Pope's Statius.

TIME. n. s. [tima, Sax. tym, Erse.]

1. The measure of duration.

This consideration of duration, as set out by certain periods, and marked by certain measures or epochas, is that which most properly we call time.

Time is like a fashionable host,
That slightly shakes his parting guest by th' hand,
But with his arms out-stretch'd, as he would fly, Grasps the incomer. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Come what come may,
Time and the hour runs through the roughest day.
Shakesp.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross exhalation, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scale. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Time, which consisteth of parts, can be no part of infinite duration, or of eternity; for then there would he infinite time past to day, which to-morrow would be more than infinite. Time is therefore one thing, and infinite duration is another. Grew.

T I M

2. Space of time.

Daniel desired that he would give him time, and that he would shew him the interpretation,
Daniel, ii. 16.

If a law be enacted to continue for a certain time, when that time is elapsed, the law ceaseth without any farther abrogation. White.

He for the time remain'd stupidly good.
Milton.

No time is allowed for digressions. Swift.

3. Interval.

Pomanders, and knots of powders, you may have continually in your hand; whereas perfumes you can take but at times. Bacon's Natural Hist.

4. Life considered as employed, or destined to employment.

A great devourer of his time, was his agency for men of quality. Fell.

kinds of virtue, lie open to those who are masters of themselves, their time, and their fortune. Law.

5. Season; proper time.

To every thing there is a season, and a time to every purpose. Ecclus. iii. 1.

They were cut down out of time, whose foundation was overflown with a flood. Job, xxii. 16.

He found nothing but leaves on it; for the time of figs was not yet. Mark, xi. 13.
Knowing the time, that it is high time to awake out of sleep. Romans, xiii. 11.

Short were her marriage joys; for in the prime
Of youth her lord expir'd before his time.
Dryden.

I hope I come in time, if not to make,
At least to save, your fortune and your honour.
Dryden.

The time will come when we shall be forced to bring our evil ways to remembrance, and then consideration will do us little good. Calamy's Sermons.

6. A considerable space of duration; continuance; process of time.

Fight under him, there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade:
And when in service your best days are spent,
In time you may command a regiment.
Dryden's Juvenal.

In time the mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, ideas of reflection.
Locke.

One imagines, that the terrestrial matter which is showered down along with rain enlarges the bulk of the earth, and that it will in time hurry all things under ground. Woodward.

I have resolv'd to take time, and, in spite of all misfortunes, to write to you, at intervals, a long letter. Swift.

7. Age; part of duration distinct from other parts.

They shall be given into his hand until a time and times. Dan. vii. 25.

If we should impute the heat of the season unto the co-operation of any stars with the sun, it seems more favourable for our times to ascribe the same unto the constellation of Leo.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The way to please being to imitate nature, the poets and the painters, in ancient times, and in the best ages, have studied her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

8. Past time.

I was the man in th' moon when time was.
Shakesp.

9. Early time.

Stanley at Bosworth-field, though he came time enough to save his life, yet he staid long enough to endanger it. Bacon.

If they acknowledge repentance and a more strict obedience to be one time or other necessary, they imagine it is time enough yet to set about these duties. Rogers.

10. Time considered as affording opportunity.

No glittering tinsel of May-fair
Could with this rod of Sid compare. Swift.

Ye tinsel insects, whom a court maintains,
That count your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eyes of day,
The muse's wing shall brush you all away. Pope.

To TINSEL. r. a. [from the noun.] To decorate with cheap ornaments; to adorn with lustre that has no value.

Hence, you fantastick postillers in song,
My text defeats your art, 'tis nature's tongue,
Scorns all her tinsoid metaphors of pelf,
Illustrated by nothing but herself. Cleaveland.

She tinsel'd o'er in robes of varying hues,
With self-applause her wild creation views;
Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,

TINT. n. s. [teinte, Fr. tinta, Ital.] A die; a colour.

T I P

Whether thy hand strike out some free design,
Where life awakes, and dawns at ev'ry line;
Or blend in beautiful tint the colour'd mass,
And from the canvass call the mimic face. Pope.
The virtues of most men will only blow,
Like coy auricles, in Alpine snow;
Transplant them to the equinoctial line,
Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline.

Harte.
Though it be allowed, that elaborate harmony of colouring, a brilliancy of tints, a soft and gradual transition from one to another, present not to the eye what an harmonious concert of musick does to the ear; it must be remembered, that painting is not merely a gratification of sight.

To drink luxuriously; to waste life over the cup.

T I R

Let us grant it is not amiss to sit,
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave,
To reel the streets at noon. Shakesp.

To TIPPLE. v. a. To drink in luxury or excess.

While his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

To a short meal he makes a tedious grace,
Before the barley-pudding comes in place;
Then bids fall on; himself for saving charges
A peel'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

If a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale. Philips.

Midnight shout and revelry,
Tipsy dance and jollity. Milton.

TIPTOE. n. s. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Where the fond ape himself uprearing high,
Upon his tiptoes stalketh stately by. Spenser.
He that outlives this day, and comes safe home,
Will stand a tiptoe when this day is nam'd,
And rouse him at the name of Crispian. Shakesp.
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains tops. Shak.
Religion stands tiptoe in our land,
Ready to pass to the American strand. Herbert.
Ten ruddy wildings in the wood I found,
And stood on tiptoes from the ground. Dryd.

TIRE. n. s. [tuyr, Dutch.]

1. Rank; row. Sometimes written tier.

Your lowest tire of ordnance must lie four foot clear above water, when all loading is in, or else those, your best pieces, will be of small use at sea, in any grown weather that makes the billows to rise. Raleigh.

Stood rank'd of seraphim another row,
In posture to displace their second tire
Of thunder. Milton.

In all those wars there were few triremes, most of them being of one tire of oars of fifty banks.

2. [Corrupted from tiar or tiara, or from attire.] A headdress.

On her head she wore a tire of gold,
Adorn'd with gems and oouches. Spenser.
Here is her picture: let me see;
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers. Shakesp.

The judge of torments, and the king of tears,
Now fills a barush'd throne of quenchless fire,
And for his old fair robes of light he wears
A gloomy mantle of dark flame; and tire
That crowns his hated head, on high appears. Crashaw.

When the fury took her stand on high,
A hiss from all the snaky tire went round. Pope.

T I S

3. Furniture; apparatus.

Saint George's worth
Enkindles like desire of high exploits
Immediate sieges, and the tire of war,
Rowl in thy eager mind. Philips.

to wear out with labour or tediousness.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past,
From pray'rs to wishes he descends at last. Dryd.
For this a hundred voices I desire,
To tell thee what a hundred tongues would tire;
Yet never could be worthily express't,
How deeply thou art seated in my breast. Dryden.

2. It has often out added, to intend the signification.

Often a few that are stiff do tire out a greater number that are more moderate. Bacon.

A lonely way
The cheerless Albion wander'd half a day;
Tir'd out, at length a spreading stream he spy'd. Tickel.

3. [From attire or tire, from tiara.] To dress the head.

Jezebel painted her face, and tired her head. 2 Kings.

To TIRE. v. n. [τῆριαν, Sax.] To fail with weariness.

TIREDDNESS. n. s. [from tired.] State earth, but through our own negligence, that it hath not satisfied us bountifully. Hakewill.

TIREsome. adj. [from tire.] Wearisome; fatiguing; tedious.

Since the inculcating precept upon precept will prove tiresome to the reader, the poet must sometimes relieve the subject with a pleasant and per-tinacious digression. Addison.

Nothing is so tiresome as the works of those crit-icks who write in a dogmatick way, without language, genius, or imagination. Addison.

TIREsomeNESS. n. s. [from tiresome.]
Act or quality of being tiresome.

TIREWOMAN. n. s. [tire and woman.]
A woman whose business is to make dresses for the head.

Holy memorials, acts of zeal and love,
Rec'd red eminent. Milton.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire;
An upper vest, once Helen's rich attire;
From Argos by the fam'd adulteress brought,
With golden flowers and winding foliage wrought. Dryden.

To TISSUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To int: rweave; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tis- sued upon blue. Bacon.

They have been always frank of their blessings to countenance any great action; and then, according as it should prosper, to tissue upon it some pretence or other. Wotton.

Mercy will sit between,
Thron'd in celestial sheen,
With radiant feet the tissued clouds down steering. Milton.

TIT. n. s.

1. A small horse; generally in contempt.

No storing of pasture with baggagely tit,
With ragged, with aged, and evil at hit. Tusser.

Thou might'st have ta'en example
From what thou read'st in story;
Being as worthy to sit
On an ambling tit
As thy predecessor Dory. Denham.

2. A woman: in contempt.

What does this envious tit, but away to her father with a tale? L'Estrange.

A willing tit, that will venture her corps with you. Dryden.

tittles. Bacon.

To TITHE. v. a. [τεοδιαν, Sax.] To tax; to levy the tenth part.

When I come to the tithing of them, I will tithe them one with another, and will make an Irishman
the tithingman. Soensers.

By decimation and a tithed death,
If thy revenges hunger for that food
Which nature loaths, take thou the destin'd tenth. Shakesp.

When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase, the third year, the year of tithing, give unto the Levite, stranger, fatherless,

To TITHE. v. n. To pay tithe.

For laube, pig, and calf, and for other the like,
Tithe so as thy cattle the lord do not strike. Tusser.

When they have got their picture towards a book;
Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine. Young.

5. A claim of right.

Let the title of a man's right be called in question; are we not bold to rely and build upon the judgment of such as are famous for their skill in the laws? Hooker.

Is a man impoverished by purchase? it is because he paid his money for a lye, and took a bad title for a good. South.

'Tis our duty
Such monuments, as we can build, to raise;
Lest all the world prevent what we should do,
And claim a title in him by their praise. Dryden.

If there were no laws to protect them, there were no living in this world for good men; and in effect there would be no laws, if it were a sin in them to try a title, or right themselves by them. Kettleworth.

To revenge their common injuries, though you had an undoubted title by your birth, you had a greater by your courage. Dryden.

Conti would have kept his title to Orange. Addison.

 barbarous provincial word.] To train;
 to draw by degrees.
 Whatever you observe him to be more frighted at than he should, tole him on by insensible degrees, till at last he masters the difficulty. Locke.

TO'LERABLE. adj. [tolerable, Fr. tolera-bilis, Lat.]
 1. Supportable; that may be endured or supported.
 Yourselves, who have sought them, ye so excuse, as that ye would have men to think ye judge them not allowable, but tolerable only, and to be borne with, for the furtherance of your purposes, till the corrupt estate of the church may be better formed. Hooker.
 It shall be more tolerable for Sodom in the day of judgment than for that city. Matthew.
 Cold and heat scarce tolerable. Milton.
 There is nothing of difficulty in the external performance, but what hypocrisy can make tolerable to itself. Tillotson.

 ed frequently, and on particular occasions had acquitted himself tolerably at a ball. Spectator.

TO'LERANCE. n. s. [tolerantia, Lat. tolerantia, Fr.] Power of enduring; act of enduring. Not used, though a good word.
 Diogenes one frosty morning came into the market-place shaking, to shew his tolerance; many of the people came about him, pitying him. Plato passing by, and knowing he did it to be seen, said, If you pity him indeed, let him alone to himself. Bacon.
 There wants nothing but consideration of our own eternal weal, a tolerance or endurance of being made happy here, and blessed eternally. Hanmond.

To TO'LERATE. v. a. [tolero, Lat. tolerer, Fr.] To allow so as not to hinder; to suffer; to pass uncensured.

Inasmuch as they did resolve to remove only such things of that kind as the church might best spare, retaining the residue; their whole counsel is, in this point, utterly condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be tolerated for a while. Hooker.
 We shall tolerate flying horses, harpies, and satyrs;
 for these are poetical fancies, whose shaded moralities require their substantial falsities. Brown.
 Men should not tolerate themselves one minute in any known sin. Decey of Piety.
 Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.
 We are fully convinced that we shall always tolerate them, but not that they will tolerate us. Swift.

TOLERA'TION. n. s. [tolero, Lat.] Allowance given to that which is not approved.
 I shall not speak against the indulgence and toleration granted to these men. South.

TOLL. n. s. [This word seems derived from tollo, Lat. toll, Sax. tol, Dut. told, Dan. toll, Welsh; tallie, Fr.] An excise of goods; a seizure of some part for permission of the rest.
 Toll, in law, has two significations: first, a liberty to buy and sell within the precincts of a manor, which seems to import as much as a fair or market; secondly, a tribute or custom paid for passage. Cowell.
 Empson and Dudley the people esteemed as his horse-leeches, bold men, that took toll of their master's grist. Bacon.
 The same Prusias joined with the Rhodians against the Byzantines, and stopped them from levying the toll upon their trade into the Euxine.
Arbuthnot.

To TOLL. v. n. [from the noun.]
 1. To pay toll or tallage.
 I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll fo-him: for this, I'll none of him. Shakesp.
 Where, when, by whom, and what y' were sold for,
 And in the open market toll'd for? Hudibras.

2. To take toll or tallage.
 The meale the more veeldeth if servant be true,
 And miller that tolleth takes none but his due. Tusser.

3. [I know not whence derived.] To sound
 as a single bell.
 The first bringer of unwelcome news
 Hath but a losing office; and his tongue
 Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
 Remember'd tolling a departed friend. Shakesp.
 Our going to church at the tolling of a bell, Gully tells us the time when we ought to go to worship God. Stillingfleet.
 Toll, toll,
 Gentle bell, for the soul
 Of the pure ones. Denham.
 You love to hear of some prodigious tale,
 The bell that toll'd alone, or Irish whale. Dryden.
 They give their bodies due repose at night;
 When hollow murmurs of their ev'ning bells Dismiss the deepy swains, and toll them to their cells. Dryden.
 With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,
 Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell. Pope.

To TOLL. v. a. [tollo, Lat.]
 1. To ring a bell.
 When any one dies, then by tolling or ringing of a bell the same is known to the searchers. Graunt.

2. To take away; to vacate; to annul. A term only used in the civil law: in this sense the o is short, in the former long.
 An appeal from sentence of excommunication does not suspend it, but then devolves it to a superior judge, and tolls the presumption in favour of a sentence. Ayliffe.

3. To take away, or perhaps to invite.
 Obsolete.
 The adventitious moisture which hangeth loose in a body, betrayeth and tolleth forth the innate and radical moisture along with it. Bacon.

TOLUTATION. n. s. [toluto, Lat.] The act of pacing or ambling.

They move per latera, that is, two legs of one side together, which is tolutation or ambling. Brown.
They rode; but authors having not Determin'd whether pace or trot,
That is to say, whether tolutation,
As they do term't, or succussion,
We leave it. Hudibras.

TOMB. n. s. [tombe, tombeau, Fr. tumba, low Lat.] A monument in which the dead are enclosed.

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb. Shakesp.
Time is drawn upon tombs an old man bald, winged, with a sithle and an hour-glass. Peacham.
Poor heart! she slumbers in her silent tomb:
Let her possess in peace that narrow room. Dryd.
The secret wound with which I bleed
Shall lie wrapt up, ev'n in my herse;
But on my tomb-stone thou shalt read
My answer to thy dubious verse. Prior.

To TOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bury; to entomb.

Souls of boys were there,
And youths that tomb'd before their parents were. May.

TO'MBLESS. adj. [from tomb.] Wanting a tomb; wanting a sepulchral monument.

TOMTIT. n. s. [See TITMOUSE.] A titmouse; a small bird.

You would fancy him a giant when you looked upon him, and a tomtit when you shut your eyes. Spectator.

TON. n. s. [tonne, Fr. See TUN.] A measure or weight.

Spain was very weak at home, or very slow to move, when they suffered a small fleet of English to fire, sink, and carry away, ten thousand ton of their great shipping. Bacon.

TON, TUN, in the names of places, are derived from the Saxon, tun, a hedge or wall; and this seems to be from don, a hill, the towns being anciently built on hills, for the sake of defence and protection in times of war. Gibson's Cam.

TONE. n. s. [ton, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. Note; sound.
Sounds called tones are ever equal. Bacon.
The strength of a voice or sound makes a difference in the loudness or softness, but not in the tone. Bacon.

In their motions harmony divine
So smooths her charming tones, that God's own ear Listens delighted. Milton.

T O N

2. Accent; sound of the voice.

Palamon replies,
Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.
Each has a little soul he calls his own,
And each enociates with a human tone. Harte.

As bad as bloody-bones or Lansford. Hudibras.

4. A particular or affected sound in speaking.

5. Elasticity; power of extension and contraction.

Drinking too great quantities of this decoction, may weaken the tone of the stomach. Arbuthnot.

TONG. n. s. [See TONGS.] The catch of a buckle. This word is usually written tongue; but, as its office is to hold, it has probably the same original with tongs, and should therefore have the same orthography.

Their hilts were burnish'd gold, and handle strong,
Of mother pearl, and buckled with a golden tong. Spenser.

TONGS. n. s. [tanꝝ, Sax. tang, Dut.] An instrument by which hold is taken of any thing; as of coals in the fire.

Another did the dying brands repair
With iron tongs, and sprinkled oft the same
With liquid waves. Spenser.
They torn the glowing mass with crooked tongs;
The fiery work proceeds. Dryden.
Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger, and toothed. Mortimer.

TONGUE. n. s. [tanꝝ, Sax. tonghe, Dut.] 1. The instrument of speech in human beings.

My conscience hath a thousand several tongues,
And ev'ry tongue brings in a sev'ral tale,
And ev'ry tale condemns me for a villain. Shakesp.
Who with the tongue of angels can relate? Milt.
They are tongue-valiant, and as bold as Hercules where there's no danger. L'Estrange.
My ears still ring with noise; I'm vex'd to death,
Tongue-kill'd, and have not yet recover'd breath. Dryden.

Tongue-valiant hero, vaunter of thy might,
In threats the foremost, but the lag in fight. Dryd.
There have been female Pythagoreans, notwithstanding that philosophy consisted in keeping a secret, and the disciple was to hold her tongue five years together. Addison.
Though they have those sounds ready at their tongue's end, yet there are no determined ideas. Locke.

I should make both a poor pretence to true learning, if I had not clear ideas under the words my tongue could pronounce. Watts.

2. The organ by which animals lick.

They hiss for hiss returned, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton.

3. Speech; fluency of words.

He said; and silence all their tongues contain'd. Chapman.

First in the council hall to steer the state,
And ever foremost in a tongue debate. Dryden.

4. Power of articulate utterance.

Parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing-birds in silver cages hung. Dryden.

5. Speech, as well or ill used.

Give me thy hand; I am sorry I beat thee; but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head. Shakesp.

So brave a knight was Tydeus, of whom a sonnie is sprong,

Inferiour farre in martial deeds, though higher in

On evil days though fallen and evil tongues. Milt.

6. A language.

The Lord shall bring a nation against thee, whose tongue thou shalt not understand. Deuteronomy.

T O N

With wond'rous gifts endu'd,
To speak all tongues, and do all miracles. Milton.
So well he understood the most and best
Of tongue that Babel sent into the west;
Spoke them so truly, that he had, you'd swear,
Not only liv'd, but been born ev'ry where. Cowley.
An acquaintance with the various tongues is nothing but a relief against the mischiefs which the building of Babel introduced. Watts.

7. Speech, as opposed to thoughts or action.

Let us not love in word, neither in tongue, but indeed and in truth. 1 John.

8. A nation distinguished by their language. A scriptural term.

The Lord shall destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea. Isaiah.

9. A small point: as, the tongue of a balance.

10. To hold the TONGUE. To be silent.

'Tis seldom seen that senators so young
Know when to speak, and when to hold their tongue. Dryden.

Whilst I live I must not hold my tongue,
And languish out old age in his displeasure. Addis.

To TONGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To chide; to scold.

But that her tender shame
Will not proclaim against her maiden loss.
How might she tongue me! Shakesp.

Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. Shakesp.

TO'NGUEPAD. n. s. [tongue and pad.] A great talker.

She who was a celebrated wit at London, is, in that dull part of the world, called a tonguepad. Tatler

TONGUET'IED. adj. [tongue and tie.]

1. Having an impediment of speech.

They who have short tongues, or are tonguetied are apt to fall short of the appulse of the tongue to the teeth, and oftener place it on the gums, and say t and d instead of th and dh; as moder for mother. Holder.

2. Unable to speak freely, from whatever cause.

Love, and tonguetied simplicity,
In least speak most to my capacity. Shakesp.
He spar'd the blushes of the tonguetied dame. Tickel.

TO'NICAL. } adj. [tonique, Fr. τῆνον.]

TO'NICK. } adj. [tonique, Fr. τῆνον.]

1. Being extended; being elastick.

Station is no rest, but one kind of motion, relating unto that which physicians, from Galen, do name extensive or tonical. Brown.

2. Relating to tones or sounds.

TO'NNAGE. n. s. [from ton.] A custom or impost due for merchandize, brought or carried in tons from or to other nations, after a certain rate in every ton.

Tonnage and poundage upon merchandizes were collected, refused to be settled by act of parliament. Clarendon.

TO'NSIL. n. s. [tonsille, Fr. tonsille, Lat.]

Tonsils or almonds are two round glands placed on the sides of the basis of the tongue, under the common membrane of the fauces, with which they are covered; each of them hath a large oval sinus, which opens into the fauces, and in it there are a great number of lesser ones, which discharge themselves through the great sinus, of a mucous and slippery matter, into the fauces, larynx, and œsophagus, for the moistening and lubricating these parts. Quincy.

TONSURE. n. s. [tonsure, Fr. tonsura, Lat.] The act of clipping the hair; the state of being shorn.

The vestals, after having received the tonsure, suffered their hair to come again, being here full grown, and gathered under the veil. Addison.

Too. adv. [too, Sax.]

1. Over and above; overmuch; more than enough. It is used to argument the signification of an adjective or adverb to a vicious degree.

Your father's rough and stern,
His will too strong to bend, too proud to learn. Cowley.

Groundless prejudices and weaknesses of conscience, instead of tenderness, mislead too many others, too many, otherwise good men. Spratt's Sermons.

It is too much to build a doctrine of so mighty consequence upon so obscure a place of scripture. Locke.

These ridiculous stories abide with us too long, and too far influence the weaker part of mankind. Hatts.

2. It is sometimes doubled to increase its emphasis; but this reduplication always seems harsh, and is therefore laid aside. Oh, that this too too solid flesh would melt!

Sometimes it would be full, and then,
Oh! too too soon decrease again;
Eclips'd sometimes, that 'twould so fall,
There would appear no hope at all. Suckling.

3. Likewise; also.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate;
And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet

Let on my cup no wars be found,
Let those incite to quarrels too,
Which wine itself enough can do. Ohlham.

The arriving to such a disposition of mind as shall make a man take pleasure in other men's sins, is evident from the text, and from experience too. South.

It is better than letting our trade fall for want of current pledges, and better too than borrowing money of our neighbours. Locke.

A courtier and a patriot too.
Let those eyes that view
The daring crime, behold the vengeance too. Pope.

TOOK. the präterite, and sometimes the participle passive, of take.

Thy soldiers,
All levied in my name, have in my name
Took their discharge. Shakesp. King Lear.

He is God in his friendship as well as in his nature, and therefore we sinful creatures are not took upon advantages, nor consumed in our provocations. South's Sermons.

Suddenly the thunder-clap Took us unprepared. Dryden.

The same device enclosed the ashes of men or boys, maids or matrons; for when the thought took, though at first it received its rise from such a particular occasion, the ignorance of the sculptors applied it promiscuously. Addison.

This took up some of his hours every day. Spectator.

The riders would leap them over my hand; and one of the emperor's huntsmen, upon a large courser, took my foot, shoe and all. Swift.

Leaving Polybus, I took my way
To Cyrrha's temple. Pope's Statius.

TOOL. n. s. [tool, tool, Sax.]

1. Any instrument of manual operation.

In mulberries the sap is towards the bark only, into which if you cut a little, it will come forth; but if you pierce it deeper with a tool, it will be dry. Bacon.

They found in many of their mines more gold than earth; a metal, which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron. Heylyn.

Arm'd with such gard'ning tools as art, yet rude, Guiltless of fire had form'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

The ancients had some secret to harden the edges of their tools. Addison.

2. A hireling; a wretch who acts at the command of another.

He'd choose
To talk with wits in dirty shoes;
And scorn the tools with stars and garters,
So often seen cussing Chartres. Swift.

To TOOT. v. n. [Of this word, in this sense, I know not the derivation; perhaps τοταν, Sax. contracted from τοπεταν, to know or examine.]

1. To pry; to peep; to search narrowly and slyly. It is still used in the provinces, otherwise obsolete.

I cast to go a shooting,
Long wand'ring up and down the land,
With bow and bolts on either hand,
For birds and bushes tooting. Spenser's Past.

2. It was used in a contemptuous sense, which I do not fully understand.

This writer should wear a tooting horn. Howell.

TOOTH. n. s. plural teeth. [tooð, Sax. tand, Dut.]

The teeth are the hardest and smoothest bones of the body; about the seventh or eighth month they begin to pierce the edge of the jaw: the dentes incisivi, or fore teeth of the upper jaw, appear first, and then those of the lower jaw: after them come out the canini or eye teeth, and last of all the molars or grinders: about the seventh year they are thrust out by new teeth, and if these teeth be lost they never grow again; but some have shed their teeth twice; about the one-and-twentieth year the two last of the molars spring up, and they are called dentes sapientie. Quincy.

Be thy mouth or black or white,
Tooth that poisons if it bite. Shak. King Lear.
Desert deserves with characters of brass
A fortified residence against the tooth of time,
And rasure of oblivion. Shakesp.

The teeth alone among the bones continue to grow in length during a man's whole life, as appears by the unsightly length of one tooth when its opposite happens to be pulled out. Ray on the Creation.

2. Taste; palate.

These are not dishes for thy dainty tooth;
What, hast thou got an ulcer in thy mouth?
Why stand'st thou picking? Dryden.

3. A tine, prong, or blade, of any multifid instrument.

The priest's servant came while the flesh was in seething, with a flesh hook of three teeth. 1 Sam. ii. 13.

I made an instrument in fashion of a comb, whose teeth being in number sixteen, were about an inch and an half broad, and the intervals of the teeth about two inches wide. Newton's Opticks.

4. The prominent part of wheels, by which they catch upon correspondent parts of other bodies.

The edge whereon the teeth are is always made thicker than the back, because the back follows the edge. Moxon.

In clocks, though the screws and teeth be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled will hardly move, though you clog them with never so much weight; but apply a little oil, they whirl about very swiftly with the tenth part of the force. Ray.

5. Tooth and nail. With one's utmost violence; with every means of attack or defence.

A lion and bear were at tooth and nail which should carry off a fawn. L'Estrange.

6. To the teeth. In open opposition.

It warms the very sickness in my heart,
That I shall live and tell him to his teeth,
Thus diddest thou. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The action lies
In his true nature, and we ourselves compell'd,
Ev'n to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence. Shakesp.

The way to our horses lies back again by the house, and then we shall meet 'em full in the teeth. Dryden.

7. To cast in the teeth. To insult by open exprobration.

A wise body's part it were not to put out his fire, because his fond and foolish neighbour from whom he borrowed wherewith to kindle it, might cast him therewith in the teeth, saying, Were it not for me thou wouldst freeze, and not be able to heat thyself. Hooker.

8. In spite of the teeth. Notwithstanding threats expressed by shewing teeth; notwithstanding any power of injury or defence.

The guiltiness of my mind drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despight of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. Shakesp.

The only way is, not to grumble at the lot they must bear in spite of their teeth. L'Estrange.

9. To shew the teeth. To threaten.

When the law shews her teeth, but dare not bite,
And South-Sea treasures are not brought to light. Young.

To TOOTH. v. a. [from tooth.]

1. To furnish with teeth; to indent.

Then saws were tooth'd, and sounding axes made. Dryden.

The point hooked down like that of an eagle; and both the edges toothed, as in the Indian crow. Greiv's Musaeum.

Get a pair of tongs like a smith's tongs, stronger, and toothed at the end. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To lock in each other.

It is common to tooth in the stretching course two inches with the stretcher only. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TOOTH'CH. n. s. [tooth and ach.] Pain in the teeth.

There never yet was the philosopher
That could endure the toothach patiently,
However at their ease they talk'd like gods. Shakesp.

He that sleeps feels not the toothach. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I have the toothach.
—What, sigh for the toothach?
Which is but an humour or a worm. Shakesp.
One was grown desperate with the toothach. Temple.

TOP. n. s. [topp, Welsh; top, Sax. top, Dut. and Dan. topper a crest, Island.]

1. The highest part of any thing.
 I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
 But I should think of shallows and of flats,
 And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand,
 Vailing her high top lower than her ribs. Shakesp.
 He wears upon his baby brow the round
 And top of sovereignty. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 Here is a mount, whose toppe seems to despise
 The farre inferior vale that underlies:
 Who, like a great man rais'd aloft by fate,
 Measures his height by others mean estate. Brown.
 Here Sodom's tow'rs raise their proud tops on high;
 The tow'rs as well as men out brave the sky. Cowley.
 Thon nor on the top of old Olympus dwell'st. Milton.
 One poor roof, made of poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of trees. Heylyn.
 That government which takes in the consent of the greatest number of the people, may justly be said to have the broadest bottom; and if it terminate in the authority of one single person, it may be said to have the narrowest top, and so makes the firmest pyramid. Temple.
 So up the steepy hill with pain
 They weighty stone is rowl'd in vain;
 Which having touch'd the top recoils,
 And leaves the labourer to renew his toils. Granville.
 Marine bodies are found upon hills, and at the bottom only such as have fallen down from their tops. Woodward.

2. The surface; the superficies.
 Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth hurt all things that grow by them, especially such trees as spread their roots near the top of the ground. Bacon's Natural History.
 Shallow brooks that flow'd so clear,
 The bottom did the top appear. Dryden.

3. The highest place.
 He that will not set himself proudly at the top of all things, but will consider the immanency of this fabric, may think, that in other mansions there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

 Bold, quick, ingenious, forward, capable;
 He's all the mother's from the top to toe. Shakesp.

8. The hair on the crown of the head; the forelock.
 Let's take the instant by the forward top;
 For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
 Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
 Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakesp.

9. The head of a plant.
 The buds made our food are called heads or tops, as cabbage heads. Watts's Logick.

10. [Top, Dan.] An inverted conoid which children set to turn on the point, continuing its motion with a whip.
 Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakesp.
 For as whipp'd tops, and handied balls,
 The learned hold, are animals;
 So horses they affirm to be Mere engines made by geometry. Hudibras.
 As young striplings whip the top for sport,
 On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
 The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
 Adair'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.
 Still humming on their drowsy course they keep,
 And lash'd so long, like tops, are lash'd asleep. Pope.
 A top may be used with propriety in a similitude by a Virgil, when the sun may be dishonoured by a Mævius. Broomer.

Arbuthnot.

TORRENT. n. s. [torrent, Fr. torrens, Lat.]

1. A sudden stream raised by showers.

The near in blood

Forsake me like the torrent of a flood. Sandys on Job.

Will no kind flood, no friendly rain,

Disguise the marshal's plain disgrace;

No torrents swell the low Mohayne?

The world will say he durst not pass.
Prior.

2. A violent and rapid stream; tumultuous current.

Not far from Caucasus are certain steep-falling torrents, which wash down many grains of gold, as in many other parts of the world; and the people there inhabiting use to set many fleeces of wool in these descents of waters, in which the grains of gold remain, and the water passeth through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true.
Raleigh.

The memory of those who, out of duty and conscience, opposed that torrent which did overwhelm them, should not lose the recompense due to their virtue.
Clarendon.

When shrivell'd herbs, on with'ring stems decay,
The wary ploughman, on the mountain's brow,
Undams his wat'ry stores, huge torrents flow,
Temp'ring the thirsty fever of the field. Dry. Georg.

Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age. Pope.

thereby holdeth it in a continual trepidation.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TORTURER. n. s. [from torture.] He who tortures; tormentor.

I play the torturer by small and small,
To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken.
Shakesp.

When king Edward the second was amongst his torturers, the more to disgrace his face, they shaved him, and washed him with cold water; the king said, Well, yet I will have warm water; and so shed abundance of tears. Bacon's Apophthegms.

TORTVITY. n. s. [torvitas, Lat.] Sour-ness; severity of countenance. Not used.

TORVOUS. adj. [torvus, Lat.] Sour of aspect; stern; severe of countenance.
Not used.

That torvous sour look produced by anger, and that gay and pleasing countenance accompanying love. Derham.

TORY. n. s. [A cant term, derived, I suppose, from an Irish word signifying a savage.] One who adheres to the ancient constitution of the state, and the apostolical hierarchy of the church of England: opposed to a whig.

The knight is more a tory in the country than the town, because it more advances his interest.
Addison.

This protestant zealot, this English divine,
In church and in state was of principles sound;
Was truer than steel to the Hanover line,
And griev'd that a tory should live above ground.
Swift.

To confound his hated coin,
All parties and religions join,
Whigs, Tories. Swift.

For whose dear sake so many troubles her did toss.
Spenser.

Calm region once,
And full of peace, now tost and turbulent. Milton.

6. To keep in play; to tumble over.
That scholar should come to a better knowledge in the Latin tongue, than most do that spend four years in tossing all the rules of grammar in common schools. Ascham.

TO TOSS. v. n.

1. To fling; to winch; to be in violent commotion.

Dire was the tossing! deep the groans! despair
Tended the sick, busiest from couch to couch. Milt.

Galen tells us of a woman patient of his whom he found very weak in bed, continually tossing and tumbling from one side to another, and totally deprived of her rest. Harvey.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.

And thou, my sire, not destin'd by thy birth
To turn to dust and mix with common earth,
How wilt thou toss and rave, and long to die,
And quit thy claim to immortality! Addison's Ovid.

They throw their person with a hoyden air
Across the room, and toss into the chair. Young.

2. To be tossed.

Your mind is tossing on the sea,
There where your argosies
Do overpeer the petty traffickers. Shakesp.

mostly defaced, the right of government doth cease. Bacon's Holy War.

The obdurate sinner, that hath long hardened his own heart against God, thereby provokes his totally to withdraw all inward grace from him.
Hammond.

Charity doth not end with this world, but goes along with us into the next, where it is perfected: but faith and hope shall then totally fail;
the one being changed into sight, the other into enjoyment. Atterbury's Sermons.

TOTHER, contracted for the other.

As bad the one as t'other. Farnaby.

TO TOTTER. v. n. [tateren, to stagger,
Dut.] To shake so as to threaten a fall.

What news, in this our tott'ring state?

—It is a reeling world indeed, my lord,
And I believe will never stand upright. Shakesp.

As a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tott'ring fence. Psalms.

The foes already have possess'd the wall,
Troy nods from high, and totters to her fall. Dryd.

TOTTERY. } adj. [from totter.] Shak-TOTTY. } ing; unsteady; dizzy.

Must hide the touch. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Ah Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakesp.

Albeit some of these articles were merely devised, yet the duke being of base gold, and fearing the touch, subscribed that he did acknowledge his offences. Hayward

6. Test; that by which any thing is examined.

The law-makers rather respected their own benefit than equity, the true touch of all laws.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

7. Proof; tried qualities.

Come, my sweet wife, my dearest mother, and
My friends of noble touch! when I am forth,
Bid me farewell, and smile. Shakesp.

8. [Touche, Fr.] Single act of a pencil upon the picture.

Artificial strife
Lives in those touches, livelier than life. Shakesp.

It will be the more difficult for him to conceive when he has only a relation given him, without the nice touches which make the graces of the picture. Dryden.

Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.

9. Feature; lineament.

Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heav'nly synod was devis'd;
Of many faces, eyes, and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd.
Shakesp. As you like it.

A son was copy'd from his voice so much,
The very same in ev'ry little touch. Dryden.

10. Act of the hand upon a musical instrument.

With solemn touches, troubled thoughts. Milton.

11. Power of exciting the affections.

Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak t' us. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

12. Something of passion or affection.

He which without our nature could not on earth suffer for the world, doth now also, by means thereof, both make intercession to God for sinners, and exercise dominion over all men, with a true natural, and a sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.

T O U

He loves us not.
He wants the natural touch. Shakesp.

13. Particular relation.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon's Essays.

14. [Touche, Fr.] A stroke.

Our kings no sooner fall out, but their mints make war upon one another; one meets sometimes with very nice touches of raillery. Addison on Medals.

Another smart touch of the author we meet with in the fifth page, where, without any preparation, he breaks out all on a sudden into a vein of poetry.
Addison.

Though its error may be such,
As Knags and Burgess cannot hit,
It yet may feel the nicer touch
Of Wicherley's or Congreve's wit. Prior

He gave the little wealth he had
To build a house for fools and mad;
To shew by one satirick touch,
No nation wanted it so much. Swift.

15. Animadversion; censure.

I never bare any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.

Soon mov'd with touch of blame, thus Eve,
What words have pass'd thy lips, Adam severe!
Milton.

16. Exact performance of agreement.

Touch kept is commended, yet credit to keep
Is pay and dispatch him, yer ever ye sleepe.
Tusser.

Quoth Hudibras, thou offer'st much,
But art not able to keep touch. Hudibras.

I keep touch both with my promise to Philopolis, and with my own usual fragality in these kind of collations. More.

He was not to expect that so perfidious a creature should keep touch with him. L'Estrange.

17. A small quantity intermingled.

Madam, I have a touch of your condition,
That cannot brook the accent of reproof. Shakesp.

This coming still nearer to an aspiration, a touch of it may perhaps be an ingredient in the rough guttural pronunciation of the Welsh and Irish.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

18. A hint; slight notice given.

The king your master knows their disposition very well; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

TOUCH-HOLE. n. s. [touch and hole.]

The hole through which the fire is conveyed to the powder in the gun.

In a piece of ordnance, if you speak in the touch-hole, and another lay his ear to the mouth of the piece, the sound is far better heard than in the open air. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TOUCHINESS. n. s. [from touch.] Peevishness; irascibility.

My friends resented it as a motion not guided with such discretion as the touchiness of those times required. King Charles.

TOUCHING. prep. [This word is originally a participle of touch.] With respect, regard, or relation to. It has often the participle as before it, of which there seems to be no use. Touching is now obsolete, though more concise than the mode of speech now adopted.

Touching things which belong to discipline, the church hath authority to make canons and decrees, even as we read in the apostles' times it did. Hooker.

Touching our person, seek we no revenge;
But we our kingdom's safety must so tender,
Whose ruin you three sought, that to her laws
We do deliver you. Shakesp. Henry V.

The heavens and the earth remained in the same state in which they were created, as touching

Howell.

Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit,
Improv'd by tract of time, and wing'd ascend Ethereal as we.

Milton.

As in tract of speech a dubious word is easily known by the coherence with the rest, and a

T R A

dubious letter by the whole word; so may a deaf person, having competent knowledge of language, by an acute sagacity, by some more evident word discerned by his eye, know the sense.

Holder.

4. Course; manner of process; unless it means, in this place, rather, discourse; explanation.

The tract of every thing

Would, by a good discourser, lose some life
Which action's self was tongue to.

Shak. Hen. VIII.

5. It seems to be used by Shakespare for track.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright tract of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

Shakesp.

6. [Tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a small book.

The church clergy at that time writ the best collection of tracts against popery that ever appeared.

Swift.

TRACTABLE. adj. [tractabilis, Lat. trail-able, Fr.]

1. Manageable; docile; compliant; obsequious; practicable; governable.

For moderation of those afflictions growing from the very natural bitterness and gall of adversity, the scripture much allegeth contrary fruit, which affliction likewise hath, whensoever it falleth on them that are tractable, the grace of God's holy spirit concurring therewith.

Hooker.

Tractable obedience is a slave
To each incensed will.

Shakesp. Henry VII.

If thou dost find him tractable to us,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons;
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,

Richard III.

Be thou so too.

Richard III.

As those who are bent to do wickedly will never want tempers to urge them on in an evil course;
so those who yield themselves tractable to good motions, will find the spirit of God more ready to encourage them.

Tillotson.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable, and quietly submit.

Locke.

2. Palpable; such as may be handled.

The other measures are of continued quantity visible, and for the most part tractable; whereas time is always transient, neither to be seen nor felt.

Holder on Time.

TRACTABLENESS. n. s. [from tractable.]

The state of being tractable; compliance; obsequiousness.

It will be objected, that whatsoever I fancy of children's tractableness, yet many will never apply.

Locke.

TRACTABLY. adv. In a tractable manner; gently.

TRACTATE. n. s. [tractatus, Lat.] A treatise; a tract; a small book.

Many divines of our own nation, in sermons and written tractates of the sabbath, and in their expositions of the fourth commandment, maintain the foresaid position.

White.

Though philosophical tractates make enumeration of authors, yet are their reasons usually introduced.

Brown.

We need no other evidence than Glanville's tractate.

Hale.

TRACTILE. adj. [tractus, Lat.] Capable to be drawn out or extended in length;
ductile.

The consistencies of bodies are very divers; fragile, tough; flexible, inflexible; tractile, or to be drawn forth in length, intractile.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

TRACTILITY. n. s. [from tractile.] The quality of being tractile.

Silver, whose ductility and tractility are much inferiour to those of gold, was drawn out to superfluous length, that a single grain amounted to twenty-seven feet.

Derham.

TRACTION. n. s. [from tractus, Lat.]

T R A

The act of drawing; the state of being drawn.

The malleus being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inwards to bring the terms of that line nearer in proportion as it is curved, and so gives a tension to the tympanum.

Holder.

TRADE. n. s. [tratta, Ital.]

1. Traffick; commerce; exchange of goods for other goods, or for money.

Whosoever commands the sea, commands the trade; whosoever commands the trade of the world, commands the riches of the world, and consequently the world itself.

Raleigh.

Trade increases in one place, and decays in another.

Temple.

2. Occupation; particular employment, whether manual or mercantile, distinguished from the liberal arts or learned professions.

Appoint to every one that is not able to live of his freehold, a certain trade of life; the which trade he shall be bound to follow.

Spenser an Irel.

How dizzy! half way down
Hangs one that gathers saunpshire, dreadful trade!

Shakesp.

I'll mountebank their loves, and come home
belov'd

Of all the trades in Rome.

Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Fear and piety,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Decline to your confounding contraries.

Shakesp.

The rude Equicola,
Hunting their sport, and plund'ring was their trade.

Dryden.

Fight under him; there's plunder to be had;
A captain is a very gainful trade.

Dryd. Juvenal.

The whole division that in Steers pertains,
All trades of death, that deal in steel for gain.

Dry.

The emperor Pertinax applied himself in his youth to a gainful trade; his father, judging him fit for a better employment, had a mind to turn his education another way; the son was obstinate in pursuing so profitable a trade, a sort of merchandise of wood.

Arbutnot on Coins.

3. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war,
His bow and quiver, and his trusty cur.

Dryd. Virg.

4. Any employment not manual; habitual exercise.

Call some of young years to train them up in that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs.

Bac.

5. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade.

Shakesp.

6. Formerly trade was used of domestick, and traffick of foreign commerce.

To TRADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To traffick; to deal; to hold commerce.
He commanded these servants to be called, to know how much every man had gained by trading.

Luke, xix. 15.

Delos, a sacred place, grew a free port, where nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded.

Arbutnot on Coins.

Maximinus traded with the Goths in the product of his estate in Thracia.

Arbutnot.

2. To act merely for money.
Saucy and overbold! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth

Shakesp. Macbeth.

In riddles and affairs of death?

Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. To have a trade wind.
They on the trading flood ply taw'rd the pole.

Milton.

To TRADE. v. a. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men and vessels of brass in thy market.

Ezekiel, xxvii. 15.

TRADED. adj. [from trade.] Versed;
practised.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes;
For villany is not without such rheum:

T R A

And he long traded in it makes it seem Like rivers of remorse and innocence. Shakesp.
Eyes and ears,

Two traded pilots 'twixt the dangerous shores
Of will and judgment. Shakesp. Troil. and Cress.
TRA'DEFUL. adj. [trade and full.] Commercial; busy in traffick.

Ye *trade*ful merchants, that with weary toil
Do seek most precious things to make your gain,
And both the Indies of their treasure spoil,
What needeth you to seek so far in vain? Spens.

TRA'DER. n. s. [from trade.]
1. One engaged in merchandise or commerce.

Pilgrims are going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purses. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Now the victory's won,
We return to our lasses like fortunate traders,
Triumphant with spoils. Dryden.
Many traders will necessitate merchants to trade for less profit, and consequently be more frugal.
Child on Trade.

That day traders sum up the accounts of the week. Swift.

2. One long used in the methods of money-getting; a practitioner.

TRA'DESFOLK. n. s. [trade and folk.]
People employed in trades.

By his advice victuallers and tradesfolk would soon get all the money of the kingdom into their hands. Swift.

TRA'DESMAN. n. s. [trade and man.] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman; and it seems disguised in Shakespeare from a man that labours with his hands.

I live by the awl, I meddle with no tradesmen's matters. Shakesp.

They rather had beheld
Dissentious numbers pest'ring streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going About their functions. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Order a trade thither and thence so as some few merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them. Bacon.

Tradesmen might conjecture what things they were like to have in their respective dealings. Grau.
M. Jordain would not be thought a tradesman, but ordered some silk to be measured out to his partner's friends: now I give up my shop. Prior.
From a plain tradesman with a shop, he is now grown a very rich country gentleman.

Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.
Domesticks in a gentleman's family have more opportunities of improving their minds, than the ordinary tradesmen. Swift.

Boastful and rough, your first son is a squire;
The next a tradesman, meek, and much a liar.
Pope's Epigrams.

Peritens was a busy notable tradesman, very prosperous in his dealings, but died in the thirty-fifth year of his age. Law.

TRADE-WIND. n. s. [trade and wind.]
The monsoon; the periodical wind between the tropicks.

Thus to the eastern wealth through storms we go,
But now, the Cape once doubled, fear no more!
A constant tradewind will securely blow,
And gently lay us on the spicy shore. Dryden.

His were the projects of perpetuum mobiles, and of incr.asing the trade-wind by vast plantations of reeds. Arbuthnot.

Comfortable is the trade-wind to the equatorial parts, without which life would be both short and grievous. Cheyne.

TRADITION. n. s. [tradition, Fr. tradi-ditio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of delivering accounts from mouth to mouth without written memorials; communication from age to age.

T R A

To learn it we have tradition; namely, that so we believe, because both we from our predecessors, and they from theirs, have so received. Hooker.

2. Any thing delivered orally from age to age.

They the truth
With superstitions and traditions taint,
Left only in those written records pure. Milton.

It is well known to have been a general tradition amongst these nations, that the world was made, and had a beginning. Wilkins.

Our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the God of day.
Pope's Statius.

TRADITIONAL. adj. [from tradition.]
1. Delivered by tradition; descending by oral communication; transmitted by the foregoing to the following age.

Whence may we have the infallible traditional sense of scripture, if not from the heads of their church? Tillotson.

If there be any difference in natural parts, it should seem the advantage lies on the side of children born from wealthy parents, the same traditional sloth and luxury, which render their body weak, perhaps refining their spirits. Swift.

2. Observant of traditions, or idle rites.
Not used, nor proper.

God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary!

—You are too senseless obstinate, my lord;
Too ceremonious and traditional. Shak. Rich. II.

TRADITIONALLY. adv. [from traditional.]

1. By transmission from age to age.

There is another channel wherein this doctrine is traditionally derived from St. John, namely, from the clergy of Asia. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. From tradition, without evidence of written memorials.

It crosseth the proverb, and Rome might well be built in a day, if that were true which is *traditional*ly related by Strabo, that the great cities Anchiale and Tarsus were built by Sardanapalus both in one day. Brown's Vulg. Err.

TRADITIONARY. adj. [from tradition.]
Delivered by tradition; transmissive;

handed down from age to age.
Suppose the same traditionary strain
Of rigid manners in the house remain,
Inveterate truth, an old plain Sabine's heart.
Dryden.

Oral tradition is more uncertain, especially if we may take that to be the traditionary sense of texts of scripture. Tillotson.

The fame of our Saviour, which in so few years had gone through the whole earth, was confirmed and perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after ages.
Addison on the Christian Religion.

TRA'DITIVE. adj. [traditive, Fr. from trado, Lat.] Transmitted or trans-missible from age to age.

Suppose we un things traditive divide,
And both appeal to scripture to decide.
Dryden's Hind and Panther.

To TRA'DUCE. v. a. [traduco, Lat. tra-duire, Fr.]

1. To censure; to condemn; to represent as blameable; to calumniate; to decry.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, who knoweth his kingdom to be no one way more shaken than by the publick devout prayers of God's church, is by traducing the form and manner of them, to bring them into contempt, and so slack
the force of all men's devotion towards them.
Hooker.

Those particular ceremonies which they pretend to be so scandalous, we shall more thoroughly sift,

T R A

when other things also traduced in the publick duties of the church are, together with these, to be touched. Hooker.

Whilst calumny has such potent abettors, we are not to wonder at its growth: as long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traduc-ing. Government of the Tongue.

From that preface he took his hint; though he had the baseness not to acknowledge his benefactor, but instead of it to traduce me in libel.
Dryden's Fables.

2. To propagate; to increase or continue by deriving one from another.

None are so gross as to contend for this,
That souls from bodies may traduced be;
Between whose natures no proportion is,
When root and branch in nature still agree. Darvis.
From these only the race of perfect animals were propagated and traduced over the earth.
Hale.

Some believe the soul is made by God, some by angels, and some by the generant: whither it be immediately created or traduced, hath been the great ball of contention to the latter ages.
Glanville's Scepis.

TRADUCEMENT. n. s. [from traduce.]
Censure; obloquy.

Rome must know
The value of her own: 'twere a concealment
Worse than a theft, no less than a traducement,
To hide your doings. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

TRADUCER. n. s. [from traduce.]
1. A false censurer; a calumniator.

2. One who derives.

TRADUCIBLE. adj. [from traduce.] Such as may be derived.

Though oral tradition might be a competent discoverer of the original of a kingdom, yet such a tradition were incompetent without written monuments to derive to us the original laws, because they are of a complex nature, and therefore not orally traducible to so great a distance of ages.
Hale.

TRADUCTION. n. s. [from traduce.]
1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

The patrons of traduction accuse their adversaries of affronting the attributes of God; and the asserters of creation impeach them of violence to the nature of things. Glanville.

If by traduction came thy mind,
Our wonder is the less to find
A soul so charming from a stock so good;
Thy father was transfus'd into thy blood. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another.

Touching traditional communication and traduction of truths conatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of them have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

3. Conveyance; act of transferring.

Since America is divided on every side by considerable seas, and no passage known by land,
the traduction of brutes could only be by shipping;
though this was a method used for the traduction of useful cattle from hence thither, yet it is not credible that bears and lions should have so much care used for their transportation.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

4. Transition.

The reports and fables have an agreement with the figures in rhetoric of repetition and tradiction. Bacon.

TRA'FFICK. n. s. [trafique, Fr. traffico, Ital.]

1. Commerce; merchandising; large trade; exchange of commodities. Traffick was formerly used of foreign commerce in distinction from trade.

Traffick's thy god. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
My father
A merchant of great traffick through the world.
Shakesp.

Tyre, a town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the most famous emporium of the elder times.

As he was, for his great wisdom, styled the English Solomon, he followed the example of that wise king in nothing more than by advancing the traffick of his people.

2. Commodities ; subject of traffick.

You'll see a draggled damsel
From Billingsgate her fishy traffick bear.

1. To practise commerce ; to merchandise ; to exchange commodities.

Their first plant for corn and cattle, and after enlarge themselves for things to traffick withal.

2. To trade meanly, or mercenarily.

Saucy and overbold ! how did you dare
To trade and traffick with Macbeth
In riddles and affairs of death ?

TRAFFICKER. n. s. [traffiqueur, Fr. from traffick.] Trader ; merchant.

Your argosies with portly sail,
Like signiors and rich burghers on the flood,
Do overpeer the petty traffickers
That curtsy to them.

TRAGACANTH. n. s. [tragacantha, Lat.]
A gum which proceeds from the incision of the root or trunk of a plant so called.

TRAGEDIAN. n. s. [from tragedy ; tragadus, Lat.]

Many of the poets themselves had much nobler conceptions of the Deity, than to imagine him to have any thing corporeal ; as in these verses out of the ancient tragedian.

2. An actor of tragedy.

I can counterfeit the deep tragedian ;
Speak, and look back, and pry on ev'ry side,
Tremble and start at wagging of a straw,
Intending deep suspicion.

TRAGEDY. n. s. [tragedie, Fr. tragadia, Lat.]

1. A dramatick representation of a serious action.

Thousands more, that yet suspect no peril,
Will now conclude their plotted tragedy.

All our tragedies are of kings and princes ; but you never see a poor man have a part unless it be as a chorus, or to fill up the scenes, to dance, or to be derided.

There to her heart sad Tragedy address
The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast.

2. Any mournful or dreadful event.

I shall laugh at this,
That they, who brought me in my master's hate,
I live to look upon their tragedy.

TRA'GICAL } adj. [tragicus, Lat. tra-

TRA'GICK. } gique, Fr.]

1. Relating to tragedy.

The root and tragical effect,
Vouchsafe, O thou the mournfull'st muse of mine,
That wont'st the tragick stage for to direct,
In funeral complaints and wailful tune
Reveal to me.

Thy Clarence, he is dead, that stabb'd my Edward ;
And the beholders of this tragick play
Untimely smother'd in their dusky graves.

2. Mournful ; calamitous ; sorrowful ; dreadful.

A dire induction I am witness to ;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

Why look you still so stern and tragical ?
So tragical and merited a fate
Shall swallow those, who God and justice hate.

I now must change those notes to tragick.
The tale of this song is a pretty tragical story ;
and pleases, because it is a copy of nature.

TRAGICALLY. adv. [from tragical.]

1. In a tragical manner ; in a manner befitting tragedy.
Juvenal's genius was sharp and eager ; and as his provocations were great, he has revenged them tragically.

2. Mournfully ; sorrowfully ; calamitously.

Like bold Phaëton, we despise all benefits of the father of light, unless we may guide his chariot ; and we moralize the fable as well in the tragicalness of the event, as in the insolence of the undertaking.

TRAGICOMEDY. n. s. [tragicomedie, Fr. from tragedy and comedy.] A drama compounded of merry and serious events.

On the world's stage, when our applause grows high,
For acting here life's tragi-comedy,
The lookers-on will say we act not well,
Unless the last the former scenes excel.

We have often had tragi-comedies upon the English theatre with success ; but in that sort of composition the tragedy and comedy are in distinct scenes.

TRAGICOMICAL. adj. [tragicomique, Fr. tragical and comical.]

1. Relating to tragi-comedy.
The whole art of the tragi-comical farce lies in interweaving the several kinds of the drama, so that they cannot be distinguished.

2. Consisting of a mixture of mirth with sorrow.

TRAGICOMICALLY. adv. [from tragicomical.] In a tragicomical manner.

Laws my Piodarick parents matter'd not,
So I was tragicomically got.

To TRAJE'CT. v. a. [trajectus, Lat.] To cast through ; to throw.

The disputes of those assuming confidants, that think so highly of their attainments, are like the controversy of those in Plato's den, who having never seen but the shadow of an horse trajected, eagerly contended, whether its neighing proceeded from its appearing mane or tail.

If there are different kinds of æther, they have a different degree of rarity ; by which it becomes so fit a medium for trajecting the light of all celestial bodies.

If the sun's light be trajected through three or more cross prisms successively, those rays which in the first prism are refracted more than others, are in all the following prisms refracted more than others in the same proportion.

TRAJECT. n. s. [trajet, Fr. trajectus, Lat.] A ferry ; a passage for a water-carriage.

What notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring to the traject, to the common ferry,
Which trades to Venice.

TRAJECTION. n. s. [trajectio, Lat.]

1. The act of darting through.
Later astronomers have observed the free motion of such comets as have, by a trajection through the æther, wandered through the celestial or interstellar part of the universe.

2. Emission.
The trajections of such an object more sharply pierce the martyred soul of John, than afterwards did the nails the crucified body of Peter.

To TRAIL. v. a. [trailler, Fr.]

1. To hunt by the track.
2. To draw along the ground.
Beat thou the drum, that it speak mournfully ;
Trail your steel pikes.

3. To draw a long floating or waving body.
What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe,
And, of all monarchs, only grasps the globe ?

4. [Treglen, Dut.] To draw ; to drag.
Because they shall not trail me through their streets
Like a wild beast, I am content to go.

Thrice happy poet, who may trail
Thy house about thee like a snail ;
Or, harness'd to a nag, at ease
Take journeys in it like a chaise ;
Or in a boat, whene'er thou wilt,
Canst make it serve thee for a tilt.

To TRAIL. v. u. To be drawn out in length.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown so fast, and all his armour steeped,
For very feltness loud he 'gan to weep.

Swift men of foot, whose broad-set backs their trailing hair did hide,
Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke,
He knew his honn was granted.

From o'er the roof the blaze began to move,
And trailing vanish'd in th' Ideal grove ;
It swept a path in heav'n, and shone a guide,
Then in a steaming stench of sulphur dy'd.

TRAIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Scent left on the ground by the animal pursued ; track followed by the hunter.
See but the issue of my jealousy : if I cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

How cheerfully on the false trail they cry !
Oh, this is counter, you false Danish dogs.

2. Any thing drawn to length.
From thence the fuming trail began to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head.

When lightning shoots in glit'ring trails along,
It shines, 'tis true, and gilds the gloomy night ;
But when it strikes, 'tis fatal.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations.

And round about her work she did empale
With a fair border wrought of sundry flow'rs,
Enwoven with an ivy winding trail.

A sudden star it shot through liquid air,
And drew behind a radiant trail of hair.

Ta TRAIN. v. a. [trainer, Fr.]

1. To draw along.

In hollow cube he train'd
His devilish enginery.

2. To draw; to entice; to invite; to allure.

If but twelve French
Were there in arms, they would be as a call
To train ten thousand English to their side.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

For that cause I train'd thee to my house.
Oh, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note!
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears,
Sing, Syren, to thyself, and I will doat:
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

We did train him on,
And his corruption heing ta'en from us,
We as the spring of all shall pay for all.

5. To educate; to bring up; commonly with up.

I can speak English,
For I was train'd up in the English court.

To nature none more bound; his training such,
That he may furnish and instruct great teachers.

A place for exercise and training up of youth in the fashion of the heathen.
Call some of young years to train them up in
that trade, and so fit them for weighty affairs.

Spirits train'd up in feast and song.
The first Christians were by great hardships trained up for glory.

The young soldier is to be trained on to the warfare of life; wherein care is to be taken that more things be not represented as dangerous than really are so.

6. To exercise; or form to any practice by exercise.

Abram armed his trained servants born in his house, and pursued.
The warrior horse here bred he's taught to train.

TRAIN. n. s. [train, Fr.]

1. Artifice; stratagem of enticement.

He cast by treaty and by trains
Her to persuade.
Their general did with due care provide,
To save his men from ambush and from train.

This mov'd the king,
To lay to draw him in by any train.

Swof'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks, venerable trains,
Softend with pleasure and voluptuous life.

Now to my charms
And to my wily trains? I shall ere long
Be well stock'd with as fair a herd as graz'd
About my mother Circe.

The practice begins of crafty men upon the simple and good; these easily follow and are caught, while the others lay trains and pursue a game.

2. The tail of a bird.

Costly followers are not to be liked, lest while a man makes his train longer, he makes his wings shorter.

Contracting their body, and being forced to draw in their fore parts to establish the hinder in the elevation of the train; if the fore parts do part and incline to the ground, the hinder grow too weak, and suffer the train to fall.

The bird guideth her body with her train, and the ship is steered with the rudder.

Th' other, whose gay train
Adorns him colour'd with the florid hue
Of rainbows and starry eyes.

The train steers their flights, and turns their bodies like the rudder of a ship; as the kite, by a light turning of his train, moves his body which way he pleases.

3. The part of a gown that falls behind upon the ground.

A thousand pounds a year, for pure respect!
That promises more thousands: honour's train
Is longer than his fore skirts.

4. A series; a consecution; either local or mental.

Rivers now stream, and draw their humid train.
Distinct gradual growth in knowledge carries its own light with it, in every step of its progression, in an easy and orderly train.

If we reflect on what is observable in ourselves,
we shall find our ideas always passing in train, one going and another coming, without intermission.

They laboured in vain so far to reach the apostle's meaning all along in the train of what he said.

Some truths result from any ideas, as soon as the mind puts them into propositions; other truths require a train of ideas placed in order, a due comparing of them, and deductions made with attention.

What would'st thou have me do? consider well
The train of ills our love would draw behind it.

The author of your beings can by a glance of the eye, or a word speaking, enlighten your mind, and conduct you to a train of happy sentiments.

5. Process; method; state of procedure.

If things were once in this train, if virtue were established as necessary to reputation, and vice not only loaded with infamy, but made the infallible ruin of all men's pretensions, our duty would take root in our nature.

6. A retinue; a number of followers or attendants.

My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names.
Our sire walks forth, without more train
Accompany'd than with his own complete Perfections.

Thou shouldst he seen
A goddess among gods, ador'd, and serv'd
By angels numberless, thy daily train.
He comes not with a train to move our fear.

The king's daughter, with a lovely train
Of fellow nymphs, was sporting on the plain.

He would put a check to the fury of war, that a stop might be put to those sins which are of its train.

7. An orderly company; a procession.

Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,
If better thou belong not to the dawn.
Who the knights in green, and what the train
Of ladies dress'd with daisies on the plain?

8. The line of powder reaching to the mine.

Since first they fail'd in their designs,
To take in heav'n by springing mines;
And with unanswerable barrels
Of gunpowder, dispute their quarrels;
Now take a course more practicable,
By laying trains to fire the rabble, Shall he that gives fire to the train, pretend to wash his hands of the hurt that's done by the playing of the mine?

9. Train of artillery. Cannons accompanying an army.

With an army abundantly supplied with a train of artillery, and all other provisions necessary, the king advanced towards Scotland.

TRAINBANDS. n. s. [train and band: I suppose for trained band.] The militia;
the part of a community trained to martial exercise.

He directed the trainbands, which consisted of the most substantial householders, to attend.

Give commission
To some bold man, whose loyalty you trust,
And let him raise the trainbands of the city.
A council of war was called, wherein we agreed to retreat: but before we could give the word,
the trainbands, taking advantage of our delay, fled first.

TRAINBEARER. n. s. [train and bearer.]
One that holds up a train.

TRAINOIL. n. s. [train and oil.] Oil drawn by coction from the fat of the whale.

TRAINY. adj. [from train.] Belonging to train oil. A bad word.

Her steams ascend,
Where the huge hogsheads sweat with trainy oil.

TO TRAIPE. v. a. [A low word. See TRAPE.] To walk in a careless or sluttish manner.

Two slipshod muses traipse along,
In lofty madness, meditating song.

TRAIT. n. s. [trait, Fr.] A stroke; a touch. Scarce English.

By this single trait Homer marks an essential difference between the Iliad and Odyssey; that in the former the people perished by the folly of their kings; in this, by their own folly.

The harmonizing tints and softer traits
Elusive shun the crude observer's gaze,
And justly to discriminate demand
A practis'd pencil and a master hand.

*TRAITOR. n. s. [traitre, Fr. traditor,
Lat.]* One who being trusted betrays.

The law laid that grievous punishment upon traitors, to forfeit all their lands to the prince, that men might be terrified from committing treasons.

If you flatter him, you are a great traitor to him.

I'll put him thus far into the plot, that he should be secured as a traitor; but when I am out of reach, he shall be released.

There is no difference, in point of morality, whether a man calls me traitor in one word, or says I am one hired to betray my religion, and sell my country.

TRAITORLY. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious.

These traitorly rascals' miseries are to be smil'd
at, their offences being so capital.

TRAITOROUS. adj. [from traitor.] Treacherous; perfidious; faithless.

What news with him, that trait'rous wight?

Pontifinus knows not you,
While you stand out upon these traitorous terms.

The traitorous or treacherous, who have misled others, he would have severely punished, and the neutrals noted.

More of his majesty's friends have lost their lives in this rebellion than of his traitorous subjects.

TRAITOROUSLY. adv. [from traitorous.]
In a manner suiting traitors; perfidiously; treacherously.

Good duke Humphry traiterously is murder'd
By Suffolk.
Thou bitter sweet! whom I had laid
Next me, me traiterously hast betray'd;

And unsuspected half invisibly
At once fled into him, and stay'd with me. Donne.
They had traitorously endeavoured to subvert the fundamental laws, deprive the king of his regal power, and to place on his subjects a tyrannical power. Clarendon.

TRAITRESS. n. s. [from traitor.] A woman who betrays.

I, what I am, by what I was, o'ercome:
Traitress, restore my beauty and my charms,
Nor steal my conquest with my proper arms. Dry.
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope's Odyssey.

TRALATI'IOUS. adj. [from translatius,
Lat.] Metaphorical; not literal.

TRALATI'IOUSLY. adv. [from tralati-tious.] Metaphorically; not literally; not according to the first intention of the word.

Language properly is that of the tongue directed to the ear by speaking; written language is tralatitiously so called, because it is made to represent to the eye the same words which are pronounced.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

To TRALI'NEATE. v. n. [trans and line.]
To deviate from any direction.

If you tralineate from your father's mind,
What are you else but of a hasty kind?
Do then as your progenitors have done,
And by their virtues prove yourself their son. Dry.

TRAMMEL. n. s. [travail, Fr. trama, tragula, Lat.]

1. A net in which birds or fish are caught.
The trammel differeth not much from the shape of the bunt, and serveth to such use as the wear and haking. Carew.

2. Any kind of net.
Her golden locks she roundly did unty
In braided trammels, that no looser hairs
Did out of order stray about her dainty ears. Spens.

3. A kind of shackles in which horses are taught to pace.

I may go shufflingly at first, for I was never before walked in trammels; yet I shall drudge at constancy, till I have worn off the hitching in my pace. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

To TRAMMEL. v. a. [from the noun.]
To catch; to intercept.

If th' assassination
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch
With its surcease success. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To TRAMPLE. v. a. [trampe, Dan.] To tread under foot with pride, contempt, or elevation.

Cast not your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet. Matt. vii. 6.
My strength shall trample thee as mire. Milton.

To TRAMPLE. v. n.
1. To tread in contempt.

Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own. Government of the Tongue.

Your country's gods I scorn,
And trample on their ignominious altars. Rowe.

2. To tread quick and loudly.
I hear his thund'ring voice resound,
And trampling feet that shake the solid ground.
Dryden.

TRAMPLER. n. s. [from trample.] One that tramples.

TRANA'TION. n. s. [trano, Lat.] The act of swimming over.

TRANCE. n. s. [transe, Fr. transitus, Lat.] It might therefore be written transe.] An ecstasy; a state in which the soul is rapt into visions of future or distant things; a temporary absence of the soul from the body. See TRANSE.

Gynecia had been in such a trance of musing, that Zelmane was fighting with the lion before she knew of any lion's coming. Sidney.

Rapt with joy resembling heavenly madness,
My soul was ravish'd quite as in a trance. Spens. Sonn.
That Taliessen, once which made the rivers dance,
And in his rapture rais'd the mountains from their trance. Drayton.

Abstract as in a trance, methought I saw. Milt.
Sudden he starts,
Shook from his tender trance. Thomson's Spring.

TRANCED. adj. [from trance.] Lying in a trance or ecstasy.

His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack. Twice then the trumpets sounded,
And there I left him transe'd. Shakesp. King Lear.

TRAN'GRAM. n. s. [A cant word.] An odd intricately contrived thing.

What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks? what are you going about, jumping over my master's hedges, and running your lines cross his grounds? Arbuthnot.

TRAN'NEL. n. s. A sharp pin. Perhaps from trennel.

With a small trannel of iron, or a large nail grounded to a sharp point, they mark the brick.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TRAN'QUIL. adj. [tranquille, Fr. tran-quillus, Lat.] Quiet; peaceful; undisturbed.

I had been happy,
So I had nothing known. Oh now, for ever Farewel the tranquil mind! farewel content! Shak.

TRANQUIL'ITY. n. s. [tranquillitas,
Lat. tranquillité, Fr.] Quiet; peace of mind; peace of condition; freedom from perturbation.

Leave off,
To let a weary wretch from her due rest,
And trouble dying souls tranquillity. Spenser.

How rev'rend is the face of this tall pile,
Whose aged pillars rear their marble heads
To bear aloft its arch'd and pond'rous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immovable,
Looking tranquillity! Congreve.

You can scarce imagine any hero passing from one stage of life to another with so much tranquillity, so easy a transition, and so laudable a behaviour. Pope.

To TRANSA'CT. v. a. [transactus, Lat.]

1. To manage; to negotiate; to conduct a treaty or affairs.

2. To perform; to do; to carry on.
It cannot be expected they should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some few of the disciples only, as the transfiguration and the agony. Addison.

TRANSA'CTION. n. s. [transaction, Fr.
from transact.] Negotiation; dealing between man and man; management;
affairs; things managed.

It is not the purpose of this discourse to set down
the particular transactions of this treaty. Clarendon.

TRANSA'NIMA'TION. n. s. [trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

If the transanimitation of Pythagoras were true, that the souls of men transigrate into species answering their former natures, some men cannot escape that very brood whose sire Satan entered.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To TRANSCEND. v. a. [transcendo, Lat.]

1. To pass; to overpass.
It is a dangerous opinion to such popes as shall transcend their limits and become tyrannical. Bacon.
To judge herself, she must herself transcend,
As greater circles comprehend the less. Davies.

2. To surpass; to outgo; to exceed; to excel.

This glorious piece transcends what he could think;
So much his blood is nobler than his ink. Waller.

These are they Deserve their greatness and uncyn'd stand, Since what they act transcends what they command. Denham.

High though her wit, yet humble was her mind
As if she could not, or she would not find
How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dry.

3. To surmount; to rise above.
Make disquisition whether these unusual lights be meteorological impressions not transcending the upper region, or whether to be ranked among celestial bodies. Howel.

To TRANSCEND. v. n.

1. To climb. Not in use.
To conclude, because things do not easily sink, they do not drown at all, the fallacy is a frequent addition in human expressions, which often give distinct accounts of proximity, and transcend from one unto another. Brown.

2. To surpass thought.
The consistence of grace and free will, in this sense, is no such transcending mystery, and I think there is no text in scripture that sounds any thing towards making it so. Hammond.

TRANSCENDENCE. } n. s. [from tran-TRANSCENDENCY. } scend.]

1. Excellence; unusual excellence; super-eminence.

2. Exaggeration; elevation beyond truth.
It is true greatness to have in one the frailty of a man, and the security of a God; this would have done better in poesy, where transcendencies are more allowed. Bacon's Essays.

TRANSCENDENT. adj. [transcendens,
Lat. transcendant, Fr.] Excellent; su-premely excellent; passing others.

The title of queen is given by Ignatius to the Lord's day, not by way of derogation and diminution, but to signify the eminent and transcendent honour of the day. White.

Thou, whose strong hand, with so transcendent worth,

Holds high the rein of fair Parthenope. Crashaw.
There is, in a lawgiver, a habitual and ultimate intention of a more excellent and transcendent nature. Bishop Sanderson.

If thou beest he—But O! how fall'n, how chang'd
From him who in the happy realms of light, Cloath'd with transcendent brightness, didst outshine

Myriads, though bright! Milton.
Oh charming princess! oh transcendent maid!
A. Phillips.

The right our Creator has to our obedience is of so high and transcendent a nature, that it can suffer no competition; his commands must have the first and governing influence on all our actions.
Rogers's Sermons.

TRANSCENDENTAL. adj. [transcendentalis, low Lat.]

1. General; pervading many particulars.

2. Super-eminent; passing others.
Though the Deity perceiveth not pleasure nor pain, as we do; yet he must have a perfect and transcendental perception of these, and of all other things. Grey's Cosmologia.

TRANSCENDENTLY. adv. [from transcendent.] Excellently; super-eminently.

The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South's Sermon.

To TRANSCOLATE. v. a. [trans and colo, Lat.] To strain through a sieve or colander; to suffer to pass, as through a strainer.

The lungs are, unless pervious like a sponge, unfit to imbibe and transcolate the air. Harvey.

To TRANSCRIBE. v. a. [transcribo, Lat. transcribere, Fr.] To copy; to write from an exemplar.

He was the original of all those inventions,
from which others did but transcribe copies. Clar.

The most rigid exactors of mere outward purity do but transcribe the folly of him who pumps 869 very laboriously in a ship, yet neglects to stop the leak.

If we imitate their repentance as we transcribe their faults, we shall be received with the same mercy.

TRANSCRIBER. n. s. [from transcribe.] A copier; one who writes from a copy.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and transcribers.

Writings have been corrupted by little and little, by unskilful transcribers.

TRANSCRIPT. n. s. [transcript, Fr. transcriptum, Lat.] A copy; any thing written from an original.

The Grecian learning was but a transcript of the Chaldean and Egyptian; and the Roman of the Grecian.

The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original.

Dictate, O mighty Judge! what thou hast seen Of cities and of courts, of books and men, And deign to let thy servant hold the pen. Through ages thus I may presume to live, And from the transcript of thy prose receive What my own short-liv'd verse can never give.

TRANSCRIPTION. n. s. [transcription, Fr. from transcriptus, Lat.] The act of copying.

The ancients were but men; the practice of transcription in our days was no monster in their's: plagiary had not its nativity with printing, but began in times when thefts were difficult.

The corruptions that have crept into it by many transcriptions was the cause of so great difference.

TRANSCRIPTIVELY. adv. [from transcript.] In manner of a copy.

Not a few transcriptively subscribing their names to other men's endeavours, transcribe all they have written.

To TRANSCUR. v. n. [transcurro, Lat.] To run or rove to and fro.

By fixing the mind on one object, it doth not spatiate and transcur.

TRANSCURSION. n. s. [from transcursum, Lat.] Ramble; passage through; passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation.

In a great whale, the sense and the affects of any one part of the body instantly make a transcurSION throughout the whole.

I have briefly run over transcurSIONS, as if my pen had been posting with them.

His philosophy gives them transcurSIONS beyond the vortex we breathe in, and leads them through others which are only known in an hypothesis.

I am to make often transcurSIONS into the neighbouring forests as I pass along.

If man were out of the world, who were then left to view the face of heaven, to wonder at the transcurSION of comets? More's Ant. against Atheism.

TRANSE. n. s. [transe, Fr. See TRANCE.] A temporary absence of the soul; an ecstasy.

Abstract as in a transe, methought I saw, Though sleeping, where I lay, and saw the shape Still glorious before whom awake I stood.

TRANSELEMENTATION. n. s. [trans and element.] Change of one element into another.

Rain we allow; but if they suppose any other transelementation, it neither agrees with Moses's philosophy nor St. Peter's.

TRANSEXION. n. s. [trans and sexus, Lat.] Change from one sex to another.

It much impeacheth the iterated transexion of hares, if that be true which some physicians affirm, that transmutation of sexes was only so in opinion, and that those transfeminated persons were really men at first.

To TRANSFER. v. a. [transferre, Fr. transfere, Lat.]

1. To convey; to make over from one to another: with to, sometimes with upon.

He that transfers the laws of Lacedemonians to the people of Athens, should find a great absurdity and inconvenience.

Was 't not enough you took my crown away, But cruelly you must my love betray? I was well pleas'd to have transferr'd my right, And better chang'd your claim of lawless night.

The king, Who from himself all envy would remove, Left both to be determin'd by the laws, And to the Grecian chiefs transferr'd the cause.

This was one perverse effect of their sitting at ease under their vines and fig-trees, that they forgot from whence that ease came, and transferred all the honour of it upon themselves.

Your sacred aid religious monarchs own, When first they merit, then ascend the throne: But tyrants dread you, lest your just decree Transfer the power, and set the people free.

By reading we learn not only the actions and the sentiments of distant nations, but transfer to ourselves the knowledge and improvements of the most learned men.

2. To remove; to transport.

The king was much moved with this unexpected accident, because it was stirr'd in such a place where he could not with safety transfer his own person to suppress it.

He thirty rolling years the crown shall wear, Then from Lavinium shall the seat transfer.

TRANSFERENCE. n. s. A change of property; a delivery of property to another.

TRANSFERRED. n. s. He that transfers.

TRANSFIGURATION. n. s. [transfiguration, Fr.]

1. Change of form.

In kinds where the discrimination of sexes is obscure, these transformations are more common, and in some without commixture; as in caterpillars or silkworms, wherein there is a visible and triple transfiguration.

2. The miraculous change of our blessed Saviour's appearance on the Mount.

It cannot be expected that other authors should mention particulars which were transacted amongst some of the disciples; such as the transfiguration and the agony in the garden.

Did Raphael's pencil never chuse to fall? Say, are his works transfigurations all?

To TRANSFIGURE. v. a. [transfigurare, Fr. trans and figura, Lat.] To transform; to change with respect to outward appearance.

I am the more zealous to transfigure your love into devotion, because I have observed your passion to have been extremely impatient of confinement.

The nuptial night his outrage strait attends, The dow'r desir'd is his transfigur'd friends: The incantation backward she repeats, Inverts her rod, and what she did defeats.

To TRANSFIX. v. a. [transfixus, Lat.] To pierce through.

Amongst these mighty men were women mix'd; The hold Semiramis, whose sides transfix'd With son's own blade, her foul reproaches spoke.

With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph.

Diana's dart In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart.

Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize, Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies.

Till fate shall with a single dart Transfix the pair it cannot part.

To TRANSFORM. v. a. [transformer, Fr. trans and forma, Lat.] To metamorphose; to change with regard to external form.

She demanded of him, whether the goddess of those woods had such a power to transform every body.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see The pretty follies that themselves commit; For if they could, Cupid himself would blush To see me thus transformed to a boy.

As is the fable of the lady fair, Which for her lust was turn'd into a cow; When thirsty to a stream she did repair, And saw herself transform'd she wist not how.

To TRANSFORM. v. n. To be metamorphosed.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet In skinny films, and shape his oary feet.

TRANSFORMATION. n. s. [from transform.] Change of shape; act of changing the form; state of being changed with regard to form; metamorphosis.

Something you have heard Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it, Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man, Resembles that it was.

What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? —And what a beast art thou already, and seest not thy loss in transformation!

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions.

TRANSFRETATION. n. s. [trans and fretum, Lat.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfretation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory.

To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of his kind doth most consist.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin, As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine? But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow, His always floats above, thine sinks below.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfus'd, the sound juices would grow morbid.

TRANSFUSION. n. s. [transfusion, Fr. transfusus, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum.

With linked thunderbolts Transfix us to the bottom of this gulph.

Diana's dart In an unhappy chace transfix'd her heart.

Nor good Eurytion envy'd him the prize, Though he transfix'd the pigeon in the skies.

Till fate shall with a single dart Transfix the pair it cannot part.

Something you have heard Of Hamlet's transformation; so I call it, Since not th' exterior, nor the inward man, Resembles that it was.

What beast could'st thou be, that were not subject to a beast? —And what a beast art thou already, and seest not thy loss in transformation!

The mensuration of all manner of curves, and their mutual transformation, are not worth the labour of those who design either of the three learned professions.

TRANSFRETATION. n. s. [trans and fretum, Lat.] Passage over the sea.

Since the last transfretation of king Richard the second, the crown of England never sent over numbers of men sufficient to defend the small territory.

To TRANSFUSE. v. a. [transfusus, Lat.] To pour out of one into another.

Between men and beasts there is no possibility of social communion; because the well-spring of that communion is a natural delight which man hath to transfuse from himself into others, and to receive from others into himself, especially those things wherein the excellency of his kind doth most consist.

Transfus'd on thee his ample spirit rests. When did his muse from Fletcher scenes purloin, As thou whole Eth'ridge dost transfuse to thine? But so transfus'd, as oil and waters flow, His always floats above, thine sinks below.

Where the juices are in a morbid state, if one could suppose all the unsound juices taken away and sound juices immediately transfus'd, the sound juices would grow morbid.

TRANSFUSION. n. s. [transfusion, Fr. transfusus, Lat.] The act of pouring out of one into another.

The crooked part of the pipe was placed in a box, to prevent the loss of the quicksilver that might fall aside in the transfusion from the vessel into the pipe.

Poesy is of so subtle a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate; and if a new spirit be not added in the transfusion, there will remain nothing but a caput mortuum.

TRA

Something must be lost in all transfusion, that is, in all translations, but the sense will remain. Dryden.

What noise have we had about transplantation of diseases, and transfusion of blood! Baker on Learning.

To TRANSGRESS. v. a. [transgressor, Fr. transgressus, Lat.]

1. To pass over; to pass beyond.

Long stood the noble youth oppress'd with awe, And stupid at the wondrous things he saw, Surpassing common faith, transgressing nature's law. Dryden.

2. To violate; to break.

Let no man doubt but that every thing is well done, because the world is ruled by so good a guide as transgresseth not his own law, than which nothing can be more absolute, perfect, and just. Hooker.

This sorrow we must repeat as often as we transgress the divine commandments. Wake's Preparation for Death.

To TRANSGRESS. v. n. To offend by violating a law.

I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all Adam had left him before he transgressed. Shakesp.
Achan transgressed in the thing accused. 1 Chron. ii. 7.

He upbraided us with our offending the law, and objecteth to our infamy the transgressings of our education. Wisdom.

TRANSGRESSION. n. s. [transgression, Fr. from transgress.]

1. Violation of a law; breach of a command.

Shall I abuse this consecrated gift Of strength, again returning with my hair After my great transgression: so require Favour renew'd, and add a greater sin? Milton.

All accusation still is founded upon some law; for where there is no law, there can be no transgression; and where there can be no transgression, there ought to be no accusation. South's Sermons.

2. Offence; crime; fault.

What 's his fault?

—The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

TRAVE, TRAVEL, or TRAVISE, n. s. A wooden frame for shoeing unruly horses.
Ainsworth.

To TRAVEL, v. n. [This word is generally supposed originally the same with travail, and to differ only as particular from general: in some writers the word is written alike in all its senses; but it is more convenient to write travail for labour, and travel for journey.]

1. To make journeys: it is used for sea as well as land, though sometimes we distinguish it from royage, a word appropriated to the sea.
I've watch'd and travell'd hard;
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle.
Shakesp.

Which would be great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth. Shakesp.

Travel in the younger sort is a part of education;
in the elder, a part of experience. Bacon's Essays.
In my travels I had been near their setting out in Thessaly, and at the place of their landing in Carniola. Brown's Travels.
A man not enlightened by travel or reflexion, grows as fond of arbitrary power, to which he hath been used, as of barren countries, in which he has been born and bred. Addison.

3. Labour; toil. This should be travail:
as in Daniel.
He wars with a retiring enemy,
With much more travail than with victory. Daniel.
What think'st thou of our empire now, though earn'd
With travel difficult? Milton.

4. Labour in childbirth. This sense belongs rather to travail.
Thy mother well deserves that short delight,
The nauseous qualms of ten long months and travel to requite. Dryden's Virgil.

5. Travels. Account of occurrences and observations of a journey into foreign parts.

Rich stuffs. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

He used his laws as well for collecting of treasure, as for correcting of manners. Bacon.

Gold is treasure as well as silver, because not decaying, and never sinking much in value. Locke.

To TREASURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To hoard; to deposit; to lay up.
After thy hardness and impenitent heart, thou treasurest up unto thyself wrath against the day of wrath. Romans, ii. 5.

Practical principles are treasured up in man's mind, that, like the candle of the Lord in the heart of every man, discovers what he is to do, and what to avoid. South.

No; my remembrance treasures honest thoughts, And holds not things like thee; I scorn thy friend ship. Rouve.

Some thought it mounted to the lunar sphere, Since all things lost on earth are treasur'd there. Pope.

TREASUREHOUSE. n. s. [treasure and house.] Place where hoarded riches are kept.

Let there be any grief or disease incident to the soul of men, for which there is not in this treasurehouse a present comfortable remedy to be found. Hooker.

Thou silver treasurehouse,
Tell me once more, what title dost thou bear? Shakesp.

Gather together into your spirit, and its treasurehouse the meteyord, not only all the promises of God, but also the former senses of the divine favours. Taylor's Holy Living.

TREASURER. n. s. [from treasure; treasorier, Fr.] One who has care of money; one who has charge of treasure.

This is my treasurer, let him speak
That I have reserv'd nothing. Shak. Ant. & Cleopat.

Before the invention of laws, private affections in supreme rulers made their own fancies both their treasurers and hangmen, weighing in this balance good and evil. Raleigh.

TREASURERSHIP. n. s. [from treasurer.]

Office or dignity of treasurer.

He preferred a base fellow, who was a suitor for the treasurership, before the most worthy. Hakew.

TREASURY. n. s. [from treasure; treasorerie, Fr.]

1. A place in which riches are accumulated.
And yet I know not how conceit may rob
The treasury of life, when life itself Yields to the theft. Shakesp. King Lear.
Ulysses' goods. A very treasurie
Of brass, and gold, and Steele of curious frame. Chapman.

He had a purpose to furnish a fair case in that university with choice collections from all parts, like that famous treasury of knowledge at Oxford. Wotton.

If we do not please, at least we treat. Prior.

TREAT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An entertainment given.
This is the ceremony of my fate:
A parting treat, and I'm to die in state. Dryden.

He pretends a great concern for his country, and insight into matters: now such professions, when recommended by a treat, dispose an audience to hear reason. Collier.

What tender maid but must a victim fall
For one man's treat, but for another's ball? Pope.

2. Something given at an entertainment.
Dry figs and grapes, and wrinkled dates were set
In caisters t' enlarge the little treat. Dryden.

The king of gods revolving in his mind
Lycaon's guilt, and his inhuman treat. Dryd.

TREATABLE. adj. [traitable, Fr.] Moderate; not violent.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatch'd away. Hooker.

The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.

TREATISE. n. s. [tractatus, Lat.] Discourse; written tractate.

The time has been, my fell of hair
Would at a dismal treatise rouze, and stir
As life were in't. Shakesp.

Besides the rules given in this treatise to make a perfect judgment of good pictures, there is required a long conversation with the best pieces. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

TREATMENT. n. s. [traitement, Fr.] Usage; manner of using good or bad.

Scarce an humour or character which they have not used; all comes wasted to us; and were they to entertain this age, they could not now make such plenteous treatment. Dryden.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

TREATY. n. s. [traité, Fr.]

Her to persuade. Spenser.

2. A compact of accommodation relating to publick affairs.

A peace was concluded, being rather a bargain than a treaty. Bacon's Henry VIII.

Echion then
Lets fall the guiltless weapon from his hand,
And with the rest a peaceful treaty makes. Addison's Ovid.

3. [For entreaty.] Supplication; petition; Solicitation.

I must
To the young man send humble treaties, dog,
And palter in the shift of lowliness. Shakesp.

TREBLE. adj. [triple, Fr. tripulus, triplex, Lat.]

1. Threefold; triple.

Some I see,
That twofold balls and treble sceptres carry. Shak.

Who can
His head's huge doors unlock, whose jaws with great

And dreadful teeth in treble ranks are set? Sandys.

All his malice serv'd but to bring forth
Infinite goodness, grace, and mercy shewn
On man by him seduc'd; but on himself
Treble confusion, wrath, and vengeance pour'd. Milton.

A lofty tow'r, and strong on ev'ry side
With treble walls. Dryden's Æneid.

The pious Trojan then his jav'lin sent:
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went
Of solid brass. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Sharp of sound. A musical term.

The sharper or quicker percussion of air causeth the more treble sound, and the lower or heavier the base sound. Bacon.

To TREBLE. v. a. [from the adjective; triplico, Lat. tripler, Fr.] To multiply by three; to make thrice as much.

She conceiv'd, and treb'ling the due time,
Brought forth this monstrous mass. Spenser.

I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet for you,
I would be trebled twenty times myself,
A thousand times more fair. Shak. Merch. of Ven.

Aquarius shines with feebler rays,
Four years he trebles, and doubles six score days. Cicc'h.

To TREBLE. v. n. To become threefold.

Whoever annually runs out, as the debt doubles and trebles upon him, so doth his inability to pay it. Swift.

TREBLE. n. s. A sharp sound.

The treble cutteth the air so sharp, as it returneth too swift to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest. Bacon.

The lute still trembles underneath thy nail:
At thy well-sharpen'd thumb, from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryd.

TREBLENESS. n. s. [from treble.] The state of being treble.

The just proportion of the air percussed towards the baseness or trebleness of tones, is a great secret in sounds. Bacon.

TREBLY. adv. [from treble.] Thrice told; in three fold number or quantity.

His jav'lin sent,
The shield gave way; through treble plates it went

Of solid brass, of linnen trebly roll'd. Dryd. Æn.
The seed being so necessary for the maintenance of the several species, it is in some doubly and trebly defended. Ray.

TREE. n. s. [tric, Island. tree, Dan.]

1. A large vegetable, rising with one woody stem to a considerable height.

Trees and shrubs, of our native growth in England, are distinguished by Ray. 1. Such as have their flowers disjointed and remote from the fruit; and these are, 1. Nuciferous ones; as, the walnut tree, the hazel nut tree, the beech, the chestnut, and the common oak. 2. Coniferous ones; of this kind are the Scotch firs, male and female; the pine, the common alder tree, and the birch tree. 3. Bacciferous; as, the juniper and yew trees. 4. Sometime we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory
With trees upon't, that nod unto the world,
And mock our eyes with air.

Shakep. Antony and Cleopatra.
Who can bid the tree unfix his earth-bound root?
Shakep.

It is pleasant to look upon a tree in summer covered with green leaves, decked with blossoms, or laden with fruit, and casting a pleasant shade: but to consider how this tree sprang from a little seed, how nature shaped and fed it till it came to this greatness, is a more rational pleasure. Burnet.

Trees shoot up in one great stem, and at a good distance from the earth spread into branches: thus gooseberries are shrubs, and oaks are trees. Locke.

2. Any thing branched out.

Vain are their hopes who fancy to inherit,
By trees of pedigrees, or fame or merit;
Though plodding heralds through each branch may trace

Old captains and dictators of their race. Dryden.

TREE germander. n. s. A plant.

TREE of life. n. s. [lignum vitæ, Lat.]

An evergreen: the wood is esteemed by turners. Miller.

TREE primrose. n. s. A plant.

TREEN. old plur. of tree.

Under the said-bag he was seen;
Lowing low like a for'ster green,
He knows his tackle and his green. Ben Jonson.

TREEN. adj. Wooden; made of wood. Obsolete.

Sir Thomas Rookesby being controlled for first suffering himself to be served in treen cups, answered, These homely cups pay truly for that they contain: I had rather drink out of treen and pay gold and silver, than drink out of gold and silver and make wooden payments. Camden.

TREFOIL. n. s. [trifolium, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

Hope, by the ancients, was drawn in the form of a sweet and beautiful child standing upon tip-toes, and a trefoil or three-leaved grass in her hand. Peacham on Drawing.

Some sow trefoil or rye-grass with their clover. Mortimer.

TREILLAGE. n. s. [Fr.]

Treillage is a contecture of pales to support espalliers, making a distinct inclosure of any part of a garden. Trevoux.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: makers of flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetters; contrivers of bowers, grottos, treillages, and cascades, are romance writers. Spect.

TRELLIS. n. s. [Fr.] Is a structure of iron, wood, or osier, the parts crossing each other like a lattice. Trevoux.

To TREMBLE. v. n. [trembler, Fr. tremo, Lat.]

1. To shake as with fear or cold; to shiver; to quake; to shudder.

My compassionate heart
Will not permit my eyes once to behold
The thing, whereat it trembles by surmise. Shak.

And power thou tremblest at. Shakep. Henry VI.
Shew your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Shak. Jul. Cesar.

When he heard the king, he fell into such a trembling that he could hardly speak. Clarendon.

Frighted Turnus trembled as he spoke. Dryd. Æn.
He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Ye pow'rs, revenge your violated altars,
That they who with unhallow'd hands approach
May tremble. Rowe.

2. To quiver; to totter.

Sinai's grey top shall tremble. Milton.
We cannot imagine a mass of water to have stood upon the middle of the earth like one great drop, or a trembling jelly, and all the places about it dry. Burnet.

3. To quaver; to shake as a sound.

Winds make a noise unequally, and sometimes, when vehement, tremble at the height of their blast. Bacon.

TREMBLINGLY. adv. [from trembling.]

So as to shake or quiver.

Tremblingly she stood,
And on the sudden dropt. Shak. Antony and Cleop.

Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
T' inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n:
Or touch, if tremblingly alive all o'er,
To smart and agonize at every pore? Pope.

TREMENDOUS. adj. [tremendus, Lat.]

Dreadful; horrible; astonishingly terrible.

There stands an altar where the priest celebrates some mysteries sacred and tremendous. Tatler.
In that portal shou'd the chief appear,
Each hand tremendous with a brazen spear. Pope's Odyssey.

TREMOUR. n. s. [tremor, Lat.]

He fell into an universal tremour of all his joints, that when going his legs trembled under him. Harvey.
By its styptick and stimulating quality it affects the nerves, occasioning tremours. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Quivering or vibratory motion.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart, and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremours, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

TREMULOUS. adj. [tremulus, Lat.]

1. Trembling; fearful.

The tender tremulous christian is easily distracted and amazed by them. Decay of Piety.

2. Quivering; vibratory.

He owned to have some kind of little discomposure in the choice of things perfectly indifferent; for where there was nothing to determine him, the balance by hanging even became tremulous. Fell.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, impresses a swift tremulous motion in the lips, tongue, or palate, which breath passing smooth does not. Halder.

As thus th' effulgence tremulous I drink,
The lambent lightnings shoot across the sky Thomson.

TREMULOUSNESS. n. s. [from tremulous.] The state of quivering.

TREN. n. s. A fish spear. Ainsworth.

To TRENCH. v. a. [trancher, Fr.]

1. To cut.

Safe in a ditch he bides,
With twenty trenched gashes on his head.
This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trench'd in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form. Shak.

2. To cut or dig into pits or ditches.

Trench the ground, and make it ready for the spring. Evelyn.
Trench the black earth a cubit long and wide. Pope.

The trenching plough or conter is useful in pasture-ground, to cut out the sides of trenches or drains. Mortimer.

On that coast build,
And with a trench enclose the fruitful field. Dryden's Æneid.

When you have got your water up to the highest part of the land, make a small trench to carry some of the water in, keeping it always upon a level. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Earth thrown up to defend soldiers in their approach to a town, or to guard a camp.

The citizens of Corioli have issued forth,
And given to Lartius aid to Marcus battle:
I saw our party to the trenches driven,
And then I came away. Shakep. Coriolanus.

William carries on the trench,
Till both the town and castle yield. Prior.

TRENCHANT. adj. [trenchant, Fr.]

Cutting; sharp.

He fiercely took his trenchant blade in hand,
With which he struck so furious and so fell,
That nothing seem'd the puissance could withstand. Scenser.

Against a vanquish'd foe, their swords
Were sharp and trenchant, not their words. Hudib.

TRENCHER. n. s. [from trench; trench-choir, Fr.]

1. A piece of wood on which meat is cut at table.

No more
I'll scrape trencher, nor wash dish. Shak. Tempest.

