VISITORS DELIGHTED WITH ULLADULLA

From all reports, all the visitors associated with the recent World Church of God Festival really enjoyed their time in Ulladulla.

Although the Festival officially ended on Monday, many have stayed on to complete their holiday in the area.

Festival co-ordinator, Mark Ellis, told our reporter that it would be very hard to fault the district and the warmth of its residents.

"The Ulladulla Civic Centre, with its outlook over the harbour, provided a perfect setting for the Festival and the weather has also been very kind to us.

"Of course, we've had a few minor problems but, with a group of over 1,000 people, it would be very hard to please absolutely everyone".

One visitor, a Sydney journalist, said that he hoped the organisers would consider returning again next year.

But he had one comment to make concerning the lunch hour break.

He said that, apart from the odd bistro and take-away shop, it was very hard to find a restaurant open during the lunch hour.

"Next time", he suggested, "it might pay some of the bigger restaurants to open both in the evening and during part of the day".
