You asked me about the history of the Remnant Church here in the Solomons. Well, it's an offshoot of an evangelical church. This evangelical church (now known as the South Seas Evangelical Church) originated in Queensland where the sugarcane labourers — the 'kanakas' — worked. Some Solomon islanders working as sugarcane labourers ~~there~~ became members of this new church. Eventually ~~the~~ some ministers left Brisbane & came over to the Solomons. This was in the late 1800s & probably early 1900s. Around ^{the} 1950s ^{some} members of this evangelical church became discontented with ^{some of} the church's teaching after much bible study. They found out that the Saturday Sabbath & other Old Testament laws & statutes were still in force at that time. So they broke off ~~from~~ the South Seas Evangelical Church & formed themselves in a new group calling themselves the Remnant Church. Not long after this group became divided again on some doctrines they held — one group joined the Seventh-Day Adventist Church while the other group remained as they were — the Remnant Church. And it's this last group that were interested in the W.C.G. It's very unfortunate ~~was~~ that when Mr John Halford & Mr Gillan came over to the Solomons they didn't manage to contact these people.
