

Aid sought for Black sport

by MIKE McCOY
THE Minister of Sport and Recreation and of National Education, Dr Koornhof, this week suggested to Mr Herbert W. Armstrong, the roving ambassador for world peace, that his organisation aid Black sports development in South Africa.

This emerged in an interview yesterday with Mr Armstrong, 84, editor of "The Plain Truth", and his executive vice-president, Mr Stanley J. Radar, in their Port Elizabeth hotel suite.

The two men have flown about three million kilometres in eight years as leaders of the Worldwide Church of God.

Meetings

Mr Radar described how he and Mr Armstrong had flown between Johannesburg, Cape Town and Durban for a constant series of public and private meetings since their arrival in South Africa late in May.

On Saturday night Mr Armstrong spoke before 1 000 people in Durban; on Sunday night he addressed 1 200 in Cape Town; and on Monday he had lunch with Dr Koornhof.

It was then they said, that Dr Koornhof suggested the Ambassador International Cultural Foundation might help develop Black sport and recreation.

"It's something we haven't thought of before," said Mr Radar, "but we are certainly going to consider it as a possible project."

Before lunch with Dr Koornhof, Mr Armstrong spent half an hour with the Prime Minister, Mr Vorster.

"He is a very impressive man," said Mr Armstrong. "I think South Africa has something to be thankful for, having him at the helm of the government. He is one of the outstanding world leaders."

And that from a man who counts many of them among his close friends.

From South Africa Mr Armstrong and Mr Radar will take their Grumman Gulfstream jet back to the United States. But on July 2 they will be in Jerusalem before going on to Kenya, where their organisation is building a secondary school near Nairobi.

Mr Armstrong spends at least 200 days in the year travelling all over the world, speaking of world peace. In spite of his age, he obviously does not intend to slacken the pace.

Peace man's nuclear fears

HERALD REPORTER

THE world was facing a daily worsening threat of extinction through nuclear warfare, the leader of the Worldwide Church of God, Mr Herbert W. Armstrong, said in Port Elizabeth last night.

Addressing about 500 people, most of whom were followers of his movement for world peace, Mr Armstrong said he had seen the crisis growing during continuous travelling around the world in the past 10 years.

Confrontation was caused by human lust, greed and competition. "I can't see people wanting to change their own natures," he said. He was proud of having changed his own nature and of having helped others to also adopt a "giving" philosophy.

He described the giving philosophy he tried to spread as being "an outgoing concern for others equal to that for one's self".

Mr Armstrong, who is 84, said his reward for adopting the new way of life had been the formation of an organisation which was worth 100 million dollars today and had an annual income of 60 million dollars.

The meeting which was not on Mr Armstrong's schedule during his visit to the country, was organised by Mr Solly Rubin, district governor of Lions International for the Eastern Cape and Midlands.
