Which I denying they fell sick and died. Shakesp.
He his fabrick of the heav'n's
Hath left to their disputes, perhaps to move
His laughter at their quaint opinions wide Hereafter. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. Quaint is, in Spenser, quailed; depressed. I believe by a very licentious irregularity.

With such fair slight him Guyon fail'd:
'Till at the last, all breathless, weary and faint,
Him spying, with fresh onset he assail'd,
And kindling new his courage, seeming quaint,
Struck him so hugely, that through great constraint
He made him stoup. Spenser.

6. Affected; foppish. This is not the true idea of the word, which Swift seems not to have well understood.

To this we owe those monstrous productions, which under the name of trips, spies, amusements, and other conceited appellations, have over-run us; and I wish I could say, those quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects. Swift.

QUAINTLY. adv. [from quaint.]

1. Nicely; exactly; with petty elegance.
When was old Sherwood's hair more quaintly curl'd,
Or Nature's cradle more enchas'd and purld? Ben Jonson.

2. Artfully.
Breathe his faults so quaintly,
That they seem the taints of liberty,
The flash and outbreak of a fiery mind. Shakesp.

3. Ingeniously with success. This is not the true sense.
As my Buxoma
With gentle finger stroak'd her milky caro,
I quaintly stole a kiss. Gay.

QUAINTNESS. n. s. [from quaint.]
Nicety; petty elegance.

There is a certain majesty in simplicity, which is far above all the quaintness of wit. Pope.

To QUAKE. v. n. [cpacan, Sax.]

1. To shake with cold or fear; to tremble.

QUA

Do such business as the better day
Would quake to look on. Shakesp. Hamlet.

Who honours not his father,
Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,
Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shakesp.
The mountains quake at him, and the hills melt, and the earth is burnt at his presence. Naham, i. 5.

Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling and carefulness. Ezekiel, xii. 18.

The quaking pow'rs of height stood in amaze. Cowley.
In fields they dare not fight where honour calls,
The very noise of war their souls does wound,
They quake but hearing their own trumpets sound. Dryden.

2. To shake; not to be solid or firm.
Next Smedley div'd; slow circles dimpled o'er
The quaking mud, that clos'd and op'd no more. Pope.

QUAKE. n. s. [from the verb.] A shudder; a tremulous agitation.

As the earth may sometimes shake,
For winds shut up will cause a quake;
So often jealousy and fear
Stol'n to mine heart, cause tremblings there. Suckling.

QUAKING-GRASS. n. s. [phalaris, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

QUALIFICATION. n. s. [qualification, Fr. from qualify.]

1. That which makes any person or thing fit for any thing.

It is in the power of the prince to make piety and virtue become the fashion, if he would make them necessary qualifications for preferment. Swift.

2. Accomplishment.
Good qualifications of mind enable a magistrate to perform his duty, and tend to create a publick esteem of him. Atterbury.

3. Abatement; diminution.
Neither had the waters of the flood infused such an impurity, as thereby the natural and powerful operation of all plants, herbs, and fruits upon the earth received a qualification and harmful change. Kateigh's History of the World.

To QUALIFY. v. a. [qualifier, Fr.]

1. To fit for any thing.
Place over them such governors, as may be qualified in such manner as may govern the place. Bacon.
I bequeath to Mr. John Whiteway the sum of one hundred pounds, in order to qualify him for a surgeon. Swift's Will.

2. To furnish with qualifications.
That which ordinary men are fit for, I am qualified in; and the best of me is diligence. Shakesp.

The spouse of any noble gentl'man. Shakesp.

3. To make capable of any employment or privilege: as, he is qualified to kill game.

4. To abate; to soften; to diminish.
I have heard,
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
I do not seek to quench your love's hot fire,
But qualify the fire's extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason. Shakesp.

I have drunk but one cup to-night, and that was craftily qualified too; and behld what innovation it makes here. Shakesp.

They would report that they had records for twenty thousand years, which must needs be a very great untruth, unless we will qualify it, expounding their years not of the revolution of the sun, but of the moon. Abbot.

It hath so pleased God to provide for all living creatures, wherewith he hath filled the world, that such inconveniences, as we contemplate afar off, are found, by trial and the witness of men's travels, to be so qualified, as there is no portion of the earth made in vain. Raleigh's History of the World.

So happy 'tis you move in such a sphere,
As your high majesty with awful fear
In human breasts might qualify that fire,
Which kindled by those eyes had flamed higher. Waller.

Children should be early instructed in the true estimate of things, by opposing the good to the evil, and compensating or qualifying one thing with another. L'Estrange.

My proposition I have qualified with the word, often; thereby making allowance for those cases, wherein men of excellent minds may, by a long practice of virtue, have rendered even the heights and rigours of it delightful. Atterbury.

5. To ease; to assuage.

He balms and herbs thereto apply'd,
And evermore with mighty spells them charm'd,
That in short space he has them qualified,
And him restor'd to health that would have dy'd. Spenser.

6. To modify; to regulate.

It hath no larynx or throttle to qualify the sound. Brown.

QUA'LITY. n. s. [qualitas, Lat. qualité, Fr.]

1. Nature relatively considered.

These, being of a far other nature and quality, are not so strictly or everlastingly commanded in scripture. Hooker.

Other creatures have not judgment to examine the quality of that which is done by them, and therefore in that they do, they neither can accuse nor approve themselves. Hooker.

Since the event of an action usually follows the nature or quality of it, and the quality follows the rule directing it, it concerns a man, in the framing of his actions, not to be deceived in the rule. South.

The power to produce any idea in our mind, I call quality of the subject, wherein that power is. Lecke.

2. Property; accidental adjunct.

In the division of the kingdom, it appears not which of the dukes he values most; for qualities are so weighed, that enriosity in neither can make choice of either's moiety. Shakesp.

No sensible qualities, as light and colour, heat and sound, can be subsistent in the bodies themselves absolutely considered, without a relation to our eyes and ears, and other organs of sense: these qualities are only the effects of our sensation, which arise from the different motions upon our nerves from objects without, according to their various modification and position. Bentley.

3. Particular efficacy.

O, mickle is the powerful grace, that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakesp.

4. Disposition; temper.

To-night we'll wander through the streets, and note
The qualities of people. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

5. Virtue or vice.

One doubt remains, said I, the dames in green,
What were their qualities, and who their queen? Dryden.

6. Accomplishment; qualification.

He had those qualities of horsemanship, dancing, and fencing, which accompany a good breeding. Clarendon.

The attorney of the dutchy of Lancaster partakes of both qualities, partly of a judge in that court, and partly of an attorney general. Bacon.
We, who are hearers, may be allowed some opportunities in the quality of standers-by. Swift.

8. Comparative or relative rank.

It is with the clergy, if their persons be respected, even as it is with other men; their quality many times far beneath that which the dignity of their place requireth. Hooker.

We lived most joyful, obtaining acquaintance with many of the city, not of the meanest quality. Bacon.

The masters of these horses may be admitted to dine with the lord lieutenant: this is to be done, what quality soever the persons are of. Teaple.

9. Rank; superiority of birth or station.

Let him be so entertained, as suits with gentlemen of your knowing to a stranger of his quality. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

10. Persons of high rank. Collectively.

I shall appear at the masquerade dressed up in my feathers, that the quality may see how pretty they will look in their travelling habits. Addison.

Of all the servile herd, the worst is he,
That in proud dulness joins with quality,
A constant critick at the great man's board,
To fetch and carry nonsense for my lord. Pope.

To quality belongs the highest place,
My lord comes forward; forward let him come!
Ye vulgar! at your peril give him room. Young.

QUALM. n. s. [spealm, Sax. a sudden stroke of death.] A sudden fit of sickness; a sudden seizure of sickly languor.

Some sudden qualm hath struck me to the heart,
And dimm'd mine eyes, that I can read no further. Shakesp.

Compar'd to these storms, death is but a qualm, Hell somewhat lightsome, the Bermudas calm. Donne.

I find a cold qualm come over my heart, that I faint, I can speak no longer. Howel.

All maladies
Of ghastly spasms, or racking torture qualms
Of heart-sick agony. Milton's Paradise Lost.

For who, without a qualm, hath ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd? Roscommon.

They have a sickly uneasiness upon them, shifting and changing from one error, and from one qualm to another, banking after novelties. L'Estrange.

Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travail to requite. Dryden's Virgil.

When he hath stretched his vessels with wine to their utmost capacity, and is grown weary and sick, and feels those qualms and disturbances that usually attend such excesses, he resolves, that he will hereafter contain himself within the bounds of sobriety. Calamy.

The qualms or ruptures of your blood Rise in proportion to your food. Prior.

QUA'LMISH. adj. [from qualm.] Seized with sickly languor.

QUARREL. n. s. [querelle, Fr.]

1. A breach of concord.

You and I may engage in this question, as far as either of us shall think profitable, without any he least beginning of a quarrel, and then that will competently be removed from such, as of which you cannot hope to see an end. Hammond.

2. A brawl; a petty fight; a scuffle.

If I can fasten but one cup upon him,
With that which he hath drank to-night already,
He'll be as full of quarrel and offence,
As my young mistress' dog. Shakesp. Othello.

3. A dispute; a contest.

The quarrel which in this present part, striveth against the current and stream of laws, was a long while nothing feared. Hooker.

It were a matter of more trouble than necessity to repeat in this quarrel what has been alleged by the worthies of our church. Holyday.

As if earth too narrow were for fate,
On open seas their quarrels they debate;
In hollow wood they floating armies bear,
And force imprison'd winds to bring 'em near. Dryden.

4. A cause of debate.

I could not die any where so contented, as in the king's company; his cause being just, and his quarrel honourable. Shakesp.

If not in service of our God we fought,
In meaner quarrel if this sword were shaken,
Well might thou gather in the gentle thought,
So fair a princess should not be forsaken. Fairfax.

5. Something that gives a right to mischief, reprisal, or action.

He thought he had a good quarrel to attack him. Holingshed.

Wives are young men's mistresses, companions for middle age, and old men's nurses; so a man may have a quarrel to marry when he will. Bacon.

QUARTERLY. adj. [from quarter.] Containing a fourth part.
The moon makes four quarterly seasons within her little year or month of consecution. Holder.
From the obliquity of the ecliptick to the equator arise the diurnal differences of the sun's right ascension, which finish their variations in each quadrant of the ecliptick, and this being added to the former inequality from eccentricity, makes these quarterly and seemingly irregular inequalities

QUARTERLY. adv. Once in a quarter of a year.

QUARTERMASTER. n. s. [quarter and master.] One who regulates the quarters of soldiers.
The quartermaster general was marking the ground for the encampment of the covering army.
Taiter.

QUARTERN. n. s. A gill or the fourth part of a pint.

QUARTERSTAFF. n. s. A staff of defence:
so called, I believe, from the manner of using it; one hand being placed at the middle, and the other equally between the middle and the end.
His quarterstaff, which he could ne'er forsake, Hung half before, and half behind his back. Dryd.
Immense riches he squandered away at quarter-staff and cudgel play, in which he challenged all the country. Arbuthnot.

QUARTILE. n. s. An aspect of the planets, when they are three signs or ninety degrees distant from each other, and is marked thus ☐. Harris.
Mars and Venus in a quartile move
My pangs of jealousy for Ariet's love. Dryden.

QUARTO. n. s. [quarto, Lat.] A book in which every sheet, being twice doubled, makes four leaves.
Our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems; then folio's and quarto's were the fashionable sizes, as volumes in octavo are now. Watts.

To QUASH. v. a. [quasso, Dut. squacci-are, Ital. gasso, Lat.]

1. To crush; to squeeze.
The whales
Against sharp rocks, like reeling vessels quash'd, Though huge as mountains, are in pieces dash'd.
Walter.

2. To subdue suddenly.
'Twas not the spawn of such as these
That dy'd with Punick blood the conquer'd seas }
And quash'd the stern Acadies. Roscommon.
Our she confederates keep pace with us in quash-ing the rebellion, which had begun to spread itself among part of the fair sex. Addison's Frecholder.

3. [Casser, Lat. casser, Fr.] To annul; to nullify; to make void: as, the indictment was quashed.

To QUASH. v. n. To be shaken with a noise.
A thin and fine membrane strait and closely adhering to keep it from quashing and slaking. Ray.

QUE

The water in this dropsy, by a sudden jirk, may be heard to quash. Sharp's Surgery.

QUASH. n. s. A pompion. Ainsw.

QUATERCOUSINS. As they are not quar-tercousins, as it is commonly spoken catercousins, plus ne sont pas de quatre cousins, they are not of the four first degrees of kindred, that is, they are not friends. Skinner.

QUATERNARY. n. s. [quaternarius, Lat.]
The number four.
The objections against the quaternary of elements and ternary of principles, need not to be opposed so much against the doctrines themselves. Boyle.

QUATERNION. n. s. [quaternion, Lat.]
The number four.
Air and the elements! the eldest birth
Of nature's womb, that in quaternion run Perpetual circle, multiform; and mix
And nourish all things; let your ceaseless change Vary to our great Maker still new praise. Milton.
I have not in this scheme of these nine quater-nions of consonants, distinct known characters, whereby to express them, but must repeat the same. Holder's Elements of Speech.

QUATERNITY. n. s. [quaternus, Lat.]
The number four.
The number of four stands much admired, not only in the quaternity of the elements, which are the principles of bodies, but in the letters of the name of God. Brown.

QUATRAIN. n. s. [quatrain, Fr.] A stanza of four lines rhyming alternately: as,
Say, Stella, what is love, whose fatal pow'r
Robs virtue of content, and youth of joy?
What nymph or goddess in a luckless hour
Disclos'd to light the mischief-making boy?
Mrs. Mulso.
I have writ my poem in quatrains or stanzas of four in alternate rhyme, because I have ever judg'd them of greater dignity for the sound and number, than any other verse in use. Dryden.

To QUAYER. v. n. [qavan, Sax.]

1. To shake the voice; to speak or sing with a tremulous voice.
Miso sitting on the ground with her knees up, and her hands upon her knees, tuning her voice with many a quavering cough, thus discours'd. Sidney.
The division and quavering, which please so much in music, have an agreement with the glittering of light playing upon a wave. Bacca.
Now sportive youth
Carol incondite rhythms with suiting notes,
And quaver unharmonious. Philips.
We shall hear her quavering them half a minute after us, to some sprightly airs of the opera. Addis.

2. To tremble; to vibrate.
A membrane, stretched like the head of a drum, is to receive the impulse of the sound, and to vibrate or quaver according to its reciprocal motions. Ray.
If the eye and the finger remain quiet, these colours vanish in a second minute of time, but if the finger be moved with a quavering motion, they appear again. Newton's Opticks.

QUAY. n. s. [quai, Fr.] A key; an artificial bank to the sea or river, on which goods are conveniently unladen.

QUEACHY. adj. [I know not whence derived; perhaps originally quaeky, quaggy, or quashy.] Unsolid; unsound;
boggy. Not in use.
The boggy meads and queachy fens below. Drayton.
Goodwin's queachy sand. Drayton.

QUEAN. n. s. [qean, Sax. a barren cow;
]openh, in the laws of Canute, a strumpet.] A worthless woman, generally a strumpet.
As fit as the nail to his hole, or as a scolding quean to a wrangling knave. Shakesp.

QUE

This well they understand like cunning queans,
And hide their nastiness behind the scenes. Dryd.
Such is that sprinkling, which some careless quean
Flirts on you from her mop. Swift.

QUE'ASINESS. n. s. [from queasy.] The sickness of a nauseated stomach.

QUE'ASY. adj. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. Sick with nausea.
He, queasy with his insolence, already
Will their good thoughts call from him. Shakesp.
Whether a rotten state and hope of gain,
Or to disuse me from the queasy pain
Of being belov'd and loving,
Ont push me first. Donnc.

2. Fastidious; squeamish.
I, with your two helps, will so practise on Benedict, that, in despite of his quick wit and his queasy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice.
Shakesp.

The humility of Gregory the great would not admit the stile of bishop, but the ambition of Boniface made no scruple thereof, nor have queasy resolutions been harboured in their successors ever since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Men's stomachs are generally so queasy in these cases, that it is not safe to overload them.
Government of the Tongue.

Without question,
Their conscience was too queasy of digestion. Dryd.

3. Causing nauseousness.
I have one thing of a queasy question,
Which I must act. Shakesp. King Lear.

To QUECK. v. n. To shrink; to show pain; perhaps to complain. A word not in use.

The lads of Sparta were accustomed to be whipped at altars, without so much as quecking. Bacon.

QUEEN. n. s. [open, Sax. a woman, a wife,
the wife of a king.]

1. The wife of a king.
He was lapt
In a most curious mantle, wrought by the hand
Of his queen mother. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom.

That queen Elizabeth lived sixty-nine, and reigned forty-five years, means no more than that the duration of her existence was equal to sixty-nine, and the duration of her government to forty-five annual revolutions of the sun. Locke.

Have I a queen
Pass by my fellow rulers of the world?
Have I refus'd their blood to mix with yours,
And raise new kings from so obscure a race? Dryd.

To QUEEN. v. n. To play the queen.
A threepence how'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,
Being now awake, I'll queen it no inch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep. Shakesp.

QUEEN-APPLE. n. s. A species of apple.

The queen-apple is of the summer kind, and a good cyder apple mixed with others. Mortimer.
Her cheeks with kindly claret s, read,
Aurora like new out of bed,
Or like the fresh queen-apple's side,
Blushing at sight of Phœbus' pride. Sidney.

QUEENING. n. s. An apple.

The winter queening is good for the table. Mort.

QUEER. adj. [Of this word the original is not known: a correspondent supposes a queer man to be one who has a quære to his name in a list.] Odd; strange; original; particular.

He never went to bed till two in the morning, because he would not be a queer fellow; and was every now and then knocked down by a constable, to signalize his vivacity. Spectator.

QUEERLY. adv. [from queer.] Particularly; oddly.

QUE

QUEERNESS. n. s. [from queer.] Odd-ness; particularity.

QUE'EST. n. s. [from questus, Lat. Skinner.] A ringdove; a kind of wild pigeon.

To QUELL. v. a. [cpellan, Sax.] To crush; to subdue; originally, to kill.

What avails Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd with pain,
Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands
Of mightiest? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Compassion quell'd
His best of man, and gave him up to tears
A space; till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.
Milton.

This quell'd her pride, but other doubts remain'd,
That once disdaining, she might be disdain'd.
Dryden.

He is the guardian of the publick' quiet, appointed to restrain violence, to quell seditions and tumults, and to preserve that peace which preserves the world. Atterbury.

To QUELL. v. n. To die. Spenser.

QUELL. n. s. [from the verb.] Murder.

trifle; a kickshaw.

From country grass to confitures of court,
Or city's quelquechoses, let not report
My mind transport. Donne.

To QUEME. v. n. [cpeman, Sax.] To please. An old word. Skinner.

To QUENCH. v. a.

1. To extinguish fire.
Since stream, air, sand, mine eyes and ears conspire,
What hope to quench, where each thing blows the fire? Sidney.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench. Shakesp.
A little fire is quickly trodden out,
Which, being suffer'd, rivers cannot quench.
Shakesp.

The fire had power in the water, forgetting his own virtue; and the water forgot his own quenching nature. Wisdom, xix. 20.

Milk quencheth wild-fire better than water, because it entrench better. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Subdu'd in fire the stubborn metal lies;
One draws and blows reciprocating air;
Others to quench the hissing mass prepare. Dryden.

You have already quench'd sedition's brand,
And zeal, which burnt it, only warms the land.
Dryden.

When your work is forged, do not quench it in water to cool it, but throw it down upon the floor or hearth to cool of itself; for the quenching of it in water will harden it. Moxon's Mechan. Exercises.

2. To still any passion or commotion; to repress any motion of the mind good or bad.

But if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy. Shakesp.

Beseech God, that he will inflame thy heart with this heavenly fire of devotion; and when thou hast obtained it, beware that thou neither quench it by any wilful sin, or let it go out again for want of stirring it up and employing it. Duty of Man.

3. To allay thirst.

Every draught to him, that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature, a provision for rheum and diseases a drowning of the spirits. South.

4. To destroy.

QUE

When death's form appears, she feareth not
An utter quenching or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot
That so she might all future ill prevent. Davies.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally very cold, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke, and retard the edge of any weapon. Rau.

To QUENCH. v. n. To cool; to grow cool.

Dost thou think, in time
She will not quench, and let instructions enter
I dare folly now possesses? Shakesp. Cymbeline.

QUENCHABLE. adj. [from quench.] That may be quenched.

QUENCHER. n. s. [from quench.] Extinguisher; one that quenches.

QUENCHLESS. adj. [from quench.] Unextinguishable.

Come, bloody Clifford, rough Northumberland,
I dare your quenchless fury to more rage. Shakesp.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
He fills a burnish'd throne of quenchless fire. Crashaw.

QUE'RELE. n. s. [querela, Lat. querell,
Fr.] A complaint to a court.

A circumdaction obtains not in causes of appeal, but in causes of first instance and simple querelle only. Aylife.

Some apple-colour'd corn
Ground in fair querns, and some did spindles turn.
Chapman.

QUERPO. n. s. [corrupted from cuervo, Span.] A dress close to the body; a waistcoat.

I would fain see him walk in querpo, like a cased rabbit, without his holy far upon his back.
Dryden.

QUERRY, for equerry. n. s. [ecuyer, Fr.]

A groom belonging to a prince, or one conversant in the king's stables, and having the charge of his horse s; also the stable of a prince. Bailey.

QUERULOUS. adj. [querulus, Lat.] Mourning; whining; habitually complaining.

Although they were a people by nature hard-hearted, querulous, wrathful, and impatient of rest and quietness, yet was there nothing of force to work the subversion of their state, till the time beforementioned was expired. Hooker.

The pressures of war have cowed their spirits, as may be gathered from the very accent of their words, which they prolate in a whining kind of querulous tone, as if still complaining and crestfallen. Hawcl's Vocal Forest.

Though you give no countenance to the complaints of the querulous, yet curb the insolence of the injurious. Lacke.

QUERULOUSLY. adv. [from querulous.] In a complaining manner.

His wounded ears complaints eternal fill, As uncoil'd hinges, querulously shrill. Young.

QUERULOUSNESS. n. s. [from querulous.] Habit or quality of complaining mournfully.

QUERY. n. s. [from quære, Lat.] A question; an enquiry to be resolved.

I shall conclude, with proposing only some queries, in order to a farther search to be made by others. Newton.

This shews the folly of this query, that might always be demanded, that would impiously and absurdly attempt to tie the arm of omnipotence from doing any thing at all, because it can never do its utmost. Bentley.

TO QUERY. v. a. [from the noun.] To ask questions.

Each prompt to query, answer and debate. Pope.

QUEST. n. s. [queste, Fr.]

1. Search; act of seeking.

None but such as this hold ape unblest, Can never thrive in that unlucky quest. Spenser.

If lusty love should find in quest of beauty, Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch? Shakesp.

Fair silver huskin'd nymphs, I know this quest of yours and free intent Was all in honour and devotion meant, To the great mistress of your princely shrine. Milton.

An aged man in rural weeds, Following, as seem'd, the quest of some stray ewe. Milton.

One for all Myself expose, with lonely steps to tread Th' unsounded deep, and the void immense To search with wand'ring quest a place foretold Should be. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'T would be not strange, should we find Paradise at this day where Adam left it; and I rather note this, because I see there are some so earnest in quest of it. Woodward.

There's not an African, That traverses our vast Numidian deserts In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow, But better practises these boasted virtues. Addison.

We see them active and vigilant in quest of delight. Spectator.

2. [For inquest.] An empannelled jury.

What's my offence? Where is the evidence that doth accuse me? What lawful quest have given their verdict up Unto the frowning judge? Shakesp. Richard III.

3. Searchers. Collectively.

You have been hotly call'd for, When, being not at your lodging to be found, The senate sent above three several quests To search you out. Shakesp. Othello.

4. Enquiry; examination.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes Are stuck upon thee; volumes of report Run with these false and most contrarious quests Upon thy doings. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

5. Request; desire; solicitation.

Gad not abroad at every quest and call Of an untrai'd hope or passion. Herbert.

TO QUEST. v. n. [quæter, Fr. from the noun.] To go in search.

QUESTANT. n. s. [from quester, Fr.] Seeker; endeavourer after

See, that you come Not to woo honour, but to wed it; when The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek, That fame may cry you loud. Shakesp.

QUESTION. n. s. [question, Fr. quæstio, Lat.]

1. Interrogatory; any thing enquired.

Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason for the entertainment of the time, that ye ask me questions, than that I ask you. Bacon.

2. Enquiry; disquisition.

It is to be put to question, whether it be lawful for christian princes to make an invasive war simply for the propagation of the faith. Bacon.

3. A dispute; a subject of debate.

There arose a question between some of John's disciples and the Jews about purifying. John.

4. Affair to be examined.

In points of honour to be try'd, Suppose the question not your own. Swift.

How easy is it for a man to fill a book with quotations, as you have done, that can be content with any thing, however foreign to the question? Waterland.

5. Doubt; controversy; dispute.

This is not my writing, Though I confess much like the character: But out of question 'tis Maria's hand. Shakesp.

'Tis time for him to shew himself, when his very being is called in question, and to come and judge the world, when men begin to doubt whether he made it. Tillotson.

The doubt of their being native impressions on the mind, is stronger against these moral principles than the other; not that it brings their truth at all in question. Lacke.

Our own earth would be barren and desolate, without the benign influence of the solar rays, which without question is true of all the other planets. Bentley.

6. Judicial trial.

Whosoever be found guilty, the communion book hath deserved least to be called in question for this fault. Hooker.

7. Examination by torture.

Such a presumption is only sufficient to put the person to the rack or question, according to the civil law, and not bring him to condemnation. Ayliffe's Pereragon.

8. State of being the subject of present enquiry.

If we being defendants do answer, that the ceremonies in question are godly, comely, decent, profitable for the church, their reply is childish and disorderly to say, that we demand the thing in question, and shew the poverty of our cause, the goodness whereof we are fain to beg that our adversaries would grant. Hooker.

If it would purchase six shillings and three-pence weighty money, he had proved the matter in question. Locke.

Nor are these assertions that dropped from their pens by chance, but delivered by them in places where they profess to state the points in question. Atterbury's Preface.

9. Endeavour; act of seeking. Not in use.

As it more concerns the Turk than Rhodes, So may he with more facile question bear it; For that it stands not in such warlike brace, But altogether lacks the abilities That Rhodes is dress'd in. Shakesp.

TO QUESTION. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To enquire.

Suddenly out of this delightful dream The man awoke, and would have question'd more; But he would not endure the woful theme. Spenser.

He that questioneth much shall learn much, and content much; but especially if he apply his questions to the skill of the persons whom he asketh. Bacon's Essays.

Unreasonable subtilty will still seem to be reasoning; and at least will question, when it cannot answer. Holyday.

2. To debate by interrogatories.

I pray you think you question with a Jew; You may as well use question with the wolf, Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb. Shakesp.

TO QUESTION. v. a. [questionner, Fr.]

1. To examine one by questions.

Question your royal thoughts, make the case yours;

Be now the father, and propose a son; Hear your own dignity so much prophand; And then imagine me taking your part, And in your pow'r so silencing your son. Shakesp.

I must not have you henceforth question me, Whither I go. Shakesp. Henry IV.

This construction is not so undubitably to be received as not at all to be questioned. Brown.

2. To doubt; to be uncertain of.

O impotent estate of human life! Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire, And most we question what we most desire. Prior.

3. To have no confidence in; to mention as not to be trusted.

Be a design never so artificially laid, if it chances to be defeated by some cross accident, the man is then run down, his counsels derided, his prudence questioned, and his person despised. South.

QUESTIONABLE. adj. [from question.]

1. Doubtful; disputable.

Your accustomed clemency will take in impressions the offer of these my simple labours, bestowed for the necessary justification of laws heretofore made questionable, because not perfectly understood. Hooker's Dedication.

That persons drowned float, the ninth day when their gall breaketh, is a questionable determination, both in the time and cause. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is questionable, whether the use of steel springs was known in those ancient times. Wilkins.

It is questionable, whether Galen ever saw the dissection of a human body. Baker.

2. Suspicious; liable to suspicion; liable to question.

Be thy advent wicked or charitable, Thou com'st in such a questionable shape, That I will speak to thee. Shakesp. Hamlet.

QUESTIONARY. adj. [from question.]

Enquiring; asking questions. I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes or no to questionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Swift.

QUESTIONABLENESS. n. s. [from question.] The quality of being questionable.

QUESTIONER. n. s. [from question.] An enquirer.

QUESTIONLESS. adv. [from question.] Certainly; without doubt; doubtless.

Questionless hence it comes that many were mistaken. Ruleigh.

Questionless duty moves not so much upon command as promise; now that which proposes the greatest and most suitable rewards to obedience, and the greatest punishments to disobedience, doubtless is the most likely to enforce the one and prevent the other. South.

QUESTMAN. } n. s. [quest, man,

QUESTMONGER. } and monger.] Starter of law-suits or prosecutions.

Their principal working was upon penal laws, wherein they spared none, great nor small, but raked over all new and old statutes, having ever a rabble of promoters, questmongers, and leading jurors at their command. Bacon.

Of't he to her his charge of quick return Repeated. Milton's Parad. Lost.

4. Active; spritely; ready.

A man of great sagacity in business, and he preserved so great a vigour of mind, even to his death, when near eighty, that some, who had known him in his younger years, did believe him to have much quicker parts in his age than before. Clarendon.

A man must have passed his noviciate in sinning, before he comes to this, he never so quick a proficient. South.

The animal, which is first produced of an egg, is a blind and dull worm; but that which hath its resurrection thence, is a quick eyed, volatile and sprightly fly. Greus Cosmol.

QUICK. adv. Nimble; speedily; readily.

Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, saucy, and As quarrelous as the weazle. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

This shall your understanding clear,
Those things from me that you shall hear, Conceiving much the quicker. Drayton's Nymphid.

They gave those complex ideas, that the things they were continually to give and receive information about, ought to be the easier and quicker understood. Locke.

This is done with little notice, if we consider how very quick the actions of the mind are performed, requiring not time, but many of them crowded into an instant. Locke.

QUICK. n. s.

1. A live animal. Not in use.

Peeping close into the thiek,
Might see the moving of some quick,
Whose shape appeared not;
But were it fairly, fiend or snake,
My courage eamed it to wake,
And manful thereof shot Spenser.

2. The living flesh; sensible parts.

If Stanley held, that a son of king Edward had still the better right, it was to teach all England to say as much; and therefore that speech touch'd the quick. Bacon.

Stung to the quick, he felt it at his heart. Dryden.
The thought of this disgraceful composition so touches me to the quick, that I cannot sleep. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

Scarifying gangrenes, by several incisions down to the quick, is almost universal, and with reason, since it not only discharges a pernicious ichor, but makes way for topical applications. Sharp.

3. Living plants.

For inclosing of land, the most usual way is with a ditch and bank set with quick. Mortimer.

QUICKBEAM, or quicktree. n. s. [ornus.]

Quickbeam or wild sorh, by some called the Irish ash, is a species of wild ash, preceded by blossoms of an agreeable scent. Mortimer.

To QUICKEN. v. a. [epiccan, Sax.]

1. To make alive.

All they that go down into the dust, shall kneel before him; and no man hath quickened his own soul. Psaln xxii. 30.

This my mean task would he
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but
The mistress which I serve, quickens what's dead,
And makes my labours pleasures. Shak. Tempest.

Fair soul, since to the fairest body join'd
You give such lively life, such quick'ning pow'r,
And influence of such celestial kind,
As keeps it still in youth's immortal flower. Davies.

He throws
His influence round, and kindles as he goes;
Hence flocks and herds, and men and beasts and fowls
With breath are quicken'd, and attract their souls. Dryden.

2. To hasten; to accelerate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Others were appointed to consider of penal laws and proclamations in force, and to quicken the execution of the most principal. Hayward.

Though any commodity should shift hands never so fast, yet, if they did not cease to be any longer traffick, this would not at all make or quicken their vent. Locke.

3. To sharpen; to actuate; to excite.

Though my senses were astonished, my mind forced them to quicken themselves; because I had learnt of him, how little favour he is wont to shew in any matter of advantage. Sidney.

It was like a fruitful garden without an hedge, that quickens the appetite to enjoy so tempting a prize. South.

They endeavour by brandy to quicken their taste already extinguished. Tutler.

An argument of great force to quicken them in the improvement of those advantages to which the mercy of God had called them by the gospel. Rogers.

The desire of fame hath been no inconsiderable motive to quicken you in the pursuit of those actions, which will best deserve it. Swift.

To QUICKEN. v. n.

1. To become alive: as, a woman quickens with child.

These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin Will quicken and accuse thee; I'm your host; With robbers hands, my hospitable favour You should not traffic this. Shakesp. King Lear.

They rub out of it a red dust, that converteth after a while into worms, which they kill with wine when they begin to quicken. Sandy's Journey.

The heart is the first part that quickens, and the last that dies. Ray on the Creation.

Sees by degrees a purer bluish arise,
And keener lightnings quicken in her eyes. P. n. e.

QUICKENER. n. s. [from quicken.]

1. One who makes alive.

2. That which accelerates; that which actuates.

Love and enmity, aversation and fear, are not able whetters and quickeners of the spirit of life in all animals. More.

QUICKGRASS. n. s. [from quick and grass; gramen craninum, Lat.] Dog grass.

QUICKLIME. n. s. [calx viva, Lat. quick and lime.] Lime unquenched.

After burning the stone, when lime is in its perfect and unaltered state, it is called quicklime. Hill.

QUICKLY. adv. [from quick.] Soon; speedily; without delay.

Thou com'st to use thy tongue: thy story quickly. Shakesp.

Pleasure dwells no longer up the appetite than the necessities of nature, which are quickly and easily provided for; and then all that follows is an oppression. South.

QUICKNESS. n. s. [from quick.]

1. Speed; velocity; celerity.

What any invention hath in the strength of its motion is abated in the slowness of it; and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins.

Joy, like a ray of the sun, reflects with a greater ardour and quickness, when it rebounds upon a man from the breast of his friend. South.

2. Activity; briskness.

The best choice is of an old physician and a young lawyer; because, where errors are fatal, ability of judgment and moderation are required; but where advantages may be wrought upon, diligence and quickness of wit. Botton.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression. Dryden.

3. Keen sensibility.

Would not quickness of sensation be an inconvenience to an animal, that most lie still? Locke.

4. Sharpness; pungency.

Thy generous fruits, though gather'd ere their prime,
Still shew'd a quickness; and maturing time
But mellow what we write to the dull sweets of rhyme. Druiden.

Ginger renders it brisk, and corrects its wildness, and juice of corinths whereof a few drops tinge and add a pleasant quickness. Mortimer.

QUICKSAND. n. s. [quick and sand.] Moving sand; unsolid ground.

What is Edward, but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence, but a quicksand of deceit? Shakesp.

Undergirding the ship, and fearing lest they should fall into the quicksands, they strike sail, and so were driven. Acts, xxvii.

But when the vessel is on quicksands cast,
The flowing tide does more the sinking haste. Dryden.

Trajan, by the adoption of Nerva, stems the tide to her relief, and like another Neptune shoves her off the quicksands. Addison.

I have marked out several of the shoals and quicksands of life, in order to keep the unwary from running upon them. Addison.

To QUICKSET. v. a. [quick and set.] To plant with living plants.

In making or mending, as needeth thy ditch,
Get set to quickset it, learn cunningly which. Tusser.

A man may ditch and quickset three poles a day, where the ditch is three foot wide and two foot deep. Mortimer.

QUICKSET. n. s. [quick and set.] living plant set to grow.

The batul pastures fence'd, and most with quickset mound. Drayton.

Plant quick sets and transplant fruit trees towards the decrease. Luclyn's Kalknar.

QUI

Nine in ten of the quickest hedges are ruined for want of skill. Swift's Miscellanies.

QUICKSIGHTED. adj. [quick and sight.] Having a sharp sight.

No body will deem the quicksighted amongst them to have very enlarged views in ethicks. Locke.

No article of religion hath credibility enough for the man; and yet these same cautious and quicksighted gentlemen can swallow down this sottish opinion about percipient atoms. Bentley.

QUICKSIGHTEDNESS. n. s. [from quicksighted.] Sharpness of sight.

The ignorance that is in us no more hinders the knowledge that is in others, than the blindness of a mole is an argument against the quicksightedness of an eagle. Locke.

QUICKSILVER. n. s. [quick and silver; argentum vivum, Lat.]

Quicksilver, called mercury by the chymists, is a naturally fluid mineral, and the heaviest of all known bodies next to gold, and is the more heavy and fluid, as it is more pure; it is wholly volatile in the fire, and may be driven up in vapour by a degree of heat very little greater than that of boiling water: it is the least tenacious of all bodies, and every smaller drop may be again divided by the lightest touch into a multitude of others. The specific gravity of pure mercury is to water as 14020 to 1000, and as it is the heaviest of all fluids, it is also the coldest, and when heated the hottest. The ancients all esteemed quicksilver a poison, nor was it brought into internal use, till about two hundred and twenty years ago, which was first occasioned by the shepherds, who ventured to give it their sheep to kill worms, and as they received no hurt by it, it was soon concluded, that men might take it safely: in time, the diggers in the mines, when they found it crude, swallowed it in vast quantities, in order to sell it privately, when they had voided it by stool: but the miners seldom follow their occupation above three or four years, and the artificers, who have much dealing in it, are generally seized with paralytick disorders. Hill.

Mercury is very improperly called a metal, for though it has weight and similarity of parts, it is neither dissolvable by fire, malleable, nor fixed: it seems to constitute a particular class of fossils; and is rather the mother or basis of all metals, than a metal itself: mercury is of considerable use in gilding, making looking-glasses, in refining gold, and various other mechanical operations besides medicine. Chambers.

Cinnabar maketh a beautiful purple like unto a red rose; the best was wont to be made in Libia, of brimstone and quicksilver burnt. Peacham.

Pleasures are few; and fewer we enjoy; Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy; We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill, Still it eludes us, and it glitters still: If seiz'd at last, compute your mighty gains, What is it, but rank poison in your veins? Young.

QUICKSILVERED. adj. [from quicksilver.] Overlaid with quicksilver.

Metal is more difficult to polish than glass, and is afterwards very apt to be spoiled by tarnishing, and reflects not so much light as glass quicksilvered over does; I would propound to use instead of the metal a glass ground concave on the foreside, and as much convex on the backside, and quicksilvered over on the convex side. Newton's Opticks.

QUIDAM. n. s. [Lat.] Somebody. Not now used.

For envy of so many worthy quidams, which catch at the garland, which to you alone is due, you will be persuaded to pluck out of the hateful darkness those so many excellent poems of yours, which lie hid, and bring them forth to eternal light. Spenser.

QUIDDANY. n. s. [cydonium, cydoniatum, Lat. quidden, Germ. a quince.] Marmalade; confection of quinces made with sugar.

QUIDDIT. n. s. [corrupted from quid-

QUIDDITY. n. s. [quidditas, low Lat.]

1. Essence; that which is a proper answer to the question, quid est? a scholastick term.

He could reduce all things to acts, And knew their natures and abstracts, Where entity and quiddity The ghosts of defunct bodies fly. Hudibras.

2. A trifling nicety; a cavil; a captious question. Not used.

Misnomer in our laws, and other quiddities, I leave to the professors of law. Camden's Remains.

QUIESCENCE. n. s. [from quiesco, Lat.] Rest; repose.

Whether the earth move or rest, I undertake not to determine: my work is to prove, that the common inducement to the belief of its quiescence, the testimony of sense, is weak and frivolous. Glanville.

QUIESCENT. adj. [quiescens, Lat.] Resting; not being in motion; not movent; lying at repose.

Though the earth move, its motion must needs be as insensible as if it were quiescent. Glanville.
The right side, from whence the motion of the body beginneth, is the active or moving side; but the sinister is the weaker or more quiescent side. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Sight takes in at a greater distance and more variety at once, comprehending also quiescent objects, which hearing does not. Holder.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew.

Pression or motion cannot be propagated in a fluid in right lines beyond an obstacle which stops part of the motion, but will bend and spread every way into the quiescent medium, which lies beyond the obstacle. Newton's Opticks.

QUIET. adj. [quiet, Fr. quiescus, Lat.]

1. Still; free from disturbance.

Breaking off the end for want of hreath, And sliding soft, as down to sleep her laid, She ended all her woe in quiet death. Spenser.

QUI

The lowest degree of faith, that can quiet the soul of man, is a firm conviction that God is placable. Forbes.

2. To still.

Putting together the ideas of moving or quieting corporeal motion, joined to substance, we have the idea of an immaterial spirit. Locke.

QUIETER. n. s. [from quiet.] The person or thing that quiets.

QUIETISM. n. s. [from quiet.]

What is called by the poets apathy or dispassion, by the sceptics indisturbance, by the Molinists quietism, by common men peace of conscience, seems all to mean but great tranquillity of mind. Temple.

QUIETLY. adv. [from quiet.]

1. Calmly; without violent emotion.

Let no man for his own poverty become more oppressing in his bargain, but quietly, modestly, and patiently recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him. Taylor.

2. Peaceably; without offence.

Although the rebels had behaved themselves quietly and modestly by the way as they went; yet they doubted that would but make them more hungry to fall upon the spoil in the end. Bacon.

3. At rest; without agitation.

QUIETNESS. n. s. [from quiet.]

1. Coolness of temper.

This cruel quietness neither returning to dislike nor proceeding to favour; gracious, but gracious still after one manner. Sidney.

That which we move for our better instruction sake, turneth into anger and choler in them; they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly. Hooker.

2. Peace; tranquillity.

Stop effusion of our christian blood, And 'stablish quietness on ev'ry side. Shakesp.

What miseries have both nations avoided, and what quietness and security attained by their peaceable union? Hayward.

3. Stillness; calmness.

If we compare the quietness and chastity of the Bolognese pencil to the bustle and tumult that fills every part of a Venetian picture, without the least attempt to interest the passions, their boasted art will appear a mere struggle without effect. Reynolds.

QUIETSOME. adj. [from quiet.] Calm; still; undisturbed. Not in use.

Let the night be calm and quietsome, Without tempestuous storms or sad affray. Spenser.

QUIETUDE. n. s. [quietude, Fr. from quiet.] Rest; repose; tranquillity. Not in common use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity in the affections. Wotton on Education.

QUILL. n. s.

1. The hard and strong feather of the wing, of which pens are made.

With her nimble quills his soul doth seem to hover, And eye the very pitch that lusty bird did cover. Drayton.

Birds have three other hard substances proper to them; the bill, which is of a like matter with the teeth, the shell of the egg, and their quills. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The instrument of writing.

I will only touch the duke's own department in that island, the proper subject of my quill. Hotton.

Those lives they fail'd to rescue by their skill, Their muse would make immortal with her quill. Garth.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear, To him that notches sticks at Westminster Peer.

3. Prick or dart of a porcupine.

Near these was the black prince of Monomotapa, by whose side was seen the quill-darting porcupine. Arbuthnot and Pope.

4. Reed on which weavers wind their threads.

The presumptuous damsel rashly dar'd
The goddess' self to challenge to the field,
And to compare with her in curious skill,
Of works with loom, with needle, and with quill.
Spenser.

5. The instrument with which musicians strike their strings.

His flying fingers and harmonious quill Strike sev'n distinguish'd notes, and sev'n at once they fill. Dryden.

QUI'LET. n. s. [quidlibet, Lat.] Subtilty; nicety; fraudulent distinction; petty cant.

Why may not that be the skull of a lawyer?
where be his quiddits now? his quilletts? his cases?

A great soul weighs in the scale of reason, what it is to judge of rather than dwell with too scrupulous a diligence upon little quilletts and niceties.
Digby.

Ply her with love letters and billets,
And bait them well for quirks and quilletts.
Hudibras.

QUILT. n. s. [couette, Fr. kulcht, Dut. culcita, culcitra, Lat.] A cover made by stitching one cloth over another with some soft substance between them.

Quilts of roses and spices are nothing so helpful, as to take a cake of new bread, and bedew it with a little sack. Bacon.

In both tables the beds were covered with magnificent quilts amongst the richest sort. Arbuth.
She on the quilt sinks with becoming woe,
Wrapt in a gown, for sickness and for show. Pope.

To QUILT. v. a. [from the noun.] To stitch one cloth upon another with something soft between them.

The sharp steel arriving forcibly
On his horse neck before the quilted fell,
Then from the head the body sundred quite.
Spenser.

A bag quilted with bran is very good, but it drieth too much. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Euellus for the strife prepares,
Strip'd of his quilted coat, his body bares, Compos'd of mighty bone. Dryden's Æneis.

A chair was ready,
So quilted, that he lay at ease reclin'd. Dryden.
Mayn't I quilt my rope? it galls my neck.

QUINARY. adj. [quinarus, Lat.] Consisting of five.

This quinary number of elements ought to have been restrained to the generality of animals and vegetables. Boyle.

QUINCE. n. s. [coin, Fr. quidden, Germ.] 1. The tree.

The quince tree is of a low stature; the branches are diffus'd and crooked; the flower and fruit is like that of the pear tree; but, however cultivated, the fruit is sour and astringent, and is covered with a kind of down: of this the species are six. Miller.

2. The fruit.

They call for dates and quinces in the pastry.
Shaksp.

A quince, in token of fruitfulness, by the laws of Solon, was given to the brides of Athens upon the day of their marriage. Peacham on Drawing.

To QUINCH. v. n. [This word seems to be the same with quack, winch, and quack.] To stir; to flounce as in resentment or pain.

Bestow all my soldiers in such sort as I have,
that no part of all that realm shall be able to dare to quinch. Spenser.

QUINCUNCIAL. adj. [from quincunx.] Having the form of a quincunx.

Of a pentagonal or quincunx disposition, Sir

Thomas Brown produces several examples in his discourse about the quincunx. Ray.

QUINCUNX. n. s. [Latin.] Quincunx order is a plantation of trees, disposed originally in a square, consisting of five trees, one at each corner, and a fifth in the middle, which disposition, repeated again and again, forms a regular grove, wood, or wilderness; and, when viewed by an angle of the square or parallelogram, presents equal or parallel alleys.

Brown produces several examples in his discourses about the quincunx. Ray on the Creation.
He whose lightning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines.
Pope.

occasion pleurisies and quinsies. Arbuthnot on Air.

QUINT. n. s. [quint, Fr.] A set of five.

For state has made a quint
Of generals he's listed in't. Hudibras.

QUINTAIN. n. s. [quintain, Fr.] A post with a turning up. See QUINTIN.

My better parts
Are all thrown down; and that, which here stands up,
Is but a quintain, a mere lifeless block. Shaksp.

QUINTAL. n. s. [centupondium, Lat.] An hundred weight to weigh with.

QUINTESENCE. n. s. [quinta essentia, Lat.] 1. A fifth being.

From their gross matter she abstracts the forms,
And draws a kind of quintessence from things.
Davies.

The ethereal quintessence of heav'n
Flew upward, spirited with various forms,
That roll'd orbicular, and turn'd to stars. Milton.

They made fire, air, earth, and water, to be the four elements, of which all earthly things were compounded, and supposed the heavens to be a quintessence or fifth sort of body distinct from all these. Watts's Logick.

2. An extract from any thing, containing all its virtues in a small quantity.

To me what is this quintessence of dust? man delights not me, nor woman neither. Shaksp.

Who can in memory, or wit, or will,
Or air, or fire, or earth, or water find?
What alchemist can draw, with all his skill,
The quintessence of these out of the mind?
Davies.

For I am a very dead thing,
In whom love wrought new alchymy,
For by his art he did express
A quintessence even from nothingness,
From dull privations and lean emptiness. Dmne.

Paracelsus, by the help of an intense cold, teaches to separate the quintessence of wine. Boyle.

Let there be light! said God; and forthwith light
Ethereal, first of things, quintessence pure, Sprung from the deep. Milton's Parad. Lost.

When the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity and complacency upon the whole soul, infinitely beyond the greatest bodily pleasures, the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delights. South.

QUINTESENTIAL. adj. [from quintessence.] Consisting of quintessence.

Venturous assertions as would have puzzled the authors to have made them good, specially considering that there is nothing contrary to the quintessential matter and circular figure of the heavens; so neither is there to the light thereof.
Hukewell.

QUINTIN. n. s. [I know not whence derived; Minshew deduces it from quintus, Lat. and calls it a game celebrated every fifth year; palus quintanus, Lat. Ainsworth; quintaine, Fr.] An upright post, on the top of which a cross post turned upon a pin; at one end of the cross post was a broad board, and at the other a heavy sand bag; the play was to ride against the broad end with a lance, and pass by before the sand bag, coming round, should strike the tilter on the back.

At quintin he,
In honour of his bridealtee,
Hath challeng'd either wide countee Come cut and long tail, for there be Six hatchelors as bold as he,
Adjuting to his company,
And each one hath his livery. Ben Jonson.

QUINTUPLE. adj. [quintuplus, Lat.] Fivefold.

In the country, the greatest proportion of mortality, one hundred and fifty-six, is above quintuple unto twenty-eight the least.
Graunt's Bills of Mort.

QUIP. n. s. [derived by the etymologists, from whip.] A sharp jest; a taunt; a sarcasm.

Notwithstanding all her sudden quips,
The least whereof would quell a lover's hope,
Yet, spaniel like, the more she spurns my love,
The more it grows, and fawneth on her still. Shak.

If I sent him word his beard was not well cut,
he would send me word, he cut it to please himself:
this is called the quip modest.
Shuk. As you like it.

Nymph, bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips, and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wretched smiles. Milton.

To QUIP. v. a. To rally with bitter sarcasms. Ainsworth.

QUIRE. n. s. [chocur, Fr. choro, Ital.] 1. A body of singers; a chorus.

The trees did bud and early blossoms bore,
And all the quire of birds did sweetly sing,
And told that garden's pleasures in their carolling.
Spenser.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays. Shaksp.

QUI

At thy nativity a glorious quire
Of angels in the fields of Bethlehem sung
To shepherds watching at their folds by night,
And told them the Messiah now was born. Milton.
I may worship thee
For ay, with temples vow'd and virgin quires.

Begin the sung, and strike the livelying lyre, Lo how the years to come, a numerous and well fitted quire,
All hand in hand do decently advance,
And to my song with smooth and equal measures dance. Cowley.

As in beauty she surpass'd the quire,
So nobler than the rest was her attire. Dryden.

2. The part of the church where the service is sung.

I am all on fire,
Not all the buckets in a country quire
Shall quench my rage. Cleveland.
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire,
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play. Dryden.

The fox obscene to gaping tombs retires,
And wolves with howling fill the sacred quires. Pope.

3. [Cahier, Fr.] A bundle of paper consisting of twenty-four sheets.

TO QUIRE. v. n. [from the noun.] To sing in concert.

There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakesp.
My throat of war be turn'd
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe
Small as an enuch, or the virgin's voice
That babies lulls asleep. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

QUIRISTER. n. s. [from quire.] Chorister; one who sings in concert, generally in divine service.

The coy quiristers, that lodge within,
Are prodigal of harmony. Thomson's Spring.

QUIRK. n. s. [Of this word I can find no rational derivation.]

1. Quick stroke; sharp fit.
I've felt so many quirks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither on the start,
Can woman me unto't. Shakesp.

2. Smart taunt.
Some kind of men quarrel purposely on others to taste their valour; belike, this is a man of that quirk. Shakesp.
I may chance to have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me. Shakesp.

3. Slight conceit.
Conceits, puns, quirks or quibbles, jests and repartees may agreeably entertain, but have no place in the search after truth. Hatts on the Mind.

4. Flight of fancy. Not in use.
Most fortunately he hath atchiev'd a maid,
That paragon description and wild fame,
One that excels the quirks of blazoning pens. Shakesp.

5. Subtily; nicety; artful distinction.
Let a lawyer tell them he has spied some defect in an entail; how solicitous are they to repair that error, and leave nothing to the mercy of a law quirk? Decey of Piety.
There are a thousand quirks to avoid the stroke of the law. L'Estrange's Fables.

6. Loose light tune.
Now the chapel's silver bell you hear,
That summons you to all the pride of pray'r;
Light quirks of musick, broken and uneven. Pope.

TO QUIT. v. a. part. pass. quit; pret. I quit or quitted. [quiter, Fr. quitar, Ital. quitar, Span.]

1. To discharge an obligation; to make even.
We will be quit of thine oath, which thou hast made us to swear. Joshua, ii. 20.

By this act, old tyrant,
I shall be quit with thee; while I was virtuous,

QUI

I was a stranger to thy blood, but now Sure thou wilt love me for this horrid crime. Denham.

To John I ow'd great obligation;
But John, unhappily, thought fit
To publish it to all the nation;
Sure John and I are more than quit. Prior.

2. To set free.
Thou art quit from a thousand calamities; therefore let thy joy, which should be as great for thy freedom from them, as is thy sadness when thou feelest any of them, do the same cure upon thy discontent.
Taylor.

Henceforth I fly not death, nor would prolong Life much: but rather how I may be quit
Fairest and easiest of this cumbersome charge. Milt.
To quit you of this fear, you have already looked death in the face; what have you found so terrible in it? Wake.

3. To carry through; to discharge; to perform.
Never worthy prince a day did quit
With greater hazard, and with more renown. Daniel.

4. To clear himself of an affair; with the reciprocal pronoun.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroically hath finish'd
A life heroic, on his enemies
Fully reveng'd, hath left them years of mourning. Milton.

5. To repay; to requite.
He fair the knight saluted, louting low,
Who fair him quitted, as that courteous was. Spens.
Enkindle all the sparks of nature,
To quit this horrid act. Shakesp. King Lear.

6. To vacate obligations.
For our reward,
All our debts are paid; dangers of law
Actions, decrees, judgments against us quitted. Ben Jonson.

One step higher
Would set me highest, and in a moment quit
The debt immense of endless gratitude. Milton.

7. To pay any obligation; to clear a debt; to be tantamount.

They both did fail of their purpose, and got not so much as to quit their charges; because truth, which is the secret of the most high God, whose proper handy-work all things are, cannot be compassed with that wit and those senses which are our own. Hooker.
Does not the air feed the flame? and does not the flame at the same time warm and enlighten the air? and does not the earth quit scores with all the elements in the noble fruits that issue from it?
South's Sermons.

Still I shall hear, and never quit the score, Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theseid o'er and o'er. Dryden.

Iron works ought to be confined to certain places, where there is no conveyance for timber to places of vent, so as to quit the cost of the carriage. Temple.

8. [Contracted from acquit.] To absolve; to acquit.

Nor further seek what their offences be,
Guiltless I quit, guilty I set them free. Fairfax.

9. To pay.
Far other plaints, tears, and laments
The time, the place, and our estates require,
Think on thy sins, which man's old foe presents
Before that judge that quits each soul his hire. Fairfax.

10. To abandon; to forsake.

Then old and fond of issue, took such sorrow,
That he quit being. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Honours are promis'd
To all will quit 'em; and rewards propos'd
Even to slaves that can detect their courses. Ben Jonson.

Such variety of arguments only distract the understanding, such a superficial way of examining is to quit truth for appearance, only to serve our vanity.

11. To resign; to give up.

QUI

The prince, renew'd to bounty as in arms,
With pity saw the ill-conceal'd distress,
Quitted his title to Canpaspe's charms,
And gave the fair one to the friend's embrace. Prior.

QUI'TCHGRASS. n. s. [epice, Sax. gramen canium, Lat.] Dog-grass.

They are the best corn to grow on grounds subject to quitchgrass or other weeds. Mortimer's Husband.

QUITE. adv. [This is derived, by the etymologists, from quittè, discharged, free, Fr. which, however at first appearance unlikely, is much favoured by the original use of the word, which was in this combination, quite and clean; that is, with a clean riddance: its present signification was gradually introduced.] Completely; perfectly; totally; thoroughly.

Those latter exclude not the former quite and clean as unnecessary. Hooker.
He hath sold us, and quite devour'd our money. Genesis, xxxi.

If some foreign ideas will offer themselves, reject them, and hinder them from running away with our thoughts quite from the subject in hand. Locke.

The same actions may be aimed at different ends, and arise from quite contrary principles. Addison.

QUITRENT. n. s. [quit and rent.] Small rent reserved.

Such a tax would be insensible, and pass but as a small quirtrent, which every one would be content to pay towards the guard of the seas. Temple.

My old master, a little before his death, wished him joy of the estate which was falling to him, desiring him only to pay the gifts of charity he had left as quirtrents upon the estate. Addison's Spec.

QUITS. interj. [from quit.] An exclamation used when any thing is repayed and the parties become even.

QUITTANCE. n. s. [quittance, Fr.]

1. Discharge from a debt or obligation; an acquittance.

Now I am remember'd, he scorn'd at me!
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance. Shak.

2. Recompence; return; repayment.

Mine eyes saw him in bloody state,
Render'ing faint quittance, wearied and outbreath'd,
To Henry Monmouth. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no need but he repay
Sevenfold above itself; no gift to him
But breeds the giver a return exceeding
All use of quittance. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

We shall forget the office of our hand,
Sooner than quittance of desert and merit. Shuk.

TO QUITTANCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To repay; to recompence. A word not used.

Embrace me then this opportunity,
As fitting best to quittance their deceit. Shakesp.

QUIT'TER. n. s.

1. A deliverer. Aiusworth.

2. Scoria of tin. Aiusworth.

QUIT'TERBONE. n. s.

Quitterbone is a hard round swelling upon the coronet, between the heel and the quarter, and grows most commonly on the inside of the foot. Farrier's Dict.

QUIVER. n. s. [This word seems to be corrupted from courrir, Fr. or covcr.] A case or sheath for arrows.

As Dianne hunted on a day,
She chauc'd to come where Cupid lay,
His quiver by his head,
One of his shafts she stole away,
And one of hers did close convey
Into the other's stead;
With that love wounded my love's heart,
But Dianne beasts with Cupid's dart. Spenser.

Q U O

Those works, with ease as much he did,
As you would ope and shut your quiver-lid. Chap.
Diana's nymphs would be arrayed in white, their arms and shoulders naked, bows in their hands, and quivers by their sides. Peacham on Drawing.
Her sounding quiver on her shoulder ty'd,
One hand a dart, and one a bow supply'd. Dryd.
QUIVER. adj. Nimble; active. Not in use.

There was a little quiver fellow, and he would manage you his piece thus; and he would about and about. Shakesp.

To QUIVER. v. n.

1. To quake; to play with a tremulous motion.

The birds chaunt melody on every bush,
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind.
Shakesp.

O'er the pommel cast the knight,
Forward he flew, and pitching on his head,
He quiver'd with his feet, and lay for dead. Dryd.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground.
Addison.

Eurydice with quivering voice he mourn'd,
And Heber's banks Eurydice return'd. Gay.
Dancing sun-beams on the waters play'd,
And verdant alders form'd a quivering shade.

The dying gales that pant upon the trees,
The lakes that quiver to the cooling breeze. Pope.

2. To shiver; to shudder.
Zelmae would have put to her helping hand, but she was taken with such a quivering, that she thought it more wisdom to lean herself to a tree and look on. Sidney.

QUIVERED. adj. [from quiver.]

1. Furnished with a quiver.

'Tis chastity
She that has that, is clad in compleat steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen,
May trace huge forests and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and perilous sandy wilds. Milton.

2. Sheathed as in a quiver.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd in his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

To QUOB. v. n. [A low word.] To move as the embrio does in the womb; to move as the heart does when throbbing.

QUODLIBET. n. s. [Lat.] A nice point; a subtilty.

He who reading on the heart,
When all his quodlibets of art
Could not expound its pulse and heat, Swore, he had never felt it beat. Prior.

QUODLIBETARIAN. n. s. [quodlibet, Lat.] One who talks or disputes on any subject. Dict.

QUODLIBETICAL. adj. [quodlibet, Lat.]

or columns at each end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. An instrument for raising warlike engines. Ainsworth.

QUOIT. n. s. [coete, Dut.]

1. Something thrown to a great distance to a certain point.

He plays at quoits well. Shakesp. Henry IV.
When he played at quoits, he was allowed his breeches and stockings. Arbutnot and Pope

2. The discus of the ancients is sometimes called in English quoit, but improperly; the game of quoits is a game of skill; the discuss was only a trial of strength, as among us to throw the hammer.

To QUOIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To throw quoits; to play at quoits. Dryden uses it to throw the discus. See the noun.

Noble youths for mastership should strive,
To quoit, to run, and steeds and chariots drive.
Dryden.

To QUOIT. v. a. To throw.

Quoit him down, Bardolf, like a shave-groat shilling. Shakesp.

QUONDAM. [Lat.] Having been formerly. A ludicrous word.

Freely up those royal spails he took,
Yet at the lion's skin he intly quook. Spenser.

QUORUM. n. s. [Lat.] A bench of justices; such a number of any officers as is sufficient to do business.

They were a parcel of mummers, and being himself one of the quorum in his own county, he wondered that none of the Middlesex justices took care to lay some of them by the heels. Addison

QUOTA. n. s. [quotus, Lat.] A share;
a proportion as assigned to each.

Q U O

Scarce one in this list but engages to supply a quota of brisk young fellows, equipt with hats and feathers. Addison.

QUOTATION. n. s. [from quote.]

1. The act of quoting; citation.
2. Passage adduced out of an author as evidence or illustration.

He, that has but ever so little examined the citations of writers, cannot doubt how little credit the quotations deserve, where the originals are wanting. Locke.

He rang'd his tropes, and preach'd up patience, Back'd his opinion with quotations. Prior.

To QUOTE. v. a. [quoter, Fr.] To cite an author or passage of an author; to adduce by way of authority or illustration the words of another.

The second chapter to the Romans is here quoted only to paint the margent. Whitgift.
St. Paul quotes one of their poets for this saying.
Stillingfleet.

He changed his mind, say the papers, and quote for it Melchior Adams and Hospinian. Atterbury.

He quoted texts right upon our Saviour, though he expounded them wrong. Atterbury.

He will, in the middle of a session, quote passages out of Plato and Pindar. Seyl's Miscel.

QUOTER. n. s. [from quote.] Citer;
he that quotes.

I proposed this passage entire, to take off the disguise which its quoter put upon it. Atterbury.

QUOTH. verb imperfect. [This is only part of epoðan, Sax. retained in English, and is now only used in ludicrous language. It is used by Sidney irregularly in the second person.] Quoth I, say I or said I; quoth he, says he or said he.

Enjoying, quoth you. Sidney.
Shall we, quoth he, so basely brook
This paltry ass? Hudibras.

but a quotidian fever, always increasing to higher inflammation. King Charles.

QUOTIDIAN. n. s. [febris quotidiana, Lat.] A quotidian fever; a fever which returns every day.

If I could meet that fancymonger, I would give him counsel; for he seems to have the quoti-dian of love. Shakesp.

QUOTIENT. n. s. [quotient, Fr. quoties,
Lat.]

In arithmetick, quotient is the number produced by the division of the two given numbers the one by the other. Cocker.

To make all the steps belonging to the same pair of stairs of an equal height, they consider the height of the room in feet and inches, and multiply the feet by twelve, whose product, with the number of odd inches, gives the sum of the whole height in inches, which sum they divide by the number of steps they intend to have in that height, and the quotient shall be the number of inches and parts that each step shall be high. Maxm.

R.

R A B

R IS called the canine letter, because it is uttered with some resemblance to the growl or snarl of a cur: it has one constant sound in English, such as it has in other languages; as, red, rose, more, muriatick: in words derived from the Greek, it is followed by an h, rhapsody: r is never mute, unless the second r may be accounted mute, where two rr are used; as myrrh.

To RA'BATE. v. n. [rabatre, Fr.] In falconry, to recover a hawk to the first again. Ainsworth.

RA'BATO. n. s. A neckband; a ruff. I think your other rabato were better. Shakesp.
Broke broad jests upon her narrow heel,
Pok'd her rabatos, and survey'd her steel.

To RA'BET. v. a. [rabatre, raboter, Fr.] To pare down pieces of wood so as to fit one another.

The rabett plane is to cut part of the upper edge of a board straight or square down, that the edge of another board, cut down in the same manner, may join into the square of the first; and this lapping over of two boards is called rabetting.

The window frame hath every one of its lights rabbed on its outside, about half an inch into the frame, and all these rabbits are groved square.

RA'BET. n. s. [from the verb.] A joint made by paring two pieces so that they wrap over one another.

Having drove in the hooks, they set the rabbits of the door within the rabbits of the door-post.

RA'BBI. } n. s. A doctor among the RA'BBIN. } Jews.

The Hebrew rabbins say, that nature hath given man, for the pronouncing of all letters, the lips, the teeth, the tongue, the palate, and throat.

Be not ye called rabbi; for one is your master, even Christ, and all ye are brethren. Mat. xxiii. 8.

RA'BBIT. n. s. [robbe, robbekin, Dut.] A furry animal that lives on plants, and burrows in the ground.

I knew a wench married, as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit.

A company of scholars, going to catch conies, carried one with them which had not much wit, and gave in charge, that if he saw any, he should be silent for fear of scaring of them: but he no sooner espied a company of rabbits, but he cried aloud, ecce multi cuniculi; which he had no sooner said, but the conies ran to their burrows; and he being checked by them for it, answered, Who would have thought that the rabbits understood Latin?

RA'BBLE. n. s. [rabula, Lat. rabulari, low Lat.] A tumultuous crowd; an assembly of low people.

Countrymen, will ye relent, and yield to mercy, Or let a rabble lead you to your deaths? Shakesp.

Go through the rabble here to this place. Shakesp.
Of these his several ravishments, betrayings, and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables, and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries.

The better sort abhors scurrility, And often censures what the rabble like. Roscom.

R A C

That profane, atheistical, epicurean rabble, whom the whole nation so rings of, are not the wisest men in the world. South.

To gratify the barbarous audience, I gave them a short rabble scene, because the mob are represented by Plutarch and Polybius with the same characters of baseness and cowardice. Dryden.

In change of government, The rabble rule their great oppressors fate, Do sovereign justice and revenge the state. Dryd.

His enemies have been only able to make ill impressions upon the low and ignorant rabble, and to put the dregs of the people in a ferment.

RA'BBLEMENT. n. s. [from rabble.] Crowd; tumultuous assembly of mean people. Not in use.

A rude rabblement, Whose like he never saw, he durst not bide, But got his ready steed, and fast away 'gan ride. Spenser.

The rabblement houted, clapp'd their chopt hands, and uttered a deal of stinking breath. Shakesp.

There will be always tyrants, murderers, thieves, traitors, and other of the same rabblement. Camden.

RA'BID. adj. [rabidus, Lat.] Fierce; furious; mad.

RA'BINET. n. s. A kind of smaller ordnance. Ainsworth.

RACE. n. s. [race, Fr. from radice, Lat.]

1. A family ascending.
2. Family descending.

He in a moment will create Another world; out of man, a race Of men innumerable, there to dwell. Milton.

Male he created thee, but thy consort Female for race. Milton.

Hence the long race of Alban fathers come. Dryden.

3. A generation; a collective family. A race of youthful and unhandled colts, Fetching mad bounds. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

4. A particular breed. The race of mules, fit for the plough is bred. Chapman.

Instead Of spirits malign, a better race to bring Into their vacant room. Milton.

In the *rac*es of mankind and families of the world, there remains not to one above another the least pretence to have the right of inheritance. Locke.

If they are all debas'd and willing slaves, The young but breathing to grow grey in bondage, And the old sinking to ignoble graves, Of such a race no matter who is king. Murphy.

5. Race of ginger. [rayz de gengibre, Span.] A root or sprig of ginger.

6. A particular strength or taste of wine, applied by Temple to any extraordinary natural force of intellect.

Of gardens there may be forms wholly irregular, that may have more beauty than of others; but they must owe it to some extraordinary dispositions of nature in the seat, or some great race of fancy or judgment in contrivance. Temple.

7. [Ras, Islandick.] Contest in running. To describe *rac*es and games

Of tilting furniture. Milton.
Stand forth ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,

Or you, the swiftest racers of the field;

R A C

Stand forth, ye wrestlers who these pastimes grace, I wield the gauntlet, and I run the race. Pope.

8. Course on the feet. The flight of many birds is swifter than the race of any beasts. Bacon.

9. Progress; course. It suddenly fell from an excess of favour, which many examples have taught them, never stopt his race till it came to a headlong overthrow. Sidney.

My race of glory run, and race of shame. Milt.
The great light of day yet wants to run Much of his race though steep. Milton.

He safe return'd, the race of glory past, New to his friends embrace. Pope's Odyssey.

10. Train; process. An offensive war is made, which is unjust in the aggressor; the prosecution and race of the war carrieth the defendant to invade the ancient patrimony of the first aggressor, who is now turn'd defendant; shall he sit down, and not put himself in defence? Bacon.

The race of this war fell upon the loss of Urbin, which he reobtained. Bacon.

RACEHORSE. n. s. [race and horse.] Horse bred to run for prizes.

The reason Hudibras gives, why those, who can talk on trifles, speak with the greatest fluency, is, that the tongue is like a race-horse, which runs the faster the less weight it carries. Addison.

RACEMATION. n. s. [racemus, Lat.] Cluster, like that of grapes.

A cock will in one day fertilite the whole racemation or cluster of eggs, which are not excluded in many weeks after. Brown.

RACER. n. s. [from race.] Runner; one that contends in speed.

His stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high As any other Pegasus can fly; So the dull eel moves nimbler in the mud, Than all the swift-fin'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

A poet's form she plac'd before their eyes, And bad the nimblest racer seize the prize. Pope.

RACINESS. n. s. [from racy.] The quality of being racy.

RACK. n. s. [racke, Dut. from racken to stretch.]

1. An engine to torture. Vex not his ghost; O let him pass! he hates him

That would upon the rack of this rough world Stretch him out longer. Shakesp. King Lear.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a cross answer from his mistress? Taylor.

Let them feel the whip, the sword, the fire, And in the tortures of the rack expire. Addison.

2. Torture; extreme pain. A fit of the stone puts a king to the rack, and makes him as miserable as it does the meanest subject. Temple.

A cool behaviour sets him on the rack, and is interpreted as an instance of aversion or indifference. Addison.

3. Any instrument by which extension is performed.

These bows, being somewhat like the long bows in use amongst us, were bent only by a man's immediate strength, without the help of any bender or rack that are used to others. Watkins.

4. A distaff; commonly a portable distaff, from which they spin by twirling a ball. It is commonly spoken and written rack.

R A C

- The sisters turn the wheel,
Empty the woolly rack and fill the reel. Dryden.
5. [Racke, Dut. a track.] The clouds as they are driven by the wind.
That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dissolves, and makes it indistinct,
As water is in water. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
The great globe itself,
Yea, all, which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant, faded,
Leave not a rack behind. Shakesp. Tempest.
We often see against some storm,
A silence in the heav'ns, the rack stand still,
The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
As hush as death. Shakesp. Hamlet.
The winds in the upper region, which move the clouds above, which we call the rack, and are not perceived below, pass without noise. Bacon.
As wintry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try;
They rage, they roar: the doubtful rack of heav'n Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n. Dryden.
6. [ῥακκα the occiput, Sax. racca, Islan. hinges or joints.] A neck of mutton cut for the table.
7. A grate; the grate on which bacon is laid.
8. A wooden grate in which hay is placed for cattle.
Their bulls they send to pastures far,
Or hill, or feed them at full racks within. May's Virgil.
The best way to feed cattle with it, is to put it in racks, because of the great quantity they tread down. Mortimer.
He bid the nimble hours
Bring forth the steeds; the nimble hours obey:
From their full racks the gen'rous steeds retire. Addison.
9. Arrack; a spirituous liquor. See AR-RACK.
- To RACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To stream as clouds before the wind.
Three glorious suns, each one a perfect sun,
Not separated with the racking clouds,
But sever'd in a pale clear-shining sky. Shakesp.
- To RACK. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To torment by the rack.
Unhappy most like tortured me,
Their joints new set to the new rack'd again. Coul.
Hold, O dreadful sir,
You will not rack an innocent old man. Dryden and Lee.
2. To torment; to harass.
Th' apostate angel, though in pain,
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair. Milt.
3. To harass by exaction.
The landlords there shamefully rack their tenants, exacting of them, besides his covenants,
what he pleaseth. Spenser.
The commons hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakesp.
He took possession of his just estate,
Nor rack'd his tenants with increase of rent. Dryd.
4. To screw; to force to performance.
They racking and stretching scripture further than by God was meant, are drawn into sundry inconveniencies. Hooker.
The wisest among the heathens racked their wits, and cast about every way, managing every little argument to the utmost advantage. Tillotson's Sermons.
It was worth the while for the adversary to rack invention, and to call in all the succours of learning and critical skill to assail them, if possible, and to wrest them out of our hands. Waterland.
5. To stretch; to extend.
Nor have I money nor commodity,
To raise a present sum;
Try what my credit can in Venice do,
That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost. Shakesp.
6. To defecate; to draw off from the lees.
I know not whence this word is derived

R A D

- in this sense; rien, Germ. is clear, pure, whence our word to riase: this is perhaps of the same race.
It is common to draw wine or beer from the lees, which we call racking, whereby it will clarify much sooner. Bacon.
Some roll their cask about the cellar to mix it with the lees, and, after a few days resettlement, rack it off. Mortimer.
- RACK-RENT. n. s. [rack and rent.] Rent raised to the uttermost.
Have poor families been ruined by rack-rents, paid for the lands of the church? Swift's Miscel.
- RACK-RENTER. n. s. [rack and renter.] One who pays the uttermost rent.
Though this he a quarter of his yearly income, and the publick tax takes away one hundred; yet this influences not the yearly rent of the land;
which the rack-renter or undertenant pays. Locke.
- RA'CKET. n. s. [Of uncertain derivation; M. Casaubon derives it, after his custom, from ρακίζω, the dash of fluctuation against the shore.]
1. An irregular clattering noise.
That the tennis court keeper knows better than I, it is a low ebb of linen with thee, when thou keepest not racket there. Shakesp.
2. A confused talk. In burlesque language.
Ambition hath removed her lodging, and lives the next door to faction, where they keep such a racket, that the whole parish is disturbed and every night in an uproar. Swift.
3. [Raquette, Fr.] The instrument with which players at tennis strike the ball.
Whence perhaps all the other senses.
When we have matcht our rackets to these balls,
We will in France play a set,
Shall strike his father's crown into the hazard, Shakesp.
The body into which impression is made, either can yield backward or it cannot: if it can yield backward, then the impression made is a motion; as we see a stroke with a racket upon a ball, makes it fly from it. Digby on the Soul.
He talks much of the motives to do and forbear, how they determine a reasonable man, as if he were no more than a tennis-ball, to be tossed to and fro by the rackets of the second causes. Bramhall against Hobbes.
- RA'CKING. n. s.
Racking pace of a horse is the same as an amble, only that it is a swifter time and a shorter tread;
and though it does not rid so much ground, yet it is something easier. Farrier's Dict.
- RA'CKOON. n. s.
The racoon is a New England animal, like a badger, having a tail like a fox, being clothed with a thick and deep furr: it sleeps in the day time in a hollow tree, and goes out a-nights, when the moon shines, to feed on the sea side, where it is hunted by dogs. Bailey.
- RA'CY. adj. [perhaps from rayz, Span. a root.] Strong; flavoured; tasting of the soil.
Rich racy verses in which we
The soil, from which they come, taste, smell, and
see. Cowley.
From his brain that Helicon distil,
Whose racy liquor did his offspring fill. Denham.
The cyder at first is very luscious, but if ground more early, it is more racy. Mortimer's Husband.
The hospitable sage, in sign
Of social welcome, mix'd the racy wine,
Late from the mellowing cask restor'd to light,
By ten long years refin'd, and rosy bright. Pope.
- RAD. the old pret. of read. Spenser.
- RAD. Rad, red, and rad, differing only in dialect, signify counsel, as Conrad, powerful or skilful in counsel; Ethelred, a noble counsellor; Radbert, eminent for counsel; Eabolus and Thasybulus have almost the same sense. Gibson.

R A D

- RA'DDOCK, or ruddock. n. s. A bird; the red breast.
The raddock would
With charitable bill bring thee all this. Shakesp.
- RA'DIANCY. } n. s. [radiare, Lat.]
RA'DIANCY. } Sparkling lustre; glitter.
By the sacred radiance of the sun,
By all the operations of the orbs,
Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakesp.
Whether there be not too high an apprehension above its natural radiancy, is not without just doubt; however it be granted a very splendid gem, and whose sparkles may somewhat resemble the glances of fire. Proun's Vulg. Err.
The Sun
Girt with omnipotence, with radiance crown'd
Of majesty divine. Milton.
A glory surpassing the sun in its greatest radiancy. Burnet.
- RA'DIANT. adj. [radians, Lat.] Shining; brightly sparkling; emitting rays.
There was a sun of gold radiant upon the top, and before, a small cherub of gold with wings displayed. Bacon.
Mark what radiant state she spreads,
In circle round her shining throne,
Shooting her beams like silver threads,
This, this is she alone. Milton's Arcades.
Virtue could see to do what virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and moon
Were in the flat sea sunk. Milton.
I see the warlike host of heaven,
Radiant in glittering arms and beamy pride, Go forth to succour truth below. Milton.
- To RA'DIATE. v. n. [radio, Lat.] To emit rays; to shine; to sparkle.
Though with wit and parts their possessors could never engage God to send forth his light and his truth; yet now that revelation hath disclosed them, and that he hath been pleased to make them radiate in his word, men may recollect those sca-tered divine beams, and kindling with them the tapers proper to warm our affections, enflame holy zeal. Boyle.
Light radiates from luminous bodies directly to our eyes, and thus we see the sun or a flame; or it is reflected from other bodies, and thus we see a man or a picture. Locke.
- RA'DIATED. adj. [radiatus, Lat.] Adorned with rays.
The radiated head of the phoenix gives us the meaning of a passage in Ausonius. Addison.
- RADIATION. n. s. [radiatio, Lat. radiation, Fr.]
1. Beamy lustre; emission of rays.
We have perspective houses, where we make demonstrations of all lights and radiations, and of all colours. Bacon.
Should I say I liv'd darker than were trace,
Your radiation can all clouds subdue,
But one; 'tis best light to contemplate you. Donne.
2. Emission from a centre every way.
Sound paralleleth in many things with the light and radiation of things visible. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
- RA'DICAL. adj. [radical, Fr. from radi,
Lat.]
1. Primitive; original.
The differences, which are secondary, and proceed from these radical differences, are, plants are all figurate and determinate, which inanimate bodies are not. Bacon.
Such a radical truth, that God is, springing up together with the essence of the soul, and previous to all other thoughts, is not pretended to by religion. Bentley.
2. Implanted by nature.
The emission of the loose and adventitious moisture doth betray the radical moisture, and carrieth it for company. Bacon.
If the radical moisture of gold were separated, it might be contrived to burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

R A F

The sun beams render the humours hot, and dry up the radical moisture. Arbutnot.

3. Serving to origination.

RADICALITY. n. s. [from radical.] Origination.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality and power of different forms; thus in the seeds of wheat, there lieth obscurely the seminality of darnel. Brown's Vulg. Err.

RA'DICALLY. adv. [from radical.] Originally; primitively.

It is no easy matter to determine the point of death in insects, who have not their vitalities radically confined unto one part. Brown's Vulg. Err.

These great orbs thus radically bright, Primitive founts, and origins of light, Enliven worlds deny'd to human sight. Prior.

RA'DICALNESS. n. s. [from radical.] The state of being radical.

To RADICATE. v. a. [radicatus, from radix, Lat.] To root; to plant deeply and firmly.

Meditation will radicate these seeds, fix the transient gleam of light and warmth, confirm resolutions of good, and give them a durable consistence in the soul. Hammond.

Nor have we let fall our pen upon discouragement of unbelief, from radicated beliefs, and points of high prescription. Brown.

If the object stays not on the sense, it makes no impression enough to be remembered; but if it be repeated there, it leaves plenty enough of those images behind it, to strengthen the knowledge of the object: in which radicated knowledge, if the memory consist, there would be no need of reserving those atoms in the brain. Glanville's Defence.

RADICATION. n. s. [radication, Fr. from radicate.] The act of taking root and fixing deep.

They that were to plant a church, were to deal with men of various inclinations, and of different habits of sin, and degrees of radication of those habits; and to each of these some proper application was to be made to cure their souls. Hammond.

RA'DICLE. n. s. [radicula, Fr. from radix, Lat.]

Radicula is that part of the seed of a plant, which, upon its vegetation, becomes its root. Quincy.

RA'DISH. n. s. [rædic, Sax. radis, raifort, Fr. raphanus, Lat.] A root. Miller.

RADIUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. The semi-diameter of a circle.
2. A bone of the fore-arm, which accompanies the ulna from the elbow to the wrist.

To RAFF. v. a. To sweep; to huddle; to take hastily without distinction.

Their causes and effects I thus raff up together. Carew.

To RA'FFLE. v. n. [raffler, to snatch, Fr.] To cast dice for a prize, for which every one lays down a stake.

Letters from Hampstead give me an account there is a late institution there, under the name of a raffling shop. Tatler.

RA'FFLE. n. s. [raffle, Fr. from the verb.] A species of game or lottery, in which many stake a small part of the value of some single thing, in consideration of a chance to gain it.

The toy, brought to Rome in the third triumph of Pompey, being a pair of tables for gaming, made of two precious stones, three foot broad, and four foot long, would have made a fine raffle. Arbutnot on Coins.

RAFT. n. s. [probably from ratia, Lat.]

R A G

A frame or float made by laying pieces of timber cross each other.

Where is that son That floated with thee on the fatal raft? Shakesp.
Fell the timber of yon lofty grove,
And form a raft, and build the rising ship. Pope.

RAFT. part. pass. of reave or raff. Spenser. Torn; rent.

RAFTER. n. s. [næpɾɛŋ, Sax. rafter, Dut. corrupted, says Junius, from roof tree.] The secondary timbers of the house; the timbers which are let into the great beam.

The rafters of my body, bone,
Being still with you, the muscle, sinew, and vein,
Which tile this house, will come again. Donne.
Shepherd,

I trust thy honest offer'd courtesy,
Which oft is sooner found in lowly sheds
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls. Milton.

On them the Trojans cast Stones, rafters, pillars, beams. Denham.

By Donaus, king of Egypt, when he fled from his brother Rameses, the use of shipping was first brought among the Grecians, who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow seas, but on beams or rafters tied to one another. Heylyn.
From the East, a Belgian wind
His hostile breath through the dry rafters sent;
The flames impell'd. Dryden.

The roof began to mount aloft,
Aloft rose every beam and rafter,
The heavy wall climb'd slowly after. Swift's Mis.

RA'FFERED. adj. [from rafter.] Built with rafters.

No rafter'd roofs with dance and tabor sound,
No noontide bell invites the country round. Pope.

RAG. n. s. [ɤnæcode, torn, Sax. gæz.] 1. A piece of cloth torn from the rest; a tatter.

Cowls, hoods, and habits, with their wearers tost,
And flutter'd into rags. Milton.

Rags are a great improvement of chalky lands. Mortimer.

2. Any thing rent and tattered; worn out clothes: proverbially, mean dress.

Fathers that wear rags,
Do make their children blind;
But fathers that bear hags,
Shall see their children kind. Shakesp. King Lear.

They took from me
Both coat and cloake, and all things that might be Grace in my habit; and in place, put on These tatter'd rags. Chapman.

Worn like a cloth,
Gnawn into rags by the devouring moth. Sandys.
Content with poverty, my soul I arm;
And virtue, though in rags, will keep me warm. Dryden.

3. A fragment of dress.

He had first matter seen undrest;
He took her naked all alone,
Before one rag of form was on. Hudibras.

RAGAMUFFIN. n. s. [from rag and I know not what else.] A paltry mean fellow.

I have led my ragamuffins where they were pepper'd; there's not three of my hundred and fifty left alive; and they are for the town's end to beg during life. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Shall we brook that paltry ass
And feeble scoundrel, Hudibras,
With that more paltry ragamuffin,
Ralpho, vapouring and huffing? Hudibras.

Attended with a crew of ragamuffins, she broke into his house, turned all things topsy-turvy, and then set it on fire. Swift.

RAGE. n. s. [rage, Fr.]

1. Violent anger; vehement fury.
This tyger-footed rage, when it shall find
The harm of unskann'd swiftness, will, too late,
Tie leaden pounds to 's heels. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

R A G

Desire not

To allay my rages and revenges with Your colder reasons. Shakesp.

Argument more heroic than the rage
Of Turnus for Lavinia dispossou'd. Milton.
Torment, and loud lament, and furious rage. Milton.

2. Vehemence or exacerbation of any thing painful.

The party hurt, who hath been in great rage of pain, till the weapon was re-anoined. Bacon.
The rage of thirst and hunger now suppress. Pope.

3. Enthusiasm; rapture.

Who brought green poetry to her perfect age,
And made that art which was a rage. Cowley.

4. Eagerness; vehemence of mind: as, a rage of money getting.

You purchase pain with all that joy can give,
And die of nothing but a rage to live. Pope.
Then may his soul its free-born rage enjoy
Give deed to will, and ev'ry pow'r employ. Harte.

To RAGE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be in fury; to be heated with excessive anger.

Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging; and whosoever is deceiv'd thereby, is not wise. Prov.
Why do the heathen rage? Psaln ii. 1.
At this he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd, Smote him into the midriff. Milton.

2. To ravage; to exercise fury.

Heart-rending news,
That death should license have to rage among
The fair, the wise, the virtuous. Waller.

3. To act with mischievous impetuosity.

The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall juggle one against another, seem like torches, and run like the lightnings. Naham ii. 4.
The madding wheels of brazen chariots rag'd. Milton.

After these waters had raged on the earth, they began to lessen and shrink, and the great fluctuations of this deep being quieted by degrees, the waters retired. Barnet.

RA'GEFUL. adj. [rage and full.] Furious; violent.

This courtesy was worse than a bastinado to Zelmane; so that again with rageful eyes she bad him defend himself; for no less than his life would answer it. Sidney.

A popular orator may represent vices in so formidable appearances, and set out each virtue in so amiable a form, that the covetous person shall scatter most liberally his beloved idol, wealth, and the rageful person shall find a calm. Hammond.

RA'GGED. adj. [from rag.]

1. Rent into tatters.

How like a prodigal,
The skarfed bark puts from her native bay
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind;
How like the prodigal doth she return
With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails,
Lean, rent and beggar'd by the strumpet wind. Shakesp.

As I go in this ragged tattered coat, I am hunted away from the old woman's door by every barking cur. Arbutnot.

2. Uneven; consisting of parts almost disunited.

The earl of Warwick's ragged staff is yet to be seen pourtrayed in their church steeple. Carew.
That some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged, fearful, hanging rock,
And throw it thence into the raging sea. Shakesp.

The moon appears, when looked upon with a good glass, rude and ragged. Burnet.

3. Dressed in tatters.

Since noble arts in Rome have no support,
And ragged virtue not a friend at court. Dryden.

4. Rugged; not smooth.

The wolf would barter away a ragged coat and a raw-boned carcass, for a smooth fat one. L'Strange.
What shepherd owns those ragged sheep? Dryden.

RA'GGEDNESS. n. s. [from ragged.] State of being dressed in tatters.

Poor naked wretches, whereso'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and naked sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness defend you?
Shakesp.

RA'GINGLY. adv. [from raging.] With vehement fury.

RA'GMAN. n. s. [rag and man.] One who deals in rags.

RAGOUT. n. s. [Fr.] Meat stewed and highly seasoned.

To the stage permit
Ragouts for Terens or Thyestes drest,
'Tis task enough for thee 't expose a Roman feast.
Dryden.

No fish they reckon comparable to a ragout of snails.
Addison.

When art and nature join, th' effect will be
Some nice ragout, or charming fricasy.
King.

RA'GWORT. n. s. [rag and wort.] A plant.
Miller.

RA'GSTONE. n. s. [rag and stone.]

1. A stone so named from its breaking in a ragged, uncertain, irregular manner.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. The stone with which they smooth the edge of a tool new ground and left ragged.

RAIL. n. s. [riegel, Germ.]

1. A cross beam fixed at the ends in two upright posts.

If you make another square, and also a tennant on each untenanted end of the stiles, and another mortise on the top and bottom rails, you may put them together.
Moron.

2. A series of posts connected with beams, by which any thing is inclosed: a pale is a series of small upright posts rising above the cross beam, by which they are connected: a rail is a series of cross beams supported with posts, which do not rise much above it.

A man upon a high place without rails, is ready to fall.
Bacon.

A large square table for the commissioners, one side being sufficient for those of either party, and a rail for others which went round.
Clarendon.

3. A kind of bird.

Of wild birds Cornwall hath quail, rail, partridge and pheasant.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

4. [rægle, Sax.] A woman's upper garment. This is preserved only in the word nightrail.

TA RAIL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To enclose with rails.

The hand is square, with four rounds at the corners; this should first have been planche'd over, and railed about with ballisters.
Carew.

As the churchyard ought to be divided from other profane places, so it ought to be fenced in and railed.
Auliffe.

Sir Roger has given a handsome pulpit-chutch, and railed in the communion-table.
Addison.

2. To range in a line.

They were brought to London all railed in ropes, like a team of horses in a cart, and were executed some at London, and the rest at divers places.
Bacon.

TA RAIL. v. n. [railer, Fr. rallen, Dut.]

To use insolent and reproachful language; to speak to, or to mention in opprobrious terms; formerly with on, now commonly with at.

Your husband is in his old lunes again; he so rails against all married mankind curses all Eve's daughters.
Shakesp.

VOL. II.

What a monstrous fellow art thou? thus to rail on one, that is neither known of thee, nor knows thee.
Shakesp.

Till thou canst rail the seals from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud.
Shakesp.

He tript me behind; being down, insulted,
rail'd,

And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him.
Shakesp. King Lear.

Angels bring not railing accusation against them.
2 Peter, ii.

The plain the forests doth disdain:
The forests rail upon the plain.
Drynton.

If any is angry, and rails at it, he may securely.
Locke.

Thou art my blood, where Johnson has no part;
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand?
Dryden.

Lesbia for ever on me rails,
To talk of me she never fails.
Swift.

RAILER. n. s. [from rail.] One who insults or defames by opprobrious language.

If I build my felicity upon my reputation, I am as happy as long as the railer will give me leave.
South's Sermons.

Let no presuming impious railer tax
Creative wisdom.
Thomson's Summer.

RAILLERY. n. s. [railleurie, Fr.] Slight satire; satirical merriment.

Let railery be without malice or heat. B. Jonson.

A quotation out of Hadibras shall make them treat with levity an obligation wherein their welfare is concerned as to this world and the next: railery of this nature is enough to make the hearer tremble.
Addison's Freeholder.

Studies employed on low objects; the very naming of them is sufficient to turn them into railery.
Addison.

To these we are solicited by the arguments of the subtle, and the raileries of the prophane.
Rogers's Sermons.

RAIMENT. n. s. [for arraiment, from array.] Vesture; vestment; clothes; dress; garment. A word now little used but in poetry.

His raiments, though mean, received handsomeness by the grace of the wearer.
Sidney.

O Protheus, let this habit make thee blush!
Be thou asham'd, that I have took upon me
Such an immodest raiment.
Shakesp.

Living, both food and raiment she supplies.
Dryd.

You are to consider them as the servants and instruments of action, and so give them food, and rest, and raiment, that they may be strong and healthful to do the duties of a charitable, useful, pious life.
Law.

TO RAIN. v. n. [Jerman, Sax. regenen, Dut.]

1. To fall in drops from the clouds.

Like a low-hung cloud, it rains so fast,
That all at once it falls.
Dryden's Knight's Tale.

The wind is south-west, and the weather lowering, and like to rain.
Locke.

2. To fall as rain.

The eye marvelleth at the whiteness thereof, and the heart is astonished at the raining of it.
Eccclus, xliiii. 13.

They sat them down to weep; nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes, but high winds rose within.
Milton.

3. It rains. The water falls from the clouds.

That which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm.
Shakesp. King Lear.

TA RAIN. v. a. To pour down as rain.

It rain'd down fortune, showing on your head.
Shakesp.

Rabi sacrificial whisps'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup.
Shak. Timon of Ath.

Israel here had fanish'd, had not God
Rain'd from heav'n manna.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

3 M

RAIN. n. s. [Jen, Sax.] The moisture that falls from the clouds.

When shall we three meet again,
In thunder, lightning, or in rain.
Shakesp.

With strange rains, hails, and showers were they persecuted.
Wisdom, xvi. 16

The lost clouds pour
Into the sea an useless shower,
And the vex'd sailors curse the rain,
For which poor farmers pray'd in vain.
Waller.

Rain is water by the heat of the sun divided into very small parts ascending in the air, till encountering the cold, it be condensed into clouds, and descends in drops.
Ray.

RAINBOW. n. s. [rain and bow] The iris; the semicircle of various colours which appears in showery weather.

Casting of the water in a most cunning manner, makes a perfect rainbow, not more pleasant to the eye than to the mind, so sensibly to see the proof of the heavenly iris.
Sidney.

To add another hue unto the rainbow.
The rainbow is drawn like a nymph with large wings dispread in the form of a semicircle, the feathers of sundry colours.
Peucham.

They could not be ignorant of the promise of God never to drown the world, and the rainbow before their eyes to put them in mind of it.
Brown.

This rainbow never appears but where it rains in the sun-shine, and may be made artificially by spouting up water, which may break aloft, and scatter into drops, and fall down like rain; for the sun, shining upon these drops, certainly causes the bow to appear to a spectator standing in a true position to the rain and sun; this bow is made by refraction of the sun's light in drops of falling rain.
Newton.

The dome's high arch reflects the mingled blaze,
And forms a rainbow of alternate rays.
Pope.

Gay rainbow silks her mellow charms unfold,
And nought of Lyce but herself is old.
Young.

RAINDEER. n. s. [branjay, Sax. rangifer, Lat.] A deer with large horns, which, in the northern regions, draws sledges through the snow.

RAININESS. n. s. [from rainy.] The state of being showery.

RAIN-WATER. n. s. [rain and water.] Water not taken from springs, but falling from the clouds.

Court holy water in a dry house, is better than the rainwater out o' doors.
Shakesp. King Lear.

We took distilled rain-water.
Boyle.

Rain-water is to be preferred before spring-water.
Mortimer.

RAINY. adj. [from rain.] Showery; wet.

Our gayness and our gilt are all besmirch'd,
With rainy marching in the painful field.
Shakesp.

A continual dropping in a very rainy day, and a contentious woman, are alike.
Proverbs, xxvii. 15.

TO RAISE. v. a. [resa, Swed. reiser, Dan.]

1. To lift; to heave.

The elders went to raise him up from the earth.
2 Sam. xii.

Twelve starv'ling bards of these degen'rate days.
Pope.

2. To set upright: as, he raised a mast.

3. To erect; to build up.

Take his carcase down from the tree, cast it at the entering of the gate, and raise thereon a heap of stones.
Joshua, viii.

4. To exalt to a state more great or illustrious.

Counsellors may manage affairs, which nevertheless are far from the ability to raise and amplify an estate.
Bacon.

Tha so pleas'd,
Canst raise thy creature to what height thou wilt
Of union.
Milton.

5. To amplify; to enlarge

That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh,
To raise my fortunes.
Shakesp. King Lear.

419

R A I

6. To increase in current value.
The plate pieces of eight were raised three-pence in the piece. Temple's Miscellanies.
7. To elevate; to exalt.
The Persians gazing on the sun,
Admir'd how high 'twas plac'd, how bright it shone;
But as his pow'r was known, their thoughts were rais'd,
And soon they worshipp'd what at first they prais'd. Prior.
8. To advance; to promote; to prefer.
This gentleman came to be raised to great titles. Clarendon.
9. To excite; to put in action.
He raiseth the stormy wind. Psalms cvii. 28.

By his captivity in Austria, and the heavy ransom that he paid for his liberty, Richard was hindered to pursue the conquest of Ireland.
Davieson Ireland.

Ere the third dawning light
Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise,
The ransom paid, which man from death redeems,
His death for man.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

Has the prince lost his army or his liberty?
Tell me what province they demand for ransom.
Den.

This as a ransom Albemarle did pay,
For all the glories of so great a life.
Dryden.

To adore that great mystery of divine love,
God's sending his only Son into this world to save sinners, and to give his life a ransom for them, would he noble exercise for the pens of the greatest wits.
Tillotson.

Th' avenging pow'r
Thus will persist, relentless in his ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to her sire,
And ransom free restor'd to his abode.
Dryden.

To RA'NSOME. v. a. [rançonner, Fr.] To redeem from captivity or punishment.

How is't with Titus Lartius?
—Condemning some to death and some to exile,
Ransoming him, or pitying, threatening the other.
Shakesp.

there is either liquor in his pate, or money in his purse, when he looks so merrily.
Shakesp.

Nay, an thou'lt mouth, I'll rant as well as thou.
Shakesp.

They have attacked me; some with piteous moans, others grinning and only shewing their teeth, others ranting and hectoring, others scolding and reviling.
Stillins, &cet.

RANT. n. s. [from the verb.] High sounding language unsupported by dignity of thought.

Dryden himself, to please a frantick age,
Was forc'd to let his judgment stoop to rage;
To a wild audience he conform'd his voice,
Comply'd to custom, but not err'd through choice;
Deem then the people's, not the writer's sin,
Almanson's rage, and rants of Maximin.
Graville.

This is a stoical rant, without any foundation in the nature of man or reason of things.
Atterbury.

RA'NTER. n. s. [from rant.] A ranting fellow.

Like footmen on a visiting day.
Prior.

2. To rap out. To utter with hasty violence.

He was provoked in the spirit of magistracy, upon discovering a judge, who rapped out a great oath at his footman.
Addison.

To RAP. v. a. [from rapio extra se, Lat.]

1. To affect with rapture; to strike with extasy; to hurry out of himself.

These are speeches of men, not comforted with the hope of that they desire, but rapped with admiration at the view of enjoyed bliss.
Hooker.

Beholding the face of God, in admiration of so great excellency, they all adore him; and being rapt with the love of his beauty, they cleave inseparably for ever unto him.
Hooker.

What thus raps you? are you well?
The government I cast upon my brother,
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rapt in secret studies
Shakesp.

You're rapt in some work, some dedication.
Shak.

Circled me
With all their welcomes, and as cheerfully Disposed their rapt minds, as if there they saw Their natural countrie.
Chapman.

The rocks that did more high their foreheads raise
To his rapt eye
I'm rapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears.
Chapman.

Well may thy Lord, appeas'd,
Redeem thee quite from death's rapacious claim.
Milton.

Shall this prize,
Soon heighten'd by the diamond's circling rays,
O, that rapacious hand for ever blaze?
Pope.

RAPA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from rapacious.] By rapine; by violent robbery.

RAPA'CIOUSNESS. n. s. [from rapacious.] The quality of being rapacious.

RAPACITY. n. s. [rapacité, Fr. rapacitas, from rapax, Lat.] Addictedness to plunder; exercise of plunder; ravenousness.

Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left to the church.
Spratt.

RAPE. n. s. [rapt, Fr. raptus, Lat.]

1. Violent deforation of chastity.

You are both decypher'd
For villains mark'd with rape.
Shak. Titus Andron.
Rape call you it, to seize my own,
My true betrothed love?
Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

The parliament conceived, that the obtaining of women by force into possession, howsoever afterwards assent might follow by allurements, was but a rape drawn forth in length, because the first force drew on all the rest.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Witness that night
In Gibeath, when the hospitable door
Expos'd a matron, to avoid worse rape.
Milton.

The haughty fair,
Who not the rape ev'n of a god could bear.

While you so smoothly turn and rowl our sphere,
That rapid motion does but rest appear.
Dryden.

RA'PIDITY. n. s. [rapidité, Fr. rapiditas, from rapidus, Lat.] Celerity; velocity; swiftness.

Where the words are not monosyllables, we make them so by our rapidity of pronunciation.
Addison.

RA'PIDLY. adv. [from rapid.] Swiftly; with quick motion.

RA'PIDNESS. n. s. [from rapid.] Celerity; swiftness.

RA'PIER. n. s. [rapicre, Fr. so called from the quickness of its motion.] A small sword used only in thrusting.

I will turn thy falsehood to thy heart,
Where it was forged, with my rapier's point. Shak.
A soldier of far inferior strength may manage a rapier or firearms so expertly, as to be an overmatch for his adversary. Pope.

RAPIER-FISH. n. s.

The rapier-fish, called xiphias, grows sometimes to the length of five yards: the sword, which grows level from the snout of the fish, is here about a yard long, at the basis four inches over, two-edged, and pointed exactly like a rapier: he preys on fishes, having first stabbed them with this sword. Grew.

RAPINE. n. s. [rapina, Lat. rapine, Fr.]

1. The act of plundering.

If the poverty of Scotland might, yet the plenty of England cannot, excuse the envy and rapine of the church's rights. King Charles.

The logic of a conquering sword may silence, but convince it cannot; its efficacy rather breeds aversion and abhorrence of that religion, whose first address is in blood and rapine. Decay of Piety.

2. Violence; force.

Her least action overaw'd

His malice, and with rapine sweet bereav'd
His fierceness of its fierce intent. Milton.

RAPPER. n. s. [from rap.] One who strikes.

RAPPORT. n. s. [rappat, Fr.] Relation; reference; proportion. A word introduced by the innovator, Temple, but not copied by others.

'Tis obvious what rapport there is between the conceptions and languages in every country, and how great a difference this must make in the excellence of books. Temple.

To RAPT. v. n. [This word is used by Chapman for rap improperly, as appears from the participle, which from rap would be not rapt, but rapted.]

To ravish; to put in ecstasy.

You may safe approve,

How strong in instigation to their love
Their rapturing tunes are. Chapman's Odyssey.

RAPT. n. s. [from rap.] A trance; an ecstasy.

RAPTURE. n. s.

