THE HISTORY OF

THE CITY OF BATH

DICTIONARY

OF THE

ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

K A Y

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clack, crack, back, brick, stick, pluck, check, which were written anciently with e final: as, clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e final: as, cloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, shock, leek. The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KALENDAR. n. s. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour

Stand as accursed in the calendar. Shakesp. Macb.

KALI. n. s. [an Arabic word.] Seaweed, of the ashes of which glass was made; whence the word alkali.

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked. Kam, in Erse, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry: clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purpose. A-schembo, Ital. hence our English a-kimbo. Clean kam is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kim, kam.

This is clean kam: merely awry. Shakesp.

TO KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nests, set all their young ones a-gaping: but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. s. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The dastard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaws her craven kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, coil the noble bird. Dryd.

KAYLE. n. s. [quille, Fr.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

K E D

And now at keels they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance. Sidney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayles, or the like idle exercises. Carac.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

TO KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dut.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rheums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The faction, is it not notorious?

Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

TO KE'CKLE. v. a. To defend a cable round with rope. Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY. n. s. [commonly kex, cigue, Fr. cicuta, Lat. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or kex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire both for hemlock, and any other hollow-joined plant.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, hurs, Losing both beauty and utility. Shak. Hen. V.

KE'CKY. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

TO KEDGE. v. a. [kaghe, a small vessel, Dut.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they set the foresail, or foretop-sail and mizen, and so let her drive with the tide. The sails are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it: then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

K E E

KE'DGER. n. s. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KEE. The provincial plural of cow, properly kin.

A lass that Cic'ly light had won his heart,
Cic'ly the western lass that tends the hee. Gay.

KEDLACK. n. s. A weed among corn; charnock. Tusser.

KEEL. n. s. [ceale, Sax, kiel, Dut. quille, Fr.] The bottom of the ship.

Portinus

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her, her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous entering at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles; which see.

TO KEEL. v. a. [caelan, Sax.] This word, which is preserved in Shakespeare, Hammer explains thus: To keel seems to mean to drink so deep, as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship.—In Ireland, to keel the pot is to scum it.

While greasy Joan doth keel the pot. Shakesp.

KE'ELPAT. n. s. [caelan, Sax. to cool, and fat or vat a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. s. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

TO KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seamen's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cene, Sax. kuhn, Germ köen Dut.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt. We say keen of an edge, and sharp either of edge or point.

Come, thick night,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakesp.

Here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side.
Shakesp.
To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my sabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.
A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryd.

2. Severe; piercing.

The winds
Blow moist, and keen, shattering the graceful locks
Of these fair spreading trees; which bids us seek Some better shroud. Milton's Par. Lost.
The cold was very supportable; but as it changed to the northwest, or north, it became excessively keen. Ellis's Voyage.

3. Eager; vehement.

Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and greedy to confound a man. Shakesp.
Keen dispatch of real hunger. Milton.
The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up a piece of the coat. L'Estrange.
Those curs are so extremely hungry, that they are too keen at the sport, and worry their game.
Tatler.

This was a prospect so very inviting, that it could not be easily withstood by any who have so keen an appetite for wealth. Swift.

4. Acrimonious; bitter of mind.

Good father cardinal, cry thou, Amen,
To my keen curses. Shakesp. King John.
I have known some of these absent officers as keen against Ireland, as if they had never been indebted to her. Swift.

TO KEEN. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sharpen. An unauthorised word.

Nor when cold Winter keens the brightening flood,
Would I weak shivering linger on the brink.
Thomson.

KE'ENLY. adv. [from keen.] Sharply; vehemently; eagerly; bitterly.

KE'ENNESS. n. s. [from keen.]

1. Sharpness; edge.

No, not the hangman's ax bears half the keenness
Of thy sharp envy. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

2. Rigour of weather; piercing cold.

3. Asperity; bitterness of mind.

That they might keep up the keenness against the court, his lordship furni-hed them with informations, to the king's disadvantage. Clarendon.
The sting of every reproachful speech is the truth of it; and to be conscious is that which gives an edge, and keenness to the invective. South.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

TO KEEP. v. a. [cepan, Sax. kepen, old
Dut.]

1. To retain; not to lose.

I kept the field with the death of some, and flight of others. Sidney.
We have examples in the primitive church of such as by fear being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel. Whitgift.
Keep in memory what I preached unto you.
1 Corinthians.

This charge I keep till my appointed day
Of reminding up. Milton.
His loyalty he kept, his love, his zeal. Milton.
You have lost a child; but you have kept one child, and are likely to do so long. Temple.
If we would weigh, and keep in our minds, what we are considering, that would instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into distinctions. Locke.

Paul dwelt with a soldier that kept him.
Acts, xxviii.

7. To detain, to hold as a motive.

But what's the cause that keeps you here with me?
—That I may know what keeps me here with you.
Dryden.

8. To hold for another.

A man delivers money or stuff to keep.
Exod. xxii. 7.
Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store.
Milton.

9. To tend; to have care of.

God put him in the garden of Eden to keep it.
Gen. ii. 15.
While in her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor, it chanced that a merchant saw and liked her. Corew.

Count it thine
To till and keep, and of the fruit to eat. Milton.

10. To preserve in the same tenour or state.

To know the true state, I will keep this order.
Bacon.

Take this at least, this last advice, my son,
Keep a still rein, and move but gently on:
The coursers of themselves will run too fast,
Your art must be to moderate their haste. Addison.

11. To regard; to attend.

While the stars and course of heav'n I keep,
My weary'd eyes were seiz'd with fatal sleep.
Dryden.

12. To not suffer to fail.

My mercy will I keep for him for ever.
Psalin lxxxix.

13. To hold in any state.

Ingenuous shame, and the apprehensions of displeasure, are the only true restraints: these alone ought to hold the reins, and keep the child in order. Locke on Education.

Men are guilty of many faults in the exercise of this faculty of the mind, which keep them in ignorance. Locke.

Happy souls! who keep such a sacred dominion over their inferior and animal powers, that the sensitive tumults never rise to disturb the superior and better operations of the reasoning mind.
Watts.

14. To retain by some degree of force in any place or state. It is often followed in this sense by particles; as, down, under, in, off.

This wickedness is found by thee; no good deeds of mine have been able to keep it down in thee. Sidney.

It is hardly to be thought that any governor should so much malign his successor, as to suffer an evil to grow up which he might timely have kept under; or perhaps nourish it with coloured countenance of such sinister means. Spenser.

What! old acquaintance! could not all this flesh
Keep in a little life? Poor Jack, farewell. Shakesp.
Venus took the guard of noble Hector's corse,
And kept the dogs off: night and day applying sovereign force

Of rosy balms, that to the dogs were horrible in taste. Chapman's Iliad.

The Chinese sail where they will; which sheweth that their law of keeping out strangers is a law of pusillanimity and fear. Bacon.
And those that cannot live from him asunder, Ungratefully shall strive to keep him under.
Milton.

If any ask me what would satisfy,
To make life easy, thus I would reply:
As much as keeps out hunger, thirst, and cold.
Dryden.

Matters, recommended by our passions, take possession of our minds, and will not be kept out.
Locke.

Prohibited commodities should be kept out, and useless ones impoverish us by being brought in.
Locke.

An officer with one of these unbecoming qualities, is looked upon as a proper person to keep off impertinence and solicitation from his superior.
Addison's Spectator.

And if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather? Prior.
We have it in our power to keep in our breaths, and to suspend the efficacy of this natural function. Cheyne.

15. To continue any state or action.

Men gave ear, waited, and kept silence at my counsel. Job, xxix. 21.

Auria made no stay, but still kept on his course.
Knolles.

It was then such a calm, that the ships were not able to keep way with the galleys. Knolles.

The moon that distance keeps till night. Milton.

An heap of ants on a hillock will more easily be kept to an uniformity in motion than these.
Glanville's Scepstis.

He dy'd in fight:
Fought next my person; as in consort fought:
Kept pace for pace, and blow for blow. Dryden.

He, being come to the estate, keeps on a very busy family: the markets are weekly frequented, and the commodities of his farm carried out and sold. Locke.

Invading foes, without resistance,
With ease I make to keep their distance. Swift.

16. To preserve in any state.

My son, keep the flower of thine age sound.

Tillotson.

27. To restrain; to with-hold.
If any rebel or vain spirit of mine
Did with the least affection of a welcome,
Give entertainment to the might of it;
Let heav'n for ever keep it from my head. Shak.
Some obscure passages in the inspir'd volume keep from the knowledge of divine mysteries.
Boyle.

If the God of this world did not blind their eyes,
it would be impossible, so long as men love themselves,
to keep them from being religious.
Tillotson.

There is no virtue children should be excited to, nor fault they should be kept from, which they may not be convinced of by reasons.
Locke on Education.

If a child be constantly kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, the custom of forbearing will preserve him. Locke.
By this they may keep them from little faults.
Locke.

28. To debar from any place.
Ill fenc'd for Heav'n to keep out such a foe.
Milton.

29. To keep back. To reserve; to with-hold.
Whatsoever the Lord shall answer, I will declare;
I will keep nothing back from you.
Jer. xlii. 4.

Some are so close and reserved, as they will not shew their wares but by a dark light, and seem always to keep back somewhat. Bacon's Ess.

30. To keep back. To with-hold; to restrain.
Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins.
Psalm, xix.

31. To keep company. To frequent any one; to accompany.

Heav'n doth know, so shall the world perceive,
That I have turn'd away my former self,
So will I those that kept me company. Shakesp.

Why should he call her whore? Who keeps her company?
What place? what time? Shakesp. Othello.

What mean'st thou, bride! this company to keep?
To sit up, till thou fain would'st sleep? Donne.

Neither will I wretched thee
In death forsake, but keep thee company. Dryden.

32. To keep company with. To have familiar intercourse.
A virtuous woman is obliged not only to avoid immodesty, but the appearance of it; and she could not approve of a young woman keeping company with men, without the permission of father or mother. Braome on the Odyssey.

33. To keep in. To conceal; not to tell.
I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from me what I am willing to keep in. Shakesp.

Syphax, your zeal becomes importunate:
I have hitherto permitted it to rave,
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it.
Addison.

34. To keep in. To restrain; to curb.
If thy daughter be shameless, keep her in straightly, lest she abuse herself through

It will teach them to keep in, and so master their inclinations. Locke on Education.

35. To keep off. To bear to distance; not to admit.

weight and fineness, and keep it up to the standard.
Arbuthnot.

38. To keep up. To continue; to hinder from ceasing.
You have enough to keep you alive, and to keep up and improve your hopes of heaven. Taylor.
In joy, that which keeps up the action is the desire to continue it. Locke.

Young heirs, from their own reflecting upon the estates they are born to, are of no use but to keep up their families, and transmit their lands and houses in a line to posterity. Addison.

During his studies and travels he kept up a punctual correspondence with Eudoxus. Addison.

39. To keep under. To oppress; to subdue.
O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us. Hooker.

Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last.
Stillingfleet.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies, that we keep under our appetites,
and do not let them loose into the enjoyments of sense. Atterbury.

To live like those that have their hope in another life, implies, that we keep under our appetites,
and do not let them loose into the enjoyments of
sense. Atterbury.

To KEEP. v. n.

1. To remain by some labour or effort in a certain state.
With all our force we kept aloof to sea,
And gain'd the island where our vessels lay.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. To continue in any place or state; to stay.

that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?
Eightscore eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial's score times?
Oh weary reckoning! Shakesp. Othello.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the King,
To be her men, and wear her livery. Shakesp.
Thou shalt keep fast by my young men, until they have euded. Ruth, ii. 21.

The necessity of keeping well with the maritime powers, will persuade them to follow our measures. Temple.

On my better hand Aseanius hung,
And with unequal paces tript along:
Creusa kept behind. Dryden's Tneid.

The goddess born in secret pin'd;
Nor visited the camp, nor in the council join'd;
But keeping close, his gnawing heart he fed
With hopes of vengeance. Dryden's Homer.

And while it keeps there, it keeps within our author's limitation. Locke.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamesters company. Locke on Education.

There are eases in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

The endeavours Achillies used to meet with Hector, the contrary endeavours of the Trojan to keep out of reach, are the intrigue.
Pope's View of Epic Poetry.

3. To remain unhurt; to last; to be durable.
Disdain me not, although I be not fair:
Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
Nor storms do turn! Sidney.

Grapes will keep in a vessel half full of wine, so that the grapes touch not the wine. Bacon.
If the malt be not thoroughly dried, the ale it makes will not keep. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To dwell; to live constantly.
A breath thou art,
Servile to all the skiey influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st, Hourly allit. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

Knock at the study, where, they say, he keeps,
To ruminate strange plots of due revenge. Shakesp.

5. To adhere strictly; with to.
Did they keep to one constant dress they would sometimes be in fashion, which they never are.
Addison's Spectator.

It is so whilst we keep to our rule; but when we forsake that we go astray. Baker on Learning.

6. To keep on. To go forward.
So carefully he took the doom;
Nor shrunk, nor slept from death,
But with unalter'd pace kept on. Dryden.

7. To keep up. To continue unsubdued.
He grew sick of a common union; yet he still kept up, that he might free his country. Life of Cleon.

8. The general idea of this word is care, continuance, or duration, sometimes with an intimation of cogency or coercion.

KEEP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Custody; guard.

Youth is least looked into when they stand in most need of good keep and regard. Ascham.

KEEPER. n. s. [from keep.]

1. One who holds any thing for the use of another.
The good old man having neither reason to dissuade, nor hopes to persuade, received the things with the mind of a keeper, not of an owner. Sidney.

2. One who has prisoners in custody.
The keeper of the prison, call to him. Shakesp.
To now

With horns exalted stands, and seems to lowe:
A noble charge; her keeper by her side
To watch her walks his hundred eyes apply'd.
Dryden.

A pleasant beverage he prepar'd before,
Of wine and water mix'd, with added store
Of opium; to his keeper this he brought,
Who swallow'd unaware the sleepy draught.
Dryden.

3. One who has the care of parks, or beasts of chase.
There is an old tale goes, that Herene the hunter,
Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest,

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun. South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife; At all times to your will conformable: Ever in fear to kindle your dislike. Shakesp.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and counteth me as one of his enemies. Job, xix. 11.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire, 'Till all inflam'd, they all in one agree. Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind. Dryden.

To K'INDLE. v. n. [cinnu, Welsh; cyn-dolan, Sax.]

1. To catch fire.
When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee. Is. xliii. 2.

2. [From cennan, Sax.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place? —As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled. Shakesp.

K'INDLER. n. s. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep, Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep. Gay.

K'INDLY. adv. [from kind.] Benevolently; favourably; with good will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company. Shakesp.

I sometimes lay here in Corioli, At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly. Shak.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another. Rom. xii. 10.

His grief some pity, others blame; The fatal cause all kindly seek. Prior.

Who, with less designing ends, Kindlier entertain their friends; With good words, and count'nance sprightly Strive to treat them all politely. Swift.

K'INDLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.
This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby. Hammond.

These soft fires Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat, Of various influence, foment and warm, Temper or nourish. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do'st thou move,
And scatter'st, where thou goest, the kindly seeds
Of love. Dryden.

Ye heav'ns, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly shower! Pope.

KINDNESS. n. s. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence; good-will; favour; love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men. Eccles. xxxvi. 23.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people. Collier on Friendl.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd. Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us. Rogers's Sermons.

KINDRED. n. s. [from kind; cynpene, Sax.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation: consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own. Dry.

2. Relation; suit.

An old mothy saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred. Shakesp.

3. Relative.

I think there is no man secure
But the queen's kindred. Shakesp. Rich. III.

Nor needs thy juster title the foul guilt
Of Eastern kings, who, to secure their reign, Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain. Denham.

KINDRED. adj. Congeneal; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exilium from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god. Dryden.

KINE. n. s. plur. from cow.

To milk the kine,
Ere the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eye. Ben Jonson.

A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine. Gay.

KING. n. s. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cyning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stont or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength. Verstegan.]

1. Monarch; supreme governor.

The great king of kings
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder. Shakesp. Rich. III.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakesp. Merch. Venice.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallows wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakesp.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thus states were form'd; the name of king unknown,

'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one:
'Twas virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Diffusing blessings, or averting harms,
The same which in a sire the sons obey'd,
A prince the father of a people made. Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors. Bacon

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen. Pope.

4. King at Arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux. Phillips.

A letter under his own hand was lately shewed me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms. Walton.

To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar,
And so I am; then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again. Shakesp. Rich. II.

KINGAPPLE. n. s. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting. Mortimer.

KINGCRAFT. n. s. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.KINGCUP. n. s. [king and cup.] The name is properly, according to Gerard, kingcob.] The flower crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair. Peacham.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows. Gay.

KINGDOM. n. s. [from king.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

You're welcome,
Most learned reverend sir, into our kingdom. Shak.

Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon, king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numb. xxxii.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.

The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.

The wat'ry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia. Shakesp.

KINGFISHER. n. s. [halcyon.] A species of bird.

When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bestows, kingfishers play on shore. Mary's Virgil.

KINGLIKE. } adj. [from king.]KINGLY. } adj. [from king.]

1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.

There we'll sit Ruling in large and ample empery, O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms. Shakesp.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.

In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.

The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.

Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st the kingly couch
A watch-case to a common larum bell? Shakesp.

Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command. Shak.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.

He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprizes. Sidney.

I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingy in my thoughts. Shakesp.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty; with superior dignity.

Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milton's Par. Lost.

His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod. Dunciad.

KINGSEVIL. n. s. [king and evil.] A scrofulous distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.

Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingsevils, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wisem. Surg.

KINGSHIP. n. s. [from king.] Royalty; monarchy.

They designed and proposed to me the new-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.

We know how successful the late usurper was, while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the imposture, upon his aspiring to the same himself, he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. s. [asphodclus.] A plant.KINGSTONE. n. s. [squatina.] A fish. *Ains.*KINSFOLK. n. s. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

Those lords, since their first grants of those lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks. Spen.

My kinsfolk have failed, and my familiar friends Forgotten me. Job, xix. 14.

KINSMAN. n. s. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.

The jury he made to be chosen out of the nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.

Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd, Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds deem'd. Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd in fight. Dryden's Fables.

There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples: the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. Addison on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. s. [kin and woman.] A female relation.

A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither. Sida.

The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis's Letters.

KIRK. n. s. [cyrce, Sax.; κίρκε,] An old word for a church, yet retained in Scotland.

Home they hasten the posts to night,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds, and sweet eglantine. Spen.

Nor is it all the nation bath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots. Clavel.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. King Charles.

KIRTLE. n. s. [cyrte, Sax.] An upper garment; a gown.

All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.
To KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; κίω.]

1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can miss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other. Shak.

2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it; but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shak.
3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shak. Merch. Ven.

KISS. n. s. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What sense had I of her stol'n hours of lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shak. Othel.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryden.
KISSER. n. s. [from kiss.] One that kisses.
KISSINGCRUST. n. s. [kissing and crust.]
Crust formed where one loaf in the oven touches another.

castle salmon is sent to London and elsewhere.

KITCHEN. n. s. [kegin, Welsh; keg, Flem. cycene, Sax. cuisine, Fr. cucina, Ital. kyshen, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.
These being culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometime amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heaven, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use. Hooker.
He was taken into service in his court to a base office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. s. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchengardens. Bacon.
A kitchengarden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery. Spectator.

KITCHENMAID. n. s. [kitchen and maid.]
A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.
KITCHENSTUFF. n. s. [kitchen and stuff.]
The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.
As thrifty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings in the snuff
Of wasting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer. Donne.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry. Hudibras.
KITCHENWENCH. n. s. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shak.
Roasting and boiling leave to the kitchenwench.
Swift.

KITCHENWORK. n. s. [kitchen and work.]
Cookery; work done in the kitchen.
KITE. n. s. [ȳt, Sax. milvus.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and bozards prey at liberty. Shakesp.
The heron, when she soareth high, so as sometimes she is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shak. K. Lear.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or childishly make paper kites of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Government of the Tongue.

KITESFOOT. n. s. A plant. Ainsworth.
KITTEN. n. s. [katteken, Dut. It is probably that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten, or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.] A young cat.
That a mare will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the driving of whelps and kittens. Brown's Vulg. Err.
It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wiscm.
Helen was just slipt into bed;
Her eyebrows on the toilet lay,
Away the kitten with them fled,
A- fees belonging to her prey. Prior.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.
So it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakesp.
The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak,
and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

To KICK. v. n. [from clack.]
1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dut. knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knap may be the same.
I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.
An ass was wishing, in a hard Winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNA'BBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.
Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron.
Brown.

KNACK. n. s. [cnapmze skill, Sax.]
1. A little machine; a pretty contrivance;
a toy.
When I was young, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it To her acceptance. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

For thee, son's boy,
If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from success. Shak.
This cap was moulded on a porringer,
A velvet dish; nee, fie, 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut-shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shakesp.
But is't not presumption to write verse to you,
Who make the better poems of the two?
For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
Alas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
A copper-plate, with almanacks
Engrav'd upon't with other knacks. Hudibras.
2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.
I'll teach you the knacks
Of eating flax,
And out of their noses
Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.
The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address.
L'Estrange.
Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack
Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryd.
My author has a great knack at remarks; in the end he makes another about our refining in controversy, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.
3. A nice trick.
For how should equal colours do the knack?
Cameleous who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.
KNACKER. n. s. [from knack.]
1. A maker of small work.
One part for plow-right, knacker, and smith. Mortimer.

2. A rope-maker. [Restio, Lat.] Ainsw.
KNAG. n. s. [knag a wart, Dan. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.
KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty;
set with hard rough knots.
KNAP. n. s. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnæp, Sax. a protuberance.] A protuberance, a swelling prominence.
You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dut.]
1. To bite; to break short.
He knappeth the spear in sunder. Common Prayer.
He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. More.

2. [Knapp, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knap a pair of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.
I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knap in before they knew they were out. Wiseman.
KNAPBOTTLE. n. s. [papaver spumcum.]
A plant.
To KNA'PPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNAPSACK. n. s. [from knappen to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, 'till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. Jing Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it farthest: there are hedges in Summer, and bars in Winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your hottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Druiden.

KNAPWEED. n. s. [jacea, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. s. [knor, Germ.] A hard knot. A cake of scurf lies haking on the ground, And prickly stubs instead of trees are found; Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old, Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryd.

KNAVE. n. s. [cnapa, Sax.]

1. A boy; a male child.

2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please With gentle beams not hurting sight, Yet hath sir sun the greater praise, Because from him doth come her light: So if my man must praises have, What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.

He eats and drinks with his domestic slaves; A verier hind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

Whic both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice; But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Druden.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account, If we are brought in play upon't, Or but by casting knaves get in, What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNAVEERY. n. s. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knaveery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakesp.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knaveery to conceal it. Shak. Winter's Tale.

The cunning courtier should be slighted too, Who with dull knaveery makes so much ado; 'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast, Like Psop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best, With amber bracelets, beads, and all this knaveery. Shakesp.

KNAVISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavish to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here she comes curst and sad; Cupid is a knavish lad, 'Thus to make poor females mad. Shakesp.

KNAVISHLY. adj. [from knavish.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.

2. Waggishly; mischievously.

TO KNEAD. v. a. [cnædan, Sax. kneden, Dut.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the heating of the oven. Shakesp.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be, Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Donne.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man His kingdom o'er his kindred world began: 'Till knowledge misapply'd, misunderstood, And pride of empire, sour'd his balny blood. Druden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd, And kneaded up alike with moistning blood. Dryd.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heat, seasoned it up with some furious particles of the lion. Addison's Spectator.

No man ever reapt his corn, Or from the oven drew his bread, Ere hinds and bakers yet were born, That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.

The cake she kneaded was the sav'ry meat. Prior.

KNEADINGTROUGH. n. s. [knæd and trough.] A trough in which the paste of bread is worked together.

Eggs shall come into thy kneadingtroughs. Exod.

KNEE. n. s. [cnæp, Sax. knæ, Dut.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father

Was a most sainted king: the queen that bore thee,

Oftrner upon her knees than on her feet, Died every day she liv'd. Shakesp. Mabeth.

Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment, made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled. Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton.

Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

I'd lay down, and leaning on her knees, Invok'd the cause of all her miseries; And cast her languishing regards above, For help from Heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden.

2. A knee is a piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great pollicicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tossed; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

TO KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent fall down, and knee the way into his mercy. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.

The sacred priests with ready knives hereave

The beast of life, and in full bowls receive

The streaming blood. Dryden's F'n.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,

And, trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. Watts.

KNIGHT. n. s. [cnif, Sax. knæcht,

Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight.

Shakesp. King Lear.
This knight; but yet why should I call him knight,

To give impiety to this rev'rent stile? Daniel.
No squire with knight did better fit

In parts, in manners, and in wit. Hudibras.

2. Shakespeare uses it of a female, and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that slew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakesp.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT Errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Denham.

The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fritters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Hudibras.

KNIGHT Errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for courage is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the Post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

There are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to swear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the Shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight; but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.
George's day he was knighted. Hotton.

The lord protector knighted the king: and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Befitting a knight; be seeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws:

As in a listed field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryd.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. s. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his nourling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Fairy Q.

Speak truly, on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee, Heaven, and thy valour. Shak.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to woo,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? B. Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise, You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knightless guile, and treacherous train,

Fair knighthood foully shamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT. v. a. preter. knit or knitted.

[cnætan, Sax.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

In their distractions: they are in my power. Shak.

O let the vile world end,
And the premised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together! Shakesp. Hen. VI.

