

David Paul Ziegler

He was associate to the famous Greenberry George Rupert and is mentioned by him in his Remnant of Israel periodical.

He was an elder with CG7 but seems to have later become an independent Church of God evangelist.

D. PAUL ZIEGLER. Among the veteran newspaper men of Indiana, few have had a more varied or interesting career than D. Paul Ziegler, president of the Press Publishing Company and publisher of the Lawrenceburg Press, one of the oldest newspapers in this section of the country. Beginning life as a minister, Mr. Ziegler did not take up newspaper work until he had reached middle age, but since then has applied himself strictly and uninterruptedly to journalism, in which vocation he is now one of the best-known figures in the state.

Mr. Ziegler was born in 1867, on a farm in Gibson County, Indiana, and as a child was taken by his aunt to Kansas, where the youth acquired his early education in the rural schools of the prairies. Subsequently he pursued a course at Orleans College, and after his graduation therefrom entered the ministry, holding various pastorates and filling pulpits allover the Sunflower State, also doing evangelistic work in many states and in Canada. At the age of forty-two years he entered the newspaper business at Clay Center, Kansas, where he remained four years and then went to Formosa, in the same state, where for a like period he published a newspaper. Selling out, Mr. Ziegler lived a retired life for some time and then founded the State Line Democrat at Waldron, Kansas, and remained in that city for six years, when he went to Joplin, Missouri, and for four years conducted a modern and successful printing plant. At the end of that period, in 1919, he came to Lawrenceburg and purchased the Lawrenceburg Press, of which he has since been the publisher. This paper was founded in 1825 and about 1850 took its present name, now being in the 104th year of its press service. Mr. Ziegler has built up a large circulation and is issuing an interesting, well-printed, well-edited newspaper, containing live news matter from all over the world, local matter, timely editorials and features, and is being well supported by the merchants of Lawrenceburg and other places in the way of advertising. He is well known in journalistic circles and is a member of the American Craftsmen and other organizations. During the World war he was active in all of the drives and was a large subscriber of Liberty Bonds. While residing at Kackley, Kansas, he served in the capacity of postmaster, and at Lawrenceburg wields an influence in public affairs. Politically he is well and favorably known in Washington, D. C., where he has two sons in the employ of the Federal Government. He also has a son in the U. S. Military Academy at West Point, New York. He is also editor of The Torch of Israel, is the author of several books upon the subject of Israel, and spends much of his time on the public platform, lecturing upon his favorite subject, "The Ten Lost Tribes of Israel."

Mr. Ziegler married Miss Ollie Morris, of Illinois, a daughter of L. M. Morris, a soldier of the Union army during the war between the states, and to this union there were born nine children. Assisting their father in the publication of the Lawrenceburg Press are his two sons, Elmer A. Ziegler and Lewelling A. Ziegler, both hustling and energetic young journalists of Dearborn County. They acquired a public school education in the various places in which the family resided, and learned the printer's trade in the newspaper office. Elmer A. married Gertrude Aplin, of Galesburg, Illinois, and to this union there have been born three children: Mariam, Phillip and Pauline. Lewelling A. married Mildred Justis, of Lawrenceburg, and they have one child, Clayton. [emphasis mine]