1. Violent seizure.

And thicke into our ship, he threw his flash:
That 'gainst a rocke, or flat, her keele did dash
With headlong rapture. Chapman.

2. Ecstasy; transport; violence of any pleasing passion; enthusiasm; uncommon heat of imagination.

Could virtue be seen, it would forget love, and advance it not only into adoration, but rapture.

Holyday.

Musick, when thus applied, raises in the mind of the hearer great conceptions; it strengthens devotion, and advances praise into rapture. Addis.
You grow correct, that once with rapture writ. Pope.

3. Rapidity; haste.

The watry throng,

Wave rowling after wave, where way they found,
If steep, with torrent rapture; if through plain Soft-ebbing; nor withstood them rock or hill. Milt.

RAPTURED. adj. [from rapture.] Ravished; transported. A bad word.

He drew

Such madning draughts of beauty to the soul,
As for a while o'erwelld his raptur'd thought
With luxury too daring. Thomson's Summer.

RAPTUROUS. adj. [from rapture.] Ecsta-tick; transporting.

Nor will he be able to forbear a rapturous ac-knowledgegment of the infinite wisdom and contrivance of the divine artificer. Blackmore.

Are the pleasures of it so inviting and rapturous?
is a man bound to look out sharp to plague himself? Collier.

RARE. adj. [rarus, Lat. rare, Fr. in all the senses but the last.]

1. Scarce; uncommon; not frequent.

Live to be the shew and gaze o' th' time;
We'll have thee, as our rarer monsters are,
Painted upon a pole. Shakesp.

2. Excellent; incomparable; valuable to a degree seldom found.

This jealousy

Is for a precious creature; as she's rare,
Must it be great; and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

On which was wrought the gods and giants fight,
Rare work, all fill'd with terror and delight. Cowley.
Above the rest I judge one beauty rare. Dryden.

3. Thinly scattered.

The cattle in the fields and meadows green,
Those rare and solitary, these in flocks
Pasturing at once, and in broad herds upspring. Milton.

4. Thin; subtle; not dense.

They are of so tender and weak a nature, as they affect only such a rare and attenuate substance, as the spirit of living creatures. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

So eagerly the fiend

O'erhogs orsteep, through strait, rough, dense or rare,
With head, hands, wings, or feet, pursues his way. Milton.

The dense and bright light of the circle will obscure the rare and weak light of these dark colours round about it, and render them almost insensible. Newton's Opticks.

Bodies are much more rare and porous than is commonly believed: water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer than gold, and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton.

5. Raw: not fully subdued by the fire.

This is often pronounced rear.

New-laid-eggs, with Baucis' busy care,
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

RA'REESHOW. n. s. [This word is formed in imitation of the foreign way of pronouncing rare show.] A show carried in a box.

The fashions of the town affect us just like a rare show, we have the curiosity to peep at them, and nothing more. Pope.

Of rarehaus he sung, and Punch's feats. Gav.

RAREFACTION. n. s. [rarefaction, Fr.
from rarefy.] Extension of the parts of a body, that makes it take up more room than it did before; contrary to condensation.

The water within being rarefied, and by rare- faction resolved into wind, will force up the smok.

Wotton's Architecture.

When exhalations, shut up in the caverns of the earth by rarefaction or compression, come to be straitened, they strive every way to set themselves at liberty. Burnet.

RA'REFIABLE. adj. [from rarefy.] Admitting rarefaction.

To RA'REFY. v. a. [rarefier, Fr. rarus and facio, Lat. rarify were more proper.]

To make thin: contrary to condense.

To the hot equator crowding fast,
Where highly rarefied the yielding air Admits their steam. Thomson.

To RA'REFY. v. n. To become thin.

Earth rarefies to dew; expanded more,
The subtil dew in air begins to soar. Dryden.

RA'RELY. adv. [from rare.]

1. Seldom; not often; not frequently.

His temperance in sleep resembled that of his meats; midnight being the usual time of his going to rest, and four or five, and very rarely six, the hour of his rising. Fell.

Rarely they rise by virtue's aid, who lie
Plung'd in the depth of helpless poverty. Dryden.

Vanessa in her bloom,
Advanc'd like Atalanta's star,
But rarely seen, and seen from far. Swift.

2. Finely; nicely; accurately. This is now seldom used but ironically.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies. Shakesp.

RA'RENESS. n. s. [from rare.]

1. Uncommonness; state of happening seldom; infrequency.

Tickling is most in the soles, arm-holes and sides: the cause is the thinness of the skin, joined with the rareness of being touch'd there; for tickling is a light motion of the spirits, which the thinness of the skin, the suddenness and rareness of touch, doth further. Bacon.

For the rareness and rare effect of that petition
I'll insert it as presented. Clarendon.

Of my heart I now a present make;
Accept it as when early fruit we send,
And let the rareness the small gift commend. Dryd.

2. Value arising from scarcity.

Roses set in a pool, supported with some stay, is matter of rareness and pleasure, though of small use. Bacon.

To worthiest things,

Virtue, art, beauty, fortune, now I see Rareness or use, not nature, value brings. Donne.

3. Thinness; tenuity.

4. Distance from each other; thinness.

RA'RITY. n. s. [rarité, Fr. raritas, Lat]

1. Uncommonness; infrequency.

Far from being found of any flower for its rarity, if I meet with any in a field which pleases me, I give it a place in my garden. Spectator.

2. A thing valued for its scarcity.

Sorrow would be a rarity most below'd,
If all could so become it. Shakesp. King Lear.

It would be a rarity worth the seeing, could any one shew us such a thing as a perfectly reconciled enemy. South.

I saw three rarities of different kinds, which pleas'd me more than any other shows of the place.
Addison.

3. Thinness; subtlety: the contrary to density.

Bodies, under the same outward bulk, have a greater thinness and expansion, or thickness and solidity, which terms, in English, do not signify fully those differences of quantity; therefore I will do it under the names of rarity and density. Digby.

This I do, not to draw any argument against them from the universal rest or accurately equal diffusion of matter, but only that I may better demonstrate the great rarity and tenuity of their imaginary chaos. Bentley's Sermons.

RA'SCAL. n. s. [ras-cal, Sax. a lean beast.]

1. A mean fellow; a scoundrel; a sorry wretch.

For the rascal commons, lest he cared. Spenser.
And when him list the rascal routs appal,
Men into stones therewith he could transmev. Spem.

When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous
To lock such rascal counters from his friends;
Be ready, gods, with all your thunder-bolts,
Dash him to pieces. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

The rascal people, thirsting after prey,
Join with the traitor. Shakesp. Henry VI.

But for our gentlemen,

The mouse ne'er shun'd the cat, as they did budge
From rascals worse than they. Shakesp.

I am accus'd to rob in that thief's company;
the rascal hatch remov'd my horse. Shakesp.

Scoundrels are insolent to their superiors; but it does not become a man of honour to contest with mean rascals. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not!
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.

I have sense, to serve my turn, in store,
And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

The poor girl provok'd told him he lyed like a rascal. Swift.

2. Rascal deer, are still mentioned for lean deer.

RASCALION. n. s. [from rascal.] One of the lowest people.

R A S

That proud dame
Us'd him so like a base rascalion,
That old Pig—what d' ye call him—malion,
That cut his mistress out of stone,
Had not so hard a hearted one. Hudibras.
RASCALITY. n. s. [from rascal.] The low mean people.

Pretended philosophers judge as ignorantly in their way, as the rascality in theirs. Glanville.
Jeroboam having procured his people gods, the next thing was to provide priests; hereupon, to the calves he adds a commission, for the approving, trying and admitting the rascality and lowest of the people to minister in that service. South.

RASCALLY. adj. [from rascal.] Mean; worthless.

Would'st thou not be glad to have the niggardly
rascally sheep biter come by some notable shame?
Shakesp.

Our rascally porter is fallen fast asleep with the black cloth and sconces, or we might have been tacking up by this time. Swift.

To RASE. v. a. [This word is written rase or raze: I would write rase, when it signifies to strike slightly, perstrin- gere; and raze, when it signifies to ruin, delere; raser, Fr. rasus, Lat.]

1. To skim; to strike on the surface.
He certifies your lordship, that this night
He dreamt the bear had rased off his helmet. Shakesp.
Was he not in the nearest neighbourhood to death? and might not the bullet, that rased his cheek, have gone into his head? South.

2. To overthrow; to destroy; to root up.
Her battering engines bent to rase some city. Milt.

3 To blot out by rasure; to erase.
Though of their names in heav'nly records now
Be no memorial, blotted out and rased. Milton.

RASE. n. s. [from To rase.]
1. A cancel.
2. A slight wound.

RASH. adj. [rasch, Dut.]
1. Hasty; violent; precipitate; acting without caution or reflection.

This is to be hold without shame, rash without skill, full of words without wit. Ascham.
Blast her pride, O ye blest gods? so will you wish on me, when the rash mood is on me. Shak.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God; for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth; therefore let thy words be few. Eccles.

Her rash hand in evil hour,
Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she eat. Milton.

2. Hasty; requiring haste. Not in use.
I have scarce leisure to salute you,
My matter is so rash. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

3. Quick; sudden: as, rash gunpowder.
Out of use.

RASH. n. s. [rascia, Ital.]

2. [Corrupted probably from rush.] An efflorescence on the body; a breaking out.

RA'SHER. n. s. [rasura lardi, Lat.] A thin slice of bacon.

If we grow all to be pork eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

White and black was all her homely cheer,
And rashers of sing'd bacon on the coals. Dryden.
Quenches his thirst with ale in nut-brown bowls,
And takes the hasty rasher from the coals. King.

RA'SHLY. adv. [from rash.] Hastily;
violently; without due consideration.

This expedition was by York and Talbot Too rashly plotted. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Men are not rashly to take that for done, which is not done. Bacon.

R A T

He that doth any thing rashly, must do it willingly; for he was free to deliberate or not. L'Estr.

Declare the secret villain,
The wretch so meanly base to injure Phædra,
So rashly brave to dare the sword of Theseus. Smith.

RA'SHNESS. n. s. [from rash.] Foolish contempt of danger; inconsiderate heat of temper; precipitation; temerity.

Who seeth not what sentence it shall enforce us to give against all churches in the world; in as much as there is not one, but hath had many things established in it, which though the scripture did never command, yet for us to condemn were rashness. Hooker.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispence,
But with cold prudence age doth recompence. Den.
In so speaking, we offend indeed against truth;
yet we offend not properly by falshood, which is a speaking against our thoughts; but by rashness, which is an affirming or denying, before we have sufficiently informed ourselves. South.

The vain Morat by his own rashness wrought,
Too soon discover'd his ambitious thought,
Believ'd me his, because I spoke him fair. Dryd.

RASP. n. s. [raspo, Ital.] A delicious berry that grows on a species of the bramble; a raspberry.

Set sorrel amongst rasps, and the rasps will be the smaller. Bacon.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply
Delicious draughts, when prest to vines. Philips.

To RASP. v. a. [raspen, Dut. rasper, Fr. raspare, Ital.] To rub to powder with a very rough file.

Some authors have advised the rasping of these bones; but in this case it is needless. Wiseman.
Having prepared hard woods and ivory for the lathe with rasping, they pitch it between the pikes.
Moxon.

RASP. n. s. [from the verb.] A large rough file, commonly used to wear away wood.

Case-hardening is used by file-cutters, when they make coarse files, and generally most rasps have formerly been made of iron and case-hardened. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

RA'SPATORY. n. s. [raspatoir, Fr. from rasp] A chirurgion's rasp.

I put into his mouth a raspatory and pulled away the corrupt flesh, and with cauteries burnt it to a crust. Hiseman's Surgery.

RA'SPBERRY, or Raspberry. n. s. A kind of berry.

Raspberries are of three sorts; the common wild one, the large red garden raspberry, which is one of the pleasantest fruits, and the white, which is little inferior to the red. Mortimer's Husb.

RASPBERRY-BUSH. n. s. A species of bramble.

RA'SURE. n. s. [rasura, Lat.]
1. The act of scraping or shaving.
2. A mark in a writing where 'something has been rubbed out.

Such a writing ought to be free from any viti-peration of rasure. Ayliffe's Parergon.

RAT. n. s. [ratte, Dut. rat, Fr. ratta, Span] An animal of the mouse kind that infests houses and ships.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that ravin down their proper bane. Shak.
Make you ready your stiff bats and clubs,
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle. Shak.
I have seen the time, with my long sword I would have made you four tall fellows skip like rats. Shakesp.

Thos horses will knable at walls, and rats will gnaw iron. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
If in despair he goes out of the way like a rat with a dose of arsenick, why he dies nobly. Dennis.

To smell a rat. To be put on the watch by suspicion, as the cat by the scent of a rat; to suspect danger.

R A T

Quoth Hudibras, I smell a rat, Ralpho, thou dost prevaricate. Hudibras.

RA'TABLE. adj. [from rate.] Set at a certain value.

The Danes brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras; I collect out of the abby-hook of Burton, that twenty oras were ratable to two marks of silver. Camden's Remains.

RA'TABLY. adv. Proportionably.
Many times there is no proportion of shot and powder allowed ratably by that quantity of the great ordnance. Raleigh.

RATA'FIA. n. s. A liquor, prepared from the kernels of apricots and spirits.

RATA'N. n. s. An Indian cane. Dict.

RATCH. n. s. In clockwork, a sort of wheel, which serves to lift up the de-tents every hour, and thereby make the clock strike. Bailey.

RATE. n. s. [ratus, Lat. rate, old Fr.]
1. Price fixed on any thing.

How many things do we value, because they come at dear rates from Japan and China, which if they were our own manufacture, common to be had,
and for a little money, would be neglected? Locke.

I'll not betray the glory of my name,
'Tis not for me, who have preserv'd a state,
To buy an empire at so base a rate. Dryden.

The price of land has never changed, the several changes have been made in the rate of interest by law; nor now that the rate of interest is by law the same, is the price of land every where the same. Locke.

2. Allowance settled.
His allowance was a continual allowance, a daily rate for every day. 2 Kings, xxv. 30.
They obliged themselves to remit after the rate of twelve hundred thousand pounds sterling per annum, divided into so many monthly payments.
Addison.

3. Degree; comparative height or value.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state. Shak.
In this did his holiness and godliness appear above the rate and pitch of other men's, in that he was so infinitely merciful. Calamy.
To which relation whatsoever is done agreeably, is morally and essentially good; and whatsoever is done otherwise, is at the same rate morally evil.
South.

4. Quantity assignable.
In goodly form comes on the enemy;
And by the ground they hide, I judge their number Upon or near the rate of thirty thousand. Shakesp.

5. That which sets value.
Heretofore the rate and standard of wit was very different from what it is now-a-days: no man was then accounted a wit for speaking such things, as deserved to have the tongue cut out. South.
A virtuous heathen is, at this rate, as happy
as a virtuous christian. Atherbury.

6. Manner of doing any thing; degree to which any thing is done.
I have disabled mine estate,
By shewing something a more swelling port,
Than my faint means would grant continuance;
Nor do I now make moan to be abridged
From such a noble rate Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Many of the horse could not march at that rate, nor come up soon enough. Clarendon.
Tom hinting his dislike of some trifle his mistress had said, she asked him how he would talk to her after marriage, if he talked at this rate before? Addison.

7. Tax imposed by the parish.
They paid the church and parish rate,
And took, but read not the receipt. Prior.

To RATE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To value at a certain price.
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;

And yet, dear lady,
Rating myself as nothing, you shall see How much I was a braggart. Shakesp.
 We may there be instructed, how to name and rate all goods, by those that will concenter into felicity. Boyle.
 You seem not high enough your joys to rate,
 You stand indebted a vast sum to fate,
 And should large thanks for the great blessings pay. Dryden.

2. [Reita, Island.] To chide hastily and vehemently.

Go rate thy minions, proud insulting boy;
 Becomes it thee to be thus bold in terms
 Before thy sovereign? Shakesp. Hen. VI.

An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, Sir. Shakesp.

What is all that a man enjoys, from a year's converse, comparable to what he feels for one hour, when his conscience shall take him aside and rate him by himself? South.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind, and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the faults, rather than a hasty rating of the child for it. Locke.

To RATE. v. n. To make an estimate.

In rating, when things are thus little and frivolous, we must not judge by our own pride and passions, which count nothing little, but aggrandize every affront and injury that is done to ourselves. Kettwell.

RATH. n. s. A hill. I know not whence derived.

There is a great use among the Irish, to make great assemblies upon a rath or hill, there to parly about matters and wrongs between townships or private persons. Spenser.

RATH. adj. [rað, Sax. quickly.] Early;
 coming before the usual time.

This is my snower worn away and wasted,
 Thus is my harvest hastened all to rathe,
 The ear, that budded fair, is burnt and blasted.
 And all my hoped gain is turned to seethe Spenser.

Rath ripe are some, and some of later kind,
 Of golden raue, and some of purple rind. May.

Bring the rath primrose that forsaken dies,
 The tufted crow-toe and pale jessamine. Milton.

RATHER. adv. [This is a comparative from rath; rað, Sax. soon. Now out of use. One may still say, by the same form of speaking, I will sooner do this than that; that is, I like better to do this]

1. More willingly; with better liking.

Almighty God desireth not the death of a sinner, but rather that he should turn from his wickedness and live. Common Prayer.

2. Preferably to the other; with better reason.

'Tis rather to be thought that an heir had no such right by divine institution, than that God should give such right, but yet leave it undeterminate who such heir is. Locke.

3. In a greater degree than otherwise.

He sought through the world, but sought in vain,
 And no where finding, rather fear'd her slain. Dryd.

4. More properly.

This is an art,
 Which does mend nature, change it rather, but
 The art itself is nature. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. Especially.

You are come to me in a happy time,
 The rather for I have some sport in hand. Shakesp.

6. To have rather. [This is, I think, a barbarous expression of late intrusion into our language, for which it is better to say will rather.] To desire in preference.

'Tis with reluctance he is provoked by our impenitence to apply the discipline of severity; he had rather mankind should adore him as their patron and benefactor. Rogers.

RATIFICATION. n. s. [ratification, Fr.

from ratify.] The act of ratifying;
 confirmation.

RATIFIER. n. s. [from ratify.] The person or thing that ratifies.

They cry, "chuse we Laertes for our king?"
 The ratifiers and props of every word,
 Caps, hands, and tongues applaud it to the clouds. Shakesp.

To RATIFY. v. a. [ratum facio Lat.] To confirm; to settle.

The church being a body which dieth not, hath always power, as occasion requireth, no less to ordain that which never was, than to ratify what hath been before. Hooker.

By the help of these, with him above
 To ratify the work, we may again
 Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights. Shak.

We have ratified upon them the borders of Judæa. 1 Mac.

God ratified their prayers by the judgment brought down upon the head of him whom they prayed against. South.

Tell me, my friend, from whence hadst thou the skill,
 So nicely to distinguish good from ill?
 And what thou art to follow, what to fly,
 This to condemn, and that to ratify? Dryden.

RATIO. n. s. [Lat.] Proportion.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio. Cheyne.

To RATIOCINATE. v. n. [ratiocinor.
 Lat.] To reason; to argue.

RATIOCINATION. n. s. [ratiocinatio, Lat.]
 The act of reasoning; the act of deducing consequences from premises.

In simple terms, expressing the open notions of things, which the second act of reason compoundeth into propositions, and the last into sylogisms and forms of *ratio*cination. Brown.

The discerning of that connexion or dependence which there is betwixt several propositions, whereby we are enabled to infer one proposition from another, which is called *ratio*cination or discourse. Wilkins.

Can any kind of *ratio*cination allow Christ all the marks of the Messiah, and yet deny him to be the Messiah? South.

Such an inscription would be self-evident without any *ratio*cination or study, and could not fail constantly to exert its energy in their minds. Bentl.

RATIOCINATIVE. adj. [from *ratio*cinate.]
 Argumentative; advancing by process of discourse.

Some consecutions are so intimately and evidently connexed to, or found in the premises, that the conclusion is attained quasi per saltum, and without any thing of *ratio*cinative process, even as the eye sees his object immediately, and without any previous discourse. Hale's Orig. of Mankind.

RATIONAL. adj. [rationalis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of reasoning.

God decreed to create man after his own image,
 a free and rational agent. Hammond.

As that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, considered as a sensitive being, is stiled natural good; so that which hath a fitness to promote the welfare of man, as a rational, voluntary and free agent, is stiled moral good; and the contrary to it moral evil. Wilkins.

If it is our glory and happiness to have a rational nature, that is endued with wisdom and reason, that is capable of imitating the divine nature;
 then it must be our glory and happiness to improve our reason and wisdom, to act up to the excellency of our rational nature, and to imitate God in all our actions, to the utmost of our power. Law.

2. Agreeable to reason.

What higher in her society thou find'st
 Attractive, humane, rational, love still. Milton.

When the conclusion is deduced from the unerring dictates of our faculties, we say the inference is rational. Glanville's Scipius.

In your arguments be rational, offer them in as moving a manner as the nature of the subject will admit; but beware of letting the pathetic art swallow up the rational. Swift.

3. Wise; judicious: as, a rational man.

RATIONALE. n. s. [from ratio, Lat.] A detail with reasons: as, Dr. Sparrow's Rationale of the Common Prayer.

RATIONALIST. n. s. [from rational.] One who proceeds in his disquisitions and practice wholly upon reason.

He often used this comparison: the empirical philosophers are like to pismires; they only lay up and use their store: the rationalists are like to spiders; they spin all out of their own bowels:
 but give me a philosopher, who, like the bee, hath a middle faculty, gathering from abroad, but digesting that which is gathered by his own virtue. Bacon.

RATIONALITY. n. s. [from rational.]

1. The power of reasoning.
 When God has made rationality the common portion of mankind, how came it to be thy inclosure? Government of the Tongue.

2. Reasonableness.

In human occurrences, there have been many well directed intentions, whose rationalities will never bear a rigid examination. Brown's Vul. Err.

RATIONALLY. adv. [from rational.] Reasonably; with reason.

Upon the proposal of an agreeable object, it may rationally be conjectured, that a man's choice will rather incline him to accept than to refuse it.
South.

RATIONALNESS. n. s. [from rational.]
 The state of being rational.

RA'TSBANE. n. s. [rat and bane.] Poison for rats; arsenick.

He would throw ratsbane up and down a house,
 where children might come at it. L'Strange.

When murder's out, what vice can we advance?
 Unless the new-found poisoning trick of France;
 And when their art of ratsbane we have got,
 By way of thanks, we'll send 'em o'er our plot.

I can hardly believe the relation of his being poisoned, but sack might do it, though ratsbane would not. Swift to Pope.

RATTEEN. n. s. A kind of stuff.

We'll rig in Meath-street Egypt's haughty queen,
 And Anthony shall court her in ratteen. Swift

To RA'TTLE v. n. [ratelen, Dut.]

1. To make a sharp quick noise, with frequent repetitions and collisions of bodies not very sonorous: when bodies are so norous, it is called jingling.

The quiver ratteth against him. Joh xxxix 23

The noise of a whip, of the rattling of the wheels, of prancing horses, and of the jumping chariots. Nahum iii. 2.

They had, to affright the enemies horses, big rattles covered with parchment, and small stones within; but the rattling of shot might have done better service. Howard.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell;
 He fagoted his notions as they fell,
 And if they rhym'd and rattled all was well. Dryden

There she assembles all her blackest storms,
 And the rude hail in rattling tempest forms. Addison.

2. To speak eagerly and noisily.

With jealous eyes at distance she hath seen Whisp'ring with Jove the silver-tooted queen;
 Then, impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
 Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryden.

He is a man of pleasure, and a free-thinker he is an assessor of liberty and property, he rattles
 it out against popery. Swift.

To RA'TTLE. v. a.

1. To move any thing so as to make a rattle or noise.

Her chains she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Druiden.

2. To stun with a noise; to drive with a noise.

Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder. Shakesp.
He should be well enough able to scatter the Irish as a flight of birds, and rattle away this swarm of bees with their king. Bacon.

3. To scold; to rail at with clamour.

Hearing Æsop had been beforehand, he sent for him in a rage, and rattled him with a thousand traitors and villains for robbing his house. L'Estr.
She that would sometimes rattle off her servants sharply, now if she saw them drunk, never took notice. Arbutnot.

RA'TTLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A quick noise nimbly repeated.

I'll hold ten pound my dream is out;
I'd tell it you but for the rattle
Of those confounded drums. Prior.

2. Empty and loud talk.

All this ado about the golden age, is but an empty rattle and fabulous conceit. Hakewill.

3. An instrument, which agitated makes a clattering noise.

The rattles of Isis and the cymbals of Brasilea nearly enough resemble each other. Raleigh.
Opinions are the rattles of immature intellects, but the advanced reasons have outgrown them. Glanville's Scepis.

They want no rattles for their froward mood,
Nor nurse to reconcile them to their food. Druden.
Farewel then, verse, and love, and ev'ry toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy;
What fight, what true, what fit we justly call,
Let this be all my care, for this is all. Pope.

4. A plant. [crista galli, Lat.] An herb resembling a cock's comb.

RA'TTLEHEADED. adj. [rattle and head.] Giddy; not steady.

RA'TTLESNAKE. n. s. A kind of serpent.

The rattlesnake is so called from the rattle at the end of his tail. Grew's Museum.
She loses her being at the very sight of him, and drops plump into his arms, like a charmed bird into the mouth of a rattlesnake. More's Foundling.

RA'TTLESNAKE Root. n. s.

Rattlesnake root, call'd also seneka, belongs to a plant, a native of Virginia; the Indians use it as a certain remedy against the bite of a rattlesnake. Hill.

To RAVAGE. v. a. [ravager, Fr.] To lay waste; to sack; to ransack; to spoil; to pillage; to plunder.

Already Cæsar
Has ravag'd more than half the globe, and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.

His blasts obey, and quit the howling hill,
The shatter'd forest, and the ravag'd vale. Thoms.

RA'VAGE. n. s. [ravage, Fr. from the verb.] Spoil; ruin; waste.

Some cruel pleasure will from thence arise,
To view the mighty ravage of your eyes. Dryden.
Would one think 'twere possible for love
To make such ravage in a noble soul? Addison.

Those savages were not then, what civilized mankind is now; but without mutual society, without arms of offence, without houses or fortifications, an obvious and exposed prey to the ravage of devouring beasts. Bentley.

RA'VAGER. n. s. [from ravage.] Plunderer; spoiler.

When that mighty empire was overthrown by the northern people, vast sums of money were buried to escape the plundering of the conquerors;

and what remained was carried off by those ravagers. Swift.

RAUC'ITY. n. s. [raucus, Lat.] Hoarseness; loud rough noise.

Inequality not stayed upon, but passing, is rather an increase of sweetness; as in the purling of a wreathed string, and in the raucity of a trumpet. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To RAVE. v. n. [reveren, Dut. rêver, Fr.]

1. To be delirious; to talk irrationally.

Men who thus rave, we may conclude their brains are turned, and one may as well read lectures at Bedlam as treat with such. Government of the Tongue.

It soon infecteth the whole member, and is accompanied with watching and raving. Wiseman.

Her grief has wrought her into frenzy!
The images her troubled fancy forms
Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed;
Sometimes she raves for musick, light, and air;
Nor air, nor light, nor musick calm her pains. Smith.

2. To burst out into furious exclamations as if mad.

Shall these wild distempers of thy mind,
This tempest of thy tongue, thus rave, and find No opposition? Smidy's Paraphrase on Job.
Our ravings and complaints are but like arrows shot up into the air, at no mark, and so to no purpose. Temple.

Wonder at my patience,
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted? Addison.

Revenge, revenge, thus raving through the streets,
I'll cry for vengeance. Southern's Spartan Dame.
He swore he could not leave me,
With ten thousand ravings. Rowe's Royal Convert.

3. To be unreasonably fond: with upon before the object of fondness. A colloquial and improper sense.

Another partiality is as fantastical and wild, attributing all knowledge to the ancients and the moderns; this raving upon antiquity, in matter of poetry, Horace has wittily exposed in one of his satires. Locke.

To RAV'EL. v. a. [ravelen, Dut. to entangle.]

1. To entangle; to entwist one with another; to make intricate; to involve; to perplex.

If then such praise the Macedonian got,
For having rudely cut the Gordian knot;
What glory's due to him that could divide
Such ravel'd interests, has the knot untied,
And without stroke so smooth a passage made,
Where craft and malice such obstructions laid? Waller.

2. To unweave; to unknit; as, to ravel out a twist or piece of knit work.

Let him for a pair of reechy kisses
Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fingers,
Make you to ravel all this matter out. Shakesp.
Sleep, that knits up the ravel'd sleeve of care. Shakesp.

3. To hurry over in confusion. This seems to be the meaning in Digby.

They but ravel it over loosely, and pitch upon disputing against particular conclusions, that at the first encounter of them single, seem harsh to them. Digby.

To RAV'EL. v. n.

1. To fall into perplexity or confusion.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
You must provide to bottom it on me. Shakesp.
Give the reins to wandering thought,
Regardless of his glory's diminution;
Till by their own perplexities involved,
They ravel more, still less resolved,
But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton.

2. To work in perplexity; to busy himself with intricacies.

It will be needless to ravel far into the records of elder times; every man's memory will suggest many pertinent instances. Decay of Piety.

The humour of raveling into all these mystical or intangled matters, mingling with the interest and passions of princes and of parties, and thereby heightened and inflamed, produced infinite disputes. Temple.

RAVELIN. n. s. [Fr.] In fortification, a work that consists of two faces, that make a salient angle, commonly called half moon by the soldiers; it is raised before the courtines or counterscarps.

Dict.

RA'VEN. n. s. [ʰnæpɪn, Sax.] A large black fowl, whose cry is supposed ominous.

The raven himself is hoarse
That cokes the fatal entrance of Duncan Under my battlements. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Come thou day in night,
For thou wilt lie upon the wings of night,
Whiter than snow upon a raven's back. Shakesp.
I have seen a perfectly white raven, as to bill as well as feathers. Boyle on Colours.

He made the greedy ravens to be Ælias' caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

On several parts a sev'ral praise bestows,
The ruby lips, and well-proportion'd nose,
The snowy skin, the raven glossy hair,
The dimpl'd cheek. Dryden's Cymon and Iphigenia.
The raven once in snowy plumes was drest,
White as the whitest dove's unsullied breast,
His tongue, his prating tongue had chang'd him quite.

To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addison.
Hence Gildon rails, that raven of the pit,
Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit. Young.

To RA'VEN. v. a. [ʰnæpɪn, Sax. to rob.] To devour with great eagerness and rapacity.

Thriftless ambition, that will raven up Thine own life's means. Shakesp.

Our natures do pursue,
Like rats that raven down their proper bauc,
A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die. Shak.

The cloyed will
That satiate, yet unsatisfied desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb, Longs after for the garbage. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

There is a conspiracy of the prophets, like a roaring lion ravening the prey. Ezekiel xxii. 25.

To RA'VEN. v. n. To prey with rapacity.

Benjamin shall raven as a wolf; in the morning he shall devour the prey, and at night he shall divide the spoil. Genesis.

They gaped upon me with their mouths, as a ravening and a roaring lion. Psaln xxii. 13.

The more they fed, they raven'd still for more,
They drain'd from Dan, and left Beersheba poor;
But when some lay preferment fell by chance,
The Gourmands made it their inheritance. Dryden.

Convulsions rack man's nerves and cares his breast,
His flying life is chas'd by rav'ning pains
Through all his doubles in the winding veins. Blackmore.

RA'VENOUS. adj. [from raven.] Furi-ously voracious: hungry to rage.

They desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous. Shak.
As when a flock

Of ravenous fowl, through many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd come flying, lur'd With scent of living carcasses. Milt. Par. Last.

What! the kind Ismenia,
That nurs'd me, watch'd my sickness! oh she watch'd me,
As rav'nous vultures watch the dying lion. Smith.

RA'VENOUSLY. adv. [from ravenous.] With raging voracity.

RA'VENOUSNESS. n. s. [from ravenous.] Rage for prey; furious voracity.

The ravenousness of a lion or bear are natural to them; yet their mission upon an extraordinary occasion may be an actus imperatus of divine providence. Hale.

RAUGHT. the old pret. and part. pass. of reach. Snatched; reached; attained.

His tail was stretch'd out in wondrous length, That to the house of heavenly gods it raught, And with extorted power and borrow'd strength, The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser.

In like delights of bloody game, He trained was till ripen years he raught, And there abode whilst any beast of name Walk'd in that forest. Spenser.

This staff of honour raught, there let it stand, Where best it fits to be, in Henry's hand. Shakesp.
The hand of death has raught him. Shakesp.
Gritus furiously running in upon Schenden, violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables, and with his horsemen took him. Knolles.

RA'VIN. n. s. [from raven]; this were better written raven.
1. Prey; food gotten by violence. The lion strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin. Nahum.
To me, who with eternal famine pine, Alike is hell, or paradise, or heav'n; There best, where most with ravin I may meet. Milton.

2. Rapine; rapaciousness. They might not lie in a condition exposed to the ravin of any vermin that may find them, being unable to escape. Roy.

RAVINGLY. adv. [from rare.] With frenzy; with distraction. In this depth of musings and divers sorts of discourses, would she ravingly have remained. Sidney.

TO RA'VISH. v. a. [ravir, Fr.]
1. To constuprate by force; to deflower by violence. They ravish'd the women and maids. Lam. v. 11.
They cut thy sister's tongue, and ravish'd her. Shakesp.

2. To take away by violence. These hairs which thou dost ravish from my chin, Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakesp. King Lear.
Their vow is made
To ransack Troy, within whose strong immures
The ravish'd Helen sleeps. Shakesp.

And all his praise, to evely syllable heard;
But then a rocke, in size more amplified,
Then first he ravish'd to him. Chapman.
I owe myself the care,
My fame and injur'd honour to repair;
From thy own tent, proud man, in thy despite,
This hand shall ravish thy pretended right. Dryden.

3. To delight to rapture; to transport. Thou hast ravished my heart. Cant. iv. 9.

RA'VISHER. n. s. [ravisseur, Fr. from ravish.]
1. He that embraces a woman by violence. They are cruel and bloody, common ravishers of women, and murderers of children. Spenser.
A ravisher must repair the temporal detriment to the maid, and give her a dowry, or marry her if she desire it. Taylor.
Turn hence those pointed glories of your eyes
For if more charms beneath those circles rise,
So weak my virtue, they so strong appear,
I shall torn ravisher to keep you here. Dryden.

2. One who takes any thing by violence. Shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare? Pope.

RA'VISHINGLY. adv. [from ravishing.]
To extremity of pleasure. As all the housewiferies of deities are To heare a voice so ravishingly fair. Chapman.

RA'VISHMENT. n. s. [ravissement, Fr. from ravish.]
1. Violation; forcible constupration. Of his several ravishments, betrayings and stealing away of men's wives, came in all those ancient fables of his transformations and all that rabble of Grecian forgeries. Raleigh.
Tell them ancient stories of the ravishment of chaste maidens. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.
I told them I was one of their knight-errants that delivered them from ravishment. Dryden.

2. Transport; rapture; ecstasy; pleasing violence on the mind. All things joy, with ravishment Attracted by thy beauty still to gaze. Milton.
Can any mortal mixture of earth's mould Breathe such divine enchanting ravishment? Milt.
What a ravishment was that, when having found out the way to measure Hiero's crown, he leaped out of the bath, and, as if he were suddenly possess, ran naked up and down! Witans.

RAW. adj. [raep, Sax. raa, Dan. rauw, Dut.]
1. Not subdued by the fire. Full of great lumps of flesh, and gobbets raw. Spenser.

2. Not covered with the skin. All aloud the wind doth blow,
And coughing drowns the parson's saw;
And birds sit brooding in the snow,
And Marian's nose looks red and raw. Shakesp.
If there be quick raw flesh in the risings, it is an old leprosy. Leviticus, xiii. 10.

3. Sore. This her knight was feeble and too faint,
And all his sinews waxen weak and raw Through long imprisonment. Spenser.

4. Immature; unripe; not concocted.

5. Unseasoned; unripe in skill. Some people, very raw and ignorant, are very unworthily and unfairly nominated to places, when men of desert are held back and unpreferred. Raleigh's Essays.

People, while young and raw, and soft-natured, are apt to think it an easy thing to gain love, and reckon their own friendship a sure price of another man's; but when experience shall have once opened their eyes, they will find that a friend is the gift of God. South.
Sails were spread to every wind that blew,
Raw were the sailors, and the depths were new. Dryden.

Well I knew
What perils youthful ardour would pursue,
Young as thou wert in dangers, raw to war. Dryden.

6. New. This seems to be the meaning. I have in my mind
A thousand raw tricks of these hragging jacks. Shakesp.

7. Bleak; chill. They carried always with them that weed, as their house, their bed, and their garment; and coming lately into Ireland, they found there more special use thereof, by reason of the raw cold climate. Spenser's State of Ireland.
Youthful still in your doublet and hose, this raw rheumatick day. Shakesp.
Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chasing with his shores. Shakesp.

9. Not spun or twisted: as, raw silk.

RA'WBONED. adj. [raw and bone.] Having bones scarcely covered with flesh. Leau raubon'd rascals! who would e'er suppose They had such courage? Shakesp.
The wolf was content to barter away a raw-boned carcass for a smooth and fat one. L'Estrange.

RA'WHEAD. n. s. [raw and head.] The name of a spectre, mentioned to fright children. Hence draw thy theme, and to the stage pernit Rawhead and bloody bones, and lands and feet, Ragouts for Terens or Thyestes drest. Dryden.
Servants awe children, and keep them in subjection, by telling them of rawhead and bloody bones. Locke.

RAWLY. adv. [from raw.]
1. In a raw manner.

2. Unskilfully; without experience.

3. Newly. Some crying for a surgeon, some upon the debts they owe, some upon their children rawly left. Shakesp. Henry V.

RA'WNESS. n. s. [from raw.]
1. State of being raw. Chalk helpeth concoction, so it be out of a deep well; for then it cureth the rawness of the water. Bacon.

2. Unskilfulness. Charles V. considering the rawness of his seamen, established a pilot major for their examination. Hakewill.

3. Hasty manner. This seems to be the meaning in this obscure passage. Why in that rawness left he wife and children, without leave taking? Shakesp. Macbeth.

RAY. n. s. [raie, rayon, Fr. radius, Lat.]
1. A beam of light. These eyes that roll in vain
To find thy piercing ray, and find no dawn. Milton.
The least light, or part of light, which may be stopt alone, or do suffer any thing alone, which the rest of the light doth not or suffers not, I call a ray of light. Newton.
Sol through white curtains shot a tintrous ray,
And op'd those eyes that must eclipse the day. Pope.

2. Any lustre corporeal or intellectual. The air sharpen'd his visual ray. Milton.
He now, observant of the parting ray,
Lyes the calm sunset of thy various day. Pope.

3. [Raye, Fr. raia, Lat.] A fish. Ainsworth.

4. [Lolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

TO RAY. v. a. [rayer, Fr. from the noun.]
To streak; to mark in long lines. An old word. Before a bubbling fountain low she lay,
Which she increased with her bleeding heart,
And the clean waves with purple gore did ray. Spenser.
His horse is raied with the yellows. Shakesp.
Was ever man so beaten? was ever man so raied?
was ever man so weary? Shakesp.

RAY. for array. Spenser.

RAZE. n. s. [rayz, a root, Span.] A root of ginger. This is commonly written raze, but less properly. I have a gammon of bacon and two razes of ginger to be delivered. Shakesp. Henry IV.

TO RAZE. v. a. [raser, Fr. rasus, Lat.]
See RASE.

1. To overthrow; to ruin; to subvert. Will you suffer a temple, how poorly built soever, but yet a temple of your deity, to be razed? Sidney.
He yoaeketh your rebellious necks,
Razeth your cities, and subverts you towns. Shak.
It grieved the tyrant, that so base a town should so long hold out, so that he would threaten to raze it. Knolles.
Shed christian blood, and populous cities raze;
Because they're taught to use some different phrase. Waller.

We touch'd with joy
The royal hand that raz'd unhappy Troy. Dryden.
The place would be razed to the ground, and its foundations sown with salt. Addison's Spectator.

2. To efface. Fatal this marriage; cancelling your fame, Razing the characters of your renown. Shakesp.
Pluck from the memory a noted sorrow,
Raze out the written troubles of the brain. Shak.

He in derision sets

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raze
Quite out their native language; and instead,
To sow a jangling noise of words. Milton.

3. To extirpate.

I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakesp.

RAZOR. n. s. [rasor, Lat.] A knife with a thick blade and fine edge used in shaving.

Zeal, except ordered aight, useth the razor with such eagerness, that the life of religion is thereby hazarded. Hooker.

These words are razors to my wounded heart.

Shakesp.

Those thy boist'rous locks, not by the sword
Of noble warrior, so to stain his honour,
But by the barber's razor best subdu'd. Milton.

Razor makers generally clap a small bar of Venice steel between two small bars of Flemish steel, and weld them together, to strengthen the back of the razor. Moxon.

As in smooth oil the razor best is weth,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set,
Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen. Young.

RAZORS of a boar. A boar's tusks.

RAZOURABLE. adj. [from razor.] Fit to be shaved. Not in use.

New-born chins be rough and razourable. Shak.

RAZORFISH. n. s.

The sheath or razorfish resembleth in length and bigness a man's finger. Carew.

RAZURE. n. s. [rasure, Fr. rasura, Lat.]

Act of erasing.

Oh! your desert speaks loud;
It well deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence, 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shakesp.

RE. Is an inseparable particle used by the Latins, and from them borrowed by us to denote iteration or backward action:

as, return, to come back; to revive, to live again; repercussion, the act of driving back; reciprocation, as to recrimi- nate. It is put almost arbitrarily before verbs and verbal nouns, so that many words so compounded will perhaps be found, which it was not necessary to insert. It sometimes adds little to the simple meaning of the word, as in rejoice.

REACE'SS. n. s. [re and access.] Visit renewed.

Let pass the quailing and withering of all things by the recess, and their reviving by the reaccess of the sun. Hakewill.

To REACH. v. a. ancient preterite raught.

[racan, Sax.]

1. To touch with the hand extended.

Round the tree
They longing stood, but could not reach. Milton.

What are riches, empire, pow'r,
But larger means to gratify the will;
The steps by which we climb to rise and reach Our wish, and that obtained, down with a scarffoldung

Of scepters, crowns, and thrones: they've serv'd their end,
And there like lumber to be left and scorn'd?

Congreve.

2. To arrive at; to attain any thing distant; to strike from a distance.

The coast so long desir'd
Thy troops shall reach, but having reach'd, repent. Dryden.

What remains beyond this, we have no more a positive notion of, than a mariner has of the depth of the sea; where, having let down his sounding line, he reaches no bottom. Locke.

It must fall perhaps before this letter reaches your hands. Pope.

3. To strike from a distant place.

O patron pow'r, thy present aid afford,
That I may reach the beast! Dryden.

4. To fetch from some place distant, and give.

He reached me a full cup. 2 Esdras xiv. 39.

5. To bring forward from a distant place.

Reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands;
and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side. John xx. 27.

6. To hold out; to stretch forth.

These kinds of goodness are so nearly united to the things which desire them, that we scarcely perceive the appetite to stir in reaching forth her hand towards them. Hooker.

7. To attain; to gain; to obtain.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature, which human penetration can reach, come short of its reality. Cheyne.

8. To transfer.

Through such hands
The knowledge of the gods is reach'd to man. Rowe.

9. To penetrate to.

Whatever alterations are made in the body, if they reach not the mind, there is no perception. Locke.

10. To be adequate to.

The law reached the intention of the promoters,
and this act fixed the natural price of money. Locke.

If these examples of grown men reach not the case of children, let them examine. Locke.

11. To extend to.

Thy desire leads to no excess that reaches blame. Milton.

12. To extend; to spread abroad.

Here imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shot not out society in death. Addison's Cato

13. To take in the hand.

Trees reach'd too far their pamper'd boughs. Milt.

Lest he reach of the tree of life, and eat. Milton.

To REACH. v. n.

We hold that the power which the church hath lawfully to make laws, doth extend unto sundry things of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and such other matters whereto their opinion is, that the church's authority and power doth not reach. Hooker.

The new world reaches quite cross the torrid zone in one tropic to the other. Boyle.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they are apt to stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end too, and reached no farther. Locke.

If I do not ask any thing improper, let me be bar'd by Theodosius; my vow reaches no farther than the grave. Addison.

The influence of the stars reaches to many events, which are not in the power of reason. Swift.

2. To be extended far.

Great men have reaching hands. Shakesp.

3. To penetrate.

He hath delivered them into your hand, and ye have slain them in a rage, that reacheth up into heaven. 2 Chronicles xxviii.

We reach forward into futurity, and bring up to our thoughts objects hid in the remotest depths of time. Addison.

4. To make efforts to attain.

Could a sailor always supply new line, and find the plummet sink without stopping, he would be in the posture of the mind, reaching after a positive idea of infinity. Locke.

REACH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Act of touching or seizing by extension of the hand.

2. Power of reaching or taking in the hand.

There may be in a man's reach a book containing pictures and discourses, capable to delight and instruct him, which yet he may never have the will to open. Locke.

3. Power of attainment or management.
In actions, within the reach of power in him, a man seems as free as it is possible for freedoms to make him. Locke.

4. Power; limit of faculties.

Our sight may be considered as a more diffusive kind of touch, that brings into ear reach some of the most remote parts of the universe. Addison.

Be sure yourself and your own reach to know,
How far your genius, taste, and learning go. Pope.

5. Contrivance; artful scheme; deep thought.

Drawn by others, who had deeper reaches than themselves to matters which they least intended. Hayward.

Some, under types, have affected obscurity to amuse and make themselves admired for profound reaches. Hewel.

6. A fetch; an artifice to attain some distant advantage.

The duke of Parma had particular reaches and ends to his own underhand, to cross the design. Bac.

7. Tendency to distant consequences.

Strain not my speech
To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
Than to suspicion. Shakesp. Othello.

8. Extent.

The confines met of empyrean heav'n,
And of this world: and, on the left hand, hell
With long reach interpos'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To REACT. v. a. [re and act.] To return the impulse or impression.

The lungs being the chief instrument of sanguification, and acting strongly upon the chyle to bring it to an animal fluid, must be reacted upon as strongly. Arbuthnot.

Cut off your hand, and you may do
With t'other hand the work of two;
Because the soul her power contracts,
And on the brother limb reacts. Swift's Miscell.

REACTION. n. s. [reaction, Fr. from react.]

The reciprocation of any impulse or force impressed, made by the body on which such impression is made: action and reaction are equal.

Do not great bodies conserve their heat the longest, their parts heating one another; and may not great, dense, and fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light so copiously, as, by the emission and reaction of its light, and the reflections and refractions of its rays within its pores, to grow still hotter till it comes to a certain period of heat, such as that of the sun?

Newton's Opticks.

Alimentary substances, of a mild nature, act with small force upon the solids, and as the action and reaction are equal, the smallest degree of force in the solids digests them. Arbuthnot.

READ. n. s. [read, Sax. read, Dut.]

1. Counsel.

The man is blest that hath not lent
To wicked read his ear. Sternhold.

2. Saying; saw. This word is in both senses obsolete.

This reade is rife that oftentime
Great cumpers fall unsoft,
In humble dales is footing fast,
The trade is not so tickle. Spenser.

To READ. v. a. preter. read; part. pass. read. [read, Sax.]

1. To peruse any thing written.

I have seen her take forth paper, write upon't, read it, and afterwards seal it. Shakesp.

The passage you must have read, though since slip't out of your memory. Pope.

If we have not leisure to read over the book itself regularly, then by the titles of chapters we may be directed to peruse several sections. Hatts.

that he may learn to fear the Lord. Deut. xvii. 19.

2 To be studious in books.
'Tis sure that Fleury reads. Taylor.

3. To know by reading.
I have read of an eastern king, who put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence. Swift

READ. particip. adj. [from read; the verb read is pronounced reed; the preterite and participle red. Skillful by reading.

Virgil's shepherds are too well read in the philosophy of Epicurus. Dryden.

We have a poet among us, of a genius as exalted as his statue, and who is very well read in Longinus his treatise concerning the sublime. Addis.

READING. n. s. [from read.]

1. Study in books; perusal of books.
Though reading and conversation may furnish us with many ideas of men and things, yet it is our own meditation must form our judgment.
Watts on the Mind.

Less reading than makes felons' scape,
Less human genius than God gives an ape,
Can make a Cibber. Pope.

2. A lecture; a prelection.

3. Public recital.
The Jews had their weekly readings of the law.
Hooker.

Give attendance to reading, exhortation and doctrine. 1 Timothy.

readings of the authors with great sagacity.
Arbutnot on Coins.

READEPTION. n. s. [re and adeptus,
Lat.] Recovery; act of regaining.
Will any say, that the readeption of Trevigi was matter of scruple? Bacon.

READER. n. s. [from read.]

1. One that peruses any thing written.
As we must take the care that our words and sense be clear, so if the obscurity happen through the hearers or readers want of understanding, I am not to answer for them. Ben Jonson.

2. One studious in books.
Ba-iris' altars and the dire decrees
Of hard Erestheus, every reader sees. Dryden.

3. One whose office is to read prayers in churches.
He got into orders, and became a reader in a parish church at twenty pounds a year. Swift.

READERSHIP. n. s. [from reader.] The office of reading prayers.

When they have taken a degree, they get into orders, and solicit a readership. Swift's Miscell.

READILY. adv. [from ready.] Expeditely; with little hinderance or delay.
My tongue obey'd, and readily could name
Whatever I saw. Milton.

Those very things, which are declined as impossible, are readily practicable in a case of extreme necessity. South.

I readily grant, that one truth cannot contradict another. Locke.

Every one sometime or other dreams that he is reading papers, in which case the invention prompts so readily, that the mind is imposed upon.
Addison.

READINESS. n. s. [from ready.]

1. Expediteness; promptitude.
He would not forget the readiness of their king in aiding him when the duke of Bretagne failed him. Bacon.

He opens himself to the man of business with reluctancy, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.

2. The state of being ready or fit for any thing.
Have you an army ready?
—The centurions and their charges already in the entertainment to be on foot at an hour's warning.
—I am joyful to hear of their readiness. Shakesp.
They remained near a month, that they might be in readiness to attend the motion of the army.
Clarendon.

3. Facility; freedom from hinderance or obstruction.
Nature has provided for the readiness and easiness of speech. Holder.

4. State of being willing or prepared.
A pious and well-disposed mind, attended with a readiness to obey the known will of God, is the surest means to enlighten the understanding to a belief of christianity. South.

Their conviction grew so strong, that they embraced the same truths, and laid down their lives, or were always in a readiness to do it, rather than depart from them. Addison.

READMISSION. n. s. [re and admission.]
The act of admitting again.

In an exhausted receiver, animals, that seem as they were dead, revive upon the readmission of fresh air. Arbutnot.

To READMIT. v. a. [re and admit.] To let in again.

These evils I deserve,
Yet despair not of his final pardon,
Whose ear is ever open, and his eye
Gracious to readmit the suppliant. Milton.

After twenty minutes I readmitted the air.
Derham.

To READORN. v. a. [re and adorn.] To decorate again; to deck a-new.

The streams now change their languid blue,
Regain their glory, and their fame renew,
With scarlet honours readorn the tide. Blackmore.

READY. adj. [næb, Sax. roed, Swed.
hnæbe nimble, Sax.]

1. Prompt; not delayed.
These commodities yield the readiest money of any in this kingdom, because they never fail of a price abroad. Temple.

He overlook'd his hindrs; their pay was just
And ready: for he scorn'd to go on trust. Dryden.

2. Fit for a purpose; not to seek.
All things are ready, if our minds be so,
Perish the man whose mind is backward now!
Shakesp.

Make you ready your stiff hats and clubs;
Rome and her rats are at the point of battle.
Shakesp.

One hand the sword, and one the pen employs,
And in my lap the ready paper lies. Dryden.

The sacred priest with ready knives bereave
The beasts of life, and in füll bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneis.

3. Prepared; accommodated to any design, so as that there can be no delay.
Trouble and anguish shall prevail against him,
as a king ready to the battle. Job xv. 24.

Death ready stands to interpose his dart. Milton
The word which I have giv'n, I'll not revoke;
If he be brave, he's ready for the stroke. Dryden.

The imagination is always restless, and the will, reason being laid aside, is ready for every extravagant project. Locke.

4. Willing; eager; quick.
Men, when their actions succeed not as they would, are always ready to impute the blame thereof unto the heavens, so as to excuse their own follies. Spenser's State of Ireland.

A cloud that is more show than moisture; a cloud that is more ready to bestow his drops upon the sea, than on the land. Holyday.

They who should have helped him to mend things, were readier to promote the disorders by which they might thrive than to set a-foot frugality. avenant.

5. Being at the point; not distant: ready;
about to do or be.
He knoweth that the day of darkness is ready at hand. Job.

Satan ready now
To stoop with weary'd wings and willing feet
On this world. Milton's Par. Lost.

6. Being at hand; next to hand.
A sapling pine he wrench'd from out the ground,
The readiest weapon that his fury found. Dryden.

7. Facile; easy; opportune; near.
Sometimes the readiest way which a wise man hath to conquer, is to fly. Hoo. er's Preface.

The race elect,
Safe towards Canaan from the shore advance
Through the wild desert, not the readiest way.
Milton.

Proud of their conquest, prouder of their prey,
They leave the camp, and take the readiest way.
Dryden.

The ready way to be thought mad is to contend that you are not so. Spectator.

8. Quick; not done with hesitation.
A ready consent often subjects a woman to contempt. Clarissa.

9. Expedite; nimble; not embarrassed;
not slow.
Those, who speak in publick, are much better accepted, when they can deliver their discourse by the help of a lively genius and a ready memory, than when they are forced to read all. Watts.

For the most part there is a finer sense, a clearer mind, a readier apprehension, and gentler dispositions in that sex, than in the other. Law.

10. To make ready. An elliptick expression for, to make things ready. To make preparations.
He will shew you a large upper room; there make ready for us. Mark xiv. 15.

READY. adv. Readily; so as not to need delay.
We will go ready armed before the children of Israel. Numbers.

READY. n. s. Ready money. A low word.
Lord Strut was not flush in ready, either to go to law, or clear old debts. Arbutnot.

REAFFIRMANCE. n. s. [re and affirm-ance.] Second confirmation.
Causes of deprivation are a conviction before the ordinary of a wilful maintaining any doctrine contrary to the thirty-nine articles, or a persisting therein without revocation of his error, or a re-affirmance after such revocation. Ayliffe.

REAL. adj. [reel, Fr. realis, Lat.]

1. Relating to things, not persons; not personal.
Many are perfect in men's humours, that are not greatly capable of the real part of business; which is the constitution of one that hath studied men more than books. Bacon.

2. Not fictitious; not imaginary; true;
genuine.
We do but describe an imaginary world, that is but little a-kin to the real one. Clayville's Scerpsis.

When I place an imaginary name at the head of a character, I examine every letter of it, that it may not bear any resemblance to one that is real. Addison.

Imaginary distempers are attended with real and unfeigned sufferings, that enfeeble the body, and dissipate the spirits. Blackmore.

The whole strength of the Arian cause, real or artificial; all that can be of any force either to convince, or deceive a reader. Waterland.

3. [In law.] Consisting of things immovable, as land.
I am hastening to convert my small estate, that is personal, into real. Child on Trade

REALGAR. n. s. A mineral.
Realgar or sandaracha is red arsenick Harris.

Put realgar hot into the midst of the quicksilver, whereby it may be condensed as well from within as without. Bacon.

REALITY. n. s. [realité, Fr. from real.]
1. Truth; verity; what is, not what merely seems.

I would have them well versed in the Greek and Latin poets, without which a man fancies that he understands a critic, when in reality he does not comprehend his meaning. Addison.

The best accounts of the appearances of nature, in any single instance human penetration can reach, comes infinitely short of its reality and internal constitution; for who can search out the Almighty's works to perfection? Cheyne.

My neck may be an idea to you, but it is a reality to me. Beattie.

2. Something intrinsically important; not merely matter of show.

Of that skill the more thou know'st, The more she will acknowledge thee her head, And to realities yield all her shows, Made so adorn for thy delight the more. Milton.

TO REALIZE. v. a. [realiser, Fr. from real.]

1. To bring into being or act.
Thus we realize what Archimedes had only in hypothesis, weighing a single grain against the globe of earth. Glanville.

As a diocesan, you are like to exemplify and realize every word of this discourse. South.

2. To convert money into land.
REALLY. adv. [from real.]

1. With actual existence.
We shall at last discover in what persons this holiness is inherent really, in what condition it is inherent perfectly, and consequently in what other sense it may be truly and properly affirmed that the church is holy. Pearson.

There cannot be a more important case of conscience for men to be resolved in, than to know certainly how far God accepts the will for the deed, and how far he does not; and to be informed truly when men do really will a thing, and when they have really no power to do what they have willed. South.

2. In truth; truly; not seemingly only.
Nothing properly is his duty but what is really his interest. Wilkins.

The understanding represents to the will things really evil, under the notion of good. South.

These orators inflame the people, whose anger is really but a short fit of madness. Swift.

They even affect to be more pleased with dress, and to be more fond of every little ornament, than they really are. Law.

3. It is a slight corroboration of an opinion.
Why really sixty-five is somewhat old. Young.

REALM. n. s. [roialme, Fr.]
1. A kingdom; a king's dominion.

Is there any part of that realm, or any nation therein, which have not yet been subdued to the crown of England? Spenser.

They had gathered a wise council to them Of every realm that did debate this business. Shakesp.

A son whose worthy deeds Raise him to be the second in that realm. Milton.

2. Kingly government. This sense is not frequent.

Learn each small people's genius, policies, The ant's republic and the realm of bees. Pope.

REALTY. n. s. [A word peculiar, I believe, to Milton.]

O heaven, that such resemblance of the Highest Should yet remain, where faith and reality Remain not. Milton's Par. Lost.

Reality means not in this place reality in opposition to show, but loyalty; for the Italian dictionary explains the adjective reale by loyal. Pearce.

REAM. n. s. [rame, Fr. riem, Dut.] A bundle of paper containing twenty quires.

All vain petitions mounting to the sky, With reams abundant this abode supply. Pope.

TO REANIMATE. v. a. [re and animo, Lat.] To revive; to restore to life.

We are our reanimated ancestors, and antedate their resurrection. Glanville's Scepis.

The young man left his own body breathless on the ground, while that of the doe was reanimated. Spectator.

TO REANNE'X. v. a. [re and annex.] To annex again.

King Charles was not a little inflamed with an ambition to repurchase and reanne'x that duchy. Bacon's Henry VII.

TO REAP. v. a. [repan, Sax.]

1. To cut corn at harvest.
From Ireland come I with my strength, And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd. Shakesp.

When ye reap the harvest, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field. Leviticus xix. 9.

The hire of the labourers, which have reaped down your fields, is kept back by fraud. James.

2. To gather; to obtain. It is once used by Shakespeare in an ill sense.

They that love the religion which they profess, may have failed in choice, but yet they are sure to reap what benefit the same is able to afford. Hooker.

What sudden anger's this? how have I reaped it? Shakesp.

This is a thing, Which you might from relation likewise reap, Being much spoke of. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him off in our prosperity. King Charles.

TO REAP. v. n. To harvest.
They that sow in tears, shall reap in joy. Psalms.

REAPER. n. s. [from reap.] One that cuts corn at harvest.

From hungry reapers their sheaves with-hold. Sandys.

Here Ceres' gifts in waving prospect stand, And nodding tempt the joyful reaper's hand. Pope.

A thousand forms he wears, And first a reaper from the field appears, Sweating he walks, while loads of golden grain O'ercharge the shoulders of the seeming swain. Pope.

REAPINGHOOK. n. s. [reaping and hook.] A hook used to cut corn in harvest.

Some are brib'd to vow it looks Most plainly done by thieves with reapinghooks. Dryden.

REAR. n. s. [arriere, Fr.]

1. The hinder troop of an army, or the hinder line of a fleet.

The rear admiral, an arch pirate, was afterwards slain with a great shot. Knolles.

Argive chiefs Fled from his well-known face, with wonted fear, As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the rear. Dryden.

2. The last class; the last in order.

Coins I place in the rear, because made up of both the other. Peacham.

Snowy headed winter leads, Yellow autumn brings the rear. Waller.

REAR. adj. [henepe, Sax.]

1. Raw; half roasted; half sodden.

2. Early. A provincial word.
O'er yonder hill does scant the dawn appear, Then why does Cuddy leave his cot so rear? Gay.

TO REAR. v. a. [arapan, Sax.]

1. To raise up.
All the people shouted with a loud voice, for the rearing up of the house of the Lord. 1 Esdras.

Who now shall rear you to the sun, or rank Your tribes. Milton.

2. To lift up from a fall.
Down again she fell unto the ground, But he her quickly reared up again. Spenser.

In adoration at his feet I fell Submit: he rear'd me. Milton.

3. To move upwards.
Up to a hill anon his steps he rear'd, From whose high top to ken the prospect round. Milton.

4. To bring up to maturity.
No creature goeth to generate, whilst the female is busy in sitting or rearing yer young. Bacon.

They were a very hardy breed, and reared their young ones without any care. Mortimer's Husbandry.

They flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves. Thamson.

5. To educate; to instruct.
He wants a father to protect his youth, And rear him up to virtue. Southern.

They have in every town publick nurseries, where all parents, except cottagers and labourers, are obliged to send their infants to be reared and educated. Swift.

6. To exalt; to elevate.
Charity decent, modest, easy, kind, Softens the high, and rears the abject mind. Prior.

7. To rouse; to stir up.
Into the naked woods he goes, And seeks the tusky boar to rear, With well-mouth'd hounds and pointed spear. Dryden.

8. To raise; to breed.
No flesh from market-towns our peasant sought: He rear'd his frugal meat, but never bought. Harte.

REARWARD. n. s. [from rear.]

1. The last troop.
He from the beginning began to be in the rearward, and before they left fighting was too far off. Sidney.

The standard of Dan was the rearward of the camp. Numbers.

2. The end; the tail; a train behind
Why follow'd not, when she said Tybalt's dead, Thy father or thy mother? Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

3. The latter part. In contempt.
He was ever in the rearward of the fashion. Shakesp.

REARMOUSE. n. s. [more properly rere-mouse; henepe muj. Sax.] The leather-winged bat.

Some war with rearmice for their leathern wings To make my small elves coats. Shakesp.

Of flying fishes the wings are not feathers, but a thin kind of skin, like the wings of a bat or rearmouse. Abbot.

TO REASC'END. v. n. [re and ascend.] To climb again.

When as the day the heaven doth adorn, I wish that night the noxious day would end; And when as night hath us of light forlorn, I wish that day would shortly reascend. Spenser.

Laugh by the heav'nly muse to venture down The dark descent, and up to reascend. Milton.

These puissant legions, whose exile Hath empty'd heav'n, shall fail to reascend, Self-rai'd, and repossess their native seat. Milton.

TO REASC'END. v. a. To mount again.
When the god his fury had allay'd, He mounts afresh, and reascends the skies. Addison.

REASON. n. s. [raison, Fr. ratio, Lat.]

1. The power by which man deduces one proposition from another, or proceeds from premises to consequences; the rational faculty; discursive power.

Reason is the director of man's will, discovering in action what is good; for the laws of well-doing are the dictates of right reason. Hooker.

Though brutish that contest and foul,
When reason hath to deal with force; yet so Most reason is that reason overcome. Milton

I appeal to the common judgment of mankind, whether the humane nature be not so framed, as to acquiesce in such a moral certainty, as the nature of things is capable of; and if it were otherwise, whether that reason which belongs to us, would not prove a burden and a torment to us, rather than a privilege, by keeping us in a continual suspense, and thereby rendering our conditions perpetually restless and unquiet. Wilkins

Dim, as the borrow'd beaus of moon and stars
To lonely, weary, wand'ring travellers,
Is reason to the soul: and as on high,
Those rowling fires discover but the sky,
Not light us here; so reason's glimmering ray
Was lent, not to assure our doubtful way,
But guide us upward to a better day. Dryden

It would be well, if people would not lay so much weight on their own reason in matters of religion, as to think every thing impossible and absurd, which they cannot conceive: how often do we contradict the right rules of reason in the whole course of our lives? reason itself is true and just, but the reason of every particular man is weak and wavering, perpetually swayed and turned by his interests, his passions and his vices. Swift

2. Cause; ground or principle.

What the apostles deemed rational and probable means to that end, there is no reason or probability to think should ever in any produce this effect. Hannond

Virtue and vice are not arbitrary things, but there is a natural and eternal reason for that goodness and virtue, and against vice and wickedness.
Tillotson

3. Cause efficient.

Spain is thin sown of people, partly by reason of the sterility of the soil, and partly their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon

Such a benefit, as by the antecedent will of Christ is intended to all men living, though all men, by reason of their own demerits, do not actually receive the fruit of it. White

The reason of the motion of the balance in a wheel watch, is by the motion of the next wheel.
Hale

By reason of the sickness of a reverend prelate,
I have been over-ruled to approach this place.
Spratt

I have not observed equality of numbers in my verse; partly by reason of my haste, but more especially because I would not have my sense a slave to syllables. Dryden

4. Final cause.

Reason, in the English language, sometimes is taken for true and clear principles; sometimes for clear and fair deductions; sometimes for the cause, particularly the final cause. Locke

5. Argument; ground of persuasion; moti-tive.

I mask the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons. Shakesp. Macbeth
If it be natural, ought we not rather to conclude, that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose? Tillotson

If we commemorate any mystery of our redemption, or article of our faith, we ought to confirm our belief of it, by considering all those reasons upon which it is built; that we may be able to give a good account of the hope that is in us.
Nelson

6. Ratiocination; discursive act.

When she rates things, and moves from ground to ground,
The name of reason she obtains by this;
But when by reason she the truth hath found,
And standeth fixt, she understanding is. Davies

7. Clearness of faculties.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends.
Shakesp.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shakesp.

8. Right; justice.

I was promis'd on a time,
To have reason for my rhyme:
From that time unto this season,
I receiv'd nor rhyme nor reason. Spenser

Are you in earnest?
—Ay, and resolv'd withal

To do myself this reason and this right. Shakesp.
The papists ought in reason to allow them all the excuses they make use of for themselves; such as an invincible ignorance, oral tradition, and authority. Stillingfleet

Let it drink deep in thy most vital part;
Strike home, and do me reason in thy heart. Dryden

9. Reasonable claim; just practice.

God brings good out of evil; and therefore it were but reason we should trust God to govern his own world, and wait till the change cometh, or the reason be discovered. Taylor

Conscience, not acting by law, is a boundless presumptuous thing; and, for any one by virtue thereof, to challenge himself a privilege of doing what he will, and of being unaccountable, is in all reason too much, either for man or angel. South

A severe reflection Mozaigne has made on princes, that we ought not in reason to have any expectations of favour from them. Dryden

We have as great assurance that there is a God, as the nature of the thing to be proved is capable of, and as we could in reason expect to have.

When any thing is proved by as good arguments as a thing of that kind is capable of, we ought not in reason to doubt of its existence.
Tillotson's Preface

10. Rationale; just account.

This reason did the ancient fathers render, why the church was called Catholic. Pearson

To render a reason of an effect or phenomenon, is to deduce it from something else more known than itself. Boyle

11. Moderation; moderate demands.

The most probable way of bringing France to reason, would be by the making an attempt upon the Spanish West Indies, and by that means to cut off all communication with this great source of riches. Addison

To REASON. v. n. [raisonner, Fr.]

1. To argue rationally; to deduce consequences justly from premises.

No man, in the strength of the first grace, can merit the second; for reason they do not, who think so; unless a beggar, by receiving one alms, can merit another. South

Ideas, as ranked under names, are those, that for the most part men reason of within themselves, and always those which they commune about with others. Locke

Every man's reasoning and knowledge is only about the ideas existing in his own mind; and our knowledge and reasoning about other things is only as they correspond with those our particular ideas. Locke

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition. Addison

In the lonely grove,
'Twas there just and good he reason'd strong, Clear'd some great truth, or rais'd some serious song. Ticket

2. To debate; to discourse; to talk; to take or give an account. Not in use.

Reason with the fellow,
Before you punish him, where he heard this.
Shakesp.

I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me in the narrow seas,
There miscarried a vessel of our country. Shakesp.
Stand still, that I may reason with you of all the righteous acts of the Lord. 1 Samuel, xii. 7.

3. To raise disquisitions; to make enquiries.

Jesus, perceiving their thoughts, said, What reason ye in your hearts? Luke v. 22.

They reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton

Down reason then, at least vain reasoning down. Milton

To REASON. v. a. To examine rationally. This is a French mode of speech.

When they are clearly discovered, well digested, and well reason'd in every part, there is beauty in such a theory. Barnet

REASONABLE. adj. [raison, Fr.]

1. Having the faculty of reason; endued with reason.

She perceived her only son lay hurt, and that his heart was so deadly, as that already his life had lost use of the reasonable and almost sensible part. Shelley

2. Acting, speaking, or thinking rationally.

The parliament was dissolved, and gentlemen furnished with such forces, as were held sufficient to hold in bridle either the malice or rage of reasonable people. Hayward

3. Just; rational; agreeable to reason.

By indubitable certainty, I mean that which doth not admit of any reasonable cause of doubting, which is the only certainty of which most things are capable. Wilkins

A law may be reasonable in itself, although a man does not allow it, or does not know the reason of the law-givers. Swift

4. Not immoderate.

Let all things be thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakesp. Henry V.

5. Tolerable; being in mediocrity.

I could with reasonable good manner receive the salutation of her and of the princess Pamela, doing them yet no further reverence than one princess oweth to another. Sidney

A good way distant from the nigra rupes, there are four several lands of reasonable quantity. Abbot

Notwithstanding these defects, the English colonies maintained themselves in a reasonable good estate, as long as they retained their own ancient laws. Davies on Ireland

REASONABLENESS. n. s. [from reasonable.]

1. The faculty of reason.

2. Agreeableness to reason.

They thought the work would be better done, if those, who had satisfied themselves with the reasonableness of what they wish, would undertake the converting and disposing of other men. Clarendon

He that rightly understands the reasonableness and excellency of charity, will know, that it can never be excusable to waste any of our money in pride and folly. Law

3. Compliance with reason.

The passive reason, which is more properly reasonableness, is that order and congruity which is impressed upon the thing thus wrought; as in a watch, the whole frame and contexture of it carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the reason or intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale

4. Moderation.

REASONABLY. adv. [from reasonable.]

1. Agreeably to reason.

Chaucer makes Arcite violent in his love, and unjust in the pursuit of it; yet when he came to die, he made him think more reasonably. Dryden

The church has formerly had eminent saints in that sex; and it may reasonably be thought, that it is purely owing to their poor and vain education, that this honour of their sex is for the most part confined to former ages. Law

2. Moderately; in a degree reaching to mediocrity.

Some men reasonably studied in the law, should be persuaded to go thither as chancellor. Bacon
If we can by industry make our deaf and dumb persons reasonably perfect in the language and pronunciation, he may be also capable of the same privilege of understanding by the eye what is spoken. Holder's Elements of Speech.

REA

REA'SONER. n. s. [raisonneur, Fr. from reason.] One who reasons; an arguer.
Due reverence pay
To learned Epicurus; see the way
By which this reas'ner of so high renown Moves through th' ecliptick road the rolling sun. Blackmore.

The terms are loose and undefined; and what less becomes a fair reasoner, he puts wrong and invidious names to every thing to colour a false way of arguing. Addison.

Those reasoners, who employ so much of their zeal for the upholding the balance of power in Christendom, by their practices are endeavouring to destroy it at home. Swift.

REA'SONING. n. s. [from reason.] Argument.
Those who would make use of solid arguments and strong reasonings to a reader of so delicate a turn, would be like that foolish people, who worshipped a fly, and sacrificed an ox to it. Addison.

Your reasonings therefore on this head, amount only to what the schools call ignaratio elenchi; proving before the question, on talking wide of the purpose. Waterland.

REA'SONLESS. adj. [from reason.] Void of reason.
This proffer is absurd and reasonless. Shakesp.
Is it
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus? Shal. esp.
That they wholly direct the reasonless mind, I am resolved; for all those which were created mortal, as birds and beasts, are left to their natural appetites. Raleigh's History of the World.

These reasons in Love's law have past for good,
Though fond and reasonless to some. Milton.

TO REASSE'MBLE. v. a. [re and assemble.] To collect anew.
There reassembling our afflicted pow'rs,
Consult how to assent our enemy. Milton.

TO REASSERT. v. a. [re and assert.] To assert anew; to maintain after suspension or cessation.
His steps I followed, his doctrine I reasserted. Atterbury.

Young Orestes grown
To many years should reassert the throne. Pope.

TO REASSU'ME. v. a. [reassumo, Lat. re and assuare.] To resume; to take again.
To I in the Son return'd,
Into his blissful bosom reassum'd,
In glory as of old. Milton.

Nor only on the Trojans fell this doom,
Their hearts at last the vanquish'd reassume. Denh.

For this he reassumes the nod,
While Semele commands the god. Prior.

After Henry VIII. had reassumed the supremacy, a statute was made, by which all doctors of the civil law might be made chancellors. Ayliffe.

TO REASSURE. v. a. [reassurer, Fr.] To free from fear; to restore from terrour.
They rose with fear,
Till dauntless Pallas reassur'd the rest. Dryden.

REATE. n. s. A kind of long small grass that grows in water, and complicates itself together.
Let them lie dry six months to kill the water-weeds; as water-lillies, candocks, reate, and bil-rushes. Walton.

TO REAVE. v. a. pret. reft. [reapian, Saxon, whence to bereave.]

1. To take away by stealth or violence. An obsolete word.
Dismounting from his lofty steed,
He to him leapt, in mind to reave his life. Spenser.
Some make his meashy bed, but reave his rest. Carew.

Of God, by some means, that sad death hath reft

REB

The roler heere; will never suffer left
Their unjust wooing of his wife. Chayman.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow,
To do a mord'rous deed, to rob a man,
To force a spotless virgin's chastity,
To reave the orphan of his patrimony,
And have no other reason for his wrong,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath;
Shakesp.

2. It was used as well in a good as bad sense.
They sought my troubled sense how to deceive
With talk, that might inquiet fancies reave. Spenser.

Each succeeding time addeth or reaveth goods and evils, according to the occasions itself produced. Carew.

TO REBAPTIZE. v. a. [rebaptiser, Fr. re and baptize.] To baptize again.
Understanding that the rites of the church were observed, he approved of their baptism, and would not suffer them to be rebaptized. Aykiffe's Parergon.

REBAPTIZA'TION. n. s. [rebaptisation, Fr. from rebaptize.] Renewal of baptism.

And carry to the skies the sacred sound. Dryden.

2. Prior has used it improperly.
Flow'rs, by the soft South West
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands, Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

R E B

REBOUN'D. n. s. [from the verb.] The act of flying back in consequence of motion resisted; resiliation.

I do feel,
By the rebound of yours, a grief that shoots
My very heart. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
If you strike a ball sideling, not full upon the surface, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes may be tried. Bacon.

The weapon with unerring fury flew,
At his left shoulder aim'd: nor entrance found;
But back, as from a rock, with swift rebound Harmless return'd. Dryden.

REBU'FF. n. s. [rebuffade, Fr. rebuffo, Ital.] Repercussion; quick and sudden resistance.

To RECA'LL. v. a. [re and call.] To call back; to call again; to revoke.

They who recal the church unto that which was at the first, must set bounds unto their speeches. Hooker.

If Henry were recall'd to life again,
These news would cause him once more yield the ghost. Shakesp.

Neglected long, she let the secret rest,
Till love recall'd it to her lab'ring breast. Dryden.

It is strange the soul should never once recal over any of its pure native ideas, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never any other ideas, but what derive their original from that union. Locke.

To the churches, wherein they were ordained, they might of right be recalled as to their proper church, under pain of excommunication. Ayliffe.

It is necessary to recall to the reader's mind, the desire Ulysses has to reach his own country. Broome on Odussey.

If princes, whose dominions lie contiguous, be forced to draw from those armies which act against France, we must hourly expect having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us in the midst of a siege. Swift's Miscellanies.

RECA'LL. n. s. [from the verb.] Revocation; act or power of calling back.

Other decrees
Against thee are gone furth, without recall. Milton.

'Tis done, and since 'tis done, 'tis past recal;
And since 'tis past recal, must be forgotten. Dryd.

To RECA'NT. v. a. [recanto, Lat.] To retract; to recall; to contradict what one has once said or done.

He shall do this, or else I do recant
The pardon that I late pronounced. Shakesp.

How soon would ease recant
Vows made in pain as violent and void? Milton.

To RECA'NT. v. n. To revoke a position; to unsay what has been said.

If it be thought, that the praise of a translation consists in adding new beauties, I shall be willing to recant. Dryden.

That the legislature should have power to change the succession, whenever the necessities of the kingdom require, is so useful towards preserving our religion and liberty, that I know not how to recant. Swift.

RECANTA'TION. n. s. [from recant.] Retraction; declaration; contradictory to a former declaration.

She could not see means to join this recantation to the former vow. Sidney.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren; received no laws from one another, but lived separately. Locke.

3. To take any thing communicated.
Draw general conclusions from every particular they meet with: these make little true benefit of history: nay, being of forward and active spirits, receive more harm by it. Locke.
The idea of solidity we receive by our touch. Locke.

The same inability will every one find, who shall go about to fashion in his understanding any simple idea, not received in by his senses or by reflection. Locke.

To conceive the ideas we receive from sensation, consider them, in reference to the different ways, whereby they make their approaches to our minds. Locke.

4. To embrace intellectually.
We have set it down as a law, to examine things to the bottom, and not to receive upon credit, or reject upon improbabilities. Bacon.
In an equal indifferency for all truth; I mean the receiving it, in the love of it, as truth; and in the examination of our principles, and not receiving any for such, till we are fully convinced of their certainty, consists the freedom of the understanding. Locke.
5. To allow.
Long received custom forbidding them to do as they did, there was no excuse to justify their act; unless in the scripture, they could shew some law, that did licence them thus to break a received custom. Hooker.

Will it not be receiv'd,
When we have mark'd with blood those sleepy two,
And us'd their very daggers, that they have don't?
—Who dares receive it other? Shakesp. Macbeth.

Least any should think that any thing in this number eight creates the diapason: this computation of eight is rather a thing received, than any true computation. Bacon.

RECENT. adj. [recens, Lat.]

1. New; not of long existence.
The ancients were of opinion, that those parts, where Egypt now is, were formerly sea, and that a considerable portion of that country was recent, and formed out of the mud discharged into the neighbouring sea by the Nile. Woodward.
2. Late; not antique.
Among all the great and worthy persons, whereof the memory remaineth, either ancient or recent, there is not one that hath been transported to the mad degree of love. Bacon.
3. Fresh; not long dismissed, released, or parted from.
Ulysses moves,
Urg'd on by want, and recent from the storms,
The brackish ouze his manly grace deforms. Pope.

RECENTLY. adv. [from recent.] Newly; freshly.
Those tubes, which are most recently made of fluids, are most flexible and most easily lengthened. Arbuthnot.

RECENTNESS. n. s. [from recent.] Newness; freshness.
This inference of the recentness of mankind from the recentness of these apotheoses of gentile deities, seems too weak to bear up this supposition of the novitas humani generis. Hale.

RECEPTACLE. n. s. [receptaculum, Lat.] A vessel or place into which any thing is received. This had formerly the accent on the first syllable.
When the sharpness of death was overcome, he then opened heaven as well to believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.
The county of Tipperary, the only county palatine in Ireland, is by abuse of some bad ones made a receptacle to rob the rest of the counties about it. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are packt. Shakesp.
The eye of the soul, or receptacle of sapience and divine knowledge. Raleigh's History of the World.
Let paradise a receptacle prove
To spirits foul, and all my trees their prey. Milton.
Their intelligence, put in at the top of the horn, shall convey it into a little receptacle at the bottom. Addison.

These are conveniences to private persons; instead of being receptacles for the truly poor, they tempt men to pretend poverty, in order to share the advantages. Atterbury.
Though the supply from this great receptacle below be continual and alike to all the globe; yet when it arrives near the surface, where the heat is not so uniform, it is subject to vicissitudes. Woodward.

RECEPTIBILITY. n. s. [receptus, Lat.] Possibility of receiving.

The peripatetick matter is a pure unacted power; and this conceited vacuum a mere receptibility. Glauville.

RECEPTARY. n. s. [receptus, Lat.] Thing received. Not in use.

They, which behold the present state of things, cannot condemn our sober enquiries in the doubtful appertences of arts and receptaries of philosophy. Brown.

RECEPTION. n. s. [receptus, Lat.]

1. The act of receiving.
Both serve completely for the reception and communication of learned knowledge. Holder.

In this animal are found parts official unto nutrition, which, were its aliment the empty reception of air, provisions had been superfluous. Brown.

2. The state of being received,

Causes, according still

To the reception of their matter, act;
Not to th' extent of their own sphere. Milton.

3. Admission of any thing communicated.

In some animals, the avenues, provided by nature for the reception of sensations, are few, and the perception, they are received with, obscure and dull. Locke.

4. Readmission.

All hope is lost
Of my reception into grace. Milton's Paradise Lost.

5. The act of containing.

I cannot survey this world of fluid matter, without thinking on the hand that first poured it out, and made a proper channel for its reception. Addison.

6. Treatment at first coming; welcome; entertainment.

This succession of so many powerful methods being farther prescribed by God, have found so discouraging a reception, that nothing but the violence of storming or battery can pretend to prove successful. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Pretending to consult

About the great reception of their king, Thither to come. Milton.

7. Opinion generally admitted.

Philosophers, who have quitted the popular doctrines of their countries, have fallen into as extravagant opinions, as even common reception countenanced. Locke.

8. Recovery. Not in use.

He was right glad of the French king's reception of those towns from Maximilian. Bacon.

RECEPTIVE. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Having the quality of admitting what is communicated.

The soul being, as it is active, perfected by love of that infinite good, shall, as it is receptive, be also perfected with those supernatural passions of joy, peace and delight. Hooker.

To advance the spiritual concerns of all that could in any kind become receptive of the good he meant them, was his unlimited desigment and endeavour. Fell.

The pretended first matter is capable of all forms, and the imaginary space is receptive of all bodies. Glanville.

RECEPTORY. adj. [receptus, Lat.] Generally or popularly admitted.

Although therein be contained many excellent things, and verified upon his own experience, yet are there many also receptory, and will not endure the test. Brown.

RECESS. n. s. [recessus, Lat.]

1. Retirement; retreat; withdrawing; secession.

What tumults could not do, an army must; my recess hath given them confidence that I may be conquered. King Charles.

Fair Thames she haunts, and ev'ry neigh'ring grove, Sacred to soft recess and gentle love. Prior.

2. Departure.

We come into the world, and know not how; we live in it in a self-ignorance, and go hence again, and are as ignorant of our recess. Glanville.

3. Place of retirement; place of secrecy; private abode.

This happy place, our sweet Recess, and only consolation left. Milton.

The deep recesses of the grove he gain'd. Dryden.
I wish that a crowd of bad writers do not rush into the quiet of your recesses. Dryden's Don Sebast.

4. [Receze, Fr.] Perhaps an abstract of the proceedings of an imperial diet.

In the imperial chamber, the proctors have a writ taxed and allowed them for every substantial recess. Ayliffe.

5. Departure into privacy.

The great seraphick lords and cherubim,
In close recess, and secret conclave sat. Milton.

In the recess of the jury, they are to consider their evidence. Hale.

This noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakesp.

Submit to Cæsar,
And reconcile thy mighty soul to life. Addison.
Contenting minds to reconcile.

He that has accustomed himself to take up with what easily offers itself, has reason to fear he shall never reconcile himself to the fatigue of turning things in his mind, to discover their more retired secrets. Locke.

2. To make to be liked again.

Many wise men, who knew the treasurer's talent in removing prejudice, and reconciling himself to wavering affections, believed the loss of the duke was unseasonable. Clarendon.

3. To make any thing consistent.

The great men among the ancients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state.
Locke.

Questions of right and wrong,
Which though our consciences have reconcil'd,
My learning cannot answer. Southern.

Some figures monstrous and mishap'd appear, Consider'd singly, or beheld too near;
Which but proportion'd to their light or place,
Due distance reconciles to form and grace. Pope.

1. To restore to favour.

So thou shalt do for every one that erreth and is simple, so shall ye reconcile the house. Ezekiel.
Let him live before thee reconcil'd. Milton.

from reconcile.]

1. Capable of renewed kindness.

2. Consistent; possible to be made consistent.

What we did was against the dictates of our own conscience; and consequently never makes that act reconciliable with a regenerate estate, which otherwise would not be so. Hammond.

The different accounts of the numbers of ships are reconciliable, by supposing that some spoke of the men of war only, and others added the transports. Arbuthnot.

The bones, to be the most convenient, ought to have been as light, as was reconciliable with sufficient strength. Cheyne.

Worldly affairs and recreations may hinder our attendance upon the worship of God, and are not

RECONCI'LEABLENESS. n. s. [from reconcileable.]

1. Consistence; possibility to be reconciled.

The cylinder is a lifeless trunk, which hath nothing of choice or will in it; and therefore cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconciliableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

Discerning how the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons and occurrences, we shall discover not only a reconciliableness, but a friendship and perfect harmony betwixt texts, that here seem most at variance. Boyle.

2. Disposition to renew love.

RECONCI'LEMENT. n. s. [from reconcile.]

1. Reconciliation; renewal of kindness; favour restored.

Injury went beyond all degree of reconciliation.
Sidney.

others.

He not only attained his purpose of uniting distant parties unto each other, but, contrary to the usual fate of reconcilers gained them to himself. Fell.

2. One who discovers the consistence between propositions.

Part of the world know how to accommodate St. James and St. Paul, better than some late re-concilers. Norris.

RECONCILIATION. n. s. [reconciliatio, from re and concilio, Lat. reconciliation, Fr.]

1. Renewal of friendship.

2. Agreement of things seemingly opposite; solution of seeming contrarieties.

These distinctions of the fear of God give us a clear and easy reconciliation of those seeming inconsistencies of scripture, with respect to this affection. Rogers.

3. Atonement; expiation.

He might be a merciful and faithful high priest to make reconciliation for sin. Hebrews, ii. 17.

To RECONDENSE. v. a. [re and condense.] To condense anew.

In the heads of stills and necks of eolipiles, such vapours quickly are by a very little cold recondens'd into water. Boyle.

RECONDITE. adj. [reconditus, Lat.]

Record her hymns, and chant her carols blest. Fairfax.

RE'CORD. n. s. [record, Fr. from the verb.]

The accent of the noun is indifferently on either syllable; of the verb always on the last.] Register; authentick memorial.

Is it upon record? or else reported Successively, from age to age? Shakesp.

It cannot be
The Volscians dare break with us.

—We have record that very well it can;
And three examples of the like have been. Shakesp.

The king made a record of these things, and Mardocheus wrote thereof. Esther, xii. 4.

An ark, and in the ark his testimony,
The records of his covenant. Milton.

Of such a goddess no times leaves record,
Who burn'd the temple where she was ador'd. Dryden.

If he affirms such a monarchy continued to the flood, I would know what records he has it from. Locke.

Though the attested copy of a record be good proof, yet the copy of a copy never so well attested will not be admitted as a proof in judicature. Locke.

Thy elder book, great Janus! cast
Into the long records of ages past;
Review the years in fairest action drest. Prior.

RECORDA'TION. n. s. [recordatio, Lat.]

Remembrance. Not in use.

I never shall have length of life enough,
To rain upon remembrance with mine eyes,
That it may grow and spout as high as heav'n
For recordation to my noble husband. Shakesp.

Make a recordation to my soul
Of every syllable that here was spoke. Shakesp.

A man of the primitive temper, when the church by lowliness did flourish in high examples, which I have inserted as a due recordation of his virtues, having been much obliged to him for many favours. Wotton.

RECO'RDER. n. s. [from record.]

1. One whose business is to register any events.

I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make the verse. Donne

2. The keeper of the rolls in a city.

I ask'd, what meant this wilful silence?
His answer was, the people were not us'd
To be spoke to except by the recorder. Shakesp.

The office of recorder to this city being vacant, five or six persons are soliciting to succeed him. Swift

3. A kind of flute; a wind instrument.

The shepherds went among them, and sang an eclogue, while the other shepherds, pulling out recorders, which possess the place of pipes, accorded their music to the others voice. Sidney.

In a recorder, the three uppermost holes yield one tone, which is a note lower than the tone of the first three. Bacon.

The figures of recorders, and flutes and pipes are straight; but the recorder hath a less bore and a greater above and below. Bacon.

To RECO'UCH. v. n. [re and couch.] To lie down again.

Thou mak'st the night to overvail the day;
Then lions whelps lie roaring for their prey,
And at thy powerful hand demand their food;
Who when at morn they all recouch again,
Then toiling man till eve pursues his pain. Wotton.

To RECOVER. v. a. [recourer, Fr. recupero, Lat.]

1. To restore from sickness or disorder.

Would my Lord were with the prophet; for he would recover him of his leprosy. 2 Kings, v. 3.

The clouds dispell'd, the sky resum'd her light,
And nature stood recover'd of her fright. Dryden.

2. To repair.

Should we apply this precept only to those who are concerned to recover time they have lost, it would extend to the whole race of mankind. Rogers

Even good men have many failings and lapses, to lament and recover. Rogers.

3. To regain; to get again.

Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him, while he rather daily sent us companions of our deceit, than ever return'd in any sound and faithful manner. Sidney.

Stay a while; and we'll debate,
By what safe means the crown may be recover'd. Shakesp.

The spirit of the Lord is upon me, to preach the gospel to the poor, and recovering of sight to the blind. Luke, iv. 18.

Once in forty years cometh a pope, that casteth his eye upon the kingdom of Naples, to recover it to the church. Bacon.

These Italians, in despite of what could be done, recovered Filiavento. Knolles.

I who ere while the happy garden sung,
By one man's disobedience lost, now sing
Recover'd Paradise to all mankind,
By one man's firm obedience. Milton.

Any other person may join with him that is injured, and assist him in recovering from the offender so much as may make satisfaction. Locke.

4. To release.

That they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil, who are taken captive by him. 2 Timothy, ii. 26.

5. To attain; to reach; to come up to.

Is like the son's, but not like his, recoverable, I fear. Shakesp.

They promised the good people ease in the matter of protections, by which the debts fr m parliament men and their followers were not recoverable. Clarendon.

RECOVERY. n. s. [from recover.]

1. Restoration from sickness.

Your hopes are regular and reasonable, though in temporal affairs; such as are deliverance from enemies, and recovery from sickness. Taylor.

The sweat sometimes acid, is a sign of recovery after acute distempers. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Power or act of regaining.

What should move me to undertake the recovery of this, being not ignorant of the impossibility?
Shakesp.

These counties were the keys of Normandy:
But wherefore weeps Warwick?

—For grief that they are past recovery. Shakesp.

Mario Sanado lived about the fourteenth age, a man full of zeal for the recovery of the Holy Land. Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. The act of cutting off an entail.

The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him; if the devil have him not in fee simple, with fine and recovery. Shakesp.

To RECOUNT. v. a. [reconter, Fr.] To relate in detail; to tell distinctly.

Bid him recount the fore-recited practices. Shak.

How I have thought of these times.
I shall recount hereafter. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Plato in Timæo produces an Egyptian priest, who recounted to Solon out of the holy books of Egypt the story of the flood universal, which happened long before the Grecian inundation. Ruleigh.

The talk of worldly affairs hindereth much,
although recounted with a fair intention: we speak willingly, but seldom return to silence. Taylor.

Say, from these glorious seeds what harvest flows.
Recount our blessings, and compare our woes. Dryden.

RECOU'NTMENT. n. s. [from recount.]

Relation; recital.

When from the first to last, betwixt us too,
Tears our recountments had most finely bath'd;
As how I came into that desert place. Shakesp.

RECOU'RED. for recovered, or recured. Spenser.

RECOUR'SE. n. s. [recursus, Lat. recours, Fr.]

1. Frequent passage. Obsolete.

Not Priamus and Hecuba on knees,
Their eyes o'ergalld with recourse of tears. Shak.

2. Return; new attack.

Preventive physick, by purging noxious humours and the causes of diseases, preventeth sickness in the healthy, or the recourse thereof in the valetudinary. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. [Recours, Fr.] Application as for help or protection. This is the common use.

Thus died this great peer, in a time of great recourse unto him and dependance upon him, the house and town full of servants and suitors. Wotton.

The council of Trent commends the making recourse, not only to the prayers of the saints, but to their aid and assistance. Stillington.

Can any man think, that this privilege was at first conferred upon the church of Rome, and that Christians in all ages had constant recourse to it for determining their differences; and yet that that very church should now be at a loss where to find it? Tillotson.

All other means have fail'd to wound her heart, Our last recourse is therefore to our art. Dryden.

4. Access.

The doors be lockt,
That no man hath recourse to her by night. Shak.

1. Cowardly; meanspirited; subdued; crying out for mercy; recanting out of fear.

Let be that lady debonaire,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare To battle. Spenser.

Thou wear a lion's hide? doff it for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs. Shakesp.

Here standeth Thomas Mowbray, duke of Norfolk,
On pain to be found false and recreant. Shakesp.

The knight, whom fate and happy chance shall grace
From out the bars to force his opposite,
Or kill, or make him recreant on the plain,
The prize of valour and of love shall gain. Dryden.

2. Apostate; false.

Who for so many benefits receiv'd
Turn'd recreant to God, ingrate and false,
And so of all true good himself despoil'd. Milton.

To RECREATE. v. a. [recreo, Lat. recreo, Fr.]

1. To refresh after toil; to amuse or divert in weariness.

He hath left you all his walks,
And to your heirs for ever; common pleasures,
To walk abroad and recreate yourselves. Shakesp.

Necessity and the example of St. John, who recreated himself with sporting with a tame partridge, teach us, that it is lawful to relax our bow, but not suffer it to be unstrung. Taylor.

Painters, when they work on white grounds, place before them colours mixt with blue and green, to recreate their eyes, white wearying and paining the sight more than any. Dryden.

2. To delight; to gratify.

These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatick scent. More's Divine Dialogues.

He walked abroad, which he did not so much to recreate himself, as to obey the prescripts of his physician. Fell.

3. To relieve; to revive.

Take a walk to refresh yourself with the open air, which inspired fresh doth exceedingly recreate the lungs, heart, and vital spirits. Harvey.

RECREATION. n. s. [from recreate]

1. Relief after toil or pain; amusement in sorrow or distress.

The chief recreation she could find in her anguish, was sometime to visit that place, where first she was so happy as to see the cause of her unhapp. Sidney.

I'll visit
The chapel where they lie, and tears, shed there, Shall be my recreation. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The great men among the antients understood how to reconcile manual labour with affairs of state; and thought it no lessening to their dignity to make the one the recreation to the other. Locke.

2. Refreshment; amusement; diversion.

You may have the recreation of surprising those with admiration, who shall hear the deaf person pronounce whatsoever they shall desire, without your seeming to guide him. Holder's El. of Speech.

Nor is that man less deceived, that thinks to maintain a constant tenure of pleasure, by a continual pursuit of sports and recreations: for all these things, as they refresh a man when weary, so they weary him when refreshed. South.

RECREATIVE. adj. [from recreate.] freshing; giving relief after labour or pain; amusing; diverting.

Let the musick be recreative, and with some strange changes. Bacon.

Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but chose such as are healthful, recreative and apt to refresh you: but at no hand dwell upon them. Taylor.

The access these trifles gain to the closets of ladies, seem to promise such easy and recreative experiments, which require but little time or charge. Boyle.

RECREATIVENESS. n. s. [from recreative.] The quality of being recreative.

RECREMENT. n. s. [recrementum, Lat.]

To RECRUIT. v. a. [recruter, Fr.]

1. To repair any thing wasted by new supplies.

He was longer in recruiting his flesh than was usual; but by a milk diet he recovered it Wiseman

Increase thy care to save the sinking kind;
With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty hives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives. Dryd.

Her cheeks glow the brighter, recruiting their colour;
As flowers by sprinkling revive with fresh odour. Granville.

This sun is set, but see in bright array
What hosts of heavenly lights recruit the day!
Love in a shining galaxy appears Triumphant still. Granville.

Seeing the variety of motion, which we find in the world is always decreasing, there is a necessity of conserving and recruiting it by active principles; such as are the cause of gravity, by which planets and comets keep their motions in their orbs, and bodies acquire great motion in falling. Newton.

2. To supply an army with new men.

He trusted the earl of Holland with the command of that army, with which he was to be recruited and assisted. Clarendon.

To RECRUIT. v. n. To raise new soldiers.

The French have only Switzerland besides their own country to recruit in; and we know the difficulties they meet with in getting thence a single regiment. Addison.

RECRUIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Supply of any thing wasted; Pope has used it less properly for a substitute to something wanting.

Whatever nature has in worth deny'd,
She gives in large recruits of needful pride. Pope.

The endeavour to raise new men for the recruit of the army found opposition. Clarendon.

2. New soldiers.

The pow'rs of Troy
With fresh recruits their youthful chief sustain:
Not theirs a raw and unexperienc'd train,
But a firm body of embattel'd men. Dryden.

RECTANGLE. n. s. [rectangle, Fr. rectangulus, Lat.]

A figure which has one angle or more of ninety degrees.

If all Athens should decree, that in rectangle triangles the square, which is made of the side that subtendeth the right angle, is equal to the squares which are made of the sides containing the right angle, geometers would not receive satisfaction without demonstration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The mathematician considers the truth and properties belonging to a rectangle, only as it is in idea in his own mind. Locke.

RECTANGULAR. adj. [rectangulaire, Fr. rectus and angulus, Lat.]

Right angled; having angles of ninety degrees.

Bricks moulded in their ordinary rectangular form, if they shall be laid one by another in a level row between any supporters sustaining the two ends, then all the pieces will necessarily sink. Wotton.

RECTANGULARLY. adv. [from rectangular.]

With right angles.

At the equator, the needle will stand rectangularly; but approaching northward toward the tropic, it will regard the stone obliquely. Brown.

RECTIFIABLE. adj. [from rectify.]

Capable to be set right.

The natural heat of the parts being insufficient for a perfect and thorough digestion, the errors of one concoction are not rectifiable by another. Brown.

RECTIFICATION. n. s. [rectification, Fr. from rectify.]

1. The act of setting right what is wrong.

It behoved the Deity to renew that revelation from time to time, and to rectify abuses with such authority for the renewal and rectification, as was sufficient evidence of the truth of what was revealed. Forbes.

2. In chymistry, rectification is drawing any thing over again by distillation, to make it yet higher or finer. Quincy.

At the first rectification of some spirit of salt in a retort, a single pound afforded no less than six ounces of phlegm. Boyle.

To RECTIFY. v. a. [rectifier, Fr. rectus and facio, Lat.]

1. To make right; to reform; to redress.

That wherein unsouder times have done amiss,
The better ages ensuing must rectify as they may. Hooker.

It shall be bootless
That longer you defer the court, as well
For your own quiet, as to rectify
What is unsettled in the king. Shakesp.

Where a long course of piety has purged the heart, and rectified the will, knowledge will break in upon such a soul, like the sun shining in his full night. South.

The substance of this theory I mainly depend on, being willing to suppose that many particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet.

If those men of parts, who have been employed in vitiating the age, had endeavoured to rectify and amend it, they need not have sacrificed their good sense to their fame. Addison.

The false judgments he made of things are owned; and the methods pointed out by which he rectified them. Asterbury.

2. To exalt and improve by repeated distillation.

The skin hath been kept white and smooth for above fifteen years, by being included with rectified spirits of wine in a cylindrical glass. Greuv.

RECTILINEAR. } adj. [rectus and linea, RECTILINEOUS. } Lat.] Consisting of right lines.

There are only three rectilinear and ordinate figures, which can serve to this purpose; and inordinate or unlike ones must have been not only less elegant, but unequal. Ray.

This image was oblong and not oval, but terminated with two rectilinear and parallel sides and two semicircular ends. Newton.

The rays of light, whether they be very small bodies projected, or only motion and force propagated, are moved in right lines: and whenever a ray of light is by any obstacle turned out of its rectilinear way, it will never return into the same rectilinear way, unless perhaps by very great accident. Newton's Opticks.

RECTITUDE. n. s. [rectitude, Fr. from rectus, Lat.]

1. Straitness; not curvity.

2. Rightness; uprightness; freedom from moral curvity or obliquity.

Faith and repentance, together with the rectitude of their present engagement, would fully prepare them for a better life. King Charles.

Calm the disorders of thy mind, by reflecting on the wisdom, equity and absolute rectitude of all his proceedings. Atterbury.

RECTOR. n. s. [rector, Fr. rector, Lat.]

1. Ruler; lord; governour.

God is the supreme rector of the world, and of all those subordinate parts thereof. Hale.

When a rector of an university of scholars is chosen by the corporation or university, the election ought to be confirmed by the superior of such university. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. Parson of an unimpropriated parish.

RECTORSHIP. n. s. [rectoral, Fr. from rector.] The rank or office of rector,

Had your bodies
Against the rectorship of judgment? Shakesp.

RECTORRY. n. s. [rectorie, Fr. from rector.]

A rectory or parsonage is a spiritual living, composed of land, tithes and other oblations of the people, separate or dedicate to God in any congregation for the service of his church there, and for the maintenance of the governour or minister thereof, to whose charge the same is committed. Spelman.

RECUBATION. n. s. [recubo, Lat.] The act of lying or leaning.

Whereas our translation renders it sitting, it cannot have that illation, for the French and Italian translations express neither position of session or recubation. Brown.

RECULE, for RECOIL. [reculer, Fr.]

Spenser.

RECU'MBENCY. n. s. [from recumbent.]

1. The posture of lying or leaning.

In that memorable shew of Germanicus, twelve elephants danced unto the sound of music, and after laid them down in tricliniums, or places of festival recumbency. Brown.

