A TREATISE OF
the travailes of Noah into Europe, containing the first inhabitation and peopling thereof.

O begin with the genealogie of Dardanius (the first founder and erecter of the cite of Troy) it is requisite that we take for our cheefest guide therein the first prince and Patriarch of the world, called Noe, surnamed Gallus, following herein most especially the chronicle of that authentike writer, Berosus the Chaldean: who indeed of all others most accordeth with the writings and holy wordes of Moses in the old Testament; for as much as the Chaldeans generally addicted themselves to Iewry, unto which they were allured and persuaded by Noe, shewing them the use of Historie, and therein the true particulars of the creation of the world, untill that very time wherein they then lived; which also Noe himselfe learned and read instru-

Instructed in by his father Lamech, who had received his knowledge from his father Methuselah, before hee was banished out of the garden of Eden; and this Enoch had it by tradition from his father Adam, who was possessed therewith by the gift of the holy inspiration. Let us now therefore know that this Berosus, the Chaldean, who being a most renowned, ancient, and grave author, was flourished not long before the times of Alexander the Great; and unto whom (as Pliny in his Naturall historie reporteth) the Athenians for his great wisdom and eloquence, erected in their universitie a most stately and gorgeous statue to his owne shape and similitude, whose tongue they gilded over with most pure and resplendent gold. This Berosus wee will in this Treatise much relie upon, adjoining withall unto his authoritie other authors of great worth, learning, and antiquitie.

Noe: (according to S. Hieron) in his interpretations of Hebrew words) significth as much as resting or resting of a mans selfe; and he was the sonne of Zamech, which significth humilitie. This Noe by the descriptions of old writers was taken in those daies to be a Giant in respect of his extraordinary stature, propertie, and corpulencie; and he was about threescore and thirtie years of age, when he begat of his wife Japheth (as Genesis affirmeth) of three hundred yeeres, when he begat of his wife Japheth (as Genesis affirmeth) three first sonnes; Shem, which meaneth, he that is obedient, the wife called Arche (as Genesis affirmeth) which significth Berosus affirmeth to be the youngest, which significth humilitie or craft; and Japheth, which significth liberte or freedom; and Japheth was the first of his familie that lived lived in a citie called Enos, which was the first citie in the world; and was buik by Cain the soone of Adam, at the foot of the mountaine Libanus in the land of Syria, and in the particular province of Phoenicia, not far from the famous citie of Ierusalem, situated in the holy land.

In this citie of Enos, and in many others thereabouts, inhabited and lived many most deformed, fierce, and terrible giants, who by reason of their unmatched strength and indomitable powerfulness, ruled and overruled all those people thereabouts at their pleasure, committing many odious and ungodly deeds, and living a most dissolute and vicious life, engorging their luxurious appetites with surfeits of adulterie and libidinous conversation, as void of shame, the law of nature, and the feare of God.

In these times many very learned Astronomers and wise Soothsaiers gave out propheticall divinations of the suddaine approaching destruction of the universall world, which their forewarning prognostications they engraved and cut forth in pillars of marble and stonie monuments, to signifie thereby unto the world, their knowledge of such future and sure happening accidents. All this notwithstanding, these obstinat and heart-hardened Giants persevered in their impious and detestable practises, tyrannizing and oppressing without all measure, addicting themselves to the finding out of weapons, shields, and other warlick accoustments, as also to the making of tents, pavilions, and such like expedient necessaries for the field; wholly excludng all thoughts of any alteration or change to ensue: onely the good giant Noe, among all the rest, feared God, and was obedient to his lawes; with all the rest of his familie and household, which was Titea his wife, Sem, Cham, and Japhet, their children; and Pandora, Noela, & Noegla, their wives: all which, Noe instructed in modestie and good manners, and in the reverence and feare of their sovereign Creator. He therefore, as well by divine commandement, as by the science of Astronomie, by which he gathered the overthrow and confusion of the world, began to frame and fashion that huge ship or Arke, which we so often read of in holy scriptures, & which was appointed from above to be the meanes of the salvation and preservation of humane kind. Noe, when hee saw this generall inundation to approach and shew it selfe, conveyed him and his familie into this Arke, when presently all the world, and all things else therein (this excepted) were overwhelmed and subverted under the raging furie of this so strange and all-devouring deluge: and this was performed on the eighteenth day of Aprill, in the six hundred yeare of the age of Noe. And hether to was accounted the first age of the world, according as Philo the Jew in his computations affirmeth.

The world thus univerally drowned and kept downe under the all-subduing power of the waters. (Noe and his familie excepted) in the end they began againe to sinke backe and retire into the earth, which when Noe perceived (his Arke then resting on the top of the high hill Gordicus in Armenia) by the will and commandement of God, he with the rest (which were seven) came out of his ship, and descended downe unto the new-dried land: which was performed eight hundred thirtie three yeares before the foundation of Troy, & before the incarnation of Christ two thousand three hundred and seventene yeares. Noe then seeing himselfe thus left the sole King, Monarch,

The travels of Noe into Europe

Monarch, Emperour, Patriarke, Lord, and Master of the whole universall land, remained wonderously astonied at this so strange and sence-amazing accident: and passing along the land, he found on a plaine a faire pillar of marble, whereon he carefully engraved and set downe the deluge and generall inundation of the world in the form of an hystoricall discourse: & this stone (as it is reported) is called at this day by the inhabitants thereabouts, Myri-Adam, which interpreted, signifies the issue of Noe; and it standeth in the countrey of Armenia, being a great province in Asia the great, which affronteth towards the East the Hyrcanian sea, towards the South lies Mesopotamia, towards the North Colchos and Albania, and towards the West Cappadocia; and through the midst of it runne the two famous rivers, Tigris and Euphrates, of all which countries, hereafter in this hystorie more at large shall be spoken. It is written, That Noe begat of his wife Tyrea after the flood, thirtie children, viz. Tuyson the Giant, Prometheus, Japetus, Maacrus, and the sixteen Titans, which were all Giants: also Crantus, Granau, Oceanus, and Tiphens; and of daughters, Araxa surnamed the Great, Regina, Pandora, Crana, and Thetis: some authours doe alleadge more, but for brevities sake wee will not further contend with others opinions. Noe thus living in Armenia, instructed these his children in the knowledge of sacred Theologic, and in rites belonging to religion and holy sacrifices, as also in the understanding of humane manners and secreties of Nature, of which hee himselfe had composed many bookes, which afterward the priests and chiefe men of Scythia and Armenia, preserved and kept in great regard and reverence. For this cause he was called led among the Scythians Ogyges Sages, which interpreted from the Scythian language, signifies as much as Great Patriarke, soveraign Priest, and mightie Sacrificer. And this Berosus affirmeth, saying: Primum itaque dixerunt Ogygam Sagam, id est, illustrem sacrorum Pontificem Noam: he also taught and instructed them the knowledge of the course of the planets, and divided the yeare into twelve months, according to the course and circumference of the Moone: he also by his studie of Astronomie and observance of the coelestiall motions, could prognosticat of the alterations of weather in the yeare succeeding: for which causes the Scythians and Armenians very highly honoured him, thinking him to partake of the divine nature and supernall knowledge, and therefore called him Olybama & Arsa, which is as much as to say, the Heaven, and the Sunne: and they afterward also built and named many great cities in his name and of his wife Titea, so much were they honoured for their vertues and godly conversation. He further taught those people the use of agriculture and tillage of the ground, and also the finding out of the use of the grape, and the manner to plant vines and other necessaries for their more easie living, whereupon hee was entearmed also Ianus, which in the Scythian tongue, signifies the giver of wine. But as he was the first that found out the use thereof, so was hee the first that felt the power and vertue of it, who not being able to endure the fume and mightie strength of the operation thereof, in a great feast wherto he had envited many of his friends, fell extremely drunke, and to overcome therewith, as he lay senselessly sleeping in unseemly manner amid these his guests and friends so envited: such was the furie of that that new found drinke. Among all the sonnes of Noe, Cham was the least in his fathers favor, who also by reason of his Magicke art (wherein he had great knowledge) was called Zoroast, who wholly gave himselfe over unto all incivilitie and rude behaviors, following the abominations and vices of those horrible giants before the flood: he, as hating his owne father, for that he saw himselfe least beloved of him, as he saw him thus lying drunke (using some charmes of enchantment) tooke now the time of revenge, and by his Magick so bewitched his father in those places of generation, that hee disabled him ever after to have the use of women, or to get more children: for these and other such his detestable impieties, hee incurred the wrath and displeasure of God, in most greivous manner, and was afterward banished from his father, who afflicted him with no more punishment therein for such his unnaturall deed so committed.

Humane kind through the succession of time, so much encreased and multiplied, that they were now enforced to seeke out some new habitations and places of abode: whereupon the good Patriarke Noe, surnamed Janus, began to exhort the princes and cheefe of his familie, to put themselves in search for other countries and places of residence, and there to build and erect villages and cities, for the societie of humane conversation: and he thus allotted unto them their regions and quarters, where to populate and inhabit. To Sem, surnamed Melchisedech, he appointed Asia the great, which in it selfe contains the halfe of the world: and hee had with him in his companie xxv. Rulers of his familie. Hee afterwards built the citie of Salem, now called Ierusalem, and free lived even until the time of Abraham. Vnto Iaphet his brother was allotted Europe, and he had with him foureteene rulers of his generation: and unto thesetwo, Noe bequeathd his blessing most amply, according as the scripture maketh mention: As for Cham, although he was out of grace with his father, yet had hee his inheritance also allowed unto him, which was the other third part of the world, as hereafter shall be farther spoken of.

Frier John Annus of Viterbe, the expositor of our author Berosus, doth recite, that Philo the Iew (another very ancient author) doth write, That in the hundred year after the deluge, Noe to shew and instruct his children in Cosmographie, went up on the mountaines which overlooke the Ponticke sea (part of which is now called Mare Mediterraneum) and there shewed unto his sonne Sem all the Asiaticke seas, from the flood Tanais in Tartaria unto the river Nilus in Egypt: unto Cham he shewed all the rivers issuing from the seas of Affrica, and from thence through Egypt to the streights of Gybraltar: and to Iaphet all the rivers and floods of Europe, passing from those streights, through Spaine, Fraunce, and Italie, and those countries round about; into which countrey of Italie Noe also after ward arrived, and left behind him certaine of his people in that part of the country where Rome was long after built, which was eight hundred yeares after the flood: from thence he passed unto the coasts of Greece, and entred into the straights leading to Constantinople, by the sea called Mare Major, and so againe to the floods of Tanais in Tartaria, from whence he first set forth. And it is to be noted, That as hee passed through all those countries, countries, he alwaies left people behind him to inhabit and increase in those countries, distributing unto every number certaine quarters to remaine in: and after this time, in short space many countries were againe re-inhabited and peopled afresh, which since the flood were desolat, and lay naked and depopulat.

About the one and twentieth yeare of this his returne from the above written voyage, Noe began to divide kingdomes, & also to erect monarchies in the world: of which the first was the monarchie of Babylon, over the which Nembrot the Giant, the sonne of his nephew Cu, who was the sonne of Cham, was first of all established, in the hundred and one and thirtieth year after the inundation; and hee was called the first Saturne or king over the Babylonians and Assyrians, who after ward in a faire Campain called Sennaar, laid the foundation, and erected the great tower and citie of Babell, which he had caused to be built even to the height of the highest mountaines, but after by the confusion of languages it was given over and left unfinished. Nembrot after this lived in peace and tranquillitie 56 yeares.

Not many years after the setting up of the monarchie of Babylon, Noe divided foure particular kingdomes in Europe, viz. the kingdome of Italie, Spain, Fraunce, and of Almaigne: for in Italie raigned Comerus Gallus, the eldest sonne of Iaphet: in Spain ruled Taball (called also Iaball) the fifteenth sonne of Iaphet: in Fraunce Samothes (surnamed Dis) Iaphets fourth sonne: and over Almaigne, (now called Germanie) governed the Giant Tuyssan, one of the sonnes of Noe. And so likewise in many other places of the world were severall governments and kingdomes.

kingdomes then erected, which now to recite, were tedious and impertinent to our purpose; & every one of them a long time kept and were contented with their quarters so allotted unto them, and imposed lawes and edicts unto their people, and they called the countrey after their own name, as also many mountaines, rivers, and townes were so entearmed, to the end, that all succeeding posteritie might know by what meanes and by whome such citties and other monuments received their first ground and foundation.

After these kingdomes and governements erected, and the earth now againe well peopled, Noe now undertaketh his second voiage into Europe, leaving Sabatus Saga his nephew, and brother to Nembroth king of Babylon, to governe and commaund over the countrey of Armenia, from whence hee now departeth with purpose to visit his children, and to know of their estates. And this Sabatus Saga (called also Saturne) had all the countrey even unto the land of Bactria, lying towards India (at this day called Tartaria) under his rule and authoritie: These things at home thus established, Noe (surnamed Ianus) with his wife Ticea, and many multitudes of people besides, began his voyage (which was eight score and nine yeares after the flood, and in the eight and thirtieth yeare of the raigne of Nembroth) towards Hyrcania, which he then peopled, and called them after his owne name Ianij. From thence he came to Mesopotamia, where also he left behind him many people to inhabit: and from thence he attained the countrey called Arabia Foelix, where he erected two citties, the one called Noa, the other Ianinea, furnishing them with inhabitants: after, hee passed from thence thence, and came into Affrica, which part of the world hee first assigned unto the government and soveraigntie of his second sonne Cham, but at that time there ruled Triton the sonne of Saba, which was the son of Cus, the eldest sonne of the same Cham. This Triton received Noe and his companie with great joy and gladnesse of hart, and he staid there some halfe a year, in which time Triton died, and left his sonne Hammon inheritour to the kingdome of Affrica, otherwise called Lybia. After this, Noe passed forward, and at the length arrived in Spainie, which was two hundred fiftie nine yeares after the flood, and in the tenth yeare of the raigne of Nimrod the third king of Babylon.

Iuball or Tubal, the fift son of Japhet, and the first king of Spainie (as all hystories do affirme) received his grandfather Noe Ianus, and his grandmother Tysca, with honorable entertainment and all gladome willingnesse, who also were exceeding joyfull to see the prosperous estate of their nephew Iuball, for so much as they found, that hee governed his people with great justice, policie, and good lawes, as Berosus in a certaine place alleadgeth, saying: Anno Nini quarto Turscon gigas Sarmatas, legibus firmat apud Rhenum: Id ipsum agit Iubal apud Celtiberos (hoc est Hispanos) & Samothas apud Celtas. Noe therefore to helpe his nephew for the better peopling of his countrey founded there two great citties, calling the one Noela, and the other Noegla, in remembrance and honour of those his two faire daughters, so called, beeing the wives of Japhet and Cham: & after this, departed for Italie to his nephew or grand child Comerus Gallus, the first sonne of Japhet, whom before he had appointed to bee king of that countrey.

rey. In this voyage, and in his remaine in Spaine, were spent nine yeares. Now it is not written, whether he went this journey into Italie by land or sea, notwithstanding it is very likely, and agreeith with good probability, that in this his voyage he would not passe by without visiting the wise prince, his nephew Samothes, the brother of Abuball king of Spaine, who was by his appointment created the first king of Fraunce, as is before touched; and hee had reigned about this time sixe score yeares, and lived after this in peace and tranquillitie five and thirtie yeares and upward.

The second time of the coming of Janus thus into Italie, was in the time of his age eight hundred and threescore yeares (and now eight score since his last departure from thence) where thinking to find Comesus Gallus, hee now understood that he was dead, and that his son Cham, (contrarie to the appointment of Noe) not contented with the soveraigne domination of Affrica, had there wrongfully usurped the siegnorie of Italie, and had now commaunded over that countrey five and twentie yeares or therabouts: and which was worse, as all the other kings in Europe had instructed and governed their people in civilitie, manners, and education, hee contrarie to such their good examples, had most abominably corrupted the youth of Italie with all manner of impieties, vices, and odious finnes, which he with the helpe of those people (called Aborigines, which he brought along with him to people the countrey) made them to embrace, entertain and live in. Noe upon the knowledge of this, waxt marvellous heavie and discontent, as sorrowing for the ungodlinesse of his owne sonne, and suffered him thus for this space of three yeares to continue therein, hoping daily to see some amendment or other in him: but finding him to persevere therein, and rather to encrease in it than otherwise, hee banished him, with a certaine number of people with him, from out the confines of Italie; from whence departed, hee arrived in the Island of Sicilia, where hee with his companie long after lived.

Janus then taking upon himselfe the kingdome of Italy, which was now two hundred threescore and twelve yeares after the flood, he began like a carefull goverour to root out and seporate the infectious sheepe out of the whole flocke, least with their impurities all should be corrupted, and so hee chose out a certaine number of people which were tainted with the vices of their commander that last ruled (and which people were called Aborigines) & commaunded them to depart out of the country, over the river Tybre, first called Ianiculum: which thing they performed and demanded for their queene and governess, Cranis, Noes daughter, which hee also graunted them: and he appointed a kingdome and government for them, and they were as is already said, called Aborigines, & those which were left in Italie, were called Ianigines, after his owne name. He had not long reigned here, but he caused to be built on this side of the river Tybre, towards Tuscania, a marvellous great cittie on the top of a high mountaine, which he then called Ianiculum, & after that Vaticanum, and since the towne of S. Peter of Rome, and it was seated on the same place, which at this day S. Peters church standeth upon, as also the Popes pallace, called at this day in Italian, Belvedere, which is as much as, The faire sight. Round about those countries to the river Arnus, which passeth through Florence, to the bounds of Sardinia, did Noe cause to bee inhabited and made populous in those daies: wherein also he built and erected many most beautiful cities, which he called Aryn Janas, id est, ex Janae ex-altatis: and hee began then also to write and set downe lawes and institutions for the civile administration of justice, and government of Commonweales, which he first prescribed in the cite of Vetulonia, called since Viterbe: and instructed the people also in the sciences of Physicke, Astronomie, and Divinitie, and in the ceremonious rites and customes belonging to holy sacrifices; and of these also he made many and severall bookes.