Lay your highness' Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie

For ever knit. Shakesp. Macbeth.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls Married in league. Shakesp. K. John.

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers loves.

Shakesp.

If ye be come peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you. 1 Chron. xii. 17.

That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love. Col. ii. 2.

He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knitings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Hotton's Architecture.

Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Usurp the chair of wit! Ben Jonson's New Inn.

Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question.

Bacon.

These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one. Hayward.

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.

God gave several abilities to several persons,
that each might help to supply the publick needs, and, by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a discharge. Wiseman's Surgery.

4. To contract.

What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,

And turn thy eyes so coldly on thy prince? Addis.

5. To tie up.

He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth.

Acts, x. 11.

LA'BEL. n. s. [labellum, Lat.]

1. A small slip or scrip of writing.

When wak'd, I found
This label on my bosom; whose containing Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

2. Any thing appendant to a larger writing.

On the label of lead, the heads of St. Peter and St. Paul are impressed from the papal seal.

3. [In law.] A narrow slip of paper or parchment affixed to a deed or writing, in order to hold the appending seal. So also any paper, annexed by way of addition or explication to any will or testament, is called a label or codicil.

Harris.

God join'd my heart to Romeo's; thou our hands;
And ere this hand, by thee to Romeo seal'd,
Shall be the label to another deed,
Or my true heart with treacherous revolt
Turn to another, this shall slay them both. Shak.

LA'BENT. adj. [labens, Lat.] Sliding; gliding; shipping. Dict.

LA'BIAL. adj. [labialis, Lat.] Uttered by the lips.

A weight of woes, and breathe the vital air. Pope.

LABO'RIOUSNESS. n. s. [from laborious.]

1. Toilsomeness; difficulty.

The parallel holds in the gainlessness, as well as the laboriousness of the work: those wretched creatures, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digg'd; no more is the insatiate miser. Decay of Piety.

2. Diligence; assiduity.

LA'BOUR. n. s. [labour, Fr. labor, Lat.]

1. The act of doing what requires a painful exertion of strength, or wearisome perseverance; pains; toil; travail; work.

If I find her honest, I lose not my labour; if she be otherwise, it is labour well bestowed. Shak.

I sent to know your faith, lest the tempter have tempted you, and our labour be in vain. 1 Thes. iii. 5.

2. Work to be done.

Being a labour of so great difficulty, the exact performance thereof we may rather wish than look for. Hooker.

If you had been the wife of Hercules,
Six of his labours you'd have done, and sav'd
Your husband so much sweat. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

3. Exercise; motion with some degree of violence.

Moderate labour of the body conduces to the preservation of health, and curing many initial diseases: but the toil of the mind destroys health, and generates maladies. Harvey.

4. Childbirth; travail.

Sit of women's labours thou hast charge,
And generation goodly doest enlarge,
Incline thy will to affect our wishful vow. Spenser.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings, and of grinding pain;
My throws come thicker, and my cries increas'd,
Which with her hand the conscious nurse subpress'd. Dryden.

Not one woman of two hundred dies in labour. Grant.

His heart is in continual labour; it even travails with the obligation, and is in pangs till it be delivered. South's Sermons.

To LA'BOUR. v. n. [laboro, Lat.]

5. To be in distress; to be pressed.

To this infernal lake the fury flies,
Here hides her hated head, and frees the lab'ring skies. Dryden.

Trumpets and drums shall fright her from the throne,
As sounding cymbals aid the lab'ring moon. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

This exercise will call down the favour of Heaven upon you, to remove those afflictions you now labour under from you. Wake's Prev. for Death.

6. To be in child-birth; to be in travail.

There lay a log unlighted on the earth,
When she was labouring in throws of birth;
For th' unborn chief the fatal sisters came,
And rais'd it up, and toss'd it on the flame. Dryden's Ovid.

Here, like some furious prophet, Pindar rode,
And seem'd to labour with th' inspiring God. Pope.

To LA'BOUR. v. a.

1. To work at; to move with difficulty; to form with labour; to prosecute with effort.

To use brevity, and avoid much labouring of the work, is to be granted to him that will make an abridgment. 2 Mac. 2.

Had you requir'd my helpful hand
Th' artificer and art you might command,
To labour arms for Troy. Dryden's Æneid.
An eager desire to know something concerning him, has occasioned mankind to labour the point, under these disadvantages, and turn on all lauds to see if there were any thing left which might have the least appearance of information.
Pope's Essay on Homer.

2. To beat; to belabour.

Take, shepherd, take a plant of stubborn oak,
And labour him with many a sturdy stroke. Dryd.

LA'BOURER. n. s. [laboureur, Fr.]

1. One who is employed in coarse and toilsome work.

If a state run most to noblemen and gentlemen, and that the husbandmen be but as their work-folks and labourers, you may have a good cavalry, but never good stable foot. Bacon.

The sun but seem'd the lab'rer of the year,
Each waxing moon supply'd her wat'ry store,
To swell those tides, which from the line did bear
Their brimful vessels to the Belgian shore. Dryden.
Labourers and idle persons, children and stripplings, old men and young men, must have divers diets. Arbuthnot.

Not balmy sleep to lab'ers faint with pain,
Not show'rs to larks, or sun-shine to the bee,
Are half so charming, as thy sight to me. Pope.

Yet hence the poor are cloth'd, the hungry fed,
Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The lab'rer bears. Pope.

The prince cannot say to the merchant, I have no need of thee; nor the merchant to the labourer,
I have no need of thee. Swift.

2. One who takes pains in any employment.

Sir, I am a true labourer; I earn that I eat; get that I wear; owe no man hate; envy no man's happiness. Shakesp.

The stone that labours up the hill,
Mocking the lab'rer's toil, returning still,
Is love. Granville.

LA'BOURSOME. adj. [from labour.] Made with great labour and diligence. Not in use.

Forget
Your laboursome and dainty trims, wherein You made great Jove angry. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

He hath, my lord, by laboursome petition,
Wring from me my slow leave. Shakesp. Hamlet.

LA'BRA. n. s. [Span.] A lip. Not used.

Word of denial in thy lab'ra's here;
Word of denial: froth and scum, thou ly'st. Shax.

LA'BYRINTH. n. s. [labyrinthus, Lat.]
A maze; a place formed with inextricable windings.

Suffolk, stay;
Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth;
There Minotaur, and ugly treasurs lurk. Shakesp.

Words, which would tear
The tender labyrinth of a maid's soft tear. Donne.

My clamours tear
The ear's soft labyrinth, and cleft the air. Sandys.
The earl of Essex had not proceeded with his accustomed wariness and skill; but run into laby-riths, from whence he could not disentangle himself. Clarendon.

My soul is on her journey; do not now
Divert, or lead her back, to lose herself
I' th' maze and winding labyrinths o' th' world.
Denham.

LAC. n. s.

Lac is usually distinguished by the name of a gum, but improperly, because it is inflammable, and not soluble in water. We have three sorts of it, which are all the product of the same tree.
1. The stick lac. 2. The seed lac. 3. The shell lac. Authors leave us uncertain whether this drug belongs to the animal or the vegetable kingdom. Hill.

LACE. n. s. [lacet, Fr. laqueus, Lat.]

1. A string; a cord.

There the fond fly entangled, struggled long,
Himself to free thereout; but all in vain:
For striving more, the more in laces strong,
Himself he tied, and wrapt his wings twain
In limy snares, the subtil loops among. Spenser.

2. A snare; a gin.

The king had snared been in love's strong lac.
Fairfax.

3. A plaited string, with which women fasten their clothes.

O! cut my lace, lest my heart cracking, it Break too. Shakesp.

Dull ne'er was call'd to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face. Swift.

4. Ornaments of fine thread curiously woven.

Our English dames are much given to the wearing of costly laces; and, if they be brought from Italy, they are in great esteem. Bacon.

5. Textures of thread, with gold or silver.

He wears a stuff, whose thread is coarse and round,
But trimm'd with curious lace. Herbert.

6. Sugar. A cant word; now out of use.

If haply he the sect pursues,
That read and comment upon news;
He takes up their mysterious face,
He drinks his coffee without lace. Prior.

To LACE. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To fasten with a string run through eilet holes.

I caused a fomentation to be made, and put on a laced sock, by which the weak parts were strengthened. Wiseman.

At this, for new replies he did not stay,
But lac'd his crested helm, and strode away. Dryd.

These glittering spoils, now made the victor's gain,
He to his body suits; but suits in vain:
Messapus' helm he finds among the rest,
And laces on, and wears the waving crest. Dryd.

Like Mrs. Primly's great belly; she may lace it down before, but it burnishes on her hips. Congreve.

When Jenny's stays are newly lac'd, Fair Alma plays about her waist. Prior.

2. To adorn with gold or silver textures sewed on.

It is but a night-gown in respect of yours;
cloth of gold and coats, and lac'd with silver. Shakesp.

3. To embellish with variegations.

Look, love, what envious streaks
Do lace the severing clouds in yonder East;
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day Stands tiptoe on the misty mountains tops. Shakesp.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustic, makes a front. Pope.

4. To beat; whether from the form which L'Esrange uses, or by corruption of lash.

Go you, and find me out a man that has no curiosity at all, or I'll lace your coat for ye.
L'Esrange.

LACED Mutton. An old word for a whore.

Aye, sir, I, a lost mutton, gave you letter to her a lac'd mutton, and she gave me nothing for my labour. Shakesp.

LACEMAN. n. s. [lace and man.] One who deals in lace.

I met with a nonjurer, engaged with a laceman, whether the late French king was most like Augustus Caesar, or Nero. Addison's Spectator.

LACERABLE. adj. [from lacerate.] Such as may be torn.

Since the lungs are obliged to a perpetual commerce with the air, they must necessarily lie open to great damages, because of their thin and lace-rable composure. Harvey.

To LACERATE. v. a. [lacero, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to separate by violence.

And my sons lacerate and rip up, viper-like, the womb that brought them forth.

The heat breaks through the water, so as to lacerate and lift up great bubbles too heavy for the air to buoy up, and causeth boiling.

Here lacerated friendship claims a tear.
Derham's Physico Theology.
Vanity of Human Wishes.

LACERATION. n. s. [from lacerate.] The act of tearing or rending; the breach made by tearing.

The effects are, extension of the great vessels, compression of the lesser, and lacerations upon small causes. Arbuthnot.

LACERATIVE. adj. [from lacerate.] Tearing; having the power to tear.

Some depend upon the intemperament of the part ulcerated, others upon the continual afflux of lacerative humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

LACHRYMAL. adj. [lachrymal, Fr.] Generating tears.

It is of an exquisite sense, that, upon any touch, the tears might be squeezed from the lachrymal glands, to wash and clean it.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

LACHRYMARY. adj. [lachryma, Lat.]
Containing tears.

How many dresses are there for each particular deity? what a variety of shapes in the ancient urns, lamps, and lachrymary vessels? Addison.

LACHRYMATION. n. s. [from lachryma, Lat.] The act of weeping, or shedding tears.LACHRYMATORY. n. s. [lachrimatoire, thered to the honour of the dead.LACINIATED. adj. [from lacinia, Lat.]

Adorned with fringes and borders.To LACK. v. a. [laecken to lessen, Dut.]
To want; to need; to be without.

Every good and holy desire, though it lack the form, hath notwithstanding in itself the substance, and with him the force of prayer who regardeth
the very moanings, groans, and sighs of the heart.
Hooker.

A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness; thou shalt not lack any thing in it.
Deut. viii. 9.

One day we hope thou shalt bring back,
Dear Bullingbroke, the justice that we lack. Daniel.
Intreat they may; authority they lack. Daniel.

To LACK. v. n.

1. To be in want.

The lions do lack and suffer hunger. Com. Pray.

2. To be wanting.

Peradventure there shall lack five of the fifty righteous; wilt thou destroy all the city for lack of five? Gen. viii. 23.

There was nothing lacking to them: David recovered all. 1 Sam. xxx. 19.
That which was lacking on your part, they have supplied. 1 Cor. xvi. 17.

LACK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Want; need; failure.

In the scripture there neither wanteth any thing, the lack wherof might deprive us of life.
Hooker.

Many that are not mad
Have sure more lack of reason. Shakesp.
He was not able to keep that place three days,
for lack of victuals. Knolles.

The trenchant blade, toledo trusty,
For want of fighting was grown rusty,
And eat into itself, for lack.

2. Lack, whether noun or verb, is now almost obsolete.LACKBRAIN. n. s. [lack and brain.] One that wants wit.

L A C

What a lackbrain is this? Our plot is as good a plot as ever was laid. Shakesp. Henry IV.

LA'CKER. n. s. [from lac, Lat.] A kind of varnish, which, spread upon a white substance, exhibits a gold colour.

To LA'CKER. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear over with lacker.

Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair. Pope.

LA'CKEY. n. s. [laquais, Fr.] An attending servant; a foot-boy.

They would shame to make me
Wait else at door; a fellow counsellor,
'Mong boys, and grooms, and lackeys!
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Though his youthful blood be fir'd with wine,
He's cautious to avoid the coach and six,
And on the lackeys will no quarrel fix. Dryden's Juvenal.

Lacqueys were never so saucy and pragmatical as they are now-a-days. Addison's Spectator.

To LA'CKEY. v. a. [from the noun.] To attend servilely. I know not whether Milton has used this word very properly.

This common body,
Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream,
Goes to, and back, *lacquey*ing the varying tide,
To rot itself with motion. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

So dear to hear'n is saintly chastity,
That when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt. Milt.

To LA'CKEY. v. n. To act as a footboy; to pay servile attendance.

Oft have I servants seen on horses ride,
The free and noble lacquey by their side. Sandys.
Our Italian translator of the Æneis is a foot poet; he lackeys by the side of Virgil, but never mounts behind him. Dryden.

LA'CKLINEN. adj. [lack and linen.] Wanting shirts.

You poor, base, rascally, cheating, lacklinen mate; away, you mouldy rogue, away. Shakesp. Henry IV.

LA'CKLUSTRE. adj. [lack and lustre.] Wanting brightness.

And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lacklustre eye,
Says very wisely, It is ten o'clock. Shakesp.

LACONICK. adj. [laconicus, Lat. laconique, Fr.] Short; brief: from Laconic, the Spartans, who used few words.

I grow laconick even beyond laconicism; for sometimes I return only yes, or no, to questionary or petitionary epistles of half a yard long. Pope to Suiff.

LACONISM. n. s. [laconisme, Fr. laconismus, Lat.] A concise stile: called by Pope, laconicism. See LACONICK.

As the language of the face is universal, so it is very comprehensive: no laconism can reach it. It is the short-hand of the mind, and crowds a great deal in a little room. Collier of the Aspect.

LACONICALLY. adv. [from laconick.] Briefly; concisely.

Alexander Nequam, a man of great learning, and desirous to enter into religion there, writ to the abbot laconically. Camden's Remains.

With Spanish pike, he broach'd a pore. Cleaveland.

LANCET. n. s. [lancette, Fr.] A small pointed surgical instrument.

I gave vent to it by an apertion with a lancet, and discharged white matter. Wise man's Surgery.
A vein, in an apparent blue runneth along the body, and if dexterously prick'd with a lancet, emitteth a red drop. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Hippocrates saith, blood-letting should be done with broad lancets or swords, in order to make a large orifice: the manner of opening a vein then was by stabbing or pertusion, as in horses. Arbuth.

To LANCH. v. a. [lancer, Fr. This word is too often written launch: it is only a vocal corruption of lance.] To dart; to cast as a lance; to throw; to let fly.

See whose arm can lanch the surer bolt,
And who's the better Jove. Dryden and Lee's Oed.
Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread that interdicted shore;
When Jove tremendous in the sable deep;
Launch'd his red lightning at our scatter'd ships. Pope.

LANCINA'TION. n. s. [from lancino, Lat.] Tearing; laceration.

To LAN'CNATE. v. a. [lancino, Lat.] To tear; to rend; to lacerate.

LAND. n. s. [land, Goth. Sax. and so all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. A country; a region; distinct from other countries.

The nations of Scythia, like a mountain flood, did overflow all Spain, and quite washed away whatsoever reliques there were left of the land-bred people. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Thy ambition,
Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
What had he done to make him fly the land? Shakesp.

The chief men of the land had great authority; though the government was monarchical, it was not despotick. Broome's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Earth; distinct from water.

By land they found that huge and mighty country. Abbot.

Yet, if thou go'st by land, th' grief possess
My soul ev'n then, my fears would be the less:
But, ah! be warn'd to shun the wat'ry way. Dry.
They turn their heads to sea, their stems to land,
And greet with greedy joy th' Italian strand. Dry.

3. It is often used in composition, as opposed to sea.

The princes delighting their conceits with confirming their knowledge, seeing wherein the sea-discipline differed from the land-service, they had pleasing entertainment. Sidney.

He to-night hath boarded a land carrack;
If it prove lawful prize, he's made for ever. Shak.
With eleven thousand land-soldiers, and twenty-six ships of war, we within two months have won one town. Bacon.

Necessity makes men ingenious and hardy; and if they have but land-room or sea-room, they find supplies for their hunger. Hale's Origin of Man.
I writ not always in the proper terms of navigation, or land-service. Dryden's Æneid.

The French are to pay the same duties at the dry ports through which they pass by land-carriage, as we pay upon importation or exportation by sea. Addison's Freeholder.

The Phœnicians carried on a land-trade to Syria and Mesopotamia, and stopt not short, without pushing their trade to the Indies. Arbuth. on Coins.
The species brought by land-carriage were much better than those which came to Egypt by sea. Arbuthnot.

Castles, and goods whatsoever, and to be Out of the king's protection. Shak. Henry VIII.
He kept himself within the bounds of loyalty, and enjoy'd certain lands and towns in the borders of Polonia. Knolles.

This man is freed of servile hands,
Of hope to rise, or fear to fall:
Lord of himself, though not of lands,
A. d having nothing, yet hath all. Wotton.

6. Nation; people; the inhabitants of the land.

These answers, in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believ'd. Dry.

7. Urine. [þlonð, Sax.] As.

Probably land-damn was a coarse expression in the cant strain, formerly in common use, but since laid aside and forgotten, which meant the taking away a man's life. For land or lant is an old word for urine, and to stop the common passages and functions of nature is to kill. Hanmer.

You are abused, and by some putter on,
That will be daun'd for't; and would I knew the villain,
I would land-damn him. Shakesp. Wint. Tale.

To LAND. v. a. [from the noun.] To set on shore.

The legions, now in Gallia, sooner landed In Britain. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

He who rules the raging wind,
To thee, O sacred ship, be kind,
Thy committed pledge restore,
And land him safely on the shore. Dryd. Horace.
Another Typhis shall new seas explore,
Another Argo land the chiefs upon th' Iberian shore. Dryden.

To LAND. v. n. To come to shore.

Let him land,
And solemnly see him set on to London. Shakesp.
Land ye not, none of you, and provide to be gone from this coast within sixteen days. Bacon's New Atlantis.

I land, with lackless omens: then adore
Their gods. Dryden's Æneid.

LAN'DED. adj. [from land.] Having a fortune, not in money, but in land; having a real estate.

A landless knight makes thee a landed squire. Shakesp.

Men, whose living lieth together in one shire, are commonly counted greater landed than those whose livings are dispersed. Bacon.

Cromwell's officers, who were for levelling lands while they had none, when they grew landed fell to crying up magna charta. Temple.
A house of commons must consist for the most part of landed men. Addison's Freeholder.

LANERET. n. s. A little hawk.

LANGUAGE. n. s. [langage, Fr. lingua, Lat.]

1. Human speech.

We may define language, if we consider it more materially, to be letters, forming and producing words and sentences; but if we consider it according to the design thereof, then language is apt signs for communication of thoughts. Holder.

2. The tongue of one nation as distinct from others.

O! good my lord, no Latin;
I am not such a tyrant since my coming,
As not to know the language I have liv'd in. Shak.
He not from Rome alone, but Greece,
Like Jason, brought the golden fleece;
To him that language, though to none
Of th' others, as his own was known. Denham.

3. Stile; manner of expression.

Though his language should not be refin'd,
It must not be obscure and impudent. Roscom.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress;
Their praise is still—the stile is excellent;
The sense, they humbly take upon content. Pope.

LANGUAGE-D. adj. [from the noun.] Having various languages.

He wand'ring long a wider circle made,
And many language'd nations has survey'd. Pope.

LANGUAGE-MASTER. n. s. [language and master.] One whose profession is to teach languages.

TO LANGUIH. v. n. [languir, Fr. languere, Lat.]

1. To grow feeble; to pine away; to lose strength.

Let her languish
A drop of blood a-day; and, being dead,
Die of this folly. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
We and our fathers do languish of such miseries. Idem.

What can we expect, but that he languishing should end in death? De Witt's Piety.
His sorrows bore him off; and sooty fate
His languish'd limbs upon his honeycomb. Dryden.

2. To be no longer vigorous in motion; not to be vivid in appearance.

The troops with late languish'd,
Their darts with clamour at a distance drive,
And only keep the languish'd war alive. Dryden.

3. To sink or pine under sorrow, or any slow passion.

What man who knows
What woman is, yea, what she cannot chuse
But must be, will his free hours languish out For assur'd bondage? Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The land shall mourn, and every one that dwelleth therein languish. Hosea, iv. 3.
I have been talking with a suitor here,
A man that languishes in your mispleasure. Shakesp. Othello.

I was about fifteen when I took the liberty to chuse for myself, and have ever since languish'd under the displeasure of an inexorable father. Addison's Spectator.

Let Leonora consider, that, at the very time in which she languishes for the loss of her deceased lover, there are persons just perishing in a shipwreck. Addison's Spectator.

4. To look with softness or tenderness.

What poems think you soft, and to be read,
With languishing regards, and bending head. Dry.

LANGUISH. n. s. [from the verb.] Soft appearance.

And the blue languish of soft Asia's eye. Pope.

Then forth he walks,
Beneath the trembling languish of her beam,
With soften'd soul. Thomson's Spring.

LANGUISHINGLY. adv. [from languishing.]

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow. Pope.

2. Dully; tediously.

Alas! my Dorus, thou seest how long and languishingly the weeks have past over since our last talking. Sidney.

LANGUISHMENT. n. s. [languishment, Fr. from languish.]

1. State of pining.

By that count which lovers books invent,
The sphere of Cupid forty years contains;
Which I have wasted in long languishment,
That seem'd the longer for my greater pains. Spe.

2. Softness of mien.

Humility it expresses, by the stooping or bending of the head; languishment, when we hang it on one side. Dryden.

LANGUOR. n. s. [languor, Lat. languor, Fr.]

1. Faintness; wearisomeness.

Well hop'd I, and fair beginnings had,
That he my captive languor should redeem. Spem.
For these, these tribunes, in the dust I write
My heart's deep languor, and my soul's shed tears. Shak. esp.

2. Listlessness; inattention.

Academical disputation gives vigour and briskness to the mind thus exercised, and relieves the languor of private study and meditation. Hutts's Improvement of the Mind.

3. Softness; laxity.

To isles of fragrance, lily-silver'd vales,
Diffusing languor in the panting gales. Dunciad.

4. [In physics.]

Languor and lassitude signifies a faintness, which may arise from want or decay of spirits, through indigestion, or too much exercise; or from an additional weight of fluids, from a diminution of secretion by the common discharges. Quincy.

LA'NGUOROUS. adj. [languoreux, Fr.] Tedious; melancholy. Not in use.

Dear lady, how shall I declare thy case, Whom late I left in languorous constraint. Spenser.

LANK. adj. [lancke, Dut.]

1. Loose; not filled up; not stiffened out; not fat; not plump; slender.

The common hast thou rack'd; the clergy's bags
Are lank and lean with thy extortions. Shakesp.
Name not Winterface, whose skin's slack,
Lank, as an unthrif't's purse. Donne

We let down into a receiver a great bladder well tied at the neck, but very lank, as not containing above a pint of air, but capable of containing ten times as much. Boyle.

Moist earth produces corn and grass, but both too rank and too luxuriant in their growth. Let not my land so large a promise boast, Lest the lank ears in length of stem be lost. Dryd.

Now, now my bearded harvest gilds the plain, Thus dreams the wretch, and vainly thus dreams on,
Till his lank purse declares his money gone. D-yd.

Meagre and lank with fasting grown,
And nothing left but skin and bone;
They just keep life and soul together. Swift.

2. Milton seems to use this word for faint; languid.

He, piteous of her woes, rear'd her lank head,
And gave her to his daughters to imbath
In nectar'd lavers strew'd with asphodil. Milton.

LA'NKNESS. n. s. [from lank.] Want of plumpness.

LA'NNER. n. s. [lanier, Fr. lanarius, Lat.] A species of hawk.

LA'NTERN. n. s. [lanterne, Fr. laterna, Lat.] It is by mistake often written lanthorn. A transparent case for a candle.

God shall be my hope,
My stay, my guide, my lanthorn to my feet. Shak.

Thou art our admiral; thou bearest the lanthorn in the poop, but 'tis in the nose of thee; thou art the knight of the burning lamp. Shak. Henry IV.

A candle lasteth longer in a lanthorn than at large. Bacon.

Amongst the excellent acts of that king, one hath the pre-eminence, the erection and institution of a society, which we call Solomon's house; the noblest foundation that ever was, and the lanthorn of this kingdom. Bacon's Atlantis.

O thievish night,
Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lanthorn thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd their lamps
With everlasting oil? Milton

Vice is like a dark lanthorn, which turns its bright side only to him that bears it, but looks black and dismal in another's hand. Gor. of the Ta.

Judge what a ridiculous thing it were, that the continued shadow of the earth should be broken by sudden miraculous eruptions of light, to prevent the art of the lantern-maker. Moré's Div. Dial.