TRE

They trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down

With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.

Those are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power, which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

TREP'HINE. n. s. A small trepan; a smaller instrument of perforation managed by one hand.

I showed a trepan and trephine, and gave them liberty to try both upon a skull. Wiseman's Surg.

TREPIDATION. n. s. [trepidatio, Lat.]

1. The state of trembling, or quivering.

The bow tortureth the string continually, and holdeth it in a continual trepidation. Bac. Nat. Hist.

All objects of the senses which are very offensive, cause the spirits to retire; upon which the parts, in some degree, are destitute; and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Moving of th' earth brings harms and fears, Men reckon what it did and meant;

But trepidation of the spheres, Though greater far, is innocent. Donne.

They pass the planets sev'n, and pass the fix'd, And that crystalline sphere whose balance weighs

The trepidation talk'd, and that first mov'd. Milt.

2. State of terroure.

Because the whole kingdom stood in a zealous trepidation of the absence of such a prince, I have been the more desirous to research the several passages of the journey. Wotton.

His first action of note was in the battle of Lepanto; where the success of that great day, in such trepidation of the state, made every man meritorious. Wotton.

To TRE'SPASS. v. n. [trespasser, Fr.]

1. To transgress; to offend.

If they shall confess their trespass which they trespassed against me, I will remember my covenant. Leviticus, xxvi. 43.

3. Experience; experimental knowledge

Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings. Hebrews.

4. Judicial examination.

Trial is used in law for the examination of all causes, civil or criminal, according to the laws of our realm: the trial is the issue, which is tried upon the indictment, not the indictment itself. Cowell.

T R I

He hath resisted law,
And therefore law shall scorn him further trial
Than the severity of publick power. Shak. Coriol.
A canon of the Jews required, in all suits and judicial trials betwixt rich and poor, that either each should stand, or both should sit. Kettlewell.
They shall come upon their trial, have all their actions strictly examined. Nelson.

5. Temptation; test of virtue.

Lest our trial, when least sought,
May find us both perhaps far less prepar'd,
The willinger I go. Milton's Paradise Lost.
No such company as then thou saw'st Intended thee; for trial only brought,
To see how thou couldst judge of fit and meet. Milt.
Every station is exposed to some trials, either temptations that provoke our appetites, or disquiet our fears. Rogers.

6. State of being tried.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
—It is to be all made of sighs and tears;
It is to be made all of faith and service,
All humbleness, all patience and impatience;
All purity, all trial, all observance.
Shakesp. As you like it.

TRIANGLE. n. s. [triangle, Fr. tri- angulum, Lat.] A figure of three angles.

The three angles of a triangle are equal to two right ones. Locke.

TRIANGULAR. adj. [triangularis, Lat.]
Having three angles.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular; O work divine!
These two the first and last proportions are Spens.
Though a round figure be most capacious for the honey, and convenient for the bee; yet did she not chuse that, because there must have been triangular spaces left void. Ray.

TRIBE. n. s. [tribus, Lat. from trev, British; b and v being labials of promiscuous use in the ancient British words: trev from tir ef, his lands, is supposed by Mr. Rowland to be Celtic, and used before the Romans had any thing to do with the British government.
This notion will not be much recommended, when it is told, that he derives centurie from trev, supposing it to be the same with our centrev, importing a hundred trevs or tribes.]

1. A distinct body of the people as divided by family or fortune, or any other cha-racteristick.

I ha' been writing all this night unto all the tribes
And centuries for their voices, to help Catiline
In his election. Ben Jonson.
If the heads of the tribes can be taken off, and the mislead multitude will see their error, such extent of mercy is honourable Bac. Advice to Villiers.
Who now shall rear you to the sun, or raise
Your tribes, and water from th' ambrosial fount?
Milton.

Teach stragling mountaineers, for publick good,
To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood,
Houses to build. Tate.

I congratulate my country upon the increase of this happy tribe of men, since, by the present parliament, the race of freeholders is spreading into the remotest corners. Addison.

2. It is often used in contempt.

She receives
As tribute warmth and light. Milton.
To acknowledge this, was all he did exact;
Small tribute, where the will to pay was act. Dry.

TRICE. n. s. [I believe this word comes from trait, Fr. corrupted by pronunciation.] A short time; an instant; a stroke.

If they get never so great spoil at any time, the same they waste in a trice, as naturally delighting in spoil, though it do themselves no good. Spens.

Just in the nick the cook knock'd thrice,
And all the waiters in a trice

His summons did obey:
Each serving man with dish in hand
March'd boldly up like our train'd band,
Presented, and away. Suckling.
He could raise scruples dark and nice,
And after solve them in a trice. Hudibras.

So when the war had rais'd a storm,
I've seen a snake in human form,
All stain'd with infamy and vice,
Leap from the doughill in a trice. Swift.

It seems incredible at first, that all the blood in our bodies should circulate in a trice, in a very few minutes; but it would be more surprising if we knew the short periods of the great circulation of water. Hentley's Sermons.

A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
If bless'd with pliant, though but slender sense,
Feign'd modesty, and real impudence. Young.

TRICHOTOMY. n. s. [τριχοτόμια.] Division into three parts.

Some disturb the order of nature by dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves: let the subject, with the design you have in view, determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

TRICK. n. s. [treck, Dut.]

1. A sly fraud.

Sir Thomas More said, that a trick of law had no less power than the wheel of fortune, to lift men up, or cast them down. Raleigh.

A bantering droll took a journey to Delphos, to try if he could put a trick upon Apollo. L'Estr.
Such a one thinks to find some shelter in my friendship, and I betray him: he comes to me for counsel, and I shew him a trick. South.

He swore by Styx,
Whate'er she would desire, to grant;
But wise Ardelia knew his tricks. Swift.

2. A dexterous artifice.

Gather the lowest, and leaving the top,
Shall teach thee a trick for to doable thy crop. Tuss.
And now, as oft in some distemper'd state,
On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. A vicious practice.

Suspicion shall be stuck full of eyes:
For treason is but trusted like a fox,
Who ne'er so tame, so cherish'd and lock'd up,
Will have a wild trick of his ancestors. Shak.
I entertain you with somewhat more worthy than the stale exploded trick of folsome panegyricks. Dryden.

Some friends to vice pretend,
That I the tricks of youth too roughly blame. Dry.

4. A juggle; an antic; any thing done to cheat jocosely, or to divert.

A rev' rend prelate stopp'd his coach and six,
To laugh a little at our Andrew's tricks. Prior.

Bacon's Henry VII.

Horridly trick

With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and impasted with the parching fires. Shak.
This pillar is but a medley, or a mass of all the precedent ornaments, making a new kind by stealth; and though the most richly tricked, yet the poorest in this, that he is a borrower of all his beauty.

Wotton's Architecture.

Their heads are trickt with tassels and flowers.

Sandys.

Woeful shepherds, weep no more,
For Lycidas, your sorrow is not dead:
Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor,
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head,
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled ore
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky. Milton.

Not trick'd and frown'd as she was wont
With the Attick boy to hunt.

Milton.

A daw that had a mind to be sparkish, tricked himself up with all the gay feathers he could muster.

Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein You made great Juno angry. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The goodly London in her gallant trim, The phoenix daughter of the vanquish'd old, Like a rich bride rides to the ocean swim, And on her shadow rides in floating gold. Dryden.

TRIMLY. adv. [from trim.] Nicely; neatly.

Her yellow golden hair Was trimly woven, and in tresses wrought. Spens.

The mother, if of the household of our lady, will have her son cunning and bold, in making him to live trimly. Ascham.

TRIMMER. n. s. [from trim.]

1. One who changes sides to balance parties; a turncoat.

The same bat taken after by a weazel begged for mercy: No, says the weazel, no mercy to a mouse: Well, says t'other, but you may see by my wings that I am a bird; and so the bat 'scap'd in both by playing the trimmer. L'Estrange.

To confound his hated coin, All parties and religions join, Whigs, Tories, trimmers. Swift.

2. A piece of wood inserted.

Before they pin up the frame of ground-plates, they must fit in the summer and the girders, and all the joists and the trimmers for the stair-case. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TRIMMING. n. s. [from trim.] Ornamental appendages to a coat or gown.

Judgment without vivacity of imagination is too heavy, and like a dress without fancy; and the last without the first is too gay, and but all trimming. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

TRIMNESS. n. s. [from trim.] Neatness, petty elegance of dress.

TRINIAL. adj. [trinus, Lat.] Threefold

Like many an angel's voice, Singing before the eternal Majesty, In their trinial triplicity on high. Spenser.

T R I

That far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith he went at heav'n's high council table
To sit the midst of trinal unity,
He laid aside. Milton.

TRINE, n. s. [trine, Fr. trinus, Lat.] An aspect of planets placed in three angles of a trigon, in which they are supposed by astrologers to be eminently benign.

To th' other five,
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy. Milt. Par. Lost.

Now frequent trines the happier lights among,
And high-raised Jove from his dark prison freed,
Those weights took off that on his planet hung,
Will gloriously the new-laid works succeed. Dryden.

From Aries right-ways draw a line, to end
In the same round, and let that line subtend
An equal triangle; now since the lines Must three times touch the round, and meet three signs,
Where'er they meet in angles those are trines. Craech.

To TRINE, v. a. [from the noun.] To put in a trine aspect.

This advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be outridden, though outrun;
By fortune he has now to Venus trined,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd. Dryden.

TRINITY, n. s. [trinitas, Lat. trinité, Fr.] The incomprehensible union of the Three Persons in the Godhead.

Touching the picture of the Trinity, I hold it blasphemous and utterly unlawful. Peacham.
In my whole essay there is not any thing like an objection against the Trinity. Locke.

TRINCKET, n. s. [This Skinner derives somewhat harshly from trinquet, Fr. trinchetto, Ital. a topsail. I rather imagine it corrupted from tricket, some petty finery or decoration.]

1. Toys; ornaments of dress; superfluities of decoration.

Beauty and use can so well agree together, that of all the trinkets where with they are attired, there is not one but serves to some necessary purpose. Sidney.

They throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Let her but have three wrinkles in her face,
Soon will you hear the sallow steward say,
Pack up with all your trinkets, and away. Dryden's Juvenal.

She was not hung about with toys and trinkets, tweezer-cases, pocket-glasses. Arbuthnot.

How Johnny wheedled, threaten'd, fawn'd,
'Till Phyllis all her trinkets pawn'd. Swift.

To have a son set your decrees at nought,
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person. Shakesp.

T R I

2. To strike from under the body.

I tript up thy heels and beat thee. Shakesp.
The words of Hobbes's defence trip up the heels of his cause; I had once resolved. To resolve presupposeth deliberation, but what deliberation can there be of that which is inevitably determined by causes without ourselves? Bramhall.

3. To catch; to detect.

These women
Can trip me, if I err; who, with wet cheeks,
Were present when she finish'd. Shakesp. Cymbel.

To TRIP, v. n.

1. To fall by losing the hold of the feet.

2. To fall; to err; to be deficient.

Saint Jerome, who pardons not over-easily his adversaries, if any where they chance to trip, presseth him as thereby making all sorts of men God's enemies. Hooker.

Virgil is so exact in every word, that none can be changed but for a worse; he pretends sometimes to trip, but it is to make you think him in danger when most secure. Dryden.

Many having used their utmost diligence to secure a retention of the things committed to the memory, cannot certainly know where it will trip and fail them. South.

Will shines in mixed company, making his real ignorance appear a seeming one: our club has caught him tripping, at which times they never spare him. Addison's Spectator.

Several writers of uncommon erudition would expose my ignorance, if they caught me tripping in a matter of so great moment. Addison's Spectator.

3. To stumble; to titubate.

I may have the idea of a man's drinking till his tongue trips, yet not know that it is called drunkenness. Locke.

4. To run lightly.

In silence sad,
Trip we after the night's shade. Shakesp.
The old saying is, the third pays for all; the triplex, Sir, is a good tripping measure. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

He throws his arm, and with a long-drawn dash
Blends all together; then distinctly trips
From this to that; then quick returning skips,
And snatches this again, and pauses there. Crawsh.

On old Lycæus, or Cyllene hoar,
Trip no more in twilight ranks;

Though Erymanth your loss deplore,
A better soil shall give ye thanks. Milton's Arcades.

She bounded by, and tripp'd so light
They had not time to take a steady sight. Dryden.

Stay, nymph, he cries, I follow not a foe;
Thus from the lion trips the trembling doe. Dryd.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light:
Nor doubt I but the silver-footed dame
Tripping from sea on such an errand came. Dryd.

He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot. Addis.

The lower plaits of the drapery in antique figures in sculpture and painting, seem to have gathered the wind when the person is in a posture of tripping forward. Addison.

In Britain's isles, as Heylin notes,
The ladies trip in petticoats. Prior.

They gave me instructions how to slide down and trip up the steepest slopes. Pope.

5. To take a short voyage.

TRIP, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A stroke or catch by which the wrestler supplants his antagonist.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or wilt not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow? Shak.

He stript for wrestling, swears his limbs with oil,
And watches with a trip his foe to foil. Dryd. Georg.

It was a noble time when trips and Cornish hoos could make a man immortal. Addison on Medals.

2. A stumble by which the foothold is lost.

3. A failure; a mistake.

He saw his way, but in so swift a pace,
To chuse the ground might be to lose the race:

T R I

They then, who of each trip th' advantage take,
Find but those faults which they want wit to make. Dryden.

Each seeming trip, and each digressive start,
Displays their case the more, and deep-plann'd art. Harte.

4. A short voyage or journey.

I took a trip to London on the death of the queen. Pope.

TRIPARTITE, adj. [tripartite, Fr. tripartitus, Lat.] Divided into three parts; having three corresponding copies; relating to three parties.

TRIPLEX, adj. [triple, Fr. triplex, triplex, Lat.]

1. Threefold; consisting of three conjoined.

See in him
The triple pillar of the world transform'd
Into a strumpet's stool. Shak. Antony and Cleop.

O night and shades,
How are ye join'd with bell in triple knot,
Against th' unarmed weakness of one virgin,
Alone and helpless! Milton.

Thrice happy pair! so near ally'd
In royal blood and virtue too:
Now love has you together ty'd,
May none this triple knot undo! Waller.

By thy triple shape as thou art seen
In heav'n, earth, hell, grant this. Dryden.

Strong Alcides, after he had slain
The triple Geryon, drove from conquer'd Spain
His captive herds. Dryden's Æneid.

Out bound the mastiff of the triple head;
Away the hare with double swiftness fled. Swift.

2. Treble; three times repeated.

We have taken this as a moderate measure betwixt the highest and lowest; but if we had taken only a triple proportion, it would have been sufficient. Burnet.

If then the atheist can have no imagination of more senses than five, why doth he suppose that a body is capable of more? If we had double or triple as many, there might be the same suspicion for a greater number without end. Bentley.

To TRIPPLE, v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To treble; to make thrice as much, or as many.

To what purpose should words serve, when nature hath more to declare than groans and strong cries; more than streams of too dry sweat; more than his doubled and tripled payers can express. Hooker.

If these halfpence should gain admittance, in no long space of time his limited quantity would be trippled upon us. Swift.

2. To make threefold.

Time, action, place, are so preserv'd by thee
That e'en Cornicille might with envy see
Th' alliance of his trippled unity. Dryden.

TRIPLET, n. s. [from triple.]

T R I

1. Three of a kind.
There sit C—nts, D—ks, and Harrison,
How they swagger from their garrison;
Such a triplet could you tell
Where to find on this side hell? Swift.
2. Three verses rhyming together; as,
Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine. Pope.
Some wretched lines from this neglected hand
May find my bero on the foreign strand, Warm with new fires, and pleas'd with new command. Prior.
I frequently make use of triplet rhymes, because they bound the sense, making the last verse of the triplet a pindarick. Dryden.
- TRIPPLICATE. adj. [from triplex, Lat.]
Made thrice as much.
TriPLICATE ratio, in geometry, is the ratio of cubes to each other; which ought to be distinguished from triple. Harris.
All the parts, in height, length, and breadth, bear a duplicate or triplicate proportion one to another. Grew.
- TRIPPLICATION. n. s. [from triplicate.]
The act of trebling, or adding three together.
Since the margin of the visible horizon in the heavenly globe is parallel with that of the earthly, accounted but one hundred and twenty miles diameter; sense must needs measure the azimuths, or vertical circles, by triplication of the same diameter of one hundred and twenty. Glanville.
- TRIPPLICITY. n. s. [triplicité, Fr. from triplex, Lat.] Trebleness; state of being threefold.
It was a dangerous triplicity to a monarchy, to have the arms of a foreigner, the discontents of subjects, and the title of a pretender, to meet.
Bacon's Henry VII.
Affect not duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things.
Watts's Logick.

With two great talents of the finest gold. Dryd. Æn.
- TRIPPOLY. n. s. [I suppose from the place whence it is brought.] A sharp cutting sand.
In polishing glass with putty, or tripoly, it is not to be imagined that those substances can by grating and fretting the glass bring all its least particles to an accurate polish. Newton.
- TRIPPOS. n. s. A tripod. See TRIPPOD.
Welcome all that lead or follow,
To the oracle of Apollo;
Here he speaks out of his pottle,
Or the tripods, his tower bottle. Ben Jonson.
Craz'd fool, who wouldst be thought an oracle,
Come down from off the tripods, and speak plain.
Dryden.
- TRIPPPER. n. s. [from trip.] One who trips.
- TRIPPPING. adj. [from trip.] Quick;
nimble.
The clear sun of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb; that stole With soft foot tow'ards the deep. Milt. Par. Lost.
- TRIPPPING. n. s. [from trip.] Light dance.
Back, shepherds, back, enough your play,
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes. Milton.
- TRIPPPINGLY. adv. [from tripping.] With agility; with swift motion.

T R I

- This ditty after me
Sing, and dance it trippingly. Shakesp.
Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it as many of our players do, I had as lieve the town-crier had spoke my lines.
Shu' esp. Hamlet.

A word consisting of three syllables.
- TRITE. adj. [tritus, Lat.] Worn out;
stale; common; not new.
These duties cannot but appear of infinite concern when we reflect how uncertain our time is;
this may be thought so trite and obvious a reflection, that none can want to be reminded of it.
Rogers's Sermons.
She gives her tongue no moment's rest,
In phrases batter'd, stale, and trite,
Which modern ladies call polite. Swift.
- TRITENESS. n. s. [from trite.] Staleness; commonness.
- TRITHE'ISM. n. s. [tritheisme, Fr. τρεῖς triturate.] Possible to be pounded or comminuted.

It is not only triturable and reducible to powder by contrition, but will not subsist in a violent fire. Brown.
- TRITURATION. n. s. [trituration, Fr.
trituro, Lat.] Reduction of any substances to powder upon a stone with a muller, as colours are ground: it is also called levigation.
He affirmeth, that a pumice stone powdered is lighter than one entire; that abatement can hardly be avoided in trituration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
- TRIVET. n. s. [See TREVET.] Any thing supported by three feet.
The best at horse-race he ordain'd a lady for his prize,
Generally praiseful; fair and young, and skill'd in housewiferies
Of all kind fitting; and withal a trivet, that enclos'd
Twenty-two measures. Chapman's Iliad.
The trivet table of a foot was lane;
A blot which prudent Baucis overcame,
Who thrusts beneath the limping leg a sherd. Dryd.
- TRIVIAL. adj. [trivial, Fr. trivialis, Lat.]

T R I

1. Vile; worthless; vulgar; such as may be picked up in the highway.
Be subjects great, and worth a poet's voice,
For men of sense despise a trivial choice. Roscom.
 2. Light; trifling; unimportant; inconsiderable. This use is more frequent, though less just.
This argues conscience in your grace,
But the respects thereof are nice and trivial.
All circumstances well considered. Shak. Rich. III.
This way of measuring felicities was so natural to him, that it would occur even in the most trivial instances. Fell.
See, you mad fools, who, for some trivial right,
For love, or for mistaken honour, fight. Dryden.
Were they only some slight and trivial indiscretions, to which the example of the world exposed us, it might perhaps not much concern our religion. Rogers.
In every word regard the writer's end;
And if the means be just, the conduct true,
Applause, in spite of trivial faults, is due. Pope.
The ancient poets are like many modern ladies;
let an action be never so trivial in itself, they always make it appear of the utmost importance. Pope.
- TRIVIALLY. adv. [from trivial.]
1. Commonly; vulgarly.
Money is not the sinews of war, as is trivially said, where the sinews of men's arms, in effeminate people, fail. Bacon.
 2. Lightly; inconsiderably.
- TRIVIALNESS. n. s. [from trivial.]
1. Commonness; vulgarity.

- TRIVUMPH. n. s. [triumphus, Lat. triomphe, Fr.]
1. Pomp with which a victory is publicly celebrated.
Hence will I drag thee headlong by the heels
Unto a dunghill, which shall be thy grave;
And there cut off thy most ungracious head,
Which I will bear in triumph to the king. Shakesp.
In ancient times the triumphs of the generals from victory, and the great donatives upon disbanding the armies, were things able to enflame all men's courage. Bacon.
 2. State of being victorious.
Sublime with expectation when to see
In triumph issuing forth their glorious chief. Milt.
Hercules from Spain
Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain. Dryd. Æn.
 3. Victory; conquest.
Eros has
Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my glory Unto an enemy's triumph. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
Each order bright
Sung triumph, and him sung victorious king. Milt.
If fools admire, or whining coxcombs toast,
The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast. Logie.
 4. Joy for success.
Great triumph and rejoicing was in heaven. Milt.
 5. A conquering card now called trump.
See TRUMP.
- To TRIUMPH, v. n. [triumpho, Lat. triompher, Fr.] This word is always accented in prose on the first syllable, but in poetry sometimes on the last.]
1. To celebrate a victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.
The triumphing of the wicked is short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment. Jeb. xx. 5.
Your victory, alas! hegets my fears;
Can you not then triumph without my tears? Dryd.
 2. To obtain victory.
This great commander sought many times to persuade Solyman to forbear to use his forces any farther against the Christians, over whom he had sufficiently triumphed, and turn them upon the Persians. Knoll's History of the Turks.

TRI

Then all this earthy grossness quit,
Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit,
Triumphing over death, and chance, and time. Milt.
There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world;
For who can help, or who can save besides? Roué.
While blooming youth and gay delight
Sit on thy rosy cheeks confest,
Thou hast, my dear, undoubted right
To triumph o'er this destin'd breast. Prior.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.
How ill beseeeming is it in thy sex
To triumph like an Amazonian trull! Shakesp.
Sorrow on all the pack of you,
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakesp.
Our grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and in th' excess of joy
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heaven. Milton.

TRIUMPHAL. adj. [triumphal, Fr. triumphalis, Lat. from triumph.] Used in celebrating victory.
He left only triumphal garments to the general. Bacon.
Ye so near heav'n's door,
Triumphal with triumphal act hath met. Milton.
Steel could the works of mortal pride confound,
And hew triumphal arches to the ground. Pope.
Lest we should for honour take
The drunken quarrel of a rake;
Or think it seated in a scar,
Or on a proud triumphal car. Swift.

TRIUMPHAL. n. s. [triumphalia, Lat. triumphal ornaments.] A token of victory. Not in use.
He to his crew, that sat consulting, brought Joyless triumphals of his hop'd success. Milton.

TRIUMPHANT. adj. [triumphans, Lat. triumphant, Fr.]

1. Celebrating a victory.
Captives bound to a triumphal car. Shakesp.
It was drawn as a triumphal chariot, which at the same time both follows and triumphs. South's Sermons.

2. Rejoicing as for victory.
Think you, but that I know our state secure,
I would be so triumphant as I am? Shak. Rich. III.
Off with the traitor's head;
And now to London with triumphal march,
There to be crowned. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Successful beyond hope, to lead ye forth
Triumphant out of this infernal pit. Milton.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.
As in the militant church men are excommunicate, not so much for their offence, as for their obstinacy; so shall it be in the church triumphant: the kingdom of heaven shall be barred against men, not so much for their sin committed, as for their lying therein without repentance. Perkins.
He speedily through all the hierarchies
Intends to pass triumphant, and give laws Milton.
Athena, war's triumphant maid,
The happy son will, as the father, aid. Pope's Ody.

TRIUMPHANTLY. adv. [from triumphant.]

1. In a triumphant manner in token of victory; joyfully as for victory.
Victory with little loss doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand triumphantly display'd. Shakesp.
Herself in person went to seek the sacred cross
Whereon our Saviour died; which found, as it was sought,
From Salem unto Rome triumphantly she brought. Drayton.
Through armed ranks triumphantly she drives,
And with one glance commands ten thousand lives. Granville.

2. Victoriously; with success.
Thou must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our street; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin,
And bear the palm. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. With insolent exultation.
A mighty governing lye goes round the world,
and has almost banished truth out of it; and so reigning triumphantly in its stead, is the source of most of those confusions that plague the universe. South's Sermons.

TRIUMPHER. n. s. [from triumph.] One who triumphs.
These words become your lips, as they pass thro' them,
And enter in our ears, like great triumphers
In their applauding gates. Shak. Timon of Athens.
August was dedicated to Augustus by the senate, because in the same month he was the first time created consul, and thrice triumpher in Rome. Peacham on Drawing.

TRIUMVIRATE. } n. s. [triumviratus, or TRIUMVIRI. } triumviri, Lat.] A coalition or concurrence of three men.
Lepidus of the triumvirate
Should he depos'd. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.
The triumviri, the three corner cap of society. Shakesp.
During that triumvirate of kings, Henry the eighth of England, Francis the first of France, and Charles the fifth emperor of Germany, none of the three could win a palm of ground but the other two would balance it. Bacon's Essays.
With these the Piercys them confederate,
And, as three heads, conjoin in one intent,
And, instituting a triumvirate,
Do part the land in triple government. Daniel's Civil War.

From distant regions fortune sends
An odd triumvirate of friends. Swift.

TRIUNE. adj. [tres and unus, Lat.] At once three and one.
We read in scripture of a triune deity, of God made flesh in the womb of a virgin, and crucified by the Jews. Burnet.

Thou, infernal serpent, shalt not long
Rule in the clouds; like an autumnal star,
Or lightning, thou shalt fall from heav'n trod down
Under his feet. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
Ev'n the rough rocks with tender myrtle bloom,
And trodden weeds send out a rich perfume. Addis.

TRODS, the preterite of tread.
They trode the grapes, and made merry. Judges, ix. 27.

TRODE. n. s. [from trode, pret. of tread.] Footing.
The trode is not so tickle. Spenser.
They never set foot on that same trode,
But haulke their right way, and strain ahroad. Spens.

TROGLODYTE. n. s. [τρογλοδυτης] One who inhabits caves of the earth.
Procure me a troglodyte footman, who can catch a roe at his full speed. Arbutnot and Pope.

To TROLL. v. a. [trolle to roll, Dut. perhaps from trochlea, Lat. a thing to turn round.] To move circularly; to drive about.
With the phant'sies of hey troll,
Troll about the bridal bowl,
And divide the broad-bread cake,
Round about the bride's stake. Ben Jons. Underw.

To TROLL. v. n.

1. To roll; to run round.
How pleasant, on the banks of Styx,
To troll it in a coach and six! Swift.

2. To fish for a pike with a rod which has a pulley towards the bottom, which I suppose gives occasion to the term.
Nor drain I ponds the golden carp to take,
Nor trowle for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake. Gau.

TRO'LLOP. n. s. [A low word, I know not whence derived. A slatternly loose woman.]

TRO'LMYDAMES. n. s. [Of this word I know not the meaning.]
A fellow I have known to go about with trolymydames: I knew him once a servant of the prince. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

TRO'NAGE. n. s. Money paid for weighing.

TROOP. n. s. [troupe, Fr. troppa, Ital. troope, Dut. trop, Swed. troppa, low Lat.]

1. A company; a number of people collected together.
That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Saw you not a blessed troop
Invite me to a banquet, whose bright faces
Cast thousand beams upon me like the sun? Shak.
As the mind, by putting together the repeated ideas of unity, makes the collective mode of any number, as a score, or a gross; so by putting together several particular substances, it makes collective ideas of substances, as a troop, an army. Locke.

2. A body of soldiers.
Æneas seeks his absent foe,
And sends his slaughter'd troops to shades below. Dryden.

3. A small body of cavalry.

To TROOP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To march in a body.
I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in their throongs of military men,
But rather shew a while like fearful war. Shakesp.
They anon
With hundreds, and with thousands, trooping came, Attended. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Armies at the call of trumpet
Troop to their standard. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To march in haste.
Yonder shines Aurora's harbinger,
At whose approach ghosts, wand'ring here and there,
Troop home to churchyards. Shakesp.

T R O

The dry streets flow'd with men,
That troop'd up to the king's capacious court.
Chapman.

3. To march in company.

I do invest you jointly with my power,
Preheminence, and all the large effects
That troop with majesty. Shakesp. King Lear.

TROOPER. n. s. [from troop.] A horse soldier. A trooper fights only on horseback; a dragoon marches on horseback, but fights either as a horseman or footman.

Custom makes us think well of any thing: what can be more indecent than for any to wear boots but troopers and travellers? yet not many years since it was all the fashion. Greiv.

TROPE. n. s. [τρόπος; trope, Fr. tropus, Lat.] A change of a word from its original signification; as, the clouds foretel rain, for forshew.

For rhetorick he could not ope
His mouth, but out there flew a trope. Hudibras.

If this licence be included in a single word, it admits of tropes; if in a sentence, of figures. Dryd.

TROPHIED. adj. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

Some greedy minion, or imperious wife,
The trophy'd arches, story'd halls invade,
And haunt their slumbers in the pompous shade.
Pope.

TROPHY. n. s. [tropæum, trophæum, Lat.] Something shewn or treasured up in proof of victory.

What trophy they shall I most fit devise,
In which I may record the memory
Of my love's conquest, peerless beauty's prize
Adorn'd with honour, love, and chastity? Spenser
To have borne

His bruised helmet and his bended sword
Before him through the city, he forbids;
Giving all trophy, signal, and ostant,
Quite from himself to God. Shakesp. Henry V.

There lie thy bones,
Till we with trophies do adorn thy tomb. Shakesp.
Twice will I not review the morning's rise,
Till I have torn that trophy from thy back,
And split thy heart for wearing it. Shakesp.

In ancient times, the trophies erected upon the place of the victory, the triumphs of the generals upon their return, the great donatives upon the disbanding of the armies, were things able to inflame all men's courage. Bacon's Essays.

Around the posts hung helmets, darts, and spears,
And captive chariots, axes, shields, and bars,
And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars. Dryden.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace,
To shew posterity Elpenor was. Pope's Odyssey.
Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,
On whom praise shines, as trophies on a post. Young.

TROPICAL. adj. [from trope.]
1. Rhetorically changed from the original meaning.

A strict and literal acceptance of a loose and tropical expression was a second ground.

The words are tropical or figurative, and import an hyperbole, which is a way of expressing things beyond what really and naturally they are in themselves. South.

The foundation of all parables is, some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South's Sermons.

2. [From tropic.] Placed near the tropick; belonging to the tropick.

The pine apple is one of the tropical fruits. Salmon.

TROPICK. n. s. [tropique, Fr. tropicus, Lat.] The line at which the sun turns back, of which the north has the tropick of Cancer, and the south the tropick of Capricorn.

T R O

Under the tropic is our language spoke,
And part of Flanders hath receiv'd our yoke.
Haller.

Since on ev'ry sea, on ev'ry coast,
Your men have been distress'd, your navy tost,
Seven times the sun has either tropic view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryd.

TROPOLOGICAL. adj. [tropologique, Fr. τρόπος and λόγος.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.

TROPOLOGY. n. s. [τρόπος and λόγος.] A rhetorical mode of speech including tropes, or a change of some word from the original meaning.

Not attaining the deuterology and second intention of words, they omit their superconsequences, coherences, figures, or tropologies, and are not persuaded beyond their literalities. Brown's Vulg. Err.

TROSSERS. n. s. [trousses, Fr.] Breeches; hose. See TROUSE.

You rode like a kern of Ireland; your French hose off, and in your strait trossers. Shak. Henry V.

TROT. v. n. [trotter, Fr. trotten, Dut.]

1. To move with a high jolting pace.

Poor Tom, that hath made him proud of heart, to ride on a bay trotting horse, over four-inch'd bridges, to course his own shadow for a traitor.
Shakesp. King Lear.

Whom doth time trot without?

—He trots hard with a young maid, between the contract of her marriage and the day it is solemnized: if the interim be but a sevennight, time's pace is so hard, that it seems the length of seven years. Shakesp. As you like it.

Take a gentle trotting horse, and come up and see your old friends. Dennis.

2. To walk fast; or, to travel on foot: in a ludicrous or contemptuous sense.

TROT. n. s. [trot, Fr. from the verb.]

1. The jolting high pace of a horse.

His honesty is not
So loose or easy, that a ruffling wind
Can blow away, or glit'ring look it blind:
Who rides his sure and even trot,
While the world now rides by, now lags behind.
Herbert.

Here lieth one who did most truly prove,
That he could never die while he could move;
So hung his destiny, never to rot
While he might still jog on and keep his trot. Milton.
The virtuoso's saddle will amble when the world is upon the hardest trot. Dryden.

2. An old woman, in contempt. I know not whence derived.

Give him gold enough, and marry him to an old trot with ne'er a tooth in her head: why, nothing comes amiss, so money comes withal. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

How now, hold-face! cries an old trot; sirrah, we eat our own hens, and what you eat you steal. L'Estrange.

TROTH. n. s. [trouth, old Engl. τρεοθ, Sax.]

1. Belief; faith; fidelity.

Saint Withold met the night-mare,
Bid her light and her troth plight. Shakesp.
Stephen assails the realm, obtains the crown,
Such tumults raising as torment them both:
The afflicted state, divided in their troth
And partial faith, most miserably grown, Endures the while. Daniel's Civil War.

2. Truth; verity.

In troth, thou'rt able to instruct grey hairs,
And teach the wily African deceit. Addison's Cata.

TROTHLESS. adj. [from troth.] Faithless; treacherous.

Thrall to the faithless waves and trothless sky. Fairfax.

TROTHPLIGHT. adj. [troth and plight.] Betrothed; affianced.

This, your son in law,
Is trothplight to your daughter. Shak. Winter's Tale.

T R O

TROTTER. n. s. [from trot.]

1. One that walks a jolting pace.
2. A sheep's foot.

To TROUBLE. v. a. [troubler, Fr.]

1. To disturb; to perplex.

An hour before the worshipp'd sun
Peer'd through the golden window of the east,
A troubled mind drew me to walk abroad. Shakesp.
But think not here to trouble holy rest. Milton.
Never trouble yourself about those faults which age will cure. Locke on Education.

2. To afflict; to grieve.

It would not trouble me to be slain for thee, but much it torments me to be slain by thee. Sidney.
They pertinaciously maintain, that afflictions are no real evils, and therefore a wise man ought not to be troubled at them. Tillotson.
Though it is in vain to be troubled for that which I cannot chuse, yet I cannot chuse but be afflicted. Tillotson.

3. To distress; to make uneasy.

He had credit enough with his master to provide for his own interest, and troubled not himself for that of others. Clarendon.

Be not dismay'd nor troubled at these tidings. Milton.
He was sore troubled in mind, and much distressed. 1 Mac.

4. To busy; to engage overmuch.

Martha, thou art careful, and troubled about many things. Luke, x. 41.

5. To give occasion of labour to. A word of civility or slight regard.

I will not trouble myself to prove that all terms are not definable, from that progress in infinitum which it will lead us into. Locke.

6. To teize; to vex.

'Tis pest enduring.
The boy so troubles me; Shakesp.

7. To disorder; to put into agitation or commotion.

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled;
Muddy, ill seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shak.
An angel went down into the pool and troubled the water; whosoever first after the troubling stepped in was made whole. John, v. 4.
God looking forth will trouble all his host. Milton.

Hear how she the ear employs;
Their air is the troubled air to take. Davies.

Seas are troubled when they do revoke
Their flowing waves into themselves again. Davies.

It is not bare agitation, but the sediment at the bottom, that troubles and defiles the water. South.

The best law in our days is that which continues our judges during their good behaviour, without leaving them to the mercy of such who might, by an undue influence, trouble and pervert the course of justice. Addison's Guardian.

Thy force alone their fury can restrain,
And smooth the waves, or swell the troubled main. Dryden.

8. [In low language.] To sue for a debt.

TROUBLE. n. s. [trouble, Fr.]

1. Disturbance; perplexity.

They all his host decided, while they stood,
A while in trouble. Milton.

2. Affliction; calamity.

Double, double, toil and trouble,
Fire burn, and cauldron bubble. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. Molestation; obstruction; inconvenience.

Take to thee from among the cherubim
Thy choice of flaming warriors, lest the fiend
Some new trouble raise. Milton.

4. Uneasiness; vexation.

I have dream'd
Of much offence and trouble, which my mind
Knew never till this irksome night. Milton.

TROUBLER. n. s. [from trouble.] Disturber; confounder.

Unhappy falls that hard necessity,
Quoth he, the troubler of my happy peace,
And vowed foe of my felicity. Spenser.

T R O

Heav'n's hurl down their indignation
On thee, thou troubler of the poor world's peace!
Shakesp.

The best temper of minds desireth good name and true honour; the lighter, popularity and applause; the more depraved, subjection and tyranny; as is seen in great conquerors and troublers of the world, and more in arch-hereticks.
Bacon.

He knowing well that nation must decline,
Whose chief support and sinews are of coin,
Our nation's solid virtue did oppose
To the rich troublers of the world's repose.
Waller.

The sword justly drawn by us can scarce safely be sheathed, till the power of the great troubler of our peace be pared, as to be under no apprehensions for the future.
Atterbury.

TROUBLE-SOME. adj. [from trouble.]

1. Vexatious; uneasy; afflictive.

Heav'n knows
By what bye-paths and indirect crooked ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sat upon my head:
To thee it shall descend with better quiet.
Shakesp.
He must be very wise that can forbear being troubled at things very troublesome.
Tillotson.

2. Full of molestation.

Though our passage through this world be rough and troublesome, yet the trouble will be but short, and the rest and contentment at the end will be an ample recompence.
Atterbury.

3. Burdensome; tiresome; wearisome.

My mother will never be troublesome to me.
Pope.

4. Full of teasing business.

All this could not make us accuse her, though it made us almost pine away for spite, to lose any of our time in so troublesome an idleness.
Sidney.

5. Slightly harassing.

They, eas'd the putting off
These troublesome disguises which we wear.
Milton.
Why d'oth the crow'n lie there upon his pillow,
Being so troublesome a bedfellow?
Shak. Henry IV.

6. Unseasonably engaging; improperly importuning.

She of late is lightened of her womb,
That her to see should be but troublesome.
Spenser.

7. Inopportune; teasing.

Two or three troublesome old nurses never let me have a quiet night's rest with knocking me up.
Arbutnot.

TROUBLESOMELY. adv. [from troublesome.] Vexatiously; wearisomely; unseasonably; importunately.

Though men will not be so troublesomely critical as to correct others in the use of words; yet, where truth is concerned, it can be no fault to desire their explication.
Locke.

TROUBLESOMENESS. n. s. [from troublesome.]

1. Vexatiousness; uneasiness.

The lord treasurer complained of the troublesome-ness of the place, for that the exchequer was so empty: the chancellor answered, Be of good cheer, for now you shall see the bottom of your business at the first.
Bacon.

2. Importunity; unseasonableness.

TROUBLE-STATE. n. s. [trouble and state.] Disturber of a community;
publick makebate.

Those fair baits these trouble-states still use,
Pretence of common good, the king's ill course;
Must be cast forth.
Daniel's Civil War.

TROUBLOUS. adj. [from trouble.] Tumultuous; confused; disordered; put into commotion. An elegant word, but disused.

He along would fly
Upon the streaming rivers, sport to find;
And oft would dare to tempt the troubulous wind.
Spenser.

Soon as they this mock king did esp'y,
Their troubulous strife they stinted by and by.
Spenser.

T R O

No other noise, nor people's troubulous cries,
As still are wont t' annoy the walled town,
Might there be heard.
Spenser.

As a tall ship tossed in troubulous seas,
Whom raging winds threaten to make the prey
Of the rough rocks.
Spenser.

Then, masters, look to see a troubulous world.
Shak.
Only one supply

In four years troubulous and expensive reign.
Daniel.
TRO'VER. n. s. [trouuer, Fr.] In the common law, is an action which a man hath against one that having found any of his goods refuseth to deliver them upon demand.
Cowell.

TROUGH. n. s. [τρογ, τροη, Sax. troch,
Dut. trou, Dan. traug, Island. truogo,
Ital.] Any thing hollowed and open longitudinally on the upper side.

The bloody boar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines, Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embow'd bosoms.
Shakesp. Richard III.
They had no ships but big troughs, which they call caques.
Abbot's Description of the World.

Where there is a good quick fall of rain-water, lay a half trough of stone, of a good length, three foot deep, with one end upon the high ground, the other upon the low; cover the trough with brakes a good thickness, and cast sand upon the top of the brakes, the lower end of the trough will run like a spring of water.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Some log, perhaps, upon the water swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin.
Dryden.

That also is accounted virgin quicksilver, which, having no need to pass the fire, is separated by water first in a sieve, and afterwards in a long trough.
Brown's Travels.

The water dissolves the particles of salt mixed in the stone, and is conveyed by long troughs and canals from the mines to Hall, where it is received in vast cisterns, and boiled off
Addison.

To TROUL. v. n. [trollen to roll, Dut.]
See TROLL.

1. To move volubly.

Bred only, and completed, to the taste
Of lustful appetite; to sing, to dance,
To dress, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye.
Milton.

2. To utter volubly.

Let us be jocund. Will you troll the catch
You taught me while-ere?
Shakesp. Tempest.

To TROUNCE. v. a. [derived by Skinner from trouc or tronson, Fr. a club.] To punish by an indictment or information.

More probable, and like to hold,
Than hand, or seal, or breaking gold;
For which so many, that renounc'd
Their plighted contracts, have been trounce'd.
Hudibras.

If you talk of peaching, I'll peach first: I'll trounce you for offering to corrupt my honesty.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

TROUSE. } n. s. [trousse, Fr. truish, TROUSERS. } Erse.] Breeches; hose.

See TROSSERS.

The leather quilted jack serves under his shirt of mail, and to cover his trouse on horseback.
Spenser on Ireland.

The unsightliness and pain in the leg may be helped by wearing a laced stocking; a laced trouse will do as much for the thigh.
Wiseman's Surgery.

TROUT. n. s. [τρουτ, Sax. tracta, truta, trutta, Lat.]

1. A delicate spotted fish, inhabiting brooks and quick streams.

The pond will keep trout and salmon in their seasonable plight, but not in their reddish grain.
Carew.

Worse than the anarchy at sea,
When fishes on each other prey;

T R U

Where ev'ry trout can make as high rants
O'er his inferiours as our tyrants.
Swift.

2. A familiar phrase for an honest, or perhaps for a silly fellow.

Here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling.
Shakesp.

To TROW. v. n. [τροειδιαν, Sax. troe, Dan.]

1. To think; to imagine; to conceive.
A word now disused, and rarely used even in ancient writers but in familiar language.

What handsomeness, trow you, can be observed in that speech, which is made one knows not to whom?
Sidney.

Is there any reasonable man, trow you, but will judge it meet that our ceremonies of Christian religion should be Popish, than Turkish or Heathenish?
Hooker.

To-morrow next
We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow.
Shak.
O rueful day! rueful indeed, I trow.
Gay.

2. To believe.

Lend less than thou owest,
Learn more than thou trowest.
Shakesp. King Lear.

TROW. interject. [for I trow, or trow you.]
An exclamation of inquiry.

Well, if you be not turn'd Turk, there is no more sailing by the star.
—What means the fool, trow?
Shakesp.

TROW'EL. n. s. [truelle, Fr. trulla, Lat.]

1. A trowel is a tool to take up the mortar with, and spread it on the bricks; with which also they cut the bricks to such lengths as they have occasion, and also stop the joints.
Moxon.

This was dex'terous at his trowel,
That was bred to kill a cow well.
Swift.

2. It is used for any coarse instrument.
How shall I answer you?
—As wit and fortune will.
—Or as the destinies decree.

—Well said, that was laid on with a trowel.
Shakesp.
The most accurate engravings or embossments seem such rude, bungling, deformed works, as if they had been done with a mattock, or a trowel.
Wilkins.

TROY-WEIGHT. } n. s. [from Troies, TROY. } Fr.] A kind of weight by which gold and bread are weighed, consisting of these denominations: a pound = 12 ounces; ounce = 20 pennyweights; pennyweight = 24

grains.

The English physicians make use of tray-weight after the following manner:

Grains
20	Scruple
60	3	Draclm
480	21	11	Ounce
5760	288	96	12 Pound.

The Romans left their ounce in Britain, now our averdupois ounce, for our troy ounce we had elsewhere.
Arbutnot.

TRUANT. n. s. [truand, old Fr. truant, Dut. a vagabond.] An idler; one who wanders idly about, neglecting his duty or employment. To play the truant is, in schools, to stay from school without leave.

For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry.
Shakesp.

Though myself have been an idle truant,
Omitting the sweet benefit of time,
To clothe mine age with angel-like perfection;
Yet hath Sir Protheus made fair advantage of his days.
Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.

T R U

Providence would only initiate mankind into the knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to our industry, that we might not live like idle loiterers and truants. More.

Our ships are laden with the Trojan store,
And you like truants come too late ashore.
Dryden's Æneid.

TRU'ANT. adj. Idle; wandering from business; lazy; loitering.

What keeps you from Wertenberg?
—A truant disposition, good my lord.
Shakes Hamlet.

He made a blushing cital of himself,
And chid his truant youth with such a grace,
As if he master'd there a double spirit,
Of teaching, and of learning instantly. Shal'esp.
Where thou seest a single ship remain
In shades aloof, or couch'd upon the plain,
Or late to lag behind with truant pace,
Revenge the crime. Druden.

To TRU'ANT. v. n. [truander to beg about the country, Fr. truwanten, old Germ.] To idle at a distance from duty; to loiter; to be lazy.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,
And let her read it in thy looks at board. Shakesp.

TRU'ANTSHIP. n. s. [truauté, old Fr. from truant; truandise in Chaucer is beggary.] Idleness; negligence; neglect of study or business.

The master should not chide with him if the child hath done his diligence, and used no truants-ship. Ascham.

TRUBS. n. s. [tuber, Lat.] A sort of herb. Ainsworth.

TRU'BTAIL. n. s. A short squat woman. Ainsworth.

TRUCE. n. s. [truga, low Lat. tregua, Ital. trua, old Fr.]

1. A temporary peace; a cessation of hostilities.

Leagues and truces made between superstitious persons, and such as serve God aright. Hooker.

They pray in vain to have sin pardoned, which seek not also to prevent sin by prayer, even every particular sin, by prayer against all sin, except men can name some transgression wherewith we ought to have truce. Hooker.

All this utter'd
With gentle breath, calm look, knees humbly bent,
Could not make truce with the ourly spleen
Of Tybalt, deaf to peace. Shakesp.

This token serveth for a flag of truce
Betwixt ourselves and all our followers. Shakesp.

Men shall be lovers of their own selves, without natural affection, truce breakers. 2 Tim. iii. 3.

Lest the truce with treason should he mixt,
'Tis my concern to have the tree betwixt. Dryden
Shadwell till death true dulness would maintain;
And in his father's right, and realm's defence,
Ne'er would have peace with wit, nor truce with sense. Dryden.

2. Cessation; intermission; short quiet.

There he may find

Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours. Milton.

Sicknesses, which in the latter years of his life gave him but short and seldom truce. Fell.

TRUCIDATION. n. s. [from trucido, Lat.] The act of killing.

To TRUCK. v. n. [troquer, Fr. truccare, Ital. trocar, Span. deduced by Salmasius from τροχον to get money.] To traffick by exchange; to give one commodity for another.

To TRUCK. v. a. To give in exchange; to exchange.

The Indians truck gold for glasses. L'Estrange.
Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul,
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole;
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See, what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden.

T R U

I see nothing left us, but to truck and barter our goods, like the wild Indians, with each other. Swift.

TRUCK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Exchange; traffick by exchange.
It is no less requisite to maintain a truck in moral offices, than in the common business of commerce. L'Estrange.

Love is covetous; I must have all of you: heart for heart is an equal truck. Dryden.

2. [τροχος.] Wooden wheels for carriage of cannon. Ainsworth.

To TRU'CKLE. v. n. [This word is, I believe, derived from truckled, which is always under another bed.] To be in a state of subjection or inferiority; to yield; to creep.

Shall our nation be in bondage thus Unto a land that truckles under us? Cleveland.
For which so many a legal cuckold
Has been run down in courts, and truckled. Hudibras.

Men may be stiff and obstinate upon a wrong ground, and ply and truckle too upon as false a foundation. L'Estrange

Religion itself is forced to truckle to worldly policy. Norris.

His zeal was not to lash our crimes,
But discontent against the times:
For had we made him timely offers,
To raise his post or fill his coffers,
Perhaps he might have truckled down,
Like other brethren of his gown. Swift.

They were subdued and insulted by Alexander's captains, and continued under several revolutions a small truckling state, of no name till they fell under the Romans. Swift.

TRU'CKLEBED, or trundlebed. n. s. [properly troclebed; from troclea, Lat. or τροχος.] A bed that runs on wheels under a higher bed.

There 's his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing hed and trucklebed. Shakesp. Merry Wives.
If he that is in battle slain
Be in the bed of honour lain;
He that is beaten may be said
'To lie in honour's trucklebed. Hudibras.

2. Terrible of aspect.

3. Destructive; cruel.

Pestilential seminaries, according to their grossness or subtilty, cause more or less truculent plagues, some of such malignity, that they enecate in two hours. Harvey on the Plague.

To TRUDGE. v. n. [truggolare, Ital.]

To travel laboriously; to jog on; to march heavily on.

No man is secure but night-walking heralds,
That trudge between the king and mistress Shore. Shakesp.

No sooner was he fit to trudge,
But both made ready to dislodge. Hudibras.

Away they trudded together, and about midnight got to their journey's end. L'Estrange.

Once a poor rogue, 'tis true, I trod the street,
And trudg'd to Rome upon my naked feet;
Gold is the greatest god. Dryden's Juvenal.

He that will know the truth must leave the beaten tract, which not but servile minds truck continually in. Locke.

TRUE. adj. [τροπος, τροπα, Sax.]

T R U

1. Not false; not erroneous; agreeing with fact, or with the nature of things.

Of those he chose the falsest two,
And fittest for to forge true seeming lies. Spenser.
Teeth hadst thou in thy head when thou wast born;

And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st into the world with thy legs forward. Shakesp.

Hesperian fables true,
If true, here only. Milton.

What you said had not been true,
If spoke by any else but you. Cowley.

2. Not false; agreeing with our own thoughts.

3. Pure from the crime of falsehood; veracious.

A true witness delivereth souls. Proverbs.

4. Genuine; real; not counterfeit.
The darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. 1 John.

Among unequals what society
Can sort? What harmony or true delight? Milton.

Unbind the charms that in slight fables lie,
And teach that truth is truest poesy. Cowley.

Religion, as it is the most valuable thing in the world, so it gives the truest value to them who promote the practice of it by their example and authority. Atterbury.

5. Faithful; not perfidious; steady.

My revenge is now at Milford: would I had wings to follow it! come and be true. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

So young, and so untender?
—So young, my lord, and true.

—Let it be so; thy truth then be thy dower. Shak.
Do not see

My fair rose wither; yet look up; behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dew,
And wash him fresh again with true love tears. Shak.

I'll rather die
Deserted, than oblige thee with a fact
Pernicious to thy peace, chiefly assur'd
Remarkably so late of thy so true,
So faithful, love unequal'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The first great work
Is, that yourself may to yourself be true. Roscommon.

When this fire is kindled, both sides inflame it:
all regard of merit is lost in persons employ'd, and these only chosen that are true to the party. Temple.

Smil'd Venus, to behold her own true knight Obtain the conquest, though he lost the fight. Dryden.

True to the king her principles are found:
Oh that her practice were but half so sound!
Stedfast in various turns of state she stood,
And seal'd her vow'd affection with her blood. Dryden.

The truest hearts for Voiture heav'd with sighs;
Voiture was wept by all the brightest eyes. Pope.

True to his charge, the bard preserv'd her lang
In honour's limits; such the pow'r of song. Pope.

6. Honest; not frandulent.

The thieves have bound the true men: now could thou and I rob the thieves, and go merrily to London, it would be arguement for a week. Shakesp. Henry V.

If king Edward be as true and just
As I am subtle, false, and treacherous,
'This day should Clarence closely be mew'd up. Shakesp.

7. Exactly; truly conformable to a rule.

If all those great painters, who have left us such fair platforms, had rigorously observed it, they had made things more regularly true, but withal very unpleasing. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

He drew
A circle regularly true. Prior.

Tickell's first book does not want its merit; but I was disappointed in my expectation of a translation nicely true to the original; whereas, in those parts where the greatest exactness seems to be demanded, he has been the least careful. Arbuthnot.

8. Rightful.

They seize the sceptre ;
Then lose it to a stranger, that the true
Anointed King Messiah might be born Barr'd of his right. Milton.

TRUEBORN. adj. [true and born.] Having a right by birth to any title.
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman. Shakesp.

Let him that is a trueborn gentleman,
And stands upon the honour of his birth,
From off this briar pluck a white rose with me. Shakesp.

TRUEBRE'D. adj. [true and bred.] Of a right breed.
Two of them I know to be as truebred towards as ever turned back. Shakesp.

A trull who sits
By the town wall, and for her living knits. Dryd.

To celebrate some suburb trull;
His similes in order set,
And ev'ry crambo he cou'd get;
Before he could his poem close,
The lovely nymph had lost her nose. Swift.

2. It seems to have had first at least a neutral sense: a girl; a lass; a wench.

Among the rest of all the route,
A passing proper lasse,
A white-hair'd trull, of twenty years,
Or neere about there was:
In stature passing all the rest,
A gallant girl for hewe;
To be compar'd with townish nymphs,
So fair she was to vieve. Turberville.

TRULY. adv. [from true.]

1. According to truth; not falsely; faith- fully; honestly.

They thought they might do it, not only willingly, because they loved him; and truly, because such indeed was the mind of the people; but safely, because she who ruled the king was agreed thereto. Sidney.

No untruth can avail the patron long; for things most truly are most behoovefully spoken. Hooker.

2. Really; without fallacy.
Wisdom alone is truly fair. Milton.

Such as are efficaciously called, justified, and sanctified, while they live, are truly holy, and, when they die, are perfectly holy. Pearson.

Right reason is nothing else but the mind of man judging of things truly, and as they are in themselves. South.

4. Indeed: a slight affirmation, almost ex- pletive.
I have not undertaken it out of any wanton pleasure in mine own pen; nor truly without often pondering with myself beforehand what censures I might incur. Watton.

TRUMP. n. s. [trompe, Dut. and old Fr. tromba, Ital.]

1. A trumpet; an instrument of warlike musick.

Whilst any trump did sound, or drum struck up,
His sword did ne'er leaving striking in the field. Shakesp.

Yet first to those ychain'd in sleep,
The wakeful trump of doom must thunder through the deep. Milton.

I heard
The neighing coursers and the soldiers cry,
And sounding trumps that seem'd to tear the sky. Dryden.

Beneath this tomb an infant lies,
To earth whose hody lent,
Hereafter shall more glorious rise,
But not more innocent.
When the archangel's trump shall blow,
And souls to hodies join,
What crowds shall wish their lives below
Had been as short as thine! Westley.

2. [Corrupted from triumph. Latimer, in a Christmas sermon, exhibited a game at cards, and made the ace of hearts triumph. Fox.] A winning card; a card that has particular privileges in a game.

Him Basto follow'd, but his fate more hard,
Gain'd but one trump and one plebeian card. Pope.

Now her heart with pleasure jumps,
She scarce remembers what is trumps. Swift.

3. To put to or upon the trumps. To put to the last expedient.
We are now put upon our last trump; the fox is earthed, but I shall send my two terriers in after him. Dryden.

3. Something of no value; trifles.
Embrios and idiots, eremits and friars,
White, black, and grey, with all their trumpery. Milton.

Another cavity of the head was stuffed with billetdoux, pricked dances, and other trumpery of the same nature. Addison.

TRUMPET. n. s. [trompette, Fr. and Dut.]

1. An instrument of martial musick sound- ed by the breath.

What 's the business,
That such a hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakesp.

If any man of quality will maintain upon Ed- mund earl of Gloster, that he is a manifold traitor, let him appear by the third sound of the trumpet Shakesp. King Lear

As disperst soldiers, at the trumpet's call,
Haste to their colours all. Cowley

He blew
His trumpet, heard in Oreh since perhaps
When God descended, and perhaps once more
To sound at general doom. Th' angelick blast Filled all the regions. Milton.

The last loud trumpet's woud'rous sound
Shall through the rending tombs rebound,
And wake the nations under ground. Roscomin.
Things of deep sense we may in prose unfold
But they move more in lofty numbers told;
By the loud trumpet which our courage aids
We learn that sound, as well as sense, persuades. Waller.

The trumpet's loud clangor
Excites us to arms,
With shrill notes of anger,
And mortal alarms. Dryden.

Every man is the maker of his own fortune, and must be in some measure the trumpet of his fame. Tatler.

Let the loud trumpet sound,
Till the roofs all around
The shrill echoes rebound. Pope.

So high as heav'd the tumid hills, so low Down sunk a hollow bottom broad and deep,
Capacious bed of waters. Milton.

3. Pompous; boastful; puffy; falsely sublime.

Though such expressions may seem tumid and aspiring; yet cannot I scruple to use seeming hyperboles in mentioning felicities, which make the highest hyperboles but seeming ones. Boyle.

TUMOROUS. adj. [from tumor.]

1. Swelling; protuberant.

Whoever saw any cypress or pine small below and above, and tumorous in the middle, unless some diseased plant? Wotton.

2. Fastuous; vainly pompous; falsely magnificent.

According to their subject, these stiles vary: for that which is high and lofty, declaring excellent matter, becomes vast and tumorous, speaking of petty and inferior things. Ben Jonson.

His limbs were rather sturdy than dainty, sublime and almost tumorous in his looks and gestures. Wotton.

TUMOUR. n. s. [tumor, Lat.]

1. A morbid swelling.

Tumour is a disease, in which the parts recede from their natural state by an undue increase of their bigness. Wiseman.

Having dissected this swelling vice, and seen what it is that feeds the tumour, if the disease be founded in pride, the abating that is the most natural remedy. Government of the Tongue.

The formation of knots and tumours in any part of the body, external or internal, that degenerate at length into an ulcer, arise from this, that some parts of the blood, becoming by their size of figure disproportioned to the small winding channels of the glands, cannot freely slip through. Blackmore.

2. Affected pomp; false magnificence; puffy grandeur; swelling mien; unsubstantial greatness.

His style was rich of phrase, but seldom in bold metaphors; and so far from the tumour, that it rather wants a little elevation. Wotton.

It is not the power of tumour and bold looks upon the passions of the multitude. L'Estrange.

To TUMP. Among gardeners, to fence trees about with earth.

To TUMULATE. v. n. [tumulat, Lat.] To swell. This seems to be the sense here, but I suspect the word to be wrong.

Urinous spirits, or volatile alkalis, are such enemies to acid, that as soon as they are put together, they tumulate and grow hot, and continue to fight till they have disarmed or mortified each other. Boyle.

TUMULOSE. adj. [tumulosus, Lat.] Full of hills. Bailey.

TUNABLENESS. n. s. [from tunable.] Harmony; melodiousness.

TUNABLY. adv. [from tunable.] Harmoniously; melodiously.

TUN-DISH. n. s. [from tun and dish.] A tunnel.

TUNE. n. s. [toon, Dut. ton, Swed. tuono, Ital. tone, Fr. tonus, Lat.]

1. Tune is a diversity of notes put together. Locke.

Came he to sing a raven's note,
Whose dismal tune bereft my vital pow'rs? Shak.
Tunes and airs have in themselves some affinity with the affections; as merry tunes, doleful tunes, solemn tunes, tunes inclining men's minds to pity, warlike tunes; so that tunes have a predisposition to the motion of the spirits. Bacon.

Keep unsteady nature to her law,
And the low world in measur'd motion draw
After the heav'nly tune, which none can hear
Of human mould with gross unpurg'd ear. Milton.

That sweet song you sung one starry night,
The tune I still retain, but not the words. Dryden.
The disposition in the fiddle to play tunes.

Arbutnot and Popc.

2. Sound; note.

Such a noise arose
As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes. Shakesp.

3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

T U N

A continual parliament I thought would but keep the common weal in tune, by preserving laws in their due execution and vigour. King Charles.

4. State of giving the due sounds; as, the fiddle is in tune, or out of tune.

5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper; proper humour.

A child will learn three times as much when he is in tune, as he will with double the time and pains, when he goes awkwardly, or is dragged unwillingly to it. Locke.

6. State of anything with respect to order.

Distressed Lear, in his better tune, remembers what we are come about. Shakesp.

To TUNE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put into such a state, as that the proper sounds may be produced.

Their golden harps they took,
Harps ever tun'd, that glitter'd by their side. Milt.
Tune your harps,

Ye angels, to that sound; and thou, my heart,
Make room to entertain thy flowing joy. Dryden.

2. To sing harmoniously.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Milt.
Rouze up, ye Thebans tune your Ió Pæans;
Your king returns, the Argians are o'ercome. Dryd.
Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know

What's roundly smooth, and languishingly slow. Pope.

3. To put into order so as to produce the proper effect.

To TUNE. v. n.

1. To form one sound to another.

The winds were hush'd, no leaf so small
At all was seen to stir;
Whilst tuning to the waters fall,
The small birds sung to her. Drayton's Cynthia.
All sounds on fret or stop
Temper'd soft tunings, intermix'd with voice. Milt.

2. To utter with the voice inarticulate harmony.

TUNEFUL. adj. [tune and full.] Musical; harmonious.

And birds to lays of love their tuneful notes apply. Dryden.

For thy own glory sing our sov'reign's praise,
God of verses and of days!
Let all thy tuneful sons adorn
Their lasting works with William's name. Prior.

Poets themselves must fall, like those they sung,
Deaf the prais'd ear, and mute the tuneful tongue. Pope.

TUNELESS. adj. [from tune.] Unharmonious; unmusical.

When in hand my tuneless harp I take,
Then do I more augment my foes despight. Spens.
Swallow, what dost thou
With thy tuneless serenade? Cowley.

brother of thy letter; but let thine inherit first, for mine never shall. Shakesp.

In bestowing
He was most princely: ever witness for him
Those twins of learning, Ipswich and Oxford.
Shakesp.

If that moment of the time of birth be of such moment, whence proceedeth the great difference of the constitutions of twins, which, though together born, have strange and contrary fortunes?
Drummond.

The divided dam
Runs to the summons of her hungry lamb;
But when the twin cries halves, she quits the first.
Cleveland.

No weight of birth did on one side prevail,
Two twins less even lie in Nature's scale. Cowley.
They came twins from the womb, and still they live
As if they would go twins too to the grave. Otway.

To TWINKLE. v. n. [twīnclan, Sax.]

1. To sparkle; to flash irregularly; to shine with intermitted light; to shine faintly; to quiver.

At first I did adore a twinkling star,
But now I worship a celestial sun. Shakesp.
As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeit'd beam,
So seems this gorgeous beauty. Shakesp.
Some their forked tails stretch forth on high,
And tear the twinkling stars from trembling sky.
Fairfax.

God comprises all the good we value in the creatures, as the sun doth the light that twinkles
in the stars. Boyle.

The star of love,
That twinkles you to fair Almeyda's bed. Dryden.

Think you your new French proselytes are come
To starve abroad, because they starv'd at home?
Your benefices twinkled from afar. Dryden.

So weak your charms, that, like a winter's night Twinkling with stars, they freeze me while they light. Dryden.

These stars do not twinkle when viewed through telescopes which have large apertures: for the rays of light which pass through divers parts of the aperture tremble each of them apart; and by means of their various, and sometimes contrary tremors, fall at one and the same time upon different points in the bottom of the eye. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns.

The owl fell a moping and twinkling. L'Estran.

3. A short space, such as is taken up by a motion of the eye.

Money can thy wants at will supply:
Shields, steeds, and arms, and all things for thee meet.

It can pourvey in twinkling of an eye. Spenser.
These false beauties of the stage are no more lasting than a rainbow; when the actor gilds them no longer with his reflection, they vanish in a twinkling. Dryden.

The action, passion, and manners of so many persons in a picture, are to be discerned in the twinkling of an eye, if the sight could travel over so many different objects all at once. Dryden.

TWINLING. n. s. [diminutive of twinn.]

A twin lamb; a lamb of two brought at a birth.

Twinlings increase bring. Tusser's Husbandry.

Woodward on Fossils.

To TWIST. v. a. [twētpīran, Sax. twisten, Dut.]

1. To form by complication; to form by convolution.

Do but despair
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will strangle thee. Shakesp.

To reprove discontent, the ancients feigned, that in hell stood a man twisting a rope of hay; and still he twisted on, suffering an ass to eat up all that was finished. Taylor.

Would Clotho wash her hands in milk,
And twist our thread with gold and silk;
Would she in friendship, peace, and plenty,
Spin out our years to four times twenty;
And should we both in this condition
Have conquer'd love, and worse ambition;
Else these two passions by the way
May chance to show us scurvy play. Prior.

The task were harder to secure my own
Against the power of those already known;
For well you twist the secret chains that bind
With gentle force the captivated mind. Lyttleton.

 Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,
 Duth now with twofold vigour life me up,
 To reach at victory above my head,
 Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers,
 And with thy blessings steel my lance's point. Shakesp.

Our twofold seas wash either side. Dryden.

Time and place, taken for distinguishable portions of space and duration, have each of them a twofold acceptation. Locke.

Ewes, that erst brought forth but single lambs,
 Now dropp'd their twofold burdens. Prior.

Holiness may be taken in a twofold sense: for that external holiness, which belongs to persons or things, offered to God; or for those internal graces which sanctify our natures. Atterbury.

TWO'FOLD. adv. Doubly.

A proselyte you make twofold more the child of hell than yourselves. Matt. xxiii. 15.

TWO'HANDED. adj. [two and hand.] Large; bulky; enormous of magnitude.

With huge twohanded sway,
 Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down,
 Wide wasting. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If little, then she's life and soul all o'er;
 An Amazon, the large twohanded whore. Dryden.

TWO'PENNY. n. s. A small coin, valued at twice a penny.

You all shew like gilt twopennies to me. Shakesp.

To TYE. v. a. To bind. See TIE.

TYE. n. s. See TIE. A knot; a bond or obligation.

Lay your Command upon me; to the which my duties
 Are with a most indissoluble tye
 For ever knit. Shakesp.

I have no tye upon you to be true,
 But that which loosen'd your's, my love to you. Dryden.

Honour's a sacred tye, the law of kings,
 The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,
 That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,
 And imitates her actions where she is not;
 It ought not to be sported with. Addison.

Lend me aid, I now conjure thee, lend,
 By the soft tye and sacred name of friend. Pope.

TYGER. n. s. See TIGER.

TYKE. n. s. [See TIKE.] Tyke in Scottish still denotes a dog, or one as contemptible and vile as a dog; and from thence perhaps comes teague.

Base tyke, call'st thou me lust? now,
 By this hand, I swear I scorn the term. Shakesp.

TYMBAL. n. s. [tymbal, Fr.] A kind of kettle drum.

Yet, gracious charity! indulgent guest!
Yet not thy pow'r exerted in my breast,
My speeches would send up unheeded pray'r:
The scorn of life would be but wild despair:
A tymbal's sound were better than my voice,
My faith were form, my eloquence were noise.

TYMPANITES. n. s. [τυμπανίτης.] That particular sort of dropsy that swells the belly up like a drum, and is often cured by tapping.

TYMPANUM. n. s. A drum; a part of the ear, so called from its resemblance to a drum.

The three little bones in meatu auditorio, by firming the tympanum, are a great help to the hearing.

TYMPANY. n. s. [from tympanum, Lat.] A kind of obstructed flatulence that swells the body like a drum; the wind dropsy.

Hope, the Christian grace, must be proportioned and temperate to the promise; if it exceed that temper and proportion, it becomes a tumour and tympany of hope.

He does not shew us Rome great suddenly,
As if the empire were a tympany;
But gives it natural growth, tells how and why
The little body grew so large and high.

Others, that affect
A lofty stile, swell to a tympany.
Pride is no more than an unnatural tympany, that rises in a bubble, and spends itself in a blast.

Nor let thy mountain-belly make pretence
Of likeness; thine's a tympany of sense.
A tun of man in thy large bulk is writ,
But sore thou'rt but a kilderkin of wit.
The air is so rarified in this kind of dropsical tumour, as makes it hard and tight like a drum, and from thence it is called a tympany.

TY'NY. adj. Small.

He that has a little tyny wit,
Must make content with his fortunes fit.

TYPE. n. s. [type, Fr. typus, Lat. τύπος.]

1. Emblem; mark of something.

Clean renouncing
The faith they have in tennis, and tall stockings,
Short bolster'd breeches, and those types of travel,
And understanding again the honest men.
Thy emblem, gracious queen, the British rose,
Type of sweet rule, and gentle majesty.

2. That by which something future is prefigured.

Informing them by types
And shadows of that destin'd seed to bruise
The serpent, by what means he shall achieve Mankind's deliverance.
The Apostle shews the Christian religion to be in truth and substance what the Jewish was only in type and shadow.

3. A stamp; a mark. Not in use.

Thy father bears the type of King of Naples,
Yet not so wealthy as an English yeoman.
What good is cover'd with the face of heav'n
To b' discovered, that can do me good?
—Th' advancement of your children, gentle lady!
—Up to some scaffold, there to lose their head!
—No, to the dignity and height of fortune,
The high imperial type of this earth's glory.
Which, though in their mean types small matter
doth appear,
Yet both of good account are reckon'd in the shiere.

1. A printing letter.

To TYPE. v. a. To prefigure.

He ratified ceremonial and positive laws, in respect of their spiritual use and signification, and by fulfilling all things typed and pre-figured by them.

TY'PICAL. } adj. [typique, Fr. typicus, TY'PICK. } Lat.] Emblematical; figurative of something else.

The Levitical priesthood was only typical of the Christian; which is so much more holy and honourable than that, as the institution of Christ is more excellent than that of Moses.

Hence that many couersers ran,
Hand-in-hand, a goodly train,
To bless the great Eliza's reign;
And in the typic glory show
What fuller bliss Maria shall bestow.

TY'PICALLY. adv. [from typical.] In a typical manner.

This excellent communicativeness of the divine nature is typically represented, and mysteriously exemplified by the Porphyrian scale of being.

TY'PICALNESS. n. s. [from typical.] The state of being typical.

To TY'PIFY. v. a. [from type.] To figure; to shew in emblem.

The resurrection of Christ hath the power of a pattern to us, and is so typified in baptism, as an engagement to rise to newness of life.

Our Saviour was typified indeed by the goat that was slain; at the effusion of whose blood, not only the hard hearts of his enemies relented, but the stony rocks and veil of the temple were shattered.

TYPO'GRAPHER. n. s. [τύπος and γράφω.] A printer.

TYPOGRA'PHICAL. adj. [from typography.]

1. Emblematical; figurative.
2. Belonging to the printer's art.

TYPOGRA'PHICALLY. adv. [from typographical.]

1. Emblematically; figuratively.
2. After the manner of printers.

TYPOGRAPHY. n. s. [typographie, Fr. typographia, Lat.]

1. Emblematical, figurative, or hieroglyphical representation.

Those diminutive and pamphlet treatises daily published amongst us, are pieces containing rather typography than verity.

2. The art of printing.

TY'RANNESS. n. s. [from tyrant.] A she tyrant.

They were, by law of that proud tyranness,
Provok'd with wrath and envy's false surmise.

The tyranness doth joy to see
The huge massacres which her eyes do make.

TYRA'NNICAL. } adj. [tyrannus, Lat.
TYRA'NNICK. } tyrannique, Fr. τυραννικός.]

Suiting a tyrant; acting like a tyrant; cruel; despotick; imperious.

Charge him home that he affects Tyrannick power.

You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd office, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical;
Domitian had been tyrannical; and in his time many noble houses were overthrown by false accusations.

Subdue and quell, o'er all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r.

If the spirit of a subject be rebellious, in a prince it will be tyrannical and intolerable.

She hath recourse
To tears and prayers, again she feels the smart
Of a fresh wound from the tyrannick dart.
Our sects a more tyrannick power assume,
And would for scorpious change the ruds of Rome.

T Y R

And by the nobles, by his commons curs'd,
Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannick where he durst;
Stretch'd o'er the poor and church his iron rod,
And treats alike his vassals and his God.

TYRA'NNICALLY. adv. [from tyrannical.] In manner of a tyrant.

TYRA'NNICIDE. n. s. [tyrannus, and caedo, Lat.] The act of killing a tyrant.

To TY'RANNISE. v. n. [tyranniser, Fr. from tyrant.] To play the tyrant; to act with rigour and imperiousness.

While we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear will not be able to tyrannise over us.

Then 'gan Carausius tyrannise anew,
And 'gainst the Romans bent their proper power,
And so Alecctus treacherously slew,
And took on him the robe of emperor.

I made thee miserable,
What time I threw the people's suffrages
On him, that thus doth tyrannise o'er me.

A crew, whom like ambition joins
With him, or under him to tyrannise.
Beauty had crown'd you, and you must have been

The whole world's mistress, other than a queen,
All had been rivals, and you might have spar'd,
Or kill'd and tyrannise without a guard.

He does violence to his own faculties, tyrannises over his own mind, and usurps the prerogative that belongs to truth alone, which is, to command by its own authority.

TY'RANNOUS. adj. [from tyrant.] Tyrannical; despotick; arbitrary; severe; cruel; imperious. Not in use.

It is strange to see the unmaulike cruelty of mankind, who, not content with their tyrannous ambition to have brought the others virtuous patience under them, think their masterhood nothing without doing injury to them.

Lately grown into a loathing and detestation of the unjust and tyrannous rule of Harold, an usurper.

Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,
And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from blowing.

To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Fear you his tyrannous passion more, alas!
Than the queen's life?
Subjection to his empire tyrannous.

After the death of this tyrannous and ambitious king, these writings came abroad.

TY'RANNY. n. s. [tyrannis, Lat. τυραννία; tyrannie, Fr.]

1. Absolute monarchy imperiously administered.

One grand foe,
Who now triumphs, and, in th' excess of joy,
Sole reigning holds the tyranny of heav'n.
The cities fell often under tyrannies, which spring naturally out of popular governments.

2. Unresisted and cruel power.

Boundless intemperance
In nature is a tyranny; it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings.

3. Cruel government; rigorous command.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure,
For goodness dares not check thee.

Suspicious dispose kings to tyranny, and husbands to jealousy.

God, in judgment just,
Subjects him from without to violent lords;
Who oft as undeservedly intral
His outward freedom: tyranny must be.

4. Severity; rigour; inclemency.
The tyranny of the open night's too rough
For nature to endure.

T Y R

TYRANT. n. s. [τυραννος; tyrannus, Lat.] Rowland contends that this word, with the correspondent Greek and Latin, is derived from tir, Welch and Erse, land, and rhanner, Welch, to share; q. d. tir-hanner a sharer, or divider of land among his vassals.]

1. An absolute monarch governing imperiously.
2. A cruel, despotick, and severe master; an oppressor.

T Y R

Love to a yielding heart is a king, but to a resisting is a tyrant. Sidney.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st For the whole space that's within the tyrant's grasp, And the rich east to boot. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Dissembling courtesy! how fine this tyrant Can tickle where she wounds! Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The house of woe, and dungeon of our tyrant. Milton.

Consider those grand agents and lieutenants of the devil, by whom he scourges and plagues the world under him, to wit, tyrants; and was there ever any tyrant who was not also false and perfidious? South.

Thou mean'st to kill a tyrant, not a king. Dryd.

T Y R

When tyrant custom had not shackled man, But free to follow nature was the mode. Thomson.

TYRE. n. s. [properly tire.] See TIRE.

I have seen her beset and bedecked all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows above the tyre of her head. Hakewill.

TY'RO. n. s. [properly tiro, as in the Lat.] One yet not master of his art; one in his rudiments.

There stands a structure on a rising hill, Where tyros take their freedom out to kill. Garth's Dispensary

V.

V A C

V HAS two powers expressed in modern English by two characters, V consonant and U vowel, which ought to be considered as two letters; but as they were long confounded while the two uses were annexed to one form, the old custom still continues to be followed.

U, the vowel, has two sounds; one clear, expressed at other times by eu, as obtus; the other close, and approaching to the Italian u, or English oo, as obtund.

V, the consonant, has a sound nearly approaching to those of b and f. With b it is by the Spaniards and Gascons always confounded, and in the Runick alphabet is expressed by the same character with f, distinguished only by a diacritical point. Its sound in English is uniform. It is never mute.

VACANCY. n. s. [from vacant.]

1. Empty space; vacuity.

How is 't,
That thus you bend your eye on vacancy,
And with th' incorporal air do hold discourse?
Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. Chasm; space unfilled.

The reader finds a wide vacancy, and knows not how to transport his thoughts to the next particular, for want of some connecting idea. Watts's Logick.

3. [Vacance, Fr.] State of a post or employment when it is unsupplied.

They were content to bribe them with the nomination of some bishops, and disposal of the revenues of some churches during the vacancies. Lesley.
In the vacancy of a bishop, the guardian of the spiritualities was summoned to parliament in the bishop's room. Ayliffe.

4. [Vacances, Fr.] Time of leisure; relaxation; intermission; time unengaged.

If, sometimes, each other's eyes we meet,
Those little vacancies from toil are sweet. Dryden.
The daily intervals of time and vacancies from necessary labour, together with the one day in seven in the Christian world, allow sufficient time. Watts.

5. Listlessness; emptiness of thought.

When alone, or in company, they sit still without doing any thing, I like it worse; for all dispositions to idleness or vacancy, even before they are habits, are dangerous. Wotton.

VACANT. adj. [vacant, Fr. vacans, Lat.]

1. Empty; unfilled; void.

V A C

Why should the air so impetuously rush into the cavity of the receiver, if there were before no vacant room to receive it? Boyle.

A better race to bring into their vacant room. Milton.

2. Free; unencumbered; uncrowded:

Religion is the interest of all; but philosophy of those only that are at leisure, and vacant from the affairs of the world. More's Divine Dialogues.

A very little part of our life is so vacant from uneasiness, as to leave us free to the attraction of remoter good. Locke.

3. Not filled by an incumbent, or possessor.

Lest the fiend invade vacant possession. Milton.
Others, when they allowed the throne vacant, thought the succession should immediately go to the next heir. Swift.

4. Being at leisure; disengaged.

They which have the government scatter the army abroad, and place them in villages to take their victuals of them, at such vacant times as they lie not in the camp. Spenser.

Sir John Berkley was the more vacant for that service, by the reduction of Barnstable. Clarendon.
Besides those portions of time which the necessities of nature and of civil life extorted from him, there was not a minute of the day which he left vacant. Fell.

The memory relieves the mind in her vacant moments, and prevents any chasms of thought, by ideas of what is past. Addison.

5. Thoughtless; empty of thought; not busy.

The wretched slave,
Who with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread. Shakesp.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face, proceeding from a singular assurance in his temper. Wotton's Buckingham.

TO VACATE. v. a. [vacat, Lat.]

1. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority.

That after-act vacating the authority of the precedent, tells the world that some remorse touched even Stratford's most implacable enemies. King Charles.

The necessity of observing the Jewish sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day. Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession of: as, he vacated the throne.

3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge;
For, while he trusts me, 'twere so base a part
To fawn, and yet betray. Dryden.

VACATION. n. s. [vacation, Fr. vacatio, Lat.]

V A C

1. Intermission of juridical proceedings, or any other stated employments; recess of courts or senates.

Vacation is all that time which passes between term and term at London. Cowell.

As these clerks want not their full task of labour during the open term, so there is for them whereupon to be occupied in the vacation only. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

2. Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity.

Benefit of peace, quiet, and vacation for piety, have rendered it necessary, in every Christian commonwealth, by laws to secure propriety. Hammond's Fundamentals

VACARY. n. s. [vacca, Lat.] A cow-house; a cow-pasture. Bailey.

VACILLANCY. n. s. [vacillans, from vacillo, Lat. vacillant, Fr.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconsistency. Not much in use.

I deny that all mutability implies imperfection, though some does, as that vacillancy in human souls, and such mutations as are found in corporeal matter. More's Divine Dialogues.

VACILLATION. n. s. [vacillatio, from vacillo, Lat. vacillation, Fr.] The act or state of reeling or staggering.

The muscles keep the body upright, and prevent its falling, by readily assisting against every vacillation. Derham.

VACUATION. n. s. [from vacuus, Lat.] The act of emptying. Dict.

VACUIST. n. s. [from vacuum.] A philosopher that holds a vacuum: opposed to a plenist.

Those spaces, which the vacuists would have to be empty, because they are manifestly devoid of air, the plenists do not prove replenished with subtle matter. Boyle.

VACUITY. n. s. [vacuitas, from vacuus, Lat. vacuité, Fr.]

1. Emptiness; state of being unfilled.
Hunger is such a state of vacuity, as to require a fresh supply of aliment. Arbutnot.

2. Space unfilled; space unoccupied.
In filling up vacuities, turning out shadows and ceremonies, by explicit prescription of substantial duties, which those shadows did obscurely represent. Hammond's Fundamentals.

He, that seat soon failing, meets
A vast vacuity. Milton.

Body and space are quite different things, and a vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter.

God, who alone can answer all our longings, and fill every vacuity of our soul, should entirely possess our heart.

Redeeming still at night these vacuities of the day.

3. Inanity; want of reality.

The soul is seen, like other things, in the mirror of its effects: but if they'll run behind the glass to catch at it, their expectations will meet with vacuity and emptiness.

VACUOUS. adj. [vacuus, Lat. vacuë, Fr.] Empty; unfiled.

Bonndless the deep, because I AM who fill Infinitude: nor vacuous the space.

VACUUM. n. s. [Lat.] Space unoccupied by matter.

Our enquiries about vacuum, or space and atoms, will shew us some good practical lessons.

TO VADE. v. n. [vado, Lat.] To vanish; to pass away.

Be ever gloried here thy sovereign name, That thou may'st smile on all which thou hast made;

Whose frown alone can shake this earthly frame, And at whose touch the hills in smook shall vade.

VAGABOND. adj. [vagabundus, low Lat. vagabond, Fr.]

1. Wandering without any settled habitation; wanting a home.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death; Vagabond exile: yet I would not buy Their mercy at the price of one fair word.

A vagabond debtor may be cited in whatever place or jurisdiction he is found.

2. Wandering; vagrant.

This common body, Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream, Goes to, and back, lacqueying the varying tide.

1. To let fall; to suffer to descend.

They stilly refused to vail their bonnets, which is reckoned intolerable contempt by seafarers.

The virgin 'gan her beavoir vale, And thank'd him first, and thus began her tale.

2. To let fall in token of respect.

Certain of the Turks galleys, which would not vail their topsails, the Venetians fiercely assailed.

Before my princely state let your poor greatness fall, And vail your tops to me, the sovereign of you all.

They had not the ceremony of veiling the bonnet in salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads.

3. To fall; to let sink in fear, or for any other interest.

That furious Scot 'Gan vail his stomach, and did grace the shame Of those that turn'd their backs.

TO VAIL. v. n. To yield; to give place; to shew respect by yielding. In this sense, the modern writers have ignorantly written veil.

Thy convenience must veil to thy neighbour's necessity; and thy very necessities must yield to thy neighbour's extremity.

VAIN. adj. [vain, Fr. vanus, Lat.]

1. Fruitless; ineffectual.

Let no man speak again To alter this; for counsel is but vain.

To crush the pillars which the pile sustain.

such store of glorious creatures on earth, and leave them all to be consumed in secular vanity, allowing none but the baser sort to be employed in his own service? Hooker.

I must

Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple

Some vanity of mine wit. Shak. Tempest.

Cast not her serious wit on idle things;

Make her free will slave to vanity. Davies.

Sin with vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

The eldest equal the youngest in the vanity of their dress; and no other reason can be given of it, but that they equal, if not surpass them, in the vanity of their desires. South.

Think not, when woman's transient breath is fled,
That all her vanities at once are dead;
Succeeding vanities she still regards,
And though she plays no more, o'erlooks the cards. Pope.

6. Ostentation ; arrogance.

The ground-work thereof is true, however they, through vanity, whilst they would not seem to be ignorant, do thereupon build many forged histories of their own antiquity. Spenser.

Whether it were out of the same vanity which possessed all those learned philosphers and poets, that Plato also published, not under the right author's names, those things which he had read in the scriptures; or fearing the severity of the Areopagite, and the example of his master Socrates, I cannot judge. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

7. Petty pride ; pride exerted upon slight grounds ; pride operating upon small occasions.

Can you add guilt to vanity, and take
A pride to hear the conquests which you make?
Dryden.

'Tis an old maxim in the schools,
That vanity 's the food of fools;
Yet now and then your men of wit
Will condescend to take a bit. Swift's Miscel.
The corruption of the world indulges women in great vanity; and mankind seem to consider them in no other view, than as so many painted idols, that are to allure and gratify their passions. Lavo.

To VANQUISH. v. a. [vaincre, Fr.]

1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue.

Were't not a shame, that, whilst you live at jar,
The fearful French, whom you late vanquished,
Should make a start o'er seas, and vanquish you?
Shakesp.

They subdued and vanquished the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon.
The gods the victor, Cato the vanquish'd chose;
But you have done what Cato could not do,
To chase the vanquish'd, and restore him too. Dryden.

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen :
While a kind glance at her pursuer flies,
How much at variance are her feet and eyes ! Pope.

If the learned would not sometimes submit to the ignorant; the old to the weaknesses of the young; there would be nothing but everlasting variance in the world. Swift.

Many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt man and man. Thomson.

Who are they that set the first and second articles at variance with each other, when for fourteen centuries, and more, they have agreed most amicably together? Waterland.

VARIATION. n. s. [variatio, Lat. variatio, Fr.]

1. Change; mutation; difference from itself.

After much variation of opinions, the prisoner was acquitted of treason, but by most voices found guilty of felony. Hayward.

The operation of agents will easily admit of intention and remission; but the essences of things are conceived not capable of any such variation. Locke.

The fame of our writers is confined to these two islands; and it is hard it should be limited in time as much as place, by the perpetual variations of our speech. Swift.

There is but one common matter, which is diversified by accidents; and the same numerical quantity, by variations of texture, may constitute successively all kinds of body. Bentley.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are more females born than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

Each sea had its peculiar shells, and the same variation of soils; this tract affording such a terrestrial matter as is proper for the formation of one sort of shell-fish; that of another. Woodward's Nat. History.

3. Successive change.

Sir Walter Blunt,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours. Shakesp.

To VA'RIEGATE. v. a. [variegatus, school Lat.] To diversify; to stain with different colours.

V A R

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward on Fossils

They had fountains of variegated marble in their rooms. Arbuthnat.

Ladies like variegated tulips show;
'Tis to the changes half the charms we owe;
Such happy spots the nice admirers take,
Fine by defect, and delicately weak. Pope.

VARIEGATION. n. s. [from variegatus.] Diversity of colours.

Plant your choice tulips in natural earth, somewhat impoverished with very fine sand; else they will soon lose their variegations. Evelyn's Kalend.

VARIETY. n. s. [variété, Fr. varietas, Lat.]

1. Change; succession of one thing to another; intermixture of one thing with another.

All sorts are here that all th' earth yields;
Variety without end. Milton's Par. Lost.

Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South.

If the sun's light consisted of but one sort of rays, there would be but one colour in the whole world, nor would it be possible to produce any new colour by reflections or refractions; and by consequence that the variety of colours depends upon the composition of light. Newton's Opticks.

2. One thing of many by which variety is made. In this sense it has a plural.

The inclosed warmth which the earth hath in itself, stirred up by the heat of the sun, assisteth nature in the speedier procreation of those varieties which the earth bringeth forth. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men, with relation to the different impressions they receive from different objects of charity. F. Atterbury.

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.

It were a great vanity to reject those reasons drawn from the nature of things, or to go about to answer those reasons by suppositions of a variety in things, from what they now appear. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

5. Many and different kinds.

He now only wants more time to do that variety of good which his soul thirsts after. Law.

VARIOUS. adj. [varius, Lat.]

Such lords ill example do give,
Where varlets and drabs so may live. Tuss. Husb.

A varlet running towards them hastily. Spenser.

2. A scoundrel; a rascal. This word has deviated from its original meaning, as fur in Latin.

I am the veriest varlet that ever chew'd.

Shakesp. Hen IV.
Where didst thou leave these varlets? Shak.
Thou, varlet, dost thy master's gains devour;
Thou milk'st his ewes, and often twice an hour. Dryden.

When the Roman legions were in a disposition to mutiny, an impudent varlet, who was a private centinel, resolved to try the power of his eloquence. Addison.

VA'RILETRY. n. s. [from varlet.] Rabble; crowd; populace.

Shall they hoist me up,
And shew me to the shouting varletry
Of cens'ring Rome? Shak. Ant. and Cleopat.

VARNISH. n. s. [vernis, Fr. vernix, Lat.]

1. A matter laid upon wood, metal, or other bodies, to make them shine.

We'll put on those shall praise your excellence,
And set a double varnish on the same. Shakesp.

The fame of Cicero had not hornie her age so well, if it had not been joined with some vanity. Like unto varnish, that makes ceilings not only shine, but last. Bacon.

This the blue varnish, that the green endears,
The sacred rust of twice ten hundred years. Pope.

2. Cover; palliation.

To VARNISH. v. a. [vernisser, vernir, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To cover with something shining.

Let your ceaseless change
Vary to our great Creator still new praise. Milton.

2. To change to something else.
Gods that never change their state,
Vary off their love and hate. Waller.
The master's hand, which to the life can trace
The airs, the lines, the features of the face,
May, with a free and bolder stroke, express
A vary'd posture, or a flattering dress. Denham.
We are to vary the customs, according to the time and country where the scene of action lies. Dryden.
He varies ev'ry shape with ease,
And tries all forms that may Pomona please. Pope.

3. To make of different kinds.
God hath divided the genius of men according to the different affairs of the world; and varied their inclinations, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Brown.

4. To diversify; to variegate.
God hath here
Vary'd his bounty so with new delights. Milton.

ferent forms.
Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

2. To be unlike each other.
Those who made laws, had their minds polished above the vulgar: and yet unaccountably the public constitutions of nations vary. Collier on Pride.

3. To alter; to become unlike itself.
He had a strange interchanging of large and unexpected pardons, with several executions; which could not be imputed to any inconsistency, but to a principle he had set unto himself, that he would vary, and try both ways in turn. Bacon.
So vary'd he, and of his tortuous train
Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.
That each from other differs, first confess;
Next, that he varies from himself no less. Pope.

4. To deviate; to depart.
The crime consists in violating the law, and varying from the right rule of reason. Locke.

While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face. Addis. Ca.

6. To disagree; to be at variance.
In judgment of her substance thus they vary,
And vary thus in judgment of her seat;
For some her chair up to the brain do carry,
Some sink it down into the stomach's heat. Davies.

7. To shift colours.
Will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove?
Admires the jay the insect's gilded wings?
Or hears the hawk when Philomela sings? Pope.

VARY. n. s. [from the verb.] Change; alteration. Not in use.
Such smiling rogues as these sooth every passion;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks,
With every gale and vary of their masters. Shak.

VASCULAR. adj. [from vasculum, Lat.]
Consisting of vessels; full of vessels.
Nutrition of the solids is performed by the circulating liquid in the smallest vascular solids. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VASCULIFEROUS. adj. [vasculum and fero, Lat.] Such plants as have, besides the common calyx, a peculiar vessel to contain the seed, sometimes divided into cells; and these have always a monopetalous flower, either uniform or difform. Quincy.

V A S

VASE. n. s. [vase, Fr. vasa, Lat.]

1. A vessel; generally a vessel rather for show than use.
The toilet stands unveil'd,
Each silver vase in mystick order laid. Pope.

2. It is used for a solid piece of ornamental marble.

VA'SSAL. n. s. [vassal, Fr. vassallo, Ital.]

1. One who holds of a superior lord.
Every petty prince, vassal to the emperor, can coin what money he pleaseth. Swift's View of Irel.
The vassals are invited to bring in their complaints to the viceroy, who imprisons and chastises their masters. Addison.

2. A subject; a dependant.
She cannot content the lord with performance of his discipline, that hath at her side a vassal, whom Satan hath made his vicegerent, to cross whatsoever the faithful should do. Hooker.
Such as they thought fit for labour, they received as vassals; but imparted not the benefit of laws, but every one made his will a law unto his own vassal. Spenser's State of Ireland.
The common people were free subjects to the king, not slaves and vassals to their pretended lords. Davies.
The mind hath not reason to remember, that passions ought to be her vassals, not her masters. Raleigh.
Vassals of his anger, when the scourge
Inexorable, and the torturing hour
Calls us to penance. Milton.
As all his vassals eagerly desir'd;
With mind averse, he rather underwent
His people's will, than gave his own consent. Dryden.

He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Baker.

3. A servant; one who acts by the will of another.
I am his fortune's vassal, and I send him
The greatness he has got. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

4. A slave; a low wretch.
Thou swear'st thy gods in vain,
O vassal! miscreant! Shaksp. King Lear.

VASSALLAGE. n. s. [vasselage, Fr. from vassal.] The state of a vassal; tenure at will; servitude; slavery; dependance.
He renounc'd the vassalage
Of Rome again. Spenser.
All my pow'rs do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty. Shak. Troilus and Cres.
They would have brought the Achæans from the condition of followers and dependents unto mere vassalage. Raleigh.
Let us not then pursue,
By force impossible, by leave obtain'd
Unacceptable, though in heav'n our state
Of splendid vassalage. Milton's Par. Lost.
Curs'd vassalage,
First idoliz'd till love's hot fire be o'er,
'Then slaves to those who courted us before. Dryd.

VAST. adj. [vaste, Fr. vastus, Lat.]

1. Large; great.
What the parliament meant to attempt with those vast numbers of men, every day levied. Clarendon.
That is an ample and capacious mind, which takes in vast and sublime ideas without pain. Watts.
His open stores,
Though vast, were little to his ample heart. Thomson.

2. Viciously great; enormously extensive or capacious.
The vicious language is vast and gaping, swelling and irregular: when it contends to be high, full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. Ben Jons.

V A U

So bore the ship aloft her fiery bound,
About whom rusht the billows, blacke aid vaste. Chapman.
They view'd the vast unmeasurable abyss. Milt.
Others with vast Typhæan rage, more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind, hell scarce holds the wild uproar. Milton.

VAST. n. s. [vastum, Lat.] An empty waste.
They shook hands, as over a vast; and embraced, as from the ends of opposed winds. Shak.
'Through the vast of heav'n it sounded. Milton.
The wat'ry vast,
Secure of storms, your royal brother past. Pope.