It hath beene mentioned before, how that upon Noes last departure out of Armenia, hee constituted and established his nephew Sabatius Saga, surnamed Saturne, to rule as King and Patriarke over that countrey; wherein he afterward raigned peaceably, even untill the time of the raigne of Jupiter Belus, the sonne of Nembroth, the second King of Babilon: who yeelding unto his disordinat desires, and coveting to command as sole Monarch of the whole world, was the first violater & infringer of the ordinances appointed in those daies, and by whose means the golden age afterward lost such her title, and never since was called so: for before such his over haughtie humors, all things were peaceable, common, & free. This Jupiter endeavored by all devises possible to overturne the greatnesse of Sabatius Saga, surnamed Saturne, and commanded also his sonne Ninus to undertake all meanes how to bring him and his family to death and destruction: which thing they jointly effectuuated so far, as hardly escaped hee the snares and subtilities laid to entrap him. Saturne therefore seeing himselfe in those dangers and casualties, to be deprived of all dignitie and command, for succour and refuge fled unto his grandfather Noe, there hoping to bee protected, safe guarded, and defended, which thing also Virgil thus remembereth: Primum ab ethereo venit Saturnus Olimpo arma locis fugiens, et regni exul ademptis. Noe according to the expectation of Saturne, friendly entertained him, & gave him many gracious signes of his welcome & wished a rivall, and for to honour him the more, and to shew the effects of his friendship and good will towards him, created him the Commander, King, and Patriarke, of the Aborigenes, whom lately wee specified: and there caused him also to build a cite, which hee called after his owne name, Saturnia, hard by that of Janus, called Ianiculum; in which very place at this day, one part of Rome, which lieth on the other side of the river Tyber, standeth, and is erected; as Virgil also in his Eneidos mentioneth, where he bringeth in Aeneas speaking to Evander, saying: Haec duo praeterea disiectis opida muris, Reliquias veterum rudes monumenta virorum, Ianiculum binae fuerat, illi Saturnia nomen. Janus then and Saturne thus raigning together, Tites the great, Noes wife, began in those times first to set up the order of Nuns, and ceremonies of Vestall virgins, inventing then the setting up of lights and lampes in the churches and temples, dedicated to the profession of virginitie and chastitie, which custome was in those daies very reverently regarded, and endured in great honor and reputation, even unto the time of the Romanes. Saturne likewise very painefully instructed the people in tillage, and in the nature of soiles, wherein he had great skill and knowledge, as also in the ceremonies of religion: and not long after (having instructed his Sonne Jabin to be the successor to the Kingdome of the Sabines and Aborigones) he died, in the three hundred and fortie fourth yeare after the inundation of the world. In the very same yeare also, Noe Janus finding & perceiving his end to approach, and that now his limbecke and vigour of spirits began to shrinke and decreas, created one of his Sonnes, called Janus, the King and Patriarke over the Tanigenes (which are now called Tuscans) and the sixt yeare after departed this life, and gave up to his maker, his noble and heroicke spirit: which was after he had reigned in Italie fourescore and two yeares, and after the flood three hundred fortie six yeares, before the foundation of Troy foure hundred and fourescore; and before the incarnation of Christ, one thousand nine hundred three score and seven yeares, and in the age of the same Noe, nine hundred and fiftie.

The death of this good King and Patriarke possessed almost all the people in the world with great sorrow and lamentation, and especially the Armenians and Italians, who in most honorable manner celebrated his obsequies with such their then used rites and ceremonies, and afterward dedicated and attributed unto him divine honours and godlike adoration, building and consecrating temples and holy altars unto him, calling him by divers and severall names and titles, as the Sun, the Heaven, the Seed of the world, the Father of the gods, the Soul of the world, the God of peace, the giver of justice and holinesse, the expuller of things hurtfull: also their children and successors called him Janus, Geminus, Quadrifons, Emotivus, Ogyges, Vertumnus, Vadimon, Protheus, Multifons, Diapiter, and Jupiter: and they invented all manner of honours and and strange worships to reverence and adore him: they also shaped forth his picture into diverse formes and fashions: sometimes seeing him forth with two faces, to signifie thereby his wisdoms upon every matter and every occasion: sometimes also, with foure faces, to denote thereby that he was the god of the yeare, for that he had so divided it into four severall parts, being the Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter, as Macrobius in his Saturnals also remembreth, saying: Janus apud poetas quatuor partes spectat, ut demonstrat eius simulachrum a phaleris advectum: Afterwards the Phenicians portrayed him forth in the forme of a Dragon, biting her tail, to shew thereby the roundnesse, and the beginning and ending of the yeare. In honour of him also at this day the first moneth of the yeare is called after his owne name Januarius, as Servius in his Aeneidos affirmeth. The ancients likewise have shaped him forth with two keys in his hand, to shew thereby that he was the inventor of gates and doores, as also of the locking of them, and making them fast, to the end that the holy temples and sacred places should not bee polluted with the impious abuse of theeves and uncivile persons, and to avoid adulteries and other such like finnes, then reigning: and of his name since have all doores and gates been called Janus. In many other sorts and formes have the ancients defigured the image of this Noe Janus, as Propertius and many others have written, who in the fourth booke of his Elegies, thus speaketh:

*Quid mirare meos tot in uno corpore formas?
Accipe Vertumni signa paterna dei Tuscus ego Tuscis orior, &c.*

And

The travels of Noe into Europe.

And undoubtedly, there hath not been read of any that lived so uprightly and justly as this Patriarke Noe, neither that ever any had such honours, reverence, and godlike adoration done unto him; both in his life time, and after his death, who also was among those people in those daies called God: neither is it to bee wondered, that in those elder times there were so many gods held & worshipped among the auncients; for so much as it is to bee understood, That in those daies all those princes, rulers, and governors that had lived virtuously, justly, and godly, and had commaunded their people with mildnesse, equitie, and uprightnesse, were esteemed gods, and that also without performing any idolatrous adoration or reverence unto them, as Metasthenes, an auncient author and hystorian of Persia affirmeth, where hee thus saith: Ante Noeum ducentis & quadraginta novem annis regnatum fuit sub tribus dijs regionis, quorum qui primus univ. so imperavit orbi, fuit Ogyges, qui profuit inundationi terrarum, &c. Cathon also, another very auncient writer, thus speaketh: Italia complura a dijs & duobus fortis fuit nomina, a Janno Ianicula quens quidem Etruriam dictam existimant, quia invenit truum & sar. And for these and such like reasons, Moyse and other godly Patriarkes were called gods, not that they were so in essence, but onely in participation, as in the seventh chapter of Exodus it is written: Ego te dedi deum Pharaoni: and in the the three and twenty chapter, Dijs non detrahes, & principes populi tui ne male dicas. Further also the Prophet David thus saith: Principes populorum congregati sunt, cum deo Abraham, quoniam dijs fortes terra vehebementer elevati sunt.

These things are thus so amply and at large exposed, to the end, that the reader of this Treatise should not so much marvell or wonder when mention is made in this booke of gods and goddeses, which in those daies were so much observed and revered. Ovid rehearsing the words of this Noe Janus, and shewing that in his death the golden age ceased, thus sayth:

Tunc ego regnabam patiens cum terra deorum Esset, & humanis numina mixta locis Nondum iustitiam facinus mortale sugarat, Ultima de superis illa reliquit humum, Proque meta populam, sive ut pudor ille regebat, Nullus erat iustis reddere iura labor Nil mihi cum bello, postes pacemque tuebar, &c.

And as Noe was among these auncients thus honored and adored, and temples and altars consecrated unto him: so also was Titea his wife held in great reverence, worship, and holy esteeme, who was called also Vesta, Aretia, Terra, Regina sacrorum, magna Cybeles, Materque deorum, atque Vestalium Princeps, sive Abbatissa, as Berosus and other writers affirme. Having thus touched the death of this good Patriarke Noe, it shall not bee now impertinent something to remember and speake of the wicked and abhominable life of his degenerate sonne Cham, which although of it selfe it be worthlesse of any recapitulation or recitall, yet to descend to the lineall genealogie of the Lybian Hercules the Great, it cannot bee well omitted: from which Hercules, Dardanius the first founder and creator of Troy, descended and came.

It hath been already specified, how Noe deviding the universall earth unto his children, and how Cham abounding in all vices and detestable courses, notwithstanding was not deprived of his portion, but had his right of inheritance justly allotted unto him, which was the third part of the world, and particularly Affrica to the hether part of Ægypt; for which countries he was commaunded by his father to depart, with his wife Nægla, and five and thirtie rulers (which is as much to say, as the cheefes of familie of his blood and house) as also with all their children and issue: which was accordingly performed, and presently he established himselfe asking and Saturne of Ægypt, where he erected and built a citie called Chem-Myn: and among them also, he himselfe was called Pan, and Silvanus, which people likewise (so engendred and issued of that familie) to honour and worship him the more, and to shew their love unto him, lived in all impious and ungracious manner, perpetrating most odious and soule-damning villanies, affirming publickly, That men ought lawfully to have the companie of their owne mothers, sisters, and daughters, in all lusts and concupiscence of the flesh; and other many most inhumane and shamefull acts, not to be recited. And to shew that they gloried and boasted in the wickednesse of such their king and ruler, they entearmed him by the name of Cham Esennus, which signifieth their infamous god Pan. And thus he ruled in Egypt long time, even unto the six and fiftith yeare of the raigne of Jupiter Belus, the second king of Babylon: in the which yeare he began to travell, and came into Italie (which was then called Kytim) to his brother Comerus Gallus, the first king of that countrey; after whose death, Cham presently usurped usurped and undertooke that mightie government: who in stead of vertuous instructions and godly laws, in which all other princes round about him, his kinsmen (commanding Germanie, Spaine, and France) had instructed and taught their people, cleane contrarie infected the youth of Italie with all manner of impieties, incivilitie, and corruptible vices: persuading them (beeing of themselves well addicted) to usurie, robbrie, murder, poysonings, and the studie of the Magicke art, who by reason of his owne great skill therein, was surnamed Zoroastes, and was the first inventor and practiser of that vild and diabolicall learning, of the use of which hee composed and writ many bookes, and hee was called generally throughout the world, Cam Esennus, id est, Cam infamis, & impudicus, propagator. Some have thought, That the Turke for those and such like causes, is called in his letters patents, le grand Cam de Tartaria.

It is written, That Cham had one sister which was called Rhea, married to Hammon king of Lybia, who also was enamoured of one other faire woman, called Almanthea, and had of her by adulterous meanes, a son, whose name afterwards was Dionysius; which child was secretly brought up and nourished in a certaine citie of Arabia, called Nysa: notwithstanding, the matter was not so closely & cunningly handled, but his wife Rhea had privie advertisements thereof. Whereupon in despight and jealous discontent, she forooke her husband, and went home to her brother Cham (then abiding in the Island of Sicilia) who presently married and espoused her, and (as some writers hold) his wife Nægla being alive: but of this other he afterwards got many children, as Cus the father of Nembrot, the first king of Babylon, Typhon the gyant, and also many others.

Cham and his owne sister Rhea thus married together, they consulted and advised to be revenged of king Hammon of Lybia, and to that effect raised a great armie of men, and with the assistance and helpe of their brothers (the sixteene gyants) they set forwards from Sycilia, and in the end arrived within the territories and confines of Lybia, where they gave king Hammon battell, and in the field overthrew and vanquishd him, so that he was glad to flee into the Isle of Crete (now called Candia:) not long after this, Rhea had a sonne of her husband Cham, called Osyris, afterwards surnamed Iupiter Iustus, who proved a most noble and gallant prince, far differing from the wicked humors and dispositions of his father.

After this, about the three and fortieth yeare of the raigne of Nynus king of Babylon, Dionysius the sonne of king Hammon and of the faire Almanthea, now beeing come to age and of mans estate, began now to think upon the wrong offered unto his father by Cham & Rhea, in usurping the commaund of Lybia, and determined accordingly to bee revenged upon them, which also hee afterwards performed, and expulst them againe out of the countrey, investing himselfe in the regalitie thereof. Notwithstanding, he used Osyris (the yong sonne of Cham and Rhea) with great clemencie and mercie, and received him as his adopted child, and in remembrance of his father called him also Hammon and Iupiter: and brought him up very carefully in the studie of letters and other necessarie gifts: over whom he appointed as schoolmaister and tutor, a learned man called Olympus, of whom afterwards

Osyris

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Osyris took his name, and was surnamed Olympicus. After that Cham and his wife and sister Rhea were thus discomfited and overthrowne by Dionysius the new king of Lybia, and now retired with such disgrace into the furthest and obscurest corners of Aegypt, Rhea was presently upon this, delivered of a daughter called Iuno, which was also called Isis the Great: and this was in the first yeare of the raigne of Semyramis, which was three hundred and two yeares after the flood: and this Isis was accounted for the fairest, as also the best disposed ladie of the world. But her unfortunat & wicked father Cham, now remaining in Aegypt (as hath beene already specified) was not contented with such his habitation there, but seeking further (as over-ambitiously enclined) arrived in the countrey of Bactria, not far from Persia, where he so wrought and prevailed with his diabolicall skill of Negromancie, that he subjugated and brought under all those people thereabouts, inso much as hee there raigned in great puissance, pride, and mightinesse: and yet not with this satisfied, gathered great troupes and armies of men, and invadeth the Assyrians, against whome marcheth their king called Nynus the young, the sonne of the before mentioned Semyramis, whose fortune was such, as hee victoriously triumphed over his enemy Cham, suppressing his glory, rule, and haughtinesse, he himselfe being in that battell slaine, and all the armie shamefully discomfited.

Many writers have affirmed, That this Cham was a man of singular Ingenuitie and sharpe capacitie, and that hee first found out the seven liberall Sciences, and had wrote many bookes of great worth, among which, his cheefest were of Negromancie, of which, most part of them were burned by the before said Nynus. Some also say, That hee onely in the world came out of his mothers womb laughing and with a smiling countenance, which is an uncouth thing, and (as most hold) prognosticating no good. Vnto this Cham, Tiphon the Gyant (his eldest sonne by Næglæ) was heire, and also succeeded him in humors and malicious dispositions, who was brought up in Ægypt, & there continued. And now also it shall bee fit to revert our historie vnto the two yongest children of Cham Zoroastes, which excelled in all good parts and vertuous inclination as their father abounded in the contrary, & that was that Osyris before spoken of (the adopted sonne of Dionysius, king of Lybia) and Isis his sister, the fairest & best accomplished damofell in the world, whom afterward he tooke to wife and married, with whome hee had also the kingdome and principallitie of Ægypt. These two now newly espoused, he being of threescore yeares of age, and shee about fiftie (and yet our author Berosus tearms them very youthfull) began to applie themselves to the studie of the nature of herbes, and to the finding out of planting, tilling, and sowing of corne, which afterwards they instructed their people in, and shewed the use to their neighbors dwelling in Palestina, of which ruled king and governour Sem, surnamed Melchisedech, who was the first that ever offered bread and wine unto God. From thence Osyris passed into Ægypt, and there also very painefully shewed them the manner of tilling and agriculture, as likewise the Poet Tibullus speaketh of, saying :

Primus aratra manu solerti fecit Osyris, Et tenerum ferro sollicitavit humum.

Afterward

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Afterward he travelled into many other countries, alwaies learning them. (then living by acornes, nuts, and water) in the knowledge of such his new invention; and by these gentle and mild courses hee gained the love of all people, and by that meanes almost possessed himselfe of all the world, with the regalities and principalities thereof (the Empire of Babylon onely excepted) whose conquests, victories, prevailements, and powers, we will something more amplie hereafter remember, following as well our owne author Berosus, as also Diodorus Siculus, the learned Catallhenes, and many other authenticke authors herein in their bookes and writings of matters of elder times, and subiects of antiquity. Osyris therefore (surnamed Jupiter Iustus) having by his wife and sister Isis (otherwise called Iuno) and also of many other ladies, which here shall bee needlesse to recite) many children, as Hercules the great, Anubis, Macedon, Lidus, Meon, Neptune, Oros, and also many others, hee assembleth a mightie armie of all sorts of people, both puissant and subtill, and leaving the government of the kingdome of Ægypt to the queene Isis, carying along with him some of his afore said children, he taketh a long and wearisome journey. The cheefe place of commaund in all his armie, hee appointed unto his eldest son Hercules of Lybia, who upon his escutchion and armes, bare depainted the shape of a crowned Lion rampant, holding in his forefeet a mightie hatchet. His two other brothers, Anubis and Macedon, caried defigured on their shields, the one a Dog, the other a Wolfe; according to the signification of their names. The armes of the Emperour Osyris was a royall scepter, and under that, the forme of an eye: as who searcheth the monuments of antiquitie, antiquitie, may there find it out: by which is perceived how ancient an usage the giving of armes is, and how to bee respected. And in those times all good and just princes were called gods, as Pan, Apollo, Jupiter, and infinite others, with their goddesses, muses, and nymphs.

This mightie, powerfull, and gallant armie thus gathered together, the Emperour Osyris proceedeth in his intended voyage, and therein compasseth round the whole universall earth: his first resistance was upon his entering into Affrica, where was opposed against him the Gyant Arthus, but him he presently overthrew. After that, hee quietly passed into India and Aethyopia, where hee did great good in instructing the poore ignorant people in the true knowledge of necessarie nutriment and victuals, telling them the manner how to governe and command with policie, justice, and equitie. Here also hee subdued many most ougly and fierce Gyants, full of crueltie and blood, who generally with their greatnesse had tyrannized over all those countries of Asia. He slew the tyrant Busiris of Phoenicia, which used to sacrifice men and women unto the gods. After this, hee arrived in Phrygia, and there also subjugated the Gyant Typhon, in whose command and place he established one of his owne sonnes, ruling there, beeing the place where Troy afterward was erected. From thence hee came by long passages, into this part of the world, being Europe, through the streights of the sea called Hellespont, since called the arm of S. George, deviding Grecia from Turkie.