Our ideas succeed one another in our minds, not much unlike the images in the inside of a lanthorn, turned round by the heat of a candle. Locke.

2. A lighthouse; a light hung out to guide ships.

Caprea, where the lanthorn fix'd on high Shines like a moon through the benighted sky,
While by its beams the wary sailor steers. Addison.

LA'NTERN JAWS. A term used of a thin visage, such as if a candle were burning in the mouth might transmit the light.

Being very lucky in a pair of long lanthorn-jaws, he wrung his face into a hideous grimace. Addis. S.

LAN'GINOUS. adj. [lanuginosus, Lat.] Downy; covered with soft hair.

LAP. n. s. [læppe, Sax. lappe, Germ.]

1. The loose part of a garment, which may be doubled at pleasure.

If a joint of meat falls on the ground, take it up gently, wipe it with the lap of your coat, and then put it into the dish. Swift's Direc. to a Footman.

2. The part of the clothes that is spread horizontally over the knees as one sits down, so as any thing may lie in it.

It feeds each living plant with liquid sap, And fills with flow'rs fair flora's painted lap. Spen.

Upon a day, as love lay sweetly slumbering
All in his mother's lap,
A gentle bee, with his loud trumpet murmur'ing,
About him flew by hap. Spenser.

I'll make my haven in a lady's lap,
And 'twich sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shakesp.

She bids you
All on the wonton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you. Shak.

Our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er-last-wear'd Antony. Shakesp.

Heav'n's almighty sire
Melts on the bosom of his love, and pours Himself into her lap in fruitful show'rs. Croshaw.

Men expect that religion should cost them no pains, and that happiness should drop into their laps. Tillotson.

He struggles into breath, and cries for aid;
Then, helpless, in his mother's lap is laid.
He creeps, he walks, and issuing into man,
Grudges their life from whence his own began:
Retchless of laws, affects to rule alone,
Anxious to reign, and restless on the throne. Dry.

To LAP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To wrap or twist round any thing.

He hath a long tail, which, as he descends from a tree, he laps round about the boughs, to keep himself from falling. Grew's Muscum.

About the paper whose two halves were painted with red and blue, and which was still like thin pasteboard, I lapped several times a slender thread of very black silk. Newton.

2. To involve in any thing.

As through the flow'ring forest rash she fled,
In her rude hairs sweet flowers themselves did lap,
And flourishing fresh leaves and blossoms did enwrap. Spenser.

The 'Thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict,
Till that Bellona's bridegroom, lapt in proof, Confronted him. Shakesp. Macbeth.

When we both lay in the field,
Frozen almost to death, how he did lap me,
Ev'n in his garments, and did give himself,
All thin and naked, to the numb cold night. Shak.

Ever against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton.

Indulgent fortune does her care employ,
And smiling, broods upon the naked boy:
Her garments spreads; and laps him in the folds,
And covers with her wings from nightly colds. Dryden.

Here was the repository of all the wise contentions for power between the nobles and commons, lapt up safely in the bosom of a Nero and a Caligula. Swift.

To LAP. v. n. To be spread or turned over any thing.

The upper wings are opacous; at their hinder ends, where they lap over, transparent, like the wing of a fly. Grew.

To LAP. v. n. [lappian, Sax. lappen, Dut.] To feed by quick reciprocations of the tongue.

The dogs by the river Nilus' side being thirsty, lap hastily as they run along the shore. Digby.

They had soups served up in broad dishes, and so the fox fell to lapping himself, and had his guest heartily welcome. L'Estrange.

The tongue serves not only for tasting, hot for mastication and deglutition, in man, by licking; in the dog and cat kind by lapping. Ray on Creat.

To LAP. v. a. To lick up.

For all the rest
They'll take suggestion, as a cat laps milk. Shak.
Upon a ball

Two horrid lions ramp't, and seiz'd, and tugg'd off, bellowing still,
Both men and dogs came; yet they tore the hide, and lapt their fill. Chapman's Iliad.

LAPDOG. n. s. [lap and dog.] A little dog, fondled by ladies in the lap.

One of them made his court to the lap-dog, to improve his interest with the lady. Collier.

These, if the laws did that exchange afford,
Would save their lap-dog sooner than their lord. Dryden.

Lap-dogs give themselves the rousing shake,
And sleepless lovers just at twelve awake. Pope.

LAPFUL. n. s. [lap and full.] As much as can be contained in the lap.

One found a wild vine, and gathered thereof wild gourds his lapful, and shred them into the pot of pottage. 2 Kings.

Will four per cent. increase the number of lenders? if it will not, then all the plenty of money these conjurers bestow upon us, is but like the gold and silver which old women believe other conjurers bestow by whole lapfuls on poor credulous girls. Locke.

LAPICIDE. n. s. [lapicida, Lat.] A stone-cutter. Dict.

LAPIDARY. n. s. [lapidaire, Fr.] One who deals in stones or gems.

As a cock was turning up a dunghill, he espied a diamond: Well, says he, this sparkling foolery now to a lapidary would have been the making of him; but, as to any use of mine, a barley-corn had been worth forty on't. L'Estrange.

Of all the many sorts of the gem kind reckoned up by the lapidaries, there are not above three or four that are original. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

To LAPIDATE. v. a. [lapido, Lat.] To stone; to kill by stoning. Dict.

LAPIDATION. n. s. [lapidatio, Lat. lapidation, Fr.] A stoning.

LAPIDEOUS. adj. [lapideus, Lat.] Stony; of the nature of stone.

There might fall down into the lapideous matter, before it was concreted into a stone, some small toad, which might remain there imprisoned, till the matter about it were condensed. Ray.

LAPIDESCENT. n. s. [lapidesco, Lat.] Stony concretion.

Of lapis ceratites, or cornu fossile, in subterraneous cavities, there are many to be found in Germany, which are but the lapidescences, and putrefactive mutations, of hard bodies. Brown.

LAPIDESCENT. adj. [lapidescens, Lat.] Growing or turning to stone.

LAPIDIFICATION. n. s. [lapidification, Fr.] The act of forming stones.

Induration or lapidification of substances more soft is another degree of condensation. Bacon.

LAPIDIFICK. adj. [lapidifique, Fr.] Forming stones.

The atoms of the lapidifick, as well as saline principle, being regular, do concur in producing regular stones. Grew.

LAPIDIST. n. s. [from lapides, Lat.] A dealer in stones or gems.

Hardness, wherein some stones exceed all other bodies, being exalted to that degree, that art in vain endeavours to counterfeit it, the factitious stones of chymists in imitation being easily detected by an ordinary lapidist. Ray.

LAPIS. n. s. [Lat.] A stone.
LAPIS Lazuli.

The lapis lazuli, or azure stone, is a copper ore, very compact and hard, so as to take a high polish, and is worked into a great variety of toys. It is found in detached lumps, of an elegant blue colour, variegated with clouds of white, and veins of a shining gold colour; to it the painters are indebted for their beautiful ultra-marine colour, which is only a calcination of lapis lazuli. Hill.

LAPPER. n. s. [from lap.]

1. One who wraps up.
They may be lappers of linen, and bailiffs of the manor. Swift.

2. One who laps or licks.

LAPSE. n. s. [lapsus, Lat.]

1. Flow; fall; glide; smooth course.

Round I saw
Hill, dale, and shady woods, and sunny plains,
And liquid lapse of murmuring streams. Milton.
Notions of the mind are preserved in the memory, notwithstanding lapse of time. Hale.

2. Petty error; small mistake; slight offence; little fault.

These are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto truth. Brown's Vulg. Er.

The weakness of human understanding all will confess; yet the confidence of most practically disowns it; and it is easier to persuade them of it from other lapses than their own. Glanville.

This scripture may be usefully applied as a caution to guard against those lapses and failings, to which our infirmities daily expose us. Rogers.

It hath been my constant business to examine whether I could find the smallest lapse in stile or propriety through my whole collection, that I might send it abroad as the most finished piece. Swift.

3. Translation of right from one to another.

In a presentation to a vacant church, a layman ought to present within four months, and a clergyman within six, otherwise a devolution, or lapse of right, happens. Ayliffe.

To LAPSE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To glide slowly; to fall by degrees.

This disposition to shorten our words, by retrenching the vowels, is nothing else but a tendency to lapse into the barbarity of those northern nations from whom we are descended, and whose languages labour all under the same defect. Swift.

2. To fail in any thing; to slip; to commit a fault.

I have ever verified my friends,
Of whom he's chief, with all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakesp.

To lapse in fulness,
Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

3. To slip, as by inadvertency or mistake.

Homer, in his characters of Vulcan and Thersites, has lapsed into the burlesque character, and departed from that serious air essential to an epick poem. Addison.

Let there be no wilful perversion of another's meaning; no sudden seizure of a lapsed syllable to play upon it. Watts.

4. To lose the proper time.

Myself stood out;
I le lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.
As an appeal may be deserted by the appellants

L A R

lapsing the term of law, so it may also be deserted by a lapse of the term of a judge. Ayliffe.

5. To fall by the negligence of one proprietor to another.

If the archbishop shall not fill it up within six months ensuing, it lapses to the king. Ayliffe.

6. To fall from perfection, truth, or faith.

Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and intrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desires. Milton.

A sprout of that fig-tree which was to hide the nakedness of lapsed Adam. Decay of Piety.

All public forms suppose it the most principal, universal, and daily requisite to the lapsing state of human corruption. Decay of Piety.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them, as appears by the canons of Ancyra. Stillingfleet.

LAPWING. n. s. [lap and wing.] A clamorous bird with long wings.

Ah! but I think him better than I say,
And yet, would herein others' eyes were worse:
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away;
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse. Shakesp.

And how in fields the lapwing Tereus reigns,
The warbling nightingale in woods complains. Dryden.

LAPWORK. n. s. [lap and work.] Work in which one part is interchangeably wrapped over the other.

A basket made of porcupine quills; the ground is a pack-thread card woven, into which, by the Indian women, are wrought, by a kind of lap-work, the quills of porcupines, not split, but of the young ones intire; mixed with white and black in even and indented waves. Grew's Museum.

LARBOARD. n. s.

The left-hand side of a ship, when you stand with your face to the head: opposed to the starboard. Harris.

Or when Ulysses on the larboard shunn'd Charybdis, and by the other whirlpool steer'd. Milton.

Tack to the larboard, and stand off to sea,
Veer starboard sea and land. Dryden.

LARCENY. n. s. [larcin, Fr. latrocinium, Lat.] Petty theft.

Those laws would be very unjust, that should chastize murder and petty larceny with the same punishment. Spectator.

LARCH. n. s. [larix, Lat.] A tree.

Some botanical critics tell us, the poets have not rightly followed the traditions of antiquity, in metamorphosing the sisters of Phaeton into poplars, who ought to have been turned into larch trees; for that it is this kind of tree which sheds a gum, and is commonly found on the banks of the Po. Addison on Italy.

LARD. n. s. [lardum, Lat. lard, Fr.]

1. The grease of swine.

So may thy pastures with their flow'ry feasts,
As suddenly as lard, fat thy lean beasts. Donne.

2. Bacon; the flesh of swine.

By this the hoiling kettle had prepar'd,
And to the table sent the smooking lard;
On which with eager appetite they dine,
A sav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden.

The sacrifice they sped;
Chopp'd off their nervous thighs, and next prepar'd
T' involve the lean in cauls, and mend with lard. Dryden.

To LARD. v. a. [larder, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To stuff with bacon.

The larded thighs on loaded altars laid. Dryden.
No man lards salt pork with orange peel,
Or garnishes his lamb with spitch-cock eel. King.

2. To fatten.

Now Falstaff sweats to death,
And lards the lean earth as he walks along. Shak.

L A R

Brave soldier, doth he lie
Larding the plain. Shakesp. Henry V.

3. To mix with something else by way of improvement.

An exact command,
Larded with many several sorts of reasons. Shak.
Let no alien interpose

To lard with wit thy hungry Epsons; rose. Druden.
He lards with flourishes his long harangue,
'Tis fine, say'st thou. Dryden.

Swearing by heaven; the poets think this nothing, their plays are so much larded with it. Collier's View of the Stage.

LARDER. n. s. [lardier, old Fr. from lard.] The room where meat is kept or salted.

This similitude is not borrowed of the larder house, but out of the school house. Ascher.

Flesh is ill kept in a room that is not cool; whereas in a cool and wet larder it will keep longer. Bacon.

So have I seen in larder dark,
Of veal a lucid loin. Dorset.

Old age,
Morose, perverse in humour, diffident
The more he still abounds, the less content:
His larder and his kitchen too observes,
And now, lest he should want hereafter, starves. King.

LARDERER. n. s. [from larder.] One who has the charge of the larder.

LARDON. n. s. [Fr.] A bit of bacon.

LARGE. adj. [large, Fr. largus, Lat.]

1. Big; bulky.

Charles II. asked me, What could be the reason, that in mountainous countries the men were commonly larger, and yet the cattle of all sorts smaller? Temple.

Great Theron, large in limbs, of giant height. Dryden.

Warwick, Leicester, and Buckingham, bear a large boned sheep of the best shape and deepest staple. Mortimer.

2. Wide; extensive.

Their former large peopling was an effect of the countries impoverishing. Carew's Survey.

Let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for it is large enough for them. Gen. xxiv. 21.
There he conquered a thousand miles wide; and large. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

3. Liberal; abundant; plentiful.

Thou shalt drink of thy sister's cup deep and large. Ezekiel.

Vernal suns and showers
Diffuse their warmest, largest influence. Thomson.

4. Copious; diffusive.

Skippon gave a large testimony under his hand, that they had carried themselves with great civility. Clarendon.

'T might be very large upon the importance and advantages of education, and say a great many things which have been said before. Feltson the C. C. L.

5. At large. Without restraint; without confinement.

If you divide a cane into two, and one speak at the one end, and you lay your ear at the other, it will carry the voice farther than in the air at large. Bacon.

Thus incorporeal spirits to smallest forms
Reduc'd their shapes immense; and were at large,
Though without number still. Milton.

The children are bred up in their father's way; or so plentifully provided for, that they are left at large. Spratt.

Your zeal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it. Addison.

6. At large. Diffusely; in the full extent.

Discover more at large what cause that was,
For I am ignorant, and cannot guess. Shakesp.
It does not belong to this place to have that point debated at large. Watts.

LA'RGELY. adv. [from large.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; diffusely; amply.

Where the author treats more largely, it will explain the shorter hints and brief intimations.

Hatton the Mind.

3. Liberally; bounteously.

How he lives and eats:

How largely gives; how splendidly he treats. Dry.

Those, who in warmer climes complain

From Phœbus' rays they suffer pain,

Must own, that pain is largely paid

By generous wines beneath the shade. Swift.

4. Abundantly; without sparing.

They their fill of love, and love's disport,

Took largely; of their mutual guilt the seal. Milt.

LA'RGENESS. n. s. [from large.]

1. Bigness; bulk.

London excels any other city in the whole world, either in largeness, or number of inhabitants. Spratt.

Nor must Bumastus his old honours lose,

In length and largeness like the dugs of cows. Dry.

2. Greatness; comprehension.

There will be occasion for largeness of mind and

3. Extension; amplitude.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in most sparing tenous acknowledge little less. Holker.

The ample proposition that hope makes,

In all designs begun on earth below,

Falls in the promis'd largeness. Shakesp.

Knowing best the largeness of my own heart toward my people's good and just contentment.

King Charles.

Shall grief contract the largeness of that heart,

In which nor fear nor anger has a part? Waller.

Man as far transcends the beasts in largeness of desire, as dignity of nature and employment.

Glanville's Apology.

If the largeness of a man's heart carry him beyond prudence, we may reckon it illustrious weakness. L'Estrange.

4. Wideness.

Supposing that the multitude and largeness of rivers ought to continue as great as now; we can easily prove, that the extent of the ocean could be no less. Bentley.

LA'RGESS. n. s. [largesse, Fr.] A present; a gift; a bounty.

Our coffers with too great a court,

And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light.

Shakesp.

He assigned two thousand ducats, for a bounty to me and my fellows: for they give great largesses where they come. Bacon's New Atlantis.

A pardon to the captain, and a largess

Among the soldiers had appeas'd their fury. Den.

The paltry largess too severely watch'd,

That no intruding guests usurp a share. Dryden.

Irus's condition will not admit of largesses.

Addison.

LARG'ITION. n. s. [largitio, Lat.] The act of giving. Dict.

LARK. n. s. [laperce, Sax. lerk, Dan. lar-rack, Scott.] A small singing bird.

It was the lark, the herald of the morn. Shak.

Look up a height, the shrill-gorg'd lark so far

Cannot be seen or heard. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Th' example of the heavenly lark,

Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark. Cowley.

Mark how the lark and linnet sing;

With rival notes

They strain their warbling throats,

To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

LA'RKER. n. s. [from lark.] A catcher of larks. Dict.

LA'RKSPUR. n. s. [delphinium.] A plant.

LA'RVATED. adj. [larvatus, Lat.] Masked. Dict.

LA'RRUM. n. s. [from alarum or alarm.]

1. Alarm; noise noting danger.

His larum bell might loud and wide be heard,

When cause requir'd, but never out of time. Spens.

The peaking cornute, her husband, dwelling in a continual larum of jealousy, comes to me in the instant of our encounter. Shakesp.

How far off lie these armies?

—Within a mile and half.

—Then shall we hear their larum, and they ours.

Shakesp.

She is become formidable to all her neighbours,

as she puts every one to stand upon his guard,

and have a continual larum bell in his ears. Howell.

2. An instrument that makes a noise at a certain hour.

Of this nature was that larum, which, though it were but three inches hig, yet would both wake a man, and of itself light a candle for him at any set hour. Wilkins.

I see men as lusty and strong that eat but two meals a day, as others, that have set their stomachs, like larums, to call on them for four or five.

Locke.

The young Æneas, all at once let down,

Stunn'd with his giddy larum half the town.

Dunciad.

LARY'NGOTOMY. n. s. [λάρυγγξ and τέμνω; laryngotomie, Fr.] An operation where the fore-part of the larynx is divided to assist respiration, during large tumours upon the upper parts; as in a quinsy. Quincy.

LA'RYNX. n. s. [λάρυγγξ.] The upper part of the trachea, which lies below the root of the tongue, before the pharynx.

Quincy.

There are thirteen muscles for the motion of the five cartilages of the larynx. Derham.

LASC'IVENT. adj. [lascivens, Lat.] Frolicksome; wantoning.

LASC'IVIOUS. adj. [lascivus, Lat.]

1. Lewd; lustful.

In what habit will you go along?

—Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose encounters of lascivious men. Shak.

He on Eve

Began to cast lascivious eyes; she him

As wantonly repaid; in lust they burn. Milton.

Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, and those unanswerable difficulties which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the lascivious man to throw off his lewd amours, and all their giant-like objections against christianity shall presently vanish. South.

2. Wanton; soft; luxurious.

Grim visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkl'd frow; South.

And now, instead of mounting barbed steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries,
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute. Shakesp.

LASC'IVIOUSNESS. n. s. [from lascivious.]

Wantonness; looseness.

The reason pretended by Augustus was the lasciviousness of his Elegies, and his Art of Love

Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

LASC'IVIOUSLY. adv. [from lascivious.]

Lewdly; wantonly; loosely.

LASH. n. s. [The most probable etymology of this word seems to be that of Skinner, from schlagen, Dut. to strike;
whence slash and lash.]

1. A stroke with any thing pliant and tough.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains

Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dry.

Rous'd by the lash of his own stubborn tail,

Our lion now will foreign foes assail. Dryden.

2. The thong or point of the whip which gives the cut or blow.

Her whip of cricket's bone, her lash of film,

Her waggoner a small grey-coated gnat. Shakesp.

I observed that your whip wanted a lash to it.

Addison.

3. A leash, or string in which an animal is held; a snare; out of use.

The farmer they leave in the lash,

With losses on every side. Tusser's Husbandry.

4. A stroke of satire; a sarcasm.

The moral is a lash at the vanity of arrogating that to ourselves which succeeds well. L'Estrange.

TO LASH. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To strike with any thing pliant; to scourge.

Let's whip these stragglers o'er the seas again,

Lash hence these over-weening rags of France.

Shakesp.

He charg'd the flames, and those that disobey'd

He lash'd to duty with his sword of light. Dryden.

And limping death, lash'd on by fate,

Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

Stern as tutors, and as uncles hard,

We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden.

Leaving on his lance, he mounts his car,

His fiery coursers lashing through the air. Garth.

2. To move with a sudden spring or jerk.

The club hung round his ears, and batter'd brows;

He falls; and lashing up his heels, his rider throws. Dryden.

3. To beat; to strike with a sharp sound.

The winds grow high,

Impending tempests charge the sky;

The lightning flies, the thunder roars,

And big waves lash the frighted shores. Prior.

4. To scourge with satire.

Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain,

Flat'ers and bigots ev'n in Louis' reign. Pope.

5. To tie any thing down to the side or mast of a ship: properly to lace.

TO LASH. v. n. To ply the whip.

They lash aloud, each other they provoke,

And lend their little souls at ev'ry stroke. Dryden.

Gentle or sharp, according to their choice,

To laugh at follies, or to lash at vice. Dryden.

Let men out of their way lash on ever so fast,

they are not at all the nearer their journey's end.

South.

Wheels clash with wheels, and bar the narrow street;

The lashing whip resounds. Gau's Trivia.

LA'SHER. n. s. [from lash.] One that whips or lashes.

LASS. n. s. [from lad is formed laddess, by contraction lass. Hickes.] A girl;
a maid; a young woman: used now only of mean girls.

Now was the time for vig'rous lads to show

What love or honour could invite them to;

A goodly theatre, where rocks are round

With reverend age, and lovely lasses crown'd.

Haller.

A girl was worth forty of our widows; and an honest, downright, plain dealing lass it was.

L'Estrange.

They sometimes an hasty kiss

Steal from unwary lasses; they with scorn

And neck reclin'd, resent. Philips.

LA'SSITUDE. n. s. [lassitudo, Lat. lassitude, Fr.]

1. Weariness; fatigue; the pain arising from hard labour.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water; for all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts; and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolliation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Assiduity in cogitation is more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude or distemper. Glanville's Decepsis.

She lives and breeds in air; the largeness and lightness of her wings and tail sustain her without lassitude. More's Antidote against Atheism.

Do not over-fatigue the spirits, lest the mind be seized with a lassitude, and thereby be tempted to nauseate, and grow tired. Hatts.

From mouth and nose the briny torrent ran, And lost in lassitude lay all the man. Pope's Ody.

2. [In physick.]

Lassitude generally expresses that weariness which proceeds from a distempered state, and not from exercise, which wants no remedy but rest; it proceeds from an increase of bulk, from a diminution of proper evacuation, or from too great a consumption of the fluid necessary to maintain the spring of the solids, as in fevers; or from a vitiated secretion of that juice, whereby the fibres are not supplied. Quincy.

LA'SSLORN. n. s. [lass and lorn.] Forsaken by his mistress. Not used.

Whose shadow the dismissed batchelor loves, Being lasslorn. Shak. Tempest.

LAST. n. s. [æteɪt, Sax. laetstc, Dut.]

1. Latest; that which follows all the rest in time.

Why are ye the last to bring the king back? Samuel.

O, may some spark of your celestial fire, The last, the meanest, of your souls inspire? Pope.

2. Hindmost; which follows in order of place.

Merion pursued at greater distance still, Last came Admetus, thy unhappy son. Pope.

3. Beyond which there is no more.

I will slay the last of them with the sword. Amos.
Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy to the last the kind releasing knell. Cole.
The swans, that on Cayster often try'd
Their tuneful songs, now sung their last, and dy'd. Addison.

O! may fam'd Brunswick be the last,
The last, the happiest British king,
Whom thou shalt paint, or I shall sing. Addison.
But, while I take my last adieu,
Heave thou no sigh, nor shed a tear. Prior.
Here, last of Britons, let your names be read. Pope.

Wit not alone has shone on ages past,
But lights the present, and shall warm the last. Pope.

4. The lowest; the meanest.

Takes the last prize, and takes it with a jest. Pope.

5. Next before the present; as, last week.

6. Utmost.

Fools ambitiously contend
For wit and pow'r; their last endeavours bend
To outshine each other. Dryden's Lucretius.

7. At last. In conclusion; at the end.

God, a troop shall overcome him; but he shall overcome at the last. Gen. xlix. 19.
Thus weather-cocks, that for a while
Have turn'd about with ev'ry blast,
Grown old, and destitute of oil,
Rust to a point, and fix at last. Freind.

8. The last; the end.

All politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

LAST. adv.

1. The last time; the time next before the present.

How long is't now since last yourself and I
Were in a mask? Shakesp.
When last I dy'd, and, dear! I die
As often as from thee I go,

I can remember yet that I
Something did say, and something did bestow. Donne.

2. In conclusion.

Pleas'd with his idol, he commends, admires,
Adores; and last, the thing ador'd desires. Dryd.

To LAST. v. n. [lætɹan, Sax.] To endure; to continue; to persevere.

All more lasting than beautiful. Sidney.

I thought it agreeable to my affection to your grace, to prefix your name before the essays; for the Latin volume of them, being in the universal language, may last as long as books last. Bacon.

With several degrees of *last*ng ideas are imprinted on the memory. Locke.

These are standing marks of facts delivered by those who were eye-witnesses to them, and which were contriv'd with great wisdom to last till time should be no more. Addison.

LAST. n. s. [lætɹ, Sax.]

1. The mould on which shoes are formed.

The cobbler is not to go beyond his last. L'Estr.
A cobbler produced several new grins, having been used to cut faces over his last. Addison's Spec.
Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
Each stone would wrench the unwary step aside. Gay.