VASTATION. n. s. [vastatio, from vasto,
Lat.] Waste; depopulation.
This wild-fire made the saddest vastations, in the many fatal outrages which these eager contentions occasion. Decay of Piety.

VASTIDITY. n. s. [vastitas, Lat. from vasty.] Wideness; immensity. A barbarous word.
Perpetual durance,
Through all the world's vastidity. Shakesp.

VASTLY. adv. [from vast.] Greatly; to a great degree.
Holland's resolving upon its own defence, without our share in the war, would leave us to enjoy the trade of the world, and thereby grow vastly both in strength and treasures. Temple.
They may, and do vastly differ in their manners, institutions, customs; but yet all of them agree in having some deity to worship. Wilkins.
It is vastly the concern of government, and of themselves too, whether they be morally good or bad. South.

VASTNESS. n. s. [from vast.] Immensity; enormous greatness.
Behemoth, biggest born of earth, upheav'd
His vastness. Milton's Par. Lo 1.
She by the rocks compell'd to stay behind,
Is by the vastness of her bulk confin'd. Waller.
When I compare this little performance with the vastness of my subject, methinks I have brought but a cockle-shell of water from the ocean. Glann.
Ariosto observed not moderation in the vastness of his draught. Dryden.
Hence we may discover the cause of the vastness of the ocean. Bentley.

VASTY. adj. [from vast.] Large; enormously great.
I can call spirits from the vasty deep. Shakesp.

VAT. n. s. [vat, Dut. vat, Sax.] A vessel in which liquors are kept in the immature state.
Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyen,
In thy vats our cares be drown'd. Shakesp.
Let him produce his vats and tubs, in opposition to heaps of arms and standards. Addison.
Wouldst thou thy vats with gen'rous juice should froth, Phillips.

VATICIDE. n. s. [vates and caedo, Lat.] A murderer of poets.
The caittif vaticide conceiv'd a prayer. Pope.

To VATICINATE. v. n. [vaticinor, Lat.]

song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets. Trevoux. A ballad; a trivial strain.

V A U

VAULT. n. s. [routte, Fr. volta, Ital. volta, low Lat.]

1. A continued arch.

O, you are men of stone.
Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so
That heaven's vault should crack. Shakesp. K. L.

The word signifies an orb or sphere. And this shews us both the form of the Mosaical abyss, which was included within this vault; and the form of the habitable earth, which was the outward surface of this vault, or the cover of the abyss.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. A cellar.

Creep into the kill-hole,
—He will seek there; neither press, well, vault,
but lie hath an abstract for the remembrance of.

Shakesp.

The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

Shakesp.

Whether your fruitful fancy lies
To banish rats that haunt our vault.

Swift.

3. A cave; a cavern.

The silent vaults of death, unknown to light,
And hell itself, lie naked to his sight.

Sandys.

4. A repository for the dead.

Shall I not be stified in the vault,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes in?

Shakesp.

To VAULT. v. a. [voûter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To arch; to shape to a vault.

Hath nature given them eyes
To see this vaulted arch, and the rich cope
Of sea and land, which can distinguish 'twixt
The fiery orbs above, and the twinn'd stones
Upon th' humbled beach?

Shak. Cymbeline.

2. To cover with an arch.

Over-head the dismal hiss
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys flew;
And flying vaulted either host with fire.

Milton.

To VAULT. v. n. [volliger, Fr. volteggiare, Ital.]

1. To leap; to jump.

Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on th' other.

Shak. Macbeth.

The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou would'st have me drown'd on shore.

Shakesp.

He is vaulting variable ramps,
In your despite, upon your purse.

Shakesp.

If I could win a lady by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife.

Shakesp.

Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree.

Dry.

If a man should leap a garret, or vault down the monument, would he leave the memory of a hero behind him?

Collier on Duelling.

Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth.

Addison.

2. To play the tumbler, or posture-master.

VAULT. n. s. [from the verb.] A leap; a jump.

VAULTAGE. n. s. [from vault.] Arched cellar. Not in use.

He'll call you to so hot an answer for it,
That caves and wombly vaultages of France shall chide your trespass, and return your mock in second accent to his ordinance.

Shak. Hen. V.

VAULTED. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave.

Restore the lock! she cries, and all around
Restore the lock! the vaulted roofs rebound.

Pope.

VAULTER. n. s. [from vault.] A leaper; a jumper; a tumbler.

VAULTY. adj. [from vault.] Arched; concave. A bad word.

I will kiss thy detestable bones,
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows,
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.

Shakesp.

I'll say that's not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heav'ns so high above our heads.

Shak.

V A W

To VAUNT. v. a. [vanter, Fr.] To boast; to display with ostentation.

Not that great champion
Whom famous poets' verse so much doth vaunt,
And hath for twelve huge labours high extoll'd,
So many furies and sharp hits did haunt. Spenser.

Not any damsel which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft silken twine. Spenser.

My vanquisher, spuil'd of his vaunted spoil.

Milton.

To VAUNT. v. n.

1. To play the braggart; to talk with ostentation; to make vain show; to boast.

You say, you are a better soldier;
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true. Shak.

The illusions of magick were put down, and their vaunting in wisdom reproved with disgrace.

Wisdom, xvii. 7.

So spake th' apostate angel, though in pain;
Vaunting aloud, but rack'd with deep despair.

Milton.

Pride, which prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is, does incline him to disvalue what he has.

Governm. of the Tongue.

2. I scarcely know in what sense Dryden has used this word, unless it be miswritten for vaults.

'Tis he: I feel him now in ev'ry part;
Like a new world he vaunts about my heart.

Dry.

VAUNT. n. s. [from the verb.] Brag; boast; vain ostentation.

Sir John Perrot bent his course not to that point, but rather quite contrary, in scorn, and in vain vaunt of his own counsels.

Spenser.

With other promises and other vaunts.
Such vaunts as his who can with patience read,
Who thus describes his hero when he's dead?
In heat of action slain, he scorns to fall,
But still maintains the war, and fights at all.

Granv.

VAUNT. n. s. [from avant, Fr.] The first part. Not used.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vaunt and firstlings.

Shakesp.

VAUNTER. n. s. [vanteur, Fr. from vaunt.] Boaster; braggart; man given to vain ostentation.

Some feign
To menage steeds, as did this vaunter; but in vain.

Spenser.

Tongue-valiant hero! vaunter of thy might!
In threats the foremost, but the last in fight.

Dryd.

VAUNTFUL. adj. [vaunt and full.] Boastful; ostentatious.

Whiles all the heavens on lower creatures
smil'd,
Young Clarion, with vauntful lustihed,
After his guise did east abroad to fare.

Spenser.

VAUNTINGLY. adv. [from vaunting.] Boastfully; ostentatiously.

I heard thee say, and vauntingly thou spak'st it,
That thou wert cause of noble Gloster's death.

Shakesp.

VAUNTMURE. n. s. [avantmur, Fr.] A false wall; a work raised before the main wall.

With another engine, named the warwolfe, he pierced with one stone, and cut, as even as a thread, two vauntmures.

Camden's Remains.

This warlike captain daily attempting the vauntmures, in the end by force obtained the same; and so possessed of the place, desperately kept it till greater help came running in; who, with wonderful expedition, clapt up a strong covering betwixt the wall and the vauntmure.

Knolles.

VA'WARD. n. s. [van and ward.] Forepart. Obsolete.

Since we have the ward of the day,
My love shall hear the musick of my fownds.

Shak.

Their bands i' th' ward are the Antiates
Of their best trust.

Shakesp. Coriol.

V E E

He desired nothing more than to have confirmed his authority in the minds of the vulgar, by the present and ready attendance of the vauced.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

U'BERTY. n. s. [ubertas, Lat.] Abundance; fruitfulness.

UBICATION. } n. s. [from ubi, Lat.] Lo-UBI'ETY. } cal relation; whereness.

A scholastiek term.

Relations, ubications, duration, the vulgar philosophy admits to be something; and yet to enquire in what place they are, were gross.

UBIQUITARY. adj. [from ubique, Lat.] Existing every where.

For wealth and an ubiquitary commerce, none can exceed her.

Howel.

UBIQUITARY. n. s. [from ubique, Lat.] One that exists every where.

How far wide is Aquinas, which saith, by the same reason that an angel might be in two places, he might be in as many as you will? See now, either Xavier is every where, or else the carcase of a friar is more subtle than the nature of an angel. To conclude, either Aquinas is false, or the Papists ubiquitaries.

Hall.

UBIQUITY. n. s. [from ubique, Lat.] Omnipresence; existence at the same time in all places.

In the one there is attributed to God death, whereof divine nature is not capable; in the other, ubiquity unto man, which human nature admitteth not.

Hooker.

Pem she bight,
A solem wight,
As you should meet
In any street,
In that ubiquity.

Ben Jonson.

Could they think that to be infinite and immense, the ubiquity of which they could thrust into a corner of their closet?

South.

U'DDER. n. s. [uden, Sax. uder, Dut. uber, Lat.] The breast or dugs of a cow, or other large animal.

A lioness, with udders all drawn dry,

Arbutnot.

VECTURE. n. s. [vectura, Lat.] Carriage.

Three things one nation selleth unto another: the commodity as nature yieldeth it, the manufacture and the vechure or carriage.

Bacon's Essays

To VEER. v. n. [vîrer, Fr.] To turn about.

Nigh river's mouth, where wind
Yeers oft, as oft he steers and shifts her sail.

Milt.

It a wild uncertainty prevail,
And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale;
You lose the fruit of all your former care,
For the sad prospect of a just despair.

Roscommon.

I have no taste of the noisy praise
Of giddy crowds, as changeable as winds;
Servants to change, and blowing with the tide
Of swoll success; but veering with its ebb.

Dryd.

V E G

A-head the master pilot steers,
And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryd.
It is a double misfortune to a nation given to change, when they have a sovereign that is prone to fall in with all the turns and veerings of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
The wind veered about to north-west. Derham.

To VEER. v. a.

1. To let out.

As it is a great point of art, when our matter requires it, to enlarge and veer out all sail; so to take it in and contract it, is of no less praise when the argument doth ask it. Ben Jonson.

2. To turn; to change.

I see the haven nigh at hand,
To which I mean my weary course to bend;
Fear the main sheet, and bear up with the land. Spenser.
Sailing farther, it veers its lily to the west, and regardeth that quarter wherein the land is nearer or greater. Brown.

VEGETABILITY. n. s. [from vegetable.]

Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.

The coagulating spirits of salts, and lapidifical juice of the sea, entering the parts of the plant, overcome its vegetability, and convert it into a lapideous substance. Brown.

VEGETABLE. n. s. [vegetabilis, school
Lat. vegetable, Fr.] Any thing that has growth without sensation, as plants.

Vegetables are organized bodies consisting of various parts, containing vessels furnished with different juices; and taking in nourishment from without, usually by means of a root fixed to the earth, or to some other body, as in the generality of plants; sometimes by means of pores distributed over the whole surface, as in sub-marine plants. Hill's Materia Medica.

Let brutes, and vegetables that cannot think,
So far as drought and nature urges, drink. Wall.
There are several kinds of creatures in the world, and degrees of dignity amongst them; some being more excellent than others, animate more than inanimate, sensitives more than vegetables, and men more than brutes. Wilkins.

In vegetables it is the shape, and in bodies not propagated by seed it is the colour, we most fix on.
Locke.

Other animated substances are called vegetables, which have within themselves the principle of another sort of life and growth, and of various productions of leaves, flowers and fruit, such as we see in plants, herbs, trees. Watts.

VEGETABLE. adj. [vegetabilis, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a plant.

The vegetable world, each plant and tree,
From the fair cedar on the craggy brow,
To creeping moss. Prior.
Both mechanisms are equally curious, from one uniform juice to extract all the variety of vegetable juices; or from such variety of food to make a fluid very near uniform to the blood of an animal.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Having the nature of plants.

Amidst them stood the tree of life,
High eminent, blooming ambrosial fruit
Of vegetable gold. Milton's Par. Lost.
That vegetative terrestrial hath been ever the standing fund, out of which is derived the matter of all animal and vegetable bodies. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To VEGETATE. v. n. [vegeto, Lat.] To grow as plants; to shoot out; to grow
without sensation.

Rain-water may be endowed with some vegetating or prolific virtue, derived from some saline or oleose particles. Ray.
As long as the seeds remained lodged in a natural soil, they would soon vegetate, and send forth a new set of trees. Woodward.
See dying vegetables life sustain:
See life dissolving vegetate again.
Pope's Ess. on Man.

V E H

VEGETATION. n. s. [from vegeto, Lat.]

1. The power of producing the growth of plants.

The exterior surface consisted of a terrestrial matter proper for the nourishment of plants, being little entangled with mere mineral matter, that was unfit for vegetation. Woodward.

The sun, deep-darting to the dark retreat
Of vegetation, sets the steaming power
At large. Thomson's Spring.

Love warbles through the vocal groves,
And vegetation paints the plain. Anonymous.

2. The power of growth without sensation.

Plants, though beneath the excellency of creatures endued with sense, yet exceed them in the faculty of vegetation and of fertility. Hooker.

These pulsations I attribute to a plastick nature, or vital principle, as the vegetation of plants must also be. Ray.

VEGETATIVE. adj. [vegetatif, Fr. from vegetate.]

1. Having the quality of growing without life.

Creatores vegetative and growing have their seeds in themselves. Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

2. Having the power to produce growth in plants.

The nature of plants doth consist in having a vegetative soul, by which they receive nourishment and growth, and are enabled to multiply their kind. Wilkins.

Homer makes deities of the vegetative faculties and virtues of the field. Broome on the Odyssey.

VEGETATIVENESS. n. s. [from vegetative.] The quality of producing growth.

VEGETE. adj. [vegetus, Lat.] Vigorous;
active; sprightly.

The soul was vegete, quick and lively; full of the youthfulness and spriteliness of youth. South.

The faculties in age must be less vegete and nimble than in youth. Wallis.

VEGETIVE. adj. [from vegeto, Lat.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants.

Nor rent off, but cut off ripe bean with a knife,
For hindering stalks of his vegetive life. Tusser.

VEGETIVE. n. s. [from the adjective.] A vegetable.

Hence vegetives receive their fragrant birth,
And clothe the naked bosom of the earth. Sondys.

The tree still painted in th' unfinished part,
Not wholly vegetive; and heav'd her heart. Dryd.

VEHEMENCE. } n. s. [vehementia, Lat.]
VEHEMENCY. }

1. Violence; force.

Universal hubbub wild,
Of stunning sounds and voices all confus'd,
Assaults his ear with loudest vehemence. Milton.

2. Ardour; mental violence; fervour.

Think ye are men; deem it not impossible for you to err: sift impartially your own hearts, whether it be force of reason, or vehemency of affection, which hath bred, and still doth feed these opinions in you. Hooker.

The best persuasions
Fail not to use; and with what vehemency
Th' occasion shall instruct you. Shak. Hen. VIII.

Would it apply well to the vehemence of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Shakesp.

The extremity of the condition produced some earnestness and vehemency of expression more than ordinary. Clarendon.

This pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sympathize.
Milton.

He hurries on his action with variety of events,
and ends it in less compass than two months.
This vehemence of his is most suitable to my temper. Dryden.

Marcus is over-warm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,

V E I

I leave him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Add. Cato.

VEHEMENT. adj. [vehement, Fr. vehemens, Lat.]

1. Violent; forcible.

A strong imagination hath more force upon light and subtle motions, than upon motions vehe- ment or ponderous. Bacon.

Gold will endure a vehement fire for a long time, without any change. Grew.

2. Ardent; eager; fervent.

By their vehement instigation,
In this just suit come I to move your grace. Shak.

In all things else delight indeed; but such
As, us'd or not, works in the mind no change, Nor vehement desire. Milton's Par. Lost.

VEHEMENTLY. adv. [from vehement.]

1. Forcibly.

2. Pathetically; urgently.
The Christian religion inculcates kindness more vehemently, and forbids malice and hatred more strictly, than any religion did before. Tillotson.

VEHICLE. n. s. [vehiculum, Lat.]

1. That in which any thing is carried.

Evil spirits might very properly appear in vehic- cles of flame, to terrify and surprize. Add. Guard.

2. That part of a medicine which serves to make the principal ingredient potable.

That the meat descends by one passage, the drink, or moistening vehicle, by another, is a popular tenet. Brown.

3. That by means of which any thing is conveyed.

The gaiety of a diverting word serves as a vehic- cle to convey the force and meaning of a thing.
L'Estrange.

To VEIL. v. n. [velo, Lat. See VAIL.]

1. To cover with a veil, or any thing which conceals the face.

Her face was veil'd; yet, to my fancied sight,
Love, sweetness, goodness in her person shin'd.
Milton.

It became the Jewish fashion, when they went to pray, to veil their heads and faces. Boyle.

2. To cover; to invest.

I descry,
From yonder blazing cloud that veils the hill,
One of the heav'nly hosts. Milton.

3. To hide; to conceal.

Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to shew, half veil the deep intent. Pope.

VEIL. n. s. [velum, Lat.]

1. A cover to conceal the face.

To feed his fiery lustful eye,
He snatch'd the veil that hung her face before.
Spenser.

The Paphian queen from that fierce battle borne,
With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
Like terror did among the immortals breed. Waller.

The famous painter could allow no place
For private sorrow in a prince's face:
Yet, that his piece might not exceed belief,
He cast a veil upon supposed grief. Waller.

As veils transparent cover, but not hide,
Such oietaphors appear when right apply'd.
When through the phrase we plainly see the sense,
Truth with such obvious meanings will dispense.
Granville.

She accepts the hero, and the dame
Wraps in her veil, and frees from sense of shame.
Pope.

2. A cover; a disguise.

I will pluck the borrowed veil of modesty from the so seeming Mrs. Page; divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon. Shak. Merry Wives.

Knock on my heart; for thou hast skill to find
If it sound solid, or be fill'd with wind;
And thro' the veil of words thou view'st the naked mind. Dryden.

The ill-natured man exposes those failings in human nature, which the other would cast a veil over. Addison.

VEIN. n. s. [veine, Fr. vena, Lat.]

1. The veins are only a continuation of the extreme capillary arteries reflected back again towards the heart, and uniting their channels as they approach it, till at last they all form three large veins; the cava descendens, which brings the blood back from all the parts above the heart; the cava ascendens, which brings the blood from all the parts below the heart; and the porta, which carries the blood to the liver. The coats of the veins are the same with those of the arteries, only the muscular coat is as thin in all the veins, as it is in the capillary arteries; the pressure of the blood against the sides of the veins being less than that against the sides of the arteries. In the veins there is no pulse, because the blood is thrown into them with a continued stream, and because it moves from a narrow channel to a wider. The capillary veins unite with one another, as the capillary arteries. In all the veins perpendicular to the horizon, excepting those of the uterus and of the porta, are small membranes or valves; like so many half thimbles stuck to the sides of the veins, with their mouths towards the heart. In the motion of the blood towards the heart they are pressed close to the side of the veins; but if blood should fall back, it must fill the valves; and they being distended, stop up the channel, so that no blood can repass them. Quincey.

When I did first impart my love to you, I freely told you all the wealth I had Ran in my veins; I was a gentleman. Shakesp. Horror chill Ran through his veins, and all his joints relax'd. Milton.

2. Hollow; cavity.

Found where casual fire Had wasted woods, on mountain, or in vale, Pown to the veins of earth. Milton's Parad. Lost. Let the glass of the prisms be free from veins, and their sides be accurately plane, and well polished, without those numberless waves or curls, which usually arise from sand-holes. Ncut. Opt.

3. Course of metal in the mine.

There is a vein for the silver. Job. xxviii. 1. Part hidden veins digg'd up, nor hath this earth Entrails unlike, of mineral and stone. Milton. It is in men as in soils, where sometimes there is a vein of gold, which the owner knows not of. Swift's Thoughts.

4. Tendency or turn of the mind or genius.

Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller. We ought to attempt no more than what is in the compass of our genius, and according to our vein. Dryden.

5. Favourable moment; time when any inclination is predominant.

Artizans have not only their growths and perfections, but likewise their veins and times. Watton's Architecture.

6. Humour; temper.

I put your grace in mind Of what you promis'd me. —I am not in the giving vein to-day. Shak. R. III. Certainly he that hath a satirical vein, as he maketh others afraid of his wit, so he had need to be afraid of others. Bacon.

They among themselves in pleasant vein Stood scoffing. Milton's Parad. Lost. Speak'st thou in earnest or in jesting vein? Dry. The carrier struck the usurer upon the right vein. L'Estrange.

7. Continued disposition.

The vein I have had of running into speculations of this kind, upon a greater scene of trade, has cost me this present service. Temple.

8. Current; continued production.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

9. Strain; quality.

My usual vein. Oldham.

10. Streak; variegation: as, the veins of the marble.

VEINED. } adj. [veineux, Fr. from VE'INY. } vein.]

1. Full of veins.

2. Streaked; variegated.

The root of an old white thorn will make very fine boxes and combs, and many of them are very finely veined. Mortimer's Husbandry. Effulgent, hence the veiny marble shines. Thoms.

VELLEITY. n. s. [vellèité, Fr. velleitas, from velle, Lat.]

Velleity is the school term used to signify the lowest degree of desire. Locke.

The wishing of a thing is not properly the willing of it; but it is that which is called by the schools an imperfect velleity, and imports no more than an idle, unoperative complacency in, and desire of the end, without any consideration of the means. South.

To VELLICATE, v. a. [rellico, Lat.] To twitch; to pluck; to act by stimulation.

Those smells are all strong, and do pluck and vellicate the sense. Bacon.

Convulsions arising from something vellivating a nerve in its extremity, are not very dangerous. Arbuthnot.

VELLICATIO'N. n. s. [rellicatio, Lat.] Twitching; stimulation.

All purges have a kind of twitching and vellication, besides the griping, which cometh of wind. Bacon.

There must be a particular motion and vellication impart upon the nerves, else the sensation of heat will not be produced. Watts on the Mind.

VELLUM. n. s. [velin, Fr. velamen, Lat. rather vitulinum, low Lat.] The skin of a calf dressed for the writer.

The skull was very thin, yielding to the least pressure of my finger, as a piece of vellum. Wisem.

VELO'CIDTY. n. s. [velocité, Fr. velocitas, Lat.] Speed; swiftness; quick motion.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are now, at the same distances from the sun; or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power, been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentric circles, but moved in hyperbolas, or parabolas, or in ellipses, very eccentric. Bentley's Sermons.

VELVET. n. s. [veluto, Ital. villos, Lat. velours, Fr.] Silk with a short fur or pile upon it.

Clad in white velvet all their troop they led, With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden. The different ranging the superficial parts of bodies, as of velvet, watered silk, we think probably is nothing but the different refraction of their insensible parts. Locke.

VELVET. adj.

1. Made of velvet.

This was moulded on a porringer, A velvet dish. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

2. Soft; delicate.

Through the velvet leaves the wind, All unseen, 'gan passage find. Shakesp. Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament

As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more To that which had too much. Then being alone, Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends; 'Tis right, quoth he: thus misery do part The flux of company. Shakesp. Such blessings nature pours, O'er-stock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores; In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen, She rears her flow'rs, and spreads her velvet green. Young.

To VELVET. v. n. To paint velvet.

Verditure, ground with a weak gum arabic water, is the palest green that is, but good to velvet upon black in any drapery. Peacham on Drawing.

VELURE. n. s. [velours, Fr.] Velvet.

An old word.

His horse with one girt, six times pieced, and a woman's crupper of velure, pieced with pack-thread. Shakesp.

VENAL. adj. [venal, Fr. venalis, Lat.]

1. Mercenary; prostitute.

This verse he thine, my friend, nor thou refuse This, from no venal or ungrateful muse. Pope.

2. [From vein.] Contained in the veins.

A technical word.

It is unreasonable to affirm, that the cool venal blood should be heated so high in the interval of two pulses. Ray.

VENA'LITY. n. s. [venalité, Fr. from venal.] Mercenariness; prostitution.

VENA'TICK. adj. [venaticus, Lat.] Used in hunting.

VENA'TION. n. s. [venatio, Lat.] The act or practice of hunting.

The manner of their venation we shall find to be otherways than by sawing away of trees. Brown.

To VEND. v. a. [vendre, Fr. vendo, Lat.]

To sell; to offer to sale.

He had a great parcel of glasses packed up, which not having the occasion he expected to vend and make use of, lay by him. Boyle.

VENDEE. n. s. [from vend.] One to whom any thing is sold.

If a vicar sows his glebe, or if he sells his corn, and the vendee cuts it, he must pay the tithes to the parson. Ayliffe.

VENDER. n. s. [vendeur, Fr. from vend.] A seller.

Where the consumption of commodity is, the vendors seat themselves. Graunt. Those make the most noise, who have the least to sell, which is very observable in the vendors of card-matches. Addison.

VENDIBLE. adj. [vendibilis, Lat.] Saleable; marketable.

Silence only is commendable In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not vendible. Shakesp.

This so profitable and vendible a merchandize riseth not to a proportionable enhancement with other less beneficial commodities. Carew.

The ignorant mine-man, aiming only at the obtaining a quantity of such a metal as may be vendible under such a determinate name, has neither the design nor skill to make nice separations of the heterogeneous bodies. Boyle.

VENDIBLENESS. n. s. [from vendible.] The state of being saleable.

VENDIBLY. adv. [from vendible.] In a saleable manner.

VENDITA'TION. n. s. [venditatio, from vendito, Lat.] Boastful display.

Some, by a cunning protestation against all reading, and venditation of their own naturals, think to divert the sagacity of their readers from themselves, and cool the scent of their own fox-like thefts; when yet they are so rank as a man may find whole pages together usurped from one author. B. Jonson.

VENDITION. n. s. [venditio, Fr. venditio, Lat.] Sale; the act of selling.

To VENER. v. a. [among cabinetmakers.] To make a kind of marquetry or inlaid work, whereby several thin slices of fine woods of different sorts are fastened or glued on a ground of some common wood. Bailey.

VENEFICE. n. s. [veneficium, Lat.] The practice of poisoning.

VENEFICIAL. adj. [from veneficium, Lat.] Acting by poison; bewitching.

The magical virtues of misseito, and conceived efficacy unto veneficial intentions, seemeth a Pagan relique derived from the ancient Druides. Brown's Vulg. Err.

VENEFICIOUSLY. adv. [from veneficium, Lat.] By poison or witchcraft.

Lest witches should draw or prick their names therein, and veneficiously mischief their persons, they brake the shell. Brown's Vulg. Err.

VENEMOUS. adj. [from venin, Fr.] Poisonous. Commonly, though not better, venomous.

The barbarians saw the venomous beast hang on his hand. Acts, xxviii. 4.

To VENENATE. v. a. [veneno, Lat.] To poison; to infect with poison.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetic as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

By giving this in fevers after calcination, where- by the venenate parts are carried off. Woodward on Fossils.

VENENATION. n. s. [from venenate.] Poison; venom.

This venenation shoots from the eye; and this way a basilisk may impoison. Brown's Vulg. Err.

VENEÑE. } adj. [veneux, Fr. from VENENOÏSE. } venenum, Lat.] Poisonous; venomous.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to attract or evacuate them hence. Harvey.

Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which he comprehends all preternatural and morbose tumours of plants, demonstrates, that all such tumours, where any insects are found, are raised up by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed upon the leaves. Ray.

VENERABLE. adj. [venerable, Fr. venerabilis, Lat.] To be regarded with awe; to be treated with reverence.

As by the ministry of saints, it pleased God there to shew some rare effect of his power; or in regard of death, which those saints have suffered for the testimony of Jesus Christ, did thereby make the places where they died venerable. Hooker.

To make the passage easy, safe, and plain, That leads us to this venerable wall. Fairfax.
Ye lamps of heav'n! he said, and lifted high His hands, now free; thou venerable sky!
Inviolable pow'rs, ador'd with dread,
Be all of you adjur'd. Dryden's Æneid.

VENERABLY. adv. [from venerable.] In a manner that excites reverence.

The Palatine, proud Rome's imperial seat,
An awful pile! stands venerably great:
Thither the kingdoms and the nations come. Addison.

To VENERATE. v. a. [venerer, Fr. vencror, Lat.] To reverence; to treat with veneration; to regard with awe.

When baseness is exalted, do not bate The place its honour for the person's sake:

The shrine is that which thou dost venerate,
And not the beast that bears it on its back. Herbert.

The lords and ladies here approaching paid Their homage, with a low obeisance made,
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

A good clergyman must love and venerate the gospel that he teaches, and prefer it to all other learning. Clarissa.

Even the peasant dares these rights to scan,
And learn to venerate himself as man. Goldsmith.
VENERATION. n. s. [eneration, Fr. veneratio, Lat.] Reverend regard; awful respect.

Theology is the compression of all other knowledge directed to its true end, i. e. the honour and veneration of the Creator, and the happiness of mankind. Locke.

We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves above us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

VENERATOR. n. s. [from venerate.] Reverencer.

If the state of things, as they now appear, involve a repugnancy to an eternal existence, the arguments must be conclusive to those great priests and venerators of nature. Hale.

VENEREAL. adj. [venerens, Lat.]

1. Relating to love.

These are no veneral signs;
Vengeance is in my heart, death in my hand. Shak.
Then swoll with pride, into the snare I fell,
Of fair fallacious looks, veneral trains,
Softn'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milt.
They are averse to veneral pleasure. Addison.
Veneral distempers confirmed by frequent relapses, where the transient satisfaction is overbalanced by a sad variety of tragical sufferings that attend it, often produce a downright consumption of the lungs. Blackmore.

2. Consisting of copper, called venus by chemists.

Blue vitriol, how veneral and unsophisticated soever, rubbed upon the whetted blade of a knife, will not impart its latent colour. Boyle.

VENEREUS. adj. [from venery.] Libidinous; lustful.

The male is lesser than the female, and very venerous. Derham.

VENERY. n. s. [venerie, from vener, Fr.]

1. The sport of hunting.

To the woods she goes to serve her turn,
And seek her spouse, that from her still does fly,
And follows other game and venerie. Spenser.
Describing beasts of venerie, and fishes, he hath springly inserted the vulgar conditions thereof. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The Norman demolished many churches and chapels in New Forest, to make it fitter for his pleasure and venerie. Hovel.

2. [From Venus.] The pleasures of the bed.

Contentment, without the pleasure of lawful venery, is continence; of unlawful, chastity. Grew's Cosmologia.

VENESECTION. n. s. [vena and sectio, Lat.] Blood-letting; the act of opening a vein; phlebotomy.

If the inflammation be sudden, after evacuation by lenient purgatives, or a clyster and venesection, have recourse to anodynes. Wiseman's Surgery.

I bruis'd my shin with playing at sword and dagger, three *veney*s for a dish of stewed prunes. Shak.

To VENGE. v. a. [venger, Fr.] To avenge; to punish.

You are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes
So speedily can venge. Shakesp.

VENGEABLE. adj. [from venge.] Revengeful; malicious.

A thrillant dart he threw,
Hended with ire and vengeable despite. Spenser.

VENGEANCE. n. s. [vengeance, Fr.]

1. Punishment; penal retribution; avengement.

The right conceit which they had, that to perjury vengeance is due, was not without good effect as touching their lives, who feared the wifful violation of oaths. Hooker.

All the stor'd vengeances of heaven fall
On her ingrateful top! Shakesp. King Lear.
The souls of all that I had murder'd
Came to my tent, and every one did threat
To-morrow's vengeance on the head of Richard. Shakesp.

Let me see thy vengeance on them. Jer. xi. 20.
Resolutions of future reforming do not always satisfy thy justice, nor prevent thy vengeance for former miscarriages. King Charles.

Jove's and Latona's son his wrath express'd,
In vengeance of his violated priest. Dryden.
The chorus interceded with heaven for the innocent, and implored its vengeance on the criminal. Addison's Spectator.

Round him a crowd of threat'ning furies stands,
With instruments of vengeance in their hands. Harte.

2. It is used in familiar language. To do with a vengeance, is to do with vehemence. This phrase was formerly solemn and dignified; what a vengeance, emphatically what?

Till the day appear, of respiration to the just,
And vengeance to the wicked. Milton.
When the same king adventured to murmur,
The pope could threaten to teach him his duty,
With a vengeance. Raleigh.

Asmodeus the fishy fume
Drove, though enamour'd, from the sponse
Of Tobit's son, and with a vengeance sent
From Medea past to Egypt, there fast bound. Milton.

But what a vengeance makes thee fly
From me too, as thine enemy? Hudibras.

and danger.

When he reads

Thy personal venture in the rebel's fight,
His wonders and his praises do contend
Which should be thine or his. Shakesp. Macbeth.

For a man to doubt whether there be any hell, and thereupon to live so as if absolutely there were none ; but when he dies to find himself confuted in the flames, this must be the height of woe and disappointment, and a bitter conviction of an irrational venture and absurd choice. South.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryd.

When infinite happiness is put in one scale, against infinite misery in the other ; if the worst that comes to the pious man, if he mistakes, be the best that the wicked can attain to, if he be in the right, who can, without madness, run the venture ? Locke.

Thrice happy you, that look as from the shore,
And have no venture in the wreck to see. Daniel.

4. At a venture. At hazard ; without much consideration ; without any thing more than the hope of a lucky chance.

You have made but an estimate of those lands at a venture, so as it should be hard to build any certainty of charge upon it. Spenser.

A bargain at a venture made
Between two partners in a trade. Hudibras.

A covetous and an envious man joined in a petition to Jupiter, who ordered Apollo to tell them, that their desire should be granted at a venture.
L'Estrange.

Here was no scampering away at a venture, without fear or wit. L'Estrange.

If Ahab be designed for death, though a soldier in the enemy's army draws a bow at a venture, yet the sure unerring directions of providence shall carry it in a direct course to his hear. South.

To VENTURE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To dare.

A man were better rise in his suit; for he that would have ventured at first to have lost the suitor, will not in the conclusion lose both the suitor and his own former favour. Bacon.

Origin mentioning their being cast out of Jerusalem, ventures to assure them, that they would never be re-established, since they had committed that horrid crime against the Saviour of the world. Addison on the Christian Religion.

2. To run a hazard.

Nor is indeed that man less mad than these, who freights a ship to venture on the seas, with one frail interposing plank to save from certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden.

Suppose him now a dean compleat,
Devoutly lolling in his seat;
The silver verge, with decent pride,
Stuck underneath his cushion side.

Swift.

2. [Vergo, Lat.] The brink; the edge; the utmost border.

Would the inclusive verge

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel to sear me to the brain!

Shakesp.

I say, and will in battle prove,
Or bere, or elsewhere, to the furthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye.

Shakesp.

You are old:

Nature in you stands on the very verge
Of her confine.

Shakesp. King Lear.

Serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Least it again dissolve, and show'r the earth.

Milton.

Let Fortune empty her whole quiver on me,
I have a soul, that, like an ample shield,
Can take in all, and verge enough for more.

Dryden.

Every thing great, within the verge of nature, or out of it, has a proper part assigned it in this poem.

Addison.

Then let him chuse a damsel young and fair,
To bless his age, and bring a worthy heir
To sooth his care, and, free from noise and strife,
Conduct him gently to the verge of life.

Pope.

3. In law.

Verge is the compass about the king's court, bounding the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household, and of the coroner of the king's house, and which seems to have been 12 miles round. Verge hath also another signification, and is used for a stick, or rod, whereby one is admitted tenant, and, holding it in his hand, swearth fealty to the lord of the manor; who, for that reason, is called tenant by the verge.

If any refuse to believe us disputing for the verity of religion established, let them believe God himself thus miraculously working for it.

Hooker.

I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise; That's verity.

Shakesp.

The precipitancy of disputation, and the stir and noise of passions that usually attend it, must needs be prejudicial to verity; its calm insinuations can no more be heard in such a bustle, than a whistle among a crowd of sailors in a storm.

VER

Glanville.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. We may as well imagine that there may be a king without majesty, a supreme without sovereignty.

South.

2. A true assertion; a true tenet.

And that age, which my grey hairs make seem more than it is, hath not diminished in me the power to protect an undeniable verity.

Shakesp.

Wherefore should any man think, but that reading itself is one of the ordinary means, whereby it pleaseth God, of his gracious goodness, to instil that celestial verity, which being but so received, is nevertheless effectual to save souls?

Hooker.

If there come truth from them,
Why, by the verities on thee made good,
May they not be my oracles as well?

Shakesp.

Must virtue be preserved by a lie?
Virtue and truth do ever best agree;
By this it seems to be a verity.

Since the effects so good and virtuous be.

Darwin.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.

VERJUICE. n. s. [verjus, Fr.] Acid liquor expressed from crab-apples. It is vulgarly pronounced vargges.

Hang a dog upon a crab-tree, and he'll never love verjuice.

L'Estrange.

The barley-pudding comes in place:
Then bids fall on; himself, for saving charges,
A peell'd slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice.

Dryden.

The native verjuice of the crab, deriv'd
Through th' infix'd graft, a grateful mixture forms
Of tart and sweet.

Phillips.

VERMICELLI. n. s. [Ital.] A paste rolled and broken in the form of worms.

With oysters, eggs, and vermicelli,
She let him almost burst his belly.

Prior.

VERSIFICATION. n. s. [versification, Fr. from versify.] The art or practice of making verses.
Donne alone had your talent, but was not happy to arrive at your versification. Dryden.
Some object to his versification; which is, in poetry, what colouring is in painting, beautiful ornament. But if the proportions are just, though the colours should happen to be rough, the piece may be of inestimable value. Glanville.

VERSIFICATOR. } n. s. [versificateur, Fr.]
VERSIFIER. } versificator, Lat.]
A versifier; a maker of verses with or without the spirit of poetry.
Statius, the best versificator next Virgil, knew not how to design after him. Dryden.
In Job and the Psalms, we shall find more sublime ideas, more elevated language, than in any of the heathen versifiers of Greece or Rome. Watts on the Mind.

To VERSIFY. v. n. [versifier, Fr. versificor, Lat.] To make verses.
You would wonder to hear how soon even children begin to versify. Sidney.
To follow rather the Goths in rhyming, than the Greeks in true versifying, were even to eat acorns with swine, when we may freely eat wheat bread among men. Ascham.
I'll versify in spite, and do my best,
To make as much waste paper as the rest. Dryden.

To VERSIFY. v. a. To relate in verse.
Unintermix'd with fictious fantasies,
I'll versify the truth, not poetize. Daniel.

VERTICITY. n. s. [from vertex.] The power of turning; circumvolution; rotation.
These stars do not peculiarly glance on us, but carry a common regard unto all countries, unto whom their verticity is also common. Brown's Vulg. Err.

We believe the verticity of the needle, without a certificate from the days of old. Glauville.
Whether they be globules, or whether they have a verticity about their own centers, that produce the idea of whiteness in us, the more particles of light are reflected from a body, the whiter does the body appear. Locke.

VERTIGINOUS. adj. [vertiginosus, Lat.]

Rang'd on the banks, beneath our equal oars, White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.

3. To trouble with slight provocations.

To VĒX. v. n. To fret; to be on tenters; to be uneasy.

Ulysses gave good care, and fed And drunke his wine, and vex, and ravished His food for mere vexation. Chapman.

VĒXATIŪN. n. s. [from vex.]

1. The act of troubling.

O that husband, My supreme crown of grief, and those repeated vexations of it! Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. The state of being troubled; uneasiness; sorrow.

Vexation almost stops my breath, That sundred friends grect in the hour of death. Shakesp.

Passions too violent, instead of heightening our pleasures, afford us nothing but vexation and pain. Temple.

3. The cause of trouble or uneasiness.

Your children were vexation to your youth; But mine shall be a comfort to your age. Shakesp.

4. An act of harassing by law.

Albeit, the party grieved thereby may have some reason to complain of an untrue charge, yet may he not well call it an unjust vexation. Bacon.

5. A slight teasing trouble.

VĒXATIŪS. adj. [from vexation.]

1. Afflictive; troublesome; causing trouble.

Consider him maintaining his usurped title by continual vexatious wars against the kings of Judah. South.

Vexations thought still found my flying mind, Nor bound by limits, nor to place confin'd; Haunted my nights, and terrified my days; Stalk'd through my garden, and pursu'd my ways; Nor shut from artful bow'r, nor lost in winding maze. Prior.

2. Full of trouble; full of uneasiness.

He leads a vexatious life, who in his noblest actions is so gored with scruples, that he dares not make a step without the authority of another. Digby.

3. Teasing; slightly troublesome.

VĒXATIŪSŪSŪ. adv. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomely; uncasily.

VĒXATIŪSŪNESS. n. s. [from vexatious.]

Troublesomeness; uneasiness.

VĒXĒR. n. s. [from vex.] He who vexes.

U'GLĪLY. adv. [from ugly.] Filthily; with deformity; in such a manner as to raise dislike.

U'GLĪNESS. n. s. [from ugly.]

1. Deformity; contrariety to beauty.

All that else seem'd fair and fresh in sight, Was turned now to dreadful ugliness. Spenser.

She takes her topics from the advantages of old age and ugliness. Dryden.

2. Turpitude; loathsomeness; moral depravity.

Their dull baldry cannot but be very nauseous and offensive to any one, who does not, for the sake of the sin itself, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances. South.

U'GLY. adj. [This word was anciently written ougly; whence Mr. Dier ingeniously deduces it from ouphlike; that is, like an ouph, elf, or goblin. In Saxon, oga is terrour; and in Gothic ogan is to fear.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beautiful; hateful.

If Cassio do remain, He hath a daily beauty in his life, That makes me ugly. Shakesp.

O, I have pass'd a miserable night, So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams. Shakesp.

Was this the cottage, and the safe abode Thou told'st me of? What grim aspects are these, These ugly-headed monsters? Milton.

VĪĀL. n. s. [φιάλη.] A small bottle.

You gods! look down, And from your sacred viāls pour your grace Upon my daughter's head. Shakesp.

Take thou this vial, being then in bed, And this distilled liquor drink thou off. Shak.

Another lamp burnt in an old marble sepulchre belonging to some of the antient Rouans inclosed in a glass vial. Wifkins.

I placed a thin vial, well stopp'd up, within the smoke of the vapour, but nothing followed. Addis.

Chemical waters, that are each transparent, when separate, ferment into a thick troubled liquor, when mixed in the same vial. Addisov.

To VĪĀL. v. a. To inclose in a vial.

This she with precious vial'd liquors heals; For which the shepherds, at the festivals, Carol her goodness loud in rustick lays. Milton.

V'AND. n. s. [vlande, French; rivanda, Italian.] Food; meat dressed.

The belly only like a gulf remain'd,
P' th' midst of the body idle and unactive,
Still cupboarding the vand. Shakesp.

No matter, since Tbey've left their vands behind, for we have stomachas.

Will't please you taste of what is here? Shakes.
These are not fruits forbidden; no interdect
Defends the touch'ng of these vands pure;
Their taste no knowledge works, at least of evil.

From some sorts of food less pleasant to the taste, persons in health, and in no necessity of using such vands, had better to abstain. Ray.

The tables in fair order spread;
Vands of various kinds allure the taste,
Of choicest sort and savour; rich repast! Pope.

V'ATICUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. Provision for a journey.
2. The last rites used to prepare the passing soul for its departure.

To V'IBRATE. v. a. [ribro, Lat.]

1. To brandish; to move to and fro with quick motion.

2. To make to quiver.
Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undu-lated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion, which breath passing smooth doth not. Holder.

To V'IBRATE. v. n.

1. To play up and down, or to and fro.
The air compressed by the fall and weight of the quicksilver, would repel it a little upwards, and make it vibrate a little up and down. Boyle.

Do not all fixed bodies, when heated beyond a certain degree, emit light, and shine? And is not this emission performed by the vibrating motions of their parts? Newton.

2. To quiver.
The whisper that to greatness still too near,
Perhaps, yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear. Pope.

VIBRATION. n. s. [from vibro, Lat.]
The act of moving, or state of being moved with quick reciprocations, or returns; the act of quivering.

It sparkled like the coal upon the altar, with the fervours of piety, the heats of devotion, and the sallies and vibrations of an harmless activity.

Do not the rays of light, in falling upon the bottom of the eye, excite vibrations in the tunica retina? Which vibrations being propagated along the solid fibres of the optic nerves into the brain, cause the sense of seeing. Newton.

Mild vibrations sooth the parted soul,
New to the dawning of celestial day. Thomson.

VICAR. n. s. [vicarius, Lat.]

1. The incumbent of an appropriated or impropriated benefice.

Procure the vicar
To stay for me at church, 'twixt twelve and one,
To give our hearts united ceremony. Shakesp.

Yours is the prize;
The vicar my defeat, and all the village see.

A landed youth, whom his mother would never suffer to look into a book for fear of spoiling his eyes, upon hearing the clergy decried, what a contentment must he entertain, not only for his vicar at home, but for the whole order! Swift.

2. One who performs the functions of another; a substitute.

An archbishop may not only excommunicate and interdict his suffragans, but his vicar-general may do the same. Ayliffe.

VICARAGE. n. s. [from vicar.] The benefice of a vicar.

This gentleman lived in his vicarage to a good old age, and having never deserted his flock, died vicar of Bray. Swift.

VICA'RIOUS. adj. [vicarius, Lat.] Deputed; delegated; acting in the place of another.

The soul in the body is but a subordinate efficient, and vicarious and instrumental in the hands of the Almighty, being but his substitute in this regiment of the body. Hale.

What can be more unnatural, than for a man to rebel against the vicarious power of God in his soul? Norris.

VICARSHIP. n. s. [from vicar.] The office of a vicar.

VICE. n. s. [vitium, Lat.]

1. The course of action opposite to virtue; depravity of manners; inordinate life.

No spirit more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton.

The foundation of error will lie in wrong measures of probability; as the foundation of vice in wrong measures of good. Locke.

2. A fault; an offence. It is generally used for an habitual fault, not for a single enormity.

No vice, so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts. Shakes.

Yet my poor country
Shall have more vices than it had before;
More suffer by him that shall succeed. Shakesp.

Where the excess and defect do make vices, or such things as ought not to be, there the mediocrity must denote something that ought to be,
and consequently must be a virtue. Wilkins.

Ungovern'd appetite, a brutish vice. Milton.
I cannot blame him for inveighing so sharply against the vices of the clergy in his age. Dryd.

Proud views and vain desires in our worldly employments are as truly vices and corruptions, as hyperisry in prayer, or vanity in alms. Law.

3. The fool, or punchinello of old shows.

I'll be with you again
In a trice, like to the old vice,
Your need to sustain;

Who with dagger of lath, in his rage and his wrath,

Cries, Ah, ha! to the devil. Shakesp.
His face made of brass, like a vice in a game.

4. [rijs, Dutch. A kind of small iron press with screws, used by workmen.

He found that marbles taught him percussion;
hottle-screws, the vice; whirlingigs, the axis in pe-ritrochio. Arbutnot and Pope.

5. Gripe; grasp.

If I but fist him once; if he come but within my vice. Shakesp.

6. [vice, Lat.] It is used in composition for one, qui vicem gerit, who performs, in his stead, the office of a superiour, or who has the second rank in command;
as, a viceroj, vicechancellor.

To VICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To draw by a kind of violence.

With all confidence he swears,
As he had seen 't, or been an instrument
To vice you to 't, that you have touch'd his queen Forbiddenly. Shakesp.

VICEADMIRAL. n. s. [vice and admiral.]

1. The second commander of a fleet.

The foremost of the fleet was the admiral: the rearadmiral was Cara Mahometes, an arch pirate.
The viceadmiral in the middle of the fleet, with a great squadron of gallees, struck sail directly. Knolles.

2. A naval officer of the second rank.

VICEADMIRALTY. n. s. [from viceadmiral.] The office of a viceadmiral.

The viceadmiralty is exercised by Mr. Trevanion.
Carew.

VICEA'GENT. n. s. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

A vassal Satan hath made his viceagent, to cross whatever the faithful ought to do. Hooker.

VICECHA'NCELLOR. n. s. [vicecancellarius, Lat.] The second magistrate of the universities.

VICED. adj. [from vice.] Vitious; corrupt. Not used.

Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air. Shakesp.

VICGERENCY. n. s. [from vicegerent.]
The office of a vicegerent; lieutenantj;
deputed power.

The authority of conscience stands founded upon its vicgerency and deputation under God.
South.

VICGERENT. n. s. [vicem gerens, Lat.]
A lieutenant; one who is intrusted with the power of the superiour, by whom he is deputed.

All precepts concerning kings are comprehended in these: remember thou art a man; remember thou art God's vicgerent. Bacon.

Employ it in unfeigned piety towards God, in unshaken duty to his vicgerent; in hearty obedience to his church. Spratt.

Great Father of the gods, when for our crimes
Thou send'st some heavy judgment on the times;
Some tyrant king, the terror of his age,
The type and true vicgerent of thy rage,
Thus punish. Dryden.

VICGERENT. adj. [vicegerens, Lat.]
Having a delegated power; acting by substitution.

Whom send I to judge thee? Whom but thee,
Vicegerent Son! To thee I have transfer'd All judgment, whether in heaven, or earth, or hell. Milton.

VICENARY. adj. [vicenarius, Lat.] Belonging to twenty. Failey.

VICEROJ. n. s. [viceroi, Fr.] He who governs in place of the king with regal authority.

Shall I, for lucre of the rest unvanquish'd,
Deduct so much from that prerogative,
As to be call'd but viceroj of the whole? Shakesp.

Mendoza, viceroj of Peru, was wont to say, that the government of Peru was the best place the king of Spain gave, save that it was somewhat too near Madrid. Bacon.

We are so far from having a king, that even the viceroj is generally absent four fifths of his time.
Swift.

VICEROYALTY. n. s. [from viceroj.]
Dignity of a viceroj.

These parts furnish our vicerojalities for the granteees; but in war are incumbrances to the kingdom. Addison.

VICETY. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning or original: a nice thing is now called in vulgar language, point vice, from the French point devise,
or point de vice; whence the barbarous word vicety may be derived.] Nicety; exactness. A word not used.

Here is the fruit of Pem,
Grafted upon Stub his stem;
With the peakish nicety,
And old Sherwood's vicety. Ben Jonson.

VICINAGE. n. s. [vicinia, Lat.] Neighbourhood; places adjoining.

VICINAL. adj. [vicinus, Lat.] Near;
VICINE. s. neighbouring.

Opening other vicine passages might obliterate any attack; as the making of one hole in the yielding mud defaces the print of another near it.
Glanville.

VICINITY. n. s. [vicinus, Lat.]

1. Nearness; state of being near.

V I C

The position of things is such, that there is a vicinity between agents and patients, that the one incessantly invades the other. Hale.
The abundance and vicinity of country seats. Swift.

2. Neighbourhood.

He shall find out and recall the wandering particles home, and fix them in their old vicinity. Rogers.

Gravity alone must have carried them downwards to the vicinity of the sun. Bentley.

VICIOUS. adj. [from vici.] See VITIOUS.

Devoted to vice; not addicted to virtue.

He heard his heavy curse,
Servant of servants, on his vicious race. Milton.

VICISSITUDE. n. s. [vicissitudo, Lat.]

1. Regular change; return of the same things in the same succession.

It makes through heav'n Grateful vicissitude, like day and night. Milton.

The rays of light are alternately disposed to be reflected or refracted for many vicissitudes. Newton.

This succession of things upon the earth is the result of the vicissitude of seasons, and is as constant as is the cause of that vicissitude, the sun's declination. Woodward.

2. Revolution; change.

During the course of the war, did the vicissitudes of good and had fortune affect us with humility or thankfulness. Atterbury.

Versè sweetens toil, however rude the sound.
All at her work the village maiden sings;
Nor, as she turns the giddy wheel around,
Revolves the sad vicissitude of things. Ciffard.

VICONTIELS. In law, vicontiel rents are certain farms for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king, and makes what profit he can of them. Vicontiel writs are such writs as are triable in the county court, before the sheriff. Bailey.

VICTIM. n. s. [victima, Lat.]

1. A sacrifice; something slain for a sacrifice.

All that were authors of so black a deed,
Be sacrific'd as victims to his ghost. Denham.

And on the victim pour the ruddy wine. Dryden.

Clitumnus' waves, for triumphs after war,
The victim ox, and snowy sheep prepare. Addison.

2. Something destroyed.

Behold where age's wretched victim lies!
See his head trembling, and his half-clos'd eyes. Prior.

VICTOR. n. s. [victor, Lat.]

1. Conqueror; vanquisher; he that gains advantage in any contest. Victor is seldom used with a genitive; we say the conqueror of kingdoms, not the victor of kingdoms; and never but with regard to some single action or person: as we never say, Cæsar was in general a great victor, but that he was victor at Pharsalia. We rarely say Alexander was victor of Darius, though we say he was victor at Arbela; but we never say he was victor of Persia.

This strange race more strange conceits did yield;

Who victor seem'd, was to his ruin brought;
Who seem'd overthrow'n, was mistress of the field. Sidney.

Some time the flood prevails, and then the wind,
Bath tugging to be victors breast to breast,
Yet neither conqueror, nor conquered. Shaksp.

Although the victor, we submit to Cæsar. Shak.
Say where and when

Their fight; what stroke shall bruise the victor's heel. Milton.

Our Hebrew songs and harps in Babylon,
That pleas'd so well our victor's ear, declare That rather Greece from us these arts deriv'd. Milton.

V I C

Their hearts at last the vanquish'd re-assume,
And now the victors fall. Denham.

In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly;
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

Fortune's unjust; she ruins oft the brave,
And him who should be victor, makes the slave. Dryden.

Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger;
Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand. Addison.

2. Pope has used this word in a manner perhaps unauthorized.

There, victor of his health, his fortune, friends,
And fame, this lord of useless thousands ends. Pope.

VICTORIOUS. adj. [victorieux, Fr.]

1. Conquering; having obtained conquest; superior in contest.

Victory doth more often fall by error of the vanquished, than by the valour of the victorious. Hayward.

The Son return'd victorious with his saints. Milton.

That happy sun, said he, will rise again,
Who twice victorious did our navy see;
And I alone must view him rise in vain,
Without one ray of all his star for me. Dryden.

2. Producing conquest.

Sudden these honours shall be snatch'd away,
And curst for ever this victorious day. Pope.

3. Betokening conquest.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Shaksp.

VICTORIOUSLY. adv. [from victorious.]

With conquest; successfully; triumphantly.

That grace will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, victoriously through all difficulties. Hammond.

VICTORIOUSNESS. n. s. [from victorious.]

The state or quality of being victorious.

VICTORY. n. s. [victoria, Lat.] Conquest; success in contest; triumph.

At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That pages blush'd at him. Shaksp.

Then to the heaven of heavens he shall ascend,
With victory, triumphing o'er his foes. Milton.

Obedience is a complicated act of virtue, and many graces are exercised in one act of obedience. It is an act of humility, of mortification, and self-denial, of charity to God, of care of the publick, of order and charity to ourselves. It is a great instance of a victory over the most refractory passions. Taylor.

VICTRESS. n. s. [from victor.] A female that conquers. Not used.

I'll lead thy daughter to a conqueror's bed;
And she shall be sole victress; Cæsar's Cæsar. Shaksp.

VICTUAL. } n. s. [victuailles, French; vittognaglia, Italian.] Provision of food; stores for the support of life; meat; sustenance. Chapman has written it as it is colloquially pronounced.

He landed in these islands, to furnish himself with victuals and fresh water. Abbot.

You had musty victuals, and he hath help to eat it: he hath an excellent stomach. Shaksp.

A huge great flagon full I bore,
And, in a good large knapsack, victles store. Chapman.

He was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals. Knolles.

They, unprovided of tackling and victual, are forced to sea by a storm. King Charles.

To VICTUAL. v. a. [from the noun.] To store with provision for food.

Talbot, farewell! Shaksp.

VICTUALLER. n. s. [from victuals.]

V I E

1. One who provides victuals.

They planted their artillery against the haven,
To impeach supply of victuals; yet the English victuallers surceased not to bring all things necessary. Hayward.

Their conquest half is to the victualler due. King.

2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.

VIDELICET. adv. [Lat.] To wit; that is. This word is generally written viz.

VIDUITY. u. s. [from viduus, Lat.] Widowhood.

To VIE. v. a. [Of this word the etymology is very uncertain.]

1. To show or practise in competition.

They vie power and expence with those that are too high. L'Estrange.

You vie happiness in a thousand easy and sweet diversions. Evelyn.

2. In this passage the meaning seems to be, to add; to accumulate.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss
She vied so fast,
That in a twink she won me to her love. Shaksp.

To VIE. v. n. To contest; to contend; to strive for superiority.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in such a way of life, as may enable them to vie with the best of their family. Addison.

The wool, when shaded with Ancona's dye,
May with the proudest Tyrian purple vie. Addison.

Now voices over voices rise;
While each to be the loudest vies. Swift.

To VIEW. v. n. [veu, Fr. from voir, or voir.]

1. To survey; to look on by way of examination.

Go, and view the country. Joshua.

Th' almighty Father bent down his eye,
His own works and their works at once to view. Milton.

View not this spire by measures giv'n
To buildings rais'd by common hands. Prior.

When'er we view some well-proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprize;
All come united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.

They here with eyes aghast
View'd first their lamentable lot. Milton.

No more I hear, no more I view;
The phantom flies me, as unkind as you. Pope.

VIEW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Prospect.

You should tread a course
Pretty, and full of view; yea, haply, near
The residence of Posthumus. Shaksp.

Vast and indefinite views, which drown all apprehensions of the uttermost objects, are condemned by good authors. Wotton.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.

Cut wide views thro' mountain to the plain,
You'll wish your hill a shelter'd hill again. Pope.

2. Sight; power of beholding.

I go, to take for ever from your view
Both the lov'd object, and the hated too. Dryden.

These things duly weighed, will give us a clear view into the state of human liberty. Locke.

Instruct me other joys to prize,
With other beauties charm my partial eyes;
Fall in my view set all the bright abode,
And make my soul quit Abelard for God. Pope.

3. Intellectual sight; mental ken.

Some safer resolution I've in view. Milton.

4. Act of seeing.

The unexpected sound
Of dogs and men, his wakeful ear does wound;
Rous'd with the noise, he scarce believes his ear,
Willing to think th' illusions of his fear
Had giv'n this false alarm; but straight his view Confirms that more than all he fears is true. Denham.

5. Sight; eye.

V I G

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

6. Survey; examination by the eye.

Time never will renew,

While we too far the pleasing path pursue,
Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

7. Intellectual survey.

If the mind has made this inference by finding out the intermediate ideas, and taking a view of the connection of them, it has proceeded rationally. Locke.

8. Space that may be taken in by the eye; reach of sight.

The fauce through all the neighb'ring nations flew,

When now the Trojan navy was in view. Dryden.

9. Appearance; show.

In that accomplish'd mind,

Help'd by the night, new graces find;
Which, by the splendour of her view
Dazzled, before we never knew. Waller.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty, would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wise considerations than a wise man? Locke.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; design.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees to the state of things at home; with that view he makes all his reflections. Atterbury.

With a view to commerce, in returning from his expedition against the Parthians, he passed through Egypt. Arbutnot.

Fisher, the Jesuit, in the year 1626, seconded the cardinal in the same plea, and upon the same views. Waterland.

VIEWER. n. s. [from view.] One who views.

VIEWLESS. adj. [from view.] Unseen; not discernible by the sight.

To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence about
The pendant world. Shakesp.

Each stair mysteriously was meant, nor stood
There always, but drawn up to heav'n sometimes Viewless. Milton.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repass'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.

Light-bounding from the earth, at once they rise;
Their feet half viewless quiver in the skies. Pope.

VIGESIMATION. n. s. [vigesimal, Lat.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man.

VIGIL. n. s. [vigilia, Lat.]

1. Watch; devotions performed in the customary hours of rest.

Su they in heaven their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.

Shrines! where their vigils pale-ey'd virgins keep,
And pitying saints, whose statues learn to weep. Pope.

2. A fast kept before a holiday.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, to-morrow is St. Crispian. Shakesp.

And that which on the Baptist's vigil sends
To nymphs and swains the vision of their friends. Harte.

3. Service used on the night before a holiday.

No altar is to be consecrated without reliques, which, placed before the church door, the vigils are to be celebrated that night before them. Stillingfleet.

The rivals call my muse another way,
To sing their vigils for the ensuing day. Dryden.

4. Watch; forbearance of sleep.

Though Venus and her son should spare

Her rebel heart, and never teach her care;
Yet Hymen may perforce her vigils keep,
And for another's joy suspend her sleep. Holler.

Nothing wears out a fine face like the vigils of the card-table, and those cutting passions which attend them. Addison.

VIGILANCE. } n. s. [vigilance, Fr. vigi- VIGILANCY. } lantia, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of sleep.

Ulysses yielded unseasonably to sleep, and the strong passion for his country should have given him vigilance. Broome.

2. Watchfulness; circumspection; incessant care.

Shall Henry's conquest, Bedford's vigilance,
Your deeds of war, and all our counsel die? Shakesp.

In this their military care, there were few remarkable occasions under the duke, saving his continual vigilancy, and voluntary hazard of his person. Wotton.

Of these the vigilance

I dread; and to elude, thus wrapt in mist
Of midnight vapour, guide obscure. Milton.

We are enabled to subdue all other creatures; and use for our behoof the strength of the ox, the sagacity and vigilancy of the dog. Ray.

3. Guard; watch.

No post is free, no place,

That guard and most unusual vigilance
Does not attend my taking. Shakesp.

In at this gate none pass

The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.

VIGILANT. adj. [vigilans, Lat.] Watchful; circumspect; diligent; attentive.

They have many prayers, but every of them very short, as if they were darts thrown out with a kind of sudden quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

Take your places and be vigilant:

If any noise or soldier you perceive,
Let us have knowledge. Shakesp.

The treasurer, as he was vigilant in such cases, had notice of the clerk's expiration so soon, that he procured the king to send a message to the master of the rolls. Clarendon.

VITALS. n. s. [Without the singular.]

Parts essential to life.

By fits my swelling grief appears, In rising sighs, and falling tears, That show too well the warm desires, The silent, slow, consuming fires, Which on my inmost vitals prey, And melt my very soul away. Phillips.

VITELLARY. n. s. [from vitellus, Lat.]

The place where the yolk of the egg swims in the white.

A greater difficulty in the doctrine of eggs is, how the sperm of the cock attaineth into every egg; since the vitellary or place of the yolk is very high. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To VITIATE. v. a. [ritio, Lat.] To deprave; to spoil; to make less pure.

The sun in his garden gives him the purity of visible objects, and of true nature before she was vitiated by luxury. Evelyn's Calendar.

The organs of speech are managed by so many muscles, that speech is not easily destroyed, though often somewhat vitiated as to some particular letters. Holder.

Spirits encountering foul bodies, and exciting a fermentation of those vitiated humours, precipitate into putrid fevers. Harvey.

This undistinguished complaisance will vitiate the taste of the readers, and misguide many of them in their judgments, where to approve and where to censure. Garth.

A transposition of the order of the sacramental words, in some men's opinion, vitiates baptism. Ayliffe's Parergon.

VITIATION. n. s. [from vitiate.] Deprivation; corruption.

The foresaid extenuation of the body is imputed to the blood's vitation by malign putrid vapours smoking throughout the vessels. Harvey on Consumptions.

To VITILIGATE. v. n. [ritiosus and liligo, Lat.] To contend in law litigiously and cavilously.

VITILIGATION. n. s. [from vitiligi gate.] Contention; cavillation.

I'll force you, by right ratiocination, To leave your vitiligation. Hudibras.

VITIOSITY. n. s. [from vitiosus, Lat.]

Depravity; corruption.

He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will, as the only cause that rendered all the arguments his doctrine came clothed with unsuccessful. South.

VITIOUS. adj. [vicius, Fr. vitiosus, Lat.]

1. Corrupt; wicked; opposite to virtuous. It is rather applied to habitual faults than criminal actions. It is used of persons and practices.

Make known It is no vitious blot, murder, or foulness, That hath depriv'd me of your grace. Shakesp. King Lear.

Witness th' irreverent son Of him who built the ark; who, for the shame Done to his father, heard his heavy curse, 'Servant of servants,' on his vitious race. Milton.

Wit 's what the vitious fear, the virtuous shun; By fools 'tis hated, and by knaves undone. Pope.

No troops abroad are so ill disciplined as the English; which cannot well be otherwise, while the common soldiers have before their eyes the vitious example of their leaders. Swift.

2. Corrupt; having physical ill qualities.

When vitious language contends to be high, it is full of rock, mountain, and pointedness. Ben Jonson.

Here, from the vitious air and sickly skies, A plague did on the dumb creation rise. Dryden.

VITIOUSLY. adv. [from vitiosus.] Not virtuously; corruptly.

VITIOUSNESS. n. s. [from vitiosus.] Corruptness; state of being vitious.

When we in our vitiousness grow hard, The wise gods seal our eyes. Shakesp.

What makes a governor justly despised is vitiousness and ill morals. Virtue must tip the preacher's tongue and the ruler's scepter with authority. South.

VITREOUS. adj. [vitré, Fr. vitreus, Lat.] Glassy; consisting of glass; resembling glass.

The hole answers to the pupil of the eye; the crystalline humour to the lenticular glass; the dark room to the cavity containing the vitreous humour, and the white paper to the retina. Ray on the Creat.

When the phlegm is too viscous, or separates into too great a quantity, it brings the blood into a morbid state: this viscous phlegm seems to be the vitreous petuete of the antients.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VITREOUSNESS. n. s. [from vitreous.] Resemblance of glass.

VITRIFICABLE. adj. [from vitricate.] Convertible into glass.

To VITRIFICATE. v. a. [vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

We have metals vitrified, and other materials, besides those of which you make glass. Bacon.

VITRIFICATION. n. s. [vitrication, Fr. from vitricate.] Production of glass; act of changing, or state of being changed into glass.

For vitrication likewise, what metals will endure it? Also, because vitrication is accounted a kind of death of metals, what vitrication will admit of turning back again, and what not?

Bacon's Physical Remarks.

If the heat be more fierce, it maketh the grosser part itself run and melt; as in the making of ordinary glass; and in the vitrication of earth in the inner parts of furnaces; and in the vitrication of brick and metals.

Bacon's Natural History.

Upon the knowledge of the different ways of making minerals and metals capable of vitrication, depends the art of making counterfeit or fictitious gems.

Boyle on Colours.

To VITRIFY. v. a. [vitricifer, Fr. vitrum and facio, Lat.] To change into glass.

Metals will vitrify; and perhaps some portion of the glass of metal vitrified, mixed in the pot of ordinary glass metal, will make the whole mass more tough.

Bacon.

Iron-slag, vitrified, has in it cortices encompassing one another like those in agats.

Woodward.

To VITRIFY. v. n. To become glass; to be changed into glass.

Chymists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire; for all earth which hath any salt or oil in it will turn to glass.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VITRIOL. n. s. [vitriol, Fr. vitriolum, Lat.]

Vitriol is produced by addition of a metallick matter with the fossil acid salt.

Woodward.

I rabbed it with the vitriol-stone.

Wise man's Surgery.

VITRIOLATE. } adj. vitriolé, Fr. from

VITRIOLATED. } vitriolum, Lat.] Impregnated with vitriol; consisting of vitriol.

Iron may be dissolved by any tart, salt, or vitriolated water.

Bacon.

The water having dissolved the imperfectly calcined body, the vitriolate corpuscles swimming in the liquor, by their excursions constituted little masses of vitriol, which gave the water they impregnated a fair vitriolate colour.

Boyle.

VITRIOLICK. } adj. vitriolique, Fr. from

VITRIOLOUS. } vitriolum, Lat.] Resembling vitriol; containing vitriol.

Copperose of Mars, by some called salt of steel, made by the spirits of vitriol or sulphur, will, after ablation, be attracted by the loadstone; and therefore whether those shooting salts partake but little of steel, and be not rather the vitriolous spirits fixed into salt by the effluvia or odour of steel, is not without good question.

Brown's Vulg. Err.

These salts have somewhat of a nitrous taste, but mixed with a smatch of a vitriolick.

Grew's Musæum.

By over-fermentation or long-keeping, wine becomes sharp, as in hock, like the vitriolick acidity.

Floyer.

VITULINE. adj. [vitulinus, Lat.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal. Bailey.

VITUPERABLE. adj. [vituperabilis, Lat.] Blameworthy. Ainsworth.

VITUPERATION. n. s. [vituperatio, Lat.] Blame; censure.

Such a writing ought to be clean, and free from any cavil or vituperation of rasure.

Ayliffe's Parer.

VIVACIOUS. adj. [vivax, Lat.]

1. Long-lived.

Though we should allow them their perpetual calm and equability of heat, they will never be able to prove, that therefore men would be so vivacious as they would have us believe.

Bentley.

2. Sprightly; gay; active; lively.

VIVACIOUSNESS. } n. s. [vivacité, Fr.

VIVACITY. } from vivacious.]

1. Liveliness; sprightliness.

He had a great vivacity in his countenance.

Dryden.

2. Longevity; length of life.

Fables are raised concerning the vivacity of deer: for neither are their gestation nor increment such as may afford an argument of long life.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Power of living.

They are esteemed very hot in operation, and will, in a convenient air, survive some days the loss of their heads and hearts; so vigorous is their vivacity.

Boyle.

VIVARY. n. s. [vivarium, Lat.] A warren. Ainsworth.

VIVE. adj. [vif, Fr. vivus, Lat.] Lively; forcible; pressing.

By a vive and forcible persuasion, he moved him to a war upon Flanders.

Bacon.

VIVENCY. n. s. [vivo, Lat.] Manner of supporting or continuing life, or vegetation.

Although not in a distinct and indisputable way of vivency, or answering in all points the property of plants, yet in inferior and descending constitutions they are determined by sensibilities.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

VIVES. n. s. A distemper among horses.

Vives is much like the strangles; and the chief difference is, that for the most part the strangles happen to colts and young horses while they are at grass, by feeding with their heads downwards; by which means the swelling inclines more to the jaws; but the vives happens to horses at any age and time, and is more particularly seated in the glands and kernels under the ears.

Farrier's Diet.

VIVID. adj. [ividus, Lat.]

1. Lively; quick; striking.

The liquor, retaining its former vivid colour, was grown clear again.

Boyle.

To make these experiments the more manifest, such bodies ought to be chosen as have the fullest and most vivid colours, and two of those bodies compared together.

Newton.

Ah! what avail his glossy varying dyes; The vivid green his shining plumies unfold; His painted wings, and breast that flames with gold?

Pope.

2. Sprightly; active.

Body is a fit workhouse for sprightly, vivid faculties to exercise and exert themselves in.

South.

Where the genius is bright, and the imagination vivid, the power of memory may lose its improvement.

Hatts.

VIVIDLY. adv. [from vivid.] With life; with quickness; with strength.

In the moon we can, with excellent telescopes, discern many hills and vallies, whereof some are more and some less vividly illustrated; and others have a fainter, others a deeper shade.

Boyle on Colours.

Sensitive objects affect a man, in the state of this present life, much more warmly and vividly than those which affect only his nobler part, his mind.

Smith.

VIVIDNESS. n. s. [from vivid.] Life; vigour; quickness.

VIVIFICATION. n. s. [vivification, Fr. from vivificate.] The act of giving life.

If that motion be in a certain order, there followeth vivification and figuration.

Bacon.

VIVIFICK. adj. [vivifique, Fr. vivificus, Lat.] Giving life; making alive.

Without the sun's salutary and vivifick beams, all motion would cease, and nothing be left but darkness and death.

Ray.

To VIVIFY. v. a. [vivifier, Fr. vivus and facio, Lat.] To make alive; to animate; to endue with life.

It hath been observed by the antients, that there is a worm that breedeth in old snow, of a reddish colour, and dull of motion; which would shew that snow hath in it a secret warmth, else it could hardly vivify.

Bacon.

Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish.

Bacon.

Gut-worms, as soon as vivified, creep into the stomach for nutriment.

Harvey on Consumptions.

VIVIPAROUS. adj. [vivus, and pario, Lat.] Bringing the young alive: opposed to oviparous.

When we perceive that hatts have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer they give suck; but whereas no other flying animals have these parts, we cannot from them infer a viviparous exclusion.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Their species might continue, though they had been viviparous; yet it would have brought their individuals to very small numbers.

More against Atheism.

If birds had been viviparous, the burden of their womb had been so great and heavy, that their wings would have failed them.

Ray on the Creation.

VIXEN. n. s.

Vixen, or fixen, is the name of a she-fox; otherwise applied to a woman whose nature and condition is thereby compared to a she-fox.

Verstegan.

O! when she's angry, she is keen and shrewd; She was a vixen when she went to school; And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Shakesp.

See a pack of spaniels, called lovers, in a hot pursuit of a two-legged vixen, who only flies the whole loud pack, to be singled out by one.

Wycherley.

VIZ. adv. [This word is ridelicet, written with a contraction.] To wit; that is. A barbarous form of an unnecessary word.

None ever acted both parts bolder,

Both of a chieftain and a soldier.

Hudibras.

The chief of all signs which the Almighty endued man with is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, viz. the letters of the alphabet, formed by the several motions of the mouth.

Holder.

Let this be done relatively, viz. one thing greater or stronger, casting the rest behind, and rendering it less sensible by its opposition.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

VIZARD. n. s. [visiere, Fr. See VIZOR.] A mask used for disguise.

Let the suits of the maskers be graceful, and such as become the person when the vizards are off.

Bacon.

Æschylus

Brought vizards in a civiler disguise. Roscommon.
A lie is like a vizard, that may cover the face indeed, but can never become it.

South.

Ye shall know them by their fruits, not by their well or ill living; for they put on the vizard of seeming sanctity.

Atterbury.

He mistook it for a very whimsical sort of mask; but upon a nearer view he found, that she held her vizard in her hand.

Addison.

To VIZARD. v. a. [from the noun.] To mask.

Degree being vizarded,

Th' unworthist shews as fairly in the mask. Shak.

VIZIER. n. s. [properly Wazir.] The prime minister of the Turkish empire.

He made him vizier, which is the chief of all the bassas.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

This grand vizier presuming to invest the chief imperial city of the west;

With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise, His treasure, tents, and cannon, left a prize. Waller.

ULCER. n. s. [ulcere, Fr. ulcus, Lat.] A sore of continuance; not a new wound.

Thou answer'st, she is fair;
Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her voice!

Which fiercest foes could break by no means. Swift.

UMBRAGE. n. s. [ombrage, Fr.]

1. Shade; skreen of trees.

O, might I here
In solitude live savage; in some glade
Obscur'd, where highest woods, impenetrable
To star or sun-light, spread their umbrage broad,
And brown as evening! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Men sweltring run
To grots and caves, and the cool umbrage seek
Of woven arborets. Phillips.

2. Shadow; appearance.

The rest are umbrages quickly dispelled; the astrologer subjects liberty to the motions of heaven. Bramhall against Hobbes.

The opinion carries no shew of truth nor umbrage of reason on its side. Woodward.

Such a removal of the metal out of one part of the mass, and collecting of it in another, has misled some, and given umbrage to an opinion, that there is a growth of metal in ore exposed to the air. Woodward on Fossils.

3. Resentment; offence; suspicion of injury.

Although he went on with the war, yet it should be but with his sword in his hand, to bend the stiffness of the other party to accept of peace: and so the king should take no umbrage of his arming and prosecution. Bacon.

UMBRA'GEOUS. adj. [ombrageus, Fr.] Shady; yielding shade.

Umbrageous grots, and caves of cool recess. Milton.

Walk daily in a pleasant, airy, and umbrageous garden. Harvey.

UMPIRAGE. n. s. [from umpire.] Arbitration; friendly decision of a controversy.

UMPIRE. n. s. [This word Minshew, with great applause from Skiinner, derives from un pere, Fr. a father.] An arbitrator; one who, as a common friend, decides disputes. It is by Brown taken simply for a judge, in a sense not usual.

Give me some present counsel; or, behold, Twixt my extremes and me, this bloody knife Shall play the umpire; arbitrating that, Which the commission of thy years and art Could to no issue of true honour bring. Shakesp.
Just death, kind umpire of men's miseries, With sweet enlargement doth dismiss me hence. Shakesp.

But as sway ne unkennt fed on the plaines, And made the echo umpire of my straines. Brown.
The learned Sennertus, in that book, takes not upon him to play the advocate for the chymists, but the umpire betwixt them and the peripateticks. Boyle.

The vast distance that sin had put between the offending creature and the offended Creator, required the help of some great umpire and intercessor, to open him a new way of access to God; and this Christ did for us as a mediator. South.

The jealous sects, that dare not trust their cause So far from their own will as from the laws, You for their umpire and their synod take. Dryd.

Among those persons, going to law was utterly a fault, being ordinarily on such accounts as were too light for the hearing of courts and umpires. Kettlewell.

UN. A Saxon privative or negative particle answering to in of the Latins, and α of the Greeks, on, Dut. It is placed almost at will before adjectives and adverbs. All the instances of this kind of composition cannot therefore be inserted; but I have collected a number sufficient, perhaps more than sufficient, to explain it.

The examples, however, though numerous, might have easily been made more; for almost every adjective has a substantive and an adverb adhering to it, as, unfaithful, unfaithfulness, unfaithfully. Un is prefixed to adjectives with their derivatives, as unapt, unaptness, unaply; and to passive participles, as unhurt, unhurt; favoured, unfavoured: it is prefixed likewise to participial adjectives, as pleasing, unpleasing, but rarely in the verbal sense expressing action; we cannot say, the dart flew unwounding, though we say, the man escaped unwounded. Un and in may be thus distinguished: To words merely English we prefix un, as unfit; to words borrowed in the positive sense, but made negative by ourselves, we prefix un, as generous, ungenerous. When we borrow both words, we retain the Latin or French in, as elegant, inelegant; politick, impolitick. Before substantives, if they have the English termination ness, it is proper to prefix un, as unfitness, ungraciousness. If they have the Latin or French terminations in tude, ice, or ence, and for the most part if they end in ty, the negative in is put before them, as unapt, unaptness, inaptnitude; unjust, injustice; imprudence; unfaithful, unfaithfulness, infidelity.

UNABASHED. adj. [from abashed.] Not shamed; not confused by modesty.

UNA'BLE. adj. [from able.]

1. Not having ability. With to before a verb, and for before a noun.

The Amalckites set on them, supposing that they had been weary, and unable to resist. Raleigh's History of the World.

Zeal mov'd thee:
To please thy gods thou did'st it; gods unable
To acquit themselves, and prosecute their foes. Milton.

The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
Gaz'd on the fair,
And sigh'd, and look'd, and sigh'd again. Dryden.
I intended to put it in practice, though far unable for the attempt of such a poem. Dryden.

Man, under the disadvantages of a weak and fallen nature, was unable even to form an idea of happiness worthy his reasonable ambition. Rogers.

2. Weak; impotent.

A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable;
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakesp.

UNABOLISHED. adj. [from abolished.]
Not repealed; remaining in force.

The number of needless laws unabolished, doth weaken the force of them that are necessary. Hooker.

UNACCE'PTABLE. adj. [from acceptable.]
Not pleasing; not such as is well received.

The marquis at that time was very unacceptable to his countrymen. Clarendon.

'Tis as indecent as unacceptable; and all men are willing to slink out of such company, the sober for the hazards, and the jovial for the unpleasantness. Government of the Tongue.

Every method for deterring others from the like practices for the future, must be unacceptable and displeasing to the friends of the guilty. Addison's Freeholder.

If he shrinks from an unacceptable duty, there is a secret reserve of infidelity at the bottom. Rogers's Sermons.

UNACCE'PTABLENESS. n. s. [from unacceptable.] State of not pleasing.

This alteration arises from the unacceptableness of the subject I am upon. Collier on Pride.

UNACCEPTED. adj. [from accepted.] Not accepted.

By turns put on the suppliant, and the lord;
Offer'd again the unaccepted wreath,
And choice of bappy love, or instant death. Prior.

UNACCE'SSIBLENESS. n. s. [from accessibility.] State of not being to be attained or approached.

Many excellent things are in nature, which, by reason of the remoteness from us, and unaccessibility to them, are not within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

UNACCO'MMODATED. adj. [from accommodated.] Unfurnished with external convenience.

Unaccommodated man is no more than such a poor, bare, forked animal as thou art. Shakesp.

UNACCO'MPANIED. adj. [from accompanied.] Not attended.

Seldom one accident, prosperous or adverse, cometh unaccompanied with the like. Hayward.

UNACCO'MPLISHED. adj. [from accomplished.] Unfinished; incomplete.

Beware of death: thou canst not die unperjur'd,
And leave an unaccomplish'd love behind. Dryden.
Thy vows are mine.

The gods, dismay'd at his approach, withdrew,
Nor durst their unaccomplish'd crime pursue. Dryden.

It grieves my soul to leave thee unassail'd.
Shakesp.

I believe
That he, the supreme good, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd.
Milton's Comus.

UNASSA'YED. adj. Unattempted.
What is faith, love, virtue unassay'd
Alone, without exterior help sustain'd?
Milton.

UNASSISTED. adj. Not helped.
Its victories were the victories of reason, unassisted by the force of human power, and as gentle as the triumphs of light over darkness.
Addison's Freeholder.

What unassisted reason could not discover, that God has set clearly before us in the revelation of the gospel; a felicity equal to our most enlarged desires; a state of immortal and unchangeable glory.
Rogers.

UNASSISTING. adj. Giving no help.
With these I went, a brother of the war;
Nor idle stood, with unassisting hands,
When savage beasts, and men's more savage bands,
Their virtuous toil subdu'd: yet these I sway'd.
Dryden.

A brother's blood yet unaton'd?
Rowe.

UNATTA'INABLE. adj. Not to be gained or obtained; being out of reach.
Praise and prayer are God's due worship; which are unattainable by our discourse, simply considered, without the benefit of divine revelation.
Dryden's Religio Laici.

I do not expect that men should be perfectly kept from error; that is more than human nature can, by any means, be advanced to: I aim at no such unattainable privilege; I only speak of what they should do.
Locke.

UNATTA'INABLENESS. n. s. State of being out of reach.
Desire is stopped by the opinion of the impossibility, or unattainableness of the good proposed.
Locke.

UNATTEMPTED. adj. Untried; not assayed.
He left no means unattempted of destroying his son.
Sidney.

Not that I have the power to clutch my hand,
When his fair angels would salute my palm;
But that my hand, as unattempted yet,
Like a poor beggar, raieth on the rich.
Shakesp.
It pursues
Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme.
Milton.
Leave nothing unattempted to destroy
That perjurd race.
Denham.
Shall we be discouraged from any attempt of doing good, by the possibility of our failing in it?
How many of the best things would, at this rate,
have been left unattempted!
Atterbury.

That is address'd to unattending ears.
Milton.
Ev'ry nymph of the flood, her tresses reuding,
Throws off her armet of pearl in the main;
Neptune in anguish his charge unattending,
Vessels are found'ring, and vows are in vain.
Dryden.

UNATTENTIVE. adj. Not regarding.
Man's nature is so unattentive to good, that there can scarce be too many monitors.
Government of the Tongue.
Such things are not accompanied with show, and therefore seldom draw the eyes of the unatten-tive.
Tatler.

UNAVA'ILABLE. adj. Useless; vain with respect to any purpose.
When we have endeavoured to find out the strongest causes, wherefore they should imagine that reading is so unavailing, the most we can learn is, that sermons are the ordinance of God, the scriptures dark, and the labour of reading easy.
Hooker.

UNAVA'ILING. adj. Useless; vain.
Since my inevitable death you know,
You safely unavailing pity show:
'Tis popular to mourn a dying foe.
Dryden's Aureng.

Supine he tumbles on the crimson sands,
Before his helpless friends and native hands,
And spreads for aid his unavailing hands.
Pope.

UNAVO'IDABLE. adj.
1. Inevitable; not to be shunned.
Oppression on one side, and ambition on the other, are the unavoidable occasions of war.
Dryden.

It is unavoidable to all, to have opinions, without certain proofs of their truth
Locke.
Single acts of transgression will, through weakness and surprize, be unavoidable to the best guarded.
Rogers.
The merits of Christ will make up the unavoidable deficiencies of our service; will prevail for pardon to our sincere repentance.
Rogers.
All sentiments of worldly grandeur vanish at that unavoidable moment, which decides the destiny of men.
Clarissa.

2. Not to be missed in ratiocination.
That something is of itself, is self-evident, because we see things are; and the things that we see must either have had some first cause of their being, or have been always, and of themselves:
one of them is unavoidable.
Tillotson.

I think it unavoidable for every rational creature, that will examine his own or any other existence, to have the notion of an eternal, wise being, who had no beginning.
Locke.

UNAVO'IDABLENESS. n. s. Inevitability.
How can we conceive it subject to material impressions? and yet the impotunity of pain, and unavoidableness of sensations, strongly persuade that we are so.
Glanville.

UNAVO'IDABLY. adv. Inevitably.
The most perfect administration must unavoidably produce opposition from multitudes who are made happy by it.
Addison.

UNAVO'IDED. adj. Inevitable.
We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavoided is the danger now.
Shakesp.
Rare poems ask rare friends;
Yet satyrs, since the must of mankind be
Their unavoided subject, fewest see.
Ben Jonson.

UNAUTHORISED. adj. Not supported by authority; not properly commissioned.
To kiss in private?
—An unauthorized kiss.
Shakesp. Othello.
It is for you to ravage seas and land,
Unauthoriz'd by my supreme command.
Dryden.

UNAWA'RE. } adv. [from aware, or UNAWA'RES. } wary.]

1. Without thought; without previous meditation.
Take heed lest you fall unawares into that inconvenience you formerly found fault with.
Spenser.

It is my father's face,
Whom, in this conflict, I unawares have kill'd.
Shakesp.
Firm we subsist; yet possible to swerve,
And fall into deception unaware.
Milton.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and honey mix'd; with added store
Of opium: to his keeper this be brought,
Who swallow'd unawares the sleepy draught,
And snor'd secure.
Dryden.
'Tis a sensation like that of a limb lopped off;
one is trying every minute unawares to use it, and finds it is not.
Pope.

2. Unexpectedly; when it is not thought of; suddenly.
Let destruction come upon him at unawares,
and let his net that he hath hid catch himself.
Psalm xxxv. 8.

My hand, unawares to me, was, by the force of that endeavour it just before employed to sus-tain the fallen weight, carried up with such violence, that I bruised it.
Boyle.
Though we live never so long, we are still sur-prized: we put the evil day far from us, and then it catches us unawares, and we tremble at the prospect.
Hake.

8. In this sense I believe at unawares is the proper use.

He breaks at unawares upon our walks,
And, like a midnight wolf, invades the fold.
Dryden.

UNA'WED. adj. Unrestrained by fear or reverence.

The raging and fanatic distemper of the house of commons must be attributed to the want of such good ministers of the crown, as, being unawed by any guilt of their own, could have watched other men's.
Clarendon.

Unfore'd by punishment, unaw'd by fear,
His words were simple, and his soul sincere.
Dryd.

UNBA'CKED. adj.

1. Not tamed; not taught to bear the rider.

Then I heat my tabor;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,
Advanc'd their eyelids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt musick.
Shakesp. Tempest.
A well-wayed horse will safely convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall.
Suckling.
They flinch like unbacked fillies.
Dennis's Letter.

2. Not contentanced; not aided.

Let the weight of thine own infamy
Fall on thee unsupported, and unback'd.
Daniel's Civil War.

UNBA'LANCED. adj. Not poised; not in equipoise.

Let earth unbalanc'd from her orbit fly,
Planets and suns run lawless through the sky.
Pope.

UNBA'LLASTED. adj. Not kept steady by ballast; unsteady.

They having but newly left those grammatick flats, where they struck unreasonably, to learn a few words with lamentable construction; and now on the sudden transported under another climate, to be tost and turmoiled with their unballasted wits in fathomless and unquiet deeps of controversy, do, for the most part, grow into hatred of learning.
Milton.

As at sea th' unballast vessel rides,
Cast to and fro, the sport of winds and tides;
So, in the bounding chariot toss'd on high,
The youth is hurried headlong through the sky.
Addison.

UNBA'NDED. adj. [from band.] Wanting a string, or band.

Your hose should be ngartered, your bonnet unbanded, and every thing demonstrating a careless desolation.
Shakesp.

To UNBA'R. v. a. [from bar.] To open, by removing the bars; to unbolt.

'Tis not secure, this place or that to guard,
If any other entrance stand unbar'd.
Denham.
These rites the king refus'd,
Deaf to their cries; nor would the gates unbar
Of sacred peace, or loose th' imprison'd war.
Dryden.

UNBA'RBED. adj. [barba, Lat.] Not shaven. Out of use.

Must I go shew them my unbarbed sconce?
Must my base tongue give to my noble heart
A lie?
Shakesp. Coriolanus.

UNBA'RKED. adj. [from bark.] Decorticated; stripped of the bark.

A branch of a tree, unbarked some space at the bottom, and so set in the ground, hath grown.
Bacon.

UNBA'SHFUL. adj. Impudent; shameless.

Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility.
Shakesp.

UNBA'TED. adj. [from bate.] Not repressed; not blunted.

Where is the horse, that doth untread again
His tedious measures with th' unbated fire
That he did pace them first? Shak. Merch. of Ven.

UNBA'THED. adj. [from bath.] Not wet.

Fierce Pasimond, their passage to prevent,
Thrust full on Cymon's back in his descent:
The blade return'd unbath'd, and to the handle bent.
Dryden.

UNBA'TTERED. adj. Not injured by blows.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves: or thou, Macbeth;
Or else my sword, with an unbatter'd edge,
I sheath again undeeded.
Shakesp.

To UNBA'Y. v. a. To set open; to free from the restraint of mounds.

I ought now to loose the reins of my affections, to unbay the current of my passion, and love on without boundary or measure.
Norris's Miscellany.

UNBEA'RING. adj. Bringing no fruit.

He with his pruning hook disjoins
Unbearing branches from their head,
And graits more happy in their etead.
Dryden.

UNBEATEN. adj.

1. Not treated with blows.

His mare was truer than his chronicle;
For she had rode five miles unspur'd, unbeaten,
And then at last turn'd tail towards Neweaton.
Bishop Corbet

2. Not trodden.

We must tread unbeaten paths, and make a way where we do not find one; but it shall be always with a light in our hand.
Bacon.
If your bold muse dare tread unbeaten paths.
Roscommon.

Virtue, to crown her fav'rites, loves to try
Some new, unbeaten passage to the sky.
Swift.

UNBECOM'G. adj. Indecent; unsuitable; indecorous.

Here 's our chief guest.
—If he had been forgotten,
It had been as a gap in our great feast,
And all things unbecoming.
Shakesp. Macbeth.
No thought of flight,
None of retreat, no unbecoming deed
That argu'd fear.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

I should rather believe that the nose was the seat of wrath in beasts than in mankind; and that it was unbecoming of any but Pan, who had very much of the beast in him, to wrinkle up his nose in anger.
Dryden.

My grief lets unbecoming speeches fall:
I should have dy'd, and not complain'd at all.
Dryden.

This petulancy in conversation prevails among some of that sex, where it appears the most unbecoming and unnatural.
Addison's Freeholder.

Men of wit, learning, and virtue, might strike out every offensive or unbecoming passage from plays.
Swift.

Such proceed upon debates without unbecoming warmth.
Swift.

UNBECOM'INGNESS. n. s. Indecency; indecorum.

If words are sometimes to be used, they ought to be grave, kind and sober, representing the ill or unbecomingness of the fault.
Locke.

To UNB'E'D. v. a. To raise from a bed.

Eels unbed themselves, and stir at the noise of thunder.
Walton's Angler.

UNBEF'ITTING. adj. Not becoming; not suitable.

Love is full of unbefitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping in vain.
Shakesp.
Far be it that I should write thee sin, or blame!
Or think thee unbefitting holiest place.
Milton.
He might several times have made peace with his discontented subjects, upon terms not at all unbefitting his dignity or interest; but he rather chose to sacrifice the whole alliance to his private passion.
Swift.

To UNBEGE'T. v. n. To deprive of existence.

Wishes each minute he could unbeget
Those rebel sons who dare t' usurp his seat.
Dryden.

UNBEGO'T. } adj. [from begot.]

UNBEGO'TTEN. }
1. Eternal; without generation.

Why should he attribute the same honour to matter, which is subject to corruption, as to the eternal, unbegotten, and immutable God?
Stillingfleet.

2. Not yet generated.

God omnipotent, mnst'ring
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn, and unbegot.
Shakesp.
In thy pow'r

It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race un'best, to being yet unbegot.
Milton.

3. Not attaining existence.

Where a child finds his own parents his perverters, better were it for him to have been unborn and unbegot, than ask a blessing of those whose conversation breathes nothing but a curse.
South.

To UNBEGUI'LE. v. a. To undeceive; to set free from the influence of any deceit.

Then unbeguile thyself, and know with me,
That angels, though on earth employ'd they be,
Are still in heav'n.
Denne.

Their comeliness unbeguiled the vulgar of the odd opinion the loyalists had formerly infused into them, by their concionatory invectives.
Howell's Vocal Forest.

UNBEHE'LD. adj. Unseen; not discoverable to the sight.

These then, though unbeheld in deep of night,
Shine not in vain.
Milton.

UNBELIEF. n. s.

1. Incredulity.

'Tis not vain or fabulous,
What the sage poets, taught by th' heav'nly muse,
Storied of old in high immortal verse,
Of dire chimæras, and enchanted isles,
And rifted rocks, whose entrance leads to hell;
For such there be; but unbelief is blind.
Milton.
I'm justly plagued by this your unbelief,
And am myself the cause of my own grief.
Dryden.

Such an universal acquaintance with things will keep you from an excess of credulity and unbelief; i. e. a readiness to believe or to deny every thing at first hearing.
Watts.

2. Infidelity; irreligion.

Where profess'd unbelief is, there can be no visible church of Christ; there may be where sound belief wanteth.
Hooker.

To UNBELIEVE. v. a.

1. To discredit; not to trust.

Heav'n shield your grace from woe,
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!
Shakesp.
So great a prince and favourite so suddenly metamorphosed into travellers with no greater train, was enough to make any man unbelieve his five senses.
Wotton's Buckinghamham.

2. Not to think real or true.

Nor less than sight and hearing could convince
Of such an unforeseen and unbeliev'd offence.
Dryden.

UNBELIEVER. n. s. An infidel; one who believes not the scripture of God.

The ancient fathers being often constrained to shew what warrant they had so much to rely upon the scriptures, endeavoured still to maintain the authority of the books of God, by arguments such as unbelievers themselves must needs think reasonable, if they judged thereof as they should.
Hooker.

What endless war would jealous nations tear, .
If none above did witness what they swear?
Sad fate of unbelievers, and yet just,
Among themselves to find so little trust.
Waller.

In the New Testament, religion is usually expressed by faith in God and Christ, and the love of them. Hence it is that true Christians are so frequently called believers; and wicked and ungodly men unbelievers.
Tillotson.