2. Rest; repose.

When the mind has been once habituated to this lazy recumbency and satisfaction on the obvious surface of things, it is in danger to rest satisfied there. Locke.

RECU'MBENT. adj. [recumbens, Lat.]

Lying; leaning.

The Roman recumbent, or more properly accumbent, posture in eating was introduced after the first Punick war. Arbuthnot.

RECUPERATION. n. s. [recuperatio, Lat.]

The recovery of a thing lost.

RECUPERATIVE, or RECUPERATORY.

adj. [from recuperation.] Belonging to recovery.

To RECUR. v. n. [recurro, Lat.]

1. To come back to the thought; to revive in the mind.

The idea, I have once had, will be unchangeably the same, as long as it recurs the same in my memory. Locke.

In this life the thoughts of God and a future state often offer themselves to us; they often spring up in our minds, and when expelled, recur again. Calamy.

A line of the golden verses of the Pythagoreans recurring on the memory, hath often guarded youth from a temptation to vice. Watts.

When any word has been used to signify an idea, that old idea will recur in the mind when the word is heard. Watts.

In dead men's skulls, and in those holes,
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems. Shakesp.

2. To bend back.

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, and never reflects in an angle, nor bends in a circle, which is a continual reflection, unless either by some external impulse, or by an intrinsic principle of gravity. Bentley's Sermons.

3. To throw back the thoughts upon the past or on themselves.

The imagination casts thoughts in our way, and forces the understanding to reflect upon them.
Duppa.

In every action reflect upon the end; and in your undertaking it, consider why you do it. Taylor.

Who saith, who could such ill events expect?
With shame on his own counsels doth reflect. Denh.

When men are grown up, and reflect on their own minds, they cannot find any thing more ancient there, than those opinions which were taught them before their memory began to keep a register of their actions. Locke.

It is hard, that any part of my land should be settled upon one who has used me so ill; and yet I could not see a sprig of any bough of this whole walk of trees, but I should reflect upon her and her severity. Addison's Spectator.

Let the king dismiss his woes,
Reflecting on her fair renown;
And take the cypress from his brows,
To put his wonted laurels on. Prior.

4. To consider attentively.

Into myself my reason's eye I turn'd;
And as I much reflected, much I mourn'd. Prior.

6. To bring reproach.

Errors of wives reflect on husbands still. Dryden.

REFLECTENT. adj. [reflectens, Lat.]

Bending back; flying back.

The ray descendent, and the ray reflectent, flying with so great a speed, that the air between them cannot take a formal play any way, before the beams of the light be on both sides of it: it follows, that, according to the nature of humid things, it must first only swell. Digby on the Soul.

REFLECTION. n. s. [from reflect: thence

I think reflexion less proper: reflexion, Fr. reflexus, Lat.]

1. The act of throwing back.

The eye sees not itself,
But by reflection from other things. Shakesp.
If the sun's light consisted but of one sort of rays, there would be but one colour, and it would be impossible to produce any new by reflections or refractions. Cheyne.

2. The act of bending back.

REF

Inanimate matter moves always in a straight line, nor ever reflects in an angle or circle, which is a continual reflection, unless by some external impulse. Bentley's Sermons.

3. That which is reflected.
She shines not upon fools, lest the reflection should hurt her. Shakesp.
As the sun in water we can bear,
Yet not the sun, but his reflection there;
So let us view her here in what she was,
And take her image in this wat'ry glass. Dryden.

4. Thought thrown back upon the past, or the absent, on itself.
The three first parts I dedicate to my old friends, to take off those melancholy reflections, which the sense of age, infirmity, and death may give them. Denham.
This dreadful image so possess'd her mind,
She ceas'd all farther hope; and now began
To make reflection on the unhappy man. Dryden.
Job's reflections on his once flourishing estate, did at the same time afflict and encourage him. Atterbury.
What wounding reproaches of soul must he feel,
From the reflections on his own ingratitude. Rogers.

5. The action of the mind upon itself.
Reflection is the perception of the operations of our own minds within us, as it is employed about the ideas it has got. Locke.

6. Attentive consideration.
This delight grows and improves under thought and reflection; and while it exercises, does also endear itself to the mind: at the same time employing and inflaming the meditations. South's Sermons.

7. Censure.
He dy'd; and oh! may no reflection shed
Its poisonous venom on the royal dead. Prior.

REFLECTIVE. adj. [from reflect.]

1. Throwing back images.
When the weary king gave place to night,
His beams he to his royal brother lent,
And so shone still in his reflective light. Dryden.
In the reflective stream the sighing bride,
Viewing her charms impair'd, abash'd shall hide
Her pensive head. Prior.

2. Considering things past; considering the operations of the mind.
Forc'd by reflective reason I confess That human science is uncertain guess. Prior.

REFLECTOR. n. s. [from reflect.] Considerer.
There is scarce any thing that nature has made,
or that men do suffer, whence the devout reflector cannot take an occasion of an aspiring meditation. Boyle on Colours.

REFLEX. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Directed backward.
The motions of my mind are as obvious to the reflex act of the soul, or the turning of the intellectual eye inward upon its own actions, as the passions of my sense are obvious to my sense; I see the object; and I perceive that I see it. Hale.
The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them do evince by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship, not of blind mechanism or blinder chance, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

REFLEX. n. s. [reflexus, Lat.] Reflection.
There was no other way for angels to sin but by reflex of their understandings upon themselves. Hooker.
I'll say you gray is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow. Shak.

REFLEXIBILITY. n. s. [from reflexible.]
The quality of being reflexible.
Reflexibility of rays is their disposition to be reflected or turned back into the same medium from any other medium, upon whose surface they fall; and rays are more or less reflexible, which are turned back more or less easily. Newton.

REFLEXIBLE. adj. [from reflexus, Lat.] Capable to be thrown back.
Sir Isaac Newton has demonstrated, by convincing experiments, that the light of the sun consists of rays differently refrangible and reflexible; and that those rays are differently reflexible, that are differently refrangible. Cheyne.

REFLEXIVE. adj. [reflexus, Lat.] Having respect to something past.
That assurance reflexive cannot be a divine faith, but at the most an human, yet such as perhaps I may have no doubting mixed with. Hammond.

REFLEXIVELY. adv. [from reflexive.] In a backward direction.
Solomon tells us life and death are in the power of the tongue, and that not only directly in regard of the good or ill we may do to others, but reflexively also in respect of what may rebound to ourselves. Governm. of the Tongue.

REFLOAT. n. s. [re and float.] Ebb; reflux.
The main float and reflux of the sea, is by consent of the universe, as part of the diurnal motion. Bacon.

To REFLOURISH. v. a. [re and flourish.]
To flourish anew.
Virtue given for lost
Revives, reflourishes, then vigorous most,
When most unactive deem'd. Milton's Agonistes.

To REFLOW. v. n. [refluer, Fr. re and flow.] To flow back.
REFLUENT. adj. [refluens, Lat.] Running back; flowing back.
The river receives the refluent blood almost from all parts of the abdomen. Arbuthnot.
Tell by what paths,
Back to the fountain's head the sea conveys
The refluent rivers, and the land repays. Blackmore.

REFLUX. n. s. [reflux, Fr. refluxus, Lat.] Backward course of water.
Besides
Mine own that 'bide upon me, all from me
Shall with a fierce reflux on me rebound. Milton.
The variety of the flux and reflux of Euripus, or whether the same do ebb and flow seven times a day, is incontrovertible. Brown.

REFOCILLATION. n. s. [refocillo, Lat.] Restoration of strength by refreshment.

To REFORM. v. a. [reformato, Lat. reformer, Fr.] To change from worse to better.
A sect in England, following the very same rule of policy, seeketh to reform even the French reformation, and purge out from thence all dregs of popery. Hooker.
Seat worthier of Gods, was built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old. Milton.
May no such storm
Fall on our times, where ruin must reform. Denh.
Now low'ring looks presage approaching storms,
And now prevailing love her face reforms. Dryden.
One cannot attempt the perfect reforming the languages of the world, without rendering himself ridiculous. Locke.
The example alone of a vicious prince will corrupt an age; but that of a good one will not reform it. Swift.

To REFORM. v. n. To pass by change from worse to better.
Was his doctrine of the mass struck out in this conflict? or did it give him occasion of reforming in this point? Atterbury.

REFORM. n. s. [Fr.] Reformation.

REFORMATION. n. s. [reformatio, Fr. from reform.]

1. Change from worse to better; commonly used of human manners.
Never came reformation in a flood
With such a heady current, scow'ring faults;
Nor ever Hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, as in this king. Shakesp.
Satire lavishes vice into reformation. Dryden.
The pagan converts mention this great reformation of those who had been the greatest sinners, with that sudden and surprising change, which the christian religion made in the lives of the most profligate. Addison.

2. [By way of eminence.] The change of religion from the corruptions of popery to its primitive state.

REF

The burden of the reformation lay on Luther's shoulders. Atterbury.

REFORMER. n. s. [from reform.]

1. One who makes a change for the better; an amender.
Publick reformers had need first practise that on their own hearts, which they purpose to try on others. King Charles.
The complaint is more general, than the endeavours to redress it: abroad every man would be a reformer, how very few at home! Spratt.
It was honour enough, to behold the English churches, reformed; that is, delivered from the reformers. South.

2. Those who changed religion from popish corruptions and innovations.
Our first reformers were famous confessors and martyrs all over the world. Bacon.

To REFRACT. v. a. [refractus, Lat.] To break the natural course of rays.
If its angle of incidence be large, and the refractive power of the medium not very strong to throw it far from the perpendicular, it will be refracted. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
Rays of light are urged by the refracting media. Cheyne.
Refracted from yon eastern cloud,
The grand ethereal bow shoots up. Thomson.

REFRACTION. n. s. [refraction, Fr.]
Refraction, in general, is the incurvation or change of determination in the body moved, which happens to it whilst it enters or penetrates any medium? in dioptricks, it is the variation of a ray of light from that right line, which it would have passed on in, had not the density of the medium turned it aside. Harris.
Refraction, out of the rarer medium into the denser, is made towards the perpendicular. Newton.

REFRACTIVE. adj. [from refract.] Having the power of refraction.
Those superficies of transparent bodies reflect the greatest quantity of light, which have the greatest refracting power; that is, which intercede mediums that differ most in their refractive densities. Newton's Opticks.

REFRACTORINESS. n. s. [from refractory.] Sullen obstinacy.
I did never allow any man's refractoriness against the privileges and orders of the houses. K. Charles.
Great complaint was made by the presbyterian gang, of refractoriness to obey the parliament's order. Saunderson.

REFRACTORY. adj. [refractaire, Fr. refractorius, Lat. and so should be written refractory. It is now accented on the first syllable, but by Shakespeare on the second.] Obstinate; perverse; contumacious.
There is a law in each well-ordered nation,
To curb those raging appetites that are Most disobedient and refractory. Shakesp.
A rough hewn seaman being brought before a wise justice for some misdemeanor, was by him ordered to be sent away to prison, and was refractory after he heard his doom, insomuch as he would not stir a foot from the place where he stood; saying, it was better to stand where he was, than go to a worse place. Bacon's Apophthegms.
Vulgar compliance with any illegal and extravagant ways, like violent motions in nature, soon grows weary of itself, and ends in a refractory sullenness. King Charles.
Refractory mortal! if thou wilt not trust thy friends, take what follows; know assuredly, before next full moon, that thou wilt be hung up in chains. Arbuthnot's Hist. of J. Bull.
These atoms of theirs may have it in them, but they are refractory and sullen; and therefore, like men of the same tempers, must be banged and buffeted into reason. Bentley.

REFRAGABLE. adj. [refragabilis, Lat.]

Capable of confutation and conviction.

TO REFRAIN. v. a. [refrener, Fr. re and frænum, Lat.] To hold back; to keep from action.

Hold not thy tongue, O God, keep not still silence; refrain not thyself. Psalm lxxviii. 1.

My son, walk not thou in the way with them, refrain thy foot from their path. Proverbs, i. 15.

Nor from the holy one of heav'n

Refrain'd his tongue. Milton.

Neptune aton'd, his wrath shall now refrain,

Or thwart the synod of the gods in vain. Pope.

TO REFRAIN. v. n. To forbear; to abstain; to spare.

In what place, or upon what consideration soever it be, they do it, were it in their own opinion of no force being done, they would undoubtedly refrain to do it. Hooker.

For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. Isaiah.

That they fed not on flesh, at least the faithful party before the flood, may become more probable, because they refrain'd therefrom some time after. Brown's Vulg. Err.

REFRANGIBILITY. n. s. [from refrangibile.]

Refrangibility of the rays of light, is their disposition to be refracted or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

REFRANGIBLE. adj. [re and frango, Lat.]

As some rays are more refrangible than others; that is, are more turned out of their course, in passing from one medium to another; it follows, that after such refraction, they will be separated, and their distinct colour observed. Locke.

REFRENA'TION. n. s. [re and fræno, Lat.]

The act of restraining.

All being forced unto fluent consistencies, naturally regress unto their former solidities. Brown.
- REGRESSION. n. s. [regressus, Lat.] The act of returning or going back.
To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must needs be annihilated in the subtraction of that essence, which substantially supporteth them, and restrains from regression into nothing. Brown.
- REGRET. n. s. [regret, Fr. regretto, Ital.]
1. Vexation at something past; bitterness of reflection.
I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.
A passionate regret at sin, a grief and sadness at its memory, enters us into God's roll of mourners. Decay of Piety.
Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing a dress, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint gratifications it affords the senses. South's Sermons.
2. Grief; sorrow.
Never any prince expressed a more lively regret for the loss of a servant, than his majesty did for this great man; in all offices of grace towards his

REG

- servants, and in a wonderful solicitous care for the payment of his debts. Clarendon.
- That freedom, which all sorrows claim,
She does for thy content resign;
Her piety itself would blaine,
If her regrets should waken thine. Prior.
3. Dislike; aversion. Not proper.
Is it a virtue to have some ineffective regrets to damnation, and such a virtue too, as shall balance all our vices? Decay of Piety.
 - To REGRET. v. a. [regretter, Fr. from the noun.]
 1. To repent; to grieve at.
I shall not regret the trouble my experiments cost me, if they be found serviceable to the purposes of respiration. Boyle.
Caluly he look'd on either life, and here Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear;
From nature's temp'rate feast rose satisfy'd,
Thank'd heav'n that he had liv'd, and that he dy'd. Pope.
 2. To be uneasy at. Not proper.
Those, the impiety of whose lives makes them regret a deity, and secretly wish there were none, will greedily listen to atheistical notions. Glanv.
 - REGUERDON. n. s. [re and gucrdon.] Reward; recompense.
Stoop, and set your knee again my foot;
And in reguerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shak.
 - To REGUERDON. v. a. [from the noun.] To reward. The verb and noun are both obsolete.
Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service and your toil in war;
Yet never have you tasted your reward,
Or been reguerdon'd with so much as thanks. Shak.
 - REGULAR. adj. [regulier, Fr. regularis, Lat.]
 1. Agreeable to rule; consistent with the mode prescribed.
The common cant of critics is, that though the lines are good, it is not a regular piece. Guardian.
The ways of heav'n are dark and intricate;
Puzzled in mazes, and perplex'd with errors,
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewild'rd in the fruitless search;
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor when the regular confusion ends. Addison.
So when we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No monstrous height or breadth or length appear;
The whole at once is bold and regular. Pope.
 2. Governed by strict regulations.
So just thy skill, so regular my rage. Pope.
 3. In geometry, regular body is a solid, whose surface is composed of regular and equal figures, and whose solid angles are all equal, and of which there are five sorts, viz. 1. A pyramid comprehended under four equal and equilateral triangles. 2. A cube, whose surface is composed of six equal squares. 3. That which is bounded by eight equal and equilateral triangles. 4. That which is contained under twelve equal and equilateral pentagons. 5. A body consisting of twenty equal and equilateral triangles: and mathematicians demonstrate, that there can be no more regular bodies than these five. Muschenbr.
There is no universal reason, not confined to human fancy, that a figure, called regular, which hath equal sides and angles, is more beautiful than any irregular one. Bentley.
 4. Instituted or initiated according to established forms or discipline: as, a regular doctor; regular troops.
 5. Methodical; orderly.

REG

- More people are kept from a true sense and taste of religion, by a regular kind of sensuality and indulgence, than by gross drunkenness. Law.
- REGULAR. n. s. [regulier, Fr.]
In the Romish church, all persons are said to be regulars, that do profess and follow a certain rule of life, in Latin stiled regula; and do likewise observe the three approved vows of poverty, chastity, and obedience. Ayliffe's Purgeon.
- REGULARITY. n. s. [regularité, Fr. from regulär.]
1. Agreeableness to rule.
 2. Method; certain order.
Regularity is certain, where it is not so apparent, as in all fluids; for regularity is a similitude continued. Greav.
He was a mighty lover of regularity and order; and managed all his affairs with the utmost exactness. Atterbury.
- REGULARLY. adv. [from regulär.] In a manner concordant to rule; exactly.
If those painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it in their figures, they had indeed made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden.
With one judicious stroke,
On the plain ground Apelles drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.
Straits that neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold and regularly low. Pope.
- To REGULARE. v. a. [regula, Lat.]
1. To adjust by rule or method.
Nature, in the production of things, always designs them to partake of certain, regulated, established essences, which are to be the models of all things to be produced - this, in that crude sense, would need some better explication. Lecke.
 2. To direct.
Regulate the patient in his manner of living. Wiseman.
Ev'n goddesses are women; and no wife
Has pow'r to regulate her husband's life. Dryden.
- REGULATION. n. s. [from regulate.]
1. The act of regulating.
Being but stupid matter, they cannot continue a regular and constant motion, without the guidance and regulation of some intelligent being. Ray.
 2. Method; the effect of being regulated.
- REGULATOR. n. s. [from regulate.]
1. One that regulates.
The regularity of corporeal principles sheweth them to come at first from a divine regulator. Greav.
 2. That part of a machine which makes the motion equable.
- REGULUS. n. s. [Latin; rigule, Fr.]
Regulus is the finer and most weighty part of metals, which settles at the bottom upon melting. Quincy.
- To REGURGITATE. v. a. [re and gurges, Lat. regorger, Fr.] To throw back; to pour back.
The inhabitants of the city remove themselves into the country so long, until, for want of receipt and encouragement, it regurgitates and sends them back. Grannt.
Arguments of divine wisdom, in the frame of animate bodies, are the artificial position of many valves, all so situate, as to give a free passage to the blood in their due channels, but not permit them to regurgitate and disturb the great circulation. Bentley.
- To REGURGITATE. v. n. To be poured back.
Nature was wont to evacuate its vicious blood, out of these veins, which passage being stop'd, it regurgitates upwards to the lungs. Harvey on Cons.
- REGURGITATION. n. s. [from regurgitate.] Resorption; the act of swallowing back.
Regurgitation of matter is the constant symptom. Sharp.

To REHEAR. v. a. [re and hear.] To hear again.

My design is to give all persons a rehearing, who have suffered under any unjust sentence.

Addison.

REHEARSAL. n. s. [from rehearse.]

1. Repetition; recital.

Twice we appoint, that the words which the minister pronounceth, the whole congregation shall repeat after him; as first in the publick confession of sins, and again in rehearsal of our Lord's prayer after the blessed sacrament. Hooker.

What dream'd my lord? tell me, and I'll requite
it

With sweet rehearsal of my morning's dream. Shak.

What respected their actions as a rule or admo-nition, applied to yours, is only a rehearsal, whose zeal in asserting the ministerial cause is so generally known. South.

2. The recital of any thing previous to publick exhibition.

The chief of Rome,

With gaping mouths to these rehearsals come. Dry.

To REHEARSE. v. a. [from rehear.
Skinner.]

1. To repeat; to recite.

Rehearse not unto another that which is told.
Eccles.

Of modest poets be thou just,
To silent shades repeat thy verse,
Till fame and echo almost burst,
Yet hardly dare one line rehearse.

Swift.

2. To relate; to tell.

Great master of the muse! inspir'd
The pedigree of nature to rehearse,
And sound the maker's work in equal verse. Dry.

3. To recite previously to publick exhibition.

All Rome is pleas'd, when Statius will rehearse,
And longing crowds expect the promis'd verse.

Dryd.

To REJECT. v. a. [rejecio, rejectus, Lat.]

1. To dismiss without compliance with proposal or acceptance of offer.

Barbarossa was rejected into Syria, although he perceived that it tended to his disgrace. Knolles.
Have I rejected those that me ador'd
To be of him, whom I adore, abhorr'd? Brown.

2. To cast off; to make an abject.

Thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, and the Lord hath rejected thee from being king.

1 Samuel, xv. 26.

Give me wisdom, and reject me not from among thy children. Wisdom, ix. 4.

He is despised and rejected of men, a man of sorrows Isaiah.

3. To refuse; not to accept.

Because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest. Hosea, iv. 6.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

How would such thoughts make him avoid every thing that was sinful and displeasing to God, lest when he prayed for his children, God should reject his prayers? Law.

4. To throw aside, as useless or evil.

In the philosophy of human nature, as well as in physics and mathematicks, let principles be examined according to the standard of common sense, and be admitted or rejected according as they are found to agree or disagree with it. Beattie.

REJECTION. n. s. [rejectio, Lat.] The act of casting off or throwing aside.

The rejection I use of experiments, is infinite;
but if an experiment be probable and of great use,
I receive it. Bacon.

Medicines urinate do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon.

REIGLE. n. s. [regle, Fr.] A hollow cut to guide any thing.

A flood gate is drawn up and let down through the reigles in the side posts. Carew.

To REIGN. v. n. [regno, Lat. regner, Fr.]

1. To enjoy or exercise sovereign authority.

This, done by them, gave them such an authority, that though he reigned, they in effect ruled, most men honouring them, because they only deserved honour. Sidney.

Tell me, shall Banquo's issue ever Reign in this kingdom? Shakesp. Macbeth.

A king shall reign in righteousness, and princes rule in judgment. Isaiah, xxxi. 1.

Did he not first sev'n years, a life-time reign?
Cowley.

This right arm shall fix
Her seat of empire; and your son shall reign.

A. Philips.

2. To be predominant; to prevail.

Now did the sign reign, under which Perkin should appear. Bacon.

More are sick in the summer, and more die in the winter, except in pestilent diseases, which commonly reign in summer or autumn. Bacon.

Great secrecy reigns in their publick councils.
Addison.

3. To obtain power or dominion.

That as sin reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ. Romans.

REIGN. n. s. [regne, Fr. regnum, Lat.]

1. Royal authority; sovereignty.

He who like a father beld his reign,
So soon forgot, was just and wise in vain. Pope.

2. Time of a king's government.

Queer country puts extol queen Bess's reign,
And of lost hospitality complain. Bramstone.

The following licence of a foreign reign,
Did all the dregs of bold Socinus drain. Pope.

Russel's blood
Stain'd the sad annals of a giddy reign. Thomson.

3. Kingdom; dominions.

Saturn's sons receive'd the threefold reign
Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath Prior.
That wrath which hurl'd to Pluto's gloomy reigns,
The souls of mighty chiefs untimely slain. Pope.

4. Power; influence.

The year againe
Was turning round; and every season's raigne
Renew'd upon us. Chapman.

To REIMBODY. v. n. [re and imbody, which is more frequently, but not more properly, written embody.] To embody again.

Quicksilver, broken into little glohes, the parts brought to touch immediately reimbody. Boyle.

To REIMBURSE. v. a. [re, in and burse, Fr. a purse.] To repay; to repair loss or expence by an equivalent.

Hath he saved any kingdom at his own expence, to give him a title of reimbursing himself by the destruction of ours? Swift.

REIMBURSEMENT. n. s. [from reimburse.] Reparation or repayment.

If any person has been at expence about the funeral of a scholar, he may retain his books for the reimbursement. Auliffe.

To REIMPREGNATE. v. a. [re and im-pregnate.] To impregnate anew.

The vigour of the loadstone is destroyed by fire, nor will it be reimpregnated by any other magnet than the earth. Brown.

REIMPRESSON. n. s. [re and impression.] A second or repeated impression.

REIN. n. s. [resnes, Fr.]

1. The part of the bridle, which extends from the horse's head to the driver's or rider's hand.

Every horse bears his commanding rein,
And may direct his course as please himself. Shak.

Take you the reins, while I from cares remove,
And sleep within the chariot which I drove. Dry.

With hasty hand the ruling reins he drew;
He lash'd the coursers, and the coursers flew. Pope.

2. Used as an instrument of government, or for government.

The hard rein, which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To give the reins. To give licence.

War to disorder'd rage, let loose the reins. Milt.

When to his lust Agisthus gave the rein, Did fate or we th' adu'trous act constrain? Pope.

To REIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern by a bridle.

He mounts and reins his horse. Chapman.
He, like a proud steed rein'd, went haughtily on.
Milton.

His son rein'd
His father's art, and warrior steeds he rein'd.
Dryden.

2. To restrain; to control.

And where you find a maid,
That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy. Shakesp.

Being once chaf'd, he cannot Be rein'd again to temperance; then he speaks
What's in his heart. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

REINS. n. s. [renes, Lat. rein, Fr.] The kidneys; the lower part of the back.

Whom I shall see for myself, though my reins be consumed. Job.

To REINSERT. v. a. [re and insert.] To insert a second time.

To REINSPIRE. v. a. [re and inspire.]

To inspire anew.

Time will run
On smoother, till Favonius reinspire
The frozen earth, and cloath in fresh attire
The lily and rose. Milton.

The mangled dame lay breathless on the ground,
When on a sudden reinspir'd with breath,
Again she rose. Dryden.

To REINSTAL. v. a. [re and instal.]

1. To seat again.

That alone can truly reinstall thee
In David's royal seat, his true successor. Milton.

2. To put again in possession. This example is not very proper.

Thy father
Levied an army, weening to redeem,
And reinstal me in the diadem. Shakesp.

To REINSTATE. v. a. [re and instat.]

To put again in possession.

David, after that signal victory, which had preserved his life, reinstated him in his throne, and restored him to the ark and sanctuary; yet suffered the loss of his rebellious son to overwhelm
the sense of his deliverance. Gov. of the Tongue.

Modesty reinstates the widow in her virginity.
Addison.

The reinstating of this hero in the peaceable possession of his kingdom, was acknowledged.
Pope.

To REINTEGRATE. v. a. [reinteger, Fr.
re and integer, Lat. It should perhaps be written redintegrate.] To renew with regard to any state or quality; to repair; to restore.

This league drove out all the Spaniards out of Germany, and reintegrated that nation in their ancient liberty. Bacon.

The falling from a discord to a concord hath an agreement with the affections, which are reintegrated to the better after some dislikes. Bac Nat. Hist.

To REINVEST. v. a. [re and invest.] To invest anew.

To REJOICE. v. n. [rejoir, Fr.] To be glad; to joy; to exult; to receive pleasure from something past.

This is the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said, there is none beside me. Zeph. ii. 15.

I will comfort them, and make them rejoice from their sorrow. Jeremiah, xxvi. 13.

Let them be brought to confusion, that rejoice
at mine hurt. Psaln xxxv. 26.

They rejoice each with their kind.
We should particularly express our rejoicing by love and charity to our neighbours.
To REJOICE. v. a. [To exhilarate; to gladden; to make joyful; to glad.

Alone to thy renown, 'tis giv'n,
Unbounded through all worlds to go;
While she great saint rejoices heav'n,
And thou sustains't the orb below.

REJOICER. n. s. [from rejoice.] One that rejoices.
Whatsoever faith entertains, produces love to God; but he that believes God to be cruel or a rejoicer in the unavoidable damnation of the greatest part of mankind, thinks evil thoughts concerning God.

To REJOIN. v. a. [rejoindre, Fr.]
1. To join again.
The grand signior conveyeth his galleys down to Grand Cairo, where they are taken in pieces, carried upon camels backs, and rejoined together at Sues.

2. To meet one again.
Thoughts, which at Hyde-park-corner I forgot, Meet and rejoin me in the pensive grot.

To REJOIN. v. n. To answer to an answer.

It will be replied, that he receives advantage by this lopping of his superfluous branches; but I rejoin, that a translator has no such right.

REJOINER. n. s. [from rejoin.]

1. Reply to an answer.
The quality of the person makes me judge myself obliged to a rejoinder.

2. Reply; answer.
Injury of chance rudely beguiles our lips
Of all rejoindure.

REJOINT. n. s. [rejoillir, Fr.] Shock; succession.

The sinner, at his highest pitch of enjoyment, is not pleased with it so much, but he is afflicted more; and as long as these inward revolts and recoillings of the mind continue, the sinner will find his accounts of pleasure very poor.

REIT. n. s. Sedge or sea-weed.

To REITERATE. v. a. [re and itero, Lat. reiterer, Fr.] To repeat again and again.

You never spoke what did become you less Than this; which to reiterate, were sin.

With reiterated crimes he might Heap on himself damnation.

Although Christ hath forbid us to use vain repetitions when we pray, yet he hath taught us, that to reiterate the same requests will not be vain.

REITERATION. n. s. [reiteration, Fr. from reiterate.] Repetition.

It is useful to have new experiments tried over again; such reiterations commonly exhibiting new phenomena.

The words are a reiteration or reinforcement of an application, arising from the consideration of the excellency of Christ above Moses.

To REJU'DGE. v. a. [re and judge.] To re-examine; to review; to recal to a new trial.

The muse attends thee to the silent shade;
'Tis her's the brave man's latest steps to trace,
Rejudge his acts, and dignify disgrace.

To REKINDLE. v. a. [re and kindle.] To set on fire again.

These disappearing, fixed stars were actually extinguished, and would for ever continue so, if not rekindled, and new recruited with heat and night.

Rekindled at the royal charms,
Tumultuous love each beating bosom warms.

To RELAPSE. v. n. [relapsus, Lat.]
1. To slip back; to slide or fall back.

The oftner he hath relapsed, the more significations he ought to give of the truth of his repentance.

3. To fall back from a state of recovery to sickness.

He was not well cured, and would have relapsed.

RELAPSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fall into vice or error once forsaken.
This would but lead me to a worse relapse
And heavier fall.

2. Regression from a state of recovery to sickness.

It was even as two physicians should take one sick body in hand; of which, the former would purge and keep under the body, the other pamper and strengthen it suddenly; whereof what is to be looked for, but a most dangerous relapse?

3. Return to any state. The sense here is somewhat obscure.

Mark a bounding valour in our English;
That being dead like to the bullet's grazing,
Breaks out into a second course of mischief,
Killing in relapse of mortality.

To RELATE. v. a. [relatus, Lat.]

1. To tell; to recite.
Your wife and babes
Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were to add the death of you.

2. To vent by words. Unauthorised.
A man were better relate himself to a statue,
Than suffer his thoughts to pass in smother.

3. To ally by kindred.
To whom related, or by whom begot,
A heap of dust alone remains.

4. To bring back; to restore. A latinism.

To RELATE. v. n. To have reference; to have respect.

All negative or privative words relate to positive ideas, and signify their absence.

As other courts demanded the execution of persons dead in law, this gave the last orders relating to those dead in reason.

RELATER. n. s. [from relate.] Teller; narrator; historian.

We shall rather perform good offices unto truth, than any disservice unto their relaters.

Her husband the relater she prefer'd
Before the angel.

The best English historian, when his style grows antiquated, will be only considered as a tedious relater of facts.

RELATION. n. s. [relation, Fr. from relate.]

1. Manner of belonging to any person or thing.
Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity and truth;
Just unto all relations known,
A worthy patriot, pious son.

So far as service imports duty and subjection, all created beings bear the necessary relation of servants to God.

Our necessary relations to a family, oblige all to use their reasoning powers upon a thousand occasions.

Our intercession is made an exercise of love and cure for those amongst whom our lot is fallen, or who belong to us in a nearer relation: it then becomes the greatest benefit to ourselves, and produces its best effects in our own hearts.

2. Respect; reference; regard.
I have been importuned to make some observations on this art, in relation to its agreement with poetry.

Relation consists in the consideration and comparing one idea with another.

3. Connexion between one thing and another.
Of the eternal relations and fitnesses of things we know nothing; all that we know of truth and falsehood is, that our constitution determines us in some cases to believe, in others to disbelieve.

4. Kindred; alliance of kin.
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son and brother first were known.

5. Person related by birth or marriage; kinsman; kinswoman.
A she-cousin, of a good family and small fortune, passed months among all her relations.

6. Narrative; tale; account; narration; recital of facts.
In an historical relation, we use terms that are most proper.

RELATIVE. adj. [relativus, Lat. relativity, Fr.]

1. Having relation; respecting.
Not only simple ideas and substances, but modes are positive beings; though the parts of which they consist, are very often relative one to another.

2. Considered not absolutely, but as belonging to, or respecting something else.
Though capable it be not of inherent holiness, yet it is often relative.

3. Particular; positive; close in connection. Not in use.
I'll have grounds
More relative than this.

RELATIVE. n. s.

1. Relation; kinsman.
'Tis an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer one to perish without reproof.

2. Pronoun answering to an antecedent.
Learn the right joining of substantives with adjectives, and the relative with the antecedent.

3. Somewhat respecting something else.
When the mind so considers one thing, that it sets it by another, and carries its view from one to the other, this is relation and respect; and the denominations given to positive things, intimating that respect, are relatives.

RELATIVELY. adv. [from relative.] As it respects something else; not absolutely.

All those things, that seem so foul and disagreeable in nature, are not really so in themselves, but only relatively. More.

These being the greatest good or the greatest evil, either absolutely so in themselves, or relatively so to us; it is therefore good to be zealously affected for the one against the other. Spratt.

Consider the absolute affections of any being as it is in itself, before you consider it relatively or survey the various relations in which it stands to other beings. Watts.

RELATIVENESS. n. s. [from relative.] The state of having relation.

To RELAX. v. a. [relaxo, Lat.]

1. To slacken; to make less tense.

It serv'd not to relax their serr'd files. Milton.

To RELAX. v. n. To be mild; to be remiss; to be not rigorous.

If in some regards she chose To curb poor Paolo in too close; In others she relax'd again, And govern'd with a looser rein. Prior.

RELAXATION. n. s. [relaxatio, Fr. relaxatio, Lat.]

1. Diminution of tension; the act of loosening.

Cold sweats are many times mortal; for that they come by a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon.

Many, who live healthy in a dry air, fall into all the diseases that depend upon relaxation in a moist one. Arbuthnot.

2. Cessation of restraint.

The sea is not higher than the land, as some imagined the sea stood upon heap higher than the shore; and at the deluge a relaxation being made, it overflowed the land. Burnet.

3. Remission; abatement of rigour.

They childishly granted, by common consent of their whole senate, under their town seal, a relaxation to one Bertelier, whom the eldership had excommunicated. Hooker.

The relaxation of the statute of mortmain, is one of the reasons which gives the bishop terrible apprehensions of popery coming on us. Swift.

4. Remission of attention or application.

As God has not so devoted our bodies to toil, but that he allows us some recreation: so doubtless he indulges the same relaxation to our minds. Government of the Tongue.

There would be no business in solitude, nor proper relaxations in business. Addison's Freeholder.

RELAY. n. s. [relais, Fr.] Horses on the road to relieve others.

To RELAXE. v. a. [relascher, relaxer, Fr.]

1. To set free from confinement or servitude.

Pilate said, Whom will ye that I release unto you? Matthew.

You relas'd his courage, and set free A valour fatal to the enemy. Dryden.

Why should a reasonable man put it into the power of fortune to make him miserable, when his ancestors have taken care to release him from her? Dryden.

2. To set free from pain.

3. To free from obligation, or penalty.

Too secure, because from death relas'd some days. Milton.

And no religion binds men to be traitors.

B. Jonson.

One spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace
And judgment from above.

Milton.

By religion, I mean that general habit of reverence towards the divine nature, whereby we are enabled and inclined to worship and serve God after such a manner as we conceive must agreeable to his will, so as to procure his favour and blessing.

Wilkins.

If we consider it as directed against God, it is a breach of religion; if as to men, it is an offence against morality.

South.

By her inform'd, we best religion learn,
Its glorious object by her aid discern.

Blackmore.

Religion or virtue, in a large sense, includes duty to God and our neighbour; but in a proper sense, virtue signifies duty towards men, and religion duty to God.

Watts.

I never once in my life considered, whether I was living as the laws of religion direct, or whether my way of life was such, as would procure me the mercy of God at this hour.

Law.

2. A system of divine faith and worship, as opposite to others.

The image of a brute, adorn'd
With gay religions, full of pomp and gold.

Milton.

The christian religion, rightly understood, is the deepest and choicest piece of philosophy that is.

More.

The doctrine of the gospel proposes to men such glorious rewards and such terrible punishments as no religion ever did, and gives us far greater assurance of their reality and certainty than ever the world had.

Tillotson.

RELIGIONIST. n. s. [from religion.] A bigot to any religious persuasion.

The lawfulness of taking oaths may be revealed to the quakers, who then will stand upon as good a foot for preferment as any other subject; under such a motly administration, what pullings and hawlings, what a zeal and bias there will be in each religionist to advance his own tribe, and depress the others.

Swift.

RELIGIOUS. adj. [religieux, Fr. religiosus, Lat.]

1. Pious; disposed to the duties of religion.

It is a matter of sound consequence, that all duties are by so much the better performed, by how much the men are more religious, from whose liabilities the same proceed.

Hooker.

When holy and devout religious christians Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them from theice;

So sweet is zealous contemplation!

Shakesp.

Their lives
Religious titled them the sons of God.

Milton.

2. Teaching religion.

He God doth late and early pray,
More of his grace than gifts to lend;

If the time throst forth
A cause for thy repeal, we shall not send O'er the vast world to seek a single man. Shakesp.

2. Revocation ; abrogation.

The king being advertised, that the over-large grants of lands and liberties made the lords so insolent, did absolutely resume all such grants ; but the earl of Desmond above all found himself grieved with this resumption or repeal of liberties, and declared his dislike. Davies on Ireland.

If the presbyterians should obtain their ends, I could not be sorry to find them mistaken in the point which they have most at heart, by the repeal of the test ; I mean the benefit of employments. Swift.

To REPEAT. v. a. [repecto, Lat. repeter, Fr.]

REP

1. To iterate ; to use again ; to do again.

He, though his power
Creation could repeat, yet would be loth
Us to abolish. Milton.

Where sudden alterations are not necessary, the same effect may be obtained by the repeated force of diet with more safety to the body. Arbuthnot.

2. To speak again.

The psalms, for the excellency of their use, deserve to be oftener repeated ; but that their multitude permitteth not any oftner repetition. Hooker.

3. To try again.

Neglecting for Creüsa's life his own,
Repeats the danger of the burning town. Waller.
Beyond this place you can have no retreat,
Stay here, and I the danger will repeat. Dryden.

what have I done ? Jeremiah, viii. 6.

Judas, when he saw that he was condemned, repented himself. Matthew, xxvii. 3.

My father has repented him ere now,
Or will repent him, when he finds me dead. Dryden.
Each age sinn'd on ;
Lo ! it repenteth me that man was made. Prior.

REPENTANCE. n. s. [repentance, Fr.
from repent.]

1. Sorrow for any thing past.

The first step towards a woman's humility, seems to require a repentance of her education. Law.

2. Sorrow for sin, such as produces newness of life ; penitence.

Repentance so altereth a man through the mercy of God, be he never so defiled, that it waketh him pure. Whitgite.

Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is not of heav'n nor earth ; for these are pleased ;
By penitence th' Eternal's wrath's appeas'd. Shakesp.

Repentance is a change of mind, or a conversion from sin to God ; not some one bare act of change, but a lasting durable state of new life, which is called regeneration. Hummond.

In regard of secret and hidden faults, unless God should accept of a general repentance for unknown sins, few or none at all could be saved. Perkins.

This is a confidence, of all the most irrational ;
for upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futility ? South.

REPENTANT. adj. [repentant, Fr. from repent.]

1. Sorrowful for the past.

Thus they, in lowliest plight, repentant stood. Milton.

2. Sorrowful for sin.

report of an ordinance, the voice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
The lashing billows make a long report,
And beat her sides. Dryden's Cezar and Alcione.

REPO'RTER. n. s. [from report.] Relater;
one that gives an account.

There she appear'd; on my reporter devis'd well for her. Shakesp.

Rumours were raised of great discord among the nobility; for this cause the lords assembled, gave order to apprehend the reporters of these surmises. Hayward.

If I had known a thing they concealed, I should never be the reporter of it. Pope.

REPO'RTINGLY. adv. [from reporting.]

By common fame.
Others say, thou dost deserve; and I Believe it better than reportingly. Shakesp.

REPO'SAL. n. s. [from repose.] The act of reposing.

Dust thou think,
If I would stand against thee, would the reposal
Of any trust, virtue, or worth in thee,
Make thy words faith'd? Shakesp.

To REPO'SE. v. a. [repono, Lat.]

1. To lay to rest.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps;
Here lurks no treason, here no envy swells. Shak.
Have ye chos'n this place,
After the toil of battle, to repose
Your wearied virtue? Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To place as in confidence or trust:
with on or in.

I repose upon your management, what is dearest to me, my fame. Dryden's Preface to Annus Mirab.
That prince was conscious of his own integrity in the service of God, and relied on this as a foundation for that trust he reposed in him, to deliver him out of his distresses. Rogers.

3. To lodge; to lay up.

Pebbles, reposed in those cliffs amongst the earth, being not so dissoluble and more bulky, are left behind. Woodward.

Within a thicket I reposed; when round
I ruff'd up fall'n leaves in heap; and found,
Let fall from heaven, a sleep interminate. Chapman.

2. To rest in confidence; with on.

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company,
Upon whose faith and honour I repose. Shakesp.

REPO'SE. n. s. [repos, Fr.]

1. Sleep; quiet.

Merciful pow'rs!
Restrain in me the curs'd thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Th' hour

Of night, and of all things now retir'd to rest, Mind us of like repose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I all the living day
Consume in meditation deep, recluse
From human converse; nor at shut of eve

2. Cause of rest.

After great lights must be great shadows, which we call reposes; because in reality the sight would be tired, if attracted by a continuity of glittering objects. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

REPO'SEDNESS. n. s. [from reposed.]

State of being at rest.

To REPO'SITE. v. a. [repositus, Lat.]

act of replacing.

Being satisfied in the reposition of the bone, take care to keep it so by deligation. Wiseman's Surgery.

REPO'SITORY. n. s. [repositoire, Fr.]

repositorium, Lat.] A place where any thing is safely laid up.

The mind of man not being capable of having many ideas under view at once, it was necessary to have a repository to lay up those ideas. Locke.

He can take a body to pieces, and dispose of them, to us not without the appearance of irretrievable confusion, but with respect to his own knowledge into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers's Sermons.

To REPO'SSESS. v. a. [re and possess.]

To possess again.

How comes it now, that almost all that realm is repossessed of them? Spenser's State of Ireland.

Her suit is now to repossess those lands,
Which we in justice cannot well deny. Shakesp.

Nor shall my father repossess the land,
The father's fortune never to return. Pope's Odyssey.

To REPREHEND. v. a. [reprehendo, Lat.]

1. To reprove; to chide.

All as before his sight, whose presence to offend with any the least unseemliness, we would be surely as loth as they, who most reprehend or deride that we do. Hooker.

Pardon me for reprehending thee,
For thou hast done a charitable deed. Shakesp.

They like dumb statues star'd;
Which when I saw, I reprehended them;
And ask'd the mayor, what meant this wilful silence? Shakesp.

2. To blame; to censure.

He could not reprehend the fight, so many strew'd
the ground. Chapman.

I nor advise, nor reprehend the choice that was not rich, for that he gave six crowns for a small fish, answered, Why, what would you have given? the other said, Some twelve pence: Aristippus said again, And six crowns is no more with me. Bacon.

REPREHENDER. n. s. [from reprehend.]

Blamer; censurer.

These fervent reprehenders of things, established by publick authority, are always confident and bold-spirited men; but their confidence for the most part riseth from too much credit given to their own wits, for which cause they are seldom free from errors. Hooker.

REPREHENSIBLE. adj. [reprehensibilis,

Fr. reprehensus, Lat.] Blameable; culpable; censurable.

REPREHENSIBLENESS. n. s. [from repre-hensibilis.] Blameableness; culpableness.

To a heart fully resolute, counsel is tedious, but reprehension is loathsome. Bacon.

There is likewise due to the publick a civil re-prehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning counsel, gross neglect, and slight information. Bacon's Essays.

The admonitions, fraternal or paternal, of his fellow christians, or the governors of the church, then more publick reprehensions and inceptions, Hammond.

What effect can that man hope from his most zealous reprehensions, who lays himself open to recrimination? Government of the Tongue.

REPREHENSIVE. adj. [from reprehend.]
Given to reproof.

To REPRESENT. v. a. [represento, Lat.
representer, Fr.]

REPU'LSIVE. adj. [from repulse.] Driving off; having the power to beat back or drive off.

The parts of the salt or vitriol recede from one another, and endeavour to expand themselves, and remove as far asunder as the quantity of water, in which they float, will allow; and does not this endeavour imply, that they have a repulse force by which they fly from one another, or that they attract the water more strongly than one another? Newton's Opticks.

To REPU'RCHASE. v. a. [re and purchase.] To buy again.

Once more we sit on England's royal throne,
Repurchos'd with the blood of enemies;
What valiant foe-men, like to autumn's corn,
Have we mow'd down in top of all their pride? Shakesp.

If the son alien those lands, and repurchase them again in fee, the rules of descents are to be observed, as if he were the original purchaser. Hale.

REPU'TABLE. adj. [from reputc.] Honourable · not infamous.

REQ

If ever any vice shall become reputable, and be gloried in as a mark of greatness, what can we then expect from the man of honour, but to signalize himself?
Roger's Sermons.

In the article of danger, it is as reputable to elude an enemy as to defeat one.
Broome.

REPUTABLENESS. n. s. [from reputable.] The quality of a thing of good repute.

REPUTABLY. adv. [from reputable.] Without discredit.

To many such worthy magistrates, who have thus reputably filled the chief seats of power in this great city, I am now addressing my discourse.
Atterbury's Sermons.

That therefore only are reputed wise,
For saying nothing.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Men, such as chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.
Donne.

If the grand vizier be so great, as he is reputed, in politicks, he will never consent to an invasion of Hungary.
Temple.

REPUTE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Character; reputation.
2. Established opinion.
He who reigns
Monarch in heav'n, till then as one secure,
Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute.
Milton.

REPUTELESS. adj. [from repute.] Disreputable; disgraceful. A word not inelegant, but out of use.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor livelihood.
Shakespeare.

REQUEST. n. s. [requeste, Fr.]

1. Petition; entreaty.
But ask what you would have reform'd,
I will both hear and grant you your requests.
Shakesp.
Hamen stood up to make request for his life to Esther,
Esther.

All thy request for man, accepted Son!
Obtain; all thy request was my decree.
Milton.
Ask him to lend
To this, the last request that I shall send,
A gentle ear.
Denham.

2. Demand; repute; credit; state of being desired.
Audius will appear well in these wars, his great opposer Coriolanus being now in no request of his country.
Shakesp.

Whilst this vanity of thinking, that men are obliged to write either systems or nothing, is in request, many excellent notions are suppressed.
Boyle.

Knowledge and fame were in as great request as wealth amon'g us now.
Temple.

To REQUEST. v. a. [requester, Fr.] To ask; to solicit; to entreat.

REQ

To-night we hold a solemn supper, Sir,
And I'll request your presence.
Shakesp. Macb.
It was to be requested of Almighty God by prayer, that those kings would seriously fulfil all that hope of peace.
Knolles.

The virgin quire for her request,
The god that sits at marriage feast;
He at their invoking came,
But with a scarce well-lighted flame.
Milton.

In things not unlawful, great persons cannot be properly said to request, because all things considered, they must not be denied.
South's Sermons.

REQUESTER. n. s. [from request.] Petitioner; solicitor.

To REQUICKEN. v. a. [re and quicken.] To reanimate.

By and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense, when straight his doubled spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battle came he.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.

REQUIEM. n. s. Lat.]

1. A hymn in which they implore for the dead requiem or rest.

We should profane the service of the dead,
To sing a requiem and such peace to her,
As to peace-parted souls.
Shakesp.

2. Rest; quiet; peace. Not in use.

The midwife kneel'd at my mother's throes,
With pain produc'd and nurs'd for future woes;
Else had I an eternal requiem kept,
And in the arms of peace for ever slept.
Sandys.

REQUIRABLE. adj. [from require.] Fit to be required.

It contains the certain periods of times, and all circumstances requirable in a history to inform.
Hale.

To REQUIRE. v. a. [requiro, Lat. requerir, Fr.]

Ye me require

A thing without the compass of my wit;
For both the lineage and the certain sire,
From which I sprung, are from me hidden yet.
Spenser.

We do require them of you, so to use them,
As we shall find their merits.
Shakesp.
This, the very law of nature teacheth us to do,
and this the law of God requireth also at our hands.
Spelman.

This imply'd
Subjection, but requir'd with gentle sway.
Milton.

Oft our alliance other lands desir'd,
And what we seek of you, of us requir'd.
Dryden.

2. To make necessary; to need.

The king's business required haste. 1 Samuel.
High from the ground, the branches would re- quire
Thy utmost reach.
Milton.

By why, alas! do mortal men complain?
God gives us what he knows our wants require,
And better things than those which we desire.
Dryden.

God, when he gave the world in common to all mankind, commanded man also to labour; and the penury of his condition required it.
Locke.

REQUISITE. adj. [requisitus, Lat.] Necessary; needful; required by the nature of things.

When God new-modelled the world by the introduction of a new religion, and that in the room of one set up by himself, it was requisite, that he should recommend it to the reasons of men with the same authority and evidence that enforced the former.
South.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep.
Bacon.

Prepare your soul with all those necessary graces, that are more immediately requisite to this performance.
Hake.

REQUISITE. n. s. Any thing necessary.

Res non parva labore, sed iuncta, was thought by a poet to be one of the requisites to a happy life.
Dryden.

RES

For want of these requisites, most of our ingenious young men take up some cried up English poet, adore him, and imitate him, without knowing wherein his part is defective.
Dryden.

God on his part has declared the requisites on ours; what we must do to obtain blessings, is the great business of us all to know.
Wale.

REQUISITELY. adv. [from requisite.] Necessarily; in a requisite manner.

We discern how requisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to several times, persons, and occurrences.
Boyle.

REQUISITENESS. n. s. [from requisite.] Necessity; the state of being requisite.

Discerning how exquisitely the several parts of scripture are fitted to the several times, persons, and occurrences intended, we shall discover not only the sense of the obscurer passages, but the requisiteness of their having been written so obscurely.
Boyle.

REQUITAL. n. s. [from requite.]

1. Return for any good or bad office; retaliation.

Should we take the quarrel of sermons in hand, and revenge their cause by requital, thrusting prayer in a manner out of doors under colour of long preaching?
Hooker.

Since you
Wear out your gentle limbs in my affairs,
Be bold, you do so grow in my requital,
As nothing can unroot you.
Shakesp.
We hear

Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to publick thanks,
Forerunning your requital.
Shakesp.

2. Return; reciprocal action.

No merit their aversion can remove,
Nor ill requital can efface their love.
Waller.

3. Reward; recompence.

He asked me for a song,
And in requital op'd his leathern scrip,
And shew'd me similes of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.
Milton.

I have ta'en a cordial,
Sent by the king of Haly, in requital
Of all my miseries, to make me happy.
Denham.

In all the light that the heavens bestow upon this lower world, though the lower world cannot equal their benefaction, yet with a kind of grateful return it reflects those rays, that it cannot recompense;
so that there is some return however,
though there can be no requital.
South's Sermons.

To REQUITE. v. a. [requiter, Fr.]

1. To repay; to retaliate good or ill; to recompense.

If he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.
Shakesp.

When Joseph's brethren saw that their father was dead, they said, Joseph will requite us all the evil we did.
Genesis.

An avenger against his enemies, and one that shall requite kindness to his friends.
Eccles.

Him within protect from harms;
He can requite thee, for he knows the charms
That call fame on such gentle acts as these.
Milton.

Great idol of mankind, we neither claim
The praise of merit, nor aspire to fame!
'Tis all we beg thee to conceal from sight
Those acts of goodness which themselves requite:
O let us still the secret joy partake,
To follow virtue ev'n for virtue's sake.
Pope.

Unhappy Wallace,
Great patriot heroe! ill requited chief!
Thomson.

2. To do or give in reciprocation.

He hath requited me evil for good. 1 Samuel.
Open not thine heart to every man, lest he re- quite thee with a srew'd turn.
Ecclus.

RE'EMOUSE. n. s. [ⱮⱮⱮⱮⱮⱮ; Sax.] A bat. See REARMOUSE.

RESALE. n. s. [re and sale.] Sale at second hand.

Monopolies and coemption of wares for resale, where they are not restrained, are great means to enrich. Bacon.

To RESALUTE. v. a. [resaluto, Lat. resalvitur, Fr.] To salute or greet a-new.

We drew her up to land,
And trod ourselves the resaluted sand. Chapman.
To resalute the world with sacred light,
Leucothæa wak'd. Milton.

To RESAIL. v. a. [re and sail.] To sail back.

From Pyle resailing, and the Spartan court, Horrid to speak! in ambush is decreed. Pope.

To RESCIND. v. a. [rescindo, Lat. rescinditur, Fr.] To cut off; to abrogate a law.

It is the imposing a sacramental obligation upon him, which being the condition, upon the performance whereof all the promises of endless bliss are made over, it is not possible to rescind or disclaim the standing obliged by it. Hammond.

I spake against the test, but was not heard;
These to rescind, and peerage to restore. Dryden.

RESCISSION. n. s. [rescission, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] The act of cutting off; abrogation.

If any infer rescission of their estate to have been for idolatry, that the governments of all idolatrous nations should be also dissolved, it followeth not. Bacon.

RESCISSORY. adj. [rescisoire, Fr. rescissus, Lat.] Having the power to cut off.

To RESCRI'BE. v. a. [rescribo, Lat. rescribere, Fr.]

1. To write back.

Whenever a prince on his being consulted rescribes or writes back Tolernanus, he dispenses with that act otherwise unlawful. Ayliffe's Paregon.

2. To write over again.

Calling for more paper to rescribe them, he shewed him the difference betwixt the ink-box and the sand-box. Howel.

RESCRIPT. n. s. [rescrit, Fr. rescriptum, Lat.] Edict of an emperour.

One finding a great mass of money digged under ground, and being somewhat doubtful, signified it to the emperor, who made a rescript thus: Use it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The popes, in such cases, where canons were silent, did after the manner of the Roman emperours, write back their determinations, which were stiled rescripts or decretal epistles, having the force of laws. Ayliffe's Paregon.

To RESCUE. v. a. [rescorre, old Fr.] To set free from any violence, confinement, or danger.

Sir Scdamore, after long sorrow, in the end met with Britoniartis, who succoured him and rescu'd his love. Spenser.

My uncles both are slain in rescuing me. Shakespeare.

We're beset with thieves;
Rescue thy mistress, if thou be a man. Shakesp.

Dr. Baucroft understood the church excellently, and had almost rescued it out of the hands of the Calvinian party. Clarendon.

He that is so sure of his particular election, as to resolve he can never fall, if he commit those acts, against which scripture is plain, that they that do them shall not inherit eternal life, must necessarily resolve, that nothing but the removing his fundamental error can rescue him from the superstructure. Hammond's Fundamentals.

Who was that just man, whom had not heav'n Rescu'd, had in his righteousness been lost? Milton.

Riches cannot rescue from the grave,
Which claims alike the monarch and the slave. Dryden.

We have never yet heard of a tumult raised to rescue a minister whom his master desired to bring to a fair account. Davenant.

RESCUE. n. s. [rescouise, rescosse, old

Fr. rescussus, low Lat.] Deliverance from violence, danger, or confinement.

How comes it, you

Have help to make this rescue? Shakesp.
RESCUER. n. s. [from rescue.] One that rescues.

RESEA'CH. n. s. [recherche, Fr.] Enquiry; search.

By a skilful application of those notices, may be gained in such researches the accelerating and heterizing of fruits, emptying mines, and draining fens. Glanville's Scepis.

I submit those mistakes, into which I may have fallen, to the better consideration of others, who shall have made research into this business with more felicity. Holder.

A felicity adapted to every rank, such as the researches of human wisdom sought for, but could not discover. Rogers.

To RESEA'CH. v. a. [rechercher, Fr.] To examine; to enquire.

It is not easy to research with due distinction, in the actions of eminent personages, both how much they may have been blemished by the envy of others, and what was corrupted by their own felicity. Wotton's Buckingham.

To RESEA'T. v. a. [re and scat.] To seat again.

When he's produc'd, will you reseat him
Upon his father's throne? Dryden.

RESEIZER. n. s. One that seizes again.

RESEIZURE. n. s. [re and seizure.] Repeated seizure; seizure a second time.

Here we have the charter of foundation; it is now the more easy to judge of the forfeiture of reseizure; deface the image and you divest the right. Bacon.

RESE'MBLANCE. n. s. [resemblance, Fr.]

1. Likeness; similitude; representation.

One main end of poetry and painting is to please; they bear a great resemblance to each other. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The quality produced hath commonly no resemblance with the thing producing it; wherefore we look on it as a bare effect of power. Loc v.

So chymists boast they have a pow'r,
From the dead ashes of a flow'r,
Some faint resemblance to produce,
But not the virtue. Swijt's Miscellanies.

I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author in qualities, fame, and fortune. Pope.

2. Something resembling.

These sensible things, which religion hath allowed, are resemblances formed according to things spiritual, whereunto they serve as a hand to lead, and a way to direct. Hooker.

Fairest resemblance of thy Maker fair, Thee all things living gaze on. Milton.

They are but weak resemblances of our intentions, faint and imperfect copies that may acquaint us with the general design, but can never express the life of the original. Addison.

To RE'SEMBLE. v. a. [resembler, Fr.]

1. To compare; to represent as like something else.

Most safely may we resemble ourselves to God, in respect of that pure faculty, which is never separate from the love of God. Raleigh.

The torrid parts of Africk are resembled to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represents the disperseness of habitations. Brerewood.

2. To be like; to have likeness to.

If we see a man of virtues, mixed with infirmities, fall into misfortune, we are afraid that the like misfortunes may happen to ourselves, who resemblance the character. Addison.

To RE'SEND. v. a. [re and send.] To send back; to send again. Not in use.

I sent to her, by this same coxcomb,
Tokens and letters, which she did resend. Shakespeare.

To RESENT. v. a. [ressentir, Fr.]

1. To take well or ill.

A serious consideration of the mineral treasures of his territories, and the practical discoveries of them by way of my philosophical theory, he then so well resented, that afterwards, upon a mature digestion of my whole design, he commanded me to let your lordships understand, how great an inclination he hath to further so hopeful a work. Bacon.

To be absent from any part of publick worship he thus deeply resented. Fell.

2. To take ill; to consider as an injury or affront. This is now the most usual sense.

Thou with scorn
And anger would'st resent the offer'd wrong. Milton.

Such proceedings have been always resented, and often punished in this kingdom. Davenant.

RESENTER. n. s. [from resent.] One who feels injuries deeply.

The earl was the worst philosopher, being a great resenter, and a weak dissembler of the least disgrace. Wotton.

RESENTFUL. adj. [resent and full.] Malignant; easily provoked to anger; and long retaining it.

RESENTINGLY. adv. [from resenting.]

1. With deep sense; with strong perception.

Hylobares judiciously and resentingly recapitulates your main reasonings. More's Divine Dialogues.

2. With continued anger.

RESENTMENT. n. s. [ressentiment, Fr.]

1. Strong perception of good or ill.

He retains vivid resentments of the more solid morality. More.

Some faces we admire and doat on; others, in our impartial apprehensions, no less deserving, we can behold without resentment: yea, with an invincible disregard. Glanville.

What he hath of sensible evidence, the very grand work of his demonstration is but the knowledge of his own resentment; but how the same things appear to others, they only know that are conscious to them; and how they are in themselves, only he that made them. Glanville's Scepis.

2. Deep sense of injury; anger long continued; sometimes simply anger.

Can heavenly minds such high resentment show,
Or exercise their spite in human woe? Dryden.

I cannot, without some envy, and a just resentment against the opposite conduct of others, reflect upon that generosity, wherewith the heads of a struggling faction treat those who will undertake to hold a pen in their defence. Swijt.

Though it is hard to judge of the hearts of people, yet where they declare their resentment, and uneasiness at any thing, there they pass their judgment upon themselves. Law.

RESERVATION. n. s. [reservation, Fr.]

1. Reserve; concealment of something in the mind.

Nor had I any reservations in my own soul, when I passed that bill, nor repentings after. King Charles

We swear with Jesuitical equivocations and mental reservations. Sanderson against the Covenant.

2. Something kept back; something not given up.

Ourselves by monthly course,
With reservation of an hundred knights,
By you to be sustain'd, shall our abode
Make with you by due turns. Shakesp.

This is academical reservation in matters of easy truth, or rather sceptical if fidelity against the evidence of reason. Brown.

These opinions Steele and his faction are endeavouring to propagate among the people concerning the present ministry; with what reservation to the honour of the queen, I cannot determine. Swift.

3. Custody; state of being treasured up.

He will'd me,

In heedful'st reservation, to bestow them
As notes, whose faculties inclusive were More than they of note. Shakespeare.

RESERVATORY. n. s. [reservoir, Fr.] Place in which any thing is reserved or kept.

How I got such notice of that subterranean reservoir as to make a computation of the water now concealed therein, peruse the propositions concerning earthquakes. Woodward.

To RESERVE. v. a. [reserver, Fr. reserver, Lat.]

1. To keep in store; to save to some other purpose.

I could add many probabilities of the names of places; but they should be too long for this, and I reserve them for another, Spenser.

Hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the day of trouble? Job.
David houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them for an hundred chariots. 2 Sam.

Flowers

Reserved from night, and kept for thee in store. Milt.

2. To retain; to keep; to hold.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness. Shakesp.

Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Jeremiah.

3. To lay up to a future time.

The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished. 2 Peter, ii. 9.

The breach seems like the scissures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to close it, and reserves its cure only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

Conceal your esteem and love in your own breast, and reserve your kind looks and language for private hours. Swift.

RESERVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Store kept untouched, or undiscovered.

The assent may be withheld upon this suggestion, that I know not yet all that may be said; and therefore, though I be beaten, it is not necessary I should yield, not knowing what forces there are in reserve behind. Locke.

2. Something kept for existence

The virgins, besides the oil in their lamps, carried likewise a reserve in some other vessel for a continual supply. Tillotson.

Things are managed by advocates, who oftentimes seek conquest, and not justice, and ransack all reserves of law to support an unrighteous cause. Kett.

3. Something concealed in the mind,

However any one may concur in the general scheme, it is still with certain reserves and deviations, and with a salvo to his own private judgment. Addison's Frecholder.

4. Exception; prohibition.

Is knowledge so despised?
Or envy, or what reserve forbids to taste? Milton.

5. Exception in favour.

Each has some darling lust, which pleads for a reserve, and which they would fain reconcile to the expectations of religion. Ringers.

6. Modesty; caution in personal behaviour.

Ere guardian thought could bring its scatter'd aid,
My soul surpriz'd, and from herself disjoin'd,
Left all reserve, and all the sex behind. Prior.

RESERVED. adj. [from reserve.]

1. Modest; not loosely free.

To all obliging, yet reserv'd to all,
None could himself the favour'd lover call. Walsh.

Fame is a bubble the reserv'd enjoy,
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, destroy. Young.

2. Sullen; not open; not frank.

Nothing reserv'd or sullen was to see,
But sweet regards. Dryden.

RESERVEDLY. adv. [from reserved.]

1. Not with frankness; not with openness; with reserve.

I must give only short hints, and write but obscurely and reservedly, until I have opportunity to express my sentiments with greater copiousness and perspicuity. Woodward.

2. Scrupulously; coldly.

He speaks reserv'dly, but he speaks with force; Nor can a word be chang'd but for a worse. Pope.

RESERVEDNESS. n. s. [from reserved.]

Closeness; want of frankness; want of openness.

Observe their gravity
And their reservedness, their many cautions Fitting their persons. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

By formality, I mean something more than ceremony and compliment, even a solemn reservedness, which may well consist with honesty. Wotton.

There was great wariness and reservedness, and so great a jealousy of each other, that they had on mind to give or receive visits. Clarendon.

Dissimulation can but just guard a man within the compass of his own personal concerns, which yet may be more effectually done by that silence and reservedness, that every man may innocently practise. South's Sermons.

RESERVER. n. s. [from reserve.] One that reserves.

RESERVOIR. n. s. [reservoir, Fr.] Place where any thing is kept in store.

There is not a spring or fountain, but are well provided with huge cisterns and reservoirs of rain and snow-water. Addison.

Who sees pale Mammon pine amidst his store,
Sees but a backward steward for the poor;
This year a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next, a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

To RESETTLE. v. a. [re and settle.] To settle again.

Will the house of Austria yield the least article, even of usurped prerogative, to resettle the minds of those princes in the alliance, who are alarmed at the consequences of the emperor's death? Swift.

RESETTLEMENT. n. s. [from resettle.]

1. The act of settling again.

To the quieting of my passions, and the resettlement of my discomposed soul, I consider that grief is the most absurd of all the passions. Norris.

2. The state of settling again.

Some roll their cask to mix it with the lees, and after a resettlement, they rack it. Mortimer.

RESIANCE. n. s. [from resiant.] Residence; abode; dwelling. Resistance and resiant are now only used in law.

The king forthwith banished all Flemings out of his kingdom, commanding his merchant adventurers, which had a resiance in Antwerp, to return. Bacon's Henry VII.

RESIANT. adj. [resscant, Fr.] Resident; present in a place.

Solyman was come as far as St. phia, where the Turk's great lieutenant in Europe is always resiant, before that the Hungarians were aware. Knolles.

The Allobroges here resiant in Rome. Ben Jonson.

To RESIDE. v. u. [resideo, Lat. resider, French.]

1. To have abode; to live; to dwell; to be present.

How can God with such reside? Milton.
In no fix'd place the happy souls reside;
In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds. Dryden.

2. [Resido, Lat.] To sink; to subside; to fall to the bottom.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a drachm of each, turn into a mouldy substance; there residing in the bottom a fair cloud and a thick oil on the top. Boyle.

RESIDENCE. n. s. [residence, Fr.]

1. Act of dwelling in a place.

Something holy lodges in that breast,
And with these raptures moves the vocal air,
To testify his hidden residence. Milton.

There was a great familiarity between the confessor and duke William; for the confessor had often made considerable residences in Normandy. Hale's Law of England.

2. Place of abode; dwelling.

Within the infant rind of this small flower,
Poison hath residence, and medicine power. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Understand the same

Of fish within their wat'ry residence. Milton.
Caprea had been the retirement of Augustus for some time, and the residence of Tiberius for several years. Addison.

3. [From resido, Lat.] That which settles at the bottom of liquors.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the ordinary residence or settlement of liquors. Bacon.
Our clearest waters, and such as seem simple unto sense, are much compounded unto reason, as may be observed in the evaporation of water, wherein, besides a terrous residence, some salt is also found. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

RESIDENT. adj. [residens, Lat. resident, Fr.] Dwelling or having abode in any place.

I am not concerned in this objection; not thinking it necessary, that Christ should be personally present or resident on earth in the millennium. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

He is not said to be resident in a place, who comes thither with a purpose of retiring immediately; so also he is said to be absent, who is absent with his family. Ayliffe's Par.

RESIDENT. n. s. [from the adjective]

An agent, minister, or officer residing in any distant place with the dignity of an ambassador.

The pope fears the English will suffer nothing like a resident or consul in his kingdoms. Addison.

RESIDENTIARY. adj. [from resident.]

Holding residence.

Christ was the conductor of the Israelites into the land of Canaan, and their residential guardian. More.

RESIDUAL. } adj. [from residuum, Lat.]

RESIDUARY. } Relating to the residue; relating to the part remaining.

'Tis enough to lose the legacy, or the residuary advantage of the estate left him by the deceased. Ayliffe.

RESIDUE. n. s. [residu, Fr. residuum, Lat.] The remaining part; that which is left.

The causes are all such as expel the most volatile parts of the blood, and fix the residue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To RESIEGE. v. a. [re and siege, Fr.]

To seat again. Obsolete.

In wretched prison long he did remain,
Till they outright had their utmost date,
And then therein resieged was again,
And ruled long with honourable state. Spenser.

To RESIGN. v. a. [resigner, Fr. resigno, Lat.]

1. To give up a claim or possession.

Your crown and kingdom indirectly held. Shakespeare.

I'll to the king, and signify to him,
That thus I have resign'd to you my charge. Shakespeare.

To her thou didst resign thy place. Milton.
Phubus resigns his darts, and Jove
His thunder, to the god of love. Denham.

2. To yield up.

Every Ismena would resign her breast;
And every dear Hippolytus be blest. Prior.

Whoever shall resign their reasons, either from the root of deceit in themselves, or inability to resist such trivial inganations from others, although their condition may place them above the multitude, yet are they still within the line of vulgarity. Brown.

Desirous to resign and render back
All I receiv'd. Milton.

Those, who always resign their judgment to the last man they heard or read, truth never sinks into those men's minds; but, camelion-like, they take the colour of what is laid before them, and as soon lose and resign it to the next that comes in their way. Locke.

3. To give up in confidence: with up emphatical.

What more reasonable, than that we should in all things resign up ourselves to the will of God? Tillotson.

4. To submit; particularly to submit to providence.

Happy the man, who studies nature's laws,
His mind possessing in a quiet state,
Fearless of fortune, and resign'd to fate. Dryden.
A firm, yet cautious, mind,
Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd. Pope.

5. To submit without resistance or murmur.

What thou art, resign to death. Shakesp.

RESIGNATION. n. s. [resignation, Fr.]

1. The act of resigning or giving up a claim or possession.

Do that office of thine own good will;
The resignation of thy state and crown. Shakesp.

He intended to procure a resignation of the rights of the king's majesty's sisters and others, entitled to the possession of the crown. Hayward.

2. Submission; unresisting acquiescence.

We cannot expect, that any one should readily quit his own opinion, and embrace ours, with a blind resignation to an authority, which the understanding acknowledges not. Locke.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as poorness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery, that very few will recover themselves out of it. Addison.

3. Submission without murmur to the will of God.

RESIGNER. n. s. [from resign.] One that resigns.

RESIGNMENT. n. s. [from resign.] Act of resigning.

RESILIENCE. } n. s. [from resilio, Lat.]
RESILIENCY. } The act of starting or leaping back.

If you strike a ball sidelong, the rebound will be as much the contrary way; whether there be any such resilience in echoes, that is, whether a man shall hear better if he stand aside the body re-percussing, than if he stand where he speaketh, may be tried. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

RESILIENT. adj. [resiliens, Lat.] Starting or springing back.

RESILIATION. n. s. [resilio, Lat.] The act of springing back; resilience.

RESIN. n. s. [resine, Fr. resina, Lat.]

The fat sulphurous parts of some vegetable, which is natural or procured by art, and will incorporate with oil or spirit, not an aqueous menstruum. Those vegetable substances that will dissolve in water are gums, those that will not dissolve and mix but with spirits or oil are resins. Quincy.

RESINOUS. adj. [from resin; resineux, Fr.] Containing resin; consisting of resin.

Resinous gums, dissolved in spirit of wine, are let fall again, if the spirit be copiously diluted. Boyle on Colours.

RESINOUSNESS. n. s. [from resinous.] The quality of being resinous.

RESIPISCENCE. n. s. [resipiscence, Fr. resipiscencia, low Lat.] Wisdom after the fact; repentance.

To RESIST. v. a. [resisto, Lat. resister, Fr.]

1. To oppose; to act against.
Submit to God: resist the devil, and he will flee. James, iv.

To do ill our sole delight,
As being the contrary to his high will Whom we resist. Milton

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles. Milt.
Some forms, tho' bright, no mortal man can bear,
Some, none resist, tho' not exceeding fair. Young.

2. Not to admit impression or force.

Nor keen nor solid could resist that edge. Milton.
To RESIST. v. n. To make opposition.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and, who resist,
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

RESISTANCE. } n. s. [resistance, Fr.]
RESISTENCE. } This word, like many others, is differently written, as it is supposed to have come from the Latin or the French.]

1. The act of resisting; opposition.

Demetrius, seeing that the land was quiet, and that no resistance was made against him, sent away all his forces. 1 Mac.

2. The quality of not yielding to force or external impression.

The resistance of bone to cold is greater than of flesh; for that the flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

Musick so softens and disarms the mind,
That not an arrow does resistance find. Waller.

The idea of solidity we receive by our touch, and it arises from the resistance which we find in body to the entrance of any other body into the place it possesses. Locke.

But that part of the resistance, which arises from the vis inertiae, is proportional to the density of the matter, and cannot be diminished by dividing the matter into smaller parts, nor by any other means, than by decreasing the density of the medium. Newton's Opticks.

RESISTIBILITY. n. s. [from resistible.]

1. Quality of resisting.

Whether the resistibility of Adam's reason did not equivalence the facility of Eve's seduction, we refer unto schoolmen. Brown.

The name body, being the complex idea of extension and resistibility, together, in the same subject, these two ideas are not exactly one and the same. Locke.

2. Quality of being resistible.

It is from corruption, and liberty to do evil, meeting with the resistibility of this sufficient grace, that one resists it. Hammond.

RESISTIBLE. adj. [from resist.] That may be resisted.

That is irresistible; this, though potent, yet is in its own nature resistible by the will of man; though it many times prevails by its efficacy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

RESISTLESS. adj. [from resist.] Irresistible; that cannot be opposed.

Our own eyes do every where behold the sudden and resistless assaults of death. Raleigh.
All at once to force resistless way. Milton.

Since you can love, and yet your error see,
The same resistless power may plead for me. Dryd.
She chang'd her state;
Resistless in her love as in her hate. Dryden

Though thine eyes resistless glances dart,
A stronger charm is thine, a generous heart. Logic.

RESOLVABLE. adj. [from resolve.]

1. That may be referred or reduced.

Pride is of such intimate connection with ingratitude that the actions of ingratitude seem directly resolvable into pride, as the principal reason of them. South.

2. Dissoluble; admitting separation of parts.

As the serum of the blood is resolvable by a small heat, a greater heat coagulates, so as to turn it horny like parchment. Arbutnot.

3. Capable of solution, or of being made less obscure.

The effect is wonderful in all, and the causes best resolvable from observations made in the countries themselves, the parts through which they pass. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

RESOLUBLE. adj. [resoluble, Fr. re and solubilis, Lat.] That may be melted or dissolved.

Three is not precisely the number of the distinct elements, whereinto mixt bodies are resolvable by fire. Boyle.

To RESOLVE. v. a. [resolvo, Lat. resoudre, Fr.]

1. To inform; to free from a doubt or difficulty.

In all things then are our consciences best resolved, and in most agreeable sort unto God and nature resolved, when they are so far persuaded, as those grounds of persuasion will bear. Hooker.

Give me some breath,
Before I positively speak in this;
I will resolve your grace immediately. Shakesp.

I cannot brook delay, resolve me now;
And what your pleasure is, shall satisfy me. Shak.
Resolve me, strangers, whence and what you are? Dryden.

2. To solve; to clear.

Examine, sift, and resolve their alledged proofs, till you come to the very root whence they spring, and it shall clearly appear, that the most which can be inferred upon such plenty of divine testimonies, is only this, that some things, which they maintain, do seem to have been out of scripture not absurdly gathered. Hooker.

I resolve the riddle of their loyalty, and give them opportunity to let the world see, they mean not what they do, but what they say. King Charles.

He always bent himself rather judiciously to resolve, than by doubts to perplex a business. Hayward.

The gravers, when they have attained to the knowledge of these resolves, will easily resolve those difficulties which perplex them. Dryden's Duffes.

The man who would resolve the work of fate,
May limit number. Prior.

Happiness, it was resolved by all, must be some one uniform end, proportioned to the capacities of human nature, attainable by every man, independent on fortune. Rogers.

3. To settle in an opinion.

Good or evil actions, commanded or prohibited by laws and precepts simply moral, may be resolved into some dictates and principles of the law of nature, imprinted on man's heart at the creation. White.

Long since we were resolved of your truth,
Your faithful service, and your toil in war. Shak.

4. To fix in a determination. This sense is rather neutral, though in these examples the form be passive.

Good proof
This day affords, declaring thee resolv'd
To undergo with me one guilt. Milton.

I run to meet th' alarms,
Resolv'd on death, resolv'd to die in arms. Dryden.
Resolv'd for sea, the slaves thy baggage pack;
Nothing retards thy voyage, unless Thy other lord forbids voluptuousness. Dryden.

5. To fix in constancy; to conform.

Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement:
I'll make the statue move. Shakesp.

6. To melt; to dissolve.

Resolving is bringing a fluid, which is now concreted, into the state of fluidity again. Arbutnot.

RES

Vegetable salts resolve the coagulated humours of a human body, and attenuate, by stimulating the solids, and dissolving the fluids. Arbuthnot.

7. To analyze; to reduce.

Into what can we resolve this strong inclination of mankind to this error? it is altogether unimaginable, but that the reason of so universal a consent should be constant. Tillotson.

Ye immortal souls, who once were men,
And now resolv'd to elements again, Dryden.
The decretals turn upon this point, and resolve all into a monarchical power at Rome. Baker.

To RESOLVE. v. n.

1. To determine; to decree within one's self.

Confirm'd, then I resolve
Adam shall share with me. Milton.
Covetousness is like the sea, that receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back; therefore those, who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, have seldom embarked all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.

2. To melt; to be dissolved.

Have I not hideous death within my view?
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, ev'n as a form of wax Resolveth from its figure 'gainst the fire? Shakesp.
No man condemn me, who has never felt
A woman's power, or try'd the force of love;
All tempers yield and soften in those fires,
Our honours, interests, resolv'd down,
Ran in the gentle current of our joys. Southern.
When the blood stagnates in any part, it first coagulates, then resolves and turns alkaline. Arbuth.

3. To be settled in opinion.

Let men resolve of that as they please: this every intelligent being must grant, that there is something that is himself, that he would have happy. Locke.

RESOLVE. n. s. [from the verb.] Resolution; fixed determination.

I'm glad you thus continue your resolve;
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy. Shakesp.
When he sees
Himself by dogs, and dogs by men pursu'd,
He strait revokes his bold resolves, and more Repents his courage, than his fear before. Denham.

Cæsar's approach hath summon'd us together,
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves. Addison.

RESOLVEDLY. adv. [from resolved.] With firmness and constancy.

A man may be resolvedly patient unto death;
so that it is not the mediocrity of resolution, which makes the virtue; nor the extremity, which makes the vice. Grew.

RESOLVEDNESS. n. s. [from resolved.] Resolution; constancy; firmness.

This resolvedness, this high fortitude in sin, can with no reason be imagined a preparative to its remission. Decay of Piety.

RESOLVENT. n. s. [resolvens, Lat.] That which has the power of causing solution.

In the beginning of inflammation, they require repellants; and in the increase, somewhat of resolvents ought to be mixed. Wiseman.
Lactescent plants, as lettuce and endive, contain wholesome juice, resolvent of the bile, anodyne and cooling. Arbuthnot.

RESOLVER. n. s. [from resolve.]

1. One that forms a firm resolution.

Thy resolutions were not before sincere; consequently God that saw that, cannot be thought to have justified that unsincere resolver, that dead faith. Hammond.

2. One that dissolves; one that separates parts.

It may be doubted, whether or no the fire be the genuine and universal resolver of mixed bodies. Boyle.

RESOLUTE. adj. [resolu, Fr.] Determined; fixed; constant; steady; firm.

RES

Be bloody, bold, and resolute; laugh to scorn
The pow'r of man; for none of woman born

We resolutely must,
To the few virtues that we have, be just. Roscomm.
A man, who lives a virtuous life, despises the pleasures of sin, and notwithstanding all the allurements of sense persists resolutely in his course. Tillotson.

Some of those facts he examines, some he resolutely denies; others he endeavours to extenuate, and the rest he distorts with unnatural turns. Swift.

RESOLUTENESS. n. s. [from resolute.] Determinateness; state of being fixed in resolution.

All that my resoluteness to make use of my ears, not tongue, could do, was to make them acquire. Boyle.

RESOLUTION. n. s. [resolutio, Lat. resolution, Fr.]

1. Act of clearing difficulties.

In matters of antiquity, if their originals escape due relation, they fall into great obscurities, and such as future ages seldom reduce into a resolution. Erown.

Visits, whether of civility, or for resolution of conscience, or information in points of difficulty, were numerous. Fell.

The unravelling and resolution of the difficulties, that are met with in the execution of the design,
are the end of an action. Druzen.

2. Analysis; act of separating any thing into constituent parts.

To the present impulses of sense, memory, and instinct, all the sagacities of brutes may be reduced; though witty men, by analytical resolution, have chymically extracted an artificial logic out of all their actions. Hale.

3. Dissolution.

In the hot springs of extreme cold countries, the first heats are unsufferable, which proceed out of the resolution of humidity congealed. Digby.

4. [From resolute.] Fixed determination; settled thought.

I th' progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution,
The bishop did require a respite. Shakesp.
O Lord, resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.
We spend our days in deliberating, and we end them without coming to any resolution. L'Estrange.

How much this is in every man's power, by making resolutions to himself, is easy to try. Locke.

The mode of the will, which answers to dubitation, may be called suspension; that which answers to invention, resolution; and that which, in the phantastical will, is obstinacy, is constancy in the intellectual. Grew.

5. Constancy; firmness; steadiness in good or bad.

The rest of the Helots, which were otherwise scattered, bent thitherward, with a new life of resolution;
as if their captain had been a root, out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.
I would unstate myself to be in a due resolution. Shakespeare.

They, who governed the parliament, had the resolution to act those monstrous things. Clarendon.
What reinforcement we may gain from hope,
if not what resolution from despair. Milton.

The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew, no longer air, but fire,
The fainty knights were scorcht'd. Dryden.
 - To catch breath.

Till breathless both themselves aside retire,
Where foaming wrath, their cruel tusks they whet,
And trample th' earth the whiles they may respire. Spenser.

I, a pris'n'er chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I feel amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh blowing, pure, and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire.
Milton.

3. To rest; to take rest from toil.

Hark! he strikes the golden lyre;
And see! the tortur'd ghosts respire,
See shady forms advance! Pope's St. Cecilia.

RESPIRE, n. s. [respit, Fr.]

1. Reprieve; suspension of a capital sentence.

I had a hope to spend
Quiet, though sad, the respite of that day,
That must be mortal to us both.
Wisdom and eloquence in vain would plead
One moment's respite for the learned head;
Judges of writings and of men have died. Prior.

2. Pause; interval.

The fox then counsel'd th' ape, for to require Respite till morrow t'answer his desire. Spenser.
This customary war, which troubleth all the world, giveth little respite or breathing time of peace, doth usually borrow pretence from the necessity, to make itself appear more honest. Raleigh.
Some pause and respite only I require,
Till with my tears I shall have quench'd my fire.
Denham.

To RESPIRE, v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To relieve by a pause.

In what bow'r or shade
Thou find'st him, from the heat of noon retir'd,
To respire his day-labour with repast,
Or with repose. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. [Respiter, old Fr.] To suspend; to delay.

An act passed for the satisfaction of the officers of the king's army, by which they were promised payment, in November following; till which time they were to respite it, and be contented that the common soldiers and inferior officers should be satisfied upon their disbanding. Clarendon.

RESPLENDENCE, } n. s. [from resplen- RESPLENDENCY, } dent.] Lustre; brightness; splendour.

Son! thou in whom my glory I behold
In full resplendence, heir of all my might. Milton.
To neglect that supreme resplendency, that shines in God, for those dim representations of it in the creature, is as absurd as it were for a Persian to offer his sacrifice to a parhelion instead of adoring the sun. Boyle.

RESPLENDENT, adj. [resplendens, Lat.]

Bright; shining; having a beautiful lustre.

Rich in commodities, beautiful in situation, resplendent in all glory. Camden's Remains.

In giving an answer, the respondent should be in court, and personally admonished by the judge to answer the judge's interrogation. Ayliffe's Parerg.

2. One whose province, in a set disputa-tion, is to refute objections.

How becomingly does Philopolis exercise his office, and seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long practised moderator?
More.

The respondent may easily shew, that though wine may do all this, yet it may be finally hurtful to the soul and body of him. Watts's Logick.

RESPONSE, n. s. [responsus, Lat.]

1. An answer; commonly an oracular answer.

Mere natural piety has taught men to receive the responses of the gods with all possible veneration.
Government of the Tongue.

The oracles, which had before flourished, began to droop, and from giving responses in verse, descended to prose, and within a while were utterly silenced. Hammond.

2. [Respons, Fr.] Answer made by the congregation, speaking alternately with the priest in public worship.

To make his parishioners kneel and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

3. Reply to an objection in a formal disputation.

Let the respondent not turn opponent; except in retorting the argument upon his adversary after a direct response; and even this is allowed only as a confirmation of his own response. Watts.

RESPONSIBLE, adj. [from responsus, Lat.]

1. Answerable; accountable.

Heathens, who have certainly the talent of natural knowledge, are responsible for it. Hammond.
He as much satisfies the itch of telling news;
he as much persuades his hearers; and all this while he has his retreat secure, and stands not responsible for the truth of his relations.
Government of the Tongue.

2. Capable of discharging an obligation.

The necessity of a proportion of money to trade depends on money as a pledge, which writing cannot supply the place of; since the bill, I receive from one man, will not be accepted as security by another, he not knowing that the bill is legal, or that the man bound is honest or responsible. Locke.

RESPONSIBLENESS, n. s. [from responsi- ble.] State of being obliged or qualified to answer.

RESPONSION, n. s. [responsio, Lat.] The act of answering.

RESPONSIVE, adj. [responsif, Fr. from responsus, Lat.]

All things retir'd to rest,
Mind us of like repose. Milton.
My tost limbs are wearied into rest. Pope.

2. The final sleep; the quietness of death.

Oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
For David left him, when he went to rest,
His lyre. Dryden's Parson.

3. Stillness; cessation or absence of motion.

Putrefaction asketh rest; for the subtle motion, which putrefaction requireth, is disturbed by any agitation. Bacon.

What cause mov'd the Creator, in his holy rest,
So late to build? Milton.

All things past are equally and perfectly at rest;
and to this way of consideration of them are all one, whether they were before the world, or but yesterday. Locke.

4. Quiet; peace; cessation from disturbance.

Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart;
and ye shall find rest unto your souls. Matt.

He giveth you rest from all your enemies. Deut.
'Scap'd from such storms of pow'r, holding it best
To be below herself to be at rest. Dryden's Civ. War.
The root cut off, from whence these tumults rose,
He should have rest, the commonwealth repose.
Daniel.

Thus fenc'd, but not at rest or ease of mind.
Milton.

Where can a frail man hide him? in what arms
Shall a short life enjoy a little rest? Fanshawe.

With what a load of vengeance am I prest,
Yet never, never, can I hope for rest;
For when my heavy burden I remove,
The weight falls down, and crushes her I love.
Dryden.

Like the sun, it had light and agility; it knew no rest but in motion, no quiet but in activity.
South's Sermons.

Thither, where sinners may have rest, I go Pope.
The grave, where ev'n the great find rest. Pope.

5. Cessation from bodily labour.

There the weary be at rest. Job, iii. 17.
The Christian cluseth for his day of rest the first day of the week, that he might thereby profess himself a servant of God, who on the morning of that day vanquished Satan. Nelson.

6. Support; that on which any thing leans or rests.

Forth prick'd Clorinda from the throng,
And 'gainst Tancredie set her spear in rest.
Fairfax.

A man may think, that a musket may be shot off as well upon the arm, as upon a rest; but when all is done, good counsel setteth business straight.
Bacon.

Their vizors clos'd, their lances in the rest,
Or at the helmet pointed, or the crest;
They speed the race. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Take the handle in your right hand, and clasping the blade of it in your left, lean it steady upon the rest, holding the edge a little aslant over the work, so as a corner of the thin side of the chissel may bear upon the rest, and the flat side of the chissel may make a small angle with the rest.
Mozm.

7. Place of repose.

Sustain'd by him with comforts, till we end
In dust, our final rest and native home. Milton.

8. Final hope.

Sea fights have been final to the war, but this is, when princes set up their rest upon the hattle.
Bacon.

This answer would render their counsels of less reverence to the people, if upon those reasons, they should recede from what they had, with that confidence and disdain of the house of peers, demanded of the king; they therefore resolved to set up their rest upon that stake, and to go through with it, or perish in the attempt. Clarendon.

9. [Reste, Fr. quod restat, Lat.] Remainder; what remains.

Religion gives part of its reward in hand, the present comfort of having done our duty; and for the rest, it offers as the best security that heaven can give. Tillotson.

The pow'r in glory shone,
By her bent bow and her keen arrows known,
The rest a huntress. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

REST, adj. [restes, Fr. quod restat, Lat.]
Others; those not included in any proposition.

By description of their qualities, many things may be learned concerning the rest of the inhabitants. Abbot.

They had no other consideration of the publick, than that no disturbance might interrupt their quiet in their own days; and that the rest, who had larger hearts and more publick spirits, would extend their labour, activity, and advice only to secure the empire at home by all peaceable arts. Clarendon.

Plato, and the rest of the philosophers, acknowledged the unity, power, wisdom, goodness, and providence of the supreme God. Stillfleet.

Arm'd like the rest, the Trojan prince appears, And by his pious labour urges theirs. Dryden.

Upon so equal terms did they all stand, that no one had a fairer pretence of right than the rest. Woodward.

To REST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sleep; to be asleep; to slumber.

Fancy then retires
Into her private cell, when nature rests. Milton.

2. To sleep the final sleep; to die.

ἄρον ὄρον
Κοιμηταὶ δὴσσαν μὴ λέγεις εὐθὺς ἀνασθεῖς.
Glad I'd lay me down,
As in my mother's lap; there I should rest,
And sleep secure. Milton.

3. To be at quiet; to be at peace; to be without disturbance.

Thither let us tend
From off the tossing of these fiery waves,
There rest, if any rest can harbour there. Milton.

4. To be without motion; to be still.

Over the tent a cloud shall rest by day. Milton.

5. To be fixed in any state or opinion.

He will not rest content, though thou givest many gifts.
Every creature has a share in the common blessings of providence; and every creature should rest well satisfied with its proportion in them. L'Estrange.

After such a lord I rest secure,
Thou wilt no foreign reins or Trojan load endure. Dryden.

There yet survives the lawful heir
Of Sauch's blood, whom, when I shall produce,
I rest assur'd to see you pale with fear. Dryden.

6. To cease from labour.

Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest. Exodus xxiii. 12.
The ark went before, to search out a resting place for them. Numbers x. 33.

From work
Resting, he bless'd the seventh day. Milton.

When you enter into the regions of death, you rest from all your labours and your fears. Taylor.

7. To be satisfied; to acquiesce.

To urge the foe to battle,
Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair,
Were to refuse th' awards of providence,
And not to rest in heaven's determination. Addison.

8. To lean; to recline for support or quiet.

On him I rested,
And, not without consid'ring, fix'd my fate. Dryden.
Sometimes it rests upon testimony, when testimony of right has nothing to do; because it is easier to believe, than to be scientifically instructed. Locke.

The philosophical use of words conveys the precise notions of things, which the mind may rest upon, and be satisfied with, in its search after knowledge. Locke.

9. [Resto, Lat. rester, Fr.] To be left; to remain.

Fall'n he is; and now
What rests, but that the mortal sentence pass
On his transgression? Milton's Par. Lost
There resteth the comparative; that is, its being granted, that it is either lawful or binding, yet whether other things be not preferred before it, as extirpation of heresies. Bacon.

To REST. v. a.

1. To lay to rest.

Your piety has paid
All needful rites, to rest my wand'ring shade. Dryden.

2. To place as on a support.

As the vex'd world, to find repose, at last,
Itself into Augustus' arms did cast;
So England now doth, with like toil oppress,
Her weary head upon your bosom rest. Waller.

The protestants having well studied the fathers, were now willing to rest their cause, not upon scripture only, but fathers too; so far at least as the three first centuries. Waterland.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth,
A youth to fortune and to fame unknown. Gray.

RESTA'GNANT. adj. [restagnans, Lat.]

Remaining without flow or motion.
Upon the tops of high mountains, the air, which bears against the restagnant quicksilver, is less pressed by the less ponderous incumbent air. Boyle.

To RESTA'GNATE. v. n. [re and stagnate.]

To stand without flow.
The blood returns thick, and is apt to restagnate. Wiscman.

RESTAGNA'TION. n. s. [from restagnate.]

The state of standing without flow, course, or motion.

RESTAURA'TION. n. s. [restauo, Lat.]

The act of recovering to the former state.

Adam is in us an original cause of our nature, and of that corruption of nature which causeth death; Christ as the cause original of restauration to life. Hooker.

O my dear father! restauration hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakesp.
Spermatical parts will not admit a regeneration, much less will they receive an integral restauration. Brown.

To RESTEM. v. a. [re and stem.]

To force back against the current.
How they restem
Their backward course, bearing with frank appearance Towards Cyprus. Shakesp. Othello.

RESTFUL. adj. [rest and full.]

Quiet; being at rest.
Is not my arm of length,
That reacheth from the restful English court,
As far as Calais to my uncle's head? Shakesp.

RESTH'ARROW. n. s. A plant.

RESTIFF. adj. [restif, Fr. restivo, Ital.]

1. Unwilling to stir; resolute against going forward; obstinate; stubborn. It is originally used of an horse, that though not wearied, will not be driven forward.

All, who before him did ascend the throne,
Labour'd to draw three restive nations on. Roscom.
This restiff stubbornness is never to be excused under any pretence whatsoever. L'Estrange.

Some, with studious care,
Their restiff steeds in sandy plains prepare. Dryden.
The archangel, when discord was restive, and would not be drawn from her beloved monastery with fair words, drags her out with many stripes. Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.

So James the drowsy genius wakes
Of Britain, long entrane'd in charms,
Restiff, and slumbering on its arms. Dryden.

The pamp'd colt will discipline disdain,
Impatient of the lash, and restiff to the rein. Dryden.

2. Being at rest; being less in motion.

Not used.
Palsies oftentimes happen upon the left side; the most vigorous part protecting itself, and protruding the matter upon the weaker and restive side. Brown's Vulg. Err.

RESTIFNESS. n. s. [from restiff.] Obstinate reluctance.

Overt virtues bring forth praise; but secret virtues bring forth fortune: certain deliveries of a man's self, which the Spanish name disembotura, partly expresseth, where there be not stands nor restiveness in a man's nature; but the wheels of his mind keep way with the wheels of his fortune. Bacon.

That it gave occasion to some men's further restiveness, is imputable to their own depraved tempers. King Charles.

RESTINCTION. n. s. [restinctus, Lat.]

The act of extinguishing.

RESTITU'TION. n. s. [restitutio, Lat.]

1. The act of restoring what is lost or taken away.

To subdue an usurper, should be no unjust enterprise or wrongful war, but a restitution of ancient rights unto the crown of England, from whence they were most unjustly expelled and long kept out. Spenser on Ireland.

He would pawn his fortunes
To hopeless restitution, so he might Be call'd your vanquisher. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He restitution to the value makes;
Nor joy in his extorted treasure takes. Sandys.

Whoever is an effective real cause of doing a neighbour wrong, by what instrument soever he does it, is bound to make restitution. Taylor.

In case our offence against God hath been complicated with injury to men, it is but reasonable we should make restitution. Tillotson.

A great man, who has never been known willingly to pay a just debt, ought not all of a sudden to be introduced, making restitution of thousands he has cheated: let it suffice to pay twenty pounds to a friend, who has lost his note. Arbutnot.

2. The act of recovering its former state or posture.

In the woody parts of plants, which are their bones, the principles are so compounded, as to make them flexible without joints, and also elastic; that so their roots may yield to stones, and their trunks to the wind, with a power of restitution. Grew.

RESTLESS. adj. [from rest.]

1. Being without sleep.
Restless he pass'd the remnants of the night,
Till the fresh air proclaim'd the morning nigh;
And burning ships, the martyrs of the fight,
With paler fires beheld the eastern sky. Dryden.

2. Unquiet; without peace.
Ease to the body some, none to the mind
From restless thoughts, that like a deadly swarm
Of hornets arm'd, no sooner found alone,
But rush upon me thronging, and present
Times past, what once I was, and what I'm now. Milton.

Could we not wake from that lethargick dream,
But to be restless in a worse extreme? Denham.

We find our souls disordered and restless, tossed and disquieted by passions, ever seeking happiness in the enjoyments of this world, and ever missing what they seek. Atterbury.

What tongue can speak the restless monarch's woes,
When God and Nathan were declar'd his foes? Prior.

3. Unconstant; unsettled.

He was stout of courage, strong of hand,
Bold was his heart, and restless was his spright. Fairf.
He's proud, fantastick, apt to change,
Restless at home, and ever prone to range. Dryden.

4. Not still; in continual motion.

How could nature on their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day
Repeated? Milton.

RESTLESSLY. adv. [from restless.]

Without rest; unquietly.
When the mind casis and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, strains this power of the soul to apprehend, that to judge, another to divide, a fourth to remember: thus tracing out the nice and scarce observable difference of some things, and the real agreement of others; at length it brings all the ends of a long hypothesis together. South.

R E S

RESTLESSNESS. n. s. [from restless.]

1. Want of sleep.
Restlessness and intermission from sleep, grieved persons are molested with, whereby the blood is dried. Harvey.

2. Want of rest; inquietness.
Let him keep the rest,
But keep them with repining restlessness!
Let him be rich and weary, that at least,
If goodness lead him not, yet weariness
May toss him to my breast. Herbert.
I sought my bed, in hopes relief to find,
But restlessness was mistress of my mind. Harte.

3. Motion; agitation.
The trembling restlessness of the needle, in any but the north point of the compass, manifests its inclination to the pole; which its wavering and its rest bear equal witness to. Boyle.

RESTORABLE. adj. [from restore.] What may be restored.
By cutting turf without any regularity, great quantities of restorable land are made utterly desperate. Swift.

RESTORATION. n. s. [from restore; restoration, Fr.]

1. The act of replacing in a former state. This is properly restoration.
Hail, royal Albion, hail to thee,
Thy longing people's expectation!
Sent from the gods to set us free
From bondage and from usurpation:
Behold the different climes agree,
Rejoicing in thy restoration. Dryden's Allion.
The Athenians, now deprived of the only person that was able to recover their losses, repent of their rashness, and endeavour in vain for his restoration. Swift.

2. Recovery.
The change is great in this restoration of the man, from a state of spiritual darkness, to a capacity of perceiving divine truth. Rogers.

RESTORATIVE. adj. [from restore.] That which has the power to recruit life.
Their tastes no knowledge works at least of evil;
But life preserves, destroys life's enemy,
Hunger, with sweet restorative delight. Milton.

RESTORATIVE. n. s. [from restore.] A medicine that has the power of recruiting life.
I will kiss thy lips;
Haply some poison yet doth hang on them,
To make me die with a restorative. Shakesp.
God saw it necessary by such mortifications to quench the boundless rage of an insatiable intemperance, to make the weakness of the flesh the physick and restorative of the spirit. South's Sermons.
Asses milk is an excellent restorative in consumptions. Mortimer.
He prescribes an English gallon of asses milk, especially as a restorative. Arbutnot.

To RESTORE. v. a. [restaurer, Fr. restauro, Lat.]

1. To give back what has been lost or taken away.
Restore the man his wife. Genesis, xx. 7.

She lands him on his native shores,
And to his father's longing arms restores. Dryden.

2. To bring back.
The father banish'd virtue shall restore,
And crimes shall tread the guilty world no more. Dryden.
Thus pencils can, by one slight touch, restore Smiles to that changed face, that wept before. Dryden.

R E S

3. To retrieve; to bring back from degeneration, declension, or ruin, to its former estate.

Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain the blissful seat. Milton.
Th' archangel thus'd
Between the world destroy'd and world restor'd. Milton.

These artificial experiments are but so many essays, whereby men attempt to restore themselves from the first general curse inflicted upon their labours. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
In his Odysseys, Homer explains, that the hardest difficulties may be overcome by labour, and our fortune restored after the severest afflictions. Prior.

4. To cure; to recover from disease.
Garth, faster than a plague destroys, restores. Gran.

5. To recover passages in books from corruption.

RESTORER. n. s. [from restore.] One that restores; one that recovers the lost, or repairs the decayed.

Next to the Son,
Destin'd restorer of mankind, by whom
New heav'n and earth shall to the ages rise. Milton.
I foretel you, as the restorer of poetry. Dryden.
Here are ten thousand persons reduced to the necessity of a low diet and moderate exercise, who are the only great restorers of our breed, without which, the nation would in an age become one great hospital. Swift.

To RESTRAIN. v. a. [restreindre, Fr. restringo, Lat.]

1. To withhold; to keep in.
If she restrain'd the riots of your followers,
'Tis to such wholesome end as clears her. Shakesp.
The gods will plague thee,
That thou restrain'st from me the duty, which
To a mother's part belongs. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

2. To repress; to keep in awe.
The law of nature would be in vain, if there were nobody that, in the state of nature, had a power to execute that law, and thereby preserve the innocent and restrain offenders. Locke.
That all men may be restrained from doing hurt to one another, the execution of the law of nature is in that state put into every man's hand, whereby every one has a right to punish the transgressors to such a degree as may hinder its violation. Locke.

3. To suppress; to hinder; to repress.
Merciful powers!
Restrain in me the cursed thoughts, that nature
Gives way to in repose. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Compassion gave him up to tears
A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess. Milt.

4. To abridge.
Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me oft forbearance. Shakesp.
Though they two were committed, at least restrained of their liberty, yet this discovered too much of the humour of the court. Clarendon.

5. To pull tight.
His horse, with a half checked bit, and a head stall of sheep's leather, which being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often horst, and now repaired with knots. Shakesp.