2. [Last, Germ.] A certain weight or measure.

LA'STERY. n. s. A red colour.

The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did spread,
That her became as polish'd ivory,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid,
With fair vermilion, or pure lastery. Spenser.

LA'STAGE. n. s. [lestage, Fr. lastagie, Dut. plæɹɹ, Sax. a load.]

1. Custom paid for freightage.

2. The ballast of a ship.

LA'STING. participial adj. [from last.]

1. Continuing; durable.

Every violence offer'd weakens and impairs,
and renders the body less durable and lasting. Ray.

2. Of long continuance; perpetual.

White parents may have black children, as negroes sometimes have lasting white ones. Boyle on C.

The seeds of discord sow'd, the war begun;
Frauds, fears, and fury, have possess'd the state,
And fix'd the causes of a lasting hate. Dryden.

A sinew crack'd seldom recovers its former strength, and the memory of it leaves a lasting caution in the man, not to put the past quickly again to any robust employment. Locke.

LA'STINGLY. adv. [from lasting.] Perpetually; durably.

LA'STINGNESS. n. s. [from lasting.] Durableness; continuance.

All more lasting than beautiful, but that the consideration of the exceeding lastingness made the eye believe it was exceeding beautiful. Sidney.
Consider the lastingness of the motions excited in the bottom of the eye by light. Newton's Opticks.

LA'STLY. adv. [from last.]

1. In the last place.

I will justify the quarrel; secondly, balance the forces; and, lastly, propound variety of designs for choice, but not advise the choice. Bacon.

2. In the conclusion; at last; finally.

LATCH. n. s. [letse, Dut. laccio, Ital.] A catch of a door moved by a string, or a handle.

The latch mov'd up. Gay's Pastorals.
Then comes rosy health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physician had lift'd the latch. Smart.

To LATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fasten with a latch.

He had strength to reach his father's house; the door was only latched; and, when he had the latch in his hand, he turned about his head to see his pursuer. Locke.

2. [Locher, Fr.] To smear.

But hast thou yet latch'd the Athenian's eyes
With the love juice, as I did bid thee do? Shak.

LATCHES. n. s.

Latches or baskets, in a ship, are small lines like loops, fastened by sewing into the bonnets and drablers of a ship, in order to lace the bonnets to the courses, or the drablers to the bonnets. Harria.

LATCHET. n. s. [lacet, Fr.] The string that fastens the shoe.

There cometh one mightier than I, the latchet of whose shoes I am not worthy to unloose. Mark, i. 7.

LATE. adj. [læt, Sax. laet, Dut. in the comparative latter or later, in the superlative latest or last. Last is absolute and definite, more than latest.]

1. Contrary to early; slow; tardy; long delayed.

My lasting days fly on with full career,
But my late spring no bud nor blossom sheweth. Milton.

Just was the vengeance, and to latest days Shall long posterity resound thy praise. Pope's Ody.

2. Last in any place, office, or character.

All the difference between the late servants, and those who staid in the family, was, that those latter were finer gentlemen. Addison's Spectator.

3. The deceased: as, the works of the late Mr. Pope.

4. Far in the day or night.

LATE. adv.

1. After long delays; after a long time.

It is used often with too, when the proper time is past.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late. Shakesp.
A second Silvius after this appears,
Silvius Aeneas, for thy name he bears;
For arms and justice equally renown'd,
Who late restor'd in Alba shall be crown'd. Dryd.
He laughs at all the giddy turns of state,
When mortals search too soon, and fear too late. Dryden.

The later it is before any one comes to have these ideas, the later also will it be before he comes to those maxims. Locke.

I might have spar'd his life,
But now it is too late. Philips's Distress Mother.

2. In a later season.

To make roses, or other flowers, come late, is an experiment of pleasure; for the ancients esteemed much of the rosa sera. Bacon's Nat. History.

than my daughters gut 'tween the lawful sheets.

Shakesp. King Lear.

LAWFULLY. adv. [from lawful.] Legally; agreeable to law.

This bond is forfeit;
And lawfully by this the Jew may claim
A pound of flesh. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

Though it be not against strict justice for a man to do those things which he might otherwise lawfully do, albeit his neighbour doth take occasion from thence to conceive in his mind a false belief, yet Christian charity will, in many cases, restrain a man. South.

I may be allowed to tell your lordship, the king of poets, what an extent of power you have, and how lawfully you may exercise it. Dryden.

LAWFULNESS. n. s. [from lawful.] Legality; allowance of law.

It were an error to speak further, till I may see some sound foundation laid of the lawfulness of the action. Bacon.

LAWGIVER. n. s. [law and giver.] Legislator; one that makes laws.

Solomon we esteem as the lawgiver of our nation.

To know their God, or message to regard,
Must be compell'd. Milton.

Orpheus did not, as poets feign, tame savage beasts,

But men as lawless, and as wild as they. Roscom.

Not the gods, nor angry Jove, will bear
Thy lawless wading walks in open air. Dryden.

Blind as the Cyclops, and as blind as he,
They own'd a lawless savage liberty,

Like that our painted ancestors so priz'd,
Ere empire's arts their breasts had civiliz'd. Dry.

He meteor-like, flames lawless through the void,
Destroying others, by himself destroy'd. Pope.

2. Contrary to law; illegal.

Take not the quarrel from his powerful arms,
He needs no indirect nor lawless course
To cut off those that have a fended him. Shakesp.

We cite our faults,
That they may hold excos'd our lawless lives. Shak.

Thou the first, lay down thy lawless claim;
Thou of my blood who bear'st the Julian name. Dryden.

LAWN. n. s. [land, Dan. lawn, Welsh; lande, Fr.]

1. An open space between woods.

Between them lawns, or level downs, and flocks Grazing the tender herb, were interpos'd. Milton.

His mountains were shaded with young trees, that gradually shot up into groves, woods, and forests, intermix'd with walks, and lawns, and gardens. Addison.

Stern beasts in trains that by his truncheon fell,
Now grisly forms shoot o'er the lawns of hell. Pope.

Interspers'd in lawns and opening glades,
Thin trees arise that shon each other's shades. Pope.

2. [Linon, Fr.] Fine linen, remarkable for being used in the sleeves of bishops.

Should'st thou bleed,
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear,
Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair. Prior.

From high life high characters are drawn,
A saint in crape is twice a saint in lawn. Pope

What awe did the slow solemn knell inspire;
The duties by the lawn robe'd prelate pay'd,
And the last words, that dust to dust convey'd! Tickel.

LAWSUIT. n. s. [law and suit.] A process in law; a litigation.

The giving the priest a right to the tithe would produce lawsuits and wrangles; his attendance on the courts of justice would leave his people without a spiritual guide. Swift.

LAWYER. n. s. [from law.] Professor of law; advocate; pleader.

It is like the breath of an unfe'd lawyer, you gave me nothing for it. Shakesp. King Lear.

Is the law evil, because some lawyers in their office swerve from it? Whitgift.

I have entered into a work touching laws, in a middle term, between the speculative and reverend discourses of philosophers, and the writings of lawyers. Bacon's Holy War.

The nymphs with scorn beheld their foes,
When the defendant's council rose;
And, what no lawyer ever lack'd,
With impudence own'd all the fact. Swift.

LAX. adj. [laxus, Lat.]

1. Loose; not confined.

Inhabit lax, ye pow'rs of heav'n! Milton.

2. Disunited; not strongly combined.

In mines, those parts of the earth which abound with strata of stone, suffer much more than those which consist of gravel, and the like laxer matter, which more easily give way. Woodward.

3. Vague; not rigidly exact.

Dialogues were only lax and moral discourses. Baker.

4. Loose in body, so as to go frequently to stool; laxative medicines are such as promote that disposition. Quincy.

5. Slack; not tense.

By a branch of the auditory nerve that goes between the ear and the palate, they can hear themselves, though their outward ear be stop't by the lax membrane to all sounds that come that way. Holder's Elements of Speech.

LAX. n. s. A looseness; a diarrhoea.

LAXATION. n. s. [laxatio, Lat.]

1. The act of loosening or slackening.

2. The state of being loosened or slackened.

LAXATIVE. adj. [laxatif, Fr. laxo, Lat.]

Having the power to ease costiveness.

Omitting honey, which is of a laxative power itself, the powder of loadstones doth rather constipate and bind, than purge and loosen the belly. Brown.

The oil in wax is emollient, laxative, and anodyne. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

LAXATIVE. n. s. A medicine slightly purgative; a medicine that relaxes the bowels without stimulation.

Nor vomits upward aid, nor downward laxative. Dryden.

LAXATIVENESS. n. s. [from laxative.]

Power of easing costiveness.

LAXITY. n. s. [laxitas, Lat.]

1. Not compression; not close cohesion.

The former causes could never beget whirlpools in a chaos of so great a laxity and thinness. Bentley.

2. Contrariety to rigorous precision; as, laxity of expression.

3. Looseness; not costiveness.

If sometimes it cause any laxity, it is in the same way with iron unprepared, which will disturb some bodies, and work by purge and vomit. Brown.

1. Slackness; contrariety to tension.

Laxity of a fibre, is that degree of cohesion in its parts which a small force can alter, so as to increase its length beyond what is natural. Quincy.

In consideration of the laxity of their eyes, they are subject to relapse. Wise man's Surgery.

5. Openness; not closeness

Hold a piece of paper close by the flame of a candle, and by little and little remove it further off, and there is upon the paper some part of that which I see in the candle, and it grows still less and less as I remove; so that if I would trust my sense, I should believe it as very a body upon the paper as in the candle, though infebled by the laxity of the channel in which it flows. Digby on Bodies.

LAXNESS. n. s. Laxity; not tension; not precision; not costiveness.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched; otherwise the laxness of that membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound. Holder.

LAY. Preterite of lye.

O! would the quarrel lay upon our heads. Shak.
He was familiarly acquainted with him at such time as he lay ambassador at Constantinople. Knolles.

When Ahab had heard those words, he fasted, and lay in sackcloth. 1 Kings, xxi. 27.

I try'd whatever in the Godhead lay. Dryden.

He rode to rounce the prey,
That shaded by the fern in harbour lay,
And thence dislodged. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

Leaving Rome, in my way to Sienna, I lay the first night at a village in the territories of the ancient Veii. Addison.

How could he have the retiredness of the cloister, to perform all those acts of devotion in, when the hurthen of the reformation lay upon his shoulders? Francis Atterbury.

The presbyterians argued, That if the Pretender should invade those parts where the numbers and estates of the dissenters chiefly lay, they would sit still. Swift.

To LAY. r. a. [leegan, Sax. leggen, Dut.]

1. To place; to put; to reposit. This word being correlative to lie, involves commonly immobility or extension; a punishment laid, is a punishment that cannot be shaken off; in immobility is included weight. One house laid to another, implies extension. Jomah.

He laid his robe from him. Ezekiel.

They have laid their swords under their heads.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid. Mit.

He sacrificing laid

The entrails on the wood. Milton.

2. To place along.

Seek not to be judge, being not able to take away iniquity, lest at any time thou fear the person of the mighty, and lay a stumbling-block in the way of thy uprightness. Ecclesi.

A stone was laid on the mouth of the den. Dan.

3. To beat down corn or grass.

Another ill accident is laying of corn with great rains in harvest. Bacon's Natural History.

I'll use th' advantage of my power,
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood. Shakesp.

It was a sandy soil, and the way had been full of dust; but an hour or two before a refreshing fragrant shower of rain had laid the dust. Roy.

5 To fix deep; to dispose regularly: either of these notions may be conceived from the following examples; but regularity seems rather implied; so we say, to lay bricks; to lay planks.

Schismatics, outlaws, or criminal persons, are not fit to lay the foundation of a new colony. Bacon.
I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden.
Men will be apt to call it pulling up the old foundations of knowledge; I persuade myself that the way I have pursued lays those foundations surer. Locke.

6. To put; to place.

Then he offered it to him again; then he put it by again; but, to my thinking, he was very loth to lay his fingers off it. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
Till us death lay

To ripe and mellow, we are but stubborn clay. Donne.
They shall lay hands on the sick, and recover. Mark.

They, who so state a question, do no more but separate and disentangle the parts of it, one from another, and lay them, when so disentangled, in their due order. Locke.

We to thy name our annual rites will pay,
And on thy altars sacrifices lay. Pope's Statius

The colouring upon those maps should be laid on so thin, as not to obscure or conceal any part of the lines. Watts.

10. To paint; to enamel.

The pictures drawn in our minds are laid in fading colours; and, if not sometimes refreshed, vanish and disappear. Locke.

11. To put into any state of quiet.

They bragged, that they doubted not but to abuse, and lay asleep, the queen and council of England. Bacon.

12. To calm; to still; to quiet; to allay.

Friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd. B. Jon.
Thus pass'd the night so foul, till morning fair
Came forth with pilgrim steps in amice grey,
Who with her radiant finger still'd the roar
Of thunder, chas'd the clouds, and laid the winds. Milton.

After a tempest, when the winds are laid,
The calm sea wonders at the wrecks it made. Waller.

I fear'd I should have found
A tempest in your soul, and came to lay it. Denh.
At once the wind was laid, the whisp'ring sound
Was dumb, arising earthquake rock'd the ground. Dryden.

18. To exclude eggs.

After the egg lay'd, there is no further growth or nourishment from the female. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

A hen mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it; she is insensible of an increase or diminution in the number of those she lays. Addis.

19. To apply with violence; as, to lay blows.

Lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it. Ezek. iv. 2.

Never more shall my torn mind be heal'd,
Nor taste the gentle comforts of repose!
A dreadful band of gloomy cares surround me,
And lay strong siege to my distracted soul. Philips.

20. To apply nearly.

She layeth her hands to the spindle, and her hands hold the distaff. Prov. xxxi. 19.
It is better to go to the house of mourning than to go to the house of feasting; for that is the end of all men, and the living will lay it to his heart. Eccles. vii. 2.

The peacock laid it extremely to heart, that, being Jono's darling bird, he had not the nightingale's voice. L'Estrange.

He that really lays these two things to heart, the extreme necessity that he is in, and the small possibility of help, will never come coldly to a work of that concernment. Duppa.

21. To add; to conjoin.

Wo unto them that lay field to field. Isa. v. 8.

22. To put in a state; implying somewhat of disclosure.

If the sinus lie distant, lay it open first, and cure that aperture before you divide that in ano. Wise.

Don Diego and we have laid it so, that before the rope is well about thy neck, he will break in and cut thee down. Arbutnot.

24. To charge as a payment.

A tax laid upon land seems hard to the landholder, because it is so much money going out of his pocket. Locke.

25. To impute; to charge.

Preoccupied with what
You rather must do, than what you should do,
Made you against the grain to voice him consul.
Lay the fault on us. Shakesp.
How shall this bloody deed be answered?
It will be laid to us, whose providence Should have kept short, restrain'd, and out of haunt,

This mad young man. Shakesp. Hamlet.
We need not lay new matter to his charge. Shak.
Men groan from out of the city, yet God layeth not folly to them. Job, xxiv. 12.

dustry, much greater sums of money on instruments than any man we ever heard of. Boyle.
The blood and treasure that's laid out,
Is thrown away, and goes for nought. Hudibras.
If you can get a good tutor, you will never repent the charge ; but will always have the satisfaction to think it the money, of all other, the best laid out. Locke.

I, in this venture, double gains pursue,
And laid out all my stock to purchase you. Dryd.
My father never at a time like this
Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste
Such precious moments. Addison's Cato.
A melancholy thing to see the disorders of a household that is under the conduct of an angry stateswoman, who lays out all her thoughts upon the publick, and is only attentive to find out miscarriages in the ministry. Addison's Freeholder.

When a man spends his whole life among the stars and planets, or lays out a twelve-month on the spots in the sun, however noble his speculations may be, they are very apt to fall into burlesque. Addison.
Nature has laid out all her art in beautifying
the face ; she has touched it with vermilion, planted in it a double row of ivory, and made it the seat of smiles and blushes. Addison.

every part of the city, went himself onto the station, which was then hardly laid to by the Passa Mostapha. Knolles.

Whilst he this, and that, and each man's blow,
Doth eye, defend, and shift, being laid to sore ;
Backwards he bears. Daniel's Civil War.

56. To lay together. To collect ; to bring into one view.

If we lay all these things together, and consider the parts, rise, and degrees of his sin, we shall find that it was not for nothing. South.

Many people apprehend danger for want of taking the true measure of things, and laying waters rightly together. L'Estrange.

My readers will be very well pleased, to see so many useful hints upon this subject laid together in so clear and concise a manner. Addison's Guardian.

One series of consequences will not serve the turn, but many different and opposite deductions must be examined, and laid together, before a man can come to make a right judgment of the point in question. Locke.

57. To lay under. To subject to.

A Roman soul is bent on higher views,
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
And lay it under the restraint of laws. Addison.

58. To lay up. To confine to the bed or chamber.

In the East Indies, the general remedy of a subject to the gout, is rubbing with hands till the

With the mincing Dryades,
On the lawns, and on the leas Milton.

The lowing herds wind slowly o'er the lea. Gray.

LEAD. n. s. [læd, Sax.]

1. Lead is the heaviest metal except gold and quicksilver. Lead is the softest of all the metals, and very ductile, though less so than gold; it is very little subject to rust, and the least sonorous of all the metals except gold. The specific gravity of lead is to that of water as 11,322 to 1000. Lead, when kept in fusion over a common fire, throws up all other bodies, except gold, that are mixed, all others being lighter, except mercury, which will not bear that degree of heat; it afterwards trivifies with the baser metals, and carries them off, in form of scoriæ, to the sides of the vessel. The weakest acids are the best solvents for lead: it dissolves very readily in aqua fortis diluted with water, as also in vinegar. The smoke of lead works is a prodigious annoyance, and subjects both the workmen, and the cattle that graze about them, to a mortal disease. Hill.

Thou art a sout in bliss, but I am bound
Up on a wheel of fire; that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead. Shakesp.
Of lead, some I can shew you so like steel, and so unlike common lead ore, that the workmen call it steel ore. Boyle.

Lead is employed for the refining of gold and silver by the cupel; hereof is made common ceruss with vinegar; of ceruss, red lead; of plumbum ustum, the best yellow ochre; of lead, and half as much tin, solder for lead. Grew.

2. [In the plural.] Flat roof to walk on; because houses are covered with lead.

3. To conduct as head or commander.

Would you lead forth your army against the enemy, and seek him where he is to fight? Spencer.

He turns head against the lion's armed jaws;
And being no more in debt to years than thou, Leads antient lords, and reverend bishops on To bloody battles. Shakesp. Henry IV.

If thou wilt have
The leading of thy own revenges, take
One half of my commission, and set down
As best thou art experienc'd. Shakesp.

He led me on to mightiest deeds,
Above the nerve of mortal arm,
Against the uncircumcis'd, our enemies:
But now hath cast me off. Milton's Agonistes.

O'er barren mountains, o'er the flow'ry plain,
The leafy forest, and the liquid main,
Extends thy uncontroul'd and boundless reign. Dryden.

Her leafy arms with such extent were spread,
That hosts of birds, that wing the liquid air,
Perch'd in the boughs. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

So when some swelt'ring travellers retire
To leafy shades, near the cool sunless verge
Of Paraba, Brazilian stream; her tail
A grisly hydra suddenly shoots forth. Philips.

LEAGUE. n. s. [ligue, Fr. ligo, Lat.] A confederacy; a combination either of interest or friendship.

You peers, continue this united league:
I every day expect an embassy
From my Redeemer, to redeem me hence.
And now in peace my soul shall part to heav'n,
Since I have made my friends at peace on earth. Shakesp.

We come to be informed by yourselves,
What the conditions of that league must be. Shak.

Thou shalt be in league with the stones of the field; and the beasts of the field shall be at peace with thee. Job.

Go break thy league with Baasha, that he may depart from me. 2 Chron. xvi. 5.

It is a great error, and a narrowness of mind, to think, that nations have nothing to do one with another, except there be either an union in sovereignty, or a conjunction in pacts or leagues; there are other bands of society and implicit confederations. Bacon's Holy War.

I, a private person, whom my country
As a league breaker gave up bound, presum'd Single rebellion, and did hostile acts. Milton.

Oh Tyrians, with immortal hate Pursue this hat'd race: and let there be 'Twixt us and them no league nor amity. Denham.

To LEAGUE. v. n. To unite; to confederate.

Where fraud and falsehood invade society, the band presently breaks, and men are put to a loss where to league and to fasten their dependences. South.

LEAGUE. n. s. [lieuë, Fr.]

1. A league; leuca, Lat. from lech, Welsh; a stone that was used to be erected at the end of every league. Camden.

2. A measure of length, containing three miles.

Ere the ships could meet by twice five leagues,
We were encount'rd by a mighty rock. Shakesp.
Ev'n Italy, though many a league remote,
In distant echoes answer'd. Addison.

LEAGUED. adj. [from league.] Confederated.

And now thus leagu'd by an eternal bond,
What shall retard the Britons bold designs? Philips.

LEAGUER. n. s. [beloggeren, Dut.] Siege; investment of a town.

We will bind and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose no other but that he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries, when we bring him to our own tents. Shakesp.

LEAK. n. s. [leck, leke, Dut.] A breach or hole which lets in water.

There will be always evils, which no art of man can cure; breaches and leaks more than man's wit hath hands to stop. Hooker.

The water rushes in, as it doth usually in the leak of a ship. Wilkins.

Whether she sprung a leak I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
Or that some rock below her bottom rent,
But down at once with all her crew she went. Dryden.

To LEAK. v. n.

1. To let water in or out.

They will allow us ne'er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney. Shakesp.

His feet should be washed every day in colc water; and have his shoes so thin, that they might leak, and let in water. Locke.

2. To drop through a breach, or discontinuity.

The water, which will perhaps by degrees leak into several parts, may be emptied out again. Wilkins.

Golden stars hung o'er their heads,
And seemed so crowded, that they burst upon 'em,
And dart at once their baleful influence
In leaking fire. Dryden and Lee.

LEAKAGE. n. s. [from leak.] Allowance made for accidental loss in liquid measures.

LEAKY. adj. [from leak.]

1. Battered or pierced, so as to let water in or out.

Thou'rt so leaky,
That we must leave thee to thy sinking; for Thy dearest quit thee. Shakesp.

If you have not enjoy'd what youth could give,
But life sunk through you like a leaky sieve,
Accuse yourself, you liv'd not while you might. Dryden.

2. Loquacious; not close.

Women are so leaky, that I have hardly met with one that could not hold her breath longer than she could keep a secret. L'Estrange.

To LEAN. v. n. preter. leaned or leant. [lhanan, Sax. leunen, Dut.]

1. To incline against; to rest against.

Lean thine aged back against mine arm,
And in that case I'll tell thee my disease. Shak.

Security is expressed among the medals of Gordianus, by a lady leaning against a pillar, a scepter in her hand, before an altar. Peach-on Drawing.

The columns may be allowed somewhat above their ordinary length, because they lean unto so good supporters. Watton.

Upon his iv'ry sceptre first he leant,
Then shook his head, that shook the firmament. Dryden.

Oppress'd with anguish, panting and o'erspent,
His fainting limbs against an oak he leant. Dryden.

If God be angry, all our other dependencies will profit us nothing; every other support will fail under us when we come to lean upon it, and deceive us in the day when we want it most. Rogers.

Then leaning o'er the rails he musing stood. Gay.

'Mid the central depth of black'ning woods,
High rais'd in solemn theatre around Leans the huge elephant. Thomson.

2. To propend; to tend towards.

They delight rather to lean to their old customs, though they be more unjust, and more inconvenient. Spenser.

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart; and lean not unto thine own understanding. Prov. iii. 5.
A desire leaning to either side, biasses the judgment strangely. Watts.

3. To be in a bending posture.

She leans me out at her mistress's chamber window, bids me a thousand times good night. Shak.

Wearied with length of ways, and worn with toil,
She laid her down; and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries. Dryden.

The gods came downward to behold the wars,
Sharpening their sights, and leaning from their stars. Dryden.

LEAN. adj. [plæne, Sax.]

1. Not fat; meagre; wanting flesh; bareboned.

You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean famine, quartering steel, and climbing fire. Shakesp.

Lean raw-bon'd rascals! whowould e'ersuppose,
They hac such courage and audacity! Shakesp.

Lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change.

I would invent as bitter searching terms,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave. Shakesp.
Seven other kine came out of the river ill-favour'd and lean-fleshed. Gen. xli. 3.
Let a physician beware how he purge after hard frosty weather, and in a lean body, without preparation. Bacon.
And fetch their precepts from the cynic tub,
Praising the lean and sallow abstinence. Milton.
Swear that Adrastus, and the lean-look'd prophet,
Are joint conspirators. Dryden and Lee.
Lean people often suffer for want of fat, as fat people may by obstruction of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

No laughing graces wanton in my eyes;
But haggard grief, lean-looking sallow care, Dwell on my brow. Roué's Jane Shore.

2. Not unctuous; thin; hungry.

There are two chief kinds of terrestrial liquors, those that are fat and light, and those that are lean and more earthy, like common water. Burnet.

3. Low; poor: in opposition to great or rich.

That which combin'd us was most great, and let not
A leaner action rend us. Shakesp.

4. Jeune; not comprehensive; not embellished: as, a lean dissertation.

LEAN, n. s. That part of flesh which consists of the muscle without the fat.

With razors keen we cut our passage clean
Through rills of fat, and deluges of lean. Farquhar.

LEANLY, adv. [from lean.] Meagerly; without plumpness.

LEANNESS, n. s. [from lean.]