He pronounces the children of such parents as were, one of them a Christian, and the other an unbeliever, holy, on account of the faith and holiness of that one. Aterbury.

Men always grow vicious before they become unbelievers; but if you would once convince profligates by topicks drawn from the view of their own quiet, reputation, and health, their infidelity would soon drop off. Swift's Miscellanies.

UNBELIEVING. adj. Infidel.

No pause,
No stay of slaughter found his vigorous arm;
But th' unbelieving squadrons turn'd to flight,
Smote in the rear. Phillips.
This wrought the greatest confusion in the unbelieving Jews, and the greatest conviction in the Gentiles. Addison.
In the days of the apostle, when all who professed themselves disciples of Christ were converts of conscience, this severe censure might be restrained to the unbelieving part of mankind. Rogers.

UNBELOVED. adj. Not loved.

Whoe'er you are, not unbelov'd by heav'n,
Since on our friendly shore your ships are driven. Dryden.

To UNBEND. v. a.

1. To free from flexure.

It is lawful to relax and unbend our bow, but not to suffer it to be unready, or unstrung. Taylor's Holy Living.
I must be in the battle; and but I'll go
With empty quiver, and unbended bow. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit; to set at ease for a time.

Here have I seen the king, when great affairs
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chace by all the flow'r of youth. Denham.

From those great cares when ease your soul unbends,
Your pleasures are design'd to noble ends. Dryden

3. To relax vitiously or effeminately.

You unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakesp. Macbeth.

UNBENDING. adj.

1. Not suffering flexure.

Not so when swift Camilla scours the plain,
Flies o'er th' unbending corn, and skims along the main. Pope.

2. Not yielding; resolute.

Ye noble few, who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressures, yet a little while,
And all your woes are past. Thomson.

3. Devoted to relaxation.

Since what was omitted in the acting is now kept in, I hope it may entertain your lordship at an unbending hour. Rowe.

UNBENEFICED. adj. Not preferred to a benefice.

More vacant pulpits would more converts make;
All would have latitude enough to take;
The rest unbenc'd your sects maintain. Dryden.

UNBENEVOLENT. adj. Not kind.

A religion which not only forbids, but by its natural influence sweetens all bitterness and asperity of temper, and corrects that selfish narrowness of spirit which inclues men to a fierce unbenevolent behaviour. Rogers.

UNBENIGHTED. adj. Never visited by darkness.

Beyond the polar circles; to them day
Had unbrighted shone, while the low sun,
To recompense his distance, in their sight
Had rounded still the horizon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNBENIGN. adj. Malignant; malevolent.

To th' other five
Their planetary motions, and aspects,
In sextile, square, and trine, and opposite,
Of noxious efficacy; and when to join
In synod unbening. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNBENT. adj.

1. Not strained by the string.

U N B

Apollo heard, and, conquering his disdain, Unbent his bow, and Greece inspir'd again. Dryden.

2. Having the bow unstrung.

Why hast thou gone so far,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengaged and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

3. Not crushed; not subdued.

But thou, secure of soul, unbent with woes,
The more thy fortune frowns, the more oppose. Dryden.

4. Relaxed; not intent.

Be not always on affairs intent,
But let thy thoughts be easy and unbent:
When our mind's eyes are disengaged and free,
They clearer, farther, and distinctly see. Denham.

UNBESEEMING. adj. Unbecoming.

No emotion of passion transported me by the indignity of his carriage, to do or say any thing unbecoming myself. King Charles.
Far be the spirit of the chase from them;
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill. Thomson.

UNBESOURGHT. adj. Not intreated.

Least heat should injure us, his timely care
Hath, unbesought, provided; and his hands
Cloath'd us unworthy; pitying while he judg'd. Milton.

UNBESTOWED. adj. Not given; not disposed of.

He had now but one son and one daughter unbestow'd. Bacon.

UNBETRAYED. adj. Not betrayed.

Many being privy to the fact,
How hard is it to keep it unbetray'd!
Daniel's Civil War.

UNBEWAILED. adj. Not lamented.

Let determin'd things to destiny
Hold unbewail'd their way.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

To UNBEWITCH. v. a. [from witch.] To free from fascination.

To UNBIASS. v. a. To free from any external motive; to disentangle from prejudice.

That our understandings may be free to examine, and reason unbiass'd give its judgment, being that whereon a right direction of our conduct to true happiness depends; it is in this we should employ our chief care. Locke.
The standing evidences of the gospel, every time they are considered, gain upon sincere, unbiass'd minds. Aterbury.

The truest service a private man may do his country, is by unbiassing his mind, as much as possible, between the rival powers. Swift.
Where's the man who counsel can bestow,
Unbiass'd or by favour or by spite;
Not dully prepossess'd, nor blindly right? Pope.

UNBIASSEDLY. adv. Without external influence; without prejudice.

I have sought the true meaning; and have unbiassedly embraced what, upon a fair enquiry, appeared so to me. Locke.

UNBID. } adj.

UNBIDDEN. } adj.

1. Uninvited.

Unbidden guests
Are often welcomest when they are gone. Shakesp.

2. Uncommanded; spontaneous.

Thorns also and thistles it shall bring thee forth Unbid. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Roses unbid, and ev'ry fragrant flow'r,
Flew from their stalks, to strow thy nuptial bow'r. Dryden.
Unbidden earth shall wreathing ivy bring,
And fragrant herbs, the promises of spring. Druden

UNBIGOTTED. adj. Free from bigotry.

Erasmus, who was an unbigotted Roman Catholic, was so much transported with this passage of Socrates, that he could scarce forbear looking upon him as a saint, and desiring him to pray for him. Addison.

U N B

To UNBIND. v. a. [from bind.] To loose; to untie.

His own woe's author, whose bound it finds,
As did Pyrocles, and it wilfully unbinds. Spenser.
Ye Latian dames,
If there be here who dare maintain
My right, nor think the name of mother vain,
Unbind your fillets, loose your flowing hair,
And orgies and nocturnal rites prepare. Dryden.
On the sixth instant it was thought fit to unbind his head. Tatler

To UNBISHOP. v. a. [from bishop.] To deprive of episcopal orders.

I cannot look upon Titus as so far unbishoped yet, but that he still exhibits to us all the essentials of jurisdiction. South.

UNBITTED. adj. [from bit.] Unbridled; unrestrained.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this love to be a sect or cyon. Shakesp. Othello.

UNBLAMABLE. adj. Not culpable; not to be charged with a fault.

Much more could I say concerning this unblamable inequality of fines and rates. Bacon.
He lov'd his people, him they idoliz'd;
And thence proceeds my mortal hatred to him;
That, thus unblamable to all beside,
He err'd to me alone. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

UNBLAMABLY. adv. Without taint of fault.

Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily, and justly, and unblamably we behaved ourselves. 1 Thess. ii. 10.

UNBLAMED. adj. Blameless; free from fault.

Shall spend your days in joy unblam'd, and dwell Long time in peace. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What time this dame rever'd her proud lord,
Who now is doo'd to mourn. Pope's Odyssey.

UNBLEMISHED. adj. Free from turpitude; free from reproach; free from deformity.

O welcome, pure eye'd faith, white-handed hope!
Thou hovering angel, girt with golden wings,
And thou unblemish'd form of chastity! Milton's Comus.

Under this stone lies virtue, youth,
Unblemish'd probity, and truth. Waller.

Is more worthy to be made a wife
In all this town? Suppose her free from strife, Rich, fair, and fruitful; of unblemish'd life. Dryden.

They appointed, out of these new converts, men of the best sense, and of the most unblemish'd lives, to preside over these several assemblies. Addison.

UNBLENCED. adj. Not disgraced; not injured by any soil.

There, where very desolation dwells,
She may pass on with unblenc'd majesty;
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption. Milton.

UNBLENDED. adj. Not mingled.

None can boast a knowledge deperate from defilement, within this atmosphere of flesh; it dwells no where in unblended proportions on this side the empyreum. Glanville.

UNBLEST. adj.

1. Accursed; excluded from benediction.

It is a shameful and unblest thing, to take the scum of people, and wicked, condemned men, to be the people with whom you plant. Bacon.

2. Wretched; unhappy.

In thy pow'r
It lies yet, ere conception, to prevent
The race unblest, to being yet unbegot. Milton.

What is true passion, if unblest it dies?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry dies? Prior.

UNBLOODIED. adj. Not stained with blood.

U N B

Who finds the partridge in the puttock's nest,
But may imagine how the bird was dead,
Although the kite soar with unbloodied beak.
Shakesp.

UNBLOO'DY. adj. Not cruel; not shedding blood; not stained with blood.

Under the ledge of Atlas lies a cave,
The venerable seat of holy hermits,
Who there, secure in separated cells,
From the purling streams, and savage fruits,
Have wholesome bev'rage and unbloody feasts.
Dryden.

UNBLO'WN. adj. Having the bud yet unexpanded.

Ah! my poor princes! Ah! my tender babes!
My unblown flowers, new-appearing sweets! Shak.

Shall feel this day, as sharp to them as thorn. Shak.
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend you. Shakesp. As you like it.

He on the wings of cherubim
Up-lifted in paternal glory rode Far into chaos, and the world unborn. Milt. Par. Lost.
To what wretched state reserv'd!

Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n
To be thus wasted from us? Milton's Par. Lost.
A queen, from whom
The souls of kings unborn for bodies wait. Dryden.

UNBORROWED. adj. Genuine; native; one's own.

But the luxurious father of the fold,
With native purple, and unborrow'd gold,
Beneath his pompous fleece shall proudly sweat. Dryden.

In substances, especially those which the common and unborrow'd names of any language are applied to, some remarkable, sensible qualities serve to distinguish one from another. Locke.

U N B

To UNBOSOM. v. a.

1. To reveal in confidence.

I lov'd thee, as too well thou knew'st,
Too well; unbosom'd all my secrets to thee,
Not out of levity, but overpower'd
By thy request, who could deny thee nothing. Milton.

Do we unbosom all our secrets to him, and hide nothing that passeth in the depth of our hearts from him? Atterbury.

2. To open; to disclose.

Should I thence, hurried on viewless wing,
Take up a weeping on the mountains wild,
The gentle neighbourhood of grove and spring
Would soon unbosom all their echoes mild. Milton.

UNBO'TTOMED. adj.

1. Without bottom; bottomless.

The dark, unbottom'd, infinite abyss. Milton.

2. Having no solid foundation; having no reliance.

This is a special act of Christian hope, to be thus unbottomed of ourselves, and fastened upon God, with a full reliance, trust, and dependance on his mercy. Hammond.

UNBO'UGHT. adj.

1. Obtained without money.

The unthought dainties of the poor. Dryd. Horace.

2. Not finding any purchaser.

The merchant will leave our native commodities un-bought upon the hands of the farmer, rather than export them to a market which will not afford him returns with profit. Locke.

UNBO'UND. adj.

1. Loose; not tied.

2. Wanting a cover; used of books.

He that has complex ideas, without particular names for them, would be in no better case than a bookseller who had volumes that lay unbound, and without titles; which he could make known to others, only by shewing the loose sheets. Locke.

3. Preterite of unbind.

Some from their chains the faithful dogs un-bound. Dryden.

UNBO'UNDED. adj.

1. Infinite; interminable.

Long were to tell what I have done;
I voyag'd the unreal, vast, unbounded deep
Of horrible confusion. Milton.
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me;
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it. Addison.

2. Unlimited; unrestrained.

He was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking Himself with princes. Shakesp.
He had given his curiosity its full, unbounded range, and examined not only in contemplation, but by sensitive experiments, whatever could be good for the sons of men. Decay of Piety.

UNBO'UNDEDLY. adv. Without bounds; without limits.

So unboundedly mischievous is that petulant member, that heaven and earth are not wide enough for its range, but it will find work at home too. Government of the Tongue.

UNBO'UNDEDNESS. n. s. Exemption from limits.

Finality, applied to created things, imports the proportions of the several properties of these things to one another. Infinity, the unboundedness of these degrees of properties. Cheyne.

On Dardan plains,
The fresh and yet unbruised Greeks do pitch
Their brave pavillions. Shakesp.

Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye:
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie;
But where unbruised youth, with unstuff'd brain,
Doth couch his limbs, there golden sleep doth reign. Shakesp.

To UNBUCKLE. v. a. To loose from buckles.

We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms; fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

He that unbuckles this, till we do please
To doff 't for our purpose, shall hear a storm. Shak.
His stary helm unbuckled, shew'd him prime
In manhood, where youth ended. Milt. Par. Lost.

All unbuckling the rich mail they wore,
Laid their bright arms along the sable shore. Pope.

To UNBUILD. v. a. To raze; to destroy.

This is the way to kindle, not to quench;
T' unbuild the city, and to lay all flat. Shakesp.
What will they then but unbuild

His living temples, built by faith to stand;
Their own faith, not another's? Milton's Par. Lost.

UNBUILT. adj. Not yet erected.

Built walls you shun, unbuilt you see. Dryden.

UNBURIED. adj. Not interred; not

This was the first day, ev'n and morn;
Nor pass'd uncelebrated, nor unsung
By the celestial choirs. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNCENSURED. adj. Exempt from public reproach.

How difficult must it be for any ruler to live uncensured, where every one of the community is thus qualified for modelling the constitution! Addison's Freholder.

U N C

Fear most to tax an honourable fool,
Whose right it is uncensur'd to be dull. Page.
To be uncensured, and to be obscure, is the same thing. Pope's Letters.

UNCERTAIN. adj. [incertain, Fr. incertus, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; not certainly known.

That sacred pile, so vast, so high,
That whether 'tis a part of earth or sky,
Uncertain seems; and may be thought a proud
Aspiring mountain, or descending cloud. Denham.

2. Doubtful; not having certain knowledge.

Man, without the protection of a superior being,
is secure of nothing that he enjoys, and uncertain
of every thing that he hopes for. Tillotson.

Condemn'd on Caucasus to lie,
Still to be dying, not to die;
With certain pain, uncertain of relief,
True emblem of a wretched lover's grief. Glanville.

3. Not sure in the consequence.

I must be married to my brother's daughter
Or else my kingdom stands on brittle glass:
Murder her brothers, and then marry her!
Uncertain way of gain! Shakesp. Richard III.

In the bright air the faulchion shone,
Or whistling slings dismiss'd th' uncertain stone. Gay.

The search of our future being is but a needless, anxious, and uncertain haste to be knowing, sooner than we can, what, without all this solicitude, we shall know a little later. Pope.

4. Not exact; not sure.

Ascanius young, and eager of his game,
Soon bent his bow, uncertain in his aim;
But the dire fiend the fatal arrow guides,
Which pierc'd his bowels through his panting sides. Dryden.

5. Unsettled; unregular.

As the form of our publick service is not voluntary, so neither are the parts thereof uncertain; but they are all set down in such order, and with such choice, as hath, in the wisdom of the church, seemed best. Hooker.

UNCERTAINED. adj. Made uncertain.
A word not used.

The diversity of seasons are not so uncertained by the sun and moon alone, who always keep one and the same course, but that the stars have also their working therein. Raleigh.

UNCERTAINLY. adv.

1. Not surely; not certainly.

Go, mortals, now, and vex yourselves in vain
For wealth, which so uncertainly must come:
When what was brought so far, and with such pain,
Was only kept to lose it nearer home. Dryden.

Names must be of very unsteady meaning, if the ideas be referred to standards without us, that cannot be known at all, or but very imperfectly and uncertainly. Locke.

2. Not confidently.

They that are past all hope of good, are past
All fear of ill: and yet, if lie be dead,
Speak softly, or uncertainly. Denham's Sophy.

UNCERTAINTY. n. s.

1. Dubiousness; want of knowledge.

All great concernsments must delays endure;
Rashness and haste make all things insecure:
And if uncertain thy pretensions be,
Stay till fit time wear out *uncertain*ty. Denham.

You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate,
Here then remain with your uncertainty;
Let ev'ry feeble rumour shake your hearts. Shakesp.

2. Inaccuracy.

That which makes doubtfulness and uncertainty
in the signification of some, more than other words, is the difference of ideas they stand for. Locke.

3. Contingency; want of certainty.

God's omniscience is a light shining into every dark corner, stedfastly grasping the greatest and most slippery uncertainties. South's Sermons.

4. Something unknown.

Our shepherd's case is every man's case, that quits a moral certainty for an uncertainty, and leaps from the honest business he was brought up to, into a trade he has no skill in. L'Estrange.

To UNCHA'IN. v. a. To free from chains.

Mimerva thus to Perseus lent her shield
Secure of conquest, sent him to the field;
The hero acted what the queen ordain'd;
So was his fame complete, and Andromede unchain'd. Prior.

UNCHA'NGEABLE. adj. Immutable; not subject to variation.

If the end for which a law provided, be perpetually necessary; and the way whereby it provideth perpetually also most apt, no doubt but that every such law ought for ever to remain unchangeable. Hooker.

UNCHA'NGED. adj.

1. Not altered.

When our fortunes are violently changed, our spirits are unchanged. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
More safe I sing with mortal voice; unchanged
To hoarse, or mute. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Not alterable.

Dismiss thy fear,
And heav'n's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side. Dryden.

Honour unchang'd, a principle profest,
Fixt to one side, but moderate to the rest. Pope.

UNCHA'NGEABLENESS. n. s. Immutability.

This unchangeableness of colour I am now to describe. Newton.

UNCHA'NGEABLY. adv. Immutably; without change.

All truth is unchangeably the same; that proposition, which is true at any time, being so for ever. South.

Her first order, disposition, frame,
Must then subsist unchangeably the same. Blacken.

UNCHA'NGING. adj. Suffering no alteration.

But that thy face is, vizzor-like, unchanging,
Made impudent with use of evil deeds,
I would essay, proud queen, to make thee blush. Shakesp.

True expression, like th' unchanging sun,
Clears and improves whate'er it shines upon:
It gilds all objects, but it alters none. Pope.

To UNCHA'RGE. v. a. To retract an accusation.

Even his mother shall uncharge the practice,
And call it accident. Shakesp. Hamlet.

UNCHA'RITABLE. adj. Contrary to charity; contrary to the universal love prescribed by christianity.

All the rich mines of learning ransack'd are
To furnish ammunition for this war;
Uncharitable zeal our reason whets,
And double edges on our passion sets. Denham.

This fills the minds of weak men with uncharitable interpretations of those actions of which they are not competent judges. Addison's Freeholder.

UNCHA'RITABLENESS. n. s. Want of charity.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him among the saints, when our unretreated uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

God commands us to love our enemies, so that if we hate them we sin, and are justly kept back by our own uncharitableness. Kettlewell.

Heaven and hell are the proper regions of mercy and uncharitableness. Atterbury.

UNCHA'RITABLY. adv. In a manner contrary to charity.

I do not mean the cutting off all that nation with the sword; which, far be it from me that I should ever think so desperately, or wish so uncharitably. Spenser.

Urge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt,
And shamefully my hopes by you are butcher'd, Shakesp.

Men imprudently and uncharitably often, employ their zeal for persons. S. ratt.

UNCHA'RY. adj. Not wary; not cautious; not frugal.

I've said too much unto a heart of stone,
And laid my honour too unchary out. Shakesp.

UNCHA'STE. adj. Lewd, libidinous; not continent; not chaste; not pure.

One, that in divers places I had heard before blaz'd, as the most impudently unchaste woman of all Asia. Sidney.

In my master's garments,
Which he inforc'd from me, away he posts
With unchaste purposes, to violate
My lady's honour. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Whosoever is unchaste, cannot reverence himself; and the reverence of a man's self is, next religion, the chiefest bride of all vices. Bacon.

Last, by unchaste looks,
Lets in defilement to the inward parts. Milton.

If she thinks to be separated by reason of her husband's unchaste life, then the nian will be uncurably ruined. Taylor.

UNCHA'STITY. n. s. Lewdness; incontinence.

That generation was more particularly addicted to intemperance, sensuality, and unchastity. Woodward.

When the sun is among the horned signs, he may produce such a spirit of unchastity, as is dangerous to the honour of your worship's families. Arbutnot.

UNCHE'CKED. adj.

1. Unrestrained; not hindered.

Apt the mind, or fancy, is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end. Milton.
Thee on the wing thy uncheck'd vigour bore,
To wanton freely, or securely suar. Smith to J. Phillips.

2. Not contradicted.

What news on the Ryalto?
—Why, yet it lives there uncheck'd, that Anthonio hath a ship of rich lading wreck'd. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

He hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,
Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shakesp.

UNCHRISTIAN. adj.

1. Contrary to the laws of christianity.

It's uncharitable, unchristian, and inhuman, to pass a peremptory sentence of condemnation upon a try'd friend, where there is any room left for a more favourable judgment. L'Estrange.

These unchristian fishers of men are fatally caught in their own nets. South.

I could dispense with the unphilosophicalness of this their hypothesis, were it not unchristian. Norris.

2. Unconverted; infidel.

Whereupon grew a question, whether a christian soldier might herein do as the unchristian did, and wear as they wore. Hooker.

UNCHRISTIANNESS. n. s. Contrariety to christianity.

The unchristianness of those denials might arise from a displeasure to see me prefer my own divines before their ministers. King Charles.

UNCIRCUMCISED. adj. Not circumcised; not a Jew.

Th' uncircumcis'd smil'd grimly with disdain, Cowley.

UN'CIRCUMCISION. n. s. Omission of circumcision.

God, that gives the law that a Jew shall be circumcised, thereby constitutes uncircumcision an obliquity; which, had he not given that law, had never been such. Hammond.

UNCIRCUMSCRIBED. adj. Unbounded; unlimited.

Though I, uncircumscrib'd myself, retire,
And put not forth my goodness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

An arbitrary prince is the master of a non-resisting people; for where the power is uncircumscribed, the obedience ought to be unlimited. Addison.
The sovereign was flattered by a set of men into a persuasion, that the regal authority was unlimited and uncircumscribed. Addison's Freeholder.

UN'CIRCUMSPECT. adj. Not cautious; not vigilant.

Their uncircumspect simplicity had been used, especially in matters of religion. Hayward.

Thou know'st no less, but all: I have unclasp'd
To thee the book, ev'n of my secret soul. Shakesp.
Prayer can unclasp the girdles of the north, saying to a mountain of ice, Be thou removed hence, and cast into the sea. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

UNCLA'SSICK. adj. Not classick.

Angel of dulness, sent to scatter round
Her magic charms o'er all unclassick ground. Pope.

UNCLE. n. s. [oncle, Fr.] The father's or mother's brother.

Hamlet punishes his uncle rather for his own death, than the murder of his father. Shakespeare Illustrated.

UNCLE'AN. adj.

1. Foul; dirty; filthy. Charon,
A sordid god: down from his hoary chin
A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

Priests are patterns for the rest;
The guld of heav'n, who bear the God impress'd.

But when the precious coin is kept unclean,
The sov'reign's image is no longer seen.
It they be foul, on whom the people trust,
Well may the baser brass contract a rust. Dryden.

2. Not purified by ritual practices.

3. Foul with sin.

Besides, how vile, contemptible, ridiculous,
What act more execrably unclean, profane? Milt.

What agonies must he endure, what difficulties overcome, before he can cleanse himself from the pollutions of sin, and be a fit inhabitant of that holy place, where no unclean thing shall enter?
Rogers's Sermons.

4. Lewd; unchaste.

Let them all encircle him about,
And, fairy-like too, pinch the unclean knight,
And ask him, why that hour of fairy revel,
In their so sacred paths he dares to tread,
In shape profane. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together
sew'd,
And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new comer, Shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

for the uncomeliness thereof. Spenser's Ireland.

He prais'd women's modesty, and gave orderly well-behaved reproof to all uncomeliness. Shakesp.

Those arches which the Tuscan writers call ai terzo, and di quarto acuto, because they always concur in an acute angle, both for the natural imbecility of the angle itself, and likewise for their very uncomeliness, ought to be eviled from judicious eyes. Wotton's Architecture.

Forgetting that duty of modest concealment which they owed to the father of their country, in case they had discovered any real uncomeliness.
King Charles.

The beauty or uncomeliness in good and ill-breed-

Better far,
Than still at hell's dark threshold I have sat watch,
Umami'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd.
Milton.

U N D

UNDRE'AMED. adj. Not thought on.

A course more promising,
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores; most certain To miseries enough. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

To UNDRRESS. v. a. [from dress.]

1. To divest of cloaths; to strip.

Undress you, and come now to bed. Shakesp.
All were stol'n aside
To counsel and undress the bride. Suckling.
Her fellows press'd,
And the reluctant nymph by force undress'd.
Addison's Ovid.

2. To divest of ornaments, or the attire of ostentation.

Undress'd at evening when she found
Their odours lost, their colours past,
She chang'd her look. Prior.

UNDRRESS. n. s. A loose or negligent dress.

Reform her into ease,
And put her in undress to make her please. Dryd.

UNDRRESSED. adj.

1. Not regulated.

Thy vineyard lies half prun'd, and half undress'd.
Dryden.

2. Not prepared for use.

The common country people wore perones, shoes of undressed leather. Arbuthnot on Coins.

UNDRIED. adj. Not dried.

Their titles in the field were tried:
Witness the fresh laments, and fun'ral tears undry'd.
Dryden.

Four pounds of undried hops, thorough ripe, will make one of dry. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNDRIVEN. adj. Not impelled either way.

As wint'ry winds contending in the sky,
With equal force of lungs their titles try:
The doubtful rack of heav'n
Stands without motion, and the tide undriv'n.
Dryden.

UNDR'OSSY. adj. Free from recre-
ment.

When a moontide sun with summer beams
Darts through a cloud, her watry skirts are edg'd
With lucid amber, or undrossy gold. Phillips.
Of heav'n's undrossy gold, the gods' array Refulgent, flash'd intolerable day. Pope's Homer.

UNDR'ITABLE. adj. Not admitting doubt; unquestionable.

Let that principle, that all is matter, and that there is nothing else, be received for certain and undubitable, and it will be easy to be seen what consequences it will lead us into. Locke.

UNDUE. adj. [indue, Fr.]

1. Not right; not legal.

That proceeding being at that time taxed for rigorous and undue, in matter and manner, makes it very probable there was some greater matter against her. Bacon.

2. Not agreeable to duty.

He will not prostitute his power to mean and undue ends, nor stoop to little and low arts of courting the people. Atterbury.

UNDULARY. adj. [from undulo, Lat.]

Playing like waves; playing with in-termissions.

The blasts and undulary breaths thereof maintain no certainty in their course.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To UNDUPLICATE. v. a. [from undulo, Lat.]

To drive backward and forward; to make to play as waves.

Breath vocalized, i. e. vibrated and undulated,
may in a different manner affect the lips, or tongue,
or palate, and impress a swift, trepidulous motion, which breath alone passing smooth doth not.
Holder on Specch.

U N E

To UNDUPLICATE. v. n. To play as waves in curls.

Through undulating air the sounds are sent,
And spread o'er all the fluid element. Pope.

UNDULATION. n. s. [from undulate.]
Waving motion.

Worms and leeches will move both ways; and so will most of those animals whose bodies consist of round and annular fibres, and move by undulation, that is, like the waves of the sea.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All tuneable sounds are made by a regular vibration of the sonorous body, and undulation of the air, proportionable to the acuteness and gravity of the tone. Holder.

Two parallel walls beat the sound back on each other, till the undulation is quite worn out.
Addison.

UNDULATORY. adj. [from undulate.]
Moving in the manner of waves.

A constant undulatory motion is perceived by looking through telescopes. Arbuthnot on Air.

UNDULY. adv. Not properly; not according to duty.

Men unduly exercise their zeal against persons;
not only against evil persons, but against those that are the most venerable. Spratt's Sermons.

UNDU'TEOUS. adj. Not performing duty;
irreverent; disobedient.

She and I, long since contracted,
Are now so sure, that nothing can dissolve us;
And this deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or unduteous title. Shakesp.

In Latium safe he lay,
From his unduteous son, and his usurping sway.
Dryden.

UNDU'TIFUL. adj. Not obedient; not reverent.

England thinks it no good policy to have that realm planted with English, lest they should grow so undutiful as the Irish, and become more dangerous. Spenser's Ireland.

No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is fit for a creature not to love God; to be undu-tiful to his great Sovereign, and ungrateful to his best benefactor. Tillotson.

UNDU'TIFULLY. adv. [from undutiful.]
Not according to duty.

The fish had long in Cæsar's ponds been fed,
And from its lord undutifully fled. Dryd. Juvenal.

UNDU'TIFULNESS. n. s. Want of respect;
irreverence; disobedience.

I should have thought they would rather have held in, and staid all the other from undutiful-ness, than need to be forced thereunto themselves.
Spenser.

Forbidding undutifulness to superiors, sedition and rebellion against magistracy. Tillotson.

UNDY'ING. adj. Not destroyed; not perishing.

Driven down
To chains of darkness, and th' undying worm.
Milton.

UNEARNED. adj. Not obtained by labour or merit.

As I am honest Poet,
If we have unearned luck,
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long. Shakesp.

Our work is brought to little, though begun
Early, and th' hour of supper comes unearn'd.
Milton.

UNEARN'THED. adj. Driven from the den
in the ground.

The robber of the fold
Is from his craggy winding haunts unearn'th'd.
Thomson.

U N E

 He lives uneasily under the burden. L'Estrange.
 They make mankind their enemy by their unjust actions, and consequently live more uneasily in the world than other men. Tillotson

UNEASINESS. n. s. Trouble; perplexity; state of disquiet.
 Not a subject
 Sits in heart-grief and uneasiness,
 Under the sweet shade of your government. Shak.
 The same uneasiness which every thing
 Gives to our nature, life must also bring. Denham.
 We may be said to live like those who have their hope in another life, if we bear the uneasiness that befall us here with constancy. Atterbury.
 Men are dissatisfied with their station, and create to themselves all the uneasiness of want. They fancy themselves poor, and under this persuasion feel all the disquiet of real poverty. Rogers.
 His majesty will maintain his just authority over them; and whatever uneasiness they may give themselves, they can create none in him. Addison's Freeholder.
 The libels against his grandfather, that fly about his very court, give him uneasiness. Swift.

UNEASY. adj.
 1. Painful; giving disturbance.
 The wisest of the Gentiles forbade any libations to be made for dead infants, as believing they passed into happiness through the way of mortality, and for a few months wore an uneasy garment. Taylor's Rule of Holy Living.
 On a tottering pinnacle the standing is uneasy, and the fall deadly. Decay of Piety.
 His present thoughts are uneasy, because his present state does not please him. L'Estrange.
 Still watch'd and importun'd, but worse for thee. Dryden.

2. Disturbed; not at ease.
 Happy low! lie down;
Uneasy lies the head that wears a crown. Shakesp.
Uneasy justice upward flew,
 And both the sisters to the stars withdrew. Dryd.
 The passion and ill language proceeded from a galled and uneasy mind. Tillotson.
 It is such a pleasure as makes a man restless and uneasy, exciting fresh desires. Addison.
 One would wonder how any person should desire to be king of a country, in which the established religion is directly opposite to that he professes. Were it possible for such a one to accomplish his designs, his own reason might tell him, there could not be a more uneasy prince, nor a more unhappy people. Addison's Freeholder.
 If we imagine ourselves intitled to any thing we have not, we shall be uneasy in the want of it; and that covousness will expose us to all the evil persuasions of poverty. Rogers.
 The soul, uneasy and confin'd from home,
 Rests and expatiates in a life to come. Pope.

3. Constraining; cramping.
 Some servile imitators
 Prescribe at first such strict, uneasy rules,
 As they must ever slavishly observe. Roscommon.

4. Constrained; not disengaged; stiff.
 In conversation, a solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, will be constrained, uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

5. Peevish; difficult to please.
 A sour untractable nature makes him uneasy to those who approach him. Addison's Spectator.

6. Difficult. Out of use.
 We will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd: from his simplicity, I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Shakesp.
 This swift business
 I must uneasy make; lest too light winning
 Make the prize light. Shakesp. Tempest.

U N E

Divers things, knowable by the bare light of nature, yet are so uneasy to be satisfactorily understood, that, let them be delivered in the clearest expressions, the notions themselves will appear obscure. Boyle.

UNEATEN. adj. Not devoured.
 Though they had but two horses left uneaten, they had never suffered a summons to be sent to them. Clarendon.

UNEATH. adv. [from eath; eað, Sax. easy.]
 1. Not easily. Out of use.
Uneath may she endure the flinty street,
 To tread them with her tender feeling feet! Shak.

2. It seems in Spenser to signify the same as beneath. Under; below.
 A roaring, hideous sound,
 That all the air with terror filled wide,
 And seem'd uneath to shake the stedfast ground. Spenser.

UNE'DIFYING. adj. Not improving in good life.
 Our practical divinity is as sound and affecting as that of our popish neighbours is flat and une'difying. Atterbury.

UNELECTED. adj. Not chosen.
 Putting him to rage,
 You should have ta'en th' advantage of his choler,
 And pass'd him unelected. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

UNELIGIBLE. adj. Not proper to be chosen.
 Both extremes, above or below the proportion of our character are dangerous; and 'tis hard to determine which is most unelidable. Rogers.

UNEMPLOYED. adj.
 1. Not busy; at leisure; idle.
 Other creatures all day long
 Rove idle, unemployed, and less need rest. Milton.
 Wilt thou then serve Philistines with that gift,
 Which was expressly given thee to annoy them?
 Better at home lie bed-rid, not only idle,
 Inglorious, unemploy'd, with age out-worn. Milton.
 Our wise Creator has annexed to several objects, and to the ideas we receive of them, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure, that those faculties which we are endowed with might not remain idle and unemployed. Locke.
 Men soured with poverty, and unemployed, easily give into any prospect of change. Addison.

2. Not engaged in any particular work.
 Pales unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
 Were all forgot. Dryden.

 Moral virtue, natural reason, unenlightened by revelation, prescribes. Atterbury.

UNENSLAVED. adj. Free; not enthralled.
 By thee
 She sits a sov'reign, unenclav'd and free. Addison.

UNENTERTAINING. adj. Giving no delight; giving no entertainment.
 It was not unentertaining to observe by what degrees I ceased to be a witty writer. Pope.

UNENTOMBED. adj. Unburied; uninterred.
 Think'st thou unentomb'd to cross the floods? Dryden.

UNENVIED. adj. Exempt from envy.
 The fortune which nobody sees makes a man happy and unenvied. Bacon.
 This loss,
 Thus far at least recover'd, bath much more
 Establish'd in a safe, unenvied throne, Yielded with full consent. Milton's Par. Lost.
 These unenvied stand;
 Since what they act transeends what they command. Denham.
 What health promotes, and gives unenvied peace,
 Is all expenceless, and procur'd with ease. Blackmore.
 Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
 And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste. Pope's Odyssey.

UNEQUABLE. adj. Different from itself; diverse.
 March and September, the two equinoxes, are the most unsettled and unequable of seasons. Bentley's Sermons.

UNEQUAL. adj. [inaequalis, Lat.]
 1. Not even.
 There sits deformity to mock my body;
 To shape my legs of an unequal size. Shakesp.
 You have here more than one example of Chaucer's unequal numbers. Dryden.

2. Not equal; inferiour.
 Among unequals what society?
 To bliss unknown my lofty soul aspires;
 My lot unequal to my vast desires. Abraham.

3. Partial; not bestowing on both the same advantages.
 When to conditions of unequal peace
 He shall submit, then may he not possess Kingdom or life! Denham.

4. [Inegal, Fr.] Disproportioned; ill matched.
Unequal work we find,
 Against unequal arms to fight in pain. Milton.
 From his strong arm I saw his rival run,
 And in a crowd th' unequal combat shun. Dryden.
 And oft the furious wasp the hive alarms
 With louder hums, and with unequal arms. Addis.
 Fierce Belinda on the Baron flies,
 Nor fear'd the chief th' unequal fight to try. Pope.

5. Not regular; not uniform.
 So strong, yet so unequal, pulses beat. Dryden.

UNEQUALABLE. adj. Not to be equalled; not to be paralleled.
 Christ's love to God is filial and unequalable. Boyle.

UNEQUALLED. adj. Unparalleled; unrivalled in excellence.
 By those unequalled and invaluable blessings, he manifested how much he hated sin, and how much he loved sinners. Boyle.

Dorinda came, divested of the scori,
Which the unequalled maid so long had worn. Rosc.
UNEQUALLY. adv. In different degrees;
in disproportion one to the other.

When we view some well proportion'd dome,
No single parts unequally surprize;
All comes united to th' admiring eyes. Pope.
UNEQUALNESS. n. s. Inequality; state of being unequal.

UNEQUITABLE. adj. Not impartial;
not just.
We force him to stand to those measures which we think too unequitable to press upon a murderer.
Decay of Piety.

UNEQUIVOCAL. adj. Not equivocal.
This conceit is erroneous, making putrefactive generations correspondent unto seminal productions, and conceiving unequivocal effects, and uni-vocal conformity unto the efficient.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNERRABLENESS. n. s. Incapacity of error.
The many innovations of that church witness the danger of pursuing upon the unerrableness of a guide. Decay of Piety.

UNERRING. adj. [inerrans, Lat.]
1. Committing no mistake.
The irresistible infirmities of our nature make a perfect and unerring obedience impossible.
Rogers.

Fast in chains constrain the various god;
Who, bound obedient to superior force,
Unerring will prescribe your destin'd course. Pope.
His javelin threw;
Hissing in air th' unerring weapon flew. Dryden.
2. Incapable of failure; certain.

The king a mortal shaft lets fly
From his unerring hand. Denham.
Is this th' unerring power? the ghost reply'd;
Nor Phoebus flatter'd; nor his answers ly'd.
Dryden.
Of lovers of truth, for truth's sake, there is this one unerring mark: the not entertaining any proposition with greater assurance than the proofs
it is built upon will warrant. Locke.

UNERRINGLY. adv. Without mistake.
What those figures are, which should be mechanically adapted to fall so unerringly into regular compositions, is beyond our faculties to conceive.
Glanville.

UNESCHEWABLE. adj. Inevitable; unavoidable; not to be escaped. Not in use.
He gave the mayor sufficient warning to shift for safety, if an uneschewable destiny had not altered him. Carew.

UNESPIED. adj. Not seen; undiscovered;
undescried.
Treachery, guile, and deceit, are things which may for a while, but do not long, go unespied.
Hooker.

From living eyes her open shame to hide,
And live in rocks and caves long unespied. Spenser.
Nearer to view his prey, and unespied
To mark what of their state he more might learn.
Milton.
The second shaft came swift and unespied;
And pierc'd his hand, and nail'd it to his side.
Dryden.

UNESSENTIAL. adj.
1. Not being of the last importance; not constituting essence.
Tillotson was moved rather with pity, than indignation, towards the persons of those who suffered from him in the unesessential parts of Christianity. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Void of real being.
The void profound
Of unesessential night receives him next. Milton.

UNESTABLISHED. adj. Not established.
UNEVEN. adj.
From plain principles, doubt may be fairly solved, and not clapped up from petitionary foundations unestablished. Brown.

1. Not even; not level.
These high wild hills, and rough, uneven ways,
Draw out our miles, and make them wearisome.
Shaksp.

Some said it was best to fight with the Turks in that uneven, mountain country, where the Turk's chief strength consisting in the multitude of his horsemen should stand him in small stead.
Knolles's History.

They made the ground uneven about their nest,
inasmuch that the slate did not lie flat. Addison.

2. Not suiting each other; not equal.
The Hebrew verse consists of uneven feet.
Peacham.

UNEVENNESS. n. s.

1. Surface not level; inequality of surface.
This softness of the foot, which yields to the ruggedness and unevenness of the roads, renders the feet less capable of being worn than if they were more solid. Ray on the Creation.

That motion which can continue long in one and the same part of the body, can be propagated a long way from one part to another, supposing the body homogenous; so that the motion may not be reflected, refracted, interrupted, or dis-ordered by any unevenness of the body. Newton.

2. Turbulence; changeable state.
Edward II. though an unfortunate prince, and by reason of the troubles and unevenness of his reign, the very law itself had many interruptions; yet it held its current in that state his father had left it in. Hale.

3. Not smoothness.
Notwithstanding any such unevenness or indis-tinctness in the style of those places, concerning the origin and form of the earth.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

UNEVITABLE. [adj. [inevitabilis, Lat. inevitable, Fr.]] Inevitable; not to be escaped.
So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet begin to open my mouth to the un- evitable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion before it had a beginning. Sidney.

UNEVICTED. adj. Not exacted; not taken by force.
All was common, and the fruitful earth
Was free, to give her unevicted birth. Dryden.

UNEXAMINED. adj. Not inquired; not tried; not discussed.
Yet within these five hours Hastings liv'd Untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shaksp.
They utter all they think, with a violence and indisposition, unexamined, without relation to person, place, or fitness. Ben Jonson.

The most pompous seeming knowledge, that is built on the unexamined prejudices of sense, stands not. Glanville.

UNEXAMPLED. adj. Not known by any precedent or example.
Charles returned with unexampled loss from Algiers. Raleigh.

O unexampled love!
Love no where to be found less than divine. Milt.
God vouchsafed Enoch an unexampled exemption from death. Boyle.

Your twice-conquer'd vassals,
First, by your courage, then your clemency,
Here humbly vow to sacrifice their lives,
The gift of this your unexampled mercy,
To your command. Denham's Sophy.
Tune my pipe afresh, each night and day,
Thy unexampled goodness to extol. Phillips.

UNEXCEPTIONABLE. adj. Not liable to any objection.
Personal prejudices should not hinder us from pursuing, with joint hands and hearts, the un- exceptionable design of this pious institution. Atterb.

not done.
Leave unexecuted your own renowned knowledge.
Shaksp.

UNEXEMPLIFIED. adj. Not made known by instance or example.

Those wonders a generation returned with so unexemplified an ingratitude, that it is not the least of his wonders, that he would vouchsafe to work
any of them. Boyle.

This being a new, unexemplify'd kind of policy, must pass for the wisdom of this particular age, scorning the examples of all former ages. South.

UNEXEMPT. adj. Not free by peculiar privilege.

You invert the cov'nants of her trust,
And harshly deal, like an ill borrower,
With that which you receiv'd on other terms,
Scorning the unexempt condition
By which all mortal frailty must subsist. Milton.

UNEXERCISED. adj. Not practised; not experienced.

Messapus, with his ardour, warms
A heartless train, unexercis'd in arms. Dryden.
Abstract ideas are not so obvious to the yet un-exercised mind as particular ones. Locke.

What avail her unexhausted stores,
While proud oppression in her valleys reigns?
Addison.

UNEXPANDED. adj. Not spread out.
Every fetus bears a secret hard;
With sleeping, unexpanded issue stor'd. Blackmore.

UNEXPECTED. adj. Not thought on;
sudden; not provided against.

Have wisdom to provide always beforehand, that those evils overtake us not, which death unexpected doth use to bring upon careless men; and although it be sudden in itself, nevertheless, in regard of our prepared minds, it may not be sudden. Hooker.

Sith evils, great and unexpected, do cause oftentimes even them to think upon divine power with fearfullest suspicions, which have been otherwise the most sacred adorers thereof; how should we look for any constant resolution of mind in such cases, saying only where unfeigned affection to God hath bred the most assured confidence to be assisted by his hand? Hooker.

O unexpected stroke! worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, paradise? Milton's Par. Lost.
Them unexpected joy surpris'd,
When the great ensign of Messiah blaz'd. Milton.

Some amazement;
But such as sprung from wonder, not from fear,
It was so unexpected. Denham's Sophy.

To the pale foes they suddenly draw near,
And summon them to unexpected fight. Dryden.
Deep was the wound; he stagger'd with the blow,

And turn'd him to his unexpected foe. Dryden.
When Barcelona was taken by a most un- expected accident of a bomb lighting on the magazine, then the Catalonians revolted. Swift.

UNEXPECTEDLY. adv. Suddenly; at a time unthought of.

Oft he seems to hide his face,
But unexpectedly returns. Milton's Agonistes.

A most bountiful present, when I was most in want of it, came most seasonably and unexpectedly to my relief. Dryden.

If the concernment be poured in unexpectedly
upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off. Wake.

mercenary, legal, and therefore unficial, affection.

Boyle.

UNFINISHED. adj. Incomplete; not brought to an end; not brought to perfection; imperfect; wanting the last hand.

It is for that such outward ornament
Was lavish'd on their sex, that inward gifts
Were left for haste unfinish'd. Milton.

I did dedicate to you a very unfinished piece.

His hasty hand left his pictures so unfinished, that the beauty in the picture faded sooner than in the person after whom it was drawn. Spectator.

And now let conscious Cecil view the piece,
Where Virtue in her loveliest light is shewn;
Let these unfinish'd lays in part express
Your great forefather's bounties, and your own.

This collection contains not only such pieces as come under our review, but many others, even unfinish'd. Swift.

UNFIRM. adj.

1. Weak; feeble.

U N G

Nor what to bid, or what forbid, he knows ;
Th' ungovern'd teapest to such fury grows.

From her own back the hurden would remove,
And lays the load on his ungovern'd love. Dryden.
UNGRACEFUL. adj. Wanting elegance ; wanting beauty.

Raphael answer'd heav'n,
Nor are thy lips ungraceful, sire of men. Milton.
A solicitous watchfulness about one's behaviour, instead of being mended, it will be constrained,
uneasy, and ungraceful. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense, and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Without the first, learning is but an incumbrance ; and without the last is ungraceful. Addison.

UNGRACEFULNESS. n. s. Inelegance ; awkwardness.

To attempt the putting another genius upon him, will be labour in vain ; and what is so plaistered on, will have always hanging to it an un- gracefulness of constraint. Locke.

UNGRACIOUS. adj.

1. Wicked ; odious ; hateful.
He, catching hold of her ungracious tongue,
Thereon an iron lock did fasten firm and strong. Spenser.

I'll, in the mature time,
With this ungracious paper strike the sight
Of the death-practis'd duke. Shakesp. King Lear.

Do not, as some ungracious pastors do,
Shew me the steep and thorny way to heav'n ;
Whilst he, a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own rede. Shakesp. Hamlet.

To the gods alone
Our future offspring, and our wives are known :
Th' audacious strumpet and ungracious son. Dryden.

2. Offensive ; displeasing.
Shew me no parts which are ungracious to the sight, as all pie-shortenings usually are. Dryden.

turns for kindness.
No person was remarkably ungrateful, who was not also insufferably proud. South.

2. Making no returns for culture.
Most when driv'n by winds, the flaming storm
Of the long files destroys the beauteous form ;
Nor will the wither'd stock be green again ;
But the wild olive shoots, and shades th' ungrate- ful plain. Dryden.

3. Unpleasing ; unacceptable.
It cannot be ungrateful, or without some pleasure to posterity, to see the most exact relation of an action so full of danger. Clarendon.

What is in itself harsh and ungrateful, must make harsh and ungrateful impressions upon us. Asterbury.

UNGRATEFULLY. adj.

1. With ingratitude.
When call'd to distant war,
His vanquish'd heart remain'd a victim here :
Oriana's eyes that glorious conquest made ;
Nor was his love ungratefully repaid. Graville.

We often receive the benefit of our prayers when yet we ungratefully charge heaven with denying our petitions. Wake.

U N G

2. Unacceptably ; unpleasingly.

UNGRATEFULNESS. n. s.

1. Ingratitude ; ill return for good.
Can I, without the detestable stain of ungrate- fulness, abstain from loving him, who, far exceeding the beautifulness of his shape with the beautifulness of his mind, is content so to abase himself as to become Dametas's servant for my sake ? Sidney.

2. Unacceptableness ; displeasing quality.

UNGRAVELY. adv. Without seriousness.
His present portance
Gibingly, and ungravelly, he did fashion. Shakesp.

UNGROUND. adj. Having no foundation.

Ignorance, with an indifferency for truth, is nearer to it than opinion with ungrounded inclination, which is the great source of error. Locke.

This is a confidence the most ungrounded and irrational. For upon what ground can a man promise himself a future repentance, who cannot promise hims: if a futurity ? South.

UNGRUDGINGLY. adv. Without ill-will ; willingly ; heartily ; cheerfully.

If, when all his art and time is spent,
He say 'twill re'er he found, yet be content !
Receive from him the doom ungrudgingly,
Because he is the mouth of destiny. Donne.

UNGUARDED. adj.

1. Undefended.
Proud, art thou met ? Thy hope was to have reach'd
The throne of God unguarded, and his side Abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

All through th' unguarded gates with joy resort,
To see the slighted camp, the vacant port. Denham.
No door there was th' unguarded house to keep,
On creaking hinges turn'd, to break his sleep. Dryden.

2. Careless ; negligent ; not attentive to danger.

All the evils that proceed from an untied tongue, and an unguarded, unlimited will, we put upon the accounts of drunkenness. Taylor.

The spy, which does this treasure keep,
Does she ne'er say her pray'rs, nor sleep ?
Or have not gold and flatt'ry pow'r
To purchase one unguarded hour ? Prior.

With an unguarded look she now devour'd
My nearer face ; and now recall'd her eye,
And heav'd, and strove to hide a sudden sigh. Prior.

It was intended only to divert a few young ladies, of good sense and good humour enough to laugh not only at their sex's little unguarded follies, but at their own. Pope.

Are we not encompassed by multitudes, who watch every careless word, every unguarded action of our lives ? Rogers.

UNGUENT. n. s. [unguentum, Lat.] Ointment.

Pre-occupation of mind ever requireth preface of speech, like a fomentation to make the unguent enter. Bacon.

There is an intercourse between the magnetic unguent and the vulnerated body. Glanville.
With unguents smooth the lucid marble shone. Pope.

UNGUIDED. adj. Not directed ; not regulated.

The blood weeps from my heart, when I do shape,
In forms imaginary, th' unguid'd days
And rotten times that you shall look upon,
When I am sleeping with my ancestors. Shakesp.

Can unguided matter keep itself to such exact conformities, as not in the least spot to vary from the species ? Glanville.
They resolve all into the accidental, unguided
motions of blind matter. Locke.

U N H

Nature, void of choice,
Does by unguided motions things produce,
Regardless of their order.

UNHABITABLE. adj. [inhabitable, Fr.
inhabitabilis, Lat.] Not capable to support inhabitants ; uninhabitable.

The night and day was always a natural day of twenty-four hours, in all places remote from the unhabitable poles of the world, and winter and summer always measured a year. Holder.

Though the course of the sun be curbed between the tropicks, yet are not those parts directly subject to his perpendicular beams unhabitable, or extremely hot. Ray.

UNHACKED. adj. Not cut ; not hewn ;
not notched with cuts.

With a blessed and unweav'd retire,
With unhack'd swords, and helmets all unbruis'd,
We will bear home that lusty blood again. Shak.

Part with unhack'd edges, and bear back
Our targe undinted. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

UNHALLOW. v. a. To deprive of holiness ; to profane ; to desecrate.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, forestast'd fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common, and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

The vanity unhallows the virtue. L'Estrange.
This one use left such an indelible sacredness upon them, that the impiety of the design could be no sufficient reason to unhallow and degrade them to common use. South.

UNHALLOWED. adj. Unholy ; profane.

Thy curst spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who hang'd for human slaughter :

Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul fleet ;
And while thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam
Infus'd itself in thee. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

I had not thought to have unlock'd my lips
In this unhallow'd air, but that this juggler
Would think to charm my judgment, as mine eyes, Obruding false rules, prack'd in reason's garb. Milton.

Nor shall presume to violate these bands,
Or touch thy person with unhallow'd hands. Dryden.

Here cease thy flight, nor with unhallow'd lays Touch the fair fame of Albion's golden days. Pope.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

1. Impious; wicked.

We think not ourselves the holier, because we use it; so neither should they, with whom no such thing is in use, think us therefore unholy, because we submit ourselves unto that which, in a matter so indifferent, the wisdom of authority and law have thought comely. Hooker.

For other dreams my erring soul employ;
Far other raptures of unholy joy. Pope.

UNHO'NOURED. adj.

1. Not regarded with veneration; not celebrated.

Unhonour'd though I am, at least, said she,
Not unreve'nd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Pal's unhonour'd, Ceres unemploy'd,
Were all forgot. Dryden.

2. Not treated with respect.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unhonour'd, at a monarch's gate. Pope.

To UNHO'OP. v. a. To divest of hoops.

Unhoop the fair sex, and cure this fashionable tympany got among them. Addison.

UNHO'PED. adj. Not expected;

UNHO'PED for. § greater than hope had promised.

With unhop'd success
Th' ambassadors return with promis'd peace.
Dryden.

Hear'n has inspir'd me with a sudden thought,
Whence your unhop'd for safety may be wrought.
Dryden.

UNHO'PEFUL. adj. Such as leaves no room to hope.

Benedict is not the unhopefullest husband that I know: thus far I can praise him; he is of approved valour. Shakesp.

I thought the rousing style I wrote in might prove no unhopeful way to procure somewhat considerable from those great masters of chymical arcana. Boyle.

To UNHO'RSE. v. a. To beat from an horse; to throw from the saddle.

He would unhorse the lustiest challenger.

The emperor rescued a noble gentleman, whom, unhorsed and sore wounded, the enemy was ready to have slain. Knolles.

On a fourth he flies, and him unhorsed too.
Daniel.

They are fore'd
To quit their boats, and fare like men unhors'd.
Waller.

The knights unhors'd may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryden.

UNHO'SPITABLE. adj. [inhospitalis, Lat.]

Affording no kindness or entertainment to strangers; cruel; barbarous.

The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden.

UNHO'STILE. adj. Not belonging to an enemy.

The high-prancing steeds
Spurn their dismounted riders; they expire
Indignant, by unhostile wounds destroy'd. Phillips.

To UNHOUSE. v. a. To drive from the habitation.

Seek true religion: O where? Mirrens!
Thinking her unhous'd here, and fled from us, Seek her at Rome. Donne.

Death unawares, with his cold, kind embrace,
Unhous'd the virgin soul from her fair biding place.
Milton.

UNHO'SED. adj.

1. Homeless; wanting a house.

U N I

Call the creatures,
Whose naked natures live in all the spight
Of wreakful heav'n; whose bare, unhoused trunks,
To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature. Shakesp. Timon.

2. Having no settled habitation.

But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhous'd, free condition
Pat into circumscription and confine. Shak. Othello.
Hear this,
You unhous'd, lawless, rambling libertines!
Southern.

UNHO'SELLED. adj. Having not the sacrament.

Thus was I sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen at once dispatch'd;
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,

UNHUM'BLE. adj. Not humbled; not touched with shame or confusion.

Should I of these the liberty regard,
Who freed, as to their ancient patrimony,
Unhumbled, unrepent, unreformed,
Headlong would follow? Milton's Par. Regained.

UNHUR'T. adj. Free from harm.

Of fifteen hundred, eight hundred were slain in the field; and of the remaining seven hundred, two men only came off unhurt.
Bacon's War with Spain.

I tread more lightly on the ground;
My nimble feet from unhurt flows rebound;
I walk in air. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Supported by thy care,
Through burning climes I pass'd unhurt,
And breath'd in tainted air. Addison's Spectator.

The stars shall fade away;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt, amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.
Addison.

UNHUR'TFUL. adj. Innoxious; harmless; doing no harm.

You hope the duke will return no more, or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. Shakesp.
Flames unhurtful, hovering, dance in air.
Blackmore.

UNHUR'TFULLY. adv. Without harm; innoxiously.

We laugh at others as innocently and as unhurtfully as at ourselves. Pope to Swift.

UNICORN. n. s. [unicornis, unus and cornu, Lat.]

1. A beast, whether real or fabulous, that has only one horn.

Wert thou the unicorn, pride and wrath would confound thee. Shakesp. Timon.

Unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
Bears with glasses, men with flatterers. Shakesp.
Nature in cornigerous animals hath placed the horns inverted upwards, as in the rhinoceros, Indian ass, and unicorn beetles.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is not of consequence, that because Dioscorides hath made no mention of unicorns horns, there is therefore no such thing in nature.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some unicorns we will allow even among insects, as those nasicornous beetles described by Muffetus. Brown.

Will the fierce unicorn thy voice obey,
Stand at the crib, and feed upon the hay? Sandys.

2. A bird.

Of the unicorn bird, the principal marks are these; headed and footed like the dunghill cock, tailed like a goose, horned on his forehead, with some likeness as the unicorn is pictured; spurred on his wings, bigger than a swan. Grew.

UNIFORM. adj. [unus and forma.]

1. Keeping its tenour; similar to itself.

Though when confusedly mingled, as in this stratum, it may put on a face never so uniform and alike, yet it is in reality very different. Woodward.

2. Conforming to one rule; acting in the same manner; agreeing with each other.

U N I

The only doubt is about the manner of their unity, how far churches are bound to be uniform in their ceremonies, and what way they ought to take for that purpose. Hooker.

Creatures of what condition soever, though each in different manner, yet all with uniform consent, admire her, as the mother of their peace and joy. Hooker.

Numbers, being neither uniform in their designs, nor direct in their views, neither could manage nor maintain the power they got. Swift.

UNIFO'RMITY. n. s. [uniformité, Fr.]

1. Resemblance to itself; even tenour.

There is no uniformity in the design of Spenser; he aims at the accomplishment of no one action. Dryden.

Queen Elizabeth was remarkable for that steadiness and uniformity which ran through all her actions. Addison.

2. Conformity to one pattern; resemblance of one to another.

The unity of that visible body and church of Christ, consisteth in that uniformity which all the several persons thereunto belonging have, by reason of that one Lord whose servants they all profess themselves; that one faith which they all acknowledge; that one baptism wherewith they are all initiated. Hooker.

The great council of Nice ordained that there should be a constant uniformity in this case. Nelson.

UNIFORMLY. adv. [from uniform.]

1. Without variation; in an even tenour.

That faith received from the apostles, the church, though dispersed throughout the world, doth notwithstanding keep as safe, as if it dwelt within the walls of some one house, and as uniformly hold, as if it had but one only heart and soul. Hooker.

The capillamenta of the nerves are each of them solid and uniform; and the vibrating motion of the aethereal medium may be propagated along them from one end to the other uniformly, and without interruption. Newton's Opticks.

2. Without diversity of one from another.

UNIMAGINABLE. adj. Not to be imagined by the fancy; not to be conceived.

Things to their thought
So unimaginable, as hate in heaven.
Milton's Par. Lost.

The skilful organist plies his grave-fancied descant in lofty fugues, or the whole symphony, with artful and unimaginable touches, adorns and graces the well-studied chords of some choice composer. Milton on Education.

An infinite succession of the generations of men, without any permanent foundation, is utterly unimaginable. Tillotson.

UNIMAGINABLY. adv. To a degree not to be imagined

Little commissures, where they adhere, may not be porous enough to be pervious to the unimaginably subtle corpuscles, that make up the beans of light. Boyle.

UNIMITABLE. adj. [inimitable, Fr. inimitabilis, Lat.] Not to be imitated.

Both these are unimitable.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

UNIMORTAL. adj. Not immortal; mortal.

They betook them several ways,
Both to destroy, or unimmortal make
All kinds. Milton.

Milton.

No uninform'd minds can represent virtue so noble to us, that we necessarily add splendour to her.

Pope.

2. Unanimous; not enlivened.

UNINGENUOUS. adj. Illiberal; disingenuous.

Did men know how to distinguish between reports and certainties, this stratagem would be as unskilful as it is uningenuous.

Decay of Piety.

UNINHABITABLE. adj. Unfit to be inhabited.

If there be any place upon earth of that nature that paradise had, the same must be found within that supposed uninhabitable burnt zone, or within the tropicks.

U N I

Raleigh.

Had not the deep been form'd, that might contain
All the collected treasures of the main;
The earth had still o'erwhelm'd with water stood,
To man an uninhabitable flood.

Blackmore.

UNINHABITABLENESS. n. s. Incapacity of being inhabited.

Divers radicated opinions, such as that of the uninhabiteness of the torrid zone, of the solidity of the celestial part of the world, are generally grown out of request.

Boyle.

UNINHABITED. adj. Having no dwellers.

The whole island is now uninhabited.

Sundys.

Uninhabited, until'd, unown
It lies, and breeds the bleating goat alone.

Pope.

I cast anchor on the lee-side of the island, which seemed to be uninhabited.

Swift.

UNINJURED. adj. Unhurt; suffering no harm.

You may as well spread out the unsun'd heaps
Of misers' treasure by an outlaw's den,
And tell me it is safe; as bid me hope
Danger will let a helpless maiden pass
Uninjur'd in this wild, surrounding waste.

Milton.

Then in full age, and hoary holiness,
Retire, great teacher! to thy promis'd bliss:
Untouch'd thy tomb, uninjur'd be thy dust,
As thy own fame among the future just!

Prior.

UNINSCRIBED. adj. Having no inscription.

Make sacred Charles's tomb for ever known;
Obscure the place, and uninscrib'd the stone.
Oh fact accurst!

Pope.

UNINSPIRED. adj. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.

Thus all the truths that men, uninspired, are enlightened with, came into their minds.

Locke.

My pastoral muse her humble tribute brings,
And yet not wholly uninspir'd she sings.

Dryden.

UNINSTRUCTED. adj. Not taught; not helped by instruction.

That fool intrudes, raw in this great affair,
And uninstructed how to stem the tide.

Dryden.

It will be a prejudice to none but widows and orphans, and others uninstructed in the arts and management of more skilful men.

Locke.

It is an unspeakable blessing to be born in those parts where wisdom flourishes; though there are even in these parts several poor uninstructed persons.

Addison.

Though we find few amongst us who profess themselves Anthropomorphites, yet we may find, amongst the ignorant and uninstructed Christians, many of that opinion.

Locke.

UNINSTRUCTIVE. adj. Not conferring any improvement.

Were not men of abilities thus communicative, their wisdom would be in a great measure useless, and their experience uninstructive.

Addison.

UNINTELLIGENT. adj. Not knowing; not skilful; not having any consciousness.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses may be unintelligent of your insufficiency.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

The visible creation is far otherwise apprehended by the philosophical enquirer, than the unintelligent vulgar.

Glanville.

This conclusion if men allowed of, they would not destroy ill formed productions. Ay, but these monsters. Let them be so; what will your drivelling, unintelligent, untractable changeling be?

Locke.

Why then to works of nature is assign'd
An author unintelligent and blind;
When ours proceed from choice?

Blackmore.

The obvious products of unintelligent nature.

Dentley.

U N J

UNINTELLIGIBILITY. n. s. Quality of not being intelligible.

Credit the unintelligibility of this union and motion.

the thickness of a little pin.
Grew's Museum.

UNION. n. s. [unio, Lat.]

1. The act of joining two or more, so as to make them one.

Adam, from whose dear side I boast me sprung,
And gladly of our union hear thee speak,
One heart, one soul, in both! Milton's Paradise Lost.
One kingdom, joy, and union without end.
Milton.

2. Concord; conjunction of mind or interests.

The experience of those profitable emanations from God, most commonly are the first motive of our love; but when we once have tasted his goodness, we love the spring for its own excellency, passing from considering ourselves, to an union with God.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

3. A pearl. Not in use.

The king shall drink to Hamlet's better breath;
And in the cup an union shall he throw,
Richer than that which four successive kings
In Denmark's crown have worn. Shakesp. Hamlet.

4. [In law.] Union is a combining or consolidation of two churches in one, which is done by the consent of the bishop, the patron, and incumbent. And this is properly called an union: but there are two other sorts, as when one church is made subject to the other, and when one man is made prelate of both, and when a conventual is made cathedral. Touching union in the first signification, there was a statute, an. 37 Hen. VIII. chap. 21. that it should be lawful in two churches, whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds in the king's books, of the first fruits, and not above one mile distant from the other. Union in this signification is personal, and that is for the life of the incumbent; or real, that is, perpetual, whosoever is incumbent.

Cowell.

UNIPAROUS. adj. [unus and pario.] Bringing one at a birth.

Others make good the paucity of their breed with the duration of their days, whereof there want not examples in animals uniparous.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNISON. adj. [unus and sonus, Lat.] Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice Choral, or unison. Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNISON. n. s.

1. A string that has the same sound with another.

When moved matters meets with any thing like that from which it received its primary impress, it will in like manner move it, as in musical strings tuned unisons. Glanville.

2. A single unvaried note.

Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While a long, solemn unison went round. Pope.
Diversify'd amidst unison of chime,
Freer than air, yet manacled with rhyme. Harte.

UNIT. n. s. [unus, unitas, Lat.] One; the least number; or the root of numbers.

If any atom should be moved mechanically, without attraction, 'tis above a hundred million millions odds to an unit, that it would not strike upon any other atom, but glide through an empty interval without contract. Bentley.

Units are the integral parts of any large number.
Watts.

UNI

To UNITE. v. a. [unitus, Lat.]

1. To join two or more into one.

The force which went in two to be dispersed,
In one alone right hand he now unites. Spenser.

And force them with a constancy, the cardinal Cannot stand under them. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. To coalesce; to be cemented; to be consolidated.

3. To grow into one.

UNITEDLY. adv. With union; so as to join.

The eyes, which are of a watry nature, ought to be much painted, and unitedly on their lower parts; but boldly touched above by the light and shadows. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

UNITER. n. s. The person or thing that unites.

Suppose an uniter of a middle constitution, that should partake of some of the qualities of both.
Glanville.

UNITION. n. s. [union, Fr. from unite.] The act or power of uniting; conjunction; coalition. A word proper, but little used.

As long as any different substance keeps off the unition, hope not to cure a wound. Wisem. Surgery.

UNITIVE. adj. [from unite.] Having the power of uniting.

That can be nothing else but the unitive way of religion, which consists of the contemplation and love of God. Norris.

UNITY. n. s. [unitas, Lat.]

1. The state of being one.

Those hereticks introduced a plurality of gods;
and so made the profession of the unity part of the symbolum, that should discriminate the orthodox from them. Hammard.

The production of one being the destruction of another, although they generate, they increase not; and must not be said to multiply, who do not transcend an unity. Brown.

Man is to beget
Like of his like; his image multiply'd:
In unity defective; which requires
Collateral love, and dearest unity.

Whatever we can consider as one thing, suggests to the understanding the idea of unity. Locke.

2. Concord; conjunction.

That which you hear, you'll swear
You see, there is such unity in the proofs. Shakesp.
Nor can we call those many, who endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace.
By this, said our Saviour, shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another; and this is the unity of charity. Pearson.

UNI

Take unity then out of the world, and it dissolves into a chaos. Holyday.

We, of all Christians, ought to promote unity among ourselves and others. Spratt's Sermons.

3. Agreement; uniformity.

To the avoiding of dissenion, it availeth much, that there be amongst them an unity, as well in ceremonies as in doctrine. Hooker.

4. Principle of dramattick writing, by which the tenour of the story, and propriety of representation, is preserved.

The unities of time, place, and action, are exactly observed. Dryden's Preface to All for Love.

Although in poetry it be absolutely necessary that the unities of time, place, and action, should be thoroughly understood, there is still something more essential, that elevates and astonishes the fancy. Addison.

5. [In law.]

Unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles. For example, I take a lease of land from one upon a certain rent; and afterwards I buy the fee-simple. This is an unity of possession, whereby the lease is extinguished; by reason that I, who had before the occupation only for my rent, am become lord of the same, and am to pay my rent to none. Cowell.

UNJUDGED. adj. Not judicially determined.

Causes unjudg'd disgrace the loaded file,
And sleeping laws the king's neglect revile. Prior.

UNIVERSAL. adj. [universalis, Lat.]

1. General; extending to all.

All sorrowed: if all the world could have seen 't,
the woe had been universal. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Appetite, an universal wolf,
So doubly seconded with will and power,
Must make perforce an universal prey,
And last eat up itself. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Divine laws and precepts, simply and formally moral, are universal, in respect of persons, and in regard of their perpetual obligation. White.

This excellent epistle, though, in the front of it,
it bears a particular inscription, yet in the drift of it is universal, as designing to convince all mankind of the necessity of seeking for happiness in the gospel. South.

No subject can be of universal, hardly can it be of general concern. Reynolds.

2. Total; whole.

From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Not particular; comprising all particulars.

From things particular
She doth abstract the universal kinds. Davies.

An universal was the object of imagination, and there was no such thing in reality. Arbuth. and Pope.

UNIVERSAL. n. s. The whole; the general system of the universe. Not in use.

To what end had the angel been set to keep the entrance into paradise after Adam's expulsion, if the universal had been paradise?

Raleigh's History of the World.
Plato calleth God the cause and original, the nature and reason of the universal. Raleigh.

UNIVERSALITY. n. s. [universalitas, school Lat.] Not particularity; generality; extension to the whole.

This catholicism, or second affection of the church, consisteth generally in universality, as embracing all sorts of persons, as to be disseminated through all nations, as comprehending all ages, as containing all necessary and saving truths, as obliging all conditions of men to all kind of obedience, as curing all diseases, and planting all graces in the souls of men. Pearson.

This catalogue of sin is but of sin under a limitation; an universality of sin under a certain kind;
that is, of all sins of direct and personal commission. Smith.

The universality of the deluge I insist upon; and that marine bodies are found in all parts of the world. Woodward.

U N J

A special conclusion cannot be inferred from a moral universality, nor always from a physical one; though it may be always inferred from an universality that is metaphysical. Watts.

He might have seen it in an instance or two; and he mistook accident for universality. Reynolds.

UNIVERSALLY. adv. [from universal.] Throughout the whole; without exception.

Those offences which are breaches of supernatural laws, violate in general that principle of reason, which willeth universally to fly from evil.

There best beheld, where universally admir'd. Hooker.

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own, in coin as good, and as universally valuable. Milton.

This institution of charity-schools universally prevailed. Dryden.

UNIVERSE. n. s. [univers, Fr. universum, Lat.] The general system of things.

Creeping murmur, and the poring dark, Fills the wide vessel of the universe. Shal. esp.

How much I have disabled my estate. Shakesp.
Many are the trees of God, that grow
In Paradise, and various, yet unknown
To us. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Here may I always on this downy grass,
Unknown, unseen, my easy minutes pass!
Roscommon.

If any chance has hither brought the name
Of Palamedes, not unknown to fame,
Accus'd and sentenc'd for pretended crimes.
Dryden.

Though incest is indeed a deadly crime,
You are not guilty, since unknown 'twas done,
And, known, had been abhor'd.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

At fear of death, that saddens all
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne;
Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown?
Pope.

2. Greater than is imagined.
The planting of hemp and flax would be an unknown advantage to the kingdom. Bacon.

3. Not having cohabitation.
I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn. Shakesp.

4. Without communication.
At a little inn, the man of the house, formerly a servant in the family, to do honour to his old master, had, unknown to Sir Roger, put him up in a sign-post. Addison.

Himself refreshing with the liquid cold. Spenser.
The helmet from my brow unlac'd. Pope's Odyssey.

2. To loose a woman's dress.
Can I forget, when they in prison placing her,
With swelling heart, in spite, and due disdainfulness,
She lay for dead, till I help'd with unlacing her?
Sidney.

Unlace yourself, for that harmonious chime
Tells me from you, that now it is bed-time. Donne.

3. To divest of ornaments.
You unlace your reputation,
And spend your rich opinion for the name
Of a night-brawler. Shakesp. Othello.

To UNLACE. v. a.
1. To remove from the vessel which carries.
He 's a foolish seaman,
That, when his ship is sinking, will not Unlade his hopes into another bottom. Denham.

2. To exonerate that which carries.
The vent'rous merchant, who design'd for far,
And touches on our hospitable shore,
Charm'd with the splendour of this northern star,
Shall here unlade him, and depart no more. Dryd.

3. To put out. Used of a vessel.
We landed at Tyre; for there the ship was to unlade her burden. Acts, xxi. 5

UNLAD. adj.
1. Not placed; not fixed.
Whatsoever we do behold now in this present world, it was inwrapped within the bowels of divine mercy, written in the book of eternal wisdom, and held in the hands of omnipotent power, the first foundations of the world being as yet unlaid.
Hooker.

2. Not pacified; not stilled; not suppressed.
No evil thing that walks by night,
Blue, meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity. Milton.

permitted.
If those alleged testimonies of scripture did indeed concern the matter to such effect as was pretended, that which they should infer were unlawfulness. Hooker.

The original reason of the unlawfulness of lying is, that it carries with it an act of injustice, and a violation of the rights of him to whom we were obliged to signify our minds. South.

2. Illegitimacy.
To UNLEARN. v. a. To forget, or disuse,
what has been learned.

Antisthenes, being asked of one, what learning was most necessary for man's life? answered, To unlearn that which is naught.

This were to imply, that all books in being should be destroyed; and that all the age should take new pains to unlearn those habits which have cost them so much labour. Holder.

The government of the tongue is a piece of morality which sober nature dictates, which yet our greatest scholars have unlearned. Decay of Piety.

Some cyders have by art, or age, unlearn'd
Their genuine relish, and of sundry wines
Assum'd the flavour. Phillips.

What they thus learned from him in one way,
they did not unlearn again in another. Atterbury.

A wicked man is not only obliged to learn to do well, but unlearn his former life. Rogers.

UNLEARNED. adj.
1. Ignorant; not informed; not instructed.

it was not leavened. Exodus, ii. 39.

UNLEISUREDNESS. n. s. Business; want of time; want of leisure. Not in use.
My essay touching the scripture having been written partly in England, partly in another kingdom, it were strange if there did not appear much unevenness, and if it did not betray the unleisuredness of the wandering author. Boyle.

UNLESS. conjunct. Except; if not;
supposing that not.
Let us not say, we keep the commandments of the one, when we break the commandments of the other.

U N L

U N I

U N L

the other: for, unless we observe both, we obey neither. Hooker.

Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon. Shakesp.

What hidden strength,
Unless the strength of heav'n, if you mean that? Milton.

For sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms;
Nor can my strength avail, unless by thee
Endu'd with force I gain the victory. Dryden.

The commendation of adversaries is the greatest triumph of a writer, because it never comes unless extorted. Dryden.

No poet ever sweetly sung,
Unless he were, like Phebus, young;
Nor ever nymph inspir'd to rhyme,
Unless, like Venus, in her prime. Swift.

UNLESSONED. adj. Not taught.

The full sum of me
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd;
Happy in this, she is not yet so old
But she may learn. Shakesp.

UNLETTERED. adj. Unlearned; untaught.

When the apostles of our Lord were ordained to alter the laws of heathenish religion, St. Paul

UNLICENSED. adj. Having no regular permission.

Ask what boldness brought him hitber Unlicensed. Milton's Par. Lost.

Warn the thoughtless, self-confiding train,
No more, unlicens'd, thus to brave the main. Pope.

UNLICKED. adj. Shapeless; not formed: from the opinion that the bear licks her young to shape.

Shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or unlick'd bear-whelp. Shakesp.

Those unlickt bear-whelps. Donne.

The bloody bear, an independent beast,
Unlick'd to form, in groans her hate express. Dryden.

UNLIGHTED. adj. Not kindled; not set on fire.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth:
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame. Dryden.

The sacred wood, which on the altar lay,
Untouch'd, unlighted glows. Prior.

UNLIGHTSOME. adj. Dark; gloomy; wanting light.

First the sun,
A mighty sphere! he fram'd, unlightsome first,
Though of æthereal mould. Milton.

UNLIKE. adj.

1. Dissimilar; having no resemblance.

Where cases are so unlike as theirs and ours, I see not how that which they did should induce, much less enforce us to the same practice. Hooker.

No the twins humours, in our Venice, are Unlike; this harsh and rude, that smooth and fair. Denham.

Unlike the niceness of our modern dames;
Affected nymphs, with new affected names. Dryd.

Our ideas, whilst we are awake, succeed one another not much unlike the images in the inside of a lantern. Locke.

Some she disgrac'd, and some with honours crown'd;
Unlike successes equal merits found. Pope.

UNLINEAL. adj. Not coming in the order of succession.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe,
Thence to be wrench'd, with an unlineal hand,
No son of mine succeeding. Shakesp. Mucheth.

To UNLINK. v. a. To untwist; to open.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself;
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself. Shakesp.

UNLIQUIFIED. adj. Unmelted; undissolved.

These huge, unwieldy lumps, remained in the melted matter rigid and unliquified, floating in it like cakes of ice in a river. Addison on Italy.

To UNLOAD. v. a.

1. To disburden; to exonerate; to free from load.

Like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloadeth thee. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Vain man, forbear, of cares unload thy mind;
Forget thy hopes, and give thy fears to wind. Cræch.

vacuum. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Resistless; such as cannot be opposed.
Those gods, whose unresisted might Hath sent me to these regions void of sight.
Dryden.

What wonder, then, thy hairs should feel
The conquering force of unresisted steel? Pope.

UNRESISTING. adj. Not opposing; not making resistance.

The sheep was sacrific'd on no pretence,
But meek and unresisting innocence:
A patient useful creature. Dryden.

Since the planets move horizontally through the liquid and unresisting spaces of the heavens, where no bodies at all, or inconsiderable ones occur, they may preserve the same velocity which the first impulse impressed. Bentley.

UNRESOLVABLE. adj. Not to be solved; insoluble.

For a man to run headlong, while his ruin stares him in the face, still to press on to the embraces of sin, is a problem unresolvable upon any other ground, but that sin infatuates before it destroys.
South.

UNRESOLVED. adj.

1. Not determined; having made no resolution: sometimes with of.
On the western coast
Rideth a puissant navy: to our shores
Throng many doubtful, hollow-hearted friends,

Before their rage grew to so great unrest. Spenser.

Repose, sweet gold, for their unrest,
That have their alms out of the empress' chest.
Shakesp.

Dismay'd confusion all possess'd
Th' afflicted troop, hearing their plot describ'd;
Then runs amaz'd distress, with sad unrest,
To this, to that; to fly, to stand, to hide. Daniel.
Silence, in truth, would speak my sorrows best,
For deepest wounds can least their feelings tell;
Yet let me borrow from mine own unrest
But time to bid him, whom I lov'd, farewell. Wotton.

Up they rose,
As from unrest; and each the other viewing,
Soon found their eyes how open'd, and their minds
How darken'd! Milton's Paradise Lost.

UNRESTORED. adj.

1. Not restored.

My hours my own, my pleasures unrestrain'd. Dryden.

2. Licentious; loose.
The taverns he daily doth frequent,
With unrestrained, loose companions. Shakesp.

3. Not limited.
Were there in this aphorism an unrestrained truth, yet were it not reasonable to infer from a caution a non-usance, or abolition. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

UNRETRACTED. adj. Not revoked; not recalled.

The penitence of the criminal may have numbered him amongst the saints, when our unretracted uncharitableness may send us to unquenchable flames. Government of the Tongue.

Nothing but plain malevolence can justify dis-union; malevolence shewn in a single outward act, unretracted, or in habitual ill-nature.
Collier on Friendship.

UNREVEALED. adj. Not told; not discovered.

Had ye once seen these her celestial treasures,
And unrevealed pleasures,
Then would ye wonder, and her praises sing.
Spenser.

Dear, fatal name! rest ever unreveal'd;
Nor pass these lips, in holy silence seal'd! Pope.

UNREVENGED. adj. Not revenged.

So might we die, not envying them that live;
So would we die, not unrevenged all. Fairfax.
Unhonour'd though I am,
Not unreveng'd that impious act shall be. Dryden.
Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,
And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst us.
Addison.

UNREVEREND. adj. Irreverent; disrespectful.

See not your bride in these unreverent robes.

Rhodes is the sovereign of the sea no more;
 Their ships unrigg'd, and spent their naval store. Dryden.

UNRIGHT. adj. Wrong. In Spenser, this word should perhaps be untight.

What in most English writers useth to be loose, and as it were unright, in this author is well grounded, nicely framed, and strongly trussed up together. Spenser's Glossary to Kalendar.
 Shew that thy judgment is not unright. Il'sidom, xii.

UNRIGHTÉOUS. adj. Unjust; wicked; sinful; bad.

Octavius here leapt into his room,
 And it usurped by unrighteous dooin;
 But he his title justified by might. Spenser.
 Within a month!

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
 Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
 She married—Oh most wicked speed!
 Let the wicked man forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return unto the Lord. Isaiah, lv.

UNRIGHTÉOUSLY. adv. Unjustly; wickedly; sinfully.

For them
 Their foes a deadly Shibboleth devise:
 By which unrighteously it was decreed,
 That none to trust or profit should succeed,
 Who would not swallow first a poisonous wicked weed. Dryden.
 A man may fall undeservedly under publick disgrace, or is unrighteously oppressed. Collier on Pride.

UNRIGHTÉOUSNESS. n. s. Wickedness; injustice.

Our Romanists can no more abide this proposition converted, than themselves. All sin, say they, is a transgression of the law; but every transgression of the law is not sin. The apostle, therefore, turns it for us: all unrighteousness, says he, is sin; but every transgression of the law is unrighteousness, saith Austin upon this place. Hall.
 Some things have a natural deformity in them, as perjury, perfidiousness, unrighteousness, and ingratitude. Tillotson.

UNRIGHTFUL. adj. Not rightful; not just.

Thou, which know'st the way
 To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again
 To pluck him headlong from th' usurped throne. Shakesp.

Be forc'd to impeach a broken hedge,
 And pigs unring'd at vis. franc. pledge. Hudibras.

To UNRIP. v. a. [This word is improper, there being no difference between rip and unrip, and the negative particle is therefore of no force; yet it is well authorised.] To cut open.

Like a traitor
 Didst break that vow, and, with thy treacherous blade, Unrip'dst the bowels of thy sov'reign's son. Shakesp.

He could not now, with his honour, so unrip, and put a lye upon all that he had said and done before, as to deliver him up. Bacon's Henry VII.

We are angry with searchers when they break open trunks, and unrip packs, and open sealed letters. Taylor.

Cato well observes, that friendship ought not to be unripp'd, but unstitch'd. Collier.

UNRIPE. adj.

1. Immature; not fully concocted.

Purpose is of violent birth, but poor validity; which now, like fruits unripe, sticks on the tree, But fall unshaken when they mellow be. Shakesp.
 In this northern tract, our hoarser throats
 Utter unripe and ill-constrained notes. Waller.

2. Not seasonable; not yet proper.

He, fix'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
 Sought not the garden, but retir'd unseen
 To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen. Dryden.

3. Too early.

Who hath not heard of the valiant, wise, and just Doriaus, whose unripe death doth yet, so many years since, draw tears from virtuous eyes? Sidney.

UNRIPENED. adj. Not matured.

Were you with these, you'd soon forget
 The pale, unripen'd beauties of the north. Addison's Cato.

UNRIPENESS. n. s. Immaturity; want of ripeness.

The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weigh'd; and generally it is good to commit the beginnings of all great actions to Argus, with his hundred eyes; and the ends to Briareus, with his hundred hands. Bacon.

UNRIVALÉD. adj.

To eat with unwashen hands defileth not a man. Matth. xv.

He accepts of no unclean, no unwashed sacrifice; and if repentance usher not in, prayer will never find admittance. Durpa.

When the Beece is shorn, if sweat remains Unwash'd, it soaks into their empty veins. Dryd.

UNWA'STED. adj. Not consumed; not diminished.

Why have those rocks so long unwasted stood, Since, lavish of their stock, they through the flood Have, ages past, their melting crystal spread, And with their spoils the liquid regions fed? Blackm.

UNWA'STING. adj. Not growing less; not decaying.

Purest love's unwasting treasure; Constant faith, fair hope, long leisure; Sacred Hymn! these are thine, Pope.

UNWA'YED. adj. Not used to travel; not seasoned in the road.

Beasts that have been rid off their legs are as much for a man's use as colts that are unwayed, and will not go at all. Suckling.

UNWEA'KENED. adj. Not weakened.

By reason of the exsuction of some air out of the glass, the elastical power of the remaining air was very much debilitated, in comparison of the unweakened pressure of the external air. Boyle.

UNWEAPONED. adj. Not furnished with offensive arms.

As the beasts are armed with fierce teeth, paws, horns, and other bodily instruments of much advantage against unweaponed men; so hath reason taught man to strengthen his hand with such offensive arms, as no creature else can well avoid. Raleigh.

UNWEA'RIBLE. adj. Not to be tired; indefatigable.

Desire to resemble him in goodness, maketh them unweariable. Hooker.

UNWEARIED. adj.

A winged virtue through th' ethereal sky, From orb to orb, unwearied dost thou fly. Tickell.

An unwearied devotion in the service of God recommended the gospel to the world. Rog. Scorr.
The righteous shall certainly be saved; but then the Christian character of a righteous man implies a constant, unwearied perseverance in many painful instances of duty. Rogers.

TO UNWEARY. v. a. To refresh after weariness.

It unwearies and refreshes more than any thing, after too great labour. Temple.

UNWED. adj. Unmarried.

This servitude makes you to keep unwed. Shak.

UNWEDGEABLE. adj. Not to be cloven.

Merciful heaven! Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak, Than the soft myrtle. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

UNWEE'DED. adj. Not cleared from weeds.

Fie! 'tis an unweed'd garden, That grows to seed; and things rank, and gross in nature, Possess it merely. Shakesp. Hamlet.

UNWEE'PED. adj. Not lamented. Now unweept.

He must not float upon his watry bier Unweept, and welter on the parching wind, Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milt.

UNWEE'TING. adj. Ignorant; unknowing.

Her seeming dead he found with feigned fear, As all unwee'ting of that well she knew; And pain'd himself with busy care to rear Her out of careless swoon. Spenser.

But contrary, unwee'ting he fulfill'd The purpos'd counsel, pre-ordain'd and fix'd, Of the Most High. Milton.

UNWEIGHED. *adj.1. Not examined by the balance.

Solomon left all the vessels unweighed, because they were exceeding many. 1 Kings, vii.

2. Not considerate; negligent.

What unweighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard pickt out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner essay me? why, he hath not been thrice in my company. Shakesp.
Daughter, what words have pass'd thy lips unweigh'd?

Deem not unjustly by my doom oppress,
Of human race the wisest and the best. Pope's Ody.

UNWEIGHING. adj. Inconsiderate; thoughtless.

Wise? why, no question but he was—a very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow. Shakesp.

UNWELCOME. adj. Not pleasing; not grateful; not well received.

Such welcome and unwelcome things at once
'Tis hard to reconcile. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Soon as th' unwelcome news

From earth arriv'd at heaven-gate, displeas'd
All were who heard. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Though he that brings unwelcome news
Has but a losing office, yet he that shews
Your danger first, and then your way to safety,
May heal that wound he made. Denham's Sophy.

Forc'd from her presence, and condemn'd to
live;

Unwelcome freedom, and unthank'd relieve!
Dryden.

From the very first instances of perception, some things are grateful, and others unwelcome to them; some things that they incline to, and others that they fly.

Such hasty nights as these would give very unwelcome interruptions to our labours. Bentley's Sermon.

UNWELT. adj. Not lamented; not be-moaned.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd;
Your widow dolorous likewise be unwept.

We, but the slaves that mount you to the throne;
A base, ignoble crowd, without a name;
Unwept, unworthy of the funeral flame;
By duty bound to forfeit each his life. Dryden.

UNWET. adj. Not moist.

Once I meant to meet
My fate with face unmov'd, and eyes unwet;
Yet since I have thee here in narrow room,
My tears shall set thee first afloat within thy tomb. Dryden.

UNWHIPT. adj. Not punished; not corrected with the rod.

Tremble, thou wretch,
That hast within thee undivulged crimes
Unwhipt of justice! Shakesp. King Lear.
Once I caught him in a lie;
And then, unwhipt, he had the sense to cry. Pope.

UNWHOLESOME. adj.

1. Insalubrious; mischievous to health.
The discovery of the disposition of the air is good for the prognosticks of wholesome and unwholesome years. Bacon.
There I a prisoner chain'd, scarce freely draw
The air imprison'd also, close and damp,
Unwholesome draught; but here I find amends,
The breath of heav'n fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day-spring born; here leave me to respire. Milton.

How can any one be assured, that his meat and drink are not poisoned, and made unwholesome, before they are brought to him? South.

Rome is never fuller of nobility than in summer; for the country towns are so infested with unwholesome vapours, that they dare not trust themselves in them while the heats last. Addis. on Italy.

Children, born healthy, often contract diseases from an unwholesome nurse. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. Corrupt; tainted.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity; this gross, watry pumption; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays. Shakesp.

UNWIELDILY. adv. Heavily; with difficult motion.

Unwieldily they walk first in ooze;
Then in the shady covert seek repose. Dryden.

UNWIELDINESS. n. s. Heaviness; difficulty to move, or be moved.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown,
But that I made it feed upon
That which love worst endures, discretion! Donne.

The supposed unwieldiness of its massy bulk, grounded upon our experience of the inaptitude of great and heavy bodies to motion, is a mere imposture of our senses. Glanville.

UNWIELDY. adj. Unmanageable; not easily moving or moved; bulky; weighty; ponderous.

An agree, meeting many humours in a fat unwieldy body of fifty-eight years old, in four or five fits carried him out of the world. Clarendon.

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unwieldy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Unwieldy sums of wealth, which higher mount
Than files of marshall'd figures can account. Dryden.

Nothing here th' unwieldy rock avails,
Rebounding harmless from the plaited scales,
That, firmly join'd, preserv'd him from a wound,
With native armour crusted all around. Addis. Ode.

What carriage can bear away all the rude and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once?
Watts on the Mind.

UNWILLING. adj. Loath; not contented; not inclined; not complying by inclination.

The nature of man is unwilling to continue doing that wherein it shall always condemn itself. Hooker.

If thou dost find him tractable,
Encourage him, and tell him all our reasons:
If he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling,
Be thou so too. Shakesp. Richard III.

If the sun rise unwilling to his race,
Clouds on his brows, and spots upon his face,
Suspect a drizzling day. Dryden.

Heaven's unchang'd decrees attentive hear;
More pow'ful gods have torn thee from my side,
Unwilling to resign, and doom'd a bride. Dryden.

At length I drop, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, keep your piece nine years. Pope.

UNWILLINGLY. adv. Not with good will; not without loathness.

The whining school-boy, with his satchel,
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. Shakesp. As you like it.

A feast the people hold to Dagon, and forbid
Laborious works, unwillingly this rest
Their superstition yields. Milton.

By seas or skies, unwillingly they stay'd. Denham.
These men were once the prince's loves, and then Unwillingly they made him great: but now,
Being his friends, shall willingly undo him. Denh.

The dire contagion spreads so fast,
That, where it seizes, all relief is vain;
And therefore must unwillingly lay waste
That country, which would else the foe maintain. Dryden.

UNWILLINGNESS. n. s. Loathness; disinclination.

Obedience, with professed unwillingness to obey, is no better than manifest disobedience. Hooker.

What moved the man to yield to her persuasions? Even the same cause that hath moved all men since, an unwillingness to grieve her, and make her sad, lest she should pine, and be overcome with sorrow. Raleigh's History of the World.

I see with what unwillingness
You lay upon me this command, and through your fears Discern your love, and therefore must obey you. Denham.

There is in most people a reluctance and unwillingness to be forgotten. We observe, even among the vulgar, how fond they are to have an inscription over their grave. Swift.

To UNWIND. v. a. pret. and part. passive unwound.1. To separate any thing convolved; to untwist; to untwine.

All his subjects having by some years learned so to hope for good and fear harm, only from her, that it should have needed a stronger virtue than his, to have unwound so deeply an entered vice. Sidney.

Empirick politicians use deceit:
You holdy shew that skill which they pretend,
And work by means as noble as your end;
Which should you veil, we might unwind the clue,
As men do nature, till we came to you. Dryden.

2. To disentangle; to loose from entanglement.

Desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skillful as in every point to unwind themselves, where the snares of glosing speech lie to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter invectives against that, which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy. Hooker.

As you unwind her love from him,
Lest it should ravel, and be good to none,
Bottom it on me. Shakesp. Two Gent. of Verona.

To UNWIND. v. n. To admit evolution.

Put the bottoms into clean scalding water, and they will easily unwind. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWIPED. adj. Not cleaned by rubbing.

Their hands and faces were all badg'd with blood,
So were their daggers, which unwip'd we found Upon their pillows. Shakesp. Macbeth.

UNWISE. adj. Weak; defective in wisdom.

O good, but most unwise patricians! why,
You grave, but reckless senators, have you thus Giv'n Hydra here to chuse an officer? Shakesp. Coriol.

Be not ta'en tardy by unwise delay. Shakesp.
He who of those delights can judge, and spare
To interpose them oft, is not unwise. Milton.

This the Greeks say, this the barbarians; the wise and the unwise. Tillotson.

When kings grow stubborn, slothful, or unwise,
Each private man for publick good should rise. Dryden.

When the balance of power is duly fixt in a state, nothing is more dangerous or unwise, than to give way to the first steps of popular encroachments. Swift.

UNWISELY. adv. Weakly; not prudently; not wisely.

Lady Zelmauc, like some, unwisely liberal, that more delight to give presents than pay debts, chose rather to bestow her love upon me, than to recompense him. Sidney.

Unwisely we the wiser east
Pity, supposing them oppress'd
With tyrant's force. Waller.

To UNWISH. v. a. To wish that which is, not to be.

My liege, would you and I alone,
Without more help, could fight this royal battle.
—Why now thou hast unwish'd five thousand men;
Which likes me better than to wish us one. Shak.

To desire there were no God, were plainly to unwish their own being, which must be annihilated in the abstraction of that essence which substantially supporteth them. Brown.

UNWISHED. adj. Not sought; not desired.

So jealous is she of my love to her daughter, that I never yet began to open my mouth to the unavoidable Philoclea, but that her unwished presence gave my tale a conclusion before it had a beginning. Sidney.

To his unwished yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty. Shakesp.
While heaping unwish'd wealth I distant roam,
The best of brothers at his natal home,
By the dire fury of a traitress wife,
Ends the sad evening of a stormy life. Pope.

UNWIS'T. adj. Unthought of; not known. Spenser.

To UNWIT. r. a. To deprive of understanding. Not used.

Friends all but now; even now
In quarter, and in terms like bride and groom
Divesting them for bed; and then but now,
As if some planet had unwitted men,
Swords out, and tilting one at other's breast. Shakesp.

UNWITHDRAW'ING. adj. Continually liberal.

Wherefore did Nature pour her bounties forth,
With such a full and unwithdrawing hand,
Covering the earth with odours, fruits, and flocks? Milton.

UNWITHSTOOD. adj. Not opposed.

And Agincourt, deep ting'd with blood, confess
What the Silures vigour unwithstood
Could do in rigid fight. Phillips.

UNWITNESSED. adj. Wanting testimony; wanting notice.

Let their zeal to the cause should any way be unwitnessed. Hooker.

UNWITTINGLY. adv. [properly unwittingly, from unwetting.] Without knowledge; without consciousness.

In these fatal things it falls out that the high-working powers make second causes unwittingly necessary to their determinations. Sidney.

Those things are termed most properly natural agents, which keep the law of their kind unwittingly, as the heavens and elements of the world, which can do no otherwise than they do. Hooker.

Atheists repudiate all title to heaven, merely for present pleasure; besides the extreme madness of running such a desperate hazard after death, they unwittingly deprive themselves here of that tranquillity they seek for. Bentley.

UNWONTED. adj.

1. Uncommon; unusual; rare; infrequent.

His sad, dull eyes, sunk deep in hollow pits,
Could not endure th' unwonted sun to view. Spenser.