6. To limit; to confine.
We restrain it to those only duties, which all men, by force of natural wit, understand to be such duties as concern all men. Hooker.
Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South.
Not only a metaphysical or natural, but a moral universality also is to be restrained by a part of the predicate; as all the Italians are politicians; that is, those among the Italians, who are politicians, are subtle politicians; i. e. they are generally so. Hatt's Logic.

R E S

RESTRAINABLE. adj. [from restrain.] Capable to be restrained.

Therein we must not deny a liberty; nor is the hand of the painter more restrainable, than the pen of the poet. Broun.

RESTRAIN'EDLY. adv. [from restrained.] With restraint; without latitude.

That Christ's dying for all is the express doctrine of the scripture, is manifested by the world, which is a word of the widest extent, and although it be sometimes used more restrainedly, yet never doth signify a far smaller disproportionable part of the world. Hammond.

RESTRAIN'NER. n. s. [from restrain.] One that restrains; one that withholds.

If nothing can relieve us, we must with patience submit unto that restraint, and expect the will of the restrainer. Broun's Vulg. Err.

RESTRAIN'T. n. s. [from restrain; restraint, Fr.]

1. Abridgment of liberty.
She will well excuse,
Why at this time the doors are barr'd against you,
Depart in patience,
And about evening come yourself alone,
To know the reason of this strange restraint. Shak.
I request
Th' enfranchisement of Arthur, whose restraint
Doth move the murr'ring lips of discontent. Shak.
It is to no purpose to lay restraints or give privileges to men, in such general terms, as the particular persons concerned cannot be known. Locke.
I think it a manifest disadvantage, and a great restraint upon us. Felton on the Classics.

2. Prohibition.
What mov'd our parents to transgress his will
For one restraint, lords of the world besides? Milt.

3. Limitation; restriction.
If all were granted, yet it must be maintained within any bold restraints, far otherwise than it is received. Broun.

4. Repression; hindrance of will; act of withholding; state of being withheld.
There is no restraint to the Lord to save, by many or by few. 1 Samuel, xiv. 6.
Thus it shall befall
Him who, to worth in woman overtrusting,
Lets her will rule; restraint she will not brook. Milton.
Is there any thing, which reflects a greater lustre upon a man's person, than a severe temperance and a restraint of himself from vicious pleasures? South.

To RESTRICT. v. a. [restrictus, Lat.]
To limit; to confine. A word scarce English.
In the enumeration of constitutions in this chapter, there is not one that can be limited and restricted by such a distinction, nor can perhaps the same person, in different circumstances, be properly confined to one or the other. Arbutnot.

RESTRICTION. n. s. [restriction, Fr.] Confinement; limitation.

This is to have the same restriction with all other recreations, that it be made a divertisement, not a trade. Government of the Tongue.
Iron manufacture, of all others, ought the least to be encouraged in Ireland; or, if it be, it requires the most restriction to certain places. Temple.
All duties are matters of conscience; with this restriction, that a superior obligation suspends the force of an inferior. L'Estrange.
Each other gift, which God on man bestows,
Its proper bounds and due restriction knows;
To one fix'd purpose dedicates its power. Prior.
Celsus's role, with the proper restrictions, is good for people in health. Arbutnot.

RESTRI'CTIVE. adj. [from restrict.]

1. Expressing limitation.

R E S

They, who would make the restrictive particle belong to the latter clause, and not to the first, do not attend to the reason. Stillingfleet.

2. [Restrictif, Fr.] Styptick; astringent.
I applied a plaister over it, made up with my common restrictive powder. Wisean's Surgery.

RESTRICTIVELY. adv. [from restrictive.]
With limitation.

All speech, tending to the glory of God or the good of man, is aright directed; which is not to be understood so restrictively, as if nothing but divinity, or necessary concerns of life, may lawfully be brought into discourse. Government of the Tongue.

To RESTRI'NGE. v. a. [restringo, Lat.]
To confine; to contract; to astringe.

RESTRI'NGENT. n. s. [restringens, Lat. restringent, Fr.] That which hath the power of contracting; styptick.

The two latter indicate phlebotomy for revulsion, restringents to stench, and incrasivatives to thicken the blood. Harvey.

RESTY. adj. [restif Fr.] Obstinate in standing still. See RESTIFF.

Come, our stomachs
Will make what's homely savoury, weariness
Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth Finds the down pillow hard. Shakesp.

Have not other hands been tried and found resty? but we stick at nothing. Davenant.

Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

To RESUBLI'ME. v. a. [re and sublime.] To sublime another time.

When mercury sublimate is resublimed with fresh mercury, it becomes mercurius dulcis, which is a white tasteless earth scarce dissolvable in water, and mercurius dulcis resublimat with spirit of salt returns into mercury sublimate. Newton.

To RESU'LT. v. n. [resulter, Fr. resulto, Lat.]

1. To fly back.

With many a weary step, and many a groan,
Up the high hill he heaves a huge round stone;
The huge round stone, resulting with a bound,
Thunders impetuous down, and snoaks along the ground. Pope's Odyssey.

2. [Resulter, Fr.] To rise as a consequence; to be produced as the effect of causes jointly concurring.

Rue prospers much, if set by a fig-tree; which is caused, not by reason of friendship, but by extraction of a contrary juice; the one drawing juice fit to result sweet, the other bitter. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Such huge extremes, when nature doth unite,
Wonder from thence results, from thence delight. Denham.

Upon the dissolution of the first earth, this very face of things would immediately result. Buract.
Pleasure and peace do naturally result from a holy and good life. Tillotson's Sermons.

The horror of an object may overbear the pleasure resulting from its greatness. Addison.

Their effects are often very disproportionable to the principles and parts that result from the analysis. Baker.

3. To arise as a conclusion from premises.

RESU'LT. n. s. [from the verb]

1. Resilience; act of flying back.

Sound is produced between the string and the air, by the return or the result of the string, which was strained by the touch to his former place. Bacon.

2. Consequence; effect produced by the concurrence of co-operating causes.

Did my judgment tell me, that the propositions sent to me were the results of the major part of their votes, I should then not suspect my own judgment for not speedily concurring with them. King Charles.

As in perfumes, scents'd with art and cost,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost,

R E S

Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all;
So she was all a sweet, whose ev'ry part,
In due proportion mix'd, proclaim'd the maker's art. Dryden.

Buying of land is the result of a full and satiated gain: men in trade seldom lay money out upon land, till their profit has brought in more than trade can employ. Locke.

3. Inference from premises.
These things are a result or judgment upon fact. South.

4. Resolve; decision. Improper.
Rude, passionate, and mistaken results have, at certain times, fallen from great assemblies. Swift.

RESU'TANCE. n. s. [resultance, Fr.] The act of resulting.

RESU'MABLE. adj. [from resume.] What may be taken back.

This was but an indulgence, and therefore resumable by the victor, unless there intervened any capitulation to the contrary. Hale.

To RESU'ME. v. a. [resumo, Lat.]

1. To take back what has been given.
The sun, like this, from which our sight we have,
Gaz'd on too long, resumes the light he gave. Denh.
Sees not my love, how time resumes
The glory which he lent these flow'rs;
Though none shou'd taste of their perfumes,
Yet must they live but some few hours:
Time, what we forbear, devours. Waller.

2. To take back what has been taken away.
That opportunity,
Which then they had to take from's, to resume
We have again. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
They resume what has been obtained fraudulently, by surprise and upon wrong suggestions. Davenant.

3. To take again.
He'll enter into glory and resume his seat. Milton.
At this, with look serene, he rais'd his head,
Reason resum'd her place and passion fled. Dryden.

4. Dryden uses it with again, but improperly, unless the resumption be repeated.
To him our common grandsire of the main
Had giv'n to change his form, and chang'd, resume again. Dryden.

5. To begin again what was broken off:
as, to resume a discourse.

RESU'MPTION. n. s. [resomption, Fr. resumptus, Lat.] The act of resuming.

If there be any fault, it is the resumption or the dwelling too long upon his arguments. Denham.
The universal voice of the people seeming to call for some kind of resumption, the writer of these papers thought it might not be unseasonable to publish a discourse upon grants. Davenant.

RESU'MPTIVE. adj. [resumptus, Lat.]
Taking back.

RESUPINA'TION. n. s. [resupino, Lat.]
The act of lying on the back.

To RESURVEY. v. a. [re and survey.] To review; to survey again.

I have, with cursory eye, o'erlanc'd the articles;
Appoint some of your council presently
To sit with us, once more with better heed
To resurvey them. Shakesp. Henry V.

RESURRECTION. n. s. [resurrection, Fr. resurrectum, Lat.] Revival from the dead; return from the grave.

The Sadducees were grieved, that they taught, and preached through Jesus the resurrection from the dead. Acts iv. 2.

Nor after resurrection shall he stay Longer on earth, than certain times 't appear
To his disciples. Milton.
He triumphs in his agonies, whilst the soul springs forward to the great object which she has always had in view, and leaves the body with an expectation of being remitted to her in a glorious and joyful resurrection. Addison's Spectator.

R E T

Perhaps there was nothing ever done in all past ages, and which was not a publick fact, so well attested as the resurrection of Christ. Watts.

To RESUSCITATE. v. a. [resuscito, Lat.]

no cost to make a delicious retreat. L'Estrange.
Holy retreat, sitthence no female thither Must dare approach, from the inferior reptile
To woman, form divine. Prior.

4. Place of security.
This place our dungeon, not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton.
That pleasing shade they sought, a soft retreat
From sudden April showers, a shelter from the heat. Dryden.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet make these retreats more like the dens of robbers, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

5. Act of retiring before a superiour force.
Retreat is less than flight.

Honourable retreats are no ways inferior to brave charges; as having less of fortune, more of discipline, and as much of valour. Bacon.

Unmov'd
With dread of death to flight or foul retreat. Milt.
No thought of flight,
None of retreat. Milton.

We ought to retrench those superfluous expences to qualify ourselves for the exercise of charity. Atterbury.

2. To confine. Improper.

In some reigns, they are for a power and obedience that is unlimited; and in others, are for retrenching within the narrowest bounds, the authority of the princes, and the allegiance of the subject. Addison's Freeholder.

To RETRENCH. v. n. To live with less magnificence or expence.

Can I retrench? yes, nightly well,
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house, with trees a-row,
And, like its master, very low. Pope.

RETRENCHMENT. n. s. [retranchement, Fr. from retrench.]

1. The act of lopping away.

I had studied Virgil's design, his judicious management of the figures, the sober retranchments of his sense, which always leaves somewhat to gratify our imagination, on which it may enlarge at pleasure. Dryden's Dedication to Virgil.
The want of vowels in our language has been the general complaint of our politest authors, who nevertheless have made these retranchments, and consequently increased our former scarcity. Addis.
I would rather be an advocate for the retranchment, than the increase of this charity. Atterbury.

2. Fortification.

To RETRIBUTE. v. a. [retribuio, Lat. retribuere, Fr.] To pay back; to make repayment of.

Both the will and power to serve him are his upon so many scores, that we are unable to retribute, unless we do restore; and all the duties we can pay our Maker are less properly requitals than restitutions. Boyle.

In the state of nature, a man comes by no arbitrary power to use a criminal, but only to retribute to him, so far as calm reason and conscience dictate, what is proportionate to his transgression. Locke.

RETRIBUTER. n. s. [from retribute.] One that makes retribution.

RETRIBUTION. n. s. [retribution, Fr. from retribute.] Repayment; return accommodated to the action.

The king thought he had not remunerated his people sufficiently with good laws, which evermore was his retribution for treasure. Bacon's Hen. VII.

In good offices and due retributions, we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged to lidge and dodge in the amends. Hall.

All who have their reward on earth, the fruits Of painful superstition, and blind zeal, Nought seeking but the praise of men, here find Fit retribution, empty as their deeds. Milton.

There is no nation, though plunged into never such gross idolatry, but has some awful sense of a deity, and a persuasion of a state of retribution to men after this life. South.

It is a strong argument for a state of retribution hereafter, that in this world virtuous persons are very often unfortunate, and vicious persons prosperous. Addison's Spectator.

RETRIBUTORY. } adj. [from retribute.]

Your intent
In going back to school to Wittenberg,
It is most retrograde to our desire. Shakesp.

3. In astronomy, planets are retrograde, when, by their proper motion in the zodiack, they move backward, and contrary to the succession of the signs; as from the second degree of Aries to the first: but this retrogradation is only apparent and occasioned by the observer's eye being placed on the earth; for to an eye at the sun, the planet will appear always direct, and never either stationary or retrograde. Harris.

Their wand'ring course, now high, now low,
then hid,

Progressive, retrograde, or standing still,
In six thou seest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Two geomantick figures were display'd;
One when direct, and one when retrograde. Dryd.

To RETROGRADE. v. n. [retrograder, Fr. retro and gradior, Lat.] To go backward.

The race and period of all things here is to turn things more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

RETROGRESSION. n. s. [retro and gressus, Lat.] The act of going backwards.

The account, established upon the rise and descent of the stars, can be no reasonable rule unto distant nations, and by reason of their retrogression, but temporary unto any one. Brown.

RETROMINGENCY. n. s. [retro and mingo, Lat.] The quality of staling backwards.

The last foundation was, retromingency, or pissing backwards; for men observing both sexes to urine backwards, or averily between their legs, they might conceive there were feminine parts in both. Brown's Vulg. Err.

RETROMINGENT. adj. [retro and mingens, Lat.] Staling backward.

By reason of the backward position of the feminine parts of quadrupeds, they can hardly admit the substitution of masculine generations, except it be in retromingents. Brown.

RETROSPECT. n. s. [retro and specio, Lat.] Look thrown upon things behind or things past.

As you arraign his majesty by retrospect, so you condemn his government by second sight. Addison's Freeholder.

RETROSPECTION. n. s. [from retrospect.] Act or faculty of looking backwards.

Can'st thou take delight in viewing
This poorisle's approaching ruin,
When thy retrospection vast Sees the glorious ages past?
Happy nation were we blind,
Or had only eyes behind. Swift.

RETROSPECTIVE. adj. [from retrospect.] Looking backwards.

In vain the grave, with retrospective eye,
Would from th' apparent what conclude the why. Pope.

To RETU'ND. v. a. [retundo, Lat.] To blunt; to turn.

Covered with skin and hair keeps it warm, being naturally a very cold part, and also to quench and dissipate the force of any stroke that shall be dealt it, and retund the edge of any weapon. Ray.

5. Repayment of price laid out in commodities for sale.
As for any merchandise you have bought, ye shall have your return in merchandize or gold. Bacon.
As to roots accelerated in their ripening, there is the high price that those things bear, and the swiftness of their returns; for, in some grounds, a radish comes in a month, that in others will not come in two, and so make double returns. Bacon.
6. Profit; advantage.
The fruit, from many days of recreation, is very little; but from these few hours we spend in prayer, the return is great. Taylor.
7. Remittance; payment from a distant place.
Within these two months, I do expect return Of thrice three times the value of this bond. Shak.
Brokers cannot have less money by them, than one twentieth part of their yearly returns. Locke.
8. Repayment; retribution; requital.
You made my liberty your late request: Is no return due from a grateful breast? I grow impatient, till I find some way, Great offices, with greater to repay. Dryden.
Since these are some of the returns which we made to God after obtaining our successes, can we reasonably presume, that we are in the favour of God?
Nothing better becomes a person in a publick character, than such a publick spirit; nor is there any thing likely to procure him larger returns of esteem. Atterbury.
Returns, like these, our mistress bids us make, When from a foreign prince a gift her Britons take. Prior.
Ungrateful lord!
Would'st thou invade my life, as a return For proffer'd love? Rowe.

Light was the wound, the prince's care unknown, She might not, would not yet reveal her own. Waller.
The answer to one who asked what time was, si non rogas intelligo; that is, the more I think of time, the less I understand it; might persuade one, that time which reveals all other things, is itself not to be discovered. Locke.
Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light, A blaze of glory that forbids the sight; O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd, And search no further than thyself reveal'd. Dryd.
2. To impart from heaven.
The sufferings of this life are not to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us. Romans viii. 18.
- REVEALER. n. s. [from reveal.]
1. Discoverer; one that shows or makes known.
The habit of faith in divinity is an argument of things unseen, as a stable ascent onto things invisible, upon authority of the divine revealer. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The lives of the revealers may be justly set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree. Atterbury.
2. One that discovers to view.
He brought a taper; the revealer light Expos'd both crime and criminal to sight. Dryden.
- TO REVEL. v. n. [Skinner derives it from reveller, Fr. to awake; Mr. Lye from ravellen, Dut. to rove loosely about, which is much countenanced by the old phrase, revel-rout.] To feast with loose and clamorous merriment.
My honey love, Will we return unto thy father's house, And revel it as bravely as the best. Shakesp.
We'll keep no great ado—a friend or two. Tybalt being slain so late, It may be thought we held him carelessly, Being our kinsman, if we revel much. Shakesp.
Antony, that revels long o' nights, Is up. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
We shall have revelling to-night; I will assume thy part in some disguise. Shakesp.
He can report you more odd tales Of our outlaw Robin Hood, That revel'd here in Sherwood, Though he ne'er shot in his bow. Ben Jonson.
Were the doctrine new, That the earth mov'd, this day would make it true; For every part to dance and revel goes, They tread the air, and fall not where they rose. Donne.
When'er I revel'd in the women's bow'r's; For first I sought her but at looser hours: The apples she had gather'd smelt most sweet. Prior.
- REVEL. n. s. [from the verb.] A feast with loose and noisy jollity.
Let them pinch th' unclean knight,

- And ask him, why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread? Shakesp.

Come, Antony and young Octavius, Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius. Shakesp.
It is a quarrel most unnatural, To be reveng'd on him that loveth thee. Shakesp.
Northumberland slew thy father; And thine, lord Clifford; and you vow'd revenge. —If I be not, heav'n's be reveng'd on me! Shakesp.
Edom hath revenged himself upon Judah. Ezekiel, xxv. 12.
O Lord, visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors. Jeremiah.
Who shall come to stand against thee, to be revenged for the unrighteous men? Wisdom, xii. 12.
Your fury of a wife, Not yet content to be reveng'd on you, Th' agents of your passion will pursue. Dryden.
- REVENGE. n. s. [revenge, revanche, Fr.]
1. Return of an injury.
May we, with the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with further revenge? Shakesp.
I will make nine arrows drunk with blood; from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. Deut. xxxii. 42.

Deformed persons are commonly even with nature; for as nature has done ill by them, so they do by nature; being void of natural affection, they have their revenge of nature. Bacon.

What will not ambition and revenge descend to? Milton.

The satyr in a rage
Forgets his business is to laugh and bite,
And will of death and dire revenges write. Dryd.

Draco, the Athenian lawgiver, granted an impunity to any person that took revenge upon an adulterer. Broome.

2. The passion of vengeance; desire of hurting one from whom hurt has been received.

Revenge burn in them: for their dear causes
Would, to the bleeding and the grim alarm, Excite the mortified man. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Revenge is an act of passion; vengeance of justice. Injuries are revenged, crimes are avenged. This distinction is perhaps not always preserved.

REVENGEFUL. adj. [from revenge.] Vindictive; full of revenge; full of vengeance.

May my hands
Never brandish more vengeful steel
Over the glittering helmet of my foe. Shakesp.

If thy vengeful heart cannot forgive,
Lo! here I lend thee this sharp-pointed sword,
Which hide in this true breast. Shakesp.

Into my borders now Jarbas falls,
And my vengeful brother scales the walls. Denh.
Repenting England, this vengeful day,
To Philip's manes did an offering bring. Dryden

REVENGEFULLY. adv. [from vengeful.] Vindictively.

He smil'd vengefully, and leap'd
Upon the floor; thence gazing at the skies,
His eye-balls fiery red, and glowing vengeance;
Gods, I accuse you not. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

REVENGER. n. s. [from revenge.]

1. One who revenges; one who wreaks his own or another's injuries.

May be, that better reason will assuage
The rash revenger's heat; words, will dispos'd,
Have secret pow'r t' appease enflamed rage. Spenser.

I do not know,
Wherefore my father should revengers want,
Having a son and friends. Shakesp.

So shall the great revenger ruinate
Him and his issue, by a dreadful fate. Sandys.
Morocco's monarch

Had come in person, to have seen and known
The injur'd world's revenger and his own. Waller.

2. One who punishes crimes.

What government can be imagined, without judicial proceedings? and what methods of judicature, without a religious oath, which supposes an omniscient being, as conscious to its falsehood or truth, and a revenger of perjury? Bentley.

REVENGEMENT. n. s. [from revenge.]
Vengeance; return of an injury.

It may dwell
In her son's flesh to mind revengement,
And be for all chaste dames an endless monument. Spenser.

By the perclose of the same verse, vagabond is understood for such a one as travellith in fear of revengement. Raleigh.

REVENGINGLY. adv. [from revenging.]
With vengeance; vindictively.

I've hel'd a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't Revengingly enfeebles me. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

REVENUE. n. s. [revenu, Fr. Its accent is uncertain.] Income; annual profits received from lands or other funds.

They privily send over unto them the revenues
wherewith they are there maintained. Spenser.

She bears a duke's revenues on her back,
And in her heart scorns our poverty. Shakesp.

Only I retain

The name and all th' addition to a king;

The sway, revenue, beloved sois, be yours. Shak.

Many offices are of so small revenue, as not to furnish a man with what is sufficient for the support of his life. Temple.

If the woman could have been contented with golden eggs, she might have kept that revenue on still. L'Estrange.

His vassals easy, and the owner blest,
They pay a trifle and enjoy the rest;

Not so a nation's revenues are paid;

The servant's faults are on the master laid. Swift.

When men grow great from their revenue spent,
And fly from bailiffs into parliament. Young.

To REVERB. v. a. [reverbero, Lat.] To resound; to reverberate. Not in use.

Reserve thy state, with better judgment check
This hideous rashness:

The youngest daughter does not love thee least;
Nor are those empty hearted, whose loud sound Reverbs no hollowness. Shakesp. King Lear.

REVERBERANT. adj. [reverberans, Lat.]

Resounding; beating back. The reading in the following passage should be,

I think, reverberant.

Hallow your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

To REVERBERATE. v. a. [reverbero,
Lat. reverberer, Fr.]

1. To beat back.

Nor doth he know them for aught,
Till he behold them formed in th' applause
Where they're extended; which, like an arch, reverberates

The sound again. Shakesp.

As the sight of the eye is like a glass, so is the ear a sinuous cave, with a hard bone, to stop and reverberate the sound. Bacon.

As we, to improve the nobler kinds of sounds, are at the expence of walls to receive and reverberate
the faint rays of the sun, so we, by the help of a good soil, equal the production of warmer countries. Swift.

2. To heat in an intense furnace, where the flame is reverberated upon the matter to be melted or cleaned.

Crocus martis, that is steel corroded with vinegar or sulphur, and after reverberated with fire, the loadstone will not attract. Brown.

To REVERBERATE. v. n.

1. To be driven back; to bound back.

The rays of royal majesty reverberated so strongly upon Villeroy, that they dispelled all clouds. Howel.

2. To resound.

Start
And echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And ev'n at hand a drum is ready brae'd,
That shall reverberate all as well as thine. Shakesp.

REVERBERATION. n. s. [reverberation, Fr. from reverberate.] The act of beating or driving back.

To the reflection of visibles, small glasses suffice; but to the reverberation of audibles, are required greater spaces. Bacon.

The first repetitions follow very thick; for two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, like the several reverberations of the same image from two opposite looking-glasses. Addison.

REVERBERATORY. adj. [reverberatoire,
Fr.] Returning; beating back.

Good lime may be made of all kinds of flints, but they are hard to burn, except in a reverbera- tory kiln. Morton.

To REVERE. v. a. [revere, Fr. revereor, Lat.] To reverence; to honour; to venerate; to regard with awe.

An emperor often stamped on his coins the face or ornaments of his colleague, and we may suppose Lucius Verus would omit no opportunity of doing honour to Marcus Aurelius, whom he rather revered as his father, than treated as his partner in the empire. Addison's Remarks on Italy.

Jove shall again revere your pow'r,

And rise a swan, or fall a show'r. Prior.

'T'ought 'em how clemency made pow'r revere'd,
And that the prince belov'd was truly fear'd. Prior.

REVERENCE. n. s. [reverence, Fr. reveren- tia, Lat.]

1. Veneration; respect; awful regard.

When quarrels and factions are carried openly,
it is a sign the reverence of government is lost.

Bacon's Essays.

Higher of the genial bed,
And with mysterious reverence I deem. Milton.

In your prayers use reverent postures and the lowest gestures of humility, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot exceed. Taylor.

A poet cannot have too great a reverence for readers. Dryden.

The fear acceptable to God, is a filial fear; is an awful reverence of the divine nature, proceeding from a just esteem of his perfections, which produces in us an inclination to his service, and an unwillingness to offend him. Rogers.

2. An act of obeisance; bow; courtesy.

Now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence. Shakesp.

He led her eas'ly forth,
Where Godfrey sat among his lords and peers,
She reverence did, then blush'd as one dismay'd. Fairfax.

Had not men the hoary heads rever'd,
Or boys paid reverence when a man appear'd,
Both must have dy'd. Dryden's Juvenal.

Upstarts the bellam,
And reverence made, accosted thus the queen. Dry.

The monarch
Commands into the court the beauteous Emily:
So call'd, she came; the senate rose and paid Becoming reverence to the royal maid. Dryden.

3. Title of the clergy.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to. Shakesp.

4. Poetical title of a father.

O my dear father! let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made. Shakesp.

To REVERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To regard with reverence; to regard with awful respect.

Those that I reverence, those I fear, the wise;
At fools I laugh, nor fear them. Shakesp.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful roles
To loathsome sickness, worthily since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milt.

He slew Action, but despoil'd him not;
Nor in his hate the funeral rites forgot;
Arm'd as he was, he sent him whole below,
And reverenc'd thus the manes of his foe. Dryden.

As his goodness will forbid us to dread him as slaves, so his majesty will command us to reverence him as sons. Rogers.

He presents every one so often before God in his prayers, that he never thinks he can esteem, reverence, or serve those enough, for whom he implores so many mercies from God. Lavo.

REVERENCER. n. s. [from reverence.]
One who regards with reverence.

The Athenians, quite sunk in their affairs, had little commerce with the rest of Greece, and were become great reverencers of crowned heads. Swift.

REVEREND. adj. [reverend, Fr. reveren- dis, Lat.]

1. Venerable; deserving reverence; enforcing respect by his appearance.

Let his lack of years be no impediment, to let him lack a reverend estimation. Shakesp.

Reverend and gracious senators. Shakesp.

Onias, who had been high priest, reverend in conversation, and gentle in condition, prayed for the Jews. 2 Mac. xv. 12.

A parish priest was of the pilgrim train,
An awful, reverend and religious man,

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,
And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.
A reverend sire among them came,
Who preach'd conversion and repentance. Milton.
Reverend old man! to here confest he stands. Pope.

2. The honorary epithet of the clergy.
Westyle a clergyman reverend; a bishop right reverend; an archbishop most reverend.

REVERENT. adj. [reverens, Lat.] Humble; expressing submission; testifying veneration.

They forthwith to the place
Repairing, where he judg'd them, prostrate fell Before him reverent. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Meet then the senior, far renown'd for sense,
With rev'rent awe, but decent confidence. Pope.

REVERENTIAL. adj. [reverentielle, Fr.
from reverent.] Expressing reverence; proceeding from awe and veneration.

That oaths made in reverential fear
Of love and his wrath may any forswear. Donne.
The least degree of contempt weakens religion;
it properly consisting in a reverential esteem of things sacred. South.

The reason of the institution being forgot, the after-ages perverted it, supposing only a reverent gratitude paid to the earth as the common parent. Hoodward's Nat. Hist.

All look up, with reverential awe,
At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law. Pope.

REVERENTIALLY. adv. [from reverent- tial.] With show of reverence.

The Jews, reverentially declining the situation of their temple, place their beds from North to South. Brown.

REVERENTLY. adv. [from reverent.]
Respectfully; with awe; with reverence.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently. Shak.
His disciples here,

By their great master sent to preach him every where,

Most reverently receiv'd. Drayton.

To nearest ports their shatter'd ships repair,
Where by our dreadful cannon they lay aw'd;
So reverently men quit th' open air,
When thunder speaks the angry gods abroad. Dryden.

Then down with all thy boasted volumes, down;
Only reserve the sacred one:

Low, reverently low,
Make thy stubborn knowledge bow;
To look to heav'n be blind to all below. Prior.

REVERER. n. s. [from revere.] One who venerates; one who reveres.

When the divine revelations were committed to writing, the Jews were such scrupulous reverers of them, that it was the business of the Masorites, to number not only the sections and lines, but even the words and letters of the Old Testament.
Government of the Tongue.

REVERSAL. n. s. [from reverse.] Change of sentence.

The king, in the reversal of the attainders of his partakers, had his will. Bacon's Henry VII.

To REVERSE. v. a. [reversus, Lat.]

1. To turn upside down.

A pyramid reversed may stand upon his point,
if balanced by admirable skill. Temple's Miscel.

2. To overturn to subvert.

These now controul a wretched people's fate,
These can divide, and these reverse the state. Pope.

3. To turn back.

Michael's sword stay'd not;
But with swift wheel reverse, deep ent'ring shar'd

4. To contradict; to repeal.

Better it was in the eye of his understanding, that sometime an erroneous sentence definitive should prevail, till the same authority, perceiving such oversight, might afterwards correct or reverse it, than that strifes should have respite to grow, and not come speedily unto some end.

A decree was made, that they had forfeited their liberties; and albeit they made great moans, yet could they not procure this sentence to be reversed. Hooker's Preface.
Hayward.

Death, his doom, which I
To mitigate thus plead, not to reverse,
To better life shall yield him. Milton.

Though grace may have reversed the condemning sentence, and sealed the sinner's pardon before God, yet it may have left no transcript of that pardon in the sinner's breast. South.

Those seem to do best, who, taking useful hints from facts, carry them in their minds to be judg'd of, by what they shall find in history to confirm or reverse these imperfect observations. Locke.

5. To turn to the contrary.

These plain characters we rarely find,
Though strong the bent, yet quick the turn of mind;

Or puzzling contraries confound the whole,
Or affections quite reverse the soul. Pope.

6. To put each in the place of the other.

With what tyranny custom governs men! it makes that reputable in one age, which was a vice in another, and reverses even the distinctions of good and evil. Rogers.

7. To recal; to renew. Obsolete.

Well knowing true all he did reverse,
And to his fresh remembrance did reverse
The ugly view of his deformed crimes. Spenser.

Lat.] To return. Spenser.

REVERSE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Change; vicissitude.

The strange reverse of fate you see;
I pity'd you, now you may pity me. Dryden.

By a strange reverse of things, Justinian's law, which for many ages was neglected, does now obtain, and the Theodosian code is in a manner antiquated. Baker.

2. A contrary; an opposite. This is a sense rather colloquial than analogous.

Count Tairiff appeared the reverse of Goodman Fact. Addison.

The performances, to which God has annexed the promises of eternity, are just the reverse of all the pursuits of sense. Rogers.

3. [Revers, Fr.] The side of the coin on which the head is not impressed.

As the Romans set down the image and inscription of the consul, afterward of the emperor, on the one side, so they changed the reverse always upon new events. Camden.

Our guard upon the royal side;
On the reverse our beauty's pride. Waller.

Several reverses are owned to be the representa-

And he our subjects next degree in hope. Shakesp.

A life in reversion is not half so valuable, as that which may at present be entered on. Hammond.

2. Succession to; right of succession to.

He was very old, and had out-lived most of his friends; many persons of quality being dead, who had, for recompence of services, procured the reversion of his office. Clarendon.

Upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise himself a futurity; whose life depends upon his breath, and is so restrained to the present, that it cannot secure to itself the reversion of the very next minute. South's Sermons.

So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce so hard to get;
In vain they crowd each other at the door;
For e'en reversions are all begg'd before. Dryden.

Fame's a reversion in which men take place,
O late reversion! at their own decease. Young.

REVERSIONARY. adj. [from reversion.]

Peacham on Music.

REVERTIBLE. adj. [from revert.] Returnable.

REVERY. n. s. [resverie, Fr.] Loose musing; irregular thought.

Revery is when ideas float in our mind, without any reflection or regard of the understanding. Locke.

If the minds of men were laid open, we should see but little difference between that of the wise man and that of the fool; there are infinite reveries and numberless extravagancies pass through both. Addison.

I am really so far gone, as to take pleasure in reveries of this kind. Pope.

To REVEST. v. a. [revestir, revestir, Fr.
revestio, Lat.]

Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

REVOLTER. n. s. [from revolt.] One who changes sides; a deserter; a renegade.

Fair honour that thou dost thy God, in trusting
He will accept thee to defend his cause,
A murderer, a revolter, and a robber. Milton.
He was not a revolter from the truth, which he he had once embraced. Atterbury's Sermons.
Those, who are negligent or revolters, shall perish. Swift.

To REVOLVE. v. n. [revolve, Lat.]

1. To roll in a circle; to perform a revolution. They do not revolve about any common centre. Cheyne.

If the earth revolve thus, each house near the equator must move a thousand miles an hour.
Watts's Improvement of the Mind.
Each revolving year,
The teeming ewes a triple offspring bear. Pope.

2. To fall back. On the desertion of an appeal, the jurisdiction does inso jure revolve to the judge a quo. Auliffe's Parergon.

To REVOLVE. v. a. [revolve, Lat.]

1. To roll any thing round. Then in the East her turn she shines, Revolv'd on heav'n's great axis. Milton.

2. To consider; to meditate on. You may revolve what tales I told you
Of courts, of princes, of the tricks of war. Shakesp.

REVOLUTION. n. s. [revolution, Fr. revolutus, Lat.]

1. Course of any thing which returns to the point at which it began to move. On their orbs impose
Such restless revolution, day by day
Repeated. Milton's Parad. Lost.
They will be taught the diurnal revolution of the heavens. Watts.

2. Space measured by some revolution. At certain revolutions are they brought,
And feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.
Meteors have no more time allowed them for their mounting, than the short revolution of a day. Dryden.

The Persian wept over his army, that within the revolution of a single age, not a man would be left alive. Wake.

3. Change in the state of a government or country. It is used among us κατ' ἐξοχήν, for the change produced by the admission of king William and queen Mary.

The late revolution, justified by its necessity, and the good it had produced, will be a lasting answer. Davenant.

REVULSION. n. s. [revulsion, Fr. revulsus, Lat.] The act of revelling or drawing humours from a remote part of the body.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote or contrary part, we call it revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman of Tumours.

There is a way of revulsion to let blood in an adverse part. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I had heard of some strange cures of frenzies, by casual applications of fire to the lower parts, which seems reasonable enough, by the violent revulsion it may make of humours from the head. Temple.

REVULSIVE. adj. Having the power of revulsion.

His flux of blood breaking forth again with greater violence than it had done before, was not to be stopped by outward applications, nor the revulsives of any kind. Fell.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award, Lat.] To give in return. Skinner.]

1. To give in return.

Thou hast rewarded me good, whereas I have rewarded thee evil. 1 Sam. xxiv. 17.
They rewarded me evil for good. Psalm xxv. 12.

2. To repay; to recompense for something good.

God rewards those that have made use of the single talent, that lowest proportion of grace, which he is pleased to give; and the method of his rewarding is by giving them more grace. Hammond.

To judge th' unfaithful dead, but to reward
His faithful, and receive them into bliss. Milton.

There is no more reason to reward a man for believing that four is more than three, than for being hungry or sleepy; because these things do not proceed from choice, but from natural necessity. A man must do so, nor can he do otherwise. Wilkins.

The Supreme Being rewards the just, and punishes the unjust. Broome on the Odyssey.

REWARD. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Recompense given for good performed.

Rewards and punishments do always presuppose something willingly done well or ill; without which respect, though we may sometimes receive good, yet then it is only a benefit and not a reward. Hooker.

To myself I owe this due regard,
Not to make love my gift, but my reward. Dryd.
Men have consented to the immortality of the soul and the recompenses of another world, promising to themselves some rewards of virtue after this life. Tillotson.

2. It is sometimes used with a mixture of irony, for punishment or recompense of evil.

REWARDABLE. adj. [from reward.] Worthy of reward.

Men's actions are judged, whether in their own nature rewardable or punishable. Hooker.

The action that is but indifferent, and without reward, if done only upon our own choice, is an act of religion, and rewardable by God, if done in obedience to our superiors. Taylor.

REWARDER. n. s. [from reward.] One that rewards; one that recompenses.

A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakesp.
As the Supreme Being is the only proper judge of our perfections, so is he the only fit rewarder of them. Addison.

Ill judges, as well as rewarders, have popular assemblies been, of those who best deserved from them. Swift.

To REWARD. v. a. [re and award.] To repeat in the same words.

R H E

Bring me to the test,
And I the matter will reward; which madness
Would gambol from. Shakesp. Hamlet.

RHABARBARATE. adj. [from rhabarbara, Lat.] Impregnated or tintured with rhabarb.

The salt humours must be evacuated by the sennate, rhabarbarate and sweet manna purgers, with acids added, or the purging waters. Floyer.

RHABDOMANCY. n. s. [ῥαβδος and μαντεία.] Divination by a wand.

Of peculiar rhabdomancy is that which is used in mineral discoveries, with a forked hazel, commonly called Moses's rod, which, freely held forth, will stir and play if any mine be under it. Brown's Vulg. Err.

RHAPSODIST. n. s. [from rhapsody.] One who writes without regular dependance of one part upon another.

Ask our rhapsodist, if you have nothing but the excellence and loveliness of virtue to preach, and no future rewards or punishments, how many vicious wretches will you ever reclaim? Watts.

RHAPSODY. n. s. [ῥαψωδία; ῥάψω to sew, and ὀδή a song.] Any number of parts joined together, without necessary dependance or natural connection.

Such a deed, as sweet religion makes A rhapsody of words. Shakesp. Hamlet.
This confusion and rhapsody of difficulties was not to be supposed in each single sinner. Hammond.

He, that makes no reflexions on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales fit for the entertainment of others. Locke.

The words slide over the ears, and vanish like a rhapsody of evening tales. Watts on the Mind.

RHEIN BERRY. n. s. [spina cervina, Lat.] Buckthorn, a plant.

RHETORICK. n. s. [ῥητορικὴ; rhetorique, Fr.]

1. The act of speaking not merely with propriety, but with art and elegance.

We could not allow him an orator, who had the best thoughts, and who knew all the rules of rhetorick, if he had not acquired the art of using them. Druden's Dufresnou.

Of the passions, and how they are moved, Aristotle in his second book of rhetorick, hath admirably discoursed in a little compass. Locke.
Grammar teacheth us to speak properly, rhetorick instructs to speak elegantly. Baker.

2. The power of persuasion; oratory. The heart's still rhetorick, disclud'd with eyes. Shakesp.

His sober lips then did he softly part,
Whence of pure rhetorick whole streams outflow. Fairfax.

Enjoy your dear wit and gay rhetorick,
That hath so well been taught her dazzling fence. Milton.

RHETORICAL. adj. [rhetoricus, Lat. from rhetorick.] Pertaining to rhetorick; oratorical; figurative.

The apprehension is so deeply riveted into my mind, that rhetorical flourishes cannot at all loosen it. More.

Because Brutus and Cassius met a blackmore, and Pompey had on a dark garment at Pharsalia, these were presages of their overthrow, which notwithstanding are scarce rhetorical sequels; concluding metaphors from realities, and from conceptions metaphorical inferring realities again. Brown.

The subject may be moral, logical, or rhetorical, which does not come under our senses. Watts.

RHETORICALLY. adv. [from rhetorical.] Like an orator; figuratively; with intent to move the passions.

To RHETORICATE. v. n. [rhetoricor,

R H O

low Lat. from rhetorick.] To play the orator; to attack the passions.

'Twill be much more seasonable to reform, than apologize or rhetoricate; not to suffer themselves to perish in the midst of such solicitations to be saved. Decay of Piety.

RHETORICIAN. n. s. [rhetoricien, Fr. rhetor, Lat.]

1. One who teaches the science of rhetoric.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians, which ever had young auditors, lived till they were an hundred years old. Bacon.

'Tis the business of rhetoricians to treat the characters of the passions. Dryden's Dafresnoy.

A man may be a very good rhetorician, and yet at the same time a mean orator Baker on Learning.

2. An orator. Less proper.

He play'd at Lyons a declaiming prize, At which the vanquish'd rhetorician dies. Dryden.

RHYME. n. s. [ῥυθμός; rhythme, Fr.]

1. A harmonical succession of sounds.

The youth with songs and rhymes: Some dance, some hale the rope. Denham.

2. The consonance of verses; the correspondence of the last sound of one verse to the last sound or syllable of another.

For rhyme the rudder is of verses, With which like ships they steer their courses. Hudibras.

Such was the news, indeed, but songs and rhymes Prevail as much in these hard iron times; As would a plump of treubling fowl, that rise Against an eagle sousing from the skies. Dryden.

If Cupid throws a single dart, We make him wound the lover's heart, But if he takes his bow and quiver, 'Tis sure he must transfix the liver; For rhyme with reason may dispense, And sound has right to govern sense. Prior.

3. Poetry; a poem.

All his manly power it did disperse, As he were warmed with enchanted rhymes, That oftentimes he quak'd. Fairy Queen.

Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme. Milton.

Now sportive youth, Carol incoadite rhythms with suiting notes, And quaver inharmonious. Philips.

4. A word of sound to answer to another word.

What wise means to gain it hast thou chose? Know, fame and fortune both are made of prose. Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme, Thou unambitious fool, at this late time? Young.

RHYME or reason. Number or sense.

I was promis'd on a time, To have reason for my rhyme; But from that time unto this season, I had neither rhyme nor reason. Spenser.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhime and reason, that they were fairies. Shakesp.

R I B

To RHYME. v. n.

1. To agree in sound.

He was too warm on picking work to dwell, } But faggot't his notions as they fell, } And, if they rhim'd and rattled, all was well. } Dryden.

2. To make verses.

These fellows of infinite tongue, that can rhime themselves into ladies favours, they do always reason themselves out again. Shakesp.

There march'd the bard and blockhead side by side, Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride. Pope.

RHYMER. } n. s. [from rhyme.] One

RHYMSTER. } who makes rhymes; a versifier; a poet in contempt.

Scall'd rhymers will ballad us out o' tune. Shakesp.

It was made penal to the English, to permit the Irish to graze upon their lands, to entertain any of their minstrels, rhimers, or news-tellers. Darvies on Ireland.

Rhymer, come on, and do the worst you can; I fear not you, nor yet a better man. Dryden.

Milton's rhime is constrained at an age, when the passion of love makes every man a rhimer, though not a poet. Dryden.

I speak of those who are only rhimsters. Dennis.

RHYTHMICAL. adj. [ῥυθμικός, rhythmic, Fr. from rhyme or rhythm.] Harmonical; having one sound proportioned to another.

RIB. n. s. [jubbe, Sax.]

1. A bone in the body.

Of these there are twenty four in number, viz. twelve on each side the twelve vertebræ of the back; they are segments of a circle; they grow flat and broad, as they approach the sternum; but the nearer they are to the vertebræ, the rounder and thicker they are; at which end they have a round head, which, being covered with a cartilage, is received into the sinus in the bodies of the vertebræ: the ribs, thus articulated, make an acute angle with the lower vertebræ: the ribs have each a small canal or sinus, which runs along their under sides, in which lies a nerve, vein, and artery; their extremities, which are fastened to the sternum, are cartilaginous, and the cartilages make an obtuse angle with the bony part of the ribs; this angle respects the head: the cartilages are harder in women than in men, that they may better bear the weight of their breasts: the ribs are of two sorts; the seven upper are called true ribs, because their cartilaginous ends are received into the sinus of the sternum: the five lower are called false ribs, because they are softer and shorter, of which only the first is joined to the extremity of the sternum, the cartilaginous extremities of the rest being tied to one another, and thereby leaving a greater space for the dilatation of the stomach and intrails: the last of these short ribs is shorter than all the rest: it is not tied to them, but sometimes to the musculus obliquus descendens. Quincy.

Why do I yield to that suggestion, Whose horrid image doth unfix my hair, And make my seated heart knock at my ribs, Against the use of nature! Shakesp. Macbeth.

He open'd my left side, and took From thence a rib, with cordial spirits warm And life blood streaming fresh. Milton.

Sure he, who first the passage try'd, In harden'd oak his heart did hide, And ribs of iron arm'd his side. Dryden.

2. Any piece of timber or other matter which strengthens the side.

I should not see the sandy hour glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats; And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand, Vailing her high top lower than her ribs, To kiss her burial. Shakesp.

The ships with shatter'd ribs scarce creeping from the seas. Drayton.

3. Any prominence running in lines: as the stalks of a leaf.

RIBALD. n. s. [ribauld, Fr. ribaldo, Ital.] A loose, rough, mean, brutal wretch.

That lewd ribald, with vile lust advanc'd,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty corse so fair and sheen.

Spenser.

You ribauld nag of Egypt,
The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sails, and flies.

Shakesp.

The busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no longer.

Shakesp.

Ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds.

Pope.

RIBALDRY. n. s. [from ribald; ribaudie, old Fr.] Mean, rude, brutal language.

Mr. Cowley asserts, that obscenity has no place in wit; Buckingham says, 'tis an ill sort of wit, which has nothing more to support it than bare-faced ribaldry.

Dryden.

The ribaldry of the low characters is different; the reeve, miller, and cook are distinguished from each other.

Dryden.

In the same antique loom these scenes were wrought,

Embellish'd with good morals and just thought,
True nature in her noblest light you see,
Ere yet debauch'd by modern gallantry
To trifling jests and fulsome ribaldry.

Granville.

If the outward profession of religion were once in practice among men in office, the clergy would see their duty and interest in qualifying themselves for lay-conversation, when once they were out of fear of being choaked by ribaldry or prophane-ness.

Swift.

RIBAND. n. s. [rubande, ruban, Fr. This word is sometimes written ribon.]

A filet of silk; a narrow web of silk, which is worn for ornament.

Quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribbands pendent, flaring 'bout her head.

Shakesp.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose.

Dryden's Knight's Tale.

See! in the lists they wait the trumpet's sound;
Some love device is wrought on ev'ry sword,
And ev'ry riband bears some mystick word.

Granville.

RIBBED. adj. [from rib.]

1. Furnished with ribs.

Was I by rocks engender'd; rib'd with steel?
Such tortures to resist, or not to feel?

Sandys.

Hung on each bough a single leaf appears,
Which shrivell'd in its infancy remains,
Like a clos'd fan, nor stretches wide its veins,
But as the seasons in their circle run,
Opens its ribb'd surface to the nearer sun.

Gay.

2. Inclosed as the body by ribs.

Remember
The nat'ral brav'ry of your isle, which stands
As Neptune's park, ribbed and paled in
With rocks unscalable, and roaring waters.

Shakesp.

3. Marked with protuberant lines.

RIBBON. n. s. See RIBAND.

TO RIBBROAST. v. n. [rib and roast.] To beat soundly. A burlesque word.

That done, he rises, humbly bows,
And give thanks for the princely blows;
Departs not meantly proud, and boasting
Of his magnificent ribbroasting.

Butler.

I have been pinched in flesh, and well ribbroasted under my former masters; but I'm in now for skin and all.

L'Estrange.

RIBWORT. n. s. [plantago.] A plant.

RIC. n. s. Ric denotes a powerful, rich, or valiant man: as in these verses of Fortunatus:

Hilperice potens, si interpres barbarus adsit, Adjutor fortis hoc quoque nomen habet.

Hil'prie Barbarians a stout helper term. So Alfric is altogether strong; Æthelric, nobly strong or powerful: to the same sense as Polycrates, Crato, Plutarchus, Opimius. Gibson's Camden.

RICE. n. s. [oryza, Lat.] One of the esculent grains: it hath its grains disposed into a panicle, which are almost of an oval figure, and are covered with a thick husk, somewhat like barley: this grain is cultivated in most of the Eastern countries.

Miller.

Rice is the food of two thirds of mankind; it is kindly to human constitutions, proper for the consumptive, and those subject to hæmorrhages.

Arbuthnot.

If the snuff get out of the snuffers, it may fall into a dish of rice milk.

Swift.

RICH. adj. [riche, Fr. ricco, Ital. rica, Sax.]

1. Wealthy; abounding in wealth; abounding in money or possessions; opulent; opposed to poor.

I am as rich in having such a jewel,
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl.

Shakesp.

The rich shall not give more, and the poor no less.

Exodus.

A thief bent to unhoard the cash
Of some rich burgher.

Milton.

Rich was his soul, though his attire was poor,
As heav'n had cloath'd his own ambassador.

Dryden.

Several nations of the Americans are rich in land, and poor in all the comforts of life. He may look upon the rich as benefactors, who have beautified the prospect all around him.

Locke.

See.

2. Valuable; estimable; precious; splendid; sumptuous.

Earth, in her rich attire,
Consummate lovely smil'd.

Milton.

RICHED. adj. [from rich.] Enriched. Obsolete.

Of all these honnds,
With shadowy forests, and with champagns rich'd,
With plenteous rivers and wide skirted meads,
We make thee lady.

Shakesp. King Lear.

RICHES. n. s. [richesses, Fr.]

1. Wealth; money or possessions.

The instrumentality of riches to charity has rendered it necessary by laws to secure propriety.

Hammond.

Chemists seek riches by transmutation and the great elixir.

Spratt.

Riches do not consist in having more gold and silver, but in having more in proportion than our neighbours, whereby we are enabled to procure to ourselves a greater plenty of the conveniences of life, than comes within their reach, who, sharing the gold and silver of the world in less proportion, want the means of plenty and power, and so are poorer.

Locke.

What riches give us, let us first enquire,
Meat, fire, and cloaths; what more? meat, cloaths, and fire.

Pope.

2. Splendid sumptuous appearance.

The riches of heav'n's pavement, trodden gold.

Milton.

RICHLY. adv. [from rich.]

1. With riches; wealthy; splendidly; magnificently.

In Belmont is a lady richly left,
And she is fair, of wondrous virtues.

Shakesp.

Women richly gay in gems.

Milton.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

In animals, some smells are found more richly than in plants.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

After a man has studied the laws of England, the reading the reports of adjudged cases will richly improve him.

Watts.

3. Truly; abundantly. An ironical use.

There is such licentiousness among the basest of the people, that one would not be sorry to see them bestowing upon one another a chastisement, which they so richly deserve.

Addison.

RICHNESS. n. s. [from rich.]

1. Opulence; wealth.

Of virtue you have left proof to the world;
And virtue is grateful with beauty and richness
adorn'd.

Stdney.

The lively tincture of whose gushing blood
Shou'd clearly prove the richness of his food.

Dryden.

RICK. n. s. See REEK.

1. A pile of corn or hay regularly heaped up in the open field, and sheltered from wet.

An inundation
O'erflowed a farmer's barn and stable;
Whole ricks of hay and stacks of corn
Were down the sudden current born.

Swift.

Mice and rats do great injuries in the field, houses, barns, and corn ricks.

Mortimer's Husband.

2. A heap of corn or hay piled by the gatherer.

In the North they bind them up in small bundles, and make small ricks of them in the field.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

RICKETS. n. s. [rachitis, Lat. A name given to the distemper at its first appearance by Glisson.]

The rickets is a distemper in children, from an unequal distribution of nourishment, whereby the joints grow knotty, and the limbs uneven: its cure is performed by evacuation and friction.

Quincy.

In some years, liver-grown, spleen, and rickets are put together, by reason of their likeness.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

O were my pupil fairly knock'd o' th' head,
I should possess th' estate, if he were dead;
He's so far gone with the rickets and th' evil,
That one small dose will send him to the devil.

Dryden.

So when at school we first declaim,
Old Busby walks us in a theme,

R I D

Whose props support our infant vein,
And help the rickets in the brain;
But when our souls their force dilate,
Our thoughts grow up to wit's estate.
Prior.
RICKETY. adj. [from rickets.] Diseased with the rickets.

In a young animal, when the solids are too lax, the case of rickety children, the diet should be gently astringent. Arbuthnot.

RICTURE. n. s. [rictura, Lat.] A gaping. Dict.

Psalm cxliv.

I will bring you out from under their burthens, and rid you out of their bondage. Exodus, vi. 6.

2. To clear; to disencumber.

They were not before so willing to be rid of their learned pastor, as now importunate to obtain him again from them, who had given him entertainment. Hooker.

I must rid all the seas of pirates. Shakesp.
We'll use his countenance; which being done,
Let her, who would be rid of him, devise His speedy taking off. Shakesp. King Lear.

Upon the word, stept forth
Three of thy crew, to rid thee of that care. B. Jons.
I can put on

Thy terrors, as I put thy mildness on,
Image of thee in all things; and shall soon,
Arm'd with thy might, rid heav'n of these rebell'd.
Milton.

Did saints for this bring in their plate;
For when they thought the cause had need on't,
Happy was he that could be rid on't. Hudibras.

The god uneasy till he slept again,
Resolv'd at once to rid himself of pain. Dryden.

The greater visible good does not always raise men's desire, in proportion to the greatness it appears to have; though every little trouble moves us, and sets us on work to get rid of it. Locke.

The ladies asked, whether we believed that the men of any town would, at the same conjuncture, have loaden themselves with their wives; or rather, whether they would not have been glad of such an opportunity to get rid of them? Add.

3. To dispatch.

Having the best at Barnet field,
We'll thither straight; for willingness rids away.
Shakesp.

L'Estrange.

3. Act of clearing away any encum-brances.

Those blossoms, and those dropping gums,
That lie bestrow'd, unsightly and unsmooth,
Ask riddance, if we mean to tread with ease. Milt.

RIDDEN, the participle of ride.

He could never have ridden out an eternal period, but it must be by a more powerful being than himself. Hale.

RIDDLE. n. s. [nædel; Sax. from næde counsel, perhaps a trial of wit.]

R I D

1. An enigma; a puzzling question; a dark problem.

How did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth,
In riddles and in charms of death? Shakesp.
The Theban monster, that propos'd
Her riddle, and him, who solv'd it not, devour'd;
That once found out, and solv'd, for grief and spight
Cast herself headlong from the Ismenian steep.
Milton.

2. Any thing puzzling.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady;
Not love, if any lov'd her: hey day!
So cowards never use their might,
But against such as will not fight. Hudibras.

3. [puzzle, Sax.] A coarse or open sieve.

Horse-beans and tares, sown together, are easily parted with a riddle. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To RIDDLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To solve; to unriddle. There is something of whimsical analogy between the two senses of the word riddle; as, we say, to sift a question: but their derivations differ.

Riddle me this, and guess him if you can,
Who bears a nation in a single man? Dryden.

2. To separate by a coarse sieve.

The finest sifted mould must be riddled in.
Mortimer.

To RIDDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To

to walk.

Infected be the air whereon they ride. Shakesp.
Upon this chaos rid the distressed ark, that bore
the small remains of mankind. Burnet.

3. To be supported in motion.

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,
Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree
On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears
To his experienc'd tongue. Shakesp.

4. To manage an horse.

Skill to ride seems a science,
Proper to gentle blood; some others feign
To manage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain. Spenser.

The horses I saw well chosen, ridden, and furnished. Shakesp.

Inspir'd by love, whose business is to please,
He rode, he fenc'd, he mov'd with graceful ease.
Dryden.

5. To be on the water.

On the western coast
Rideth a puissant army. Shakesp.
The sea was grown so rough, that the admiral was not able longer to ride it out with his gallees; but was enforced to slip his anchors, and run his gallees on ground. Knolles.
They were then in a place to be aided by their ships, which rode near in Edinburgh Frith. Haywo.

R I D

Waiting him his royal fleet did ride,
And willing winds to their low'r sails deny'd. Dryd.
Men once walk'd where ships at anchor ride. Dry.
Now on their coasts our conquering navy rides,
Way-lays their merchants, and their land besets.
Dryden.

6. To be supported by something subservient.

A credulous father, and a brother noble,
Whose nature is so far from doing harms,
That he suspects none; on whose foolish honesty
My practices rid easy. Shakesp. King Lear.

To RIDE. v. a.

1. To sit on so as to be carried.

They ride the air in whirlwind. Milton.

2. To manage insolently at will.

Humility does not make us servile or insensible, nor oblige us to be ridden at the pleasure of every coxcomb. Collier.

The nobility could no longer endure to be ridden
by bakers, cobblers, and brewers. Swift.

RIDER. n. s. [from ride.]

1. One who is carried on a horse, or in a vehicle.

The strong camel and the generous horse,
Restrain'd and aw'd by man's inferior force,
Do to the riders' will their rage submit,
And answer to the spur, and own the bit. Prior.

2. One who manages or breaks horses.

His horses are bred better; and to that end riders dearly hired. Shakesp. As you like it.
I would with jockies from Newmarket dine,
And to rough riders give my choicest wine. Bramst.

3. An inserted leaf.

RIDGE. n. s. [þrugg, Sax. rig, Dan.
rygge, Dut. the back.]

1. The top of the back.

He thought it was no time to stay;
But in a trice advanc'd the knight
Upon the bare ridge bolt upright. Hudibras.

2. The rough top of any thing, resembling the vertebræ of the back.

As when a vulture on Imaus hied,
Whose snowy ridge the moving Tartar bounds, Dislodges from a region scarce of prey. Milton.
His sons

Shall dwell to Seir, on that long ridge of hills! Milt.
The highest ridges of those mountains serve for the maintenance of cattle for the inhabitants of the vallies. Ray.

3. A steep protuberance.

Part rise in crystal wall, or ridge direct,
For haste. Milton.
About her coasts unruly waters roar,
And, rising on a ridge, insult the shore. Dryden.

4. The ground thrown up by the plow.

Thou visitest the earth; thou waterest the ridges thereof abundantly; thou settlest the furrows thereof. Psalm lxx. 10.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this
'tis set with ridges round the point. Woodward.

Wheat must be sowed above furrow fourteen days before Michaelmas, and laid up in round high warm ridges. Mortimer.

5. The top of the roof rising to an acute angle.

Ridge tiles or roof tiles, being in length thirteen inches, and made circular breadthways like an half cylinder, whose diameter is about ten inches or more, and about half an inch and half a quarter in thickness, are laid upon the upper part or ridge of the roof, and also on the hips. Morton.

6. Ridges of a horse's mouth are wrinkles or risings of the flesh in the roof of the mouth, running across from one side of the jaw to the other like fleshy ridges, with interjacent furrows or sinking cavities. Farrier's Dict.

To RIDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To form a ridge.

Thou from heav'n
Feign'dst at thy birth was given thee in thy hair,

R I D

Where strength can least abide, though all thy hairs
Were bristles rang'd like those that ridge the back Of chaf'd wild boars, or ruffl'd porcupines. Milton RÍDGLING. } n. s. [ovis rejcicula, Lat.]
RÍDGIL. } Ainsworth.] A ram half castrated.
Tend my herd, and see them fed;
To morning pastures, evening waters led:
And 'ware the Libyan ridgil's butting head. Dryd.
And 'ware the ridgling with his butting head. Dryden.

RÍDGY. adj. [from ridge.] Rising in a ridge.
Far in the sea against the foaming shore,
There stands a rock, the raging billows roar
Above his head in storms; but when 'tis clear, Uncurl their ridgy backs, and at his feet appear. Dryden.

RÍDICULE. n. s. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculum, Lat.] Wit of that species that provokes laughter.
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.
Those, who aim at ridicule,
Should fix upon some certain rule,
Which fairly hints they are in jest. Swift.

To RÍDICULE. v. a. [from the noun.] To expose to laughter; to treat with contemptuous merriment.
I wish the vein of ridiculing all that is serious and good may have no worse effect upon our state, than knight errantry had on theirs. Temple.
He often took a pleasure to appear ignorant, that he might the better turn to ridicule those that valued themselves on their books. Addison.

RÍDICULER. n. s. One that ridicules.
The ridiculer shall make only himself ridiculous.
Larl of Chesterheld.

RÍDICULOUS. adj. [ridicule, Fr. ridiculus, Lat.] Worthy of laughter; exciting contemptuous merriment.
Thus was ice building left Ridiculous; and the work confusion nam'd. Milton.
It was not in Titus's power not to be derided;
But it was in his power not to be ridiculous. South.

RÍDICULOUSLY. adv. [from ridiculous.]
In a manner worthy of laughter or contempt.
Epicurus's discourse concerning the original of the world is so ridiculously merry, that the design of his philosophy was pleasure and not instruction. South.

RÍDICULOUSNESS. n. s. [from ridiculous.]
The quality of being ridiculous.
What sport do Tertullian, Minucius, and Arnobius make with the images consecrated to divine worship? from the meanness of the matter they are made, the casualties of fire, and rottenness they are subject to, on purpose to represent the ridiculousness of worshipping such things. Stillingfleet.

RÍDING. particip. adj. Employed to travel on any occasion.
It is provided by another provincial constitution, that no suffragan bishop shall have more than one riding apparitor, and that archdeacons shall not have so much as one riding apparitor, but only a foot messenger. Ayliffe's Peregrin.

RÍDING. n. s. [from ride.]
1. A district visited by an officer.
2. One of the divisions of Yorkshire, answering to hundreds in other counties: corrupted from trithing.

served both for a tunic and a coat. Arbuthnot.
Good housewives all the winter's rage despise, Defended by the ridinghood's disguise. Gay.
RÍE. n. s. An esculent grain. This differs from wheat in having a flatter spike, the corn larger and more naked. Miller.
August shall bear the form of a young man of a fierce aspect, upon his head a garland of wheat and rye. Peacham.

RÍFE. adj. [nyfe, Sax. rijf, Dut.] Prevalent; prevailing; abounding. It is now only used of epidemical distempers.
While those restless desires, in great men rife,
To visit so low folks did much disdain,
This while, though poor, they in themselves did reigu. Sidney.

Guynon closely did await Advantage; whilst his foe did rage most rife; Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him straight,
And falsed off his blows. Spenser.
The plague was then rife in Hungary. Knolles.
Blessings then are plentiful and rife,
More plentiful than hope. Herbert.
Space may produce new worlds; whereof so rife
There went a fame in heav'n, that he ere long Intended to create. Milton's Parad. Lost.

This is the place,
Whence ev'n now the tumult of loud mirth
Was rife, and perfect in my list'ning ear. Milton.
That ground'd maxim
So rife and celebrated in the mouths
Of wisest men, that to the publick good Private respects must yield. Milton.

Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal. Arbuthnot on Air.
RÍFE. adv. [from rife.] Prevalently:

The refuse of any thing.

To RÍFFLE. v. a. [riffler, rifler, Fr. rijfelen, Dut.]
1. To rob; to pillage; to plunder.
Stand, Sir, and throw us what you have about you; if not, we'll make you, Sir, and rife you. Shakesp.

Men, by his suggestion taught,
Ransack'd the centre, and with impious hands
Rifed the bowels of their mother earth
For treasures better hid. Milton's Parad. Lost.
You have rifed my master; who shall maintain me? L'Estrange.
A commander in the parliament's rebel army
rifed and defaced the cathedral at Litchfield. South.

2. To take away; to seize as pillage.
Mine is thy daughter, priest, and shall remain,
And pray'rs and tears and bribes shall plead in vain
Till time shall rifle every youthful grace. Pope.

RÍFLER. n. s. [from rifle.] Robber;
plunderer; pillager.

RÍFT. n. s. [from rive.] A cleft; a breach; an opening.

Small drops of gory blood. Spenser.
She did confine thee
Into a cloven pine, within which rift
Imprison'd, thou didst painfully remain. Shakesp.
In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault; at the end of that is a round house, with a small slit or rift; and in the conduit a window: if you cry out in the rift, it makes a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.

They have an idle tradition, that a missel bird, feeding upon a seed she cannot digest, expelleth it whole; which, falling upon a bough of a tree that hath some rift, putteth forth the misseltree. Bacon.

R I G

Either tropick
'Gan thunder, and both ends of heav'n; the clouds
From many a horrid rift abortive pour'd Fierce rain, with lightning mixt. Milton.
Some pick out bullets from the vessels sides,
Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift. Dryden.

To RÍFT. v. a. [from the noun.] To cleave; to split. To rive is perhaps more proper.
To the dread rattling thunder
Have I giv'n fire, and rifed Jove's stout oak With his own bolt. Shakesp. Tempest.
At sight of him the people with a s' out Rifed the air. Milton's Aganistes.
On rifed rocks, the dragon's late abodes,
The green reed trembles. Pope's Messiah.

To RÍFT. v. n.
1. To burst; to open.
I'd shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Some trees are best for ship-timber, as oaks that grow in moist grounds; for that maketh the timber tough, and not apt to rift with ordnance.
When ice is congealed in a cup, it will swell instead of contracting, and sometime rift. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. [Raver, Dan.] To belch; to break wind.
RÍG. n. s. Rig, ridge, seem to signify the top of a hill falling on each side;
from the Saxon hrigg; and the Islandick hriggur, both signifying a back. Gibson's Camden.

To RÍG. v. a. [from rig or ridge, the back.]
1. To dress; to accoutre. Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly.
Jack was rigged out in his gold and silver lace, with a feather in his cap; and a pretty figure he made in the world. L'Estrange.

2. To fit with tackling.
My mind for Egypt stoo'd;
When nine faire ships I rig'd forth for the flood. Chapman.
He, like a foolish pilot, hath shipwreck'd
My vessel gloriously rigg'd. Milton's Agonistes.
The sinner shall set forth like a ship launched into the wide sea, not only well built and rigg'd;
but also carried on with full wind. South.
He bids them rig the fleet. Deuham.
He rigged out another small fleet, and the Achaens engaged him with theirs. Arbuthnot

RÍGADOON. n. s. [rigadon, Fr.] A dance.
RÍGATION. n. s. [rigatio, Lat.] The act of watering. Dict.

or tackling of a ship.
To plow the deep.
To make fit rigging, or to build a ship. Creech.
His batter'd rigging their whole war receives,
All here, like some old oak with tempests beat,
He stands, and sees below his scatter'd leaves. Dryden.

RÍGGISH. adj. [from rig, an old word for a whore.] Wanton; whorish.
Vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests
Bless her, when she is riggish. Shakesp.

To RÍGGLE. v. a. [properly to wriggle.]
To move backward and forward, as shrinking from pain.
RÍGHT. adj. [riht, Sax. recht, Dut.
ritto, Ital. rectus, Lat.]
1. Fit; proper; becoming; suitable.

R I G

The words of my mouth are plain to him that understandeth, and right to them that find knowledge. Proverbs, viii.

A time there will be, when all these unequal distributions of good and evil shall be set right, and the wisdom of all his transactions made as clear as the noon-day. Atterbury.
The Lord God led me in the right way. Genesis, xxiv. 48.

2. Rightful; justly claiming.

There being no law of nature, nor positive law of God, that determines which is the right heir in all cases, the right of succession could not have been certainly determined. Locke.

3. True; not erroneous; not wrong.

If there be no prospect beyond the grave, the inference is certainly right, let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die. Locke.

Our calendar wants to be reformed, and the equinox rightly computed; and being once reformed and set right, it may be kept so, by omitting the additional day at the end of every hundred and thirty-four years. Holder on Time.

If my present and past experience do exactly coincide, I shall then be disposed to think them both right. Beattie.

4. Not mistaken; passing a true judgment; passing judgment according to the truth of things.

7. Not left.

It is not with certainty to be received, concerning the right and left hand, that men naturally make use of the right, and that the use of the other is a digression. Proun.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight, But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right.

8. Strait; not crooked.

The idea of a right lined triangle necessarily carries with it an equality of its angles to two right ones. Locke.

9. Perpendicular; direct.

RIGHT. interj. An expression of approbation.

Right, cries his lordship, for a rogue in need To have a taste is insolence indeed; In me 'tis noble, suits my birth and state. Pope.

RIGHT. adv.

1. Properly; justly; exactly: according to truth or justice.

Then shall the right-aiming thunderbolts go abroad, and from the clouds, as from a rogue in need bow, shall they fly to the mark. Wisdom, v. 21.

To understand political power right, and derive it from its original, we must consider what state all men are naturally in, and that is a state of perfect freedom to order their actions, and dispose of their possessions and persons. Locke.

2. According to art or rule.

You with strict discipline instructed right, Have learn'd to use your arms before you fight. Roscommon.

Take heed you steer your vessel right, my son, This calm of heav'n, this mermaid's melody, Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast, And in a moment sinks you. Dryden.

3. In a direct line; in a straight line.

Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eyelids look straight before thee. Proverbs, iv. 25.

Ye shall be driven out right forth, and none shall gather up him that wandereth. Jeremiah, xlix. 3.
The people passed over right against Jericho. Joshua, iii. 16.

R I G

Insects have voluntary motion, and therefore imagination; for ants go right forward to their hills, and bees know the way from a flowery heath to their hives. Bacon.

This way, right down to Paradise descend. Milton.

4. In a great degree; very. Now obsolete.

I gat me to my Lord right humbly. Psal. xxx. 8.

Of thy devotion and right christian zeal. Shakesp.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd
Where our right valiant is become. Shakesp.

When I had climb'd a height Rough and right hardly accessible; I might Behold from Circe's house, that in a grove Set thicke with trees stood, a bright vapour move. Chapman.

The senate will smart deep
For your upbraidings: I should be right sorry
To have the means so to be veng'd on you,
As I shall shortly on them. Ben Jonson.

Right many a widow his keen blade,
And many fatherless had made. Hudibras.

5. It is still used in titles: as, right honourable; right reverend.

I mention the right honourable Thomas Howard lord high marshal. Peacham on Drawing.

RIGHT. n. s.

1. Not wrong.

One rising, eminent
In wise deport, spake much of right and wrong,
Of justice, of religion, truth, and peace,

2. Justice; not injury.

Persons of noble blood are less envied in their rising; for it seemeth but right done to their birth. Bacon.

In the midst of your invectives, do the Turks this right, as to remember that they are no idolaters. Bacon.

Long love to her has borne the faithful knight,
And well deserv'd, had fortune done him right. Dryden.

He, that would do right to religion, cannot take a more effectual course, than by reconciling it with the happiness of mankind. Tillotson.

3. Freedom from guilt; goodness.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might Be wrong, his life I'm sure was in the right. Cowley.

4. Freedom from error.

Seldom your opinions err;
Your eyes are always in the right. Prior.

5. Just claim.

The Roman citizens were, by the sword, taught to acknowledge the pope their lord, though they knew not by what right. Raleigh.

The proud tyrant would many times say, that whatsoever belonged unto the empire of Rome, was of right his, for as much as he was possessed of the imperial scepter, which his great grandfather Mahomet had by law of arms won from Constantine. Knolles.

Subdue by force, all who refuse
Right reason for their law; and for their king Messiah, who by right of merit reigns. Milton.

My right to it appears,
By long possession of eight hundred years. Dryd.
Might and right are inseparable in the opinion of the world. L'Estrange.

Descriptions, figures, and fables must be in all heroic poems; every poet hath as much right to them, as every man hath to air. Dryden.

Judah pronounced sentence of death against Tamar: our author thinks it is very good proof, that because he did it, therefore he had a right to do it. Locke.

Agrippa is severally ranged in sets of medals among the emperors; as some among the emperors have no other right. Addison.

6. That which justly belongs to one.

To thee doth the right of her appertain, seeing thou only art of her kindred. Tobit, vi. 11.

R I G

The custom of employing these great persons in all great offices, passes for a right. Temp. c.

The pris'n'er freed himself by nature's laws,
Born free, he sought his right. Dryden.

7. Property; interest.

A subject in his prince may claim a right,
Nor suffer him with strength impair'd to fight. Dry. n.

8. Power; prerogative.

God hath a sovereign right over us, as we are his creatures, and by virtue of this right, he might, without injustice, have imposed difficult tasks; but in making laws, he hath not made use of this right. Tillotson.

9. Immunity; privilege.

The citizens,
Let them but have their rights, are ever forward
In celebration of this day with shews. Shakesp.

Their only thoughts and hope was to defend their own rights and liberties, due to them by the law. Clarendon.

10. The side not left.

On his right
The radiant image of his glory sat,
His only Son. Milton.

These strata falling, the whole tract sinks down to rights into the abyss, and is swallowed up by it. Woodward.

12. To rights. Deliverance from error.

Several have gone about to inform them, and set them to rights; but for want of that knowledge of the present system of nature, have not given the satisfaction expected. Woodward.

To RIGHT. v. a. To do justice to; to establish in possessions justly claimed; to relieve from wrong.

How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me? gentle, my lord,
You scarce can right me thoroughly. Shakesp.

If the injured person be not righted, every one of them is wholly guilty of the injustice, and bound to restitution. Taylor.

I cou'd not expedient see,
On this side death, to right our family. Haller.

Some seeking unto courts, and judicial endeavours to right ourselves, are still innocent. Kettler.

Make my father known,
To right my honour, and redeem your own. Dryd.

RIGHTEOUS. adj. [righte, Sax. whence rightwise in old authors, and rightwisely in bishop Fisher: so much are words corrupted by pronunciation.]

1. Just; honest; virtuous; uncorrupt.

That far be from thee, to slay the righteous with the wicked; and that the righteous should be as the wicked. Genesis.

2. Equitable; agreeing with right.

Kill my rival too, for he no less Deserves; and I thy righteous doom will bless. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUSLY. adv. [from righteous.] Honestly; virtuously.

Athens did righteously decide,
When Phocion and when Socrates were try'd;
As righteously they did those dooms repent,
Still they were wise, whatever way they went. Dryden.

RIGHTEOUSNESS. n. s. [from righteous.] Justice; honesty; virtue; goodness; integrity.

The scripture, ascribing to the persons of men righteousness, in regard of their manifold virtues, may not be construed, as though it did thereby clear them from all faults. Hooker.

Here wretched Phlegias warns the world with cries,
Cou'd warning make the world more just or wise;
Learn righteousness, and dread th' avenging deities. Dryden.

Good men often suffer, and that even for the sake of righteousness. Nelson.

RIGHTFUL. adj. [right and full.]

1. Having the right; having the just claim.

As in this haughty great attempt,
They laboured to supplant the rightful heir;
I lost my liberty, and they their lives. Shakesp.
Some will mourn in ashes, some coal black,
For the deposing of a rightful king. Shakesp.

2. Honest; just; agreeable to justice.

Nor would, for gold or fee,
Be won, their rightful causes down to tread. Spens.
Gather all the soiling hours;
Such as with friendly care have guarded Patriots and kings in rightful wars. Prior.

RIGHTFULLY. adv. [from rightful.] According to right; according to justice.

Henry, who claimed by succession, was sensible that his title was not found; but was rightfully in Mortimer, who had married the heir of York. Dryden's Preface to Fables.

RIGHT-HAND. n. s. Not the left.

The rank of osiers, by the murmuring stream,
Left on your right-hand brings you to the place. Shakesp.

RIGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from rightful.]

Moral rectitude.

But still although we fail in perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these superfluities,
Nor wholly wink though void of purest sightfulness. Sidney.

RIGHTLY. adv. [from right.]

1. According to truth or justice; properly; suitably; not erroneously.

Each of his reign allotted, rightlier call'd Pow'rs of fire, air, water, and earth beneath. Milt.
Descend from heav'n, Urania! by that name
If rightly thou art call'd. Milton's Pur. Lost.

For glory done
Of triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods;
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and plagues of men. Milton.

A man can never have so certain a knowledge, that a proposition, which contradicts the clear principles of his own knowledge, was divinely revealed, or that he understands the words rightly, wherein it is delivered; as he has, that the contrary is true. Locke.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?
Or from their deeds I rightlier may divine,
Unseemly blown with insolence or wine. Pope.

2. Honestly; uprightly.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonour;
You may be rightly just, whatever I shall think. Shakesp.

3. Exactly.

Should I grant, thou didst not rightly see;
Then thou wert first deceiv'd. Dryden.

4. Straightly; directly.

We wish one end; but differ in order and way,
that leadeth rightly to that end. Ascham.

RIGHTNESS. n. s. [from right.]

1. Conformity to truth; exemption from being wrong; rectitude; not error.

It is not necessary for a man to be assured of the rightness of his conscience, by such an infallible certainty of persuasion as amounts to the clearness of a demonstration; but it is sufficient if he knows it upon grounds of such a probability, as shall exclude all rational grounds of doubting. South.

Like brute beasts, we travel with the herd, and are never so solicitous for the rightness of the way, as for the number or figure of our company. Rogers's Sermons.

2. Straitness.

Sounds move strongest in a right line, which nevertheless is not caused by the rightness of the line, but by the shortness of the distance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

RIGID. adj. [rigide, Fr. rigidus, Lat.]

1. Stiff; not to be bent; unpliant.

A body, that is hollow, may be demonstrated to be more rigid and inflexible, than a solid one of the same substance and weight. Ray on the Crea.

2. Severe; inflexible.

His severe judgment giving law,
His modest fancy kept in awe;
As rigid husbands jealous are,
When they believe their wives too fair. Denham.

3. Unremitted; unmitigated.

Queen of this universe! do not believe
Those rigid threats of death; ye shall not die. Milt.

4. Sharp; cruel. It is used somewhat harshly by Philips.

Cressy plains
And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwithstood Could do in rigid fight. Philips.

RIGIDITY. n. s. [rigidité, Fr. from rigid.]

1. Stiffness.

Rigidity is said of the solids of the body, when being stiff or impliable, they cannot readily perform their respective offices; but a fibre is said to be rigid, when its parts so strongly cohere together, as not to yield to that action of the fluids, which ought to overcome their resistance in order to the preservation of health: it is to be remedied by fomentations.

Rigidity of the organs is such a state as makes them resist that expansion, which is necessary to carry on the vital functions: rigidity of the vessels and organs must necessarily follow from the rigidity of the fibres. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Stiffness of appearance; want of easy or airy elegance.

This severe observation of nature, by the one in her commonest, and by the other in her absolute forms, must needs produce in both a kind of rigidity, and consequently more naturalness than gracefulness. Watton's Architecture.

RIGIDLY. adv. [from rigid.]

1. Stiffly; unpliantly.

2. Severely; inflexibly; without remission; without mitigation.

RIGIDNESS. n. s. [from rigid.] Stiffness; severity; inflexibility.

RIGLET. n. s. [regulet, Fr.] A flat thin square piece of wood.

The pieces that are intended to make the frames for pictures, before they are molded, are called riglets. Moxon.

RIGOL. n. s. A circle. Used in Shakespeare for a diadem.

This sleep is sound; this is a sleep,
That, from his golden rigol, hath divorc'd
So many English kings. Shakesp. Henry IV.

RIGOUR. n. s. [rigor, Lat.]

1. Cold; stiffness.

The rest his look
Bound with Gorgonian rigour, not to move. Milton.

2. A convulsive shuddering with sense of cold.

Rigors, chillness, and a fever attend every such new suppuration. Blackmore.

A right regimen, during the rigor or cold fit in the beginning of a fever, is of great importance; a long continued rigor is a sign of a strong disease: during the rigor, the circulation is less quick, and the blood actually stagnates in the extremities, and, pressing upon the heart, may produce concretions; therefore a rigor increaseth an inflammation. Arbuthnot.

3. Severity; sternness; want of condescension to others.

Nature has got the victory over passion, all his rigour is turned to grief and pity. Denham's Sophy.
Rigour makes it difficult for sliding virtue to recover. Clarissa.

4. Severity of life; voluntary pain; austerity.

He resumed his rigors, esteeming this calamity such a one as should not be outlived, but that it became men to be martyrs to. Fell.

Does not looseness of life, and want of a due sobriety in some, drive others into rigors that are unnecessary? Synatt.

This prince lived in this convent, with all the rigor and austerity of a capuchin. Addison on Italy.

5. Strictness; unabated exactness.

It may not seem hard, if in cases of necessity certain profitable ordinances sometimes be relaxed, rather than all men always strictly bound to the general rigor thereof. Hooker.

Heat and cold are not, according to philosophical rigour, the efficient; but are names expressing our passions. Glanville.

The base degenerate age requires Severity and justice in its rigour;
This awes an impious bold offending world. Addis.

6. Rage; cruelty; fury.

He at his foe with furious rigour smites,
That strongest oak might seem to overthrow;
The stroke upon his shield so heavy lights,
That to the ground it doubleth him fall low. Spens.

Driven by the necessities of the times and the temper of the people, more than led by his own disposition to any height and rigour of actions. King Charles.

7. Hardness; not flexibility; solidity; not softness.

The stones the rigor of their kind expel,
And supple into softness as they fell. Dryden.

RIGOROUS. adj. [from rigour.]

1. Severe; allowing no abatement.

He shall be thrown down the Tarpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial,
Than the severity of publick power. Shakesp.
Arc these terms hard and rigorous, beyond our capacities to perform? Rogers's Sermons.

2. Exact; scrupulously nice: as, a rigorous demonstration; a rigorous definition.

RIGOROUSLY. adv. [from rigorous.]

1. Severely; without tenderness or mitigation.

Lest they faint
At the sad sentence rigorously urg'd,
For I behold thee soften'd, and with tears,
Bewailing their excess, all terror hide. Milton.
The people would examine his works more rigorously than himself, and would not forgive the least mistake. Dryden.

2. Exactly; scrupulously; nicely.

RILL. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.] A small brook; a little streamlet.

May thy brimmed waves from this
Their full tribute never miss,
From a thousand pretty rills,
That tumble down the snowy hills. Milton.
On every thorn delightful wisdom grows,
In every rill a sweet instruction flows;
But some untaught, o'erhear the whisp'ring rill,
To spite of sacred leisure blockheads still. Young

To RILL. v. n. [from the noun.] To run in small streams.

Io! Apollo, mighty king, let envy,
Ill-judging and verbose, from Lethe's lake,
Draw tuns immeasurable; while thy favour Administers to my ambitious thirst
The wholesome draught from Aganippe's spring
Genuine, and with soft murmurs gently rilling
Adown the mountains where thy daughters haunt. Prior.

For so appears this fleet. Shakesp.

RIVAL. n. s. [realis, Lat.]

1. One who is in pursuit of the same thing which another man pursues; a competitor.

Oh love! thou sternly dost thy pow'r maintain,
And wilt not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryd.

2. A competitor in love.

She saw her father was grown her adverse party, and yet her fortune such as she must favour her rival. Sidney.

France and Burgundy, Great rivals in our younger daughter's love. Shak.
Your rival's image in your worth I view;
And what I lov'd in him, esteem in you. Granville.

RIVAL. adj. Standing in competition; making the same claim; emulous.

Had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I should be fortunate. Shakesp.

Equal in years, and rival in renown
With Epaphus, the youthful Phaeton Like honour claims. Dryden

You bark to be employ'd,
While Venus is by rival dogs enjoyed. Dryden.

To RIVAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stand in competition with another; to oppose.

Those, that have been raised by the interest of some great minister, trample upon the steps by which they rise, to rival him in his greatness, and at length step into his place. South.

2. To emulate; to endeavour to equal or excel.

Ambitious fool! with horny hoofs to pass
O'er hollow arches of resounding brass;
To rival thunder in its rapid course,
And imitate inimitable force. Dryden's Aeneis.

O thou, too great to rival or to praise,
Forgive, lamented shade, these duteous lays.
Lee had thy fire, and Congreve had thy wit;
And copyist, here and there, some likeness hit;
But now possess'th thy graces, and thy ease;
In thee alone 'twas natural to please! Harte.

To RIVAL. v. n. To be competitors. Out of use.

Burgundy,
We first address'd to w'rd you, who with this king
Have rival'd for our daughter. Shakesp.

RIVALITY. n. s. [realitas, Lat. From RIVALRY. } rival.] Competition; emulation.

It is the privilege of posterity to set matters right between those antagonists, who, by their rivalry for greatness, divided a whole age. Addison.

RIVALSHIP. n. s. [from rival.] The state or character of a rival.

To RIVE. v. a. preter. rived; part. riven. [nȳꝛ broken, Sax. rijten, Dut. river, Fr. to drive.] To split; to cleave; to divide by a blunt instrument; to force in disruption.

At his haughty helmet
So hugely struck, that if the steel did rive
And cleft his head. Spenser.

The varlet at his plaint was grieved sore,
That his deep wounded heart in two did rive. Spenser.

Through riven clouds and molten firmament,
The fierce three-forked engine making way,
Both lofty towers and highest trees hath rent. Spenser.

O Cicero!

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have rived the knotty oaks; but ne'er till now
Did I go through a tempest dropping fire. Shakesp.

As one he stood, escap'd from cruel fight,
Sore toil'd, his riven arms to havock hewn. Milton
The neighbouring forests, formerly shaken and riven with the thunder-bolts of war, did envy the sweet peace of Draina. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Had I not been blind, I might have seen
You riven oak, the fairest of the green. Dryden.

Let the fierce light'ning blast, the thunder rive me. Rowe.

To RIVE. v. n. To be split; to be divided by violence.

Freestone rives, splits, and breaks in any direction. Woodward.

To RIVE, for derive or direct. Not used.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament.
To rive their dangerous artillery
Upon no christian soul but English Talbot. Shak.

To RIVEL. v. a. [ꝛenpleb, Sax. corrugated, rumped.] To contract into wrinkles and corrugations.

Then droop'd the fading flow'rs, their beauty fled,
And clos'd their sickly eyes and bung the head,
And clos'd up with heat, lay dying in their bed. Dryden.

And since that plenteous autumn now is past,
Whose grapes and peaches have indulg'd your taste,
Take in good part, from our poor poet's board,
Such rivell'd fruits as winter can afford. Dryden.

Alum stipticks, with contracting pow'r,
Shrink his thin essence like a rivell'd flow'r. Pope.

RIVEN. part. of rive.

RIVER. n. s. [riviere, Fr. rivus, Lat.] A land-current of water bigger than a brook.

It is a most beautiful country, being stored throughout with many goodly rivers replenished with all sorts of fish. Spenser.

The first of these rivers has been celebrated by the Latin poets for the gentleness of its course, as the other for its rapidity. Addison on Italy.

RIVER-DRAGON. n. s. A crocodile. A name given by Milton to the king of Egypt.

Thus with ten wounds
The river-dragon tan'd at length, submits
To let his sojourners depart. Milton's Par. Lost.

RIVERET. n. s. [diminutive of river.] A small stream; a rill.

Bringing all their riverets in,
There ends; a new song to begin. Drayton.

Calls down riveret from her spring,
Their queen upon her way to bring. Drayton.

RIVER-GOD. n. s. Tutelary deity of a river. His wig hung as trait as the hair of a river-god rising from the water. Arbutnot and Pope.

RIVER-HORSE. n. s. Hippopotamus.

Rose,
As plants ambiguous between sea and land,
The river-horse and scaly crocodile. Milton.

RIVET. n. s. [river, Fr. to break the point of a thing; to drive.] A fastening pin clenched at both ends.

The armourers accomplishing the knights,
With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation. Shakesp.

Thy armour
I'll frush, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it. Shakesp.

Though Valeria's fair, and though she love me too,
'Gainst her my soul is arm'd on every part;
Yet there are secret rivets to my heart,
Where Berenice's charms have broke the way, Subtle as lightnings. Druden's Tyrannick Love.

The verse in fashion is, when numbers flow
So smooth and equal, that no sight can find
The rivet, where the polish'd piece was join'd. Dryden.

The rivets of those wings inclod'd Fit not each other. Druden's Don Sebastian.
This instrument should move easy upon the rivet. Sharp.

To RIVET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with rivets.

This man,
If all our fire were out, would fetch down new
Out of the hand of Jove; and rivet him
To Caucasus, should he but frown. Ben Jonson.

2. To fasten strongly; to be made immoveable.

You were to blame to part with
A thing stuck on with oaths upon your finger,
And rivetted with faith unto your flesh. Shakesp.

Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Screw'd to my memory? Shakesp. Cymbeline.

What one party thought to rivet to a settledness by the influence of the Scots, that the other rejects. King Charles.

Till fortune's fruitless spite had made it known,
Her blows not shook but rivetted his throne. Dryd.

Thus hath God not only rivetted the notion of himself into our natures, but likewise made the belief of his being, necessary to the peace of our minds and happiness of society. Tillotson.

If the eye sees those things rivetted which are loose, where will you begin to rectify the mistake? Locke.

Where we use words of a loose and wandering signification, hence follows mistake and error, which those maxims, brought as proofs to establish propositions, wherein the terms stand for undetermined ideas, do by their authority confirm and rivet. Locke.

Rivet and nail me where I stand, ye pow'rs!
They provoke him to the race Congreve.

Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground. Addison.

A similitude of nature and manners, in such a degree as we are capable of, must tie the holy knot, and rivet the friendship between us. Atterbury.

3. To drive or clench a rivet.

In rivetting, the pin you rivet in should stand upright to the place you rivet it upon; for if it do not stand upright, you will be forced to set it upright, after it is rivetted. Moron.

RIVULET. n. s. [rivulus, Lat.] A small river; a brook; a streamlet.

By fountain, or by shady rivulet,
He sought them. Milton.

The veins, where innumerable little rivulets have their confluence into the common channel of the blood. Bentley.

I saw the rivulet of Salforata, formerly called Albulu, and smelt the stench that arises from its water, which Martial mentions. Addison on Italy.

RIXDOLLAR. n. s. A German coin, worth about four shillings and sixpence sterling. Dict.

ROACH. n. s. [from rutilus, Lat. red-haired.]

A roach is a fish of no great reputation for his faint taste: his spawn is accounted much better than any other part of him: he is accounted the water sheep for his simplicity and foolishness; and it is noted, that roaches recover strength, and grow in a fortnight after spawning. Walton's Ang.
If a gudgeon meet a roach,
He dare not venture to approach;
Yet still he leaps at flies. Swift.

ROAD. n. s. [rade, Fr. route, Fr. route is via trita.]
1. Large way; path.
Would you not think him a madman, who, whilst he might easily ride on the beaten road way, should trouble himself with breaking up of gaps? Suckling.
To God's eternal house direct the way,
A broad and ample road. Milton.
The liberal man dwells always in the road. Fell.
To be indifferent whether we embrace falsehood or truth, is the great road to error. Locke.
Could stupid atoms, with impetuous speed,
By diff'rent roads and adverse ways proceed,
That there they might encounter, here unite. Blackmore.

There is but one road by which to climb up Addison.
2. [Rade, Fr.] Ground where ships may anchor.
I should be still Peering in maps for ports and roads;
And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures. Shakesp.
About the island are many roads, but only one harbour. Sandy's Journey.
3. Inroad; incursion.
The Volsicians stand Ready, when time shall prompt them, to make road
Upon's again. Shak. Coriolanus.

The king of Scotland, seeing none came in to Perkin, turned his enterprize into a road, and wasted Northumberland with fire and sword. Bac.

4. Journey. The word seems, in this sense at least, to be derived from rode, the preterite of ride: as we say, a short ride; an easy ride.
With easy roads he came to Leicester,
And lodg'd in the abbey. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
He from the East his flaming road begins. Milt.

5. The act, or state of travelling.
Some taken from their shops and farms, others from their sports and pleasures, these at suits of law, those at gaming tables, some on the road, others at their own fire-sides. Law.

To ROAM. v. n. [romigare, Ital. See ROOM] To wander without any certain purpose; to ramble; to rove; to play the vagrant. It is imagined to come from the pretences of vagrants, who always said they were going to Rome.
Five summers have I spent in farthest Greece,
Roaming clean through the bounds of Asia. Shak.
Daphne roaming through a thorny wood. Shak.
The lonely fox roams far abroad,
On secret rapine bent, and midnight fraud. Prior.
What were unenlighten'd man,
A savage roaming through the woods and wilds
In quest of prey. Thomson's Summer.

To ROAM. v. a. To range; to wander over.
Now fowls in their clay nests were couch'd,
And now wild beasts came forth the woods to roam. Milton.

ROAMER. n. s. [from roam.] A rover; a rambler; a wanderer; a vagrant.

ROAN. adj. [rouen, Fr.]

They cast the sound to Libya's desert shore;
The Libyan lions hear, and hearing roar. Dryd.

2. To cry in distress.
At his nurse's tears,
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Sole on the barren sands the suffering chief Roar'd out for anguish, and indulg'd his grief. Dry.

3. To sound as the wind or sea.
South, East, and West, with mix'd confusion roar,
And rowl the foaming billows to the shore. Dryd.
Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep,
Howl to the roaring of the northern deep. Pope.

4. To make a loud noise.
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar. Mil.
Consider what fatigues I've known,
How oft I cross'd where carts and coaches roar'd. Gay.

ROAR. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of the lion or other beast.
The wonted roar is up,
And hiss continual through the tedious night. Thomson.

2. An outcry of distress.

3. A clamour of merriment.
Where be your gibes now? your gambols? your songs?
Your flashes of merriment, that were wont to set the table in a roar? Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. The sound of the wind or sea.
The roar
Of loud Euroclydon. Philips.

5. Any loud noise.
Deep throated engines belch'd, whose roar
Imbow'd with outrageous noise the air. Milton.
Oft on a plat of rising ground,
I hear the far-off curfew sound,
Over some wide-water'd shoar,
Swinging slow with sullen roar. Milton.
When cannons did diffuse,
Preventing posts, the terror, and the news;
Our neighbour princes trembled at their roar. Waller.

The waters, listning to the trumpets' roar,
Ohey the summons, and forsake the shore. Dryd.

ROARER. n. s. [from roar.] A noisy brutal man.

To ROAST. v. a. [rostir, rotir, Fr. rosten, Germ. zerstoeden, Sax. roasted; from rastrum, Lat. a grate; to roast, being, in its original sense, to broil on a grid-iron.]

1. To dress meat, by turning it round before the fire.
He roasteth not that which he took in hunting. Decay of Piety.
Roasting and boiling are below the dignity of your office. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

2. To impart dry heat to flesh.
Here elements have lost their uses,
Air ripens not, nor earth produces;
Fire will not roast, nor water boil. Swift.

3. To dress at the fire without water.
In eggs boiled and roasted, there is scarce difference to be discerned. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

4. To heat any thing violently.
Roasted in wrath and fire,
He thus o'ersized with coagulate gore,
Old Priam seeks. Shakesp.

ROAST, for roasted.
He lost his roast beef stomach, not being able to touch a sirlion. Addison.
And if Dan Congreve judges right,
Roast beef and ale make Britons tight. Prior.
It warms the cook-maid not to burn
The roast meat, which it cannot turn. Swift.

To rule the roast. To govern; to manage; to preside. It was perhaps originally roist, which signified a tumult, to direct the populace.
Where champions ruleth the roast,
Their dallie disorder is most. Tusser's Husbandry.
The new made duke that rules the roast. Shakesp.
Alma slap-dash is all again
In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein;
Runs here and there, like Hamlet's ghost,
While every where she rules the roast. Prior.

ROB. n. s. [I believe Arabick.] Inspissated juices.
The infusion, being evaporated to a thicker consistence, passeth into a jelly, rob, extract, which contain all the virtues of the infusion. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To ROB. v. a. [robber, old Fr. robbare, Ital.]

1. To deprive of any thing by unlawful force, or by secret theft; to plunder. To be robbed, according to the present use of the word, is to be injured by theft secret or violent; to rob is to take away by unlawful violence; and to steal, is to take away privately.
Is't not enough to break into my garden,
And, like a thief, to come to rob my grounds,
But thou wilt brave me with these sawcy terms? Shakesp.

Our sins being ripe, there was no preventing of God's justice from reaping that glory in our calamities, which we robbed him of in our prosperity. King Charles.
I have not here design'd to rob him of any part of that commendation which he has so justly acquired from the whole author, whose fragments only fall to my portion. Dryden.
The water nymphs lament their empty urns, Bæotia, rob'd of silver Dirce, mourns. Addison.

2. To set free; to deprive of something bad. Ironical.
Our house is hell, and thou, a merry devil,
Didst rob it of some taste of tediousness. Shakesp.

3. To take away unlawfully.
Better be disdain'd of all, than fashion a carriage to rob love from any. Shakesp.
Procure, that the nourishment may not be robbed and drawn away. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Nor will I take from any man his due;
But thus assuoin' all, he robs from you. Dryden.
Oh double sacrilege on things divine,
To rob the relic, and deface the shrine! Dryden.

ROBBER. n. s. [from rob.] One that plunders by force, or steals by secret means; a plunderer; a thief.
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee: I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favours
You should not rattle thus. Shakesp.
Had'st thou not committed Notorious murder on those thirty men
At Ascalon;
Then, like a robber, strip'd'st them of their robes. Milton's Agonistes.

The robber must run, ride, and use all the desperate ways of escape; and probably, after all, his sin betrays him to the gaol, from thence advances him to the gibbet. South.
Bold Prometheus did aspire,
And stole from heav'n the seeds of fire;
A train of hills, a ghastly crew,
The robber's blazing track pursue. Dryd. Horace.

R O C

Public robbers are more criminal than petty and common thieves. Davenant.

RO'BBERY. n. s. [roberie, old Fr. from rob.] Theft perpetrated by force or with privacy.
Thieves for their robbery have authority,
When judges steal themselves. Shakesp.
A storm or robbery
Shook down my mellow hangings. Shakesp.
Some more effectual way might be found, for suppressing common thefts and robberies. Temple.

ROBE. n. s. [robbe, Fr. robba, Ital. rauba, low Lat.] A gown of state; a dress of dignity.
Through tatter'd cloaths small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Shakesp.
My Nan shall be the queen of all fairies,
Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shakesp.
The last good king, whom willing Rome obey'd,
Was the poor offspring of a captive maid;
Yet he those robes of empire justly bore,
Which Romulus, our sacred founder, wore. Dryd.

TO ROBE. v. a. [from the noun.] To dress pompously; to invest.
What christian soldier will not be touch'd with a religious emulation, to see an order of Jesus do such service for enlarging the christian borders; and an order of St. George only to robe, and feast, and perform rites and observances? Bacon.
There in long robes the royal magi stand;
The sage Chaldeans rob'd in white appear'd,
And Brahmans. Pope's Temple of Fame.
Robed in loose array she came to bathe. Thoms.

Robustious to no purpose, clustering down,
Vain monument of strength. Milton's Agonistes.
2. Boisterous; violent; unwieldy.
The men sympathize with the mastiffs, in robustious and rough coming on. Shakesp. Henry V.
It offends me to hear a robustious periwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Shakesp.
While I was managing this young robustious fellow, that old spark, who was nothing but sin and bone, slipt through my fingers. Dryden.
Romp-loving miss
Is haul'd about in gallantry robust. Thomson.

3. Requiring strength.
The tenderness of a sprain remains a good while after, and leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the part quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

4. Robustious is now only used in low language, and in a sense of contempt.

ROBU'STNESS. n. s. [from robust.]

Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind. Pope.
2. Protection; defence. A scriptural sense.
Though the reeds of Egypt break under the hand of him that leans on them, yet the rock of Israel will be an everlasting stay. King Charles.
3. [Rock, Dan. rocca, Ital. rucca, Span. spinroch, Dut.] A distaff held in the hand, from which the wool was spun by twirling a ball below.
A learned and a manly soul
I purpos'd her; that should with even powers,
The rock, the spindle, and the sheers controul
Of destiny, and spin her own free hours. B. Jonson.
On the rock a scanty measure place
Of vital flax, and turn the wheel apace. Dryden.
Flow from the rock, my flax, and swiftly flow,
Persue thy thread, the spindle runs below. Parnel.

To ROCK. v. a. [rocquer, Fr.]
1. To shake; to move backwards and forwards.
If, by a quicker rocking of the engine, the smoke were more swiftly shaken, it would, like water, vibrate to and fro. Boyle.
The wind was laid; and the whisp'ring sound
Was dumb; a rising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.
A living tortoise, being turned up on its back, could help itself only by its neck and head, by pushing against the ground to rock itself as in a cradle, to find out the side towards which the inequality of the ground might more easily permit to roll its shell. Ray on the Creation.
2. To move the cradle, in order to procure sleep.
Come, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shakesp.
Leaning her head upon my breast,
My panting heart rock'd her asleep. Suckling.
My bloody resolutions,
Like sick and froward children,
Were rock'd asleep by reason. Denham.

enriched by metals, the wand will, by bowing towards it, discover it. Boyle.

2. A kind of scepter.

Sh' had all the royal makings of a queen; As holy oil, Edward Confessor's crown, The rod and bird of peace. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The past'ral reed of Hermes, or his opiate rod. Milton

O gentle sleep, I cry'd,
Why is thy gift to me alone deny'd?
Mildest of beings, friend to ev'ry clime,
Where lies my error, what has been my crime?
Beasts, birds and cattle feel thy balmy rod;
The drowsy mountains wave, and seem to nod:
The torrents cease to chide, the seas to roar,
And the hush'd waves recline upon the shore. Harte.

3. Any thing long and slender.

Let the fisherman
Increase his tackle, and his rod retie. Gay.
Haste, ye Cyclops, with your forked rods,
This rebel love braves all the gods,
And every hour by love is made,
Some heaven-defying Enclade. Granville.

You rogue, here's lime in this sack too; there's nothing but roguery to be found in villainous man. Shakesp.

Like the devil did tempt and sway 'em
To rogueries, and then betray 'em. Hudibros.
The kid smelt out the roguery. L'Estrange.
'Tis no scandal grown,
For debt and roguery to quit the town. Dryden.

The roguery of alchymy,
And we, the bubbled fools,
Spend all our present stock in hopes of golden rules. Swift.

3. Waggey; arch tricks.

RO'GUESHIP. n. s. [from rogue.] The qualities or personage of a rogue.

Say, in what nasty cellar under ground,
Or what church porch your rogueship may be found? Dryden.

RO'GUISH. adj. [from rogue.]

1. Vagrant; vagabond.
Though the persons, by whom it is used, be of better note than the former roguish sort; yet the fault is no less worthy of a marshal. Spenser.

2. Knavish; fraudulent.

He gets a thousand thumps and kicks,
Yet cannot leave his roguish tricks. Swift.

3. Waggish; wanton; slightly mischievous.

The most bewitching leer with her eyes, the most roguish cast; her cheeks are dimpled when she smiles, and her smiles would tempt an hermit. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

I am pleased to see my tenants pass away a whole evening in playing their innocent tricks; our friend Wimble is as merry as any of them, and shews a thousand roguish tricks on these occasions. Addison.