1. Extenuation of body; want of flesh; meagreness.

If thy leanness loves such food,
There are those, that, for thy sake,
Do enough. Ben Jonson.

The symptoms of too great fluidity are excess of universal secretions, as of perspiration, sweat, urine, liquid dejectures, leanness and weakness. Arbuthnot.

2. Want of matter; thinness; poverty.

The poor King Reigner, whose large style Agrees not with the leanness of his purse. Shakesp.

To LEAP, v. n. [pleapan, Sax. leap, Scott.]

1. To jump; to move upward or progressively without change of the feet.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, or by vaulting into my saddle with my armour on, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakesp. Hen. V.

A man leapeth better with weights in his hands than without; for that the weight, if it be proportionable, strengtheneth the sinews by contracting them. In leaping with weights, the arms are first cast backwards and then forwards with so much the greater force; for the hands go backward before they take their rise. Bacon.

In a narrow pit
He saw a lion, and leap'd down to it. Cowley.
Thrice from the ground she leap'd, was seen to wield

Her brandish'd lance. Dryden's Æn.

2. To rush with vehemence.

God changed the spirit of the king into mild-ness, who in a leap'd from his throne, and took her in his arms, till she came to herself again. Esther, xv. 8.

After he went into the tent and found her not,
he leaped out to the people. Judith xiv. 7.

He ruin upon ruin heaps,
And on me, like a furious giant, leaps. Sandys.
Strait leaping from his horse, he rais'd me up.

3. To bound; to spring.

Rejoice ye in that day, and leap for joy. Luke vi. 2.

I am warm'd, my heart:

Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. Addison

1. To fly; to start.

He parted frowning from me, as if ruin
Leap'd from his eyes; so looks the chased lion
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd his side;
Then makes him nothing. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.
Out of his mouth go burning lamps, and sparks of fire leap out. Job xli. 19.

To LEAP, v. a.

1. To pass over, or into, by leaping.

Every man is not of a constitution to leap a gulf for the saving of his country. L'Estrange.
As one condemn'd to leap a precipice,
Who sees before his eyes the depth below,
Stops short. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
She dares pursue, if they dare lead:
As their example still prevails,
She tempts the stream, or leaps the pales. Prior.

2. To compress, as beasts.

Too soon they must not feel the sting of love:
Let him not leap the cow. Dryden's Georg.

LEAP, n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Bound; jump; act of leaping.

2. Space passed by leaping.

After they have carried their riders safe over all leaps, and through all dangers, what comes of them in the end but to be broken-winded. L'Estrange.

3. Sudden transition.

Wickedness comes on by degrees, as well as virtue; and sudden leaps from one extreme to another are unnatural. L'Estrange.

The commons wrested even the power of chusing a king intirely out of the hands of the nobles; which was so great a leap, and caused such a convulsion in the state, that the constitution could not bear. Swift.

4. An assault of an animal of prey.

The cat made a leap at the mouse. L'Estrange.

5. Embrace of animals.

How she cheats her belloving lover's eye;
The rushing leap, the doubtful progeny. Dryden.

6. Hazard, or effect of leaping.

Methodists, it were an easy leap
To pluck bright honour from the pale-fac'd moon. Shakesp.

You take a precipice for no leap of danger,
And woo your own destruction. Shakesp.

Behold that dreadful downfall of a rock,
Where you old fisher views the waves from high!
'Tis the convenient leap I mean to try. Dryd.

LEAP-FROG, n. s. [leap and frog.] A play of children, in which they imitate the jump of frogs.

If I could win a lady at leap-frog, I should quickly leap into a wife. Shakesp. Hen. V.

LEAP-YEAR, n. s.

Leap-year or bissextile is every fourth year, and so called from its leaping a day more that year than in a common year: so that the common year has 365 days, but the leap-year 366: and then February hath 29 days, which in common years hath but 28. To find the leap-year you have this rule:
Divide by 4; what's left shall be

For leap-year 0; for past 1, 2, 3. Harris.

The reason of the name of leap-year, is, that a day of the week is missed; as, if on one year the first of March be on Monday, it will on the next year be on Tuesday, but on leap-year it will leap to Wednesday.

That the sun consisteth of 365 days and almost six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted will, in process of time, largely de-prave t compute; and this is the occasion of the bissextile or leap-year. Brown.

To LEARN, v. a. [leornman, Sax.]

1. To gain the knowledge or skill of.

Learn a parable of the fig-tree. Matt. xxiv. 32
He, in a shorter time than was thought possible, learned both to speak and write the Arabian tongue. Knolles.

*Learn*s wretches! learn the motions of the mind,
And the great moral end of humankind. Dryden.

You may rely upon my tender care.

To keep him far from perils of ambition
All he can learn of me, will be to weep! A. Ph. lii.

2. To teach. [It is observable, that in many of the European languages the same word signifies to learn and to teach; to gain or impart knowledge.] This sense is now obsolete.

He would learn

The lion stoop to him in lowly wise,
A lesson hard. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

You taught me language, and my profit is Is, I know not how to curse: the fell plague rid you,

For learning me your language. Shakesp. Tempest.
A thousand more mischances than this one,
I have learn'd me how to brook this patiently. Shakesp.

Hast thou not learn'd me how To make perfumes? Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To LEARN, v. n. To take pattern: with of.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for
I am meek and lowly. Matt. xi. 29.

In imitation of sounds, that man should be the teacher is no part of the matter; for birds will learn one of another. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

LEARNED, adj. [from learn.]

1. Versed in science and literature.

It is indifferent to the matter in hand, which way the learned shall determine of it. Locke.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence;
Such labour'd nothings, in so strange a style,
Amaze th' unlearn'd, and make the learned smile. Pope.

The learned met with free approach,
Although they came not in a coach. Swift.

The best account is given of them by their own authors: but I trust more to the table of the learned bishop of Bath. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. Skilled; skillful; knowing: with in.

Thou' train'd in arms, and learn'd in martial arts,

Thou chusest not to conquer men, but hearts. Granv.

3. Skilled in scholastick, as distinct from other knowledge.

Till a man can judge whether they be truths or no, his understanding is but little improved: and thus men of much reading are greatly learned, but may be little knowing. Locke.

LEARNEDLY, adv. [from learned.] With knowledge; with skill.

The apostle seem'd in his eyes but learnedly
mad. Hooker.

Much
He spoke, and learnedly, for life; but all
Was either pitied in him, or forgotten. Shakesp.

Every coxcomb swears as learnedly as they. Swift.

LEARNING, n. s. [from learn.]

1. Literature; skill in languages or sciences; generally scholastick knowledge.

Learning hath its infancy, when it is almost childish; then its youth, when luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when solid;
and, lastly, its old age, when dry and exhaust. Bacon.

To tongue or pudding thou hast no pretence,
Learning thy talent is, but mine is sense. Prior.

As Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, so it is manifest from this chapter, that St. Paul was a great master in all the learning of the Greeks. Bentley.

2. Skill in any thing good or bad.

An art of contradiction by way of scorn, a learning wherewith we were long since be fore-warn'd; that the miserable times wherewith we are fallen should abound. Hooker.

LEARNER, n. s. [from learn.] One who is yet in his rudiments; one who is acquiring some new art or knowledge.

F 33

The late learners cannot so well take the ply, except it be in some minds that have not suffered themselves to fix. Bacon

Nor can a learner work so cheap as a skilful practised artist can. Granville's Bills of Mortality.

LEASE. n. s. [laisser, Fr. Spelman.]

1. A contract by which, in consideration of some payment, a temporary possession is granted of houses or lands.

Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world, It were a shame to let this land by lease. Shakesp.
Lords of the world have but for life their lease,
And that too, if the lessor please, must cease. Denham.

I have heard a man talk with contempt of bishops leases, as on a worse foot than the rest of his estate. Swift.

2. Any tenure.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature. Shakesp.
Thou to give the world increase,
Short'ned hast thy own life's lease. Milton.

To LEASE. v. a. [from the noun.] To let by lease.

Where the vicar leases his glebe, the tenant must pay the great tythes to the rector or impropriator, and the small tythes to the vicar. Ayliffe.

To LEASE. v. n. [lesen, Dut.] To glean; to gather what the harvest men leave.

She in harvest us'd to lease;
But harvest done, to chare-work did aspire,
Meat, drink, and two-pence, was her daily hire. Dryden.

LEASER. n. s. [from lease.] Gleaner; gatherer after the reaper.

There was no office which a man from England might not have; and I looked upon all who were born here as only in the condition of leasers and gleaners. Swift.

LEASH. n. s. [lesse, Fr. letse, Dut. laecio, Ital.]

1. A leather thong, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a coursier leads his greyhound. Hanmer.

Holding Corioli in the name of Rome,
Even like a fawning greyhound in the leash,
To let him slip at will. Shakesp.

What I was, I am;
More straining on, for plucking back; not following. Shak. Winter's Tale.

My leash unwillingly.

2. A tierce; three.

I am sworn brother to a leash of drawers, and can call them all by their Christian names. Shak.
Some thought when he did gabble,
Th'ad heard three labourers of Babel,
Or Cerberus himself pronounce
A leash of languages at once. Hudibras.

Thou art a living comedy; they are a leash of dull devils. Dennis's Letters.

3. A band wherewith to tie any thing in general.

The ravished soul being shewn such game, would break those leashes that tie her to the body. Boyle.

To LEASH. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind; to hold in a string.

Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword and fire,
Crouch for employment. Shakesp. Henry V.

LEASING. n. s. [leap, Sax.] Lies; falsehood.

O ye sons of men, how long will ye have such pleasure in vanity, and seek after leasing? Psalms iv. 2

He 'mongst ladies would their fortunes read
Out of their hands, and merry leasings tell. Habberd's Tale.

He hates foul leasings and vile flattery,
Two filthy blots in noble gentery. Habberd's Tale.

That false pilgrim which that leasing told,
Was indeed old Archinago. Fairy Queen.

I have ever verified my friends
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer: nay, sometimes,
Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have almost stamp't the leasing. Shakesp.

As folks, quoth Richard, prone to leasing,
Say things at first, because they're pleasing;
Then prove what they have once asserted,
Nor care to have their lie deserted:
Till their own dreams at length deceive them,
And oft repeating they believe them. Prior.

Trading free shall thrive again,
Nor leasings lewd affright the swain. Gay.

LEAST. adj. the superlative of little. [læp, Sax. This word Wallis would persuade us to write lest, that it may be analogous to less; but surely the profit is not worth the change.] Little beyond others; smallest.

I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies shewed to thy servant. Gen. xxxii. 10.
A man can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space. Locke.

LEAST. adv. In the lowest degree; in a degree below others; less than any other way.

He resolv'd to waver his suit,
Or for a while play least in sight. Hudibras.
Ev'n that avert; I chuse it not;
But taste it as the least un'appy lot. Dryden.

No man more truly knows to place a right value on your friendship, than he who least deserves it on all other accounts than his due sense of it. Pope.

At LEAST. } To say no more; not
At the LEAST. } to demand or affirm
At LEASTWISE. } more than is barely sufficient; at the lowest degree.

He who tempts, though in vain, at least aspires
The tempted with dishonour. Milton.
He from my side subducing, took perhaps
More than enough; at least on her bestowed
Too much of ornament, in outward show Elaborate, of inward less exact. Milton.

Upon the mast they saw a young man, at least if he were a man, who sat as on horseback. Sidney.
Every effect doth after a sort contain, at least-wise resemble, the cause from which it proceedeth. Hooker.

Honour and fame at least the thund'rer ow'd,
And ill he pays the promise of a god. Pope.
The remedies, if any, are to be proposed from a constant course of the milken diet, continued at least a year. Temple.

A fiend may deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, at least by the tacit permission of the omniscient Being. Dryden.

2. It has a sense implying doubt; to say no more; to say the least; not to say all that might be said.

Whether such virtue spent now fail'd
New angels to create, if they at least
Are his created. Milton.
Let useful observations be at least some part of the subject of your conversation. Watts.

LEAS'Y. adj. [This word seems formed from the same root with loisir, Fr. or loose.] Flimsy; of weak texture. Not in use.

He never leaveth, while the sense itself be left loose and leasy. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

LEATHER. n. s. [leðer, Sax. leadr, Erse.]

1. Dressed hides of animals.

He was a hairy man, and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. 2 Kings, i. 8.
And if two boots keep out the weather,
What need you have two hides of leather? Prior.

2. Skin: ironically.

Returning sound in limb and wind,
Except some leather lost behiud. Swift.

3. It is often used in composition for leathern.

The shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle;
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies. Shakesp.

LEATHERCOAT. n. s. [leather and coat.] An apple with a tough rind.

There is a dish of leathercoats for you. Shakesp.

LEATHER-DRESSER. n. s. [leather and dresser.] He who dresses leather; he who manufactures hides for use.

He removed to Cumæ; and by the way was entertained at the house of one Tycheius, a leather-dresser. Pope.

LEATHER-MOUTHED. adj. [leather and mouth.]

By a leather mouthed fish, I mean such as have their teeth in their throat; as, the club or cheven. Walton's Angler.

LEATHERY. adj. [from leather.] Resembling leather.

Wormius calls this crust a leathery skin. Grew.

LEATHERN. adj. [from leather.] Made of leather.

I saw her hand; she has a leathern hand,
A free-stone colour'd hand: I verily did think
That her old gloves were on. Shakesp.

The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting. Shakesp. As you like it.

In silken or in leathern purse retain A splendid sbling. Philips.

LEATHERSELLER. n. s. [leather and seller.] He who deals in leather, and vends it.

LEAVE. n. s. [leap, Sax. from lȳpan to grant.]

1. Grant of liberty; permission; allowance.

By your leave, Irenus, notwithstanding all this your careful foresight, methinks I see an evil lurk unespied. Spenser.

When him his dearest Una did behold, Disdaining life, desiring leave to die. Spenser.
I make bold to press upon you.
—You're welcome; give us leave, drawer. Shakesp.

The days
Of Sylla's sway, when the free sword took leave
To act all that it would. Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Thrice happy snake! that in her sleeve
May boldly creep; we dare not give Our thoughts so unconfind a leave. Waller.

No friend has leave to bear away the dead. Dryden.
Offended that we fought without his leave,
He takes this time his secret hate to shew. Dryden.
One thing more I crave leave to offer about syllogism, before I leave it. Locke.

I must have leave to be grateful to any who serves me, let him be never so obnoxious to any party; nor did the tory party put me to the hardship of asking this leave. Pope.

2. Farewel; adieu. In this sense leave is permission to depart.

Take leave and part, for you must part forthwith. Shakesp.

Evils that take leave,
On their departure, most of all shew evil. Shakesp.
There is further compliment of leave taking between France and him. Shakesp. King Lear.

Here my father comes;
A double blessing is a double grace;
Occasion smiles upon a second leave. Shak.

But, my dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Suckling.
Many stars may be visible in our hemisphere, that are not so at present; and many shall take leave of our horizon, and appear unto southern habitations. Browne.

To LEAVE. v. a. pret. I left; I have left. [Of the derivation of this word the etymologists give no satisfactory account.]

1. To quit; to forsake.

A man shall leave his father and his mother, and cleave to his wife. Gen. ii. 24.

If they love lees, and leave the costly wine, Envy them not their palates with the swine. Ben Jonson.

2. To desert; to abandon.

He that is of an unthankful mind, will leave him in danger that delivered him. Eccclus. xxix. 17.

3. To depart from, without action: as, I left things as I found them.

When they were departed from him, they left him in great diseases. 2 Chron. xxiv. 25.

4. To have remaining at death.

There be of them that have left a name behind them. Eccclus. xlv. 8.

5. Not to deprive of.

They still have left me the providence of God, and all the promises of the gospel, and my charity to them too. Taylor.

6. To suffer to remain.

If it be done without order, the mind comprehendeth less that which is set down; and besides, it leaveth a suspicion, as if more might be said than is expressed. Bacon.

These things must be left uncertain to farther discoveries in future ages. Abbot.

Who those are, to whom this right by descent belongs, he leaves out of the reach of any one to discover from his writings. Locke.

7. Not to carry away.

They encamped against them, and destroyed the increase of the earth, and left no sustenance for Israel. Judges vi. 4.

He shall eat the fruit of thy cattle; which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil. Deut. xxviii. 48.

Vastius gave strict commandment, that they should leave behind them unnecessary baggage. Knolles.

8. To reject; not to choose.

In all the common incidents of life, I am superior, I can take or leave. Steele.

9. To fix as a token or remembrance.

This I leave with my reader, as an occasion for him to consider, how much he may be beholden to experience. Locke.

10. To bequeath; to give as inheritance.

That peace thou leav'st to thy imperial line, That peace, Oh happy shade! be ever thine. Dryden.

11. To give up; to resign.

Thou shalt not glean thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger. Lev. xix. 10.

If a wise man were left to himself, and his own choice, to wish the greatest good to himself he could devise; the sum of all his wishes would be this, That there were just such a being as God is. Tillotson.

12. To permit without interposition.

Whether Esau were a vassal, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

13. To cease to do; to desist from.

Let us return, lest my father leave caring for the asses, and take thought for us. 1 Sam. ix. 5.

14. To leave off. To desist from; to forbear.

If, upon any occasion, you bid him leave off the doing of any thing, you must be sure to carry the point. Locke.

In proportion as old age came on, he left off fox-hunting. Addison's Spectator.

15. To leave off. To forsake.

He began to leave off some of his old acquaintance, his roaring and bullying about the streets: he set on a serious air. Arbuthnot.

16. To leave out. To omit; to neglect.

I am so fraught with curious business, that I leave out ceremony. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

You may partake: I have told 'em who you are. —I should be loth to be left out, and here too. Ben Jonson.

What is set down by order and division doth demonstrate, that nothing is left out, or omitted, but all is there. Bacon.

Befriend till utmost end,

Of all thy dues be done, and none left out, Ere nice morn on the Indian steep From her cabin'd loop-hole peep. Milton.

We ask, if those subvert Reason's establish'd maxims, who assert That we the world's existence may conceive, Though we one atom out of matter leave? Blackm.

I always thought this passage left out with a great deal of judgment, by Tucca and Varius, as seems to contradict a part in the sixth Lucid.

Addison on Italy.

To LEAVE. v. n.

1. To cease; to desist.

She is my essence, and I leave to be, If I be not by her fair influence Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakesp.

And since this business so far fair is done, Let us not leave till all our own be won. Shakesp.

He began at the eldest, and left at the youngest. Genesis.

2. To leave off. To desist.

Gritus, hoping that they in the castle would not hold out, left off to batter or undermine it, wherewith he perceived he little prevailed. Knolles.

But when you find that vigorous heat abate, Leave off, and for another summons wait. Roscom.

3. To leave off. To stop.

Wrongs do not leave off there where they begin, But still beget new mischiefs in their course. Dun.

To LEAVE. v. a. [from levy; levor, Fr.]

To levy; to raise: a corrupt word, made, I believe, by Spenser, for a rhyme.

An army strong she leav'd, To war on those which him had of his realm be-reav'd. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

LEAVED. adj. [from leaves, of leaf.]

1. Furnished with foliage.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. 1.

2. Made with leaves or folds.

I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two leaved gates. Isa. xlv. 1.

LEAVEN. n. s. [levain, Fr. levare, v. a.]

1. Ferment mixed with any body to make it light; particularly used of sour dough mixed in a mass of bread.

It shall not be haken with leaven. Lev. vi. 17. All fermented meats and drinks are easiest digested; and those unfermented, by barm or leaven, are hardly digested. Floyer.

2. Any mixture which makes a general change in the mass: it generally means something that depraves or corrupts that with which it is mixed.

Many of their propositions savour very strongly of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

To LEAVEN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To ferment by something mixed.

You must tarry the leav'n'ng. Shakesp.

Who-soever eateth leavened bread, that soul shall be cut off. Exod. xii. 17.

Breads we have of several grains, with divers kinds of leavenings, and seasonings; so that some do extremely move appetites. Bacon.

2. To taint; to imbue.

That cruel something unpossest, Corrodes and leavens all the rest. Prior.

LEAVER. n. s. [from leave.] One who deserts or forsakes.

Let the world rank me in register A master-leaver and a fugitive. Shakesp.

LEAVES. n. s. The plural of leaf.

Parts fit for the nourishment of man in plants are, seeds, roots, and fruits; for leaves they give no nourishment at all. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

LEAVINGS. n. s. [from leave.] Remnant; relics; offal; refuse; it has no singular.

My father has this morning call'd together, To this poor hall, his little Roman senate, The leavings of Pharsalia. Addison's Cato.

Then who can think we'll quit the place,

Or stop nud light at Chloe's head, With scraps and leavings to be fed? Swift.

LEAVY. adj. [from leaf.] Full of leaves; covered with leaves: leafy is more used.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel tree, A garland made on temples for to wear, For he then e'osen was the dignity.

Of village lord that Whitsontide to bear. Sidney.

Now near enough: your leavy screens throw down,

And show like those you are. Shakesp.

To LECH. v. a. [lecher, Fr.] To lick over.

Hast thou yet leched the Athenian's eyes With the love-juice? Shakesp.

LECHER. n. s. [Derived by Skinner from luxure, old Fr. luxuria is used in the middle ages in the same sense.] A whore-master.

I will now take the leacher; he's at my house; he cannot 'scape me. Shakesp.

You, like a lecher, out of whorish loins Are pleas'd to breed out your inheritors. Shakesp.

The lecher soon transforms his mistress; now In lo's place appears a lovely cow. Dryden.

The sleepy lecher shuts his little eyes, About his churning chaps the frothy bubbles rise. Dryden.

She yields her charms To that fair lecher, the strong god of arms. Pope.

To LE'CHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To whore.

Die for adultery! No: The wren goes to't, and the small gilded fly does lecher in my sight. Shak.

Gut eats all day, and lechers all the night. Ben Jonson.

LE'CHEROUS. adj. [from lecher.] Lewd; lustful.

The sapphire should grow foul, and lose its beauty, when worn by one that is lecherous; the emerald should fly to pieces, if it touch the skin of any unchaste person. Derham.

LE'CHEROUSLY. adv. [from lecherous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

LE'CHEROUSNESS. n. s. [from lecherous.] Lewdness.

LE'CHERY. n. s. [from lecher.] Lewdness; lust.

The rest welter with as little shame in open lechery, as swine do in the common mire. Ascham.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery, Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakesp.

LECTION. n. s. [lectio, Lat.] A reading; a variety in copies.

Every critic has his own hypothesis: if the common text be not favourable to his opinion, a various lection shall be made authentick. Watts.

LECTURE. n. s. [lecture, Fr.]

1. A discourse pronounced upon any subject.

Mark him, while Dametas reads his rustick lecture unto him, how to feed his beasts before noon, and where to shade them in the extreme heat. Sidney.

Wrangling pedant, When in musick we have spent an hour, Your lecturers shall have leisure for as much. Shak.

When letters from Caesar were given to Rusticus, he refused to open them till the phil. sopher had done his lectures. Taylor's Holy Living.

Virtue is the solid good, which tutors should not only read lectures and talk of, but the labour and art of education should furnish the mind with, and fasten there. Locke.

2. The act or practice of reading; perusal.

In the lecture of holy scripture, their apprehensions are commonly confined unto the literal sense of the text. Brown.

3. A magisterial reprimand; a pedantick discourse.

Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures. Addison.

To LECTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To instruct formally.
 2. To instruct insolently and dogmatically.
- To LECTURE. v. n. To read in public; to instruct an audience by a formal explanation or discourse: as, Wallis lectured on geometry.

LECTURER. n. s. [from lecture.]

1. An instructor; a teacher by way of lecture.
 2. A preacher in a church hired by the parish to assist the rector or vicar.
- If any minister refused to admit into his church a lecturer recommended by them, and there was not one orthodox or learned man recommended, he was presently required to attend upon the committee. Clarendon.

LECTURESHIP. n. s. [from lecture.] The office of a lecturer.

He got a lectureship in town of sixty pounds a year, where he preached constantly in person. Swift.

LED. part. pret. of lead.

Then shall they know that I am the Lord your God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. Ezek. xxxix. 28.
The leaders of this people cause them to err, and they that are led of them are destroyed. Isa. ix. 16.
As in vegetables and animals, so in most other bodies, not propagated by seed, it is the colour we most fix on, and are most led by. Locke.

LEDGE. n. s. [leggen, Dut. to lie.]

1. A row; layer; stratum.
The lowest ledge or row should be merely of stone, closely laid, without mortar: a general caution for all parts in building contiguous to board. Wotton's Architecture.
2. A ridge rising above the rest; or projecting beyond the rest.
The four parallel sticks rising above five inches higher than the handkerchief, served as ledges on each side. Gulliver.
3. Any prominence, or rising part.
Beneath a ledge of rocks his fleet he hides,
The hending brow above a safe retreat provides. Dryden

LEDHORSE. n. s. [led and horse.] A sumpter horse.

LEE. n. s. [lie, Fr.]

1. Dregs; sediment; refuse: commonly lees.
My cloaths, my sex, exchang'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee. Prior.
2. [Sea term; supposed by Skinner from Feau, Fr.] It is generally that side which is opposite to the wind, as the lee shore is that the wind blows on. To be under the lee of the shore, is to be close under the weather shore. A leeward ship is one that is not fast by a wind, to make her way so good as she might. To lay a ship by the lee, is to bring her so that all her sails may lie against the masts and shrouds flat, and the wind to come right on her broadside, so that she will make little or no way. Diet.
If we, in the bay of Biscay, had had a port under our lee, that we might have kept our transporting ships with our men of war, we had taken the Indian fleet. Raleigh
The Hollanders were before Dunkirk with the wind at north-west, making a lee shore in all weathers. Raleigh
Unprovided of tackling and victualling, they are forced to sea by a storm; yet better do so than venture splitting and sinking on a lee shore. King Charles.