At this time ruled in Thræcia (which is that part of Greece where Constantinople is erected) a most horrible tyrant and inhumane Gyant called Lycorgus, who now denied denied passage through his country unto Osyris, and at the first fiercely resisted his approaches, but in the end, in gallant fight, he slew him with his owne hands, and remained victor and sole commauder of that country: which afterwards he resigned to one of his owne followers called Maron, being a young and valiant prince. From thence he passed into another province called Emathia, in which also ruled many bloudie and cruell Gyants, all which hee cleane extirpated, destroyed, and subdued, setting the country in peaceable quietnesse and security, over which he appointed to be commauder, one of his owne sonnes before spoken of, called Macedon, who afterwards called that country after his owne name, Macedonia, and the people Macedonians, of whom descended and issued the ever famous conquerour, Alexander the great. Out of this country, the Emperour Osyris presently departed, and came into the Isle of Crete (now called Candia) where he vanquished the Gyant Milinus, a tyrannicall and soure governour, yet hee appointed his sonne (in whome good hopes appeared of good government) to be king of the said Island. From these parts he returned again into Grecia, and so to Scythia, now called Tartaria, where he found his eldest son, the great Hercules of Lybia, in prosperous estate: who at this instant was extremely enamoured of a ladie called Araxa, by whom afterwards he begat a sonne called Tuscus, which long after was king of Italie, and of whome descended king Dardanus, the first founder and builder of Troy. From Tartaria, the mightie Emperour Osyris (surnamed Jupiter Justus) and his sonne Hercules are now departed, and in short space arived in Hungarie, and so came into Almaign or Germanie, even unto the flood of Duno, not farre from the famous river of Rhyne, where (finding the country something populous) he made some stay and residence, painefully instructing them in the sowing of corne and planting of vines: and builded also in this place diverse villages and cities, of whom, hee beeing also furnamed Apis the mighty house of the Counts of Habsburgh in Germanie tooke her name; from which hath issued the noble and illustrious house of Austria, since in great power and greatnesse exceedingly flourishing. He also there gave the names unto the cheefest hills & mountaines thereabouts, whereof at this day some are called Appenini. And from thence hee passed into Italie, which presently shall be further showne, and as that very ancient authour affirmeth, whom wee call Cathon the auncient, saying:

Cathon

Aurea et as usque ad Apina deorum Italia ultimum, &c.

In these times there reigned in Germanie a prince, called Gambrius, the vij. king of the Germanes, descended from the house of Tuyson the Gyant, the first king of that countrey, and the sonne of Noe. With this prince the emperor Osyris made long residence, and was roially feasted and entertained, as being indeed near in kinred and consanguinitie, who accordingly received him and his traine with great joy and gladnesse. The countrey of Italie about this time was extreemly opprest with the tyrannie & bloudie fashions of infinit numbers of Gyants that therabouts then lived, called Titans, insomuch, as the people of the countrey, not able longer to tollerate and endure those such slavish impositions and unsufferable tyrannies, (hearing ring of the same and late arrivall of the Emperor Osyris, into Germanie) sent their messengers or embassadours unto him, most humbly craving and desiring his favourable assistance and protection against those barbarous and uncivile oppressors, and that he would make a journey thither to deliver them from the miserable servitude & bondage that they then were forced to abide and live in. The Emperor Osyris or Jupiter hearing and accepting of their distressed condition and case, willingly condescended to leave Germanie, and to undertake a voyage thither, to redresse and suppress their wrongs, and the Gyants super-arrogant pride, glory, and haughtinesse: which, although they were of kinred and alliance unto him, yet in respect of their uncivile and tyrannicall usances, he instantly proceeded to the redressement thereof: and in three severall battels utterly overthrew, vanquished, and discomfited them, and thereupon tooke upon him the government of the principalltie of Italie, which (long before) his father Cham and his grandfather Noe were also possessed of; and hee commaunded and ruled over the Italians for the space of eleven yeares, where for the most part hee remained in the citie of Viterbe, called also Verulonia; and at the end of eleven yeares, in great triumph joy, and glorie, instituted his nephew Lestrigon the Gyant (the son of his son Neptane) king, commander, & ruler over all the countrey of Italie.

But for so much as in this booke mention is made oftentimes of strange and horrible Gyants, & other rare and admirable things, the reader may perhaps remain incredulous, and scarce beleve them to be true, accounting them wholly fabulous, and by invention fashioned.

yet to alleadge some authoritie for the confirmation thereof (leaving out infinite other examples of infallible certaintie) you only shall be referred to the holy scriptures, and also unto Iosephus the Jewish writer, who amply hath handled the apologie thereof: among the rest, Nembroth, Golias, and others, are apparent; that they were Gyants, and of unusuall stature, strength, & proportion of bodie. If the authoritie of Boccace may be accepted, he thus writeth of himselfe: In my time (sayth hee) there was found under the foot and hollow caverne of a mountaine, not far from the citie of Deprana, in the Isle of Sicilia, the bodie of a marvellous, huge, and strange proportioned Gyant, which seemed to hold in one of his hands a mightie long peece of wood like unto the bodie of a young tree, or the mast of a ship, which so soone as it was touched, fell all into ashes and duff, but it was all garnisht & wrought about with lead, which remained sound and firm, & it was found to weigh five hundred pound weight: his bodie also being touched, consumed, and became all powder and ashes, except certaine of his bones, and three of his teeth, which were also peized, and every tooth weighed fortie ounces. For the height and full stature of his bodie, it was conjectured by the people of that countrey, to be two hundred cubits long. And the same author sayth, That his teeth were afterwards hanged up in our ladies church of Deprana, for a straunge monument, and a thing of wonderfull admiration. In many other places are the bones of gyants that lived in those daies, kept and preserved for woonders and reliques of memorie, but yet not of so uncouth and almost incredible hugeness: but leaving these matters to be further ruminated by the scrupulous, I will retorne to our maine intendment proceeding, till I have further explained the obscuritie thereof.

These things above spoken of, being achieved by Osyris against those Gyants and molesters of civile conversation, he departed out of Italie with all his royall armie, singularly well-prepared and in gallant equipage, accompanied with gods, heroes, demie gods, and martialists, that is, with all valiant, courageous, and wise princes, rulers, and captaines: and it is not written, whether in this his journey he passed through Gaule (now called Fraunce) or went that way by sea, but hard by the continent hee coasted, in which then ruled one Lucus, king of that famous countrey: but howsoever he journeyed, hee now is arrived in Spaine, where once againe hee renewed mortall battels against the Tytans, which were mightie Gyants, and cousins to those he before discomfited in Italie, these also hee now subdueth and quite raseth out all their generation, leaving the government of that countrey to the command of Gerion. And from thence he againe sayled into Greece, and arived in the province of Peloponnesus, now called Morea: and hee there settled himselfe, and ruled in the citie of Arges for the space of five and thirtie yeares, as it is written by Ensebinus in his booke of Time. After this he createth his sonne Egealus, king of Achaia, and so returneth againe into Egypt, there to spend his latter daies with his wife and sister Isis, surnamed Juno; who took such his coming home in full joyous acceptance and glad some pleasingnesse. By this time all the world had beene filled with the report of Osyris great fame and worthinesse, unto whom were ascribed and given many titles & names of triumph, as Iupiter Insus, Dux, Rex, Consultor, Quisum regnum perpetuum est, & habitatio in Olympo : all which were cleane contrary to those wherewith his father Cham was entituled.

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Being thus returned into his countrey of Aegypt, hee caused in many and severall parts and corners thereof, to bee erected certaine columnes and high pillars, in which he commaunded to bee cut out and engraved for the preservation and memorie of his name and glory, these following lines, as Diodorus Siculus repeateth them:

Diodorus Siculus.

Mihi pater Saturnus deorum olim iunior, sum vero Osiris rex, qui universum peragravi orbem, usque ad Indiarum desertos fines, ad eos quoque sum profectus, qui arcto subjacent, & Istri fontes, & usque Oceanum, sum Saturni filius antiquior, germen ex pulchro & generoso ortum, cui genus non semen fuit, nec fuit in orbe locus quem non adinerim, docens ea quorum inventor fui.

After hee thus was quietly seated in his kingdome of Aegypt, his brother Typhon the Aegyptian (who in all villanie & mallice followed the humors of his father Cham) began now to repine and envie at the glorie and fortune of the Emperor Osiris, in so much as he fell into a present conspiracie with many other malicious Gyants, for the death and destruction of him and of his greatnesse: which hee most traiterously prosecuted so far, as in the end, by subtil and craftie practises he entrapped him, who was by him and the rest of the Gyants cruelly murdered and torn in peeces, whose bodie they divided, and had hewne out into six and twentie peeces, whereof every Gyant had a share share and part, as a reward and satisfaction for such their bloudie and victorious stratageme : but afterwards these parts of his bodie were found out and gathered together againe by the meanes of his wife Isis, and buried with their right honor and due solemnitie, whom after his death the Aegyptians held & worshipped as a god; as also the children of Israel did the like in the desert. Boccaccio sayth, That hee was called also Serapis, and that the auncient Poets rearmed him likewise Dionysius, Liber Pater, and Bacchus, and that hee was the first that ever triumphed, which was in the first voyage hee made into the Indies; and that the invention of garlands and crownes was by him devised.

Our authour Berosus by his collections seemeth to alledge, That this Emperour Osiris was thus slaine in the prime and flower of his age, having attained onely unto three hundred yeares, for he was borne about the time of Ninus the third king of Babylon, and died in the raig of Baleus, the Babylonians eleventh king, by which it is very apparent, what woonderfull long time men in those ages did live. His wife Isis survived him two hundred and fourescore yeares, as hereafter shall bee mentioned, who after that shee had with all fit ceremonies and rites performed the funerals of her murdered husband, began nowe to thinke upon the actors thereof, and to meditate upon revenge and direfull practises: whereupon she convocateth all her children and nephewes, and inciteth them to the embracement of this her attempt and action, against the horrible murderers of her newly entered husband. To be short, they condescend to her motion, and in the field encounter with Typhon and his associates, and in battell utterly subdue them : which victorie was achieved hard by the the river Oris in Arabia, and in the same place where Osfiris himselfe slew the mightie Gyant and tyrant Antheus. The world being thus delivered of the perverse generation of Cham, Isis remained a peacefull and secure governess and queene over Aegypt, which shee compassed as well by her owne pollicies and devises, as by the valour and hardie prowesse of her children, of which the cheefest and most valiant was called Hercules of Lybia, of whome now (withdrawing my pen for a while to speake further of Isis) I will more amply entreat.

Hercules therefore, the most valourous and courageous young prince, after hee had by this meanes revenged the death of his father Osfiris upon his uncle Typhon, and the rest of his associates, began now to have a feeling of his owne power and vigour, and undertaketh many most tedious voyages, to scour all places of the world from the tyrannie and oppression of such inhumane and impious tyrants: and first he passed through the province of Phoenicia, where he slew the tyrant Busiris, the sonne of him, whom Osfiris before had slaine. From thence he went into Phrygia, where Troy afterward was built, and there overcame the young tyrant Tiphous; and he gave the government of that country to his owne son Athos, which he begat of a ladie called Omphale, as hereafter shall be declared. Likewise he vanquisheth the Gyant Myinus, the younger king of the Island of Candia: and from thence hee came into Africa, since called Barbaria, of which, hee named most part of it Lybia after his owne name, which before was called Phutea: and there in memory of his conquests hee erected a column and stately pinnacle. From hence passing through the streights of Gibraltar, hee arrived in

Spaine

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Spaine, where upon his first landing, hee fought bodie to bodie against the three Gerons, which were brothers and joint commaunders and kings of Spaine, those also hee overcame and slew, and created his sonne Hispalus king and ruler of that country: which was now the ninth king thereof, and of whom the citie Hispalis, now called Sivile in Spaine, tooke her name and was so called. After this, Hercules determined to make a journey into Italie, there also to purchase further fame and reputation, by suppressing the tyrannie of those that there then lived according to their owne will, power, and mightinesse. In this his journey towards Italie by land, he passeth through the kingdom called Regnum Celticum, then called also Gaule, and at this day is knowne and nominated by the name of Fraunce: of the antiquitie of which country (before we come to speake of his arrivall in Italie) having so fit occasion, we will in this place something remember.

First therefore we must find out and know in what time and in what age this famous Hercules of Lybia passed through the country in this his journey, for so much as it is not written of any certaintie, or by any authentick author, That hee ever journeyed through this kingdom before, although some doe hold, That hee went that way into Spaine with his father Iupiter (surnamed Iustus) in the reigne of Lucus, the eight king of Gaule, as hath been before somewhat commented: and this matter may be easily and evidently discovered, by comparing the times wherein Hispalus was established and made king of Spaine with those succeeding, of which Johannes Annus of Vit Johannes Annus. is a most excellens writer & diligent Hystoriographer in his Chronicles of Spaine, sayeth, That the same Hispalus

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Noe was crowned and invested in the kingdome of Spaine by his father Hercules, in the six and thirtieth yeare of Baleus (the second of that name) the eleventh king of Babylonia; which was after the flood five hundred fourescore and ten years, before the foundation of Troy two hundred threescore and one, and before the incarnation of Christ a thousand seven hundred and seven and twenty; for Hercules was born presently after the death of Ninus, the third king of Babylon, from whose death unto the six and thirtieth yeare of Baleus, the eleventh king, were just two hundred fourescore and ten yeares: so that by this meanes it may clearly bee perceived, in what time and in what age this Lybian Hercules so arrived in Gaule, being presently after the coronation of his sonne Hispalus in Spaine. At this very time therefore of his comming into Gaule (which wee will now hereafter call Fraunce) reigned and governed in that countrey as their king and commander, one called by the name of Jupiter Celtae, the sonne of king Lucius, whom before we a little touched, who exceeded all others in riches in those dayes, and was in a yelous wealth in sheepe, in cattell, and in pasturage, which were all the goods and possessions that princes in those times are bounded in, in that countrey; for then silver or gold was not there known, jewels and rare stones were disesteemed, no tributes were paid, no taxes or impositions laid upon the subjects, all things without deceit, art, or any villanous invention of mans braine, were peaceably enjoyed. And to confirme this their ignorance of silver and such metalls Didorus Siculus thus sayeth, That the sheepeheardes of this king Jupiter Celtae, attending their flocks on the top of those mountaines which divide the kingdome of Fraunce from from that of Spaine, called Pyrene, espied on the furdons on the one side of the furthermost hills, certaine liquid moisture to run downe in haste streames into the vallies below, and at the higher part of that mountaine, certaine flames of fire in most furious manner to flame themselves, in so much, that very hard rocks and stonie substances on that mountaine were dissolved and were melted with the extremitie of the heat and riscaldation of those fires: which also ceased not, but continued in that strange manner many moneths together. The silly and simple understanding of these sheepeheardes, by no meanes assumed any apprehension of this so straunge working of nature, but entertained it as a matter exceeding their capacite and reach of judgement, and therefore passed it over with the lesser wonder, in that they acknowledged in themselves so deepe an imperfection and want of knowledge. But it so fortun'd, That certaine merchants of Phoenicia travelling along those coasts, and perceiving that that metall must needs be good which so distilled and tumbled downe from the tops of those mountaines (being, as many old writers alleadge, the metall of silver) began to seele the dispositions of those all ignorant sheepeheardes, and to come to some composition and friendly tearmes for exchange of some wares they had, with that metall, which those hills in that plentie so affourded and yeelded forth. The poore sheepeheardes (as I told you before) not capable of the true value thereof, for matters of very little worth (which those merchants then had) exchanged the one for the other, without any suspect of disadvantage or ill bargain on their sides; and therupon the Phoenicians laden and fraughted their ships (then abiding in a port or haven.

have not farre of) with that mettall which those silver mines so produced, and afterwards enriched their countrey therewith in most abundant and plentifull manners: and by the reason of these fires, those hills were afterwards entearmed and called Montes Pyrenæi, for Pyx in Greeke signifies Feu in French, and fire in English: But to returne from whence we digressed. This royall king, Jupiter Cætes which before wee remembered, had one onely daughter, which hee prized and endeared as his onely good; who exceeded all other ladies in the world, in proportion and stature, and in the graces of naturall beautie, and for that she was of so extraordinarie and large tallnesse, shee was in those daies held among those people a Gyantesse. This ladie, whether proud of her own goodly features, or chaste in her cogitations, could not by any meanes bee brought to affect any man whatsoever living, neither would her father consent to any match or marriage, that might be occasion to take her from his sight, and the fruition of her so desired presence, untill the coming of this so far-famous and renowned Hercules of Lybia (of whose great worthinesse and straunge performances, they had largely heard) they of themselves intertained a new thought, and were easily induced, upon the first sight of his personage (which was majesticke and of wondrous grace) to unite their house with one of so noble demerit and of so generall fame. Hercules likewise became so far ensnared with the gallant beautie, big proportion, and exquisite perfections of Galathea (for so was the ladie called) that he instantly discovered the motions of his affections and love towards her, which were reciprocally embraced and kindly entertained: so that there rested onely the consummation of

of the nuptials, which were presently after performed with all manner of solemnization and rites of ceremonies observed in those dayes. Not long after the marriage of the Giantesse Galathea unto Hercules, her father Jupiter Cætes died, who for his vertuous life and good government, was held in that reputation, esteeme, & reverence among those people, that ever since that day, the third part of all that countrey of France is called after his own name Celtica. After him succeeded his sonne in law Hercules, and tooke upon him the command and government of the countrey of Fraunce, living peaceably and prosperously with his wife Galathea many yeares, and taught also the people new courses how to live, & better customes and fashions of behavior, controlling them for their rude and uncivile manners, and wholly depressing a most inhumane and impious order they had, of sacrificing poore strangers unto their gods; this hee abolished and wholly extinguished, enjoyning streight lawes, & punishments for the violaters and infringers of such his commandement herein. Not long after, he built and erected a most gallant and mightie citie, which hee caused to be seated on a high mountaine of that countrey, which now is called by the name of the Dutchie of Burgundie; betwene Authun & Langres, which citie he called Alexia, which interpreted, signifies conjunctive or uniting; to shew that there were two noble houses of straunge countries conjoined and made one. This citie afterwards flourished in great glorie and puissance, and especially in the times of Julius Cæsar, before which, hee himselfe with a most strong armie lay, begirting the same with a most strict & hard siege: at which time, the giving of the flowers de Luces in Fraunce tooke his originall, as Iulius Caesar himselfe in his seventh booke of his Commentaries affirmeth. But at this present, that once gallant and glorious citie of Alexia is but a mean village, and of small account in the countrey of Lauxois not far from Flauigny.