Timothy used to be playing roguish tricks; when his mistress's back was turned, he would loll out his tongue. Arbutnot.

RO'GUISHLY. adv. [from roguish.] Like a rogue; knavishly; wantonly.

8. To form in a stream or waves.
A small Euphrates through the piece is roll'd,
And little eagles wave their wings in gold. Pope.

To ROLL. v. n.

R O L

1. To be moved by the successive application of all parts of the surface to a plane: as a cylinder.

Fire must rend the sky,
And wheel on the earth, devouring where it rolls.

Reports, like snow-halls, gather still the farther they roll.

I'm pleas'd with my own work, Jove was not more
With infant nature, when his spacious hand
Had rounded this huge ball of earth and seas,
To give it the first push, and see it roll
Along the vast abyss.

2. To run on wheels.

He next essays to walk, but downward press'd
On four feet imitates his brother beast;
By slow degrees he gathers from the ground
His legs, and to the rolling chair is bound.

3. To perform a periodical revolution.

Thus the year rolls within itself again.

4. To move with the surface variously directed.

Thou, light,
Revisit'st not these eyes, which roll in vain,
To find the piercing ray, and find no dawn.

5. To float in rough water.

Twice ten tempestuous nights I roll'd, resign'd
To roaring billows and the warring wind.

6. To move as waves or volumes of water.

Wave rolling after wave in torrent rapture.

R O O

A terras-walk, and half a rood
Of land, set out to plant a wood. Swift.
No stately larch-tree there expands a shade
O'er half a rood of Larissæan glade. Harte.

2. A pole; a measure of sixteen feet and a half in long measure.

Satan,
With head uplit 'bove the wave, his other parts
Pronè on the flood, extended long and large,
Lay floating many a rood. Milton.
For stone fences in the North, they dig the stones for eighteen-pence a rood, and make the walls for the same price, reckoning twenty-one foot to the rood or pole. Mortimer.

3. [node, Sax.] The cross; sometimes an image of a saint.

By the holy rood,
I do not like these several councils. Shakesp.

ROODLOFT. n. s. [rood and loft.] A gallery in the church on which reliques or images were set to view.

ROOF. n. s. [hrof, Sax. In the plural Sidney has rooves: now obsolete.]

1. The cover of a house.

Her shoulders he like two white doves,
Perching within square royal rooves. Sidney.

Return to her, and fifty men oismiss'd!
No, rather I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakesp.

2. The house in general.

I'll tell all strictly true,
If time, and foode, and wine enough accrue Within your roofs to us; that freely we May sit and banquet. Chapman.

3. The vault; the inside of the arch that covers a building.

From the magnanimity of the Jews, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and un-wonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever match. Hooker.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n, Rais'd by your populous troops. Shakesp.

In thy fane, the dusty spoils among,
High on the burnish'd roof, thy banner shall be hung. Dryden.

4. The palate; the upper part of the mouth.

Swearing till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

My very lips might freeze to my teeth, my tongue to the roof of my mouth, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me. Shakesp.

Some fishes have rows of teeth in the roofs of their mouths; as pikes, salmons, and trouts.
Bacon's Natural History.

To ROOF. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a roof.

He enter'd soon the shade
High *roof*d, and walks beneath, and alleys brown. Milton.

Large foundations may be safely laid;
Or houses roof'd, if friendly planets aid. Creech.

I have not seen the remains of any Roman buildings, that have not been roofed with vaults or arches. Addison.

2. To inclose a house.

Here had we now our country's honour roof'd,
Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present. Shakesp.

ROOFY. adj. [from roof.] Having roofs.

Snakes,
Whether to roofy houses they repair,
Or sun themselves abroad in open air,
In all abodes of pestilential kind
To sheep. Dryden's Georgicks.

ROOK. n. s. [hroc, Sax.]

1. A bird resembling a crow; it feeds not on carrion but grain.

Augurs, that understood relations, have,

R O O

By magpies, and by choughs, and rooks, brought forth

The secret'st man of blood. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Huge flocks of rising rooks forsake their food,
And crying seek the shelter of the wood. Dryden.

The jay, the rook, the daw Aid the full concert. Thomson's Spring.

2. [Rocco, Ital.] A common man at chess.

So have I seen a knight at chess,
His rooks and knights withdrawn.

His queen and bishops in distress,
Shifting about grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden's Songs.

3. A cheat; a trickish rapacious fellow.

I am, like an old rook, who is ruined by gaming, forced to live on the good fortune of the pushing young men. Wycherley.

To ROOK. v. n. [from the noun.] To rob; to cheat.

They rook'd upon us with design,
To out-reform and undermine. Hudibras.

How any one's being put into a mixed herd of unruly boys, and there learning to rook at span-farthing, fits him for conversation, I do not see.
Locke on Education.

ROOKERY. n. s. [from rook.] A nursery of rooks.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court. Pope.

ROOKY. adj. [from rook.] Inhabited by

To all delight of human sense expos'd
In narrow room, nature's whole wealth. Milton.

If you will have a young man to put his travels in a little room, and in short time gather much, this he must do. Bacon.

2. Space or place unoccupied.

The dry land is much too big for its inhabitants:
and that before y shall want room by encreasing and multiplying, there may be new heavens and a new earth. Bentley.

3. Way unobstructed.

Make room, and let him stand before our face. Shakesp.

What train of servants, what extent of field,
Shall aid the birth, or give him room to build?

Creech.

This paternal regal power, being by divine right, leaves no room for human prudence to place it any where. Locke.

4. Place of another; stead.

In evils, that cannot be removed without the manifest danger of greater to succeed in their rooms, wisdom of necessity must give place to necessity. Hooker.

For better ends our kind Redeemer dy'd,
Or the fallen angels rooms will be but ill supply'd. Roscommon.

By contributing to the contentment of other men, and rendering them as happy as lies in our power, we do God's work, are in his place and room. Calamy's Sermons.

5. Unobstructed opportunity.

When this princess was in her father's court, she was so celebrated, that there was no prince in the empire, who had room for such an alliance, that was not ambitious of gaining her into his family. Addison's Freholder.

It puts us upon so eager a pursuit of the advantages of life, as leaves no room to reflect on the great author of them. Atterbury.

6. Possible admission; possible mode.

Will you not look with pity on me?
Is there no hope? is there no room for pardon?
A. Philips.

7. An apartment in a house; so much of a house as is inclosed within partitions.

I found the prince in the next room,
Washing with kindly tears his gentle cheeks. Shakesp.

If when she appears in th' room,

R O O

Thou dost not quake, and art struck dumb;

Know this,
Thou lov'st amiss;

And to love true,
Thou must begin again, and love anew. Suckling.

In a prince's court, the only question a man is to ask is, whether it be the custom of the court, or will of the prince, to be uncovered in some rooms and not in others? Stillingfleet.

It will afford me a few pleasant rooms, for such a friend as yourself. Pope.

ROOMAGE. n. s. [from room.] Space;

place.

Man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion, for the lodging of the in-tellective faculties: it must be a silent character of hope, when there is good store of roomage and receipt, where those powers are stow'd. Watton.

ROOMINESS. n. s. [from roomy.] Space;

quantity of extent.

ROOMY. adj. [from room.] Spacious;

wide; large.

With roomy decks, her guns of mighty strength,
Deep in her draught, and warlike in her length. Dryden.

truth universally agreed in. Temple.

5. The first ancestor.

It was said,
That myself should be the root, and father
Of many kings. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Why did my parents send me to the schools,
That I with knowledge might enrich my mind?
Since the desire to know first made men fools,
And did corrupt the root of all mankind. Davies.

Whence,
But from the author of all ill, could spring
So deep a malice, to confound the race
Of mankind in one root. Milton's Paradise Lost

R O O

They were the roots, out of which sprang two distinct people, under two distinct governments. Locke.

- 6. Fixed residence.
- 7. Impression; durable effect.

Having this way eased the church, as they thought, of superfluity, they went on till they had plucked up even those things also, which had taken a great deal stronger and deeper root. Hooker.
That love took deepest root which first did grow. Dryden.

To ROOT. n. n. [from the noun.]

- 1. To fix the root; to strike far into the earth.

Here follow leas
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon. Shakesp. Henry V.
Underneath the grove of sycamour,
That westward rooteth, did I see your son. Shakesp.
The multiplying brood of the ungodly shall not take deep rooting from bastard slips, nor lay any fast foundation. Wisdom.
After a year's rooting, then shaking doth the tree good, by loosening of the earth. Bacon.
The coultter must be proportioned to the soil, because, in deep grounds, the weeds root the deeper. Mortimer.

- 2. To turn up earth: as, the hog roots the garden.

Had spread her purple robe through dewy air. Spenser.

A smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue.
Fairest blossom! do not slight
That age, which you may know so soon;
The rosy morn resigns her light,
And milder glory to the noon.
As Thessalian steeds the race adorn,
So rosy colour'd Helen is the pride
Of Lacedemon, and of Greece beside.
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.

To ROT. v. n. [rotan, Sax. rotten, Dut.] To putrify; to lose the cohesion of its parts.

A man may rot even here.
From hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
And then from hour to hour we rot and rot. Shak.

Didst trust our counsels, and we both may rue, Having his falsehood found too late, 'twas he
That made me cast you guilty, and you me.
Donne.

Thy will Chose freely what it now so justly rues.
Milton.

RUE. n. s. [rue, Fr. ruta, Lat.] An herb, called herb of grace, because holy water was sprinkled with it.
Miller.

What savor is better,
For places infested, than wormwood and rue?
Tusser.

Here did she drop a tear; here, in this place,
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, even for Ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen.
Shakesp. Richard II.

The weasel, to encounter the serpent, arms herself with eating of rue.
Morc.

RUEFUL. adj. [rue and full.] Mournful; woeful; sorrowful.

When we have our armour buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords,
Spur them to rueful work, rein them from ruth.
Shakesp.

Cocytus, nam'd of lamentation loud,
Heard on the rueful stream.
Milton's Paradise Lost.
He sigh'd, and cast a rueful eye;
Our pity kindles, and our passions die.
Dryden.

RUEFULLY. adv. [from rueful] Mournfully; sorrowfully.

Why should an ape run away from a snail, and very ruefully and frightfully look back, as being afraid?
Morc.

RUFF. n. s.

1. A puckered linen ornament, formerly worn about the neck. See RUFFLE.

You a captain! for what? for tearing a whore's ruff in a bawly house.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

We'll revel it,
With ruffs, and cuffs, and fardingsals.
Shakesp.
Like an upstart in the town,
Before them every thing went down,
Some tore a ruff, and some a gown.
Drayton.

Sooner may a gulling weather spy,
By drawing forth heav'n's scheme, tell certainly,
What fashion'd hats, or ruffs, or suits next year,
Our giddy-headed anticke youth will wear.
Donne.

The ladies freed the neck from those yokes, those linen ruffs in which the simplicity of their grandmothers had enclosed it Addison's Guardian

R U F

2. Any thing collected into puckers or corrugations.

I rear'd this flow'r,
Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread. Pope.

3. [From rough scales.] A small river fish.

A ruff or pope is much like the perch for shape, and taken to be better, but will not grow bigger than a gudgeon; he is an excellent fish, and of a pleasant taste. Walton.

4 A state of roughness. Obsolete.

As fields set all their bristles up; in such a ruff wert thou. Chapman's Iliad.

5. New state. This seems to be the meaning of this cant word, unless it be contracted from ruffle.

How many princes that, in the ruff of all their glory, have been taken down from the head of a conquering army to the wheel of the victor's chariot! L'Estrange.

RUFFIAN. n. s. [ruffiano, Ital. ruffian, Fr. a bawd; ruffier, Dan. to pillage; perhaps it may be best derived from the old Teutonick word which we now write, rough.] A brutal, boisterous, mischievous fellow; a cut-throat; a robber; a murderer.

Have you a ruffian that will swear? drink? dance? Revel the night? rob? murder? Shakesp.

Sir Ralph Vane's bold answers, termed rude and ruffian like, falling into years apt to take offence, furthered his condemnation. Hayward.

The boasted ancestors of these great men, Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians; This dread of nations, this almighty Rome, That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds All under heaven, was founded on a rape. Addison's Cato.

RUFFIAN. adj. Brutal; savagely boisterous.

Experienc'd age
May timely intercept the ruffian rage;
Convene the tribes. Pope's Odyssey.

To RUFFIAN. v. n. [from the noun.]

To rage; to raise tumults; to play the ruffian. Not in use.

A fuller blast ne'er shook our battlements;
If it hath ruffian'd so upon the sea,
What ribs of oak, when mountains melt on them,
Can hold the mortoise? Shakesp. Othello.

To RUFFLE. v. a. [ruffelen, Dut. to wrinkle.]

1. To disorder; to put out of form; to make less smooth.

Naughty lady,
These hairs, which thou dost ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee: I'm your host;
With robbers hands, my hospitable favours
You should not ruffle thus. Shakesp.

In changeable taffeties, differing colours emerge and vanish upon the ruffling of the same piece of silk. Boyle.

As she first began to rise,
She smooth'd the ruffled seas, and clear'd the skies. Dryden.

Bear me, some god! oh quickly hear me lieuce
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense;
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings. Pope.

2. To discompose; to disturb; to put out of temper.

Were I Brutus,
And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
In every wound of Caesar, that should move
The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny. Shakesp.

We are transported by passions, and our minds ruffled by the disorders of the body; nor yet can we tell, how the soul should be affected by such kind of agitations. Glanville.

3. To put out of order; to surprise.

R U G

The knight found out
Th' advantage of the ground, where best
He might the ruff'd foe infest. Hudibras.

A rug was o'er his shoulders thrown;
A rug; for nightgown he had none. Swift.

3. A rough woolly dog. Not used.

Mungrels, spaniels, curs,
Shoughes, water rugs, and demy wolves are cleped
All by the name of dogs. Shakesp. Macbeth.

RUGGED. adj. [rugget, Swed.]

1. Rough; full of unevenness and asperity.

Nature, like a weak and weary traveller,
Tir'd with a tedious and rugged way. Denham.

Since the earth revolves not upon a material and rugged, but a geometrical plane, their proportions may be varied in innumerable degrees. Bentley.

2. Not neat; not regular; uneven.

His hair is sticking;
Hiswell-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged
Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd. Shakesp.

3. Savage of temper; brutal; rough.

The greatest favours to such an one neither soften nor win upon him; neither melt nor endear him, but leave him as hard, rugged, and unconcerned as ever. South.

4. Stormy; rude; tumultuous; turbulent;

tempestuous.

Now bind my brows with iron, and approach
The rugged'st hour that time and spite dare bring,
To frown upon th' enrag'd Northumberland. Shakesp.

RULE. n. s. [regula, Lat.]

1. Government; empire; sway; supreme command.

I am asham'd, that women
 Should seek for rule, supremacy, or sway,
 When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakesp.

May he live
 Ever below'd, and loving may his rule be! Shak.
 A wise servant shall have rule over a son that causeth shame. Proverbs, xvii. 2.

Adam's sin did not deprive him of his rule, but left the creatures to a reluctance. Bacon.
 There being no law of nature nor positive law of God, that determines which is the positive heir, the right of succession, and consequently of bearing rule, could not have been determined.
 Locke.

This makes them apprehensive of every tendency, to endanger that form of rule established by the law of their country.
 Instruct me whence this uproar;
 And wherefore Vanoe, the sworn friend to Rome,
 Should spurn against our rule, and stir
 The tributary provinces to war? A. Philips's Briton.

Sev'n years the traitor rich Mycenæ sway'd;
 And his stern rule the groaning land obey'd. Pope.

2. An instrument by which lines are drawn.

If your influence be quite damn'd up
 With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
 Though a rush candle from the wicker hole
 Of some clay habitation, visit us
 With thy long level'd rule of streaming light. Milton.

A judicious artist will use his eye, but he will trust only to his rule. South's Sermons.

3. Canon; precept by which the thoughts or actions are directed.

He lay'd this rule before him, which proved of great use; never to trouble himself with the foresight of future events. Fell.

This little treatise will furnish you with infallible rules of judging truly. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 Know'st with an equal hand to hold the scale;
 See'st where the reasons pinch, and where they fail,
 And where exceptions o'er th' general rule prevail. Dryden.

We profess to have embraced a religion, which contains the most exact rules for the government of our lives. Tillotson.

We owe to Christianity the discovery of the most certain and perfect rule of life. Tillotson.

A rule that relates even to the smallest part of our life, is of great benefit to us, merely as it is a rule. Law.

4. Regularity; propriety of behaviour.

Not in use.
 Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him,
 Do call it valiant fury; but for certain,
 He cannot buckle his distemper'd cause
 Within the belt of rule. Shakesp.

To RULE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To govern; to control; to manage with power and authority.

It is a purpos'd thing
 To curb the will of the nobility;
 Suffer't, and live with such as cannot rule,
 Nor ever will be rul'd. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
 Marg'ret shall now be queen, and rule the king;
 But I will rule both her, the king, and realm. Shak.
 A greater power now rul'd him. Milton.

Rome! 'tis thine alone with awful sway,
 To rule mankind, and make the world obey,
 Disposing peace and war thy own majestic way. Dryden.

2. To manage; to conduct.

He sought to take unto him the ruling of the affairs. 1 Mac.

3. To settle as by a rule.

Had he done it with the pope's license, his adversaries must have been silent; for that's a ruled case with the schoolmen. Atterbury.

To RULE. v. n. To have power or command to rule over.

Judah yet ruleth with God, and is faithful with the saints. Hosea, xi. 12.

Thrice happy men! whom God hath thus ad-vanc'd!

Created in his image, there to dwell,
 And worship him; and in reward to rule O'er his works. Milton's Paradise Lost.

We subdue and rule over all other creatures;
 and use for our own behoof those qualities wherein they excel. Ray.

He can have no divine right to my obedience, who cannot shew his divine right to the power of ruling over me. Locke.

RU'LER. n. s. [from rule.]

Though rushes overspread the neighbour'g plains. Dryden.

2. Any thing proverbially worthless.

Not a rush matter, whether apes go on four legs or two. L'Estrange.
John Bull's friendship is not worth a rush. Arbuth.

RUSH-CANDLE. n. s. [rush and caudle.]

A small blinking taper, made by stripping a rush, except one small stripe of the bark which holds the pith together, and dipping it in tallow.
Be it moon or sun, or what you please;
And if you please to call it a rush-candle,
Henceforth it shall be so for me. Shakesp.

If your influence be quite dam'd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us. Milton.

To RUSH. v. n. [Sax.] To move with violence; to go on with tumultuous rapidity.

Gorgias removed out of the camp by night, to the end he might rush upon the camp of the Jews. 1 Mac. iv. 2.

Every one that was a warrior rushed out upon them. Judith.

Arms rush to battle in the clouds.
Why wilt thou rush to certain death, and rage
In rash attempts beyond thy tender age, Betray'd by pious love? Dryden's Virgil.

Desperate should he rush, and lose his life,
With odds oppress'd. Dryden's Aeneis.

They will always strive to be good christians, but never think it to be a part of religion, to rush into the office of princes or ministers. Spratt.

You say, the sea
Does with its waves fall backward to the West,
And, thence repell'd, advances to the East;
While this revolving motion does endure,
The deep must reel, and rush from shoar to shoar. Blackmore.

With a rushing sound th' assembly bend Diverse their steps. Pope's Odyssey.

RUS

Now sunk the sun from his aereal height,
And o'er the shaded billows rush'd the night. Pope.

RUSH. n. s. [from the verb.] Violent course.

A gentleman of his train spurred up his horse, and with a violent rush severed him from the duke. Watton.

Him while fresh and fragrant time Cherish in his golden prime,
The rush of death's unruly wave
Swept him off into his grave. Crashaw.

Cruel Auster thither ly'd him,
And with the rush of one rude blast,
Sham'd not spitefully to cast
All his leaves so fresh, so sweet. Crashaw.

RUSHY. adj. [from rush.]

1. Abounding with rushes.
In rushy grounds, springs are found at the first spit. Mortimer.

The timid hare to some lone seat
Retir'd; the rushy fen or rugged furze. Thomson.

What knight like him could toss the rushy lance? Tickel.

RUSK. n. s. Hard bread for stores.

The lady sent me divers presents of fruits, sugar, and rusk. Raleigh.

RUSMA. n. s. A brown and light iron substance, with half as much quicklime steeped in water, the Turkish women make their psilothron, to take off their hair. Grew.

RUSSET. adj. [roussel, Fr. russus, Lat.]

1. Reddish brown. Such is the colour of apples called rusetings.

The morn, in ruset mantle clad,
Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill. Shak.
Our summer such a ruset livery wears,
As in a garment often dy'd appears. Dryden.

2. Newton seems to use it for grey; but, if the etymology be regarded, improperly.

This white spot was immediately encompassed with a dark grey or ruset, and that dark grey with the colours of the first iris. Newton's Opticks.

3. Coarse; homespun; rustick. It is much used in descriptions of the manners and dresses of the country, I suppose, because it was formerly the colour of rustick dress; in some places, the rusticks still dye cloaths spun at home with bark, which must make them ruset.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Figures pedantical: these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd
In ruset yeas, and honest kersy noes. Shakesp.

RUSSET. n. s. Country dress. See

RUSSET. adj.
The Dorick dialect has a sweetness in its clownishness, like a fair shepherdess in her country ruset. Dryden.

RUSSET. } n. s. A name given to RUSSETING. } several sorts of pears or apples from their colour.

The ruset pearmain is a very pleasant fruit, continuing long on the tree, and in the conservatory partakes both of the rusetting and pearmain in colour and taste; the one side being generally ruset, and the other streaked like a pearmain. Mortimer.

RUST. n. s. [ruyt, Sax.]

1. The red desquamation of old iron.

This iron began at the length to gather rust. Hooker.

Rust eaten pikes and swords in time to come,
When crooked plows dig up earth's fertile womb,
The husbandman shall oft discover. May's Virgil.

But Pallas came in shape of rust,
And 'twixt the spring and hammer thrust
Her Gorgon shield, which made the cock Stand stiff, as 'twere transform'd to stock. Hudibras.

R U S

My scymitar got some rust by the sea water.
Gulliver.

2. The tarnished or corroded surface of any metal.

By dint of sword his crown he shall increase,
And scour his armour from the rust of peace. Dryd.

3. Loss of power by inactivity.

4. Matter bred by corruption or degeneration.

Let her see thy sacred truths cleared from all rust and dross of human mixtures. King Charles.

To RUST. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To gather rust; to have the surface tarnished or corroded.

Her fallow leas,
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory
Doth root upon, while that the cutler rusts,
That should deracinate such savagery. Shakesp.
Our armours now may rust, our idle scymitars
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

2. To degenerate in idleness.

Must I rust in Egypt, never more Appear in arms, and be the chief of Greece?
Dryden.

To RUST. v. a.

1. To make rusty.

Keep up your bright swords, for the dew will rust them. Shakesp. Othello.

2. To impair by time or inactivity.

RUSTICAL. adj. [rusticus, Lat. rustique, Fr.] Rough; savage; boisterous; brutal;
rude.

On he brought me unto so bare a house, that it was the picture of miserable happiness and rich beggary, served only by a company of rustical villains, full of sweat and dust, not one of them other than a labourer. Sidney.

This is by a rustical severity to banish all urba-nity, whose harmless and confined condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

He confounds the singing and dancing of the satyrs with the rustical entertainment of the first Romans. Dryden.

RUSTICALLY. adv. [from rustical.] Savagely; rudely; inelegantly.

My brother Jaques he keeps at school,
And report speaks goldenly of his profit;
For my part he keeps me rustically at home. Shak.
Quintus here was born,

Whose shining ploughshare was in furrows worn,
Met by his trembling wife, returning home,
And rustically joy'd, as chief of Rome. Dryden.

RUSTICALNESS. n. s. [from rustical.]

The quality of being rustical; rudeness;
savageness.

To RUSTICATE. v. n. [rusticor, Lat.]

To reside in the country.

My lady Scdamore, from having rusticated in your company too long, pretends to open her eyes for the sake of seeing the sun, and to sleep because it is night. Pope.

To RUSTICATE. v. a. To banish into the country.

I was deeply in love with a milliner, upon which I was sent away, or, in the university phrase, rusticated for ever. Spectator.

RUSTICITY. n. s. [rusticité, Fr. rusticitas, from rusticus, Lat.]

1. Qualities of one that lives in the country; simplicity; artlessness; rudeness;
savageness.

There presented himself a tall, clownish, young man, who falling before the queen of the fairies, desired that he might have the achievement of any adventure, which, during the feast, might happen; that being granted, he rested him on the floor, unfit for a better place by his rusticity. Spenser.

The sweetness and rusticity of a pastoral cannot be so well express in any other tongue as in the Greek, when rightly mixt with the Dorick dialect.
Addison.

R U T

This so general expence of their time would curtail the ordinary means of knowledge, as 'twould shorten the opportunities of vice; and so accordingly an universal rusticity presently took place, and stopped not till it had over-run the whole stock of mankind. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Rural appearance.

RUSTICK. adj. [rusticus, Lat.]

1. Rural; country.

By Lelius willing missing was the odds of the Iberian side, and continued so in the next by the excellent running of a knight, though fostered so by the muses, as many times the very rustick people left both their delights and profits to hearken to his songs. Sidney.

2. Rude; untaught; inelegant.

An ignorant clown cannot learn fine language or a courtly behaviour, when his rustick airs have grown up with him till the age of forty.
Watts's Logick.

3. Brutal; savage.

My soul foreboded I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster fierce with barb'rous pow'r;
Some rustick wretch, who liv'd in heav'n's despight,
Contenting laws, and trampling on the right.
Pope.

4. Artless; honest; simple.

5. Plain; unadorned.

An altar stood, rustick, of grassy ford. Milton.
With unguents smooth the polish'd marble shone
Where ancient Neleus sat, a rustick throne. Pope.

RUSTICK. n. s. A clown; a swain; an inhabitant of the country.

As nothing is so rude and insolent as a wealthy rustick, all this his kindness is overlooked, and his person most unworthily rail'd at. South.

RUSTINESS. n. s. [from rusty.] The state of being rusty.

To RUSTLE. v. n. [hrustelan, Sax.] To make a low continued rattle; to make a quick succession of small noises.

He is coming; I hear the straw rustle. Shakesp.
This life

Is nobler than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble;
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk. Shakesp.

Thick swarm'd, both on the ground, and in the air

Brush'd with the hiss of rustling wings. Milton.
As when we see the winged winds engage,
Rustling from every quarter of the sky,
North, East, and West, in airy swiftness vy.
Granville.

All begin the attack;
Fans clap, silks rustle, and tough whalebones crack. Pope.

Notless their number than the milk-white swans
That o'er the winding of Cyaster's springs, Stretch their long necks, and clap their rustling wings. Pope.

RUSTY. adj. [from rust.]

1. Covered with rust; infected with rust.

After a long calm of peace, he was left engaged in a war with a rusty sword and empty purse.
Howel.

Part scour the rusty shields with seam, and part
New grind the blunted ax. Dryden's Æneis.

2. Impaired by inactivity.

I Hector, in his dull and long continued truce,
Is rusty grown. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To RUT. v. n. [ruit, Fr.] To desire to come together. Used of deer.

RUT. n. s. [rut, Fr.]

1. Copulation of deer.

The time of going to rut of deer is in September; for that they need the whole summer's feed to make them fit for generation; and if rain come about the middle of September, they go to rut somewhat the sooner. Bacon.

The ground hereof was the observation of this part in deer after immoderate venery, and about the end of their rut. Brown.

R Y E

2. [Route, Fr.] The track of a cart wheel.
Ainsworth.

From hills raine waters headlong fall,
That always eat huge ruts, which, met in one bed fill a vall

With such a confluence of streames, that on the mountaine grounds
Farre off, in frighted shepherds eares the bustling noise rebounds. Chapman.

RUTH. n. s. [from rue.]

1. Mercy; pity; tenderness; sorrow for the misery of another. Out of use.

O wretch of guests, said he, thy tale hath stirred
My mind to much ruth. Chapman.

All ruth, compassion, mercy he forgot. Fairfax.
She fair, he full of bashfulness and truth
Lov'd much, hop'd little, and desired nought;
He durst not speak, by suit to purchase ruth. Fairfax.

The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chosen thou hast; and they that overween,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and ruth. Milton.

2. Misery; sorrow.

The Britons, by Maximilian laid way
With wretched miseries and woful ruth,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey. Spens.

RUTHFUL. adj. [ruth and full.] Rueful;
woful; sorrowful.

The inhabitants seldom take a ruthful and reaving experience of those harms, which infectious diseases carry with them. Carew.

RUTHFULLY. adv. [from ruthful.]

1. Wofully; sadly.

The flower of horse and foot, lost by the valour of the enemy, ruthfully perished. Knolles.

2. Sorrowfully; mournfully.

Help me, ye baneful birds, whose shrieking sound
Is sign of dreary death, my deadly cries
Most ruthfully to tune. Spenser's Pastorals.

3. Wofully. In irony.

By this Minerva's friend bereft Oileades of that rich bowl, and left his lips, nose, eyes Ruthfully smear'd. Chapman's Iliads.

RUTHLESS. adj. [from ruth.] Cruel;
pitiless; uncompassionate; barbarous.

What is Edward but a ruthless sea?
What Clarence but a quicksand of deceit? Shak.
The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
And when I start, the cruel people laugh. Shakesp.

His archers circle me; y reins they wound,
And ruthless shed my gall upon the ground. Sandys.
Their rage the hostile powers restrain,
All but the ruthless monarch of the main. Pope.

RUTHLESSNESS. n. s. [from ruthless.]

Want of pity.

RUTHLESSLY. adv. [from ruthless.] Without pity; cruelly; barbarously.

RUTTIER. n. s. [rouitiere, Fr.] A direction of the road or course at sea.

RUTTISH. adj. [from rut.] Wanton; libidinous; salacious; lustful; lecherous.

That is an advertisement to one Diana, to take heed of the allurements of count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy; but for all that very ruttish.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

RYE. n. s. [rýzē, Sax.]

1. A coarse kind of bread corn.

Between the acres of the rye,
These pretty country folks would lye. Shakesp.
Rye is more acrid, laxative, and less nourishing than wheat. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. A disease in a hawk. Ainsworth.

RYEGRASS. n. s. A kind of strong grass.

Some sow ryegrass with the corn at Michaelmas.
Mortimer.

S.

SHAS in English the same hissing sound as in other languages, and unhappily prevails in so many of our words that it produces in the ear of a foreigner a continued sibilation.

In the beginning of words it has invariably its natural and genuine sound: in the middle it is sometimes uttered with a stronger appulse of the tongue to the palate, like z, as rose, roscate, rosy, osier, nosel, resident, busy, business. It sometimes keeps its natural sound; as loose, designation; for which I know not whether any rules can be given.

In the end of monosyllables it is sometimes s, as in this; and sometimes z, as in as, has; and generally where es stands in verbs for eth, as gives. It seems to be established as a rule, that no noun singular should end with s single: therefore in words written with diphthongs, and naturally long, an e is nevertheless added at the end, as goose, house; and where the syllable is short the s is doubled, and was once sse, as ass, anciently asse; wilderness, anciently wildernesse; distress, anciently distresse.

SABA'OTH. n. s. [Heb.] Signifying an army.

Holy Lord God of sabaoth; that is, Lord of hosts. Common Prayer.

SABBATH. n. s. [An Hebrew word signifying rest; sabbat, Fr. sabbatum, Lat.]

1. A day appointed by God among the Jews, and from them established among Christians for publick worship; the seventh day set apart from works of labour to be employed in piety.

I purpose,
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn,
To have the due and forfeit of my bond. Shakesp.
Glad we return'd up to the coasts of light,
Ere sabbath ev'ning. Milton.

Here ev'ry day was sabbath: only free
From hours of pray'r, for hours of charity,
Such as the Jews from servile toil releas't,
Where works of mercy were a part of rest:
Such as blest angels exercise above,
Vary'd with sacred hymns and acts of love;
Such sabbaths as that one she now enjoys,
Ev'n that perpetual one, which she employs:
For such vicissitudes in heav'n there are,
In praise alternate, and alternate pray'r. Dryden.

2. Intermission of pain or sorrow; time of rest.

Never any sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep, Daniel's C. War.
Nor can his blessed soul look down from heav'n,
Or break the eternal sabbath of his rest,
To see her miseries on earth. Dryden.
Peaceful sleep out the sabbath of the tomb,
And wake to raptures in a life to come. Pope.

SABBATA'RIAN. n. s. [from sabbath.] One who observes the Sabbath with unreasonable rigour; one who observes the seventh day of the week in opposition to the first.

SABBATHBREAKER. n. s. [sabbath and break.] Violator of the sabbath by labour or wickedness.

The usurer is the greatest sabbathbreaker, because his plough goeth every Sunday. Bacon's Essays.

SABBA'TICAL. adj. [sabbaticus, Lat. sabbatique, Fr. from sabbath.] Resembling the sabbath; enjoying or bringing intermission of labour.

The appointment and observance of the sabbatical year, and after the seventh sabbatical year a year of jubilee, is a circumstance of great moment. Forbes.

SABBATISM. n. s. [from sabbatum, Lat.] Observance of the sabbath superstitiously rigid.

SABINE. n. s. [sabine, Fr. sabina, Lat.] A plant.

Sabine or savin will make fine hedges, and may be brought into any form by clipping, much beyond trees. Mortimer.

SABLE. n. s. [zibella, Lat.] Fur.

Sable is worn of great personages, and brought out of Russia, being the fur of a little beast of that name, esteemed for the perfectness of the colour of the hairs, which are very black. Hence sable, in heraldry, signifies the black colour in gentlemen's arms. Peachment on Blazoning.

Furiously running in upon him, with tumultuous speech, he violently raught from his head his rich cap of sables. Knolles.

The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail. Gay.

SABLE. adj. [Fr.] Black. A word used by heralds and poets.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night,
Who with her sable mantle 'gan to shade
The face of earth, and ways of living wight. Fairy Queen.

With him inthron'd
Sat sable vested night, eldest of things,
The consort of his reign. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They soon begin that tragick play,
And with their smoaky cannons hanish day:
Night, horreur, slaughter, with confusion meet,
And in their sable arms embrace the fleet. Waller.
Adoring first the genius of the place,
And night, and all the stars that gild her sable throne. Dryden.

SABLIERE. n. s. [Fr.]

2. [In carpentry.] A piece of timber as long, but not so thick, as a beam. Bailey.

SABRE. n. s. [sabre, Fr. I suppose, of Turkish original.] A cymetar; a short sword with a convex edge; a falchion.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms;
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms;
I ask no other blessing of my stars,
No prize but fame, no mistress but the wars. Dryd.
Seam'd o'er with wounds, which his own sabre gave,

In the vile habit of a village slave,
The foe deceiv'd. Pope's Odyssey.

SABULOSITY. n. s. [from sabulous.] Grittiness; sandiness.

SABULOUS. adj. [sabulum, Lat.] Gritty; sandy.

SACCA'DE. n. s. [Fr.] A violent check the rider gives his horse, by drawing both the reins very suddenly; a correction used when the horse bears heavy on the hand. Bailey.

SACCHARINE. adj. [saccharum, Lat.]

S A C

They have several offices and prayers, especially for the dead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

He fell violently upon me, without respect to my sacerdotal orders. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

If ample powers, granted by the rulers of this world, add dignity to the persons intrusted with these powers, behold the importance and extent of the sacerdotal commission. Atterbury.

SACHEL. n. s. [sacculus, Lat.] A small sack or bag.

SACK. n. s. [קש Hebrew; σακκος; sacus, Lat. jac, Sax. It is observable of this word, that it is found in all languages, and it is therefore conceived to be antediluvian.]

1. A bag; a pouch; commonly a large bag. Our sacks shall be a mean to sack the city,
And we be lürds and rulers over Roan. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Vastius caused the authors of that mutiny to be thrust into sacks, and in the sight of the fleet cast into the sea. Knolles.

2. The measure of three bushels.

3. A woman's loose robe.

To SACK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put in bags. Now the great work is done, the corn is ground,
The grist is sack'd, and every sack well bound. Betterton.

2. [From sacar, Span.] To take by storm; to pillage; to plunder.

Edward Bruce spoiled all the old English pale inhabitants, and sacked and raised all cities and corporate towns. Spenser.

I'll make thee stoop and bend thy knee,
Or sack this country with a mutiny. Shak. Hen. VI.
What armies conquer'd, perish'd with thy sword?
What cities sack'd? Fairfax.

Who sees these dismal heaps, but would demand
What barbarous invader sack'd the land? Denham.
The pope himself was ever after unfortunate,
Rome being twice taken and sack'd in his reign. South.

The great magazine for all kinds of treasure is the bed of the Tiber: when the Romans lay under the apprehensions of seeing their city sacked by a barbarous enemy, they would take care to bestow such of their riches this way as could best bear the water. Addison.

SACK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Storm of a town; pillage; plunder.

If Saturn's son bestows
Thy sack of Troy, which he by promise owes,
Then shall the conqu'ring Greeks thy loss restore. Dryden.

2. A kind of sweet wine, now brought chiefly from the Canaries. [See, Fr. of uncertain etymology; but derived by Skinner, after Maundesto, from Neque a city of Morocco. The sack of Shakespeare is believed to be what is now called Sherry.]

Please you drink a cup of sack. Shakesp.
The butler bath great advantage to allure the maids with a glass of sack. Swift.

SAC'KBUT. n. s. [sacabuche, Span. sombuca, Lat. sambuque, Fr.] A kind of pipe.

The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries and fife,
Make the sun dance. Shakesp. Coriolanus

SACKCLOTH. n. s. [sack and cloth.]

Cloth of which sacks are made; coarse cloth sometimes worn in mortification.

Coarse stuff made of goats hair, of a dark colour, worn by soldiers and mariners; and used as a habit among the Hebrews in times of mourning. Called sackcloth, either because sacks were made of this sort of stuff, or because haircloths were straight and close like a sack. Calmet.

To augment her painful penance more,
Thrice every week in ashes she did sit,
And next her wrinkled skin rough sackcloth wore. Spenser.

Thus with sackcloth I invest my woe,
And dust upon my clouded forehead Sandys,
Being clad in sackcloth, he was to lie on the ground and constantly day and night implore God's mercy for the sin he had committed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SACKER. n. s. [from sack.] One that takes a town.

SACKFUL. n. s. [sack and full.] A full bag.

SACKPOSSET. n. s. [sack and posset.] A posset made of milk, sack, and some other ingredients.

Snuff the candles at supper on the table, because the burning snuff may fall into a dish of soup or sackposset. Swift.

SACRAMENT. n. s. [sacrament, Fr. sacramentum, Lat.]

1. An oath; any ceremony producing an obligation.

2. An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

As often as we mention a sacrament, it is improperly understood; for in the writings of the ancient fathers all articles which are peculiar to Christian faith, all duties of religion containing that which sense or natural reason cannot of itself discern, are most commonly named sacraments; our restraint of the word to some few principal divine ceremonies, importeth in every such ceremony two things, the substance of the ceremony itself, which is visible; and besides that, somewhat else more secret, in reference whereunto we conceive that ceremony to be a sacrament. Hooker.

3. The eucharist; the holy communion.

Ten thousand French have ta'en the sacrament
To drive their dangerous artillery
Upon no Christian soul but English Talbot. Shakesp. Henry VI.

As we have ta'en the sacrament,
We will unite the white rose with the red. Shakesp. Richard III.

Before the famous battle of Cressy, he spent the greatest part of the night in prayer; and in the morning received the sacrament, with his son, and the chief of his officers. Addison.

SACRAMENTAL. adj. [sacramental, Fr. from sacrament.] Constituting a sacrament; pertaining to a sacrament.

To make complete the outward substance of a sacrament, there is required an outward form, which form sacramental elements receive from sacramental words. Hooker.

The words of St. Paul are plain; and whatever interpretation can be put upon them, it can only vary the way of the sacramental efficacy, but it cannot evacuate the blessing. Taylor.

SACRAMENTALLY. adv. [from sacramental.] After the manner of a sacrament.

My body is sacramentally contained in this sacrament of bread. Hall.

The law of circumcision was meant by God sacramentally to impress the duty of strict purity. Huanonid.

SACRED. adj. [sacre, Fr. sacer, Lat.]

1. Immediately relating to God.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers, grievous wolves,

Who all the sacred mysteries of Heaven
To their own vile advantages shall turn. Milton.

Before me lay the sacred text,
The help, the guide, the balm of souls perplex'd. Arbuthnot.

2. Devoted to religions uses; holy.

Those who came to celebrate the sabbath, made a conscience of helping themselves for the honour of that most sacred day. Macc.

They with wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast,
Shall spend their days with joy unblam'd. Milton.

This temple, and his holy ark,
With all his sacred things. Milton.

3. Dedicated; consecrate; consecrated: with to.

O'er its eastern gate was rais'd above
A temple sacred to the queen of love. Dryden.

4. Relating to religion; theological.

Smit with the love of sacred song. Milton.

5. Entitled to reverence; awfully venerable.

Bright officious lamps,
In thee concentrating all their precious beams
Of sacred influence. Milton.

P. et and saint, to thee alone were giv'n,
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

6. Inviolable, as if appropriated to some superiour being.

The honour's sacred, which he talks on now,
Supposing that I lackt it. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

SALMON. n. s. [salmo, Lat. saumon, Fr.]

The salmon is accounted the king of fresh water fish, and is bred in rivers relating to the sea, yet so far from it as admits no tincture of brackishness. He is said to cast his spawn in August; some say that then they dig a hole in a safe place

In the gravel, and there place their eggs or spawn, after the melter has done his natural office, and then cover it over with gravel and stones, and so leave it to their Creator's protection; who, by a gentle heat which he infuses into that cold element, makes it brood and beget life in the spawn, and to become sanlets early in the Spring: they haste to the sea before Winter, both the melter and spawner—Sir Francis Bacon observes the age of a salmon exceeds not ten years. After he is got into the sea he becomes from a samlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Walton's Angler.

They poke them with an instrument somewhat like the salmon spear. Carew's Survey of Cornw. They take salmon and trouts by groping and tickling them under the bellies in the pools, where they hover, and so throw them on land. Carew. Of fishes, you find in arms the whale, dolphin, salmon and trout. Peacham.

The salsoacids help its passing off; as sal prunel. Floyer.

SALSUGINOUS. adj. [salsugo, Lat.] Salty; somewhat salt.

The distinction of salts, whereby they are discriminated into acid, volatile, or salsuginous, if I may so call the fugitive salts of animal substances, and fixed or alkalize, may appear of much use in natural philosophy. Boyle.

SALT. n. s. [salt, Goth. realtz, Sax. sal, Lat. sel, Fr.]

1. Salt is a body whose two essential properties seem to be, dissolubility in water, and a pungent sapor: it is an active incombustible substance: it gives all bodies consistence, and preserves them from corruption, and occasions all the variety of tastes. There are three kinds of salts, fixed, volatile, and essential; fixed salt is drawn by calcining the matter, then boiling the ashes in a good deal of water: after this the solution is filtered, and all the moisture evaporated, when the salt remains in a dry form at the bottom: this is called a lixivious salt. Volatile salt is that drawn chiefly from the parts of animals, and some purified parts of vegetables: it rises easily, and is the most volatile of any. The essential salt is drawn from the juice of plants by crystallization. Harris.

Is not discourse, manhood, learning, gentleness, virtue and liberality, the spice and salt that seasons a man. Shakesp.

He perfidiously has given up, For certain drops of salt, your city Rome, To his wife and mother. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Since salts differ much, some being fixt, some volatile, some acid, and some urinous, the two qualities wherein they agree are, that it is easily dissoluble in water, and affects the palate with a sapor, good or evil. Boyle.

A particle of salt may be compared to a chaos, being dense, hard, dry, and earthy in the centre, and rare, soft, and moist in the circumference. Newton's Opticks.

Salts are bodies friable and brittle, in some degree pellucid, sharp or pungent to the taste, and dissoluble in water; but after that is evaporated, incorporating, crystalizing, and forming themselves into angular figures. Woodward.

This conduct might give Horace the hint to say, that when Homer was at a loss to bring any difficult matter to an issue, he laid his hero asleep, and this salved all difficulty. Broome.

4. [From salvo, Lat.] To salute. Obsolete.

That stranger knight in presence came,

And goodly salved them; who nought again

Ilum answered as courtesy became. Fairy Queen.

SALVER. n. s. [A vessel, I suppose, used at first to carry away or save what was left.] A plate on which any thing is presented.

He has printed them in such a portable volume, that many of them may be ranged together on a single plate; and is of opinion, that a salver of spectators would be as acceptable an entertainment for the ladies, as a salver of sweetmeats. Ad.

Between each act the trembling salver ring,

From soup to sweet wine. Pope.

SALVO. n. s. [from salvo jure, Lat. a form used in granting any thing: as salvo jure putei.] An exception; a re-reservation; an excuse.

They admit many salvos, cautions, and reservations, so as they cross not the chief design. King Charles.

It will be hard if he cannot bring himself off at last with some salvo or distinction, and be his own confessor. L'Estrange.

If others of a more serious turn join with us deliberately in their religious professions of loyalty, with any private salvos or evasions, they would do well to consider those maxims in which all casuists are agreed. Addison.

SALUTARINESS. n. s. [from salutary.]

Wholesomeness; quality of contributing to health or safety.

SALUTARY. adj. [salutaire, Fr. salu- taris, Lat.] Wholesome; healthful; safe; advantageous; contributing to health or safety.

The gardens, yards, and avenues are dry and clean; and so more salutary as more elegant. Ray.

It was want of faith in our Saviour's countrymen, which hindered him from shedding among them the salutary emanations of his divine virtue;

and he did not many mighty works there, because of their unbelief. Bentley.

SALUTATION. n. s. [salutation, Fr. salu- latio, Lat.] The act or stile of saluting; greeting.

The early village cock

Hath twice done salutation to the morn. Shakesp.

Thy kingdom's peers

Speak my salutation in their minds;

Whose voices I desire aloud with mine,

Hail, king of Scotland! Shakesp. Macbeth.

On her the angel hail

Bestow'd, the holy salutation used

To bless Mary. Milton.

In all publick meetings, or private addresses, use those forms of salutation, reverence, and de-ceency, used amongst the most sober persons. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Court and state he wisely shuns;

Nor brib'd, to servile salutations runs. Dryden.

TO SALUTE. v. a. [saluto, Lat. saluer,

Fr.]

1. To greet; to hail.

The golden sun salutes the morn,

And, having gilt the ocean with his beams,

Gallops the zodiack in his glist'ring coach. Shakesp. Titus Andronicus.

One hour hence

Shall salute your grace of York as mother. Shak.

2. To please; to gratify.

Would I had no being,

If this salute my blood a jot: it faints me,

To think what follows. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. To kiss.

SALUTE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Salutation; greeting.

The custom of praying for those that sneeze is more ancient than these opinions hereof; so that not any one disease has been the occasion of this salute and deprecation. Brown.

S A M

O, what avails me now that honour high

To have conceiv'd of God, or that salute,

Hail highly favour'd, among women blest! Milt.

Continual salutes and addresses entertaining him

all the way, kept him from saving so great a life, but with one glance of his eye upon the paper, till he came to the fatal place where he was stabbed. South.

I shall not trouble my reader with the first salutes of our three friends. Addison.

2. A kiss.

There cold salutes, but here a lover's kiss. Rose.

SALUTER. n. s. [from salute.] He who salutes.

SALUTIFEROUS. adj. [salutifer, Lat.]

Healthy; bringing health.

The king commanded him to go to the south of France, believing that nothing would contribute more to the restoring of his former vigour than the gentle salutiferous air of Montpellier. Dennis's Lett.

SAME. adj. [samo, Goth. sammo, Swed.]

1. Not different; not another; identical;

being of the like kind, sort, or degree.

Miso, as spitefully as her rotten voice could utter it, set forth the same sins of Amphialus. Sidney.

The tenor of man's woe

Holds on the same. Milton.

Th' etherial vigour is in all the same,

And ev'ry soul is fill'd with equal flame. Dryden.

If itself had been coloured, it would have dismissed all visible objects tinged with the same colour; as we see whatever is beheld through a coloured glass, appears of the same colour with the glass. Ray on the Creation.

The merchant does not keep money by him;

but if you consider what money must be lodged in the banker's hands, the case will be much the same. Locke.

The same plant produceth as great a variety of juices as there is in the same animal. Arbutinot.

2. That which was mentioned before.

Do but think how well the same he spends,

Who spends his blood his country to relieve. Dan.

SAMENESS. n. s. [from same.]

1. Identity; the state of being not another; not different.

Difference of persuasion in matters of religion may easily fall out, where there is the sameness of duty, allegiance and subjection. King Charles.

2. Undistinguishable resemblance.

If all courts have a sameness in them, things may be as they were in my time, when all employments went to parliamentmen's friends. Swift.

SAMLET. n. s. [salmonet, or salmonlet.]

A little salmon.

A salmon, after he is got into the sea, becomes from a samlet, not so big as a gudgeon, to be a salmon, in as short a time as a gosling becomes a goose. Hutton's Angler.

SAMPHIRE. n. s. [saint Pierre, Fr. ritimum,

Lat.] A plant preserved in pickle.

This plant grows in great plenty upon the rocks near the sea-shore, where it is washed by the salt water. It is greatly esteemed for pickling, and is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

Half way down

Hangs one that gathers samphire: dreadful trade!

Metinks he seems no bigger than his head. Shak.

SAMPLE. n. s. [from exsample.] A specimen; a part of the whole shown, that judgment may be made of the whole.

He entreated them to tarry but two days, and he himself would bring them a sample of the car.

Raleigh.

I have not engaged myself to any: I am not loaded with a full cargo: 'tis sufficient if I bring a sample of some goods in this voyage. Dryden.

I design this but for a sample of what I hope more fully to discuss. Woodward.

Determinations of justice were very summary and decisive, and generally put an end to the vexations of a law-suit by the ruin both of plaintiff and defendant: travellers have recorded some samples of this kind. Addison

554

From most bodies

Some little bits ask leave to flow;
And, as through these canals they roll,
Bring up a sample of the whole. Prior.

To SAMPLE. v. a. To show something similar. Ainsworth.

SAMPLER. n. s. [exemplar, Lat.] Whence it is sometimes written sauplar. A pattern of work; a piece worked by young girls for improvement.

O love, why dost thou in thy beautiful sampler set such a work for my desire to set out, which is impossible? Sidney.

Fair Philumela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind. Shakesp.

We created with our needles both one flower,
Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion;
Both warbling of one song, both in one key,
As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds
Had been incorporate. Shakesp.

Coarse complexion,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to seize the housewife's wool. Milton

I saw her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

SA'NABLE. adj. [sanabilis, Lat.] Curable; susceptible of remedy; remediable.

SANATION. n. s. [sanatio, Lat.] The act of curing.

Consider well the member, and, if you have no probable hope of sanation, cut it off quickly. Wiseman's Surgery.

SA'NATIVE. adj. [from sano, Lat.] Powerful to cure; healing.

The vapour of coltsfoot hath a sanative virtue towards the lungs. Bacon's Natural History.

SA'NATIVENESS. n. s. [from sanative.] Power to cure.

SANCTIFICATION. n. s. [sanctification, Fr. from sanctifico, low Lat.]

1. The state of being freed, or act of freeing from the dominion of sin for the time to come.

The grace of his sanctification and life, which was first received in him, might pass from him to his whole race, as malediction came from Adam unto all mankind. Hooker.

2. The act of making holy; consecration. The bishop kneels before the cross, and devoutly adores and kisses it: after this follows a long prayer for the sanctification of that new sign of the cross. Stillingfleet.

SA'NCTIFIER. n. s. [from sanctify.] He that sanctifies or makes holy.

To be the sanctifier of a people, and to be their God, is all one. Derham's Physico-Theol.

To SANCTIFY. v. a. [sanctifier, Fr. sanctifico, Lat.]

1. To free from the power of sin for the time to come.

For if the blood of bulls, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ? Heb. ix. 13.

2. To make holy. What actions can express the intire purity of thought, which refines and sanctifies a virtuous man? Addison.

3. To make a means of holiness. The gospel, by not making many things unclean, as the law did, hath sanctified those things generally to all, which particularly each man to himself must sanctify by a reverend and holy use. Hooker.

Those judgments God hath been pleased to send upon me, are so much the more welcome, as a means which his mercy hath sanctified so to me as to make me repent of that unjust act. K. Charles.

Those external things are neither parts of our devotion, or by any strength in themselves direct causes of it; but the grace of God is pleased to move us by ways suitable to our nature, and to sanctify these sensible helps to higher purposes. South.

4. To make free from guilt. The holy man, amaz'd at what he saw,
Made haste to sanctify the bliss by law. Dryden.

5. To secure from violation. Troth guards the poet, sanctifies the line. Pope.

SANCTIMONIOUS. adj. [from sanctimonia, Lat.] Sainly; having the appearance of sanctity.

A sanctimonious pretence, under a pomp of form, without the grace of an inward integrity, will not serve the turn. L'Estrange.

SANCTIMONY. n. s. [sanctimonia, Lat.] Holiness; scrupulous austerity; appearance of holiness.

If sanctimony, and a frail vow between an errant Barbarian and a supersubtle Venetian, be not too hard for my wit, and all the tribe of hell, thou shalt enjoy her. Shakesp. Othello.

Her pretence is a pilgrimage, which holy undertaking, with most austere sanctimony, she accomplished. Shakesp.

There was great reason why all discreet princes should beware of yielding hasty belief to the robes of sanctimony. Raleigh.

SANCTION. n. s. [sanction, Fr. sanctio, Lat.]

1. The act of confirmation which gives to any thing its obligatory power; ratification.

I have kill'd a slave,
And of his blood can'st'd to be mix'd with wine:
Fill every man his bowl. There cannot be
A fitter drink to make this sanction in. Ben Jonson.
Against the publick sanctions of the peace,
With fates averse, the rout in arms resort,
To force their monarch. Dryden's Æneis.

There needs no positive law or sanction of God to stamp an obliquity upon such a disobedience. South.

By the laws of men, enacted by civil power, gratitude is not enforced; that is, not enjoined by the sanction of penalties, to be inflicted upon the person that shall not be found grateful. South.

The satisfactions of the Christian life, in its present practice and future hopes, are not the mere raptures of enthusiasm, as the strictest professors of reason have added the sanction of their testimony. Watts.

This word is often made the sanction of an oath: it is reckoned a great commendation to be a man of honour. Swift.

Wanting sanction and authority, it is only yet a private work. Baker on Learning.

2. A law; a decree ratified. Improper. 'Tis the first sanction nature gave to man,
Each other to assist in what they can. Denham.

SANCTITUDE. n. s. [from sanctus, Lat.] Holiness; goodness; saintliness.

In their looks divine
The image of their glorious Maker shone,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, serene and pure. Milt.

SA'NCITY. n. s. [sanctitas, Lat.]

1. Holiness; the state of being holy. At his touch,
Such sanctity hath Heaven given his hand,
They presently amend. Shakesp.

God attributes to place
No sanctity, if none be thither brought
By men who there frequent. Milton.

2. Goodness; the quality of being good; purity; godliness.

This youth
I reliev'd with such sanctity of love,
And to his image, which methought did promise
Most venerable worth, did I devotion. Shakesp.

It was an observation of the ancient Romans, that their empire had not more increased by the strength of their arms than the sanctity of their manners. Addison.

3. Saint; holy being. About him all the sanctities of heav'n Stood thick as stars, and from his sight receiv'd Beatitude past utterance. Milton.

To SANCTUARISE. v. n. [from sanctuary.] To shelter by means of sacred privileges. Not in use. No place indeed should murder sanctuarise. Shakesp.

SANCTUARY. n. s. [sanctuaire, Fr. sanctuarium, Lat.]

1. A holy place; holy ground. Properly the penitralia, or most retired and awful part of a temple.

Having waste ground enough,
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary,
And pitch our evils there? Shakesp.

They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines. Milton.
Let it not be imagined, that they contribute nothing to the happiness of the country who only serve God in the duties of a holy life, who attend his sanctuary, and daily address his goodness. Rogers's Sermons.

2. A place of protection; a sacred asylum; whence a sanctuary man, one who takes shelter in a holy place.

Come, my boy, we will to sanctuary. Shakesp.
I'll hence forthwith unto the sanctuary.
To save at least the heir of Edward's right. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Oft have I heard of sanctuary men;
But sanctuary children, ne'er 'till now. Shakesp.
He fled to Beverley, where he and divers of his company registered themselves sanctuary men. Bacon's Henry VII.

Howsoever the sanctuary man was protected from his creditors, yet his goods out of sanctuary should not. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. Shelter; protection.

What are the hells to the frogs, or the lakes to the meadows?—Very much, says the frog; for he that's worsted will be sure to take sanctuary in the fens. L'Estrange.

The admirable works of painting were made fuel for the fire; but some reliques of it took sanctuary underground, and escaped the common destiny. Dryden's Dufresnou.

SAND. n. s. [sand, Dan and Dut.]

1. Particles of stone not conjoined, or broken to powder.

That finer matter called sand, is no other than very small pebbles. Woodward.

Here 't' th' sands
Thee I'll rake up, the post un sanctified. Shakesp.
Hark, the fatal followers do pursue!
The sands are number'd that make up my life:
Here must I stay, and here my life must end. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Sand hath always its root in clay, and there be no veins of sand any great depth within the earth. Bacon.

Calling for more paper to rescribe, king Philip shewed him the difference betwixt the ink box and sand box. Howell.

If quicksilver be put into a convenient glass vessel, and that vessel exactly stopp'd, and kept for ten weeks in a sand furnace, whose heat may be constant, the corpuscles that constitute the quicksilver will, after innumerable revolutions, be so connected to one another, that they will appear in the form of red powder. Boyle.

Engag'd with money bags, as bold
As men with sand bags did of old. Hudibras.

The force of water casts gold out from the bowels of mountains, and exposes it among the sands of rivers. Dryden.
Shells are found in the great sand pit at Woolwich. Woodward.

Celia and I, the other day,
Walk'd o'er the sand hills to the sea. Prior.

2. Barren country covered with sands.

Most of his army being slain, he, with a few of his friends, sought to save themselves by flight over the desert sands. Knolles.

Her sons spread

Beneath Gibraltar to the Lybian sands. Milton.

So, where our wild Numidian wastes extend,

Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,

Wheel thro' the air, in circling eddies play,

Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,

Sees the dry desert all around him rise,

And smother'd in the dusty whirlwind dies. Addi.

SANDAL. n. s. [sandale, Fr. sandalium,

Lat.] A loose shoe.

Thus sung the uncouth swain to th' oaks and rills,

While still the morn went out with sandals grey. Milton.

From his robe

Flows light ineffable : his harp, his quiver,

And Lycian bow are gold : with golden sandals

His feet are shod. Prior.

The sandals of celestial mold,

Fledg'd with ambrosial plumes, and rich with gold,

Surround her feet. Pope's Odyssey.

SANDARAK. n. s. [sandaraque, Fr. sandaraca,

Lat.]

1. A mineral of a bright colour, not much unlike to red arsenick. Bailey.

2. A white gum oozing out of the juniper tree. Bailey.

SANDBLIND. adj. [sand and blind.]

Having a defect in the eyes, by which small particles appear to fly before them.

My true begotten father, being more than sandblind, high gravelblind, knows me not.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

SANDBOX Tree. n. s. [hura, Lat.] A plant.

The fruit of this plant, if suffered to remain on till they are fully ripe, burst in the heat of the day with a violent explosion, making a noise like the fring of a pistol, and hereby the seeds are thrown about to a considerable distance. These seeds, when green, vomit and purge, and are supposed to be somewhat a-kin to nux vomica. Miller.

SANDED. adj. [sand.]

1. Covered with sand ; barren.

In well sanded lands little or no snow lies. Mort.

The river pours along

Resistless, roaring dreadful down it comes ;

Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads. Thom.

2. Marked with small spots ; variegated with dusky specks.

My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,

So flow'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung

With ears that sweep away the morning dew. Shakesp.

SANDERLING. n. s. A bird.

We reckon coots, sanderlings, pewets, and mews.

Curew.

SANDERS. n. s. [santalum, Lat.] A precious kind of Indian wood, of which there are three sorts, red, yellow, and green. Bailey.

Aromatize it with sanders. Wiseman's Surgery.

SANDEVER. n. s.

That which our English glassmen call sandever, and the French, of whom probably the name was borrowed, suindever, is that recement that is made when the materials of glass, namely, sand and a fixt lixiviate alkali, having been first baked together, and kept long in fusion, the mixture casts up the superfluous salt, which the workmen afterwards take off with ladles, and lay by as little worth. Boyle.

SANDISH. adj. [sand.] Approaching to the nature of sand ; loose ; not close ; not compact.

Plant the tenuifolia's and ranunculus's in fresh sandish earth, taken from under the turf. Evelyn.

SANDSTONE. n. s. [sand and stone.]

Stone of a loose and friable kind, that easily crumbles into sand.

Grains of gold in sandstone, from the mine of Costa Rica, which is not reckoned rich ; but every hundred weight yields about an ounce of gold. Woodward.

SANDY. adj. [sand.]

1. Abounding with sand ; full of sand.

I should not see the sandy hourglass run,

But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shak.

Safer shall he be on the sandy plains,

Than where castles mounted stand. Shakesp.

A region so desert, dry, and sandy, that travellers are fain to carry waters on their camels.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Rough unwieldy earth, nor to the plough

Nor to the cattle kind, with sandy stones

And gravel o'er-bounding. Philips.

O'er sandy wilds were yellow harvests spread. Pope.

2. Consisting of sand ; unsolid.

Favour, so bottomed upon the sandy foundation of personal respects only, cannot be long lived. Bacon to Filliers.

SANE. adj. [sanus, Lat.] Sound ; healthy.

Baynard wrote a poem on preserving the body in a sane and sound state.

SANG. The preterite of sing.

Lord. Exod. xv.

They next they sang, of all creation first. Milt.

SANGUIFEROUS. adj. [sanguifer, Lat.]

Conveying blood.

The fifth conjugation of the nerves is branched to the muscles of the face, particularly the cheeks, whose sanguiferous vessels it twists about.

Derham's Physico Theology.

SANGUIFICATION. n. s. [sanguification,

Fr. sanguis and facio, Lat.] The production of blood ; the conversion of the chyle into blood.

Since the lungs are the chief instrument of sanguification,

the animal that has that organ faulty can never have the vital juices, derived from the blood, in a good state. Arbuthnot.

Asthmatick persons have voracious appetites, and consequently, for want of a right sanguifica-

tion, are leucophlegmatick. Arbuthnot.

SANGUIFIER. n. s. [sanguis and facio,

Lat.] Producer of blood.

Bitters, like choler, are the best sanguifiers, and also the best febrifuges. Floyer on the Humours.

To SANGUIFY. v. n. [sanguis and facio,

Lat.] To produce blood.

At the same time I think, I command : in infer-rior faculties, I walk, see, hear, digest, sanguify, and carnify, by the power of an individual soul. Hale.

SANGUINARY. adj. [sanguinarius, Lat.]

sanguinaire, Fr. from sanguis, Lat.]

Cruel ; bloody ; murderous.

We may not propagate religion by wars, or by sanguinary persecutions to force consciences. Bac.

The scene is now more sanguinary, and fuller of actors : never was such a confused mysterious civil war as this. Havel.

Passion transforms us into a kind of savages,

and makes us brutal and sanguinary. Broome.

SANGUINARY. n. s. [sanguis, Lat.]

An herb. Ainsworth.

SANGUINE. adj. [sanguin, Fr. sanguis,

Fr. from sanguis, Lat.]

1. Red ; having the colour of blood.

This fellow

Upbraided me about the rose I wear ;

Saying, the sanguine colour of the leaves

Did represent my master's blushing cheeks. Shak.

A stream of nect'rous humour issuing flow'd

Sanguine. Milton.

Dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward,

Girt in her sanguine gown. Dryden.

Her flag aloft, spread ruffling to the wind,

And sanguine streamers seem the flood to fire :

The weaver charm'd with what his loom design'd,

Goes on to sea, and knows not to retire. Dryden.

2. Abounding with blood more than any other humour ; cheerful.

The choleric fell short of the longevity of the sanguine. Brown.

Though these faults differ in their complexions

as sanguine from melancholy, yet they are frequently united. Government of the Tongue.

3. Warm ; ardent ; confident.

A set of sanguine tempers ridicule, in the number of fopperies, all such apprehensions. Swift.

SANGUINE. n. s. [sanguis.] Blood colour.

A griesly wound,

From which forth gush'd a stream of gore, blood thick,

That all her goodly garments stain'd around,

And in deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground. Fairy Queen.

SANGUINENESS. } n. s. [sanguine.]

SANGUINITY. } Ardour ; heat of expectation ; confidence. Sanguinity is perhaps only used by Swift.

Rage, or phrensy it may be, in some perhaps natural courage, or sanguineness of temper in others ; but true valour it is not, if it knows not as well to suffer as to do. That mind is truly great, and only that, which stands above the power of all extrinsick violence ; which keeps itself a distinct pincipality, independent upon the outward man. Decay of Piety.

I very much distrust your sanguinity. Swift.

SANGUINEOUS. adj. [sanguineus, Lat.]

sanguin, Fr.]

1. Constituting blood.

This animal of Plato containeth not only sanguineous and reparable particles, but is made up of veins, nerves, and arteries. Brown.

2. Abounding with blood.

A plethorick constitution, in which true blood abounds, is called sanguineous. Arbuthnot.

SANIEDRIM. n. s. [synedrion, Lat.]

Lat.] A plant.

SANIES. n. s. [Lat.] Thin matter ;

serous excretion.

It began with a round crack in the skin, without other matter than a little sanies. Wiseman.

SANIOUS. adj. [from sanies.] Running a thin serous matter, not a well-digested pus.

Observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion as the only way to remove the pain. Wisem.

SANITY. n. s. [sanitas, Lat.] Soundness of mind.

How pregnant, sometimes, his replies are !

A happiness that often madness hits on,

Which sanity and reason could not be

So prosperously delivered of. Shakesp. Hamlet.

SANK. The preterite of sink.

As if the opening of her mouth to Zelmane had opened some great floodgate of sorrow, whereof her heart could not abide the violent issue, she sank to the ground. Sidney.

Our men followed them close, took two ships, and gave divers others of their ships their death's wounds, whereof soon after they sank and perished. Bacon's War with Spain.

SANS. prep. [Fr.] Without. Out of use.

Last scene of all,

That ends this strange eventful history,

Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.
Shakesp.

For nature so preposterously to err,
Being not deficient, blind, or lame of sense,
Sans witchcraft could not.
Shakesp. Othello.

SAP. n. s. [sape, Sax. sap, Dut.] The vital juice of plants; the juice that circulates in trees and herbs.

Now sucking of the sap of herbs most sweet,
Or of the dew, which yet on them does lie,
Now in the same bathing his tender feet. Spenser.

Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap consuming Winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shakesp.

Wound the bark of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being over-proud with sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself. Shakesp.

His presence had infus'd
Into the plant scientific sap. Milton.

The sap which at the root is bred
In trees, through all the boughs is spread. Waller.

Vegetables consist of the same parts with animal substances, spirit, water, salt, oil, earth; all which are contained in the sap they derive from the earth. Arbuthnot.

To SAP. v. a. [sapper, Fr. zappare, Ital.] To under-mine; to subvert by digging; to mine.

There dwellings were sapp'd by floods,
Their houses fell upon their household gods. Dryden.

To SAP. v. n. To proceed by mine; to proceed invisibly.

For the better security of the troops, both assaults are carried on by sapping. Tatler.

In vain may heroes fight, and patriots rave,
If secret gold saps un from knave to knave. Pope.

SAPPHIRE. n. s. [sapphirus, Lat. so that it is improperly written saphyre.] A precious stone of a blue colour.

Sapphire is of a bright blue colour. Woodward.

In enroll'd tufts, flow'rs purified, blue and white,
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery. Shakesp.

He tinctures rubies with their rosy hue,
And on the sapphire spreads a heavenly blue. Blackmore.

That the sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous, and many other fabulous stories of gems, are great arguments that their virtue is equivalent to their value. Derham.

SAPPHIRINE. adj. [sapphirinus, Lat.] Made of sapphire; resembling sapphire.

She was too sapphirine and clear for thee;
Clay, flint, and jet now thy fit dwellings be. Don.

A few grains of shell silver, with a convenient proportion of powdered crystal glass, having been kept three hours in fusion, I found the colliquated mass, upon breaking the crucible, of a lovely sapphirine blue. Boyle.

SAPID. adj. [sapidus, Lat.] Tasteful; palatable; making a powerful stimulation upon the palate.

Thus camels, to make the water sapid, do raise the mud with their feet. Brown.

The most oily parts are not separated by a slight decoction, till they are disentangled from the salts; for if what remains of the subject, after the infusion and decoction be continued to be boiled down with the addition of fresh water, a fat, sapid, odorous, viscous, inflammable, frothy water will constantly be found floating atop of the boiling liquor. Arbuthnot.

SAPIDITY. } n. s. [from sapid.] Taste-

SAPIDNESS. } fulness; power of stimulating the palate.

As for their taste, if their nutriment be air, neither can it be an instrument thereof; for the body of that element is ingustible, and void of all sapidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

If sapidness belong not to the mercurial principle of vegetables and animals, it will scarce be discriminated from their phlegm. Boyle.

SAPIENCE. n. s. [sapience, Fr. sapientia, Lat.] Wisdom; sageness; knowledge.

By sapience, I mean what the ancients did by philosophy; the habit or disposition of mind which importeth the love of wisdom. Grew.

Ne only they that dwell in lowly dust,
The sons of darkness and of ignorance;
But they whom thou, great Jove, by doom unjust,
Did'st to the top of honour earst advance:

They now, puft up with's deignful insolence,
Despise the hrood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

King James, of immortal memory, among all the lovers and admirers of divine and human sapience, accomplished at Theobalds his own days on earth. Watton.

Because enterprises guided by ill counsels have equal success to those by the best judgment conducted, therefore had violence the same external figure with sapience. Raleigh.

Sapience and love
Immense, and all his father in him shoue. Milton.

O sov'reign, virtuous, precious of all threes
In Paradise! of operation blest
To sapience. Milton.

Many a wretch in Bedlam,
Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly flings his filth about,
Still has gratitude and sapience,

To spare the folks that give him ha'pence. Swift.

The sappy parts, and next resembling juice,
Were turn'd to moisture for the body's use,
Supplying humours, blood, and nourishment. Dryden.

The sappy boughs
Attire themselves with blooms, sweet rudiments
Of future harvest. Phillips.

The green heat the ripe, and the ripe give fire to the green; to which the higness of their leaves, and hardness of their stalks, which continue moist and sappy long, doth much contribute. Mortimer.

2. Young; not firm; weak.

This young prince was brought up among nurses, till he arrived to the age of six years: when he had passed this weak and sappy age, he was committed to Dr. Cox. Hayward.

SARABAND. n. s. [carabande, Span. sarabande, Fr.] A Spanish dance.

The several modifications of this tune-playing quality in a fiddle, to play preludes, sarabands, jigs, and gavots, are as much real qualities in the instrument as the thought is in the mind of the composer. Arbuthnot and Pope.

SARCASM. n. s. [sarcasme, Fr. sarcasmus, Lat.] A keen reproach; a taunt; a gibe.

Sarcasms of wit are transmitted in story
Government of the Tongue

Rejoice, O young man, says Solomon, in a severe sarcasm, in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thy heart; but know that for these things God will bring thee into judgment.

When an angry master says to his servant, it is bravely done, it is one way of giving a severe reproach; for the words are spoken by way of sarcasm, or irony. Watts.

SARCASTICALLY. adv. [from sarcastick.] Tauntingly; severely.

He asked a lady playing with a lap-dog, whether the women of that country used to have any children or no? thereby sarcastically reproaching them for misplacing that affection upon brutes, which could only become a mother to her child. South.

SARCASTICAL. } adj. [from sarcasm.]

SARCASTICK. } Keen; taunting; severe.

What a fierce and sarcastick reprehension would this have drawn from the friendship of the world, and yet what a gentle one did it receive from Christ? South.

SARACENET. n. s. [Supposed by Skinner

to be sericum saracenicum, Lat.] Fine thin woven silk.

Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sley'd silk, thou green saracenet flap for a sore eye, thou tassel of a prodigal's purse? Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

If they be covered, though but with linen or saracenet, it intercepts the effluvia. Brown.

These are they that cannot bear the heat
Of figur'd silks, and under saracnets sweat. Dryden.

She darts from saracenet ambush wily leers,
Twitches thy sleeve, or with familiar airs
Her fan will pat the cheek; these snares disdain. Gay.

SATIRIST. n. s. [from satire.] One who writes satires.

I first adventure, follow me who list, And be the second English satirist. Hall.

Wycheerly, in his writings, is the sharpest satyr-ist of his time; but, in his nature, he has all the softness of the tenderest dispositions; in his writings he is severe, bold, undertaking; in his nature gentle, modest, inoffensive. Granville.

All vain pretenders have been constantly the topicks of the most candid satyrists, from the Codrus of Joveval to the Danon of Boileau. Cleland.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay; His anger moral, and his wisdom gay: Blest satyrists! who touch'd the mean so true. As show'd vice had his hate and pity too. Pope.

To SATIRIZE. v. a. [satirizer, Fr. from satire.] To censure as in a satire.

Covetousness is described as a veil cast over the true meaning of the poet, which was to satirize his prodigality and voluptuousness. Dryden.

Should a writer single out and point his rail-ery at particular persons, or satirize the miserable he might be sure of pleasing a great part of his readers; but must be a very ill man if he could please himself. Addison.

I insist that my lion's mouth be not defiled with scandal; for I would not make use of him to re-ville the human species, and satirize his betters. Addison's Spectator.

It is as hard to satirize well a man of distinguished vices, as to praise well a man of distinguished virtues. Swift.

SATISFACTION. n. s. [satisfactio, Lat. satisfaction, Fr.]

1. The act of pleasing to the full, or state of being pleased.

Run over the circle of earthly pleasures, and had not God secured a man a solid pleasure from his own actions, he would be forced to complain that pleasure was not satisfaction. South.

2. The act of pleasing.

The mind, having a power to suspend the execution and satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to consider the objects of them. Locke.

3. The state of being pleased.

'Tis a wretched satisfaction a revengeful man takes, even in losing his life, provided his enemy go for company. L'Estrange.

There are very few discourses so short, clear, and consistent, to which most men may not, with satisfaction enough to themselves, raise a doubt. Locke.

4. Release from suspense, uncertainty, or uneasiness; conviction.

Wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied? — What satisfaction can you have? Shakesp.

ration or division in the church of God.

S C H

Set bounds to our passions by reason, to our errors by truth, and to our schisms by charity, King Charles.

Oppose schisms by unity, hypocrisy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spratt.

When a schism is once spread, there grows at length a dispute which are the schismatics; in the sense of the law the schism lies on that side which opposes itself to the religion of the state.
Swift.

SCHISMA'TICAL. adj. [schismatique, Fr.
from schismatick.] Implying schism;
practising schism.

By these tumults all factions, seditions, and schismatical proposals against government, ecclesiastical and civil, must be backed. King Charles.

Here bare anathemas fall but like so many bruta fulmina upon the obstinate and schismatical, who are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt by being cut off from that body which they chuse not to be of, and so being punished into a quiet enjoyment of their beloved separation. South.

SCHISMA'TICALLY. adv. [from schisma- tical.] In a schismatical manner.

SCHIS'MATICK. n. s. [from schism.] One who separates from the true church.

No known heretick nor schismatick should be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

church.

SCHOL'AR. n. s. [scholaris, Lat. écolier, French.]

1. One who learns of a master; a disciple.

Many times that which deserveth approbation would hardly find favour, if they which propose it were not to profess themselves scholars, and followers of the ancients. Hooker.

The scholars of the Stagyrite,
Who for the old opinion fight,
Would make their modern friends confess
The diff'rence but from more to less. Prior.

2. A man of letters.

This same scholar's fate res angusta domi, hinders
the promoting of learning. Wilkins.

To watch occasions to correct others in their discourse, and not slip any opportunity of shewing their talents, scholars are most blamed for. Locke.

3. A pedant; a man of books.

To spend too much time in studies, is sloth; to make judgment wholly by their rules, is the humour of a scholar; they perfect nature, and are perfected by experience. Bacon.

My cousin William is become a good scholar:
he is at Oxford still, is he not? Shakesp.

SCHOL'ARSHIP. n. s. [from scholar.]

1. Learning; literature; knowledge.

It pited my very heart to think that a man of my master's understanding, and great scholarship, who had a book of his own in print, should talk so outrageously. Pope.

2. Literary education.

This place should be school and university, not needing a remove to any other house of scholarship.
Milton.

3. Exhibition or maintenance for a scholar.

Ainsworth.

SCHOLA'STICAL. adj. [scholasticus, Lat.]

Belonging to a scholar or school.

SCHOLA'STICALLY. adv. [from scholasticus.]

According to the niceties or methods of the schools.

S C H

No moralists or casuists, that treat scholastically of justice but treat of gratitude, under that general head as a part of it. South.

SCHOLA'STICK. adj. [from schola, Latin; scholastique, Fr.]

1. Pertaining to the school; practised in schools.

I would render this intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastic learning.
Digby on Bodies.

Scholastic education, like a trade, does so fix a man in a particular way, that he is not fit to judge of any thing that lies out of that way. Bar.Theory.

2. Befitting the school; suitable to the school; pedantick; needlessly subtle.

The favour of proposing there, in convenient sort, whatsoever ye can object, which thing I have known them to grant, of scholastic courtesy unto strangers, never bath nor ever will be denied you.
Hooker.

Sir Francis Bacon was wont to say, that those who left useful studies for useless scholastic speculations, were like the Olympick gamesters, who abstained from necessary labours, that they might be fit for such as were not so. Bacon.

Both sides charge the other with idolatry, and that is a matter of conscience, and not a scholastic nicety. Stillington.

SCHOL'IAST.n.s. [scholiaste, Fr. scholiastes,
Lat.] A writer of explanatory notes.

The title of this satyr, in some ancient manuscripts, was the reproach of idleness; though in others of the scholiasts, 'tis inscribed against the luxury of the rich. Dryden.

What Gellius or Stobæus cook'd before,
Or chew'd by blind old scholiasts o'er and o'er. Pope.

SCHOL'ION. } n. s. [Latin. A note; SCHOLIUM. } an explanatory observation.

Hereunto have I added a certain gloss or schol- ion, for the exposition of old words, and harder phrases, which manner of glossing and commenting will seem strange in our language. Spenser.

Some cast all their metaphysical and moral learning into the method of mathematicians, and bring every thing relating to those abstracted or practical sciences under theorems, problems, pos-tulates, scholiums, and corollaries. Watts.

SCHOL'Y. n. s. [scholie, Fr. scholium, Lat.]
An explanatory note. This word, with the verb following, is, I fancy, peculiar to the learned Hooker.

He therefore, which made us to live, had also taught us to pray, to the end, that speaking unto the Father in the Son's own prescript form, without scholy or gloss of ours, we may be sure that we utter nothing which God will deny. Hooker.

That scholy had need of a very favourable reader, and a tractable, that should think it plain construction, when to be commanded to the word, and grounded upon the word, are made all one.
Hooker.

To SCHOL'Y. v. n. [from the noun.] To write expositions.

The preacher should want a text, whereupon to scholy. Hooker.

SCHOOL. n. s. [schola, Lat. école, Fr.]

1. A house of discipline and instruction.

Their age the same, their inclinations too,
And bred together in one school they grew. Dryd.

2. A place of literary education; an university.

My end being private, I have not expressed my conceptions in the language of the schools. Digby.

Writers on that subject have turned it into a composition of hard words, trifles, and subtilities, for the mere use of the schools, and that only to amuse men with empty sounds. Watts.

3. A state of instruction.

The calf breed to the rural trade, Set him betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry. Dryden

563

4. System of doctrine as delivered by particular teachers.

No craz'd brain could ever yet propound,
Touching the soul, so vain and fond a thought;
But some among these masters have been found,
Which in their schools the self-same thing had taught.

Let no man be less confident in his faith, Concerning the great blessings God designs in these divine mysteries, by reason of any difference in the several schools of Christians, concerning the consequent blessings thereof.

5. The age of the church, and form of theology succeeding that of the fathers; so called, because this mode of treating religion arose from the use of academical disputations.

The first principles of Christian religion should not be forced with school points and private tenets.

A man may find an infinite number of propositions in books of metaphysics, school divinity, and natural philosophy, and know as little of God, spirits, or bodies, as he did before.

To SCHOOL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct; to train.

Una her besought to be so good
As in her virtuous rules to school her knight.
He's gentle, never school'd, and yet learned.

2. To teach with superiority; to tutor.

You shall go with me;
I have some private schooling for you both.
Cousin, school yourself; but for your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious.

And ask why God's anointed he revild.
If this be schooling, 'tis well for the considerer:
I'll engage that no adversary of his shall in this sense ever school him.

SCHOOLBOY. n. s. [school and boy.] A boy that is in his rudiments at school.

Schoolboys tears take up
The glasses of my sight.
He grins, smacks, shrugs, and such an itch endures,

As 'prentices or schoolboys, which do know
Of some gay sport abroad, yet dare not go.
Once he had heard a schoolboy tell,
How Semele of mortal race
By thunder died.

SCHOOLDAY. n. s. [school and day.] Age in which youth is sent to school.

Is all forgot?
All schooldays friendship, childhood, innocence?

SCHOOLFELLOW. n. s. [school and fellow.] One bred at the same school.

Thy flatt'ring method on the youth pursue;
Join'd with his schoolfellows by two and two:
Persuade them first to lead an empty wheel,
In length of time produce the lab'ring yoke.
The emulation of schoolfellows often puts life and industry into young lads.

SCHOOLHOUSE. n. s. [school and house.] House of discipline and instruction.

Fair Una 'gan Fidelia fair request,
To have her knight unto her schoolhouse plac'd.

SCHOOLMAN. n. s. [school and man.]

1. One versed in the niceties and subtilties of academical disputation.

The king, though no good schoolman, converted one of them by dispute.
Unlearn'd, he knew no schoolman's subtle art;
No language, but the language of the heart.

2. A writer of scholastick divinity or philosophy.

If a man's wit be not apt to distinguish or find differences, let him study the schoolmen.
To schoolmen I bequeath my doubtfulness,
My sickness to physicians.
Men of nice palates could not relish Aristotle, as he was drest up by the schoolmen.

Let subtle schoolmen teach these friends to fight,
More studious to divide than to unite.

SCHOOLMASTER. n. s. [school and master.] One who presides and teaches in a school.

I, thy schoolmaster, have made thee more profit
Than other princes can, that have more time
For vainer hours, and tutors not so careful.
Adrian VI. was some time schoolmaster to Charles V.

The ancient sophists and rhetoricians lived 'till they were an hundred years old; and so likewise did many of the grammarians and schoolmasters, as Orbilius.

A father may see his children taught, though he himself does not turn schoolmaster.

SCHOOLMISTRESS. n. s. [school and mistress.] A woman who governs a school.

Such precepts I have selected from the most considerable which we have from nature, that exact schoolmistress.

My schoolmistress, like a vixen Turk,
Maintains her lazy husband by our work.

SCHREIGHT. n. s. [turdus viscivorus.] A fish.

SCI'AGRAPHY. n. s. [sciagraphic, Fr. σκιագραφία.]

1. [In architecture.] The profile or section of a building, to shew the inside thereof.

2. [In astronomy.] The art of finding the hour of the day or night by the shadow of the sun, moon, or stars.

SCI'ATHERICAL. } adj. [sciaterique, Fr. SCI'ATHERICK. } σκιαθρική.] Belonging to a sun-dial.

There were also, from great antiquity, sciatheretical or sun-dials, by the shadow of a stile or gnomon denoting the hours; an invention ascribed unto Anaxamines by Pliny.

SCIATICA. } n. s. [sciaticque, Fr. SCIAT'ICK. } dica passio, Lat.] The hip gout.

Which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners.

The Scythians, using continual riding, were generally molested with the sciatica, or hip gout.

SCIAT'ICAL. adj. [from sciatica.] Afflicting the hip.

In obstinate sciatical pains, blistering and cauteries have been found effectual.

SCI'ENCE. n. s. [science, Fr. scientia, Lat.]

1. Knowledge.

If we conceive God's sight or science, before the creation, to be extended to all and every part of the world, seeing every thing as it is, his prescience or foresight of any action of mine, or rather his science or sight, from all eternity, lays no necessity on any thing to come to pass, more than my seeing the sun move hath to do in the moving of it.

The indisputable mathematicks, the only science Heaven hath yet vouchsafed humanity, have but few votaries among the slaves of the Stagirite.

2. Certainty grounded on demonstration.
So you arrive at truth, though not at science.

3. Art attained by precepts, or built on principles.
Science perfects genius, and moderates that fury of the fancy which cannot contain itself within the bounds of reason.

4. Any art or species of knowledge.
No science doth make known the first principles, whereon it buildeth; but they are always taken as plain and manifest in themselves, or as proved and granted already, some former knowledge having made them evident.

Whatsoever we may learn by them, we only attain according to the manner of natural sciences, which mere discourse of wit and reason findeth out.

I present you with a man
Cunning in musick and the mathematicks,
To instruct her fully in those sciences.

5. One of the seven liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, logick, arithmetick, musick, geometry, astronomy.

Good sense, which only is the gift of Heav'n,
And though no science, fairly worth the sev'n. Pope.

SCIENTIAL. adj. [from science.] Producing science.

From the tree her step she turn'd;
But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
That dwelt within; whose presence had infus'd
Into the plant scientific sap, deriv'd
From nectar, drink of gods.

SCIENTIFICAL. } adj. [scientificque, Fr. SCIENTIFICK. } scientia and facio, Lat.] Producing demonstrative knowledge; producing certainty.

Natural philosophy proceeding from settled principles, therein is expected a satisfaction from scientific progressions, and such as beget a sure or rational belief.

No where are there more quick, inventive, and penetrating capacities, fraught with all kind of scientific knowledge.

No man, who first trafficks into a foreign country, has any scientific evidence that there is such a country, but by report, which can produce no more than a moral certainty; that is, a very high probability, and such as there can be no reason to except against.

The systems of natural philosophy that have obtained, are to be read more to know the hypotheses, than with hopes to gain there a comprehensive, scientific, and satisfactory knowledge of the works of nature.

SCIENTIFICALLY. adv. [from scientific.] In such a manner as to produce knowledge.

Sometimes it rests upon testimony, because it is easier to believe than to be scientifically instructed.

SCI'MITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A short sword with a convex edge.

I'll heat his blood with Greekish wine to-night,
Which with my scimitar I'll cool to-morrow.

SCINK. n. s. A cast calf. In Scotland and in London they call it slink.

To SCINT'LLATE. v. n. [scintillo, Lat.] To sparkle; to emit sparks.

SCINTILLA'TION. n. s. [scintillatio, Lat. from scintillate.] The act of sparkling; sparks emitted.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the bodies collided.

He saith the planets scintillation is not seen, because of their propinquity.

SC'OLIST. n. s. [sciulus, Lat.] One who knows many things superficially.

'Twas this vain idolizing of authors, which gave birth to that silly vanity of impertinent citations: these ridiculous fooleries signify nothing to the more genuine discerners, but the pedantry of the affected sciolists.

These passages were enough to humble the presumption of our modern sciolists, if their pride were not as great as their ignorance.

SCI'OLOUS. adj. [sciulus, Lat.] Superficially or imperfectly knowing. Not used.

I could wish these sciolous zelotists had more judgment joined with their zeal.

SCI'OMACHY. n. s. [schiamachie, Fr. σκία and μαχία.] Battle with a shadow. This should be written sciamachy.

To avoid this sciomachy, or imaginary combat of words, let me know, Sir, what you mean by the name of tyrant? Cowley.

SCI'ON. n. s. [scion, Fr.] A small twig taken from one tree to be engrafted into another.

Sweet maid, we marry
A gentle scion to the wildest stock;
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bad of nobler race. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
March is drawn, in his left hand blossoms, and scions upon his arm. Peacham.
The scions are best of an old tree. Mort. Husband.

SCIRE FACIAS. n. s. [Lat.] A writ judicial in law, most commonly to call a man to shew cause unto the court whence it is sent, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made. This writ is not granted before a year and a day is passed after the judgment given. Cowell.

SCISSIBLE. adj. [from seissus, Lat.] Capable of being divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

The differences of impressible and not impressible, scissible and not scissible, and many other passions of matter, are plebeian notions. Bacon.

SCISSILE. adj. [scissile, Fr. scissilis, Lat.] Capable of being cut or divided smoothly by a sharp edge.

Animal fat is a sort of amphibious substance, scissible like a solid, and resolvable by heat. Arbuth.

SCISSION. n. s. [scission, Fr. scissio, Lat.] The act of cutting.

Nerves may be wounded by scission or puncture: the former way they are usually cut through, and wholly cease from action. Wiscman's Surg.

SCISSOR. n. s. [This word is variously written, as it is supposed to be derived by different writers; of whom some write cisors, from cado or icidid; others scissors, from scindo; and some cisars, cizars, or scissars, from ciseaux, Fr.] A small pair of sheers, or blades moveable on a pivot, and intercepting the thing to be cut.

His heard they have sing'd off with brands of fire;

And ever, as it blaz'd, they threw on him
Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair:
My master preaches patience to him, and the while His man with scissars nicks him for a fool. Shakesp.
Wanting the scissars, with these hands I'll tear,
If that obstruct my flight, this load of hair. Prior.

When the lawyers and tradesmen brought extravagant lills, Sir Roger wore a pair of scissars in his pocket, with which he would snip a quarter of a yard off nicely. Arbuthnot.

SCISSURE. n. s. [scissum, Lat.] A crack; a rent; a fissure.

The breach seems like the scissures and ruptures of an earthquake, and threatens to swallow all that attempt to elude it, and reserves its core only for omnipotence. Decay of Piety.

SCLEROTICK. adj. [sclerotique, Fr. σκληρότης.] Hard; an epithet of one of the coats of the eye.

The ligaments observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunicles of the eye, serve instead of a muscle, by their contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray on the Creation.

SCLEROTICKS. n. s. [from the adjective.] Medicines which harden and consolidate the parts they are applied to. Quincy.

To SCOAT. } v. a. To stop a wheel by
To SCOTCH. } putting a stone or piece of wood under it before. Bailey.

To SCOFF. v. n. [schoppen, Dut.] To treat with insolent ridicule; to treat with contemptuous language; with at.

Of two noblemen of the west of England, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given? Bacon.

There is no greater argument of a light and inconsiderate person, than prophane to scoff at religion. Tillotson.

Such is love,
And such the laws of his fantastick empire,
The wanton boy delights to bend the mighty,
And scoffs at the vain wisdom of the wise. Rowe.

SCOFF. n. s. [from the verb.] Contemptuous ridicule; expression of scorn; contemptuous language.

Our answer therefore to their reasons is, no; to their scoff, nothing. Holder.

With scoffs and scorns, and contemptuous taunts, In open market-place produc'd they me. Shakesp. Henry VI.

How could men surrender up their reason to flattery, more abusive and reproachful than the rudest scoffs and the sharpest invectives? South.

Some little souls, that have got a smattering of astronomy or chemistry, for want of a due acquaintance with other sciences, make a scoff at them all, in comparison of their favourite science. Watts.

SCOFFER. n. s. [from scoff.] Insolent ridiculer; saucy scorner; contemptuous reproacher.

Sell when you can; you are not for all markets: Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer; Fool is the most fool, being found to be a scoffer. Shakesp.

Divers have hoarded themselves among these profane scoffers, not that they are convinced by their reasons, but terrified by their contumelies. Goverm. of the Tongue.

Consider what the apostle tells these scoffers they were ignorant of; not that there was a deluge, but he tells them that they were ignorant that the heavens and the earth of old were so and so constituted. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

SCOFFINGLY. adv. [from scoffing.] In contempt; in ridicule.

Aristotle applied this hemistick scoffingly to the sycophants at Athens. Broome.

To SCOLD. v. n. [scholden, Dut.] To quarrel clamorously and rudely.

Pardon me, 'tis the first time that ever I'm forc'd to scold. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The one as famous for a scolding tongue,
As th' other is for beauteous modesty. Shakesp.
They attacked me, some with piteous moans,
Others grinning and only shewing their teeth,
Others ranting, and others scolding and reviling. Stillingfleet.

For gods, we are by Homer told,
Can in celestial language scold. Swift.
Scolding and cursing are her common conversation. Swift.

SCOLD. n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous, rude, mean, low, foul-mouthed woman.

A shrew in domestick life is now become a scold in politicks. Addison's Freeholder.

San-born matrons mending old nets;
Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between;
Scolds answer foul-mouthed scolds. Swift.

SCOLLOP. n. s. [written properly scallop.] A pectinated shell-fish.

SCOLOPÉNDRA. n. s. [scolopendre, Fr. σκολόπενδρα.]

1. A sort of venomous serpent.
2. [Scolopendrium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsw.

SCOMM. n. s. [perhaps from scomma, Lat.] A buffoon. A word out of use, and unworthy of revival.

The *scomm*s, or buffoons, of quality are wolfish in conversation. L'Estrange.

SCONCE. n. s. [schantz, Germ.]

1. A fort; a bulwark.
Such fellows are perfect in the great commanders names, and they will learn you by rote where services were done; at such and such a sconce, at such a breach. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. The head; perhaps as being the acropolis, or citadel of the body. A low word.
Why does he suffer this rude knave now to knock him about the sconce with a dirty shovel, and will not tell him of this action of battery? Shakesp. Hamlet.

3. A pensile candlestick, generally with a looking-glass to reflect the light.

Golden sconces hang upon the walls,
To light the costly suppers and the balls. Dry. Luc.
Triumphant Umbriel, on a sconce's height,
Clapp'd his glad wings, and sat to view the fight. Pope.

Put candles into sconces. Swift's Dir. to the Butl.

4. A mulct, or fine.

To SCONCE. v. a. [A word used in the universities, and derived plausibly by Skinner, whose etymologies are generally rational, from sconce, as it signifies the head; to sconce being to fix a fine on any one's head.] To mulct; to fine. A low word, which ought not to be retained.

SCOOP. n. s. [schoepe, Dut.]

1. A kind of large ladle; a vessel with a long handle used to throw out liquor.

They turn upside down hops on malt-kilns, when almost dry, with a scoop. Mortimer's Husb.

2. A churgeon's instrument.
Endeavour with thy scoop, or fingers, to force the stone outwards. Sharp's Surgery.

3. A sweep; a stroke. Perhaps it should be swoop.

Oh, hell-kite!
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam
At one fell scoop! Shakesp. Macbeth.

To SCOOP. v. a. [schoepen, Dut.]

1. To lade out.

As by the brook he stood,
He scoop'd the water from the crystal flood. Dryden's Æneid.

2. This word seems to have not been understood by Thomson.

Melting Alpine snows
The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks. Thomson.

3. To empty by lading.
If some penurious source by chance appear'd
Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' outasted moisture from him? Addison.

4. To carry off so as to leave the place hollow.

A spectator would think this circular mound had been actually scooped out of that hollow space. Spectator.

Her fore-feet are broad, that she may scoop away much earth at a time. Addison.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dext'rously applied,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoopt out the big round jelly from its orb. Addison.

5. To cut into hollowness or depth.
Whatever part of the harbour they scoop in, it has an influence on all the rest; for the sea immediately works the whole bottom to a level. Add. on Italy.

Those carbuncles the Indians will scope, so as to hold above a pint. Arbutnot on Coins.

It much conduces how to scarce
The little race of birds, that hop
From spray to spray, scoping the costliest fruit, Insatiate, undisturb'd. Philips.

The genius of the place
Or helps the ambitious hill the heav'n to scale,
Or scopes in circling theatres the vale. Pope.

SCOOPER. n. s. [from scoop.] One who scoops.

SCOPE. n. s. [scopus, Lat.]

1. Aim; intention; drift.

Your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws,
As to your soul seems good. Shakesp. Mea. for Mea.
His coming hither hath no farther scope
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Infranchisement immediate on his knees.
Shakesp. Richard II.

Had the whole scope of the author been answerable to his title, he would have only undertaken to prove what every man is convinced of; but the drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

2. Thing aimed at; mark; final end.

The scope of all their pleading against man's authority is to overthrow such laws and constitutions in the church, as depending thereupon, if they should therefore be taken away, would leave neither face nor memory of church to continue long in the world. Hooker.

Now was time
To aim their counsels to the fairest scope. Hubb. Ta.
We should impute the war to the scope at which it aimeth. Roleigh.

He, in what he counsels, and in what excels,
Mistrustful, grounds his courage on despair
And utter dissolution, as the scope
Of all his aim. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Room; space; amplitude of intellectual view.

An heroic poet is not tied to a bare representation of what is true, but that he might let himself loose to visionary objects, which may give him a freer scope for imagination. Dryden.

These theorems being admitted into optics, there would be scope enough of handling that science voluminously, after a new manner; not only by teaching those things which tend to the perfection of vision, but also by determining mathematically all kinds of phenomena of colours which could be produced by refraction. Newton's Opticks.

4. Liberty; freedom from restraint.

If this constrain them to grant that their axiom is not to take any place, save in those things only where the church hath larger scope, it resteth that they search out some stronger reason. Hooker.

Ah, cut my lace asunder,
That my pent heart may have some scope to beat,
Or else I swoon with this dread killing news. Shak.

5. Liberty beyond just limits; licence.

Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gall them
For what I bid them do. Shakesp.

Being moody, give him liue and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shak. Hea. IV.

6. Act of riot; sally.

As surfeit is the father of much fast,
So every scope, by the immoderate use,
Turns to restraint. Shakesp.

7. Extended quantity.

The scopes of land granted to the first adventurers were too large, and the liberties and royalties were too great for subjects. Davies on Ireland.

8. It is out of use, except in the three first senses.

SCO'PULOUS. adj. [scopulosus, Lat.] Full of rocks. Dict.

SCORBU'TICAL. } adj. [scorbutique, Fr.]

SCORBU'TICK. } from scorbutus, Lat.]

Diseased with the scurvy.

A person about forty, of a full and scorbutical body, having broke her skin, endeavoured the curing of it; but observing the ulcer sanious, I proposed digestion. Wiseman.

Violent purging hurts scorbutic constitutions; lenitive substances relieve. Arbutnot.

SCORBU'TICALLY. adv. [from scorbutical.] With tendency to the scurvy; in the scurvy.

A woman of forty, scorbutically and hydropically affected, having a sordid ulcer, put herself into my hand. Wiseman.

SCORCE. n. s. This word is used by Spenser for discourse, or power of reason: in imitation perhaps of the Italians.

Lively vigour rested in his mind,
And recompens'd him with a better score;
Weak body well is chang'd for mind's redoubled force. Fairy Queen.

To SCORCH. v. a. [reconneb, Sax. burnt.]

1. To burn superficially.

Fire scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon's Nat. II.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air but fire;
The fainty knights were scorch'd. Dryden.

2. To burn.

Power was given to scorch men with fire. Rev. xvi. 8.
The same that left thee by the cooling stream,
Safe from sun's heat, but scorch'd with beauty's beam
You look with such contempt on pain,
That languishing you conquer more;
So lightnings which in storms appear Scorch more than when the skies are clear. Waller.
The same beams that shine, scorch too. South.

And, like a giddy bird in dead of night,
Fly round the fire that scorches me to death. Dryden.
He, from whom the nations should receive Justice and freedom, lives himself a slave;
Tortur'd by cruel change of wild desires,
Lash'd by mad rage, and scorch'd by brutal fires. Prior.

To SCORCH. v. n. To be burnt superficially; to be dried up.

The swarthy Africans complain
To see the chariot of the sun
So nigh their scorching country run. Roscommon.
The love was made in Autumn, and the hunting followed properly when the heats of that scorching country were declining. Dryden.
Scatter a little mungy straw or fern amongst your seedlings, to prevent the roots from scorching, and to receive the moisture that falls. Mortimer's Husband.

SCORCHING Fennel. n. s. A plant.

SCORDIUM. n. s. [Lat.] An herb. Ainsw.

SCORE. n. s. [skora, Island, a mark, cut, or notch.]

1. A notch, or long incision.

auscultare, Lat. to listen ; scolta, Ital.]

One who is sent privily to observe the motions of the enemy.

Are not the speedy scouts return'd again,

That dogg'd the mighty army of the Dauphin ? Shakesp.

As when a scout,

Through dark and desert ways with peril gone

All night, at last, by break of cheerful dawn,

Obtains the brow of some high-climbing hill. Milt.

This great vessel may have lesser cabins, wherein scouts may be lodged for the taking of observations. Wilkins.

The scouts to sev'ral parts divide their way,

To learn the natives names, their towns, explore

The coasts. Dryden's Æneid.

To SCOUT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go out, in order to observe the motions of an enemy privately.

Oft on the bordering deep

Encamp their legions ; or with obscure wing

Scout far and wide into the realm of night,

Scouring surprize. Milton.

As a hunted panther casts about

Her glaring eyes, and pricks her list'ning ears to so she, to shun his toils, her cares employ'd. Dry.

Command a party out,

With a strict charge not to engage, but scout. Dryd.

eyes to deliver a slavering good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

With bent lowering brows, as she would threat,

She scowl'd and frown'd with froward countenance. Fairy Queen.

Even so, or with much more contempt, men's

eyes

Did scowl on Richard. Shakesp. Richard II.

Not a courtier,

Although they wear their faces to the bent

Of the king's look, but hath a heart that is Glad at the thing they scowl at. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The dusky clouds o'erspread

Heav'n's cheerful face ; the low'ring element

Scowls o'er the darken'd landscape snow or show'r. Milton.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs ! far hence fly away

With your dull influence ; it is for you

To sit and scowl upon night's heavy brow. Crashaw.