Him, haply slum'ring on the Norway foam,
The pilot of some small night-founder'd skiff,
Decem'g some island, oft, as seamen tell,
With fixed anchor in his scaly rind,
Moors by his side under the lee, while night
Invests the sea. Milton.

Batter'd by his lee they lay,
The passing winds through their torn canvass play. Dryden.

LEECH. n. s. [lac, Sax.]

1. A physician; a professor of the art of healing: whence we still use cow-leech.
A leech, the which had great insight
In that disease of griev'd conscience,
And well could cure the same; his name was Patience. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
Her words prevail'd, and then the learned leech
His cunning hand 'gan to his wounds to lay,
And all things else the which his art did teach. Fairy Queen.

Physick is their bane,
The learned leeches in despair depart,
And shake their heads, desponding of their art. Dryden.

Wise leeches will not vain receipts obtrude:
Deaf to complaints they wait upon the ill,
Till some safe crisis. Dryden.
The hoary wrinkled leech has watch'd and toil'd,
Tried every health-restoring herb and gum,
And wearied out his painful skill in vain. Rowe.
A skilful leech,
They say, had wrought this blessed deed;
This leech Arbutinot was yecept. Gay's Pastorals.

2. A kind of small water serpent, which fastens on animals, and sucks the blood: it is used to draw blood where the lancet is less safe, whence perhaps the name.
I drew blood by leeches behind his ear. Hilseman.
Sticking like leeches, till they burst with blood,
Without remorse insatiably. Roscommon.

To LEECH. v. a. [from the noun.] To treat with medicaments.

LEECHCRAFT. n. s. [leech and craft.] The art of healing.

We study speech, but others we persuade:
We leechcraft learn, but others cure with it. Davies.

- LEEF. adj. [lieve, leve, Dut.] Kind; fond.
Whilom all these were low and leef,
And lov'd their flocks to feed;
They never strove to be the chief,
And simple was their weed. Spenser's Pastorals.

LEEK. n. s. [leac, Sax. loock, Dut. leechk, Erse; porrum, Lat.] A plant.

Know'st thou Fuellen?—Yes.
—Tell him I'll knock his leek about his pate, Upon St. David's day. Shakesp.
Leek to the Welsh, to Dutchmen butter's dear. Gau.

We use acrid plants inwardly and outwardly in gangrenes; in the scurvy, water-cresses, horse-radish, garlick, or leek pottage Floyer on Humours.

LEER. n. s. [pleape, Sax.]

1. An oblique view.
I spy entertainment in her; she gives the leer of invitation. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Aside the devil turn'd
For envy, yet with jealous leer malign
Ey'd them askance. Milton.

2. A laboured cast of countenance.
Damn with faint praise, concede with civil leer. Pope.

I place a statesman full before my sight;
A bloated minister in all his geer,
With shameless visage, and perfidious leer. Swift

To LEER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To look obliquely; to look archly.
I will leer upon him as he comes by; and do but mark the countenance that he will give me. Shakesp.
I wonder whether you taste the pleasure of independency, or whether you do not sometimes leer upon the court. Swift.
2. To look with a forced countenance.

Bertran has been taught the arts of courts,
To gild a face with smiles, and leer a man to ruin. Dryden.

LEES. n. s. [lie, Fr.] Dregs; sediment: it has seldom a singular.

The memory of king Richard was so strong, that it lay like lees at the bottom of men's hearts; and if the vessel was but stirred, it would come up. Bacon's Henry VII
If they love lees, and leave the lusty wine,
Envy them not their palates with the swine. Ben Jonson.

Those lees that trouble it, refine
The agitated soul of generous wine. Dryden.

To LEESE. v. a. [lesen, Dut.] To lose: an old word.

Then sell to thy profit both butter and cheese,
Who buieth it sooner the more he shall leese. Tuss.
No cause, nor client fat, will Chev'ril leese,
But as they come on both sides he takes fees;
And pleaseth both: for while he melts his grease
For this, that wins for whom he holds his peace. Ben Jonson.

How in the port our fleet dear time did leese,
Withering like prisoners, which lie but for fees. Donne.

LEET. n. s.

Leete, or leta, is otherwise called a law-day. The word seemeth to have grown from the Saxon leſe, which was a court of jurisdiction above the wapentake or hundred, comprehending three or four of them, otherwise called thirthing, and contained the third part of a province or shire: these jurisdictions, one and other, be now abolished, and swallowed up in the county court. Cowell.

Who has a breast so pure,
But some uncleanly apprehensions Keep leets and law-days, and in sessions sit With meditations lawful? Shakesp. Othello.
You would present her at the leet,
Because she bought stone jugs, and no seal'd quarts. Shakesp.

LEEWARD. adj. [lee and peapb, Sax.] Towards the wind. See LEE.

The classics were called long ships, the oenaric round, because of their figure approaching towards circular: this figure, though proper for the stowage of goods, was not the fittest for sailing, because of the great quantity of leeward way, except when they sailed full before the wind. Arbutnot.

Let no statesman dare
A kingdom to a ship compare;
Lest he should call our commonwealth
A vessel with a double keel;
Which just like ours, new rigg'd and man'd,
And got about a league from land,
By change of wind to leeward side,
The pilot knew not how to guide. Swift.

LEFT. participle preter. of leave.

Alas, poor lady! desolate and left;
I weep myself to think upon thy words. Shakesp.
Had such a river as this been left to itself, to have found its way out from among the Alps, whatever windings it had made, it must have formed several little seas. Addison.
Were I left to myself, I would rather aim at instructing than diverting; but if we will be useful to the world, we must take it as we find it. Addison's Spectator.

That there is also in men a natural prepotency in the right, we cannot with constancy affirm, if we make observation in children, who, permitted the freedom of both hands, do oftentimes confine it unto the left, and are not without great difficulty restrained from it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The right to Pluto's golden palace guides,
The left to that unhappy region tends,
Which to the depth of Tartarus descends. Dryden.

The gods of greater nations dwell around,
And, on the right and left, the palace bounds;
The commons where they can. Dryden.

A raven from a wither'd oak,
Left of their lodging was oblig'd to croak:
That omen lik'd him not. Dryden.

The left foot naked when they march to fight, But in a bull's raw hide they sheathe the right. Dryden.

The limbs are used most on the right side, whereby custom helpeth; for we see, that some are left handed, which are such as have used the left hand most. Bacon.

For the seat of the heart and liver on one side, whereby men become left handed, it happeneth too rarely to countenance an effect so common: for the seat of the liver on the left side is very monstrous. Brown's Vulg. Err.

LEG. n. s. [leg, Dan. legzur, Islandick.]

1. The limb by which we walk; particularly that part between the knee and the foot.

They haste; and what their hardy feet deny'd, The trusty staff, their better leg, supply'd. Dryden.

Purging conphis, and ants eggs, Had almost brought him off his legs. Hudibras.

Such intrigues people cannot meet with, who have nothing but legs to carry them. Addison.

2. An act of obedience; a bow with the leg drawn back.

At court, he that cannot make a leg, put off his cap, kiss his hand, and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap. Shakesp.

Their horses never give a blow, But when they make a leg, and bow. Hudibras.

If the boy should not put off his hat, nor make legs very gracefully, a dancing-master will cure that defect. Locke.

He made his leg, and went away. Saunders.

3. To stand on his own legs. To support himself.

Persons of their fortune and quality could well have stood upon their own legs, and need not to lay in for countenance and support. Collier.

4. That by which any thing is supported on the ground: as, the leg of a table.

LEGACY. n. s. [legatum, Lat.]

Legacy is a particular thing given by last will and Testament. Covell.

If there be no such thing apparent upon record, they do as if one should demand a legacy by force and virtue of some written testament, wherein there being no such thing specified, he pleadeth that there it must needs be, and bringeth arguments from the love or good-will which always the testator bore him; imagining, that these, or the like proofs, will convict a testament to have that in it, which other men can nowhere by reading find. Hooker.

Fetch the will hither, and we shall determine How to cut off some charge in legacies. Shakesp.

Good counsel is the best legacy a father can leave a child. L'Estrange.

When he thought you gone T'augment the number of the bless'd above, He deem'd 'em legacies of royal love; Nor arm'd, his brothers portions to invade, But to defend the present you had made. Dryden.

When the heir of this vast treasure knew How large a legacy was left to you, He wisely ty'd it to the crown again. Dryden.

Leave to thy children tumult, strife, and war, Portions of toil, and legacies of care. Prior.

LEGAL. adj. [legal, Fr. leges, Lat.]

1. Done or conceived according to law.

LEGEND. n. s. [legenda, Lat.]

1. A chronicle or register of the lives of saints.

Legends being grown in a manner to be nothing else but heaps of frivolous and scandalous vanities, they have been even with disdain thrown out, the very nests which bred them abhorring them. Hooker.

There are in Rome two sets of antiquities, the christian and the heathen; the former, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison.

2. Any memorial or relation.

And in this legend all that glorious deed Read, whilst you arm you; arm you whilst you read. Fairfax.

3. An incredible unauthentic narrative.

Who can show the legends, that record More idle tales, or fables so absurd? Blackmore.

It is the way of attaining to Heaven, that makes profane scorers so willingly let go the expectation of it. It is not the articles of the creed, but the duty to God and their neighbour, that is such a consistent incredible legend. Bentley.

4. Any inscription; particularly on medals or coins.

Compare the beauty and comprehensiveness of legends on ancient coins. Adanson on Medals.

LEGER. n. s. [from legger, Dut. To lie or remain in a place.] Any thing that lies in a place; as, a leger ambassador; a resident; one that continues at the court to which he is sent; a leger-book, a book that lies in the compting-house.

Lard Angelo, having affairs to Heav'n, Intends you for his swift ambassador, Where you shall be an everlasting leger. Shakesp.

Not in the legions
Of horrid hell, can come a devil more damn'd. Shakesp.

The partition between good and evil is broken down; and where one sin has entered, legions will force their way through the same breach. Rogers.

LEGIONARY. adj. [from legion.]
1. Relating to a legion.
2. Containing a legion.
3. Containing a great indefinite number.

You many applying themselves betwixt just and earnest, make up the legionary body of error. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

LEGISLATION. n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The act of giving laws.
Pythagoras joined legislation to his philosophy, and, like others, pretended to miracles and revelations from God, to give a more venerable sanction to the laws he prescribed. Littleton.

LEGISLATIVE. adj. [from legislator.]
Giving laws; lawgiving.
Their legislative frenzy they repent,
Enacting it should make no precedent. Denham.
The poet is a kind of lawgiver, and those qualities are proper to the legislative style. Dryden.

LEGISLATOR. n. s. [legislator, Lat. legislator, Fr.] A lawgiver; one who makes laws for any community.
It spoke like a legislator: the thing spoke was a law. South.
Heroes in animated marble frown,
And legislators seem to think in stone. Pope.

LEGISLATURE. n. s. [from legislator, Lat.] The power that makes laws.
Without the concurrent consent of all three parts of the legislature, no law is, or can be made. Hale's Common Law.

In the notion of a legislature is implied a power to change, repeal, and suspend laws in being, as well as to make new laws. Addison.
By the supreme magistrate is properly understood the legislative power; but the word magistrate seeming to denote a single person, and to express the executive power, it came to pass that the obedience due to the legislature was, for want of considering this easy distinction, misapplied to the administration. Swift.

LEGITIMACY. n. s. [from legitimate.]
1. Lawfulness of birth.
In respect of his legitimacy, it will be good. Ayliffe.

2. Genuineness; not spuriousness.
The legitimacy or reality of these marine bodies vindicated, I now inquire by what means they were hurried out of the ocean. Woodward.

LEGITIMATE. adj. [from legitimus, Lat. legitime, Fr.] Born in marriage; lawfully begotten.
Legitimate Edgar, I must have your land;
Our father's love is to the bastard Edmund. Shak.
An adulterous person is tied to make provision for the children begotten in unlawful embraces, that they may do no injury to the legitimate, by receiving a portion. Taylor.

To LEGITIMATE. v. a. [legitimer, Fr. from the adjective.]
1. To procure to any the rights of legitimate birth.
Legitimate him that was a bastard. Ayliffe.

2. To make lawful.
It would be impossible for any enterprize to be lawful, if that which should legitimate it is subsequent to it, and can have no influence to make it good or bad. Decay of Piety.

LEGITIMATELY. adv. [from legitimate.]
1. Lawfully.
2. Genuinely.
By degrees he rose to Jove's imperial seat;
Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

LEGITIMATION. n. s. [legitimation, Fr. from legitimate.]
1. Lawful birth.
I have disclaimed my land;
Legitimation, name, and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father. Shakesp.

From whence will arise many questions of legitimation, and what in nature is the difference betwixt a wife and a concubine. Locke.
2. The act of investing with the privileges of lawful birth.

LEGUME. n. s. [legume, Fr. legu-
LEGUMEN. n. s. [legumen, Lat.] Seeds not reaped, but gathered by the hand; as, beans: in general, all larger seeds; pulse.
Some legumens, as peas or beans, if newly gathered and distilled in a retort, will afford an acid spirit. Boyle.

In the spring fell great rains, upon which ensued a most destructive mildew upon the corn and legumes. Arbuthnot.
LEGUMINOUS. adj. [legumincus, Fr. from legumen.] Belonging to pulse; consisting of pulse.
The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous seeds: as, oats, barley, and wheat: or of some of the siliquose or leguminous; as, peas or beans. Arbuthnot.

LEISURABLE. adj. [from leisure.] Done at leisure: not hurried; enjoying leisure.
A relation inexcusable in his works of leisable hours, the examination being as ready as the relation. Brown.
LEISURABLY. adv. [from leisable.] At leisure; without tumult or hurry.
Let us beg of God, that when the hour of our rest is come, the patterns of our dissolution may be Jacob, Moses, Joshua, and David, who leisurably ending their lives in peace, prayed for the mercies of God upon their posterity. Hooker.

LEISURE. n. s. [loisir, Fr.]
1. Freedom from business or hurry; vacancy of mind; power to spend time according to choice.
A gentleman fell very sick, and a friend said to him, Send for a physician: but the sick man answered, It is no matter; for if I die, I will die at leisure. Bacon's Aphorisms.
Where ambition and avarice have made no entrance, the desire of leisure is much more natural than of business and care. Temple.

You enjoy your quiet in a garden, where you have not only the leisure of thinking, but the pleasure to think of nothing which can decompose your mind. Dryden.
2. Convenience of time.
We'll make our leasures to attend on yours. Shakesp.

They summon'd up their meiny, strait took horse;
Commanded me to follow and attend
The leisure of their answer. Shakesp. King Lear.
O happy youth!
For whom thy fates reserve so fair a bride:
He sigh'd, and had no leisure more to say,
His honour call'd his eyes another way. Dryden.
I shall leave with him that rebuke, to be considered at his leisure. Locke.

3. Want of leisure. Not used.
More than I have said, loving countrymen,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakesp. Richard III.

LEISURELY. adj. [from leisure.] Not hasty; deliberate; done without hurry.
He was the wretchedest thing when he was young,
So long a growing, and so leisurely,
That, if the rule were true, he should be gracious. Shakesp.

The earl of Warwick, with a handful of men, fired Leith and Edinburgh, and returned by a leisurely march. Hayward.
The bridge is human life; upon a leisurely survey of it, I found that it consisted of threescore and ten entire arches. Addison.
LEISURELY. adv. [from leisure.] Not in a hurry; slowly; deliberately.
The Belgians hop'd, that with disorder'd haste,
Our deep-cut keels upon the sands might run;
Or if with caution leisurely we past,
Their numerous gross might charge us one by one. Dryden.

We descended very leisurely, my friend being careful to count the steps. Addison.
LEMAN. n. s. [Generally supposed to be l'aimant the lover, Fr. but imagined by Junius, with almost equal probability, to be derived from leaf, Dut. or leaf, Sax. beloved, and man. This etymology is strongly supported by the ancient orthography, according to which it was written leveman.] A sweetheart; a gallant; or a mistress. Hammer.
Laid for my sake, and do him not to die;
But vanquish'd, thine eternal bondslave make,
And me thy worthy meed unto thy leman take. Spenser.

A cup of wine,
That's brisk and fine,
And drink unto the leman mine. Shakesp.
LEMMA. n. s. [λήμμα; lemme, Fr.] A proposition previously assumed.
LEMON. n. s. [limon, Fr. limonium, low Lat.]
1. The fruit of the lemon-tree.
The juice of lemons is more cooling and astringent than that of oranges. Arbuthnot.
The dyers use it for dyeing of bright yellows and lemon colours. Mortimer.
Bear me, Pomona!
To where the lemon and the piercing line,
With the deep orange, glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend. Thomson.

2. The tree that bears lemons.
The lemon tree hath large stiff leaves; the flower consists of many leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruit is almost of an oval figure, and divided into several cells, in which are lodged hard seeds, surrounded by a thick fleshy substance, which, for the most part, is full of an acid juice. There are many varieties of this tree, and the fruit is yearly imported from Lisbon in great plenty. Miller.
LEMONADE. n. s. [from lemon.] Liquor made of water, sugar, and the juice of lemons.
Thou, and thy wife and children, should walk in my gardens, buy toys, and drink lemonade. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

To LEND. v. a. preterite and part. pass. lent. [lenen, Sax. leenen, Dut.]
1. To afford or supply, on condition of repayment.
In common worldly things 'tis call'd ungrateful
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which, with a bounteous hand, was kindly lent;
Much more to be thus opposite with Heav'n. Shak.

33

Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase.

Lev. xxv. 37.

They dare not give, and e'en refuse to lend,
To their poor kindred, or a wanting friend. Dryd.

2. To suffer to be used on condition that it be restored.

I'll lend it thee, my dear, but have no power to give it from me. Shakesp.

The fair blessing we vouchsafe to send;
Nor can we spare you long, though often we may lend. Dryden.

3. To afford; to grant in general.

Covetousness, like the sea, receives the tribute of all rivers, though far unlike it in lending any back again. Decay of Piety.

Painting and poesy are two sisters so like, that they lend to each other their name and office; one is called a dumb poesy, and the other a speaking picture. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

From thy new hope, and from thy growing store,
Now lend assistance, and relieve the poor. Dryden.
Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And descend to hear a young man speak. Add.

Wilt lend a hand to close thy mistress' eyes.
A. Phillips.

LENDER. n. s. [from lend.]

1. One who lends any thing.

2. One who makes a trade of putting money to interest.

Let the state be answer'd some small matter, and the rest left to the lender; if the abatement be small, it will not discourage the lender: he that took ten in the hundred, will sooner descend to eight than give over this trade. Bacon.

Whole droves of lenders crowd the bankers doors
To call in money. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

Interest would certainly encourage the lender to venture in such a time of danger. Addison.

LENGTH. n. s. [from leng, Sax.]

1. The extent of any thing material from end to end; the longest line that can be drawn through a body.

There is in Ticinum a church that is in length one hundred feet, in breadth twenty, and in height near fifty; it reporteth the voice twelve or thirteen times. Bacon.

2. Horizontal extension.

Mezentius rushes on his foes,
And first unhappy Acron overbrows;
Stretch'd up at his length he spurns the swarthy ground. Dryden.

3. Comparative extent; a certain portion of space or time: in this sense it has a plural.

Large lengths of seas and shores
Between my father and my mother lay. Shakesp.

To get from th' enemy, and Ralph, free;
Left dangers, fears, and foes behind,
And beat, at least, three lengths the wind. Hudib.

Time glides along with undiscover'd haste,
The future but a length beyond the past. Dryden.

4. Extent of duration or space.

What length of lands, what oceans have you pass'd,
What storius sustain'd, and on what shores been cast? Dryden.

Having thus got the idea of duration, the next thing is to get some measure of this common duration, whereby to judge of its different lengths. Locke.

5. Long duration or protraction.

May Heav'n, great monarch, still augment your bliss,
With length of days, and every day like this. Dryd.

Such toil requir'd the Roman name,
Such length of labour for so vast a frame. Dryden.

In length of time it will cover the whole plain, and make one mountain with that on which it now stands. Addison.

6. Reach or expansion of any thing.

I do not recommend to all a pursuit of sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced. Watts.

7. Full extent; uncontracted state.

If Latitia, who sent me this account, will acquaint me with the worthy gentleman's name, I will insert it at length in one of my papers. Addison's Spectator.

8. Distance.

He had marched to the length of Exeter, which he had some thought of besieging. Clarendon.

9. End; latter part of any assignable time.

Churches purged of things burdensome, all was brought at the length unto that wherein now we stand. Hooker.

A crooked stick is not straitened, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle state of evenness between them both. Hooker.

10. At length. [An adverbial mode of speech. It was formerly written at the length.] At last; in conclusion.

At length, at length, I have thee in my arms,
Though our malevolent stars have struggled hard,
And held us long asunder. Dryden's King Arthur.

To LENGTHEN. v. a. [from length.]

1. To draw out; to make longer; to elongate.

Relaxing the fibres, is making them flexible, or easy to be lengthen'd without rupture. Arbuthnot.
Falling dews with spangles deck'd the glade,
And the low sun had lengthen'd every shade. Pope.

2. To protract; to continue.

Frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms, and lengthens life. Shakesp.

Break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor: if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity. Dan.

It is in our power to secure to ourselves an interest in the divine mercies that are yet to come, and to lengthen the course of our present prosperity. Atterbury's Sermons.

3. To protract pronunciation.

The learned languages were less constrained in the quantity of every syllable, beside helps of grammatical figures for the lengthening or abbreviation of them. Dryden.

4. To lengthen out. [The particle out is only emphatical.] To protract; to extend.

What if I please to lengthen out his date
A day, and take a pride to cozen fate? Dryden.

I'd hoard up every moment of my life,
To lengthen out the payment of my tears. Dryden.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words. Addison.

To LENGTHEN. v. n. To grow longer; to increase in length.

One may as well make a yard, whose parts lengthen and shrink, as a measure of trade in materials, that have not always a settled value. Locke.

Still 'tis farther from its end;
Still finds its error lengthen with its way. Prior.

LENGTHWISE. adv. [length and wise.]

According to the length; in a longitudinal direction.

LENIENT. adj. [leniens, Lat.]

1. Assuasive; softening; mitigating.

In this one passion man can strength enjoy;
Time, that on all things lays his lenient hand,
Yet tames not this: it sticks to our last sand. Pope.

2. With of.

Consolatory is writ
With study'd argument, and much persuasion sought,

Lenient of grief and anxious thought. Milton.

3. laxative; emollient.

Oils relax the fibres, are lenient, balsamick, and abate acrimony in the blood. Arbuthnot on Alim.

LENIENT. n. s. An emollient, or assuasive application.

I dressed it with lenients. Wiscman's Surgery.

To LENIFY. v. n. [lenifier, old Fr. lenio, Lat.] To assuage; to mitigate.

Used for squinancies and inflammations in the throat, it seemeth to have a mollifying and lenifying virtue. Bacon.

All soft'ning simples, known of sov'reign use,
He presses out, and pours their noble juice;

These first infus'd, to lenify the pain,
He tugs with pinners, but he tugs in vain. Dryd.

LENITIVE. adj. [lenitif, Fr. lenio, Lat.] Assuasive; emollient.

Some plants have a milk in them; the cause may be an inception of putrefaction: for those milks have all an acrimony, though one would think they should be lenitive. Bacon.

There is aiment lenitive expelling the faeces without stimulating the bowels; such are animal oils. Arbuthnot.

LENITIVE. n. s.

1. Any thing medicinally applied to ease pain.

2. A palliative.

There are lenitives that friendship will apply, before it would be brought to decretory rigours. South's Sermons.

LENITY. n. s. [lenitas, Lat.] Mildness; mercy; tenderness; softness of temper.

Henry gives consent,
Of meer compassion, and of lenity,
To ease your country. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Lenity must gain
The mighty men, and please the discontent. Dan.

Albeit so ample a pardon was proclaimed touching treason, yet could not the boldness be beaten down either with severity, or with lenity he abated. Hayward.

These jealousies
Have but one root, the old imprison'd king,
Whose lenity first pleas'd the gaping crowd;

But when long try'd, and found supinely good,
Like Esop's log, they leapt upon his back. Dryd.

LENS. n. s. From resemblance to the seed of a lentil.

A glass spherically convex on both sides, is usually called a lens; such as is a burning-glass, or spectacle glass, or an object-glass of a telescope. Newton's Opticks.

According to the difference of the lenses, I used various distances. Newton's Opticks.

LENT. part. pass. from lend.

By Jove the stranger and the poor are sent,
And what to those we give, to Jove is lent. Pope.

LENT. n. s. [lentzen the spring, Sax.] The quadragesimal fast; a time of abstinence; the time from Ashwednesday to Easter.

Lent is from springing, because it falleth in the spring; for which our progenitors, the Germans, use glent. Camden.

LENTEN. adj. [from lent.] Such as is used in lent; sparing.

My lord, if you delight not in man, what lenter entertainment the players shall receive from you! Shakesp. Hamlet.

She quench'd her fury at the flood,
And with a lenter sallad cool'd her blood.
Their commens, though but coarse, were nothing scant. Dryden's Hind and Panther.

LENTICULAR. adj. [lenticulaire, French.]

Doubly convex; of the form of a lens.

The crystalline humour is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides. Rau on the Creation.

LENTIFORM. adj. [lens and forma, Lat.]

Having the form of a lens.

LENTIGINOUS. adj. [lentigo, Lat.] Scurfy; scurfuraceous.

LENTIGO. n. s. [Lat.] A freckly or scurfy eruption upon the skin; such especially as is common to women in child-bearing. Quincy.