The great citie of Alexia thus in those daies peopled, inhabited, and fortified by the great Hercules, the king of Gaule: after some orders and institutions appointed for the good governance and managing of all things whatsoever at home, hee proceedeth in his intended voyage for Italie, and for that expedition raised a mightie and powerfull armie; with which after hee had taken his leave of his wife Galathea, and of his young sonne Galathen, (now aged about foure yeares or thereabouts) hee professed to the effectuating of his first entendment, and presently enters into the territories of the Allobroges (which countrey is now called Savoy) and there with main force of many hands and laborious souldiours; hee maketh his passage through those wondrous high rockie mountains, in all ordinarie sense and opinion their inaccessible and not to be passed; but as the extreame industrie and painfulnessse of worke bringeth all difficult things in the end to obedience and commaund of art, so these undigested heapes of stubborne stones and rockes, were forced at the last to give way unto his armie, so far, that all their horses and baggage whatsoever found a very plaine and easie passage. From thence he descended and came into Italy, where he fully revenged himselfe of those inhumane and lawlesse Gyants, which were the death of his owne father Iupiter Iustus: and after all tumults quieted, and the rebels subdued, hee fell to prescribe lawes to the people, and

and to instruct them very carefully in matters of civile association & orderly living: where we will for a while leave him, and once againe betake our selves more particularly to entreat of the first originall & inhabitation of France: to begin with which, it must of necessitie be drawn by the lineall succession and discent of father to son, even unto that Iupiter Celtae, and this Hercules of Lybia wee so lately remembered.

It hath beene in the beginning of this booke related, how in the hundred yeare after the universall inundation and deluge of all things whatsoever which were contained in the wide embracement of the world, the good father and Patriarke Noe made his first voyage, and put forth from Armenia with all those his children, nephewes, and kinsfolkes, to discover unto them the situation of many other countries then unknowne: and that hee first passed over the Ponticke sea, and so to the arme of the sea Mediterraneum, coasting along the continent about all those quarters; of purpose to shew unto his children the division of the world, and Cosmographically to instruct them in the situation of each severall countrey, as they stood: and were inhabited before the floud: and after that, to proportionize unto his three first begotten sonnes, every one his share and allowance for his rule, commaund, and domination, as hath been before already spoken of. And in these his travels, hee brought also along with him many sorts of beasts, cattell, hearbes, and other such things that were availeable for the encreate and maintenance of humane life; and with every one of his children or kinsfolkes left a certaine allowance of such things, there to multiply and engender. In this his first perigrination, he came into Gaul

The travels of Noe into Europe.

Gaule, and so into Italie, where after hee had spent some time, hee returned backe into Armenia, about the tenth yeare he had set forth from thence: by which it may be gathered, that Gaule was first inhabited and peopled in the hundred and eight yeare after the generall flood.

After this his returne into Armenia, having there rested himselfe some one and twentie yeares, hee began to invent the foundations of great citties, and to establish kingdomes and siegnories throughout the world: so that in the hundred and two and thirtieth yeare after the deluge he first erected and appointed the monarchie of the Babylonians, of which, the first king was called Nembroth, Noes cousin: and about the thirteenth yeare of the raigne of this Nembroth, hee instituted and established for the king of the Gaules one other of his kinsmen called Samothes, surnamed Dis, the fourth sonne of Japhet, a man very wise and well governed. Samothes therefore accordingly tooke his leave of the Patriarke Noe, his grandmother Ti-tea, of his father Japhet, and of his mother Noegla and the rest of his kindred, and set forward toward his kingdom and government with all expedition possible: carying along with him diverse sorts of cattell, poultrery, and other things necessarie for the maintaining and conservation of mankind (which kind of things were all the riches & treasures that men desired to possesse in those daies;) and thus with all his traine, familie, and followers, hee taketh shipping in the sea called Mare major, and in the end, by the favorable assistance of prosperous winds, he arrived within the confines of Gaule, which was some seven & thirtie yeares after his first being there with his grandfather Noe, and about eightscore and foure yeares after the deluge: by by which it may be understood, That this Samothes the fourth sonne of Japhet, was little lesse than seven score yeares of age, when he now last visited the country.

Samothes therefore now entred into his own kingdom with his wife, children, and followers, and also his horses, kine, and other things necessarie, began to settle himselfe therein, and to give out edicts and breefe commaunds what he would have done and performed in this his coun-tre: which was done in the yeare after the flood above written, and about two thousand fourescore and thirteene yeares before the incarnation of our Lord Iesus Christ.
The country was very much peopled by this time, and great encreases of all other things there were found upon his now comming (for it was now seven and thirtie yeares past since Noe left people there first to inhabit and multiply, which in such a time grew to great abundance of all things whatsoever.) His welcome and entertainment was wonderous gladly accepted of those people and men of the country, who acknowledged him as their Lord, their Patriarke, their cheefe, and their Saturne; which names in those daies were given as titles only of honor, excellence, and dignitie, as Zenophon in his Æquivocals also sayth:

Saturni dicuntur familiarium nobilium regum, qui urbes condiderunt Primogeniti eorum, vocantur Ioves, & Iuvones: vero Nepotes eorum Hercules fortissimi & cetera.

It may now very well be imagined, that those people having so long time lived without a governour, king, or particular commander, must of necessitie be very rude, G uncivile, uncivile, obstinat, and barbarous, living onely according to the lawes of Nature, and following their owne wils, desires, and concupiscence. Yet notwithstanding, Samothet by faire and gentle demeanures & mild cariages, so wooon their hearts unto him, that they became easily reclaimed, and brought to be docible and obedient to what precepts or commaunds were imposed upon them: and upon this hee devised lawes and ordinances for domesticke conversation, which he caused to bee made plaine unto the people, who at the first something wondered at so straunge alterations, having so many yeares together lived without any cheefe, or any lawes to curbe or bridle their naturall fantasies and disordinat affections. And these lawes were made in the fourth yeare of the raigne of Ninus, the third king of Babylon, at what time also Tuyson the Gyant, his uncle, king of Almaine, and Tuball king of Spaine, did the like, instructing their people very industriously in the rules of Philosophie, Physicke, and Astronomie, which they themselves had learned of their grandfather Noe and their father Iaphet. And if it bee here demaunded, what kind of writings they then used, Berosus doth answer, that they were certaine Phœnician characters & letters (which also were used in Armenia) which were very like unto those which Cadmus long time after brought from Phœnicia into Greece, and therefore Julius Caesar in his sixt booke of Commentaries sayth, That the Gauls did use in those times Greeke letters for their manner of writing: but undoubtedly, those characters were found long time before they were ever knowne in Greece, as Zenophon and many other authors confidently doe affirme.

Samothet, surnamed Dis, living thus in all tranquillitie and and peaceable securitie among his people, ceased not dayly to possesse their hearts with strong opinions of the worth and value of learning, for it is written, that hee was the wisest and most learned prince in the world in those times, as Berosus also alloweth, when he thus sayth:

Samothet, qui & Dis vocatur, Celtas colonias fundavit, nec erat quis etate illa isto sapientior, ac propterea Samothet dicitur est.

Among other his rules of Philosophie and learning, one was (beeing the cheefest) hee taught the people, That the soules of men were immortall; which before they hardly beleaved, as men dwelling in the shade of ignorance, and invellped with darke mists of error. After he had thus established lawes and ordinances for the good government of his country, and all his people enjoying peaceably the fruits of quietnesse: after the end of seven and fortie yeares, he rendered up unto Nature that debt which could not be any longer kept backe and detained; and left his eldest sonne (called Magus) inheritor unto his kingdome and government, which was in the one and fiftieth yeare of the raigne of Nynus the third king of Babylon, and when his father Samothet had commaunded that countrey seven score & five yeares, being at his death about three hundred yeares of age, or much thereabout. This Samothet was of that esteeme in those dayes, and so generally revered and loved for his vertues through all that countrey, that the Gauls or Frenchmen, even unto the time of Julius Caesar, boasted and gloried of nothing so much, as that they were descended and issued from him, so highly was he possessed of the peoples hearts, in the greatest opinion of truest love, the which thing also Iulius Casar in the sixth booke of his Commentaries more copiously remembreth. In his time also the sects of Philosophie first tooke their beginning and originall in Europe, and were called Samothees, which were men studied and expert in all letters, humane and divine; contrarie to the opinion of many, who write, that Greece was the first mother and bringer forth of arts and sciences. But Diogenes Laertius, in the beginning of his booke entituled, The lives of the Philosophers, contradicteth those suppositions, saying: Philosophiam à Ba: baris initia sumpisse complures auctores asserunt, constat enim apud Persas claruisse Magos, apud Babilonios & Assirios floruisse Caldeos, apud Celtas & Gallos Druidas, & qui Samothesi dicuntur. Magus, the eldest sonne of the Patriarke and Saturne, Samothes surnamed Dis, began now to take upon him the rule and commaund of this his countrey so left unto him by rightfull succession from his father, in the three hundred yeare after the flood, after the nativitie of the Patriarke Abraham eight yeares, and before the birth of Christ two thousand and seventene yeares. This Magus was a prince of great wisdom, learning and judgement, and also a great builder, as the interpretation of his name delivereth us: for this word Magus, in the Scythian tongue signifieth a builder or erecter; and in the Persian language, a Philosopher or a wise man. And Berosus in his booke of Time thus sayth of him: Nini LI. anno, apud Celtas regnavit Samothis filius Magus, a quo oppida plurima posita sunt in ea regione: by which it may be gathered, that hee was the first that ever in that country caused any villages, cities townes.

townes or houses to bee built and erected, for before that time men lived altogether in the fields, under the umbrages of trees and covertures of some pleasant groves. Iohannes Annius di Viterba in his Commentaries upon Berosus, sayth, That this word Magus signifieth in that tongue which first was used in that countrey of Gaule, as much, as a pallace, house, or mansion: which opinion challengeth unto it selfe the stronger probability, for that with Ptolomie in his Cosmographie you shall find; that most of the most auncient townes in that country ended with this word Magus: as in Aquitaine, Noviomagus; in the province of Lyons, Neomagus; in Gallia Belgica, Rhotomagus, which is now the citie of Roan in Normandie: there is also Beibetomagus, Vindomagus, and many others, whose names doe end in this word Magus; as also Nimegham in Guelderland, was called likewise Noviomagus. By all these instances it is made apparent, that this Magus, the sonne of Samothes, was the first that reduced & gathered together the people of that countrey into villages, townes, and boroughs. And further, either of his life, or the certaine time or continuance of his raigne and government, it hath not been by any allowed author or ancient writer capitulated.

Magus king of Fraunce the first that ever built townes in that country, and caused them to be inhabited

After Magus, succeeded one of his sons called Sarron, the third king of Fraunce, who excelled in the studie of letters, and governed his people with great mildnes, clemencie, and uprightnesse; and he was the first that erected universities or publicke schooles of learning: and of him also came a sect of Philosophers called Sarronides, as Diodorus Siculus in his sixth booke of Antiquities affirmeth, thus saying: Sunt apud Celtas Theologi, ac Philosophi quos vocant Sarronidas, qui precipue ab eis coluntur, nam mori est apud illos nullum absque Philosopho sacrificium facere, &c. For in those daies Philosophers and men of learning were regarded with great reverence, zeale, and gracious respect; and nothing there, of any import was concluded or agreed upon without their privities consent or advise therein.

Vnto the kingdome of Fraunce after Sarron, came Dryus, Sarrons eldest sonne, unto whom Berosus ascribeth this title: Apud Celtas Dryus peritia plenus. Hee began to raigne foure hundred and tenne yeares after the generall deluge, which was about two hundred five & fiftie yeares after the first foundation and inhabitation of the kingdome of Fraunce. Hee was deeply seene in principles of Philosophie, & very skilfull in many other sciences. And it is very credibly delivered by many very grave and learned writers, that he built the cittie of Dreux in Normandie, and that of his name came the sect of Philosophers, which were called Dryydes, which were wondrous learned Divines, Augurers, Magicians, and Sacrificers: but such their oblations and sacrifices in these their dayes of blindnesse, were performed with such inhumane and ungodly fashions, with the effusion and shedding of human bloud in that lamentable and cruell manner, as is too straunge to be reported: which unnaturall and impious custome, was abolished and cleane put downe by the first Romane Emperours, Augustus, and Drusus Claudius, as Suetonius Tranquilius, Iulius Caesar, and Plinie, more directly have particularized the same.

After the death of this king Dryus, his sonne (called Bardus) raigned in his place, & was the fift king of France. This Bardus was the first deviser and inventor of rimes, songs, songs, and Musicke, of whome the Poets and Rhethoricians first tooke their sect, which were called also Bardes, as Diodorus Siculus in his sixt booke more at large remembreth. And these Poets and singers were held in that revered regard in those times among those people, that if upon the instant encounter of the battels of the enemies on both parts, these Poets had stept and put themselves in betweene both the armies, they had for that present time recalled their furious intendments, and beene mollified with the pleasant persuasive tongues of these eloquent Rhethoricians and sweet-singing Poets, as Berosus in one place sayth to the same purpose: Etiam apud agrestiores barbaros ira cedit sapientia & Mars reveretur musas.

The debt due unto Nature being fully satisfied by this king Bardus (for no quillit or evacuation whatsoever may avoid it) his eldest sonne called Longho was called upon to undertake that which his father had left hereditarie unto him: of whome, no extraordinarie memorable thing is left by fame unto the sonnes of time, nor any authoritie of any great antiquarie possesseth us with his worthinesse vertues or perfections: it is only supposed, that before his death he built the citie of Langres, which we call in Latin Civitas Lingonensis. And hee had a sonne called Bardus the younger, which was the seventh king of Fraunce, and began to commaund some three hundred and one and fortie yeares after the foundation and enpeopling of this countrey of Fraunce. And it is very probable, that of these two kings Longho and Bardus, the first originall and beginning of the people called Lombards took their being and name, for they are entearmed in Latine Lombardi, bardi, which nation, although at the first they were extracted and descended out of Almain (now called Germanie) yet they bare domination and rule for the space of two hundred yeares and more in Italie, even untill the time of king Charlemaine, who absolutely deprived them of all command, power, and authoritie in that countrey round about.

The eight king of Fraunce, was Lucus, the sonne of Bardus the younger, of whom it is written (as Ptolomy and others doe affirme) the people called Luces or Lucenses (since inhabiting about the cittie of Paris) tooke their name and originall. Of him also, writers have beene very sparing to speake of, more than that hee begat a son called Jupiter Celtes, the ninth king of Fraunce, and father to the faire and beautiful gyantesse Galathen, whom before wee so largely spoke of and remembred. And it is by computation and due reckoning found, that since the first Saturn and king of Fraunce called Samothes surnamed Dis, unto the raige of Jupiter Celtes, were about four hundred years. And now having thus lineally drawne the succession of every king of this countrey, since the first inhabitation thereof untill this Jupiter Celtes, and so consequently unto his sonne in law, Hercules of Lybia, now the tenth king of Fraunce; we will proceed with him (now employed about his affaires in Italie) and with his issue and posteritie, as it is delivered by authours of great worth, learning, and authoritie.

It hath been before somewhat touched, how Hercules passing through those mountainous places of the countrey of Savoy, at length arrived in Italie, where (having a puissant armie) hee presently fell to wars with the Gyants called called Lestrigones, most bloudie, cruell, and oppressive tyrants, and the murderers or consenting aidants unto the death of his father Osyris (surnamed Jupiter Iustus.) With these powerfull commaunders in that countrey, he entertained many fights, and found them very resolute, & prepared to endure the uttermost of his mightinesse and strength: yet in the end, after a ten yeares wars he victoriously triumphed over them, and utterly razed out all their issue and posteritie whatsoever: and the place wherein his last battell against these Gyants, was fought in, retaineth still his old name, and is yet called, The valley of the Gyants; which is hard adjoyning unto the cittie called Tuscanelia in Tuscania. These civile & intestine broiles being thus valiantly and successfully appeased, Hercules remained a quiet and peaceable possessor of all the countrey of Italie, wherein he reigned and continued for the space of twenty yeares, much about the time that his father Osyris, his grandfather Cham, and his great grandfather Noe, had there commaunded: in which time hee bestowed many gracious and commodious good tunnes upon the people of that countrey, and built and erected many gallant and famous cities, although the most part of them bee at this day by the all consuming tyrannie of Time ruined, spoiled, and decayed. He also at this time caused the Island of Sardinia to be peopled, frequented, and inhabited, which untill that time lay wast, depopulate, and barbarous: and in this place hee appointed a ruler called Iolans to command as under him, that countrey; and those people so committed unto him. Hee likewise caused through most part of Italie (especially in the moorish & wettest places thereof) many ditches and trenches to bee cast up, that thereby the palludious meres and standing lakes, might find passages to emptie their floods, and that the fields and baltures by that meanes might be preserved drie, and be made more fit for agriculture, tillage, and other necessarie encreases for the generall profit and good of all the whole countrey thereabouts: and of him the river Arnus taketh name, for Hercules was also surnamed Musarnus: and he lived for the most part of the time that he spent in that countrey, in a cittie called Fesula in Tuscania, which citie even at this day (though not in that glory as heretofore) giveth the armes of Hercules.