My father's of a better nature
Than he appears by speech; this is unwonted
Which now came from him. Shakesp.

Every unwonted meteor is portentous, and some divine prognostick. Glawville.

Thick breath, quick pulse, and heaving of my heart,
All signs of some unwonted change appear. Dryden.

2. Unaccustomed; unused.

Philoclea, who blushing, and withal smiling, making shamefacedness pleasant, and pleasure shamefaced, tenderly moved her feet, unwonted to feel the naked ground. Sidney.

Sea-calves unwonted to fresh waters fly. May.
O how oft shall he
On faith and changed gods complain; and seas,
Rough with black winds and storms,
Unwonted shall admire. Milton.

UNWORKING. adj. Living without labour.

Lazy and unworking shopkeepers in this being worse than gamblers, do not only keep so much of the money of a country in their hands, but make the publick pay them for it. Locke.

UNWORSHIPPED. adj. Not adored.

He resolv'd to leave
Unworshipp'd, unobey'd, the throne supreme. Milton.

U N W

UNWORTHILY. adv. Not according to desert; either above or below merit.

I vow'd, base knight,
To tear the garter from thy craven leg,
Which I have done, because unworthily
Thou wast installed. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Fearing lest my jealous aim might err,
And so unworthily disgrace the mau,
I gave him gentle looks. Shakesp.

If we look upon the Odyssey as all a fiction, we consider it unworthily. It ought to be read as a story founded upon truth, adorned with embellishments of poetry. Broome.

UNWORTHINESS. n. s. Want of worth; want of merit.

A mind fearing the unworthiness of every word that should be presented to her ears, at length brought it forth in this manner. Sidney.

O let not an excellent spirit do itself such wrong, as to think, where it is placed, embraced, and loved, there can be any unworthiness; since the weakest mist is not easilier driven away by the sun, than that is chased away with so high thoughts. Sidney.

Every night he comes with songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves, for he persists. Shakesp.

I fear'd to find you in another place;
But, since you're here, my jealousy grows less:
You will be kind to my unworthiness. Dryden.

Have a true and humble sense of your own unworthiness, which will not suffer you to rise to a confidence unwarrantably pretended to by some. Wake on Death.

UNWORTHY. adj.

1. Not deserving; whether good or bad.

The Athanasian creed and doxology should remain in use; the one as a most divine explication of the chiefest articles of our Christian belief; the other as an heavenly acclamation of joyful applause to his praises, in whom we believe: neither the one nor the other unworthy to be heard sounding, as they are in the church of Christ. Hooker.

Every particular accident, not unworthy the remembrance, for brevity I wittingly pass over. Knolles.

2. Wanting merit.

Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest shews as fairly in the mask. Shak.
Are there unworthy men chosen to offices? Whitgifte.

So may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain;
And die with grieving. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

3. Mean; worthless; contemptible.

Tell me, Philoclea, did you ever see such a shepherd? did you ever hear of such a prince? and then tell me if a small or unworthy assault have conquered me? Sidney.

4. Not suitable; not adequate.

I laid at her feet a work, which was unworthy her, but which I hope she will forgive. Dryden.
Our friend's papers are in my hands, and I will take care to suppress things unworthy of him. Pope to Swift.

Care is taken to intersperse additions in such a manner, that scarce any book can be brought, without purchasing something unworthy of the author. Swift.

5. Unbecoming; vile.

The brutal action rous'd his manly mind:
Mov'd with unworthy usage of the maid,
He, though unarm'd, resolv'd to give her aid. Dryden.

UNWOUND. part. pass. and pret. of unwind. Untwisted.

Thatclers tie with withs, but old pitched ropes unwound are more lasting. Mortimer's Husbandry.

UNWOUNDED. adj.

1. Not wounded.

We may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies. Milton's Paradise Lost.

V O C

2. Not hurt.

Oh blest with temper!
She who can love a sister's charms, or hear
Sighs for a daughter with unwounded ear. Pope.

To UNWRAP. r. a. [from un and wrap.] To open what is folded.

To UNWREATH. r. a. To untwine.

The beads of wild oats, and of divers other wild plants, continually wreath and unwreath themselves, according to the temperature of the ambient air. Boyle.

UNWRITING. adj. Not assuming the character of an author.

The peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested. Arbutnot.

UNWRITTEN. adj.

1. Not written; not conveyed by writing; oral; traditional.

A rule of right unwritten, but delivered by tradition from one to another. Spenser's State of Ireland.

The laws of England may be divided into the written law, and unwritten. Hale.

2. Not containing writing.

As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion, a rude, unwritten blank; making him to be created as much an infant, as others are born. South.

UNWROUGHT. adj. Not laboured; not manufactured.

Or prove at least to all of wiser thought,
Their hearts were fertile land, although unwrought. Fairfax.

Yet thy moist clay is pliant to command;
Unwrought and easy to the potter's band:
Now take the mold, now bend thy mind to feel
The first sharp motions of the forming wheel. Dryden.

UNWRUNG. adj. Not pinched.

We that have free souls, it touches us not; let the galled jade winch, our withers are unwrung. Shakesp. Hamlet.

UNYIELDED. adj. Not given up.

O'erpower'd at length, they force him to the ground,
Unyielded as he was, and to the pillar bound. Dryden.

To UNYOKE. r. a.

1. To loose from the yoke.

Our army is dispers'd already:
Like youthful steers unyok'd, they took their course
East, west, north, south. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Homer calls them like gods, and yet gives them the employment of slaves; they unyoke the mules. Broome.

2. To part; to disjoin.

Shall these hands, so lately purg'd of blood,
So join'd in love, so strong in both,
Unyoke this seizure, and this kind regret? Shakesp.

UNYOKED. adj.

1. Having never worn a yoke.

Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd for Phœbus chuse,
And for Diana sev'n unspotted ewes. Dryden.

2. Licentious; unrestrained.

I will awhile uphold
The unyok'd humour of your idleness. Shakesp. Henry IV.

UNZONED. adj. Not bound with a girdle.

Easy her motion seem'd, serene her air;
Full, though unzon'd, her bosom. Prior.

VOCABULARY. n. s. [vacabularium, Lat. vocabulaire, Fr.] A dictionary; a lexicon; a word book.

Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and that they stand in awe of conjurations, which signify nothing, not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Among other books, we should be furnished with vocabularies and dictionaries of several sorts. Watts.

VOCAL. adj. [vocal, Fr. vocalis, Lat.]

1. Having a voice.

Eyes are vocal, tears have tongues;
And there be words not made with lungs;
Sententious shows't! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical. Crashaw.
Witness if I be silent, morn or even,
To hill, or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
Made vocal by my song, and taught his praise. Milton.

Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal reeds,
That strain I heard was of a higher mood. Milton.

None can animate the lyre,
And the mute springs with vocal souls inspire,
As Helen, in whose eyes ten thousand Cupids dwell. Dryden.

Mennon, though stone, was counted vocal;
But 'twas the god, mean while, that spoke all.
Rome oft has heard a cross haranguing,
With prompting priest behind the hanging. Pri.

2. Uttered or modulated by the voice.

They which, under pretence of the law ceremonial being abrogated, require the abrogation of instrumental music, approving nevertheless the use of vocal melody to remain, must shew some reason wherefore the one should be thought a legal ceremony, and not the other. Hooker.

They join'd their vocal worship to the choir
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton's Parad. Lost.

VOCALITY. n. s. [vocalitas, Lat. from vocal.] Power of utterance; quality of being utterable by the voice.

L and R being in extremes, one of roughness, the other of smoothness and freeness of vocality, are not easy in tract of vocal speech to be pronounced spiritually. Holder.

TO VOCALIZE. v. a. [from vocal.] To form into voice.

It is one thing to give an impulse to breath alone; another thing to vocalize that breath, i. e. in its passage through the larynx to give it the sound of human voice. Holder.

VOCALLY. adv. [from vocal.] In words; articulately.

Although it is as natural to mankind to express their desires vocally, as it is for brutes to use their natural vocal signs; yet the forming of languages into this or that fashion, is a business of institution. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

VOCATION. n. s. [vocation, Fr. vocatio, Lat.]

1. Calling by the will of God.

Neither doth that which St. Paul, or other apostles, teach, enforce the utter disability of any other men's vocation thought requisite in this church for the saving of souls. Hooker.

They which thus were in God eternally, by their intended admission to life, have, by vocation or adoption, God actually now in them. Hooker.

2. Summons.

What can be urged for them, who not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of meer wantonness make themselves ridiculous? Dryden.

3. Trade, employment; calling.

He would think his service greatly rewarded, if he might obtain by that means to live in the sight of his prince, and yet practise his own chosen vocation. Sidney.

God's mother, in a vision full of majesty,
Will'd me to leave my base vocation. Shakesp. Henry VI.

God has furnished men with faculties sufficient to direct them in the way they should take, if they will seriously employ them, when their ordinary vocations allow them the leisure. Locke.

4. It is used ironically in contempt.

But lest you should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake,
Or when a whore in her vocation
Keeps punctual to an assignation. Swift.

Lat.] The grammatical case used in calling or speaking to.

VOCIFERATION. n. s. [vociferatio, vocifero, Lat.] Clamour; outcry.

The lungs, kept too long upon the stretch by vociferation, or loud singing, may produce the same effect. Arbutnot.

VOCIFEROUS. adj. [vocifero, Lat.] Clamorous; noisy.

Thrice three vociferous heralds rose to check the rout. Chapman.

Several templars, and others of the more vociferous kind of critics, went with a resolution to hiss, and confessed they were forced to laugh. Pope.

VOGUE. n. s. [rogue, Fr. from roguer, to float, or fly at large.] Fashion; mode.

It is not more absurd to undertake to tell the name of an unknown person by his looks, than vouch a man's saintship from the vogue of the world. South.

Use may revive the obsoletest words,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

What factions th' have, and what they drive at
In public vogue, or what in private. Hudibras.

In the vogue of the world, it passes for an exploit of honour, for kings to run away with whole countries that they have no pretence to. L'Estrange.

No periodical writer, who always maintains his gravity, and does not sometimes sacrifice to the Graces, must expect to keep in vogue for any time. Addison.

At one time they keep their patients so close and warm, as almost to stife them; and all on a sudden the cold regimen is in vogue. Baker on Learning.

VOICE. n. s. [voix, Fr. voicis, Lat.]

1. Sound emitted by the mouth.

I assay to see
The works of men; or heare mortalitye Expire a voice. Chapman.

2. Sound of the mouth, as distinguished from that uttered by another mouth.

Air in sounds that are not tones, which are all equal, admitteth much variety, as in the voices of living creatures, and in the voices of several men; for we can discern several men by their voices. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

3. Any sound made by breath.

O Marcus, I am warn'd; my heart
Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison.

4. Vote; suffrage; opinion expressed.

Are you all resolv'd to give your voices?
But that's no matter, the greater part carries it. Shakesp.

I've no words;
My voice is in my sword! thou bloodier villian
Than terms can give thee out! Shakesp. Macbeth.

The state was betrayed by the multitude and corruption of voices, and most shortly perisht, if not committed to the grave judgment of some few; for two hundred gave voices, reducing that multitude to fifty, who, for their experience, were holden for men of greatest gravity. Knolles.
Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

5. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

TO VOICE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rumour; to report. Out of use.

Is this th' Athenian minion, whom the world
Voic'd so regardfully? Shakesp. Timon.

It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet, prisoner in the Tower; whereat there was great murmur. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Many sought to feed
The easy creditors of novelties,
By voicing him alive. Daniel's Civil War.

2. To vote. Obsolete.

Your minds, pre-occupied with what

You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you, against the grain, to voice him consul. Shakesp.

TO VOICE. v. n. To clamour; to make outcries. Obsolete.

Stir not questions of jurisdiction; and rather assume thy right in silence, than voice it with claims. Bacon.

It is not the gift of every person to harangue the multitude, to voice it loud and high. South's Sermon.

VOICED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with a voice.

That Erythæa,
Or some angel voic'd like her. 'Tis she! my struggling soul

Would fain goout to meet and welcome her! Denham.

VOID. adj. [vuide, Fr.]

1. Empty; vacant.

The earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. Gen. i. 2.
I'll get me to a place more void, and there
Speak to great Cæsar as he comes along. Shakesp.

2. Vain; ineffectual; null; vacated.

If it be void, and to no purpose, that the names of men are so frequent in their books, what did move them to bring them in? Hooker.

My word shall not return void, but accomplish that which I please. Isaiah, lv. 11.

This custom made their whole government void, as an engine built against human society, worthy to be fired and polled down. Bacon.

Though the wisdom of a future parliament may find cause to declare this or that act of parliament void, yet there will be the same temper requisite to repeal it. Clarendon.

The two houses declared, that nothing which should from that time pass under the great seal, should be good and valid, but void and null. Clarendon.

Some kind of subjection is due from every man to every man, which cannot be made void by any power whatsoever. Swift.

3. Unsupplied; unoccupied.

Queen Elizabeth, importuned much to supply divers great offices, that had been long void, answered nothing to the matter, but rose up on the sudden, and said, I am sure my office will not be long void. Camden.

4. Wanting; unfurnished; empty.

If some be admitted into the ministry, void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whitgift.

How void of reason are our hopes and fears! Dryden.

Being void of all friendship and enmity, they never complain. Swift.

5. Unsubstantial; unreal.

Senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.

VOID. n. s. [from the adjective.] An empty space; vacuum; vacancy.

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.

Were first th' unwieldy planets launch'd along
Th' illimitable void? Thomson.

TO VOID. v. a. [from the adjective; vider, Fr.]

1. To quit; to leave empty.

If they will fight with us, bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shakesp. Henry V.

Towards this passage, somewhat darker than the chamber which he voided, this assassinate gave him, with a back blow, a deep wound into his left side. Wotton's Buckingham.

2. To emit; to pour out.

The ascending water is vented by fits, every circumvolution voiding only so much as is contained in one helix. Wilkins.

3. To emit as excrement.

Excrements smell ill to the same creature that voideth them; and the cat burieth what she voideth. Bacon.

Believ'd the heav'ns were made of stone,
Because the sun had voided one. Hudibras.
Fleshy filaments, or matter voided by urine, are suspicious symptoms of a stone in the kidneys, especially if the patient has been subject to voiding of gravel. Arbuthnot.

4. To vacate; to nullify; to annul.

It was become a practice, upon any specious pretences, to void the security that was at any time given for money so borrowed. Clarendon.

To VOID. v. n.

1. To be emitted.

By the use of emulsions, and frequent emollient injections, his urine voided more easily. Hiseman's Surgery.

2. To receive what is emitted.

How in our voiding lobby hast thou stood, And duly waited for my coming forth? Shakesp. Henry VI.

VOIDABLE. adj. [from void.] Such as may be annulled.

If the metropolitan, pretending the party deceased had bona vacantia in divers dioceses, grants letters of administration, such administration is not void, but voidable by a sentence. Ayliffe.

VOIDANCE. n. s. [from void.]

1. The act of emptying.

2. Ejection from a benefice.

VOIDER. n. s. [from void.] A basket, in which broken meat is carried from the table.

A voider for the nonce, I wrong the devil should I pick their bones. Cleaveland.

VOIDNESS. n. s. [from void.]

1. Emptiness; vacuity.

2. Nullity; inefficacy.

3. Want of substantiality.

If thereby you understand their nakedness and voidness of all mixt bodies, good divines are of opinion, that the work of the creation was not in itself distinguished by days. Hakewill.

VOITURE. n. s. [Fr.] Carriage; transportation by carriage. Not in use.

They ought to use exercise by voiture or carriage. Arbuthnot.

VOLANT. adj. [rolans, Lat. rolant, Fr.]

1. Flying passing through the air.

The volant or flying automata are such mechanical contrivances as have a self-motion, whereby they are carried aloft in the air, like birds. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. Nimble; active.

His volant touch
Instinct through all proportions, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

Blind British hards, with volant touch,
Traverse loquacious strings, whose solemn notes
Provoke to harmless revels. Phillips.

VOLATILE. adj. [volatilis, Lat.]

1. Flying; passing through the air.

The caterpillar towards the end of summer waxeth volatile, and turneth to a butterfly. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

There is no creature only volatile, or no flying animal but hath feet as well as wings; because there is not sufficient food for them always in the air. Ray on the Creation.

2. [Volatile, Fr.] Having the power to pass off by spontaneous evaporation.

In vain, though by their powerful art they bind Volatile Heroes. Milton's Parad. Lost.

When arsenick with soap gives a regulus, and with mercury sublimate a volatile fusible salt, like butter of antimony; doth not this shew that arsenick, which is a substance totally volatile, is compounded of fixed and volatile parts, strongly cohering by a mutual attraction; so that the volatile will not ascend without carrying up the fixed? Newton.

3. Lively; fickle; changeable of mind; full of spirit; airy.

Active spirits, who are ever skimming over the surface of things with a volatile temper, will fix nothing in their mind. Watts on the Mind.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever, just the reverse of Mr. Pope, who hath always loved a domestick life. Swift.

VOLATILE. n. s. [volatile, Fr.] A winged animal.

The air conveys the heat of the sun, maintains fires, and serves for the flight of volatiles. Brown's Vulg. Err.

VOLATILENESS. } n. s. [volatilité, Fr.]

VOLATILITY. } from volatile.

1. The quality of flying away by evaporation; not fixity.

Upon the compound body, chiefly observe the colour, fragility, or plantiness, the volatility or fixation, compared with simple bodies. Bacon.

Of volatility the utmost degree is, when it will fly away without returning. Bacon.

Heat causeth the spirits to search some issue out of the body, as in the volatility of metals. Bacon.

The animal spirits cannot, by reason of their subtlety and volatileness, be discovered to the sense. Hale.

The volatility of mercury argues that they are not much bigger; nor may they be much less, lest they lose their opacity. Newton's Opticks.

By the spirit of a plant, we understand that pure, elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, in which the odour or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Mutability of mind; airiness; liveliness.

VOLATILIZATION. n. s. [from volatilize.]

The act of making volatile.

Chemists have, by a variety of ways, attempted in vain the volatilization of the salt of tartar. Boyle.

To VOLATILIZE. v. a. [volatiliser, Fr.]

from volatile.] To make volatile; to subtilize to the highest degree.

Spirit of wine has a refractive power, in a middle degree between those of water and oily substances, and accordingly seems to be composed of both, united by fermentation: the water, by means of some saline spirits with which it is impregnated, dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton's Opticks.

Spirituos liquors are so far from attenuating, volatilizing, and rendering perspirable the animal fluids, that they rather condense them. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

VOLCANO. n. s. [Ital. from Vulcan.]

A burning mountain.

Navigators tell us there is a burning mountain in an island, and many volcanos and fiery hills. Brown.

When the Cyclops o'er their anvils sweat,
From the volcanos gross eruptions rise,
And curling sheets of smoke obscure the skies. Garth.

Subterraneous minerals ferment, and cause earthquakes, and cause furious eruptions of volcanos, tumble down broken rocks. Bentley's Sermons.

Why want we then enormiums on the storm,
Or famine, or volcanos? They perform
Their mighty deeds; they hero-like can slay,
And spread their ample deserts in a day. Young.

VOLE. n. s. [vole, Fr.] A deal at cards, that draws the whole tricks.

Past six, and not a living soul!
I might by this have won a vole. Swift.

VOLERY. n. s. [volerie, Fr.] A flight of birds.

An old boy, at his first appearance, is sure to draw on him the eyes and chirping of the whole town volery; amongst which, there will not be wanting some birds of prey, that will presently be on the wing for him. Locke.

VOLITATION. n. s. [volito, Lat.] The act or power of flying.

Birds and flying animals are almost erect, advancing the head and breast in their progression, and only prone in the act of volitation. Brown's Vulg. Err.

VOLITION. n. s. [volitio, Lat.] The act of willing; the power of choice exerted.

To say that we cannot tell whether we have liberty, because we do not understand the manner of volition, is all one as to say, that we cannot tell whether we see or hear, because we do not understand the manner of sensation. Wilkins.

There is as much difference between the approbation of the judgment, and the actual volitions of the will, as between a man's viewing a desirable thing with his eye, and reaching after it with his hand. South's Sermons.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it; or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, by directing any particular action, or its forbearance. Locke.

VOLITIVE. adj. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive; making the man not only more knowing, but more wise and better. Hale.

VOLLEY. n. s. [rolée, Fr.]

1. A flight of shot.

From the wood a volley of shot slew two of his company. Raleigh's Apology.

More on his guns relies than on his sword,
From whence a fatal volley we receiv'd. Waller.

2. A burst; an emission of many at once.

A fine volley of words, gentlemen, and quickly shot off. Shakesp.

Distrustful sense with modest caution speaks;
It still looks home, and short excursions makes;
But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

To VOLLEY. v. n. To throw out.

The holding every man shall beat as loud
As his strong sides can rollen. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

VOLLED. adj. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a volley.

I stood
Thy fiercest, when in battle to thy aid
The blasting volley'd thunder made all speed. Milt.

The Gallic navy, impotent to bear
His volley'd thunder, torn, dissever'd, scud. Phillips.

VOLT. n. s. [volte, Fr.] Volt signifies a round or a circular tread; a gate of two treads made by a horse going sideways round a center; so that these two treads make parallel tracks, the one which is made by the fore feet larger, and the other by the hinder feet smaller; the shoulders bearing outwards, and the croupe approaching towards the center. Farrier's Dictionary.

VOLUBILITY. n. s. [volubilité, Fr. volubilitas, from volubilis, Lat.]

1. The act or power of rolling.

Volubility, or aptness to roll, is the property of a bowl, and is derived from its roundness. Watts's Log.

Then celestial spheres should forget their wonted motions, and by irregular volubility turn themselves any way, as it might happen. Hooker.

2. Activity of tongue; fluency of speech.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word,
Then I'll commend her volubility. Shakesp.

He express'd himself with great volubility of words, natural and proper. Clarendon.

He had all the French assurance, cunning, and volubility of tongue. Addison.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

3. Mutability; liableness to revolution.

He that's a victor this moment, may be a slave the next, and this volubility of human affairs is the judgment of Providence, in the punishment of oppression. T. Estrange.

VOLUELE. adj. [volubilis, Lat.]

1. Formed so as to roll easily; formed so as to be easily put in motion.

Neither the weight of the matter of which a cylinder is made, nor its round voluble form, which, meeting with a precipice, do necessarily continue the motion of it, are any more imputable to that dead, choiceless creature in its first motion. Hamm.

The adventurous corpuscles may produce stability in the matter they pervade, by expelling thence those volatile particles, which, whilst they continued, did by their shape unfit for cohesion, or by their motion oppose coalition. Boyle.

2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This less voluble earth,
By shorter flight to th' east, had left him there. Milton.

Then voluble and bold; now hid, now seen,
Among thick-woven arborets. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Nimble; active. Applied to the tongue.

A friend promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices, which render it so wonderfully voluble and flippant. Addison.

These, with a voluble and flippant tongue, become mere echoes. Harris on the Mind.

4. Fluent of words. It is applied to the speech, or the speaker.

Cassio, a knave very voluble; no further commendable, than in putting on the meek form of civil and humane seeming, for the better compassing of his loose affection. Shakesp.

If voluble and sharp discourse be marr'd,
Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard. Shak.

VOLUME. n. s. [volumen, Lat.]

1. Something rolled or convolved.

2. As much as seems convolved at once; as a fold of a serpent, a wave of water.

Threescore and ten I can remember well;
Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful, and things strange. Shak. Macb.

Unoppos'd they either lose their force,
Or wind in volumes to their former course. Dryden.

Behind the general mends his weary pace,
And silently to his revenge he sails:

So glides some trodden serpent on the grass,
And long behind his wounded volume trails. Dryden.

Thames' fruitful tides
Slow through the vale in silver volumes play. Fent.

By the insinuations of these crystals, the volumes of air are driven out of the watery particles, and many of them uniting, form larger volumes, which thereby have a greater force to expand themselves. Chevne.

3. [Volume, Fr.] A book; so called, because books were anciently rolled upon a staff.

Guyon all this while his book did read,
Ne yet has ended; for it was a great
And ample volume, that doth far exceed My leisure, so long leaves here to repeat. Spenser.

—Aye, as an hostler, that for the poorest piece
Will bear the knave by th' volume. Shakesp.

The most sagacious man is not able to find out any blot or error in this great volume of the world. Wilkins.

I shall not now enlarge on the wrong judgments whereby men mislead themselves. This would make a volume. Locke.

If one short volume could comprize
All that was witty, learn'd, and wise,
How would it be esteem'd and read? Swift.

VOLUMINOUS. adj. [from volume.]

1. Consisting of many complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting of many volumes or books.

If heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars
Voluminous, or single characters
In their conjunction met, give me to spell. Milton.

There is pleasure in doing something new, tho' never so little, without pestering the world with voluminous transcriptions. Graunt's Bills of Mortal.

The most severe reader makes allowances for many rests and nodding-places in a voluminous writer. Spectator.

3. Copious; diffusive.

He did not bear contradiction without much passion, and was too voluminous in discourse. Clarendon.

VOLUMINOUSLY. adv. [from voluminous.] In many volumes or books.

The controversies are hotly managed by the divided schools, and voluminously every where handled. Granville.

VOLUNTARILY. adv. [volontiers, Fr. from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own accord; without compulsion.

Sith there is no likelihood that ever voluntarily they will seek instruction at our hands, it remaineth that, unless we will suffer them to perish, salvation itself must seek them. Hooker.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker.

Self-preservation will oblige a man voluntarily, and by choice, to undergo any less evil, to secure himself but from the probability of an evil incomparably greater. South.

VOLUNTARY. adj. [volontaire, Fr. voluntarius, Lat.]

1. Acting without compulsion; acting by choice.

God did not work as a necessary, but a voluntary agent; intending before-hand, and decreeing with himself, that which did outwardly proceed from him. Hooker.

The lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary chusing. Shakesp.

2. Willing; acting with willingness.

Then virtue was no more; her guard away,
She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope's Odyssey.

3. Done by design; purposed.

If a man be lopping a tree, and his ax-head fall from the helve, out of his hand, and kills another passing by, here is indeed manslaughter, but no voluntary murder. Perkins.

4. Done without compulsion.

Voluntary forbearance denotes the forbearance of an action, consequent to an order of the mind. Locke.

The old duke is banished; the new duke, and three or four loving lords, have put themselves into voluntary exile with him. Shakesp. As you like it.

They must have recourse to abstinence, which is but voluntary fasting; and to exercise, which is but voluntary labour. Seed's Sermons.

5. Acting of its own accord; spontaneous.

The publick prayers of the people of God, in churches thoroughly settled, did never use to be voluntary dictates, proceeding from any man's extemporal wit. Hooker.

Thoughts which voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

VOLUNTARY. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A volunteer; one who engages in any affair of his own accord.

All the unsettled humours of the laud;
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries. Shakesp.
Ajax was here the voluntary, and you as under an impress. Shakesp.

The bordering were made altogether by voluntaries, upon their own head. Davies's Ireland.
Aids came in partly upon missives, and partly voluntaries from all parts. Bacon.

2. A piece of musick played at will, without any settled rule.

Whistling winds like organs play'd,
Until their voluntaries made
The waken'd earth in odours rise,
To be her morning sacrifice. Cleaveland.

By a voluntary before the first lesson, we are prepared for admission of those divine truths, which we are shortly to receive. Spectator.

VOLUNTEER. n. s. [volontaire, Fr.] A soldier, who enters into the service of his own accord.

Congreve, and the author of the Relapse, being the principals in the dispute, I satisfy them; as for the volunteers, they will find themselves affected with the misfortune of their friends. Collier.

All Asia now was by the ears;
And gods beat up for volunteers
To Greece and Troy. Prior.

TO VOLUNTEER. v. n. To go for a soldier. A cant word.

Leave off these wagers, for in conscience speaking,

The city needs not your new tricks for breaking;
And if you gallants lose, to all appearing,
You'll want an equipage for volunteering. Dryden.

VOLUPTUARY. n. s. [voluptuaire, Fr. voluptuarius, Lat.] A man given up to pleasure and luxury.

Does not the voluptuary understand, in all the liberties of a loose and a lewd conversation, that he runs the risk of body and soul? L'Estrange.

The parable was intended against the voluptuaries, men who lived like heathens, dissolutely, without regarding any of the restraints of religion. Atterbury.

VOLUPTUOUS. adj. [voluptuosus, Lat.]

voluptueux, Fr.] Given to excess of pleasure; luxurious.

He them deceives; deceiv'd in his deceit;
Made drunk with drugs of dear voluptuous receipt. Spenser.

If a new sect have not two properties, it will not spread. The one is, the supplanting, or the opposing of authority established; the other is, the giving licence to pleasures, and a voluptuous life. Bacon.

Thou wilt bring me soon
To that new world of light and bliss, among
The gods, who live at ease, where I shall reign
At thy right hand voluptuous, without end. Milton.

Then swol'n with pride, into the snare I fell
Of fair fallacious looks; venerable trains,
Soft'n'd with pleasure, and voluptuous life. Milton.

Speculative atheism subsists only in our speculation; whereas really human nature cannot be guilty of the crime. Indeed a few sensual and voluptuous persons may for a season eclipse this native light of the soul, but can never wholly smother and extinguish it. Bentley's Sermons.

VOLUPTUOUSLY. adv. [from voluptuous.]

Luxuriously; with indulgence of excessive pleasure.

Had I a dozen sons, I had rather eleven died nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakesp.

This cannot be done, if my will be so worldly or voluptuously disposed, as never to suffer me to think of them; but perpetually to carry away and apply my mind to other things. South.

VOLUPTUOUSNESS. n. s. [from voluptuous.]

Luxuriousness; addictedness to excess of pleasure.

There's no bottom
In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakesp. Macbeth.

If he fill'd his vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Here, where still ev'ning is, not noon nor night;
Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

These sons of Epicurus, for voluptuousness and irreligion, must pass for the only wits of the age. South.

You may be free, unless Your other lord forbid, voluptuousness. Dryden.

VOLUTATION. n. s. [volutatio, Lat.]

Wallowing; rolling.

VOLUTE. n. s. [volute, Fr.] A member of a column.

That part of the capitals of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders, which is supposed to represent the bark of trees twisted and turned into spiral lines, or, according to others, the head-dresses of virgins in their long hair. According to Vitruvius, those that appear above the stens in the Corinthian order, are sixteen in every capital, four in the Ionick, and eight in the Composite. These volutes are more especially remarkable in the Ionick capital, representing a pillow or cushion laid between the abacus and echinus; whence that ancient architect calls the voluta pulvinus.

It is said there is an Ionick pillar in the Santa Maria Transtevere, where the marks of the compass are still to be seen on the volute; and that Palladio learnt from thence the working of that difficult problem.

VOMICA. n. s. [Lat.] An encysted tumour in the lungs.

If the ulcer is not broke, it is commonly called a vomica, attended with the same symptoms as an empyema; because the vomica communicating with the vessels of the lungs, must necessarily void some of the putrid matter, and taint the blood.

VOMICK NUT. n. s.

Vomick nut is the nucleus of an fruit of an East Indian tree, the wood of which is the lignum cubrinum, or snake-wood of the shops. It is flat, compressed, and round, of the breadth of a shilling, and about the thickness of a crown-piece. It is certain poison to quadrupeds and birds; and taken internally, in small doses, it disturbs the whole human frame, and brings on convulsions.

To VOMIT. v. n. [vomo, Lat.] To cast up the contents of the stomach.

The dog, when he is sick at the stomach, knows his cure, falls to his grass, vomits, and is well.

To Vo'MIT. v. a. [vomir, Fr.]

1. To throw up from the stonach: often with up or out.

As though some world unknown, By pamper'd nature's store too prodigally fed, And surfeiting therewith, her surcrease vomited.

The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land.

Vomiting is of use, when the foulness of the stomach requires it.

Weak stomachs vomit up the wine that they drink in too great quantities, in the form of vinegar.

2. To throw up with violence from any hollow.

Vo'MIT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The matter thrown up from the stomach.

He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd, Like vomit from his yawning entrails pour'd.

2. An emetick medicine; a medicine that causes vomits.

This vomit may be repeated often, if it be found successful.

Whether a vomit may be safely given, must be judged by the circumstances: if there be any symptoms of an inflammation on the stomach, a vomit is extremely dangerous.

VOMITION. n. s. [from vomo, Lat.] The act or power of vomiting.

How many have saved their lives, by spewing up their debauch! Whereas, if the stomach had wanted the faculty of vomition, they had inevitably died.

VOMITIVE. adj. [vomitif, Fr.] Emetick; causing vomits

From this vitriolous quality, mercurius dulcis, and vitriol vomitive, occasion black cjections.

VOMITORY. adj. [vomitore, Fr. vomitarius, Lat.] Procuring vomits; emetick.

Since regulus of stibium, or glass of antimony, will communicate to water or wine a purging or vomitory operation, yet the body itself, after iterated infusions, abates not virtue or weight.

Some have vomited up such bodies as these, namely, thick, short, blunt pins, which, by straining, they vomit up again, or by taking vomitories privately.

VORACIOUS. adj. [vorace, Fr. vorax, Lat.]

1. Greedy to eat; ravenous; edacious. So voracious is this humour grown, that it draws in every thing to feed it.

2. Rapacious; greedy.

VORACIOUSLY. adv. [from voracious.] Greedily; ravenously.

VORACIOUSNESS. n. s. [voracit e, Fr. voracitas, Lat. from voracious.] Greediness; ravine; ravenousness.

He is as well contented with this, as those that with the rarities of the earth pauper their voracities.

VORTEX. n. s. In the plural vortices.

[Lat.] Any thing whirled round. Conflicting passions, loud, impetuous, strong, Wrapt in their vortex, hurry him along; And luckily one striking feature caught, A semblance stamps, tho' charg'd with many a fault.

If many contiguous vortices of molten pitch were each of them as large as those which some suppose to revolve about the sun and fixed stars, yet these, and all their parts, would by their tenacity and stiffness communicate their motion to one another.

Nothing else could impel it, unless the ethereal matter be supposed to be carried about the sun, like a vortex, or whirlpool, as a vehicle to convey it and the rest of the planets.

The gathering number, as it moves along, Involves a vast involuntary throng; Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less, Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.

VORTICAL. adj. [from vortex.] Having a whirling motion.

If three equal round vessels be filled, the one with cold water, the other with oil, the third with molten pitch, and the liquors be stirred about alike, to give them a vortical motion; the pitch, by its tenacity, will lose its motion quickly; the oil, being less tenacious, will keep it longer; and the water being still less tenacious, will keep it longest, but yet will lose it in a short time.

It is not a magnetical power, nor the effect of a vortical motion; those common attempts towards the explication of gravity.

VO'TARIST. n. s. [devotus, Lat.] One devoted to any person or thing; one given up by a vow to any service or worship; votary.

I wish a more strict restraint Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of St. Clare.

Earth, yield me roots! What is here? Gold! yellow, glittering, precious gold! No, gods, I am no idle votarist.

Like a sad votarist in palmer's weed, Rose from the hindmost wheels of Phœbus' wain.

VO'TARY. n. s. One devoted, as by a vow, to any particular service, worship, study, or state of life.

Wherefore waste I time to counsel thee? Thou art a votary to fond desire.

Thou, faint god of sleep! forget that I Was ever known to be thy votary. No more my pillow shall thine altar be, Nor will I offer any more to thee Myself a melting sacrifice.

'Twas the coldness of the votary, and not the prayer, that was in fault, whenever fervor was deficient at the publick office of the church.

By these means, men worship the idols that have been set up in their minds, and stamping the characters of divinity upon absurdities and errors, become zealous votaries to bulls and monkeys.

The enemy of our happiness has his servants and rotaries among those, who are called by the name of the son of God.

How can heavenly wisdom prove An instrument to earthly love? Know'st thou not yet, that men commence Thy rotaries for want of sense?

VO'TARY. adj. Consequent to a vow. Superstition is now so well advanced, that men of the first blood are as firm as butchers by occupation; and votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood.

VO'TARESS. n. s. [female of rotary.] A woman devoted to any worship or state.

The imperial votress pass'd on In maiden meditation, fancy free.

His mother was a votress of my order; And, in the speed Indian air by night, Full often she hath gossip'd by my side.

Like a sad votress, beautiful in tears, Child of unfeign'd contrition she appears.

No rosary this votress needs, Her very syllables are beads.

Thy votress from my tender years I am; And love, like thee, the woods and sylvan game.

What force have pious vows? the queen of love His sister sends, her votress from above.

VOTE. n. s. [rotum, Lat.] Suffrage; voice given and numbered.

He that joins instruction with delight, Profit with pleasure carries all the votes.

How many have no other ground for their tenets, than the supposed honesty or learning of those of the same profession! as if truth were to be established by the vote of the multitude.

The final determination arises from the majority of opinion or votes in the assembly, because they ought to be swayed by the superiour weight of reason.

To VOTE. v. a.

1. To chuse by suffrage; to determine by suffrage.

You are not only in the eye and ear of your master, but you are also a favourite, the favourite of the time, and so are in his bosom also; the world hath also voted you, and doth so esteem of you.

2. To give by voice. The parliament voted them one hundred thousand pounds, by way of recompence for their sufferings.

VO'TER. n. s. [from rote.] One who has the right of giving his voice or suffrage.

Elections growing chargeable, the voters, that is, the bulk of the common people, have been universally seduced into bribery, perjury, drunkenness, malice, and slander.

He hates an action base; Can sometimes drop a voter's claim, And give up party to his fame.

VO'TIVE. adj. [rotivus, Lat.] Given by vow.

Such in Isis' temple you may find, On votive tablets to the life pourtray'd.

Venus! take my votive glass; Since I am not what I was, What from this day I shall be, Venus! let me never see.

To VOUCII. v. a. [vouchier, Norman Fr.]

1. To call to witness; to obtest. The sun and day are witnesses for me; Let him who fights unseen relate his own, And touch the silent stars and conscious moon.

2. To attest; to warrant; to declare; to maintain by repeated affirmations.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold That is not often touch'd, while 'tis making, 'Tis given with welcome.

V O W

The consistency of the discourse, and the pertinency of it to the design he is upon, vouches it worthy of our great apostle. Locke.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterwards to credit it Atterbury.
To VOUCH. v. n. To bear witness; to appear as a witness; to give testimony.

He declares he will not believe her, until the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she hath so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH. n. s. [from the verb.] Warrant; attestation.

What praise couldst thou bestow on a deserving woman indeed? one that, in the authority of her merit, did justly put on the vouch of very malice itself. Shakesp. Othello.

VOUCHER. n. s. [from vouch.]

1. One who gives witness to any thing. All the great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for one another's reputation. Spectator.

I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon lost. Pope.

2. Testimony.

Better to starve,
 Than crave the hire which first we do deserve:
 Why in this volkish gown should I stand here,
 To beg of Hob and Dick, that do appear,
 Their needless voucher? Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The stamp is a mark, and a public voucher, that a piece of such denomination is of such a weight, and of such a fineness, i. e. has so much silver in it. Locke.

To VOUCHSAFE. v. a. [vouch and safe.]

1. To permit any thing to be done without danger.

2. To condescend to grant. He grew content to mark their speeches, then marvel at such wit in shepherds, after to like their company, and lastly to vouchsafe conference. Sidney.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?
 —Two thousand, fair woman, and I'll vouchsafe thee hearing. Shakesp.

But if the sense of touch seem such delight
 Beyond all other, think the same vouchsaf'd
 To cattle and each beast. Milton.

It is not said by the apostle, that God vouchsafed to the heathens the means of salvation; and yet I will not affirm, that God will save none of those, to whom the sound of the gospel never reached. South's Sermons.

To VOUCHSAFE. v. n. To disdain; to condescend; to yield.

Do I not see Zelmene, who does not think a thought which is not first weighed by wisdom and virtue? doth not she vouchsafe to love me with like ardour? Sidney.

Vouchsafe, divine perfection of a woman,
 Of these supposed crimes to give me leave
 By circumstance but to acquit myself. Shakesp. Richard III.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
 What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCHSAFEMENT. n. s. [from vouchsafe.] Grant; condescension.

The infinite superiority of God's nature places a vast disparity betwixt his greatest communicated vouchsafements, and his boundless, and therefore to his creatures inconimicable, perfections. Boyle.

Vow. n. s. [vœu, Fr. rotum, Lat.]

1. Any promise made to a divine power; an act of devotion, by which some part of life, or some part of possessions, is consecrated to a particular purpose. The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows; They are polluted offerings. Shakesp.

Where honour or where conscience does not bind,
 No other law shall shackle me,
 Slave to myself I will not be,

V O Y

Nor shall my future actions be confin'd
 By my own present mind.

Who by resolves or vows engag'd does stand
 For days that yet belong to fate,
 Does, like an anthrifit, mortgage his estate

Before it comes into his hand
 The bondman of the cloister so
 All that he does receive does always owe;
 And still, as time comes in, it goes away,
 Not to enjoy, but debts to pay.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bel,
 Which his hour's work, as well as hours, does tell;

Unhappy till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

If you take that vow and that wish to be all one,
 you are mistaken; a wish is a far lower degree than a vow. Hammond.

She vows for his return with vain devotion pays. Dryden.

2. A solemn promise, commonly used for a promise of love or matrimony.

By all the vows that ever men have broke,
 In number more than ever woman spoke. Shakesp.

Those, who wear the woodbine on their brow,
 Were knights of love, who never broke their vow;
 Firm to their plighted faith. Dryden.

To Vow. v. a. [vouer, Fr. vorco, Lat.]

1. To consecrate by a solemn dedication; to give to a divine power.

David often voweth unto God the sacrifice of praise and thanksgiving in the congregation. Hooker.

Vow and pray unto the Lord. Psalms lxxvi.
 When we have not only vowed, but delivered them over into the possession of Almighty God, for the maintenance of his publick worship, and the ministers thereof, they are not now arbitrable, nor to be revoked. Spelman.

Whoever sees these irreligious men,
 With burden of a sickness, weak and faint,
 But hears them talking of religion then,
 And vowing of their soul to ev'ry saint. Davies.

This plant Latinus, when his town he wall'd,
 Then found, and from the tree Laurentam call'd:
 And last, in honour of his new abode,
 He vow'd the laurel to the laurel's god. Dryden.

2. To devote; a ceremonial phrase.

To Master Harvey, upon some special consideration, I have vowed this my labour. Spenser.

To Vow. v. n. To make vows or solemn promises.

Dust see how unregarded now
 That piece of beauty passes?
 There was a time, when I did vow
 To that alone; but mark the fate of faces. Suckling.

VO'WED. part. pass. [from the verb.] Consecrated by solemn declaration.

VO'WEL. n. s. [voyle, Fr. vocalis, Lat.] A letter, which can be uttered by itself.

I distinguish letters into vowels and consonants, yet not wholly upon their reason, that a vowel may be sounded alone, a consonant not without a vowel, which will not be found all true; for many of the consonants may be sounded alone, and some joined together without a vowel, as bl, st; and as we pronounce the latter syllable of people, ruffle. Holder.

Virgil makes the two vowels meet without an elision. Broome.

VOWFELLOW. n. s. [row and fellow.] One bound by the same vow.

Who are the votaries
 That are vowfellows with this virtuous king?
Shakesp.

VOYAGE. n. s. [voyage, Fr.]

1. A travel by sea.

Gayon forward 'gan his voyage make,
 With his black palmer, that him guided still. Spenser.

U P

Our ships went sundry voyages, as well to the pillars of Hercules, as to other parts in the Atlantick and Mediterranean seas. Bacon.

This great man acted like an able pilot in a long voyage; contented to sit in the cabin, when the winds were allayed, but ready to resume the helm when the storm arose. Prior.

2. Course; attempt; undertaking. A low phrase.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,
 I would turn her loose to him; and what he get more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakesp.

If you make your voyage upon her, and prevail,
 I am no further your enemy. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

3. The practice of travelling.

All nations have interknowledge of one another, by voyage into foreign parts, or strangers that come to them. Bacon.

To VOYAGE. v. n. [royager, Fr. from the noun.] To travel by sea.

For, voaging to learn the direful art,
 'To taint with deadly drugs the barbed dart;
 Illus refus'd t' impart the haneful trust. Pope's Odyssey.

To VOYAGE. v. a. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep
 Of horrible confusion. Milton's Parad. Lost.

VOYAGER. n. s. [voiyagcur, Fr. from voyage.] One, who travels by sea.

Disdain not in thy constant travelling
 To do as other voyagers, and make
 Some turns into less creeks, and wisely take Fresh water at the Heliconian spring. Donne.

How comfortable this is, voyagers can best tell. Cheyne.

Deny your vessels, ye deny in vain;
 A private voyager I pass the main. Pope's Odyssey.

Up. adv. [up, Sax. op, Dut. and Dan.]

1. Aloft; on high; not down.

From those two brethren, admire the wonderful changes of worldly things; now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles.

Thither his course he bends; but up or down,
 By center, or eccentric, hard to tell,
 Or longitude. Milton.

2. Out of bed; in the state of being risen from rest.

Helea was not up, was she?
 His chamber being commonly stived with suiters, when he was up, he gave his legs, arms, and breast to his servant to dress him, his eyes to his letters, and ears to petitioners. Wotton.

3. In the state of being risen from a seat.

Upon his first rising, a general whisper ran among the country people, that Sir Roger was up. Addison.

4. From a state of decumbiture or concealment.

5. In a state of being built.

Up with my tent; here will I lie to-night;
 But where to-morrow?—well, all's one for that. Shakesp.

6. Above the horizon.

As soon as the sun is up, set upon the city. Judges, ix.
 Now morn with rosy light had streak'd the sky,
 Up rose the sun, and up rose Emily;
 Address'd her early steps to Cynthia's fane. Dryden.

7. To a state of proficiency.

Till we have wrought ourselves up into this degree of Christian indifference, we are in bondage. Atterbury.

8. In a state of exaltation.

Those that were up themselves kept others low;
 Those that were low themselves held others hard,
 Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater grow. Spenser.

U P

- Henry the Fifth is crown'd; up, vanity!
Down, royal state! all you sage counsellors,
hence! Shakesp.
9. In a state of climbing.
Strait the rumour flew
Up to the city; which heard, up they drew
By daies first breake. Chapman.
10. In a state of insurrection.
The gentle archbishop of York is up
With well-appointed powers. Shakesp. Henry VI.
- Rebels there are up,
And put the Englishmen unto the sword. Shakesp.
Thou hast fir'd me; my soul's up in arms,
And mans each part about me. Dryden.
11. In a state of being increased, or raised.
Grief and passion are like floods raised in little brooks by a sudden rain; they are quickly up, and if the concernment be poured unexpectedly in upon us, it overflows us. Dryden.
12. From a remoter place, coming to any person or place.
As a boar was whetting his teeth, up comes a fox to him. L'Estrange.
13. Into order: as he drew up his regiment.
14. From younger to elder years.
I am ready to die from my youth up.
Psalms lxxxviii.
15. Up and down. Dispersedly; here and there.
Abundance of them are seen scattered up and down like so many little islands, when the tide is low. Addison.
16. Up and down. Backward and forward.
Our desire is, in this present controversy, not to be carried up and down with the waves of uncertain arguments, but rather positively to lead on the minds of the simpler sort by plain and easy degrees, till the very nature of the thing itself do make manifest what is truth. Hooker.
- The skipping king he rambled up and down,
With shallow jesters. Shakesp.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again;
Then nimbly shifts a thrust, then lends a wound;
Now back he gives, then rushes on amain. Daniel.
- Thou and death
Shall dwell at ease, and up and down unseen
Wing silently the buxom air. Milton.
On this windy sea of land, the fiend
Walk'd up and down alone, bent on his prey.
Milton.
- What a miserable life dost thou lead, says a dog to a lion, to run starving up and down thus in woods. L'Estrange.
- She moves! life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up every charm.
Addison.
17. Up to. To an equal height with.
Tantalus was punished with the rage of an eternal thirst, and set up to the chin in water, that fled from his lips whenever he attempted to drink
it. Addison.
18. Up to. Adequately to.
The wisest men in all ages have lived up to the religion of their country, when they saw nothing in it opposite to morality. Addison.
- They are determined to live up to the holy rule by which they have obliged themselves to walk.
Atterbury.
- We must not only mortify all these passions that solicit us, but we must learn to do well, and act up to the positive precepts of our duty.
Rogers's Sermons.
19. Up with. A phrase that signifies the act of raising any thing to give a blow.
She, quick and proud, and who did Pas despise,
Up with her fist, and took him on the face;
Another time, quoth she, become more wise:
Thus Pas did kiss her hand with little grace. Sidn.
20. It is added to verbs implying some accumulation, or increase.

U P B

- If we could number up those prodigious swarms that settled in every part of the Campania of old Rome, they would amount to more than can be found in any six parts of Europe of the same extent. Addison on Italy.
- UP. interject.
1. A word exhorting to rise from bed.
Up, up! cries gluttony, 'tis break of day;
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey. Pope.
2. A word of exhortation, exciting or rousing to action.
Up then, Melpomene, the mournful muse of nine;
Such cause of mourning never hadst afore;
Up grisly ghosts: and up, my rueful rime;
Matter of mirth now shalt thou have no more.
Spenser.
- But up, and enter now into full bliss. Milton.
Up, for honour's sake; twelve legions wait
you,
And long to call you chief. Dryden.
- UP. prep. From a lower to a higher part;
not down.
In going up a hill, the knees will be most weary;
in going down, the thighs: for that in lifting the feet, when a man goeth up the hill, the weight of the body heareth most upon the knees, and in going down, upon the thighs. Bacon.
- To UPBEAR. v. a. preter. upbore; part. pass. upborn. [up and bear.]
1. To sustain aloft; to support in elevation.
Upborn with indefatigable wings. Milton.
Rang'd in a line the ready racers stand,
Start from the goal, and vanish o'er the strand;
Swift as on wings of winds upborn they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky. Pope.
2. To raise aloft.
This with pray'r,
Or one short sigh of human breath, upborn
Ev'n to the seat of God. Milton's Parad. Lost.
- A monstrous wave upbore
The chief, and dash'd him on the craggy shore. Pope.
3. To support from falling.
Vital pow'rs 'gan wax both weak and wan,
For want of food and sleep; which two upbear,
Like weighty pillars, this frail life of man. Spens.
- To UPBRAID. v. a. [upgebrædan, upgebrædan, Sax.]
1. To charge contemptuously with any thing disgraceful. It has commonly with, sometimes of, before the thing imputed; sometimes it has only an accusative of the thing, as in Milton; and sometimes the person without the thing, or the thing without the person.
The fathers, when they were upbraided with that defect, comforted themselves with the meditation of God's most gracious nature, who did not therefore the less accept of their hearty affection. Hooker.
- It seem'd in me
But as an honour snatch'd with boisterous hand,
And I had many living to upbraid
My gain of it by their assistances,
Which daily grew to quarrel. Shakesp. Henry IV.
- If you refuse your aid, yet do not Upbraid us with our distress. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Vain man! how long wilt thou thy God upbraid?
And, like the roaring of a furious wind,
Thus vent the vile distemper of thy mind? Sandys.
How cunningly the sorceress displays
Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine. Milt.
- 'Tis a general complaint against you, and I must upbraid you with it, that, because you need not write, you will not. Dryden.
- You may the world of more defects upbraid,
That other works by Nature are unmade;
That she did never at her own expence
A palace rear. Blackmore.
2. To object as matter of reproach; with to before the person.

U P H

- Those that have been bred together, are more apt to envy their equals when raised: for it doth upbraid unto them their own fortunes, and pointeth at them. Bacon.
- Any of these, without regarding the pains of churchmen, grudge or upbraid to them those small remains of ancient piety, which the rapacity of some ages has scarce left. Spitt.
- May they not justly to our climes upbraid?
Shortness of night, and penury of shade? Prior.
3. To urge with reproach.
I have too long born
Your blunt upbraidings, and your bitter scoffs. Shak.
He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraidings of his own conscience. Decay of Piety.
4. To reproach on account of a benefit received from the reproacher.
Ev'ry hour
He flashes into one gross crime or other;
His knights grow riotous, and he himself upbraids us O'ev'ry trifle. Shakesp. King Lear.
- If any lack wisdom, let him ask of God that giveth liberally, and upbraideth not. James, i. 5.
Be ashamed of upbraiding speeches before friends: and after thou hast given, upbraid not.
Ecclus. xli. 22.
5. To bring reproach upon; to shew faults by being in a state of comparison.
Ah, my son, how evil fits it me to have such a son! and how much doth thy kindness upbraid
my wickedness! Sidney.
- The counsel which I cannot take,
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness. Addison.
6. To treat with contempt. Not in use.
There also was that mighty monarch laid,
Low under all, yet above all in pride;
That name of native sire did fool upbraid,
And would, as Ammon's son, be magnified. Spens.
- UPBRAIDER. n. s. [from upbraid.] One that reproaches.
- UPBRAIDINGLY. adv. By way of reproach.
The time was when men would learn and study good things, not envy those that had them. Then men were had in price for learning; now letters only make men vile. He is upbraidingly called a poet, as if it were a contemptible nick-name.
Ben Jonson.
- To UPBRAY. v. a. [A word formed from upbraid by Spenser, for the sake of a rhyming termination.] To shame.
Vile knight,
That knights and knighthood dost with shame upbray,
And shew'st the ensample of thy childish might,
With silly, weak, old women thus to fight. Spens.
- UPBROUGHT. part. pass. of upbring.
Educated; nurtured.
Divinely wrought,
And of the brood of angels, heav'nly born,
And with the crew of blessed saints upbrought,
Each of which did her with her gifts adorn. Spens.
- UPCAST. [Participle from To cast up.
The verb To upcast is not in use.]
Thrown upwards.
Beasts with upcast eyes forsake their shade,
And gaze, as if I were to be obey'd. Dryden.
- Old Saturn here, with upcast eyes,
Beheld his abdicated skies. Addison.
- UPCAST. n. s. A term of bowling; a throw; a cast.
Was there ever man had such luck? when I kissed the jack, upon an upcast to be hit away!
Shakesp. Cymbeline.
- To UPGATHER. v. a. [up and gather.]
To contract.
Himself he close upgather'd more and more
Into his den, that his deceitful train
By his there being might not be beward,
Ne any noise, ne any question made. Spenser.
- UPHAUND. adj. [up and hand.] Lifted by the hand.

U P H

The uphand sledge is used by underworkmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter. They use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammer higher than their head. Mozon's Mechanical Exercises.
UPHELD. prct. and part. pass. of uphold. Maintained; sustained.

He who reigns
 Monarch in heav'n, till then, as one secure,
 Sat on his throne, upheld by old repute. Milton.
UPHILL. adj. [up and hill.] Difficult; like the labour of climbing an hill.

What an uphill labour must it be to a learner, who has those first rudiments to master at twenty years of age, which others are taught at ten. Clarissa.

Yet, as immortal, in our uphill chace
 We press coy Fortune with unslacken'd pace. Young.

To UPHOARD. v. a. [up and hoard.]
 To treasure; to store; to accumulate in private places.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
 With horrid sound, though having little sense,
 They think to be chief praise of poetry;
 And thereby wanting due intelligence,
 Have marr'd the face of goodly poesie,
 And made a monster of their fantasia. Spenser.
 If thou hast uphoarded in thy life
 Extorted treasure in the womb of earth,
 Speak of it. Shakesp.

To UPHOLD. v. a. preter. upheld; part. pass. upholden. [up and hold.]

1. To lift on high.
 The mournful train with groans, and hands upheld, Besought his pity. Druden.
2. To support; to sustain; to keep from falling.

While life upholds this arm,
 This arm upholds the house of Lancaster. Shakesp.
 This great man found no means to continue and uphold his ill-purchased greatness, but by rejecting the English law, and assuming, in lieu thereof, the barbarous customs of the Irish. Dav. Irel.
 Poetry and painting were upheld by the strength of imagination. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

3. To keep from declension.
 There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are fair pleaded; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel, and beats down in him the conceit of his cause. Bacon.
 Never was a time, when the interposition of the magistrate was more necessary to secure the honour of religion, and uphold the authority of those great principles by which his own authority is best upheld. Atterbury.
4. To support in any state of life.
 Many younger brothers have neither lands nor means to uphold themselves. Raleigh.
5. To continue; to keep from defeat.
 Divers, although peradventure not willing to be yoked with elderships, yet were contented to uphold opposition against bishops, not without greater heart to the course of their whole proceedings. Hooker.

6. To keep from being lost.
 In spite of spite, alone upholds the day. Shakesp.
7. To continue without failing.
 A deaf person, by observing the motions of another man's mouth, knows what he says, and upholds a current communication of discourse with him. Holder.

8. To continue in being.
 As Nebuchodneser liveth, who had sent thee for the upholding of every living thing. Jud. xi. 7.
 A due proportion is held betwixt the parts, as well in the natural body of man as the body politic of the state, for the upholding of the whole. Hakewell.

UPHOLDER. n. s. [from uphold.]

1. A supporter.

U P M

Suppose then Atlas ne'er so wise:
 Yet when the weight of kingdoms lies
 Too long upon his single shoulders,
 Sink down he must, or find upholders. Swift.

2. A sustainer in being.
 The knowledge thereof is so many manuductions to the knowledge and admiration of the infinite wisdom of the creator and upholder of them. Hale.
3. An undertaker; one who provides for funerals.
 The company of upholders have a right upon the bodies of the subjects. Arbutnot.
 Where the brass knocker wrapt in flannel band
 Forbids the thunder of the footman's hand;
 Th' upholder, raeul harbinger of death,
 Waits with impatience for the dying breath. Gay.

UPHOLSTERER. n. s. [a corruption of upholder.] One who furnishes houses; one who fits up apartments with beds and furniture.

 Your barber, cook, upholsterer. Pope.

UPLAND. n. s. [up and land.] Higher ground.
 Men at first, after the flood, lived in the uplands and sides of the mountains, and by degrees sauk into the plains. Burnet.

UPLAND. adj.
 1. Higher in situation.
 Those in Cornwall do no more by nature than others elsewhere by choice, conceive themselves an estranged society from the upland dwellers, and carry an emulation against them. Corew's Sarvey of Cornwall.
 Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite. Milton.

2. Rude; savage. This is the meaning in Chapman; probably because the uplanders, having less commerce, were less civilized.
 And long'd to see this heap of fortitude,
 That so illiterate was, and upland rude,
 That lawes divine nor humane he had learn'd. Chapman.

UPLANDISH. adj. [from upland.] Mountainous; inhabiting mountains.
 Lion-like, uplandish, and mere wild,
 Slave to his pride; and all his nerves being naturally compild
 Of eminent strength; stalks out and preys upon second cogitations, there should be cause to alter.

Bacon.

These forces took hold of divers; in some upon discontent, in some upon ambition, in some upon levity and desire of change, and in some few upon conscience and belief, but in most upon simplicity; and in divers out of dependance upon some of the better sort, who did in secret favour these bruits.
Bacon.

He made a great difference between people that did rebel upon wantonness, and them that did rebel upon want. Bacon.
Upon pity they were taken away, upon ignorance
 they are again demanded. Hayward.
 Promises can be of no force, unless they be believed to be conditional, and unless that duty proposed to be enforced by them be acknowledged to be part of that condition, upon performance of which those promises do, and upon the neglect of which those promises shall not, belong to any.
Hammond.

The king had no kindness for him upon an old account, as remembering the part he had acted against the earl of Strafford. Clarendon.
 Though sin offers itself in never so pleasing and alluring a dress at first, yet the remorse and inward regrets of the soul, upon the commission of it, infinitely overbalance those faint and transient gratifications. South's Sermons.

The common corruption of human nature, upon the bare stock of its original depravation, does not usually proceed so far. South's Sermons.
 When we make judgments upon general pre-sumptions, they are made rather from the temper of our own spirit, than from reason. Burnet.
 'Tis not the thing that is done, but the intention in doing it, that makes good or evil. There is a great difference betwixt what we do upon force, and what upon inclination. L'Estrange.

The determination of the will upon enquiry, is following the direction of that guide. Locke.
 There broke out an irreparable quarrel between their parents; the one valuing himself too much upon his birth, and the other upon his possessions.

UPROAR. n. s. [oproer, Dut.] This word likewise is accented on the first syllable in prose ; in verse, indifferently on either.] Tumult ; bustle ; disturbance ; confusion.

The Jews, which believed not, set all the city on an uproar. Acts, xvii. 5.

It were well if his holiness had not set the world in an uproar, by nourishing of war. Raleigh.

He levied forces in a disordered uproar, albeit the treason rested in him and some other his complices. Hayward.

The uproar was so loud, that the accusation itself could not be heard. Holiday.

Others, with vast Typhæan rage more fell,
Rend up both rocks and hills, and ride the air
In whirlwind : hell scarce holds the wild uproar.
Milton.

Horror thus prevail'd,
And wild uproar ! ah, who at length will end
This long pernicious fray? Phillips.

The impiety of this sentiment set the audience in an uproar ; and made Socrates, though an intimate friend of the poet, go out of the theatre with indignation. Addison.

To UPROAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To

In this upshot, purposes mistake
Fall on th' inventors heads. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Every leading demonstration to the main upshot of all, which is the proportion betwixt the sphere and cylinder, is a pledge of the wit and reason of that mathematician. More.

Upon the upshot, afflictions are but the methods of a merciful Providence, to force us upon the only means of setting matters right. L'Estrange.

Here is an end of the matter, says the prophet :
here is the upshot and result of all ; here terminate both the prophecies of Daniel and St. John.

Let's now make an end of matters peaceably, as we shall quickly come to the upshot of our affair. Arbuthnot.

At the upshot, after a life of perpetual application, to reflect that you have been doing nothing for yourself, and that the same or less industry might have gained you a friendship that can never deceive or end ; a glory, which, though not to be had till after death, yet shall be felt and enjoyed to eternity. Pope.

UPSIDE down. [an adverbial form of speech.]

1. With the lower part above the higher.

In his lap a mass of coin he told,
And turned upside down, to feed his eye
And covetous desire with his huge treasure. Spens.

The flood did not so turn upside down the face of the earth, as thereby it was made past knowledge, after the waters were decreased.

The severe notions of Christianity torned all this upside down, filling all with surprize and amazement. They came upon the world like light darting foll upon the face of a man asleep, who had a mind not to be disturbed. South.

UPSPRING. n. s. [up and spring.] This sudden upstarts, that shall seek to trouble the peace thereof. Spenser's Ireland.

My rights and royalties
Pluckt from my arms perforce, and given away
To upstart unthrifts. Shaksp.

Mushrooms have two strange properties ; the one, that they yield so delicious a meat ; the other, that they come up so hastily, even in a night, and yet they are unswon : and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms.

The king did not neglect Ireland, the soil where these mushrooms and upstart weeds, that spring up in a night, did chiefly prosper. Bacon.

A place of bliss
In the purlieus of heav'n, and therein plac'd
A race of upstart creatures, to supply
Perhaps our vacant room. Milton's Paradise Lost

For I would have you, when you upward move, Speak kindly of me to our friends above. Druden.

U R E

In sheets of rain the sky descends,
And ocean swell'd with waters upwards tends;
One rising, falling one, the heav'n and sea
Meet at their confines, in the middle way. Dryd.
A man on a cliff is at liberty to leap twenty yards downwards into the sea, not because he has power to do the contrary action, which is to leap twenty yards upwards for that he cannot do; but he is therefore free, because he has a power to leap, or not to leap. Locke.

2. Towards heaven and God.
Looking inward, we are stricken dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker.

3. With respect to the higher part.
Dagon, sea-monster! upward man,
And downward fish. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. More than; with tendency to a higher or greater number.
Their counsel must seem very unseasonable, who advise men now to suspect that, wherewith the world hath had, by their own account, twelve hundred years acquaintance and upwards, enough to take away suspicion. Hooker.
I have been your wife in this obedience
Upward of twenty years; and have been blest
With many children by you. Shak. Henry VIII.

5. Towards the source.
Be Homer's works your study;
Thence form your judgment, thence your notions bring,
And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

To UPWIND. v. a. pret. and part. pass.
upwound. [up and wind.] To convolve.
As she lay upon the dirty ground,
Her huge long tail her den all overspread,

URBANITY. n. s. [urbanité, Fr. urbanitas, Lat.] Civility; elegance; politeness; merriment; facetiousness.
A rustical severity banishes all urbanity, whose harmless condition is consistent with religion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Raillery is the sauce of civil entertainment; and without some such tincture of urbanity, good humour falters. L'Estrange.
Moral doctrine, and urbanity, or well-mannered wit, constitute the Roman satire. Dryden.

URCHIN. n. s. [heureuchin, Armorick; erinaceus, Lat.]
1. A hedge-hog.
Urchins shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee. Shakesp. Tempest.
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,
As any mortal body, bearing it,
Would straight fall mad. Shakesp. Titus Andron.
That nature designs the preservation of the more inferior creatures by the defensive armour it hath given them, is demonstrable in the common hedge-hog, or urchin. Ray.

2. A name of slight anger to a child.
Pleas'd Cupid heard, and check'd his mother's pride;
And who's blind now, mamma? the urchin cried.
'Tis Chloe's eye, and cheek, and lip, and breast:
Friend Howard's genius fancied all the rest. Prior.
Thos in the glebe the deadly nightshade grows,
Flourants in the sun and mingles with the rose,
The peevish hane the prowling urchin spies:
Touch! Touch it not! He gorges it, and dies. White's Poems.

URE. n. s. Practice; use; habit. Obsolete.
Is the warrant sufficient for any man's conscience to build such proceedings upon, as are and have been put in ure for the establishment of that cause. Hooker.
He would keep his hand in ure with somewhat of greater value, till he was brought to justice. L'Estrange.

URETER. n. s. [ὑδρητης; uretere, Fr.]
Ureters are two long and small canals

U R G

The passage of the urine.
Caruncles are loose flesh arising in the urethra. Wiseman.

To URGE. v. a. [urgeo, Lat.]
1. To incite; to push; to press by motives.
You do mistake your business: my brother Did urge me in his act. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.
What I have done my safety urg'd me to. Shak.
This urges me to fight, and fires my hand. Dry.
High Epidaurus urges on my speed,
Fam'd for his hills, and for his horses' breed. Dry.
The heathens had but uncertain apprehensions of what urges men most powerfully to forsake their sins. Tillotson.

2. To provoke; to exasperate.
Urge not my father's anger, Eglamour,
But think upon my grief. Shakesp.

3. To follow close, so as to impel.
Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?
Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. Pope.

4. To labour vehemently; to do with eagerness or violence.
He, seiz'd with horror, in the shades of night
Through the thick deserts headlong urg'd his flight. Pope.

5. To press; to enforce.
The enemy 's in view; draw up your powers;
Your haste is now urg'd on you. Shakesp.
Urge your petitions in the street. Shakesp. Julius Cesar.
And great Achilles urge the Trojan fate. Dryd.

6. To press as an argument.
He pleaded still not guilty;
The king's attorney, on the contrary,
Urg'd on examinations, proofs, confessions,
Of divers witnesses. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Urge the necessity and state of times,
And be not peevish. Shakesp. Richard III.
But against all this some may urge two places, which seem to take away all suits among Christians. Kettlewell.

7. To importune; to solicit.
He urged sore,
With piercing words and pitiful implore,
Him hasty to arise. Spenser.

8. To press in opposition, by way of objection.
Though every man have a right in dispute to urge a false religion, with all its absurd consequences; yet it is barbarous incivility scurrilously to sport with that which others account religion. Tillotson.

To URGE. v. n. To press forward.
A palace, when 'tis that which it should be,
Stands such, or else decays:
But he which dwells there is not so; for he Strives to urge upward, and his fortune raise. Donne.

URGENCY. n. s. [from urgent.] Pressure of difficulty or necessity.
Being for some hours extremely pressed by the necessities of nature, I was under great difficulties between urgency and shame. Gulliver's Travels.

URGENT. adj. [urgent, Fr. urgens, Lat.]
1. Cogent; pressing; violent.
Things so ordained are to be kept; howbeit not necessarily any longer than till there grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hooker.
Not alone
The death of Fulvia, but more urgent touches,
Do strongly speak 's us. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleopat.
This ever hath been that true cause of more wars than upon all other occasions, though it least partakes of the urgent necessity of state. Raleigh.

U R I

Let a father seldom strike, but upon very urgent necessity, and as the last remedy. Locke on Education.

2. Importunate; vehement in solicitation.
The Egyptians were urgent upon the people, that they might send them out in haste. Exod. xii. 53.

URGENTLY. adv. [from urgent.] Cogently; violently; vehemently; importunately.
Acrimony in their blood, and afflux of humours to their lungs, urgently indicate phlebotomy. Horney.

URGER. n. s. [from urge.] One who presses; importuner.
I wish Pope were as great an urger as I. Swift.

URGEWONDER. n. s. A sort of grain.
This barley is called by some urgewonder. Mort.

URIM. n. s.
Urim and thummim were something in Aaron's breast-plate; but what, critics and commentators are by no means agreed. The word urim signifies light, and thummim perfection. It is most probable that they were only names given to signify the clearness and certainty of the divine answers which were obtained by the high-priest consulting God with his breast-plate on, in contradistinction to the obscure, enigmatical, uncertain, and imperfect answers of the heathen oracles. Newton's Notes on Milton.
He in celestial panoply all arm'd,
Of radiant urim, work divinely wrought. Milton.

URINAL. n. s. [urinal, Fr. from urine.]
A bottle, in which water is kept for inspection.
These follies shine through you, like the water in an urinal. Shakesp. Two Gentlemen of Verona.
A candle out of a musket will pierce through an inch board, or an urinal force a nail through a plank. Brown.
This hand, when glory calls,
Can brandish arms as well as urinals. Garth.
Some with scymitars in their hands, and others with urinals, ran to and fro. Spectator.

URINARY. adj. [from urine.] Relating to the urine.
The urachus or ligamentous passage is derived from the bottom of the bladder, whereby it discharges the waterish and urinary part of its contents. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Diureticks that relax the urinary passages, should be tried before such as stimulate. Arbutnot on Aliments.

URINATIVE. adj. Working by urine; provoking urine.
Medicines urinative do not work by rejection and indigestion, as solutive do. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

URINATOR. n. s. [urinateur, Fr. urinator, Lat.] A diver; one who searches under water.
The precious things that grow there, as pearl, may be much more easily fetched up by the help of this, than by any other way of the urinators. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.
Those relations of urinators belong only to those places where they have dived, which are always rocky. Ray.

URINE. n. s. [urine, Fr. urina, Lat.]
Animal water.
Drink, Sir, is a great provoker of nose-painting, sleep, and urine. Shakesp.
As though there were a seminality in urine, or that, like the seed, it carried with it the idea of every part, they foolishly believe we can visibly behold therein the anatomy of every particle. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
The chyle cannot pass by urine or sweat. Arbutnot.

To URINE. v. n. [uriner, Fr. from the noun.] To make water.
Places where men urine commonly have some smell of violets. Bacon's Natural History.
No oviparous animal, which spawn or lay eggs, doth urine, except the tortoise. Brown's Vulg. Err.

URINOUS. adj. [from urine.] Partaking of urine.

The putrid matter being distilled, affords a water impregnated with an urinous spirit, like that obtainable from animal substances. Arbuth. on Alim.

URN. n. s. [urne, Fr. urna, Lat.]

1. Any vessel, of which the mouth is narrower than the body.

Vesta is not displeas'd, if her chaste urn
Do with repaired fuel burn;
But my saint frowns, though to her honour'd name
I consecrate a never-dying flame. Carew.

Mimos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls;
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls. Dryden.

2. A water-pot; particularly that in the sign of Aquarius.

The fish oppose the maid, the watry urn
With adverse fires sees raging Leo burn. Creech.

3. The vessel in which the remains of burnt bodies were put.

Or lay these bones in an unworthy urn,
Tombless, with no remembrance over them. Shak.
A rustick, digging in the ground by Padua, Found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn; and, in this lesser, a lamp clearly burning. Hilkins.
His scatter'd limbs with my dead body burn;
And once more join us in the pious urn. Dryden.

UROSCOPY. n. s. [ὑρσος and σκόπιον.] Inspection of urine.

My brother
Is pris'n'r to the bishop, at whose hands
He bath good usage, and great liberty.

Shak. Hen. VI.

The rest were sav'd, and made enthralled swains
To all the basest usages there bred. Chapman.

What usage have I met with from this adversary, who passes by the very words I translated, and produces other passages; and then hectors and cries out of my disingenuity? Stillingfleet.

Are not hawks brought to the hand and to the lure, and lions reclaimed, by good usage? L'Estr.

He was alarmed with the expectations of that usage, which was then a certain consequent of such meritorious acts. Fell.

Neptune took unkindly to be bound,
And Eurus never such hard usage found
In his Eolian prison. Dryden.

2. Custom; practice long continued.

Of things once received and confirmed by use,
long usage is a law sufficient. In civil affairs, when there is no other law, custom itself doth stand for law. Hooker.

3. Manners; behaviour. Obsolete.

A gentle nymph was found,
Light Astery, excelling all the crew
In courteous usage, and unstained hue. Spenser.

The fat of the beast that dieth of itself, may be used in any other use. Leviticus, vii. 24.
Number the mind makes use of in measuring all things by us measurable. Locke.
Consider the history, with what use our author makes of it. Locke.
Things may, and must, differ in their use; but yet they are all to be used according to the will of God. Law.

2. Qualities that make a thing proper for any purpose.

Rice is of excellent use for illnesses of the stomach, that proceed from cold or moist humours;
a great digester and restorer of appetite. Temple.

3. Need of; occasion on which a thing can be employed.

This will secure a father to my child;
That done, I have no farther use for life. A. Phillips.

4. Advantage received; power of receiving advantage.

More figures in a picture than are necessary, our author calls figures to be let; because the pictures has no use for them. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

5. Convenience; help; usefulness.

Distinct growth in knowledge carries its own light in every step of its progression; and than nothing is of more use to the understanding. Locke.

improvement of knowledge and politeness, than some effectual method for correcting, enlarging, and ascertaining our language. Swift.
When will my friendship be of use to thee?
A. Phillips.
You shew us Rome was glorious, not profuse;
And pompous buildings once were things of use.
Pope.

6. Usage; customary act.

That which those nations did use, having been also in use with others, the ancient Roman laws do forbid. Hooker.
He that first brought the word sham, wheedle, or banter, in use, put together, as he thought fit,
those ideas he made it stand for. Locke.

7. Practice; habit.

Sweetness, truth, and ev'ry grace
Which time and use are wont to teach,
The eye may in a moment reach,
And read distinctly in her face. Waller.

8. Custom; common occurrence.

O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

9. Interest; money paid for the use of money.

If it be good, thou hast received it from God, and then thou art more obliged to pay duty and tribute, use and principal, to him.

Most of the learned, Heathen and Christian, assert the taking of use to be unlawful; yet the divines of the reformed church beyond the seas do generally affirm it to be lawful. South's Sermons.

To USE. v. a. [user, Fr. usus, Lat.]

1. To employ to any purpose.

Yon 're welcome,
Most learned, rev'rend Sir, into our kingdom;

In pulling of trees, many do use to leave a bough or two on the top, to help to draw up the sap.
Bacon.

A prudent governor, to advance religion, will not consider men's duty, but their practice; not what they ought to do, but what they use to do.
South's Sermons.

2. To be customarily in any manner; to be wont.

Fears use to be represented in such an imaginary fashion, as they rather dazzle men's eyes than open them. Bacon.

The waters going and returning, as the waves and great commotions of the sea use to do, retired leisurely. Barnet.

3. To frequent; to inhabit. Obsolete.

Conduct me well
In these strange ways, where never foot did use.
Spenser.
Snakes that use within the house for shade
Securely lurk, and like a plague invade
Thy cattle with venom.
Ye vallies low, where the mild whisp'ers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing brooks.
May's Virgil.
Milton.

USEFUL. adj. [use and full.] Convenient; profitable to any end; conducive or helpful to any purpose; valuable for use.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry.
More's Antidote.
Gold and silver being little useful to the life of man, in proportion to food, raiment, and carriage, has its value only from the consent of men.
Locke.
That the legislature should have power to change the succession, is very useful towards preserving our religion and liberty.
Swift.
Deliver a particular account of the great and useful things already performed.
Swift.
Next to reading, meditation, and prayer, there is nothing that secures our hearts from foolish passions, nothing that preserves so holy and wise a frame of mind, as some useful, humble employment of ourselves.
Low.

USEFULLY. adv. [from useful.] In such a manner as to help forward some end.

In this account they must constitute two at least, male and female, in every species; which chance could not have made so very nearly alike without copying, nor so usefully differing without contrivance.
Bentley's Sermons.

USEFULNESS. n. s. Conduciveness or helpfulness to some end.

The grandeur of the commonwealth shows itself chiefly in works that were necessary or convenient. On the contrary, the magnificence of Rome, under the emperors, was rather for ostentation than any real usefulness.
Addison.

USELESS. adj. [from use.] Answering no purpose; having no end.

So have I seen the lost clouds pour
Into the sea an useless show'r;
And the vex'd sailors curse the rain
For which poor shepherds pray'd in vain.
Waller.
The hurtful teeth of vipers are useless to us, and yet are parts of their bodies.
Boyle.
His friend, on whose assistance he must relied, either proves false and forsakes him, or looks on with an useless pity, and cannot help him.

Wotton.

USHER. n. s. [huissier, Fr.]

1. One whose business is to introduce strangers, or walk before a person of high rank.

The wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horse to tell her approach,
Long ere she did appear.
Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.
You make guards and ushers march before, and then enters your prince.
Tatler.
Gay paid his courtship with the crowd,
As far as modest pride allow'd;
Rej-ects a servile usher's place,
And leaves St. James's in disgrace.
Swift.

2. An under-teacher; one who introduces young scholars to a higher learning.

Though grammar's profits less than rhetoric's are,
Yet ev'n in those his usher claims a share.
Dryden.
To USHER. v. a. [from the noun.] To introduce as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.
No sun shall ever usher forth my honours,
Or gild again the noble troops that waited Upon my smiles.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

The sun,
Declin'd, was hasting now with prone career
To th' ocean isles; and, in th' ascending scale
Of heav'n, the stars, that usher evening, rose.
Milton.

As the deluge is represented a disruption of the abyss, so the future combustion of the earth is to be ushered in, and accompanied, with violent impressions upon nature, and the chief will be earthquakes.
Barnet's Theory of the Earth.
With songs and dance we celebrate the day,
And with due honours usher in the May.
Dryden.
The Examiner was ushered into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author.

Pours into captain's wounds?
Shakesp. Timon.

USURER. n. s. [usurier, Fr. usura, Lat.] One who puts money out at interest.

Commonly used for one that takes exorbitant interest.

Fie! thou sham'st thy shape, thy love, thy wit;
Which, like an usurer, abound'st in all,
And usest none in that true use indeed,
Which should bedeck thy shape, thy love, thy wit.
Shakesp.

When usurers tell their gold 't' th' field,
And bawds and whores do churches build.
Shak.
If thou lend money to any that is poor, thou shalt not be to him as an usurer, nor lay upon him usury.
Erodus, xxii. 25.

There may be no commutative injustice, justice, which each retains a mutual benefit; the usurer for his money, the borrower for his industry.

Child on Trade.
The asses usura occasioned great tumults among the people; yet he that took it was not reckoned to transgress any law; and there were some greedy usurers that exacted double, triple.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

USURIOUS. adj. [usuaire, Fr. from usury.] Given to the practice of usury; exorbitantly greedy of profit.

For every hour that thou wilt spare me now
I will allow,
*Usurious god of love, twenty to thee,
When with my browa my grey hairs equal be.*
Donne.

To USURP. v. a. [usurper, Fr. usurpo, Lat.] To possess by force or intrusion; to seize or possess without right.

So ugly a darkness, as if it would prevent the night's coming, usurped the day's right.
Sidney.
Not having the natural superiority of fathers, their power must be usurped, and then unlawful; or, if lawful, then granted or consented unto by them over whom they exercise the same, or else given them extraordinarily from God.
Hooker.

In as much as the due estimation of heavenly truth dependeth wholly upon the known and approved authority of those famous oracles of God, it greatly beloveth the church to have always most sacred care, lest human inventions usurp the room and title of divine worship.
Hooker.

Victorious prince of York!
Before I see thee seated in that throne
Which now the house of Lancaster usurps,
These eyes shall never close.
Shakesp. Henry VI.
What art thou, that usurp'st this time of night,
Together with that fair and warlike form?
Shak.
Their fox-like thefts are so rank, as a man may find whole pages usurped from one another.
Ben Jonson.

U S U

But soon revives; death over him no pow'r
 Shall long usurp: ere the third dawning light
 Return, the stars of morn shall see him rise
 Out of his grave. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 All fountains of the deep
 Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
 Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton.
 Farewell court,
 Where vice not only hath usurpt the place,
 But the reward, and even the name, of virtue.
Denham.
 Your care about your banks infers a fear
 Of threat'ning floods and inundations near:
 If so, a just reprove would only be
 Of what the land usurp'd upon the sea. Dryden.
 Who next usurps will a just prince appear,
 So much your ruin will his reign endear. Dryden.
 Struggling in vain, impatient of her load,
 And lab'ring underneath the pond'rous God,
 The more she strove to shake him from her breast,
 With more and far superior force he press'd,
 Commands his entrance, and without controul
Usurps her organs, and inspires her soul. Dryden.
 Who 's this, that dares usurp
 The guards and habit of Numidia's prince?
Addison's Cato.

USURPA'TION. n. s. [usurpation, Fr. from usurp.] Forcible, unjust, illegal seizure or possession.

The Piercies,
 Finding his usurpation most unjust,
 Endeavour'd my advancement to the throne. Shak.
 Succeeding kings recovery of their right from unjust usurpations, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine. King Charles.
 To raise a tempest on the sea was usurpation on the prerogative of Neptune, who had given him no leave. Dryden.

O baseness to support a tyrant throne,
 And crush your freeborn brethren of the world;
 Nay, to become a part of usurpation,
 To espouse the tyrant's person and her crimes. Dry.
 Whatever opposition was made to the usurpations of king James, proceeded altogether from the church of England. Swift.

USUR'PER. n. s. [from usurp.] One who seizes or possesses that to which he has no right. It is generally used of one who excludes the right heir from the throne.

Ever sithence he hath continued his first usurped power, and now exacteth upon all men what he list: so that now to subdue or expel an usurper, should be no unjust enterprize, but a restitution of ancient right unto the crown. Spenser.

Richard duke of York
 Was rightful heir unto the English crown;
 And that your majesty was an usurper. Shakesp.
 But this usurper his encroachment proud Stays not on man; to God his tow'r intends Siege and defiance. Milton.

Few usurpers to the shades descend
 By a grief death, or with a quiet end.
 He griev'd, the land he freed should be oppress'd,
 And he less for it than usurpers do. Dryden.

USURPINGLY. adv. [from usurp.] Without just claim.

Lay aside the sword,
 Which sways usurpingly these several titles,
 And put the same into young Arthur's hand,
 Thy right royal sovereign. Shakesp. King John.

USURY. n. s. [usuré, Fr. usura, Lat.]

1. Money paid for the use of money; interest.

He that high does sit, and all things see
 With equal eyes, their merits to restore;
 Behold, what ye this day have done for me,
 And what I cannot quit, requite with usury. Spens.
 The wished day is come at last,
 That shall, for all the pains and sorrows past,
 Pay to her usury of long delight. Spenser.
 Our angles are like money put to usury; they may thrive, though we sit still and do nothing.
Walton's Angler.

U T M

What he borrows from the antients, he repays with usury of his own; in coin as good, and almost as universally valuable. Dryd. Ded. to Juvenal.

2. The practice of taking interest. It is commonly used with some reproach.

Usury bringeth the treasure of a realm into few hands: for the usurer being at certainties, and others at uncertainties, at the end most of the money will be in the box. Bacon.

UTENSIL. n. s. [utensile, Fr. utensile, low Lat.] An instrument for any use, such as the vessels of the kitchen, or tools of a trade.

Burn but his books; he has brave utensils,
 Which, when he has a house, he'll deck withal. Shakesp.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
 And waggons fraught with utensils of war. Milton.
 Tithes and lands given to God are never, and plate, vestments, and other sacred utensils, are seldom consecrated. South.

The springs of life their former vigour feel;
 Such zeal he had for that vile utensil. Garth's Disp.

UTERINE. adj. [uterin, Fr. uterinus, Lat.] Belonging to the womb.

In hot climates, and where the uterine parts exceed in heat, by the coldness of some simple, they may be reduced unto a conceptive constitution. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The vessels of the interior glandulous substance of the womb are contorted with turnings and meanders, that they might accommodate themselves without danger of rupture to the necessary extension of the uterine substance. Ray.

UTERUS. n. s. [Lat.] The womb.

UTI'LITY. n. s. [utilité, Fr. utilitas, Lat.] Usefulness; profit; convenience; advantageousness; applied to things only: as, this book is of great utility; not, this book was written for the utility of scholars.

Those things which have long gone together are confederate; whereas new things piece not so well; but though they help by their utility, yet they trouble by their inconformity. Bac. Nat. Hist.

Should we blindly obey the restraints of physicians and astrologers, we should confine the utility of physick unto a very few days. Br. Vulg. Err.
 M. Zulicheum desired me that I would give a relation of the cure of the gout, that might be made publick, as a thing which might prove of common utility to so great numbers as were subject to that disease. Temple.

UTIS. n. s. A word which probably is corrupted, at least is not now understood.

Utis was the octave of a saint's day, and may perhaps be taken for any festivity.
 Then here will be old utis: it will be an excellent stratagem. Shakesp. Henry IV.

UTMOST. adj. [utmoæt, Sax. from utæp.]

1. Extreme; placed at the extremity.

Much like a subtle spider, which doth sit
 In middle of her web, which spreadeth wide;
 If aught do touch the utmost thread of it,
 She feels it instantly on every side. Davies.
 As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milt.
 I went, by your command,
 To view the utmost limits of the land. Dryden.

2. Being in the highest degree.

I'll undertake to bring him,
 Where he shall answer by a lawful form,
 In peace, to his utmost peril. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

UTMOST. n. s. The most that can be; the greatest power; the highest degree; the greatest effort.

What miscarries
 Shall be the general's fault, though he perform
 To th' utmost of a man. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
 I will be free,
 Even to the utmost: as I please in words. Shakesp.

U T T

Such a conscience, as has employed the utmost of its ability to give itself the best information, and clearest knowledge of its duty, that it can, is a rational ground for a man to build such an hope upon. South.

Try your fortune.
 —I have to the utmost. Dost thou think me desperate Without just cause? Dryden's All for Love.

A man, having carefully enquired into all the grounds of probability and unlikeliness, and done his utmost to inform himself in all particulars, may come to acknowledge on which side the probability rests. Locke.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men: let us perform our utmost, and we shall overwhelm them with our multitudes. Addison.

UTTER. adj. [utæp, Sax.]

1. Situate on the outside, or remote from the centre.

In my flight
 Through utter and through middle darkness borne,
 I sung of chaos and eternal night. Milton.

2. Placed beyond any compass; out of any place.

Pursue these sons of darkness; drive them out
 From all heav'n's bounds into the utter deep. Milt.

3. Extreme; excessive; utmost. This seems to be Milton's meaning here, though the former sense may serve.

Such place eternal justice had prepar'd
 For those rebellious; here their prison ordain'd
 In utter darkness; and their portion set
 As far remov'd from God, and light of heav'n,
 As from the center thrice to th' utmost pole. Milt.

4. Complete; total.

The parliament thought the utter taking it away necessary for the preservation of the kingdom. Clarendon.

5. Peremptory.

There could not be any other estimate made of the loss, than by the utter refusal of the auxiliary regiments of London and Kent to march farther. Clarendon.

6. Perfect; mere.

They feel fewer corporal pains, and are utter strangers to all those anxious thoughts which disquiet mankind. Atterbury.

TO UTTER. v. a. [from the adjective; to make publick, or let out; palam facere.]

1. To speak; to pronounce; to express.

Men spake not with the instruments of writing, neither writ with the instruments of speech; and yet things recorded with the one, and uttered with the other, may be preached well enough with both. Hooker.

These very words I've heard him utter. Shak.
 There 's more gold; but, sirrah,
 We say the dead are well. Bring it to that,
 The gold I give thee will I melt, and pour Down thy ill-uttering throat. Shakesp.

Shall not they teach thee and tell thee, and utter words but of their heart?
Job, viii. 10.

Who knows but his poor bleeding heart,
 Amidst its agonies, remember'd Marcia,
 And the last words he utter'd call'd me cruel!
Addison.

2. To disclose; to discover; to publish.

When do partial and sinister affections more utter themselves, than when an election is committed to many?
Whitgift.

Were it fully to be modest in uttering what is known to all the world?
Raleigh.

I meant my words should not reach your ears; but what I utter'd was most true.
Dryd. All for Love.

3. To sell; to vend.

Such mortal drugs I have, but Mantua's law
 Is death to any he that utters them.
Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

They bring it home, and utter it common 't by the name of Newfoundland fish.

Abbot's Description of the World

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

4. To disperse; to emit at large.

To preserve us from ruin, the whole kingdom should continue in a firm resolution never to receive or utter this fatal coin.

Swift.

UTTERABLE. adj. [from utter.] Expressible; such as may be uttered.

UTTERANCE. n. s. [from utter.]

1. Pronunciation; manner of speaking.

He with utterance grave, and countenance sad,
From point to point discours'd his voyage. Spens.
Many a man thinks admirably well, who has a poor utterance; while others have a charming manner of speech, but their thoughts are trifling.

Hatts.

2. [Outrance, Fr.] Extremity; terms of extreme hostility. Out of use.

Of him I gather'd honour;
Which he to seek of me again perforce,
Behoves me keep at utterance. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Come, fate, into the list,
And champion me to th' utterance. Shak. Macbeth.

3. Vocal expression; emission from the mouth.

Till Adam, though no less than Eve abash'd,
At length gave utterance to these words constrain'd.

Milton.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by several discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several determinate significances.

Holder.

There have been some inventions, which have been able for the utterance of articulate sounds, as the speaking of certain words.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

UTTERER. n. s. [from utter.]

Utters of secrets lie from thence debar'd;
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime. Spenser.

3. A seller; a vender.

UTTERLY. adv. [from utter.] Fully; completely; perfectly. For the most part in an ill sense.

God, whose property is to shew his mercies then greatest, when they are nearest to be utterly despair'd.

Hooker.

Arguments taken from the authority of men, may not only so far forth as hath been declared, but further also, be of some force in human sciences; which force, be it never so small, doth shew that they are not utterly naught.

Hooker.

All your interest in those territories is utterly bereft you; all is lost.

Shak. Henry VI.

He was so utterly tired with an employment so contrary to his humour, that he did not consider the means that would lead him out of it.

Clarend.

There is no where any nation so utterly lost to all things of law and morality, as not to believe the existence of God.

Wilkins.

While in the flesh, we cannot be utterly insensible of the afflictions that befall us.

Atterbury.

UTTERMOST. adj. [from utter.]

1. Extreme; being in the highest degree.

Whereon I live! thy gentle looks, thy aid,
Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress.

Milton.

2. Most remote.

The land, from the uttermost end of the straits on Pero side, did go towards the south.

Abbot's Description of the World.

UTTERMOST. n. s. The greatest.

Ray on the Creat.

FULCANO. n. s. [Ital.] A burning mountain: it is commonly written, after the Italian, volcano.

Earth calcined flies off into the air; the ashes of burning mountains, in volcanos, will be carried to great distances.

Arbuthnot.

VULGAR. adj. [vulgaire, Fr. vulgaris, Lat.]

1. Plebeian; suiting to the common people; practised among the common people.

Men who have passed all their time in low and vulgar life, cannot have a suitable idea of the several beauties and blemishes in the actions of great men.

Addison.

2. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, who was to be his immediate care, to write in our vulgar language.

Fell.

3. Mean; low; being of the common rate.

It requiring too great a sagacity for vulgar minds to draw the line between virtue and vice, no wonder if most men attempt not a laborious scrutiny into things themselves, but only take names and words, and so rest in them.

South.

Now wasting years my former strength confound,
And added woes have bow'd me to the ground:
Yet by the stubble you may guess the grain,
And mark the ruins of no vulgar man.

Broome.

4. Publick; commonly bruited.

Do you hear aught of a battle toward?
—Most sure, and vulgar; every one hears that.

Shakesp.

VULGAR. n. s. [vulgaire, Fr.] The common people.

I'll about;

Drive away the vulgar from the streets. Shakesp.
Those men, and their adherents, were then look'd upon by the affrighted vulgar as greater protectors of their laws and liberties than myself.

King Charles.

The most considering and wisest men, in all ages and nations, have constantly differed from the vulgar in their thought.

Wilkins.

The vulgar imagine the pretender to have been a child imposed upon the nation by the fraudulent zeal of his parents, and their bigoted counsellors.

Swift.

VULGARISM. n. s. [from vulgar.] Grossness; meanness; vulgarity.

The great events of Greek and Roman fable and history, which early education, and the usual course of reading, have made familiar and interesting to all Europe, without being degraded by the vulgarism of ordinary life in any country.

Reynolds.

VULGARITY. n. s. [from vulgar.]

1. Meanness; state of the lowest people.

Although their condition may place them many spheres above the multitude; yet are they still within the line of vulgarity, and democratical enemies to truth.

Brown.

True it is, and I hope I shall not offend their vulgarity if I say, they are daily mocked into error by devisers.

Brown.

2. Mean or gross mode.

Is the grand sophos of Persius, and the sublimity of Juvenal, to be circumscribed with the meanness of words, and vulgarity of expression?

Dryden's Dedication to Juvenal.

U X O

Connubial dotage; fond submission to a wife.

W.

W A D

W is a letter of which the form is not to be found in the alphabets of the learned languages; though it is not improbable that by our w is expressed the sound of the Roman v, and the Eolick f. Both the form and sound are excluded from the languages derived from the Latin.

W is sometimes improperly used in diphthongs as a vowel for u; view, strew: the sound of w consonant, if it be a consonant, is uniform.

To WA'BBLE. v. n. [a low barbarous word.] To move from side to side; to change direction.

If in your work you find it wabble; that is that one side of the flat inclines to the right or left hand, with soft blows of an hammer set it to rights, and then screw it hard up. Mozon.

WAD. n. s. [peod, hay, Sax.]

1. A bundle of straw or other loose matter thrust close together.

2. Wadd, or black lead, is a mineral of great use and value. Woodward.

WA'DDING. n. s. [from wad, rad, Islandick.] A kind of soft stuff loosely woven, with which the skirts of coats are stuffed out.

To WA'DDLE. v. n. [wagghelen, Dut. to waggle; whence, by a casual corruption, waddlc.] To shake, in walking from side to side; to deviate in motion from a right line.

She could have run and waddled all about. Shak.
The strutting petticoat smooths and levels all distinctions; while I cannot but be troubled to see so many well-shaped innocent virgins bloated up, and waddling up and down, like big-bellied women. Spectator.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill,
And hardly waddles forth to cool
Her belly in the neighbouring pool. Swift.
Dulness, of business the directing soul,
To human heads like bias to the bowl;
Which, as more pond'rous, makes their aim more true,
Obliquely waddling to the mark in view. Pope.