In rueful gaze

The cattle stand, and on the scowling heav'n's

Cast a deploring eye. Thomson's Summer.

SCOWL. n. s. [from the verb.] Look of sullenness or discontent ; gloom.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray

Hover o'er the new-born day

With rosy wings so richly bright,

As if he scorn'd to think of night ;

When a ruddy storm, whose scowl

Made heav'n's radiant face look foul,

Call'd for an untimely night,

To blot the newly-blossom'd light. Crashaw.

The lab'ring swain Scratch'd with a rake a furrow for his grain, And cover'd with his hand the shallow seed again. Dryden

A sort of small sand-coloured stones, so hard as to scratch glass. Grew's Musæum

2. To tear with the nails.

How can I tell but that his talons may Yet scratch my son, or rend his tender hand? Fairy Queen

I should have scratch'd out your unseeing eyes, To make my master out of love with thee. Shak

I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow, than a man swear he loves me.

—Keep your ladyship still in that mind; so some gentleman or other shall 'scape a predestinate scratch face.

—Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were. Shak. Much ado about No.

Scots are like witches: do but what your pen Scratch till the blood come, they'll not hurt you then. Cleveland

To wish that there were nothing but such dull tame things in the world, that will neither bite nor scratch, is as childish as to wish there were no fire in nature. More

Unhand me, or I'll scratch your face; Let go, for shame. Dryden

3. To wound slightly.

4. To hurt slightly with any thing pointed or keen.

Daphne, roaming through a thorny wood, Scratching her legs that one should swear she bleeds. Shakesp.

5. To rub with the nails.

Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented to signify his name St. Francis, with a friary cowl in a corn field. Camden

Other mechanical helps Aretæus uses to procure sleep, particularly the scratching of the temples and the ears. Arbutnot

Be mindful, when invention fails, To scratch your head, and bite your nails. Swift

6. To write or draw awkwardly.

If any of their labourers can scratch out a pamphlet, they desire no wit, stile, or argument. Swift

SCRATCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An incision ragged and shallow.

The coarse file cuts deep, and makes deep scratches in the work; and before you can take out those deep scratches with your finer cut files, those places where the risings were when your work was forged, may become dents to your hammer dents. Moxon's Mech. Exercises

The smaller the particles of those substances are, the smaller will be the scratches by which they continually fret and wear away the glass until it be polished; but be they never so small, they can wear away the glass no otherwise than by grating and scratching it, and breaking the protuberances; and therefore polish it no otherwise than by bringing its roughness to a very fine grain, so that the scratches and frettings of the surface become too small to be visible. Newton's Opticks

2. Laceration with the nails.

These nails with scratches shall deform my breast, Lest by my look and colour be express'd The mark of aught high-born, or ever better dress'd. Prior

3. A slight wound.

The valiant beast turning on her with open jaws, she gave him such a thrust through his breast, that all the lion could do was with open paw to tear off the mantle and sleeve of Zelruane, with a little scratch rather than a wound. Sidney

Heav'n forbid a shallow scratch should drive The prince of Wales from such a field as this. Shakesp. Henry IV.

SCRATCHER. n. s. [from scratch.] He that scratches.

SCRATCHES. n. s. Cracked ulcers or scabs in a horse's foot. Ainsworth

To SCREECH. v. n. [skrekia to cry, Islan.]

1. To cry out as in terror or anguish.

Screeching is an appetite of expelling that which suddenly strikes the spirits. Bacon.

- To cry as a night owl: thence called a screechowl.

SCREECH. n. s. [from the verb.]

- Cry of horror and anguish.
- Harsh horrid cry.

The birds obscene, that nightly flock'd to taste,
With hollow screeches fled from the dire repast;
And ravenous dogs, allur'd by scented blood,
And starving wolves, ran howling to the wood.

SCREE'CHOWL. n. s. [screech and owl.]

An owl that hoots in the night, and whose voice is supposed to betoken danger, misery, or death.

Deep night,
The time of night when Troy was set on fire,
The time when screechowls cry, and baidogs howl.

Let him that will a screechowl ay be call'd,
Go into Troy, and say there, Hector's dead. Shak.

By the screechowl's dismal note,
By the black night-raven's throat,
I charge thee, Hob.

Jupiter, though he had joggled the balance to weigh down Furnus, sent the screechowl to discourage him.

Sooner shall screechowls bask in sunny day,
Than I forget my shepherd's wanted love. Gay.

SCREEN. n. s. [escran, Fr.]

- Any thing that affords shelter or concealment.

Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are.

Some ambitious men seem as screens to princes in matters of danger and envy.

Our people, who transport themselves, are settled in those interjacent tracts, as a screen against the insults of the savages.

My juniors by a year,
Who wisely thought my age a screen,
When death approach'd, to stand between;
The screen remov'd, their hearts are trembling.

- Any thing used to exclude cold or light.

When there is a screen between the candle and the eye, yet the light passeth to the paper whereon one writeth.

One speaks the glory of the British queen,
And one describes a charming Indian screen.

Ladies make their old clothes into patchwork for screens and stools.

- A riddle to sift sand.

To SCREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To shelter; to conceal; to hide.

Back'd with a ridge of hills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth, and seats of men,

From cold S-pentriion blasts.

A good magistrate's retinue of state screens him from the dangers which he is to incur for the sake of it.

This gentle deed shall fairly be set foremost,
To screen the wild escapes of lawless passion.

- [Cerno, cerni, Lat.] To sift; to riddle.

Let the cases be filled with natural earth, taken the first half spit, from just under the turf of the best pasture-ground, mixed with one part of very mellow soil screened.

SCREW. n. s. [scroev, Dut. escrou, Fr.]

One of the mechanical powers, which is defined a right cylinder cut into a furrowed spiral: of this there are two kinds, the male and female; the former being cut convex, so that its threads rise outwards; but the latter channelled on its concave side, so as to receive the former.

The screw is a kind of wedge, that is multiplied or continued by a helical revolution about a cylinder, receiving its motion not from any stroke, but from a vectis at one end of it.

After your apples are ground, commit them to the screw press, which is the best.

To SCREW. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To turn or move by a screw.

Some, when the press, by utmost vigour screw'd,
Has drain'd the pulposus mass, regale their swine
With the dry refuse.

- To fasten with a screw.

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail.

To screw your lock on the door, make wide holes, big enough to receive the shank of the screw.

- To deform by contortions.

Sometimes a violent laughter screw'd his face,
And sometimes ready tears dropp'd down apace.

He screw'd his face in to a harden'd smile,
And said, Sebastian knew to govern slaves.

With screw'd face, and doleful whine, they ply you with senseless harangues against human inventions on the one hand, and loud outcries for a further reformation on the other.

- To force; to bring by violence.

He resolv'd to govern by subaltern ministers, who screw'd up the pins of power too high.

No discourse can be, but they will try to turn the tide, and draw it all into their own channel; or they will screw in here and there some intimations of what they said or did.

The rents of land in Ireland, since they have been so enormously raised and screw'd up, may be computed to be about two millions.

- To squeeze; to press.

- To oppress by extortion.

Our country landlords, by unmeasurable screwing and racking their tenants, have already reduced the miserable people to a worse condition than the peasants in France.

SCREW Tree. n. s. [isoro, Lat.] A plant of the East and West Indies.

To SCRIBBLE. v. a. [scribo, scribillo, Lat.]

- To fill with artless or worthless writing.

With centrick and eccentric, scribbled o'er Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

- To write without use or elegance: as, he scribbled a pamphlet.

To SCRIBBLE. v. n. To write without care or beauty.

If a man should affirm, that an ape, casually meeting with pen, ink, and paper, and falling to scribble, did happen to write exactly the Leviathan of Hobbes, would an atheist believe such a story? And yet he can easily digest things as incredible as that.

If Mævius scribble in Apollo's spite,
There are who judge still worse than he can write.

Leave flattery to fulsome dedicators,
Whom, when they praise, the world believes no more Than when they promise to give scribbling o'er.

SCRIBBLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Worthless writing.

By solemnly endeavouring to countenance my conjectures, I might be thought dogmatical in a hasty scribble.

If it struck the present taste, it was soon transferred into the plays and current scribbles of the week, and became an addition to our language.

SCRIBBLER. n. s. [from scribble.] A petty author; a writer without worth.

The most copious writers are the arrantest scribblers, and in so rough talking the tongue runs before the wit.

The actors represent such things as they are capable, by which they and the scribbler may get their living.

The scribbler, pinch'd with hunger, writes to dine,
And to your genius must conform his line.

To affirm he had cause to apprehend the same treatment with his father, is an improbable scandal flung upon the nation by a few bigotted French scribblers.

Nobody was concerned or surprised, if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce.

SCRIBE. n. s. [scribe, Fr. scriba, Lat.]

- A writer.

Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets, cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number, ho!

His love to Antony.

My master, being the scribe to himself, should write the letter.

We are not to wonder, if he thinks not fit to make any perfect and unerring scribes.

The following letter comes from some notable young female scribe.

- A publick notary.

SCRIMER. n. s. [escrimeur, Fr.] A gladiator; a fencing-master. Not in use.

The scrimers of their nation,
He swore, had neither motion, guard, nor eye,
If you oppos'd them.

SCRINE. n. s. [scrinium, Lat.] A place in which writings or curiosities are reposed.

Help then, O holy virgin,
Thy weaker novice to perform thy will;
Lay forth, out of thine everlasting scrine,
The antique rolls which there lie hidden still.

SCRIP. n. s. [skappa, Island.]

- A small bag; a satchel.

Come, shepherd, let us make an honourable treat; though not with bag and haggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

He'd in requital ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties.

- [From scriptio, Lat. as it seems.] A schedule; a small writing.

Call them man by man, according to the scrip.

Bills of exchange cannot pay our debts abroad, till scrips of paper can be made current coin.

SCRIPPAGE. n. s. [from scrip.] That which is contained in a scrip.

SCRIPTORY. adj. [scriptorius, Lat.] Written; not orally delivered.

SCRIPTURAL. adj. [from scripture.] Contained in the Bible; biblical.

Creates, the scriptural use of that word determines it sometimes to men.

SCRIPTURE. n. s. [scriptura, Lat.]

- Writing.

It is not only remembered in many scriptures, but famous for the death and overthrow of Crassus.

- Sacred writing; the Bible.

With us there is never any time bestowed in divine service, without the reading of a great part of the holy scripture, which we account a thing most necessary.

The devil can cite scripture for his purpose: An evil soul producing holy witness Is like a villain with a smiling cheek.

There is not any action which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the scripture will give him a clear precept, or prohibition, for it.

Forbear any discourse of other spirits, till his reading the scripture history put him upon that enquiry.

Scripture proof was never the talent of these men, and 'tis no wonder they are foiled.

Why are scripture maxims put upon us without taking notice of scripture examples, that lie cross them?

The Author of nature and the scriptures has expressly enjoined, that he who will not work shall not eat. Seed's Sermons

SCRIVENER. n. s. [scrivano, Lat.]

1. One who draws contracts.

We'll pass the business privately and well :
Send for your daughter by your servant here,
My boy shall fetch the scrivener.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. One whose business is to place money at interest.

How happy in his low degree,
Who leads a quiet country life,

And from the griping scrivener free ! Dry. Horace.

I am reduced to beg and borrow from scriveners and usurers, that suck the heart and blood.

Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

SCROFULA. n. s. [from scrofula, Lat. a sow, as χοίρας.] A depravation of the humours of the body, which breaks out in sores, commonly called the king's evil.

If matter in the milk dispose to coagulation, it produces a scrofula. Wiseman of Tumours.

SCROFULOUS. adj. [from scrofula.] Diseased with the scrofula.

Scrofulous persons can never be duly nourished ; for such as have tumours in the parotides often have them in the pancreas and mesentery.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

English consumptions generally proceed from a scrofulous disposition. Arbutnot.

What would become of the race of men in the next age, if we had nothing to trust to, beside the scrofulous consumptive production furnished by our men of wit and pleasure ? Swift.

SCROLL. n. s. [supposed by Minshew to be corrupted from roll ; by Skinner derived from an escrouelle given by the heralds : whence parchment, wrapped up into a resembling form, has the same name. It may be observed, that a gaoler's list of prisoners is escrou.] A writing wrapped up.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd ;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,

That were all worm-eaten, and full of canker holes. Spenser.

We'll add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll, that tells of this war's loss,
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings. Sha.

Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit through all Atheism to play in our interlude. Shakesp.

A Numidian priest, hellowing out certain superstitious charms, east divers scrolls of paper on each side the way, wherein he cursed and banned the Christians. Knolles.

He drew forth a scroll of parchment, and delivered it to our foremost man. Bacon.

Such follow him, as shall be register'd ;
Part good, part bad : of bad the longer scroll. Milt.

With this epistolary scroll,
Receive the partner of my inmost soul. Prior.

Yet, if he wills, may change or spoil the whole ;
May take you beautiful, mystick, stary roll,
And burn it like an useless parchment scroll. Prior.

SCROYLE. n. s. [This word I remember only in Shakespeare : it seems derived from escrouelle, Fr. a scrofulous swelling ; as he calls a mean fellow a scab from his itch, or a patch from his raggedness.] A mean fellow ; a rascal : a wretch.

The scroyles of Angiers bout you kings,
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre. Shakesp. King John.

To SCRUB. v. a. [schrobben, Dut.] To rub hard with something coarse and rough.

Such wrinkles as skillful hand would draw

For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dry.
She never would lay aside the use of brooms and scrubbing brushes. Arbutnot.

Now Moll had whirl'd her mop with dextrous airs,

Prepar'd to scrub the entry and the stairs. Swift.

SCRUB. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A mean fellow, either as he is supposed to scrub himself for the itch, or as he is employed in the mean offices of scouring away dirt.

2. Anything mean or despicable.
With a dozen large vessels my vault shall be stor'd ;
No little scrub joint shall come on my board. Swift.

3. A worn-out broom. Ainsworth.

SCRUBBED. } adj. [scrubet, Dan.] Mean ;

SCRUBBY. } vile ; worthless ; dirty ;

The smallest scruple of her excellence ;
But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor. Shak. Meas. for Me.

To SCRUPLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To doubt ; to hesitate.

He scrupled not to eat

Against his better knowledge ; not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charms. Milton's Par. Lost.

SCRUPLER. n. s. [from scruple.] A doubter ; one who has scruples.

The scruples which many publick ministers would make of the worthiness of parents to have their children baptized, forced such questioned parents, who did not believe the necessity of having their children baptized by such scruplers, to carry their children unto other ministers.

Grant's Bills of Mortality.

SCRUPULOSITY. n. s. [from scrupulous.]

1. Doubt ; minute and nice doubtfulness.
The one sort they warn'd to take heed, that scrupulosity did not make them rigorous in giving unadvis'd sentence against their brethren which were free ; the other, that they did not become scandalous, by abusing their liberty and freedom to the offence of their weak brethren, which were scrupulous. Hooker.

So careful, even to scrupulosity, were they to keep their sabbath, that they must not only have a time to prepare them for that, but a further time also to prepare them for their very preparations. South.

2. Fear of acting in any manner ; tenderness of conscience.

The first sacrilege is looked on with horror ; but when they have made the breach, their scrupulosity soon retires. Decay of Piety.

SCRUTINY. n. s. [scrutinium, Lat.] Enquiry ; search ; examination with nicety.

In the scrutinies for righteousness and judgment, when it is inquired whether such a person be a good man or no, the meaning is not, what does he believe or hope, but what he loves.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

I thought thee worth my nearer view
And narrower scrutiny, that I might learn

In what degree or meaning thou art call'd
The Son of God. Milton's Parad. Regain'd
They that have designed exactness and deep scrutiny, have taken some one part of nature. Hale.
Their difference to measure, and to reach,
Reason well rectified must nature teach;
And these high scrutines are subjects fit
For man's all-searching and enquiring wit. Denh.
We are admonish'd of want of charity towards others, and want of a christian scrutiny and examination into ourselves. L'Estrange.
When any argument of great importance is managed with that warmth which a serious conviction of it generally inspires, somewhat may easily escape, even from a wary pen, which will not bear the test of a severe scrutiny. Atterbury.
These, coming not within the scrutiny of human senses, cannot be examined by them, or attested by any body. Locke.
SCRUTOIRE. n. s. [for scritoire, or escritoire.] A case of drawers for writings.

I must confess I've seen in former days
The best knights in the world, and scuffled in some frays. Drayton.
A gallant man would rather fight to great disadvantages in the field, in an orderly way, than scuffle with an undisciplined rabble. King Charles.
To SCULK. v. n. [sculcke, Dan.] To lurk in hiding-places; to lie close.
It has struck on a sudden into such a reputation, that it scorns any longer to sculk, but owns itself publicly. Government of the Tongue.
Fearing to be seen, within a bed
Of coleworts he conceal'd his wily head;
There sculk'd till afternoon, and watch'd his time. Dryden.
My prophets and my sophists finish'd here
Their civil efforts of the verbal war:

Not so my rabbins and logicians yield;
Retiring still they combat; from the field
Of open arms unwilling they depart,
And sculk behind the subterfuge of art. Prior.
No news of Phyl! the bridegroom came,
And thought his bride had sculk'd for shame;
Because her father us'd to say,
The girl had such a bashful way. Swift.

from shell, in some provinces called shull; as testa, and teste or tête signify the head. Mr. Lye observes more satisfactorily, that skola is in Islandick the skull of an animal.]
1. The bone which incases and defends the brain; the arched bone of the head.
Fractures of the scull are at all times very dangerous, as the brain becomes affected from the pressure. Sharp.
2. A small boat; a cockboat. [See SCULLER.]
3. One who rows a cockboat.
Like cahiff vile, that for misdeed
Rides with his face to rump of steed;
Or rowing scull, he's fain to love,
Look one way and another move. Hudibras.
4. [reole, Sax. an assembly.] In Mil- ton's style, a shoal or vast multitude of fish.
Each bay
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave, in sculls that oft Bank the mid sea. Milton.
SCULLCAP. n. s. [scull and cap.]
1. A headpiece.
2. A nightcap.
SCULLER. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology. Skiola is, in Islandick, a vessel; and escuille, in French, a dish.]
1. A cockboat; a boat in which there is but one rower.
Her soul already was consign'd to fate,
And shiv'ring in the leaky sculler sate. Dryden.
They hire the sculler, and, when once abroad,
Grow sick, and damn the climate like a lord. Pope.
One that rows a cockboat.
SCULLERY. n. s. [from skiola a vessel, Island. or escuille, Fr. a dish.] The place where common utensils, as kettles or dishes are cleaned and kept.
Pyreicus was famous for counterfeiting base things, as pitchers, a scullery, and setting rogues together by the ears. Peucham.
SCULLION. n. s. [from escuille, Fr. a dish.] The lowest domestick servant, that washes the kettles and the dishes
in the kitchen.
I must, like a whore, unpack my heart with words,
And fall a-cursing like a very drab,
A scullion, fye upon 't! foh! about my brain.
Shakesp. Hamlet.
If the gentleman hath lain there, get the cook, the stable-men, and the scullion, to stand in his way. Swift.
To SCULP. v. a. [sculpo, Lat. sculper, Fr.] To carve; to engrave. A word not in use.
O that the tenor of my just complaint
Were sculpt with steel on rocks of adamant! Sand.
SCULPTILE. adj. [sculptilis, Lat.] Made by carving.
In a silver medal is upon one side Moses horned, and on the reverse the commandment against sculptile images. Brazen.

SCULPTOR. n. s. [sculptor, Lat. sculp- teur, Fr.] A carver; one who cuts wood or stone into images.
Thy shape is in ev'ry part
So clean, as might instruct the sculptor's art. Dryd.
The Latin poets give the epithets of trifidum and trisculcum to the thunderbolt, from the sculp- tors and painters that lived before them, that had given it three forks. Addison.
SCULPTURE. n. s. [sculptura, Lat. sculp- ture, Fr.]
1. The art of carving wood, or hewing stone, into images.
Then sculpture and her sister arts revive,
Stones leap'd to form and rocks began to live. Pope.
2. Carved work.
Nor did there want Cornice or freeze with bossy sculpture grav'd. Milt.
There too, in living sculpture, might be seen
The mad affection of the Cretan queen. Dryden.
3. The art of engraving on copper.
To SCULPTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To cut; to engrave.
Gold, silver, ivory vases sculptur'd high,
There are who have not. Pope.
SCUM. n. s. [escume, Fr. schiuma, Ital.
skum, Dan. schuym, Dut.]
1. That which rises to the top of any liquor.
The rest had several offices assign'd;
Some to remove the scum as it did rise,
Others to bear the same away did mind,
And others it did use according to his kind. F. Qu.
The salt part of the water doth partly rise into a scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom. Bacon.
Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
Self-fed and self-consum'd. Milton.
Away, ye scum,
That still rise upmost when the nation boils. Dryd.
They mix a medicine, to foment their limbs,
With scum that on the molten silver swims. Dryd.
2. The dross; the refuse; the recrement; that part which is to be thrown away.
There floeked unto him all the scum of the Irish out of all places, that ere long he had a mighty army. Spenser.
Some forty gentlemen excepted, had we the very scum of the world, such as their friends thought it an exceeding good gain to be discharged of. Radclygh's Essays.
I told thee what would come
Of all thy vapouring, base scum. Hudibras.
The Scythian and Egyptian scum
Had almost ruin'd Rome. Roscommon.
You'll find, in these hereditary tales,
Your ancestors the scum of broken jails. Dryd. Inv.
The great and innocent are insulted by the scum
and refuse of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
To SCUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To clear off the scum: commonly written and spoken skim.
A second multitude
Severing each kind, and scumm'd the bullion dross. Milton.
Hear, ye sullen pow'rs below;
Hear, ye taskers of the dead!
You that hoiling cauldrons blow,
You that scum the molten lead! Dryd. and Lee's Oed.
What corns swim upon the top of the brine, scum off. Mortimer's Husbandry.
SCUMBER. n. s. [from scum.] The dung of a fox. Ainsworth.
SCUMMER. n. s. [escumoir, Fr.] A vessel with which liquor is skimmed, commonly called a skimmer.
SCUPPER Holes. n. s. [schoppen, Dut. to draw off.] In a ship, small holes on the deck, through which water is carried into the sea. The leathers over those holes are called scupper leathers; and the nails with which they are fastened, scupper nails. Bailey.

The blood at scupper holes run out. Ward.
SCURF, n. s. [scurf, Sax. skarfa, Island. skurff, Dan. skorf, Swed. schorft, Dut.]

1. A kind of dry miliary scab.
 Her crafty head was altogether bald,
 And, as in hate of honourable eld,
 Was overgrown with scurf and filthy scald. F. Que.

The virtue of his hands
 Was lost among Pactolus' sands,
 Against whose torrent while he swims,
 The golden scurf peels off his limbs. Swift.

2. A soil or stain adherent.
 Then are they happy, when by length of time
 The scurf is worn away of each committed crime,
 No speck is left. Dryden.

3. Any thing sticking on the surface.
 There stood a hill, whose grisly top Shone with a glossy scurf. Milton.
 Upon throwing in a stone, the water boils; and at the same time are seen little fleaks of scurf rising up. Addison.

SCURFINESS, n. s. [from scurf.] The state of being scurfy.

SCURRIL, adj. [scurrilis, Lat.] Low; mean; grossly opprobrious; lewdly jocose.

With him Patroclus,
 Upon a lazy bed, the live-long-day Breaks scurril jests. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Nothing conduces more to letters than to examine the writings of the ancients, provided the plagues of judging and pronouncing against them be away; such as envy, bitterness, precipitation, impudence, and scurril scoffing. Ben Jonson.

Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
 Than all thy foul unmanner'd scurril taunts. Dryd.

SCURRILITY, n. s. [scurrilité, Fr. scurrilitas, Lat.] Grossness of reproach; lewdness of jocularity; mean buffoonery.

Good master Holofernes, purge; so it shall please you to abrogate scurrility. Shakesp.

Banish scurrility and profaneness, and restrain the licentious insolence of poets. Dryden.

SCURRILOUS, adj. [scurrilis, Lat.] Grossly opprobrious; using such language as only the licence of a buffoon can warrant; lewdly jocular; vile; low.

Scurrilous and more than satyirical immodesty. Hooker.

Let him approach singing. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in's tunes. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

How often is a person, whose intentions are to do good by the works he publishes, treated in as scurrilous a manner as if he were an enemy to mankind? Addison's Freeholder.

Their characters have been often treated with the utmost barbarity and injustice by scurrilous and enraged orators. Swift.

SCURRILOUSLY, adv. [from scurrilous.] With gross reproach; with low buffoonery; with lewd merriment.

Such men there are, who have written scurrilously against me, without any provocation. Dryd.

It is barbarous incivility, scurrilously to sport with that which others count religion. Tillotson.

SCURRILOUSNESS, n. s. [from scurrilous.] Scurrility; baseness of manners.

SCURVILY, adv. [from scurvy.] Vilely; basely; coarsely. It is seldom used but in a ludicrous sense.

Look i' your glass now,
 And see how scurvily that countenance shews;
 You would be loth to own it. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This alters the whole complexion of an action, that would otherwise look but very scurvily, and makes it perfect. South.

The clergy were never more learned, or so scurvily treated. Swift.

SCURVY, n. s. [from scurf. This word was, I believe, originally an adjective.]

The scurvy is a distemper of the inhabitants of cold countries, and amongst those such as inhabit marshy, fat, low, moist soils, near stagnating water, fresh or salt; invading chiefly in the winter such as are sedentary, or live upon salted or smoked flesh and fish, or quantities of unfermented farinaceous vegetables, and drink bad water. Arbuthnot.

SCURVY, adj. [from scurf, scurfy, scurvy.] 1. Scabbed; covered with scabs; diseased with the scurvy.

Whatsoever man be scurvy or scabbed. Lev. xxi. 20.

2. Vile; bad; sorry; worthless; contemptible; offensive.

I know him for a man divine and holy;
 Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler. Shakesp.

This is a very scurvy tune to sing to a man's funeral.
 He spoke scurvy and provoking terms Against your honour. Shakesp.

A crane, which is but scurvy meat, lays but two eggs. Cheyne.

It would be convenient to prevent the excess of drink, with that scurvy custom of taking tobacco. Swift.

SCURVYGRASS, n. s. [scurvy and grass; cochlearia, Lat.] The spoonwort. A plant. Miller.

SCUSES. For excuses.
 I shifted him away,
 And laid good 'scuses on your ecstasy. Shak. Othello.

SCUT, n. s. [skott, Island.] The tail of those animals whose tails are very short, as a hare.

In the hare it is aversely seated, and in its distension inclines unto the coecix or scut. Brown's Vulg. Err.

He fled to earth, but first it cost him dear;
 He left his scut behind, and half an ear. Swift.

SCUTCHEON, n. s. [scuccione, Ital. from scutum, Lat.] The shield represented in heraldry; the ensigns armorial of a family. See ESCUTCHEON.

And thereto had she that scutcheon of her desires, supported by certain badly diligent ministers. Sidney.

Your scutcheons, and your signs of conquest, shall hang in what place you please. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.

Honour is a mere scutcheon. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

The chiefs about their necks the scutcheons wore,
 With orient pearls and jewels powder'd o'er. Dryd.

SCUTELLATED, adj. [scutella, Lat.] Divided into small surfaces.

It seems part of the scutellated bone of a sturgeon, being flat, of a porous or cellular constitution. Woodward.

SCUTIFORM, adj. [scutiformis, Lat.] Shaped like a shield.

SCUTTLE, n. s. [scutella, Lat. scutell, Celt. Ainsworth.]

1. A wide shallow basket, so named from a dish or platter which it resembles in form.
 A scuttle or skrein to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.
 The earth and stones they are fain to carry from under their feet in scuttles and baskets. Hakewill on Providence.

2. A small grate.
 To the hole in the door have a small scuttle, to keep in what mice are there. Mortimer's Husband.

3. [From scud.] A quick pace; a short run; a pace of affected precipitation. This is properly scuddle.
 She went with an easy scuttle out of the shop. Spectator.

TO SCUTTLE, v. n. [from scud or scuddle.] To run with affected precipitation.

The old fellow scuttled out of the room. Arbuth
TO SDEIGN, v. a. [Spenser. Sdegnare, Ital. Milton, for disdain.]

Lifted up so high,
 I sdeign'd subjection. Milton.

SDEIGNFUL, adj. Contracted for disdainful.
 They now, puffed up with sdeignful insolence, Despise the brood of blessed sapience. Spenser.

SEA, n. s. [græ, Sax. see, or zee, Dut.] 1. The ocean; the water, opposed to the land.

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood Clean from my hand? No, this my hand will rather Thy multitudinous sea incarnadine, Making the green one red. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The rivers run into the sea. Carew.
 He made the sea, and all that is therein. Exodus, xx. 11.

So do the winds and thunders cleanse the air,
 So working sea settle and purge the wine. Davies.

Amphibious between sea and land,
 The river horse. Milton.

Some leviathan,
 Haply slumb'ring on the Norway foam,
 The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff
 Deeming some island, oft, as seamen tell,
 With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
 Moors by his side under the lee, while night Invests the sea. Milton.

Small fragments of shells, broken by storms on some shores, are used for manuring of sea land. Woodward.

They put to sea with a fleet of three hundred sail. Arbuthnot.

Sea racing dolphins are train'd for our motion,
 Moony tides swelling to roll us ashore. Dryd. Alb.

But like a rock unmov'd, a rock that braves
 The raging tempest and the rising waves,
 Propp'd on himself he stands: his solid sides
 Wash off the sea weeds, and the sounding tides. Dryden.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is,
 without a great loss to the world. Bentley.

So when the first hold vessel dar'd the sea,
 High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain,
 While Argo saw her kindred trees
 Descend from Pelion to the main. Pope.

2. A collection of water; a lake.
 By the sea of Galilee. Mat. iv. 18.

3. Proverbially for any large quantity.
 That sea of blood, which hath in Ireland been barbarously shed, is enough to drown in eternal infamy and misery the malicious author and instigator of its effusion. King Charles.

4. Any thing rough and tempestuous.
 To sorrow abandon'd, but worse felt within,
 And in a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

5. Half seas over. Half drunk.
 The whole magistracy was pretty well disguised before I gave 'em the slip: our friend the alderman was half seas over before the bonfire was out. Spect.

Sea is often used in composition, as will appear in the following examples.

SEABAR, n. s. [from sea and bar; hirundo piscis, Lat.] The sea-sallow.

SEABEAT, adj. [sea and beat.] Dashed by the waves of the sea.

The sovereign of the seas he blames in vain,
 That once seabeat will to sea again. Spenser's Past.

Darkness cover'd o'er
 The face of things: along the seabeat shore Satiate we slept. Pope's Odyssey.

SEABOAT, n. s. [sea and boat.] Vessel capable to bear the sea.

Shipwrecks were occasioned by their ships being bad seaboats, and themselves but indifferent seamen. Arbuthnot.

SEABORN, n. s. [sea and born.] Born of the sea; produced by the sea.

Like Neptune and his seaborn niece, shall be
 The shining glories of the land and sea. Waller.

All these in order march, and marching sing
 The warlike actions of their seaborn king. Dryden.

SE'ABOY. n. s. [sea and boy.] Boy employed on shipboard.

Canst thou, O partial sleep! give thy repose
To the wet seaboy in an hour so rude,
And in the calmest and the stillest night
Deny it to a king? Shakesp.

SE'ABREACH. n. s. [sea and breach.] Ir-ruption of the sea by breaking the banks.
To an impetuous woman, tempests and seabreaches are nothing. L'Estrange.

SE'ABREEZE. n. s. [sea and breeze.] Wind blowing from the sea.

Hedges, in most places, would be of great advantage to shelter the grass from the seabreeze. Mortimer.

SE'ABUILT. adj. [sea and built.] Built for the sea.

Borne each by other in a distant line,
The seabuilt forts in dreadful order move. Dryden.

SEAC'BBAGE. n. s. [crambe, Lat.] Seacolewort. A plant.

It hath fleshy leaves like those of the cabbage. Miller.

SE'ACALF. n. s. [sea and calf; phoca.] The seal.

The seacalf, or seal, so called from the noise he makes like a calf: his head comparatively not big, shaped rather like an otter's, with teeth like a dog's, and mustaches like those of a cat: his body long, and all over hairy: his forefeet, with fingers clawed, but not divided, yet fit for going; his hinder feet, more properly fins, and fitter for swimming, as being an amphibious animal. The female gives suck, as the porpoise, and other viviparous fishes. Grew's Musæum.

SE'ACAP. n. s. [sea and cap.] Cap made to be worn on shipboard.

I know your favour well,
Though now you have no seacap on your head. Shak.

SE'ACARP. n. s. [from sea and carp; turdus marinus, Lat.] A spotted fish that lives among stones and rocks.

SE'ACHART. n. s. [sea and chart.] Map on which only the coasts are delineated.

The situation of the parts of the earth are better learned by a map or seachart, than reading the description. Watts.

SE'ACOAL. n. s. [sea and coal.] Coal so called, not because found in the sea, but because brought to London by sea; pit-coal.

We'll have a posset soon at the latter end of a seacoal fire. Shakesp.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal. Bacon.

This pulmonique indisposition of the air is very much heightened, where a great quantity of seacoal is burnt. Harvey.

SE'ACOAST. n. s. [sea and coast.] Shore; edge of the sea.

The venturesome mariner that way,
Learning his ship from those white rocks to save,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay;
For safety's sake that same his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.

Upon the seacoast are many parcels of land, that would pay well for the taking in. Mortimer's Husb.

SE'ACOB. n. s. [gavia, Lat.] A bird, called also Seagull.

SE'ACOMPASS. n. s. [sea and compass.] The card and needle of mariners.

The needle in the seacompass still moving but to the north point only, with moveer immotus, notified the respective constancy of the gentleman to one only. Camden's Remains.

SE'ACOOT. n. s. [from sea and coot; fulica marina, Lat.] Sea fowl, like the moor-hen.

SE'ACORMORANT, or Seadrake. n. s.

[from sea and cormorant; corvus marinus, Lat.] A seacrow.

SE'ACOW. n. s. [sea and cow.] The manatee.

The seacow is of the cetaceous kind. It grows to fifteen feet long, and to seven or eight in circumference: its head is like that of a hog, but longer and more cylindrical: its eyes are small, and it has no external ears, but only two little apertures. Its lips are thick, and it has two long tasks standing out. It has two fins, which stand forward on the breast like hands, whence the Spaniards called it manatee. The female has two round breasts placed between the pectoral fins. The skin is very thick and hard, and not scaly, but hairy. Hill's Mat. Méd.

SE'ADOG. n. s. [sea and dog.] Perhaps the shark.

Fierce seadogs devour the mangled friends. Rosc.
When stung with hunger, she embroils the flood,
The seadog and the dolphin are her food. Pope's Od.

SE'AEAR. n. s. [from sea and ear; auris marina, Lat.] A sea plant.

SEAFARER. n. s. [sea and fare.] A traveller by sea; a mariner.

They still refused to veil their bonnets by the summons of those towns, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by the better enabled seafarers. Carew.

A wand'ring merchant, he frequents the main,
Some mean seafarer in pursuit of gain;
Stodious of freight, in naval trade well skill'd,
But dreads th' athletic labours of the field. Pope.

SEAFARING. adj. [sea and fare.] Travelling by sea.

My wife fasten'd him unto a small spare mast,
Such as seafaring men provide for storms. Shakesp.
It was death to divert the ships of seafaring people, against their will, to other uses than they were appointed. Arbutnot.

SE'AFENNEL. The same with SAMPHIRE.

SE'AFIGHT. n. s. [sea and fight.] Battle of ships; battle on the sea.

Seafights have been often fatal to the war; but this is when princes set up their rest upon the battles. Bacon.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, we should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep than in the middle of a seafight. Locke.

This fleet they recruited with two hundred sail, whereof they lost ninety-three in a seafight. Arbutnot on Coins.

SE'AFOWL. n. s. [sea and fowl.] Birds that live at sea.

The bills of curlews, and many other seafowl, are very long, to enable them to hunt for the worms. Derham.

A seafowl properly represents the passage of a deity over the seas. Broome.

A length of ocean and unbounded sky,
Which scarce the seafowl in a year o'er-fly. Pope.

SE'AGIRDLES. n. s. pl. [fungus phasganoides, Lat.] A sort of sea mushrooms.

SE'AGIRT. adj. [sea and girt.] Girded or encircled by the sea.

Neptune, besides the sway
Of every salt flood and each ebbing stream,
Took in his lot, 'twixt high and nether Jove, Imperial lot of all the seagirt isles. Milton.

Telemachus the blooming heir,
Of seagirt Ithaca, demands my care:
'Tis mine to furnish green unpractis'd years
In sage debates. Pope.

SE'AGRASS. n. s. [from sea and grass; alga, Lat.] An herb growing on the sea shore.

SE'AGREEN. adj. [sea and green.] Resembling the colour of the distant sea; cerulean.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their mixtures, as green, scarlet, purple, and seagreen, come in by the eyes. Locke.

Upon his urn reclin'd
His seagreen mantle waving in the wind,
The god appear'd. Po. e.

SE'AGREEN. n. s. Saxifrage. A plant.

SE'AGULL. n. s. [sea and gull.] A water fowl.

Seagulls, when they flock together from the sea towards the shores, foreshow rain and wind. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Bitterns, herons, and seagulls, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SE'AGUL. n. s. A sea bird. Ainsworth.

SE'AHEDGEHOG. n. s. [cchinus.] A kind of sea shellfish.

The seahedgehog is inclosed in a round shell, fashioned as a loaf of bread, wrought and pinched, and guarded by an outer skin full of prickles, as the land urchin. Carew.

SE'AHOG. n. s. [sea and hog.] The porpus.

SE'AHOLLY. n. s. [eryngium, Lat.] A plant.

The species are, seaholly, or eryngo. Common eryngo. The roots of the first are candied, and sent to London for medicinal use, being the true eryngo. Miller.

SE'AHOLM. n. s. [sea and holm.]

1. A small uninhabited island.

2. Seaholly. A kind of sea weed.

Cornwall bringeth forth greater store of seaholm and samphire than any other county. Carew.

SE'AHORSE. n. s. [sea and horse.]

1. The seahorse is a fish of a very singular form, as we see it dried, and of the needlefish kind. It is about four or five inches in length, and nearly half an inch in diameter in the broadest part. Its colour, as we see it dried, is a deep reddish brown: and its tail is turned round under the belly. Hill's Mat. Méd.

2. The morse.

Part of a large tooth, round and tapering: a tusk of the morse, or waltrons, called by some the seahorse. Woodward.

3. The medical and the poetical seahorse seem very different. By the seahorse Dryden means probably the hippopotamus.

Seahorses found'ring in the slimy mud,
Toss'd up their heads, and dash'd the ooze about 'em. Dryden.

SE'AMAID. n. s. [sea and maid.] Mermaid.

Certain stars shot from their spheres,
To hear the seamaid's musick. Shakesp.

SE'AMAN. n. s. [sea and man.]

1. A sailor; a navigator; a mariner.

Beholds the fleet, and hears the seamen shout.
She, looking out, Denham.

Seamen, through dismal storms, are wont
To pass the oyster breeding Hellespont. Evelyn.

A stately tomb, whose top a trumpet bore,
A soldier's falchion, and a seaman's oar;
Thus was his friend interr'd. Dryden.

By undergoing the hazards of the sea, and the company of common seamen, you make it evident you will refuse no opportunity of rendering yourself useful. Dryden.

Had they applied themselves to the increase of their strength by sea, they might have had the greatest fleet, and the most seamen, of any state in Europe. Addison.

2. Merman; the male of the mermaid.

Seals live at land and at sea, and porpuses live

the warm blood and intrails of a hog, not to mention mermaids or seamen. Locke.

SEAMARK. n. s. [sea and mark.] Point or conspicuous place distinguished at sea, and serving the mariners as directions of their course.

Those white rocks,
Which all along the southern seacoast lay,
Threat'ning unbec'ny wreck and rash decay,
He for his safety's sake his seamark made,
And nam'd it Albion. Fairy Queen.

Though you do see me weapon'd,
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
The very seamark of my utmost sail. Shak. Othello.

They were executed at divers places upon the seacoast, for seamarks or lighthouses, to teach Perkin's people to avoid the coast, Bacon's H.VII.

They are remembered with a brand of infamy fixt upon them, and set as seamarks for those who observe them to avoid. Dryden.

The fault of others sway
He set as seamarks for himself to shun. Dryden.

SEAMEW. n. s. [sea and mew.] A fowl that frequents the sea.

An island salt and bare,
The haunt of seals, and orks, and seamews clang. Milton.

The chough, the seamew, the loquacious crow, Scream aloft. Pope's Odyssey.

SEAL. n. s. [phoca; jreol, pele, Sax. seel, Dan.] The sea calf.

The seal or soyle is in make and growth not unlike a pig, ugly faced, and footed like a mold-warp; he delighteth in music, or any loud noise, and thereby is trained to sliew himself above water: they also come on land. Carew.

An island salt and bare,

The haunt of seals, and orks, and seamews clang. Milton.

SEAL. n. s. [jriigel, Sax. sigillum, Lat.]

1. A stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony.

The king commands you
To render up the great seal. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

If the organs of perception, like wax over-hardened with cold, will not receive the impression of the seal; or, like wax of temper too soft, will not hold it; or else supposing the wax of a temper fit, but the seal not applied with a sufficient force to make a clear impression: in any of these cases the print left by the seal will be obscure. Locke.

The same grandire wore about his neck
In three seal rings; which after, melted down, Form'd a vast buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.

2. The impression made in wax.

Till thou canst rail the seal from off my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud. Shakesp.

Solyman shewed him his own letters, asking him if he knew not that hand, and if he knew not that seal? Knolles.

He saw his monkey picking the seal wax from a letter. Arbuthnot.

2. To confirm or attest by a seal.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shakesp.

3. To confirm; to ratify; to settle.

My soul is purg'd from grudging hate,
And with my hand I seal our true hearts love. Shakesp. Richard III.

When I have performed this, and seal'd to them this fruit, I will come into Spain. Rom. xv. 28.

4. To shut; to close: with up.

Seal up your lips, and give no words but mum!
At my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation. Shak. Hen. IV.

The sense is like the sun; for the sun seals up the globe of heaven, and opens the globe of earth: so the sense doth obscure heavenly things, and reveals earthly things. Bacon.

5. To make fast.

Back to th' infernal pit I drag thee chain'd,
And seal thee so, as henceforth not to scorn
The fatal gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.

6. To mark with a stamp.

You'd rail upon the hostess,
And say you would present her at the lect,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakesp.

TO SEAL. r. n. To fix a seal.

I will seal unto this bond. Shakesp.
We make a sure covenant and write it, and our princes and priests seal unto it. Neh. ix. 38.

If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch? Sha.

Stay him from his intendment, or brook such disgrace well as he shall run into; in that it is a thing of his own search, and altogether against my will. Shakesp. As you like it.

Nor did my search of liberty begin Till my black hairs were chang'd upon my chin. Dryden.

SEARCHER. n. s. [from search.]

1. Examiner; trier.

The Agarenes that seek wisdom upon earth, the authors of fables, and searchers out of understanding.
Par. iii. 23.

The searchers found a marvellous difference between the Anakins and themselves. Raleigh.

Religion has given us a more just idea of the divine nature: he whom we appeal to is truth itself, the great searcher of hearts, who will not let fraud go unpunished, or hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. Addison.

2. Seeker; enquirer.

In vain we lift up our presumptuous eyes
To what our Maker to their ken denies:
The searcher follows fast, the object flies. Prior.

are very fit for children; only let them not be seasoned with sugar. Locke.

The wise contriver,
To keep the waters from corruption free,
Mixt them with salt, and season'd all the sea.

Blackmore

2. To give a relish to; to recommend by something mingled.

You season still with sports your serious hours;
For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours.

Dryden.

The proper use of wit is to season conversation, to represent what is praiseworthy to the greatest advantage, and to expose the vices and follies of men.

Tillotson.

3. To qualify by admixture of another ingredient.

Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly pow'r does then shew likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice.

Shak. Merchant of Venice.

Season your admiration but a while
With an attentive ear, till I deliver
This marvel to you.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. To imbue; to tinge or taint.

Whatever thing

The scythe of time mows down, devour unpar'd,
Till I, in man residing, through the race
His thoughts, his looks, words, actions, all infect,
And season him thy last and sweetest prey.

Milton's Parad. Lost.

Secure their religion, season their younger years with prudent and pious principles.

Taylor.

Sin, taken into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills, it also seasons:
the touch and tincture go together.

South.

5. To fit for any use by time or habit; to mature.

The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark,
When neither is attended; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When ev'ry goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren;
How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise and true perfection!

Shakesp.

Who in want a hollow friend doth try
Directly seasons him his enemy.

Shakesp.

We charge you, that you have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind Yourself unto a power tyrannical.

Shak. Coriol.

The archers of his guard shot two arrows, every mant together, against an inch board of well season'd timber.

Hayward.

His plenteous stores do season'd timber send;
Thither the brawny carpenters repair.

Dryden.

A man should harden and season himself beyond the degree of cold wherein he lives.

Addison.

Carpenters rough plane boards for flooring, that they may set them by to season.

Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

- SEASONABLE. adj. [saison, Fr.] Opportune; happening or done at a proper time, proper as to time.

Mercy is seasonable in the time of affliction, as clouds of rain in the time of drought.

Eccles. v. 2.

If ever it was seasonable to preach courage in the despised abused cause of Christ, it is now, when his truths are reform'd into nothing, when the hands and hearts of his faithful ministers are weakened.

South's Sermons.

- SEASONABLENESS. n. s. [from seasonable.] Opportuneness of time; propriety with regard to time.

A British freeholder would badly discharge his part, if he did not acknowledge the excellency and seasonableness of those laws by which his country has been recovered out of its confusions.

Addison.

- SEASONABLY. adv. [from seasonable.] Properly, with respect to time.

This is that to which I would most earnestly,
most seasonably, advise you all.

Spratt's Sermons.

- SEASONER. n. s. [from To season.] He who seasons or gives a relish to any thing.

- SEASONING. n. s. [from season.] That which is added to any thing to give it a relish.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites, and some do nourish so as divers do live of them alone.

Bacon.

Some abound with words without any seasoning or taste of matter.

Ben Jonson.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a seasoning to retirement, and make us taste the blessing.

Dryden.

Political speculations are of so dry and austere a nature, that they will not go down with the publick without frequent seasonings.

Addison's Freeholder.

The publick accept a paper which has in it none of those seasonings that recommend the writings which are in vogue among us.

Addison's Spect.

Many vegetable substances are used by mankind as seasonings, which abound with a highly exalted aromatic oil; as thyme and savory.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

- SEAT. n. s. [sedes, Lat. sett, old Germ. Skinner.]

1. A chair, bench, or any thing on which one may sit.

The sons of light

Hasted, resorting to the sunnons high,
And took their seats.

Milton's Parad. Lost.

The lady of the leaf ordain'd a feast,
And made the lady of the flow'r her guest;

When, lo, a bow'r ascended on the plain,
With sudden seats ordain'd, and large for either train.

Dryden.

2. Chair of state; throne; post of authority; tribunal.

With due observance of thy goodly seat,
Great Agamemnon, Nestor shall supply
Thy latest words.

Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Thus we debase

The nature of our seats, and make the rabble
Call our cares fears.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Whatever be the manner of the world's end, most certain it is an end it shall have, and as certain that when we shall appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive according to that which he hath done in his body, whether it be good or evil.

Hakewill on Providence.

3. Mansion; residence; dwelling; abode.

It were enough in reason to succour with victuals, and other helps, a vast multitude, compelled by necessity to seek a new seat, or to direct them into a country able to receive them.

Raleigh.

O earth, how like to heav'n! if not prefer'd
Most justly, seat worthier of gods, as built
With second thoughts, reforming what was old.

Milton.

In Alba he shall fix his royal seat;
And, born a king, a race of kings beget.

Has winter caus'd thee, friend, to change thy seat,

And seek in Sabine air a warm retreat?

Dryden.

The promis'd seat of empire shall again
Cover the mountain and command the plain.

4. Situation; site.

It followeth now that we find out the seat of Eden; for in it was Paradise by God planted.

Raleigh.

A church by Strand-bridge, and two bi-hops houses, were pulled down to make a seat for his new building.

Huward.

He that builds a fair house upon an ill seat,
commiteth himself to prison.

Bacon.

The fittest and the easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war,

The rather for their seat, being next borderers
On Italy.

Ben Jonson's Cataline.

The guests were no sooner seated but they entered into a warm debate.

Arbutnot.

2. To place in a post of authority, or place of distinction.

Thus high was king Richard seated.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Not Babylon,

Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equal'd in all their glories, to inshrine
Belus or Serapis their gods, or seat
Their kings.

Milton.

A spirit of envy or opposition makes mankind uneasy to see others of the same species seated above them in a sort of perfection.

Pope.

3. To fix in any particular place or situation; to settle.

Should one family or one thousand hold possession of all the southern undiscovered continent, because they had seated themselves in Nova Guiana?

Raleigh.

By no means build too near a great neighbour, which were in truth to be as unfortunately seated on the earth as Mercury is in the heavens; for the most part ever in combustion or obscurity, under brighter beams than his own.

Wotton.

4. To fix; to place firm.

Why do I yield to that suggestion,
Whose horrid image doth afflict my hair,
And make my seated heart knock at my ribs,
Against the use of nature?

From their foundations loosening to and fro,
They pluck'd the seated hills.

Milton.

- SEAWARD. adv. [sea and peapd, Sax.]
Towards the sea.

The rock rash'd seaward with impetuous roar,
Ingulf'd, and to th' abyss the boaster bore.

from the earth's surface, perturbs not the equilibration of either hemisphere.

Brown.

2. The act of withdrawing from councils or actions.

- SECLE. n. s. [siccle, Fr. seculum, Lat.]
A century.

Of a man's age, part he lives in his father's lifetime, and part after his son's birth; and thereupon it is wont to be said that three generations make one secle, or hundred years, in the genealogies.

Hammond's Practical Catechism.

- To SECLU'DE. v. a. [secludo, Lat.] To confine from; to shut up apart; to exclude.

None is secluded from that function, of any degree, state, or calling.

Whitefte.

Some parts of knowledge God has thought fit to seclude from us; to fence them not only, as he did the interdicted tree, by combination, but with difficulties and impossibilities.

Decay of Piety.

The number of birds described may be near five hundred, and of fishes, secluding shell-fish, as many; but, if the shell-fish be taken in, more than six times the number.

Inclose your tender plants in your conservatory, secluding all entrance of cold. Exelyn's Kalender.
Let eastern tyrants from the light of heaven Seclude their bosom slaves. Thomson.

SE'COND. adj. [second, Fr. secundus, Lat. It is observable, that we have no ordinal of two; as the Latins, and the nations deriving from them, have none of duo. What the Latins call secundus, from sequor, the Saxons term oðer, or æftera.]

1. The next in order to the first; the ordinal of two.

Sunk were their hearts with horror of the crime,
Nor needed to be warn'd a second time,
But bore each other back. Dryden.

2. Next in value or dignity; inferior.

I shall not speak superlatively of them, lest I be suspected of partiality; but this I may truly say, they are second to none in the Christian world. Bacon's Advice to Filiiis.

None I know
Second to me, or like; equal much less. Milton.
My eyes are still the same; each glance, each grace.

Keep their first lustre, and maintain their place,
Not second yet to any other face. Dryden.
Not these huge boats, by which the giants slain
Lay overthrown on the Pilegian plain;
'Twas of a lesser mould and lighter weight;
They call it thunder of a second rate. Addison.

By a sad train of miseries alone
Distinguish'd long, and second now to none. Pope.
Persons of second rate merit in their own country, like birds of passage, thrive here, and fly off when their employments are at an end. Swift.

SE'COND-HAND. n. s. Possession received from the first possessor.

SE'COND-HAND is sometimes used adjectively. Not original; not primary.

Some men build so much upon authorities, they have but a second-hand or implicit knowledge. Locke.

They are too proud to cringe to second-hand favourites in a great family. Swift to Gay.

At SE'COND-HAND. adv. In imitation; in the second place of order; by transmission; not primarily; not originally.

They pelted them with satires and epigrams, which perhaps had been taken up at first only to make their court, and at second-hand to flatter those who had flattered their king. Temple.

In imitation of preachers at second-hand, I shall transcribe from Bruyere a piece of rallery. Tatler.
Spurious virtue in a maid;
A virtue but at second-hand. Swift.

SE'COND. n. s. [second, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. One who accompanies another in a duel, to direct or defend him.

Their seconds minister on oath,
Which was indifferent to them both,
That on their knightly faith and troth
No magick them supplied;
And sought them that they had no charms,
Wherewith to work each other's harms,
But came with simple open arms
To have their causes tried. Drayt. Nym.

Their first encounters were very furious, till after some toil and bloodshed they were parted by the seconds. Addison.

Personal brawls come in as seconds to finish the dispute of opinion. Watts.

2. One who supports or maintains; a supporter; a maintainer.

He propounded the duke as a main cause of divers infirmities in the state, being sure enough of seconds after the first onset. Wotton.

Courage, when it is only a second to injustice, and falls on without provocation, is a disadvantage to a character. Collier.

3. A second minute, the second division of an hour by sixty; the sixtieth part of a minute.

Four flames of an equal magnitude will be kept alive the space of sixteen second minutes, though one of these flames alone, in the same vessel, will not last above twenty-five or at most thirty seconds. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Sounds move above 1140 English feet in a second minute of time, and in seven or eight minutes of time about 100 English miles. Locke.

To SE'COND. v. a. [seconder, Fr. secundo, Lat. from the noun.]

1. To support; to forward; to assist; to come in after the act as a maintainer.

The authors of the former opinion were presently seconded by other wittier and better learned, who being luth that the form of church polity, which they sought to bring in, should be otherwise than in the highest degree accounted of, took first an exception against the difference between church polity, and matters of necessity to salvation. Hook.

Though we here fall down,
We have supplies to second our attempt;
If they miscarry, theirs shall second them. Shakesp. Henry VI.

I to be the power of Israel's God
Avow, and challenge Dagon to the test,
Offering to combat thee, his champion bold.
With th' utmost of his godhead seconded. Milton.
Familiar Ovid tender thoughts inspires,
And nature seconds all his soft desires. Roscommen.

If in company you offer something for a jest, and nobody seconds you in your laughter, you may condemn their taste; but in the mean time you make a very indifferent figure. Swift.

In human works, though labour'd on with pain,
A thousand movements scarce one purpose gain;
In God's, one single can its ends produce,
Yet serves to second toosome other use. Pope.

2. To follow in the next place.

You some permit
To second ill with ill. Shakesp.
Having formerly discoursed of a marital voyage, I think it not impertinent to second the same with some necessary relations concerning the royal navy. Roleigh.

He saw his guileful act
By Eve, though all unweeting, seconded
Upon her husband. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Sin is seconded with sin; and a man seldom commits one sin to please, but he commits another to defend himself. South.

SECOND Sight. n. s. The power of seeing things future, or things distant: supposed inherent in some of the Scottish islanders.

As he was going out to steal a sheep, he was seized with a fit of second sight: the face of the country presented him with a wide prospect of new scenes, which he had never seen before. Addison's Freeholder.

SECOND sighted. adj. [from second sight.] Having the second sight.

Sawney was descended of an ancient family, renowned for their skill in prognosticks: most of his ancestors were second sighted, and his mother but narrowly escaped for a witch. Addison.

SE'CONDARILY. adv. [from secondary.] In the second degree; in the second order; not primarily; not originally; not in the first intention.

These atoms make the wind primarily tend downwards, though other accidental causes impel it secondarily to a sloping motion. Digby.

That which is peculiar and discriminative must be taken from the primariness and secondariness of the perception. Norris.

SE'CONDARY. adj. [secundarius, Lat.]

1. Not primary; not of the first intention. Two are the radical differences: the secondary differences are as four. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Succeeding to the first; subordinate.

Where-ever there is moral right on the one hand, no secondary right can discharge it. L'Estr.
Gravitation is the powerful cement which holds together this magnificent structure of the world, which stretcheth the north over the empty space, and banegeth the earth upon nothing, to transfer the words of Job from the first and real cause to the secondary. Bentley.

3. Not of the first order or rate.

If the system had been fortuitously formed by the conveying matter of a chaos, how is it conceivable that all the planets both primary and secondary, should revolve the same way, from the west to the east, and that in the same plane? Bentl.

4. Acting by transmission or deputation.

That we were form'd then, say'st thou, and the work
Of secondary hands, by task transferr'd
From father to his son? Milton's Parad. Lost.

As in a watch's fine machine
Though many artful springs are seen,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

5. A secondary fever is that which arises after a crisis, or the discharge of some morbid matter, as after the declension of the small-pox or measles. Quincy.

SE'CONDARY. n. s. [from the adjective.] A delegate; a deputy.

They call it thunder of the second-rate. Addison's Ovid.

2. [It is sometimes used adjectively.] One of the second order: a colloquial licence.

He was not then a second-rate champion, as they would have him who think fortitude the first virtue in a hero. Dryden.

SE'CRECY. n. s. [from secret.]

1. Privacy; state of being hidden; concealment.

That's not suddenly to be perform'd,
But with advice and silent secrecy. Shak. Hen. VI.
The lady Anne,
Whom the king hath in secrecy long married,
This day was view'd in open as his queen. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

In Nature's book of infinite secrecy
A little can I read. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

2. Solitude; retirement; not exposure to view.

Thou in thy secrecy, although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication. Milton's Parad. Lost.

There is no such thing as perfect secrecy, to encourage a rational mind to the perpetration of any base action; for a man must first extinguish and put out the great light within him, his conscience; he must get away from himself, and shake off the thousand witnesses which he always carries about him, before he can be alone. South's Sermons.

3. Forbearance of discovery.

It is not with publick as with private prayer: in this rather secrecy is commended than outward shew; whereas that, being the public act of a whole society, requireth accordingly more care to be had of external appearance. Hooker.

4. Fidelity to a secret; taciturnity inviolate; close silence.

For secrecy no lady closer. Shakesp.
Secrecy and fidelity were their only qualities.

SECRET. adj. [secret, Fr. secretus, Lat.]

1. Kept; hidden; not revealed; concealed.

The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us. Deut. xxix. 29.

Be this, or aught
 Than this more secret, now design'd, I haste
 To know. Milton.

2. Retired; private; unseen.

Thou open'st wisdom's way
 And giv'st access, though secret she retire:
 And I perhaps am secret. Milton.

There secret in her sapphire cell
 He with the Nais wont to dwell. Fenton.

3. Faithful to a secret entrusted.

Secret Romans, that have spoke the word,
 And will not palter. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

1. Privately; privily; not openly; not publicly; with intention not to be known.

Give him this letter, do it secretly. Shakesp.
 Now secretly with inward grief he pin'd;
 Now warm resentments to his griefs he join'd.
Addison.

Some may place their chief satisfaction in giving secretly what is to be distributed; others, in being the open and avowed instruments of making such distributions. Atterbury.

2. Latently; so as not to be obvious; not apparently.

Those thoughts are not wholly mine; but either they are secretly in the poet, or may be fairly deduced from him. Dryden.

SECRETNESS. n. s. [from secret.]

1. State of being hidden.

2. Quality of keeping a secret.

I could muster up
 My giants and my witches too,
 Which are vast constancy and secretness. Donne.

SECRETORY. adj. [from secretus, Lat.] Performing the office of secretion, or animal separation.

All the glands are a congeries of vessels complicated together, whereby they give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory, which afterwards exonerate themselves into one duct. Ray.

SECT. n. s. [secte, Fr. secta, Lat. from sectando.]

1. A body of men following some particular master, or united in some settled tenets. Often in a bad sense.

We'll wear out,
 In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
 That ebb and flow by th' moon. Shak. King Lear.

The greatest vicissitude of things is the vicissitude of sects and religions: the true religion is built upon a rock; the rest are tossed upon the waves of time. Bacon's Essays.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause so far from their own will as to the laws, You for their empire and their synod take. Dryd.

The academics were willing to admit the goods of fortune into their notion of felicity; but no sects of old philosophers did ever leave a room for greatness. Dryden.

A sect of freethinkers is a sum of cyphers. Bentl.

2. In Shakespeare it seems to be misprinted for set.

Of our unbitted lusts, I take that you call love to be a set or cion. Shakesp. Othello.

In the section of bodies, man, of all sensible creatures, has the fullest brain to his proportion. Wotton.

2. A part divided from the rest.

3. A small and distinct part of a writing or book.

Instead of their law, which they might not read openly, they read of the prophets, that which in likeness of matter came nearest to each section of their law. Hooker.

The production of volatile salts I reserve till I mention them in another section. Boyle.

Without breking in upon the connection of his language, it is hardly possible to give a distinct view of his several arguments in distinct sections. Locke.

SECTOR. n. s. [secteur, Fr.] In geometry.

Sector is an instrument made of wood or metal, with a joint, and sometimes a piece to turn out to make a true square, with lines of sines, tangents, secants, equal parts, rhumbs, polygons, hours, latitudes, metals, and solids. It is generally useful in all the practical parts of the mathematicks, and particularly contrived for navigation, surveying, astronomy, dialling, and projection of the sphere. All the lines of the sector can be accommodated to any radius, which is done by taking off all divisions parallelwise, and not lengthwise; the ground of which practice is this, that parallels to the base of any plain triangle bear the same proportion to it as the parts of the legs above the parallel do to the whole legs. Harris.

SECULAR. adj. [secularis, Lat. seculier, Fr.]

1. Not spiritual; relating to affairs of the present world; not holy; worldly.

This, in every several man's actions of common life, appertaineth unto moral, in publick and politick secular affairs, unto civil wisdom. Hooker.

Then shall they seek t'avail themselves of names, Places, and titles; and with these to join Secular pow'r, though feigning still to act By spiritual. Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. [In the church of Rome.] Not bound by monastick rules.

Those northern nations easily embraced the religion of those they subdued, and by their devotion gave great authority and reverence, and thereby ease, to the clergy, both secular and regular. Temple.

In France vast numbers of ecclesiasticks, secular and religious, live upon the labours of others. Addison.

3. Seculaire, Fr.] Happening or coming once in a secle or century.

The secular year was kept but once in a century. Addison.
SECULARITY. n. s. [from secular.] Worldliness; attention to the things of the present life.

 Fr. secundæ, viz. partes, quod nascentem infantem sequantur. Ainsw.] The membrane in which the embryo is wrapped; the after-birth.

The casting of the skin is by the ancients compared to the breaking of the secundine, or cawl, but not rightly; for the secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts, but the skin is. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
 Future ages lie
 Wrapp'd in their sacred secundine a sleep. Cowley.
 If the fetus be taken out of the womb inclosed in the secundines, it will continue to live, and the blood to circulate. Ray.

 As not secure to single or combin'd. Milton.
 Messapus next,
Secure of steel, and fated from the fire,
 In pomp appears. Dryden.
Secure from fortune's blows,
 Secure of what I cannot lose,
 In my small pinnace I can sail. Dryden's Horace.

6. It has sometimes of before the object in all its senses; but more properly from before evil, or the cause of evil.

TO SECURE. v. a. [from the adjective.]
 1. To make certain; to put out of hazard; to ascertain.
 Nothing left
 That might his happy state secure,
 Secure from outward force. Milton.
 Actions have their preference, not according to the transient pleasure or pain that accompanies or follows them here, but as they serve to secure that perfect durable happiness hereafter. Locke.

Truth and certainty are not secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain floating estate with as without them. Locke.
 That prince, who shall be so wise as, by established laws of liberty, to secure protection to the honest industry of mankind against the oppression of power, will quickly be too hard for his neighbours. Locke.

Deeper to wound, she shuns the fight;
 She drops her arms to gain the field;
 Secures her conquest by her flight.
 And triumphs when she seems to yield. Prior.
 Nothing can be more artful than the address of Ulysses: he secures himself of a powerful advocate, by paying an ingenuous and laudable deference to his friend. Broome.

2. To protect; to make safe.
 I spread a cloud before the victor's sight, Sustain'd the vanquish'd, and secur'd his flight;
 Ev'n then secur'd him, when I sought with joy
 The vow'd destruction of ungrateful Troy. Dryd.
 Where two or three sciences are pursued at the same time, if one of them be dry, as logic, let another be more entertaining, to secure the mind from weariness. Watts.

3. To insure.
SECURELY. adv. [from securus.]

1. Without fear; carelessly.
 Love, that now long time securely slept
 In Venus's lap, unarmed then and naked,
 'Gan rear his head, by Clotho being waked. Spens.
 'Tis done, like Hector, but securely done,
 A little proudly, and great deal misprising.
 The knight oppos'd. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
 His daring foe securely him defy'd. Milton.
 A soul that can securely death defy,
 And count it nature's privilege to die. Dryd. Juv.
 Whether any of the reasonings are inconsistent, I securely leave to the judgment of the reader.
Atterbury.

2. Without danger; safely.
 We upon our globe's last verge shall go,
 And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
 From thence our rolling neighbours we shall know,
 And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryd.

SECUREMENT. n. s. [from securus.] The cause of safety; protection; defence.
 They, like Judas, desire death; Cain, on the contrary, grew afraid thereof, and obtained secure-ment from it. Brown's Vulg. Errors

SECURITY. n. s. [securite, Fr. securitas,
 Lat. from securus.]

1. Carelessness; freedom from fear.
 Marvellous security is always dangerous, when men will not believe any bees to be in a hive, until they have a sharp sense of their stings. Hayward.
 2. Vitious carelessness; confidence; want of vigilance.
 How senseless then and dead a soul hath he
 Which thinks his soul doth with his body die;
 Or thinks not so, but so would have it be,
 That he might sin with more security? Davies.

3. Protection; defence.
 If the providence of God be taken away, what security have we against those innumerable dangers to which human nature is continually exposed.
Tillotson.

4. Any thing given as a pledge or caution; insurance; assurance for any thing; the act of giving caution, or being bound.
 There is scarce truth enough alive to make societies secure; but security enough to make fellowships accrue. Shakesp.
 When they had taken security of Jason, they let them go. Acts xvii. 9.
 It is possible for a man, who hath the appearance of religion, to be wicked and an hypocrite;
 but it is impossible for a man, who openly declares against religion, to give any reasonable security that he will not be false and cruel. Swift.
 Exchequer bills have been generally reckoned the surest and most sacred of all securities.
Swift's Examiner.

The Romans do not seem to have known the secret of paper credit, and securities upon mortgages. Arbuthnot on Coins.

5. Safety; certainty.
 Some, who gave their advice for entering into a war, alledged that we should have no security for our trade, while Spain was subject to a prince of the Bourbon family. Swift.
SEDA'N. n. s. A kind of portable coach;
 a chair. I believe because first made at Sedan.

Some beg for absent persons, feign them sick,
 Close mew'd in their sedans for want of air,
 And for their wives produce an empty chair. Dryd.
 By a tax of Cato's it was provided, that women's wearing cloaths, ornament, and sedan, exceeding 12*l.* 1*s.* 10*d.* halfpenny, should pay 5*s.*
 in the hundred pound value. Arbuthnot.

SEDATE. adj. [sedatus, Lat.] Calm; quiet; still; unruffled; undisturbed; serene.

With count'nance calm and soul sedate,
 Thus Turnus. Dryden's Æneid.
 Disputation carries away the mind from that calm and sedate temper which is so necessary to contemplate truth. Watts.

SEDA'TELY. adv. [from sedate.] Calmly;
 without disturbance.

That has most weight with them that appears sedately to come from their parents reason. Locke.
SEDA'TENESS. n. s. [from sedate.] Calmness; tranquillity; serenity; freedom from disturbance.

There is a particular sedateness in their conversation and behaviour that qualifies them for council, with a great intrepidity that fits them for action. Addison on the War.

SE'DENTARINESS. n. s. [from sedentary.]
 The state of being sedentary; inactivity.
SE'DENTARY. adj. [sedentaire, Fr. se-dentario, Ital. sedentarius, from sedeo,
 Lat.]

1. Passed in sitting still; wanting motion or action.
 A sedentary life, appropriate to all students, crushes the bowels; and, for want of stirring the body, suffers the spirits to lie dormant.
Harvey on Consumptions.

The blood of labouring people is more dense and heavy than those who live a sedentary life. Arb.
 2. Torpid; inactive; sluggish; motionless.
 The sedentary earth,
 That better might with far less compass move,
 Serv'd by more noble than herself, attains
 Her end without least motion. Milton.

Till length of years,
 And sedentary numbness, craze my limbs
 To a contemptible old age obscure. Milt. Agon.
 The soul, considered abstractedly from its passions, is of a remiss sedentary nature, slow in its resolves, and languishing in its executions.
Addison's Spectator.

SEDGE. n. s. [Jæçz, Sax. whence, in the provinces, a narrow flag is called a sag or seg.] A growth of narrow flags; a narrow flag.

The current, that with gentle mormur glides Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;
 But when his fair course is not hindered,
 He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones,
 Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
 He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
 And so by many winding nooks he strays,
 With willing sport, to the wild ocean. Shakesp.
 Adonis, painted by a running brook,
 And Cytherea all in sedges hid;
 Which seem to move and wanton with her breath,
 Even as the waving sedges play with wind. Shak.

In hotter countries a fly called lucicelle, that shineth as the glow worm, is chiefly upon fens and marshes; yet is not seen but in the height of summer, and sedge or other green of the fens give as good shade as bushes. Bacon.

He hid himself in the sedges adjoining. Sandys.
My hands I brake,
Fled from my guards, and in a muddy lake,
Amongst the sedges, all the night lay hid. Denham.
Niphates, with inverted urn,
And drooping sedge, shall his Armenia mourn. Dryden.

SED'GY. adj. [from sedge.] Overgrown with narrow flags.

On the gentle Severn's sedgy bank,
In single opposition, hand to hand,
He did confound the best part of an hour,
In changing hardiment with great Gwendower. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Old father Thames rais'd up his reverend head,
But fear'd the fate of Simoeis would return:
Deep in his ooze he sought his sedgy bed,
And shrunk his waters back into his urn. Dryd.

SEDIMENT. n. s. [sediment, Fr. sedimentum, Lat.] That which subsides or settles at the bottom.

The salt water rises into a kind of scum on the top, and partly goeth into a sediment in the bottom, and so is rather a separation than an evaporation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South's Sermons.

That matter sunk not down till last of all, settling at the surface of the sediment, and covering all the rest. Woodward.

SEDITION. n. s. [sedition, Fr. seditio, Lat.] A tumult; an insurrection; a popular commotion; an uproar.

That sunshine brew'd a shower for him,
That wash'd his father's fortunes forth of France,
And heap'd sedition on his crown at home. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

In soothing them, we nourish'd 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

SEDITIOUS. adj. [seditieux, Fr. seditiosus, Lat.] Factious with tumult; turbulent.

The cause, why I have brought this army hither,
Is to remove proud Somerset from the king,
Seditious to his grace and to the state. Shak. H. VI.

Very many of the nobility in Edenborough, at that time, did not appear yet in this seditious behaviour. Clarendon.

Thou return'st
From flight, seditious angel. Milton.

But if she has deform'd this earthly life
With murder's rapine and seditious strife,
In everlasting darkness must she lie;
Still more unhappy that she cannot die. Prior.

SEDITIOUSLY. adv. [from seditious.] Tumultuously; with factious turbulence.

SEDITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from seditious.] Turbulence; disposition to sedition.

To SEDUCE. v. a. [seduco, Lat. seduire, Fr.] To draw aside from the right; to tempt; to corrupt; to deprave; to mislead; to deceive.

'Tis meet
That noble minds keep ever with their likes;
For who so firm that cannot be seduc'd? Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Me the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit it as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shak. H. V.

A beauty-waiving and distressed widow
Seduc'd the pitch and height of all his thoughts
To base declension. Shakesp. Richard III.

In the latter times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits. 1 Tim. iv. 1.
I shall never gratify the spitefulness of a few with any sinister thoughts of all their allegiance, whom pious frauds have seduced. King Charles.

Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton.

Nor let false friends seduce thy mind to fame,
By arrogating Jonson's hostile name;
Let father Flecknoe fire thy mind with praise,
And uncle Ogleby thy envy raise. Dryden.

SEDUCEMENT. n. s. [from seduce.] Practice of seduction; art or means used in order to seduce.

To season them, and win them early to the love of virtue and true labour, ere any flattering seducement or vain principle seize them wandering, some easy and delightful book of education should be read to them. Milton on Education.

Her hero's dangers touch'd the pitying pow'r,
The nymph's seducements, and the magic bow'r. Pope.

SEDUCER. n. s. [from seduce.] One who draws aside from the right; a tempter; a corrupter.

Grant it me, O king; or otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone. Shakesp.

There is a teaching by restraining seducers, and so removing the hindrances of knowledge. South.

The soft seducer, with enticing looks,
The bellowing rivals to the fight provokes. Dryd.

He, whose firm faith no reason could remove,
Will melt before that soft seducer, love. Dryden.

SEDUCIBLE. adj. [from seduce.] Corruptible; capable of being drawn aside from the right.

The vicious example of ages past poisons the curiosity of the present, affording a hint of sin unto seducible spirits. Brown.

We owe much of our error to the power which our affections have over our so easy seducible understandings. Glanville.

SEDUCTION. n. s. [seduction, Fr. seductus, Lat.] The act of seducing; the act of drawing aside.

Whatsoever men's faith, patience, or perseverance were, any remarkable indulgence to this sin, the seduction of Balaam, was sure to bring judgments. Hammond.

To procure the miseries of others in those extremities, wherein we hold an hope to have no society ourselves, is a strain above Lucifer, and a project beyond the primary seduction of hell. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The deceiver soon found out this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him from this way of seduction. Glanville's Scepis.

Helen ascribes her seduction to Venus, and mentions nothing of Paris. Pope.

A woman who is above flattery, and despises all praise but that which flows from the approbation of her own heart, is, morally speaking, out of reach of seduction. Clarissa.

SEDULITY. n. s. [sedulitas, Lat.] Diligent assiduity; laboriousness; industry; application; intenseness of endeavour.

Man oftentimes pursues, with great sedulity and earnestness, that which cannot stand him in any stead for vital purpose. Hooker.

Let there be but the same propensity and bent of will to religion, and there will be the same sedulity and indefatigable industry in men's enquiries into it. South.

SEDULOUS. adj. [sedulus, Lat.] Assiduous; industrious; laborious; diligent; painful.

Not sedulous by nature to indite Wars, hitherto the only argument Heroick deem'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

What signifies the sound of words in prayer, without the affection of the heart, and a sedulous application of the proper means that may naturally lead us to such an end. L'Strange.

The goat, now bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthæa, reach'd her teat, distent
With milk, thy early food: the sedulous bee Distill'd her honey on thy purple lips. Prior.

The bare majority of a few representatives is often procured by great industry and application, wherein those who engage in the pursuit of malice are much more sedulous than such as would prevent them. Swift.

SEDULOUSLY. adv. [from sedulous.] Assiduously; industriously; laboriously; diligently; painfully.

The ritual, preceptive, prophetick, and all other parts of sacred writ, were most sedulously, most religiously guarded by them. Gov. of the Tongue.

All things by experience
Are most improv'd; then sedulously think
To meliorate thy stock, no way or rule
Be unessay'd. Phillips.

SEDULOUSNESS. n. s. [from sedulous.] Assiduity; assiduousness; industry; diligence.

SEE. n. s. [sedes, Lat.] The seat of episcopal power; the diocese of a bishop.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose see is by a civil peace maintain'd,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose learning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,
Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boisterous tongue of war? Shakesp. Henry IV.

It is a safe opinion for their sees, empires, and kingdoms; and for themselves, if they be wise. Bacon.

The pope would use these treasures, in case of any great calamity that should endanger the holy see. Addison.

Episcopal revenues were so low reduced, that three or four sees were often united to make a tolerable competency. Swift.

To SEE. r. a. preter. I saw; part. pass. seen. [Æon, Sax. sien, Dut.]

1. To perceive by the eye.

Dear son Edgar,
Might I but live to see thee in my touch,
I'd say I had eyes again. Shakesp. King Lear.

I was bow'd down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it. Is. xxi. 3.

I speak that which I have seen with my father, and ye do that which you have seen with yours. John viii. 58.

He'll lead the life of gods, and be
By gods and heroes seen, and gods and heroes see. Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good for you; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

I see her sober over a sampler. Pope.

Made promise to the doctor. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

They to their viands fell, not seemingly
The angels, nor in mist. Milton.

I have touched upon them, though seemingly collateral to my scope; and yet I think they are more than seemingly so, since they pertinently illustrate my design. Glanville's Scopsis.

The city dame was so well bred, as seemingly to take all in good part. L'Estrange.

The king and haughty empress, to our wonder,
If not aton'd, yet seemingly at peace. Dryden.

This the father seemingly complied with; but afterwards refusing, the son was likewise set aside. Addison's Freeholder.

They depend often on remote and seemingly disproportioned causes. Atterbury.

SEEMINGNESS. n. s. [from seeming.]
Plausibility; fair appearance.

The seemingness of those reasons persuades us on the other side. Digby.

SEEMLINESS. n. s. [from seemly.] Decency; handsomeness; comeliness; grace; beauty.

When substantialness combineth with delightfulness, seemliness with portliness, and currentness with stayedness, how can the language sound other than full of sweetness? Camden.

SEEMLY. adj. [soommeligt, Dan. from soome, Island. honour or decency.] Decent; becoming; proper; fit.

Suspense of judgment and exercise of charity were safer and seemlier for Christian men, than the hot pursuit of these controversies. Hooker.

I am a woman lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons. Shakesp. Henry VII.

The wife safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

May we enjoy
Our humid products, and with seemly draughts
Enkindle mirth and hospitable love. Phillips.

SEEMLY. adv. [from the adjective.] In a decent manner; in a proper manner.

There, seemly rang'd in peaceful order, stood Ulysses' arms, now long disus'd to blood. Pope.

SEEN. adj. [from see.] Skilled; versed.

Petruchio shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes,
To old Baptista, as a schoolmaster
Well seen in musick. Shakesp.

Noble Boyle, not less in nature seen,
Than his great brother read in states and men. Dryd.

SEER. n. s. [from see.]

1. One who sees.

We are in hopes that you may prove a dreamer of dreams, and a seer of visions. Addison's Spect.

2. A prophet; one who foresees future events.

How soon bath thy prediction, seer blest!
Measur'd this transient world the race of time,
Till time stand fix'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

By day your frightened seers
Shall call for fountains to express their tears,
And wish their eyes were floods: by night from dreams

Of opening gulphs, black storms, and raging flames,
Starting amaz'd, shall to the people show Emblems of heav'nly wrath, and mystick types of woe. Prior.

SEERWOOD. n. s. See SEARWOOD. Dry wood.

Caught, like dry stubble fir'd, or like searwood;
Yet from the wound ensued no purple flood,
But look'd a bubbling mass of frying blood. Dryd.

SEE'SAW. n. s. [from saw.] A reciprocating motion.

His wit all seesaw, between that and this;
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis. Pope.

To SEE'SAW. v. n. [from saw.] To move with a reciprocating motion.

Sometimes they were like to pull John over, then it went all of a sudden again on John's side;
so they went seesawing up and down, from one end of the room to the other. Arbutnot.

To SEETH. v. a. preterite, I sod or seethed; part pass. sodden. [reodan, Sax. soiden, Dut.] To boil; to decoct in hot liquor.

The Scythians used to seeth the flesh in the hide, and so do the northern Irish. Spenser.

Go, suck the subtle blood o' th' grape,
Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so 'scape hanging. Shakesp. Timon.

Set on the great pot, and seeth pottage for the sons of the prophets. 2 Kings iv.

To SEETH. v. n. To be in a state of ebullition; to be hot.

The boiling baths at Cairbadon,
Which seeth with secret fire eternally,
And in their entrails, full of quick brimston,
Nourish the flames which they are warm'd upon.
Fairy Queen.

I will make a complimentary assault upon him;
for my business seeths. Shal'esp. Troilus and Cressida.

Lovers and madmen have their seething brains,
Such shaping fantasies, that apprehend
More than cool reason ever comprehends. Shakesp.

The priest's servant came, while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh-hook, and stuck it into the pan. 1 Sam. ii. 13.

SEETHER. n. s. [from seeth.] A boiler; a pot.

The fire thus form'd, she sets the kettle on;
Like burnish'd gold the little seether shone. Dryd.

SEGMENT. n. s. [segment, Fr. segmentum, Lat.] A figure contained between a chord and an arch of the circle, or so much of the circle as is cut off by that chord.

Unto a parallel sphere, and such as live under the poles, for half a year, some segments may appear at any time, and under any quarter, the sun not setting, but walking round. Brown.

Their segments or arcs, which appeared so numerous, for the most part exceeded not the third part of a circle. Newton.

SEGNYITY. n. s. [from segnis, Lat.] Sluggishness; inactivity. Dict.

Te SEGREGATE. v. a. [segrego, Lat. sigreger, Fr.] To set apart; to separate from others.

SEGREGATION. n. s. [segregation, Fr. from segregate.] Separation from others.

What shall we hear of this?
—A segregation of the Turkish fleet,

For do but stand upon the foaming shore,
The chiding billows seem to pelt the clouds.
Shakesp. Othello.

SE'JANT. adj. [In heraldry.] Sitting.

SEIGNEURIAL. adj. [from seignior.] Invested with large powers; independent. Those lands were seigneurial. Temple.

SEIGNIORY. n. s. [seigneurie, Fr. from seignior.] A lordship; a territory.

O'Neil never had any seigniorie over that country, but what by encroachment he got upon the English. Spenser.

Were you not restor'd
To all the duke of Norfolk's seigniories? Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Hosea, in the person of God, sayeth of the Jews, they have reigned, but not by me; they have set a seigniorie over themselves: which place proveth plainly, that there are governments which God doth not avow. Bacon.

William, earl of Pembroke, being lord of all Leinster, had royal jurisdiction throughout that province, and every one of his five sons enjoyed that seigniorie successively. Davies.

SEIGNORAGE. n. s. [seignuriage, Fr. from seignior.] Authority; acknowledgment of power.

They brought work to the mint, and a part of the money coined to the crown for seignorage. Locke.

To SEIGNORISE. v. a. [from seignior.] To lord over.

As fair he was as Cytherea's make,
As proud as he that seignoriseth hell. Fairfax.

SEINE. n. s. [regne, Sax. seine, senne, seme, Fr.] A net used in fishing.

They have cock-boats for passengers, and seine boats for taking of pilchards. Carew.

SEINER. n. s. [from seine.] A fisher with nets.

Seiners complain, with open mouth, that these drovers work much prejudice to the commonwealth of fishermen, and reap small gain to themselves. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

To SEIZE. v. a. [saisir, Fr.]

1. To take hold of; to gripe; to grasp.

Then as a tiger, who by chance hath spied,
In some purlieu, two gentle fawns at play,
Straight couches close, then rising changes oft
His couchant watch, as one who chose his ground, Whence rushing he might surest seize them both,
Both grip'd in each paw. Milton.

2. To take possession of by force.

At last they seize
The scepter, and regard not David's sons. Milton.

3. To take possession of; to lay hold on; to invade suddenly.

In her sad breast the prince's fortunes roll,
And hope and doubt alternate seize her soul. Pope.

4. To take forcible possession of by law.

An escheator of London had arrested a clothier that was outlawed, and seized his goods. Camden.

It was judged, by the highest kind of judgment, that he should be banished, and his whole estate confiscated and seized, and his houses pulled down. Bacon.

5. To make possessed; to put in possession of.

So th' one for wrong, the other strives for right:

As when a griffin, seized of his prey,

A dragon fierce encount'reth in his fight,

Through wildest air making his idle way. F. Queen.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd

To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;

There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beautiful prize,

Nor envied Jove his sunshine and his skies.

Adison's Cato.

To SEIZE. v. n. To fix the grasp or the power on any thing.

Fairest Cordelia,
Thee and thy virtues here I seize upon:
Be't lawful I take up what's cast away?

Shakesp. King Lear.

When there is a design of supplanting, that necessarily requires another of accusing; even Jezebel projects not to seize on Naboth's vineyard without a precedent charge. Decay of Piety.

SEIZIN. n. s. [saisine, Fr.]

1. [In law.] Is of two sorts: seisin in fact, and seisin in law. Seisin in fact, is when a corporal possession is taken: seisin in law, is when something is done which the law accounteth a seisin, as an inrolment. This is as much as a right to lands and tenements, though the owner be by wrong disseised of them. Cowell.

2. The act of taking possession.

Every indulged sin gives Satan livery and seisin of his heart, and a power to dispose of it as he pleases. Decay of Piety.

Seisin is the same, in the canon law, as livery and seisin at the common law. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. The thing possessed.

Many recoveries were had, as well by heirs as successors, of the seisin of their predecessors. Hale.

SEIZURE. n. s. [from seize.]

1. The act of seizing.

2. The thing seized.

Sufficient that thy pray'rs are heard, and death,
Then due by sentence when thou didst transgress,
Defeated of his seizure, many days Giv'n thee of grace. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. The act of taking forcible possession.

Thy lands, and all things that thou dost call thine,
Worth seizure, do we seize into our hands. Shak.

In the general town he maintained a seizure and possession of the whole. Wotton.

Henry continued to burn protestants, after he had cast off the pope; and his seizure of ecclesiastical revenues cannot be reckoned as a mark of the church's liberty. Suiff.

4. Gripe; possession.

And shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shak.

Make o'er thy honour by a deed of trust,
And give me seizure of the mighty wealth. Dryden.

5. Catch.

Let there be no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable, to play upon it. Watts.

SELCOUTH. adj. [selb rare, Sax. and couth known.] Rarely known; uncommon: Spenser. The same with uncouth.

SELDOM. adv. [selban rarely; selbon more rarely; selboyt most rarely. Selban is supposed to be contracted from selban or selb rare, and hpænne when, Sax. selden, Dut. seltan, Germ.] Rarely; not often; not frequently.

Wisdom and youth are seldom joined in one; and the ordinary course of the world is more according to Job's observation, who giveth men advice to seek wisdom amongst the ancients, and in the length of days understanding. Hooker.

There is true joy conveyed to the heart by preventing grace, which pardoning grace seldom gives. South's Sermons.

Where the flight of fancy is managed with good judgment, the seldomer it is seen it is the more valuable. Greav.

SELDOMNESS. n. s. [from seldom.] Uncommonness; infrequency; rareness; rarity. Little used.

Degrees of well-doing there could be none, except perhaps in the seldomness and oftensness of doing well. Hooker.

SELDSHOWN. adj. [seld and shown.] Seldom exhibited to view.

SEL

Seldshoun flamins
Do press among the popular throngs. Shak. Coriol.
To SELECT. v. a. [selectus, Lat.] To choose in preference to others rejected.

The footmen, selected out of all the provinces, were greatly diminished, being now scarce eight thousand strong. Knolles.

The vicious chief
A hundred youths from all his train selects. Dryd.
SELECT. adj. [from the verb.] Nicely chosen; choice; culled out on account of superior excellence.

To the nuptial bow'r
I led her, blushing like the morn : all heav'n,
And happy constellations, on that hour Shed their selectest influence. Milton's Par. Lost.
Select from vulgar herds, with garlands gay,
A hundred bulls ascend the sacred way. Prior.

SELECTION. n. s. [selectio, Lat. from se- lect.] The act of culling or choosing ; choice.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems but arbitrary.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

SELECTION. n. s. [from select.] The state of being select.

SELECTOR. n. s. [from select.] He who

SELENOGRA'PHICAL } adj. [selenogra- SELENOGRA'PHICK. } phiqu, Fr. from selenography.] Belonging to selenography.

SELENOGRAPHY. n. s. [selenographie, Fr.
σελήνη and γραφία.] A description of the moon.

Hevelius, in his accurate selenography, or description of the moon, hath well translated the known appellations of regions, seas, and mountains, unto the parts of that luminary. Brown.

SELF. pronoun. plur. selves, [silba, Goth.
rylf, rylfa, Sax. self, selve, Dut.]

1. Its primary signification seems to be that of an adjective. Very; particular; this above others; sometimes, one's own.

Shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first. Shak. Merch. of Ven.
The cruel ministers, by self and violent hands,
Took off her life. Shakesp.
On these self-hills the air is so thin, that it is not sufficient to bear up the body of a bird. Raleigh.
At that self moment enters Palamon
The gate of Venus. Dryden.

2. It is united both to the personal pronouns, and to the neutral pronoun it, and is always added when they are used reciprocally, or return upon themselves:
as, I did not hurt him, he hurt himself;
the people hiss me, but I clap myself;
thou lovest thyself, though the world scorns thee.

They cast to build a city,
And get themselves a name. Milton.
He permits
Within himself unworthy pow'rs to reign
Over free reason. Milton.

Self is that conscious thinking thing, which is sensible or conscious of pleasure and pain, capable of happiness and misery, and so is concerned for itself, as far as that consciousness extends.
Locke.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically in the nominative case: as, myself will decide it; I myself will come; himself shall revenge it. This use of self, thus compounded, without the pronoun personal, is chiefly poetical.

SEL

4. Compounded with him, a pronoun substantive, self is in appearance an adjective: joined to my, thy, our, your, pronoun adjectives, it seems a substantive.
Even when compounded with him it is at last found to be a substantive, by its variation in the plural, contrary to the nature of English adjectives, as himself, themselves.

No more be mention'd then of violence Against ourselves, or wilful barrenness. Milton.

5. Myself, himself, themselves, and the rest may, contrary to the analogy of my, him, them, be used as nominatives.

6. It often adds only emphasis and force to the pronoun with which it is compounded: as, he did it himself.

A horse well bitted, which himself did dress.
Dryden.
And touch'd with miseries myself have known,
I learn to pity woes so like my own. Dryd.

7. It signifies the individual, as subject to his own contemplation or action.

The spark of noble courage now awake,
And strive your excellent self to excel. Fairy Q.
Next to the knowledge of God, this knowledge of our selves seems most worthy of our endeavour.
Hale.

Since consciousness always accompanies thinking, and it is that that makes every one to be what he calls self, and thereby distinguishes himself from all other thinking things; in this alone consists personal identity, i. e. the sameness of a rational being. Bacon.

It is by the consciousness it has of its present thoughts and actions, that it is self to it self now, and so will be the same self, as far as the same consciousness can extend to actions past or to come. Locke.

The fondness we have for self, and the relation which other things have to our selves, furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts.

8. It is much used in composition, which it is proper to explain by a train of examples. It is to be observed, that its composition in Shakespeare is often harsh.

Then held she her tongue, and cast down a self accusing look, finding that in herself she had shot out of the bow of her affection a more quick opening of her mind than she minded to have done. Sid.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive,
We think they hurt when most they do assist. Sid.
Till Strephon's plaining voice him nearer drew,
Where by his words his self-like case he knew. Sid.

Al! where was first that cruel cunning found,
To frame of earth a vessel of the mind,
Where it should be to self-destruction bound? Sid.
Before the door sat self-consuming care,
Day and night keeping wary watch and ward.

My strange and self-abuse
Is the initiate fear that wants hard use. Shak. Macb.
I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought t'have spoke thereof;
But being over full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. Shak. Mids. Night's Dream.

Nor know I ought
By me that's said or done amiss this night,
Unless self-charity be sometimes a vice,
And to defend ourselves it be a sin,
When violence assails us. Shakesp. Othello.
He walks, and that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forswore. Shakesp.

It is in my power, in one self-born hour,
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Shak. Wint. Tale.
His treasons will sit blushing in his face,
Not able to endure the sight of day,
But self-affrighted tremble at his sin. Shak. Rich. II.

The stars above us govern our conditions;

Confronted him with self-caparisons,
Point against point. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Self love, my liege, is not so vile a sin
As self-neglecting. Shakesp. Hen. V.

Anger is like
A full hot horse, who being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him. Shakesp.

His lords desire him to have borne
His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city; he forbids it,
Being free from vainness and self-glorious pride.
Shakesp.

You promis'd

In their anger they slew a man, and in their self- will they digged down a wall. Genesis xlix. 6.

The most ordinary cause of a single life is liberty, especially in certain self-pleasing and humorous minds, which are so sensible of every restraint as to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles. Bacon.

Hast thou set up nothing in competition with God; no pride, profit, self-love, or self-interest of thy own? Duppa.

Up through the spacious palace passed she
To where the king's proudly reposed head,
If any can be soft to tyranny,
And self-tormenting sin, had a soft bed. Crashaw.

With a joyful willingness these self-loving reformers took possession of all vacant preferments, and with reluctance others parted with their beloved colleges and subsistence. Walton.

Repent the sin; but if the punishment
Thou canst avoid, self-preservation bids. Milton.
Him fast sleeping soon he found,

Eighteen and nineteen are equal to thirty-seven, by the same self-evidence that one and two are equal to three. Locke.

A contradiction of what has been said, is a mark of yet greater pride and self-conceitedness, when we take upon us to set another right in his story. Locke.

I am as justly accountable for any action done many years since, appropriated to me now by this self-consciousness, as I am for what I did the last moment. Locke.

Each intermediate idea agreeing on each side with those two, it is immediately placed between: the ideas of men and self-determination appear to be connected. Locke.

This self-existent being hath the power of perfection, as well as of existence, in himself; for he that is above, or existeth without, any cause, that is, hath the power of existence in himself, cannot be without the power of any possible existence. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Body cannot be self-existent, because it is not self-mov'd; for motion is not of the essence of body, because we may have a definitive conception of body, abstracted from that of motion: wherefore motion is something else besides body, something without which body may be conceived to exist. Grew.

Confidence, as opposed to modesty, and distinguished from decent assurance, proceeds from self-opinion, occasioned by ignorance or flattery. Collier of Confidence.

Bewilder'd, I my author cannot find, Till some first cause, some self-existent mind, Who form'd and rules all nature, is assign'd. Blackm.

Living and understanding substances do clearly demonstrate to philosophical inquirers the necessary self-existence, power, wisdom, and beneficence of their Maker. Bentley.

If it can intrinsically stir itself, and either commence or alter its course, it must have a principle of self-activity, which is life and sense. Bentl. Serm.

This desire of existence is a natural affection of the soul; 'tis self-preservation in the highest and truest meaning. Bentley.

The philosophers, and even the Epicureans, maintained the self-sufficiency of the godhead, and seldom or never sacrificed it all. Bentley.

Matter is not endued with self-motion, nor with a power to alter the course in which it is put: it is merely passive, and must ever continue in that state it is settled in. Cheyne.

I took not arms, till urg'd by self-defence, The eldest law of nature. Rowe's Amb. Stepmother.

His labour and study would have shewn his early mistakes, and cured him of self-flattering delusions. Watts.

This is not to be done in a rash and self-sufficient manner; but with an humble dependance on divine grace, while we walk among snares. Watts.

The religion of Jesus, with all its self-denials, virtues, and devotions, is very practicable. Watts.

I heard in Crete, this island's name; For 'twas in Crete, my native soil, I came Self-banish'd thence. Pope's Odyssey.

Achilles' courage is furious and untractable; that of Ajax is heavy and self-confiding. Pope.

I doom, to fix the gallant ship, A mark of vengeance on the sable deep; To warn the thoughtless self-confiding train No more vultures'd thus to brave the main. Pope.

What is loose love? a transient gust, A vapour fed from wild desire, A wand'ring self-consuming fire. Pope.

In dubious thought the king awaits, And self-considering, as he stands, debates. Pope.

By mighty Jove's command, Unwilling have I trod this pleasing land; For who self-mov'd with weary wing would sweep

They who reach Parnassus' lofty crown Employ their pains to spurn some others down; And, while self-love each jealous writer rules, Contending wits become the sport of fools. Pope.

It may be thought that Ulysses here is too ostentatious, and that he dwells more than modesty allows upon his own accomplishments; but self-praise is sometimes no fault. Broome.

No wonder such a spirit, in such a situation, is provoked beyond the regards of religion or self-conviction. Swift.

SELFHEAL. n. s. [brunella, Lat.] A plant. The same with SANICLE; which see.

SELFISH. adj. [from self.] Attentive only to one's own interest; void of regard for others.

What could the most aspiring selfish man desire more, were he to form the notion of a being to whom he would recommend himself, than such a knowledge as can discover the least appearance of perfection, and such a goodness as will proportion a reward to it? Addison's Spectator.

Passions, though selfish, if their means be fair, List under reason, and deserve her care; Those that imparted court a nobler aim, Exalt their kind, and take some virtue's name. Pope.

SELFISHNESS. n. s. [from selfish.] Attention to his own interest, without any regard to others; self-love.

This sublimer love, being, by an intimate conjunction with its object, thoroughly refined from all base dross of selfishness and interest, nobly begets a perfect subordination of our wills to the will of God. Boyle's Scraphick Love.

SELFISHLY. adv. [from selfish.] With regard only to his own interest; without love of others.

He can your merit selfishly approve, And shew the sense of it without the love. Pope.

SELFSAME. adj. [self and same.] Exactly the same.

I have no great cause to look for other than the self-same portion and lot, which your manner hath been hitherto to lay on them that concur not in opinion with you. Hooker's Preface.

Flight pursued one way the self-same hour. Milt.

I have been base, Base ev'n to him from whom I did receive All that a son could to a parent give: Behold me punish'd in the self-same kind; Th' ungrateful does a more ungrateful find. Dryden.

of the senses.

Diversity of constitution, or other circumstances, vary the sensations ; and to them of Java pepper is cold. Glanville's Scepis.

The brain, distempred by a cold, heating against the root of the auditory nerve, and protracted to the tympanum, causes the sensation of noise.
Hervey on Consumptions.

This great source of most of the ideas we have, depending wholly upon our senses, and derived by them to the understanding, I call sensation. Locke.

When we are asleep, joy and sorrow give us more vigorous sensations of pain or pleasure than at any other time. Addison.

The happiest, upon a fair estimate, have stronger sensations of pain than pleasure. Rogers.

SE'NSE. n. s. [sens, Fr. sensus, Lat.]

1. Faculty or power by which external objects are perceived ; the sight, touch, hearing, smell, taste.

This pow'r is sense, which from abroad doth bring
The colour, taste, and touch, and scent, and sound,
The quantity and shape of ev'ry thing
Within earth's centre or heaven's circle found ;
And though things sensible be numberless,
But only five the sense's organs be ;
And in those five all things their forms express,
Which we can touch, taste, feel, or hear, or see. Davies.

Then is the soul a nature, which contains
The pow'r of sense within a greater pow'r,
Which doth employ and use the sense's pains ;
But sits and rules within her private bow'r. Davies.

Both contain
Within them ev'ry lower faculty
Of sense, whereby they hear, see, smell, touch, taste. Milton.

Of the five senses, two are usually and most properly called the senses of learning, as being most capable of receiving communication of thought and notions by selected signs ; and these are hearing and seeing. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Perception by the senses ; sensation.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the effects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcourse throughout the whole. Bacon's Natural History.

If we had nought but sense, then only they Should have sound minds which have their senses sound ;
But wisdom grows when senses do decay,
And folly most in quickest sense is found. Davies.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves the sense behind. Dryden.

3. Perception of intellect ; apprehension of mind.

This Basilus, having the quick sense of a lover, took as though his mistress had given him a secret reprehension. Sidney.

God, to remove his ways from human sense,
Plac'd heav'n from earth so far. Milton.

4. Sensibility ; quickness or keenness of perception.

He should have liv'd,
Save that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense,
Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge. Shakesp.

5. Understanding ; soundness of faculties ; strength of natural reason.

Opprest nature sleeps :
This rest might yet have balm'd thy broken senses. Shakesp.

God hath endued mankind with powers and abilities which we call natural light and reason, and common sense. Bentley.

There's something previous even to taste ; 'tis sense,
Good sense, which only is the gift of heav'n,
And, though no science, fairly worth the seven :
A light within yourself you must perceive ;
Jones and Le Nôtre hate it not to give. Pope.

6. Reason ; reasonable meaning.

He raves ; his words are loose
As heaps of sand, and scattering wide from sense :
You see he knows not me, his natural father ;
That now the wind has got into his head,
And turns his brains to frenzy. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

7. Opinion ; notion ; judgment.

I speak my private but in-partial sense,
With freedom, and, I hope, without offence. Roscommon.

8. Consciousness ; conviction.

In the due sense of my want of learning, I only make a confession of my own faith. Dryden.

9. Moral perception.

Some are so hardened in wickedness, as to have no sense of the most friendly offices. L'Estrange.

10. Meaning ; import.

In this sense, to be preserved from sin is not impossible. Hooker.

My hearty friends,
You take me in too dolorous a sense. Shakesp.

A haughty presumption, that because we are encouraged to believe that in some sense all things are made for man, that therefore they are not made at all for themselves. More.
All before Richard I. is before time of memory ;
and what is since, is, in a legal sense, within the time of memory. Hale.

In one sense it is, indeed, a building of gold and silver upon the foundation of Christianity. Tillotson.

When a word has been used in two or three senses, and has made a great inroad for error, drop one or two of those senses, and leave it only one remaining, and affix the other senses or ideas to other words. Watts's Logic.

SENSED. part. [from sense.] Perceived by the senses. A word not in use.

Let the sciolist tell me, why things must needs be so as his individual senses represent them ; is he sure that objects are not otherwise sensed by others, than they are by him ? And why must his sense be the infallible criterion ? It may be, what is white to us, is black to negroes. Glanville's Scepis.

SENSEFUL. adj. [from sense and full.] Reasonable ; judicious. Not used.

Men, otherwise senseful and ingenious, quote such things out of an author as would never pass in conversation. Norris.

SENSELESS. adj. [from sense.]

1. Wanting sense ; wanting life ; void of all life or perception.

The charm and venom which they drunk
Their blood with secret filth infected hath,
Being diffus'd through the senseless trunk,
That through the great contagion direful deadly

The ears are senseless that should give us hearing,
To tell him his commandment is fulfill'd. Shakesp. Hamlet.