Italie being thus freed from the servitude wherein it lived of those ungodly and uncivile Gyants, and beeing now brought to a generall quietnesse, ease, and prosperous estate, Hercules determined with himselfe to send for both of his eldest sonnes, to establish the one in the principallitie of Italie, & the other in the kingdome of France; and hee to take his journey once againe into Spaine (to which countrey hee was much addicted) there to live privately, and to spend the rest of his yeares to come, in peace pleasantnesse, and in all content. Whereupon hee dispatched messengers to his wite Galathea (then remaining in Fraunce, as hath been before spoken of) to send him presently his sonne Galatheus, being now of mans estate, and very able to beare armes. Other messengers were dispatched into Scythia (now called Tartaria) there to seek out his eldest sonne Tuscus, then remaining with the queene Araxa, queene of Scythia, inhabiting those countries which lie upon the flood Tanais, and by the moores and water-lakes called Meotides. Vpon the commandement of king Hercules, Galathea his wife presently sent unto him him his son Galatheus into Italie, accompanied with the greatest men of Fraunce, who was very joyously welcomed unto his father with great feasts and signes of gladnesse: for he was now growne up unto a gallant big proportion of bodie and comely feature, and was also of a very gentle and gracious disposition, mild in his demeanures, and yet majesticall and of a spirit-promising aspect, throughout all his countenance. Not long after him arrived his elder brother Tuscus from Tartaria, who also was of a mightie corpulencie and extraordinarie large stature, whom indeed Hercules had begot in the very prime of his youth and vigorous lustinesse. Vpon the meeting of these two, a great court or assembly of great lords and princes was held in all pompe, glorie, and magnificence: where, in the presence of all the noble Lords and Barons of diverse countries and governments, as of Ægypt, Lybia (now called Affrica) Spaine, Fraunce, Italie, and Tartaria, with great solemnities, rites, and ceremonies, Tuscus was created and established the sole king, Saturne, and commander of all the countrey of Italie, and hee was there invested in the dignitie of Cæsar, that is as much to say, as Jupiter crowned, or Patriarke of Tuscania: & the yonger brother Galatheus, aged about six and thirtie yeares or thereabouts, was preferred also at that time unto the rule and government of the kingdome of Fraunce. All which ceremonies were performed with great triumph, state, and royaltie, and kept in the citie of Viterba, in the yeare after the universall inundation of the world, six hundred and five and twentie, before the foundation of Troy nine score and one yeares, and before the incarnation of Christ a thousand six hundred fortie eight. These things thus solemnely consummated, and Hercules voluntarily disposing himselfe of these two such imperiall crowns. After he had delivered some instructions & principles of good government to these new created kings, Tuscanus and Galathens, after a generall conge of them all, he took his journey towards Spaine, to the great discontent and grieffe of all the cheefe Barons, and also of the Plebeians, throughout all the countrey of Italie: but being now arrived in Spaine, he found his son Hispanus, which hee himselfe had before established in that kingdome, to be dead, who had reigned onely seventene yeares: and that after him succeeded his nephew Hispanus, the seventeenth king of Spaine, and the first of that name, who called the countrey after his owne name, Hispania, which name it ever since hath retained: for before that time it was called Hberia. This Hispanus raigned afterwards some two and thittie yeares or neare thereabouts, as most writers and Cronographers of Spaine doe agree. And in this kings raigne, about the nineteenth yeare thereof (as is before written) arrived Hercules in that countrey, now very aged, and of many yeares, where hee continued three yeares with his nephew, without any command or place, in as great content, ease, and quiet as might bee, for hee had now given over the desire of rule and principaltie, and gloried in nothing so much, as that he by his owne valour, prowesse, and labours, had conquered such gallant countries to dispose of as hee himselfe thought good, and to give to his children to enjoy as their rightful inheritances: for indeed hee was the Monarch and prince almost of all the world, and had attained unto such his height of glorie and fame, not by oppressions, tyrannie, or unlawfulnessse, but by the subduing.

subduing of wicked and ungodly gyants; the deposing of all usurpers and bloudie governours, & by the abolishing and rooting out of all divellish and inhumane customes then observed in those daies among the poore and faith-wanting vulgars in those times of error. In these his times of privatensse and retired living which he spent in Spaine, he builded and caused to bee created many great townes, cities, and villages; for which cause the people of that countrey still call him Hercules the builder. Besides this, also hee gave and addicted himselfe to the finding out of the natures of strange hearbs, and to the studie of Astronomie, and the Magicke art, wherein he wondrous deeply was scene, and excellently well read; but hee never applied the use thereof but unto the good and generall commoditie of the countrey. Hee found out many remedies and enchauntments against the poyson of serpents and many other venomous beasts, then abounding in that countrie in great plentie, and by which the inhabitants before were greivously molested and exceedingly troubled. Hee also performed there many other memorable things of great worth, value, and import, as Higinus and many other very learned writers doe affirme. Not long after, his nephew Hispanus, king of Spaine, died without issue, & left none of his owne blood to inherite the kingdome after him: whereupon by the generall entreatie of all the whole land, and by publicke consent, the command and government of that countrey was imposed upon Hercules, whome the people for his vertues, faire demeanures, and good government, did indeed very highly affect and reverence: and here (having so fit an occasion to speake of the originall and antiquitie of this countrey of Spaine) wee will for a while leave him, undertaking the charge once again and the commaund and government thereof: and we will begin with the first king of Spaine, and so by succession and lineall descent from one to another, as far as Berosus, Eusebius, Solynus, and Diodorus Siculus have proceeded therein, and untill wee come to the raigne of this Hercules.

The very first inhabitation and peopling of this countrey of Spaine, was by those people that came from the other side of the Caspian sea, called Iberi, Persæ, Phenices, and Pæni, as Plinie in the third booke of his naturall hystorie doth alleadge; as also Marcus Varro, and Cato in his originals doe affirme the same; wholly condemning the Grecians of vaine glorie and ignorance, to write, that Hercules, Pirenes, Lusus, and Pan were the first that ever inhabited in this countrey: but of the colonies therefore of those people before mentioned, it is very certain, that Spaine took first her originall, as also those other Islands round about, is called Sicilia, Corsica, Sardinia, and Balears: and the Island Corsica was so called of the people Corsi, which the Grecians tearme Cynnum or Cyrum, but the Persians and Hebrewes Corlum: and after these people, the Gothes and Alani came and lived in Spaine long time, and continued for the most part of them untill this very present wherein wee now live, from whence and from the rest before mentioned, it is delivered for certaine by many auncient, grave, and learned writers, this countrey of Spaine deriveth her first beginning and principall foundation.

S. Ierome, Eusebius, Iosephus, and many other approved good authors, doe all consent and agree, That Tuball the first first sonne of Iaphet, the son of Noe, was the first that ever was called by the name of king in that countrey of Spaine, and that he was also the first that erected & built townes and cities, and prescribed bounds and limits in the same; which as Berosus sayth, was after the floud a hundred three and fortie yeares, and in the twelfth yeare of the raigne of Nembroth, the Babylonians Saturne and ruler; which was before the foundation of Troy six hundred thirtie seven yeares, and before the nativitie of Christ two thousand two hundred yeares. The great citie which he called after his owne name (Tuball) is in Bætica, as Pomponius Mela affirmeth, as also Strabo averreth the same. This kings cheefe studie and delight was in pasturage, in flockes of sheepe, and heards of cattell, wherein in those times men repoted great contentment, pleasure, and felicitie: & such his studie the people (called Arameans) entearmed by the name of Tharaconem, which is as much to say, as Pastorum congregationem, The meeting together or assembly of sheepeheards, as S. Ierome and the Thalmudists of the Jewes interprets it: and of the same the great citie of Tharacona is called, as Saguntum first tooke her name of Sagus, the builder and erecter thereof. He began also first to set downe lawes, precepts, and directions unto his people, and to possesse them with the opinion of good obedience unto their prince, and perswaded them by fair and gentle meanes to the embracement of a civile and quiet life and conversation: and this, Berosus saith was performed and done in the fourth yeare of Ninus king of Babylon, as before in some places hath been a little remembered: and Strabo sayth, That in the tenth yeare of the same Ninus king of Babylon, and in the age of Tuball one hundred dred and fifteene yeares, Noe (surnamed Ianus) coming out of Africa and Phoenicia, arrived in Spain, & brought thither with him two colonies, called Noelas and Noceglas; although Plinie in his third booke of naturall hystorie, in the six and twentieth chapter thereof calleth them Nocegas and Noelas: and in this countrey were they planted, and remained with great multiplication, encrease and abundance. This Tuball reigned in this his government, untill the nine and fortieth yeare of the raigne of Ninus, and from the first inhabitation of Spain a hundred and five and fiftie yeares: and in this kings government was the Patriarke Abraham borne, which was just by all nearest computation, towards the end of his raigne, and in the foure and fortieth yeare of the before specified Ninus king of Babylon.

Vnto Tuball succeeded his sonne called Iberus, in the government and kingdome which he had left him to enjoy: which was from the flood two hundred ninetie & nine yeares, from the first enpeopling of Spain a hundred fiftie six, before the erection of Troy five hundred thirtie and one, and before the birth of Christ two thousand and sixteene yeares. And of this Iberus (as Marcus Varro alleadgeth) the countrey was generally called Iberia, as it was afterwards Celtiberia, of certaine people called Celtes, inhabiting long after in Fraunce, as many authentike hystorians doe affirme: and of this king also the river Iberus tooke her name, and was so called. This flood, as Solyms, Albertus Magnus, and Diodorus Siculus averre, beginneth his first Spring, and taketh his head under the hills called Montes Pyrenæi, which lately before we remembred, and from thence runs winding and crooked like the shape of a serpent serpent or snake through the promontorie of Perada, and so tumbleth downe amaine into the sea called Pelagus Belear. And this king Iberus reigned untill the three and thirtieth yeare of the rule of Semiramis, which is about seven and thirtie yeares or much thereabouts, as Eusebius accounteth it.

The third king of Spaine, according to the opinion of most hystorians, was Iubalda, of whose name the hill called Iubalda, was so called, as Berosus affirmeth, although in Ptolomie it is written Iubeda, and by the successions of times, corruptibly Gybalta, by which name at this time the countrey doth acknowledge it. This Iubalda began to enter into his kingdome in the foure and thirtieth yeare of the raigne of Semiramis: from the worlds inundation three hundred thirtie six, from the birth of the holy Patriarke Abraham foure and fottie, from the first inhabitation of Spain two hundred wanting seven yeares, before the building of Troy foure hundred fourescore and foure yeares, and before the birth of our Saviour Christ one thousand nine hundred fourescore and one yeares. And in this kings raigne the ever-famous Hercules of Lybia was borne, which was before the birth of the Grecian Hercules, of whom so many grave authors have written and bene deceived, almost seven hundred yeares: of the difference of which, because it hath bred such an incurable skar of error among very learned and old writers, I think it shall not be much impertinent in this place something to particularize. Of the number therefore of those men which were called by the name of Hercules, Varro and many other authors alleadge to bee at the least three and fottie severall names, but the most famous & renowned were only two.

of which, the first and most worthie was called Egyptus Thebanus, or Hercules Licius; the second, Alceus Græcus, the son of Alcmena and Amphitrio, as Diodorus Siculus, Herodotus, and many others affirme, who report also, That there was a temple in Phœnicia buile and dedicated unto the first Hercules many years before the coming of this Hercules Græcus, the son of Amphitrio; and that also long after both these two (with the ancient Grecians) were held and worshipped in great reverence and adoration; but the one of them, being Hercules Egyptus (say they) was adored as a god, the other but as a mightie and famous conquerour. Cicero in his booke entituled de natura Deorum, setteth downe this Hercules also as a god, as Macrobius also and many others have opinionated the same. Diodorus Siculus in his first booke confidently alleadgeth, That this Hercules Græcus had not to name Hercules, which signifies heartie, but that his proper name was Alceus and also Heraclius, which interpreted, signifies Iunonis gloria; which opinion likewise Herodotus consenteth with, when in his second booke of histories hee affirmeth, that this word Hercules is not a Greeke word, but of the Egyptian language, and that the Grecians afterwards stole it from the right owner thereof, and unworthily attributed it unto this Alceus, the sonne of Amphitrio: which thing also Eusebius maintaineth, and sayth, That those famous and gallant exploits wherewith the world was so long possessed, and caried such universall admirations among all men, were misplaced and bestowed on a stranger, that came not neare the true merit and worthinesse of him whom it truly concerned; thereby cleane exempting & excepting this Alceus (Amphitrios sonne) from all interest or right unto any these so high and wonder worthy performances, as only particular and belonging unto this noble Hercules Egyptus or Libicus, the sonne of Osiris, called Iupiter Iustus (as Diodorus Siculus, Herodotus, St. Moses also, certainly doe report.) Unto him also the people of Lybia consecrated many triumphes, ceremonious observances, and generall feasts, as one for his valour and vertues honored and worshipped amongst them as a mighty and powerful god: so were they blinded from the true sight and understanding of knowledge, in those times of darknesse, error, and superstition. And these people were first called Phœci or Phaetonci, as Iosephus and Iheronimus in his tenth chapter upon the booke of Genesis affirmeth. Unto this Hercules of Lybia were adjoynd also all these names (according to the Egyptian tongue) Her, Hercol, Arno, Misfarno, and AG; of which, hereafter occasion will present it selfe, further to expound, and more largely to speake of: but it is most unfallibly certaine, that this Hercules Egyptus or Libicus, was long before the times of the so much renowned Hercules of Greece: who indeed according to the writings of very many grave and learned authors, deserved not the least part of so many glorious praises and titles of honour, as the flattering and selfe-pleasing conceits of the Grecians have so amply and prodigally ascribed unto him: for he is by many authors set downe no other but a very pyrate on the sea, a robber and bloudie oppressor, where he could find out any bootie or advantage to shew his power, wil, and mightinesse; much unlike the proceedings that victorious and vertuous conqueror Hercules of Lybia: to approve which to be no detraction, but memorious notes of forepassed learned writers, Ma- with that famous Priest and Historian of Egypt, thus sayth: Constat hanc Herculem Græcum dolo non bello Lacedæmontem nil eiusmodi, suspicantem occidisse, & primum ex maximis piratis extitisse, quanquam virum dnoino & admirabilis robore preeditum, &c. Whereby it is very apparene by this authoritie and many others of like worth and antiquitie, that this Hercules the Grecian was but some famous robber or pyrate, living for the most part among the Argonauts, men excelling in warlike discipline, and armed with armours of yron and other like furnitures for the wars, as Eusebius sayth: *Hercules Alceus affuit domito jaro orbe, & legibus & regibus formato, & instituto, & formidoloso ferro invento: whereas contrariwise, Hercules Egypcius lived in times of ignorance, in respect of those knowledges, when the use of armour or yron was unfound out, the furie of warre not then felt, and in times of new-rising tumults, not as then ripened or growne to any head or maturitie. His armour was the skins of wild beasts, and such like accoustrements was he habited with: which also is attributed unto Hercules Alceus, as having a Lions skin and a great club in his hands, but they are among the rest of the fables which the Grecians used, inserted: for it is nothing likely, that the use of yron beeing in those times found out, he would have used any such inferiour meanes of defence for the safetie of his bodie. This assertion also maketh cleane contrarie against him: for Hercules of Lybia was borne before the destruction of Troy (according to the computation of the Egyptian yeares) above tenne thousand yeares, but Alceus not fully two thousand, as Diodorus in his first booke of Time alleadgeth: which manner of computation and reckoning of the Egyptians, if* we will reduce to the order and rule observed by the Chaldeans, Scythians, Hebrewes, and Latins, which is by the circular circumference and revolution of the Sunne, accounting it as we now reckon, we shall find, that he was borne presently after the king of Babylon called Ninus, which is according to our latter observation, some eight hundred yeares before the overthrow and ruine of Troy; which maketh up the number & proportion of ten thousand yeares, held and observed among the Egyptians: by which we may perceive the great distance of time that was betwene these two famous personages, Hercules Egypcius or Libicus, the sonne of Osiris, furnamed Jupiter Insus, and Hercules Græcus or Alceus (or as some hold) the son of Amphitrio and Alcmena: or the son (by a adulterous meanes) as some others doe thinke, of one called Jupiter Græcus. But having now thus farre digressed from the maine entendment, we will returne to the prosecuting thereof.

The continuance of the raigne of the above written Inbalda, king of Spaine, dated from the foure and thirtieth yeare of the raigne of Semiramis, the Babylonian Emperesse, untill the eighteenth yeare of Arius; which is in the whole about the time of threescore and foure yeares, as by the diligent & carefull collections both of Eusebius and Berosus, is clearely approved. And about this time (the Patriarke Abraham, beeing about the age of a hundred yeares) is borne his son Isaack, as all histories for the most part give record and mention. In the government of this king Inbalda, no memorable act done in that countrey, is left written by historians.

Vnto the kingdome of Spaine, next after him, succeed ded Brygus, which was in the eighteenth yeare of the late specified Arius, the Babylonians sixt king; which is from the first inhabitation of Spaine, two hundred threescore and seven yeares, and before the foundation of Troy four hundred and thirtie. This word Brygus with the Arameans and Armenians, is called Castellum. And the Etruscians at this day (with whome many words of the Aramean language remaine) call a castle Bricola, by changing the letter g into c. This king Brygus (as Berosus & other writers affirme) founded and erected many townes and great castles in the kingdome of Spaine, as Ptolomie also copiously hath delivered; as in the countrey of Lusitania, there are castles called at this day Laccobryga, Micobryga, and others. And in the province of Taracona, a towne called Brygantum, Volubryga, and many others, founding and ending after the name of the king Brygus. Plinie sayeth in his fift booke of naturall hystorie, that many old writers do affirme, That a certain people called Brygi in Europe travelled into Asia, and there builded a citie and called it Brygios, which afterwards by chaunging the letter B into P, was called Phrygios; and that the Phrygians afterwards from these people tooke their first originall and being, of whome issued that famous progenie of the Trojans, so gloriously renowned throughout the world: and this king Brygus reigned in all securitie and peace untill the first yeare of the reigne of Balanus, the eight king of Babylon, which was about two and fiftie yeares or near therabouts.

The first king of Spaine was Tagus (as Berosus and Diodorus deliver) and he began his rule and government before the nativitic of Christ a thousand eight hundred threescore threescore and five yeares, before the building of Troy threescore and eightene yeares, after the first peopling of Spaine three hundred and nine yeares. And of this kings name that far-famed river Tagus taketh her name: in which (as Plinie and Solyanus report) were found many golden sands, heaped together in many places of that river. This king with many authours is called also Tagum Orma, and Moyse by sincereicall composition, rearmeth him Tagorma, as Ptolomie and many other writers of great worth and credite, more particularly have spoken of the same: and this Tagus reigned in the kingdome of Spain, about the time of thirtie yeares, by all due computation and conferring of consent of times, and as Berosus affirmeth the same.