She draws her words, and waddles in her pace;
Unwashed her hands, and much besmear'd her face. Young.

To WADE. v. n. [from vadum, Lat. pronounced wadum.]

1. To walk through the waters; to pass water without swimming.

We'll wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood. Shakesp.
She waded through the dirt to pluck him off. Shakesp.

I am in blood
Stept in so far, that, should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shak. Macb.
He staid seven days at the Crassus, until a bridge was made for the transporting of his army, for that the river was not to be waded over. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Then, since fortune's favours fade,
You that in her arms do sleep,
Learn to swim, and not to wade,
For the hearts of kings are deep. Watson's Poems.

With head, hands, wings, or feet pursues his way,
And swims, or sinks, or wades, or creeps, or flies. Milton.

It is hard to wade deep in baths where springs arise. Brown.

Fowls that frequent waters, and only wade, have as well long legs as long necks; and those that are made for swimming have feet like oars. More's Divine Dialogues.

2. To pass difficultly and laboriously.

They were not permitted to enter into war, nor conclude any league of peace, nor to wade through any act of moment between them and foreign states, unless the oracle of God, or his prophets, were first consulted with. Hooker.

I have waded through the whole cause, searching the truth by the causes of truth. Hooker.

Virtue gives herself light, through darkness for to wade. Spenser.

Occasions you have met with to excite your faculties to wade a little farther into the positive part of these doctrines. Hammond.

I should chuse rather with spitting and scorn to be tumbled into the dust in blood, bearing witness to any known truth of our Lord; than, by a denial of those truths, through blood and perjury wade to a sceptre, and lord it in a throne. South.

'Tis not to my purpose to wade into those bottomless controversies, which, like a gulph, have swallowed up so much time of learned men. Decay of Piety.

The dame
Now tried the stairs, and wading through the night,
Search'd all the deep recess, and usher'd into light. Dryden.

The wrathful god then plunges from above,
And where in thickest waves the sparkles drove,
There lights, and wades through fumes, and gropes his way, Dryden.

Half-sing'd, half-stifled,
The king's admirable conduct has waded through all these difficulties. Davenant.

Simonides, the more he contemplated the nature of the Deity, found that he waded but the more out of his depth, and that he lost himself in the thought. Addison.

WA'FER. n. s. [wafel, Dut.]

1. A thin cake.

Wife, make us a dinner; spare flesh, neither corn;

Make wafers and cakes, for our sheepe must be shorne. Tusser.

Poor Sancho they persuaded that he enjoyed a great dominion, and then gave him nothing to subsist upon but wafers and marmalade. Pope.

2. The bread given in the eucharist by the Romanists.

That the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once; that the whole body should lie hid in a little thin waffer, yet so that the members thereof should not one run into another, but continue distinct, and have an order agreeable to a man's body, it doth exceed reason. Hall.

3. Paste made to close letters.

To WAFT. v. a. preter. wafted, or perhaps waft; participle passive wafted or waft. [probably from ware.]

1. To carry through the air or on the water.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottomis have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide. Shakesp.

Our high admiral
Shall waft them over with our royal fleet. Shakesp.

Thence wafted with a merry gale,
Sees Leinster, and the golden vale. Drayton.

W A G

Nor dares his transport-vessel cross the waves,
With such whose bones are not compos'd in graves;
A hundred years they wander on the shore;
At length, their penance done, are wafted o'er. Dryden.

Lend to this wretch your hand, and waft him o'er
To the sweet banks of yon forbidden shore. Dryd.

From hence might first spring that opinion of the vehicles of spirits; the vulgar conceiving that the breath was that wherein the soul was wafted and carried away. Rau.

They before wafted over their troops into Sicily in open vessels. Arbutnot on Coins.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over:
Alas! what winds can happy prove,
That bear me far from what I love? Prior.

Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Iudus to the pole. Pope.

2. To buoy; to make float; to hinder from sinking.

Whether cripples, who have lost their thighs, will not sink but float; their longs being able to waft up their bodies, which are in others overpoised by the hinder legs, we have not made experiment. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. To beckon; to inform by a sign of any thing moving.

To WAFT. v. n. To float.

It wafted nearer yet, and then she knew,
That what before she but surmisd, was true. Dry.
Those trumpets his triumphant entry tell,
And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryd.

WAFT. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A floating body. I know not whether authorized.

From the bellowing east oft the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains,
In one wide waft. Thomson's Winter.

2. Motion of a streamer. Used as a token or mean of information at sea.

WA'FTAGE. n. s. [from waft.] Carriage by water or air. Not in use.

Gave sign for me to leave you. Shak. Julius Caesar.

To WAG. v. a. [pagan, Sax. waggen, Dut.] To move lightly; to shake slightly.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shakesp.

All that pass hiss and wag their heads at thee. Lamentations, ii. 15.

Thou canst not wag thy finger, or begin
The least light motion, but it tends to sin. Dryd.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie hight,
Majestically stalk;

A stately, worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift.

To WAG. v. n.

1. To be in quick or ludicrous motion.

W A G

Be merry, be merry, my wife has all,
For women are shrews, both short and tall;
'Tis merry in the hall, where beards wag all. Shak.

He from his guards and midnight tent
Disguis'd o'er hills and vallies went
To wanton with the sprightly dame,
And in his pleasure lust his fame. Prior.

2. To revel; to play. In Otway it may be an adjective.
Oh! I heard him wanton in his praise;
Speak things of him might charm the ears. Otway.

Nature here
Wanton'd as in her prime, and play'd at will Her virgin fancies. Milton.

O ye muses! deign your blest retreat,
Where Horace wantons at your spring,
And Pindar sweep a bolder string. Fenton.
Thou dost but try how far I can forbear,
Nor art that monster which thou wouldst appear;
But do not wantonly my passion move,
I pardon nothing that relates to love. Dryden.

WA'NTONLY. adv. [from wanton.] Lasciviously; frolicksomely; gaily; sportively; carelessly.
Into what sundry gyres her wondered self she throws,
And oft inisles the shore, as wantonly she flows. Draughton.

With line to fetch litter. Tusser.

WA'PED. adj. [Of this word I know not the original, except that to whape, to shock, or deject, is found in Spenser;
from which the meaning may be gathered.] Dejected; crushed by misery.
This makes the waped widow wed again. Shak.

WA'PENTAKE. n. s. [from pæpun, Sax.
and take; wapentakium, wapentagium,
low Lat.]

Wapentake is all one with what we call a hundred: as, upon a meeting for that purpose, they touched each other's weapons, in token of their fidelity and allegiance. Cowell.
Hundred signifieth a hundred pledges, which were under the command and assurance of their alderman; which, as I suppose, was also called a wapentake; so named, of touching the weapon or spear of their alderman, and swearing to follow him faithfully, and serve their prince truly. But others think that a wapentake was ten hundreds, or borroughs. Spenser.

WAR. n. s. [werre, old Dut. guerre, Fr.]
1. War may be defined the exercise of violence under sovereign command against withstanders; force, authority, and resistance, being the essential parts thereof. Violence, limited by authority, is sufficiently distinguished from robbery, and the like outrages; yet, consisting in relation towards others, it necessarily requires a supposition of resistance, whereby the force of war becomes different from the violence inflicted upon slaves or yielding malefactors. Raleigh.

W A R

On, you noblest English,
Whose blood is fetcht from fathers of war proof. Shakesp.
After a denunciation or indiction of war, the war is no more confined to the place of the quarrel, but left at large. Bacon.
I saw the figure and armour of him that headed the peasants in the war upon Bern, with the several weapons found on his followers. Addison.

2. The instruments of war, in poetical
language.
The god of love inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care:
His complement of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Forces; army. Poetically.
On th' embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. The profession of arms.
Thine almighty word leapt down from heaven, as a fierce man of war into the midst of a land of destruction. H'isdorn.

5. Hostility; state of opposition; act of opposition.
Duncan's horses
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out, Contending 'gainst obedience, as they would Make war with man. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To WAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To make war; to be in a state of hostility.
Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds? Shak.
Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
That find such cruel battle here within? Shakesp.
Make peace with God, for you must die, my lord.
—Have you that holy feeling in your souls,
To counsel me to make my peace with God?
And are you yet to your own souls so blind.
That you will war with God by murd'ring me?
Shakesp.

He teacheth my hands to war. 2 Sam. xxii.
This charge I commit unto thee, son Timothy, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare. 1 Timothy, i. 18.

He limited his forces, to proceed in aid of the Britons, but in no wise to war upon the French.
Bacon's Henry VII.
We seem ambitious God's whole work t'undo;
With new diseases on ourselves we war,
And with new physick, a worse engine far. Donne.

His next design
Was all the Theban race in arms to join,
And war on Theseus. Dryden.
To the island of Delos, hy being reckon'd a sacred place, nations warring with one another resorted with their goods, and traded as in a neutral country. Arbutnot on Coins.

To WAR. v. a. To make war upon. Not used. In Spenser it is probably falsely printed for warraid.
And them long time before great Nimrod was,
The first the world with sword and fire warred. Spenser.

To them the same was render'd, to the end,
To war the Scot, and borders to defend. Daniel's Civil War.

To WARBLE. v. a. [werben, old Teuto-nick; wervelen, Germ. to twirl, or turn round.]

1. To quaver any sound.
Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Milton.

W A R

2. To cause to quaver.

To WARBLE. v. n.
1. To be quavered.
Such strains ne'er warble in the linnet's throat, Gay.

2. To be uttered melodiously.
A plaining song plain singing voice requires,
For warbling notes from inward cheering flow. Sidney.

There birds resort, and in their kind thy praise
Among the branches chiant in warbling lays. Wotton.

3. To sing.
Creatures that liv'd, and mov'd, and walk'd, or flew;
Birds on the branches warbling; all things smil'd. Milton.

She warbled in her throat,
And tun'd her voice to many a merry note,
But indistinct. Dryden.
A bard amid the joyous circle sings
High airs attemper'd to the vocal strings;
Whilst warbling to the varied strain advance
Two sprightly youths to form the bounding dance. Pope.

WA'RBLER. n. s. [from warble] A singer;
a songster.
Hark! on ev'ry bough,
In lulling strains, the feather'd warblers woo. Tickell.

WARD. A syllable much used as an affix in composition, as heavenward, with tendency to heaven; hitherward, this way; from peard, Saxon; it notes tendency to or from.

Before she could come to the arbour, she saw walking from her-ward a man in shepherdish apparel. Sidney.

To WA'RD. v. a. [peardian, Sax. waren,
Dut. garder, Fr.]

1. To guard; to watch.
He march'd forth towards the castle wall,
Whose gates he found fast shut; ne living wight
To ward the same, nor answer com'er's call. Spens.

2. To defend; to protect.
Tell him it was a hand that warded him
From thousand dangers, bid him bury it. Shakesp.

3. To fence off; to obstruct or turn aside any thing mischievous. It is now used with off, less elegantly.
Not once the baron lift his armed hand
To strike the maid, but gazing on her eyes,
Where lordly Cupid seem'd in arms to stand,
No way to ward or shun her blows he tries. Fairfax.

Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again. Daniel.

Toxeus amaz'd, and with amazement slow,
Or to revenge or ward the coming blow Stood doubting; and, while doubting thus he stood,
Receiv'd the steel bath'd in his brother's blood. Dryden.

The pointed javelin warded off his rage. Addison.
The provision of bread for food, cloathing to ward off the inclemency of the air, were to be first looked after. Woodward.

It instructs the scholar in the various methods of warding off the force of objections, and of discovering and repelling the subtle tricks of sophis-ters. H'atts on the Mind.

To WARD. v. n.
1. To be vigilant; to keep guard

2. To act upon the defensive with a weapon.
So redoubling her blows, drove the stranger to no other shift than to ward and go back. Sidney.

W A R

Short crooked swords in closer fight they wear,
And on their warding arms lighter bucklers bear.

Dryden.

WARD. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Watch; act of guarding.

Still when she slept he kept both watch and ward.

Spenser.

Sublime on these a tower of steel is rear'd,
And dire Disphone there keeps the ward;
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day
Observant of the souls that pass the downward way.

Dryden.

2. Garrison; those who are intrusted to keep a place.

By reason of these two forts, though there be but small wards left in them, there are two good towns now grown, which are the greatest stay of both those two countries.

Spenser.

Th' assieged castles ward
Their steadfast stands did mightily maintain.

3. Guard made by a weapon in fencing.

Thou know'st my old ward; here I lay, and thus I bore my point.

Shakesp. Hen. IV.

Come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick.

Shakesp. Tempest.

Now by proof it shall appear,
Whether thy horns are sharper, or my spear.
At this I threw; for want of other ward,
He lifted up his hand his front to guard.

Dryden.

4. Fortress; strong hold.

She dwells securely on the excellency of her honour.
Now could I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her from the ward of her purity, her reputation, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me.

Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

5. [Horda, law Lat.] District of a town.

Throughout the trembling city plac'd a guard,
Dealing an equal share to every ward.

Dryden.

6. Custody; confinement.

That wretched creature, being deprehended in that impiety, was held in ward.

Hooker.

Stopt there was his too vehement speech with speed,
And he sent close to ward from where he stood.

Daniel.

7. The part of a lock, which, corresponding to the proper key, hinders any other from opening it.

In the key-hole turns
Th' intricate wards, and every bolt and bar.

Milton.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are there several inventions in the making and contriving their wards, or guards.

The keys, as well as the locks, were fitted ward to ward by the same wisdom.

Grew's Cosm.

8. One in the hands of a guardian.

The king causeth bring up his wards, but bestoweth no more of their rents upon them than is useful.

Drummond.

You know our father's ward,
The fair Minimia: is your heart at peace?
Is it so guarded that you could not love her?

Otway.

Thy Violante's heart was ever thine,
Compell'd to wed before she was my ward.

When, stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,
We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward.

Titles of honour, and privileges, the rich and the great can never deserve, unless they employ them for the protection of these, the true wards and children of God.

Spratt.

9. The state of a child under a guardian.

I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Shakesp.

Lewis the Eleventh of France, having much abated the greatness and power of the peers, would say, that he had brought the crown out of ward.

Bacon.

10. Guardianship; right over orphans.

It is also inconvenient, in Ireland, that the wards and marriages of gentlemen's children should be in the disposal of any of those lords.

Spenser.

WARDEN. n. s. [warden, Dut.]

1. A keeper; a guardian.

2. A head officer.

The warden of apothecaries hall.

Garth.

3. Warden of the cinque ports.

A magistrate that has the jurisdiction of those havens in the east part of England, commonly called the cinque ports, or five havens, who has there all that jurisdiction which the admiral of England has in places not exempt. The reason why one magistrate should be assign'd to these havens, seems to be, because, in respect of their situation, they formerly required a more vigilant care than other havens, being in greater danger of invasion by our enemies.

Cowell.

4. [Pyrum volemm, Lat. I know not whence denominated] A large pear.

Nor must all shoots of pears alike be set, Crustumian, Syrian pears, and wardens great.

Mary's Virgil.

Ox-cheek when hot, and wardens bak'd, some cry.

King.

WARDER. n. s. [from ward.] A keeper; a guard.

Upon those gates with force he fiercely flew,
And, rending them in pieces, felly slew
Those warders strange, and all that else he met.

Spenser.

Where be these warders, that they wait not here?
Open the gates!

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads.

Shakesp.

The warders of the gate but scarce maintain
Th' unequal combat, and resist in vain.

Dryden.

1. A truncheon by which an officer of arms forbade fight.

Then, then, when there was nothing could have staid

My father from the breast of Bolingbroke,
O, when the king did throw his warden down,
His own life hung upon the staff he threw.

Shakesp.

WARDMOTE. n. s. [ward and mot, or zemoz, Sax. wardemotus, low Lat.] A meeting; a court held in each ward or district in London, for the direction of their affairs.

WARDROBE. n. s. [garderobe, Fr. garderobera, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

The third had of their wardrobe custody,
In which were not rich tires nor garments gay,
The plumes of pride, and wings of vanity,
But cloaths meet to keep keen cold away.

I will kill all his coats,
I'll murder all his wardrobe piece by piece,
Until I meet the king.

Behold,
What from his wardrobe her belov'd allows,
To deck the wedding-day of his unspotted spouse.

It would not be an impertinent design: to make a kind of an old Roman wardrobe, where you should see togas and tunics, the chlamys and trabea, and all the different vests and ornaments so often mentioned in the Greek and Roman authors.

Addison.

WARDROBE. n. s. [garderobe, Fr. garderobera, low Lat.] A room where clothes are kept.

WARE. adj. [For this we commonly say aware.]

1. Being in expectation of; being provided against.

The lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not ware of him.

Matthew, xxiv. 50.

2. Cautious; wary.

What man so wise, what earthly wit so ware,
As to decry the crafty cunning train
By which deceit doth mask in vizard fair?

Bid her well be ware and still erect.

To WARE. v. n. To take heed of; to beware.

A shuffled, sullen, and uncertain light,
That dances through the clouds, and shuts again,
Then ware a rising tempest on the main.

WARE. n. s. [parr, Sax. waere, Dut. wara, Swed.] Commonly something to be sold.

Let us, like merchants, shew our foulest wares,
And think, perchance, they'll sell.

If the people bring ware or any victuals to sell that we would not buy it.

I know thou whole art but a shop
Of toys and trifles, traps and snares,
To take the weak, and make them stop;
Yet art thou falsher than thy wares.

Why should my black thy love impair?
Let the dark shop commend the ware.

London, that vents of false ware so much store,
In no ware deceives us more.

He turns himself to other wares, which he finds your markets take off.

WAREFUL. adj. [ware and full.] Cautious; timorously prudent.

WAREFULNESS. n. s. [from wareful.] Cautiousness. Obsolete.

With pretence from Strephon her to guard,
He met her full; but full of warefulness.

WAREHOUSE. n. s. [ware and house.] A storehouse of merchandise.

His understanding is only the warehouse of other men's lumber, I mean false and unconvincing reasonings, rather than a repository of truth for his own use.

She had never more ships at sea, greater quantities of merchandise in her warehouses, than at present.

She the big warehouse built,
Rais'd the strong crane.

WARELESS. adj. [from ware.] Uncautious; unwary.

WARELY. adv. [from ware.] Warily; cautiously; timorously.

They bound him hand and foot with iron chains,
And with continual watch did warely keep.

WARFARE. n. s. [war and fare.] Military service; military life; state of contest and solicitude.

In the wilderness
He shall first lay down the rudiments
Of his great warfare, ere I send him forth
To conquer sin and death.

Faithful hath been your warfare, and of God Accepted, fearless in his righteous cause.

Fully, when he read the Tactics, was thinking on the bar, which was his field of battle: the knowledge of warfare is thrown away on a general who does not make use of what he knows.

The state of Christians, even when they are not actually persecuted, is a perpetual state of warfare and voluntary sufferings.

The scripture has directed us to refer these miscarriages in our Christian warfare to the power of three enemies.

To WARFARE. v. n. [from the noun.] To lead a military life.

That was the only amulet, in that credulous warfaring age, to escape dangers in battles.

Camden's Remains.

W A R

WARHABLE. adj. [war and habile, from habilis, Lat. or able.] Military; fit for war.

The weary Britons, whose warhable youth Was by Maximilian lately led away,
With wretched miseries and woeful rath,
Were to those Pagans made an open prey. Spens.
WARILY. adv. [from wary.] Cautiously; with timorous prudence; with wise forethought.

The charge thereof unto a courteous sprite Commended was, who thereby did attend,
And warily awaited day and night,
From other covetous fiends it to defend. Spenser.
The change of laws, especially concerning matters of religion, must be warily proceeded in.

So rich a prize could not so warily be fenced but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low Countrymen, have laid in their own barns part of the Spaniards harvest. Heylyn.
They searched diligently, and concluded warily.

It will concern a man to treat conscience awfully and warily, by still observing what it commands, but especially what it forbids. South's Sermon.
WARINESS. n. s. [from wary.] Caution; prudent forethought; timorous scrupulousness.

For your own conscience he gives innocence, But for your fame a discreet wariness. Donne.
It will deserve our special care and wariness to deliver our thoughts in this manner. Hammond.
To determine what are little things in religion, great wariness is to be used. Spratt's Sermons.
The path was so very slippery, the shade so exceeding gloomy, and the whole wood so full of echoes, that they were forced to march with the greatest wariness, circumspection, and silence.

Most men have so much of ill-nature, or of wariness, as not to sooth the vanity of the ambitious man. Addison.
I look upon it to be a most clear truth; and expressed it with more wariness and reserve than was necessary. Aterbury.

WARK. n. s. [anciently used for work; whence bulwark.] Building.
Thou findest fault where any 's to be found,
And buildest strong wark upon a weak ground,
Spenser.

WARLIKE. adj. [war and like.]
1. Fit for war; disposed to war.
She using so strange, and yet so well succeeding a temper, made her people by peace warlike.

Old Sward with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at appoint, was setting forth. Shakesp. Macbeth.
When a warlike state grows soft and effeminate, they may be sure of a war. Bacon.
O imprudent Gauls,
Relying on false hopes, thus to incense
The warlike English. Phillips.

2. Military; relating to war
The great archangel from his warlike toil Surcea'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

WARLING. n. s. [from war.] This word is I believe only found in the following adage, and seems to mean, one often quarrelled with.

Better be an old man's darling than a young man's warling. Camden's Remains.

WARLOCK } n. s. [wardlook, Island.
WARLUCK } a charm; peplog, Sax.
an evil spirit. This etymology was communicated by Mr. Wise.] A male witch; a wizard.

Warluck in Scotland is applied to a man whom the vulgar suppose to be conversant with spirits, as a woman who carries on the same commerce is called a witch: he is supposed to have the invulnerable quality which Dryden mentions, who did not understand the word.

He was no warluck, as the Scots commonly call such men, who they say are iron free or lead free. Dryden.

WARM. adj. [warm, Goth. peapm, Sax. warm, Dut.]

1. Not cold, though not hot; heated to a small degree.

He stretched himself upon the child, and the flesh of the child waxed warm. 2 Kings, iv. 34.
Main ocean flow'd not idle, but with warm Prolifick humour soft'ning all her globe. Milton.
We envy not the *warm*er clime that lies In ten degrees of more indulgent skies. Addison.

2. Zealous; ardent.
I never thought myself so warm in any party's cause as to deserve their money. Pope.
Each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

Scaliger in his poetics is very warm against it. Broome.

3. Habitually passionate; ardent; keen.

4. Violent; furious; vehement.
Welcome, day-light; we shall have warm work on 't:

The Moor will 'gage
His utmost forces on his next assault,
To win a queen and kingdom. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

5. Busy in action; heated with action.
I hate the ling'ring summons to attend,
Death all at once would be a nobler end;
Fate is unkind: methinks a general
Should warm, and at the head of armies, fall, Dryden.

6. Fanciful; enthusiastick.
If there be a sober and a wise man, what difference will there be between his knowledge and that of the most extravagant fancy in the world? If there be any difference between them, the advantage will be on the warm-headed man's side, as having the more ideas, and the more lively. Locke.

7. Vigorous; sprightly.
Now warm in youth, now with'ring in thy bloom,
Lost in a convent's solitary gloom. Pope.

To WARM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To free from cold; to heat in a gentle degree.
It shall be for a man to burn, for he shall take thereof and warm himself. Isaiah, xlv. 15.
The mounted sun
Shot down direct his fervid rays, to warm
Earth's inmost womb. Milton.

2. To heat mentally; to make vehement.
The action of Homer being more full of vigour than that of Virgil, is more pleasing to the reader: one warms you by degrees, the other sets you on fire all at once, and never intermits his heat. Dryd.

To WARM. v. n. To grow less cold.
There shall not be a coal to warm at, nor fire to sit before it. Isaiah, xlvii. 14.

WARMINGPAN. n. s. [warm and pan.]
A covered brass pan for warming a bed by means of hot coals.

WARMINGSTONE. n. s. [warm and stone.]
To stones add the warming-stone, digged in Cornwall, which being well heated at the fire, retains warmth a great while, and hath been found to give ease in the internal hæmorrhoids. Ray.

WARMLY. adv. [from warm.]

1. With gentle heat.
There the warming sun first warmly smote
The open field. Milton.

2. Eagerly; ardently.
Now I have two right honest wives;
One to Atides I will send,

W A R

And t'other to my Trojan friend;
Each prince shall thus with honour have What both so warmly seem to crave. Prior.

The ancients expect you should do them right in the account you intend to write of their characters: I hope you think more warmly than ever of that design. Pope.

WARMNESS. } n. s. [from warm.]
WARMTH. }

1. Gentle heat.
Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol;
from the lathed warmth whereof deliver me. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun increasing than the hot herbs have; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.
He vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth,
Throughout the fluid mass. Milton.

Here kindly warmth their mounting juice ferments
To nobler tastes, and more exalted scents. Addison.

2. Zeal; passion; fervour of mind.
What warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come? Shakesp.

Our duties towards God and man we should perform with that unfeigned integrity which belongs to Christian piety; with that temper and sobriety which becomes Christian prudence and charity; with that warmth and affection which agrees with Christian zeal. Spratt's Sermons.

Your opinion, that it is entirely to be neglected, would have been my own, had it been my own case; but I felt more warmth here than I did when first I saw his book against myself. Pope.

The best patriots, by seeing with what warmth and zeal the smallest corruptions are defended, have been wearied into silence. Davenant.

3. Fancifulness; enthusiasm.
The same warmth of head disposes men to both. Temple.

To WARN. v. a. [warman, Sax. waernan, Dut. warna, Swed. varna, Island.]

1. To caution against any fault or danger; to give previous notice of ill.
What, dost thou scorn me for my gentle counsel,
And sooth the devil that I warn thee from? Shak.
The hand can hardly lift up itself high enough to strike, but it must be seen, so that it warns while it threatens; but a false insidious tongue may whisper a lie so close and low, that though you have ears to hear, yet you shall not hear. South.
Juturna warns the Daunian chief
Of Lausus' danger, urging swift relief. Dryden.

He had chidden the rebellious winds for obeying the command of their usurping master; he had warned them from the seas; he had beaten down the billows. Dryden.

If we consider the mistakes in men's disputes and notions, how great a part is owing to words, and their uncertain or mistaken significations; this we are the more carefully to be warned of, because the arts of improving it have been made the business of men's study. Locke.

The father, whilst he warn'd his erring son,
The sad examples which he ought to shun Describ'd. Prior.

When first young Maro sung of kings and wars,
Ere warning Phœbus touch'd his trembling ears,
Perhaps he seem'd above the critics law,
And but from nature's fountains scorn'd to draw. Pope.

2. To admonish of any duty to be performed, or practice or place to be avoided or forsaken.
Cornelius was warned from God, by an holy angel, to send for thee. Acts x. 22.

3. To inform previously of good or bad.
He wonders to what end you have assembled
Such troops of citizens to come to him,
His grace not being warn'd thereof before. Shak.

He charg'd the soldiers with preventing care,
Their flags to follow, and their arms prepare, Warn'd of th' ensuing fight, and had them hope the war. Dryden's Æneid.

Man, who knows not hearts, should make examples,

Which like a warning-piece must be shot off,
To fright the rest from crimes. Druid. Spanish Fryar.

1. Milton put no preposition before the thing.

Our first parents had been warn'd
The coming of their secret foe, and 'scap'd
His mortal snare. Milton's Par. Lost.

WARNING. n. s. [from warn.]

1. Caution against faults or dangers; previous notice of ill.

I will thank the Lord for giving me warning in the night. Psalms.

He, groaning from the bottom of his breast,
This warning in these mournful words exprest. Dryden.

Here wretched Pilegias warns the world with cries,
Could warning make the world more just or wise. Dryden.

You have fairer warning than others who are unexpectedly cut off, and so have a better opportunity, as well as greater engagements, to provide for your latter end. Wake.

A true and plain relation of my misfortunes may be of use and warning to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift's Story of the Injured Lady.

2. Previous notice: in a sense indifferent.

Suppose he have a more leisurely death, that some disease give him warning of its approach, yet perhaps he will not understand that warning, but will still flatter himself, as very often sick people do, with hopes of life to the last. Duty of Man.

Death called up an old man, and bade him come; the man excus'd himself, that it was a great journey to take upon so short a warning. L'Estrange.

I saw, with some disdain, more nonsense than either I, or as bad a poet, could have crammed into it at a month's warning; in which time it was wholly written. Dryden.

WARP. n. s. [pearp, Sax. werp, Dut.]

That order of thread in a thing woven that crosses the woof.

The placing of the tangible parts in length or transverse, as it is in the warp and the woof of texture, more inward or more outward. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To WARP. v. n. [pearp, Sax. werpen, Dut. to throw; whence we sometimes say, the work casts.]

1. To change from the true situation by intestine motion; to change the position of one part to another.

This fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunk pannel, and, like green timber, warp. Shakesp. As you like it.

They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another piece, to keep it from casting or warping. Mason's Mech. Exercises.

2. To lose its proper course or direction.

There 's our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Shakesp.

This is strange! methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Shakesp.

All attest this doctrine, that the pope can give away the right of any sovereign, if he shall never so little warp. Dryden.

This we should do as indirectly as may be, with as little warping and declension towards the creature as is possible. Norris.

3. To turn. I know not well the meaning here.

The potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Wav'd round the coast, up call'd a pitchy cloud
Of locusts, warping on the eastern wind,
That o'er the realm of impious Pharaoh hung Like night. Milton's Par. Lost.

To WARP. v. a.

1. To contract; to shrivel.

2. To turn aside from the true direction.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind;
Nor the frail texture of the female kind Betray'd my virtue. Dryden.

Not foreign or domestick treachery
Could warp thy soul to their unjust decree. Dryd.

A great argument of the goodness of his cause, which required in its defender zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of the word of God. Locke.

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy, since my first entering upon it. Addison.

Not warp'd by passion, aw'd by rumour,
Nor grave through pride, or gay through folly;
An equal mixture of good-humour,
And sensible soft melancholy. Swift.

A constant watchfulness against all those prejudices that might warp the judgment aside from truth. Watts.

Aristotle's moral, rhetorical, and political writings, in which his excellent judgment is very little warped by logical subtleties, are far the most useful part of his philosophy. Beattie.

3. It is used by Shakespeare to express the effect of frost.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky!
Thou dost not bite so nigh

As benefits forgot:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp.

As friends remember'd not. Shakesp. As you like it.

To WARRANT. v. n. [warrantir, Fr.]

1. To support or maintain; to attest.

She needed not disdain any service, though never so mean, which was warranted by the sacred name of father. Sidney.

He that readeth unto us the Scriptures, delivereth all the mysteries of faith, and not any thing amongst them all more than the mouth of the Lord doth warrant. Hooker.

If this internal light be conformable to the principles of reason, or to the word of God, which is attested revelation, reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it for true. Locke.

2. To give authority.

Now we'll together, and the chance of goodness
Be like our warranted quarrel. Shakesp. Macbeth.

3. To justify.

How can any one warrant himself in the use of those things against such suspicions, but in the trust he has in the common honesty and truth of men in general? South.

True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
That justice warrants and that wisdom guides:
All else is tow'ring frenzy and distraction. Addison.

4. To exempt; to privilege; to secure.

If my coming, whom, she said, he feared, as soon as he knew me by the armour, had not warranted her from that near approaching cruelty. Sidney.

These thoughts cannot, in this your loneliness, warrant you from suspicion in others, nor defend you from melancholy in yourself. Sidney.

WATER. n. s. [waeter, Dut. pœtēn, Sax.]

1. Sir Isaac Newton defines water, when pure, to be a very fluid salt, volatile, and void of all savour or taste; and it seems to consist of small, smooth, hard, porous, spherical particles, of equal diameters, and of equal specifick gravities, as Dr. Cheyne observes; and also that there are between them spaces so large, and ranged in such a manner, as to be pervious on all sides. Their smoothness accounts for their sliding easily over one another's surfaces; their sphericity keeps them also from touching one another in more points than one; and by both these their friction in sliding over one another is rendered the least possible.

Their hardness accounts for the incompressibility of water, when it is free from the intermixture of air. The porosity of water is so very great, that there is at least forty times as much space as matter in it; for water is nineteen times specifically lighter than gold, and consequently rarer in the same proportion.

Quincy.

My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griets,
My meery dry'd their water-flowing tears.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Your water is a sore decayer of your whorson dead body.

Was from the bonds of wedlock to be free,
And uncontroll'd to give account to none. Dryden.
A man determined, about the fiftieth year of his age, to enter upon wedlock. Adison.

WEDNESDAY. n. s. [wɔdnɛs]dag, Sax. odensday, Swed. woensday, Dut. wensday, Island.] The fourth day of the week, so named by the Gothick nations from Wodin or Odin.

Where is the honour of him that died on Wednesday? Shakesp.
The offices of prayer he had in his church, not only upon the Sondaies, and festivals, and their eves, as also Wednesdaies and Fridaies. Fell.

WEE. adj. [a Saxon word of the same root with weeing, Dut. wenig, Germ.] Little; small; whence the word weasel or weasel is used for little; as, a weasel face. In Scotland it denotes small or little: as a wee ane, a little one, or child; a wee bit; a little bit.

Does he not wear a great round beard, like a glover's paring knife?—No, forsooth; he hath but a wee face, with a little yellow beard. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

WEECHELM. n. s. [This is often written witch elm.] A species of elm.

A cion of a weechelm grafted upon an ordinary elm, will put forth leaves as broad as the brim of a hat. Bacon.

WEED. n. s. [wɛd, Sax. tares.]

1. An herb noxious or useless.

If he had an immoderate ambition, which is a weed, if it be a weed, apt to grow in the best soils, it doth not appear that it was in his nature. Clarendon.

He wand'ring feeds
On slowly growing herbs and ranker weeds Sandys.
Too much manuring fill'd that field with weeds,
While sects, like locusts, did destroy the seeds. Denham.

Stinking weeds and poisonous plants have their use. Mor.
When they are cut let them lie, if weedy, to kill the weeds. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Their virtue, like their Tyber's flood
Rolling, its course design'd the country's good;
But oft the torrent's too impetuous speed
From the low earth tore some polluting weed;
And with the blood of Jove there always ran
Some viler part, some tincture of the man. Prior.

If they are often seen to lose that little religion they were taught in their youth, 'tis no more to be wondered at, than to see a little flower choaked and killed amongst rank weeds. Law.

2. [wɛdɔ, Sax. waed, Dut.] A garment; clothes; habit; dress. Now scarce in use, except in widow's weeds, the mourning dress of a widow.

My mind for weeds your virtue's livery wears. Sidney

Neither is it any man's business to cloath all his servants with one weed; nor theirs to cloath themselves so, if left to their own judgments. Hooker.
They meet upon the way

An aged sire, in long black weeds clad;
His feet all bare, his beard all hoary gray,
And by his belt his hook he hanging had. Spenser.

Livery is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears, so called as it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure. Spenser.

The snake throws her enamell'd skin,
If eed wide enough to wrap a fairy in. Shakesp.

Throgs of knights, and barons hold,
In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
With store of ladies. Milton.

Lately your fair hand in woman's weed
Wrapp'd my glad head. Waller.

3. It is used by Chapman for the upper garment.

The morning, in her throne of gold,
Survaid the vast world, by whose orient light
The nymph adorn'd me with attires as bright;
Her own hands putting on both shirt and weede. Chapman.

TO WEED. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rid of noxious plants.

When you sow the berries of hays, weed not the borders for the first half year; for the weed giveth them shade. Bacon.

Your seedlings having stood till June, bestow a weeding or a slight bowing upon them. Mortimer.

2. To take away as noxious plants.

Oh Marcius,
Each word thou'st spoke hath weeded from my heart
A root of ancient envy. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Sarcasms, contumelies, and invectives, fill so many pages of our controversial writings, that, were those weeded out, many volumes would be reduced to a more moderate bulk and temper. Deacy of Picty.

3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive.

He weeded the kingdom of such as were devoted to Elaiana, and manumized it from that most dangerous confederacy. Hovel's Yocal Forest.

4. To root out vice.

Wise fathers be not as well aware in weeding from their children ill things, as they were before in grafting in them learning. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

One by one, as they appeared, they might all be weeded out, without any signs that ever they had been there. Loche.

WEEDER. n. s. [from weed.] One that takes away any thing noxious.

A weeder out of his proud adversaries,
A liberal rewarder of his friends. Shakesp. Richard III.

WEEDHOOK. n. s. [weed and hook.] A hook by which weeds are cut away or extirpated.

In May get a weedhook, a crotch, and a glove,
And weed out such weeds as the corn doth not love. Tusser.

WEEDLESS. adj. [from weed.] Free from weeds; free from any thing useless or noxious.

So many weedless paradises be,
Which of themselves produce no venomous sin. Donne.

A crystal brook,
When troubled most it does the bottom show;

WEEDY. adj. [from weed.]

1. Consisting of weeds.

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weed
Clamb'ring to hang, an envious sliver broke,
When down her weedy trophies and herself
Fell in the weeping brook. Shakesp. Hamlet.

2. Abounding with weeds.

laid in a weedy lake all night I lay,
Secure of safety. Dryden's Æneid
If it is weedy, let it lie upon the ground. Mortimer.

WEEK. n. s. [wɛok, Sax. weke, Dut. wicka, Swed.] The space of seven days.

Fulfil her week, and we will give thee this also. Genesis, xxix.

The division of time by weeks hath been universally observed in the world, not only amongst the civilized, but likewise among the most barbarous nations. Wilkins.

WEEKDAY. n. s. [week and day.] Any day not Sunday.

One solid dish his weekday meal affords,
An added pudding solemniz'd the Lord's. Pope.

WEEKLY. adj. [from week.] Happening, produced, or done once a week; hebdomadary.

The Jews had always their weekly readings of the law of Moses. Hooker.

So liv'd our sires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with heirs their weekly bill. Dryd.

Nothing more frequent in their weekly papers, than affecting to confound the terms of clergy and high-church, and then loading the latter with calumny. Swift.

WEEKLY. adv. [from week.] Once a week; by hebdomadal periods.

These are obliged to perform divine worship in their turns weekly, and are sometimes called hebdomadal canons. Ayliffe.

WHEEL. n. s. [wɛəl, Sax.]

1. A whirlpool.

2. [Perhaps from willow.] A twiggen snare or trap for fish.

TO WEEN. v. n. [wɛnan, Sax. wacnen, Dut.] To think; to imagine; to form a notion; to fancy. Obsolete.

Ah lady dear, quoth then the gentle knight,
Well may I ween your grief is wondrous great. Spenser.

So well it her beseems, that ye would ween
Some angel she had been. Spenser's Epithalamium.

When weening to return whence they did stray,
They cannot find that path which first was shown;
But wander to and fro in ways unknown,
Farthest from end then, when they nearest ween. Spenser.

Thy father, in pity of my hard distress,
Levied an army, weening to redeem
And reinstal me in the diadem. Shak. Henry VI.

When you of better luck,
I mean in perjor'd witness, than your Master
Whose minister you are, whil' here he liv'd Upon this naughty earth. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

They ween'd
That self same day, by light or by surprize,
To win the mount of God; and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain. Milton.

TO WEEP. v. n. preter. and part. pass. wɛpt, weep'd, [wɛopan, Sax.]

1. To show sorrow by tears.

In that sad time
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not hence exhale,
That beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping. Shakesp.

I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unmanly sadness in his youth. Shakesp.

The days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended. Deuteronomy, xxxiv, 8.

Have you wept for your sin, so that you were indeed sorrowful in your spirit? Are you so sorrowful that you hate it? Do you so hate it that you have left it? Taylor.

Away! with women weep, and leave me here,
Fis'd like a man, to die without a tear,
Or save or slay us both. Dryden.

A corps it was, but whose it was, unknown;
Yet mov'd, howe'er, she made the case her own;
Took the bad omen of a shipwreck'd man,
As for a stranger wept. Dryden.

When Darius wept over his army, that within a single age not a man of all that confluence would be left alive, Artabanus improved his meditation by adding, that yet all of them should meet with so many evils, that every one should wish himself dead long before. Hake's Preparation for Death.

2. To shed tears from any passion.
Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow sung,
That such a king should play bo-peep,
And go the fools among. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. To lament; to complain.
They weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh that we may eat. Numbers.

To WEEP. v. a.
1. To lament with tears; to bewail; to bemoan.
If thou wilt weep my fortunes, take my eyes.
Shakesp.

Nor was I near to close his dying eyes,
To wash his wounds, to weep his obsequies. Dryd.
We wand'ring go
Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe.
Pope.

2. To shed moisture.
This was this place
A happy rural seat of various view, Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gums and balm. Milton.

3. To drop.
Let India boast her plants; nor envy we
The weeping amber or the balsam tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are borne,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn.
Pope.

4. To abound with wet.
Rye-grass grows on clayey and weeping grounds.
Mortimer.

WE'PER, n. s. [from weep.]
1. One who sheds tears; a lamenter; a bewailer; a mourner.

If you have served God in a holy life, send away the women and the weepers: tell them it is as much intemperance to weep too much as to laugh too much: if thou art alone, or with fitting company, die as thou shouldst; but do not die impatiently, and like a fox caught in a trap. Taylor.
Laughter is easy; but the wonder lies,
What store of brine supply'd the weeper's eyes.
Dryden.

2. A white border on the sleeve of a mourning coat.

WE'ERISH. adv. [See WEARISH.] This old word is used by Ascham in a sense which the lexicographers seem not to have known. Applied to tastes, it means insipid; applied to the body, weak and washed; here it seems to mean, sour, surly.

A voice not soft, weak, piping, womaniish; but audible, strong, and manlike: a countenance not weerish and crabbed, but fair and comely.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

To WEET. v. n. preterite wot, or wote.
[prtan, Sax. weten, Dut.] To know; to be informed; to have knowledge. Obsolete.

Him the prince with gentle court did board;
Sir knight, nought I of you this court'sy read,
To weat why on your shield, so goodly scord,
Bear ye the picture of that lady's head? Spenser.
I bind,
On pain of punishment, the world to weat
We stand up peerless. Shak. Antony and Cleopatra.
But well I weat thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song. Prior.

WE'ETLESS. adj. [from weat.] Unknow-ing. Spenser.

WE'EVIL. n. s. [pepel, Sax. revel, Dut. curculio, Lat.] A grub.

A worm called a weevil, bred under ground,
feedeth upon roots, as parsnips and carrots.
Bacon's Natural History.
Corn is so innocent from breeding of mice, that it doth not produce the very weevils that live in it and consume it. Bentley.

WE'ZEEL. n. s. [See WEASEL.]
I suck melancholy out of a song, as a weazel
sucks eggs. Shakesp.
The corn-devouring weezel here abides,
And the wise airt. Dryden's Georgicks.

WEFF. The old preterite and part. pass. from To WAVE. Spenser.

WEFT. n. s. [guaire, Fr. rofa to wander,
Island. ragus, Lat.]

1. That of which the claim is generally waved; any thing wandering without an owner, and seized by the lord of the manour.
His horse, it is the herald's weft;
No, 'tis a mare. Ben Jonson's Underwoods.

2. It is in Bacon for waft, a gentle blast.
The smell of violets exceedeth in sweetness that of spices, and the strongest sort of smells are best in a weft afar off. Bacon.

WEFT. n. s. [pefta, Sax.] The woof of cloth.

WEFTAGE. n. s. [from weft.] Texture.
The whole muscles, as they lie upon the bones, might be truly tanned; whereby the weftage of the fibres might more easily be observed.
Grew's Museum.

To WEIGH. v. a. [pragan, Sax. weyhen,
Dut.]

1. To examine by the balance.
Earth taken from land adjoining to the Nile, and preserved so as not to be wet nor waste d, and weighed daily, will not alter weight until the seventeenth of June, when the river beginneth to rise; and then it will grow more and more ponderous, till the river c-meth to its height. Bacon.
Th' Eternal hung forth his golden scales,
Wherein all things created first he weighed. Milton.
She does not weigh her meat in a pair of scales, but she weighs it in a much better balance; so much as gives a proper strength to her body, and renders it able and willing to obey the soul. Law.

2. To be equivalent to in weight.
They that must weigh out my afflictions,
They that my trust must grow to, live not here;
They are, as all my comforts are, far hence. Shak.
By the exsuction of the air out of a glass vessel, it made that vessel take up, or suck up, to speak in the common language, a body weighing divers ounces. Boyle.

3. To pay, allot, or take by weight.
They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.
Zech. xi

4. To raise; to take up the anchor.
Barbarossa, using this exceeding cheerfulness of his soldiers, weighed up the fourteen galleys he had sunk. Knolles.
They having freight
Their ships with spoil enough, weigh anchor streight. Chapman.
Here he left me, ling'ring here delay'd
His parting kiss, and there his anchor weigh'd. Dry.

5. To examine; to balance in the mind;
to consider.
Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.
I have in equal balance justly weigh'd
What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs
we suffer,
And find our griefs heavier than our offences.
Shakesp. Henry IV.
The ripeness or unripeness of the occasion must ever be well weighed. Bacon.
His majesty's speedy march left that design to be better weighed and digested. Clarendon.
You chose a retreat, and not till you had ma-turely weighed the advantages of rising higher with the hazards of the fall. Dryden.

All grant him prudent; prudence interest weighs,
And interest bids him seek your love and praise.
Dryden.

The mind, having the power to suspend the satisfaction of any of its desires, is at liberty to examine them on all sides, and weigh them with others. Locke.
He is the only proper judge of our perfections, who weighs the goodness of our actions by the sincerity of our intentions. Addison's Spectator.

6. To compare by the scales.
Here in vice balance truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.
I weigh not you.
—You do not weigh me; that is, you care not for me. Shakesp.

8. To weigh down. To overbalance.
Fear weighs down faith with shame.
Daniel's Civil War.

9. To weigh down. To overburden; to oppress with weight; to depress.
In thy blood will reign
A melancholy damp of cold and dry,
To weigh thy spirits down. Milton.
Her father's crimes
Sit heavy on her, and weigh down her prayers;
A crown usurp'd, a lawful king depos'd,
His children murder'd. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks
The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep.
Addison's Cato.
Excellent persons, weighed down by this habitual sorrow of heart, rather deserve our compassion than reproach. Addison.

To WEIGH. v. n.

1. To have weight.
Exactly weighing, and strangling a chicken in the scales, upon an immediate ponderation, we could discover no difference in weight; but suffering it to lie eight or ten hours, until it grew perfectly cold, it weighed most sensibly lighter.
Brown.

2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance.
This objection ought to weigh with those, whose reading is designed for much talk and little knowledge. Locke.
A wise man is then best satisfied, when he finds that the same argument which weighs with him has weighed with thousands before him, and is such as hath born down all opposition. Addison.

3. To raise the anchor.
When gath'ring clouds o'ershadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh, my boys, he cries. Dryden.

4. To bear heavily; to press hard.
Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd,
And with some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stoff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart? Shakesp Macbeth.

5. To sink by its own weight.
The Indian fig boweth so low, as it taketh root again; the plenty of the sap, and the softness of the stalk, making the bough, being overloden, weigh down. Bacon.

WEIGHED. adj. [from weigh.] Experienced.
In an embssy of weight, choice was made of son a sad person of known experience, and not of a young man, not weighed in state watters. Bacon.

WEIGHER. n. s. [from weigh.] He who weighs.

WEIGHT. n. s. [piht, Sax.]

1. Quantity measured by the balance.
Tobacco cut and weighed, and then dried by the fire, loseth weight; and, after being laid in the open air, recovereth weight again. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Fain would I chuse a middle course to steer;
Nature's too kind, and justice too severe;
Speak for us both, and to the balance bring,
On either side, the father and the king

Heav'n knows my heart is bent to favour thee;
Make it but scanty weight, and leave the rest to me.
Dryden.

So was every thing of the temple, even to the weight of a flesh hook, given to David, as you may see.
Lesleu.

Boerhaave fed a sparrow with bread four days, in which time it eat more than its own weight; and yet there was no acid found in its body.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A mass by which, as the standard, other bodies are examined.

Just balances, just weights, shall ye have.
Leviticus, xix. 36.

Undoubtedly there were such weights which the physicians used, who, though they might reckon according to the weight of the money, they did not weigh their drugs with pieces of money.
Arbutnot on Coins.

When the balance is entirely broke, by mighty weights fallen into either scale, the power will never continue long in equal division, but run entirely into one.
Swift.

3. Ponderous mass.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without: for that the weight, if proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them: otherwise, where no contraction is needful, weight hindereth; as we see, in horse-races, men are curious to foresee that there be not the least weight upon the one horse more than upon the other. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards, and then forwards, with so much the greater force.
Bacon's Nat. History.

Wolsey, who from his own great store might have a palace or a college for his grave,
Lies here interr'd;

Nothing but earth to earth, no pond'rous weight
Upon him, but a pebble or a quoit:
If thus thou liest neglected, what must we Hope after death, who are but shades of thee?
Bishop Corbet.

All their confidence
Under the weight of mountains buried deep.
Milt.
Pride, like a gulf, swallows us up; our very virtues, when so leavened, becoming weights and plummets to sink us to the deeper ruin.
Governour of the Tongue.

Then shun the ill; and know, my dear,
Kinness and constancy will prove
The only pillars fit to bear
So vast a weight as that of love.
Prior.

4. Gravity; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

Heaviness or weight is not here considered as being such a natural quality, whereby condensed bodies do of themselves tend downwards; but rather as being an affection, whereby they may be measured.
Wilkins.

The shaft that slightly was impress'd,
Now from his heavy fall with weight increas'd
Drove through his neck.
Dryden.

What natural agent impel them so strongly
With a transverse side blow against that tremendous weight and rapidity, when whole worlds are falling?
Bentley.

5. Pressure; burthen; overwhelming power.

Thou art no Atlas for so great a weight.
Shak.
As some of the angels did scarce sooner receive than break the law of obedience; so some men, by an unhappy imitation of such angels, are more ready to slander the weight of their yoke than to bear it.
Holyday.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning.
Milton.

We must those, who groan beneath the weight
Of age, disease, or want, commiserate.
Denham.
The prince may carry the plough, but the weight lies upon the people.
L'Estrange.

Possession's load was grown so great,
He sunk beneath the cumb'rous weight.
Swift.
They are like so many weights upon our minds, that make us less able and less inclined to raise up our thoughts and affections to the things that are above.
Law

6. Importance; power; influence; efficacy.

How to make ye suddenly an answer,
In such a point of weight, so near mine honour,
In truth I know not.
Shak. Henry VIII.

If this right of heir carry any weight with it, if it be the ordinance of God, most not all be subject to it?
Locke.

To make the sense of esteem or disgrace sink the deeper, and be of the more weight, other agreeable or disagreeable things should constantly accompany these different states.
Locke.

An author's arguments lose their weight, when we are persuaded that he only writes for argument's sake.
Addison.

See, Lord, the sorrows of my heart,
Ere yet it be too late;
And hear my Saviour's dying groans,
To give those sorrows weight.
Addison's Spect.

The solemnities that encompass the magistrate add dignity to all his actions, and weight to all his words.
Atterbury.

WEIGHTILY. adv. [from weighty.]

1. Heavily; ponderously.
2. Solidly; importantly.

Is his poetry the worse, because he makes his agents speak weightily and sententiously?
Broom's Notes on the Odyssey.

WEIGHTINESS. n. s. [from weighty.]

1. Ponderosity; gravity; heaviness.
2. Solidity; force.

I fear I have dwelt longer on this passage than the weightiness of any argument in it requires.
Locke.

3. Importance.

The apparent defect of her judgment, joined to the weightiness of the adventure, caused many to marvel.
Hayward.

WEIGHTLESS. adj. [from weight.] Light; having no gravity.

How by him balanc'd in the weightless air?
Caust thou the wisdom of his works declare?
Sandys.

It must both weightless and immortal prove,
Because the center of it is above.
Dryden.

WEIGHTY. adv. [from weight.]

1. Heavy; ponderous.

You have already weary'd Fortune so,
She cannot farther be your friend or foe,
But sits all breathless, and admires to see
A fate so weighty that it stops her wheel.
Dryden.

2. Important; momentous; efficacious.

I to your assistance do make love,
Masking the business from the common eye
For sundry weighty reasons.
Shaksp. Macbeth.
It only forbids suits in lighter losses and intricacies, such as our Lord there mentions, and making the law the instrument of revenge in weightier matters.
Kettlewell.

No fool Pythagoras was thought:
Whilst he his weighty doctrines taught,
He made his listening scholars stand,
Their mouth still cover'd with their hand;
Else, may be, some odd thinking youth,
Less friend to doctrine than to truth,
Might have refus'd to let his ears
Attend the musick of the spheres.
Prior.

Thus spoke to my lady the knight full of care,
Let me have your advice in a weighty affair.
Swift.

3. Rigorous; severe. Not in use.

If, after two days shine, Athens contains thee,
Attend our weightier judgment.
Shaksp. Timon.

WELAWAY. interj. [This I once believed a corruption of wel away, that is, happiness is gone; so Juvius explained it; but the Saxon exclamation is palapa, woe on woe. From welaway is formed by corruption weladay.] Alas.

Harrow now out, and welaway, he cried,
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light!
Spens.

Ah, welaway, most noble lords, how can
Your cruel eyes endure so piteous sight?
Spenser.
Welaway, the while I was so fond,
To leave the good that I had in bond.
Spenser.

WELCOME. adj. bien venu, Fr. pilcome, Sax. welkom, Dut.]

1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to any place or enjoyment; grateful; pleasing.

I serve you, madam:
Your graces are right welcome.
Shaksp. King Lear.
He, though not of the plot, will like it,
And wish it should proceed; for, auto men
Prest with their wants, all change is ever welcome.
Ben Jonson.

Here let me earn my bread,
Till oft-invocated death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains.
Milton.
He that knows how to make those he converses with easy, has found the true art of living, and being welcome and valued every where.
Locke.

2. To bid welcome. To receive with professions of kindness.

Some stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us; and divers put their arms a little abroad, which is their gesture when they bid any welcome.
Bacon

WELCOME. interj. A form of salutation used to a new comer, elliptically used for you are welcome.

Welcome, be said,
O long expected, to my dear embrace!
Dryden.
Welcome, great monarch, to your own.
Dryden.

WELCOME. n. s.

1. Salutation of a new comer.

Welcome ever smiles, and farewell goes out sighing.
Shaksp.
Leontes opening his free arms, and weeping
His welcome forth.
Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

2. Kind reception of a new comer.

I should be free from injuries, and abound as much in the true causes of welcomes, as I should find want of the effects thereof.
Sidney.
I look'd not for you yet, nor am provided
For your fit welcome.
Shaksp. King Lear.
Madam, new years may well expect to find
Welcome from you, to whom they are so kind;
Still as they pass they court and smile on you,
And make your beauty, as themselves, seem new.
Waller.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartiality keeps it, truth finds an entrance and a welcome too.
South's Sermons.

To WELCOME. v. a. To salute a new comer with kindness.

I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard.
Shaksp. Richard II.
They stood in a row in so civil a fashion, as if to welcome us.
Bacon.
Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.
Milton.

To welcome home
His warlike brother, is Pirithous come.
Dryden.
The lark and linnet strain their warbling throats,
To welcome in the spring.
Dryden.

WELCOME to our house, n. s. [lactuca marina, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

WELCOMENESS. n. s. [from welcome.] Gratefulness.

Our joys, after some centuries of years, may seem to have grown older, by having been enjoyed so many ages: yet will they really still continue new, not only upon the scores of their welcomeness, but by their perpetually equal, because infinite, distance from a period.
Boyle.

WELCOMER. n. s. [from welcome.] The saluter or receiver of a new comer.

Farewel, thou woeeful welcomer of glory!
Shaksp.

WELD, or Would. n. s. [lutcola, Lat.]
Yellow weed, or dyers weed.

To WELD, for To wield. Spenser.

To WELD. v. a. To beat one mass into another, so as to incorporate them.

Sparkling or welding fire is used when you double up your iron to make it thick enough, and so weld or work in the doublings into one another. Moulin's Mechanical Exercises.

WELDER. n. s. [a term perhaps merely Irish; though it may be derived from To wield, to turn or manage: whence wielder, welder.] Manager; actual occupier.

Such immediate tenants have others under them, and so a third and fourth in subordination, till it comes to the welder, as they call him, who sits at a rack-rent, and lives miserably. Swift.

WELFARE. n. s. [well and fare.] Happiness; success; prosperity.

If friends to a government forbear their assistance, they put it in the power of a few desperate men to ruin the welfare of those who are superior to them in strength and interest. Addison.

Discretion is the perfection of reason: cunning is a kind of instinct that only looks out after our immediate interest and welfare. Addison's Spectator.

To WELK. v. a. [Of this word in Spenser

I know not well the meaning: pealcan, in Saxon, is to roll; walken, in Germ. and pelcen, in Saxon, are clouds; whence I suppose welk, or whilk, is an undulation or corrugation, or corrugated or convolved body. Whilk is used for a small shell fish.] To cloud; to obscure. It seems in Spenser both active and neuter.

Now sad winter welked hath the day,
And Phoebus, weary of his yearly task,
Establish'd hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

As gentle shepherd in sweet erentide,
When ruddy Phoebus gins to welk in west,
Marks which do bite their hasty supper best. Spens.
The welked Phoebos gan avale
His weary wain. Spenser.

WELKED. adj. Set with protuberances.
Properly, I believe, welked, from welk.

Methought his eyes
Were two full moons; he had a thousand noses, Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea. Shakesp.

WELKIN. n. s. [from pealcan, to roll, or pelcen, clouds, Sax.]

1. The visible regions of the air. Out of use, except in poetry.

Ne in all the welkin was no cloud. Chaucer.
He leaves the welkin way most beaten plain,
And rapt with whirling wheels inflames the skyen
With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.

The swallow peeps out of her nest,
And cloudy welkin cleareth. Spenser's Pastorals.
Spur your proud horses hard, and ride in blood;
Anaze the welkin with your broken staves. Richard III.

With feats of arms
From either end of heav'n the welkin burns. Milt.
New my task is smoothly done,
I can fly or I can run

Quickly to the green earth's end,
Where the how'd welkin slow doth bend. Milton.
Their hideous yells Rend the dark welkin. Phillips.

2. Welkin Eye, is, I suppose, blue eye; sky-coloured eye.

Yct were it true
To say this boy were like me! Come, sir page,
Look on me with your welkin eye, sweet villain. Shakesp.

WELL. n. s. [pelle, pæll, Sax.]

1. A spring; a fountain; a source.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That frow beneath the seat of Jove doth spring. Milton.

As the root and branch are but one tree,
And well and stream do but one river make;
So if the root and well corrupted be,
The stream and branch the same corruption take. Davies.

2. A deep narrow pit of water.

Now up, now down, like buckets in a well. Dryden.
The muscles are so many well-buckets: when one of them acts and draws, 'tis necessary that the other must obey. Dryden.

3. The cavity in which stairs are placed.

Hollow newelled stairs are made about a square hollow newel; suppose the well-hole to be eleven foot long, and six foot wide, and we would bring up a pair of stairs from the first floor eleven foot high, it being intended a sky-light shall fall through the hollow newel. Mealon's Mechanical Exercises.

To WELL. v. n. [peallon, Sax.] To spring; to issue as from a spring.

Thereby a crystal stream did gently play,
Which from a sacred fountain welld forth alway. Spenser.

A dreary corse,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welld fresh, alas! Spenser.

Himself assists to lift him from the ground,
With clotted locks, and blood that welld from out the wound. Dryden's Æneid.

From his two springs
Pure welling out, he through the lucid lake
Of fair Danoeba rolls his infant stream. Thomson's Summer.

To WELL. v. a. To pour any thing forth.

To her people wealth they forth do welld,
And health to every foreign nation. Spenser.

WELL. adj. [Well seems to be sometimes an adjective, though it is not always easy to determine its relations.]

1. Not sick; being in health.

Lady, I am not well, else I should answer
From a folt flowing stomach. Shakesp. King Lear.
In poison there is physick; and this news,
That would, had I been well, have made me sick,
Being sick, hath in some measure made me well. Shakesp.

While thou art well, thou mayest do much good; but when thou art sick, thou canst not tell what thou shalt be able to do; it is not very much nor very good. Few men mend with sickness, as there are but few who by travel and a wandering life become devout. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

Men under irregular appetites never think themselves well, so long as they fancy they might be better; then from better they most rise to best. L'Estrange.

'Tis easy for any, when well, to give advice to them that are not. Huke's Preparation for Death.

2. Happy.

Mark, we use
To say the dead are well. Shak. Ant. & Cleopatra.
Holdings were so plentiful, and holders so scarce, as well was the landlord who could get one to be his tenant. Carow.

Charity is made the constant companion and perfection of all virtues; and well it is for that virtue where it most enters and longest stays. Sprats's Sermons.

3. Convenient; advantageous.

This exactness is necessary, and it would be well too if it extended itself to common conversation. Locke.

It would have been well for Genoa, if she had followed the example of Venice, in not permitting her nobles to make any purchase of lands in the dominions of a foreign prince. Addison.

4. Being in favour.

He followed the fortunes of that family; and was well with Henry the Fourth. Dryden.

5. Recovered from any sickness or misfortune.

I am sorry
For your displeasure; but all will sure be well. Shakesp.

Just thoughts and modest expectations are easily satisfied. If we don't over-rate our pretensions, all will be well. Coltier.

WELL. adv. [will, Goth. pell, Sax. wel, Dut. vel, Island.]

1. Not ill; not unhappily.

Some sense, and more estate, kind heav'n
To this well-lotted peer has given:
What then? he must have rule and sway;
Else all is wrong till he's in play. Prior.

2. Not ill; not wickedly.

My bargains, and well-won thrift, he calls interest. Shakesp.
Thou one had act with many deeds well done

3. Skillfully; properly; in a laudable manner.

Beware, and govern well thy appetite. Milton.
Whether the learn'd Miurva be her theme,
Or chaste Diana bathing in the stream;
None can record their heavenly praise so well. Dryden.

What poet would not mourn to see
His brother write as well as he? Swift.

4. Not amiss; not unsuccessfully; not erroneously.

Solyman commended them for a plot so well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason. Knolles.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd. Denham.

'Tis almost impossible to translate verbally and well. Dryden.

5. Not insufficiently; not defectively.

The plain of Jordan was well watered every where. Genesis.
We are well able to overcome it. Numb. xiii. 30.
The merchant adventurers, being a strong company, and well underset with rich men, held out bravely. Bacon.

6. To a degree that gives pleasure.

I like well, in some places, fair columns upon frames of carpenters work. Bacon.

7. With praise; favourably.

All the world speaks well of you. Pope.

8. Well is sometimes, like the French bien, a term of concession.

The knot might well be cut, but untied it could not be. Sidney.

9. Conveniently; suitably.

Know
In measure what the mind can well contain. Milton.

10. To a sufficient degree; a kind of slight sense.

A private caution I know not well how to sort, unless I should call it political, by no means to build too near a great neighbour. Watton.

11. It is a word by which something is admitted as the ground for a conclusion.

Well, let's away, and say how much is done. Shak.
Well, by this author's confession, a number superior are for the succession in the house of Hanover. Swift.

12. As well as. Together with; not less than.

Long and tedious, as well as grievous and uneasy courses of physick, how necessary s ever to the cure, much enfeeble the patient, and reduce him to a low and languishing state. Blackmore.

Coptos was the magazine of all the trade from Æthiopia, by the Nile, as well as of those commodities that came from the west by Alexandria. Arbutnot on Coins.

13. Well is him or me: bene est, he is happy.

Well is him that dwelleth with a wife of understanding, and that hath not slipped with his tongue. Eccles. xxv. 8.

14. Well nigh. Nearly; almost.

I freed well nigh half th' angelick name. Milton.

15. Well enough. In a moderate degree; tolerably.

6. It is used much in composition, to express any thing right, laudable, or not defective.

Autichus understanding him not to be well-affected to his affairs, provided for his own safety. 2 Mac. iv. 21.

There may be safety to the well-affected Persians; but to those which do conspire against us, a memorial of destruction. Esth. xvi. 23.

Should a whole host at once discharge the bow, My well-aim'd shaft with death prevents the foe. Pope.

What well-appointed leader fronts us here? Shak.

Well-apparell'd April on the heel Of limping winter treads. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

The pow'r of wisdom march'd before, And, ere the sacrificing throng he join'd, Admonish'd thus his well-attending mind. Pope.

Such musick Before was never made, But when of old the sons of morning sung, Whilst the Creator great His constellations set, And the well-balanc'd world on hinges hung. Milton.

Learners must at first be believers, and their master's rules having been once made axioms to them, they mislead those who think it sufficient to excuse them, if they go out of their way in a well-beaten track. Locke.

He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all His warlike troops, to wait the funeral: To bear him back, and share Evander's grief; A well-becoming, but a weak relief. Dryden.

Those opposed files, Which lately met in the intestine shock And furious close of civil butchery, Shall now in mutual well-beseeming rank March all one way. Shakesp. Henry IV.

O'er the Elean plains thy well-breath'd horse Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryd.

More dismal than the loud dislodged roar Of brazen engines, that ceaseless storms The bastion of a well-built city. Phillips.

He conducted his course among the same well-chosen friendships and alliances with which he began it. Addison.

My son corrupts a well-derived nature With his inducement. Shakesp.

If good accrue, 'tis conferred most commonly on the base and infamous; and only happening sometimes to well-deservers. Dryden.

It grieves me he should desperately adventure the loss of his well-deserving life. Sidney.

What a pleasure is well-directed study in the search of truth. Locke.

A certain spark of honour, which rose in her well-disposed mind, made her fear to be alone with him, with whom alone she desired to be. Sidney.

The unpossessed, the well-disposed, who both together make much the major part of the world, are affected with a due fear of these things. South's Sermons.

A clear idea is that, whereof the mind hath such a full and evident perception, as it does receive from an outward object operating duly on a well-disposed organ. Locke.

Amid the main two mighty fleets engage; Actium surveys the well-disputed prize. Dryden.

The ways of well-doing are in number even as many as are the kinds of voluntary actions: so that whatsoever we do in this world, and may do it ill, we shew ourselves therein by well-doing to be wise. Hooker.

The conscience of well-doing may pass for a recompence. L'Estrange.

Beg God's grace, that the day of judgment may not overtake us unawares, but that by a patient well-doing we may wait for glory, honour, and immortality. Nelson.

God will judge every man according to his works; to them, who by patient continuance in well-doing endure through the heat and burden of the day, he will give the reward of their labour. Rogers's Sermons.

For whose wellbeing
So amply, and with hands so liberal,
Thou hast provided all thingt. Milt. Par. Lost.
The most sacred ties of duty are founded upon gratitude: such as the duty of a child to his parent, and of a subject to his sovereign. From the former there is required love and honour, in recompence of being; and from the latter obedience and subjection, in recompence of protection and wellbeing. South's Sermons.
All things are subservient to the beauty, order,
and wellbeing of the whole. L'Estrange.
He who does not co-operate with this holy spirit, receives none of those advantages which are the perfecting of his nature, and necessary to his wellbeing. Spectator.

under which they oftentimes prosecute quarrels of envy. Hooker.

WELLWISH. n. s. [well and wish.] A wish of happiness.

Let it not enter into the heart of any one, that hath a wellwish for his friends or posterity, to think of a peace with France, till the Spanish monarchy be entirely torn from it. Addison.

WELLWISHER. n. s. [from wellwish.]
One who wishes the good of another.

The actual traitor is guilty of perjury in the eye of the law; the secret wellwisher of the cause is so before the tribunal of conscience. Addison's Freeholder.

Betray not any of your wellwishers into the like inconveniencies. Spectator.

No man is more your sincere wellwisher than myself, or more the sincere wellwisher of your family. Pope.

WELT. n. s. A border; a guard; an edging.

Little low hedges made round like welts, with some pretty pyramids, I like well. Bacon.

Certain scoli, or smatterers, are busy in the skirts and outsides of learning, and have scarce any thing of solid literature to recommend them.
They may have some edging or trimming of a scholar, a welt or so, but no more. Ben Jonson.

He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unweep'd, nor welter to the parching winds. Milt.

The companions of his fall o'erwhelm'd
He soon discerns, and welt'ring by his side
The next himself. Milton's Par. Lost.

The gasping head flies off; a purple flood
Flows from the trunk, that welters in the blood.
Dryden.

He sung Darius, great and good,
By too severe a fate,
Fall'n from his high estate,
And welt'ring in his blood. Dryd. St. Cecilia.

Bellona wades in blood; that mangled body,
Deform'd with wounds and welt'ring in its gore,
I know it well! Oh close the dreadful scene!
Believe me, Phœbus, I have seen too much.
Murphy.

2. To roll voluntarily; to wallow.

If a man inglut himself with vanity, or welter
in filthiness like a swine, all learning, all goodness, is soon forgotten. Ascham.

WEMM. n. s. [pen, Sax.] A spot; a scar.

Although the wound be healed, yet the wemme or scar still remaineth. Brewerwood on Languages.

WEN. n. s. [pen, Sax.] A fleshy or callous excrescence or protuberance.

Warts are said to be destroyed by the rubbing them with a green elder stick, and then burying the stick to rot in muck. It would be tried with coms and wens, and such other excrescences.
Bacon's Natural History.

Mountains seem but so many wens and unnatural protuberances upon the face of the earth.
More.

The poet rejects all incidents which are foreign to his poem: they are wens, and other excres-cences, which belong not to the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

A promontory wen, with griesly grace,
Stood high upon the handle of his face. Dryden.

WENCH. n. s. [pencl, Sax.]

1. A young woman.

What do I, silly wench, know what love hath prepared for me? Sidney.
Now—how dost thou look now? Oh ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from heav'n,
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my girl, Ev'n like thy chastity. Shakesp. Othello.

'Thou wouldst persuade her to a worse offence
Than that whereof thou didst accuse her wench.
Donne.

2. A young woman in contempt; a strumpet.

But the rude wench her answer'd nought at all.
Spenser.

Do not pray in wench-like words with that Which is so serious. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Men have their ambitious fancies,

WHIG. n. s. [hpæç, Sax.]

1. Whey.
2. The name of a faction.

The south-west counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north; and from a word, whiggam, used in diving their horses, all that drove were called the whiggamors, and shorter the whigs. Now in that year, before the news came down of duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching at the head of their parishes with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them, they being about six thousand.
This was called the whiggamors inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court came in contempt to be called whigs; and from Scotland the word was brought into England, where it is now one of our unhappy terms of disunion. Burnet.

Whoever has a true value for church and state, should avoid the extremes of whig for the sake of the former, and the extremes of tory on the account of the latter. Swift.

to the whigs.

She'll prove herself a tory plain.
From principles the whigs maintain;
And, to defend the whiggish cause,
Her topik's from the tories draws. Swift.

WHIGGISM. n. s. [from whigs.] The notions of a whig.

I could quote passages from fifty pamphlets, wholly made up of whiggism and atheism. Swift.

WHILE. n. s. [weil, Germ. hpilc, Sax.]
Time; space of time.

If my beauty be any thing, then let it obtain this much of you, that you will remain some while in this company, to ease your own travel and our solitariness. Sidney.

I have seen her rise from her bed, and again return to bed; yet all this while in a most fast sleep.
Shak. Mocheth.

One while we thought him innocent,
And then w' accus'd the consul. Ben Jons. Catal.

W H I

We saw him feeding come,
And on his necke a burtlien logging home,
Most bigly huge, of sere-wood; which the pile
That fed his fire supplide all supper while. Chapm.

I hope all ingenious persons will advertise me fairly, if they think it worth their while, of what they dislike in it. Digby.

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd.
Milton.

How couldst thou look for other, but that God should condemn thee for the doing of those things for which thine own conscience did condemn thee
all the while thou wast doing of them? Tillotson.

That which I have all this while been endeavouring to convince men to, is no other but what God himself doth particularly recommend. Tillotson.

Few, without the hope of another life, would think it worth their while to live above the allurements of sense. Atterbury.

What fate has dispos'd of the papers, 'tis not worth while to tell. Locke.

WHILE. } adv. [hpilc, Sax. Whilcs is WHILES. } now out of use.]
WHILST. }

1. During the time that.
Whiles I was protector,
Pity was all the fault that was in me.
Shakesp. Hen. VI.

What we have, we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it; but being lackt and lost,
Why then we rack the value. Shakesp.

Repeated, while the sedentary earth
Attains her end. Milton.

2. As long as.
Use your memory; you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.
Whiles by the experiment of this ministration they glorify God, for your professed subjection unto the gospel. 2 Cor. ix.

Can he imagine that God sends forth an irresistible strength against some sins, whilst in others he permits men a power of repelling his grace?
Decay of Piety.

All hearts shall bend, and ev'ry voice
In loud applauding shouts rejoice;
While all his gracious as; ect praise,
And crowds grow loyal as they gaze. Addison.

He sits attentive to his own applause;
While wits and templars ev'ry sentence raise,
And wonder with a foolish face of praise. Pope.

To WHILE. v. n. [from the noun. To loiter.

Men guilty this way never have observed that the whiling time, the gathering together, and waiting a little before dinner, is the most auk-wardly passed away of any. Spectator.

WHILE'ERE. adv. [while and ere, or before.]
A little while ago; ere while. Not in use.

That cursed wight from whom I 'scap'd whilere,
A man of hell, that calls himself Despair. Spenser.

Let us be jocund: will you trol the catch
You taught me but while-ere? Shakesp.

Those armies, that while-ere Affrighted all the world, by him struck dead with fear. Drayton.

Here lies Hobbino!, our shepherd whilere.
Raleigh.

He who, with all heav'n's heraldry, whilere
Enter'd the world, now bleeds to give us ease.
Milton.

WHILOM. adv. [hpilom, Sax. that is, once on a time.] Formerly; once; of old.
Not in use.

Where now the studious lawyers have their howers,
There whilom wont the Templar knights abide,
Till they decayed through pride. Spenser.

In northern clime a val'rous knight
Did whilom kill his bear in fight,
And wound a fidler. Hudibras.

Yet art thou not inglorious in thy fate;
For so Apollo, with unwee'ting hand,
Whilom did slay his dearly loved mate. Milton.

WHIM. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from a thing turning round; nor can I find any etymology more probable.] A freak; an odd fancy; a caprice; an irregular motion of desire.

All the superfluous whims relate,
That fill a female gamester's pate. Swift.
He learnt his whims and high-faloot notions too,
Such as fine men adopt, and fine men rue. Harte.

To WHIMPER. v. n. [wimmeren, Germ.] To cry without any loud noise.

The father, by his authority, should always stop this sort of crying, and silence their whimpering.
Locke.
A laughing, toying, wheedling, whimpering she Shall make him amble on a gossip's message. Rowe.
In peals of thunder now she roars, and now
She gently whimpers like a lowing cow. Swift.

WHIMPLED. adj. [I suppose from whimper.] This word seems to mean distorted with crying.

This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy,
This signior Junio's giant dwarf, Don Cupid,
Regent of love-rhimes, lord of folded arms,
Th' appointed sovereign of sighs and groans.
Shakespeare.

WHIMSEY. n. s. [only another form of the word whim.] A freak; a caprice; an odd fancy; a whim.

At this rate a pretended freak or whimsy may be palliated. L'Estrange.
All the ridiculous and extravagant shapes that can be imagined, all the fantasies and whimsies of poets and painters, and Egyptian idolaters, if so be they are consistent with life and propagation, would be now actually in being, if our atheists notion were true. Ray.

So now, as health or temper changes,
In larger compass Alma ranges;
This day below, the next above,
As light or solid whimsies move. Prior.
What I speak, my fair Chloe, and what I write, shows

The difference there is betwixt nature and art;
I court others in verse, but I love thee in prose;
And they have my whimsies, but thou hast my heart. Prior.
Oranges in whimsy-boards went round. King.
He spoke with such a sedate and undisturbed mind, that I could not impute it to melancholy, or a spleenick whimsy. Blaekmore.

Th' extravagance of poetry
Is as a loss for figures to express
Men's folly, whimsies, and inconsistency. Swift.

WHIMSICAL. adj. [from whimsy.] Freakish; capricious; oddly fanciful.

In another circumstance I am particular, or, as my neighbours call me, whimsical: as my garden invites into it all the birds, I do not suffer any one to destroy their nests. Addison.

WHIN. n. s. [chwyn, Welsh; genista spinosa, Lat.] Furze; gorse.
With whins or with furzes thy hovel renew.

To WHINE. v. n. [German, Sax. wecnen, Dut. wynno, Welsh.] To lament in low murmurs; to make a plaintive noise; to moan meanly and effeminately.

They came to the wood, where the hounds were in couples staying their coming, but with a whin- ing accent craving liberty. Sidney.
At his nurse's tears
He whin'd and roar'd away your victory,
That ages blush'd at him. Shakespeare.
Twice and once the hedge-pig whin'd. Shak.
Whip him,
Till, like a boy, you see him cringe his face,
And whine aloud for mercy. Shakespeare.

The common people have a whining tone and accent in their speech, as if they did still suffer some oppression. Davies.

Then if we whine, look pale,
And tell our tale,
Men are in pain
For us again;
So neither speaking doth become
The lovers state, nor being dumb. Suckling.

He made a vile noise than swine
In windy weather, when they whine. Hudibras.
Some, under sheep's cloathing, had the properties of wolves; that is, they could whine and howl, as well as bite and devour. South.

I was not born so base to flatter crowds,
And move your pity by a whining tale. Dryden.
Laughing at their whining may perhaps be the proper method. Locke.
Life was given for nobler purposes; and therefore it must not be sacrific'd to a quarrel, nor whined away in love. Colliver.

Upon a general mourning, mercers and woulledrapers would in four-and-twenty hours raise their cloths and silks to above a double price; and, if the mourning continued long, come whining with petitions to the court, that they were ready to starve. Swift.

WHINE. n. s. [from the verb.] Plaintive noise; mean or affected complaint.

The favourable opinion of men comes oftentimes by a few demure looks and affected whines, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces. South.

Thy hateful whine of war
Breaks in upon my sorrows, a and distracts
My jarring senses with thy beggar's cry. Rowe.

To WHINNY. v. n. [hinnio, Lat. from the sound.] To make a noise like a horse or colt.

WHINYARD. n. s. [pinnan, and are, to gain honour, Saxon, Skinner.] I know not whether this word was ever used seriously, and therefore perhaps it might be denominated in contempt from whin, a tool to cut whins.] A sword: in contempt.

He snatch'd his whinyard up, that fled
When he was falling off his steed. Hudibras.

To WHIP. v. a. [hpeopan, Sax. wippen, Dut.]

1. To strike with any thing tough and flexible.

The harness'd steeds, that still with horror shook,
And plies them with the lash, and whips 'em on:
And, as he whips, upbraids them with his son. Addison.

2. To sew slightly.

In half-whipt muslin needles useless lie. Gay.

3. To drive with lashes.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shakespeare.
Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again;
Lash hence these over-weaning rags of France,
These famish'd beggars. Shakespeare.
Since I pluckt geese, play'd truant, and whipt
top, I knew not what it was to be beaten till lately. Shakespeare.

If ordered every day to whip his top, so long as to make him weary, he will wish for his book, if you promise it him as a reward of having whipt his top lustily quite out. Locke.
Whipt cream; unfortified with wine or sense!
Froth'd by that slattern muse, Indifference. Harte.

4. To correct with lashes.

I'll leave you to the hearing of the cause,
Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.
Shakespeare.
Reason with the fellow,

Before you punish him, where he heard this,
Lest you should chance to whip your information. Shakespeare.

Hourly we see some raw pin-feather'd thing
Attempt to mount, and fight and heroes sit;
Who for false quantities was whipt at school,
But t' other day, and breaking g' ammar rule. Dryden.

How did he return this haughty brave,
Who whipt the winds, and made the sea his slave? Dryden.

This requires more than setting children a task, and whipping them, wit' out any more ado, if it be not done to our fancy. Locke.

Oh, chain me! whip me! let me feel the scorn
Of sordid rables and insulting crowds!
Give me but life. Smith.

Heirs to titles and large estates have a weakness in their eyes, and are not able to bear the pain and indignity of whipping. Swift.

5. To lash with sarcasm.

They would whip me with their fine wits, till I was as crest-fallen as a dried pear. Shakespeare.

6. To inwrap.

that it may the easier move in the edge of the rowler. Morton.
To WHIP. v. a. To take any thing nimbly; always with a partiele ascertaining the sense: as, out, on, up, away. A ludicrous use.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whipt his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in this brainish apprehension kills
The un-seen good old man. Shakespeare.
She in a hurry whips up her darling under her arm. L'Estrange.

Raise yourself upon your hinder legs, and then stretch out your head: I can easily whip up to your horns, and so out of the well. L'Estrange.
Brisk Susan whips her linen from the rope,
Whilst the first drizzling show'r is born aslope. Swift.

Thus disposed, it lies ready for you to whip it out in a moment. Swift.

To WHIP. v. n. To move nimbly. A ludicrous word.

Two friends travelling together, met a bear upon the way; the one whips up a tree, and the other throws himself flat upon the ground. L'Estrange.

The simple squire made a sudden start to follow; but the justice of the quorum whipped between. Tutler.

WHIP. n. s. [hpeop, Sax.] An instrument of correction tough and pliant.

There sat infernal Pain,
And fast beside him sat tumultuous Strife;
The one in hand an iron whip did strain,
The other brandish'd a bloody knife. Spenser.

Put in ev'ry honest hand a whip,
To lash the rascal naked through the world. Shakespeare.

Love is merely a madness, and deserves as well
a dark-house and a whip as madmen do. Shakespeare.
High on her head she rears two twisted snakes;
Her chain she rattles, and her whip she shakes. Dryden.

In his right hand he holds the whip, with which he is supposed to drive the horses to the snn. Dryden.

 In Bridewel a number he stript,
 Lesse worthe than thesee to be whipt. Tusser.

TO WHIRL. v. a. [whyrren, Sax. wirbeln, Dut.] To turn round rapidly.
 My thoughts are whirled like a potter's wheel;
 I know not where I am, or what I do. Shakesp.
 He whirls his sword around without delay,
 And hews through adverse foes an ample way. Dryden.

With his full force he whirl'd it first around;
 But the soft yielding air receiv'd the wound. Dryden.

The Stygian flood,
 Falling from on high, with bellowing sound
 Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around. Adison.
 With impetuous motion whirl'd apace,
 This magic wheel still moves, yet keeps its place. Granville.

They have ever been taught by their senses,
 That the sun, with all the planets and the fixed stars, are whirled round this little globe. Watts.

TO WHIRL. v. n.

1. To run round rapidly.
 He, rapt with whirling wheels, inflames the skyen
 With fire not made to burn, but fairly for to shine. Spenser.
 Five moons were seen to-night,
 Four fix'd, and the fifth did whirl about
 The other four in wondrous motion. Shakesp.

As young striplings whip the top for sport
 On the smooth pavement of an empty court,
 The wooden engine flies and whirls about,
 Admir'd with clamours of the beardless rout. Dryden.
 Wild and distracted with their fears,
 They justling plunge amidst the sounding deeps;
 The flood away the struggling squadron sweeps,
 And men, and arms, and horses, whirling bears. Smith.

2. To move hastily.
 She what he swears regards no more
 Than the deaf rocks when the loud billows roar;
 But whirl'd away to shun his hateful sight,
 Hid in the forest. Dryden.

WHIRL. n. s. [from the verb.]
 Gyration; quick rotation; circular motion; rapid circumvolution.

'Twere well your judgments but in plays did range;
 But ev'n your follies and debauches change
 With such a whirl, the poets of your age
 Are tir'd, and cannot score them on the stage. Dryden.

Wings raise my feet; I'm pleas'd to mount on high,
 Trace all the mazes of the liquid sky;
 Their various turnings and their whirls declare,
 And live in the vast region of the air. Crech.
 Nor whirl of time, nor flight of years can waste. Crech.

I have been watching what thoughts came up
 In the whirl of fancy that were worth communicating. Pope.
 How the carriages, how its kindling wheels
 Smoke in the whirl: the circling sand ascends,
 And in the noble dust the chariot's lost. Smith.
2. Anything moved with rapid rotation.
 For though in dreadful whirls we hang
 High on the broken wave,
 I know thou wert not slow to hear,
 Nor impotent to save. Spectator.

WHIRLBAT. n. s. [whirl and bat.] Anything moved rapidly round to give a blow. It is frequently used by the poets for the ancient cestus.
 At whirlbat he had slain many, and was now Himself slain by Pollux. L'Estrange.
 The whirlbat's falling blow they nimbly shun,
 And win the race ere they begin to run. Crech.
 The guardian angels of kingdoms he rejected,
 As Dares did the whirlbats of Eryx, when they Were thrown before him by Entellus. Dryden.
 The whirlbat and the rapid race shall be Reserv'd for Cæsar, and ordain'd by me. Dryden.

 And set this whirligig a-spinning. Prior.

WHIRLPIT. } n. s. [whyrren, Sax.]
WHIRLPOOL. } A place where the water moves circularly, and draws whatever comes within the circle towards its centre; a vortex.

Poor Tom! whom the foul fiend hath led Through ford and whirlpool, o'er bog and quagmire. Shakespeare.
 In the fathomless profound
 Down sunk they, like a falling stone,
 By raging whirlpits overthrow. Sandys.
 This calm of heaven, this mermaid's melody,
 Into an unseen whirlpool draws you fast,
 And in a moment sucks you. Dryden.
 Send forth, ye wise! send forth your lab'ring thought;
 Let it return with empty notions fraught
 Of airy columns every moment broke,
 Of circling whirlpools, and of spheres of smoke. Prior.

There might arise some vertiginous motions or whirlpools in the matter of the chaos, whereby the atoms must be thrust and crowded to the middle of those whirlpools, and there constipate one another into great solid bodies. Bentley.

WHIRLWIND. n. s. [werbelwind, Germ.] A stormy wind moving circularly.
 In the very torrent and whirlwind of your passion,
 Heget a temperance that may give it smoothness. Shakesp.

1. To sweep with a small besom.
2. To move nimbly, as when one sweeps.

Cardinal believ'd great states depend Upon the tip o' th' bear's tail's end;
 That as she whisk'd it upwards the sun,
 Strow'd mighty empires up and down. Hudibras.

WHISKER. n. s. [from whisk.] The hair growing on the upper lip unshaven; the mustachio.
 A sacrifice to fall of state,
 Whose thread of life the fatal sisters
 Did twist together with its whiskers. Hudibras.
 Behold four kings in majesty rever'd,
 With hoary whiskers and a fork'd beard. Pope.
 A painter added a pair of whiskers to the face. Addison.

TO WHISPER. v. n. [uisperen, Dutch.]
To speak with a low voice, so as not to be heard but by the ear close to the speaker; to speak with suspicion or timorous caution.

He sometime with fearful countenance would Desire the king to look to himself; for that all The court and city were full of whisperings, and expectation of some sudden change. Sidney.
 All that hate me whisper together against me. Psalms.

In speech of man, the whispering or susurris, whether louder or softer, is an interior sound; but the speaking out is an exterior sound; and therefore you can never make a tone, nor sing, in whispering, but in speech you may. Bacon.

The king Aëstus calis;
 Then softly whisper'd in her faithful ear,
 And bade his daughters at the rites appear. Pope.
 It is as offensive to speak with a fool's company, as it would be ill manners to whisper in it; he is displeas'd at both, because he is ignorant of what is said. Pope.
 The hollow whispering breeze, the pliant reeds
 Parle down amid the twisted roots. Thomson.

TO WHISPER. v. a.

1. To address in a low voice.
 When they talk of him, they shake their heads,
 And whisper one another in the ear. Shakesp.
 Give sorrow words; the grief that does not speak
 Whispers the o'erfraught heart, and bids it break. Shakesp.
 He first whispers the man in the ear, that such a man should think such a card. Bacon.
 The steward whispered the young Templar, that's true to my knowledge. Tatler.

2. To utter in a low voice.
 You have heard of the news abroad, I mean the whispered ones; for they are yet but ear-kissing arguments. Shakesp.
 Sit and eat your bread,
 Nor whisper more a word; or get ye gone,
 And weep without doors. Chapman.
 They might buzz and whisper it one to another, and, tacitly withdrawing from the apostles, noise it about the city. Bentley.

3. To prompt secretly.
 Charles the emperor,
 Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
 For 't was indeed his colour, but he came
 To whisper Wolsey, here makes visitation. Shakesp.

WHISPER. n. s. [from the verb.] A low soft voice; cautious and timorous speech.

The extension is more in tones than in speech ; therefore the inward voice or whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.

Strictly observe the first hints and whispers of good and evil that pass in the heart, and this will keep conscience quick and vigilant. South.

Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.

He meall'd, his patron to controul,

Divulg'd the secret whispers of his soul. Dryden.

With such like false whispers, in former reigns,

the ears of princes have been poisoned. Davenant.

WHISPERER. n. s. [from whisper.]

1. One that speaks low.

2. A private talker ; a teller of secrets ; a conveyer of intelligence.

Kings trust in eunuchs hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates. Bacon.

WHIST. [This word is called by Skinner, who seldom errs, an interjection commanding silence, and so it is commonly used ; but Shakespeare uses it as a verb, and Milton as an adjective or a participle.]

1. Are silent.

Come unto these yellow sands,

And then take hands ;

Curt'sied when you have, and kist,

The wild waves whist. Shakesp.

2. Still ; silent ; put to silence.

The winds with wonder whist,

Smoothly the waters kiss'd,

Whispering new joys to the mild ocean. Milton.

3. Be still.

WHIST. n. s. A game at cards, requiring close attention and silence ; vulgarly pronounced whisk.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swobbers. Swift.

Whist awhile

Walks his grave round, beneath a cloud of smoke

Wreath'd fragrant from the pipe. Thomson.

To WHISTLE. v. n. [whistle, Saxon ; fastulo, Lat.]

1. To form a kind of musical sound by an inarticulate modulation of the breath.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard ;

Some time I shall sleep out, the rest I'll whistle.

Shakespeare.

Let one whistle at the one end of a trunk, and hold your ear at the other, and the sound shall strike so sharp as you can scarce endure it. Bacon.

While the plowman near at hand

Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

Should Bertran sound his trumpets,

And Torrismond but whistle through his fingers,

He draws his army off. Dryden.

He whistled as he went, for want of thought. Dryden.

The ploughman leaves the task of day,

And trudging homeward whistles on the way. Gay.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.

3. To sound shrill.

His big manly voice

Changing again toward childish treble pipes,

He whistles in his sound. Shakesp.

Soft whispers run along the leafy woods,

And mountains whistle to the mur'm'ring floods. Dryden.

Rhæus from the earth a burning brand

Selects, and whirling waves ; till from his hand

The fire took flame, then dash'd it from the right

On fair Charaxus' temples, near the sight

Then whistling past came on. Dryden.

When winged deaths in whistling arrows fly,

Wilt thou, though wounded, yet undaunted stay,

Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day ?

Prior.

The wild winds whistle, and the billows roar,

The splitting raft the furious tempest tore. Pope.

To WHISTLE. v. a. To call by a whistle.

Let him whistle them backwards and forwards, till he is weary. South.

He chanced to miss his dog : we stood still till he had whistled him up. Addison.

When simple pride for flattery makes demands,

May dunces by dunces be whistled off my hands ! Pope.

WHISTLE. n. s. [whistle, Saxon.]

1. Sound made by the modulation of the breath in the mouth.

My sire in caves constrains the wind,

Can with a breath their clam'rous rage appease ;

They fear his whistle, and forsake the seas. Dryden.

2. A sound made by a small wind instrument.

3. The mouth ; the organ of whistling.

Let's drink the other cup to wet our whistles, and so sing away all sad thoughts. Walton.

4. A small wind instrument.

The masters and pilots were so astonished, that they knew not how to direct ; and if they knew, they could scarcely, when they directed, hear their own whistle. Sidney.

Behold

Upon the hempen tackle shipboys climbing ;

Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give

To sounds confus'd. Shakesp.

Small whistles, or shepherds' oaten pipes, give a sound, because of their extreme slenderness, whereby the air is more pent than in a wider pipe. Bacon.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew,

The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew. Pope.

5. The noise of winds.

6. A call, such as sportsmen use to their dogs.

Madam, here comes my lord, —

— I have been worth the whistle. Shakesp.

The knight, pursuing this epistle,

Believ'd he'd brought her to his whistle. Hudibras.

WHISTLER. n. s. [from whistle.] One who whistles.

The prize was a guinea to be confer'd upon the ablest whistler, who could whistle clearest, and go through his tune without laughing. Addison.

WHIT. n. s. [whit, a thing ; aphit, any thing, Sax.] A point ; a jot.

We love, and are no whit regarded. Sidney.

Her sacred book with blood swrit,

That none could read except she did him teach,

She unto him disclosed every whit,

And heavenly documents thereout did preach. Spenser.

The motive cause of doing it is not in ourselves, but carrieth us as if the wind should drive a feather in the air ; we no whit furthering that whereby we are driven. Hooker.

Although the lord became the king's tenant, his country was no whit reformed thereby, but remained in the former barbarism. Davies.

Nature's full blessings would he well dispens'd

In unsuperfluous, even proportion,

And she no whit encumber'd with her store. Milton.

It does not me a whit displease,

That the rich all honours seize. Cowley.

In accounts of ancient times, it ought to satisfy any enquirer, if they can be brought any whit near one another. Tillotson.

It is every whit as honourable to assist a good minister, as to oppose a bad one. Addison.

WHITE. adj. [whit, Sax. wit, Dut.]

1. Having such an appearance as arises from the mixture of all colours ; snowy.

When the paper was held nearer to any colour than to the rest, it appeared of that colour to which it approached nearest ; but when it was equally, or almost equally, distant from all the colours, so that it mix'd he equally illuminated by them all, it appear'd white. Newton.

Why round our coaches crowd the white-glovd beaux ? Pope.

2. Having the colour of fear ; pale.

My hands are of your colour, but I shame

To wear a heart so white. Shakesp.

3. Having the colour appropriated to happiness and innocence.

Welcome, pure-eyed faith, white-handed hope ; Thou hovering angel girl with golden wings,

And thou unblemish'd form of chastity. Milton.

Wert thou that sweet smiling youth ?

Or that crown'd matron sage, white-rubed Truth ? Milton.

Let this auspicious morning he express

With a white stone distinguish'd from the rest,

White as thy fame, and as thy honour clear ;

And let new joys attend on thy new-added year. Dryden.

To feastful mirth be this white hour assign'd,

And sweet discourse, the banquet of the mind. Pope.

Peace o'er the world her olive wand extend,

And white-rob'd innocence from heav'n descend. Pope.

4. Gray with age.

I call you servile ministers,

That have with two pernicious daughters join'd

Your high engender'd battles 'gainst a head

So old and white as this. Shakesp.

So minutes, hours, and days, weeks, months,

and years,

Past over, to the end they were created,

Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave. Shakesp.

5. Pure ; unblemish'd.

Unhappy Dryden ! in all Charles's days,

Roscommon only boasts unspotted lays ;

And in our own, excuse some courtly stains,

No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

WHITE. n. s.

1. Whiteness ; any thing white ; white colour.

My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies,

Finely attir'd in a robe of white. Shak.