You blocks ! you worse than senseless things !
Shakesp.

It is as repugnant to the idea of senseless matter, that it should put into itself sense, perception, and knowledge, as it is repugnant to the idea of a triangle, that it should put into itself greater angles than two right ones. Locke.

2. Unfeeling ; wanting sympathy.
The senseless grave feels not your pious sorrows. Rowe.

3. Unreasonable ; stupid ; doltish ; blockish.
They would repent this their senseless perverseness when it would be too late, and when they found themselves under a power that would destroy them. Clarendon.

If we be not extremely foolish, thankless, or senseless, a great joy is more apt to cure sorrow than a great trouble is. Taylor.

The great design of this author's book is to prove this, which I believe no man in the world was ever so senseless as to deny. Tillotson.

She saw her favour was misplaced ;
The fellows had a wretched taste ;
She needs must tell them to their face,
They were a senseless stupid race. Swift.

4. Contrary to true judgment ; contrary to reason.

It is a senseless thing, in reason, to think that one of these interests can stand without the other, when, in the very order of natural causes, government is preserved by religion. South's Sermons.

Other creatures, as well as monkies, little wiser than they, destroy their young by senseless fondness, and too much embracing. Locke.

5. Wanting sensibility ; wanting quickness or keenness of perception. Not in use.

To draw Mars, like a young Hippolitus, with an effeminate countenance, or that hot-spurred Harpalice in Virgil, proceedeth from a senseless and over-cold judgment. Peachment.

6. Wanting knowledge ; unconscious ; with of.

The wretch is drench'd too deep ;
His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep,
Fatten'd in vice ; so callous and so gross,
He sins and sees not, senseless of his loss. Dryden.

Hear this,
You onhous'd, lawless, rambling, libertines,
Senseless of any charm in love, beyond
The prostitution of a common bed. Southern.

SENSELESSLY. adv. [from senseless.] In a senseless manner ; stupidly ; unreasonably.

If any one should be found so senselessly arrogant as to suppose man alone knowing and wise, but yet the product of mere ignorance and chance, and that all the rest of the universe acted only by that blind hap-hazard, I shall leave with him that very rational and emphatical rebuke of Fully. Locke.

SENSELESSNESS. n. s. [from senseless.] Folly ; unreasonableness ; absurdity ; stupidity.

The senselessness of the tradition of the crocodile's moving his upper jaw, is plain, from the articulation of the occiput with the neck, and the nether jaw with the upper. Grew.

SENSIBILITY. n. s. [sensibilité, Fr.]

1. Quickness of sensation.
2. Quickness of perception ; delicacy.
Modesty is a kind of quick and delicate feeling in the soul ; it is such an exquisite sensibility, as warns a woman to shun the first appearance of every thing hurtful. Addison's Spectator.

SENSIBLE. adj. [sensible, Fr. sensilis, Lat.]

1. Having the power of perceiving by the senses.

Would your cambrick were as sensible as your finger, that you might leave pricking it for pity. Shakesp.

These be those discourses of God, whose effects those that live witness in themselves ; the sensible in their sensible natures, the reasonable in their reasonable souls. Raleigh.

A blind man conceives not colours, but under the notion of some other sensible faculty. Glanville's Scep sis.

2. Perceptible by the senses.

By reason man attaineth unto the knowledge of things that are and are not sensible ; it resteth, therefore, that we search how man attaineth unto the knowledge of such things unsensible as are to be known. Hooker.

Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand ? Come, let me clutch thee :

I have thee not, and yet I see thee still :
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight ? Shakesp. Macbeth.

The space left and acquired in every sensible moment in such slow progressions, is so inconsiderable, that it cannot possibly move the sense. Glanville's Scep sis.

It is manifest that the heavens are void of all sensible resistance, and by consequence of all sensible matter. Newton.

The greater part of men are no otherwise moved than by sense, and have neither leisure nor ability so to improve their power of reflection, as to be capable of conceiving the divine perfections, without the assistance of sensible objects. Rogers.

Air is sensible to the touch by its motion, and by its resistance to bodies moved in it. Arbuth. on Air.

3. Perceived by the mind.

Idleness was punished by so many stripes in publick, and the disgrace was more sensible than the pain. Temple.

4. Perceiving by either mind or senses ; having perception by the mind or senses.

This must needs remove
The sensible of pain. Milton.

I saw you in the east at your first arising : I was as soon sensible as any of that light, when just shooting out, and beginning to travel upwards to the meridian. Dryden.

I do not say there is no soul in man, because he is not sensible of it in his sleep ; but I do say he cannot think at any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

The versification is as beautiful as the description complete ; every ear must be sensible of it. Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

5. Having moral perception ; having the quality of being affected by moral good or ill.

If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so great a shew of zeal. Shak.

6. Having quick intellectual feeling ; being easily or strongly affected.

Even I, the bold, the sensible of wrong,
Restrain'd by shame, was forc'd to hold my tongue. Dryden.

7. Convinced ; persuaded. A low use.

They are very sensible that they had better have pushed their conquests on the other side of the Adriatick ; for then their territories would have lain together. Addison.

8. In low conversation it has sometimes the sense of reasonable ; judicious ; wise.

I have been tired with accounts from sensible men, furnished with matters of fact, which have happened within their own knowledge. Addison.

SENSIBLENESS. n. s. [from sensible.]

1. Possibility to be perceived by the senses.
2. Actual perception by mind or body.
3. Quickness of perception ; sensibility.

The sensibleness of the eye renders it subject to pain, as also unfit to be dressed with sharp medicaments. Shakesp.

4. Painful consciousness.

There is no condition of soul more wretched than that of the senseless obdurate sinner, being a kind of numbness of soul ; and, contrariwise, this feeling and sensibleness, and sorrow for sin, the most vital quality. Hammond.

5. Judgment ; reasonableness. An use not admitted but in conversation.

SENSIBLY. adv. [from sensible.]

1. Perceptibly to the senses.
He is your brother, lords ; sensibly fed
Of that self-blood that first gave life to you. Shakesp. Temple.

A sudden pain in my right foot increased sensibly.

The salts of human urine may, by the violent motion of the blood, be turned alkaline, and even corrosive ; and so they affect the fibres of the brain, more sensibly than other parts. Arbuthnot.

2. With perception of either mind or body.

3. Externally ; by impression on the senses.

That church of Christ, which we properly term his body mystical, can be but one ; neither can that one be sensibly discerned by any, inasmuch as the parts thereof are some in heaven already with Christ. Hooker.

4. With quick intellectual perception.

5. [In low language.] Judiciously ; reasonably.

SENSITIVE. adj. [sensitif, Fr.] Having sense or perception, but not reason.

The sensitive faculty may have a sensitive love of some sensitive objects, which though moderated so as not to fall into sin, yet, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards that inferior object than towards God : this is a piece of human frailty. Hammond.

All the actions of the sensitive appetite are in painting called passions, because the soul is agitated by them, and because the body suffers and is sensibly altered. Druden.

Bodies are such as are endued with a vegetative soul, as plants ; a sensitive soul, as animals ; or a rational soul, as the body of man. Ray.

SENSITIVE Plant. n. s. [mimosa, Lat.]

A plant.
The flower consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a funnel, having many stamina in the centre : these flowers are collected into a round head : from the bottom of the flower rises the pistillum, which afterwards becomes an oblong flat-pointed pod, which opens both ways, and contains in each partition one roundish seed. Of this plant the humble plants are a species, which are so called, because, upon being touched, the pedicle of their leaves falls downward ; but the leaves of the sensitive plant are only contracted. Miller.

Vegetables have many of them some degrees of motion, and, upon the different application of other bodies to them, do very briskly alter their figure and motion, and so have obtained the name of sensitive plants, from a motion which has some resemblance to that which in animals follows upon sensation. Locke.

Whence does it happen that the plant, which well

We name the sensitive, should move and feel ?
Whence know her leaves to answer her command,
And with quick horror fly the neighbouring hand ? Prior.

The sensitive plant is so called, because, as soon as you touch it, the leaf shrinks. Mortimer.

SENSITIVELY. adv. [from sensitive.] In a sensitive manner.

The sensitive faculty, through the nature of man's sense, may express itself more sensitively towards an inferior object than towards God : this is a piece of frailty. Hammond.

SENSORIUM. } n. s. [Lat.]

SENSORY. }

1. The part where the senses transmit their perceptions to the mind ; the seat of sense.

Spiritual species, both visible and audible, will work upon the sensories, though they move not any other body. Bacon.

As sound in a bell, or musical string, or other sounding body, is nothing but a trembling motion, and the air nothing but that motion propagated from the object, in the sensorium it is a sense of that motion under the form of sound. Newton.

Is not the sensory of animals the place to which the sensitive substance is present, and into which the sensible species of things are carried through the nerves of the brain, that there they may be perceived by their immediate presence to that substance?
Newton's Opticks.

2. Organ of sensation.

That we all have double sensories, two eyes, two ears, is an effectual confutation of this atheistical sophism.
Bentley.

SENSUAL. adj. [sensuel, Fr.]

1. Consisting in sense; depending on sense; affecting the senses.

Men in general are too partial in favour of a sensual appetite, to take notice of truth when they have found it.
L'Estrange.

Far as creation's ample range extends,
The scale of sensual, mental pow'rs ascends. Pope.

2. Pleasing to the senses; carnal; not spiritual.

The greatest part of men are such as prefer their own private good before all things, even that good which is sensual before whatsoever is most divine.
Hooker.

3. Devoted to sense; lewd; luxurious.

From amidst them rose
Belial, the dissolutes spirit that fell;
The sensuallest, and after Asmodai
The fleshliest incubus.
Milton.

No small part of virtue consists in abstaining from that wherein sensual men place their felicity.
Atterbury.

SENSUALIST. n. s. [from sensual.] A carnal person; one devoted to corporeal pleasures.

Let atheists and sensualists satisfy themselves as they are able; the former of which will find, that, as long as reason keeps her ground, religion neither can nor will lose hers.
South.

SENSUALITY. n. s. [from sensual.] Devoledness to the senses; addiction to brutal and corporeal pleasures.

But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamp'rd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.
Shakesp.

Kill not her quick'ning pow'r with surfeitings;
Mar not her sense with sensuality;

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;
Make not her free-will slave to vanity.
Davies.

Sensuality is one kind of pleasure, such an one as it is.
South.

They avoid dress, lest they should have affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort and delight of their whole beings.
Addison.

Impure and brutal sensuality was too much confirmed by the religion of those countries, where even Venus and Bacchos had their temples.
Bentley.

To SENSUALIZE. v. a. [from sensual.]

To sink to sensual pleasures; to degrade the mind into subjection to the senses.

Not to suffer one's self to be sensualized by pleasures, like those who were changed into brutes by Circe.
Pope.

SENSUALLY. adv. [from sensual.] In a sensual manner.

SENSUOUS. adj. [from sense.] Tender; pathetic; full of passion. Not in use.

To this poetry would be made precedent, as being less subtle and fine; but more simple, sensuous, and passionate.
Milton.

SENT. The participle passive of send.

I make a decree that all Israel go with thee; forasmuch as thou art sent of the king. Ezra vii. 14.

SENTENCE. n. s. [sententia, Fr. sententia, Lat.]

1. Determination or decision, as of a judge civil or criminal.

The rule of voluntary agents on earth is the sententia that reason giveth, concerning the goodness of those things which they are to do.
Hooker.

If we have neither voice from heaven, that so pronounceth of them, neither sententia of men grounded upon such manifest and clear proof, that they, in whose hands it is to alter them, may likewise infallibly, even in heart and conscience, judge them so; upon necessity to urge alteration, is to trouble and disturb without necessity.
Hooker.

How will I give sententia against them.
Jeremiah iv. 12.

If matter of fact breaks out with too great an evidence to be denied, why, still there are other lenitives, that friendship will apply, before it will be brought to the decretory rigours of a condemning sententia.
South's Sermons.

Let him set out some of Luther's works, that by them we pass sententia upon his doctrines.
Atterbury.

2. It is usually spoken of condemnation pronounced by the judge; doom.

By the consent of all laws, in capital causes, the evidence must be full and clear; and if so, where one man's life is in question, what say we to a war, which is ever the sententia of death upon many?
Bacon's Holy War.

What rests but that the mortal sententia pass?
Milton.

3. A maxim; an axiom, generally moral.

A sententia may be defined a moral instruction couched in few words. Broom's Notes on Odyssey.

4. A short paragraph; a period in writing.

An excellent spirit, knowledge, understanding, and shewing of hard sentences were found in Daniel.
Dan. v. 12.

To SENTENCE. v. a. [sentencier, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To pass the last judgment on any one.

After this cold consid'rance sententia me;
And, as you are a king, speak in your state,
What I have done that misbecame my place.
Shakesp.

Came the mild judge and intercessor both
To sententia man.
Milton.

2. To condemn; to doom to punishment.

Could that decree from our brother come?
Nature herself is sentenc'd in your doom:
Piety is no more.
Dryden.

Idleness, sentenced by the decurions, was punished by so many stripes.
Temple.

SENTENTIOSITY. n. s. [from sententiosus.]

Comprehension in a sententia.

Vulgar precepts in morality carry with them nothing above the line, or beyond the extemporary sententiosity of common conceits with us.
Brown's Vulgar Errors

SENTENTIOUS. adj. [sentencieux, Fr. from sententia.]

1. Abounding with sentences, axioms, and maxims, short and energetick.

He is very swift and sententious.
Shak. As you like it.

Eyes are vocal, ears have tongues:
Sententious showers! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical.
Crashaw.

Eloquence, with all her pomp and charms,
Foretold us useful and sententious truths.
Waller.

How he apes his sire,
Ambitiously sententious!
Addison's Cato.

2. Comprising sentences.

The making of figures being tedious, and requiring much room, put men first upon contracting them, as by the most ancient Egyptian monuments it appears they did: next, instead of sententious marks, to think of verbal, such as the Chinese still retain.
Grew's Cosmologia.

SENTENTIOUSLY. adv. [from sententiosus.] In short sentences; with striking brevity.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously: they say, look how many feathers she hath, so many eyes she hath underneath.
Bacon's Essays.

Nausicaa delivers her judgment sententiously, to give it more weight.
Broom.

SENTENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from sententiosus.] Pithiness of sentences; brevity with strength.

The Medea I esteem for the gravity and sententiousness of it, which he himself concludes to be suitable to a tragedy.
Dryden.

SENTERY. n. s. [This is commonly written sentry, corrupted from sentinel.]

One who is set to watch in a garrison, or in the outlines of an army.

What strength, what art, cau then Suffice, or what evasion bear him safe
Through the strict senteries, and stations thick
Of angels watching round?
Milton.

SENTIENT. adj. [sentiens, Lat.] Perceiving; having perception.

This acting of the sentient phantasy is performed by a presence of sense, as the horse is under the sense of hunger, and that, without any formal syllogism, presseth him to eat.
Hale.

SENTIENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] He that has perception.

If the sentient be carried, passibus æquis, with the body whose motion it would observe, supposing it regular, the remove is insensible.
Clauvill's Scepis.

SENTIMENT. n. s. [sentiment, Fr.]

1. Thought; notion; opinion.

The consideration of the reason why they are annexed to so many other ideas, serving to give us due sentiments of the wisdom and goodness of the sovereign Disposer of all things, may not be unsuitable to the main end of these enquiries.
Locke.

Alike to council or th' assembly came,
With equal souls and sentiments the same.
Pope.

2. The sense considered distinctly from the language or things; a striking sententia in a composition.

Those who could no longer defend the conduct of Cato, praised the sentiments.
Dennis.

SENTINEL. n. s. [sentinelle, Fr. from sentio, Lat.] One who watches or keeps guard to prevent surprise.

Norfolk, hie thee to thy charge;
Use careful watch, chuse trusty sentinels.
Shakesp. Richard III.

Counsellors are not commonly so united, but that one counsellor keepeth sentinel over another, so that if any do counsel out of faction or private ends, it commonly goes to the king's ear.
Bacon's Essays.

First, the two eyes, which have the seeing pow'r,
Stand as one watchman, spy, or sentinel,
Being plac'd aloft, within the head's high tower;
And though both see, yet both but one thing tell.
Davies.

Love to our citadel resorts,
Through those deceitful sally ports:
Our sentinels betray our forts.
Denham.

The senses are situated in the head, as sentinels in a watchtower, to receive and convey to the soul the impressions of external objects.
Ray on the Creation.

Perhaps they had sentinels waking while they slept; but even this would be unsoldierlike.
Browne.

SENTRY. n. s. [corrupted, I believe, from sentinel.]

1. A watch; a sentinel; one who watches in a garrison, or army, to keep them from surprise.

If I do send, dispatch
Those sentries to our aid; the rest will serve
For a short holding.
Shakesp. Coriolanus.

The youth of hell strict guard may keep,
And set their sentries to the utmost deep.
Dryden.

One goose they had, 'twas all they could allow,
A wakeful sentry, and on duty now.
Dryden.

2. Guard; watch; the duty of a sentry.

Thou, whose nature cannot sleep,
O'er my slumbers sentry keep;
Guard me 'gainst those watchful foes,
Whose eyes are open while mine close. Brown.
Here toils and death, and death's half-brother,
sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their sentry keep. Dryden.

SEPARABILITY. n. s. [from separable.]
The quality of admitting disunion or disception.

Separability is the greatest argument of real distinction. Glauville.
The greatest argument of real distinction is separability, and actual separation: for nothing can be separated from itself. Norris.

SEPARABLE. adj. [separable, Fr. separabilis, Lat. from separate.]

1. Susceptive of disunion; discernible.
The infusions and decoctions of plants contain the most separable parts of the plants, and convey not only their nutritious but medicinal qualities into the blood. Arbutnot.

2. Possible to be disjoined from something; with from.
Expansion and duration have this farther agreement, that though they are both considered by us as having parts, yet their parts are not separable one from another. Locke.

SEPARABLENESS. n. s. [from separable.]
Capableness of being separated.

Trials permit me not to doubt of the separableness of a yellow tincture from gold. Boyle.

TO SEPARATE. v. a. [separo, Lat. separer, Fr.]

1. To break; to divide into parts.
2. To disunite; to disjoin.

I'll to England.
—To Ireland, I: our separated fortunes Shall keep us both the safer. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Resolv'd,

Rather than death, or ought than death more dread, Shall separate us. Milton.

3. To sever from the rest.
Can a body be inflammable, from which it would puzzle a chemist to separate an inflammable ingredient? Boyle.
Death from sin no power can separate. Milton.

4. To set apart; to segregate.
Separate me Barnabas and Saul, for the work whereunto I have called them. Acts, xiii. 2.
David separated to the service those who should prophesy. 1 Chron. xxv. 1.

5. To withdraw.
Separate thyself from me: if thou wilt take the left, I will go to the right. Gen. xiii. 9.

TO SEPARATE. v. n. To part; to be disunited.

When there was not room enough for their herds to feed, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

SEPARATE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Divided from the rest.
'Twere hard to conceive an eternal watch, whose pieces were never separate one from another, nor ever in any other form. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Disjointed; withdrawn.
Eve separate he wish'd. Milton.

3. Secret; secluded.
In a secret vale the Trojan sees
A separate grove. Dryden.

4. Disunited from the body; disengaged from corporeal nature. An emphatical sense.

Whatever ideas the mind can receive and contemplate without the help of the body, it can retain without the help of the body too: or else the soul, or any separate spirit, will have but little advantage by thinking. Locke.

SEPARATELY. adv. [from separate.] Apart;

singly; not in union; distinctly; particularly.

It is of singular use to princes, if they take the opinions of their council both separately and together: for private opinion is more free, but opinion before others is more reserved. Bacon.

If you admit of many figures, conceive the whole together; and not every thing separately and in particular. Dryden.

SEPARATENESS. n. s. [from separate.]
The state of being separate.

SEPARATION. n. s. [separatio, Lat. separation, Fr. from separate.]

1. The act of separating; disjunction.
They have a dark opinion, that the soul doth live after the separation from the body. Abbot.

Any part of our bodies, vitally united to that which is conscious in us, makes a part of ourselves; but upon separation from the vital union, by which that consciousness is communicated, that, which a moment since was part of ourselves, is now no more so. Locke.

2. The state of being separate; disunion.
As the confusion of tongues was a mark of separation, so the being of one language was a mark of union. Bacon.

3. The chemical analysis, or operation of disuniting things mingled.

A fifteenth part of silver, incorporate with gold, will not be recovered by any matter of separation, unless you put a greater quantity of silver, which is the last refuge in separations. Bacon.

4. Divorce; disjunction from a married state.

Did you not hear
A bozzing of a separation
Between the king and Catherine? Shakesp.

SEPARATIST. n. s. [separatiste, Fr. from separate.] One who divides from the church; a schismatick; a seceder.

The anabaptists, separatists, and sectaries tenets are full of schism, and inconsistent with monarchy. Bacon.

Our modern separatists pronounce all those heretical, or carnal, from whom they have withdrawn. Decay of Piety.

Says the separatist, if those, who have the rule over you, should command you any thing about church affairs, you ought not, in conscience, to obey them. South's Sermons.

SEPARATOR. n. s. [from separate.] One who divides; a divider.

SEPARATORY. adj. [from separate.]
Used in separation.

The most conspicuous gland of an animal is the system of the guts, where the lacteals are the emissary vessels, or separatory ducts. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SEPIBIBLE. adj. [sepio, Lat.] That may be buried. Bailey.

SEPIMENT. n. s. [sepimentum, Lat.] A hedge; a fence. Bailey.

SEPOSITION. n. s. [sepono, Lat.] The act of setting apart; segregation.

SEPT. n. s. [septum, Lat.] A clan; a race; a family; a generation. A word used only with regard or allusion to Ireland, and, I suppose, Irish.

This judge, being the lord's brehon, adjudgeth a better share unto the lord of the soil, or the head of that sept, and also unto himself for his judgment a greater portion, than unto the plain-tiffs. Spenser on Ireland.

The English forces were ever too weak to subdue so many warlike nations, or septs of the Irish, as did possess this island. Davies on Ireland.

The true and ancient Russians, a sept whom he had met with in one of the provinces of that vast empire, were white like the Daees. Boyle.

SEPTANGULAR. adj. [septem and angu- lus, Lat.] Having seven corners or sides.

SEPTEMBER. n. s. [Lat. Septembre, Fr.] The ninth month of the year; the seventh from March.

September hath his name as being the seventh month from March: he is drawn with a merry and cheerful countenance, in a purple robe. Peacham on Drawing.

SEPTENARY. adj. [septenarius, Lat.] Consisting of seven.

Every controversy has seven questions belonging to it; though the order of nature seems too much neglected by a confinement to this septenary number. Harris.

SEPTENARY. n. s. The number seven.
The days of men are cast up by septenaries, and every seventh year conceived to carry some altering character in temper of mind or body.

These constitutions of Moses, that proceed so much upon a septenary, or number of seven, have no reason in the nature of the thing. Burnet.

SEPTENNIAL. adj. [septennis, Lat.]

1. Lasting seven years.
2. Happening once in seven years.
Being once dispensed with for his septennial visit, by a holy instrument from Petropolis, he resolved to govern them by subaltern ministers. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

SEPTENTRION. n. s. [French; septentrio, Lat.] The north.

Thou art as opposite to every good
As the antipodes are unto us,
Or as the south to the septentrion. Shakesp. Henry VI.

SEPTENTRION. } adj. [septentrionalis, SEPTENTRIONAL. } Lat. septentrional- al.] Fr. Northern.

Back'd with a ridge of bills,
That screen'd the fruits of th' earth and seats of men
From cold septentrion blasts. Milton's Par. Regained.

If the spring
Preceding should be destitute of rain,
Or blast septentrional with brushing wings
Sweep up the smoky mists and vapours damp,
Then woe to mortals! Phillips.

SEPTENTRIONALITY. n. s. [from septentrional.] Northerliness.

SEPTENTRIONALLY. adv. [from septentrional.] Towards the north; northerly.

If they be powerfully excited, and equally let fall, they commonly sink down, and break the water, at that extreme whereat they were septentrionally excited. Brown.

TO SEPTENTRIONATE. v. n. [from septentrio, Lat.] To tend northerly.

Steel and good iron, never excited by the loadstone, septentrionate at one extreme, and australize at another. Brown.

SEPTICAL. adj. [σηπτικός] Having power to promote or produce putrefaction.

As a septic medicine, Galen commended the ashes of a salamander. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTILATERAL. adj. [septem and lateris, Lat.] Having seven sides.

By an equal interval they make seven triangles, the bases whereof are the seven sides of a septilateral figure, described within a circle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTUAGENARY. adj. [septuagenarius, Lat. septuagenaire, Fr.] Consisting of seventy.

The three hundred years of John of times, or Nestor, cannot afford a reasonable encouragement beyond Moses's septuagenary determination. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

S E Q

SEPTUAGESIMAL. adj. [septuagesimus, Lat.] Consisting of seventy.

In our abridged and septuagesimal age, it is very rare to behold the fourth generation.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SEPTUAGINT. n. s. [septuaginta, Lat.]

The old Greek version of the Old Testament, so called as being supposed the work of seventy-two interpreters.

Which way soever you try, you shall find the product great enough for the extent of this earth; and if you follow the Septuagint chronology, it will still be far higher.

Burnet.

SEPTUPLE. adj. [septuplex, Lat.] Seven times as much. A technical term.

SEPULCHRAL. adj. [sepulcral, Fr. sepulchralis, from sepulchrum, Lat.] Relating to burial; relating to the grave; monumental.

Whilst our souls negotiate there,

We like sepulchral statues lay;

All day the same our postures were,

And we said nothing all the day.

Donne.

Mine eye hath found that sad sepulchral rock,

That was the casket of heav'n's richest store.

Milton.

Sepulchral lies our holy walls to grace,

And new-year odes.

Pope's Dunciad.

SEPULCHRE. n. s. [sepulchre, Fr. sepulchrum, Lat.] A grave; a tomb.

To entail him and 's heirs unto the crown,

What is it but to make thy sepulchre?

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Flies and spiders get a sepulchre in amber, more durable than the monument and embalming of any king.

Bacon.

There, where the virgin's son his doctrine taught,

His miracles, and our redemption, wrought;

Where I, by thee inspir'd, his praises sung,

And on his sepulchre my offering hung.

Sandys.

Perpetual lamps for many hundred years have continued burning, without supply, in the sepulchres of the ancients.

W'itkins.

If not one common sepulchre contains Our bodies, or one urn our last remains, Yet Cyax and Aleyone shall join.

Dryden.

To SEPULCHRE. v. a. [from the noun. It is accented on the second syllable by Shakespeare and Milton; on the first, more properly, by Jonson and Prior.]

To bury; to entomb.

Go to thy lady's grave, and call her thence;

Or, at the least, in hers sepulchre thine.

Shakesp.

I am glad to see that time survive,

Where merit is not sepulchred alive;

Where good men's virtues thou to honours bring,

And not to dangers.

Ben Jonson.

Thou so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,

That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

Milton.

Disparted streams shall from their channels fly,

And, deep sureharg'd, by sandy mountains lie.

Prior.

SEPULTURE. n. s. [sepulture, Fr. sepultura, Lat.] Interment; burial.

That Niobe, weeping over her children, was turned into a stone, was nothing else but that during her life she erected over her sepultures a marble tomb of her own.

Brown.

Where we may royal sepulture prepare; With speed to Meselinda bring relief, Recal her spirits, and moderate her grief.

Druden.

In England, sepulture or burial of the dead may be deferred and put off for the debts of the person deceased.

Ayliffe.

SEQUACIOUS. adj. [sequacis, Lat.]

1. Following; attendant.

Orpheus could lead the savage race,

And trees uprooted left their place,

Sequacious of the lyre;

But bright Cecilia rais'd the wonder higher;

S E Q

When to her organ vocal breath was giv'n,
An angel heard,
And straight appear'd,
Mistaking earth for heav'n.

Dryden.

Above those superstitions horrors that enslave
The foul sequacious herd, to mystick faith
And blind amazement prone, th' enlighten'd few
The glorious stranger hail.

Thomson.

2. Ductile; pliant.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious, and obedient to the hand and stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, or moulded.

Ray.

SEQUACITY. n. s. [from sequax, Lat.]

Ductility; toughness.

Matter whereof creatures are produced, hath a closeness, lentor, and sequacity.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

SEQUEL. n. s. [sequelle, Fr. sequela, Lat.]

1. Conclusion; succeeding part.

If black scandal or foul-fac'd reproach
Attend the sequel of your imposition,
Your meer enforcement shall acquittance me.

Shakesp. Richard III.

Was he not a man of wisdom? Yes, but he was poor: but he was poor: grant this, and you cannot keep off that unavoidable sequel in the next verse, the poor man's wisdom is despised.

South.

2. Consequence; event.

Let any principal thing, as the sun or the moon, but once cease, fail, or swerve, and who doeth not easily conceive that the sequel thereof would he run both to itself and whatsoever dependeth on it?

Hooker.

In these he put two weights,
The sequel each of parting and of fight.

Milton.

3. Consequence inferred; consequential-ness.

What sequel is there in this argument? An archdeacon is the chief deacon: ergo, he is only a deacon.

W'hitgift.

SEQUENCE. n. s. [from sequor, Lat.]

1. Order of succession. An elegant word, but little used.

How art thou a king,
But by fair sequence and succession?

Shakesp. Richard III.

2. Series; arrangement; method.

The cause proceedeth from a precedent sequence and series of the seasons of the year

Bacon's Natural History.

SEQUENT. adj. [sequens, Lat.]

1. Following; succeeding.

Let my trial be mine own confession,
Immediate sentence then, and sequent death,
Is all the grace I beg.

Shakesp. Meas. for M. as.

There he dies, and leaves his race
Growing into a nation; and now grown Suspected to a sequent king, who seeks To stop their overgrowth.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Consequential.

SEQUENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] A follower. Not in use.

Here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the 'stranger queen's, which accidentally miscarried.

Shakesp.

To SEQUESTER. v. a. [sequestrer, Fr. secrestar, Span. sequestro, low Lat.]

1. To separate from others for the sake of privacy.

Why are you sequester'd from all your train?

Shakesp.

To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish.

Shakesp. As you like it.

In shady bow'r
More sacred and sequester'd, though hut feign'd, Pan or Silvanus never slept.

Milton.

Ye sacred Nine! that all my soul possess,
Whose raptures fire me, and whose visions bless,
Bear me, oh bear me, to sequester'd scenes
Of bow'ry mazes, and surrounding greens.

Pope.

S E R

2. To put aside; to remove.

Although I had wholly sequester'd my civil affairs, yet I set down, out of experience in business, and conversation in books, what I thought pertinent to this affair.

Bacon.

3. To withdraw; to segregate.

A thing as seasonable in grief as in joy, as decent being added unto actions of greatest weight and solemnity, as being used when men most sequester themselves from action.

Hooker.

4. To set aside from the use of the owner to that of others; as, his annuity is sequestered to pay his creditors.

5. To deprive of possessions.

It was his taylor and his cook, his fine fashions and his French ragouts, which sequestered him; and, in a word, he came by his poverty as sinfully as some usually do by their riches.

South.

SEQUESTERABLE. adj. [from sequestrate.]

1. Subject to privation.

2. Capable of separation.

Hartshorn, and divers other bodies belonging to the animal kingdom, abound with a not easily sequestrable salt.

Boyle.

To SEQUESTRATE. v. n. To sequester; to separate.

In general contagions, more perish for want of necessities than by the malignity of the disease, they being sequestered from mankind.

Arbuthnot on Air.

SEQUESTRATION. n. s. [sequestration, Fr. from sequestrate.]

1. Separation; retirement.

His addiction was to courses vain;
I never noted in him any study,
Any retirement, any sequestration
From open haunts and popularity.

Shakesp. Henry V.

There must be leisure, retirement, solitude, and a sequestration of a man's self from the noise of the world; for truth scorns to be seen by eyes much fixt upon inferior objects.

South.

2. Disunion; disjunction.

The metals remain unsevered, the fire only dividing the body into smaller particles, hindering rest and continuity, without any sequestration of elementary principles.

Boyle.

3. State of being set aside.

Since Henry Monmouth first began to reign,
Before whose glory I was great in arms,
This loathsome sequestration have I had.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

4. Deprivation of the use and profits of a possession.

If there be a single spot in the glebe more barren, the rector or vicar may be obliged, by the caprice or pique of the bishop, to build upon it, under pain of sequestration.

Swift.

SEQUESTRATOR. n. s. [from sequestrate.]

One who takes from a man the profit of his possessions.

I am fallen into the hands of publicans and sequestrators, and they have taken all from me.

Taylor.

SERAGLIO. n. s. [Italian; perhaps of Oriental original. The g is lost in the pronunciation.] A house of women kept for debauchery.

There is a great deal more solid content to be found in a constant course of well living, than in the voluptuousness of a seraglio.

Norris.

SERAPH. n. s. [שראף] One of the orders of angels.

He is infinitely more remote, in the real excellency of his nature, from the highest and perfectest of all created beings, than the purest seraph is from the most contemptible part of matter, and consequently must infinitely exceed what our narrow understandings can conceive of him.

Locke.

As full, as perfect, in vile man that mourns,
As the rapt seraph that adores and burns.

Pope.

SERA'PHICAL. } adj. [seraphique, Fr. from SERA'PHICK. } seraph.]

1. Angelick; angelical.

Love is curious of little things, desiring to be of angelical purity, of perfect innocence, and seraphical fervour. Taylor.
Seraphick arms and trophees. Milton.

2. Pure; refined from sensuality.

'Tis to the world a secret yet,
Whether the nymph, to please her swain,
Talks in a high romantick strain;
Or whether he at last descends
To like with less seraphick ends. Swift.

SERAPHIM. n. s. [This is properly the plural of seraph, and therefore cannot have s added; yet, in compliance with our language, seraphims is sometimes written.] Angels of one of the heavenly orders.

To thee cherubim and seraphim continually do cry. Common Prayer.

Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand. Isaiah, vi. 6.
Of seraphim another row. Milton.

SERE. adj. [reapian, Sax. to dry.] Dry;
withered; no longer green. See SEAR.

The muses, that were wont green bays to wear,
Now bringen bitter elder-branches seré. Spenser.
He is deformed, crooked, old, and seré,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where;
Vicious, ungentle. Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

Ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected may with matter seré foment. Milton.
They seré wood from the rotten hedges took,
And seeds of latent fire from flints provoke. Dryd.

On a seré branch,
Low bending to the bank, I sat me down, Musing and still. Rowe's Royal Convert.

SERE. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology, nor, except from this passage, the meaning. Can it come, like sheers, from rcynan, Sax. to cut?]
Claw; talon.

Two eagles,
That mounted on the winds, together still
Their strokes extended; but arriving now
Amidst the council, over every brow Shook their thick wings, and threat'ning death's cold fears,
Their necks and cheeks tore with their eager seres.
Chapman.

SERENÁDE. n. s. [serenade, Fr. serenata, Ital. whence, in Milton, serenate, from serenus, Lat. the lovers commonly attending their mistresses in fair nights.]
Musick or songs with which ladies are entertained by their lovers in the night.

Mixt dance, or wanton mask, or midnight ball,
Or serenate, which the starv'd lover sings
To his proud fair; best quitted with disdain.
Milton.

Foolish swallow, what dost thou
So often at my window do,
'With thy tuneless serenade?
Shall I the neighbours nightly rest invade,
At her deaf doors, with some vile serenade?
Dryden.

Will fancies he never should have been the man he is, had not he broke windows, and disturbed honest people with his midnight serenade, when he was a young fellow. Addison.

To SERENÁDE. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with nocturnal musick.

He continued to serenade her every morning,
till the queen was charmed with his harmony.
Spectator.

SERENE. adj. [seren, Fr. serenus, Lat.]
1. Calm; placid; quiet.

Spirits live insper'd
In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.
2. Unruffled; undisturbed; even of temper; peaceful or calm of mind; shewing a calm mind.

There wanted yet a creature might erect
His stature, and upright with front serene Govern the rest. Milton.

Exciting them, by a due remembrance of all that is past, unto future circumspection, and a serene expectation of the future life. Grew's Cosmol.
Gutta SERENA. n. s. An obstruction in the optic nerve.

These eyes that roll in vain,
So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs.
Milton.

SERENE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A calm damp evening.

Wherever death doth please t' appear,
Seas, serenes, swords, shot, sickness, all are there.
Ben Jonson.

To SERENE. v. a. [serener, Fr. sereno,
Lat.]

1. To calm; to quiet.
2. To clear; to brighten. Not proper.

Take care
Thy muddy beverage to serene, and drive
Precipitant the baser rosy lees. Phillips.

SERENELY. adv. [from serene.]
1. Calmly; quietly.

The setting sun now shone serenely bright. Pope.
2. With unruffled temper; coolly.

Whatever practical rule is generally broken, cannot be supposed innate; it being impossible that men would, without shame or fear, confidently and serenely break a rule, which they could not but evidently know that God had set up. Locke.
The nymph did like the scene appear.

Serenely pleasant, calmly fair;
Soft fell her words as flew the air. Prior.

SERENENESS. n. s. [from serene.] Serenity.

SERENITUDE. n. s. [from serene.] Calmness; coolness of mind. Not in use.

From the equal distribution of the phlegma-tick humour will flow quietude and serenitude in the affections. Wotton.

SERENITY. n. s. [serenité, Fr. from serenus,
Lat.]

1. Calmness; mild temperature.

In the constitution of a perpetual equinox, the best part of the globe would be desolate; and as to that little that would be inhabited, there is no reason to expect that it would constantly enjoy that admired calm and serenity. Bentley.
Pure serenity apace
Induces thought and contemplation still. Thamson.

2. Peace; quietness; not disturbance.

A general peace and serenity newly succeed'd a general trouble and cloud throughout all his kingdoms. Temple.

3. Evenness of temper; coolness of mind.

I cannot see how any men should ever transgress those moral rules, with confidence and serenitity, were they innate, and stamped upon their minds. Locke.

SERGE. n. s. [serge, Fr. xerga, Span.
which Covarruvias derives from xirica, Arab. Skinner from serge, Germ. a mat.]
A kind of woollen cloth.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves into cloth, another into kersey or serge, and another into arras. Hale.

Ye weavers, all your shuttles throw,
And bid broad-cloths and serges grow. Gay.

SERGEANT. n. s. [sergent, Fr. sergente,
Ital. from serviens, Lat.]

1. An officer whose business it is to execute the commands of magistrates.

Had I but time, as this fell sergent, Death,
Is strict in his arrest, oh! I could tell.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

When it was day, the magistrates sent the sergeants, saying, Let these men go. Acts, xvi. 35.

2. A petty officer in the army.

This is the sergeant,
Who like a good and hardy soldier fought.
Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. A lawyer of the highest rank under a judge.

None should be made sergeants, but such a^s probably might be held fit to be judges afterwards.
Bacon.

4. It is a title given to some of the king's servants: as, sergeant chirurgian; that is, a chirurgian servant to the king.

SERGEANTRY. n. s. [from sergeant.]

Grand sergeantry is that where one holdeth lands of the king by service, which he ought to do in his own person unto him: as to bear the king's banner or his spear, or to lead his host, or to be his marshal, or to blow a horn, when he seeth his enemies invade the land; or to find a man at arms to fight within the four seas, or else to do it himself; or to bear the king's sword before him at his coronation, or on that day to be his sewer, carver, butler, or chamberlain. Petit sergeantry is where a man holdeth land of the king, to yield him yearly some small thing towards his wars; as a sword, dagger, bow, knife, spear, pair of gloves of mail,
a pair of spurs, or such like. Cowell.

SERGEANTSHIP. n. s. [from sergeant.]
The office of a sergeant.

SERIES. n. s. [serie, Fr. series, Lat.]

1. Sequence; order.

Draw out that antecedent, by reflecting briefly upon the text, as it lies in the series of the epistle.
Ward of Infidelity.

The chasms of the correspondence I cannot supply, having destroyed too many letters to preserve any series. Pope.

2. Succession; course.

This is the series of perpetual woe,
Which thou, alas! and thine, are born to know.
Pope.

SERIOUS. adj. [serieux, Fr. serius, Lat.]

1. Grave; solemn; not volatile; not light of behaviour.

Ah! my friends, while we laugh, all things are serious round about us: God is serious, who exerciseth patience towards us; Christ is serious, who shed his blood for us; the Holy Ghost is serious, who striveth against the obstinacy of our hearts; the holy Scriptures bring to our ears the most serious things in the world; the Holy Sacraments represent the most serious and awful matters;
the whole creation is serious in serving God, and us; all that are in heaven or hell are serious; how then can we be gay? To give these excellent words their full force, it should be known that they came not from the priesthood, but the court: and from a courtier as eminent as England ever boasted.
Young.

2. Important; weighty; not trifling.

I'll hence to London on a serious matter.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

There's nothing serious in mortality;
All is but toys. Shakesp. Macbeth.

SERIOUSLY. adv. [from serious.] Gravely;
solemnly; in earnest; without levity.

It cannot but be matter of very dreadful consideration to any one, sober and in his wits, to think seriously with himself, what horror and confusion must needs surprise that man, at the last day of account, who had led his whole life by one rule, when God intends to judge him by another.
South.

All laugh to find Unthinking plainness so o'erspread thy mind,
That thou could'st seriously persuade the crowd
To keep their oaths, and to believe a God.
Dryden.

Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Lactantius, and Amobius, tell us, that this martyrdom first of all made them seriously inquisitive into that religion, which could induce the mind with so much strength, and overcome the fear of death, nay, raise an earnest desire of it, though it appeared in all its terrors. Addison.

SERIOUSNESS. n. s. [from serious.] Gravity; solemnity; earnest attention.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished all at once, and a spirit of libertinism and profaneness started up in the room of it. Atterb. Sermons.

The youth was received at the door by a servant, who then conducted him with great silence and seriousness to a long gallery, which was darkened at noon-day. Addison's Spectator.

SERMOCINATION. n. s. [sermocinatio, Lat.] The act or practice of making speeches.

SERMOCINATOR. n. s. [sermocinator, Lat.] A preacher; a speech-maker.

These obstreperous sermocinators make easy impression upon the minds of the vulgar. Howell.

SERMON. n. s. [sermon, Fr. sermo, Lat.] A discourse of instruction pronounced by a divine for the edification of the people.

As for our sermons, be they never so sound and perfect, God's word they are not, as the sermons of the prophets were; no, they are but ambiguously termed his word, because his word is commonly the subject whereof they treat, and must be the rule whereby they are framed. Hooker.

This our life, exempt from public haunt, Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,

Sermons in stones, and good in every thing. Shakesp.

Sermons he heard, yet not so many
As left no time to practise any;
He heard them reverently, and then
His practice preach'd them o'er again.

Crashaw.

Many, while they have preached Christ in their sermons, have read a lecture of atheism in their practice. South.

His preaching much, but more his practice wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught. Dryden.
TO SERMON. v. a. [sermoner, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To discourse as in a sermon.

Some would rather have good discipline delivered plainly by way of precept, or sermoned at large, than thus cloudily wrapped in allegorical devices. Spenser.

2. To tutor; to teach dogmatically; to lesson.

Come, sermon me no farther:
No villainous bounty yet hath pass'd my heart. Shakesp. Timon.

SERMOUNTAIN or Seseli, n. s. [siler, Lat.] A plant.

SEROSITY. n. s. [serosité, Fr.] Thin or watery part of the blood.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity is divided between the guts and the bladder; but it remains undivided in birds. Brown.

The tumour of the throat, which occasions the difficulty of swallowing, and breathing, proceeds from a serosity obstructing the glands, which may be watery, œdematose, or scirrhusous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

SEROUS. adj. [seveur, Fr. serosus, Lat.]

1. Thin; watery. Used of the part of the blood which separates in congelation from the grumous or red part.

2. Adapted to the serum.

This disease is commonly an extravasation of serum, received in some cavity of the body; for there may be also a dropsy by a dilatation of the serous vessels, as that in the ovarium. Arb. on Diet.

SERPENT. n. s. [serpens, Lat.] An animal that moves by undulation without legs. They are often venomous. They are divided into two kinds: the viper, which brings young; and the snake, that lays eggs.

She was array'd all in lily white,
And in her right hand bore a cup of gold,
With wine and water fill'd up to the height;
In which a serpent did himself enfold,
That horror made to all that did behold. Fairy Queen.

She struck me with her tongue,
Most serpent like, upon the very heart. Shakesp. King Lear.

They, or under ground, or circuit wide,
With serpent error wand'ring, found their way. Milton.

The chief I challeng'd: he, whose practis'd wit
Knew all the serpent mazes of deceit,
Eludes my search. Pope's Odyssey.

SERPENTINE. adj. [serpentinus, Lat. from serpent.]

1. Resembling a serpent.

I craved of him to lead me to the top of this rock, with meaning to free him from so serpentine a companion as I am. Sidney.

This of ours is described with legs, wings, a serpentine and winding tail, and a crest or comb somewhat like a cock. Brown.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape
Like his, and colour serpentine, may shew Thy inward fraud. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The figures and their parts ought to have a serpentine and flaming form naturally: these sorts of outlines have I know not what of life and seeming motion in them, which very much resembles the activity of the flame and serpent. Dryden.

2. Winding like a serpent; anfractuons.

Nor can the sun
Perfect a circle, or maintain his way
One inch direct; but where he rose to-day
He comes no more, but with a cozening line Steals by that point, and so is serpentine. Donne.
His hand th' adorn'd firmament display'd,
Those serpentine yet constant motions made. Sandys.

How many spacious countries doth the Rbine,
In winding banks, and mazes serpentine,
Traverse, before he splits in Belgia's plain,
And, lost in sand, creeps to the German main! Blackmoor.

SERPENTINE, n. s. [dracantium.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SERPENTINE Stone. n. s.

There were three species of this stone known among the ancients, all resembling one another, and celebrated for the same virtues. The one was green, variegated with spots of black, thence called the black ophtes; another, called the white ophtes, was green also, but variegated with spots of white: the third was called tephria, and was of a grey colour, variegated with small black spots. The ancients tell us, that it was a certain remedy against the poison of the bite of serpents; but it is now justly rejected. Hill's Materia Medica.

Accept in good part a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which hath the quality to give any wine or water, that shall be infused therein for four-and-twenty hours, the taste and operation of the spaw-water, and is very medicinal for the cure of the spleen and gravel. Wotton.

SERPENT'S Tongue. n. s. [ophioglosson.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SERPET. n. s. A basket. Ainsworth.

SERPINOUS. adj. [from serpigo, Lat.] Diseased with a serpigo.

The skin behind her ear downwards became serpiginous, and was covered with white scales. Wise.

SERPIGO. n. s. [Lat.] A kind of letter.

For thy own bowels, which do call thee sire,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner. Shakesp.

She had a node, with pains, on her right leg, and a serpigo on her right hand. Wiseman.

TO SERR. v. a. [serrer, Fr.] To drive hard together; to crowd into a little space. Not received into use, nor deserving reception.

The frowning and knitting of the brows is a gathering or serring of the spirits, to resist in some measure; and also this knitting will follow upon earnest studying, though it be without dislike. Bacon's Natural History.

Heat attenuates and sends forth the spirit of a body, and upon that the more gross parts contract and serr themselves together. Bacon.

SERRATE. } adj. [serratous, Lat.] Formed SERRATED. } with jags or indentures like the edge of a saw.

All that have serrate teeth are carnivorous. Ray.

The common heron hath long legs for wading, a long neck answerable thereto to reach prey, a wide throat to pouch it, and long toes, with strong hooked talons, one of which is remarkably serrate on the edge. Derham's Physico-Theology.

This stick is usually knotted, and always armed: one of them with a curious shark's tooth near an inch long, and indented or serrated on both edges: a survy weapon. Greav.

SERRATION. n. s. [from serra, Lat.] Formation in the shape of a saw.

SERRATURE. n. s. [from serra, Lat.] Indenture like teeth of saws.

These are serrated on the edges; but the serratures are deeper and grosser than in any of the rest. Woodward.

TO SERRY. v. a. [serrer, Fr. serrato, Ital.] To press close; to drive hard together. For serry, Bacon uses serr; but neither serr nor serry are received.

With them rose
A forest huge of spears, and thronging helms
Appea'r'd, and serr'd shields in thick array,
Of death immeasurable. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout;
Nor serv'd it to relax their serr'd files. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SERVANT. n. s. [servant, Fr. servus, Lat.]

1. One who attends another, and acts at his command; the correlative of master. Used of man or woman.

We are one in fortune; both Fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most. Shakesp

I had rather be a country servant maid,
Than a great queen with this condition. Shakesp. Richard III.

He disdain'd not
Thenceforth the form of servant to assume. Milt.
For master or for servant here to call
Was all alike, where only two were all. Dryden.

2. One in a state of subjection. Unusual.

Being unprepar'd,
Our will became the servant to defect,
Which else should free have wrong'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. A word of civility used to superiors or equals.

This subjection, due from all men to all men, is something more than the compliment of course when our betters tell us they are our humble servants, but understand us to be their slaves. Swift

TO SE'VANT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To subject. Not in use.

My affairs
Are servanted to others: though I owe
My revenge properly, remission lies
In Volscian breasts. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

TO SERVE. v. a. [servir, Fr. servio, Lat.]

1. To work for.

Because thou art my brother, shouldst thou therefore serve me for nought? Genesis xxix. 15.

2. To attend at command.

A goddess among gods ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train. Milton.

3. To obey servilely or meanly.
When wealthy, shew thy wisdom not to be
To wealth a servant, but make wealth serve thee.
Denham.
4. To supply with food ceremoniously.
Others, pamper'd in their shameless pride,
Are serv'd in plate, and in their chariots ride.
Dryden.
5. To bring meat as a menial attendant; with in or up: with in, as meat dressed in the kitchen is brought into another room; with up, as the room of repast is commonly higher than the kitchen.
Bid them cover the table, serve in the meat,
and we will come in to dinner.
Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
Soon after our dinner was serv'd in, which was right good viands, both for bread and meat: we had also drink of three sorts, all wholesome and good. Bacon.
Besmeared with the horrid juice of sepia, they danced a little in phantastick postures, retired a while, and then returned, serv'ing up a banquet as at solemn funerals. Taylor.
Some part he roasts; then serves it up so drest,
And bids me welcome to this humble feast:
Mov'd with disdain,
I with avenging flames the palace burn'd. Dryd.
The same mess should be serv'd up again for supper, and breakfast next morning.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
6. To be subservient or subordinate to.
Bodies bright and greater should not serve
The less not bright. Milton.
7. To supply with any thing: as, the curate serv'd two churches.
They that serve the city, shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel. Ezek. xlvi. 19.
8. To obey in military actions; as, he serv'd the king in three campaigns.
9. To be sufficient to.
If any subject, interest, or fancy has recommended, their reasoning is after their fashion; it serves their turn. Locke.
10. To be of use to; to assist; to promote.
When a storm of a sad mischance beats upon our spirits, turn it into some advantage, by observing where it can serve another end, either of religion or prudence. Taylor.
He consider'd every creature
Most opportune might serve his wiles. Milton.
11. To help by good offices.
Shall he thus serve his country, and the muse
The tribute of her just applause refuse? Tate.
12. To comply with; to submit to.
They think herein we serve the time, because thereby we either hold or seek preferment.
Hooker.
3. To satisfy; to content.
As the former empty plea serv'd the sottish Jews, this equally serves these to put them into a fool's paradise, by feeding their hopes, without changing their lives. South.
Nothing would serve them but riding. L'Estr.
One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
And is at once their vinegar and wine. Pope.
14. To stand instead of any thing to one.
The dull flat falsehood serves for policy;
And, in the cunning, truth itself's a lye. Pope.
15. [Se servir de, Fr.] To serve himself of. To make use of. A mere Galli-cism.
A complete brave man must know solidly the main end he is in the world for: and withal how to serve himself of the divine's high contemplations, of the metaphysician's subtle speculations, and of the natural philosopher's minute observations.
Digby on the Soul.
They would serve themselves of this form. Taylor.
I will serve myself of this concession. Chillingworth.
It is much more easy for men to serve their own ends of those principles, which they do not put into men, but find there. Tillotson.

- If they elevate themselves, 'tis only to fall from a higher place, because they serve themselves of other men's wings, neither understanding their use nor virtue. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
16. To treat; to requite: in an ill sense:
as, he serv'd me ungratefully
17. [In divinity.] To worship the Supreme Being.
Matters hid leave to God, him serve and fear.
Milton.
18. To serve a warrant. To seize an offender, and carry to justice.
19. To serve an office. To discharge any onerous and public duty.
- TO SERVE. v. n.

Israel serv'd for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep. Hosca.
We will give thee this also, for the service which thou shalt serve with me. Genesis, xx. 27.
2. To be in subjection.
Thou hast made me to serve with thy sins;
thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.
Isaiah, xliii. 24.
3. To attend; to wait.
Martha was cumbered about much serv'ing, and said, Lord, dost thou not care that my sister hath left me to serve alone? Luke, x. 40.
4. To engage in the duties of war under command.
Both more or less have given him the revolt;
And none serve with him but constrained things,
Whose hearts are absent too. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Many noble gentlemen came out of all parts of Italy, who had before been great commanders, but now serv'd as private gentlemen without pay.
Knolles's History of the Turks.
5. To produce the end desired.
The look bewrayed, that, as she used these ornaments not for herself, but to prevail with another, so she feared that all would not serve.
Sidney.
6. To be sufficient for a purpose.
Take it, she said; and, when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.
Dryden.
7. To suit; to be convenient.
We have the summary of all our griefs,
When time shall serve to shew in articles.
Shaksp. Henry IV.
As occasion serves, this noble queen
And prince shall follow with a fresh supply.
Shaksp. Henry IV.
Read that; 'tis with the royal signet sign'd,
And given me by the king, when time should serve,
To be perus'd by you. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
8. To conduce; to be of use.
Churches, as every thing else, receive their chief perfection from the end whereunto they serve. Hooker.
Our speech to worldly superiors we frame in such sort as serveth best to inform and persuade the minds of them, who otherwise neither could nor would greatly regard our necessities. Hooker.
Who lessens thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.
First investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs which serve for articulation, and the variety of matter to which those articulations are severally applied. Hooker.
Fashion is, for the most part, nothing but the ostentation of riches; and therefore the high price of what serves to that, rather increases than lessens its vent. Locke.
Our victory only serv'd to lead us on to further visionary prospects. Swift.
9. To officiate or minister: as, he serv'd at the publick dinner.
- SERVICE. n. s. [service, Fr. servitium,
lat.]
1. Menial office; low business done at the command of a master.

- The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his king, and did him service
Improper for a slave. Shaksp. King Lear.
2. Attendance of a servant.
Both fell by our servants, by those men we lov'd most:
A most unnatural and faithless service. Shaksp.
3. Place; office of a servant.
I have serv'd prince Florizel; but now I am out of service. Shaksp.
By oppressing and betraying me,
Thou might'st have sooner got another service. Shak.
These that accuse him are a yoke of his discarded men; very rogues, now they be out of service. Shaksp.
A court, properly a fair, the end of it trade and gain; for none would go to service that thinks he has enough to live well of himself. Temple.
4. Any thing done by way of duty to a superior.
That service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
This poem was the last piece of service I did for my master king Charles. Dryden.
5. Attendance on any superior.
Madam, I entreat true peace of you,
Which I will purchase with my dueous service.
Shaksp.
Riches gotten by service, though it be of the best rise, yet, when gotten by flattery, may be placed amongst the worst. Bacon.
6. Profession of respect uttered or sent.
I am a woman lacking wit
To make a seemly answer to such persons;
Pray do my service to his majesty.
Shaksp. Henry VIII.
7. Obedience; submission.
Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound. Shaksp. King Lear.
God requires no man's service upon hard and unreasonable terms. Tillotson's Sermons.
8. Act on the performance of which possession depends.
Although they built castles and made freeholders, yet were there no tenures and services reserv'd to the crown; but the lords drew all the respect and dependency of the common people unto themselves. Davies's State of Ireland.
9. Actual duty; office.
The order of human society cannot be preserv'd, nor the services requisite to the support of it be supplied, without a distinction of stations, and a long subordination of offices. Rogers.
10. Employment; business.
If stations of power and trust were constantly made the rewards of virtue, men of great abilities would endeavour to excel in the duties of a religious life, in order to qualify themselves for publick service. Swift.
11. Military duty.
When he cometh to experience of service abroad, or is put to a piece or pike, he maketh a worthy soldier. Spenser.
At the parliament at Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in sea-service, had somewhat been shrewdly touch'd, even before the sluices of popular liberty were yet set open. Watson's Buck.
12. A military achievement.
Such fellows will learn you by rote where ser- VICES were done, at such and such a breach.
Shaksp. Henry V.
13. Purpose; use.
All the vessels of the king's house are not for uses of honour; some be common stuff, and for mean services, yet profitable. Spelman.
14. Useful office; advantage conferred.
The stork's plea, when taken in a net, was the service she did in picking up venomous creatures.
L'Estrange.
The clergy prevent themselves from doing much service to religion, by affecting so much to converse with each other, and caring so little to mingle with the laity. Swift.
Gentle streams visit populous towns in their course, and are at once of ornament and service to them. Pope.

That service may really be done, the medicine must be given in larger quantities. Mead.

15. Favour.

To thee a woman's services are due,
My fool usurps my body. Shakesp. King Lear.

16. Public office of devotion.

According to this form of theirs, it must stand for a rule, No sermon, no service. Hooker.

If that very service of God in the Jewish synagogues, which our Lord did approve and sanctify with his own presence, had so large portions of the law and prophets, together with the many prayers and psalms read day by day, as equal in a manner the length of ours, and yet in that respect was never thought to deserve blame; is it now an offence, that the like measure of time is bestowed in the like manner? Hooker.

I know no necessity why private and single abilities should quite jumble out and deprive the church of the joint abilities and concurrent gifts of many learned and godly men, such as the composers of the service book were. King Charles.

The congregation was discomposed, and divine service broken off. Watts.

17. Course; order of dishes.

Cleopatra made Anthony a supper sumptuous and royal; howbeit there was no extraordinary service seen on the board. Hakewill.

18. A tree and fruit. [sorbus, Lat.]

The flower consists of several leaves, which are placed orbicularly, and expand in form of a rose, whose flower-cup afterwards becomes a fruit shaped like a pear or medlar; to which must be added, pennated leaves like that of the ash. Miller.

October is drawn in garment of yellow and carnation; in his left hand a basket of services, medlars, and other fruits that ripen late. Peucham.

SERVICEABLE. adj. [servissable, old Fr. from service.]

1. Active; diligent; officious.

He was sent to the king's court, with letters from that officer, containing his own serviceable diligence in discovering so great a personage; adding withal more than was true of his conjectures. Sidney.

I know thee well, a serviceable villain;
As deuteous to the vices of thy mistress
As badness could desire. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. Useful; beneficial.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, and to make them, in publick affairs, the more serviceable; governors the apter to rule with conscience; inferiours, for conscience sake, the willinger to obey. Hooker.

So your father charg'd me at our parting,
Be serviceable to my son. Shakesp.

His own inclinations were to confine himself to his own business, and be serviceable to religion and learning. Atterbury.

A book to justify the revolution archbishop Tillotson recommended to the king, as the most serviceable treatise that could have been published then. Swift.

SERVICEABLENESS. n. s. [from serviceable.]

1. Officiousness; activity.

He might continually be in her presence, shewing more humble serviceableness and joy to content her than ever before. Sidney.

2. Usefulness; beneficialness.

All action being for some end, its aptness to be commanded or forbiddeu must be founded upon its serviceableness or disserviceableness to some end. Norris.

SERVILE. adj. [servil, Fr. servilis, Lat.]

1. Slavish; dependant; mean.

Fight and die, is death destroying death;
Where fearing dying, pays death servile breath. Shakesp.

From imposition of strict laws to free
Acceptance of large grace, from servile fear
To filial. Milton.

Ev'n fortune rules no more a servile land,
Where exil'd tyrants still by turns command. Pope.

2. Fawning; cringing.

The most servile flattery is lodged the most easily in the grossest capacity; for their ordinary conceit draweth a yielding to their greaters, and then have they not wit to discern the right degrees of duty. Sidney.

She most bend the servile knee,
And fawning take the splendid robber's boon. Thomson.

SERVILELY. adv. [from servile.] Meanly; slavishly.

T' each changing news they chang'd affections
bring.

And servilely from fate expect a king. Dryd. Aur.
He affects a singularity in his actions and thoughts, rather than servilely to copy from the wisest. Swift.

SERVILENESS. } n. s. [from servile.]
SERVILITY. }

1. Subjection; involuntary obedience.

What, besides this unhappy servility to custom, can possibly reconcile men, that own christianity, to a practice widely distant from it?
Government of the Tongue.

2. Meanness; dependance; baseness.

3. Submission from fear.

The angels and dæmons, those by their subserviency, and these by the servility of their obedience, manifestly declared Christ and his apostles to be vested with an authority derived from their Lord. West.

4. Slavery; the condition of a slave.

To be a queen in bondage, is more vile
Than is a slave in base servility;
For princes should be free. Shakesp. Henry VI.

SERVING-MAN. n. s. [serre and man.]
A menial servant.

Your niece did more favours to the duke's servin'-man than ever she bestowed on me.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Just in the nick; the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey;
Each servin'-man, with dish in hand,
March'd boldly up, like our train'd band,
Presented, and away. Suckling.

With Deunis you did ne'er combine,
Not you, to steal your master's wine;
Except a bottle, now and then,
To welcome brother servin'-men. Swift.

SERVITOR. n. s. [serviteur, Fr.]

1. Servant; attendant. A word obsolete.

This workman, whose servitor nature is, being only one, the heathens imagining to be more, gave him in the sky the name of Jupiter; in the air, of Juno; in the water, of Neptune; in the earth, of Vesta and Ceres. Hooker.

Thus are poor servitors,
When others sleep upon their quiet beds,
Constrain'd to watch in darkness, rain, and cold. Shakesp.

Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snale-pac'd beggary. Shakesp.

2. One who acts under another; a follower.

Our Norman conqueror gave away to his servitors the lands and possessions of such as did oppose his invasion. Davies.

3. One who professes duty and obedience.

My noble queen, let former grudges pass,
And henceforth I am thy true servitor. Shakesp. Henry VI.

4. One of the lowest order in the university.

His learning is much of a size with his birth and education; no more of either than what a poor hungry servitor can be expected to bring with him from his college. Swift.

SERVITUDE. n. s. [servitude, Fr. servitus, Lat.]

1. Slavery; state of a slave; dependance.

Aristotle speaketh of men, whom nature hath framed for the state of servitude, saying, They have reason so far forth as to conceive when others direct them. Hooker.

You would have sold your king to slaughter,
His princes and his peers to servitude,
His subjects to oppression and contempt Shakesp. Henry V.

Unjustly thou deprav'st it with the name
Of servitude, to serve whom God ordains,
Or nature: God and nature bid the same,
When he who rules is worthiest. Milton.

Though it is necessary that some persons in the world should be in love with a splendid servitude, yet certainly they must be much beholding to their own fancy, that they can be pleased at it; for he that rises up early, and goes to bed late, only to receive addresses, is really as much abridged in his freedom, as he that waits to present one. South.

2. Servants collectively. Not in use.

After him a comb rous train
Of herds, and flocks, and numerous servitude. Milton.

SERUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. The thin and watery part that separates from the rest in any liquor, as in milk the whey from the cream.

2. The part of the blood which in coagulation separates from the grume.

Blood is the most universal juice in an animal body: the red part of it differs from the serum, the serum from the lymph, the lymph from the nervous juice, and that from the several other humours separated in the glands. Arbuthnot.

SESQUIALTER. } adj. [sesquialtere, SESQUIALTERAL. } Fr. sesquialter, Lat.]

In geometry, is a ratio where one quantity or number contains another once and half as much more, as 6 and 9. Dict.

In all the revolutions of the planets about the sun, and of the secondary planets about the primary ones, the periodical times are in a sesquialter proportion to the mean distance. Cheyne.

As the six primary planets revolve about the sun, so the secondary ones are moved about them, in the same sesquialteral proportion of their periodical motions to their orbs. Bentley.

SESQUIPEDAL. } adj. [sesquipedalis, SESQUIPEDALIAN. } Lat.] Containing a foot and a half.

As for my own part, I am but a sesquipedal, having only six foot and a half of stature. Addison's Guardian.

Hast thou ever measured the gigantic Ethiopian, whose stature is above eight cubits high, or the sesquipedalian pigmy? Arbuthnot and Pope.

SESQUPLICATE. adj. [In mathematics.]

Is the proportion one quantity or number has to another, in the ratio of one half.

The periodical times of the planets are in sesquuplicate proportion, and not a duplicate proportion of the distances from the center or the radii; and consequently the planets cannot be carried about by an harmonically circulating fluid. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SESQUITERTIAN. [In mathematicks.]

Having such a ratio, as that one quantity or number contains another once and one third part more, as between 6 and 8. Dict.

SESS. n. s. [for assess, cess, or cense.]

Rate; cess charged; tax.
His army was so ill paid and governed, as the English suffered more damage by the sess of his soldiers, than they gained profit or security by abating the pride of their enemies. Davies's History of Ireland.

SESSION. n. s. [sessio, Fr. sessio, Lat.]

1. The act of sitting.

He hath as man, not as God only, a supreme dominion over quick and dead; for so much his ascension into heaven, and his session at the right hand of God, do import.

Many, though they concede a table-gesture, will hardly allow this usual way of session.

2. A stated assembly of magistrates or senators.

They are ready t' appear Where you shall hold your session.

Summon a session, that we may arraign Our most disloyal lady.

The old man, mindful still of moan, Weeping, thus bespake the session.

Of their session ended they bid cry The great result.

Call'd to council all the Achaian states, Nor herald sworn the session to proclaim.

3. The space for which an assembly sits, without intermission or recess.

It was contrary to the course of parliament, that any bill that had been rejected should be again preferred the same session.

The second Nicene council affords us plentiful assistance in the first session, wherein the pope's vicar declares that Meletius was ordained by Arian bishops, and yet his ordination was never questioned.

Many decrees are enacted, which at the next session are repealed.

4. A meeting of justices: as, the sessions of the peace.

SESTERCE. n. s. [sesterce, Fr. sestertium, Lat.] Among the Romans, a sum of about 8*l.* 1*s.* 5*d.* half-penny sterling.

Several of them would rather chuse a sum in sesterces, than in pounds sterling.

To SET. v. a. preterite I set; part. pass. I am set. [satgan, or satyan, Goth. settan, Sax. setten, Dut.]

1. To place; to put in any situation or place; to put.

Ere I could Give him that parting kiss which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father.

But that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave constable had set me i' th' common stocks for a witch.

They that are younger have me in derision, whose fathers I would have disdain'd to have set with the dogs of my flock.

He that hath received his testimony, hath set to his seal, that God is true.

They have set her a bed in the midst of the slain.

God set them in the firmament, to give light upon the earth.

She sets the bar that causes all my pain; Ooe gift refus'd, makes all their bounty vain.

The lives of the revealers may be justly enough set over against the revelation, to find whether they agree.

2. To put into any condition, state, or posture.

They thought the very disturbance of things established an hire sufficient to set them on work.

That man that sits within a monarch's heart, Would he abuse the count'nance of the king, Alack, what mischiefs might he set a-bruach!

Our princely general Will give you audience; and wherein It shall appear that your demands are just, You shall enjoy them; ev'ry thing set off That might so much as think you enemies.

This present enterprize set off his head, I do not think a braver gentleman Is now alive.

Ye caused every man his servant, whom he had set at liberty, to return Every sabbath ye shall set it in order.

I am come to set a man at variance against his father.

Thou shalt pour out into all those vessels, and set aside that which is full.

The beauty of his ornament he set in majesty, but they made images; therefore have I set it far from them.

The gates of thy land shall be set wide open.

The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

The shipping might be set on work by fishing, by transportation from port to port.

This wheel, set on going, did pour a war upon the Venetians with such a tempest, as Padua and Trevigi were taken from them.

That this may be done with the more advantage, some hours must be set apart for this examination.

Finding the river fordable at the foot of the bridge, he set over his horse.

To set himself in glory above his peers.

Equal success had set these champions high, And both resolv'd to conquer or to die.

Nothing renders a man so inconsiderable; for it sets him above the meaner sort of company, and makes him intolerable to the better.

Some are reclaimed by punishment, and some are set right by good nature.

The fire was form'd, she sets the kettle on.

Leda's present came To ruin Troy, and set the world on flame.

Set calf betimes to school, and let him be instructed there in rules of husbandry.

Over-labour'd with so long a course, 'Tis time to set at ease the smoking horse.

The punish'd crime shall set my soul at ease, And morn'ring maens of my friend appease.

Love call'd in haste The son of Maia, with severe decree, To kill the keeper, and to set her free.

If such a tradition were at any time endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment.

When the father looks sour on the child, every body else should put on the same coldness, till forgiveness asked, and a reformation of his fault has set him right again, and restored him to his former credit.

His practice must by no means cross his precepts, unless he intend to set him wrong.

If the fear of absolute and irresistible power set it on upon the mind, the idea is likely to sink the deeper.

When he has once chosen it, it raises desire that proportionably gives him uneasiness, which determines his will, and sets him at work in pursuit of his choice on all occasions.

This river, When nature's self lay ready to expire, Quench'd the dire flame that set the world on fire.

A couple of lovers agreed, at parting, to set aside one half hour in the day to think of each other.

Your fortunes place you far above the necessity of learning, but nothing can set you above the ornament of it.

Their first movement and impressed motions demaod the impulse of an almighty hand to set them a-going.

That the wheels were but small, may be guessed from a custom they have of taking them off, and setting them on.

Be frequent in setting such causes at work, whose effects you desire to know.

3. To make motionless; to fix immovably.

Struck with the sight, inanimate she seems, Set are her eyes, and motionless her limbs.

4. To fix; to state by some rule.

Hereon the prompter falls to flat railing in the bitterest terms; which the gentleman, with a set gesture and countenance, still soberly related; until the ordinary, driven at last into a mad rage, was fain to give over.

The town of Bern has handsome fountains planted, at set distances, from one end of the streets to the other.

5. To regulate; to adjust.

In court they determine the king's good by his desires, which is a kind of setting the sun by the dial.

God bears a different respect to places set apart and consecrated to his worship, to what he bears to places designed to common uses.

Our palates grow into a liking of the seasoning and cookery which by custom they are set to.

He rules the church's best dominions, And sets men's faith by his opinions.

Against experience he believes, He argues against demonstration; Pleas'd when his reason he deceives, And sets his judgment by his passion.

6. To fit to musick; to adapt with notes.

Set thy own songs, and sing them to thy lute.

Grief he tames that fetters it in verse; But when I have done so, Some man, his art or voice to shew, Doth set and sing my pain;

And, by delighting many, frees again Grief, which verse did restrain.

I had one day set the hundredth psalm, and was singing the first line, in order to put the congregation into the tune.

7. To plant, not sow.

Whatever fruit useth to be set upon a root or a slip, if it be sown, will degenerate.

I prostrate fell, To shrubs and plants my vile devotion paid, And set the bearded leek to which I pray'd.

8. To intersperse or variegate with any thing.

As with stars, their bodies all, And wings, were set with eyes.

High on their heads, with jewels richly set, Each lady wore a radiant coronet.

The body is smooth on that end, and on this it is set with ridges round the point.

9. To reduce from a fractured or dislocated state.

Can honour set to a leg? no: or an arm? no: honour hath no skill in surgery then? no.

Considering what an orderly life I had led, I only commanded that my arm and leg should be set, and my body anointed with oil.

The fracture was of both the foci of the left leg: he had been in great pain from the time of the setting.

Credit is gained by course of time, and seldom recovers a strain; but, if broken, is never well set again.

10. To fix the affection; to determine the thoughts.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth.

They should set their hope in God, and not forget his works.

Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, the heart of men is fully set in them to do evil.

Some I found wond'rous harsh, Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite.

Set not thy heart
Thus overfond on that which is not thine.

Milton.

When we are well, our hearts are set,
Which way we care not, to be rich or great.

Denham.

Our hearts are so much set upon the value of the benefits received, that we never think of the be-stower.

L'Estrange.

These bubbles of the shallowest, emptiest sorrow,
Which children vent for toys, and women rain
For any trifle their fond hearts are set on.

Dryden and Lee.

Should we set our hearts only upon these things, and be able to taste no pleasure but what is sensual, we must be extremely miserable when we come unto the other world, because we should meet with nothing to entertain ourselves.

Tillotson

No sooner is one action dispatched, which we are set upon, but another uneasiness is ready to set us on work.

Locke.

Minds, altogether set on trade and profit, often contract a certain narrowness of temper.

Addison.

Men take an ill-natured pleasure in disappointing us in what our hearts are most set upon.

Addison's Spectator.

An Englishman, who has any degree of reflection, cannot be better awakened to a sense of religion in general, than by observing how the minds of all mankind are set upon this important point, and how every nation is attentive to the great business of their being.

Addison.

I am much concerned when I see young gentlemen of fortune so wholly set upon pleasures, that they neglect all improvements in wisdom and knowledge.

Addison.

11. To predetermine; to settle.

We may still doubt whether the Lord, in such indifferent ceremonies as those whereof we dispute, did frame his people of set purpose unto any utter dissimilitude with Egyptians, or with any other nation.

Hooker.

He remembers only the name of Conon, and forgets the other, on set purpose, to shew his country swain was no great scholar.

Dryden.

12. To establish; to appoint; to fix.

Of all helps for due performance of this service,
the greatest is that very set and standing order itself, which, framed with common advice, hath for matter and form prescribed whatsoever is herein publickly done.

Hooker.

It pleased the king to send me, and I set him a time.

Neh. ii.

He setteth an end to darkness, and searcheth out all perfection.

Job, xxviii. 3.

In studies, whatsoever a man commandeth upon himself, let him set hours for it; but whatsoever is agreeable to his nature, let him take no care for any set times: for his thoughts will fly to it of themselves, so as the spaces of other business or studies will suffice.

Bacon.

For using set and prescribed forms, there is no doubt but that wholesome words, being known, are aptest to excite judicious and fervent affections.

King Charles.

His seed, when is not set, shall bruise my head.

Milton.

Though set form of prayer be an abomination,
Set forms of petitions find great approbation.

Denham.

Set places and set hours are but parts of that worship we owe.

South.

That law cannot keep men from taking more use than you set, the want of money being that alone which regulates its price, will appear, if we consider how hard it is to set a price upon unnecessary commodities; but how impossible it is to set a rate upon victuals in a time of famine.

Locke.

Set him such a task, to be done in such a time.

Locke.

Take set times of meditating on what is future.

Atterbury.

Should a man go about, with never so set study and design, to describe such a natural form of the year as that which is at present established, he could scarcely ever do it in so few words that we

Woodward.

13. To appoint to an office; to assign to a post.

Am I a sea, or a whale, that thou settest a watch over me?

Job, vii. 12.

As in the subordinations of government the king is offended by any insults to an inferior magistrate, so the sovereign ruler of the universe is affronted by a breach of allegiance to those whom he has set over us.

Addison.

14. To exhibit; to display: with before.

Through the variety of my reading, I set before me many examples both of ancient and later times.

Bacon.

Reject not then what offer'd means: who knows
But God hath set before us to return thee
Home to thy country and his sacred house?

Milton.

Long has my soul desir'd this time and place,
To set before your sight your glorious race.

Dryden.

A spacious veil from his broad shoulders flew,
That set th' unhappy Phaëton to view:
The flaming chariot and the steeds it shew'd,
And the whole fable in the mantle glow'd.

Addison.

When his fortune sets before him all
The pomp and pleasures that his soul can wish,
His rigid virtue will accept of none.

Addison's Cato.

He supplies his not appearing in the present scene of action, by setting his character before us, and continually forcing his patience, prudence,
and valour upon our observation.

Broome.

15. To propose to choice.

All that can be done is to set the thing before men, and to offer it to their choice.

Tillotson.

16. To value; to estimate; to rate.

Be you contented

To have a son set your decrees at nought,
To pluck down justice from your awful bench?

Shakesp.

The backwardness parents shew in divulging their faults, will make them set a greater value on their credit themselves, and teach them to be the more careful to preserve the good opinion of others.

Locke.

If we act by several broken views, and will not only be virtuous, but wealthy, popular, and every thing that has a value set upon it by the world, we shall live and die in misery.

Addison.

Have I not set at nought my noble birth,
A spotless fame, and an unblemish'd race,
The peace of innocence, and pride of virtue?
My prodigality has given thee all.

Rowe's Jane Shore.

Though the same sun, with all-diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flow'r.

Pope.

17. To stake at play.

What sad disorders play begets!
Desp'rate and mad, at length he sets
Those darts, whose points make gods adore.

Prior.

18. To offer a wager at dice to another.

Who sets me else? I'll throw at all.

Shakesp. Richard II.

19. To fix in metal.

Think so vast a treasure as your son
Too great for any private man's possession;
And him too rich a jewel to be set
In vulgar metal for a vulgar use.

Dryden.

He may learn to cut, polish, and set precious stones.

Locke.

20. To embarrass; to distress; to perplex.

[This is used, I think, by mistake, for beset: as, Adam, hard beset, replied.
Milton.]

Those who raise popular murmurs and discon-tents against his majesty's government, that they find so very few and so very improper occasions for them, shew how hard they are set in this particular, represent the bill as a grievance.

Addison.

21. To fix in an artificial manner, so as to produce a particular effect.

The proud have laid a snare for me, they have set gins.

Psalms.

22. To apply to something, as a thing to be done.

Unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury, that the Lord may bless thee in all that thou settest thine hand to.

Deuteronomy.

With whate'er gall thou sett'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never hite.

Dryden.

23. To fix the eyes.

I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and bring them again to this land.

Jer. xxiv. 6.

Joy salutes me when I set

My blest eyes on Amoret.

Waller.

24. To offer for a price.

There is not a more wicked thing than a covetous man; for such an one setteth his own soul to sale.

Ecclus. x. 9.

25. To place in order; to frame.

After it was framed, and ready to be set together, he was, with infinite labour and charge, carried by land with camels through that hot and sandy country.

Knolles.

26. To station; to place.

Cæsus has betray'd
The bitter truths that our loose court upbraid:
Your friend was set upon you for a spy,
And on his witness you are doom'd to die.

Dryden.

27. To oppose.

Will you set your wit to a fool's?

Shakesp.

28. To bring to a fine edge: as, to set a razor.

To point out, without noise or disturbance: as, a dog sets birds.

30. To set about. To apply to.

They should make them play-games, or endeavour it, and set themselves about it.

Locke.

31. To set against. To place in a state of enmity or opposition.

The king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem.

Ezek.

The devil hath reason to set himself against it;
for nothing is more destructive to him than a soul armed with prayer.

Duppa.

There should be such a being as assists us against our worst enemies, and comforts us under our sharpest sufferings, when all other things set themselves against us.

Tillotson.

32. To set against. To oppose; to place in rhetorical opposition.

This perishing of the world in a deluge is set against, or compared with, the perishing of the world in the conflagration.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

33. To set apart. To neglect for a season.

They highly commended his forwardness, and all other matters for that time set apart.

Knolles.

34. To set aside. To omit for the present.

Set your knighthood and your soldiership aside, and give me leave to tell you that you lye in your throat.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

In 1585 followed the prosperous expedition of Drake and Carlile; in the which I set aside the taking of St. Jago and St. Domingo, as surprizes rather than encounters.

Bacon.

My highest interest is not to be deceived about these matters; therefore, setting aside all other considerations, I will endeavour to know the truth, and yield to that.

Tillotson.

35. To set aside. To reject.

I'll look into the pretensions of each, and shew upon what ground it is that I embrace that of the deluge, and set aside all the rest.

Woodw. Nat. Hist.

No longer now does my neglected mind
Its wonted stores and old ideas find:

Fix'd judgment there no longer does abide,
To taste the true, or set the false aside.

Prior.

36. To set aside. To abrogate; to annul.

Several innovations, made to the detriment of the English merchant, are now entirely set aside.

Addison.

There may be
Reasons of so much pow'r and cogent force,

As may ev'n set aside this right of birth
If sons have rights, yet fathers have 'em too.

Rowe.

He shows what absurdities follow upon such a supposition; and the greater those absurdities are, the more strongly do they evince the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow, and consequently the truth of the doctrine set aside by that supposition.

Atterbury.

37. To set by. To regard; to esteem.

David behaved himself more wisely than all, so that his name was much set by. 1 Sam. xviii. 30.

38. To set by. To reject or omit for the present.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had not policy and moral virtue; though the propagation of the faith, whereof we shall speak in the proper place, were set by, and not made part of the case.

Bacon.

39. To set down. To explain, or relate in writing.

They have set down, that a rose set by garlick is sweeter, because the more fetid juice goeth into the garlick.

Bacon.

Some rules were to be set down for the government of the army.

Clarendon.

The reasons that led me into the meaning which prevailed on my mind are set down.

Locke.

An eminent instance of this, to shew what use can do, I shall set down.

Locke.

I shall set down an account of a discourse I chanced to have with one of these rural statesmen.

Addison.

40. To set down. To register or note in any book or paper; to put in writing.

Let those that play your clowns speak no more than is set down for them.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

Every man, careful of virtuous conversation, studious of scripture, and given unto any abstinence in diet, was set down in his calendar of suspected Priscilianists.

Hooker.

Take

One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd, since thou know'st
Thy country's strength and weakness.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

I cannot forbear setting down the beautiful description Claudian has made of a wild beast, newly brought from the woods, and making its first appearance in a full amphitheatre.

Addison.

41. To set down. To fix on a resolve.

Finding him so resolutely set down, that he was neither by fair nor foul means, but only by force, to be removed out of his town, he inclosed the same round.

Knolles.

42. To set down. To fix; to establish.

This law we may name eternal, being that order which God before all others hath set down with himself, for himself to do all things by.

Hooker.

43. To set forth. To publish; to promulgate; to make appear.

My willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear,
Set forth in your person.

Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

The poems, which have been so ill set forth under his name, are as he first writ them.

Waller.

44. To set forth. To raise; to send out on expeditions.

Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to descry the seas.

Abbot.

The Venetian admiral had a fleet of sixty galleys, set forth by the Venetians.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

45. To set forth. To display; to explain; to represent.

As for words to set forth such lewdness, it is not hard for them to give a goodly and painted shew thereunto, borrowed even from the praises proper to virtue.

Spenser.

Whereas it is commonly set forth green or yellow, it is inclining to white.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

So little have these false colours dishonoured painting, that they have only served to set forth her praise, and to make her merit further known.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

46. To set forth. To arrange; to place in order.

Up higher to the plain, where we'll set forth
In best appointment all our regiments.

Shakesp. King John.

47. To set forth. To show; to exhibit.

To render our errors more monstrous, and what unto a miracle sets forth the patience of God, he hath endeavoured to make the world believe he was God himself.

Brown.

To set forth great things by small.

Milton.

The two humours, of a cheerful trust in providence, and a suspicious diffidence of it, are very well set forth here for our instruction.

L'Estrange.

When poor Rutilius spends all his worth,
In hopes of setting one good dinner forth,
'Tis downright madness.

Dryden's Juvenal.

48. To set forward. To advance; to promote.

They yield that reading may set forward, but not begin, the work of salvation.

Hooker.

Amongst them there are not those helps which others have, to set them forward in the way of life.

Hooker.

In the external form of religion, such things as are apparently, or can be sufficiently proved, effectual, and generally fit to set forward godliness, either as betokening the greatness of God, or as beseeching the dignity of religion, or as concurring with celestial impressions in the minds of men, may be reverently thought of.

Hooker.

They mar my path, they set forward my calamity.

Job.

Dung or chalk, applied seasonably to the roots of trees, doth set them forwards.

Bacon's Natural History.

49. To set in. To put in a way to begin.

If you please to assist and set me in, I will recollect myself.

Collier.

50. To set off. To decorate; to recommend; to adorn; to embellish. It answers to the French relever.

Like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

The prince put thee into my service for no other reason than to set me off.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

Neglect not the examples of those that have carried themselves ill in the same place; not to set off thyself by taxing their memory, but to direct thyself what to avoid.

Bacon.

May you be happy, and your sorrows past
Set off those joys I wish may ever last.

Waller.

The figures of the gronpes must contrast each other by their several positions: thus, in a play, some characters must be raised to oppose others, and to set them off.

Dryden.

The men, whose hearts are aimed at, are the occasion that one part of the face lies under a kind of disguise, while the other is so much set off and adorned by the owner.

Addison.

Their women are perfect mistresses in shewing themselves to the best advantage: they are always gay and sprightly, and set off the worst faces with the best airs.

Addison.

The general good sense and worthiness of his character, makes his friends observe these little singularities as foils, that rather set off than blemish his good qualities.

Addison.

The work will never take, if it is not set off with proper scenes.

Addison.

Claudian sets off his description of the eridannus with all the poetical stories.

Addison on Italy.

51. To set on or upon. To animate; to instigate; to incite.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or never discovered it, stoop with despair.

Sidney.

He upbraids Iago, that he made him
Brave me upon the watch; whereon it came
That I was east; and even now he spake Iago set him on.

Shakesp. Othello.

Thou, traitor, hast set on thy wife to this.

Shakesp.

Ba-uch setteth thee on against us, to deliver us unto the Chaldeans.

Clarendon.

In opposition sits

Grim death, my son and foe, who sets them on.

Milton.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misin-formation.

South's Sermons.

The skill used in dressing up power, will serve only to give a greater edge to man's natural ambition: what can this do but set men on the more eagerly to scramble?

Locke.

A prince's court introduces a kind of luxury, that sets every particular person upon making a higher figure than is consistent with his revenue.

Addison.

52. To set on or upon. This sense may, perhaps, be rather neutral. To attack; to assault.

There you missing me, I was taken up by pirates, who, putting me under board prisoner, presently set upon another ship, and, maintaining a long fight, in the end put them all to the sword.

Sidney.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark: He's almost slain, and Rodrigo dead.

Shakesp. Othello.

So other foes may set upon our back.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Alphonsus, captain of another of the galleys, suffering his men to straggle too far into the land, was set upon by a Turkish pirate, and taken.

Knolles.

Of one hundred ships there came scarce thirty to work: howbeit with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them the chase.

Bacon's War with Spain.

If I had been set upon by villains, I would have redeemed that evil by this which I now suffer.

Taylor.

When once I am set upon, 'twill be too late to be whetting when I should be fighting.

L'Estrange.

When some rival power invades a right,
Flies set on flies, and turtles turtles fight.

Set on thy wife to observe.

Shakesp. Othello

54. To set on or upon. To fix the attention; to determine to any thing with settled and full resolution.

It becomes a true lover to have your heart more set upon her good than your own, and to bear a tenderer respect to her honour than your satisfaction.

Sidney.

55. To set out. To assign; to allot.

The rest, unable to serve any longer, or willing to fall to thrift, should be placed in part of the lands by them won, at better rate than others to whom the same shall be set out.

Spenser.

The squaring of a man's thoughts to the lot that providence has set out for him, is a blessing.

L'Estrange.

56. To set out. To publish.

I will use no other authority than that excellent proclamation set out by the king in the first year of his reign, and annexed before the book of Common Prayer.

Bacon.

If all should be set out to the world by an angry whig, the consequence must be a confinement of our friend for some months more to his garret.

Swift.

57. To set out. To mark by boundaries or distinctions of space.

Time and place, taken thus for determinate portions of those infinite abysses of space and duration, set out, or supposed to be distinguished, from the rest by known boundaries, have each a two-fold acceptation.

Locke.

58. To set out. To adorn; to embellish.

An ugly woman, in a rich habit set out with jewels, nothing can become.

We might have repaired the losses of one campaign by the advantages of another, and, after several victories gained over us, might have still kept the enemy from our gates. Addison.

3. Particular; single.

Each several ship a victory did gain,
As Rupert or as Albeinle were there. Dryden.

4. Distinct; appropriate.

The parts and passages of state are so many, as, to express them fully, would require a several treatise.
Davies's Ireland.

Like things to like, the rest to several place Disparted. Milton.

Each might his sev'ral province well command,
Would all but stoop to what they understand. Pope.

SEVERAL. n. s. [from the adj.]

1. A state of separation, or partition.

This substantive has a plural.

More profit is quieter found Where pastures in several be,
Of one silly aker of ground
Than champion maketh of three. Tusser's Husband.

2. Each particular singly taken.

This by some severals
Of headpiece extraordinary, lower messes
Perchance are to this business purblind. Shakesp.
There was not time enough to hear
The severals. Shakesp.

That will appear to be a methodical successive observation of these severals, as degrees and steps preparative the one to the other. Hammond's Fund.

Several of them neither arose from any conspicuous family, nor left any behind them. Addis. Freech.

3. Any inclosed or separate place.

They had their several for heathen nations, their several for the people of their own nation,
their several for men, their several for women, their several for their priests, and for the high priest alone their several. Hooker.

4. Inclosed ground.

There was a nobleman that was lean of visage, but immediately after his marriage he grew pretty plump and fat. One said to him, Your lordship doth contrary to other married men; for they at first wax lean, and you wax fat. Sir Walter Raleigh stood by and said, There is no heat, that if you take him from the common, and put him into the several, but will wax fat. Bacon.

SEVERALLY. adv. [from several.] Distinctly; particularly; separately; apart from others.

Consider angels each of them severally in himself, and their law is, All ye his angels praise him. Hooker.

Nature and scripture, both jointly and not severally, either of them, be so complete, that unto everlasting felicity we need not the knowledge of any thing more than these two may easily furnish our minds with. Hooker.

Th' apostles could not be confin'd
To these or those, but severally design'd
Their large commission round the world to blow. Dryden.

We ought not so much to love likeness as beauty, and to chuse from the fairest bodies severally the fairest parts. Dryden.

Others were so very small and close together, that I could not keep my eye steady on them severally, so as to number them. *Newton's Opticks.*SEVERALTY. n. s. [from several.] State of separation from the rest.

The jointure or advancement of the lady was the third part of the principality of Wales, the dukedom of Cornwall, and earldom of Chester, to be set forth in severalty. Bacon.

Having considered the apertions in severalty, according to their particular requisites, I am now come to the casting and contexture of the whole work. Wotton.

SEVERANCE. n. s. [from sever.] Separation; partition.

Those rivers inclose a neck of land, in regard of his fruitfulness not unworthy of a severance. Curew's Survey of Cornwall.

SEVERE. adj. [severe, Fr. severus, Lat.]

1. Sharp; apt to punish; censorious; apt to blame; hard; rigorous.

Let your zeal, if it must be expressed in anger, be always more severe against thyself than against others. Taylor.

Soor mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve:
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam severe?
Milton.

What made the church of Alexandria be so severe with Origen for, but holding the incense in his hands, which those about him cast from thence upon the altar? yet for this he was cast out of the church. Stillingfleet.

2. Rigid; austere; morose; harsh; not indulgent.

Am I upbraided? not enough severe,
It seems, in thy restraint. Milton.

In his looks serene,
When angry most he seem'd, and most severe,
What else but favour shone? Milton.

Nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Cruel; inexorable.

His severe wrath shall he sharpen for a sword. Wisdom.

4. Regulated by rigid rules; strict.

Truth, wisdom, sanctitude, severe and pure,
Severe, but in true filial freedom plac'd. Milton.

5. Exempt from all levity of appearance; grave; sober; sedate.

His grave rehuke,
Severe in youthful beauty, added grace. Milton.
Your looks must alter, as your subject does,
From kind to fierce, from wanton to severe. Waller.

Taught by thy practice steadily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

6. Not lax; not airy; close; strictly methodical; rigidly exact.

Their beauty I leave it rather to the delicate wit of poets, than venture upon so nice a subject with my severer style. Morc.

7. Painful; afflictive.

These piercing fires are soft, as now severe. Milt.

8. Close; concise; not luxuriant.

The Latin, a most severe and compendious language, often expresses that in one word, which modern tongues cannot in more. Dryden.

SEVERELY. adv. [from severe.]

1. Painfully; afflictively.

We have wasted our strength to attain ends different from those for which we undertook the war; and often to effect others, which after a peace we may severely repent. Swift.

2. Ferrociously; horribly.

More formidable Hydra stands within;
Whose jaws with iron teeth severely grin. Dryden.

3. Strictly; rigorously.

To be or fondly or severely kind. Savage.

SEVERITY. n. s. [severitas, Lat.]

1. Cruel treatment; sharpness of punishment.

I laugh to see your ladyship so fond,
To think that you have aught but Talbot's shadow
Whereon to practice your severity. Shakesp.

He shall be thrown down the Turpeian rock
With rigorous hands; he hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power
Which he so sets at naught. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Never were so great rebellions expiated with so little blood; as for the severity used upon those taken in Kent, it was but upon a scum of people. Bacon.

There is a difference between an ecclesiastical censure and severity: for under a censure we only include excommunication, suspension, and an interdiction; but under an ecclesiastical severity every other punishment of the church is intended; but, according to some, a censure and a severity is the same. Ayliffe.

2. Hardness; power of distressing.

Though nature hath given insects sagacity to avoid the winter cold, yet its severity finds them out. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

3. Strictness; rigid accuracy.

Confining myself to the severity of truth, becoming, I must pass over many instances of your military skill. Dryden.

4. Rigour; austerity; harshness; want of mildness; want of indulgence.

Serv'd up in hall with sewers and seneschals:
The skill of artifice or office mean. Milton.

The cook and sewer each his talent tries,
In various figures scenes of dishes rise. Swift.

2. [From issue, issuer.] A passage for water to run through, now corrupted to shore.

The fennmen hold that the sewers must be kept so, as the water may not stay too long in the spring, till the weeds and sedge be grown up. Bacon.

Men suffer their private judgment to be drawn into the common sewer or stream of the present vogue. King Charles.

As one who long in populous city pent,
Where houses thick, and sewers, annoy the air,
Forth issuing on a summer's morn, to breathe
Among the pleasant villages and farms
Adjoin'd from each thing met conceives delight. Milton.

3. He that uses a needle.

SEX. n. s. [sex, Fr. sexus, Lat.]

 That the captain suppos'd he was curate to Jenny. Swift.

To SHA'CKLE. v. a. [from the noun shackles; schaeckelen, Dut.] To chain; to fetter; to bind.

It is great,
 To do that thing that ends all other deeds;
 Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakesp.

You must not shackle and tie him up with rules about indifferent matters. Locke

No trivial price
 Should set him free, or small should be my praise
 To lead him shackled. Philips.

So the stretch'd cord the shackled dancer tries,
 As prone to fall as impotent to rise. Smith.

SHA'CKLES. n. s. wanting the singular. [jeacul, Sax. schaeckels, Dut.] Fetters; gyves; chains for prisoners.

Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
 His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean. Fairy Queen.

A servant commonly is less free in mind than in condition; his very will seems to be in bonds and shackles, and desire itself under durance and captivity. South.

The forge in fetters only is employ'd;
 Our iron mines exhausted and destroy'd
 In shackles. Dryden's Juvenal.

SHAD. n. s. [clupea] A kind of fish.

SHADE. n. s. [jeabu, Sax. schade, Dut.]

1. The cloud or opacity made by interception of the light.

Spring no obstacle found here nor shade,
 But all sunshine. Milton.

2. Darkness; obscurity.
 The weaker light unwillingly declin'd,
 And to prevailing shades the murmuring world resign'd. Roscommon.

3. Coolness made by interception of the sun.

Antigonus, when told that the enemy had such volleys of arrows that lid the sun, said, That falls out well; for this is hot weather, and so we shall fight in the shade. Bacon.

That high mount of God, whence light and shade Shine both. Milton.

4. An obscure place, properly in a grove or close wood, by which the light is excluded.

Let us seek out some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakesp.
 Regions of sorrow, doleful shades. Milton.

Then to the desert takes his flight;
 Where still from shade to shade the Son of God,
 After forty days fasting, had remain'd. Milton.

The pious prince then seeks the shade
 Which hides from sight his venerable maid. Dry.

5. Screen causing an exclusion of light or heat; umbrage.

Let the arch'd knife,
 Well sharpen'd, now assall the spreading shades
 Of vegetables, and their thirsty limbs discover. Philips.

In Brazil are trees, which kill those that sit under their shade in a few hours. Arbuthnot.

6. Protection; shelter.

7. The parts of a picture not brightly coloured.

'Tis ev'ry painter's art to hide from sight,
 And cast in shades, what seen would not delight. Dryden.

8. A colour; gradation of light.

White, red, yellow, blue, with their several degrees or shades and mixtures, as green, come in only by the eyes. Locke.

9. The figure formed upon any surface corresponding to the body by which the light is intercepted; the shadow.

Envy will merit, as it shade, pursue. Pope.

10. The soul separated from the body; so called, as supposed by the ancients to be perceptible to the sight, not to the touch. A spirit; a ghost; manes.

To Tranchin, swift as thought, the fitting shade
 Thro' air his momentary journey made. Dryden.
 Ne'er to these chambers, where the mighty rest,
 Since their foundation came a nobler guest;

Nor e'er was to the bow'rs of bliss convey'd
 A fairer spirit or more welcome shade. Tickel.

To SHADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To overspread with opacity.

Thou shad'st
 The full blaze of thy beams, and through a cloud Thy skirts appear. Milton.

2. To cover from the light or heat; to overspread.

A seraph six wings wore to shade
 His lineaments divine. Milton.
 And, after these, came arm'd with spear and shield

An host so great as cover'd all the field;
 And all their foreheads, like the knights before,
 With laurels ever green were shaded o'er. Dryden.

I went to crop the sylvan scenes,
 And shade our altars with their leafy greens. Dryd.
 Sing, while beside the shaded tomb I mourn,
 And with fresh bays her rural shrine adorn. Pope.

3. To shelter; to hide.
 Ere in our own house I do shade my head,
 The good patricians must be visited. Shakesp.

4. To protect; to cover; to screen.
 Leave not the faithful side
 That gave thee being, still shades thee and protects. Milton.

5. To mark with different gradations of colours.
 The portal shone, inimitable on earth
 By model, or by shading pencil drawn. Milton.

6. To paint in obscure colours.

SHA'DINESS. n. s. [from shady.] The state of being shady; umbrageousness.

SHA'DOW. n. s. [jeabu, Sax. schaduw, Dut.]

1. The representation of a body by which the light is intercepted.

Poor Tom! proud of heart, to ride over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor. Shakesp.

Life's but a walking shadow, a poor player,
 That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,
 And then is heard no more. Shakesp.

Such a nature,
 Ticked with good success, disdains the shadow
 Which he treads on at noon. Shakesp.

The body, though it moves, yet not changing perceivable distance with some other bodies, the thing seems to stand still, as in the hands of clocks, and shadows of sun-dials. Locke.

2. Opacity; darkness; shade.

By the revolution of the skies
 Night's sable shadows from the ocean rise. Denham.
 His countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and shadow of the eclipse. Addison.

3. Shelter made by any thing that intercepts the light, heat, or influence of the air.

In secret shadow from the sunny ray,
 On a sweet bed of lilies softly laid. Fairy Queen.
 Here, father, take the shadow of this tree
 For your good host. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. Obscure place.

To the secret shadows I retire,
 To pay my penance till my years expire. Dryden.

5. Dark part of a picture.

A shadow is a diminution of the first and second light. The first light is that which proceeds immediately from a lightened body, as the beams of the sun. The second is an accidental light, spreading itself into the air, or medium, proceeding from the other. Shadows are threefold: the first is a single shadow, and the least of all; and is proper to the plain surface, where it is not wholly possessed of the light. The second is the double shadow, and it is used when the surface begins once to forsake your eye, as in columns. The third shadow is made by crossing over your double shadow again, which darkeneth by a third part. It is used for the inmost shadow, and farthest from the light, as in gulf, wells, and caves. Peacham.
 After great lights there must be great shadows. Dryden.

6. Any thing perceptible only to the sight; a ghost; a spirit or shade.

Hence, terrible shadow!

Unreal mock'ry hence! Shakesp.

7. An imperfect and faint representation; opposed to substance.

If substance might be call'd that shadow seen'd.

In the glorious lights of heaven we perceive a shadow of his divine countenance.

Without the least impulse or shadow of fate. Milt.

Amongst the creators are particular excellencies scattered, which are some shadows of the divine perfections. Tillotson.

8. Inseparable companion.

Sin, and her shadow, death. Milton.

Inseparable most with me be long. Milton.

9. Type; mystical representation.

Types and shadows of that destin'd seed. Milton.

10. Protection; shelter; favour.

Keep me under the shadow of thy wings. Psalms.

To SHA'DOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with opacity.

The warlike elf much wou'd'er at this tree,

So fair and great, that shadow'd all the ground.

The Assyrian was a cedar with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud. Ezek. xxxi. 3.

2. To cloud; to darken.

Mislike me not for my complexion;

The shadow'd livery of the burning sun,

To whom I am a neighbour. Shakesp.

3. To make cool, or gently gloomy, by interception of the light or heat.

A gentle south-west wind comes creeping over flowery fields and shadowed waters in the extreme heat of summer. Sidney.

4. To conceal under cover; to hide; to screen.

Let every soldier hew him down a bough,

And bear 't before him; thereby shall we shadow

The number of our host, and make discovery

Err in report of us. Shakesp.

5. To protect; to screen from danger; to shroud.

God shall forgive you Cœur de Lion's death,

The rather, that you give his offspring life,

Shadowing their right under your wings of war. Shakesp.

6. To mark with various gradations of colour, or light.

Turnsoil is made of old linen rags dried, and laid in a saucer of vinegar, and set over a chafindish of coals till it boil; then wring it into a shell, and put it into a little gum arabick: it is good to shadow carnations, and all yellows. Peucham.

From a round globe of any uniform colour, the idea imprinted on our minds is of a flat circle,

variously shadowed with different degrees of light

coming to our eyes. Locke.

More broken scene, made up of an infinite variety of inequalities and shadowings, that naturally arise from an agreeable mixture of hills, groves, and vallies. Addison.

