Home, family founding Church principle

MOUNT POCONO — "The home and family relationship is the basis of a healthy, happy and enduring society, and must be made a special concern of education."

This statement, made after the Worldwide Church of God completed a study of minorities in relation to society, is one of the founding principals of education at the Worldwide Church of God three Ambassador Colleges located in the United States and England.

"The stronger the family ties, the higher is the rate of education, self-improvement, achievement and social status; the more broken are the home and family ties, the higher is the crime rate and the lower the education," the study states.

Pointed out in the lengthy report are the family, social and political influences affecting minority groups in relationship to education as well as national problems.

The study relates both today's racial situation and much of the crime in this country to a poor family structure.

The study says, "In a healthy and happy society, education must begin in the home! It must put major emphasis on family life. Yet in our Western world-United States - the family system is breaking down."

"This breakdown of our family system is inscribing the handwriting on our national wall! The need of right education in this sphere is far more vital to the very question of survival than is recognized," the report continued.

"The most tragically serious need in education today is in-the-home education on the basic importance of the happy family structure in our society." This, the Worldwide Church of God study emphasized, is the crux of education's new dimension.