In the first yeare of the reigne of Armatrisis the ninth king of the Babylonians and Assyrians, the rule and government of the kingdome of Spaine fell and came unto Belus, of whom afterwards a great part of this countrey tooke her name, and was knowne by the name of Bericia. The Etruscians by transposition and division of z, call him Beatus, which with the Latines signifies happie or blessed. The Hebrewes derive this word Beris from Behin, which as S. Jerome interprets it, meaneth as much as, locus vite vite (id est) felicitatis optus, &c. and from hence it is likely, that in this countrey some supposed the Elesian fields to be, and so also thereby many other such like suppositions arose, which to decide, would here bee tedious, and too much digression from the matter intended. This king Belus reigned seven and thirtie yeares, as Berosus and other authours doe alleadge.

After him in the eight and thirtith yeare of Armatrisis above

above mentioned, Gerion (surnamed Afer) challenged to him the rule and domination of the country of Spain, wherein it is written, he governed with great tyrannie and oppression of the inhabitants thereof, intruding himselfe by violent and forcible means into the possession and government of that kingdome. This word Gerion signifies in the Hebrew tongue as much as advena in Latin, which he manifested more plainly by coming from Mauritania into this kingdome of Spaine, and ruling there like a straunget, according to his owne will, desire, and mightinesse. Berosus, as also Diodorus Siculus, doth affirme, That he had another name also, which in the Aramen & Mauritanian language was Deaba, in the Greeke Chryseo, in Latine Aureo, which first of all came of his great wealth and store of gold; in which he most wonderfully abounded in those daies: and this Gerion reigned thus in this his usurped authoritie untill the eight and twentieth yeare of the raigne of Balochus, the tenth king and ruler of Babylonia, which was about the tith of three & thirtie years or neare therabouts. Immediately after him three brethren together tooke the rule and government of this country of Spaine into their hands, which were called Deabi Dominum, which word (as S. Jerome expoundeth it) signifieth the cheefes or rulers of armies, and which wee call by the name of the three Gerions, being indeed the sons of the beforementioned Gerion, the last king and ruler of Spain. In the time when these three brethren thus reigned and ruled together, happened that generally known accident, which afterward the world so universally entertained from the report of loud-tongued Fame, which was, the untimely and unfortunat death of Ossis, surnamed Jupiter Instus; who who was most unreasonably and vilely murdered by his brother Typhus Egyptus, whose all-lamented death was afterward highly revenged by his sonne Hercules Lybicus, who instantly took up armes, and scoured almost all the countries of the world, untill hee had found out the authors of the murder of his father Ossis, upon whose bodie his angrie and wrathfull mind tooke in the end direfull and cruell revenge: at which time also (hee being in the pride and fulnesse of furie and choller) searcht out all corners and places of abode, where any such like bloudie and impious gyants, rulers, and commaunders, kept their tyrannicall and uncivile governments: among the rest, he slew Bufris in Phoenicia, Typhus the younger in Phrygia, Aylinus, a great commaunder on the sea in Croce, Antheus in Lybia, the Lestrigones in Italia, and afterwards, these three brethren called Geriones in Spaine, and also many others in many other places, as hath already heretofore beene spoken of. After the overthrow thus of these late specified Geriones, hee established and appointed to succeed them one called Hispalus, who now after these, instantly tooke upon him the government thereof.

Hispalus therefore (according to the report and affirmation of Berosus) now entered to take possession of the regaltie and principalltie of Spaine, which was from the flood five hundred fourescore and nine yeares before the erection of Troy two hundred one & fortie years, before the birth of Christ a thousand seven hundred twentie seven, and after the first finding out and peopling of Spain three hundred seven and fortie yeares. Of this Hispalus, the citie Hispalis first was erected and so entearmed; and he was the sonne of Hercules Lybicus, as many authours and writers of fame and great antiquitie have given in report unto the posteritie of time. He reigned and commanded over Spaine untill the very end of the reigne and government of Balesis, the Babylonians eleventh king, which was by just reckoning and account, the time of seventene yeares.

In the first yeare of the raignt of Altazes, the twelfth king of Babylonia, Hispanus the nephew of Hercules, was established king, and sole ruler over the dominions of Spaine, of whom the countrey then generally was called Hispania, which the mallice of time hath not yet worn out; but still it is knowne and called after the same name. After him, Hercules (comming out of Italic, fraught with yeares and many victories) took upon him by the election and suffrages of all the people, the rule & government thereof. And thus hath been lineally drawne forth the first inhabitation of the countrey of Spaine with the particular and right successions of the kings and commanders thereof, as hath been warranted and allowed by writers of great antiquitie and industrious Chronographers of Spaine: where we will now surcease to wade any further, having brought it unto the very times where wee last left our cheefe purpose and matter, and will goe forward, and proceed from hence untill wee shall nearer arrive at the time wherein Troy was first erected and founded, following herein the same manner of method and forme, with which wee first set forth, and meant to continue, unto the end (by the favourable permission and allowance of the divine Majestie.) Hercules therefore ruling thus in Spaine, built and erected many goodly cities and faire castles in that countrey, wherupon at this day in some auncient records and monumentall schedules of Spaine, you may read of another title given unto him, which is, Hercules edificator. He was called also by these names, as Her, Hercol, Arno, Musarno: and they thus signifie and are englished from the Hebrew tongue, as S. Jerome and others expound it: Her signifieth hairie, Hercol all covered over with haire, Arno signifieth a Lion, and Musarno the portraiture or effigies of a Lyon, and these names were thus ascribed unto him, for that he alwaies wore for his upper garment the hairie skins of Lyons, Beares, Leopards, and other such like beasts, and for that on his shield or rarguet was depainted and drawne the shape and forme of a Lyon, and which, in all his wars and attempts hee alwaies caried about him: & with some he was called the knight of the ramping Lyon. The town of Vetulonia, called also Viterbe, caused the picture of Hercules to be stamped and imprinted on their coine: which continued unto the time of the raignt and government of the last king of the Lumbards, who then abollished the remembrance thereof by any such representation or means of memorie. After the time of some nineteene yeares or thereabouts, as most writers doe alleadge, having governed with all love and obedience of the people, Hercules died; leaving all those countries thereabouts heavily lamenting the losse and departure of so noble and gallant a conqueror; which was about the time of his owne age three hundred and fiftie yeares, and after he had reigned and commanded in Fraunce, Italic, and Spaine, threescore and seven yeares. In solemne remembrance of whose generally deplored death, the people of Spaine erected most sumptuous and costly monuments, and bestowed upon him a wonderfull rich and stately tombe; which as some hold, was built hard by that place, which as we now call them, the Gades, pillars, or columns of Hercules are seated upon, being not far from the famous streights of Gibraltar. Vnto him also after his death they attributed very godlike honors, and tearms of veneration and reverence, so was hee possessed while hee lived among mortals, with the love and opinion of all those people therabouts, and wheresoever else he had governed and commanded. And more of this so far renowned conquerour Hercules shall not at this time bee declared, whose victories, triumphes, & exploits would indeed require a small volume of themselves, being so many, so glorious, & so worthis, deserving in the perfection of their owne merit to be insculpt in the brasle leaved booke of time-resisting and endlesse perpetuities. And now we will revert our pen to speake of his two famous sons, Tuscus king of Italie, and Galathews king of Fraunce, and of their issue and posteritie. But first is to be understood, that vnto the kingdome of Spaine next after Hercules, succeeded Hesperus, beeing the twelfth king and governor thereof, & who was brother vnto the renowned Atlas, whome hereafter occasion will bee presented to speake and entreat of.

It hath been before declared and mentioned, how that the great Monarch and Emperour Hercules dispossest himselfe voluntarily of two royall & mighty kingdomes, placed and instituted therein his two sons, Tuscus and Galathews: who long time after lived reciprocally, & reigned together in their severall commaunds and government, in all peace, quiet, and tranquillitie. And to shew and manifest this their love and agreement the more, Tuscus freely freely bestowed and gave vnto his brother Galathews the great Island of Sicilia, as then appertaining & belonging vnto the crowne and kingdome of Italie, and which was then altogether desolate and disinhabited (the race and generation of Cham, Noes son, the first commander thereof, being now extinct and perished.) Vnto this Island, Galathews made a journey, carying with him great numbers and abundance of people, and all things necessary for the inpeopling and inhabiting thereof: which people and nation he afterwards and from thence forth called after his owne name Galathenes; and erected and built also a very great citie there, calling it by the name of Cenegalatha, of which citie likewise, Plinie in his fourth booke of Naturall hystorie doth there entreat and mention. And it was held in those daies to be the greatest and cheefest honour that might bee, to authorise and license any to build and erect any citie, and to call it after his owne name: for the denominating of which, no man neither could give any leave or authoritie, but those which were established in place and office of Coritus, that is, the Patriarke, Iupiter, or cheefe king and commander of that country, as Tuscus then was, being the sole king and ruler over all Italie and all those territories adjoyning thereunto. And this grace and favour Galathews tooke in great thankfulness and all kind acceptance, endeavouring by all means possible to be found gratefull for so high a favor received. After all matters were well settled and orderly disposed in this new erected government of Sicilia, Galathews returned backe againe into his countrey of Fraunce, where with all signs and apparent tokens of a long wished welcome, hee was joyfully received of his people in all the provinces round about, where we must now leave him for a while, to speak of his brother Tuscus, and of his affaires and negotiations in his government and charge.

This Tuscus (as is before declared) was the sole and absolute King, Patriarke, and Jupiter of all the dominions of Italie; of whose name also a cheefe province of that kingdome then tooke her name, and was called Tuscania, and by the favourable good will of the tyrant Time (who is wont to blot out all reliques and tokens of antiquitie) it yet retaineth the same: in which particular countrey, hee for the most part made his continuall abode & residence, which before that time was called Etruria, & before that, Ianicula, and the people thereof Ianigenes, which is as much to say, as the issue of Ianus: it was also called Oenotria, Hesperia, Apenina, and many others, according to the greatnesse or will of any such cheefe or famous king so commaunding and ruling over it. Dionysius Halicarnassensis, writeth, That the countrey Hetruria (taken oftentimes for the whole and entire kingdome of Italie) was also called Comera, of Comerus, Japhets son; and it had to name also Razenua, Thuscia, and Thussa, and at this day Italia, as hereafter shall be declared. Berosus further sayth, That at the first peopling and inhabiting thereof, it was called Vimbria of the people Vimbri, which heretofore we have somewhat touched, as also Pelasgia of the people Pelasgi (taken also sometimes for the inhabitants of a countrey in Greece.) Besides all these, it was also knowne by the name of Tarrhenia, as many authors of great and approved knowledge in matters of antiquitie, have more amply delivered, which opinion also should be more easily entertained, if wee will but diligently marke the diverse and and severall names given & attributed unto other countries, after the same fashion and manner: for first concerning the people of France, they were first of all called Samothei, of Samothes their king, then Celti, then Gallarij, after that Belgae, of their king and Patriarke Beligius, after that Galli, and since that Francigenæ or Franci. The names in like manner of the people of Germanie varied and differed very often and severally: For the first name that ever that people received, were Tuyscones, of Tuyscon one of Noes sonnes, the first that ever was king and ruler over that country. After that they were called Gambrivij, then Inghæones, after that, Isteones, Suevi, and Vandali; then also Theranes, Theutontes, Vindelici, Vandalici, after that Alemanni, and last of all, of the Romanes (as some hold) they were generally called Germani. So that by these it is plainly shown, how almost all countries and nations have at diverse times been diversly and differently called: by the occasion of which, many writers that have not indeed seriously and laboriously lookt into fragments of old and authentike fathers, for the derivations and first originals of cities and countries, have been infected with some disease or other of ignorance and errour; by reason of which dangerous sicknesse, first creeping (though not perceived) into the heads of men learned and of authoritie, it hath proved universally mortall, to all those that have not invoked the aid of that good Physician, Industrie, throughout all the world wheresoever. And so now againe wee will returne to the place from whence we last of all set forth, which was from the matters and particulars which we handled of king Tuscus, sole ruler and commaunder of all the countrey of Italy, of whose actions.

actions or memorable atchevements, there is little read in any authors, onely it is writ, that hee first invented the order and dignitie of the Palladian knight hood, and instituted large priviledges and allowances for the maintenance of that new found ceremonie. And of any matter else which might challenge unto it selfe worth and extraordinarie commends, done and performed by him, few or no hystorians have written: onely hee left after him, his son Altheus inheritor & rightfull successor to his government and kingdome.

Altheus then, the son of Tiscon, began to take upon him the rule and commaund of Italie, presently after the death of his deceased father, which was the fourth yeare after the death of his grandfather Hercules in Spaine, who as you have heard, left inheritour unto him Hesperus, the brother of Atlas, for the governement of that countrey: which Hesperus had not there long reigned, but hee was expelled and driven out of his countrey, by violent and oppressive meanes by his brother Atlas the gyant, surnamed Italus: so that now hee was enforced to forsake the countrey, and to flie into Italie, in one part of which, hee afterward commaunded, and called it after his own name Hesperia, which name it long time afterwards retained. After this, Atlas Italus, not contented sufficiently with the principallitie and dominion of Spaine (as overambitiously thought) came also into Italie, and overswayed by his mightinesse and power all the country round about, and created and established himselfe king & ruler thereof, and called all the countrey generally after his owne name, Italia, by which it is at this day called, & in the kingdome of Spaine he appointed one of his sonnes to reign called

Sicorus,

Sicorus, which was now by just account the foureteenth king thereof. When these things were thus done, he went also into Sicilia, as Galathem before had done, and there for a while he rested himselfe, till at the length he returned againe backe into Italie, wherein afterwards he lived many yeates. This Italus Atlas by his descent was of the lineage of Japhet, and of his sonne Comerius Gallus, the first king of Italie; and it was hee, which according to the opinions of many, excelled most of all men then living, in the knowledge of Astrologie, for which cause, the base Poets fained, that he supported and upheld the heaven with his shoulders. Altheus all this while was suppressed and kept under by the mightinesse of this ruler, by reason whereof, hystories cannot speake of any worthe matter done or performed by him, onely it is written, he builded and created two very large and beautifull cities, one of them called Altera, the other Althea, with a castle also called after the same name. And this Altheus, the sonne of Tiscon before specified, was uncle unto Dardanus, the first builder and founder of Troy. Hee had also a sonne called Blescon, but it is not read, that hee was afterward Corius, that is, king of Italie, or commaunded in any extraordinary power and authoritie; but that this Atlas Italus created and established one of his owne sonnes, called Marges, in the dignitie and office thereof, wrongfully disinheriting the true heires that might lawfully have challenged the same: so that by this unjust meanes of usurpation & greatnesse, the line and issue of Hercules was debarted from the possessing and enjoying of what rightfully belonged unto them. Also he created and appointed his daughter called Rhoma, as dutchesse and commaundresse of the people and nation called Aborigines (of whome heretofore wee something spoke of) And this Rhoma was afterward married to a prince of Tuscane, of whom she had a son called after her owne name Rhomanos; who was the first that ever laid the first foundation of the cite of Rome; as Sempronius very confidently affirmeth, condemning all those which attribute the first founding thereof unto Romulus, who (sayth hee) indeed beautified and enlarged the same, but was not the first that laid the foundation thereof; and that his name Romulus (being himselfe found hard by that citie by wonderous accident) tooke his name of Rome, and not Roma of Romulus, as the above written authour Sempronius, a very sufficient writer, and some others also of allowed authoritie, have averred the same. And the interpretation of this word Rhomanos, as S. Ierome, the Talmudists, and many others doe expound it, is as much, as, Magna aut potens sublimitas; a mightie or powerfull height or glorie; being compounded of two severall words of the Aramean language; Roma, which interpreted, signifies sublimitas, and Nesson, which is validum or magnum: or as some understand it, it signifieth validum augurium, which is, a strong and infallible propheticie, which indeed the exceeding greatnesse & all subjugating power & mightinesse of that Empire did afterwards very fitly answer and make good, being raised unto that infinit greatnesse and highest perfection of soveraigntie, that it impelled almost the greater part of the world to sue unto her for favour, and to become tributarie in great taxes and impositions unto her seat & magnificence. And this citie also was called long after by the name of Valentia: of which, now wee will cease further to entreat, returning to the