7. To paint in obscure colours.

If the parts be too much distant, so that there be void spaces which are deeply shadowed, then place in those voids some fold, to make a joining of the parts. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

8. To represent imperfectly.

Whereat I wak'd, and found

Before mine eyes all real, as the dream

Had lively shadow'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Augustus is shadowed in the person of Eneas.

I have shadowed some part of your virtues under another name. Dryden.

9. To represent typically.

Many times there are three things said to make up the substance of a sacrament; namely, the grace which is thereby offered, the element which shadoweth or signifieth grace, and the word which expresseth what is done by the element. Hooker.

The shield being to defend the body from weapons, aptly shadowing out to us the countenance of the emperor, which made him proof to all the attacks of pleasure. Addison.

SHA'DOWGRASS. n. s. [from shadow and grass; gramen sylvaticum, Lat.] A kind of grass.

SHA'DOWY. adj. [from shadow.]

1. Full of shade; gloomy.

This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,

I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shak.

With shadowy verdure flourish'd high,

A sudden youth the groves enjoy. Fenton.

2. Not brightly luminous.

More pleasant light

Shadowy sets off the face of things. Milton.

3. Faintly representative; typical.

When they see

Law can discover sin, but not remove,

Save by those shadowy expiations weak,

The blood of bulls and goats; they may conclude

Some blood more precious must be paid for man. Milton.

4. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Milton has brought into his poems two actors of a shadowy and fictitious nature, in the persons of sin and death; by which he hath interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory. Addison.

5. Dark; opaque.

By command, ere yet dim night

Her shadowy cloud withdraws, I am to haste

Homeward. Milton's Paradise Lost

SHADY. adj. [from shade.]

1. Full of shade; mildly gloomy.

The wakeful bird

Sings darkling, and in shades covert hid

Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Stretch'd at ease you sing your happy loves,

And Amaryllis fills the shady groves. Dryden.

2. Secure from the glare of light, or sultriness of heat.

Cast it also that you may have rooms shady for summer, and warm for winter. Bacon.

SHAFT. n. s. [ƿæapƿ, Sax.]

1. An arrow; a missile weapon.

To pierce pursuing shield,

By parents train'd, the Tartars wild are taught,

With shafts shot out from their back-turned bow. Sidney.

Who, in the spring, from the new sun

Already has a fever got,

Too late begins those shafts to shun

Which Phœbus thro' his veins has shot. Waller.

They are both the archer and shaft taking aim afar off, and then shooting themselves directly op-

on the desired mark. More.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow

With vigour drawn must send the shaft below. Dryden.

2. [Shaft, Dut.] A narrow, deep, perpendicular pit.

They sink a shaft or pit of six foot in length.

The fulminating damp, upon its ascension, gives a crack like the report of a gun, and makes an explosion so forcible as to kill the miners, and force bodies of great weight from the bottom of the pit up through the shaft. Woodward.

Suppose a tube, or, as the miners call it, a shaft were sunk from the surface of the earth to the center. Arbuthnot.

3. Any thing straight; the spire of a church.

Practise to draw small and easy things, as a cherry with the leaf, the shaft of a steeple. Peuch.

SHAG. n. s. [ʃæagæʒ, Sax.]

1. Rough woolly hair.

Full often, like a shag-hair'd crafty kern,

Hath he conversed with the enemy;

And given me notice of their villainies. Shakesp.

Where is your husband?

He's a traitor.

—Thou'st, thou shag-ear'd villain! Shakesp.

From the shag of his body, the shape of his legs, his having little or no tail, the slowness of his gait, and his climbing up of trees, he seems to come near the bear kind. Crew.

True Witney broad cloth, with its shag unshorn,

Be this the horseman's fence. Gay.

2. A kind of cloth.

SHAAC. n. s. [phalacrocorax, Lat.] A sea bird.

Among the first sort we reckon shags, duck, and mallard. Covew.

SHA'GGED. } adj. [from shag.]

SHA'GGY. } adj. [from shag.]

1. Rugged; rough; hairy.

They change their hue, with haggard eyes they stare,

Lean are their looks, and shagg'd is their hair. Dry.

A lion's hide he wears;

About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin,

The teeth and gaping jaws severely grin. Dryden.

From the frosty north,

The early valiant Swede draws forth his wings,

In battalions array, while Volga's stream

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,

Her borderers, on mutual slaughter bent. Philips.

2. Rough; rugged.

They pluck'd the seated hills with all their load,

Rocks, waters, woods; and by the shaggy tops

Uplifting, bore them in their heads. Milton's Paradise Lost.

There, where very desolation dwells,

By grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid shades,

She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,

Be it not done in pride. Milton.

Through Eden went a river large,

Nor chang'd his course, but through the shaggy hill

Pass'd underneath ingulph'd. Milton.

How would the old king smile

To see you weigh the paws when tipt with gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders. Addison.

Ye rugged rocks! which holy knees have worn;

Ye grots and caverns shagg'd with horrid thorn! Pope

SHAGREEN. n. s. [chagrin, Fr.] The skin of a kind of fish, or skin made rough in imitation of it.

To SHA'GREEN. v. a. [chagriner, Fr.]

To irritate; to provoke. Both should be written chagrin.

To SHAIL. v. n. To walk sideways. A low word.

Child, you must walk straight, without skiew-

ing and shailing to every step you set. L'Estrange.

To SHAKE. v. a. preterite shook; part.

pass. shaken, or shook. [ƿæacan, Sax.

shecken, Dut.]

1. To put into a vibrating motion; to move with quick returns backwards and forwards; to agitate.

Who honours not his father,

Henry the fifth, that made all France to quake,

Shake he his weapon at us, and pass by. Shak.

I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants. Zech. ii. 9.

I shook my lap, and said, So God shake out every man from his house; even thus he he shaken out and emptied. Neh. v.

The stars fell into the earth, even as a fig-tree casteth her untimely figs when she is shaken of a mighty wind. Rev. vi.

He shook the sacred honours of his head:

With terror trembled heav'n's subdning hill,

And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distil. Dryden

She first her husband on the poop espies,

Shaking his hand at distance on the main;

She took the sign, and shook her hand again. Dry.

2. To make to totter or tremble.

The rapid wheels shake heav'n's basis. Milton.

Let France acknowledge that her shaken throne

Was once supported, Sir, by you alone. Roscom.

3. To throw down by a violent motion.

Macbeth is ripe for shaking, and the powers above

Put on their instruments. Shakesp.

The tyrannous breathing of the north Shakes all her buds from blowing. Shakesp.
When ye depart, shake off the dust of your feet. Matth. x.

He looked at his book, and, holding out his right leg, put it into such a quivering motion, that I thought he would have shaken it off. Tatler.

4. To throw away; to drive off.

'Tis our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age, Conferring them on younger strengths, whilst we Unburthen'd crawl towards death. Shakesp.

5. To weaken; to put in danger.

When his doctrines grew too strong to be shook by his enemies, they persecuted his reputation. Atterbury.

6. To drive from resolution; to depress;
to make afraid.

A sly and constant knave, not to be shak'd.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

This respite shook

The bosom of my conscience. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Be not soon shaken in mind, or troubled, as that the day of Christ is at hand. 2 Thess. ii. 2.

Not my firm faith

Can by his fraud be shaken or sedac'd. Milton.

7. To shake hands. This phrase, from the action used among friends at meeting and parting, sometimes signifies to join with, but commonly to take leave of.

With the slave

He ne'er shook hands, nor bid farewell to him,
Till he unseam'd him from the nape to th' chops. Shakesp.

Nor can it be safe to a king to tarry among them who are shaking hands with their allegiance, under pretence of laying faster hold of their religion. King Charles.

8. To shake off. To rid himself of; to free from; to divest of.

Be pleas'd that I shake off these names you give me:

Antonio never yet was thief or pirate. Shakesp.
If I could shake off but one seven years
From these old arms and legs,
I'd with thee every foot. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Say, sacred bard! what could bestow
Courage on thee, to soar so high?
Tell me, brave friend! what help'd thee so

To shake off all mortality?
Him I reserv'd to be answered by himself, after I had shaken off the lesser and more barking creatures. Stillingfleet.

Can I want courage for so brave a deed?
I've shook it off: my soul is free from fear. Dryden.

Here we are free from the formalities of custom and respect: we may shake off the baughty impertinent. Collier.

How does thy beauty smooth
The face of war, and make even horror smile!
At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows. Addison.

To SHAKE. v. n.

1. To be agitated with a vibratory motion.

Darts are counted as stubble: he laugheth at the shaking of a spear. Job, xli. 29.

2. To totter.

Under his burning wheels
The steadfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton.

3. To tremble; to be unable to keep the body still.

Thy sight, which should Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance with comforts,
Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and sorrow. Shakesp.

What said the wench, when he rose up again?
—Trembled and shook; for why, he stamp'd,
As if the vicar meant to cozen him. Shakesp.

A shaking through their limbs they find,
Like leaves saluted by the wind. Waller.

4. To be in terror; to be deprived of firmness.

He, short of succours, and in deep despair,
Shook at the dismal prospect of the war. Dryden's Æneid.

SHAKE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Concussion suffered.

If that thy fame with ev'ry toy be pos'd,
'Tis a thin web, which poisonous fancies make;
But the great soldier's honour was compos'd
Of thicker stuff, which could endure a shake:
Wisdom picks friends; civility plays the rest,
A toy, shunn'd el' anly, passeth with the best. Herb.

2. Impulse; moving power.

The freeholder is the basis of all other titles:
this is the substantial stock, without which they are no more than blossoms, that would fall away with every shake of wind. Addison.

3. Vibratory motion.

Several of his countrymen probably lived within the shake of the earthquake, and the shadow of the eclipse, which are recorded by this author. Addis.

4. Motion given and received.

Our salutations were very hearty on both sides, consisting of many kind shakes of the hand. Addis.

SHA'KER. n. s. [from shake.] The person or thing that shakes.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise:
He said; the shaker of the earth replies. Pope's Odys.

SHALE. n. s. [corrupted, I think, for shell.]

A husk; the case of seeds in siliquous plants.

Behold you poor and starved band,
And your fair shew shall sack away their souls,
Leaving them but the shales and husks of men. Shakesp.

SHALL. verb defect. [Jceal, Sax. is originally I owe, or I ought. In Chaucer, the faithe I shall to God, means the faith I owe to God: thence it became a sign of the future tense. The French use devoir, dois, doit, in the same manner, with a kind of future signification;

and the Swedes have skall, and the Islanders skal, in the same sense. It has no tenses but shall future, and should imperfect.

The explanation of shall, which foreigners and provincials confound with will, is not easy; and the difficulty is increased by the poets, who sometimes give to shall an emphatical sense of will;
but I shall endeavour, crassa Minerva, to show the meaning of shall in the future tense.]

1. I shall love. It will so be that I must love; I am resolved to love.

2. Shall I love? Will it be permitted me to love? Will you permit me to love?

Will it be that I must love?

3. Thou shalt love. I command thee to love; it is permitted thee to love; [in poetry or solemn diction] it will be that thou must love.

4. Shalt thou love? Will it be that thou must love? Will it be permitted to thee to love?

5. He shall love. It will be that he must love; it is commanded him that he love.

It is a mind, that shall remain.
—Shall remain!

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Mark you
His absolute shall? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

See Romulus the great:
This prince a priestess of your blood shall bear;
And, like his sire, in arms he shall appear. Dryden's Æneid.

That he shall receive no benefit from Christ, is the affirmation where all his despair is founded;

and the one way of removing this dismal apprehension, is, to convince him that Christ's death, and the benefits thereof, either do, or, if he perform the condition required of him, shall certainly belong to him. Hammond's Fundamentals.

6. Shall he love? Is it permitted him to love? [in solemn language.] Will it be that he must love?

7. The plural persons follow the signification of the singulars.

SHALLOON. n. s. A slight woollen stuff.

In blue shalloon shall Hannibal be clad,
And Scipio trail an Irish purple plaid. Swift.

SHA'LOP. n. s. [chaloupe, Fr.] A small boat.

You were resolved, after your arrival into Oroonoque, to pass to the mine; and, to that end, you desired to have Sir John Fearne's shallop: I do not allow of that course, because ye cannot land so secretly but that some Indians on the river side may discover you, who giving knowledge of your passage to the Spaniards, you may be cut off before you can recover your boat. Raleigh.

Our hero set

In a small shallop, fortune in his debt. Waller.

SHA'LOW. adj. [This word is probably compounded of shoal and low.]

1. Not deep; having the bottom at no great distance from the surface or edge.

I had been drowned, but that the shore was shelvy and shallow; a death that I abhor.

Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

That inundation, though it were shallow, had a long continuance, whereby they of the vale, that were not drowned, perished for want of food. Bac.

The like opinion he held of Meotis Palus, that by the floods of Tanais, and earth brought down thereby, it grew observably shallower in his days, and would in process of time become a firm land.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

I am made a shallow forded stream,
Seen to the bottom: all my clearness scorn'd,
And all my faults expos'd. Dryden's All for Love.

Shallow brooks, that flow'd so clear,
The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

2. Not intellectually deep; not profound; not very knowing or wise; empty; trifling; futile; silly.

I'll shew my mind,
According to my shallow simple skill. Shakesp.

This is a very shallow monster:
Afraid of him? A very shallow monster,
The man i' th' moon! A most poor credulous monster. Shakesp.

The king was neither so shallow nor so ill advertised as not to perceive the intention of the French king, for the investing himself of Brittain.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Uncertain and unsettled he remains,
Deep vers'd in books, and shallow in himself. Milt.

One would no more wonder to see the most shallow nation of Europe the most vain, than to find the most empty fellows in every nation more conceited than the rest. Addison.

3. Not deep of sound.

If a virginal were made with a double concave, the one all the length of the virginal, and the other at the end of the strings, as the harp hath, it must make the sound perfecter, and not so shallow and jarring. Bacon.

SHA'LOW. n. s. [from the adjective.] A shelf; a sand; a flat; a shoal; a place where the water is not deep.

I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats;
And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
Veiling her high top lower than her ribs,
To kiss her harial. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

A swift stream is not heard in the channel, but upon shallows of gravel. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Having but newly left those grammatick flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction, and now on the sudden transported, to be tost with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, they do grow into hatred of learning. Milton.

You that so oft have sounded
And fathom'd all his thoughts, that know the deeps
And shallows of his heart, should need no instruments

To advance your ends. Denham.

He sounds and fathoms him, to find
The shallows of his soul. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

The wary Dutch
Behind their treach'rous shallows now withdraw,
And there lay snares to catch the British host. Dry.

Three more fierce Eurys in his angry mood
Dash'd on the shallows of the moving sand,
And in mid ocean left them moor'd a-land.

Dryden's Æneid.

In arms of the sea, and among islands, there is no great depth, and some places are plain shallows.

Their spawn being lighter than the water, there it would not sink to the bottom, but be buoyed up by it, and carried away to the shallows.

Ray on the Creation.

With the use of diligence, and prudent conduct,
he may decline both rocks and shallows. Norris.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

SHALLOWBRAINED, adj. [shallow and brain.] Foolish; futile; trifling; empty.

It cannot but be matter of just indignation to all good men, to see a company of lewd shallow-brained huffs making atheism, and contempt of religion, the sole badge of wit. South.

SHALLOWLY, adv. [from shallow.]

1. With no great depth.

The load lieth open on the grass, or but shallowly covered. Correv.

2. Simply; foolishly.

Most shallowly did you these arms commence,
Fondly brought here, and foolishly sent hence. Shakesp.

SHALLOWNESS, n. s. [from shallow.]

1. Want of depth.

By it do all things live their measur'd hour:
We cannot ask the thing which is not there,
Blaming the shallowness of our request. Herbert.

I cannot wonder enough at the shallowness and impertinent zeal of the vulgar sort in Druina, who were carried away with such an ignorant devotion for his successes, when it little concerned their religion or security. Howel.

SHALM, n. s. [Germ.] A kind of musical pipe.

Every captain was commanded to have his soldiers in readiness to set forward upon the sign given, which was by the sound of a shalm or hoboy. Knolles's History of the Turks.

SHALT, Second person of shall.

To SHAM, v. n. [shommi, Welsh. to cheat.]

1. To trick; to cheat; to fool with a fraud; to delude with false pretences. A low word.

Men tender in point of honour, and yet with little regard to truth, are sooner wrought upon by shame than by conscience, when they find themselves fooled and shammed into a conviction.

L'Estrange.

Then all your wits that flee and sham,
Down from Don Quixote to Tom Tram,
From whom I jests and puns perloit,
And slyly put them off for mine,
Fond to be thought a country wit. Prior.

2. To obtrude by fraud or folly.

We must have a care that we do not, for want of laying things and things together, sham fallacies upon the world for current reason. L'Estrange.

SHAM, n. s. [from the verb.] Fraud; trick; delusion; false pretence; imposture. A low word.

No sham so gross but it will pass upon a weak man, that is pragmatical and inquisitive.

L'Estrange.

It goes a great way when natural curiosity and vulgar prejudice shall be assisted with the shams of astrological judgments.

L'Estrange.

He that first brought the sham, wheedle, or hanter in use, put together, as he thought fit, those ideas he made it stand for.

Locke.

That in the sacred temple needs would try
Without a fire th' unheated gums to fry,
Believe who will the solem sham, not I. Addison.

SHAM, adj. False; counterfeit; fictitious; pretended.

Never join the fray,

Where the sham quarrel interrupts the way. Gay.

SHAMBLE, n. s. [of uncertain etymology; scannaglia, Ital.]

1. The place where butchers kill or sell their meat; a butchery.

Far be the thoughts of this from Henry's heart,
To make a shambles of the parliament-house.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

I hope my noble lord esteems me honest,

—Oh, ay, as summer flies are in the shambles,

That quicken ev'n with blowing. Shakesp. Othello.

He warned a flock of sheep, that were driving to the shambles, of their danger; and, upon uttering some sounds, they all fled. Arbutnot.

2. It is here improperly used.

When the person is made the jest of the mob, or his back the shambles of the executioner, there is no more conviction in the one than in the other.

Watts.

SHAMBLING, adj. [See SCAMBLING.]

Moving awkwardly and irregularly. A low bad word.

By that shambling in his walk, it should be my rich banker, Gomez, whom I knew at Barcelona.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

So when nurse Nokes to act young Ammon tries,
With shambling legs, long chio, and foolish eyes,
With dangling hands he strokes th' imperial robe,
And with a cuckold's air commands the globe.

Smith.

SHAME, n. s. [cream, Sax. schaemte, Dut.]

1. The passion felt when reputation is supposed to be lost; the passion expressed sometimes by blushes.

Lamenting sorrow did in darkness lie.

And shame his ugly face did hide from living eye.

Spenser.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.

—Urge neither charity nor shame to me:

Uncharitably with me have you dealt,

And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd:

My charity is outrage, life my shame;

And in my shame still lives my sorrow's rage.

Shakesp. Richard III.

Hide, for shame,

Romans, your grandsires images,

That blush at their degenerate progeny. Dryden.

In the schools men are allowed, without shame, to deny the agreement of ideas; or, out of the schools, from thence have learned, without shame to deny the connection of ideas. Locke.

2. The cause or reason of shame; disgrace; ignominy.

The more shame for him that he sends it me;

For I have heard him say, a thousand times,

His Julia gave it him at his departure. Shakesp.

God deliver the world from such guides, who are the shame of religion. South.

This jest was first of th' other house's making,

And, five times tried, has never fail'd of taking;

For 'twere a shame a poet should be kill'd,

Under the shelter of so broad a shield. Dryden.

O shame to manhood! shall one daring boy

The scheme of all our happiness destroy?

Pope's Odyssey.

3. Reproach; infliction of shame.

A foul shame is upon the thief. Eccles. v. 14.

The ostracism, and sham'd it out of use. Cleaveland.

Despoil'd

Of all our good, sham'd, naked, miserable. Milton.

What hurt can there be in all the slanders and disgraces of this world, if they are but the arts and methods of providence, to shame us into the glories of the next? South.

Were there but one righteous man in the world,
he would hold up his head with confidence and honour;
he would shame the world, and not the world him.

South.

He, in a loathsome dungeon doom'd to lie,

In bonds retain'd his birthright liberty,

And sham'd oppression, till it set him free. Dryd.

The coward bore the oar immortal spite,

Who sham'd him out of madness into flight. Dryd.

Who shames a scribbler, breaks a cobweb through:

He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew. Pope.

2. To disgrace.

Certes, Sir knight, ye been too much to blame,

Thus for to blot the honour of the dead,

And with foul cowardice his carcass shame. Fairy Q.

To SHAME, v. n. To be ashamed.

Great shame it is, thing so divine in view,

Made for to be the world's most ornament,

To make the hait her gazers to embrew;

Good shames to be to ill an instrument. Spenser.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art ex-traught,

To let thy tongue detect thy base-born heart?

Shakesp.

To the trunk of it authors give such a magnitude, as I shame to repeat. Ral. Hist. of the World.

Cruel Auster thither hied him;

And, with the rush of one rude blast,

Sham'd not spitefully to waste

All his leaves, so fresh, so sweet,

And lay them trembling at his feet. Crashaw.

SHAMEFACED, adj. [shame and face.]

Modest; bashful; easily put out of countenance.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasing, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Conscience is a blushing shamefac'd spirit, that mutinies in a man's bosom: it fills one full of obstacles. Shakesp. Richard III.

A man may be shamefaced, and a woman modest,
to the degree of scandalous. L'Estrange.

Your shamefac'd virtue shunn'd the people's praise,

And senate's honours. Dryden.

From this time we may date that remarkable turn in the behaviour of our fashionable Englishmen, that makes them shamefaced in the exercise of those duties which they were sent into the world to perform. Addison's Freeholder.

SHAMEFACEDLY, adv. [from shamefaced.]

Modestly; bashfully.

SHAMEFACEDNESS, n. s. [from shame-faced.] Modesty; bashfulness; timidity.

Dorus, having had all the while a free beholding of the fair Pamela, could well have defended the assault he gave unto her face with bringing a fair stain of shamefacedness into it. Sidney.

She is the fountain of your modesty;

You shamefac'd are, but shamefac'dness itself is
she. Fairy Queen.

None but fools, out of shamefacedness hide their ulcers, which, if shown, might be healed.

Milton.

5. It is now used in low conversation for manner.

SHA'PELESS. adj. [from shape.] Wanting regularity of form; wanting symmetry of dimensions.

You are born
To set a form upon that indigest,
Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.
Shak.

He is deformed, crooked, old and here;
Ill fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless every where.
Shak.

Thrice had I lov'd thee,
Before I knew thy face or name,
So in a voice, so in a shapeless flame,
Angels affect us oft, and worshipp'd be.
Donne.

Now the victor stretch'd his eager hand,
Where the tall nothing stood, or seem'd to stand;
A shapeless shade, it melted from his sight,
Like forms in clouds, or visions of the night!
Pope.

Some objects please our eyes,
Which out of nature's common order rise,
The shapeless rock or hanging precipice.
Pope.

SHA'PESMITH. n. s. [shape and smith.]

One who undertakes to improve the form of the body. A burlesque word.

No shapessmith yet set up and drove a trade,
To mend the work that providence had made.
Garth.

SHA'PELINESS. n. s. [from shapely.]

Beauty or proportion of form.

SHA'PELY. adv. [from shape.] Symmetrical; well formed.

SHARD. n. s. [scharde, Trisick.]

1. A fragment of an earthen vessel.

For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin chants,
Her maiden strewments.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. [Chard.] A plant.

Shards or mallows for the pot
Keep the loosen'd body sound.
Dryden. Horace.

3. It seems in Spenser to signify a frith or strait. It is used, says Upton, in the west, for a gap.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand,
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phedria's fleet bark, over that per'ulous shard.
Fairy Queen.

4. A sort of fish.

SHA'RDBORN. adj. [shard and born.]

Born or produced among broken stones or pots. Perhaps shard, in Shakespeare, may signify the sheaths of the wings of insects.

Ere to black Hecat's summons
The shardborn beetle, with his drowsy hums,
Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be done
A deed of dreadful note.
Shakesp.

SHA'RDED. adj. [from shard.] Inhabiting shards.

Often shall we find
The sharded beetle in the safer hold,
Than is the full wing'd eagle. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To SHARE. v. a. [r̄ceapan, r̄cynan, Sax.]

1. To divide; to part among many.

Good fellows all,
The latest of my wealth I'll share among you. Shak.
Any man may take trial of his fortune, provided he acknowledge the lord's right, by sharing out unto him a toll. Curew.

Well may he then to you his cares impart,
And share his burden where he shares his heart. Dryden.

In the primitive times the advantage of priesthood was equally shared among all the order, and none of that character had any superiority. Collier.

Though the weight of a falsehood would be too heavy for one to bear, it grows light in their imaginations when it is shared among many. Addison's Spectator.

Suppose I share my fortune equally between my children and a stranger, will that unite them? Swift.

2. To partake with others; to seize or possess jointly with another.

The captain, half of whose soldiers are dead, and the other quarter never mustered or seen, comes shortly to demand payment of his whole account; where, by good means of some great ones, and privy sharings with the officers of other some, he receiveth his debt. Spenser on Ireland.

In vain does valour bleed,
While avarice and rapine share the land. Milton.
Go, silently enjoy your part of grief,
And share the sad inheritance with me. Dryden.

Wav'd by the wanton winds his banner flies,
All maiden white, and shares the people's eyes. Dryden.

This was the prince decreed,
To share his sceptre. Dryden's Æneid.
Not love of liberty, nor thirst of honour,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns and plunder'd provinces. Addison's Cato.

All night it rains, the shews return with day;
Great Jove with Cæsar shares his sov'reign sway. Logie.

3. To cut; to separate; to sheer. [from r̄ceap, Sax.]

With swift wheel reverse deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side. Milton.
Scalp, face, and shoulders the keen steel divides,
And the shar'd visage hangs on equal sides. Dryd.

To SHARE. v. n. To have part; to have a dividend.

I am the prince of Wales; and think not, Percy,
To share with me in glory any more. Shak. H. IV.
Had greater haste these sacred rites prepar'd,
Some guilty mouths had in your triumphs shar'd;
But this untain'd year is all your own. Dryden.

A right of inheritance gave every one a title to share in the goods of his father. Locke.
This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

SHARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Part; allotment; dividend obtained.

If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some with vast excess. Milton.
The subdued territory was divided into greater and smaller shares, besides that reserved to the prince. Temple.

I'll give you arms; burn, ravish, and destroy:
For my own share one beauty I design;
Engage your honours that she shall be mine. Dryden.

While fortune favour'd,
I made some figure; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame, Dryden's Æneid.

The youths have equal share
In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister. Addison's Cato.

In poets as true genius is but rare,
True taste as seldom is the critic's share. Pope.
He who doth not perform that part assigned him, is a very mischievous member of the publick;
because he takes his share of the profit, and yet leaves his share of the burden to be born by others. Swift.

2. To go shares; to partake.

They went a hunting, and every one to go share and share alike in what they took. L'Estrange.

By being desirous that every one should have their full share of the favours of God, they would not only be content, but glad, to see one another happy in the little enjoyments of this transitory life. Law.

3. A part contributed.

These, although they bear a share in the discharge, yet have different offices in the composition. Brown's Vulg. Err.

4. [r̄ceap, Sax.] The blade of the plough that cuts the ground.

Nor laws they knew, nor manners, nor the care
Of lab'ring oxen, nor the shining share. Dryden.
Great cities shall with walls be compass'd round,
And sharpen'd shares shall vex the fruitful ground. Dryden.

Incumbent o'er the shining share
The master leans, removes th' obstructive clay. Thomson.

For clay the coultter is long and bending, and the share narrow. Mortimer.

SHAR'BONE. n. s. [share and bone.]
The os pubis; the bone that divides the trunk from the limbs.

The cartilage bracing together the two ossa pu-bis, or sharebones, Bartholine saith, is twice thicker and laxer in women than men. Derham.

SHAR'ER. n. s. [from share.]

1. One who divides or apportions to others; a divider.

2. A partaker; one who participates any thing with others.

Most it seem'd the French king to import,
As sharer in his daughter's injury. Dan. Civil War.

People not allowed to be sharers with their companions in good fortune, will hardly agree to be sharers in bad. L'Estrange.

An overgrown estate falling into the hands of one that has many children, it is broken into so many portions as render the sharers rich enough. Addison.

You must have known it.
—Indeed I did, then favour'd by the king,
And by that means a sharer in the secret. Rowe.

If, by taking on himself human nature at large,
he hath a compassionate and tender sense of the infirmities of mankind in general, he must needs, in a peculiar manner, feel and commiserate the infirmities of the poor, in which he himself was so eminent a sharer. Atterbury.

I suffer many things as an author militant, whereof in your days of probation you have been a sharer. Pope to Swift.

SHARK. n. s. [canis charcharias, Lat.]

1. A voracious sea fish.

His jaws horriſtick arm'd with threefold fate,
The direful shark. Thomson's Summer.

2. A greedy artful fellow; one who fills his pockets by sly tricks. A low word.

David's messengers are sent back to him, like so many sharks and runagates, only for endeavouring to compliment an ill nature out of itself and seeking that by petition which they might have commanded by their sword. South.

3. Trick; fraud; petty rapine. A low word.

Wretches who live upon the shark, and other men's sins, the common poisoners of youth, equally desperate in their fortunes and their manners, and getting their very bread by the damna-tion of souls. South.

To SHARK. v. a. To pick up hastily or slyly.

Young Fontinbras,
Of unimproved mettle, hot and full,
Hath in the skirts of Norway, here and there,
Shark'd up a list of landless resolute. Shakesp. Hamlet.

To SHARK. v. n.

1. To play the petty thief. A low word.

The fly leads a lazy, voluptuous, scandalous, sharking life, hateful wherever she comes. L'Estr.

2. To cheat; to trick. A low word.

There are cheats by natural inclination as well as by corruption: nature taught this boy to shark, not discipline. L'Estrange.

The old generous English spirit, which heretofore made this nation so great in the eyes of all the world, seems utterly extinct; and we are degenerated into a mean, sharking, fallacious, undermining converse; there being a snare and a trap almost in every word we hear, and every action we see. South.

3. To shark. To fawn upon for a dinner.

SHARP. adj. [r̄ceap, Sax. scherpe, Dut.]

1. Keen; piercing; having a keen edge; having an acute point; not blunt.

She hath tied
Sharp tooth'd unkindness like a vulture here. Shak.

In Ireland have I seen this stubborn Cade Oppose himself against a troop of kerns;
And fought so long, till that his thighs with darts
Were almost like a sharp quill'd porcupine. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs, like a sharp
razor, working deceitfully. Psalms lii. 2.

With edged grooving tools they cut down and smoothen away the extuberances left by the sharp pointed grooving tools, and bring the work into a perfect shape. Mexon.

2. Terminating in a point or edge; not obtuse.

The form of their heads is narrow and sharp, that they may the better cut the air in their swift flight. More.

There was seen some miles in the sea a great pillar of light, not sharp, but in form of a column or cylinder, rising a great way up towards heaven. Bacon.

To come near the point and draw into a sharper angle, they do not only speak and practise truth, but really desire its enlargement. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Their embryon atoms Light arm'd or heavy, sharp, smooth, light, or slow. Milton.

It is so much the firmer, by how much broader the bottom, and sharper the top. Temple.

In shipping such as this the Irish kern,
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
Eye sharp keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn
Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

3. Acute of mind; witty; ingenious; inventive.

Now as fine in his apparel as if he would make me in love with a cloak, and verse for verse with the sharpest witted lover in Arcadia. Sidney.

If we had nought but sense, each living wight,
Which we call brutes would be more sharp than
we. Davies.

Sharp to the world, but thoughtless of renown,
They plot not on the stage, but on the town. Dryden.

There is nothing makes men sharper, and sets their hands and wits more at work, than want. Addison on Italy.

Many other things belong to the material world, wherein the sharpest philosophers have never yet arrived at clear and distinct ideas. Watts.

4. Quick, as of sight or hearing.

As the sharpest eye discerneth night,
Except the sun-beams in the air do shine;
So the best soul, with her reflecting thought,
Sees not herself without some light divine. Davies.

To sharp eyed reason this would seem untrue;
But reason I through love's false opicks view. Dry.
5. Sour without astringency; sour, but not austere; acid.

So we, if children young diseas'd we find,
Anoint with sweets the vessel's foremost parts,
To make them taste the potions sharp we give;
They drink deceiv'd and so deceiv'd they live.

Spenser.
Sharp tasted citrons Median climes produce;
Bitter the rind, but generous is the juice. Dryden.
Different simple ideas are sometimes expressed by the same word, as sweet and sharp are applied to the objects of hearing and tasting. Watts.

6. Shril; piercing the ear with a quick noise; not flat.

In whistling you contract the mouth, and, to make it moresharp, men use their finger.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound strikes so sharp, as you can scarce endure it. Bacon.

For the various modulation of the voice, the upper end of the windpipe is endued with several cartilages to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray.

7. Severe; harsh; biting; sarcastick.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakesp.

How often may we meet with those who are one while courteous, but within a small time after are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very sores and burdens of society! South.

Cease contention: be thy words severe, Sharp as he merits; but the sword forbear. Dryd.

8. Severe; quick to punish; cruel; severely rigid.

There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law Cannot pursue us. Shakesp.

9. Eager; hungry; keen upon a quest.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full gorg'd;
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakesp.

The sharp desire I had
Of tasting. Milton.

10. Painful; afflictive.

That she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is,
To have a thankless child. Shakesp. King Lear.

He caused his father's friends to be cruelly tortured; grieving to see them live to whom he was so much beholden, and therefore rewarded them with such sharp payment. Knolles.

Death becomes
His final remedy; and after life
Tried in sharp tribulation, and refin'd
By faith and faithful works. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. A robber; a plunderer.

They fell all into the hands of the cruel mountain people, living for the most part by the theft, and waiting for wrecks, as hawks for their prey: by these shavers the Turks were stript of all they had. Knolles.

SHA'VING. n. s. [from shave.] Any thin slice pared off from any body.

Take lignum aloes in gross shavings, steep them in sack, changed twice, till the bitterness bedrawn forth; then take the shavings forth, and dry them in the shade, and beat them to powder. Bacon.

By electric bodies I do not conceive only such as take up shavings, straws, and light bodies, but such as attract all bodies palpable whatsoever. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The shavings are good for the fining of wine. Mortimer.

SHAW. n. s. [r̄cua, Sax. schawe, Dut. skugga, Island.] A thicket; a small wood. A tuft of trees near Litchfield is called Gentle shaw.

SHAWFOWL. n. s. [shaw and fowl.] An artificial fowl made by fowlers on purpose to shoot at.

SHA'WM. n. s. [from schawme, Teut.] A hantboy; a cornet; written likewise shalm.

With trumpets also and shawms. Psalms, Common Prayer.

SHE. pronoun. In oblique cases her. [si, Goth r̄eo, Sax. sche, old Eng.]

1. The female pronoun demonstrative; the woman; the woman before mentioned.

She, of whom the ancients seem'd to prophesy,
When they call'd virtues by the name of she;
She, in whom virtue was so much refin'd,
That for allay unto so pure a mind
She took the weaker sex. Donne.

This once disclos'd,
The ladies did change favours, and then we Following the signs, woo'd but the sign of she. Shaksp.

What, at any time, have you heard her say? Shaksp.

The most upright of mortal men was he;
The most sincere and holy woman she. Dryden.

2. It is sometimes used for a woman absolutely, with some degree of contempt.

The shes of Italy shall not betray Mine interest, and his honour. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
Lady, you are the cruell'st she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy. Shak. Twelfth Night.

I was wont
To load my she with knacks; I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

3. The female; not the male.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she bear,
To win thee, lady. Shaksp. Merchant of Venice.
The nightingale, if she would sing by day,
When ev'ry goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shaksp.

He lions are hirsute, and have great manes; the shes are smooth, like cats. Bacon.

Stand it in Judah's chronicles confest,
That David's son, by impious passion mov'd, Smote a she slave, and murder'd what he lov'd. Prior.

SHEAF. n. s. sheaves, plural. [r̄ceap, Sax. schoof, Dut.]

1. A bundle of stalks of corn bound together, that the ears may dry.

These be the sheaves that honour's harvest bears;
The seed, thy valiant acts; the world, the field, Fairfax.

He beheld a field,
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd: the other part sheep-walks and folds. Milton.

The reaper fills his greedy hands,
And binds the golden sheaves in brittle bands. Dryden.

2. Any bundle or collection held together.

She vanish'd;
The sheaf of arrows shook and rattled in the case. Dryden.

In the knowledge of bodies, we must glean what we can; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole sheaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature of whole species. Locke.

To SHEAL. v. u. To shell. See SHALE. Thou art a sheald peasecod. Shak. King Lear.

To SHEAR. preter. shore, or sheared; part. pass. shorn. [ſceapian, ſcýpen, Sax. This word is more frequently written sheer, but sheer cannot analogically form shore or shorn: shear, shore, shorn; as tear, tor, tor.]

1. To clip or cut by interception between two blades moving on a rivet.

So many days, my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks, ere the poor fools will yeau;
So many months, ere I shall sheer the fleece. Shak.
Laban went to sheer his sheep. Gen. xxxi. 19.
When wool is new shorn, they set pails of water
by in the same room to increase its weight.
Bacon's Natural History.

To lay my head, and hollow pledge
Of all my strength, in the lascivious lap
Of a deceitful concubine, who shore me,
Like a tame wether, all my precious fleece. Milt.
The same ill taste of sense would serve to join Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine. Dry.
May'st thou henceforth sweetly sleep!
Shear, swains, oh shear your softest sheep,
To swell his couch! Gay.

O'er the congenial dust enjoind'to shear
The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear. Pope.

2. To cut by interception.

The sharp and toothed edge of the nether chap strikes into a canal cut into the bone of the upper; and the toothed protuberance of the upper into a canal in the nether: by which means he easily sheers the grass whereon he feeds. Grew.

To SHEAR. v. n. [In navigation.] To make an indirect course.

SHEAR. } n. s. [from the verb. It is SHEARS. } seldom used in the singular, but is found once in Dryden.]

1. An instrument to cut, consisting of two blades moving on a pin, between which the thing cut is intercepted. Shears are a larger, and scissors a smaller, instrument of the same kind. Pope uses shears for scissors.

Alas! thought Philoclea to herself, your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings that already is flown away. Sidney.

Why do you bend such solemn brows on me?
Think you I bear the shears of destiny?
Have I commandment on the pulse of life? Shak.
The fates prepar'd their sharpen'd sheers. Dryd.

When the fleece is shorn,
Then their defenceless limbs the brambles tear;
Short of their wool, and naked from the sheer.
Dryden.

That people live and die, I know,
An hour ago, as well as you;
And if fate spins us longer years,
Or is in haste to take the shears,
I know, we must both fortunes try,
And bear our evils, wet or dry. Prior.
How happy should we be if we had the privilege of employing the sheers, for want of a mint, upon foreign gold, by clipping it into half-crowns!
Swift.

Fate urg'd the shears, and cut the sylph in twain,
Eut airy substance soon unites again. Pope.
Beneath the shears they felt no lasting smart;
They lost but fleeces, while I lost a heart. Gay.

2. The denomination of the age of sheep.

When sheep is one shear, they will have two broad teeth before; when two shear, four; when three, six; when four, eight: and, after that, their mouths break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing in the form of the blades of shears.

4. Wings, in Spenser.

Two sharp-wing'd sheers
Deck'd with divers plumes, like painted jays,
Were fix'd at his back to cut his airy ways. Spens.

SHEARD. n. s. [ſceapd, Sax.] A fragment. It is now commonly written shard, and applied only to fragments of earthenware.

In the bursting of it, not a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water out of the pit.
Isaiah, xxx. 14.

SHEARER. n. s. [from shear.] One that clips with shears; particularly one that fleeces sheep.

Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearers feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest. Milton.
Was he to be led as a lamb to the slaughter, patient and resigned as a sheep before her shearers?
Rogers.

SHEARMAN. n. s. [shear and man.] He that shears.

Thy father was a plaisterer,
And thou thyself a shearman. Shakesp.

SHEARWATER. n. s. [laurus niger.] A fowl. Ainsworth.

SHEATH. n. s. [ſcæðe, Sax.] The case of any thing; the scabbard of a weapon.
The dead knight's sword out of his sheath he drew,
With which he cut a lock off all their hair. F. Queen.
Doth not each look a flash of lightning feel,
Which spares the body's sheath, yet melts the steel?
Cleveland.

Swords by the lightning's subtle force distill'd,
And the cold sheath with running metal fill'd.
Addison.

To SHEATH. } v. a. [from the noun.
To SHEATHE. }]

1. To inclose in a sheath or scabbard; to inclose in any case.

This, drawn but now against my sovereign's breast,
Before 'tis sheath'd shall give him peace and rest.
Waller.

In his hair one hand he wreaths,
His sword the other in his bosom sheaths. Denham.
Is this her hate to him, her love to me?
'Tis in my breast she sheaths her dagger now. Dry.

The left foot naked, when they march to fight,
But in a bull's raw hide they sheath the right. Dry.
The leopard, and all of this kind as goes, keeps the claws of his forefeet turned up from the ground, and sheathed in the skin of his toes, whereby he preserves them sharp for rapine, extending them only when he leaps at the prey. Grew.

2. [In philosophy.] To obtund any acrid particles.

Those active parts of a body are of differing natures when sheathed up or wedged in amongst others, in the texture of a concrete, and when extricated from these impediments. Boyle.

Other substances, opposite to acrimony, are called demulcent or mild, because they blunt or sheath those sharp salts; as pease and beans.
Arbuthnot.

3. To fit with a sheath.

There was no link to colour Peter's hat,
Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing. Shak.

4. To defend the main body by an outward covering.

It were to be wished that the whole navy throughout were sheathed as some are. Raleigh.

SHEATHWINGED. adj. [sheath and wing.] Having hard cases which are folded over the wings.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all vaginipennous or sheathwinged insects, as beetles and durs. Brown.

SHEATHY. adj. [from sheath.] Forming a sheath.

With a needle put aside the short and sheathy cases on earwigs backs, and you may draw forth two wings. Brown.

SHECKLATON. n. s.

He went to fight against the giant in his robe of shecklaton, which is that kind of gilded leather with which they use to embroider the Irish jackets.

Spenser.

To SHED. v. a. [ſceðan, Sax.]

1. To effuse; to pour out; to spill.
The painful service, and the drops of blood shed for my thankless count'ry, are requir'd
But with that surname of Coriolanus. Shakesp.
Cromwell I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries. Shakesp.

For this is my blood which is shed for many,
for the remission of sins. Matthew, xxvi. 28.
Some think one general soul fills ev'ry brain,
As the bright sun sheds light in ev'ry star. Davies.
Around its entry nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.
You seem to mourn another lover dead,
My sighs you gave him, and my tears you shed.
Dryden.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause;
'Tis love of honour, and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Drya.
In these lone walls, their days eternal bound,
These moss-grown domes with spiry turrets
crown'd,

Where awful arches make a noon-day night,
And the dim windows shed a solemn light,
Thy eyes diffus'd a reconciling ray,
And gleams of glory brighten'd all the day. Pope.

2. To scatter; to let fall.

Trees that bring forth their leaves late, and cast them late, are more lasting than those that sprout their leaves early, or shed them betimes.
Bacon's Natural History.

So the returning year he blest,
As his infant months bestow
Springing wreaths for William's brow;
As his summer's youth shall shed
Eternal sweets around Maria's head. Prior.

To SHED. v. n. To let fall its parts.

White oats are apt to shed most as they lie, and black as they stand. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SHED. n. s. [supposed by Skinner to be corrupted from shade.]

1. A slight temporary covering.

The first Aletes born in lowly shed,
Of parents base, a rose sprung from a bride. Fairf.
Though he his house of polish'd marble build,
With jasper floor'd, and carved cedar ciel'd;
Yet shall it ruin like the mull's frail cell,
Or sheds of reeds which summer's beat repel.
Sandys.

In such a season born, when scarce a shed
Could be obtain'd to shelter him or me
From the bleak air. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
So all our minds with his conspire to grace
The Gentiles great apostle, and deface
Those state-obscuring sheds, that like a chain Seem'd to confine and fetter him again. Waller.

Those houses then were caves, or homely sheds
With twining osiers fenc'd, and moss their beds.
Dryden.

An hospitable house they found,
A homely shed; the roof, not far from ground,
Was thatch'd with reeds and straw together bound.
Dryden.

Then out he steals, and finds where by the head
Their horse hung fasten'd underneath a shed.
Betterton.

Here various kinds, by various fortunes led,
Commence acquaintance underneath a shed. Swift.
Weak as the Roman chief, who strove to hide
His father's cot, and once his father's pride,
By casing a low shed of rural mould
With marble walls, and roof adorn'd with gold.
Harte.

2. [In composition.] Effusion: as blood-shed.

SHEDDER. n. s. [from shed.] A spiller; one who sheds.

A shedder of blood shall surely die. Ezek. xviii. 10.

SHEEN. } adj. [This was probably SHEENY. } only the old pronunciation of shine.] Bright; glittering; shewy.
A word now not in use.

That lewd ribbald, with vile lust advanc'd,
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin clean,
To spoil her dainty course so fair and sheen. F. Q.
When he was all dight, he took his way
Into the forest, that he might be seen
Of the wild beasts, in his new glory sheen.

Hubberd's Tale.

Now they never meet in grove or green,
By fountain clear, or spangled star-light sheen Shak.
Up arose each warrior bold and brave,
Glistering in filed steel and armour sheen. Fairfax.
Out of the hierarchies of angels sheen,
The gentle Gabriel called he from the rest. Fairfax.
By the roshy fringed bank,
Where grows the willow and the osier dank,
My sliding chariot stays,
Which set with agat, or the azure sheen,
Of turcois blue, and emerald green. Milton.
Or did of late earth's sons besiege the wall
Of sheeny heav'n. Milton.

SHEEN. n. s. [from the adjective.]

Brightness; splendour. Not now used.
Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial sheen. Milton.

Far above, in spangled sheen,
Celestial Cupid, her fam'd son, advanc'd,
Holds his dear Psyche sweet entranc'd. Milton.

SHEEP. n. s. plural likewise sheep.
[ŕeap, Sax. of which the plural was ŕeep; schæp, Dut.]

1. The animal that bears wool, remarkable for its usefulness and innocence.

Fire the brambles, snare the birds, and steep
In wholesome water-falls the fleecy sheep. Dryden.
Of substances there are two sorts of ideas; one of single substances, as they exist separately, as a man, or sheep. Locke.

2. [In contempt.] A foolish silly fellow.
Ainsworth.

3. [In theology.] The people, considered as under the direction of God, or of their pastor.

We are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.
Psalms.

To SHEEPBITE. v. n. [sheep and bite.]
To use petty thefts.

Shew your knave's visage, with a pox to you;
Shew your sheepbiting face, and be hanged. Shak.

SHEEPBITER. n. s. [from sheep-bite.]
A petty thief.

His gate like a sheepbiter fleeing aside. Tusser.
Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly
rascally sheepbiter come to some notable shame?
Shakesp.

There are political sheepbiters as well as pastoral;
betrayers of public trust as well as of private.
L. Estrange.

SHEEPCOT. n. s. [sheep and cot.] A little inclosure for sheep.

Bedlam beggars, with roaring voices,
From low farms, sheepcots, and toils Inforce their charity. Shakesp. King Lear.

Up to a bill anon his steps he rear'd,
From whose high top to ken the prospect round,
If cottage were in view, sheepcot, or herd;
But cottage, herd, or sheepcot none he saw. Milton.

SHEEPFOLD. n. s. [sheep and fold.]
The place where sheep are inclosed.

The bear, the lion, terrors of the plain;
The sheepfold scatter'd, and the shepherd slain.
Prior.

SHEEPHOOK. n. s. [sheep and hook.] A hook fastened to a pole, by which shepherds lay hold on the legs of their sheep.

The one carried a crosier of balm-wood, the other a pastoral staff of cedar like a sheep-hook.
Bacon's New Atlantis.

If you dare think of deserving our charms,
Away with your sheephook, and take to your arms.
Dryden.

SHEEPISH. adj. [from sheep.] Bashful; over-modest; timorously and meanly diffident.

comes abroad, be a sheepish or conceited creature.
Locke.

SHEEPISHNESS. n. s. [from sheepish.]
Rashfulness; mean and timorous diffidence.

Thy gentry bleats, as if thy native cloth Transfus'd a sheepishness into thy story. Herbert.
Sheepishness, and ignorance of the world, are not consequences of being bred at home. Locke.
Without success, let a man be never so hardy,
he will have some degree of sheepishness. Grew.

SHEEPMASTER. n. s. [sheep and master.]

A feeder of sheep.
A nobleman was a great grasier and sheepmaster.
Bacon.

SHEEPSHEARING. n. s. [sheep and shear.] The time of shearing sheep;
the feast made when sheep are shorn.

There happening a solemn festivity, such as the sheepshearings used to be, David begs some small repast. South.

SHEEP'S EYE. n. s. [sheep and eye.] A modest diffident look, such as lovers cast at their mistresses.

Cast a sheep's eye behind you: in before me.
Dryden.

SHEEPWALK. n. s. [sheep and walk.]
Pasture for sheep.

He beheld a field,
Part arable and tilth, whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part sheepwalks and folds.
Milton.

SHEER. adj. [ŕeyn, Sax.] Pure; clear;
unmingled.

If she say, I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheer ale, score me up for the lying'st rogue in Christendom. Shakesp.

Sheer argument is not the talent of the man; little wrested sentences are the bladders which bear him up, and he sinks downright, when he once pretends to swim without them. Atterbury.

SHEER. adv. [from the adjective.] Clean; quick; at once. Not now in use, except in low language.

Thrown by angry Jove
Sheer o'er the crystal battlements; from morn
To noon he fell, from noon to dewy eve,
A summer's day; and with the setting sun
Dropp'd from the zenith, like a falling star,
On Lemnos. Milton.

The sword of Satan, with steep force to smite Descending, and in half cut sheer. Milton.

Due entrance he disdain'd, and in contempt
At one slight bound high overleap'd all bound
Of hill or highest wall, and sheer withiin Lights on his feet. Milton.

Receives her lord. Dryden.

3. [Ŕcoutes, Fr. echoten, Dut.] In a ship are ropes bent to the clews of the sails, which serve in all the lower sails to hale or round off the clew of the sail; but in topsails they draw the sail close to the yard arms. Dict.—Dryden seems to understand it otherwise.

The little word behind the back, and undoing whisper, like pulling off a sheet-rope at sea, slackens the sail. Suckling.

And Ŕeas drove against his flying sails,
Fire rent the sheets. Dryden.

4. As much paper as is made in one body.

As much love in rhyme
As could be cramm'd up in a sheet of paper,
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all. Shak.

When I first put pen to paper, I thought all I should have to say would have been contain'd in one sheet of paper. Locke.

I let the refracted light fall perpendicularly upon a sheet of white paper upon the opposite wall. Newton's Opticks.

5. A single complication or fold of paper in a book.

6. Any thing expanded.

Such sheets of fire, such horsts of horrid thunder
I never remember to have heard. Shak. King Lear.

Bind fast, or from their shelves

Your books will come and right themselves. Swift.

2. A sand bank in the sea, a rock under shallow water.

Our transported souls shall congratulate each other their having now fully escaped the numerous rocks, shelves, and quicksands. Boyle.

Near the shelves of Circe's shores they run,
A dang'rous coast. Dryden.

He call'd his money in;
But the prevailing love of self
Soon split him on the former shelf;
He put it out again. Dryden.

3. The plural is analogically shelves;

Dryden has shelvs, probably by negligence.

He seiz'd the helm; his fellows cheer'd,
Turn'd short upon the shelvs, and madly steer'd.
Dryden.

SHELFY. adj. [from shelf.]

1. Full of hidden rocks or banks; full of dangerous shallows.

Glides by the syrens cliffs, a shelvy coast,
Long infamous for ships and sailor's lost,
And white with bones.
Dryden.

2. I know not well the meaning in this passage; perhaps rocky.

The tillable fields are in some places so tough, that the plough will scarcely cut them; and in some so shelvy, that the corn hath much ado to fasten its root.
Carew.

SHELL. n. s. [ŕeýll, ŕeall, Sax. schale, schelle, Dut.]

1. The hard covering of any thing; the external crust.

The sun is as the fire, and the exterior earth is as the shell of the colipile, and the abyss as the water within it; now when the heat of the sun had pierced through the shell, and reached the waters, it rarefied them.
Burnet's Theory.

Whatever we fetch from under ground is only what is lodged in the shell of the earth.
Locke.

2. The covering of a testaceous or crustaceous animal.

Her women wear
The spoils of nations in an ear;
Chang'd for the treasure of a shell,
And in their loose attires do swell.
B. Jon. Cataline.

Albion
Was to Neptune recommended;
Peace and plenty spread the sails:
Venus, in her shell before him,
From the sands in safety bore him.
Dryd. Albion.

The shells served as moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated, and afterwards freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell.
Woodward.

He whom ungrateful Athens could expel,
At all times just but when he sign'd the shell.
Pope.

Milton.

2. A swain; a rural lover.

If that the world and love were young,
And truth in ev'ry shepherd's tongue,
These pretty pleasures might me move,
To live with thee and be thy love. Raleigh.

3. One who tends the congregation; a pastor.

Lead up all those who heard thee, and believ'd;
'Midst thy own flock, great shepherd, be receiv'd,
And glad all heaven with millions thou hast sav'd.
Prior.

SHEPHERDESS. n. s. [from shepherd.]

A woman that tends sheep; a rural lass.

She put herself into the garb of a shepherdess, and in that disguise lived many years; but, discovering herself a little before her death, did profess herself the happiest person alive, not for her condition, but in enjoying him she first loved;
and that she would rather, ten thousand times,
live a shepherdess in contentment and satisfaction.
Sidney.

These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora Peering in April's front. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

She like some shepherdess did shew,
Who sat to bathe her by a river's side. Dryden.

Ethereal temper, massy, large, and round,
Behind him cast; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon.

2. One that gives protection or security.

3. Defense; protection.

The terror of the Trojan field,
The Grecian honour, ornament, and shield,
High on a pile th' unconquer'd chief is plac'd.

To SHIELD. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To cover with a shield.

2. To defend; to protect; to secure.
Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear
Thy flesh and bones: how'er a woman's shape
Doth shield thee.

Shouts of applause ran ringing through the field,
To see the son the vanquish'd father shield.

Hear one that comes to shield his injur'd honour,
And guard his life with hazard of her own.

3. To keep off; to defend against.
Out of their cold caves and frozen habitations, into the sweet soil of Europe, they brought with them their usual weeds, fit to shield the cold to which they had been inured.

My lord, I must intreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion.

TO SHIFT. v. n. [Of this word the original is obscure: skipta, Runick, is to change.]

1. To change place.
Vegetables being fixed to the same place, and so not able to shift and seek out after proper matter for their increment, it was necessary that it should be brought to them.

2. To change; to give place to other things.
If the ideas of our minds constantly change and shift, in a continual succession, it would be impossible for a man to think long of any one thing.

3. To change clothes, particularly the linen.
She begs you just would turn you while she shifts.

4. To find some expedient; to act or live though with difficulty.
We cannot shift: being in we must go on.

I would advise you to shift a shirt; the violence of action hath made you reck as a sacrifice.

6. To dress in fresh clothes.

As it were to ride day and night, and not to have patience to shift me.

7. To shift off. To defer; to put away by some expedient.

The most beautiful parts must be the most finished, the colours and words most chosen: many things in both, which are not deserving of this care, must be shifted off, content with vulgar expressions.

Struggle and contrive as you will, and lay your taxes as you please, the traders will shift it off from their own gain.

By various illusions of the devil they are prevailed on to shift off the duties, and neglect the conditions, on which salvation is promised.

SHIFT. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Expedient found or used with difficulty; difficult means.

She redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back; at that time seeming the image of innocency against violence.

If I get down and do not break my limbs, I'll find a thousand shifts to get away.

This perfect artifice and accuracy might have been omitted, and yet they have made shift to move up and down in the water.

Not any boast of skill, but extreme shift How to regain my sever'd company,
Compell'd me to awake the courteous echo,
To give me answer from her mossy couch.

A fashionable hypocrisy shall be called good manners, so we make a shift somewhat to legitimate the abuse.

Those little animals provide themselves with wheat; but they can make shift without it.

Our herbals are sufficiently stored with plants, and we have made a tolerable shift to reduce them to classes.

2. Indirect expedient; mean refuge; last resource.
The very custom of seeking so particular aid and relief at the hands of God, doth, by a secret contradiction, withdraw them from endeavouring to help themselves, even by those wicked shifts, which they know can never have his allowance whose assistance their prayers seek.

To say, where the notions cannot fitly be reconciled, that there wanteth a term, is but a shift of ignorance.

3. Fraud; artifice; stratagem.
Know ye not Ulysses' shifts?
Their swords less danger carry than their gifts.

4. Evasion; elusory practice.
As long as wit, by whetting itself, is able to find out any shift, be it never so slight, whereby to escape out of the lands of present contradiction, they are never at a stand.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtildies and sly shifts.

Here you see your commission; this is your duty, these are your discouragements; never seek for shifts and evasions from worldly afflictions; this is your reward, if you perform it; this your doom, if you decline it.

5. A woman's linen.

SHIFTER. n. s. [from shift.] One who plays tricks; a man of artifice.
'Twas such a shifter, that, if truth were known,
Death was half glad when he had got him down.

SHIFTLESS. adj. [from shift.] Wanting expedients; wanting means to act or live.

For the poor shiftless irrationals, it is a prodigious act of the great Creator's indulgence, that they are all ready furnished with such clothing.

SHILLING. n. s. [ſcýlling, Sax. and Erse; ſchelling, Dut.] A coin of various value in different times. It is now twelve pence.

Five of these pence made their shilling, which they called ſcilling, probably from ſcillingus, which the Romans used for the fourth part of an ounce; and forty-eight of these ſcillings made their pound; and four hundred of these pounds were a legacy for a king's daughter, as appeareth by the last will of king Alfred. Camden's Remains.

The very same shilling may at one time pay twenty men in twenty days, and at another rest in the same hands one hundred days. Locke.

Who, with much pains exerting all his sense, Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and pence. Young.

SHILL-I-SHALL-I. A corrupt reduplication of shall I? The question of a man hesitating. To stand shill-I-shall-I, is to continue hesitating and procrastinating.

I am somewhat dainty in making a resolution, because when I make it, I keep it: I don't stand shill-I-shall-I then: if I say 't, I'll do 't.

Congreve's Way of the World.

SHILY. adv. [from shy.] Not familiarly; not frankly.

SHIN. n. s. [ſcina, Sax. ſchien, Germ.] The forepart of the leg.

I bruised my shin the other day with playing at sword and dagger. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

The shin bone, from the knee to the instep, is made by shadowing one half of the leg with a single shadow. Peacham.

His leg, then broke,

Had got a deputy of oak;

For when a shin in fight is cropt,

The knee with one of timber's propt. Hudibras.

As when to an house we come,

To know if any one's at home,

We knock; so one must kick your shin,

Ere he can find your soul's within. Anonymous.

Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers

Irradiate. Milton.

SHINE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fair weather.

Be it fair or foul, or rain or shine. Dryden.

He will accustom himself to heat and cold, and shine and rain; all which if a man's body will not endure, it will serve him to very little purpose. Locke.

2. Brightness; splendour; lustre. It is a word, though not unanalogical, yet ungraceful, and little used.

He that has inured his eyes to that divine splendour which results from the beauty of holiness, is not dazzled with the glittering shine of gold, and considers it as a vein of the same earth he treads on. Decay of Piety.

Say, in what mortal soil thou deign'st to grow?

Fair op'ning to some court's propitious shine,

Or deep with diamonds in the flaming mine? Pope.

SHINNESS. n. s. [from shy.] Unwillingness to be tractable or familiar.

An incurable shinness is the vice of Irish horses, and is hardly ever seen in Flanders, because the winter forces the breeders there to house and handle their colts. Temple.

They were famous for their justice in commerce, but extreme shinness to strangers: they exposed their goods with the price marked upon them, and then retired. Arbutnot.

Into a gulf shot under ground, till part
Rose up a fountain by the tree of life. Milton.
At first she flutters, but at length she springs
To smoother flight, and shoots upon her wings. Dryden.

The broken air loud whistling as she flies,
She stops and listens, and shoots forth again,
And guides her pinions by her young ones cries. Dryden.

Heaven's imperious queen shot down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd. Dryden.

She downward glides,
Lights in Fleet-ditch, and shoots beneath the tides. Gay.

Where the mob gathers, swiftly shoot along,
Nor idly mingle in the noisy throng. Gay.
Not half so swiftly shoots along in air
The gliding lightning. Pope.

9. To feel a quick glancing pain.

SHOOT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act or impression of any thing emitted from a distance.

The Turkish bow giveth a very forcible shoot, insomuch as the arrow hath pierced a steel target two inches thick; but the arrow, if headed with wood, hath been known to pierce through a piece of wood of eight inches thick. Bacon.

2. The act of striking, or endeavouring to strike, with a missive weapon, discharged by any instrument.

The noise of thy cross-bow
Will scare the herd, and so my shoot is lost. Shak.
But come the bow; now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot;
Not wounding, pity would not let me do't. Shak.
As a country-fellow was making a shoot at a pigeon, he trod upon a snake that bit him. L'Estrange.

3. [Scheuten, Dut.] Branches issuing from the main stock.

They will not come just on the tops where they were cut, but out of those shoots which were water-boughs. Bacon.

I saw them under a green mantling vine,
Plucking ripe clusters from the tender shoots. Milt.
Prune oil superfluous branches, and shoots of this second spring; but expose not the fruit without leaves sufficient. Evelyn.

The hook she bore
To lop the growth of the luxuriant year,
To decent form the lawless shoots to bring,
And teach th' obedient branches where to spring. Pope.

Now, should my praises owe their truth
To beauty, dress, or paint, or youth,
'Twere grafting on an annual stock,
That mast our expectations mock;
And, making one luxuriant shoot,
Die the next year for want of root. Swift.
Pride push'd forth buds at ev'ry branching shoot,
And virtue shrunk almost beneath the root. Harte.

S H O

SHOOTER. n. s. [from shoot.] One that shoots; an archer; a gunner.

The shooter ewe, the broad-leaf'd sycamore. Fairfax.

We are shooters both, and thou dost deign
To enter combat with us, and contest
With thine own clay. Herbert.

The king with gifts a vessel stores;
And next to reconcile the shooter God,
Within her hollow sides the sacrifice he stow'd. Dryden.

SHOP. n. s. [ſceop, Sax. a magazine; es-choppe, Fr. shopa, low Lat. Ainsworth.]

1. A place where any thing is sold.

Our windows are broke down,
And we for fear compell'd to shut our shops. Shak.
In his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff, and other skins
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakesp.
Scarce any sold in shops could be relied on as faithfully prepared. Boyle.

His shop is his element, and he cannot with any enjoyment of himself live out of it. South's Serm.

What a strange thing is it, that a little health, or the poor business of a shop, should keep us so senseless of these great things that are coming so fast upon us! Law.

2. A room in which manufactures are carried on.

Your most grave helly thus answer'd:
True is it, my incorporate friends,
That I receive the general food at first,
Which you do live upon; and fit it is,
Because I am the storehouse and the shop
Of the whole body. Shakesp.

We have divers mechanical arts and stuffs made by them; and shops for such as are not brought into vulgar use. Bacon.

SHOPBOARD. n. s. [shop and board.]

Bench on which any work is done.

That beastly rabble, that came down
From all the garrets in the town,
And stalls, and shopboards, in vast swarms,
With new-chalk'd bills, and rusty arms. Hudibras.

It dwells not in shops or workhouses; nor till the late age was it ever known that any one served seven years to a smith or a taylor, that he should commence doctor or divine from the shopboard or the anvil; or from whistling to a team come to preach to a congregation. South's Sermons.

SHOPBOOK. n. s. [shop and book.] Book in which a tradesman keeps his accounts.

They that have wholly neglected the exercise of their understandings, will be as unfit for it, as one unpractised in figures to cast up a shopbook. Locke.

SHOPKEEPER. n. s. [shop and keep.] A trader who sells in a shop; not a merchant, who only deals by wholesale.

Nothing is more common than to hear a shop-keeper desiring his neighbour to have the goodness to tell him what is a clock. Addison.

SHOPMAN. n. s. [shop and man.] A petty trader.

Garth, generous as his muse, prescribes and gives;
The shopman sells, and by destruction lives. Dryden.

SHORE. The preterite of shear.

I'm glad thy father's dead:
Thy match was mortal to him, and pure grief
Shore his old thread in twain. Shakesp.

SHORE. n. s. [ſceope, Sax.]

1. The coast of the sea.
Sea cover'd sea; Milton.
Sea without shore.

2. The bank of a river. A licentious use.
Beside the fruitful shore of muddy Nile,
Upon a sunny bank outstretch'd lay,
In monstrous length, a mighty crocodile. Spenser.

3. A drain; properly sewer.

4. [Schooren, Dut. to prop.] The support of a building; a buttress.

When I use the word shore, I may intend thereby a coast of land near the sea, or a drain to carry off water, or a prop to support a building.

Watts's Logick.

To SHORE. v. a. [schooren, Dut.]

1. To prop; to support.

They undermined the wall, and, as they wrought, shored it up with timber. Knolles

He did not much strengthen his own subsistence in court, but stood there on his own feet, for the most of his allies rather leaned upon him than shored him up. Wotton.

There was also made a shoring or under-propping act for the benevolence; to make the suits which any person had agreed to pay leviable by course of law. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To set on shore. Not in use.

I will bring these two blind ones aboard him; if from sin to God; the casting off all our former evils, and, instead thereof, constantly practising all those christian duties which God requireth of us. Duty of Man.

If he meet with no reply, you may conclude that I trust to the goodness of my cause: the short on 't is, 'tis indifferent to your humble servant whatever your party says. Dryden.

From Medway's pleasing stream
To Severi's roar be thine:

In short, restore my love, and share my kingdom. Dryden.

The proprieties and delicacies of the English are known to few: 'tis impossible even for a good wit to understand and practise them, without the help of a liberal education and long reading; in short, without wearing off the rust which he contracted while he was laying in a stock of learning. Dryden.

The short is, to speak all in a word, the possibility of being found in a salvable state cannot be sufficiently secured, without a possibility of always persevering in it. Norris.

To see whole bodies of men breaking a constitution; in short, to be encompassed with the greatest dangers from without, to be torn by many virulent factions within, then to be secure and senseless, are the most likely symptoms, in a state of sickness unto death. Swift.

SHORT. adv. [It is, I think, only used in composition.] Not long.

SHORTHAND. n. s. [short and hand.]
A method of writing in compendious characters.

Your follies and debauches change
With such a whirl, the poets of your age
Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage;
Unless each vice in shorthand they indite,
Ev'n as nocht 'prentices whole sermons write.

Boys have but little use of shorthand, and should by no means practise it, till they can write perfectly well. Locke.

In shorthand skill'd, where little marks comprise Whole words, a sentence in a letter lies. Creech
As the language of the face is universal, so 'tis very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it:
'tis the shorthand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier.

SHORTLIVED. adj. [short and live.] Not living or lasting long.

Unhappy parent of a shortliv'd son!
Why loads he this embitter'd life with shame?

The joyful shortliv'd news soon spread around,
Took the same train. Dryden.

Some vices promise a great deal of pleasure in the commission; but then, at best, it is but short-lived and transient, a sudden flash presently extinguished.

The frequent alterations in publick proceedings, the variety of shortlived favourites that prevailed in their several turns under the government of her successors, have broken us into these unhappy distinctions. Addison's Freeholder.

A piercing torment that shortlived pleasure of yours must bring upon me, from whom you never received offence. Addison.

All those graces
The common fate of mortal charms may find;
Content our shortliv'd praises to engage,
The joy and wonder of a single age. Addison.

Admiration is a shortlived passion that immediately decays upon growing familiar with its object, unless it be still fed with fresh discoveries.

Then palaces shall rise; the joyful son
Shall finish what his shortlived sire begun. Pope.

SHORTLY. adv. [from short.]1. Quickly; soon; in a little time. It is commonly used relatively of future time, but Clarendon seems to use it absolutely.

I must leave thee, love, and shortly ton. Shakespeare.
Thou art no friend to God, or to the king;
Open the gates, or I'll shut thee out shortly.

The armies came shortly in view of each other. Clarendon.

The time will shortly come, wherein you shall more rejoice for that little you have expended for the benefit of others, than in that which by so long toil you shall have saved. Calamy.

He celebrates the anniversary of his father's funeral, and shortly after arrives at Cumæ. Dryden.
Ev'n he, whose soul now melts in mournful lays,

Shall shortly want the generous tear he pays. Pope.

2. In a few words; briefly.

I could express them more shortly this way than in prose, and much of the force as well as grace of arguments depends on their conciseness. Pope.

SHORTNESS. n. s. [from short.]

1. The quality of being short, either in time or space.

I'll make a journey twice as far, t' enjoy A second night of such sweet shortness, which Was mine in Britain. Shakespeare, Cymbeline.

The rolling billows beat the ragged shore,

As they the earth would shoulder from her seat. Fairy Queen.

Dudman, a well-known foreland to most sailors, here shoulders out the ocean, to shape the same a large bosom between itself. Carew's Surv. of Cornw.

You debase yourself,

To think of mixing with th' ignoble herd:

What, shall the people know their god-like prince

Headed a rabble, and profan'd his person,

Shoulder'd with filth? Dryden.

So vast the navy now at anchor rides,

That underneath it the press'd waters fail,

And, with its weight, it shoulders off the tides. Dry.

Around her numberless the rabble flow'd,

Should'ring each other, crowding for a view. Roue's Jane Shore.

When Hopkins dies, a thousand lights attend

The wretch who living sav'd a candle's end;

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,

Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To put upon the shoulder.

Archimedes's lifting up Marcellus's ships finds little more credit than that of the giants shouldering mountains. Glanville.

SHOULDERBELT. n. s. [shoulder and belt.]

A belt that comes across the shoulder.

Thou hast an ulcer which no leach can heal,

Though thy broad shoulderbelt the wound conceal. Dryden.

SHOULDERBLADE. n. s. The scapula; the plate bone to which the arm is connected.

If I have lifted up my hand against the fatherless when I saw my help in the gate, then let mine arm fall from my shoulderblade, and mine arm be broken from the bone. Job, xxxi. 22.

SHOULDERCLAPPER. n. s. [shoulder and clap.] One who affects familiarity, or one that mischiefs privily.

A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;

A back friend, a shoulderclapper, one that commands

The passages of alleys. Shakesp. Comedy of Errors.

SHO'ULDERSHOTTEN. adj. [shoulder and shot.] Strained in the shoulder.

His horse waid in the back, and shouldershotten.
Shakesp.

SHO'ULDERSLIP. n. s. [shoulder and slip.] Dislocation of the shoulder.

The horse will take so much care of himself as to come off with only a strain or a shoulderslip.
Swift.

To SHOUT. v. n. [a word of which no etymology is known.] To cry in triumph or exhortation.

They shouted thrice: what was the last cry for?
Shakesp.

Shout unto God with the voice of triumph.
Psalm xlvii. 1.

It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery.
Ex. xxxii.

The shouting for thy summer fruits and harvest is fallen.
Isaiah.

He storms and shouts; but flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow:

They miss, or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay.
Waller.

There had been nothing but howlings and shoutings of poor naked men, belabouring one another with snagged sticks.
More.

All, clad in skins of beasts, the jav'lin bear;
And shrieks and shoutings rend the suff'ring air.
Dryden.

What hinders you to take the man you love?
The people will be glad, the soldiers shout;

And Bertran, though repining, will be aw'd.
Dryden.

SHOUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A loud and vehement cry of triumph or exhortation.

Thanks, gentle citizens:

This general applause, and cheerful shout;
Argues your wisdom and your love to Richard.
Shakesp.

The Rhadians, seeing the enemy turn their backs, gave a great shout in derision.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

Then he might have died of all admir'd,
And his triumphant soul with shouts expir'd.
Dryden.

SHO'UTER. n. s. [from shout.] He who shouts.

A peal of loud applause rang out,
And thinn'd the air, till even the birds fell down
Upon the shouters head.
Dryden's Cleomenes.

To SHOW. v. a. pret. showed and shown; part. pass. shown. [See apan, Sax. schouwen, Dut.] This word is frequently written shew; but since it is always pronounced, and often written, show, which is favoured likewise by the Dut. schowen, I have adjusted the orthography to the pronunciation.]

1. To exhibit to view as an agent.

If I do feign,

O let me in my present wildness die,
And never live to shew th' incredulous world
The noble change that I have purpos'd.
Sh. H. IV.

Wilt thou shew wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee? Psalm lxxxviii. 10.

Men should not take a charge upon them that they are not fit for, as if singing, dancing, and shewing of tricks, were qualifications for a govern-nor.
L'Estrange.

I through the ample air, in triumph high,
Shall lead hell captive, maugre hell, and show
The powers of darkness bound.
Milton.

2. To afford to the eye or notice, as a thing containing or exhibiting.

Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence, and what can heav'n shew more?
Milton.

A mirror in one hand collective shews,
Varied and multiplied, the groupe of woes.
Savage.

3. To make to see.

Not higher that hill, nor wider, looking round,
Whereon for different cause the tempter set
Our second Adam in the wilderness,
To show him all earth's kingdoms and their glory.
Milton.

Yet him, God the most high vouchsafes
To call by vision from his father's house,
His kindred and false gods, into a land
Which he will show him.
Milton.

4. To make to perceive.

Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail, and snow,
Which now the sky with various face begins
To show us in this mountain, while the winds Blow moist and keen.
Milton.

5. To make to know.

Him the Most High,
Rapt in a balmy cloud with winged steeds
Did, as thou saw'st, receive, to walk with God
High in salvation and the climes of bliss,
Exempt from death; to show thee what reward Awaits the good.
Milton.

A shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night, when vapours fir'd Impress the air, and shows the mariner
From what point of his compass to beware
Impetuous winds.
Milton.

Know, I am sent
To show thee what shall come in future days
To thee and to thy offspring; good with bad
Expect to hear.
Milton.

6. To give proof of; to prove.

This I urge to show
Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd.
Milton.
I'll to the citadel repair,
And show my duty by my timely care.
Dryden.
Aelates' diligence his duty shows.
Dryden.

7. To publish; to make publick; to proclaim.

Ye are a chosen generation, that ye should shew forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness.
1 Peter, ii.

8. To inform; to teach: with of.

I shall no more speak in proverbs, but shew you plainly of the father.
Job, xvi. 25.

9. To make known.

I raised thee up to shew in thee my power.
Ex. ix. 16.

Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and color serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to warn all creatures from thee.
Milton.

10. To conduct. To show, in this sense, is to show the way.

She taking him for some cautious city patient, that came for privacy, shews him into the dining-room.
Swift.

11. To offer; to afford.

To him that is afflicted, pity should be shewed
from his friend.
Job, vi. 14.

Felix willing to shew the Jews a pleasure, left Paul bound.
Acts, xxiv. 27.

Thou shalt utterly destroy them; make no covenant with them, nor shew mercy unto them.
Deut. vii. 2.

12. To explain; to expound.

Forasmuch as knowledge and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same, Daniel let him be called.
Dan. v. 12.

13. To discover; to point out.

Why stand we longer shivering under fears,
That show no end but death?
Milton.

To SHOW. v. n.

1. To appear; to look; to be in appearance.

She shews a body rather than a life,
A statue than a brother.
Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
Just such she shows before a rising storm.
Dry.
Still on we press; and here renew the carriage,
So great, that in the stream the moon show'd purple.
Philips.

2. To have appearance; to become well or ill.

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text,
Than now to see you here, an iron man,
Cheering a rout of rebels with your drum.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

SHOW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A spectacle; something publickly exposed to view for money.

I do not know what she may produce me; but, provided it be a show, I shall be very well satisfied.
Addison.

The dwarf kept the gates of the show room.
Arbutnot.

2. Superficial appearance; not reality.

Mild heav'n
Disapproves that care, though wise in show,
That with superfluous burden loads the day.
Milt.

3. Ostentatious display.

Nor doth his grandeur and majestic show
Of luxury, though call'd magnificence, Allure mine eye.
Milton's Par. Reg.

Stand before her in a golden dream;
Set all the pleasures of the world to show,
And in vain joys let her loose spirits flow.
Dryden.

The radiant sun
Sends from above ten thousand blessings down,
Nor is he set so high for shew alone.
Granville.

Never was a charge maintained with such a show of gravity, which had a slighter foundation.
Atterbury.

I envy none their pageantry and show,
I envy none the gilding of their woe.
Young.

4. Object attracting notice.

The city itself makes the noblest show of any in the world: the houses are most of them painted on the outside, so that they look extremely gay and lively.
Addison.

5. Publick appearance: contrary to concealment.

Jesus, rising from his grave,
Spoil'd principalities and pow'rs, triumph'd
In open show, and with ascension bright Captivity led captive.
Milton.

6. Semblance; likeness.

When devils will their blackest sins put on
They do suggest at first with heav'nly shews.
Shakesp. Othello.

He through past the midst unmark'd,
In show plebeian angel militant.
Milton.

7. Speciousness; plausibility.

The places of Ezechiel have some show in them, for there the Lord commanded the Levites, which had committed idolatry, to be put from their dignity, and serve in inferior ministries.
Whitgift.

The kindred of the slain forgive the deed;
But a short exile must for show precede.
Dryden.

8. External appearance.

Shall I say O Zelmane? Alas, your words be against it. Shall I say prince Pyrocles? Wretch that I am, your show is manifest against it.
Sidney.

Fierce was the fight on the proud Belgians side,
For honour, which they seldom sought before;
But now they by their own vain boasts were tied,
And forc'd, at least in shew, to prize it more.
Dryden.

9. Exhibition to view.

I have a letter from her,
The mirth thereof 's so larded with my matter,
That neither singly can be manifested,
Without the shew of both.
Shakesp.

10. Pomp; magnificent spectacle.

As for triumphs, masks, feasts, and such shews, men need not be put in mind of them.
Bacon.

11. Phantoms; not realities.

What you saw was all a fairy show;
And all those airy shapes you now behold
Were human bodies once.
Dryden.

12. Representative action.

Florio was so overwhelmed with happiness, that he could not make a reply; but expressed in dumb show those sentiments of gratitude that were too big for utterance.
Addison.

SHO'WBREAD or SHE'WBREAD. n. s. [show and bread.] Among the Jews, they thus called loaves of bread that the priest of the week put every Sabbath day upon the golden table, which was in the sanctuary before the Lord. They were covered with leaves of gold, and were twelve in number, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. They served them up hot, and at the same time took away the stale ones, and which could not be eaten but by the priest alone. This offering was accompanied with frankincense and salt. Calmet.

Set upon the table shoubread before me. Exodus, xxv. 30.

SHOW'ER. n. s. [scheure, Dut.]

1. Rain either moderate or violent.

If the boy have not a woman's gift,
To rain a shower of commanded tears,
An onion will do well for such a shift. Shakesp.
The ancient cinnamon was, while it grew, the driest; and in showers it prospered worst. Bacon.

2. Storm of any thing falling thick.

I'll set thee in a shower of gold, and hail Rich pearls upon thee. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
Give me a storm; if it be love,
Live Danaë in the golden shower,
I swim in pleasure. Carew.

With show'rs of stones he drives them far away;
The scatt'ring dops around at distance bay. Pope.

3. Any very liberal distribution.

He and myself
Have travell'd in the great show'r of your gifts,
And sweetly felt it. Shakesp. Timon.

To SHOW'ER. r. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wet or drown with rain.

Serve they as a flow'ry verge, to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth? Milt.
The sun more glad impress'd his beams,
Than in fair evening cloud, or humid bow,
When God hath shower'd the earth. Milton's Par. L.

2. To pour down.

These, lull'd by nightingales, embracing slept;
And on their naked limbs the flow'ry roof
Shower'd roses, which the morn repair'd.
Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To distribute or scatter with great liberality.

After this fair discharge, all civil honours having showered on him before, there now fell out occasion to action. Wotton.

Cesar's favour,
That show'rs down greatness on his friends, will raise me
To Rome's first honours. Addison's Cato.

To SHOW'ER. v. n. To be rainy.

SHOW'ERY. adj. [from shower.] Rainy.
A hilly field, where the stubble is standing, set on fire in the showery season, will put forth mushrooms.
Bacon.

Murrans came from Anxur's show'ry height,
With ragged rocks and stony quarries white,
Seated on hills. Addison on Italy.

The combat thickens, like the storm that flies
From westward, when the show'ry winds arise.
Addison.

SHOW'ISH. adj. [from show.]

1. Splendid; gaudy.

The escutcheons of the company are showish, and will look magnificent. Swift.

2. Ostentatious.

SHOWN. [pret. and part. pass. of To show.]
Exhibited.

Mercy shown on man by him seduc'd. Milton.

SHOW'Y. adj. [from show.] Ostentatious.

Men of warm imaginations neglect solid and substantial happiness for what is showy and superficial. Addison.

SHRANK. The preterite of shrink.

The children of Israel eat not of the sinew which shrank upon the hollow of the thigh. Gen. xxxii. 32.

To SHRED. v. a. pret. shred. [rpeabadan, Sax.] To cut into small pieces. Commonly used of cloth or herbs.

It hath a number of short cuts or shreddings, which may be better called wishes than prayers.
Hooker.

S H R

One gathered wild gourds, and shred them. 2 Kings.
Where did you whet your knife to-night, he cries,
And shred the leeks that in your stomach rise?
Dryden's Juvenal.

SHRED. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A small piece cut off.

Gold, grown somewhat churlish by recovering, is made more pliant by throwing in shreds of tanned leather. Bacon.

The mighty Tyrian queen, that gain'd
With subtle shreds a tract of land,
Did leave it with a castle fair
To his great ancestor. Hudibras.

A beggar might patch up a garment with such shreds as the world throws away. Pope.

2. A fragment.

They said they were an hungry; sigh'd forth
proverbs,
That hunger broke stone walls; that dogs must eat:
And with these shreds they vented their complain-ings. Shakesp.

Shreds of wit and senseless rhimes
Blunder'd out a thousand times. Swift.

His panegyrick is made up of half a dozen shred, like a schoolboy's theme, beaten general tupicks. Swift.

SHREW. n. s. [schreyen, Germ to clamor.]

A peevish, malignant, clamorous, spiteful, vexatious, turbulent woman. It appears in Robert of Gloucester, that this word signified anciently any one perverse or obstinate of either sex.

There deede of hem vor hunger a thousand and mo,
And yat nolde the shrewen to none pes go.
Robert of Gloucester.

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all;
For women are shrews both short and tall.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

By this reckoning he is more shrew than she.
Shakesp.

A man had got a shrew to his wife, and there could be no quiet in the house for her. L'Estrange.
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the shrew. Dryden.
Every one of them, who is a shrew in domestick life, is now become a scold in politics.
Addison's Freeholder.

SHREWD. adj. [contracted from shrewed.]

1. Having the qualities of a shrew; malicious; troublesome; mischievous.

Her eldest sister is so curst and shrewd,
That till the father rids his hands of her,
Your love must live a maid. Shakesp.

2. Maliciously sly; cunning; more artful than good.

It was a shrewd saying of the old monk, that two kind of prisons would serve for all offenders, an inquisition and a bedlam: if any man should deny the being of a God, and the immortality of the soul, such a one should he put into the first, as being a desperate heretick; but if any man should profess to believe these things, and yet allow himself in any known wickedness, such a one should be put into bedlam. Tillotson.

A spiteful saying gratifies so many little passions, that it meets with a good reception; and the man who utters it is looked upon as a shrewd satirist. Addison.

Corruption proceeds from employing those who have the character of shrewd worldly men, instead of such as have had a liberal education, and trained up in virtue. Addison.

3. Bad; ill betokening.

Scarce any man passes to a liking of sin in others, but by first practising it himself; and consequently we may take it for a shrewd indication, and sign, whereby to judge of those who have sinned with too much caution, to suffer the world to charge sins directly upon their conversation.
South.

S H R

4. Painful; pinching; dangerous; mischievous.

Every of this number,
That have endur'd shrewd nights and days with us,
Shall share the good of our return'd fortune. Shak.
When a man thinks he has a servant, he finds a traitor that eats his bread, and is readier to do him a mischief, and a shrewd turn, than an open adversary. South.

No enemy is so despicable but he may do a body a shrewd turn. L'Estrange.

SHRE'WDLY. adv. [from shrewd.]

1. Mischievously; destructively.

This practice hath most shrewdly past upon thee.
Shakesp.
At Oxford, his youth, and want of experience in maritime service, had somewhat been shrewdly touched, even before the sluices of popular liberty were set open. Wotton.

2. Vexatiously. It is used commonly of slight mischief, or in ironical expression.

The obstinate and schismatical are like to think themselves shrewdly hurt, forsooth, by being cut off from that body which they choose not to be of.
South.

This last allusion rubb'd upon the sore;
Yet seem'd she not to winch, tho' shrewdly pain'd.
Dryden.

3. With good guess.

Four per cent. increases not the number of lenders, as any man at first hearing will shrewdly suspect it. Locke.

SHRE'WDNESS. n. s. [from shrewd.]

1. Sly cunning; archness.

Her garboiles, which not wanted shrewdness of policy too, did you too much disquiet. Shakesp.
The neighbours round admire his shrewdness,
For songs of loyalty and lewdness. Swift.

2. Mischievousness; petulance.

SHRE'WISH. adj. [from shrew.] Having the qualities of a shrew; froward; petulantly clamorous.

Angelo, you must excuse us;
My wife is shrewish, when I keep not hours. Shak.

SHRE'WISHLY. adv. [from shrewish.] Petulantly; peevishly; clamorously; frowardly.

He speaks very shrewishly; one would think his mother's milk were scarce out of him. Shakesp.

SHRE'WISNESS. n. s. [from shrewish.]

The qualities of a shrew; frowardness;
petulance; clamorousness.

I have no gift in shrewishness,
I am a right maid for my cowardice;
Let her not strike me. Shakesp.

SHRE'WMOUSE. n. s. [rpeapa, Sax.]

A mouse of which the bite is generally supposed venomous, and to which vulgar tradition assigns such malignity, that she is said to lame the foot over which she runs. I am informed that all these reports are calumnious, and that her feet and teeth are equally harmless with those of any other little mouse. Our ancestors however looked on her with such terrour, that they are supposed to have given her name to a scolding woman, whom for her venom they call a shrew.

To SHRIEK. v. n. [skrieger, Dan. scriccio-lare, Ital.] To cry out inarticulately with anguish or horror; to scream.

On top whereof ay dwelt the ghastly owl,
Shrieking his baleful note. Fairy Queen.

It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal belman
Which gives the sternest good night. Shakesp.

Were I the ghost that walk'd,
I'd shriek, that even your cars should rift to hear me. South.

In a dreadful dream
I saw my lord so near destruction,
Then shriek'd myself awake. Denham.
Hark! peace!

At this she shriek'd aloud; the mournful train Echo'd her grief. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Why did you shriek out? Dryden's Span. Fryar.
SHRIEK. n. s. [skrieg, Dan. scriccio, Ital.]
An inarticulate cry of anguish or horrour.

Una hearing evermore
His rueful shrieks and groanings, often tore
Her guiltless garments, and her golden hair,
For pity of his pain. Fairy Queen.
Time has been, my senses would have cool'd,
To hear a night shriek, and my fell of hair,
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir
As life were in't. Shakesp. Macb.
The corps of Almon and the rest are shown;
Shrieks, clamours, murmurs, fill the frighted town. Dryden.

SHRIFT. n. s. [ſc̄rīft, Sax.] Confession made to a priest. A word out of use.

Off with Bernardine's head: I'll give a present shrift,
And will advise him for a better place. Shakesp.
My lord shall never rest;
I'll watch him tame, and talk him out:
His bed shall seem a school, his hoard a shrift. Shak.
The duke's commands were absolute;
Therefore, my lord, address you to your shrift,
And be yourself; for you must die this instant. Rowe.

SHRIGHT, for shrieked. Spenser.

SHRILL. adj. [a word supposed to be made per onomatopœiam, in imitation of the thing expressed, which indeed it images very happily.] Sounding with a piercing, tremulous, or vibratory sound.
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth. Sha.
The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
Doth with his lofty and shrill sounding throat
Awake the god of day. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far Cannot be seen or heard, Shakesp. King Lear.
Up springs the lark, shrill voic'd and loud. Thomson.

To SHRILL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To pierce the ear with sharp and quick vibrations of sound.

The sun of all the world is dim and dark:
O heavy horse!
Break we our pipes that shrill'd as loud as lark,
O careful verse! Spenser.
Hark how the minstrels' gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling crowd,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.
A shrilling trumpet sounded from on high,
And unto battle bade themselves address. Shakesp.
Here no clarion's shrilling note
The muse's green retreat can pierce;
The grove, from noisy camps remote,
Is only vocal with my verse.

Fenton's Ode to Lord Gower.
The females round,
Maids, wives, and matrons, mix a shrilling sound. Pope.

SHRILLY. adv. [from shrill.] With a shrill
noise.

SHRILLNELS. n. s. [from shrill.] The quality of being shrill.

SHRIMP. n. s. [schrumpe a wrinkle, Ger.
scrympe, Dan.]

1. A small crustaceous vermiculated fish.
Of shell fish there are wrinkles, shrimps, crabs. Carew.
Hawks and gulls can at a great height see mice on the earth, and shrimps in the waters. Derham.
2. A little wrinkled man; a dwarf. In contempt.
It cannot be, this weak and writhled shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakesp.

He nath found,
Within the ground,
At last, no shrimp,
Whereon to imp
His jolly club. Ben Jonson.

SHRINE. n. s. [ſc̄in, Sax. scrinium, Lat.]
A case in which something sacred is reposed.

You living pow'rs, inclos'd in stately shrine
Of growing trees? you rural gods, that wield
Your scepters here, if to your ears divine
A voice may come, which troubled soul doth yield. Sidney.
All the world come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint. Shakesp.

Come offer at my shrine and I will help thee. Sha.
They often plac'd
Within his sanctuary itself their shrines, Abominations! and with cursed things
His holy rites profan'd. Milton.
Falling on his knees before her shrine,
He thus implor'd her pow'r. Dryden.
Lovers are in rapture at the name of their fair idol; they lavish out all their incense upon that shrine, and cannot bear the thought of admitting a blemish therein. Watts.

To SHRINK. v. n. preterite I shrunk, or shrank; participle shrunk. [ſc̄runcan, Sax.]

1. To contract itself into less room; to shrivel; to be drawn together by some internal power.

But to be still not summer's tantlings, and
The shrinking slaves of winter. Shak. Cymbeline.
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment, and against this fire
Do I shrink up. Shakesp. King John.
I have not found that water, by mixture of ashes, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Ill-weav'd ambition how much art thou shrunk!
When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound;
But now two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough. Shakesp.

2. To withdraw as from danger.
The noise increases;
She comes, and feeble nature now I find Shrinks back in danger, and forsakes my mind. Dryden.

Nature stands aghast;
And the fair light which gilds this new-made orb,
Shorn of his beams, shrinks in. Dryden.
Love is a plant of the most tender kind,
That shrinks and shakes with ev'ry ruffling wind. Granville.

To hear from me you had left Antony,
And put yourself under his shroud, the universal landlord. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
By me invested with a veil of clouds,
And swaddled, as new-born, in sable shrouds,
For these a receptacle I design'd. Sandys.
The winds
Blow moist and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish
Our limbs benumb'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. The dress of the dead; a winding-sheet.
Now the wasted brands do glow;
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe
In remembrance of a shroud. Shakesp.
They drop apace; by nature some decay,
And some the blasts of fortune sweep away;
Till naked quite of happiness, aloud
We call for death, and shelter in a shroud. Young.

3. The sail-ropes. It seems to be taken sometimes for the sails.
I turned back to the mast of the ship; there I found my sword among some of the shrouds. Sidney.

multuously, so as that one thing takes the place of another; to confuse; to throw together tumultuously.
When the heavens shuffle all in one,
The torrid with the frozen zone,
Then, sybil, thou and I will greet. Cleaveland.
From a new shuffling and disposition of the component particles of a body, might not nature compose a body dissoluble in water? Boyle.
In most things good and evil lie shuffled, and thrust up together in a confused heap; and it is study which must draw them forth and range them. South.
When lots are shuffled together in a lap or piteher, what reason can a man have to presume, that he shall draw a white stone rather than a black? South.
A glimpse of moonshine sheath'd with red,
A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds and shuts again. Dryden.
Children should not lose the consideration of human nature in the shufflings of outward conditions. The more they have, the better humoured they should be taught to be. Locke.
We shall in vain, shuffling the little money we have from one another's hands, endeavour to prevent our wants; decay of trade will quickly waste all the remainder. Locke.
These vapours soon, miraculous event!
Shuffled by chance, and mix'd by accident. Blackm.
Shuffled and entangled in their race,
They clasp each other. Blackmore.
He has shuffled the two ends of the sentence together, and, by taking out the middle, makes it speak just as he would have it. Atterbury.
'Tis not strange that such a one should believe that things were blindly shuffled and hurled about in the world; that the elements were at constant strife with each other. Woodward.

2. To change the position of cards with respect to each other.
The motions of shuffling of cards, or casting of dice, are very light. Bacon.
We sure in vain the cards condemn,
Ourselves both cut and shuffled them. Prior.

Her mother,
Now firm for doctor Cæsus, bath appointed
That he shall likewise shuffle her away. Shakesp.
It was contrived by your enemies, and shuffled into the papers that were seized. Dryden.

4. To SHUFFLE off. To get rid of.

In that sleep of death, what dreams may come,
When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
Must give us pause. Shakesp.
I can no other answer make, but thanks;
And oft good turns

Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay. Shakesp.
If any thing hits, we take it to ourselves; if it miscarries, we shuffle it off to our neighbours.

If, when a child is questioned for any thing, he persist to shuffle it off with a falsehood, he must be chastised. Locke.

5. To SHUFFLE up. To form tumultuously or fraudulently.

They sent forth their precepts to convent them before a court of commission, and there used to shuffle up a summary proceeding by examination, without trial of jury. Bacon.

He shuffled up a peace with the cedar, in which the Bumelians were excluded. Hovel.

To SHUFFLE. v. n.

1. To throw the cards into a new order.

A sharper both shuffles and cuts. L'Estrange
Cards we play

A round or two; when us'd, we throw away,
Take a fresh pack; nor is it worth our grieving
Who cuts or shuffles with our dirty leaving.

Granville.

2. To play mean tricks; to practise fraud; to evade fair questions.

I myself, leaving the fear of heaven on my left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle. Shakesp.

I have nothing to do with that shuffling sect, that doubt eternally, and question all things.

Glanville.

The crab advised his companion to give over shuffling and doubling, and practise good faith.

L'Estrange.

To these arguments, concerning the novelty of the earth, there are some shuffling excuses made.

Burnet.

If a steward be suffered to run on without bringing him to a reckoning, such a sottish forbearance will teach him to shuffle, and strongly tempt him to be a cheat. South.

Though he durst not directly break his appointment, he made many a shuffling excuse. Arbuth.

3. To struggle; to shift.

Your life, good master,
Must shuffle for itself. Shakesp.

SHUFFLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of disordering things, or making them take confusedly the place of each other.

Is it not a firmer foundation for contentment, to believe that all things were at first created, and are continually disposed, for the best, than that the whole universe is mere bungling, nothing effected for any purpose, but all ill-favourably cobbled and jumbled together, by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

2. A trick; an artificeer.

The gifts of nature are beyond all shams and shuffles. L'Estrange.

SHUFFLECAP. n. s. [shuffle and cap.] A who plays tricks or shuffles.

SHUFFLINGLY. adv. [from shuffle.] With an irregular gait.

VOL. II.

I may go shufflingly, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge and toil at constancy, till I have worn off the itching in my pace. Dryden.

To SHUN. v. a. [ajrcuman, Sax.] To avoid;
to decline; to endeavour to escape; to eschew.

Consider death in itself, and nature teacheth Christ to shun it. Hooker.

The lark still shuns on lofty boughs to huild,
Her humble nest lies silent in the field. Waller.

Birds and beasts can fly their foe;
So chanticler, who never saw a fox,

Yet shunn'd him as a sailor shuns the rocks. Dryd.
Cato will train thee up to great

And virtuous deeds: do but observe him well, Thou't shun misfortunes, or thou't learn to bear them. Addison.

SHUNLESS. adj. [from shun.] Inevitable; unavoidable.

Alone he enter'd
The mortal gate of the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny. Shakesp.

The king's a-bed;
He is shut up in measureless content. Shakesp.

Although he was patiently heard as he delivered his embassy, yet, in the shutting up of all, he received no more but an insolent answer.

Knolles.

To leave you blest, I would be more accurst Than death can make me; for death ends our woes,

And the kind grave shuts up the mournful scene.

Dryden.

When the scene of life is shut up, the slave will be above his master, if he has acted better.

Collier.

To SHUT. v. n. To be closed; to close itself: as, flowers open in the day, and shut at night.

let us ask one that is sickly, or in pain, and we have the price.

Grew.

There affectation, with a sickly mien,

Shows in her cheek the roses of eighteen ;

Practis'd to lisp, and hang the head aside,

Faints into airs, and languishes with pride.

When on my sickly couch I lay,

Impatient both of night and day,

Then Stella ran to my relief.

Swift.

Your bodies are not only poor and perishing, like your clothes ; but, like infected clothes, fill you with all diseases and distempers, which oppress the soul with sickly appetites, and vain cravings.

Low.

Auliffe's Parergon.
S'IDEWAYS, } adv. [from side and way,
S'IDEWISE. } or wise.] Laterally; on one side.

The fair blossom hangs the head
Sideways, as on a dying bed;
And those pearls of dew she wears Prove to be presaging tears. Milton.

If the image of the sun should he drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions, the same oblong image would, by a second refraction made sideways, be drawn out as much in breadth by the like dilatation of the rays, or other casual inequality of the refraction sideways. Newton's Opticks.

SIEGE. n. s. [siege, Fr.]

1. The act of besetting a fortified place; a leaguer.

Our castle's strength
Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them be,
Till famine eat them up. Shakesp. Macbeth.
It seemed, by the manner of their proceeding, that the Turks purposed rather by long siege than by assault to take the town. Knolles's History of the Turks.

The more I see
Pleasur about me, so much more I feel Torment within me, as from the hateful siege
Of contraries. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Any continued endeavour to gain possession.

Beat away the busy meddling fiend,
That lays strong siege unto this wretch's soul,
And from his bosom purge this black despair. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Give me so much of your time, in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honesty of Ford's wife. Shakespeare.
Love stood the siege, and would not wield his breast. Dryden.

From men of royal siege. Shakesp. Othello.
Your sum of parts
Did not together pluck such envy from him,
As did that one, and that in my regard
Of the unworthiest siege. Shakespeare. Hamlet.

5. [Siege, Fr.] Stool.

It entereth not the veins, but taketh leave of the permeant parts, as the mouths of the merricks, and accompanieth the inconvertible portion unto the siege. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

To SIEGE v. a. [sieger, Fr. from the noun.]

To besiege. A word not now in use.
Him he had long oppress with tort,
And fast imprison'd in sieged fort. Fairy Queen.

SIEVE. n. s. [from sift.] Hair or lawn strained upon a hoop, by which flower is separated from bran, or fine powder from coarse; a boulder; a searce.

Thy counsel
Falls now into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve. Shakespeare.

In a sieve I'll tither sail,
And, like a rat without a tail,
I'll do—I'll do—I'll do. Shakesp. Macbeth.

An innocent found a sieve, and presently fell to stopping the holes. L'Estrange.

If life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself you liv'd not while you might. Dry.

To SIFT. v. a. [siften, Sax. siften, Dut.]

2. To separate; to part.

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show. Dryden.

S I G

3. To examine; to try.

We have sifted your objections against those pre-eminences royal. Hooker.
All which the wit of Calvin could from thence draw, by sifting the very utmost sentence and syllable, is no more than that certain speeches seem to intimate, that all Christian churches ought to have their elderships. Hooker.

I fear me, if thy thoughts were sifted,
The king thy sovereign is not quite exempt
From envious malice of thy swelling heart. Shakesp. Henry VI.

As near as I could sift him on that argument. Shakesp.

Opportunity I here have had
To try thee, sift thee, and confess have found thee
Proof against all temptation, as a rock
Of adamant. Milton's Par. Regained.

One would think that every member, who embraces with vehemence the principles of either of these parties, had thoroughly sifted and examined them, and was secretly convinced of their preference to those he rejects. Addison.

SIFTER. n. s. [from sift.] He who sifts.

SIG was used by the Saxons for victory:

Sigbert, famous for victory; Sigward, victorious preserver; Sigard, conquering temper; and almost in the same sense are Nicolas, Nicomachus, Nicanter, Victor, Victorinus, Vincentius, &c. Gibson.

To SIGH. v. n. [sicau, sicetzan, Saxon; suchten, Dut.] To emit the breath audibly, as in grief.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man Sigh'd truer breath. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

He sighed deeply in his spirit, and saith, Why doth this generation seek after a sign? Mark, viii. 12.

For the oppression of the poor, for the sighing of the needy, will I arise. Psaln xii. 5.

Happier he,
Who seeks not pleasure through necessity,
Than such as once on slipp'ry thrones were plac'd,
And, chasing, sigh to think themselves are chas'd. Dryden.

The nymph too longs to be alone;
Leaves all the swains, and sighs for one. Prior.

To SIGH. r. a. To lament; to mourn.

Not in use.

Ages to come, and men unborn,
Shall bless her name, and sigh her fate. Prior.

SIGH. n. s. [from the verb.] A violent and audible emission of the breath which has been long retained, as in sadness.

Full often has my heart swolln with keeping my sighs imprisoned; full often have the tears I drove back from mine eyes turned back to drown my heart. Sidney.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes. Shak.

What a sigh is there! The heart is sorely charg'd. Shakespeare.