LENTIL. n. s. [lens, Lat. lentille, Fr.] A plant. It hath a papilionaceous flower, the pointal of which becomes a short pod, containing orbicular seeds, for the most part convex; the leaves are conjugated, growing to one mid-rib, and are terminated by tendrils. Miller.

The Philistines were gathered together, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles. 2 Sam. xxiii. 11.

LENTISCK. n. s. [lentiscus, Lat. lentisque, Fr.] Lentisck wood is of a pale brown, almost whitish, resinous, fragrant, and acrid: it is the tree which produces mastich, esteemed astringent and balsamick. Hill.

Lentisck is a beautiful evergreen, the mastich or gum of which is of use for the teeth or gums. Mortimer's Husbandry.

LENTITUDE. n. s. [from lentus, Lat.] Sluggishness; slowness. Diet.

LENTNER. n. s. A kind of hawk. I should enlarge my discourse to the observation of the haggard, and the two sorts of lentners. Walton's Angler.

Some bodies have a kind of lentor, and more deceptible nature than others. Bacon.

2. Slowness; delay; sluggish coldness. The lentor of eruptions, not inflammatory, points to an acid cause. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. [In physick] That sily, viscid, coagulated part of the blood, which, in malignant fevers, obstructs the capillary vessels. Quincy.

LENTOUS. adj. [lentus, Lat.] Viscous; tenacious; capable to be drawn out.

In this spawn of a lentous and transparent body, are to be discerned many specks which become black, a substance more compacted and terrestrious than the other; for it riseth not in distillation. Brown.

LEOD. n. s. Leod signifies the people; or, rather, a nation, country, &c. Thus, leodgar is one of great interest with the people or nation. Gibson.

LEOF. n. s. Leof denotes love; so leofwin is a winner of love; leofstan, best beloved: like these Agapetus, Erasmus, Philo, Amandus, &c. Gibson's Camden.

LEONINE. adj. [leoninus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a lion; having the nature of a lion.

2. Leonine verses are those of which the end rhimes to the middle, so named from Leo the inventor: as,

Gloria factorum temere conceditur horum.

LEOPARD. n. s. [leo and pardus, Lat.] A spotted beast of prey.

Sheep run not half so timorous from the wolf, Or horse or oxen from the leopard.

As you fly from your oft-subdued slaves. Shakesp.
A leopard is every way, in shape and actions, like a cat: his head, teeth, tongue, feet, claws, tail, all like a cat's: he boxes with his fore-feet, as a cat doth her kittens; leaps at the prey, as a cat at a mouse; and will also sit much after the same manner: so that they seem to differ, just as a kite doth from an eagle. Grew.

Before the king tame leopards led the way, And troops of lions innocently play. Dryden.

LEPER. n. s. [lepra, leprosus, Lat.] One infected with a leprosy.

I am no loathsome leper; look on me. Shakesp.
The leper in whom the plague is, his cloaths shall be rent. Lev. xiii. 45.

LEPEROUS. adj. [Formed from leprosus, to make out a verse.] Causing leprosy; infected with leprosy; leprous.

Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment. Shakesp. Hamlet.

LEPORINE. adj. [leporinus, Lat.] Belonging to a hare; having the nature of a hare.

LEPROSITY. n. s. [from leprosus] Squamous disease.

If the crudities, impurities, and leprositities of metals were cured, they would become gold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

LEPROSY. n. s. [lepra, Lat. lepre, Fr.] A loathsome distemper, which covers the body with a kind of white scales.

Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms, and their crop
Be general leprosy. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
It is a plague of leprosy. Lev. xiii. 3.

Between the malice of my enemies and other men's mistakes, I put as great a difference as between the itch of novelty and the leprosy of disloyalty. King Charles.

Authors, upon the first entrance of the pox, looked upon it so highly infectious, that they ran away from it as much as the Jews did from the leprosy. Wiseman's Surgery.

LEPROUS. adj. [lepr, Lat. lepreux, Fr.] Infected with a leprosy.

The silly amorous sucks his death,
By drawing in a leprous harlot's breath. Donne.

LERE. n. s. [lepe, Sax. leere, Dut.] A lesson; lore; doctrine. Obsolete. This sense is still retained in Scotland.

The kid pitying his heaviness,
Asked the cause of his great distress;
And also why, and whence, that he were,
Though he had well yond his lere,
Thus melled his talk with many a tear. Spenser.

LERRY. [from lere.] A rating; a lecture. Rustick word.

LESS. A negative or privative termination. [leap, Sax. loos, Dut.] Joined to a substantive, it implies absence or privation of the thing expressed by that substantive; as, a witless man, a man without wit; childless, without children; fatherless, deprived of a father; pennyless, wanting money.

LESS. adj. [leap, Sax.] The comparative of little: opposed to greater, or to so great; not so much; not equal.

Mary, the mother of James the less Mark xv. 40.
He that thinks he has a positive idea of infinite space will find, that he can no more have a positive idea of the greatest than he has of the least space; for in this latter we are capable only of a comparative idea of smallness, which will always be less than any one whereof we have the positive idea. Locke.

All the ideas that are considered as having parts, and are capable of increase by the addition of any equal or less parts, afford us, by their repetition, the idea of infinity. Locke.

'Tis less to conquer, than to make wars cease,
And, without fighting, awe the world to peace. Halifax.

LESS. n. s. Not so much; opposed to more, or to as much.

They gathered some more, some less. Ex. xvi. 17.
Thy servant knew nothing of this, less or more. 1 Sam.

Yet could he not less his closing eyes withdraw,
Though less and less of Emily he saw. Dryden.

LESS. adv. In a smaller degree; in a lower degree.

This opinion presents a less mercy, but not less dangerous, temptation to those in adversity.

Deau of Piety.
The less space there is betwixt us and the object, and the more pure the air is, by so much the more the species are preserved and distinguished; and, on the contrary, the more space of air there is, and the less it is pure, so much the more the object is confused and embroiled. Dryden.

Their learning lay chiefly in flourish; they were not much wiser than the less pretending multitude. Collier on Pride.

The less they themselves want from others, they will be less careful to supply the necessities of the indigent. Smalbridge.

Happy, and happy still, she might have prov'd,
Were she less beautiful, or less beloved. Pope.

LESSEE. n. s. The person to whom a lease is given.

To LESSEN. v. a. [from less.]

1. To make less; to diminish in bulk.
2. To diminish the degree of any state or quality; to make less intense.

To beggars, and not lessen their own greatness. Den.

Though charity alone will not make one happy in the other world, yet it shall lessen his punishment. Calemy's Sermons.

Collect into one sum as great a number as you please, this multitude, how great soever, lessens not one jot the power of adding to it, or brings him any nearer the end of the inexhaustible stock of number. Locke.

This thirst after fame betrays him into such indecencies as are lessening to his reputation, and is looked upon as a weakness in the greatest characters. Addison's Spectator.

Nor are the pleasures which the brutal part of the creation enjoy, subject to be lessened by the uneasiness which arises from fancy. Atterbury.

3. To degrade; to deprive of power or dignity.

To lessen thee, against his purpose serves
To manifest the more thy might. Milton.

St. Paul chose to magnify his office, when ill men conspired to lessen it. Atterbury's Sermons.

To LESSEN. v. n. To grow less; to shrink; to be diminished.

All government may be esteemed to grow strong or weak, as the general opinion in those that govern is seen to lessen or increase. Temple.

The objection lessens much, and comes to no more than this, there was one witness of no good reputation. Atterbury.

LESSER. adj. A barbarous corruption of less, formed by the vulgar from the habit of terminating comparatives in er; afterwards adopted by poets, and then by writers of prose, till it has all the authority which a mode originally erroneous can derive from custom.

What great despite doth fortune to thee bear,
Thus lowly to abase thy beauty bright,
That it should not deface all other lesser light? Fairy Queen.

It is the lesser blot, modestly finds,
Women to change their shapes than men their minds. Shakesp.

The mountains, and higher parts of the earth, grow lesser and lesser from age to age: sometimes the roots of them are weakened by subterraneous fires, and sometimes tumbled by earthquakes into caverns that are under them. Burnet.

Cain, after the murder of his brother, cries out, Every man that findeth me shall slay me. By the same reason may a man, in the state of nature, punish the lesser breaches of that law. Locke.

Any heat promotes the ascent of mineral matter, but more especially of that which is subtle, and is consequently moveable more easily, and with a lesser power. Hoodward.

The larger here, and there the lesser lumbs,
The new-fall'n young herd bleating for their dams.

LESSER. adv. [formed by corruption from less.]

Some say he's mad; others, that lesser hate him.
Do call it valiant fury. Shakesp. Macbeth.

LESSÉS. n. s. [laissés, Fr.] The dung of beasts left on the ground.

LESSON. n. s. [leçon, Fr. lectio, Lat.]
1. Any thing read or repeated to a teacher, in order to improvement.
I but repeat that lesson
Which I have learn'd from thee. Denham's Sophy.

2. Precept; notion inculcated.
This day's ensample hath this lesson dear
Deep written in my heart with iron pen,
That bliss may not abide in state of mortal men.
Fairy Queen.

Be not jealous over the wife of thy bosom, and teach her not an evil lesson against thyself.
Eccles. ix. 1.

3. Portions of scripture read in divine service.
Notwithstanding so eminent properties, whereof lessons are happily des itute; yet lessons being free from some inconveniences whereunto serious are most subject, they may, in this respect, no less take, than in other they must give the hand which betokeneth pre-eminence. Hooker.

4. Tune pricked for an instrument.
Those good laws were like good lessons set for a flute out of tune; of which lessons little use can be made, till the flute be made fit to be played on.
Davies on Ireland.

5. A rating lecture.

LEVITE. n. s. [levita, Lat. from Levi.]

1. One of the tribe of Levi; one born to the office of priesthood among the Jews.

In the Christian church, the office of deacons succeed'd in the place of the levites among the Jews, who were as ministers and servants to the priests. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. A priest: used in contempt.

LEVITICAL. adj. [from levite.] Belonging to the levites; making part of the religion of the Jews.

By the levitical law, both the man and the woman were stoned to death; so heinous a crime was adultery. Ayliffe

LEVITY. n. s. [levitas, Lat.]

1. Lightness; not heaviness; the quality by which any body has less weight than another.

He gave the form of levity to that which ascend- ed; to that which descended, the form of gravity. Raleigh.

This bubble, by reason of its comparative levity to the fluidity that encloses it, would ascend to the top. Bentley.

2. Inconstancy; changeableness.

They every day broached some new thing; which restless levity they did interpret to be their growing in spiritual perfection. Hoker.

Where wigs with wigs, with sword-knots sword-knots strive,
Beaus banish beaus, and coaches coaches drive,
This erring mortals levity may call. Pope.

3. Unsteadiness; laxity of mind.

I unbosom'd all my secrets to thee;
Not out of levity, but over-power'd
By thy request. Milton's Agonistes.

4. Idle pleasure; vanity.

He never employed his omnipotence out of levity or ostentation, but as the necessities of men required. Calamy.

5. Trifling gaiety; want of seriousness.

Our graver business frowns at this levity. Shak.
Hogton abhorred the licence, and the levities, with which he saw too many corrupted. Clarend.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanished, and a spirit of levity and libertinism, infidelity and profane- ness, started up in the room of it. Atterb.

TO LEVY. v. a. [lever, Fr.]

1. To raise; to bring together: applied to men.

He resolved to finish the conquest of Ireland, and to that end levied a mighty army. Dav. on Irel.

2. To raise: applied to war. This sense, though Milton's, seems improper.

They live in hatred, enmity, and strife,
Among themselves, and levy cruel wars. Milton.

3. To raise: applied to money.

Levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war. Numbers.

Instead of a ship, he should levy upon his coun- ty such a sum of money. Clarendon.

LEVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

They have already contributed all their super- fluous hands, and every new levy they make must be at the expence of their farms and commerce. Addison's State of the War.

2. War raised.

Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poison,
Malice domestick, foreign levy, nothing Can touch him further. Shakesp. Macbeth.

LEWD. adj. [kepsede, Sax.]

1. Lay; not clerical; from leod people. It is sometimes gross; ignorant. Ob- scure.

For lewd men this book I writ, Bishop Grosthead.
So these great clerks their little wisdom shew
To mock the lewd, as learn'd in this as they. Davies.

2. Wicked; bad; dissolute.

If some be admitted into the ministry, either void of learning, or lewd in life, are all the rest to be condemned? Whigifte.

Before they did oppress the people, only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same oppressions by warrant. Dovies.

3. Lustful; libidinous.

He is not lolling on a lewd love-bed;
But on his knees at meditation. Shakespeare.

Then lewd Anchemolus he laid in dust,
Who stain'd his step-dame's bed with impious lust. Dryden.

LEWDLY. adv. [from lewd.]

1. Wickedly; naughtily.

A sort of naughty persons, lewdly bent,
Have practis'd dangerously against your state. Shakesp.

2. Libidiously; lustfully.

He lov'd fair lady Elfred, lewdly lov'd,
Whose wanton pleasures him too much did please,
That quite his heart from Goendeline remov'd. Spenser.

So lewdly dull his idle works appear,
The wretched texts deserve no comments here. Dryden.

LEWDNESS. n. s. [from lewd.] Lustful licentiousness.

Softer no lewdness, nor indecent speech,
Th' apartment of the tender youth to reach. Dryd.

Damianus's letter to Nicholas is an authentick record of the lewdnesses committed under the reign of celibacy. Atterbury.

LEWDSTER. n. s. [from lewd.] A lecher; one given to criminal pleasures.

Against such lewdsters, and their lechery,
Those that betray them do no treachery. Shakesp.

LEWIS D'OR. n. s. [Fr.] A golden

French coin, in value twelve livres, now settled at seventeen shillings. Dict.

LEXICOGRAPHER. n. s. [λεξιων and γραφω;

lexicographe, Fr.] A writer of dic- tionaries; a harmless drudge, that busies himself in tracing the original, and de- tailing the signification of words.

Commentators and lexicographers acquainted with the Syriac language, have given these hints in their writings on scripture. Watts.

LEXICOGRAPHY. n. s. [λεξιων and γραφω.]

The art or practice of writing dic- tionaries.

LEXICON. n. s. [λεξιων.] A dictionary;

a book teaching the signification of words.

Though a linguist should pride himself to have all the tongues that Babel cleft the world into, yet if he had not studied the solid things in them as well as the words and lexicons, yet he were nothing so much to be esteemed a learned man as any yeoman competently wise in his mother dialect only. Milton.

LEY. n. s.

Ley, lee, lay, are all from the Saxon lag a field or pasture, by the usual melting of the letter g or g.

LIABLE. adj. [liable, from lier, old Fr.]

Obnoxious; not exempt; subject: with to.

But what is strength without a double share
Of wisdom? vast, unwieldy, burthensome,
Proudly secure, yet liable to fall
By weakest subtleties. Milton's Agonistes.

The English boast of Spenser and Milton, who neither of them wanted genius or learning; and yet both of them are liable to many censures. Dryden.

This, or any other scheme, coming from a private hand, might be liable to many defects. Sieff.

LIAR. n. s. [from lie. This word would analogically be lier; but this orthogra- phy has prevailed, and the convenience of distinction from lier, he who lies down, is sufficient to confirm it.] One who tells falsehood; one who wants veracity.

Sh.'s like a liar, gone to burning hell!
'Twas I that kill'd her Shakesp. Othello.

He approves the common liar, fame,
Who speaks him thus at Rome. Shakesp.

I do not reject his observation as untrue, much less condemn the person himself as a liar, when- soever it seems to be contradicted. Boyle.

Thy better soul abhors a liar's part,
Wise is thy voice, and noble is thy heart. Pope.

LIARD. adj.

1. Mingled roan. Markham.

2. Liard in Scotland denotes grey-haired; as, he's a liard old man.

LIBATION. n. s. [libatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pouring wine on the ground in honour of some deity.

In digging new earth pour in some wine, that the vapour of the earth and wine may comfort the spirits, provided it be not taken for a heathen sacri- fice, or libation to the earth. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The wine so poured.

They had no other crime to object against the Christians, but that they did not offer up libations, and the smoke of sacrifices, to dead men.

Sitting feet on Romish Idolatre.
The goblet then she took, with nectar crown'd,
Sprinkling the first libations on the ground. Dryden's Æneid.

LIBBEARD. n. s. liebard, Germ. leopardus, Lat.] A leopard.

Make the libbard stern
Leave roaring, when in rage he for revenge did yearn. Spenser.

The libbard and the tiger, as the mole
Rising, the crombied earth above them threw. Milton.

The torrid parts of Africk are by Piso reseru- bed to a libbard's skin, the distance of whose spots represent the dispersens of libitations, or towns of Africk. Brewer's wood.

LIBEL. n. s. [libellus, Lat. libelle, Fr.]

1. A satire; defamatory writing; a lam- poon.

Are we reproached for the name of Christ? that ignominy serves but to advance our future glory; every such libel here becomes panegyrick there. Deacy of Pietu.

Good heav'n! that sots and knaves should be so vain,
To wish their vile resemblance may remain!
And stand recorded, at their own request,
To future days, a libel or a jest. Dryden.

2. [In the civil law.] A declaration or charge in writing against a person exhibited in court.

TO LIBEL. r. n. [from the noun.] To spread defamation, written or printed: it is now commonly used as an active verb, without the preposition against.

Sweet scrawls to fly about the streets of Rome:
What's this but libelling against the senate? Shak.
He, like a privileg'd spy, whom nothing can Discredit, libels now 'gainst each great man. Donna.

TO LIBEL. v. a. To satirise; to lampoon.

Is the peerage of England dishonour'd when a peer suffers for his treason? if he be libelled, or any way defamed, he has his scandalum magna- tum to punish the offender. Dryden.

But what so pure which envious tongues will spare?

Some wicked wits have libell'd all the fair. Pope.

LIBELLER. n. s. [from libel.] A defamer by writing; a lampooner.

Our common libellers are as free from the imputation of wit, as of morality. Dryden's Juvenal.
The squibs are those who, in the common phrase, are called libellers and lampooners. Tattler.
The common libellers, in their invectives, tax the church with an insatiable desire of power and wealth, equally common to all bodies of men. Swift.

1. Not mean; not low in birth; not low in mind.

2. Becoming a gentleman.

3. Munificent; generous; bountiful; not parsimonious.

Her name was Mercy, well-known over all,
To be both gracious and eke liberal. Fairy Queen.
S. Aringould shew a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Men of his way should be most liberal,
They're set here for examples. Shak. Henry VIII.
Needs must the pow'r

That made us, and for us this ample world,
Be infinitely good, and of his good
As liberal and free, as infinite. Milton.

The liberal are secure alone,
For what we frankly give, for ever is our own. Granville.

4. It has of before the thing, and to before the person.

There is no art better than to be liberal of praise and commendation to others, in that wherein a man's self hath any perfection. Bacon's Essays.
Several clergy men, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, are, in their sermons, very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers, as if it were our duty to understand them. Swift.

LIBERALITY. n. s. [liberalitas, Lat. liberalité, Fr.] Munificence: bounty; generosity; generous profusion.

Why should he despair, that knows to court
With words, fair looks, and liberality? Shakes.
Such moderation with thy bounty join,
That thou may'st nothing give that is not thine;
That liberality is but cast away,
Which makes us borrow what we cannot pay. Denham.

LIBERALLY. adv. [from liberal.]

1. Bounteously; bountifully; largely.

If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not. James, i. 5.

2. Not meanly; magnanimously.

L'IBERTINE. n. s. [libertin, Fr.]

1. One unconfined; one at liberty.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder looketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakesp. Henry V.

2. One who lives without restraint or law.

Man, the lawless libertine, may rove,
Free and unquestion'd. Rove's Jane Shore.
Want of power is the only bound that a libertine puts to his views upon any of the sex. Clarissa.

3. One who pays no regard to the precepts of religion.

They say this town is full of couzenage,
Disguis'd cheaters, pratin, mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shakesp.
That word may be applied to some few libertines in the audience. Collier's View of the Stage.

4. [In law; libertinus, Lat.] A freedman; or rather, the son of a freedman.

Some persons are forbidden to be accusers on the score of their sex, as women; others on the score of their age, as pupils and infants; others on the score of their condition, as libertines against their patrons. Ayliffe's Purgeon.

L'IBERTINE. adj. [libertin, Fr.] Licentious; irreligious.

There are men that marry not, but choose rather a libertine and impure single life, than to be yoked in marriage. Bacon.

Might not the queen make diligent inquiry, if any person about her should happen to be of libertine principles or morals? Swift's Project.

L'IBERTINISM. n. s. [from libertine.] Irreligion; licentiousness of opinions and practice.

That spirit of religion and seriousness vanish'd all at once, and a spirit of liberty and libertinism, of infidelity and profaneness, started up in the room of it. Atterbury's Sermons.

LIBERTY. n. s. [liberté, Fr. libertas, Lat.]

1. Freedom, as opposed to slavery.

My master knows of your being here, and hath threaten'd to put me into everlasting liberty, if I tell you of it; for he swears, he'll turn me away. Shakesp.

O liberty! thou goddess, heav'nly bright!
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight,
Eternal pleasures in thy presence reign. Addison.

2. Exemption from tyranny or inordinate government.

Justly thou abhorr'st
The son, who, on the quiet state of man
Such trouble brought, affecting to subdue Rational liberty; yet know withal,
Since thy original lapse, true liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells. Milton.

3. Freedom, as opposed to necessity.

Liberty is the power in any agent to do, or forbear, any particular action, according to the determination, or thought of the mind, whereby either of them is preferred to the other. Locke.

As it is in the motions of the body, so it is in the thoughts of our minds: where any one is such, that we have power to take it up, or lay it by, according to the preference of the mind, there we are at liberty. Locke.

4. Privilege; exemption; immunity.

His majesty gave not an intire country to any, much less did he grant jura regalia, or any extraordinary liberties. Davies.

5. Relaxation of restraint: as, he sees himself at liberty to choose his condition.

License they mean when they cry liberty. Milt.

6. Leave; permission.

I shall take the liberty to consider a third ground, which, with some men, has the same authority. Locke.

LIB'IDINOUS. adj. [libidinosus, Lat.] Lewd; lustful.

None revolt from the faith; because they must not look upon a woman to lust after her, but because they are much more restrained from the perpetration of their lusts. If wanton glances and libidinous thoughts had been permitted by the gospel, they would have apostatized nevertheless. Bentley.

LIB'IDINOUSLY. adv. [from libidinous.] Lewdly; lustfully.

L'IBERAL. adj. [libralis, Lat.] Of a pound weight. Dict.

LIBR'ARIAN. n. s. [librarius, Lat.]

1. One who has the care of a library.

2. One who transcribes or copies books.

Charybdis thrice swallows, and thrice refunds the waves: this must be understood of regular tides. There are indeed but two tides in a day, but this is the error of the librarians. Broome.

LIBRARY. n. s. [librarie, Fr.] A large collection of books, publick or private.

Then as they 'gan his library to view,
And antique registers for to advise,
There chanced to the prince's hand to rise
An antique book, highl Britain's monuments. Fairy Queen.

I have given you the library of a painter, and a catalogue of such books as he ought to read. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

To LIBRATE. v. a. [libro, Lat.] To poise; to balance; to hold in equipoise.

LIBRATION. n. s. [libratio, Lat. libration, Fr.]

1. The state of being balanced.

This is what may be said of the balance, and the libration of the body. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Their pinions still
In loose librations stretch'd, to trust the void Trembling refuse. Thomson's Spring.

2. [In astronomy.]

Libration is the balancing motion or trepidation in the firmament, whereby the declination of the sun, and the latitude of the stars, change from time to time. Astronomers likewise ascribe to the moon a libratory motion, or motion of trepidation, which they pretend is from east to west, and from north to south, because that at full moon they sometimes discover parts of her disk which are not discovered at other times. These kinds are called, the one a libration in longitude, and the other a libration in latitude. Besides this, there is a third kind, which they call an apparent libration, and which consists in this, that when the moon is at her greatest elongation from the south, her axis being then almost perpendicular to the plane of the elliptick, the sun must enlighten towards the north pole of the moon some parts which he did not before, and that, on the contrary, some parts of those which he enlightened towards the opposite pole are obscured: and this produces the same effect which the libration in latitude does. Dié. Trév.

Those planets which move upon their paps, do not all make entire revolutions; for the moon maketh only a kind of libration, or a reciprocated motion on her own axis. Grew.

L'IBRATORY. adj. [from libro, Lat.] Balancing; playing like a balance.

LICE, the plural of louse.

Red blisters rising on their paps appear,
And flaming carbuncles, and noisome swar,
And clammy dews, that loathsome lice beget;
Till the slow creeping evil eats his way. Dryden's Virgil.

L'ICEBANE. n. s. [lice and bane.] A plant.

L'ICENSE. n. s. [licentia, Lat. licence, Fr.]

1. Exorbitant liberty; contempt of legal and necessary restraint.

Some of the wiser seeing that a popular licence is indeed the many-headed tyranny, prevailed with the rest to make Musidorus their chief. Staney.
Taunt my faults

With such full licence, as both truth and malice
Have power to utter. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.
They baul for freedom in their senseless moods,
And still revolt when truth would set them free.
Licence they mean, when they cry liberty. Milton.

The privilege that ancient poets claim,
Now turn'd to licence by too just a name. Roscom.
Though this be a state of liberty, yet it is not a state of licence: though man, in that state, have an uncontrollable liberty to dispose of his person or possessions, yet he has not liberty to destroy himself. Locke.

2. A grant of permission.

They sent some to bring them a licence from the senate. Juath, xi. 14.