the matter before handled of Atlas, surnamed Italus, now flourishing and commanding over Italie in great puissance, glorie, and mightinesse: who although (as it is already before specified) he bore great affection, favour, and love unto his sonne Morges, and had established him in the regaltie and kingdome of Italie, as Corinus, yet hee began in the end to thinke and meditate with himselfe how apparent and monstrous wrongs and indignities hee had offered to all the issue and posteritie of Hercules, in expelling Alibeu, and depriving his sonne Blascon of his right in the principallitie of that countrey; & in those thoughts and humors, hee caused to be called unto him Camboblascon, the sonne of the beforementioned Blascon, the sonne of Alibeu, and in lieu and recompence of all former and forepassed injuries, hee gave unto him one of his owne daughters in marriage and matrimoniall association, who was called Electra, with whome in dowrie hee gave all those townes and countries lying about the Alpes and the hether mountaines, nearest confining upon Italie: and upon this, presently after died. After whose death, his sonne Morges, possessed belike with holy and religious cogitations, acknowledging the mightie wrong and disparagement which his father had imposed on his brother in law Camboblascon, in depriving him of his rightfull succession, willingly and voluntarily despoiled himselfe of his crowne and commaund, and transferred it upon Camboblascon, whom presently hee caused to be created and established in the dignitie of Corinus, that is, the Jupiter or king of Italie; and so after that, contented himselfe to live privately and obscurely with his brother in law and sister Electra: with whome hee had not many yeares lived and conversed, but hee died, and paid Nature that debt which no sureties can put off, or be bound for: and so then Camboblascon was with more generall allowances of the people fully invested in his office and place of Coritus, which is as much to say, as Jupiter Coronatus, as I have already made known, and which I cannot almost too often expound; in that many have made so many and severall doubts and scrupules, What these Jupiter, Saturnus, and Hercules might meane? which names indeed are nothing else but titles of honour, Superioritie, and dignitie: and Jupiter was such, as in Egypt Pharoa, and in Rome Caesar, and as now their Pope: for Jupiter is as much as; Juvans pater: and Papa, Pater patriam. And whereas the superstitious people in those dayes honored and reverenced them as gods, it was nothing else, but for some excellencie and great dignitie they possessed, or for some great vertue, learning, and knowledge they were then endued with, as Fabius Pictor and Zenophon have delivered the same, saying: Principes quia iusti erant, & religionibus dediti, iure habiti dii, & dicti. Non enim arbitria illorum ab equo, vel populis à iure innato discedebant. Now then having satisfied that point, we may the more boldly proceed with our intendment and with the matters of this Camboblascon king of Italie, and Jupiter and Patriarke thereof, and the great father (as they say) of the famous and renowned Trojans. And this king built the faire cittie of Montoblascon in Tuscania, which by corruption is now called and knowne by the name of Montblacon: and another also which hee named Coritus, now called Cornete, which is situated about some fortie miles from the now mightie cittie of Rome: And this Camboblascon had by his wife Electra, the daughter daughter of Atlas King of Italie, three children, which are these, Europa, Dardania, and Armonia: Atlas being created Coritus and Patriarke of Italie, his father being alive, who also bestowed upon him the rule and kingdome of Fraunce (as many Historiographers affirm) the next yeare after, so that he became very mightie and powerfull in all those countiees thereabouts. And now we will proceed with the rest of the kings of Fraunce, beginning where we last left of, which was (if it bee remembred) at Galathus, the noble sonne of Hercules of Lybia, and of his faire wife Galathea: where it was then mentioned, how this Galathus at the hands of his loving brother Tuscus, received the Island of Sicilia, and accordingly, caried with him people to inhabite and possesse the countrey, which being performed, he returned also back again into Fraunce, as hath been likewise before somewhat touched: after which time, hee lived peaceably and quietly many yeares, governing his people with great mildnesse and clemencie, and yet mingled and accompanied with uprightnesse of justice, and execution of his laws and edicts; of whose deeds and performances, more than are already spoken of, few or no writers have mentioned, onely that of him and of his name the countrey generally was called Gauls, and so continued, and the people thereof reamed Gaulons, which by corruption and overturning of many ages and times, are now in some part of that countrey called Wallons, and which before Galathus, were called Sambrothi or Celti. And it is most likely by the conjecturall opinions of most writers, that this king Galathus remained and lived in those dayes for the most part in that part of Gauls, which is now the province of Aquitaine, which is so called of the abundance of waters and rivers, wherein that countrey was wont to exceed, and that this place was held to be the first and most auncient of all the other parts of Fraunce, which indeed are onely two more; for that the whole countrey of France is by most divided onely into three parts, and they are called Gallia Aquinatica, Celtica, and Belgica, which of themselves retaine and carie the very names of the first kings and rulers of them, as before is something specified. The cheefe cities and principall siegnories of Gallia Aquinatica, are supposed and held to bee these, as most auncient writers doe consent, Narbon, Thoulouse, Caours, Rodetz, Lymoges, Perigort, Bourdeaux, Zainetes, Angolesme, Baione, Clermont, Bourges, Tours, Foix, Lestore, Allebreth, Saint Pons, Nantes, Resnes, Saint Malo, and others. The cheefest rivers and waters, these, Gironde, Dordonne, Garonne, Loire, Lalier, Cher, Charente, & many others, now too long to recite.

After the death of the famous and most renowned prince Galathens, his sonne Harbon tooke upon him the government of the countrey, and was established the twelfth king of Fraunce, who presently erected and built a very gallant citie for his seat, and called it Harbonne, after his owne name, which is now called Narbonne, as many authours doe affirme. And of this king, little or nothing is left written, memorable, or meriting a tedious commemoration or rehearfall, onely hee left behind him a son called Lugdus, which was now the thirteenth king of this countrey of Fraunce, and who built the famous citie called Lugdunum, called also Lyon; which is now one of the cheefest and principallest cities of France, and which hath long time flourished in great priviledges, prerogatives, and extraordinary customes, being a citie indeed tres-auncient and of long continuance; and of her name, all that province is called Lyonnoise, which, as some hold, is contained within the bounds of Gallia Celtica, and is the greatest and the cheefest part thereof. And this citie of Lyons was first founded and erected by the same king Lugdus, in the twelfth yeare of the raigne of Maneslem, the foureteenth king of Babylon, which is as much to say, as after the flood & inundation of the whole world sixe hundred and fourescore yeares, after the first inhabiting of Fraunce five hundred and sixtene yeares, before the foundation of the cittie of Troy one hundred and fortie yeares, and before the now famous citie of Paris was erected, two hundred and twentie yeares, before Rome was built, five hundred threescore and eightene yeares, and before the incarnation and birch of our Saviour Christ a thousand sixe hundred seven and thirtie yeares, or neare thereabouts. And in the times of this king Lugdus, arrived and came into Fraunce the queene Isis, who was so famous and so renowned throughout all the world.

After this Lugdus succeeded his eldest sonne Belgine, now the foureteenth king of that countrey, whose name is yet even fresh in all mens memories; for of his name that great and populous countrey called Gallia Belgica, tooke her title and was so called; of which (as of the other) we will now make some mention. The cheefest rivers and waters thereof are these, Lescault, la Sambre, le Lis, le Rin, Meuse, and Moselle, Saine, Marne, Somme, le Daulx, and others; the cheefe woods and Forrests these, Mormault, and Ardenne. The highest hills and mountaines, are the hill Saint Claude, les Faucilles and Vosagus. The principall villages and greatest cities are these: Cambrai, Valenciennes, Couloign, Conflans, Virecht, Mayence, Strasbourg, Aix, Constance, Lygge, Tournay, Arras, Amiens, Beauvais, Senlis, Laon, Noyon, Soissons, Meaulx, Rouzn, Rains, Metz, Langres, Besancon, Salins, Dole, Lofanne, Geneve, and Camberi. The cheefest seignories are these: the Dukedomes of Iulliers, Cleves, Gheldes, Brabant, Lorraine, Bar, Lembourg, and Luxembourg: the counties Palatine, Haynau, Bourgoigne, Ferreres, Montbeliard, Flaunders, Artois, Champagne, Holland, Zeland, and Namur. This king Belgius (of whom all these gallant and most famous countries were thus called) builded also the citie of Belges, of which, now only some ruines and reliques of memorie are left, which are to be seene in the countrey of Haynau, and which Iulius Caesar likewise in the sixteenth booke of his Commentaries doth mention & remember, where he calleth it Belgium. This word Belgius (as many old writers expound it) signifieth in the Hebrew or Phenician language (which tongue the ancient Gauloys then used) as much as, An auncient god wrestling; for in those times (as I already have spoken) the people called their kings, gods; by which it may be gathered, that this their king Belgius was a great wrestler, unto which kind of exercise and unto the barriers, the people inhabiting in Gallia Belgica, did not long since wonderfully much addict themselves, & were very active and skilfull therein, howsoever at this day those sports for the most part are now utterly left off and rejected. S. Jerom sayth also, That this word Belga signifieth in the Hebrew tongue tongue, An auncient commotion, or an old strife: and indeed heretofore those people of that country were much conversant in wars, in troubles, and dissensions, and were held to bee the most valiant and strongest nation of this part of the world, as Caesar also in his Commentaries alleadgerth to the same purpose, saying: Fortissimi autem omnium Belgi. And Strabo in the fourth booke of his Commentaries also sayth thus: Omnium Gallorum Belgi sunt summi: as a people that in those times (as it is written) could bring into the field three hundred thousand fighting men. And thus much for the descriptions of the people of the countrey called Gallia Belgica, with the cheefest townes, seignories, and rivers thereof, and now we will looke back againe for the prosecuting and finishing of our former matter.

In this king Belgius, the line and race of Galathens the sonne of Hercules Lybicus, failed and was determinate, so that upon his death the people of Fraunce (becing of themselves wonderfully desirous to elect one of that lineage so near as it was possible) bestowed the government and command of that countrey upon the above written Iassus Ianigena, the sonne of Iupiter Camboblascon. And so by that meanes Iassus was invested and established in that kingdome as the fifteenth king and Patriark thereof. And in this yeare the realm & kingdome of Athens in Greece was first set up and begun, as Berosus our cheefly followed author in these matters of antiquitie averreth, who thus saith: Apud Ianigenas a patre, Iassus creatus est Coritus, & anno sequente simul ceperunt duo reges, videlicet primus Rex Atheniensium Cecrops presens, & Iassus Ianigena apud Celtas. And this was about fourescore yeares or thereabouts before the first building and erection of the cittie of Troy.

Iafius Ianigena, the eldest son of Iupiter Camboblaſcen (as is before declared) being thus ſo gloriously poſſeſſed of two ſuch regall and powerfull kingdomes, and being in the cheeſt ſpring and blooming daies of his age, contracted and joined in marriage with a noble and rich ladie called Ipitia Cibeles: for the celebration of which nuptials and eſpouſals, great feaſts and ceremonies of joy and triumph were held and kept, and (as ſome write) performed in the cittie of Viterbe, then the capitall ſeat of all Tuſcania. And this was before the foundation of Troy threeſcore and ſeventeene yeares, in the preſence of Dardanius the firſt builder thereof, and brother to the new married king Iafius Ianigena. Many writers doe affirme, That in this marriage were greater triumphs, paſtimes, ſports, magnificencie, ſtate and pomp, than in any other in thoſe times throughout all the world whatſoever, and cheeſely in reſpect of that noble aſſembly and meeting of ſo many mightie and great princes, and more particularly for the coming of the famous empreſſe and goddeſſe (as they tearme her) the Ægyptian Iſis, the daughter of Cham, the wife of Iupiter Juſtus, otherwiſe called Oſyris, and the mother of that all renowned and ever memorable conquerour, Hercules of Lybia, king and emperor of all Fraunce, Italie, and Spaine. And this Iſis there firſt taught thoſe people the manner of making bread, of flour, meale, and ſuch like ſtuffe; although before that Oſyris her husband had inſtructed them in knowledge of agriculture, tilling, and ſowing corne, yet they were not untill now perfected in the uſe and right applying thereof, eſpecially for the making making of bread, which they learned and underſtood by the coming of this empreſſe Iſis. And this marriage and ceremony of aſſociation and matrimonic was the firſt that in thoſe times was celebrated and ſolemnized with any rites, feaſtivals, or new invented uſances, as Diodorus Siculus to the ſame purpoſe thus ſayth, theſe being his very words: Has nuptias a dijs primum celebratas ferunt, Cereſemque in gratiam Iaſy ei ex frumento panem attuliſſe, Mercurium lyram, Palladem decantatum monile pepulum, ac tibias, &c. This their goddeſſe Iſis, otherwiſe called by the names of Ceres, Inno, Fragiferæ, Legiferæ, and others, was by all probability and by the opinion of all writers a woman of wonderfull long life and many yeares, for at her now arrivall and coming to this marriage into Italie, ſhe was at the leaſt four hundred and fifty yeares old, as ſhee that was borne in the firſt yeare of the raigne of Semiramis queene of Babylon, and lived in the whole at the leaſt ſix hundred and ſixteene yeares, for ſhee was living after the firſt deſtruction and deſolation of Troy, by the ſpace of forty yeares or neare thereabouts, as almoſt all writers have delivered in their opinions to the ſame purpoſe and effect. Johannes Annus an old writer, ſayth, That ſhee was in Germanie in the time of Hercules Alemannus, the eleventh king of that countrey, by him called Almaigne: and Cornelius Tacitus alſo ſeemeth to affirme the ſame by theſe words, Pars Suevorum etiam Iſidis ſacrificat. It is written alſo, that ſhe was in Fraunce in the time of Lugdus then king thereof, as hath beene before declared, and that ſhee had travelled almoſt all theſe parts of Europe, inſtructing and teaching the poore ignorant people the uſe of many things then unknown & unſound out. And to approve the better that she was present at this mariage of Iasius Janigena, it is yet apparent in that countrey of Tuscan by many very auncient scrolls, left still from time to time in that countrey from one posteritie to another; as also certaine old statues and monuments of marble, with inscriptions of characters infix'd thereon, found out in the times of Pope Alexander the sixt, averre the same, which as Iohannes Annius sayth, were first found in the earth in the citie of Viterbe: and that there were at that time upon further digging and search of more such like reliques, found hidden far in the ground four severall images or pictures of triumph, the one was of Iasius, the other of his mother Electra, the third of his faire sister Armonia, which never married, but continued and died a vestall virgine, and the fourth was of Cibeles the now new married wife of Iasius. There was also found another square kind of table made of marble, on which were in Greeke letters, these words following engraved, which not long after were thus translated into Latine. Coritina desponsio, cum Electra Atlai Kytij iamdudum pertransiverat, et maxima Isis Frumentaria atque Panifica, concessit ad nuptias Iasij filij Coriti, in habitaculum turre Cibeles sponse Iasij in prelio Cybelario, ad fontem Cybelarium, paulo post subvadimonia palatia, et paulo post à scelerato fratre Dardano Iasius male perijt in agro Iasinello in Theisyis, &c. And these be the very words used heretofore by authors of antiquitie. By these therefore and by like semblable apparences, it is cleared, that this Isis, their so reverently-adored goddess, was now present at the consummation of the espousals of Iasius Janigena, king of Italie and Fraunce, with the ladie Isis Cibeles, his wife. And that this Isis had travelled

and journeyed through many and diverse countries, it appeareth by many and severall pillars and stonie monuments erected in many countries of Europe in that behalte, as many authors doe produce. Diodorus Siculus interreth, That in Egypt shee caused her selfe a mightie and stately columnne to be erected, wherein shee caused also these words to be intculped and inserted. Ego sum Isis Egypti Regina à Mercurio erudita. Que ego legibus statui, nullus solvet: ego sum Osyrides, ego sum prima frugum inventrix, ego sum Ori regis mater. But to omit many other like authorities and improvements which might conduce to the clearer manifesting and unclouding of what was first proposed, wee will now goe forward with this royall mariage of Iasius, that we with more speed may attaine to the complete accomplishment and effectuating of my purposed entendment.

This great king and ruler Iasius Janigena had of this his wife Cibeles a sonne called Corybanus, so that now there wanted not any terrene or earth-born delight or felicitie which might make this happie-seeming potentate more fortunat, mightie, or contentfull, but it is a common humor of fortune, that amidst the thickest and most abundances of her graces and favours, shee in some angrie or fantasticke imagination, suddainely snatcheth away her so liberally bestowed gifts, and leaveth the late possessors thereof involved and wrapt in a world of the miserablest unhappinesse and soule vexations that may be invented, as by the farall successe and end of this kings life most plainly appeareth. For when as Dardanus, his younger brother (a man indeed of a proud heart, great courage, and inward ambition) saw his brother Iasius thus to float

The travels of Noë into Europe.

(as it were) on the calme seas of joyous prosperitie, and to tast of the sweet cup of Nectar, which Fortune oftentimes administreth unto her favourites, and thus to live famous in such abundant measure of grace and happinesse; hee infinitely repined and maliciously stomacked such the greatnesse and height of his power and authoritie, hee being himselfe so suppressed and obscured by the spight of Fortune, and living privately and without command, as an inferiour or some base born person or slave. These things oftentimes revolving and studying within himselfe, he could not now any longer depreesse or quench the overfurious heat of his aspiring spirit, but in a disdainfull and scorning kind of fashion went unto his brother the king, to demaund leave and licence, That (upon some occasions of discontent pretended) he might depart out of the country to seeke out his better fortunes: which request Iafius, refused to condescend unto, and would by no meanes allow of his brothers purposes in that behalfe intended: whereupon Dardanus (taking it in great dislike and disparagement unto his greatnesse) began secretly to enter into deadly hostilitie with him, and to gather many factions and parties together on his side, which, by reason that he was exceedingly well beloved throughout most of those countries, grew to a great number and multitude of men, especially of those people then inhabiting on the other side of the river Tybre, which we called since the Latines, besides the country of Naples, Povilla, Calabria, and others thereabouts; all these conjoynd and consorted with the faction of Dardanus: and with Iafius, all those on this side of Tybre, being them of Tuscania, Fraunce, and other particular provinces thereabouts. At this very time (as many writers doe deliver) happened in the world many uncouth, straunge, and wonderfull portents, as fearefull earthquakes, lightening, blazing comets, and ougly visions; as also throughout all Thessalie a generall overflow and deluge of waters, in another part of Greece, a strange combustion of houses and townes, and miserable effects of fire throughout most part of that country. In the same time also, Pharao king of Egypt following Moyfes and the children of Israel through the red sea, with all his armie perished and were overwhelmed with the churlish buffetings of the angrie and wrathfull billowes. All which signes and extraordinarie accidents did manifestly pretoken & prefigure the suddain approach of some great alteration of estates, and troubles of mightie kingdomes.

The fire of discontent and enmitie betweene the two brothers being thus wholly set on flame, and diverse attempts and meetings of wrath passed betweene them, it happened that Dardanus received the worst, and upon many encounters still was put unto his shifts, especially by the fresh supplie and aid which Siceleus, king of the isle of Sicilia, & the sixteenth king of Spain had then brought unto his brother Iafius: so that continually being weakened more and more both in numbers of men, and in the courages of them that staid, he was enforced for his own securitie to give over those such publicke means of oppression and revenge, and to betake his thoughts unto contriving and plotting of some more inward and therefore more dangerous stratagems. So that in the end (to avoid prolixitie and tedious circumstance) he so wrought that he awaited a time when the king his brother (then all suspectlesse of any intended mischeefe) went privately to a fountaine or spring to wash himselfe, which occasion and oportunitie so fairely presenting it selfe, Dardanus most traiterously and vilely murdered him. And upon that, not daring to adventure his stay, or to engage himselfe so far in those cases of perill, he presently tooke shipping in the next haven, and with all his jewels & what else riches portable, he could cary with him away, with many of his freinds, followers, and servitors, he secretly and closely set saile and departed.