A friend coming to visit me, I stopped him at the door, and before I told him what the colours were, or what I was doing, I asked him which of the two whites were the best, and wherein they differed ; and after he had at that distance viewed them well, he answered that they were both good whites, and that he could not say which was best, nor wherein their colours differed. Newton.

2. The mark at which an arrow is shot, which used to be painted white.

If a mark be set up for an anchor at a great distance, let him aim as exactly as he can, the least wind shall take his arrow, and divert it from the white. Dryden.

Remove him, then, and all your plots fly sure,

Point blank, and level to the very white

Of your designs. Southern.

3. The albuminous part of an egg.

I'll fetch some flax and whites of eggs

To apply to 's bleeding face. Shakesp.

The strongest repellents are the whites of new-laid eggs beaten to a froth with alum. Hfseman.

When fates among the stars do grow,

Then into the close nests of time dost peep ;

And there, with piercing eye,

Through the firm shell and the thick white dost spy

Years to come a-forming lie,

Close in their sacred secundine asleep. Cowley.

What principle manages the white and yolk of an egg into such a variety of textures, as is requisite to fashion a chick ? Boule.

The two inmost regims represent the yolk and the membrane that lies next above it ; so the exterior region of the earth is as the shell of the egg, and the abyss under it as the white that lies under the shell. Burnet.

4. The white part of the eye.

Our general himself

Sanctifies himself with 's hands,

And turns up th' white of th' eye to his discourse. Shakesp.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye doth not lie in the same superficies with the white of the eye, but riseth up, as a hillock, above its convexity. Ray.

To WHITE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make white; to dealbate; to white-wash.

His raiment became shining, exceeding white as snow; so as no fuller on earth can white them.

Like unto whited sepulchres, which appear beautiful outward, but are within full of dead men's bones.

WHITE'AD. n. s.

White lead is made by taking sheet-lead, and having cut it into long and narrow slips, they make it up into rolls, but so that a small distance may remain between every spiral revolution. These rolls are put into earthen pots, so ordered that the lead may not sink down above half way, or some small matter more, in them; these pots have each of them very sharp vinegar in the bottom, so full as almost to touch the lead. When the vinegar and lead have both been put into the pot, it is covered up close, and so left for a certain time; in which space the corrosive fumes of the vinegar will reduce the surface of the lead into a mere white calx, which they separate by knocking it with a hammer. There are two sorts of this sold at the colour shops; the one called coarse, which is the most pure part, and the other is called white lead.

WHITE'VERED. adj. [from white and liver.] Envious; malicious; cowardly.

WHITE'LY. adj. [from white.] Coming near to white.

A whitely was thou, with a velvet brow,
With two pitch balls stuck in her face for eyes.

Now, governor, I see that I must blush
Quite through this veil of night a whitely shame,
To think I could design to make those free,
Who were by nature slaves.

WHIT'MEAT. n. s. [white and meat.] Food made of milk.

Much saltiness in whitemeat is ill for the stone.
The Irish banished into the mountains, lived only upon whitemeats.

To WHIT'EN. v. a. [from white.] To make white.

The smoke of sulphur will not black a paper, and is commonly used by women to whiten tiffanies.

Flax the soil and climate are proper for whitening, by the frequency of brooks, and also of winds.

Women of my complexion ought to be more modest, especially since our faces debar us from all artificial whitenings.

Striking her cliff, the storm confirms her power;
The waves but whiten her triumphant shore.
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd walls provoke the skewer to write;
In dance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,
Like Lee or Budge, I will rhyme and print.

To WHIT'EN. v. n. To grow white.

The bark expects its freight;
The loosen'd canvas trembles with the wind,
And the sea whitens with auspicious gales.

WHIT'ENER. n. s. [from whiten.] One who makes any thing white.

WHIT'ENESS. n. s. [from white.]

1. The state of being white; freedom from colour.

This noth lead me to her hand,
Of my first love the fatal band,
Whence whiteness doth for ever sit;
Nature herself enamell'd it.

Whiteness is a mean between all colours, having disposed itself indifferently to them all, so as with equal facility to be tinged with any of them.

2. Paleness.

Thou tremblest, and the whiteness of thy cheek
Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.

3. Purity; cleanness.

The least spot is visible on ermine: but to preserve this whiteness in its original purity, you have, like that ermine, forsaken the common track of business which is not always clean.

WHIT'EPOT. n. s. A kind of food.

1. Broad; extended far each way.

They found fat pasture, and the land was wide and quiet. 1 Chronicles.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,

And many-linguag'd nations he survey'd. Pope.

2. Broad to a certain degree: as, three inches wide.

3. Deviating; remote.

Many of the fathers were far wide from the understanding of this place. Raleigh.

Consider the absurdities of that distinction betwixt the act and the obliquity; and the contrary being so wide from the truth of scripture and the attributes of God, and so noxious to good life, we may certainly conclude, that to the perpetration of whatsoever sin there is not at all any predestination of God. Hammond.

To more

His laughter at their quaint opinions wide. Milton.

Oft wide of nature must he act a part,
Make love in tropes, in bombast break his heart. Tickle.

WIDE. adv.

1. At a distance. In this sense wide seems to be sometimes an adverb.

A little wide

There was a holy chapel edified,

Wherein the hermit wou'd to say

His holy things each morn and even tide. Spenser.

The Chinese, a people whose way of thinking seems to lay as wide of ours in Europe as their country does. Temple.

2. With great extent.

Of all these bounds, enrich'd

With plenteous rivers, and wide skirted meads,

We make thee lady. Shakespeare.

On the east side of the garden-pace

Cherubic watch, and of a sword the flame

Wide waving; all approach far off to fright. Milton.

She open'd, but to shut

Excell'd her power; the gates wide open stood. Milton.

With huge two-handed sway

Brandish'd aloft, the horrid edge came down, Milton.

Wide wasting.

The south wind rose, and with black wings

Wide hovering, all the clouds together drove

From under heav'n. Milton.

Stretch'd at ease, the panting lady lies,

To shun the fervour of meridian skies;

While sweating slaves catch ev'ry breeze of air,

And with wide-spreading fans refresh the fair. Gay.

Yet wide was spread their fame in ages past,

And poets once had promis'd they should last. Pope.

WIDELY. adv. [from wide.]

1. With great extent each way.

Any that considers how immense the intervals of the chaos are, in proportion to the bulk of the atoms, will hardly induce himself to believe, that particles so widely disseminated could ever thur-ing one another to a compact texture. Bentley.

2. Remotely; far.

Let him exercise the freedom of his reason, and his mind will be strengthened; and the light which the remote parts of truth will give to one another, will so assist his judgment, that he will seldom be widely out. Locke.

To WIDEN. v. a. [from wide.] To make wide; to extend.

So now the gates are open; now prove good seconds;

'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,

Not for the flyers. Shakespeare.

These accidents, when they first happen, seem but small and contemptible; but by degrees they branch out and widen themselves into a numerous train of mischievous consequences. South.

He was accustomed to sleep with a peaceable nose, softening in his slumbers the wrinkles of it, and the anger which commonly mount'd to that part; but now his nostrils were widened to the last degree of fury. Dryden.

To WIDEN. v. n. To grow wide; to extend itself.

It is in this that the species of brutes are discriminated from man, and that proper difference wherein they are wholly separated, and which at last widens to so vast a distance. Locke.

With her the temple ev'ry moment grew,

Upward the columns shoot, the roofs ascend,

And arches widen, and long aisles extend. Pope.

WIDENESS. n. s. [from wide.]

1. Breadth; large extent each way.

The rugged hair began to fall away;

The sweetness of her eye did only stay,

Though not so large; her crooked horns decrease;

The wideness of her jaws and nostrils cease. Dryden.

2. Comparative breadth.

Within the same annual time, the center of the earth is carried above fifty times as far round the orbis magnus, whose wideness we now assume to be twenty thousand terrestrial diameters. Bentley.

WIDGEON. n. s. A waterfowl, not unlike a wild duck, but not so large.

Amongst the first sort we reckon creysers, cur-lews, and widgeons. Carew.

WIDOW. n. s. [widwa, Sax. weduwe, Dut.
widdie, Welsh; vidua, Lat.] A woman whose husband is dead.

To take the widow,

Texasperates, makes mad her sister Generil. Shak.

Catharine no more

Shall he call'd queen; but princess dowager,

And widow to prince Arthur. Shakespeare.

Our fatherless distress was left unmoan'd,

Your widow-dolors likewise be unwept. Shakespeare.

And will she yet debase her eyes on me,

That cropt the golden prime of this sweet prince,

And made her widow to a woful bed? Shakespeare.

And you, fair widow, who stay here alive,

Since he so much rejoices, cease to grieve:

Your joys and pains were wont the same to be,

Begin not now, blest pair! to disagree. Cowley.

The barren they were miserable make,

And from the widow all her comfort take. Sandys.

He warns the widow, and her household gods,

To seek a refuge in remote abodes. Dryden.

Who has the paternal power whilst the widow queen is with child? Locke.

To WIDOW. v. a. [from widow.]

1. To deprive of a husband.

In this city he

Hath widow'd and unchilded many a one,

Which to this hour bewail the injury. Shak.

You are beguil'd,

Both you and I, for Romeo is exil'd:

He made you for a highway to my bed;

But I, a maid, die maiden widow'd. Shakespeare.

Thy little care to mend my widow'd nights,

Has forc'd me to recourse of marriage rites,

To fill an empty side. Dryden.

2. To endow with a widow-right.

For his possessions,

Although by confiscation they are ours,

We do instate and widow you widow,

To buy you a better husband. Shakespeare.

3. To strip of any thing good.

The widow'd isle in mourning' Dryden.

Dries up her tears.

Incluent weather and frosty blasts deface

The blithesome year, trees of their shrivel'd fruits

Are widow'd, dreary storms o'er all prevail. Philips.

WIDOWER. n. s. [from widow.] One who has lost his wife.

The king, sealing up all thoughts of love under the image of her memory, remained a widower
many years after. Sidney.

The main consents are had, and here we'll stay

To see our widower's second marriage-day. Shakespeare.

They that marry, as they that shall get no children; and they that marry not, as the widowers.

2 Esdras.

WIDOWHOOD. n. s. [from widow.]

1. The state of a widow.

Cecropia, having in her widowhood taken this young Artesia into her charge, had taught her to think that there is no wisdom but in including both heaven and earth in one's self. Sidney.

Ne ween my right with strength adown to tread,

Through weakness of my widowhood or woe,

For truth is strong. Spenser.

She employ'd her last widowhood to works no less bountiful than charitable. Carew.

It is of greater merit wholly to abstain from things desirable, than after fruition to be content to leave them; as they who magnify single life prefer virginity much before widowhood. Milton.

Cherish thy hasten'd widowhood with the gold

Of matrimonial treason: so farewell. Milton.

2. Estate settled on a widow. Not in use.

For that dow'ry, I'll assure her of

Her widowhood, be it that she survives me,

In all my lands. Shakespeare.

WIDOWHUNTER. n. s. [widow and hunter.]

One who courts widows for a jointure.

The widowhunters about town often afford them great diversions. Addison.

WIDOWMAKER. n. s. [widow and maker.]

One who deprives women of their husbands.

It grieves my soul

That I must draw this metal from my side
To be a widowmaker. Shakesp.

WIDOW-WAIL. n. s. [widow and wail.] A plant.

WIDTH. n. s. [from wide.] Breadth; wideness. A low word.

For the width of the morose gage this side, then for the tenant gage on that end of the quarter you intend the tenant should be made. Milton.

Let thy vines in intervals be set;

Indulge their width, and add a roomy space,
That their extremest lines may scarce embrace. Dryden.

To WIELD. v. a. [pealban, Saxon, to manage in the hand.]

1. To use with full command, as a thing not too heavy for the holder.

His looks are full of peaceful majesty,
His head by nature fram'd to wear a crown,
His hand to wield a scepter, and himself
Likely in time to bless a regal throne. Shakesp.

Amongst forest, hills, and floods, was ne'er such leave and shove,
Since Albion wielded arms against the son of Jove. Dryden.

There is that hand bolden'd to blood and war,
That must the sword in wondrous actions wield. Daniel.

They are in the dark before they are aware, and then they make at nose only with terms; which, like too heavy weapons that they cannot wield, carry their strokes beyond their aim. Digby.

The least of whom could wield
These elements, and arm him with the force
Of all their regions. Milton.

Part wield their arms, part curb the bounding steed. Milton.

If Rome's great senate could not wield that sword,
Which of the conquer'd world had made them lord;
What hope had ours, while yet their power was new,
To rule victorious armies, but by you! Waller.

He worthiest, after him, his sword to wield,
Or wear his armour, or sustain his shield. Dryden.

2. To handle: in an ironical sense.

Base Hungarian wight, wilt thou the spigot wield? Shakesp.

WIELDY. adj. [from wield] Manageable.

WIERY. adj. [from wire.]

1. Made of wire: it were better written wiry.

Your gown going off, such beauteous state reveals,
As when through flow'ry meads th' hill's shadow steals;
On with that wiery coronet, and shew
The hairy diadem which on your head doth grow. Donne.

2. Drawn into wire.

Polymnia shall be drawn with her hair hanging loose about her shoulders, resembling wiery gold. Peacham.

3. [From pen, a pool.] Wet; wearish; moist. Obsolete.

Where but by chance a silver drop hath fall'n,
E'en to that drop ten thousand wiery fric'ds
Drew the elves in sociable grief. Shakesp.

WIFE. n. s. plural wives. [wif, Sax. wiff, Dutch.]

1. A woman that has a husband.

There's no bottom, none,
In my voluptuousness; your wives, your daughters,

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

The kings of Spain have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a competitor without foul dishonour. Heylyn.

The wife, where danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milton.

The wife her husband murders, he the wife. Dryden.

Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife. Pope.

2. It is used for a woman of low employment.

Strawberry wives lay two or three great strawberries at the mouth of their pot, and all the rest are little ones. Bacon.

WIG. n. s. Wig, being a termination of the names of men, signifies war, or else a hero; from wiga, a word of that signification. Gibson.

WIG. n. s. [contracted from periwig.]

1. False hair worn on the head.

Triumphing totes and desponding whigs Forget their feuds, and join to save their wigs. Swift.

2. A sort of cake. Ainsworth.

WIGHT. n. s. [wiht, Sax.] A person; a being. Now used only in irony or contempt.

Beshrew the witch! with venomous wight she stays,
Tedious as hell; but flies the grasp of love,
With wings more momentary swift than thought. Shakesp.

This world below did need one wight,
Which might thereof distinguish ev'ry part. Davies.

This meaner wight, of trust and credit bare,
Not so respected, could not look t' effect. Daniel.

A wight he was, whose very sight would Entitle him mirror of knight-hood. Hudibras.

The water flies all taste of living wight. Milton.

How couldst thou suffer thy devoted knight,
On thy own day, to fall by foe oppress'd,
The wight of all the world who lov'd thee best? Dryden.

His station he yielded up to a wight as disagreeable as himself. Addison.

In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The tulip's dead. Young.

WIGHT. adj. Swift; nimble. Out of use.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From bough to bough he leaped light,
And oft the pumies latched. Spenser.

WIGHT, an initial in the names of men, signifies strong; nimble; lusty; being purely Saxon. Gibson.

WIGHTLY. adv. [from wight.] Swiftly; nimbly. Obsolete.

Her was her, while it was day-light,
But now her is a most wretched wight;
For day that was is wightly past,
And now at last the night doth hast. Spenser.

WILD. adj. [wild, Saxon; wild, Dutch.]

1. Not tame; not domestick.

For I am he, and born to tame you, Kate,
And bring you from a wild cat to a kate,
Conformable as other household kates. Shakesp.

Winter's not gone yet, if the wild geese fly that way. Shakesp.

All beasts of the earth since wild. Milton.

2. Propagated by nature; not cultivated.

Whatsoever will make a wild tree a garden tree, will make a garden tree to have less core or stone. Bacon.

Goose grass or wild tansy is a weed that strong clays are very subject to. Mortimer.

The wild bee breeds in the stocks of old willows, in which they first bore a canal, and furnish afterwards with hangings, made of loose leaves: and to finish their work, divide the whole into several rooms or nests. Grew.

3. Desert; uninhabited.

The wild beast where he wons in forest wild. Milton.

4. Savage; uncivilized: used of persons or practices.

Affairs that walk,
As they say spirits do, at midnight, have
In them a wilder nature than the business
That seeks dispatch by day. Shakesp.

Though the inundation destroyed man and beast generally, yet some few wild inhabitants of the woods esca, ed. Bacon.

When they might not converse with any civil men without peril of their lives, whither should they fly but into the woods and mountains, and there live in a wild and barbarous manner. Davies.

May those already earst Essexian plains,
Where hasty death and pining sickness reigns,
Prove as a desert, and none there make stay
But savage beasts, or men as wild as they. Waller.

5. Turbulent; tempestuous; irregular.

His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigur'd in him. Addison.

6. Licentious; ungoverned.

The barbarous dissonance
Of that wild root that tore the Thracian bard. Milton.

Valour grown wild by pride, and pow'r by rage,
Did the true charms of majesty impair:
Rome by degrees advancing more in age,
Shew'd sad remains of what had once been fair. Prior.

7. Inconstant; mutable; fickle.

In the ruling passion, there alone,
The wild are constant, and the cunning known. Pope.

8. Inordinate; loose.

Other bars he lays before me,
My riots past, my wild societies. Shakespeare.

Besides, thou art a beau; what's that, my child,
A fop well drest, extravagant, and wild;
She that cries herbs has less impertinence,
And in her calling more of common sense. Dryden.

9. Uncouth; strange.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on 't? Shakespeare.

10. Done or made without any consistent order or plan.

With mountains as with weapons arm'd, they make wild work in heav'n. Milton.

The sea was very necessary to the ends of providence, and it would have been a very wild world had it been without. Woodward.

11. Merely imaginary.

As universal as these appear to be, an effectual remedy might be applied: I am not at present upon a wild speculative project, but such a one as may be easily put into execution. Swift.

WILD. n. s. [from the adjective.] A desert; a tract uncultivated and uninhabited.

Whereas the scorching sky
Doth singe the sandy wilds of spiciful Barbary. Dryden.

We sometimes,
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton.

This gentle knight
Forsook his easy couch at early day,
And to the woods and wilds pursued his way. Dryden.

Then Lybia first, of all her moisture drain'd,
Became a barren waste, a wild of sand. Addison.

Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,
Amidst the barren rocks and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name? Addison.

W I L

You rais'd these hallow'd walls; the desert
smil'd,
And paradise was open'd in the wild. Pope.
WILD Basil. n. s. [acinius, Lat.] A plant.
Miller.
WILD Cucumber. n. s. [elaterium, Lat.] A plant.
The branches are somewhat like those of the cucumber, but have no tendrils; the fruit is prickly, and when ripe bursts with great elasticity, and abounds with fetid juice. Miller.
WILD Olive. n. s. [elagnus, Lat. from ελαια, oliva, and αγρος, ritex.] This plant hath leaves like those of the chaste tree, and a fruit like an olive. Miller.
To WILDER. v. a. [from wild.] To lose or puzzle in an unknown or pathless tract.
The little courtiers, who ne'er come to know
The depth of factions, as in mazes go,
Where interests meet, and cross so oft, that they
With too much care are wilder'd in the way. Dry.
O thou! who free'st me from my doubtful state,
Long lost and wilder'd in the maze of fate,
Be present still. Pope.
WILDERNESS. n. s. [from wild.]
1. A desert; a tract of solitude and savageness.
He travell'd through wide wasteful ground,
That nought but desert wilderness shew'd all around. Spenser.
When as the land she saw no more appear,
But a wild wilderness of waters deep,
Than 'gan she greatly to lament and weep. Spens.
O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!
When that my care could not withhold thy riots,
What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?
O thou wilt be a wilderness again,
Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants! Shak.
But who can always on the billows lie?
The watry wilderness yields no supply. Waller.
All those animals have been obliged to change their woods and wildernesses for lodgings in cities.
Arbutnot and Pope.
2. The state of being wild or disorderly.
Not in use.
The paths and bow'rs doubt not but our joint hands
Will keep from wilderness with ease. Milton.
WILDFIRE. n. s. [wild and fire.] A composition of inflammable materials, easy to take fire, and hard to be extinguished.
When thou rann'st up Gadshill in the night to catch my horse, I did think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus, or a ball of wildfire. Shakesp.
Though brimstone, pitch, wildfire, burn easily and are hard to quench, yet they make no such fiery wind as gunpowder. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Yet shall it in his boiling stomach turn
To bitter poison, and like wildfire burn;
He shall cast up the wealth by him devour'd.
Sandys.
No matter in the world so proper to write with as wildfire, as no characters can be more legible than those which are read by their own light.
Addison's Guardian.
In flames, like Semele's, be brought to bed,
While opening hell spouts wildfire at your head.
Pope.
WILDGOOSECHASE. n. s. A pursuit of something as unlikely to be caught as the wildgoose.
If our wits run the wildgoosechase, I have done;
for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakesp.
Let a man consider the time, money, and vexation that this wildgoosechase has cost him, and then say, what have I gotten to answer all this expence, but giddy frolick? L'Estrange.
WILDING. n. s. [wildelinghe, Dut.] A wild sour apple.

W I L

Ten roddy wildings in the wond I found,
And stoud on tip-toes, reaching from the ground.
Dryden.
The redstreak, of all cyder fruit, hath obtained the preference, being but a kind of wilding, never pleasing to the palate. Mortimer.
The wilding's fibres are contriv'd
To draw th' earth's purest spirit, and resist its feulence. Philips.

Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows. Shakesp.
5. Capriciously; irrationally.
Who is there so wildly sceptical as to question whether the sun shall rise in the east? Wilkins.
6. Irregularly.
She, wildly wanton, wears by night away
The sign of all our labours done by day. Dryden.
WILDNESS. n. s. [from wild.]
1. Rudeness; disorder like that of uncultivated ground.
The heath, which was the third part of our plot, I wish to be framed, as much as may be, to a natural wildness. Bacon.
Vainly thou tell'st me what the woman's care
Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare. Prior.
2. Inordinate vivacity; irregularity of manners.
This same starved justice hath done nothing but rated to me of the wildness of his youth, and the feats he had done about Turnbal-street; and every third word a lie. Shakesp.
He is giv'n
To sports, to wildness, and much company. Shak.
3. Savageness; brutality.
He came in like a wild man, but such a wildness as shewed his eye-sight had tamed him; full of withered leaves, which, though they fell not, still threatened falling. Sidney.
4. Ferity; the state of an animal untamed; contrary to tameness.
5. Uncultivated state.
Their wildness lose, and, quitting nature's part,
Obey the rules and discipline of art. Dryden.
6. Deviation from a settled course; irregularity.
A delirium is but a short wildness of the imagination; a settled irregularity of fancy is distraction and madness. Watts.
7. Alienation of mind.
Ophelia, I wish
That your good beauties be the happy cause
Of Hamlet's wildness; so shall I hope your virtues
May bring him to his wonted way again. Shakesp.
WILDSE'RVICE. n. s. [cratagus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.
WILE. n. s. [pile, Sax. wiel, Island] A deceit; a fraud; a trick; a stratagem;
a practice artful, sly, and insidious.
Their leader by his wiles had much obtain'd,
And done much mischief on the English state. Dan.

W I L

My sentence is for open war; of wiles,
More mexpert, I boast not; then let those Contrive who need Milton.
Life essay'd the surest wile,
Gilding itself with Laura's smile. Roscommon.
So Sforza, cursed with a too fertile brain,
Lost by his wiles the pow'r his wit did gain. Dry.
The heart of man is so full of wiles, artifices, and deceit, there is no guessing at what he is from his speeches. Addison.
Wisdom 's above suspecting wiles,
The queen of learning gravely smiles. Swift.
WILFUL. adj. [will and full.]
1. Stubborn; contumacious; perverse; inflexible.
The wilful never want woe. Proverb.
2. Done or suffered by design.

With wilful cord, for wanting of her will. Spenser.
Thou to me
Art all things under heav'n, all places thou,
Who for my wilful crime art banish'd hence. Milt.
The silent stranger stood amaz'd to see Contempt of wealth, and wilful poverty. Dryden.
By chance he ancient anities forgot,
Or else expung'd them with one wilful blot;
Nor knew he God nor man, nor faith, nor friends,
But for by-purposes, and worldly ends. Harte.
WILFULLY. adv. [from wilful.]
1. Obstinate; stubbornly.
The mother, who being determinately, least I should say of a great lady wilfully, bent to marry her to Demagoras, tried all ways which a witty and hard-hearted mother could devise. Sidney.
Evil could she conceal her fire, and wilfully persevered she in it. Sidney.
Religion is matter of our freest choice; and if men will obstinately and wilfully set themselves against it, there is no remedy. Tillotson.
2. By design; on purpose.
That will carry us, if we do not wilfully betray our succours, through all difficulties. Hammond.
If you do not wilfully pass over any of your greater offences, but confess particularly, and repent seriously, of them, God will more easily pass by your lesser infirmities. Bishop Taylor.
This let him know;
Lest, wilfully offending, he pretend Surprisal. Milton.
WILFULNESS. n. s. [from wilful.] Obstinacy; stubbornness; perverseness.
So full of wilfulness and self-liking is our nature, that without some definitive sentence, which, being given, may stand, small hope there is that strifes will end. Hooker.
Thy causeless ruth repress;
He that his sorrow sought through wilfulness,
And his foe fetter'd would release again,
Deserves to taste his folly's fruit. Spenser.
Never hydra-headed wilfulness
So soon did lose his seat, and all at once,
As in this king. Shakesp.
Sins of presumption are such as proceed from pride, arrogance, wilfulness, and haughtiness of man's heart. Perkins.
A still and stubborn obstinacy is not so much firmness and resolution, as wilfulness. L'Estrange.
That is not hastily to be interpreted obstinacy or wilfulness, which is the natural product of their age. Locke.
WILLY. adv. [from wily.] By strata-gem; fraudulently.
They did work willy, and went and made as if they had been ambassadors. Joshua.
WILINESS. n. s. [from wily.] Cunning; guile.

the poor; let them be taken in the crafty wiliness
that they have imagined. Psalms x. 2.
She supplied the weakness of force by wiliness of wit, and advantage of treaty. Hovel's Vic. Forest.
WILL. n. s. [pilla, Sax. wille, Dut.]
1. That power by which we desire and purpose; volleity.
What freedom the will naturally, under this corrupt state, hath, I do not consider. Hammond.

The will cannot be constrained. Perkins
Two principal fountains there are of human actions, knowledge and will; which will, in things tending towards any end, is termed choice. Hooker.

2. Choice; arbitrary determination.

Will is the power which the mind has to order the consideration of any idea, or the forbearing to consider it, or to prefer the motion of any part of the body to its rest, and vice versa. Locke.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,
To be so cruel to an humble foe?
If nature, then she may it mend with skill;
If will, then she at will may will forego. Spenser.
These things have a shew of wisdom in will, worship and humility. Colossians, ii. 23.

Will holds the serpent in the soul,
And on the passions of the heart doth reign. Davies.
The truth is, such a man understands by his will, and believes a thing true or false, merely as it agrees or disagrees with a violent inclination; and therefore, whilst that inclination lasts in its strength, he discovers nothing of the different degrees of evidence. Atterbury.

3. Discretion; choice.

Religion was observed in the beginning of the world, before there were civil laws amongst them; I mean any other than the mere wills of their princes and governors. Wilkins.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

At his first sight the mountains are shaken, and at his will the south wind bloweth. Eccles. xliii. 16.
Our prayers should be according to the will of God; they should have nothing in them but what is wise, and holy, and heavenly. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire.

I make bold to press upon you with so little preparation.—You're welcome; what's your will? Shakesp.

He hath a will, he hath a power to perform. Drummond.

He said, and with so good a will to die
Did to his beast the fatal point apply;
It found his heart. Dryden.

6. Power; government.

Deliver me not over unto the will of mine enemies. Psalms.
He had his will of his maid before he could go; he had the mastery of his parents ever since he could prattle; and why, now he is grown up, must he be restrained? Locke.

7. Divine determination.

I would give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground. The wills above be done; but I would fain die a dry death. Shakesp.

8. Testament; disposition of a dying man's effects.

Another branch of their revenue still Remains, beyond their boundless right to kill,
Their father yet alive, impower'd to make a will. Dryden.

Do men make their last wills by word of mouth only? Stephens's Sermons.

9. Good-will. Favour; kindness.

I'll to the doctor, he hath my good-will,
And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. Shak.

10. Good-will. Right intention.

Some preach Christ of envy, and some of good-will. Phil. i. 13.

11. Ill-will. Malice; malignity.

Will with a wisp. n. s. Jack with a lantern.

Will with the wisp is of a round figure, in bigness like the flame of a candle; but sometimes broader, and like a bundle of twigs set on fire. It sometimes gives a brighter light than that of a wax candle; at other times more obscure, and of a purple colour. When viewed near at hand, it shines less than at a distance. They wander about in the air, not far from the surface of the earth; and are more frequent in places that are unctuous, muddy, marshy, and abounding with reeds. They haunt burying-places, places of execution, dung-hills. They commonly appear in summer and at the beginning of autumn, and are generally at the height of about six feet from the ground. Now they dilate themselves, and now contract; now they go on like waves, and rain as it were sparks of fire, but they burn nothing. They follow those that run away, and fly from those that follow them. Some that have been, caught were observed to consist of a shining, viscous, and gelatinous matter, like the spawn of frogs, not hot or burning, but only shining; so that the matter seems to be phosphorus, prepared and raised from purified plants or carcasses by the heat of the sun, which is condensed by the cold of the evening, and then shines. Muschenbroek.

Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills and sinking bogs. Gay.

To WILL. v. a. [wilgan, Goth. pullan, Sax. willen, Dut.]

1. To desire that any thing should be, or be done; or not be, or not be done.

To will, is to bend our souls to the having or doing of that which they see to be good. Hooker.

Let Richard be restored to his blood,
As will the rest; so willeth Winchester. Shakesp.
I speak not of God's determining his own will, but his predetermining the acts of our will. There is as great difference betwixt these two, as betwixt my willing a lawful thing myself, and my inducing another man to do that which is unlawful. Hammond on Fundamentals.

Whosoever wills the doing of a thing, if the doing of it be in his power, he will certainly do it; and whosoever does not do that thing which he has in his power to do, does not properly will it. South.

A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To be inclined, or resolved to have.

She's too rough for me;
There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shak.

3. To command; to direct.

St. Paul did will them of Corinth, every man to lay up somewhat on the Sunday, and to reserve it in store for the church of Jerusalem, for the relief of the poor there. Hooker.

How rarely does it meet with this time's guise,
When man was will'd to love his enemies? Shak.

Our hattle is more full of names than yours,
Our men more perfect in the use of arms,
Our armour's all as strong, our cause the best;
Then reason wills our hearts should be as good. Shakesp.

He will'd him to be of good comfort, promising to bestow upon him whatsoever he should win. Knolles.

If they had any business, his majesty will'd that they should attend. Clarendon.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will
The work, which duty binds me to fulfil. Dryden.

4. It has a loose and slight signification.

Let the circumstances of life be what or where they will, a man should never neglect improvement. Watts.

5. It is one of the signs of the future tense, of which it is difficult to show or limit the signification.

I will come. I am determined to come; importing choice.

Thou wilt come. It must be so that thou must come, importing necessity; or, it shall be that thou shalt come, importing choice.

Wilt thou come? Hast thou determined to come? importing choice.

He will come. He is resolved to come; or, it must be that he must come: importing either choice or necessity.

It will come. It must so be that it must come; importing necessity.

The plural follows the analogy of the singular.

WILLI and Vili, among the English Saxons, as viele at this day among the Germans, signified many. So willielmus is the defender of many; wilfred, peace to many; which are answered in sense and signification by Polymachus, Polycrates, and Polyphilus. Gibson's Camden.

WILLING. adj. [from will.]

1. Inclined to any thing; consenting; not disposed to refuse.

Some other able, and as willing, pays
The rigid satisfaction. Milton.

Can any man trust a better support, under affliction, than the friendship of Omnipotence, who is both able and willing, and knows how to relieve him? Bentley.

2. Pleased; desirous.

He, willing to please one in authority, forced all his skill to make the resemblance of the best fashion. Wisdom.
He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

3. Favourable; well disposed to any thing.

As many as were willing-hearted brought bracelets and earrings. Exodus, xxxv. 22.

4. Ready; complying.

Religion hath force to qualify all sorts of men, to make governors the apter to rule with conscience, inferiors for conscience sake the willing to obey. Hooker.

We've willing dames enough. Shakesp.

5. Chosen.

They're held with his melodious harmony
In willing chains, and sweet captivity. Milton.

6. Spontaneous.

Forbear, if thou hast pity;
These groans proceed not from a senseless plant;
No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryd.

7. Consenting.

How can hearts not free serve willing? Milt.

WILLINGLY. adv. [from will.]

1. With one's own consent; without dislike; without reluctance.

That preservation of peace and unity amongst Christian churches should be by all good means procured, we join most willingly and gladly with them. Hooker.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to. Shakesp.

This ransom, if my whole inheritance
May compass it, shall willingly be paid. Milton.

2. By one's own desire.

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied, as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILLINGNESS. n. s. [from willing.] Consent; freedom from reluctance; ready compliance.

We praise the things we hear with much more willingness than those we see; because we envy the present, and reverence the past; thinking ourselves instructed by the one, and overlaid by the other. Ben Jonson.

It is not doing good after that same wonderful manner that Christ's example obligeth us unto, but to a like willingness and readiness to do good, as far as our power reacheth. Calamy.

Fear never yet a generous mind did gain;
We yield on parley, but are storm'd in vain;
Constraint, in all things, makes the pleasure less;
Sweet is the love which comes with willingness. Dryden.

WILLOW. n. s. [pelhe, Sax. salix, Lat. gwilou, Welsh.] A tree worn by forlorn lovers.

It hath amentaceous flowers, consisting of several stamina, which are collected into a spike, but are barren. The embryos are produced upon different trees from the male flowers, and afterwards become a fruit or husk, shaped like a cone, opening in two parts, and containing downy seeds. Miller.

I offered him my company to a willow tree, to make him a garland, as being forsaken; to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipt. Shak.

In such a night
Stood Dido with a willow in her hand
Upon the wild sea banks. Shakesp.
Tell him, in hope he'll prove a widower shortly,
I wear the willow garland for his sake. Shakesp.
When heaven's burning eye the fields invades,
To marshes he resorts obscur'd with reeds,
And hoary willows which the moisture feeds.

Afflicted Israel shall sit weeping down,
Their harps upon the neighb'ring willows hung,
No joyous hymn encouraging their tongue. Prior.
WILLOWISH. adj. [from willow.] Resembling the colour of willow.

Make his body with greenish coloured crewel, or willowish colour. Walton.

WILLOWWEED. n. s. [from willow and weed; lysimachia, Lat.] A plant. Ainsw.

WILLOWWORT. n. s. A plant. Miller.

WILY. adj. [from wile.] Cunning; sly;
full of stratagem; fraudulent; insidious;
subtle; mischievously artful.

They are so cautious and wily headed, especially being men of small practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and shifts. Spenser.

In the wily snake
Whatever slights, none would suspicious mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding. Milton's Par. Lost.

Since this false, wily, doubling disposition of mind is so intolerably mischievous to society, God is sometimes pleased, in more compassion to men, to give them warning of it, by setting some odd mark upon such Cains. South.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound;
'Tis love, said she. Dryden.

WIMBLE. n. s. [wimpel, old Dut. from wemelen, to bore.] An instrument with which holes are bored.

At harvest-home, trembling to approach
The little barrel which he fears to broach,
He assays the wimble, often draws it back,
And deals to thirsty servants but a smack. Dryden.
As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er,
Who ply the wimble, some lunge beam to bore;
Urg'd on all hands it nimbly spins about,
The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.
The trepan is like a wimble used by joiners.

WIMBLE. adj. Active; nimble; shifting to and fro. Such seems to be the meaning here.

He was so wimble and so wight,
From hough to bough he leaped light,
And out the pumies latched;
Therewith afraid I ran away;
But he, that earst seem'd but to play,
A shaft in earnest snatched. Spenser.

WIMPLE. n. s. [wimple, Fr.] A hood;
a veil. It is printed in Spenser, perhaps by mistake, wimble.

So fair and fresh, as fairest flower in May,
For she had laid her mournful stole aside,
And widow-like sad wimple thrown away. Spenser.
The Lord will take away the changeable suits of apparel, and the wimples, and the crisping pins.

WIMPLE. n. s. [peplion, Lat.] A plant.
To WIMPLE. v. a. To draw down as a hood or veil.

The same did hide
Under a veil that wimpled was full low. Spenser.

WIN, whether initial or final, in the names of men, may either denote a masculine temper, from win, which signifies in Saxon, war, strength, &c. or else the general love and esteem he hath among the people, from the Saxon winne, i. e.
dear, beloved. In the names of places it implies a battle fought there. Gibson.

To WIN. v. a. pret. wan and won; part.
pass won. [pinna, Sax. winnen, Dut.]

1. To gain by conquest.

The town of Gaza, where the enemy lay encamped, was not so strong but it might be won. Knolles.
He gave him a command in his navy, and under his good conduct won many i-lands. Heylyn.
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win.
Milton.

Follow cheerful to the trembling town;
Press but an entrance, and presume it won. Dryd.

2. To gain the victory in a contest.

Loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Altho' it be not shin'd upon. Hudibras.
I five years at Tarentum wan
The questorship, and then our love began. Deuham.

Thy well-breath'd horse
Impels the flying car, and wins the course. Dryd.

3. To gain something withheld, or something valuable.

When you see my son, tell him, that his sword can never win the honour that he loses. Shakesp.
Resolv'd to win, he meditates the way
By force to ravish, or by fraud betray. Pope.

4. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance.

Thy virtue wan me; with virtue preserve me.
Dost thou love me? Keep me then still worthy to be beloved. Devilish Macbeth

By many of these trains hath sought to win me.
Shakesp.

5. To gain by play.

He had given a disagreeable vote in parliament, for which reason not a man would have so much correspondence with him as to win his money. Adilison

6. To gain by persuasion.

They win great numbers to receive
With joy the tidings brought from heav'n Milton.

7. To gain by courtship.

She's beautiful, and therefore to be woo'd;
She is a woman, therefore to be won. Shakesp.
No tears, Celia, now shall win
My resolv'd heart to return;

I have search'd thy soul within,
And find nought but pride and scorn. Carew.
That flood witness'd his inconstant flame,
When thus he swore, and won the yielding dame. Gay.

To WIN. v. n.

1. To gain the victory.

Nor is it aught but just,
That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

2. To gain influence or favour.

You express yourself very desirous to win upon the judgment of your master, and not upon his affections only. Bacon.

You have a softness and beneficence winning on the hearts of others. Dryden.
Thy words like musick every breast controul,
Steal thro' the air, and win upon the soul. Pope.

3. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power. Shak.

4. To be conqueror or gainer at play.

Charles, I will play no more to-night;
My mind's not on't, you are too hard for me.
—Sir, I did never win of you before.

—But little, Charles;
Nor shall not, when my fancy's on my play. Shak.

To WINCE. v. n. [wincing, Welsh.] To kick, as impatient of a rider, or of pain.

I will sit as quiet as a lamb,
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word. Shak.
Room, room, for my horse will wince,
If he came within so many yards of a prince. Ben Jonson.

The angry beast did straight resent
The wrong done to his fundament,
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if he had been beside his sense. Hudibras.

WIN'NCER. n. s. [from wince.] A kicking beast.

WINCH. n. s. [wincher, Fr. to twist.] A windlae; something held in the hand by which a wheel or cylinder is turned.

Put a winch with the wheel. Mortimer.

To WINCH. v. a. [The same with wince;
or perhaps from wincher, Fr. to twist;
winch signifying sometimes to writhe or contort the body.] To kick with impatience; to shrink from any uneasiness.

We who have free souls
It touches not: let the gall'd jade wince,
Our withers are unwrung. Shakesp. Halet.

Have these bones rattled, and this head
So often in thy quarrel bled!

Nor did I ever wince or grudge it. Hudibras.
This last allusion gaul'd the panther more;
Yet seem'd she not to wince, though shrewdly paid. Dryden.

Their consciences are galled; and this makes them wince and fling, as if they had some mettle.
Tillotson.

WINCOPEPE. n. s.

There is a small red flower in the stubble-fields, which country people call the wincopipe; which if it opens in the morning, you may be sure a fair day will follow. Bacon.

WIND. n. s. [pmb, Sax. wind, Dut. guynt, Welsh.]

1. Wind is when any tract of air moves from the place it is in, to any other,
with an impetus that is sensible to us:
wherefore it was not ill called by the ancients a swifter course of air; a flowing wave of air; a flux, effusion, or stream of air. Maschenbroek.

The worthy fellow is our general. He's the rock,
the oak, not to be wind shaken. Shak. Coriolanus.
Love's heralds should be thoughts

Which ten times faster glide than the sun beams,
Driving back shadows over low ring hills,
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw love;
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Shakesp.
Falmouth lieth farther out in the trade way,
and so offereth a sooner opportunity to winddriven ships than Ply mouth. Carew.

Wind is nothing but a violent motion of the air, produced by its rarefaction more in one place than another, by the sun-beams, the attractions of the moon, and the combinations of the earth's motions. Cheyne.

2. Direction of the blast from a particular point; as eastward, westward.

I'll give thee a wind;
I myself have all the other,
And the very points they blow;
All the quarters that they know
I'll shipman's card. Shakesp. Macbeth.

In the year 1300, one Flavio of Malpla, in the realm of Naples, found out the compass, or paix nautica, consisting of eight winds only, the four principal, and four collateral, and not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding twenty-four other subordinate winds or points. Heylyn.

3. Breath; power or act of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shakesp.

His wind he never took whilst the cup was at his mouth, but justly observed the rule of drinking with one breath. Hake.

The perfume of the flowers, and their virtues to cure shortness of wind in palsy old men, seems to agree most with the orange. Temple.

It stopp'd at once the passage of his wind,
And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.

4. Air caused by any action.

On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool. Shakesp.

W I N

In an organ, from one blast of wind,
To many a row of pipes the sound-board breathes.
Milton.

5. Breath modulated by an instrument.
Where the air is pent, there breath or other blowing, which carries but a gentle percussion, suffices to create sound; as in pipes and wind instruments.
Bacon.
Their instruments were various in their kind; Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind.
Dryden.

6. Air impregnated with scent.
A bare had long escap'd pursuing hounds,
By often shifting into distant grounds,
Till finding all his artifices vain,
To save his life, he leap'd into the main.
But there, alas! he could no safety find,
A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind.
Swift.

7. Flatulence; windiness.
It turns
Wisdom to folly, as nourishment to wind.
Milt.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.
Think not with wind of airy threats to awe.
Milton.

9. Down the wind. To decay.
A man that had a great veneration for an image in his house, found that the more he prayed to it to prosper him in the world, the more he went down the wind still.
L'Estrange.

10. To take or have the wind. To gain or have the upper hand.
Let a king in council beware how he opens his own inclinations too much; for else counsellors will but take the wind of him, instead of giving free counsel.
Bacon.

To WIND. v. a. preter. wound, in Pope winded; part. wound. [wɪnbən, Sax. winden, Dut. from the noun.]

1. To blow; to sound by inflation.
The squire 'gan higher to approach,
And wind his horn under the castle wall,
That with the noise it shook as it would fall.
Spens.
Every Triton's horn is winding,
Welcome to the wat'ry plain.
Dryden.
Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferments your blood,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net.
Pope.

2. To turn round; to twist.
Nero could touch and time the harp well; but in government sometimes he used to wind the pins too high, and sometimes let them down too low.
Bacon.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen cloaths; in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain.
Wotton.

Wind the wood-bine round this arbour.
Milton.

3. To regulate in motion; to turn to this or that direction.
He vaulted with such ease into his seat,
As if an angel dropt down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
Shakesp.

In a commonwealth or realm,
The government is called the helm;
With which, like vessels under sail,
They're turn'd and winded by the ail.
Hudibras.

4. To nose; to follow by scent.

5. To turn by shifts or expedients.
Whence turning of religion's made
The means to turn and wind a trade.
Hudibras.

Mr. Whiston did not care to give more than short, general hints of this famous challenge, and the issue of it; but he endeavours to wind and turn himself every way to evade its force. H'aterl.

6. To introduce by insinuation.
You have contriv'd to take
From Rome all season'd offices, and to wind
Yourself into a power tyrannical.
Shakesp. Coriol.
Edmund, seek him out, wind me into him,
frame the business after your own wisdom.
Shakesp. K. Lear.

W I N

Little arts and dexterities they have to wind in such things into discourse. Government of the Tong.

7. To change.
Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure, and shape our government to his fancy.
Addison.

8. To entwine; to enfold; to encircle.
Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms.
Shakesp.
You know me well, and herein spend but time
To wind about my love with circumstance.
Shakesp.

All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues
Do hiss me into madness.
Shakesp.

9. To wind out. To extricate.
When he found himself dangerously embarked, he bethought himself of all possible ways to disentangle himself, and to wind himself out of the labyrinth he was in.
Clarendon.

10. To wind up. To bring to a small compass, as a bottom of thread.
Without solemnly winding up one argument, and intimating that he began another, he lets his thoughts, which were fully possessed of the matter, run in one continued strain.
Locke.

11. To wind up. [used of a watch.] To convolve the spring.
I frown the while, and perchance wind up my watch, or play with some rich jewel.
Shak.

12. To put into a state of renovated or continued motion.
Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years,
Yet freshly ran he on ten winters more:
Till, like a clock worn out with calling time,
The wheels of weary life at last stood still.
Dryd.
Will not the Author of the universe, having made an automaton which can wind up itself, see whether it hath stood still or gone true?
Grey.
Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up?
Young.

13. To wind up. To raise by degrees.
These he did so wind up to his purpose, that they withdrew from the court.
Hayward.
When they could not coolly convince him, they railed, and called him an heretick: thus they wound up his temper to a pitch, and treacherously made use of that infirmity.
Atterbury.

14. To wind up. To straiten a string by turning that on which it is rolled; to put in tune.
Hylas! why sit we mute,
Now that each bird saluteth the spring?
Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute,
Never canst thou want matter to sing.
H'aller.
Your lute may wind its strings but little higher,
To tune their notes to that immortal quire.
Prior.

15. To wind up. To put in order for regular action: from a watch.
O you kind gods!
Cure this great breach of his abused nature;
Thi' untun'd and jarring senses, O wind up,
Of this child changed father.
Shakesp.
The weyrd sisters, hand in hand,
Posters of the sea and land,
Thus do go about, about,
Thrice to thine, and thrice to mine,
And thrice again, to make up nine.
Peace! the charm's wound up.
Shak. Macbeth.

To WIND. v. n.

1. To turn; to change.
So swift your judgments turn and wind,
You cast our fleetest wits a mile behind.
Dryden.

2. To turn; to be convolved.
Some plants can support themselves; and some others creep along the ground, or wind about other trees, and cannot support themselves.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Stairs of a solid newel spread only upon one small newel, as the several folds of fans spread about their centre; but these, because they sometimes wind, and sometimes fly off from that winding, take more room up in the staircase.
Moxon.

3. To move round.

W I N

If aught obstruct thy course, yet stand not still,
But wind about till thou hast topp'd the hill.
Denk.

4. To proceed in flexures.
It shall not wind with such a deep indent,
As rob me of so rich a bottom here.
Shakesp.
Ever more did winde
About his bosom a most crafty winde.
Chapman.

Through the pure marble air his oblique way,
Amongst innumerable stars.
Milton's Par. Lost.
It was a rock, winding with one ascent.
Milt.
The silver Thames, her own domestick flood,
Shall bear her vessels, like a sweeping train;
And often wind, as of his mistress proud,
With longing eyes to meet her face again.
Dryd.
You that can search those many-corner'd mounds,
Where woman's crooked fancy turns and winds.
Dryden.

Still fix thy eyes intent upon the throng,
And, as the passes open, wind along.
Gay.

5. Wound is commonly the preterite. Pope has used winded.
Swift ascending from the azure wave,
He took the path that winded to the cave.
Pope.

6. To be extricated; to be disentangled: with out.
Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison.
Milton.

WINDBOUND. adj. [wind and bound.]

Confined by contrary winds.
Yet not for this the windbound navy weigh'd;
Slack were their sails, and Neptune disobey'd.
Dry.
When I bestir myself, it is high sea in his house; and when I sit still, his affairs forsooth are windbound.
Addison's Spectator.
Is it reasonable that our English fleet, which used to be the terror of the ocean, should be windbound?
Spectator.

WINDDEGG. n. s. An egg not impregnated; an egg that does not contain the principles of life.
Sound eggs sink, and such as are added swim; as do also those termed hypenemia, or winddeggs.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

WINDER. n. s. [from wind.]

1. An instrument or person by which any thing is turned round.
The winder shows his workmanship so rare
As doth the fleece excel, and mocks her looser
Clew;
As neatly bottom'd up as nature forth it drew.
Drayton.

To keep troublesome servants out of the kitchen, leave the winder sticking on the jack, to fall on their heads.
Swift.

2. A plant that twists itself round others.
Plants that put forth their sap hastily, have their bodies not proportionable to their length; and therefore they are winders and creepers, as ivy and bryony.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

WINDFALL. n. s. [wind and fall.]

1. Fruit blown down from the tree.
Gather now, if ripe, your winter fruits, as apples, to prevent their falling by the great winds; also gather your windfalls.
Creelyn's Kalendar.

2. An unexpected legacy.

WINDFLOWER. n. s. The anemone. A flower.

WINDGALL. n. s. [wind and gall.]
Windgalls are soft, yielding, flatulent tumours or bladders, full of corrupt jelly, which grow upon each side of the fetlock joints, and are so painful in hot weather and hard ways, that they make a horse to halt. They are caused by violent straining, or by a horse's standing on a sloping floor, or from extreme labour and heat, or by blows.
Forrier's Dict.

His horse infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, and sped with spavins.
Shak. Taming of the Shrew.

WINDGUN. n. s. [wind and gun.] Gun which discharges the bullet by means of wind compressed.

W I N

The windgun is charged by the forcible compression of air, being injected through a syringe; the strife and distension of the imprisoned air serving, by the help of little falls or shuts within, to stop and keep close the vents by which it was admitted.

Fore'd from windguns, lead itself can fly,
And pound'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.
Pope.

WINDINESS. n. s. [from windy.]

1. Fulness of wind; flatulence.

A windiness and puffing up of your stomach after dinner, and in the morning. Harvey on Consump.
Orifices are prepared for the letting forth of the rarified spirits in roctus, or windiness, the common effects of all fermented liquors. Floyer on the Hum.

2. Tendency to generate wind.

See a loath somewhat of its windiness by decocting; and, generally, subtle or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.

3. Tumour; puffiness.

From this his modest and humble charity, virtues which rarely cohabit with the swelling windiness of much knowledge, issued this.

WINDING. n. s. [from wind.] Flexure; meander.

It was the pleasantest voyage in the world to follow the windings of this river Inn, through such a variety of pleasing scenes as the course of it naturally led us.

The ways of heaven are dark and intricate; Our understanding traces them in vain,
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends.

WINDINGSHEET. n. s. [wind and sheet.] A sheet in which the dead are enwrapped.

These arms of mine shall be thy windingsheet;
My heart, sweet boy, shall be thy sepulchre,
For from my heart thine image ne'er shall go.

WINDLASS. n. s. [wind and lace.]

1. A handle by which a rope or lace is wrapped together round a cylinder.

2. A handle by which any thing is turned.

Thus do we of wisdom and of reach,
With windlasses, and with assays of bias,
By indirections find directions out.

WINDLE. n. s. [from To wind.] A spindle.

WINDMILL. n. s. [wind and mill.] A mill turned by the wind.

We, like Don Quixote, do advance
Against a windmill our vain lance.

Such a sailing chariot might be more conveniently framed with moveable sails, whose force may be impeded from their motion, equivalent to those in a windmill.

Windmills grind twice the quantity in an hour that watermills do.

His fancy has made a giant of a windmill, and he's now engaging it.

WINDOW. n. s. [vindue, Dan.] Skinner thinks it originally wind-door.

1. An aperture in a building by which air and light are introritted.

Being one day at my window all alone,
Many strange things happened me to see.

A fair view her window yields,
The town, the river, and the fields.

He through a little window cast his sight,
Though thick of bars that gave a scanty light;
But ev'n that glimmering serv'd him to descry
Th' inevitable charms of Emily.

W I N

When you leave the windows open for air, leave books on the window-seat, that they may get air too.

2. The frame of glass or any other materials that cover the aperture.

To thee I do commend my watchful soul
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes:
Sleeping or waking, oh defend me still!

In the sun's light, let into my darkened chamber through a small round hole in my window-shutter, at about ten or twelve feet from the window I placed a lens.

3. Lines crossing each other.

The favourite, that just begins to prattle,
Is very humoursome, and makes great clutter,
Till he has windows on his bread and butter.

4. An aperture resembling a window.

To WINDOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish with windows.

Between these half columns above, the whole room was windowed round.

2. To place at a window.

Thy master thus with pleacht arms, bending down
His corrigible neck, his face subdued
To penetrative shame?

3. To break into openings.

Poor naked wretches, whereso'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your hoarseless heads, and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these?

WINDPIPE. n. s. [wind and pipe.] The passage for the breath; the aspera arteria.

Let gallows gape for dogs, let man go free,
And let not hemp his windpipe suffocate.

The wezzon, rough artery, or windpipe, is a part inservient to voice and respiration; thereby the air descendeth unto the lungs, and is communicated unto the heart.

The quacks of government, who sat
At th' unregarded helm of state,
Consider'd timely how t' withdraw,
And save their windpipes from the law.

Because continual respiration is necessary for the support of our lives, the windpipe is made with annular cartilages.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called hronchia: these end in small air-bladders, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it.

WINDWARD. adv. [from wind.] Towards the wind.

WINDY. adj. [from wind.]

1. Consisting of wind.

Subtile or windy spirits are taken off by incension or evaporation.

2. Next the wind.

3. Empty; airy.

Why should calamity be full of words?
Windy attornies to their client woes,
Poor breathing orators of miseries.

What windy joy this day had I conceiv'd,
Hopeful of his deliver'y, which now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring
Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost!

Look, here's that windy applause, that poor transitory pleasure, for which I was dishonoured.

Of ev'ry nation each illustrious name
Such toys as these have cheated into fame,

W I N

Exchanging solid quiet to obtain
The windy satisfaction of the brain.

4. Tempestuous; molested with wind.

On this windy sea of land the fiend
Walk'd up and down.

5. Puffy; flatulent.

In such a windy colic, water is the best remedy after a surfeit of fruit.

1. The fermented juice of the grape.

The wine of life is drawn, and the meer lees
Is left this vault to brag of.

For I am fals'er than vows made in wine.

Be not amongst wine bibbers, amongst riotous eaters.

Thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine fat.

As in a wine-press Judah's daughter crush'd.

With large wine-offerings pour'd, and sacred feast.

Short of his canne and body: must I find
A pain in that, wherein he finds a pleasure?

Rich fragrant wines the cheering bowl supply.

2. Preparations of vegetables by fermentation, called by the general name of wines, have quite different qualities from the plant; for no fruit, taken crude, has the intoxicating quality of wine.

3. The limb of a bird by which it flies.

As Venus' bird, the white swift lovely dove,
Doth on her wings her utmost swiftness prove,
Finding the gripe of falcon fierce not fur.

Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to heaven.

An eagle stirreth up her nest, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, and beareth them on her wings.

Her wings to waft us, and so urg'd our keel.

The prince of augurs, Helitherses, rose;
Prescient he view'd th' aerial tracts, and drew
A sure presage from ev'ry wing that flew.

2. A fan to winnow.

3. Flight; passage by the wing.

Like chickens, and the crow
Makes wing to th' rooky wood:
Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

Thy affections hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.

I have pursued her as love hath pursued me, on the wing of all occasions.

While passion is upon the wing, and the man fully engaged in the prosecution of some unlawful object, no remedy or controul is to be expected from his reason.

You are too young your power to understand;
Lovers take wing upon the least command.

And straight, with inborn vigour, on the wing,
Like mountain larks, to the new morning sing.
Dryden.
Then life is on the wing; then most she sinks
When most she seems reviv'd.
Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

4. The motive or incitement of flight.
Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and swail-pac'd beggary:
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king.
Shakesp. Rich. III.

5. The side bodies of an army.
The footmen were Germans, to whom were joined as wings certain companies of Italians.
Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.
The left wing put to flight,
The chiefs o'erborn, he rushes on the right.
Dryden.

6. Any side-piece.
The plough proper for stiff clays is long, large,
and broad, with a deep head and a square earth-board, the coulter long and very little bending, with a very large wing.
Mortimer.

To WING. v. a. [from the noun.]
To furnish with wings; to enable to fly.

The seed of gods
Time counts not, though with swiftest minutes wing'd.
Milton.
Who knows but he, whose hand the lightning forms,
Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms,
Pours fierce ambition in a Cæsar's mind,
Or turns young Amunon loose to scourge mankind?
Pope.

2. To supply with side bodies.
We ourself will follow
In the main battle, which on either side
Shall be well winged with our chiefest horse.
Shakesp. Richard III.

To WING. v. n.
1. To transport by flight.
I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough, and there
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

2. To exert the power of flying.
Warm'd with more particles of heav'nly flame,
He wing'd his upward flight, and soar'd to fame;
The rest remain'd below, a crowd without a name.
Dryden.

Struck with the horror of the sight,
She turns her head, and wings her flight.
From the Meotis to the northern sea,
The goddess wings her desperate way.
Prior.

WINGED. adj. [from wing.]
1. Furnished with wings; flying.
And shall grace not find means, that finds her way
The speediest of thy winged messengers,
To visit all thy creatures?
Milton's Par. Lost.
We can fear no force
But winged troops, or Pegasean horse.
The winged lion's not so fierce in fight,
As Lib'ri's hand presents him to our sight.
The cockney is surpris'd at many actions of the quadruped and winged animals in the fields.
Watts.

2. Swift; rapid.
Now we bear the king
Tow'rd Calais: grant lion there, and there being seen,
Heave him away upon your winged thoughts
Athwart the sea.
Shakesp. Henry V.
Hie, good Sir Michael, bear this sealed brief
With winged haste to the lord marshal.
Shak. H. IV.

WINGEDPEA'. n. s. [ochrus, Lat.] A plant.
Miller.

WINGSHELL. n. s. [wing and shell.] The shell that covers the wing of insects.
The long-shelled goat-chaffer is above an inch long, and the wing-shells of themselves an inch, and half an inch broad; so deep as to come down below the belly on both sides.

Grew.

WINGY. adj. [from wing.] Having wings; resembling wings.

They spring together out, and swiftly bear
The flying youth through clouds and yielding air;
With wingy speed outstrip the eastern wind,
And leave the breezes of the morn behind.
Addison.

To WINK. v. n. [pinctan, Sax. wincken,
Dut.]

1. To shut the eyes.
Let's see thine eyes; wink now, now open them:
In my opinion yet thou see'st not well.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

They're fairies; he that speaks to them shall die:
I'll wink and couch; no man their sports must eye.
Shakesp.

His false cunning
Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance,
And grew a twenty years removed thing,
While one would wink.
Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

He, with great imagination,
Proper to madmen, led his pow'rs to death,
And, winking, leap'd into destruction.
Shak. H. IV.
In despite of all this, he runs foolishly into his sin and ruin, merely because he winks hard, and rushes violently like a horse into the battle.
Taylor.

The scripture represents wicked men as without understanding: not that they are destitute of the natural faculty; they are not blind, but they wink.
Tillotson.

If any about them should make them think there is any difference between being in the dark and winking, get it out of their minds.
Locke.

2. To hint, or direct, by the motion of the eyelids.

You saw my master wink and laugh upon you.
Shakesp.
Send him a spoon when he wants a knife: wink at the footman to leave him without a plate.
Swift.

3. To close, and exclude the light.

While Heracles pip'd and sung, and told his tale,
The keeper's winking eyes began to fail,
And drowsy slumber on the lids to creep,
Till all the watchmen were at length asleep.
Dryden.
When you shoot and shut one eye,
You cannot think he would deny
To lend the t' other friendly aid,
Or wink, as coward and afraid.
Prior.

4. To connive; to seem not to see; to tollerate.

They be better content with one that will wink at their faults, than with him that will reprove them.
Whitgijte.
I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kinsmen.
Shak. Romeo and Jul.
Let not night see my black and deep desires;
The eye winks at the hand!
Shakesp. Macbeth.

The king gave him great gifts, and winked at the great spoil of Bosworth-field, which came almost wholly to this man's hands.
Bacon's Hen. VII.
Let us not write at a loose rambling rate,
In hope the world will wink at all our faults.
Roscommon.

Obstacny cannot be winked at, but must be subdued.
Locke.

Cato is stern, and awful as a god:
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.
Add. Cato.

5. To be dim.
The sullen tyrant slept not all the night,
But lonely walking by a winking light,
Sobb'd, wept, and groan'd, and beat his wither'd breast.
Dryden.

WINK. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Act of closing the eye.

Your doing thus,
To the perpetual wink for ay might put
This ancient moral.
Shak. Tempest.
At every wink of an eye some new grace will be born.
Shakesp.
Since I receiv'd command to do this business,
I have not slept one wink.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.

The beams so reverend and stroug,
Dost thou not think
I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink,
But that I would not lose her sight so long?
Dimna.
It rag'd so all night, that I could not sleep a wink.
Temple.

Nut write! but then I think;
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink.
Pope.

2. A hint given by motion of the eye.
Her wink each bold attempt forbids.
Sidney.
The stockjober thus from 'Change-alley goes down,

And tips you the freeman a wink;
Let me have but your vote to serve for the town,
And here is a guinea to drink.
Swift.

WINKER. n. s. [from wink.] One who winks.

A set of noddors, winkers, and whisperers, whose business is to strangle all other offspring of wit in their birth.
Pope.

WINKINGLY. adv. [from winking.] With the eye almost closed.

If one beholdeth the light, he vieweth it wink- ingly, as those do that are purblind; but if any thing that is black, he looketh upon it with a broad and full eye.
Peacham on Drawing.

WINNER. n. s. [from win.] One who wins.

A gamester, having lost all, borroweth of his next fellow-gamester somewhat to maintain play; which he setting unto him again, shortly winneth
all from the winner.
Spenser.

Go together,
You precious winners all; your exultation
Partake to every one.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Beshrew the winners, for they play'd me false
Shakesp.

Whether the winner laughs or no, the loser will complain; and rather than quarrel with his own skill, will do it at the dice.
Temple.

WINNING. participial adj. [from win.]
Attractive; charming.

Yet less fair,
Less winning soft, less amably mild,
Than that smooth watery image.
Milton's Par. Lo.

On her, as queen,
A pomp of winning graces waited still;
And from about her shot darts of desire
Lute all eyes, to wish her still in sight.
Milton's P. L.
Cato's soul

Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Soften the rigour of her father's virtue.
Addison.

WINNING. n. s. [from win.] The sum won.

A simile in one of Congreve's prologues compares a writer to a buttering gamester, that stakes all his winnings upon every cast; so that if he loses the last throw, he is sure to be undone.
Add. Free.

To WINNOW. v. a. [pinōrian, Sax. evanno,
Lat.]

1. To separate by means of the wind; to part the grain from the chaff.

Were our royal faith martyrs in love,
We shall be winnow'd with so rough a wind,
That even our corn shall seem as light as chaff,
And good from bad find no partition.
Shak. H. IV.
In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day.
Dry. Vir.

2. To fan; to beat as with wings.
Now on the polar winds, then with quick fan
Winnows the buxom air.
Milton's Par. Lost.

3. To sit; to examine.
Winnow well this thought, and you shall find
This light as chaff that flies before the wind.
Dryden.

4. To separate; to part.
Bitter torture shall Winnow the truth from falsehood.
Shak. Cymbeline.

To WINNOW. v. n. To part corn from chaff.

Winnow not with every wind, and go not into every way.
Eclaus. v. 9.

WINNOWER. n. s. [from winnow.] He who winnows.

WINTER. n. s. [wintēr, Sax. winter, Dan. Germ. and Dut.] The cold season of the year.

Though he were already steep into the winter of his age, he found himself warm in those desires, which were in his son far more excusable. Sidney.

After summer evermore succeeds
The barren winter with his nipping cold.

Shakesp. Henry VI.
A woman's story at a winter's fire. Shak. Macb.
He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana; a nun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them.

Shakesp. As you like it.
The two beneath the distant poles complain
Of endless winter and perpetual rain. Dryden.
Liest thou asleep beneath those hills of snow?
Stretch out thy lazy limbs; awake, awake,
And winter from thy furry mantle shake. Dryden.

Suppose our poet was your foe before,
Yet now t'is business of the field is o'er;
'Tis time to let your civil war alone,
When troops are into winter-quarters gone. Drud.
He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter-nights for the entertainment of oth'rs. Locke.

Stern winter smiles on that auspicious clime,
The fields are florid with un fading prime. Pope.

To define winter, I consider first wherein it agrees with summer, spring, autumn, and I find they are all seasons of the year; therefore a season of the year is a genus; then I observe wherein it differs from these, and that is in the shortness of the days; therefore this may be called its special nature, or difference: then, by joining these together, I make a definition. Winter is that season of the year wherein the days are shortest. Watts's Logick.

TO WINTER. v. n. [from the noun.] To pass the winter.

The fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

Isaiah, xviii. 6.
Because the haven was not commodious to winter
in, the more part advised to depart.

Acts, xxvii. 12.
TO WINTER. v. a. To feed or manage in the winter.

The cattle generally sold for slaughter within, or exportation abroad, had never been handled or wintered at hand-meat. Temple.

Young lean cattle may by their growth pay for their wintering, and so be ready to fat next summer. Mortimer.

Winter is often used in composition.

The king sat in the winter-house, and there was a fire burning before him. Jer. xxxvi. 22.

If in November and December they fallow, 'tis called a winter-fallowing. Mortimer.

Shred it very small with thyme, sweet marjoram, and a little winter-savoury. Walton's Angler.

WINTERBEATEN. adj. [winter and beat.] Harassed by severe weather.

He compareth his careful case to the sad season of the year, to the frosty ground, to the frozen trees, and to his own winterbeaten flock. Spenser.

WINTERCHERRY. n. s. [alkheenge.] A plant. The fruit is about the bigness of a cherry, and inclosed in the cup of the flower, which swells over it in form of a bladder. Miller.

WINTERCITRON. n. s. A sort of pear.

WINTERGREEN. n. s. [pyrola, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

WINTERLY. adj. [winter and like.] Such as is suitable to winter; of a winter kind.

If 't be summer news,
Smile to't before; if winterly, thou need'st
But keep that count'enance still. Shakesp. Cymbel.

WINTRY. adj. [from winter.] Brumal; hyemal; suitable to winter.

He saw the Trojan fleet dispers'd, distress'd,
By stormy winds and winty heaven oppress'd.
Dryden.

WINY. adj. [from wine.] Having the taste or qualities of wine.

Set cucumbers among maskmelons, and see whether the melons will not be more winy, and better tasted. Bacon.

TO WIPE. v. a. [wipān, Sax.]
1. To cleanse by rubbing with something soft.

Such a handkerchief,
I'm sure it was your wife's, did I to-day
See Cassio wipe his beard with. Shak. Othello.
She a gentle tear let fall
From either eye, and wip'd them with her hair.

Milton.
Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denham.

2. To take away by tertion.
Calumniate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind. Decay of P.

3. To strike off gently.
Let me wipe off this honourable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shak.
Some natural tears they dropp'd, but wip'd them soon. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A young man, having suffered many tortures, escaped with life, and told his fellow Christians, that the pain of them had been rendered tolerable
by the presence of an angel, who stood by him and wiped off the tears and sweat. Addison.

4. To clear away.
Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples; reconcil'd my thoughts
To thy good truth and honour. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. [Emungo.] To cheat; to defraud.
The next bordering lords commonly encroach one upon another, as one is stronger, or lie still in wait to wipe them out of their lands. Spenser on Ire.

6. To wipe out. To efface.
This blot, that they object against your house,
Shall be wip'd out in the next parliament.

Shakesp. Hen. VI.
As thou lov'st me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now. Shak. Hen. Ta.

Take one in whom decrepid old age has blotted out the memory of his past knowledge, and clearly wiped out the ideas his mind was formerly stored with, and stopped up all the passages for new ones to enter; or, if there be some of the inlets yet left open, the impressions made are scarce perceived. Locke.

WIPE. n. s. [from the verb.]
1. Act of cleansing.

2. A blow; a stroke; a jeer; a gybe; a sarcasm.

To statesmen would you give a wipe,
You print it in Italic type:
When letters are in vulgar shapes,
'Tis ten to one the wit escapes;
But when in capitals exprest,
The dullest reader smokes the jest. Swift.

3. [Fanellus.] A bird. Ainsworth.

WIPE. n. s. [from wipe.] An instrument or person by which any thing is wiped.

The maids and their makes,
At dancing and wakes,
Had their napkins and posies,
And the wipers for their noses. Ben Jonson.

WIPE. n. s. [viver, Fr. to draw round.
Skinner.] Metal drawn into slender threads.

'Tame was the damsel; and without remorse
The king condemn'd her, guiltless, to the fire:
Her veil and mantle pluckt they off by force,
And bound her tender arms in twisted wire.

Fairfax.
Thou shalt be whipt with wire, and stew'd in brine,
Smarting in ling'ring pickle. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleo.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ,
That's strong with wire instead of veins,
In whose embraces you're in chains.

Beaumont and Fletcher.
And the cherubick host, in thousand quires,
Touch their immortal harps of golden wires. Milt.

Some roll a mighty stone, some laid along,
And, bound with burning wires, on spokes of wheels are hung. Dryden's Aneid.

TO WIREDRAW. v. a. [wire and draw.]
1. To spin into wire.

2. To draw out into length.
A fluid moving through a flexible canal, when small, by its friction will naturally lengthen and wiredraw the sides of the canal, according to the direction of its axis. Avbuthnot.

3. To draw by art or violence.
I have been wrongfully accused, and my sense wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden.

WIREDRAWER. n. s. [wire and draw.] One who spins wire.

Those who have need of unmixed silver, as gilders and wiredrawers, must, beside an equal weight of silver mixed with other metals, give an overplus to reward the refiner's skill. Locke.

TO WIS. v. a. pret. and part. pass. wist.
[wissen, Germ. wysen, Dut.] To think;
to imagine. Obsolete.

Thus proud and fierce, unto the hearts he steep
Of them poor souls; and cutting reason's reins,
Made them his own before they had it wist. Sidney.

When Mammon saw his purpose wist,
Him to entrap unawares, another way he wist.

Spenser.
This book, advisedly read, and dili- gently followed but one year at home, would do a young gentleman more good, I wis, than three years travel abroad. Asham's Schoolmaster.

There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakesp.
Mary with a king,
A bachelor, a handsome stripling too,
I wis your grandam had a worse match.

Shak. Rich. III.
When for more worlds the Macedonian cried,
He wist not Thetys in her lap did hide
Another yet, a world reserv'd for you,
To make more great than that he did subdue. Hal.

WISDOM. n. s. [wīsdōm, Sax. wiisdom,
Dan.]

1. Sapience; the power of judging rightly; the knowledge of divine and human things.

That which moveth God to work is goodness, and that which ordereth his work is wisdom, and that which perfecteth his work is power. Hooker.

As from senses reason's work doth spring,
So many reason's understanding gain,
And many understandings knowledge bring,
And by much knowledge wisdom we obtain.

Davies.
Wisdom is that which makes men judge what are the best ends, and what the best means to attain them, and gives a man advantage of counsel and direction. Temple.

As science is properly that knowledge which re-lateth to the essences of things, so wisdom to their operations. Grew's Cosmologia.

O sacred solitude! divine retreat!
Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in the waving shade,
We count fair wisdom, that celestial maid. Young.

2. Prudence; skill in affairs; judicious conduct.

'Tis much he dares,
And to that dauntless temper of his mind,
He hath a wisdom that doth guide his valour
To act in safety. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

WISE. adj. [wīz, Sax. wiis, Dut. and Dan.]

W I S

1. Sapient; judging rightly; having much knowledge.

Heav'n is for thee too high; he lowly wise. Milt.
All the writings of the ancient Goths were composed in verse, which were called runes, or verses, and from thence the term of wise came. Temple.

Since the floods demand
For their descent a prone and sinking land,
Does not this one declivity declare
A wise director's providential care? Blackmore.

2. Judicious; prudent; practically knowing.

There were ten virgins; five of them were wise, and five were foolish. Matthew.
I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. Rom. xvi. 19.

The young and gay declining, Alna flies
At nobler game, the mighty and the wise:
By nature more an eagle than a dove,
She impiously prefers the world to love. Young.

3. Skilful; dexterous.

Speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments. Ezod. xxviii. 3.
Do we count him a wise man, who is wise in any thing but his own proper profession and employment, and wise for every body but himself? Tilots.

They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge. Jer. iv. 22.

4. Skilled in hidden arts; a sense somewhat ironical.

There was an old fat woman even now with me.
—Pray, was 't not the wise woman of Brauford? Shakesp.

5. Grave; becoming a wise man.

One eminent in wise deport spake much. Milt.
It must be a wise Being that is the cause of those wise effects. Wilkins.

WISE. n. s. [piye, Sax. wyse, Dnt. wise, Germ. guise, Fr. guisa, Ital.] Manner; way of being or acting. This word, in the modern dialect, is often corrupted into ways.

This song she sings in most commanding wise;
Come, shepherd's boy, let now thy heart be bow'd
To make itself to my least look a slave. Sidney.

Ere we farther pass, I will devise
A passport for us both, in fittest wise. Spenser.
On this wise ye shall bless Israel. Numb. vi. 23.
The lovers standing in this doleful wise,
A warrior bold approached. Fairfax.

With foam upon thy lips, and sparkling eyes,
Thou sayst and dost in such outrageous wise,
That mad Orestes, if he saw the show,
Would swear thou wert the madder of the two. Dryden.

'Tis no wise strange that such a one should believe that things were blindly shuffled. Woodward.

WISEACRE. n. s. [It was anciently written wissegger, as the Dutch wiseggher, a soothsayer.]

1. A wise or sententious man. Obsolete.
2. A fool; a dunce.

Why, says a wisecraze that sat by him, were I as the king of France, I would scorn to take part with the footmen. Addison.

WISELY. adv. [from wise.] Judiciously; prudently.

If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire. Milton's P. L.

He sits like discontented Damocles,
When by the sportive tyrant wisely shown
The dangerous pleasure of a flatter'd throne. Dry.
Admitting their principles to be true, they act wisely: they keep their end, evil as it is, steadily in view. Rogers.

The doctors, tender of their fame,
If wisely on me lay all the blame:
We must confess his case was nice,
But he would never take advice. Swift.

W I S

WISENESS. n. s. [from wise.] Wisdom; sapience. Obsolete.

No less deserveth his wittiness in devising, his pithiness in uttering, his pastoral rudeness, and his moral wiseness. Spenser.

To WISH. v. n. [piycian, Sax.]

1. To have strong desire; to long.

The sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and wish'd in himself to die. Jonah, iv. 8.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would he as tedious as to work;
But when they seldom come, they wish'd-for come. Shakesp.

They have more than heart could wish. Psalm lxxiii. 7.

Eve
With lowliness majestick from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay,
Rose, and went forth. Milton.

They are ships prepar'd by my command,
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port. Addison's Cato.

That Noah or Janus understood navigation, may be very well supported by his image found upon the first Roman coins. One side was stamp'd with a Janus bifrons, and the other with a rostrum, or prow of a ship. This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbuthnot on Coins

And much he wish'd, but durst not ask to part. Parnell.

2. To be disposed or inclined.

Those potentates, who do not wish well to his affairs, have shewn respect to his personal character. Addison.

3. It has a slight signification of hope or fear.

I wish it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune, to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

To WISH. v. a.

1. To desire; to long for.

He was fain to pull him out by the heels, and shew him the beast as dead as he could wish it. Sidney.

2. To recommend by wishing.

Had I as many sons as I have hairs,
I would not wish them to a fairer death. Shak. Ma.

3. To imprecate.

If heavens have any grievous plague in store,
Exceeding those that I can wish upon thee;
O let them keep it till thy sins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation. Shak. R. III.

4. To ask.

Digby should find the best way to make Antrim communicate the affair to him, and to wish his assistance. Clarendon.

WISH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Longing desire.

To his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies. Milton.
A wish is properly the desire of a man sitting or lying still; but an act of the will, is a man of business vigorously going about his work. South's Ser.

2. Thing desired.

What next I bring shall please thee; be assur'd,
Thy likeness, thy fit help, thy other self,
Thy wish, exactly to thy heart's desire. Milt. P. L.

3. Desire expressed.

Shame come to Romeo!
—Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish! Shakesp. Romeo and Jul.
I admire your wiieg principles of resistance in the spirit of the Barcelonians: I join in your wish for them. Pope.

WISHEDLY. adv. [from wished.] According to desire. Not used.

What could have happened unto him more wishedly, than with his great honour to keep the town still? Knolles.

WISHER. n. s. [from wish.]

1. One who longs.

2. One who expresses wishes.

Wishers and woulders are never good householders. Proverbs.

W I T

With half that wish the wisher's eyes he press'd. Shakesp.

WISHFUL. adj. [from wish and full.]

1. Longing; showing desire.

From Scotland am I stol'n, ev'n of pure love,
To greet mine own land with my wishful sight. Shak.

2. Desirable; exciting wishes.

Nor could I see a exile, where e'er I came,
More sweete and wishfull. Chapman.

WISHFULLY. adv. [from wishful.] Earnestly; with longing.

WISKET. n. s. A basket. Ainsw.

WISP. n. s. [wisp, Swed. and old Dut.]

A small bundle, as of hay or straw.
A wisp of straw for a ballad. Shakesp.
A gentleman would fast five days, without meat, bread, or drink; but the same used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelted on; and amongst those some esculent herb of strong scent, as onions. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Jews, who their whole wealth can lay
In a small basket, on a wisp of hay. Dryden.

WIST, pret. and part. of wis.

WISTFUL. adj.

1. Attentive; earnest; full of thought.

Why, Grubbinel, dost thou so wistful seem?
There's sorrow in thy look. Gay's Pastorals.

2. It is used by Swift, as it seems, for wishful; though it may mean earnest, eager.

Lifting up one of my sashes, I cast many a wistful melancholy look towards the sea. Swift.

WISTFULLY. adv. [from wistful.] Attentively; earnestly.

With that he fell again to pry
Through perspective more wistfully. Hudibras.

WISTLY. adv. [from wis.] Attentively; earnestly.

Speaking it, he wistly look'd on me;
As who shall say, I would thou wert the man. Shakesp.

To WIT. v. n. [piyan, Sax.] To know.

This word is now only used in the phrase to wit, that is to say.

There is an officer, to wit, the sheriff of the shire, whose office is to walk up and down his bailiwick. Spenser.

Yet are these feet, whose strengthless stay is numb,
Unable to support this lump of clay,
Swift-winged with desire to get a grave;
As witting I no other comfort have. Shak. Hen. VI.

WIT. n. s. [wiçeit, Sax. from piyan to know.]

1. The powers of the mind; the mental faculties: the intellects. This is the original signification.

Who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? Shak.
The king your father was reputed for
A prince most prudent, of an excellent
And unmatched wit and judgment. Shak. H. VIII.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth;
Will ever acts, and wit contemplates still;
And as from wit the power of wisdom riseth,
All other virtues daughters are of will.
Will is the prince, and wit the counselor
Which doth for common good in counsel sit;
And when wit is resolv'd, will lends her power
To execute what is advis'd by wit. Davies.

For wit and pow'r their last endeavours bend
T' outshine each other. Dryden.

2. Imagination; quickness of fancy.

They never meet, but there's a skirmish of wit between them—Alas, in our last conflict, four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man govern'd by one. Shak.

Lewd, shallow, hair-brained huffs make atheism, and contempt of religion, the only badge and character of wit. South.

And though a tun in thy large bulk be writ,
Yet thou art but a kilderkin of wit. Dryden.

Wit lying most in the assemblage of ideas, and putting these together with quickness and variety, wherein can be found any resemblance or congruity, thereby to make up pleasant pictures in the fancy. Judgment, on the contrary, lies in separating carefully one from another ideas wherein can be found the least difference, thereby to avoid being misled by similitude. Locke.

Could any but a knowing prudent cause begin such motions, and assign such laws? The great mind had form'd a different frame, Might not your wanton wit the system blame? Blackmore.

5. Sentiments produced by quickness of fancy, or by genius; the effect of wit.

All sorts of men take a pleasure to gird at me. The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends more to laughter than what I invent, and is invented on me. I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakesp.

His works become the frippery of wit. Ben Jonson.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spratt. The definition of wit is only this, that it is a propriety of thoughts and words; or, in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

Let a lord once but own the happy lines, How wit will brightens, and the style refines! Pope.

4. A man of fancy.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe, and make themselves the common enemies of mankind. L'Estrange.

A poet, being too witty himself, could draw nothing but wits in a comedy; even his fools were infected with the disease of their author. Dryden.

To tell them would a hundred tongues require; Or one vain wit's, that might a hundred tire. Pope.

5. A man of genius.

Hence 'tis a wit, the greatest word of fame, Grows such a common name; And wits by our creation they become, Just so as titular bishops made at Rome: 'Tis not a rule, 'tis not a jest

Admir'd with laughter at a feast, Nor florid talk, which can that title gain; The proofs of wit for ever must remain. Cowley.

Searching wits, of more mechanic parts, Who grac'd their age with new-invented arts; Those who to worth their bounty did extend, And those who knew that bounty to commend. Dryden.

How vain that second life in others breath, Th' estate which wits inherit after death! Ease, health, and life, for this they must resign; Unsure the tenu e, but how vast the fine! The great man's curse without the gain endure; Be envy'd, wretched; and be blatter'd, poor. Pope. Nought but a genius can a genius fit; A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

6. Sense; judgment.

Strong was their plot, Their practice close, their faith suspected not; Their states far off, and they of wary wit. Daniel. Come, leave the loath'd stage, And this more loathsome age;

Where pride and impudence, in faction knit, Usurp the chair of wit. Ben Jonson. Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine, He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.

If our wits run the wildgoose-chase, I have done; for thou hast more of the wildgoose in one of thy wits, than I have in my whole five. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

8. [In the plural.] Soundness of understanding; intellect not crazed; sound mind.

I had a son, Now outlaw'd from my blood; he sought my life; The grief hath craz'd my wits. Shak. King Lear. Are his wits safe? is he not light of brain? Shak. Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating; he riseth early, and his wits are with him; but the pain of watching, and choleric, and pangs of the belly, are with an unsatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

No man in his wits can make any doubt, whether there be such things as motion, and sensation, and continuity of bodies. Wilkins.

Wickedness is voluntary frenzy, and every sinner does more extravagant things than any man that is crazed, and out of his wits, only that he knows better what he does. Tillotson.

No man in his wits can seriously think that his own soul hath existed from all eternity. Bentley.

9. Contrivance; stratagem; power of expedients; invention; ingenuity.

How can it chuse but bring the simple to their wits end? how can it chuse but vex and amaze them? Hooker.

I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Braintree; but that my admirable dexterity of wit, counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me. Shakesp.

Sleights from his wit and subtlety proceed. Milton.

The neighbourhood were at their wits end, to consider what would be the issue. L'Estrange.

WITCHCRAFT. n. s. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention. Obsolete.

He was no body that could not hammer out of his name an invention by this witchcraft, and picture it accordingly. Camden's Remains.

WITCRACKER. n. s. [wit and cracker.]

A joker; one who breaks a jest.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour; dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakesp.

WITWORM. n. s. [wit and worm.] One that feeds on wit; a canker of wit.

Thus to come forth so suddenly a witworm. Ben Jonson.

WITCH. n. s. [wicce, Sax.]

1. A woman given to unlawful arts.

Wise judges have prescribed, that men may not rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor the evidence against them. For the witches themselves are imaginative; and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents to witchcraft. Bacon.

View the ruder witch, the conjurer by root, and has she not store of ignorance, and zeal of mischief? Helyday.

The night-hag comes to dance With Laund witches, while the lab'ring moon Eclipses at their charms. Milton.

When I consider whether there are such persons as witches, my mind is divided: I believe in general that there is such a thing as witchcraft, but can give no credit to any particular instance of it. Addison's Spectator.

2. [From wic, Sax.] A winding sinuous bank.

Leave me those hills where harbrough nis to see; Nor holy bush, nor briar, nor winding witch. Spenser.

To WITCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewitch; to enchant.

Me ill befits, that in der-doing arms, And honour's suit, my vowed days do spend, Unto thy bounteous baits, and pleasing charms, With which weak men thou wichest, to attend. Spenser.

'Tis now the very witching time of night, When church-yards yawn, Shakesp. Hamlet. I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakesp.

WITCHCRAFT. n. s. [witch and craft.]

1. The practices of witches.

People are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Power more than natural.

Uranic came, whose force he knew so well, He quickly knew what witchcraft gave the blow. Sidney.

Have not some of learning and gravity thought themselves wise, in thinking witchcraft rather a mistake than a crime? Holyday.

If you cannot Bar his access to the king, never attempt Any thing on him, for he hath a witchcraft Over the king in's tongue. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

What subtle witchcraft man constrains To change his pleasure into pains? Denham.

WITCHERY. n. s. [from witch.] Enchantment.

Another kind of petty witchery, if it be not altogether deceit, they call charming of beasts and birds. Raleigh.

Great Comus!

Deep skill'd in all his mother's witcheries. Milton.

To WITE. v. a. [witan, Sax.] To blame; to reproach.

The palmer 'gan most bitterly Her to rebuke, for being loose and light; Which not abiding, but more scornfully Scolding at him, that did her justly wite, She turn'd her boat about. Spenser.

WITE. n. s. [from the verb.] Blame; reproach.

Blame; reproach. Spenser.

WITH. prep. [wið, Sax.]

1. By; noting the cause.

Truth, tir'd with iteration, As true as steel, as plantage to the moon. Shakesp. With thy pow'rful blast, Heat apace, and cool as fast. Carew.

They adhered to John, their deprived bishop; and could not be charmed with the faintship of any second bishop, during his life. Lesley.

With ev'ry stab her bleeding heart was torn, With wounds much harder to be seen than born. Rowe.

2. Noting the means.

Rude and unpolish'd are all operations of the soul in their beginnings, before they are cultivated with art and study. Dryden.

3. Noting the instrument.

Boreas through the lazy vapour flies, And sweeps, with healthy wings, the rank polluted skies. Rowe.

By perillations with large bellows, miners give motion to the air. Woodward.

4. On the side of; for; noting confederacy or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee. Genesis.

5. In opposition to; in competition or contest.

I do contest As hotly and as nobly with thy love, As ever 'gainst thy valour. Shak. Coriolanus. He shall lye with any fryar in Spain. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

6. Noting comparison.

Can blazing carbuncles with her compare? Sandys.

7. In society; noting connection.

God gave man a soul that shall live for ever, although the body be destroyed; and those who were good should be with him. Stillfleet.

In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow, Thou'rt such a touchy, testy, pleasing fellow; Hast so much wit, and mirth, and sly leen about thee, There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tuttler.

8. In company of.

At the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor from Rome. Shakesp.

9. In appendage; noting consequence or concomitance.

Men might know the persons who had a right to regal power, and with it to their obedience. Locke.

10. In mutual dealing.

I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following; but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. Shakesp.

11. Noting confidence; as, I trust you with all my secrets; or, I trust all my secrets with you.

Though Jove himself no less content would be, To part his throne, and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

12. In partnership.

Though Jove himself no less content would be, To part his throne, and share his heaven with thee. Pope.

13. Noting connection.

Pity your own, or pity our estate,
Nor twist our fortunes with your sinking fate. Dry.

14. Immediately after.

With that she told me, that, though she spake of her father Cremes, she would hide no truth from me. Sidney.

With that, he crawl'd out of his nest,
Forth creeping on his caitiff hands and thighs.

Fairy Queen.

In falling, both an equal fortune tried;
Would fortune for my fall so well provide!
With this he pointed to his face, and show'd
His hands, and all his habit smear'd with blood.

Dryden.

With that the god his darling phantom calls,
And from his falt'ring lips this message falls. Garth.

15. Amongst.

Jasper duke of Bedford, whom the king used to employ with the first in his wars, was then sick.

Bacon.

Tragedy was originally, with the ancients, a piece of religious worship. Rymer's Trag. of the last Age.
Immortal powers the term of Conscience know,
But Interest is her name with men below. Dryden.

16. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those Pagan philosophers who became Christians. Addis.

17. In consent: noting parity of state.

See where on earth the flow'ry glories lie!
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die. Pope.

18. This preposition might perhaps be exemplified in many more relations, for its use is very frequent, and therefore very lax and various. With and by it is not always easy to distinguish, nor perhaps in distinction always observed. With seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause: thus, he killed his enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. The arrow is considered rather as a cause, as there is no mention of an agent. If the agent be more remote, by is used; as, the vermin which he could not kill with his gun, he killed by poison: if these two prepositions be transposed, the sentence, though equally intelligible, will be less agreeable to the common modes of speech.

19. With, in composition, signifies opposition or privation; except withal.

A present natural good may be parted with, upon a profitable expectation of a future moral good. Wilkins.

WITHA'L. adv. [with and all.]

1. Along with the rest; likewise; at the same time.

Yet it must be withal considered, that the greatest part of the world are they which be farthest from perfection. Hooker.

How we supplied with noble counsellors!
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution! Shak. Hen. V.

The one contains my picture, prince;
If you chuse that, then I am yours withal. Shak.

This that prince did not transmit as a power,
to make conquest, but as a retinue for his son;
and, withal, to enable him to recover some part of Ulster. Darves on Ireland.

The river being wholly of fresh water, and so large withal, chilleth the air. Heylyn.

God, when he gave me strength, to shew withal
How slight the gift was, hung it in my hair. Milt.

'Tis necessary men should be out of their nonage before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and, withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties. Wilkins.

I cannot, cannot bear; 'tis past, 'tis done;
Perish this impious, this detested son!

Perish his sire, and perish I withal,
And let the house's heir and the hop'd kingdom fall. Dryden.

Christ had not only an infinite power to work miracles, but also an equal wisdom to know the just force and measure of every argument to persuade, and withal to look through and through all the dark corners of the soul of man, and to discern what prevails upon them, and what does not. South.

2. It is sometimes used by writers where we now use with, but I think improperly.

Time brings means to furnish him withal;
Let him but wait the occasions as they fall. Daniel
It is to know what God loves and delights in,
and is pleased withal, and would have us do in order to our happiness. Tillotson.

We owe to christianity the discovery of the most perfect rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal. Tillotson.

To WITHDRAW. v. a. [with and draw;
from wið, or wiðer, Sax. against, and draw.]

1. To take back; to bereave.

It is not possible they should observe the one,
who from the other withdraw unnecessarily obedience. Hooker.

Impossible it is that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

2. To call away; to make to retire.

Nausicaa is withdrawn, and a whole nation introduced, for a more general praise of Ulysses.

Broome.

To WITHDRAW. v. n. To retire; to retreat.

She from her husband soft withdrew. Milton.
At this excess of courage all amaz'd,
The foremost of his foes awhile withdraw:

With such respect in enter'd Rome they gaz'd,
Who on high chairs the godlike fathers saw. Dryd.

Duunvir has passed the noon of life; but cannot withdraw from entertainments which are pardonable only before that stage of our being. Towler.

WITHDRAWINGROOM. n. s. [withdraw and room.] Room behind another room, for retirement.

For an ordinary gentleman, a hall, a great parlour, with a withdrawingroom, with a kitchen, but-teries, and other conveniences, is sufficient.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

WITHE. n. s.

1. A willow twig.

An Irish rebel put up a petition, that he might be hanged in a withe, and not a halter, because it had been so used with former rebels. Bacon.

There let him lie
Till I, of cut-up osiers, did imply
A withe, a fathome long, with which his feete
I made together in a sure league meete. Chapman.

2. A band, properly a band of twigs. [wiðe signifies a band.]

These cords and withes will hold men's con-sciences, when free attends and twists them.

King Charles.

Birch is of use for ox-yoaks, hoops, screws, withes for faggots. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To WITHER. v. n. [zepiðerod, Sax. dry, faded.]

1. To fade; to grow sapless; to dry up.

That which is of God we defend, to the utter-most of that ability which he hath given: that which is otherwise, let it wither even in the root from whence it hath sprung. Hooker.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again:
It needs must wither. Shakesp. Othello.

It shall wither in all the leaves of her spring.

Ezek. xvii. 9.

The soul may sooner leave off to subsist than to love; and, like the vine, it withers and dies, if it has nothing to embrace. South's Sermons.

2. To waste, or pine away.

Are there so many left of your own family, that you should desire wholly to reduce it, by suffering the last branch of it to wither away before its time? Temple.

3. To lose or want animal moisture.

Vain men, how vanishing a bliss we crave,
Now warn in love, now wither in the grave!
Dryden.

To WITHER. v. a.

1. To make to fade.

The sun is no sooner risen with a burning heat, but it withereth the grass, and the flower thereof
falleth. James, i. 11.

2. To make to shrink, decay, or wrinkle, for want of animal moisture.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety. Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

Look how I am bewitch'd: behold, mine arm
Is, like a blasted sapling, wither'd up. Shakesp.

What are these,

So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change

To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children, be Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;

No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

WITHERBAND. n. s. A piece of iron which is laid under a saddle, about four fingers above the horse's withers, to keep the two pieces of wood tight that form the bow. Furrier's Dict.

WITHEREDNESS. n. s. [from withered.]

The state of being withered; marcidty.

Water them as soon as set, till they have recovered their witheredness. Mortimer's Husbandry.

WITHERS. n. s. Is the joining of the shoulder-bones at the bottom of the neck and mane, towards the upper part of the shoulder. Furrier's Dict.

Let the call'd beast wince;

We are unwrung in the withers. Shakesp.

Rather than let your master take long journies, contrive that the saddle may pinch the beast in his withers. Suijt.

WITHERWRUNG. The hurt expressed by witherwrung sometimes is caused by a bite of a horse, or by a saddle being unfit, especially when the bows are too wide; for when they are so, they bruise the flesh against the spines of the second and third vertebrae of the back, which forms that prominence that rises above their shoulders. Furrier's Dict.

To WITHHOLD. v. a. [with and hold.]

Withheld, or withholden, pret. and part.

Spenser has, for the sake of rhyme,
very licentiously written withhault.

1. To restrain; to keep from action; to hold back.

That hand, which as no kind of imminent danger could cause at first to withhold itself, so neither have any practices, so many, so bloody, following since, been ever able to make weary. Hooker.

Sith mine he is, or free or bound;
Withhold, O sovereign prince, your hasty hand
From knitting league with him. Spenser.