The right noble and trespuissant king of Fraunce thus cruelly murdered by the bloudie hands of his owne naturall (though in that unnatural) brother, in the fiftith year of his raigne and mightie governement, and in the four-score and fourth year of his owne age; all the people and inhabitants thereabouts began mightily to bewaile his untimely and miserable end, which was before the foundation of Troy eight and twentie yeares or much thereabouts. In generall deploration and laments of this kings death, not only Italy and France, but all parts of the world unto whome the shrill voiced trumpet of Fame had founded forth this report, conjoynd and beinoned together, for that hee kept peace and amitie with all princes whatsoever, in all unitie, love, and concord; and carried himselfe so upright and so wise in the troublesome managing of affaires belonging unto two kingdomes, that hee gained and woun unto him the hearts and affections of almost all people whatsoever. After his death, his sonne Coribantus succeeded in the governement of the kingdome of Italie, but not of Fraunce, so that the people thereof were a good while after without a cheefe or ruler:

but in the end they chose and elected one that was nearest unto the linage and line of Heverus as they might, and his name was Allobrox, one of the seventh king thereof. The which king afterward for the most part here and remained at the foot of the mountaines Apennini, affronting upon Italie, and there commaunded even unto the hills Pyrence (which divide the countrey of Spaine from France) and from the Mediterranean sea unto the maine Ocean, and unto the river of Rhync: and he there builded and created many famous townes and citties, of which, some were those which were since called Piemont, Savoy, Proavnce, Danphine, and others, and which people of very late times (if not at this day) were called Allobroges: and in this kings raigne was the fame-famed and mightie citie of Troy first built and created. To come unto the foundation of which, wee must here in these affaires pause and take breath a while, and returne unto Dardanus, whom on the sea tossed with uncertaine fortunes, and tempest-beaten indeed with overblowing and cruell winds, so that he remained in very great daunger and hazard to bee cast away and swallowed in the vult and mercilesse embraces of the all-wracking waters. Enforced by these calamities, hee was glad to put in at an Island of the Cyclades, attending there the favourable smiles of Fortune, and the abatement of those horrible and tempestuous stormes. In the end hee put forth againe, and recovered the sea Archipelagus, and went afterwards on shore in an Island in Greece called Samos or Samosrace, according to that which the Poet Virgil in his eighth booke of his Aeneidos sayth: Arunculos, ita ferre senec' huius oritur in agris, Dardania id est in insula quae dicitur in Thracia, et in amque Samam quae nunc Samothracia vocatur. This island of Samos or Samothracia, is directly opposite unto the countrey of Thracia in Greece where Constantinople is erected, which heretofore abounded in all plentiful manner with Vines, Olive trees, Grapes, and others such like fruit of most sorts; and in this countrey also was the learned and famous Philosopher Pythagoras the one, and one of the prophetesses called Sibyls. Dardanus the son of (the more to be lamented) in the tyrannous hands and possessions of the bloudie and barbarous Turke. In this countrey, Dardanus staid a good space before he did the foundation of Troy, hoping yet to be recalled home, par-gaine into Italie: but when he perceiveth that all hopes were frustrate that were builded on such grounds, hee put-teth himselfe forth to seeke out as yet his further fortunes, which happened as hereafter shall briefly be im-folded.

It is to be understood, that on the other side of the said Hellesponte, which is called also the streights leading unto Constantinople, in the firme continent of a countrey called Asia Minor, now called Natolia or Turkie, and not far from the abovewritten Island of Samos, is a province called Lydia; which heretofore was called also Meonia; in the which countrey, as also in those next and neare adjoyning thereunto called Phrygia, reigned and governed at that time a prince called by the name of Athys, the Hounger, of the same bloud and parentage as was Dardanus for (if it bee remembred) we long since spake how Hercules of Lybia had a ladie to his wife called Omphale; by whom whom hee begat a sonne called Lycaeus the great, of which Athys from his great to descent in foure generations came this Athys the younger, king of Meonia and Phrygia and who had two sonnes also, the one called by the name of Lycaus, the other Jaheus. This king Athys having now upon the arrivall of Dardanus, great abundance of people in his countrey, by reason of fruitfull encrease and multiplications; and having also but small store of victuals and food in his countrey to nourish and maintaine so populous a state, for want of which, great famines, pestilences, and other diseases arose in the countrey, knew not almost how to dispose of his people, or in what sort to remedie this mischeefe, so that in the end hee was enforced by reason of that mortall famine, to discharge many of his subjects out of the countrey to seeke out some new inhabitations and places of abode: which thing also they wonderous willingly embraced as glad to be rid and quit of so penurious and starving a place. Dardanus hearing and understanding of these proceedings, and in what necessities they stood in by meanes of the overabundance of inhabitants presently made his repaire to king Athys, and there desired of him, That since hee must needs send forth such people for the finding out of new places of habitations, that he would bestow the charge, conduct, and leading of them upon him, and that hee would joyne with them for the provisions and necessaries needfull and convenient for the setting of themselves in such their new places of abode, residence, and habitation. This thing king Athys very willingly entertained, especially for that Dardanus was of his owne kindred and consanguinitie.

This request and desire of Dardanus thus obtained, hee knew no other meanes to require so great a favour, and to bee occasion to draw on further kindnesse, but to offer unto Athus, and utterly to resigne all his right, title, interest, and claime in the kingdome of Italie for one of his sonnes, unto which of them the father pleased and was contented. This profer of Dardanus beeing well considered of by king Athus, was in the end thankfully accepted: in lieu and exchange whereof was allowed unto Dardanus a certaine quantitie and peece of ground in Phrygia for him to build and erect a citie upon. And betweene the two brethren, Lydus and Turrhenus, lots were indifferently cast, which of them with a certaine number of people should set forward for Italie; and which should stay at home: for the deciding whereof, it fell unto Lydus to remain behind, and to be left inheritor unto that kingdome which afterwards of his name was called Lydia; and that Turrhenus should bee presently dispatched away with his people to inhabite in Italie, of whome afterwards also it was called by the name of Turrhena. These covenants and agreements concluded upon, Turrhenus setteth forward from Asia Minor (now called Turkie) in his journey for Italie; and Dardanus with his people and associates began now to build in Phrygia, and in short space fully finished and erected a citie, which he called after his own name Dardania: which was before the incarnation of Christ a thousand foure hundred fourescore and seven yeares, before the building of Rome by Romulus foure hundred and seven and twentie yeares, and before the citie of Paris was erected threescore and tenns yeares, as

Eusebius and most writers doe affirme. On the other side Turrhenus is arrived in Italie, and presently repairth unto the queene Cibelis, the widdow and late wife to Lisus Ianigma, as before hath been declared, as also unto her sonne Coribantus king of Tuscania; unto which two, hee brought and presented many costly and rich gifts from his father Athus king of Meonia: who also received them in all gracious and kind acceptance, as comming from their kinsman, and of the race and bloud of Hercules of Lybia. Turrhenus had not long remained here, but that he was highly favoured of the king Coribantus, who now desirous to see and understand of the estate of his kinsman Dardanus, prepared presently to take in hand that so long and tedious journey, and ordained and instituted at home for the government of his countrey, the order of the twelve Dukes, whereof Turrhenus was one; and so with a great troupe and companie of followers & friends he embarked for the coast of Phrygia, to see the greatnesse of Dardanus, and the beaurie and excellencie of his new built citie Dardania. After some tedious and troublesome travels in this voyage, at the last hee arrived at his wished and desired place, where with all manner of ceremonie he was joyfully entertained by Dardanus, whose reciprocal and mutuall love grew in the end to bee such, as hee resolved and there set downe his rest for ever to remaine, and not to returne againe into Italie, but sent word together of his purposes, and commanding them to create and establish Turrhenus in his absence king and sole ruler over all that countrey. In few yeares Dardanus began to grow unto great mightinesse, riches, and power, who had also a mighty power, of might and puissance; was rich; and fortunate, whose name was Tarus, and hereupon many writers call the Ellygians Tarusians; and of this Tarus was the source of Trachin to witte, who had also himselfe a very beautifull and faire daughter, which hee married shortly after unto Dardanus; and was called Balea, of whom Dardanus begot a sonne called Erichonius, who succeeded after him and was the first our line in the kingdom of Ellygia. This Erichonius in processe of time arose up unto a wonderfull great estate, and large possessions, who (as many writers do assure) may be counted to bee one of the richest kings in those daies in that part of the world, who (as it is also said) had at the least three thousand hokes of his owne continually feeding in his pastures. And this Erichonius had also a sonne whom he named Tros, whom after his death hee left as successour and inheritor unto him, and of whose name afterward the Dardanians were called, Trojans. This Tros very much enlarged and beautified the citie also of Dar- dania, and built the towres, which long time after it continued to have three towres, which were, Helus, Asaricus, and Trachin; and hee brought up in the knowledge of the most warlike sciences, unto which kind of studie (as it is written) hee himselfe also was much addicted, and many many years together maintained hostile warres with the king of Greece called Jupiter, the fourth of that name there; in which warres his sonne Ganimedes was taken prisoner even by the hands of Jupiter himselfe, Tantalus, king of high Ellygia and of Phlogonia, a most miserable, covetous and invidious prince, had taken a wife and private acquaintance with Demeter and to take him prisoner as hee used to do himselfe in hunting, and being by the device to get a mightie rancor some of his children for the redeeming and enfranchising of his wife, hee was taken and carried away, and that this Tantalus should have beene the father of the Isle of Greece; for to save himselfe; and to have had the same wife which should be paid for his redelivery and freedom. And for such like causes, be the Poets also do assure, and say that Tantalus is plagued and tormented in hell, standing up to the chin in water, and apples hanging downe unto his lips, and yet can neither drink nor tast the one or the other; and it is also more credibly written, that he died most miserably and in great extremities. His sonne Pelops also, banished and exiled his owne naturall countrey, fled into Greece; and there married a wonderfull rich wife and great ladie, by which meanes hee got unto himselfe and obtained the command of a whole countrey, which hee called after his own name Peloponnesus, which is now the countrey of Mauritania, and subject unto the Empire of the Turke. And of this Pelops lived and came upon revenge, and in the meantime comforted himselfe with his two other wives, Ilus and Assaracus. And this Ilus called Troy after that, Ilium; who begat a sonne named Laomedon, the father of the renowned Priamus; and of Assaracus issued and came Achilles, Aeneas father. And the before written Tros ruled & commaunded there in great power and puissance for the space of threescore yeares or neare thereabouts, as Archilochus in his booke of Times alloadgeth.

Archilochus.

Laomedon, the sonne of king Ilus (as is before said) after the death of his father tooke upon him the rule and government of Troy, in the two hundred and two and twentieth yeare after the first foundation thereof by Dardanus, and hee had five sonnes and two daughters, which were these, Priamus, Titonus, Lampus, Clytion, and Letaon, and of these Homer in his Iliads maketh further mention: his daughters were Antigone and Hesione. The Greeke Poets (who indeed for the most part are full of such like fables) doe say, that the two gods Neptune and Apollo, for a certaine summe of money promised them by him, went with him about the circuit of the citie, and there erected wonderfull strong and most huge high wals round about the same: the which wals afterwards finished accordingly, and no money received nor to bee got, Apollo in great rage and anger infected the citie with a deadly and generall pestilence; and Neptune in token of his wrath and displeasure also, sent a monster of the sea among them, unto which they must every day give and throw a young child; or els that they all should perish and bee devoured by the ravenous maw and hunger thereof; and that in the end it hap-pend upon the daughter of Laomedon (called Hesione) to be given unto this monster, which (say they) was rescued and releev'd by great means by Hercules of Greece, which came that way; and also afterwards flew that monster, and did gratification thereof unto Hesione (the daughter of Laomedon) was pleased to marry him not long after his marriage; but yet not married unto him by reason of their unwillingness afterwards (howsoever it fell out) of her father: for the breach of which promise, Hercules afterwards slew Laomedon in open battell, and spoiled and ruined such his glorious citie. And for that Ulysses his consort had that day behav'd himselfe very valiantly in fight, hee bestowed the young ladies of Troy upon him, (as his conquest and love) who carried her away with him into the countrey of Sardinia; whereof he was then king and ruler. But it is most certaine, that for the most part all those Greeke writers have erred infinitely and have delivered many most unlikely histories: for this Hercules (as hath been before spoken) was a noble and a famous pyrate; and hee slew Laomedon by treachery, and surprised Troy on a suddaine and unawares, and also hee was a common ravisher of maidens, as of Hesione, Medea, and others, as Strabo, Strabo, Strabo, and Jacques de Bergame have written and very plainly approved the same. Laomedon being slaine, Titonus succeeded next after him; but hee being of another disposition, resigned his interest therein, and betooke himselfe to travell into strange countreies; even unto the Indies, where (according to Diodorus Siculus) hee married a ladie called Ida, and (as the Poets write) Lycoris; of whom, hee afterwards afterwards had a sonne called Medon, who long after came unto the succour of Priamus in hischer last perils, and was there slaine by the hands of Achilles. In the absence therefore of his brother Tythos, Priamus took upon him the government and charge of that kingdome, being the second son unto Laomedon their father, who in short time came to bee one of the greatest and most famous princes of the world, for it is writen, that he was wondrous wise, discreet, and valiant, and matcht his children with persons of great fort, worth, and dignitie. And so to make him at the first the stronger, and that he might have time to redifie his late spoyled and fire perished citie, hee entered into alliance and fast kindred with a very mighty and powerfull prince, hee was adjoyning upon his countrey, who was called by the name of Cyprus, or (as some hold) Dymas, king and sole commander of Thrace; which is a province, in Greece, on this side of the sea Hellepont, whereof the chiefe citie is at this day Constantinople; and with this Cyprus or Dymas his daughter, called Hecuba, hee married: a ladie accomplisht with all exteriour graces and inward vertuous dispositions, at which espousals of Priamus and Hecuba, great ceremonies and signes of joyfulness were shovne forth and observed: and of this ladie it is writ, that he begot nineteen children male and female; and of other women and concubines which hee dayly kept and maintained in his palace (according to the fashions and usances in those daies) hee had one and thirtie more, so that onely nineteene of his fiftie sonnes and daughters were legitimate and lawfully begotten, the rest bastards and illegitimate. many children (which indeed hee publickly maintained and shamed not to acknowledge) King also in the second booke of his Eneidos thus sayth: Quis agrata illi stitit, spes tunc a nepotum. And Homere likewise in the last booke of his Iliads most plainly seemeth to confirm the same.

Troy now thus most gallantly flourishing, newly fortified, repaired, enlarged, enriched, enpopled, & broughtly provided and stored of all manner of things which might bee necessarie either for the use of martiall warres, and open hostilities, or for the conservation of peace, & domestick tranquillitie, began to assume unto her selfe a mighty and glorious selfe-conceit and strong opinion of her owne power, height, and magnificence; asserting her selfe of all victorious prevalgements over her enemies whatsoever, and of a never failing prosperitie, glorie, and felicitie; and yet it is not writ, that Priamus himselfe was puffed up with any more extraordinary pride or insolencie than became the greatnesse of so puissant a prince. It is writ also, that in the times of this his greatest power, he was forewarned by certaine Oracles and false gods which they used to worship in those daies, that so long as hee did preserve and safegard three things belonging unto the citie, the towne should bee inexpugnable and never to bee lost, as Servius and Boccaccio have writen of the same: the things were these, The image of Pallas called Paladium preserved undefaced, The sepulchre or tombe of Laomedon which was under the great gate Scea, kept undefoyled by walls, and so long as the life of Troilus lasted and did endure. Priamus therefore very carefull to keep these three things with all diligentnesse and heed, lived in the greater pompe, delicacie, and state that ever any prince in the world in those times did or could: so that he seemed not onely to be king of Phrygia, but also cheefe dominator and emperour of all Asia, now called Natalia or Tinkie: and hee was called also in those times, The king of kings, as Strabo in the thirteenth booke of his Geographie, to the same purpose thus sayth: Printhus magnus ex parvo, & Rex Regum effectus. And these his powers and authorities not onely extended and stretcht themselves abroad throughtout the maine continent and firme lands of all those countries thereabout round, but in the end shewed themselves also and possessed their maister of many famous and great Islands lying farre in within the bosome and embracement of the breivill and rude behavior'd sea; as the Island of Tenedos, and the Island of Metelyn, were subject and vassalized unto the government of his imperious principalltie, paying him yearly tributes, taxes, and impositions; and many others also of great fame adjoining neare therabouts: so that the infinite greatnesse and large commaund of this thirce-mightie emperour Printhus, possessed all the princes and rulers of countries neare that way, with astonied admiration and wonderous maze of his skill, and unexpected puissance. And thereupon sent and dispatched messengers from all quarters to crave his amitie, friendship, and to be in league with him, as also to be nearer allied unto him in some matches and marriages of their children on both sides; by reason whereof, Printhus matcht his children with great houses, and of great power and possessions:

possessions: First hee married one of his legitimate and lawfully begotten daughters called Chrysos, a prince of great riches named Enna; the sonne of old Ulichises: by his daughter Astyoche, hee matcht with one Telephus, a mightie king of Mysia; and his sonne Hektor joynd in marriage with Dardamacha, the faire daughter of Eetion, the powerfull and famous king of Thebes and Silicia: and Polydamas, one of the sonnes of Antenor, married with one of Printhus daughters, (being a bastard, and begotten of one of his concubines) being of an excellent and singular beaurie, called Lycasta. So also many others of his children were linked and joynd in marriages with men of great rule, power, and commaund in those dayes; the posteritie of which, and of their deedes and mightinesse, hereafter in some other place and opportunity occasion may bee presented further to make of. And for this time (being indeed forced by an extraordinary occasion) I must thus on the suddaine abruptly breake off; desiring and wishing very earnestly, that if this small peece of paines of mine shall ever to bee publickely impressed (which leaving behind mee, it will not bee in my power to prevent) it may indifferently passe uncensured, till the returne of his fortune-beaten father may answer for the innocencie of the child, and bee able a little better to protect him in his afflictions.