The prince

Would fain have come with me to meet your grace;

And by his mother was perforce withheld.

A great number of suits are for abusive words, or a box on the ear, or other trivial matters, which leave no permanent ill effects, but, if our passions may be withheld from estimating them, pass off without making us the worse, or doing us any prejudice. Kettlewell.

Be careful to withhold
Your talons from the wretched and the bold;
Tempt not the brave and needy to despair;
For though your violence should leave them bare
Of gold and silver, swords and darts remain.

Dryden.
Volition is an act of the mind, knowingly exerting that dominion it takes itself to have over any part of man, by employing it in, or withholding it from, any particular action. Locke.

2. To hinder; to obstruct.

What difficulties there are which as yet withhold our assent, till we be further and better satisfied, I hope no indifferent amongst them will scorn or refuse to hear. Hooker.

3. To take away; to refuse.

Soon as Titan 'gan his head exault,
And soon again as lie his light withhault,
Their wicked engines they against it bent.

WITHHOLDEN. participle pass. of withhold.

The word keep back, sheweth that it was a thing formerly due unto God; for we cannot say that any thing is kept back, or withholden, that was not due before. Spelman.

WITHHOLDER. n. s. [from withhold.]
He who withholds.

WITHIN. prep. [p̄dinnan, Sax.]

1. In the inner part of.

Who then shall blame
His pester'd senses to recoil and start,
When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakesp. Macbeth.

By this means, not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation of men will be bred up, within ourselves, not perverted by any other hopes. Spratt.

Till this be cured by religion, it is as impossible for a man to be happy, that is, pleased and contented within himself, as it is for a sick man to be at ease. Tillotson.

The river is afterwards wholly lost within the waters of the lake, that one discovers nothing like a stream, till within about a quarter of a mile from Geneva. Addison.

2. In the compass of; not beyond: used both of place and time.

Next day we saw, within a kenning before us, thick clouds, which put us in hope of land. Bacon.

A beet-root and a radish-root, which had all their leaves cut close to the roots, within six weeks had fair leaves. Bacon.

Most birds come to their growth within a fortnight. Bacon.

Within some while the king had taken up such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a masterpiece. Watton.

The invention of arts necessary or useful to human life, hath been within the knowledge of men. Burnet.

As to infinite space, a man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest, than he has of the least space. For in this latter, which is more within our comprehension, we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

This, with the green hills and naked rocks within the neighbourhood, makes the most agreeable confusion. Addison.

Bounding desires within the line which birth and fortune have marked out, is an indispensable duty. Atterbury.

3. Not reaching to any thing external.

Were every action concluded within itself, and drew no consequences after it, we should undoubtedly never err in our choice of good. Locke.

4. Not longer ago than.

Within these five hours Hastings liv'd
Untainted, unexamined, free at liberty. Shakesp.

Within these three hours, Tullus,
Alone I fought in your Corioli walls,
And made what work I pleas'd. Shak. Coriolanus.

5. Into the reach of.

When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock. Otrway.

6. In the reach of.

Secure of outward force, within himself
The danger lies, yet lies within his pow'r;
Against his will he can receive no harm. Milton.

I have suffer'd in your woe;
Nor shall be wanting aught within my pow'r
For your relief. Dryden.

Though Aurengzebe return a conqueror,
Both he and she are still within my pow'r. Dryden.

7. Into the heart or confidence of.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drive him on from one lowness to another, no wonder if they rejoice to see him guilty of all villainy. South.

8. Not exceeding.

Be inform'd how much your husband's revenue amounts to, and be so good a computer as to keep within it. Swift.

9. In the inclosure of.

No interwoven reeds a garland made,
To hide his brows within the vulgar shade;
But poplar wreaths around his temples spread. Addison.

Sedentary and within-door arts, and delicate manufactures, that require rather the finger than the arm, have a contrariety to a military disposition. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

WITHIN. adv.

1. In the inner parts; inwardly; internally.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design. Within rests more of fear,
More dread of sad event yet unescried. Daniel.

Yet sure, tho' the skin
Be clos'd without, the wound festers within. Carew.

Death thou hast seen
In his first shape on man; but many shapes
Of death, and many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave; all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within. Milton.

2. In the mind.

Language seems too low a thing to express your excellence; and our souls are speaking so much within, that they despise all foreign conversation. Dryden's State of Innocence.

These as thy guards from outward harms are sent;
Ills from within thy reason must prevent. Dryden.

WITHINSIDE. adv. [within and side.]
In the interior parts.

The forceps for extracting the stone is represented a little open, that the teeth may be better seen withinside. Sharp.

WITHOUT. prep. [p̄dūzan, Sax.]

1. Not with.

Many there are, whose destinies have prevented their desires, and made their good motives the wards of their executors, not without miserable success. Hall.

2. In a state of absence from.

Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Tatler.

3. In the state of not having.

The vituous bezoar is taken from the beast that feedeth upon the mountains; and that without virtue, from those that feed in the vallies. Bacon.

Infallibility and inerrableness are assumed and inclosed by the Romish church, without any in-errable ground to hold it on. Hammond.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; and then they will not be innate, but be derived from some other original. Locke.

4. Beyond; not within the compass of.

Eternity, before the world and after, is without our reach; but that little spot of ground that lies betwixt those two great oceans, tis we are to cultivate. Burnet's Theory.

5. Supposing the negation or omission of.

Without the separation of the two monarchies,
the most advantageous terms from the French must end in our destruction. Addison.

6. Not by; not by the use of; not by the help of.

Excess of diet, in costly meats and drinks fetched from beyond the seas, would be avoided:
wise men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon.

There is in a manner two sorts of virgin mercury; the one running out and discovering itself without labour; the other requiring some way of extraction and separation, though not so high an one as by fire. Brown's Travels.

7. On the outside of.

Without the gate
Some drive the cars, and some the coursers rein. Dryden.

I leave to love, being too unfit a vessel in whom so high thoughts should be engraved. Sidney.

You will never live to my age, without you keep yourselves in breath with exercise, and in heart with joyfulness. Sidney.

WITHOUTEN. prep. [p̄dūzan, Sax.]
Without. Obsolete.

Her face so fair, as flesh it seem'd not,
But heavenly portrait of bright angel's hue,
Clear as the sky, withouten blame or blot,
Through godly mixture of complexion's dew. Spenser.

TO WITHSTAND. v. a. [with and stand.]

To gainstand; to oppose; to resist.

The violence of sorrow is not at the first to be striven withal; being, like a mighty beast, sooner tamed with following, than overthrow with with- standing. Sidney.

The wonderful zeal and fervour wherewith ye have withstood the received orders of this church, was the first thing which caused me to enter into consideration, whether every christian man, fearing God, stand bound to join with you. Hooker.

W I T

It is our frailty that in many things we all do miss, but a virtue that we would do amiss in nothing, and a testimony of that virtue, that when we pray that what occasion of sin soever do offer itself, we may be strengthened from above to withstand it. Hooker.

They soon set sail; nor now the fates withstand; Their forces trusted with a foreign hand. Dryden.

When Elymas withstood Paul and Barnabas, and when Paul says of Alexander, he hath greatly withstood our words, do we think the withstanding there was without speaking? Atterbury.

And from the cross-row plucks the letter G;
And says, a wizard told him that by G
His issue disinherited should he. Shakesp. Rich. III.
That dam'd wizard, hid in sly disguise,
For so by certain signs I knew, had met
Already, ere my best speed could prevent,
The address innocent lady, his wish'd prey. Milton.

The prophecies of wizards old Increas'd her terror, and her fall foretold. Waller.
The wily wizard must be caught,
For, unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for nought. Dryden.

WO. n. s. [pa, Sax.]

1. Grief; sorrow; misery: calamity.

The king is mad: how stiff is my vile sense,
That I stand up and have ingenious feeling
Of my huge sorrows! better I were distract;
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakesp. King Lear.
So many oil-eries have craz'd my voice,
That my woe-weary'd tongue is still. Shakesp.
Her rash hand in evil hour
Forth reaching to the fruit, Eve pluck'd, she eat:
Earth felt the wound; and nature from her seat
Sighing through all her works, gave signs of woe
That all was lost. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O'er dreary wastes they weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. It is often used in denunciations, wo be; or in exclamations of sorrow, wo is; anciently wo wurth; pa pupp, Sax.

All is but lip wisdom which wants experience:
I now, wo is me! do try what love can do. Sidney.
It's in my heart!

That poor soldier, that so richly fought,
Whose rags shan'd gild arms, whose naked breast

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie down'd and suak'd in mercenary blood. Shak.

If God be such a being as I have described, wo to the world if it were without him: this would be a thousand times greater loss to mankind than the extinguishing of the sun. Tillotson.

Woe to the vanquish'd, woe! Dryden's Albion.

2. A denunciation of calamity; a curse.
Can there be a wo or curse in all the stores of vengeance equal to the malignity of such a practice, of which one single instance could involve all mankind in one confusion? South.

4. Wo seems in phrases of denunciation or imprecation to be a substantive, and in exclamation an adjective; as particularly in the following lines, which seem improper and ungrammatical:

Woe are we, Sir! you may not live to wear
All your true followers out. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

WOAD. n. s. [pab, Sax. glastum, Lat.]

A plant.
In times of old, when British nymphs were known

To love no foreign fashions like their own;
When dress was monstrous, and fig-leaves the mode,
And quality put on no paint but woad. Garth.

WO'BEGONE. adj. [wo and begone.] Lost in wo; distracted in wo; overwhelmed with sorrow.

Such a man,
So dull, so dead in look, so woebegone,
Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd;
But Priam found the fire, ere he his tongue. Shak.

Who so woebegone
For Ochy, as the isle of ancient Avalon? Drayton.
Tancred he saw his life's joy set at nought,

It is a token of a worldly wise man, not to content in vain against the nature of times wherein he liveth. Raleigh.

Subverting worldly strong, and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton's Par. Lost.
This cannot be done, if my will be worldly or voluptuously disposed. South's Sermons.

Since your mind is worldly bent,
Therefore of the two gifts in my dispose,
Think ere you speak, I grant you leave to choose.
Dryden.

WORM. n. s. [pyrma, Sax. worm, Dut. vermis, Lat.]

1. A small harmless serpent that lives in the earth.

Both the princes
Thy broken faith hath made a prey to worms. Sha.
Help me into some house,
Or I shall faint! A plague o' both your houses!
They have made worms meat of me. Shakesp.
Though worms devour me, though I turn to mold,
Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold:
I from my marble monument shall rise
Again intire, and see him with these eyes.
Sandys's Paraphrase.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect or worm. Milton.

2. A poisonous serpent.

The mortal worm. Shakesp.

3. Animal bred in the body.

Physicians observed these worms engendered within the body of man. Harvey on Consump.

4. The animal that spins silk; silkworm.

Thou owest the worm no silk, the sheep no wool. Shakesp.

5. Grubs that gnaw wood and furniture.

'Tis no awkward claim,
Pick'd from the worm-holes of long-vanish'd days,
Nor from the dust of old oblivion rak'd. Shak. H. V.

6. Something tormenting.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.
Shakesp.
The chains of darkness, and th' undying worm.
Milton.

7. Any thing vermiculated, or turned round; any thing spiral.

The threads of screws, which bigger than can be made in screw-plates, are called worms. The length of a worm begins at the one end of the spindle, and ends at the other; the breadth of the worm is contained between any two grooves on the spindle; the depth of the worm is cut into the diameter of the spindle, viz. the depth between the outside of the worm, and the bottom of the groove. Mozon.

To WORM. r. n. [from the noun.] To work slowly, secretly, and gradually.

When debates and fretting jealousy
Did worm and work within you more and more.
Your colour faded. Herbert.

To WORM. r. a.

1. To drive by slow and secret means, perhaps as by a screw.

They find themselves wormed out of all power, by a new spawn of independents, sprung from your own howels. Swift.

2. To deprive a dog of something, nobody knows what, under his tongue; which is said to prevent him, nobody knows why, from running mad.

Every one that keepeth a dog should have him
wormed. Mortimer.

WORMEATEN. adj. [worm and eaten.]

1. Gnawed by worms.

For his verity in love, I do think him as concave as a covered goblet, or a wormeaten nut. Shak.

2. Old; worthless.

His chamber all was hang'd about with rolls,
And old records from ancient times deriv'd;
Some made in books, some in long parchment
scrolls,
That were all wormeaten, and full of canker holes.
Spenser.

Things among the Greeks, which antiquity had worn out of knowledge, were called ogygia, which we call wormeaten, or of defaced date.
Raleigh's Hist. of the World.

Thine's like wormeaten trunks cloath'd in seal's skin;
Or grave, that's dust without, and stink within.
Donne.

WORMWOOD. n. s. [from its virtue to kill worms in the body; perhaps properly wormwort.]

Wormwood hath an indeterminate stalk, branching out into many small shoots, with spikes of naked flowers hanging downward; the leaves are hoary and bitter. Of this plant there are thirty-two species, one of which, the common wormwood, grows in the roads; but it is also planted in gardens for common use. Great variety of sea wormwoods are found in the salt marshes of England, and sold in the markets for the true Roman wormwood, though they differ greatly. Miller.
She was wear'd; I had then laid Wormwood to my dog. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

Pituitous cacochymia must be corrected by bitters, as wormwood wine. Floyer on the Humours.

I ask whether one be not invincibly conscious to himself of a different perception, when he actually tastes wormwood, or only thinks on that savour? Locke.

WORMY. adj. [from worm.] Full of worms.

Spirits that in crossways and floods have burial,
Already to their wormy beds are gone. Shakesp.
Yet can I not persuade me thou art dead,
Or that thy corse corrupts in earth's dark womb,
Or that thy beauties lie in wormy bed. Milton.

WORN. part. pass. of wear. Worn out is quite consumed.

His is a maiden shield, Guiltless in fight; mine, batter'd, hew'd, and bor'd,

Worn out of service, must forsake his lord. Dryd.
What I now offer, is the wretched remainder of a sickly age, worn out with study, and oppress'd by fortune. Dryden.

The greatest part of mankind are given up to labour, whose lives are worn out only in the provisions for living. Locke.

Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
A worm-out trick; wouldst thou be thought in earnest,
Cloath thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, in fury.
Addison.

W'ORNIL. n. s.

In the backs of cows, in the summer, are maggots generated, which in Essex we call wornils, being first only a small knot in the skin.
Derham's Physico-Theology

To W'ORRY. r. a. [ponzen, Sax. whence perhaps the word warray.]

1. To tear, or mangle, as a beast tears its prey.

If we, with thrice such powers left at home,
Cannot defend our own doors from the dog,
Let us be worried. Shak. Henry V.

The fury of the tumults might fly so high as to worry and tear those in pieces, whom as yet they but played with in their paws. King Charles.

'Tis no new thing for the dogs that are to keep the wolves from worrying the sheep, to be delivered up to the enemy, for fear the sheep should worry the wolves. L'Estrange.

This revives and imitates that inhuman barbarity of the old heathen persecutors, wrapping up Christians in the skins of wild beasts, that so they might be worried and torn in pieces by dogs.
South's Sermons.

2. To harass, or persecute brutally.

Then embraces his son-in-law; then again worries he his daughter with clipping her.
Shak. Winter's Tale.

For want of words, or lack of breath,
Witness when I was worried with thy peals.
Milton.

It hath pleased Providence at length to give us righteousness instead of exaction, and hopes of religion to a church worried with reformation.

South's Sermons.

All his care
Was to preserve me from the barbarous rage,
Which worried him only for being mine. Southern.

I shall not suffer him to worry any man's reputation, nor indeed fall on any person whatsoever.
Addison.

Let them rail,
And worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.

Madam, contrive and invent,
And worry him out, till he gives his consent. Swift.

WORSE. adj. The comparative of bad: bad, worse, worst. [pyrj, Sax.] More bad; more ill.

Why should he see your faces worse liking than the children of your sort? Daniel, i. 10.

In happiness and misery the question still remains, how men come often to prefer the worse to the better, and to chuse that, which, by their own confession, has made them wiserable? Locke.

WORSE. adv. In a manner more bad.

The more onc sickens, the worse at ease he is,
Shakesp.

The WORSE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. The loss; not the advantage; not the better.

Was never man, who most conquests achiev'd,
But sometimes had the worse, and lost by war.
Spenser.

Judah was put to the worse before Israel; and they fled to their tents. 2 Kings, xiv. 12.

2. Something less good.

A man, whatever are his professions, always thinks the worse of a woman, who forgives him for making an attempt on her virtue. Clarissa.

To WORSE. r. a. [from the adjective.] To put to disadvantage. This word, though analogical enough, is not now used.

Perhaps more valid arms,
Weapons more violent, when next we meet,
May serve to better us, and worse our foes. Milton.

W'ORSER. adj. A barbarous word, formed by corrupting worse with the usual comparative termination.

Gods! take my breath from me;
Let not my worser spirit tempt me again
To die before you please. Shakesp.
A dreadful quiet felt, and, worser far
Than arms, a sullen interval of war. Dryden.

WO'RSHIP. n. s. [peop'de'rype, Sax.]

1. Dignity; eminence; excellence.
Elfyn born of noble state,
And muckle worship in his native land,
We'll could he tourney, and in lists debate. Spens.
My train are men of choice and rarest parts,
That all particulars of duty know;
And in the most exact regard support
The worship of their names. Shakesp. K. Lear.
Thou madest him lower than the angels, to crown him with glory and worship. Psalms viii. 5.

2. A character of honour.
I belong to worship, and affect
In honour, honesty. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

3. A title of honour.
Dinner is on table; my father desires your worship's company. Shakesp. Merry W. of Windsor.
Th' old Romans freedom did bestow,
Our princes worship with a blow. Hudibras.
What lands and lordships for their owner know
My quondam barber, but his worship now. Dryden.

4. A term of ironical respect.
Against your worship when had S—k writ?
Or P—ge pour'd forth the torrent of his wit? Pope.

5. Adoration; religious act of reverence.
They join their vocal worship to the quire
Of creatures wanting voice. Milton.
Under the name of church, I understand a body or collection of human persons professing faith in Christ, gathered together in several places of the world for the worship of the same God, and united into the same corporation. Pearson.
He wax'd a torch aloft, and, madly vain,
Sought godlike worship from a servile train. Drud.
The worship of God is an eminent part of religion,
and prayer is a chief part of religious worship;
hence religion is described by seeking God. Tillotson.
There was a voyage of the Egyptians under Osiris up the Danube; from them the Sævi had their worship of Isis. Arbutnot.

6. Honour; respect; civil deference.
The humble guest shall have worship in the presence of those who sit at meat with him. Luke, xiv. 10.
Since God hath appointed government among men, it is plain that his intention was, that some kind of worship should be given from some to others; for where there is a power to punish and reward, there is a foundation of worship in those who are under that power; which worship lies in expressing a due regard to that power, by a care not to provoke it, and an endeavour to obtain the favour of it; which, among mankind, is called civil worship. Stillingfleet.

7. Idolatry of lovers; submissive respect.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship. Shak.

To WO'RSHIP. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To adore; to honour or venerate with religious rites.
Thou shalt worship no other God. Erod. xxxiv. 14.
Let no man beguile you of your reward, in a voluntary humility and worshipping of angels. Col. ii. 18.
The law of nature teacheth, that the true and living God ought to be worshipped, and that a sufficient and convenient time is to be set apart for the same. White.
Adore and worship God supreme. Milton.
First worship God; he that forgets to pray,
Bids not himself good-morrow, nor good-day. T. Randolph.

On the smooth rind the passenger shall see Thy name engrav'd, and worship Helen's tree. Dryden.
2. To respect; to honour; to treat with civil reverence.
Our grave,
Like Turkish mute, shall have a tongueless mouth,
Not worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph. Shak. Hen. V.

3. To honour with amorous respect.
With bended knees I daily worship her,
Yet she consumes her own idolater. Carew.
To WO'RSHIP. v. n. To perform acts of adoration.
The people went to worship before the golden calf. 1 Kings.

WO'RSHIPFUL. adj. [worship and full.]
1. Claiming respect by any character or dignity.
'This is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit like myself. Shakesp.
When old age comes upon him, it comes alone, bringing no other evil with it; but when it comes to wait upon a great and worshipful sinner, who for many years has ate well and done ill, it is attended with a long train of rheums. South.

2. A term of ironical respect.
Every man would think me an hypocrite; and what excites your most worshipful thought to think so? Shakesp.
Suppose this worshipful idol be made, yet still it wants sense and motion. Stillingfleet.

WO'RSHIPFULLY. adv. [from worshipful.] Respectfully.
Hastings will lose his head ere give consent
His master's son, as worshipfully he terms it, Shall lose the royalty of England's throne. Shakesp.

WO'RSHIPPER. n. s. [from worship.]
Adorer; one that worships.
What art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs than do thy worshippers? Shakesp. Henry V.
Those places did not confine the immensity of God, nor give his worshippers a nearer approach to heaven by their height. South's Sermons.
If posterity takes its notions of us from our medals, they must fancy one of our kings paid a great devotion to Minerva, that another was a professed worshipper of Apollo. Addison.
By sanctifying the seventh day after they had laboured six, they avowed themselves worshippers of that only God who created heaven and earth. Nelson.

WORST. adj. [the superlative of bad, formed from worse; bad, worse, worst.]
Most bad; most ill.
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been knave and flatterer. Shakesp.
The pain that any one actually feels is still of all other the worst; and it is with anguish they cry out. Locke.

WORST. n. s. The most calamitous or wicked state; the utmost height or degree of any thing ill.
Who is 't can say I 'm at the worst?
I 'm worse than e'er I was,
And worse I may be yet: the worst is not,
So long as we can say, this is the worst. Shakesp.
That you may be armed against the worst in this unhappy state of affairs in our distressed country, I send you these considerations on the nature and immortality of the soul. Digby.
Happy the man, and happy he alone,
He who can call to-day his own:
He who secure within can say,
To-morrow do thy worst, for I have liv'd to-day. Dryden.
Sir Roger gets into the frontiers of his estate before he beats about in search of a hare, on purpose to spare his own fields, where he is always sure of finding diversion when the worst comes to the worst. Addison's Spectator.

To WORST. n. a. [from the adjective.] To defeat; to overthrow.
The case will be no worse than where two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword given him again without further hurt. Suckling.
The bear was in a greater fright,
Beat down and worsted by the knight. Hudibras.
It is downright madness to contend where we are sure to be worsted. L'Estrange.
The victorious Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army. South's Sermons.
She could have brought the chariot again, when she saw her brother worsted in the duel. Dryden.

WO'RSTED. n. s. [from Worsted, a town in Norfolk famous for the woollen manufacture.] Woollen yarn; wool spun.
A base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three suited, hundred pound, filthy, worsted-stocking knave. Shakesp. K. Lear.

The very worsted still look'd black and blue. Pope.

WORT. n. s. [pɔrt, Sax. wort, Dut.]
1. Originally a general name for an herb; whence it still continues in many, as liverwort, spleenwort.
2. A plant of the cabbage kind.
3. [pɔrt, Sax.] New beer, either unfermented, or in the act of fermentation.
If in the wort of beer, while it worketh, before it be tunned, the burrage be often changed with fresh, it will make a sovereign drink for melancholy.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

WORTH or WARTH. v. n. [peop'dan, Sax.]
To be. This word is only now retained in wo worth, or wurt; wo be.
Wo worth the man
That first did teach the cursed steel to bite
In his own flesh, and make way to the living spirit. Spenser.

WORTH, in the termination of the names of places, comes from po'rd, a court or farm; or po'rdig, a street or road. Gibs.
WORTH. n. s. [peop'd, Sax.]
1. Price; value.
Your clemency will take in good worth the offer of these my simple and mean labours. Hooker.
What is worth in any thing,
But so much money as 'twill bring? Hudibras.
A common mercasite shall have the colour of gold exactly; and yet upon trial yield nothing of worth but vitriol and sulphur. Woodward's Nat. H.

2. Excellence; virtue.
How can you him unworthy then decree,
In whose chief part your worths implanted be?
Sidney.
Is there any man of worth and virtue, although not instructed in the school of Christ, that had not rather end the days of this transitory life as Cyrus, than to sink down with them of whom Elihu hath said, memento moriuntur? Hooker.
Having from these suck'd all they had of worth,
And brought home that faith which you carried forth, Donne.
I thoroughly love.
Her virtue, and the conscience of her worth,
That would be wo'd. Milton.
A nymph of your own train
Gives us your character in such a strain,
As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller.

3. Importance; valuable quality.
Peradventure those things, whereupon time was then well spent, have sithence that lust their dignity and worth. Hooker.

WORTH. adj.

1. Equal in price to; equal in value to.
Women will love her that she is a woman,
More worth than any man; men that she is
The rarest of all women. Shak. Winter's Tale.
You have not thought it worth your labour to enter a professed dissent against a philosophy, which the greatest part of Europe have deserted,
as a mere maze of words. Glanville.
As if 'tis nothing worth that lies conceal'd,
And science is not science till reveal'd. Dryden
It is worth while to consider how admirably he has turned the course of his narration, and made his husbandman concerned even in what relates to the battle. Addison.
If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Beattie.

2. Deserving of: either in a good or a bad sense.
Your son and daughter found this trespass worth the shame which here it suffers. Shak.

you with a letter; but was discouraged for want of something that I could think worth sending fifteen hundred miles. Berkley to Pope.
Many things are worth enquiry to one man,
which are not so to another.
Hatt's Improv. of the Mind.

3. Equal in possessions to.
Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
Erode the roaring waters with my silks,
And, in a word, but even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakesp. Mer. of Venice.
Although worth nothing, he shall be proffered the best endowed and most beautiful virgin of their island. Sandys.
At Geneva are merchants reckoned worth twenty hundred thousand crowns. Addison's Italy.

WORTHILY. adv. [from worthy.] fluence upon us to engage us to walk worthily of our extraction, and to do nothing that is base. Ray.

2. Deservedly; according to merit.
They are betray'd,
While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules,
To loathsome sickness, worthily, since they God's image did not reverence in themselves. Milton.
You worthily succeed, not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues. Dryden.

3. Justly; not without cause.

Christian men having, besides the common light of all men, so great help of heavenly direction from above, together with the lamps of so bright examples as the church of God doth yield, it cannot but worthily seem reproachful for us to leave both the one and the other. Hooker.
The king is present; if 't be known to him
That I gainsay my deed, how may he wound,
And worthily, my falsehood! Shak. Henry VIII.
A Christian cannot lawfully hate any one; and yet I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated; and, of all, the deceiver deserves it most. South's Sermons.

WORTHINESS. n. s. [from worthy.]

1. Desert; merit.
The prayers which our Saviour made were, for his own worthiness, accepted; ours God accepteth not, but with this condition, if they be joined with a belief in Christ. Hooker.
2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.
Determining never to marry but him whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured. Sidney.
He that is at all times good, must hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakesp.
Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
It see and judge, and follow worthiness,
And by deeds praise it? he who doth not this,
May lodge an inmate soul, but 'tis not his. Donne.
What set my thoughts on work was the worthiness and curiosity of the subject in itself. Holder.

In search of what we like, employ;
Scorning at night the worthless prey,
We find the labour gave the joy. Prior.
Am I then doom'd to fall
By a boy's hand, and for a worthless woman?
Addison.

WORTHLESSNESS. n. s. [from worthless.]

Want of excellence; want of dignity;
want of value.
But that mine own worthlessness spoils the conceit, I could think our company parallel to the seven wise men of Greece. Moré's Div. Dialogues.
A notable account is given us by the apostle of this windy insignificant charity of the will, and of the worthlessness of it, not enlivened by deeds.
South's Sermons.

WORTHY. adj. [from worth.]

1. Deserving; such as merits; with of before the thing deserved.
She determin'd never to marry any but him whom she thought worthy of her, and that was one in whom all worthinesses were harboured.
Sidney.
Further I will not flatter you,
That all I see in you is worthy love,
Than this; that nothing do I see in you That should merit hate. Shakesp. K. John.
Thou art worthy of the sway,
To whom the heav'ns in thy nativity
Adjung'd an olive branch and laurel crown. Shak.
2. Valuable; noble; illustrious; having excellence or dignity.
If the best things have the perfectest and best operations, it will follow, that seeing man is the worthiest creature on earth, and every society of men more worthy than any man, and of society that most excellent which we call the church.
Hooker.
He now on Pompey's basis lies along,
No worthier than the dust! Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other Gentiles, in point of religion and honour; though hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.
Think of her worth, and think that God did mean
This worthy mind should worthy things embrace;
Blot not her beauties with thy thoughts unclean,
Nor her dishonour with thy passion base. Davies.

Happier thou mayst be, worthier canst not be. Milton.

3. Having worth; having virtue.
The doctor is well money'd, and his friends
Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her, Though twenty thousand worthier come to crave
her. Shakesp.
The matter I handle is the most important, within the whole extent of human nature, for a worthy person to employ himself about. Digby on the Soul.
We see, though order'd for the best,
Permitted laurels grace the lawless brow,
Th' unworthy rais'd, the worthy cast below. Dryd.

4. Not good. A term of ironical commendation.
My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from henceat my head my sword convey'd;
The door unlatch'd, and with repeated calls
Invites her former lord within my walls. Dryden.

5. Suitable for any quality good or bad;
equal in value; equal in dignity.

Shakesp.
If the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, the judge shall cause him to be beaten. Deut. xxv. 2.

WORTHY. n. s. [from the adjective.]

A man laudable for any eminent quality, particularly for valour.
Such as are constellated unto knowledge come short of themselves if they go not beyond others, and must not sit down under the degree of worthies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
It were a matter of more trouble than necessity, to repeat, in this quarrel, what has been alledged
by the worthies of our church. Holyday.
What do these worthies
But rob and spoil, burn, slaughter, and enslave Peaceable nations? Milton's Par. Reg.
No worthies form'd by any muse but thine
Could purchase robes to make themselves so fine.
Waller.
For this day's palm, and for thy former acts,
Thou, Arthur, hast acquir'd a future fame,
And of three Christian worthies art the first. Dryd.
The next worthy came in with a retinue of historians. Tatler.

To WORTHY. r. a. [from the adjective.]

To render worthy; to aggrandise; to exalt. Not used.
He conjunct tripp'd me behind;
And put upon him such a deal of man,
That worthied him; got praises of the king,
For him attempting who was self-subdued. Shak.

To WORTH. v. n. [pitan, Saxon: whence wæet, to know; of which the preterite was wot, knew; which by degrees was mistaken for the present tense.]

To know; to be aware. Obsolete.
The salve of reformation they thoughtly call for,
but where and what the sores are which need it,
as they wot full little, so they think not greatly material to search. Hooker.
Well I wot, compar'd to all the rest
Of each degree, that beggar's life is best. Spenser.
More water glieth by the mill
Than wots the miller of. Shakesp.
H'ot you what I found?
Forsooth, an inventory, thus importing. Shak.

—I would little or nothing with you. Shakesp.

6. Should wish.

Celia, if you apprehend
The muse of your incensed friend;
Nor would that be record your blame,
And make it live; repeat the same:
Again deceive him, and again,
And then he swears he'll not complain. Walter.

7. It is used in old authors for should.

The excess of diet would be avoided. Bacm.
As for percolation, which belongeth to separation, trial would be made by clarifying by adhesion, with milk put into new beer, and stirred with it. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

8. It has the signification of I wish, or I pray. This, I believe, is improper, and formed by a gradual corruption of the phrase, would God; which originally imported, that God would, might God will, might God decree. From this phrase, ill understood, came would to God, thence I would to God; and thence I would, or elliptically would, came to signify I wish: and so it is used, even in good authors, but ought not to be imitated.

I would my father look'd but with my eyes. Shakesp.

I would this musick would come.
I, this sound I better know. Shakesp.
Wise men will do it without a law; I would there might be a law to restrain fools. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

List! I would I could hear mo. Ben Jonson.
Would to heaven that youth such spirit did feed
Now in my nerves, and that my joints were knit
With such a strength, as made me then hold fit
To lead men with Ulysses. Chapman.

This is yet the outward, fairest side
Of our design: within resists more of fear
Than, my most worthy lords, I would there were. Daniel.

'Would thou hadst hearken'd to my words, and stay'd
With me, as I besought thee, when that strange Desire of wand'ring, this unhappy morn, Possess'd thee. Milton's Par. Lost.

Would God we might prevent the deed of such unkindly expedients, and, by a thankful sense of what we have, provide to conserve it. Decay of P.

I scarce am pleas'd, I tamely mount the throne;
Would Aurengzebe had all their souls in one. Dry.

In dusky wreaths reluctant flames. Milton's Par. L.

He of his tortuous train Curl'd many a wanton wreath. Milton.

Let altars smोक, And richest gums, and spice, and incense, roll Their fragrant wreaths to heav'n. Smith's Phadra and Hippolitus.

2. A garland; a chaplet.

Nw are our brows bound with victorious wreaths, Our bruised arms hung up for monuments. Richard III.

Drop'd from his head, a wreath lay on the ground. Roscommon

The boughs of Lotus, form'd into a wreath, This monument, thy maiden beauty's due,

High on a plane-tree shall be hung to view. Dryden.

When for thy head the garland I prepare, A second wreath shall bind Aminta's hair:

And when my choicest songs thy worth proclaim, Alternate verse shall bless Aminta's name. Prior.

To WREATH. v. a. preterite wreathed; part. pass. wreathed, wreathen. [from the noun.]

1. To curl; to twist; to convolve.

Longaville Did never sonnet for her sake compile, Nor ever laid his wreathed arms athwart

His loving bosom, to keep down his heart. Shak.

About his neck A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,

Who with her head, nimble, in threats approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away.

Shakesp. As you like it.

The beard of an oat is wreathed at the bottom, and one smooth entire straw at the top; they take only the part that is wreathed, and cut off the other.

Bacon

2. It is here used for to writhe.

Impatient of the wound,

He rolls and wreaths his shining body round;
Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide.

Gay.

3. To interweave; to entwine one in another.

Two chains of pure gold, of wreathen work, shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathen chains to the ouches.

Ex. xxviii

As snakes breed in dunghills not singly, but in knots, so in such base noisome hearts you shall ever see pride and ingratitude indivisibly wreathed and twisted together.

South.

4. To encircle as a garland.

In the flowers that wreath the sparkling hawl
Fell adders hiss, and poisonous serpents rowl.

Prior.

5. To encircle as with a garland; to dress in a garland.

For thee she feeds her hair,
And with thy winding ivy wreathes her lance.

Dryden.

The soldier, from successful camps returning,
With laurel wreath'd, and rich with hostile spoil,
Severs the bull to Mars.

Prior.

TO WREATH. v. n. To be interwoven; to be intertwined.

Here, where the labourer's hands have form'd a bow'r
Of wreathing trees, in singing waste an hour.

Dryden.

WREATHY. adj. [from wreath.] Spiral; curled; twisted.

That which is preserved at St. Dennis, near Paris, hath wreathy spires, and cochleary turnings about, which agreeth with the description of an unicorn's horn in Ælian.

Brown.

WRECK. n. s. [præce, Sax. a miserablen person; wracke, Dut. a ship broken.]

1. Destruction by being driven on rocks or shallows at sea; destruction by sea.

Fair be ye sure; but hard and obstinate,
As is a rock amidst the raging floods;
'Gainst which a ship, of succour desolate,
Doth suffer wreck both of herself and goods. Spens.
Like those that see their wreck
Ev'n on the rocks of death; and yet they strain,
That death may not them idly find t' attend
To their uncertain task, but work to meet their end.

Daniel.

Think not that flying fame reports my fate;
I present, I appear, and my own wreck relate.

Dryden.

2. Dissolution by violence.

Not only Paradise,
In this commotion, but the stary cope
Had gone to wreck. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The soul shall flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amidst the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.

Addison.

3. Ruin; destruction.

Whether he was Combin'd with Norway, or did line the rebel
With hidden help and vantage; or that with both
He labour'd in his country's wreck, I know not.

Shakesp.

4. It is misprinted here for wreak.

He cried as raging seas are wont to roar,
When wintry storm his wrathful wreck doth threat.

Spenser.

5. The thing wrecked: as, the ship was considered as a wreck.

TO WRECK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To destroy by dashing on rocks or sands.

Have there been any more such tempests, wherein she hath wretchedly been wrecked? Specu. on Irel.
A pilot's thomb,

Wreck'd as homeward he did come. Shak. Macb.
The coral found growing upon wrecked ships and lost anchors, that are daily dragg'd up out of the sea, demonstrates that coral continues to be formed to this day. Woodward.

2. To ruin.

Weak and envid, if they should conspire,
They wreck themselves, and he hath his desire.

Daniel.

3. In the following passages it is ignorantly used for wreak, in its different senses of revenge and execute.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.

Shakesp.

I faint! I die! the goddess cried:
O cruel, couldst thou find none other
To wreck thy spleen on, paricide?
Like Nero, thou hast slain thy mother. Prior.

TO WRECK. v. n. To suffer wreck.

With manlier objects we must try
His constancy, with such as have more shew
Of worth, of honour, glory, and popular praise,
Rocks whereon greatest men have often wreck'd.

Milton.

WREN. n. s. [penna, Sax. regulus, Lat.] A small bird.

The poor wren,
The most diminutive of birds, will fight,
Her young ones in her nest, against the owl.

Shakesp. Marbeth.

All ages have conceived that the wren is the least of birds; yet the discoveries of America have shewed us one far less, the humbird, not much exceeding a beetle.

Brown.

TO WRENCH. v. a. [prunzan, Sax. wrenghen, Dut.]

1. To pull by violence; to wrest; to force.

Wrench his sword from him. Shakesp. Othello.
Oh form!

How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Shak. Measure for Measure.
Give me that mattock and the wrenching iron.

Shakesp.

Cæsar's army, wanting something, demanded a mission or discharge, with no intention it should be granted; but thought by that means to wrench him to their other desires.

Bacon.

Sing the Parthian, when transfix'd he lies,
Wrenching the Roman jav'lin from his thighs. Dryd.
Struggling to get loose, I broke the stings, and wrenched out the pegs that fastened my arm to the ground.

Swift.

2. To sprain; to distort.

O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine, wrenched my frame of nature

From the fix'd place; drew from my heart all love,
And added to the gall. Shakesp. King Lear.
You wrenched your foot against a stone, and were forced to stay.

Swift.

WRENCH. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A violent pull or twist.

2. A sprain.

Some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench, the whole leg thereby loses its strength.

Locke.

3. Wrenches, in Chaucer, signifies means, sleights, subtilities; which is, I believe, the sense here.

He resolved to make his profit of this business of Britain, as a quarrel for war; and that of Naples as a wench and mean for peace.

Bacon's Henry VII.

TO WREST. v. a. [prærtzan, Sax.]

1. To twist by violence; to extort by writhing or force.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Aschum.

To what wretched state resciv'd,
Better end here unborn! Why is life giv'n,
To be thus wrested from us? Milt. Paradise Lost.
Where you charged in person, you were a conqueror: the rebels afterwards recovered strength, and wrested that victory from others that they had lost to you. Dryden.

Our country's cause,
That drew our swords, now wrests 'em from our hands,
And bids us not delight in Roman blood
Unprofitably shed. Addison's Cato.
O prince, I blush to think what I have said;
But fate has wrested the confession from me. Addi.

2. To distort; to writhe; to force.

So far to extend their speeches is to wrest them against their meaning. Hooker.

My father's purposes have been mistook,
And some about him have too lavishly Wrested his meaning and authority. Shak. Hen. IV.
Wrest once the law to your authority;
To do a great right, do a little wrong. Shakesp.

WREST. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Distortion; violence.

Whereas it is concluded, out of weak premises, that the retaining of divers things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can shew that they have done ill; what needed this wrest, to draw out from us an accusation of foreign churches? Hooker.

2. It is used in Spenser and Shakespeare for an active or moving power: I suppose, from the force of a tilter acting with his lance in his rest.

Adown he kest it with so puissant wrest,
That hack again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groneful sound.

Spenser.

Antenor's such a wrest in their affairs,
That their negotiations all must slacken, Wanting his manage. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.

3. An instrument to tune.

WRESTER. n. s. [from wrest.] He who wrests.

TO WRESTLE. v. n. [from wrest.]

1. To contend who shall throw the other down.

If ever he goes alone again, I'll never wrestle for prize more. Shakesp. As you like it.
Another, by a fall in wrestling, started the end of the clavicle from the sternum. Hewison's Surg.
To play or wrestle well, it should be used with those that do it better. Temple.

None in the leap spring with so strong a bow'd,
Or firmer in the wrestling press the ground. Pope.

2. To struggle; to contend: followed by with.

I persuaded them, if they lov'd Benedick,
To wish him wrestle with affection,
And never to let Beatrice know of it. Shakesp.
James knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

WRESTLER. n. s. [from wrestle.]

1. One who wrestles; one who professes the athletick art.

When the young wrestlers at their sport grew warm,
Old Milo wept, to see his naked arm. Denham.
'Tis not from whom, but where we live;

The place does oft those graces give:
Great Julius, on the mountains bred,
A flock perhaps, or herd, had led;
He, that the world subdued, had been
But the best wrestler on the green. Waller.

2. One who contends in wrestling.
So earnest with thy God, can no new care,
No sense of danger, interrupt thy prayer?
The sacred wrestler, till a blessing giv'n,
Quits not his hold, but halting conquers heav'n.

Waller.

Two wrestlers help to pull each other down.
Dryden.

WRETCH. n. s. [wrecca, Sax.]

1. A miserable mortal.
When I loved, I was a wretch. Accidence.
She weeps, and says her Henry is depos'd;
He smiles, and says his Edward is install'd;
That she, poor wretch, for grief can speak no more.
Shakesp.

The butcher takes away the calf,
And binds the wretch, and beats it when it strives.
Shakesp.

Illustrious wretch! repine not, nor reply;
View not what heav'n ordains with reason's eye;
For bright the object is, the distance is too high.
Prior.

2. A worthless sorry creature.

Base-minded wretches! are your thoughts so deeply bemired in the trade of ordinary worldlings, as, for respect of gain some poultry wool may yield you, to let so much time pass without knowing perfectly herestat?
Sidney.

He now
Has these poor men in question: never saw I
Wretches so quake; they kneel, they kiss the earth,
Forswear themselves as often as they speak. Shak.
Title of honour, worth and virtue's right,
Should not be given to a wretch so vile.
Daniel's Civil War.

When they are gone, a company of starved hungry wretches shall take their places. L'Estrange.

3. It is used by way of slight, or ironical pity, or contempt.

When soon away the wasp doth go:
Poor wretch was never frightened so;
He thought his wings were much too slow,
O'erjoy'd they so were parted. Drayt. Nymphid.
Then, if the spider find him fast beset,
She issues forth, and runs along her loom:
She joys to touch the captive in her net,
And drags the little wretch in triumph home. Dryd.

4. It is sometimes a word of tenderness, as we now say poor thing.

Excellent wretch. Shakesp.
Chastened but thus, and thus his lesson taught,
The happy wretch she put into her breast. Sidney.

WRETCHED. adj. [from wretch.]

1. Miserable; unhappy.

These we should judge to be most miserable, but that a wretcher sort there are, on whom whereas nature hath bestowed ripe capacity, their evil disposition seriously goeth about therewith to apprehend God, as being not God. Hooker.

O cruel death! to those you are more kind
Than to the wretched mortals left behind. Waller.
Why dost thou drive me
To range all o'er a waste and barren place,
To find a friend? The wretched have no friends.
Dryden.

2. Calamitous; afflictive.

3. Sorry; pitiful; paltry; worthless.

When God was served with legal sacrifices, such was the miserable and wretched condition of some men's minds, that the best of every thing they had being called out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor, starved, or diseased thing, not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hooker.
Affected noise is the most wretched thing
That to contempt can empty scribblers bring.
Roscommon.

Forgive the many failings of those who, with their wretched art, cannot arrive to those heights that you possess. Dryden.

4. Despicable; hatefully contemptible.

An adventure worthy to be remembered for the unused examples therein, as well of true natural goodness as of wretched ungratefulness. Sidney.

WRETCHEDLY. adv. [from wretched.]

1. Miserably; unhappily.

From these two wars, so wretchedly entered into,
the duke's ruin took its date. Clarendon.

2. Meantly; despicably.

When such little shuffling arts come once to be ripped up, and laid open, how poorly and wretch- edly must that man sneak, who finds himself guilty and baffled too! South.

WRETCHEDNESS. n. s. [from wretched.]

1. Misery; unhappiness; afflicted state.

My misery cannot be greater than it is: fear not the danger of my blind steps, I cannot fall worse than I am; and do not obstinately continue to infect thee with my wretchedness. Sidney.

He 'gan inquire
What hard mishap him brought to such distress,
And made that catif's thrall the thrall of wretch- edness. Spenser.

Clarion did at last decline
To lowest wretchedness; and is there then Such rancour in the hearts of mighty men? Spens.

When they are weary of wars, and brought down to extreme wretchedness, then they creep a little, and sue for grace, till they have recovered their strength again. Spenser.

I love not to see wretchedness o'ercharg'd,
And duty in his service perishing. Shakesp.

We have with the feeling lost the very memory of such wretchedness as our forefathers endured by those wars, of all others the most cruel. Raleigh.

2. Pitifulness; despicableness.

WRETCHLESS. adj. [This is, by I know not whose corruption, written for reck- less.] Careless; mindless; heedless.

For any man to put off his present repentance, or contemplation of a possibility that his latter repentance may serve the turn, is the most wretch- less presumption, and hath no promise of mercy annexed to it. Hammond.

If persons of so circumspect a piety have been thus overtaken, what security can there be for our wretchless oscitancy? Government of the Tongue.

WRETCHLESSNESS. n. s. [from wretch- less.] Carelessness.

The devil drives them into desperation, or into wretchlessness of unclean living. Common Prayer.

TO WRIGGLE. v. n. [wrgan, Sax. wug- gelen, Dut.] To move to and fro with short motions.

If sheep or thy lamb fall a wiggling with tail,
Go by-and-by search it, whiles help may prevail.
Tusser.

The busy importunities of these extensional phantasms I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wiggings up and down of pismires. More.

The excellency of sawing is to keep in the line marked to be sawn, without wiggling on either side. Moxon.

To bed went the bridegroom and the bride:
Was never such an ill-pair'd couple tied;
Restless he toss'd, and tumbled to and fro,
And roll'd and wiggled farther off for woe. Dryd.

How wildly will ambition steer!
A vermin wiggling in th' usurper's ear. Dryden.

And both he and his successors would often wiggle in their seats as long as the cushion lasted.
Swift.

TO WRIGGLE. v. a. To put in a quick reciprocating motion; to introduce by shifting motion.

Ralpho was mounted now, and gotten O'erthwart his beast with active vaulting,
Wriggling his body to recover
His seat, and cast his right leg over. Hudibras.
A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wiggle his body into a hen-roost. L'Estrange.

WRIGGLETAIL. n. s. For wrigglingtail.
See WRIGGLE.

My ragged ronts all shiver and shake:
They wout in the wind wagg their wriggletails,
Peak as a peacock, but nought it avails. Spenser.

WRIGHT. n. s. [wrihta, wrihta, Sax.] A workman; an artificer; a maker; a manufacturer.

Nor place the neighbour Cyclops their delights
In brave vermilion prow-deck ships; nor wrights
Useful and skillful. Chapman.

It is impossible duly to consider these things, without being rapt into admiration of the infinite wisdom of the Divine Architect, and contemning the arrogant pretences of the world and animal wrights, and much more the productions of chance.
Cheyne.

The verb To write has the same sound with wright a workman; right, or equity; and rite, or ceremony; but spelled very differently.
Watts's Logic.

TO WRING. v. a. preter. and part. pass.
wringed and wrung. [wringan, Sax.]

1. To twist; to turn round with violence.

The priest shall wring off his head, and burn it on the altar. Leviticus, i. 15.

2. To force by contortion: with a particle, as out.

He thrust the fleece together, and wringed the dew out of it, a bowl full of water. Judges, vi. 58.

The figure of a sturdy woman, done by Michael Angelo, washing and winding of linen clothes; in which act she wrings out the water that made the fountain. Wotton.

Apply mild detergents on pledgets of lint over it, with a compress wrung out. Wiseman.

3. To squeeze; to press.

In sleep I heard him say, Sweet Desdemona,
Let us be wary, let us hide our loves!
And then, sir, would he gripe and wring my hand.
Shakesp.

4. To writhe.

The silly owner of the goods
Weeps over them, and wrings his hapless hands.
Shakesp.

5. To pinch.

The king began to find where his shoe did wring him, and that it was his depressing the house of York that did rangle and lester the affectious of his people. Bacon's Henry VII.

If he had not been too much grieved, and wrung by an uneasy and streight fortune, he would have been an excellent man of business. Clarendon.

6. To force by violence; to extort.

I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash
By any indirection. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To wring the widow from her custom'd right,
And have no other reason for his wring,
But that he was bound by a solemn oath?
Shakesp. Henry VI.

That which I must speak
Must either punish me, not being believ'd,
Or wring redress from you. Shak. Meas. for Meas.

Thirty spies,
Threatening cruel death, constrain'd the bride
'To wring from me, and tell to them, my secret.
Milton.

7. To harass; to distress; to torture.

He dives into the king's soul, and there scatters
Doubts, dangers, wringing of the conscience,
Fear and despair, and all these for his marriage.
Shakesp.

Pleasure enchants, impetuous rage transports,
And grief dejects and wrings the tortor'd soul.
Roscommon.

Didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly. Addison.

8. To distort; to turn to a wrong purpose.

To wring this sentence, to wrest thereby out of men's hands the knowledge of God's doctrine, is without all reason. Asham's Schoolmaster.
Lord, how dare these men thus wring the scriptures? Whitgift.

9. To persecute with extortion.

The merchant-adventurers have been often wronged and wringed to the quick; but were never quick and lively in thanks to those by whose endeavours they were freed. Hayward.

To WRING. v. n. To writhe with anguish.

'Tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow;
But no man's virtue nor sufficiency
To be so moral, when he shall endure
The like himself. Shak. Much ado about Nothing.

WRINGER. n. s. [from wring.] One who squeezes the water out of clothes.

One Mrs. Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, his laundress, his washer, and his wringer. Shakesp.

WRINKLE. n. s. [prunckle, Sax. wrinkel, Dut.]

1. Corrugation or furrow of the skin or the face.

Give me that glass, and therein will I read:
No deeper wrinkles yet! Hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? Shakesp. Richard II.
She hath continued a virgin without any visible token, or least wrinkle, of old age.

Howel's Vocal Forest.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow. Dryden.
Though you, and all your senseless tribe,
Could art, or time, or nature bribe,
To make you look like beauty's queen,
And hold for ever at fifteen;
No bloom of youth can ever blind
The cracks and wrinkles of your mind:
All men of sense will pass your door,
And crowd to Stella's at fourscore. Swift.

2. Rumples of cloth.

3. Any roughness.

Our British heaven was all serene;
No threatening cloud was nigh,
Not the least wrinkle to deform the sky. Dryden.

To WRINKLE. v. a. [prunckian, Sax.]

1. To corrugate; to contract into furrows.

It is still Fortune's use
To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkle brow
An age of poverty. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Scorn makes us wrinkle up the nose, and stretch the nostrils also, at the same time drawing up the upper lip. Bacon.

Here steams ascend,
That in mixt fumes the wrinkled nose offend. Gay.
Here stood ill-nature, like an ancient maid,
Her wrinkled form in black and white array'd. Pope.

2. To make rough or uneven.

A keen north wind, blowing dry,
Wrinkled the face of deluge, as decay'd. Milton.

WRIST. n. s. [pýpýr, Sax.] The joint by which the hand is joined to the arm.

He took me by the wrist, and held me hard. Shakesp.

The brawn of the arm must appear full, shadowed on one side; then shew the wrist-bone thereof. Peacham.

The axillary artery, below the cubit, divideth into two parts; the one running along the radius, and passing by the wrist, or place of the pulse, is at the fingers subdivided into three branches. Brown's Vulgar Errors

WRISTBAND. n. s. [wrist and band.] The fastening of the shirt at the hand.WRIT. n. s. [from write.]

1. Any thing written; scripture. This sense is now chiefly used in speaking of the Bible.

The church, as a witness, preacheth his mere revealed truth, by reading publicly the sacred scripture; that a second kind of preaching is the reading of holy writ. Hooker.

Divine Eliza, sacred empress,
Live she for ever, and her royal places

Be fill'd with praises of divinest wits,
That her eternize with their heavenly writs. Spens.
Bagdat rises out of the ruins of the old city of Babylon, so much spoken of in holy writ. Knolles's History of the Turks.

Others famous after known,
Although in holy writ not nam'd. Par. Regained.
He cannot keep his fingers from meddling with holy writ. More's Divine Dialogues.

Sacred writ our reason does exceed. Waller.
His story, filled with so many surprising incidents bears so close an analogy with what is delivered in holy writ, that it is capable of pleasing the most delicate reader, without giving offence to the most scrupulous. Addison's Spectator.
Of ancient writ unlocks the learned store,
Consults the dead, and lives past ages o'er. Pope

2. A judicial process, by which any one is summoned as an offender.

Hold up your head, hold up your hand:
Would it were not my lot to shew ye
This cruel writ, wherein you stand Indicted by the name of Chloe. Prior.

3. A legal instrument.

The king is fled to London.
To call a present court of parliament:
Let us pursue him, ere the writs go forth. Shakesp. Henry VI

I folded the writ up in form of th' other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely.
The changeling never known. Shakesp.

For every writ of entry, whereupon a common recovery is to be suffered, the queen's fine is to be rated upon the writ original, if the lands comprised therein be held. Ayliffe

WRIT. The preterite of write.

When Sappho writ,
By their applause the critics shew'd their wit. Prior.

WRITATIVE. A word of Pope's coining, not to be imitated.

Increase of years makes men more talkative, but less writative; to that degree, that I now write no letters but of plain how d'ye's. Pope to Swift.

To WRITE. v. a. preterite writ or wrote; part. pass. written, writ, or wrote. [pritan, apritan, Sax. ad rita, Island. wreta a letter, Goth.]

1. To express by means of letters.

I'll write you down
The which shall point you forth, at every sitting.
What you must say. Shakesp.
Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
we write in water. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
When a man hath taken a wife, and she find no favour in his eyes, then let him write her a bill of divorcement. Deuteronomy.
David wrote a letter. 2 Sam. xi.
The time, the place, the manner how to meet,
Were all in punctual order plainly writ. Dryden.

2. To engrave; to impress.

Cain was so fully convinced that every one had a right to destroy such a criminal, that he cries out, every one that findeth me shall slay me; so plain was it writ in the hearts of all mankind. Locke.

3. To produce, as an author.

When, more indulgent to the writer's ease,
You are so good to be so hard to please;
No such convulsive pangs it will require
To write the pretty things that you admire. Granr.

4. To tell by letter.

I chose to write the thing I durst not speak
To her I lov'd. Prior.

To WRITE. v. n.

not so proper to furnish materials for a writer. Addison's Freeholder.

Writers are often more influenced by a desire of fame, than a regard to the public good. Addison's Freeholder.

Would a writer know how to behave himself with relation to posterity, let him consider in old books what he finds that he is glad to know, and what omissions he most laments. Swift.

To WRITHE. v. a. [pruðan, Sax.]

1. To distort; to deform with distortion.

It cannot be this weak and writhe'd shrimp
Should strike such terror in his enemies. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Hatefullest disrelish writhe'd their jaws
With soot and cinders.
Her mouth saw writhe'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;
Her sallow cheeks her envious mind did shew,
And ev'ry feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shrew. Dryden.

2. To twist with violence.

Then Satan first knew pain,
And writhe'd him to and fro convolv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Amid the plaited scales it took its course,
And in the spinal marrow spent its force;
The monster hiss'd aloud, and rag'd in vain,
And writhe'd his body to and fro with pain:
He bit the dart. Addison.

3. To wrest; to force by violence; to torture; to distort.

The reason which he yieldeth, sheweth the least part of his meaning to be that whereunto his words are writhe'd. Hooker.

4. To twist.

WRY'NECK. n. s. [torquilla, Lat.] A bird.

X.

X Is a letter, which, though found in Saxon words, begins no word in the English language.

Y.

Y, At the beginning of words, is commonly taken, though I think erroneously, for a consonant; at the end, and when it follows a consonant, is a vowel, and has the sound of i. It is used at the end of words, and whenever two i's would come together; and in words derived from the Greek, to express the u. Y was much used by the Saxons, whence y is found for i in the old English writers.

Y is, in old English, sometimes prefixed as an increasing syllable to preterites and passive participles of verbs. It seems borrowed from ge, the Saxon augmentum of the preterite. It is sometimes put before present tenses, but I think erroneously.

YACHT. n. s. [a Dutch word.] A small ship for carrying passengers.

YARD. n. s. [geard, Sax.]

Ill at last
Yawning received them whole, and on them clos'd. Milton.

The sword pierc'd his tender side;
Down fell the beauteous youth; the yawning wound
Gush'd out a purple stream. Dryden.

High she rear'd her arm, and with her sceptre struck
The yawning cliff: from its dispar'd height
Adown the mount the gushing torrent ran. Prætor.

3. To express desire by yawning.

The chiefest thing at which lay-reformers yawn, is, that the clergy may, through conformity in condition, be poorer as the apostles were. In which one circumstance if they imagine so great perfection, they must think that church which hath such store of mendicant friars, a church in that respect most happy. Hooker.

Y E A

YAWN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Oscitation.

Thæe, Paridel, she mark'd thee there,

Some mumble-news,
That smiles his cheek in years, and knows the trick
To make my lady laugh when she's dispos'd, Told our intents. Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

There died also Cecile, mother to king Edw. IV. being of extreme years, and who had lived to see three princes of her body crown'd, and four murdered. Bacon's Henry VII.

He look'd in years, yet in his years were seen
A youthful vigour, and autumnal green. Dryden.

YE'ARLING. adj. [from year.] Being a year old.

A yearling bullock to thy name shall smoke,
Untam'd, unconscious of the galling yoke. Pope.

YE'ARLY. adj. [from year.] Annual; happening every year; lasting a year.

The yearly course that brings this day about Shall never see it but a holiday. Shakesp. K. John.

Why the changing oak should shed
The yearly honour of his stately head;
Whilst the distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
Uncbang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prætor.

YEARLY. adv. Annually; once a year.

He that outlives this day, and sees old age,
Will yearly on the vigil feast his neighbours,
And say, To-morrow is St. Crispin.

Shakesp. Henry V.

For numerous blessings yearly shower'd,
And property with plenty crown'd;
For freedom still maintain'd alive;
For these, and more, accept our pious praise.

Dryden.

Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
And yearly some are falling of the few.

Young.

To YEARN. v. n. [earnan, Sax.] To feel great internal uneasiness. In Spenser it is sometimes earn. It is by Spenser used for desire, or the pain of longing; it now implies tenderness or pity.

He despis'd to tread in due degree,
But chaff'd, and foam'd, with courage fierce and stern,

And to bees'd of that base burden still did yearn.

Spenser.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn.

Spenser.

Though peeping close into the thick,
Might see the moving of some quick:
But were it fairy, fiend, or snake,
My courage earned it to wake,
And manfully thereat shot.

Spenser.

Falstaff, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore.

Shakesp. Hen. V.

Joseph made haste; for his bowels did yearn upon his brother: and he sought where to weep, and he entered into his chamber.

Gen. xliii. 30.

When the fair Leucothoe he spy'd,
To check his steeds impatient Phebus yearn'd,
Though all the world was in his course concern'd.

Waller.

Yet for all the yearning pain
Y' have suffer'd for their loves, in vain,
I fear they'll prove so nice and coy,
To have, and t' hold, and to enjoy.

Hudibros.

Where our heart does but relent, his melts;
where our eye pities, his bowels yearn.

South's Sermons.

At beholding the miseries of others, they find such yearnings in their bowels, and such sensible commotions rais'd in their breasts, as they can by no means satisfy.

Calamy.

Your mother's heart yearns towards you.
Unmov'd the mind of Ithacus remain'd;
But Anticlus, unable to controul,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul.

Pope.

To YEARN. v. a. To grieve; to vex.

She laments for it, that it would Yearn your heart to see it.

Shakesp.

I am not covetous of gold,
It yearns me not if men my garments wear.

Shak.

YEST. n. s. [ȝeȝt, Sax.]

1. The foam, spume, or flower of beer in fermentation; or barn.

Yeast and outward means do fail,
And have no power to work on ale.

Hudibros.

When drays bound high, then never cross behind,
Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind.

Gay.

2. The spume on troubled water; foam; froth.

Now the ship boring the moon with her main-mast, and anon swallowed with yeast and froth, as you'd thrust a cork into a hog's head.

Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

YESTY. adj. [from yest.] Frothy; spumy; foamy.

Though you untie the winds, and let them fight Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

YELK. n. s. [from ȝealepe, yellow, Sax.]

The yellow part of the egg. It is commonly pronounced, and often written, yolk.

The yolk of the egg conducteth little to the generation of the bird, but only to the nourishment of the same: for if a chicken be opened when it is new-hatched, you shall find much of the yolk remaining.

Bacon's Natural Hist.

That a chicken is formed out of the yolk of an egg, with some antient philosophers, the people still opinion.

Brown.

All the feather'd kind
From th' included yolk, not ambient white, arose.

Dryden.

To YELL. v. n. To cry out with horreur and agony.

Nor the night raven, that still deadly yells,
Nor grisly vultures, make us once appear'd.

Spenser.

Each new morn,
New widows howl, new orphans cry; new sorrows
Strike heav'n on the face, that it resounds,
As if it felt with Scotland, and yell'd out
Like syllables of doleour.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

Now worse than e'er he was before,
Poor Puck doth yell, poor Puck doth roar,
That wak'd queen Mab, who doubted sore
Some treason had been wrought her.

Drayton's Nymphid.

Yelling monsters, that with ceaseless cry
Surround me.

Milton.

Night-struck fancy dreams the yelling ghost.

Thomson.

YELL. n. s. [from the verb.] A cry of horreur.

With like tim'rous accent and dire yell,
As when, by night and negligence, the fire
Is spread in populous cities.

Shakesp. Othello.

Hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains.
The Trojan stood astonished at their cries,
And ask'd his guide from whence those yells arise.

Dryden.

Others in frantick mood
Run howling through the streets; their hideous yells
Rend the dark welkin.

Phillips.

YELLOW. adj. [ȝealepe, Sax. gheleuwe, Dut. giallo, Ital.] Being of a bright glaring colour, as gold.

Only they that come to see a fellow
In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow,
Will be deceiv'd.

Shak. Henry VIII. Prologue.

He brought the green ear and the yellow sheaf.

Milton.

After a lively orange, followed an intense, bright, and copious yellow, which was also the best of all the yellows.

Newton.

Negligent of food,
Scarce seen, he wades among the yellow broom.

Thomson.

YELLOWBOY. n. s. A gold coin. A very low word.

John did not starve the cause; there wanted not yellowboys to fee counsel.

Arbuthnot's John Bull.

YELLOWHAMMER. n. s. [cenchrinus belonii.] A bird.

YELLOWISH. adj. [from yellow.] Approaching to yellow.

Although amber be commonly of a yellowish colour, yet there is found of it also black, white, brown, green, blue, and purple.

Woodward's Natural Hist.

YELLOWISHNESS. n. s. [from yellowish.] The quality of approaching to yellow.

Bruised madder, being drenched with the like alcalizate solution, exchanged its yellowishness for a redness.

Boyle.

YELLOWNESS. n. s. [from yellow.] 1. The quality of being yellow.

Apples, covered in lime and ashes, were well matured, as appeared in the yellowness and sweetness.

Bacon's Natural Hist.

Yellowness of the skin and eyes, and a saffron-coloured urine, are signs of an inflammatory disposition of the liver.

Arbuthnot.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for jealousy.

Ford I will possess with yellowness.

Shakesp.

YELLOWS. n. s. A disease in horses. When the gallpipe is stopped up, that matter which should be turned into gall is carried back into the blood, and tinctures it yellow; so that the eyes, inside of the lips, slaver, and all the parts of the horse that are capable of shewing the colour appear yellow.

Farrier's Dictionary.

His horse sped with spavins, and raied with the yellows.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

To YELP. v. n. [ȝealpan, Sax.] To bark as a beagle-hound after his prey.

A little herd of England's tim'rous deer,
Maz'd with a yelping keimel of French curs.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

YEO'MAN. n. s. [Of this word the original is much doubted: the true etymology seems to be that of Junius, who derives it from ȝeman, Frisick, a villager.]

1. A man of a small estate in land; a farmer; a gentleman farmer.

Gentlemen should use their children as the honest farmers and substantial yeomen do their Lecke.

He that has a spatul by his side is a yeoman of about one hundred pounds a year, an honest man, he is just qualified to kill an hare.

Addison.

2. It seems to have been anciently a kind of ceremonious title given to soldiers: whence we have still yeoman of the guard.

Tall yeomen scemed they, and of great might,
And were enraged ready still for fight.

Spenser.

You, good yeomen,
Whose limbs were made in England, shew us here
The mettle of your pasture.

Shakesp. Hen. V.

He instituted, for the security of his person, a band of fifty archers, under a captain, to attend him, by the name of yeomen of his guard.

Bacon's Hen. VII.

Th' appointment for th' ensuing night he heard;
And therefore in the cavern had prepar'd
Two brawny yeomen of his trusty guard.

Dryden.

At Windsor St. John whispers me i' th' ear;
The waiters stand in ranks, the yeomen cry
Make room! as if a duke were passing by.

Swift.

3. It was probably a freeholder not advanced to the rank of a gentleman.

His grandfather was Lyonel duke of Clarence,
Third son to the third Edward king of England:
Spring crestless yeomen from so deep a root?

Bacon's Hen. VI.

4. It seems to have had likewise the notion of a gentleman servant.

A jolly yeoman, marshal of the hall,
Whose name was Appetite, he did bestow
Both guests and meats.

Spenser.

YEO'MANRY. n. s. [from yeoman.] The collective body of yeomen.

This did amortize a great part of the lands of the kingdom unto the hold and occupation of the yeomanry, or middle people, of a condition between gentlemen and cottagers.

Bacon.

To YERK. v. a. [of unknown etymology.] To throw out or move with a spring.

A leaping horse is said to yerk, or strike out his hind legs, when he flings and kicks with his whole hind quarters, stretching out the two hinder legs near together, and even to their full extent.

Farrier's Dict.

Their wounded steeds
Fret fetlock deep in gore, and with wild rage
Yerk out their armed heels at their dead masters

Shakesp.

Y E T

YERK. n. s. [from the verb. A quick motion.]
To YERN. v. a. See YEARN.
YES. adv. [ȝyre, Sax.]
1. A term of affirmation; the affirmative particle opposed to no.
 Pray, Madam, are you married?—Yes.
More's Fables.
2. It is a word of enforcement: even so; not only so, but more.
 This were a fit speech for a general in the head of an army, when going to battle: yes, and it is no less fit speech in the head of a council, upon a deliberation of entrance into a war. Bacon.
 Yes, you despise the oar to books confin'd, Who from his study rails at human kind, Though what he learns he speaks. Pope.
YESTER. adj. [ghister, Dut. hesternus, Lat.] Being next before the present day. It is not often used but in composition with another word, as day or night.
 Love might as well be sow'd upon our sands, As in a breast so barren:
 To love an enemy, the only one
 Remaining to, whom yester sun beheld Must ring her charms. Dryden's Don Sebastian.
YESTERDAY. n. s. [ȝīrcandæg, Sax.] The day last past; the day next before to-day.
 To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
 Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
 To the last syllable of recorded time;
 And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
 The way to dusty death. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 We are but of yesterday, and know nothing, because our days upon earth are a shadow. Job. viii. 9.
 You are both fluid, chang'd since yesterday;
 Next day repairs but ill last day's decay;
 Nor are, although the river keep the name,
Yesterdau's waters and to-day's the same. Donne.
 If yesterday could be recall'd again,
 Ev'n now would I conclude my happy reign. Dryd.
Yesterday was set apart as a day of publick thanksgiving for the late extraordinary successes. Addison.
 Mrs. Simper sends complaint in your yesterdau's Spectator. Addison's Spectator.
 Naked from the womb
 We yesterday came forth, and in the tumb
 Naked again we must to-morrow lie;
 Born to lament, to labour, and to die. Prior.
YESTERDAY. adv. On the day last past.
 Martius gave us yesterday a representation of the empire of the Turks, with no small vigour of words. Bacon.
YESTERNIGHT. n. s. The night before this night.
YESTERNIGHT. adv. On the night last past.
 Eleven hours I've spent to write it over;
 For yesternight by Catesby was it sent me.
Shakesp. Richard III.
 The distribution of this conference was made by Eupolis yesternight. Bacon.
YET. conjunct. [ȝȳt, ȝȳt, ȝȳta, Sax.] Nevertheless; notwithstanding; however.
 They had a king was more than him before;
 But yet a king, where they were nought the more. Daniel.
 French laws forbid the female reign,
 Yet love does them to slav'ry draw. Cowley.
 Though such men have lived never so much upon the re-crave, yet, if they be observed to have a particular fondness for persons noted for any sin, it is ten to one but there was a communication in the sin, before there was so in affection. South.
 The heathens would never suffer their gods to be reviled, which yet were no gods; and shall it be allowed to any man to make a mock of him that made heaven and earth. Tillotson.

Y E W

He is somewhat arrogant at his first entrance, and is too inquisitive through the whole tragedy; yet these imperfections being balanced by great virtues, they hinder not our compassion for his miseries. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 Let virtuous's in five years be writ,
 Yet not one thought accuse thy toil of wit. Dryd.
YET. adv.
1. Beside; over and above.
 This furnishes us with yet one more reason why our Saviour lays such a particular stress on acts of mercy. Atterbury.
2. Still; the state still remaining the same.
 They attest facts they had heard while they were yet heathens; and had they not found reason to believe them, they would still have continued heathens, and made no mention of them in their writings. Addison.
3. Once again.
 Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
 Indulge, dread chaos and eternal night. Pope's Dun.
4. At this time; so soon; hitherto: with a negative before it.
 Thales being asked when a man should marry, said, Young men, not yet; old men, not at all. Bacon.
5. At least; at all. Noting uncertainty or indetermination.
 A man that would form a comparison betwixt Quintilian's declamations, if yet they be Quintilian's, and the orations of Tully, would be in danger of forfeiting his discretion. Baker.
6. It denotes continuance and extension, greater or smaller.
 Shake not his hour-glass, when his hasty stand
 Is ebbing to the last:
 A little longer, yet a little longer,
 And nature drops him down without your sin,
 Like mellow fruit without a winter storm. Dryd.
 Yet a few days, and those which now appear
 In youth and beauty like the blooming year,
 In life's swift scene shall change. Dryden.
7. Still; in a new degree.
 He that takes from a thief that which the thief took from an honest man, and keeps it to himself, is the wickedest thief of the two, by how much the rapine is made yet blacker by the pretence of piety and justice. L'Estrange.
8. Even; after all. A kind of emphatical addition to a negative.
 If any man neglect his duty, his fault must not be ascribed to the rule appointed, neither yet to the whole church. Whitgift.
 Men may not too rashly believe the confessions of witches, nor yet the evidence against them; for the witches themselves are imaginative, and people are credulous, and ready to impute accidents and natural operations to witchcraft. Bacon.
 Nor yet amidst this joy and brightest morn
 Was absent, after all his mischief done,
 The prince of darkness. Milt. Par. Regained.
9. Hitherto; something with as before it.
 Hope beginning here, with a trembling expectation of things far removed, and as yet but only heard of, endeth with real and actual fruition of that which no tongue can express. Hooker.
YEW. for given.
 Wants not a fourth grace to make the dance even?
 Let that room to my lady be yewen,
 She shall be a grace,
 To fill the fourth place,
 And reign with the rest in heaven. Spenser.
YEW. n. s. [ȝw, Sax. yw, Welsh. This is often written ewgh; but the former orthography is at once nearer to the sound and derivation. See EGH.] A tree of tough wood, used for bows, and therefore planted in church-yards.
 It hath amentaceous flowers, which consist of many apices, for the most part shaped like a mushroom, and are barren; but the embryos, which are produced at remote distances on the same tree, do afterward become hollow bell-shaped berries, which are full of juice, and include seeds somewhat like acorns, having as it were, a little cup to each. Miller.

 The shooter ewgh, the broad-leav'd sycamore,
 The barren plantane, and the walnut sound;
 The myrrhe, that her foal sin doth still deplore;
 Alder, the owner of all waterish ground. Fairfax.
 Sliver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shak Macbeth.
 He drew,
 And almost join'd the horns of the tough yew.
 The distinguish'd yew is ever seen,
 Unchang'd his branch, and permanent his green. Prior.
YEWEN. adj. [from yew.] Made of the wood of yew.

1. Long.
Witness the burning altars, which he swore,
And, guilty, heavens of his bold perjury;
Which, though he hath polluted oft and yore,
Yet I to them for judgment just do fly. Spenser.

2. Of old time; long ago: with of before it.
And seated here a see, his bishoprick of yore,
Upon the farthest point of this unfruitful shore. Dryden.
Three bright-eyed Vesta long of yore
To solitary Saturn bore. Milton.
There liv'd, as authors tell, in days of yore,
A widow somewhat old, and very poor. Dryden.
In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd. Prior.
The devil was piqued such saintship to behold,
And long'd to tempt him, like good Job of old;
But Satan now is wiser than of yore,
And tempts by making rich, not making poor. Pope.

YOU. pron. [æop, nub, Sax. of ge, ye.]
1. The oblique case of ye.
Ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God, which is given me to you ward. Ephes.
I thought to show you
How easy 'twas to die, by my example,
And hansen late before you. Dryden.

2. It is used in the nominative, in common language, when the address is to persons; and though first introduced by corruption, is now established. In the following lines you and ye are used ungrammatically in the places of each other; but even this use is customary.
What gain you by forbidding it to teaze ye?
It now can neither trouble ye nor please ye. Dryden.

3. It is the ceremonial word for the second person singular, and is always used, except in solemn language.

YOU

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.
 But madam, if the fates withstand, and you
 Are destin'd Hymen's willing victim too. Pope.
 4. It is used indefinitely, as the French on;
 any one; whosoever.

We passed by what was one of those rivers of burning matter; this looks, at a distance, like a new-ploughed land; but as you come near it, you see nothing but a long heap of heavy disjointed clods. Addison.

5. You is used in the subsequent members of a sentence, as distinguished from ye.

Stand forth, ye champions, who the gauntlet wield,
 Or you the swiftest racers of the field. Pope.

YOUNG, adj. [iunɔŋ, ȳeong, Sax. jong, Dutch.]

1. Being in the first part of life; not old;
 used of animal life.

Guests should be interlarded, after the Persian custom, by ages young and old. Carew.
 There's not the smallest orb which thou be-hold'st,

But in his motion like an angel sings,
 Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims. Shak.
 I firmly am resolv'd

Not to bestow my youngest daughter,
 Before I have a husband for the elder. Shakesp.
 Thou old and true Menenius,

Thy tears are saltier than a younger man's,
 And venomous to thine eyes. Shakesp.

He ordain'd a lady for his prize, Generally praiseful, fair, and young, and skill'd in housewiferies. Chapman

In timorous deer he hantels his young paws,
 And leaves the rugged bear for firmer claws. Cowley.

Nor need'st thou by thy daughter to be told,
 Though now thy spry blood with age be cold,
 Thou hast been young. Dryden.

When we say a man is young, we mean that his age is yet but a small part of that which usually men attain to; and when we denominate him old, we mean that his duration is run out almost to the end of that which men do not usually exceed. Locke.

It will be but an ill example to prove, that dominion, by God's ordination, belonged to the eldest son; because Jacob the youngest here had
 it. Locke.

From earth they rear him struggling now with death,
 And Nestor's youngest stops the vents of breath. Pope.

2. Ignorant; weak.

Come, elder brother, thou art too young in this. Shakesp.

3. It is sometimes applied to vegetable life.

There be trees that bear best when they begin to be old, as almonds; the cause is, for that all trees that bear must have an oily fruit; and young trees have a more watery juice, and less concocted. Bacon.

YOUNG, n. s. The offspring of animals collectively.

The hedge-sparrow fed the cuckoo so long,
 That it had its head bit off by its young. Shakesp.
 So many days my ewes have been with young;
 So many weeks ere the poor fools will yeau. Shakesp.

The eggs disclos'd their callow young. Milton.
 The reason why birds are oviparous, and lay eggs, but do not bring forth their young alive, is because there might be more plenty. More.

Not so her young; for their unequal line
 Was heroes make, half human, half divine;
 Their earthly mold obnoxious was to fate,
 Their mortal; art assum'd immortal state. Dryden.

Those insects, for whose young nature hath not made provision of sufficient sustenance, do themselves gather and lay up in store for them. Ray

YOUNGISH, adj. [from young.] Somewhat young.

YOU

She let her second room to a very genteel youngling man. Tatler.

YOUNGLING, n. s. [from young; ȳeongling, Sax.] Any creature in the first part of life.

More dear unto their God than younglings to their dam. Fairy Queen.

Youngling, thou canst not love so dear as I.
 —Grey-beard, thy love doth freeze. Shakesp.

When we perceive that bats have teats, it is not unreasonable to infer, they suckle their younglings with milk. Brown.

Encourag'd thus, she brought her younglings nigh. Dryden.

The stately beast the two Tyrreidae hred, Snatch'd from his dam, and the tame youngling
 fed. Dryden.

YOUNGLY, adv. [from young.]
 1. Early in life.

Say we read lectures to you,
 How youngly he began to serve his country,
 How long continued, and what stock he springs of. Shakesp.

2. Ignorantly; weakly.

YOUNGSTER, } n. s. [from young.] A YOUNKER. } young person: in contempt.

What, will you make a younger of me? shall I not take mine ease in mine inn, but I shall so have my pocket pick'd? Shakesp.

See how the morning opens her golden gates,
 And takes her farewell of the glorious sun:
 How well resembles it the prime of youth,
 Trim'd like a younger prancing to his love. Shakesp.

While Ulysses slept there, and close by
 The other youngers, he abroad would ly. Chapman.

Fame tells, by age fame reverend grown,
 That Phœbus gave his chariot to his son;
 And whilst the youngster from the path declines, Admiring the strange beauty of the signs,
 Proud of his charge, he drove the fiery horse,
 And would outdo his father in his course. Creech.

The youngster, who at nine and three Drinks with his sisters milk and tea,
 From breakfast reads, till twelve o'clock,
 Burnet and Heylin, Hobbes and Locke. Prior.

YOUNGTH, n. s. [from young.] Youth.
 Obsolete.

The mournful muse in mirth now list ne mask,
 As she was wont in youngth and summer days. Spenser.

YOUR, pronoun. [eoepɔ, Saxon.]
 1. Belonging to you. It is used properly when we speak to more than one, and ceremoniously and customarily when to only one.

Either your unparagoned mistress is dead, or she's outprized by a trifle. Shakesp.
 Impute your danger to our ignorance;
 The bravest men are subject most to chance. Dryden.

Ye dauntless Dardans hear,
 Think on the strength which once your fathers bore. Pope.

2. Your is used in an indeterminate sense.

Every true man's apparel fits your thief; if it be too little for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough. If it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough; so every true man's apparel fits your thief. Shakesp.

There is a great affinity between coins and poetry, and your metallist and critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

A disagreement between these seldom happens, but among your antiquaries and schoolmen. Fenton.

3. Yours is used when the substantive goes before or is understood: as, this is your book, this book is yours.

Pray for this man and for his issue,
 Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave,
 And beggar'd yours for ever. Shakesp.

That done, our day of marriage shall be yours,
 One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. Shakesp.

YOU

This kiss, if it durst speak,
 Would stretch thy spirits up into the air
 Conceive and fare thee well.—

—Yours in the ranks of death. Shakesp.
 He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
 Behold another day break in the east. Shakesp.

While the sword this monarchy secures
 'Tis manag'd by an abler hand than yours. Dryden.
 My wealth, my city, and myself are yours. Dryden.

It is my employment to revive the old of past ages to the present, as it is yours to transmit the young of the present to the future. Pope.

YOURSELF, n. s. [your and self.]
 1. You, even you; ye, not others.

If it stand, as you yourself still do,
 Within the eye of honour; be assur'd,
 My purse, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions. Shakesp.

O heav'n's!
 If you do love old men, if your sweet sway
 Allow obedience, if yourselves are old,
 Make it your cause. Shakesp.

2. In the oblique cases it has the sense of reciprocation, or reference to the same subject mentioned before: as, you love only yourself; you have betrayed your- selves by your rashness.

Whenever you are more intent upon adorning your persons than upon perfecting of your souls, you are much more beside yourselves than he that had rather a laced coat than a healthful body. Law.

3. It is sometimes reciprocal in the nominative.

Be but yourselves. Pope.

YOUTH, n. s. [ȳeozuð, Sax.]

1. The part of life succeeding to childhood and adolescence; the time from fourteen to twenty-eight.

But could youth last, and love still breed,
 Had joys no date, and age no need;
 Then these delights my mind might move,
 To live with thee, and be thy love. Raleigh.

His stary helm unbuckled show'd him prime
 In manhood, where youth ended. Milton.

The solidity, quantity, and strength of the aliment, is to be proportioned to the labour or quantity of muscular motion, which in youth is greater than any other age. Airbuthnot

2. A young man.

Siward's son,
 And many unrough youths even now,
 Protest their first of manhood. Shakesp.

If this were seen,
 The happiest youth viewing his progress through,
 What perils past, what crosses do ensue,
 Would shut the book and sit him down and die. Shakesp.

O'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
 Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost;
 Sev'n youths from Athens yearly sent, to meet
 The fate appointed by revengeful Crete. Dryden.

The pious chief
 A hundred youths from all his train elects,
 And to the Larian court their course directs. Dryden.

3. Young men. Collectively.

As it is fit to read the best authors to youth first, so let them be of the openest and clearest; as Livy before Sallust, Sidney before Donne. Ben Jonson.

About him exercised heroic games
 Th' unarmed youth of heav'n. Milton.

The graces put not more exactly on
 Th' attire of Venus, when the ball she won,
 Than that young beauty by thy care is drest,
 When all your youth prefers her to the rest. Wallor.

YOUTHFUL, adj. [youth and full.]
 1. Young.

Our army is dispers'd already:
 Like youthful steers unyok'd they took their course, Shakesp.

East, west, north, south. Shakesp.

YOU

There, in a heap of slain, among the rest,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load
Of slaughter'd foes. Dryden.
2. Suitable to the first part of life.
Here be all the pleasures
That fancy can beget on youthful thoughts,
When the fresh blood grows lively, and returns
Brisk as the April buds in primrose season. Milton.
In his years were seen
A youthful vigour and autumnal green. Dryden.
The nymph surveys him, and beholds the gr. ce
Of charming features, and a youthful face. Pope.
3. Vigorous, as in youth.
How is a good Christian animated by a stedfast belief of an everlasting enjoyment of perfect felicity, such as, after millions of millions of ages, is still youthful and flourishing, and inviting as at the first! no wrinkles in the face, no grey hairs on the head of eternity. Bentley.

YOUTHFULLY. adv. [from youthful.] In a youthful manner.
YOUTHLY. adj. [from youth.] Young;
early in life. Obsolete.
True be thy words, and worthy of thy praise,
That warlike feats dost highest glorify,
Therein have I spent all my youthly days,
And many battles fought, and many frayes. Spenser.
YOUTHY. adj. [from youth.] Young;
youthful. A bad word.
The scribbler had not genius to turn my age,

YUX

as indeed I am an old maid, into railery, for affecting a youthier turn than is consistent with my time of day. Spectator.
YPIGHT. part. [y and pight, from pitch.] Fixed.
That same wicked wight
His dwelling has low in an hollow cave,
Far underneath a craggy cliff ypight,
Dark, doleful, dreary, like a greedy grave. Spenser.
YUCK. n. s. [jocken, Dut.] Itch.
YULE. n. s. [zeol, yeol, ye hul, Sax.] The time of Christmas.
YUX. n. s. [yeox, Saxon; sometimes pronounced yea.] The hiccough.

Z.

ZEA

Z Is found in the Saxon alphabet set down by grammarians, but is read in no word originally Teutonick: its sound is uniformly that of a hard s.
No word of English original begins with Z.
ZAFFAR. } n. s.
ZAFFIR. } Powder the calx of cobalt fine, and mix it with three times its weight of powdered flints; this being wetted with common water, concretes into a mass called zaffre, which from its hardness has been mistaken for a native mineral. Hill.
Cobalt being sublimed, the flowers are of a blue colour; these German mineralists called zaffir.
Woodward.
The artificers in glass tinge their glass blue with that dark mineral zaphra. Boyle.
ZANY. n. s. [Probably of zanei the contraction of Giovanni: from sanna, a scoff, according to Skinner.] One employed to raise laughter by his gestures, actions, and speeches; a merry-andrew;
a buffoon.
Some carrytale, some pleasanter, some slight zany,
Some nonchalance, some trencher knight, some Dick,
Told our intents before. Shakespeare
Then write that I may follow, and so be Thy echo, thy debtor, thy foil, thy zany,
I shall be thought, if mine like thine I shape,
All the world's lion, though I be thy ape. Donne.
Oh, great restorer of the good old stage,
Preacher at once, and zany of thy age. Pope.
ZARNICH. n. s. A substance in which orpiment is found; it approaches to the nature of orpiment, but without its lustre and foliated texture. The common kinds of zarnich are green and yellow. Hill.

ZEAL. n. s. [ζηλος; zelus, Lat.] Passionate ardour for any person or cause.
In this present age, wherein zeal hath drowned charity and skill, meekness will not now suffer any man to marvel, whatsoever he shall hear re-proved by whomsoever. Hooker.
If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand pound I burrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew

ZEA

doth better; this doth infer the zeal I had to see him. Shakespeare.
O Cromwell, Cromwell!
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies. Shakespeare.
The bare fervour and zeal is taken in commutation for much other piety, by many the most eager contenders. Hammond.
Among the seraphims
Abdiel, than whom none with more zeal ador'd
The Deity, and divine commands obey'd,
Stood up, and in a flame of zeal severe,
The current of his fury thus oppos'd. Milton.
Had zeal anciently arm'd itself against sovereignty, we had never heard of a calendar of saints. Holyday.
We must look our prayers be with zeal and earnestness: it is not enough that we so far attend them, as barely to know what it is we say, but we must put forth all the affection and devotion of our souls. Duty of Man.
Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.
She with such a zeal the cause embrac'd,
As women, where they will, are all in haste;
The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by the fury of the tide. Dryden.
The princes applaud with a furious joy,
And the king seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy. Dryden.
Seriousness and zeal in religion is natural to the English. Tillotson.
Good men often blemish the reputation of their piety by overacting some things in their religion; by an indiscreet zeal about things wherein religion is not concerned. Tillotson.
True zeal seems not to be any one single affection of the soul, but rather a strong mixture of many holy affections; rather a gracious constitution of the whole mind, than any one particular grace, swaying a devout heart, and filling it with all pious intentions; all not only uncounterfeit, but most fervent. Spencer.
When the sins of a nation have provoked God to forsake it, he suffers those to concur in the most pernicious counsels for enslaving conscience, who pretend to the greatest zeal for the liberty of
it. Stillingfleet.
This rebellion has discovered to his majesty who have espoused his interests with zeal or indifference. Addison.
A scorn of flattery and a zeal for truth. Pope.
There is nothing noble in a clergyman but burning zeal for the salvation of souls; nor any thing poor in his profession, but idleness and worldly spirit. Law.
ZEA'LOT. n. s. [zeloteur, Fr. ζηλωτης.]

ZEA

One passionately ardent in any cause.
Generally used in dispraise.
But now, whereas these zealots complain of us for partaking with the Roman church in things lawful and good, they themselves comply with the same in articles and actions which are of no good quality. White.
The fury of zealots, intestine bitterness and division, were the greatest occasion of the destruction of Jerusalem. King Charles.
Are not those men too often the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? true zeal should always begin with true knowledge, and thence proceed to an unwearied passion, for what it once knows to be worthy of such passion. Spencer.
No wonder that so many of these deluded zealots have been engaged in a cause which they at first abhorred, and have wished or acted for the success of an enterprise, that might have ended in the extirpation of the protestant religion. Addison.
ZEA'LOUS. adj. [from zeal.] Ardently passionate in any cause.
Our hearts are right with God, and our intentions pious, if we act our temporal affairs with a desire no greater than our necessity, and in actions of religion we be zealous, active, and operative, so far as prudence will permit. Taylor.
This day, at height of noon, came to my sphere
A spirit zealous, as he seem'd, to know
More of the Almighty's works. Milton.
We should be not only devout towards God, but zealous towards men; endeavouring by all prudent means to recover them out of those snares of the devil, whereby they are taken captive. Decay of Piety.
It is not at all good to be zealous against any person, but only against their crimes. It is better to be zealous for things than for persons; but then it should be only for good things; a rule that does certainly exclude all manner of zeal for ill things, all manner of zeal for little things. Spencer.
Being instructed only in the general, and zealous in the main design; and as finite beings not admitted into the secrets of government, the last resorts of Providence, or capable of discovering the final purposes of God, they must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducing to those ends in which alone they can oppose each other.
Dryden.
Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.
ZEA'LOUSLY. adv. [from zealous.] With passionate ardour.

Z E U

Z O N

Z O O

Thy care is fixt, and zealously attends,
To fill thy odorous lamp with deeds of light,
And hope that reaps not shame. Milton.
To enter into a party as into an order of friars, with so resigned an obedience to superiors, is very unsuitable with the civil and religious liberties we so zealously assert. Swift.

ZEALOUSNESS. n. s. [from zealous.] The quality of being zealous.

ZÉCHIN. n. s. [from Zecha, a place in Venice, where the mint is settled for coinage.] A gold coin worth about nine shillings sterling.

ZÉDOARY. n. s. [zedoaire, Fr.] A spicy plant, somewhat like ginger in its leaves, but of a sweet scent.

ZED. n. s. The name of the letter z.
Thou whoreson zed, thou unnecessary letter. Shakespeare.

ZÉNITH. n. s. [Arabick,] The point over head opposite to the nadir.
Fond men! if we believe that men do live
Under the zenith of both frozen poles, Though none come thence advertisement to give,
Why bear we not the like faith of our souls? Darvies.
These seasons are designed by the motions of the sun; when that approaches nearest our zenith, or vertical point, we call it summer. Brown.

ZÉPHYR, } n. s. [zephyrus, Lat.] The ZÉPHYRUS. } west wind; and, poeti-cally, any calm soft wind.
They are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet. Shakespeare.
Zephyr you shall see a youth with a merry countenance, holding in his hand a swan with wings displayed, as about to sing. Peacham.
Forth rush the levant and the ponent winds, Eurus and Zephyr. Milton.
Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora hreathes. Milton.

ZEST. n. s.
1. The peel of an orange squeezed into wine.
2. A relish; a taste added.
Almighty vanity! to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe. Young.

To ZEST. v. a. To heighten by an additional relish.

ZETE'TICK. adj. [from ζητω.] Proceeding by inquiry.

ZÉUGMA, n. s. [from ζευγμα.] A figure in grammar when a verb agreeing with divers nouns, or an adjective with divers substantives, is referred to one expressly, and to the other by supplement; as, lust overcame shame, boldness fear, and madness reason.

ZO'CLE. n. s. [In architecture.] A small sort of stand or pedestal, being a low square piece or member, serving to support a busto, statue, or the like, that needs to be raised; also a low square member serving to support a column instead of a pedestal, base, or plinth. Dict.

ZO'DIACK. n. s. [zodiacque, Fr. ζωδιακος, ex των ζωων, the living creatures, the figures of which are painted on it in globes.]
1. The track of the sun through the twelve signs; a great circle of the sphere, containing the twelve signs.
The golden sun salutes the morn,
And having gilt the ocean with his beams,
Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shakesp.
Years he number'd scarce thirteen,
When fates turn'd cruel:
Yet three fill'd zodiacks had he been
The stage's jewel. Ben Jonson.
It exceeds even their absurdity to suppose the zodiack and planets to be efficient of, and antecedent to, themselves, or to exert any influences before they were in being. Bentley.
Here in a shrine, that cast a dazzling light,
Sat fixt in thought the mighty Stagyrite;
His sacred head a radiant zodiack crown'd,
And various animals his sides surround. Pope.

2. It is used by Milton for a girdle.
By his side,
As in a glistering zodiack, hung the sword,
Satan's dire dread; and in his hand the spear. Milton.

ZONE. n. s. [ζωνη; zona, Lat.]
1. A girdle.
The middle part
Girt like a starry zone his waist, and round
Skirted his loins and thighs with downy gold, Milton.
And colours clipp'd in heaven.
An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist. Dryden.
Thy statue, Venus, though by Phidias' hands
Design'd immortal, yet no longer stands;
The magic of thy shining zone is past,
But Salisbury's garter shall for ever last. Granville.
Scarce could the goddess from her nymphs be known,
But by the crescent and the golden zone. Pope.

2. A division of the earth.
The whole surface of the earth is divided into five zones: the first is contained between the two tropicks, and is called the torrid zone. There are two temperate zones, and two frigid zones. The northern temperate zone is terminated by the tropick of Cancer and the arctic polar circle: the southern temperate zone is contained between the tropick of Capricorn and the polar circle: the frigid zones are circumscribed by the polar circles, and the poles are in their centers.

True love is still the same: the torrid zones,
And those more frigid ones,
It must not know:
For love grown cold or hot,
Is lust or friendship, not
The thing we show:
For that's a flame would die,
Held down or up too high:
Then think I love more than I can express,
And would love more, could I but love thee less. Suckling.
And as five zones th' ethereal regions bind,
Five correspondent are to earth assign'd:
The sun, with rays directly darting down,
Fires all beneath, and fries the middle zone. Dryd.

3. Circuit; circumference.
Scarce the sun
Hath finish'd half his journey, and scarce begins
His other half in the great zone of heaven. Milton.

ZOO'GRAPHER. n. s. [ζωη and γραφω.]
One who describes the nature, properties, and forms of animals.
One kind of locust stands not prone, or a little inclining upward; but in a large erectness, elevating the two fore legs, and sustaining itself in the middle of the other four, by zoographers called the prophet and praying locust. Brown.

ZOO'GRAPHY. n. s. [of ζωη and γραφω.] A description of the forms, natures, and properties of animals.
If we contemplate the end, its principal final cause being the glory of its Maker, this leads us into divinity; and for its subordinate, as it is designed for alimental sustenance to living creatures, and medicinal uses to man, we are thereby conducted into zoography. Glanville.

ZOO'LOGY. n. s. [of ζωον and λογος.] A treatise concerning living creatures.

ZO'OPHYTE. n. s. [ζωοφυτον, of ζωος and φυτον.] Certain vegetables or substances which partake of the nature both of vegetables and animals.

ZOO'PHORICK Column. n. s. [In architecture.] A statuary column, or a column which bears or supports the figure of an animal. Dict.

ZOO'PHORUS. n. s. [ζωοφορος.] A part between the architraves and cornice, so called on account of the ornaments carved on it, among which were the figures of animals. Dict.