Those few abstract names that the schools forged, and put into the mouths of their scholars, could never yet get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

We procured a licence of the duke of Parma to enter the theatre and gallery. Addison on Italy.

3. Liberty; permission.
It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have the accusers face to face, and have licence to answer for himself. Acts.

lic LICENCE. v. a. [licencier, Fr.]
To permit by a legal grant.
Wit's Titans brav'd the skies,
And the press groan'd with licens'd blasphemies. Pope.

2. To dismiss; to send away. Not in use.
He would play well, and willingly, at some games of greatest attention, which shewed, that when he listed he could license his thoughts. Wott.

LICENSER. n. s. [from license.] A granter of permission; commonly a tool of power.

LICENTIATE. n. s. [licentiatius, low Lat.]

1. A man who uses license. Not in use.
The licentiates somewhat licentious, lest they should prejudice poetical liberty, will pardon themselves for doubling or rejecting a letter, if the sense fall aptly. Camden.

2. A degree in Spanish universities.
A man might, after that time, sue for the degree of licentiate or master in this faculty. Ayliffe.

TO LICENTIATE. v. a. [licentier, Fr.]
To permit; to encourage by license.
We may not hazard either the stifling of generous inclinations, or the licentiating of any thing that is coarse. L'Estrange.

LICENTIOUS. adj. [licencieux, Fr. licentiosus, Lat.]

1. Unrestrained by law or morality.
Later ages pride, like corn-fed steed,
Abus'd her plenty, and fat swoll increase,
To all licentious lust, and 'gan exceed
The measure of her ucan, and natural first need. Fairy Queen.
How would it touch thee to the quick,
Should'st thou but hear I were licentious?
And that this body, consecrate to thee,
With ruffian lust should be contaminate? Shak.

2. Presumptuous; unconfined.
The Tyber, whose licentious waves,
So often overflow'd the neighbouring fields,
Now runs a smooth and inoffensive course. Rosc.

LICENTIOUSLY. adv. [from licentious.]
With too much liberty; without just restraint.
The licentiates, somewhat licentiously, will pardon themselves. Camden's Remains.

LICENTIOUSNESS. n. s. [from licentious.]
Boundless liberty; contempt of just restraint.
One error is so fruitful, as it begetteth a thousand children, if the licentiousness thereof be not timely restrained. Raleigh.
This custom has been always looked upon, by the wisest men, as an effect of licentiousness, and not of liberty. Swift.
During the greatest licentiousness of the press, the character of the queen was insulted. Swift.

LICH. n. s. [lice, Sax.] A dead carcass; whence lichwake, the time or act of watching by the dead; lichgate, the gate through which the dead are carried to the grave; Lichfield, the field of the dead, a city in Staffordshire, so named from martyred christians. Salve magna parens. Lichwake is still retained in Scotland in the same sense.

LICHOWL. n. s. [lich and owl.] A sort of owl, by the vulgar supposed to foretell death.

TO LICK. v. a. [liccan, Sax. lecken, Dut.]

1. To pass over with the tongue.
Esculapius went about with a dog and a she-goat, both which he used much in his cures; the first for licking all ulcerated wounds, and the goat's milk for the diseases of the stomach and lungs. Temple.

A bear's a savage beast;
Whelp'd without form, until the dam
Has lick'd it into shape and frame. Hudibras.
He with his tepid rays the rose renews,
And licks the drooping leaves, and dries the dew. Dryden.
I have seen an antiquary lick an old coin, among other trials, to distinguish the age of it by its taste. Addison.

2. To lap; to take in by the tongue.
At once pluck out
The multitudinous tongue; let them not lick
The sweet which is their poison. Shakesp.

3. To lick up. To devour.
Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass. Numbers.
When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself:
Think how posterity will treat thy name. Pope.

LICK. n. s. [from the verb] A blow; rough usage. A low word.
He turned upon me as round as a chafed boar,
and gave me a lick across the face. Dryden.

LICKERISH. } adj. [liccepa, a glutton, LICKEROUS. } Saxon. This seems to be the proper way of spelling the word, which has no affinity with liquor, but with like.]

1. Nice in the choice of food.
Voluptuous men sacrifice all substantial satisfactions to a liquorish palate. L'Estrange.

2. Eager; greedy to swallow; eager not with hunger but gust.
It is never tongue-tied, where fit commendation, whereof womankind is so lickerish, is offered unto it. Sidney.
Strephon, fond boy, delighted, did not know
That it was love that shin'd in shining maid;
But lick'rous, poison'd, fain to her would go. Sidney.
Certain rare manuscripts, sought in the most remote parts by Erpenius, the most excellent linguist, had been left to his widow, and were upon sale to the Jesuits, liquorish chapmen of all such ware. Wotton.

In vain he proffer'd all his goods to save
His body, destin'd to that living grave;
The liquorish hag rejects the pelf with scorn,
And nothing but the man would serve her turn. Dryden.

In some provinces they were so liquorish after man's flesh, that they would suck the blood as it run from the dying man. Locke.

3. Nice; delicate; tempting the appetite. This sense I doubt.
Would'st thou seek again to trap me here
With lickerish baits, fit to ensnare a brute? Milton.

LICKERISHNESS. n. s. [from lickerish.]
Niceness of palate.

LICORICE. n. s. [γλυκύριζα; liquoricia, Ital.] A root of sweet taste.
Liquorice root is long and slender, externally of a dusky reddish brown, but within of a fine yellow, full of juice, and of a taste sweeter than sugar; it grows wild in many parts of France, Italy, Spain, and Germany. The inspissated juice of this root is brought to us from Spain and Holland; from the first of which places it obtained the name of Spanish juice. Hill's Mat. Med.

LICTOR. n. s. [Lat.] A headle that attended the consuls to apprehend or punish criminals.
Saucy lictors
Will catch at us like strumpets. Shakesp.
Proconsuls to their provinces
Hasting, or on return, in robes of state, Lictors and rods the ensigns of their power. Milt.

Democritus could feed his spleen, and shake
His sides and shoulders till he felt 'em ake;
Though in his country-town no lictors were,
Nor rods, nor ax, nor tribune. Dryden's Juvenal.

LID. n. s. [phb, Sax. lied, Germ.]

1. A cover; any thing that shuts down over a vessel; any stopple that covers the mouth, but not enters it.
I hope, instead of flying off with the rest, stuck so close to the lid of the cup, that it was shut down upon her. Addison.

2. The membrane that, when we sleep or wink, is drawn over the eye.
Do not for ever with thy veiled lids,
Seek for thy noble father in the dust, Shakesp.
Our eyes have lids, our ears still ope we keep. Davies.
That eye dropp'd sense distinct and clear,
As any muse's tongue could speak;
When from its lid a pearly tear Ran trickling down her heautecus cheek. Prior.
The rod of Hermes
To sleep could mortal eye-lids fix,
And drive departed souls to Styx:
That rod was just a type of Sid's,
Which o'er a British senate's lids
Could scatter opium full as well,
And drive as many souls to hell. Swift.

LIE. n. s. [lie, Fr.] Any thing impregnated with some other body; as, soap or salt.
Chamber-lie breeds fleas like a loach. Shakesp.
All liquid things concocted by heat become yellow; as lye, wort, &c. Peacham on Drawing.

LIE. n. s. [lige, Saxon.]

1. A criminal falsehood.
Thou liest, abhorred tyrant! with my sword
I'll prove the lie thou speak'st. Shakesp. Macbeth.
A lye is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant or intended, that is properly a lye. South.
Truth is the object of our understanding, as good is of our will; and the understanding can no more be delighted with a lye, than the will can choose an apparent evil. Dryden.
When I hear my neighbour speak that which is not true, and I say to him, This is not true, or this is false, I only convey to him the naked idea of his error; this is the primary idea; but if I say it is a lie, the word lie carries also a secondary idea; for it implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker. Watts's Logick.

2. A charge of falsehood; to give the lie, is a formulary phrase.
That lye shall lye so heavy on my sword,
That it shall render vengeance and revenge;
Till thou the lie giver, and that lie, rest
In earth as quiet as thy father's skull. Shakesp.
It is a contradiction to suppose, that whole nations of men should unanimously give the lie to what, by the most invincible evidence, every one of them knew to be true. Locke.
Men will give their own experience the lie, rather than admit of any thing disagreeing with these tenets. Locke.

3. A fiction. This sense is ludicrous.
The cock and fox, the fool and knave imply;
The truth is moral, though the tale a lie. Dryden.

TO LIE. v. n. [leogan, Sax. liegen, Dut.]

1. To utter criminal falsehood.
I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, He lies here, or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat. Shakesp.
If a soul lye unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, he shall restore that which was delivered. Lev.
Should I lye against my right? Job xxxiv. 6.

2. To exhibit false representation.
Inform us, will the emp'r treat?
Or do the prints and papers lie? Swift.

To LIE. v. n. pret. I lay; I have lain or lien. [hexan, Sax. liggen, Dut.]

1. To rest horizontally, or with very great inclination against something else.

2. To rest; to press upon.

Death lies on her like an untimely show'r
Upon the sweetest flow'r of all the field. Shak.
Lie heavy on him, earth, for he Laid many a heavy load on thee.

3. To be repositied in the grave.

All the kings of the nations lie in glory, every one in his own house. Isa. xiv. 18.

I will lie with my fathers, and thou shalt carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in your burying-place. Gen. xlvii. 30.

4. To be in a state of decumbiture.

How many good young princes would do so;
their fathers lying so sick as yours at this time is?
Shakesp.

My little daughter lieth at the point of death;
I pray thee come and lay thy hands on her, that she may be healed. Mark.

5. To pass the time of sleep.

The watchful traveller,
That by the moon's mistaken light did rise,
Lag down again, and clos'd his weary eyes. Dryd.
Forlorn he must, and persecuted lie;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

6. To be laid up or repositied.

I have seen where copperas is made, great variety of them, divers of which I have yet lying by me. Boyle.

7. To remain fixed.

The Spaniards have but one temptation to quarrel with us, the recovering of Jamaica, for that has ever lien at their hearts. Temple.

8. To reside.

If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted?
and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at the door.
Gen. iv. 7.

9. To be placed or situated, with respect to something else.

Deserts, where there lay no way, Wis dom.
I fly
To those happy climes that lie,
Where day never shuts his eye. Milton.
There lies our way, and that our passage home. Dryden.

Envy lies between beings equal in nature, though unequal in circumstances. Collier of Envy.

The business of a tutor, rightly employed, lies out of the road. Locke on Education.

What lies beyond our positive idea towards infinity, lies in obscurity, and has the undeterminate confusion of a negative idea. Locke.

10. To press upon afflictively.

Thy wrath lieth hard upon me, and thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves, Psalms.
He that commits a sin shall find
The pressing guilt lie heavy on his mind,
Though bribes or favour shall assert his cause.

Shew the power of religion, in abating that particular anguish which seems to lie so heavy on Leonora. Addison.

11. To be troublesome or tedious.

Suppose kings, besides the entertainment of luxury, should have spent their time, at least what lay upon their hands, in chemistry, it cannot be denied but princes may pass their time advantageously that way. Temple.

I would recommend the studies of knowledge to the female world, that they may not be at a loss how to employ those hours that lie upon their hands. Addison's Guardian.

12. To be judicially imputed.

If he should intend his voyage towards my wife,
I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp words, let it lie on my head. Shakespeare.

13. To be in any particular state.

If money go before, all ways do lie open. Shak.
The highways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceaseth. Isaiah.

The seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still. Exodus.

Do not think that the knowledge of any particular subject cannot be improved, merely because it has lain without improvement. Watts.

14. To be in a state of concealment.

Many things in them lie concealed to us, which they who were concerned understood at first sight.
Locke.

15. To be in prison.

Your imprisonment shall not be long;
I will deliver you, or else lie for you. Shakesp.

16. To be in a bad state.

Why will you lie pining and pinching yourself in such a lonesome, starving course of life?
L' Estrange's Fables.

The generality of mankind lie pecking at one another, till one by one they are all torn to pieces.
L' Estrange's Fables.

Are the gods to do your drudgery, and you lie
bellowing with your finger in your mouth?
L' Estrange's Fables.

17. To be in a helpless or exposed state.

To see a hated person superior, and to lie under the anguish of a disadvantage, is far enough from diversion. Collier.

It is but a very small comfort, that a plain man, lying under a sharp lit of the stune for a week, receives from this fine sentence. Tillotson.

As a man should always be upon his guard against the vices to which he is most exposed, so we should take a more than ordinary care not to lie at the mercy of the weather in our moral conduct. Addison's Frecholder.

The maintenance of the clergy is precarious, and collected from a most miserable race of farmers, at whose mercy every minister lies to be de-franded. Swift.

18. To consist.

The image of it gives me content already; and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection:—It lies much in your holding up. Shakesp.

He that thinks that diversion may not lie in hard labour, forgets the early rising, and hard riding of huntmen. Locke.

19. To be in the power; to belong to.

Do'st thou endeavour, as much as in thee lies,
to preserve the lives of all men?
Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

He shews himself very malicious if he knows I deserve credit, and yet goes about to blast it, as much as in him lies. Stillingfleet on Idolatry.

Mars is the warrior's god; in him it lies
On whom he favours to confer the prize. Dryden.

20. To be valid in a court of judicature:

as, an action lieth against one.

21. To cost: as, it lies me in more money.

22. To lie at. To importune; to teaze.

23. To lie by. To rest; to remain still.

Ev'ry thing that heard him play,
Ev'n the billows of the sea,
Hung their heads, and then lay by;
In sweet musick is such art,
Killing care, and grief of heart,
Fall asleep, or hearing die.

Shakesp. Henry VIII.

24. To lie down. To rest; to go into a state of repose.

The leopard shall lie down with the kid.
Isaiah xi. 6.

The needy shall lie down in safety.
Isaiah xiv. 30.

25. To lie down. To sink into the grave.

His bones are full of the sin of his youth, which shall lie down with him in the dust. Job xx. 11.

26. To lie in. To be in childbed.

As for all other good women that love to do but little work, how handsome it is to lie in and sleep, or to loose themselves in the sun-shine, they that have been but a while in Ireland can well witness.

Spenser on Ireland.
You confine yourself most unreasonably. Come, you must go visit the lady that lies in. Shak. Cor.
She had lain in, and her right breast had been apostemated. Wiseman's Surgery.

The doctor has practized both by sea and land, and therefore cures the green sickness and lying-
in. Spectator.

When Florimel design'd to lie privately in;
She chose with such prudence her pants to conceal,
That her nurse, nay her midwife, scarce heard her once squeal. Prior.

Hysterical affections are contracted by accidents in lying in. Arbutnot on Diet.

27. To lie under. To be subject to; to be oppressed by.

A generous person will lie under a great disad-vantage. Smalbridge's Sermons.

This mistake never ought to be imputed to Dryden, but to those who suffered so noble a genius to lie under necessity. Pope.

Europe lay then under a deep lethargy, and was no otherwise to be rescued but by one that would cry mightily. Atterbury.

28. To lie upon. To become the matter of obligation or duty.

These are not places merely of favour, the charge of souls lies upon them; the greatest account wherof will be required at their hands. Bac.

It should lie upon him to make out how matter, by undirected motion, could at first necessarily fall, without ever erring or miscarrying, into such a curious formation of human bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

29. To lie with. To converse in bed.

Pardon me, Bassanio,
For by this ring she lay with me. Shakesp.

30. It may be observed of this word in general, that it commonly implies something of sluggishness, inaction, or steadiness, applied to persons; and some gravity or permanency of condition, applied to things.

LIEF. adj. [leof, Sax. lief, Dut.] Dear; beloved. Obsolete.

My liefest lord she thus beguiled had,
For he was flesh; all flesh duth frailty breed.

You, with the rest,
Causeless have laid disgraces on my head;
And with your best endeavour have stirr'd up
My liefest liege to be mine enemy. Fairy Queen.

31. LIEF. adv. Willingly; now used only in familiar speech.

If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors; and yet to say the truth, I had as lief have the foppery of freedom, as the morality of imprisonment. Shakesp.

LIEGE. adj. [lige, Fr. ligio, Ital. ligius, low Lat.]

1. Bound by some feudal tenure; subject; whence liegeman for subject.

2. Sovereign. [This signification seems to have accidentally arisen from the former, the lord of liege men, being by mistake called liege lord.]

Did not the whole realm acknowledge Henry VIII. for their king and liege lord?
Spenser.

My lady liege, said he,
What all your sex desire is sovereignty. Dryden.

So much of it as is founded on the law of nature, may be stiled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God our liege lord, so as to act in all things according to his will. Greus's Cosm.

LIEGE. n. s. Sovereign; superior lord:
scarcely in use.

O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke
Shakesp.

The other part reserv'd I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt. Shak.

The natives, dubious whom
They must obey, in constrauction wait
Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.
Philips.

LIEGEMAN, n. s. [from liege and man.]

A subject: not in use.

This liegeman 'gan to wax more bold,
And when he felt the folly of his lord,
In his own kind, he 'gan himself unfold.

Fairy Queen.

Sith then the ancestors of those that now live,
Yielded themselves then subjects and liegemen, Shall it not tye their children to the same subjection? Spenser on Ireland.

Stand, ho! who is there?

—Friends to this ground, and liegemen to the Dane.

Shakesp.

LIEGER, n. s. [more proper legier, or leger.] A resident ambassador.

His passions and his fears

Lie liegers for you in his breast, and there Negotiate your affairs. Denham's Sophy

LIEEN, the participle of lie.

One of the people might lightly have lieen with thy wife. Gen. xxvi. 10.

LIENTERICK, adj. [from lientery.] Pertaining to a lientery.

There are many medicinal preparations of iron,
but none equal to the tincture made without acids;
especially in obstructions, and to strengthen the tone of the parts; as, in lienterick and other like cases. Greiv's Museum.

LIENTERY, n. s. [from λειον, laev smooth, and εντερον, intestinum gut; lienteric, Fr.] A particular loo-ness, or diarrhoea, wherein the food passes so suddenly through the stomach and guts, as to be thrown out by stool with little or no alteration. Quincy.

LIER, n. s. [from to lie.] One that rests or lies down, or remains concealed.

There were liers in ambush against him behind the city. Jos. viii. 14.

LIEU, n. s. [Fr.] Place; room: it is only used with in; in lieu, instead.

God, of his great liberality, had determined, in lieu of man's endeavours, to bestow the same by the rule of that justice which best becometh him.
Hooker.

In lieu of such an increase of dominion, it is our business to extend our trade. Addison's Freehold.

LIEVE adv. [See LIEF.] Willingly.

Speak the speech, I pray you, as I pronounced it to you, trippingly on the tongue: but if you mouth it, as many of our players do, I had as lieve
the town-crier had spoke my lines. Shakesp.

Action is death to some sort of people, and they would as lieve hang as work. L'Estrange.

LIEUTENANCY, n. s. [lieutenant, Fr.
from lieutenant.]

1. The office of a lieutenant.

If such tricks as these strip you out of your lieu-tenancy, it had been better you had not kissed your three fingers so oft. Shakesp.

2. The body of lieutenants.

The list of undisputed masters, is hardly so long as the list of the lieutenancy of our metropolis.
Felton on the Classics.

LIEUTENANT, n. s. [lieutenant, Fr.]

1 A deputy; one who acts by vicarious authority.

Whither away so fast?

—No farther than the tower.

—We'll enter all together,

And in good time here the lieutenant cotoes. Shak.

I must put you in mind of the lords lieutenants, and deputy lieutenants, of the counties: their proper use is for ordering the military affairs, in order to oppose an invasion from abroad, or a rebellion or sedition at home. Bacon.

Killing, as it is considered in itself without all undue circumstances, was never prohibited to the lawful magistrate, who is the vicegerent or lieutenant of God, from whom he derives his power of life and death. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Sent by our new lieutenant, who in Rome,
And since from me, has heard of your renown,
I come to offer peace. Philips's Briton.

2. In war, one who holds the next rank to a superior of any denomination; as, a general has his lieutenant generals, a colonel his lieutenant colonel, and a captain simply his lieutenant.

It were meet that such captains only were employed as have formerly served in that country, and been at least lieutenants there. Spenser on Irell.
According to military custom the place was good, and the lieutenant of the colonel's company might well pretend to the next vacant captainship.
Wotton.

The earl of Essex was made lieutenant general of the army; the most popular man of the kingdom, and the darling of the swordmen. Clarendon.

His lieutenant, engaging against his positive orders, being beaten by Lysander, Alcibiades was again bani-hed. Swift.

Canst thou so many gallant soldiers see,
And captains and lieutenants slight for me? Guy.

LIEUTENANTSHIP, n. s. [from lieutenant.] The rank or office of lieutenant.

LIFE, n. s. plural lives. [Lipian, to live, Saxon.]

1. Union and co-operation of soul with body; vitality; animation, opposed to an unanimate state.

On thy life no more

—My life I never held but as a pawn

To wage against thy foes. Shakesp. K. Lear.

She shews a body rather than a life.

A statue than a breather. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

Let the waters bring forth abundantly the moving creature that hath life. Gen. i. 20.

The identity of the same man consists in nothing but a participation of the same continu'd life, by constantly fleeting parcels of matter, in succession vitally united to the same organized body.
Locke.

2. Present state; as distinct from other parts of human existence.

O life, thou nothing's younger brother!

So like, that we may take the one for t'other!

Dream of a shadow! a reflection made
From the false glories of the gay reflected bow,

Is more a solid thing than thou!

Thou weak-built isthmus, that dost proudly rise

Up betwixt two eternities;

Yet canst not wave nor wind sustain,

But, broken and o'erwhelm'd, the ocean meets again. Cowley.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat,

Yet fool'd by hope men favour the deceit,

Live on, and think to-morrow will repay;

To-morrow's fals'er than the former day;

Lies more; and when it says we shall be blest

With some new joy, takes off what we possess.

Strange cozenage! none would live past years
again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;

And from the dregs of life think to receive

What the first sprightly running could not give;

I'm tir'd of waiting for this chiecnick gold,

Which fools us young, and beggars us when old.
Dryden.

Howe'er 'tis well that while mankind

Through life's perverse meanders errs,

He can imagin'd pleasures find,

To combat against real cares. Prior.

So peaceful shalt thou end thy blissful days,

And steal thyself from life by slow decays. Pope.

3. Enjoyment, or possession of existence, as opposed to death.

Then avarice 'gan through his veins to inspire

His greedy flames, and kindle life devouring fire.
Fairy Queen.

Their complot is to have my life;

And, if my death might make this island happy,

And prove the period of their tyranny,

I would expend it with all willingness. Shakesp.

Nor love thy life, nor hate; but what thou liv'st
Live well, how long or short permit to Heav'n.
Milton.

He entreated me not to take his life, but exact a sum of money. Broome on the Odyssey.

4. Blood, the supposed vehicle of life.

His gushing entrails smook'd upon the ground,
And the warm life came issuing through the wound. Pope.

5. Conduct; manner of living with respect to virtue or vice.

His faith perhaps in some nice tenets might

Be wrong; his life I'm sure was in the right.

Cowley.

Henry and Edward, brightest sons of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name;

After a life of glorious toils endur'd,

Clos'd their long glories with a sigh. Pope.

I'll teach my family to lead good lives.

Mrs. Barker.

6. Condition; manner of living with respect to happiness and misery.

Such was the life the frugal Sabines led;

So Remus and his brother god were bred.

Dryden.

7. Continuance of our present state: as, half his life was spent in study.

Some have not any clear ideas all their lives.

Locke.

Untam'd and fierce the tyger still remains,

And t'ires his life with biting on his chains.

Prior.

The administration of this bank is for life, and partly in the hands of the chief citizens

Addison on Italy.

8. The living form: opposed to copies.

This is the best part of beauty which a picture cannot express, no, nor the first sight of the life.

Bacon's Essays.

Let him visit eminent persons of great name abroad, that he may tell how the life agreeth with the fame. Bacon.

He that would be a master, must draw by the life as well as copy from originals, and join theory and experience together. Collier.

9. Exact resemblance: with to before it.

I believe no character of any person was ever better drawn to the life than this. Denham.

Rich carvings, portraiture, and imagery,

Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd

The godhead's pow'r. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

He saw in order painted on the wall

The wars that fame around the world had blown,

All to the life, and every leader known. Dryden.

10. General state of man.

Studious they appear

Of arts that polish life: inventors rare!

Unmindful of their Maker. Milton.

All that cheers or softens life,

The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife.

Pope.

11. Common occurrences; human affairs;
the course of things.

This I know, not only by reading of books in my study, but also by experience of life abroad in the world. Ascham.

Not to know at large of things remote

From use, obscure and subtle; but to know

That which before us lies in daily life,

Is the prime wisdom. Milton's Par. Lost.

12. Living person.

Why should I play the Roman fool, and die

On mine own sword? whilst I see lives the gashes

Do better upon them. Shakesp. Macbeth.

13. Narrative of a life past.

Plutarch, that writes his life,

Tells us, that Cato dearly lov'd his wife. Pope.

14. Spirit; briskness; vivacity; resolution.

The Helots bent thitherward with a new life of resolution, as if their captain had been: a root out of which their courage had sprung. Sidney.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words; and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure, is as good oratory and poetry to them as the best. Felton.

Not with half the fire and life,
With which he kiss'd Amphitryon's wife. Prior.
15. Animal; animated existence; animal being.

Full nature swarms with life. Thomson.
16. System of animal nature.
Lives through all life. Pope.

17. Life is also used of vegetables, and whatever grows and decays.

LIFE BLOOD. n. s. [life and blood.] The blood necessary to life; the vital blood.

This sickness doth infect
The very lifeblood of our enterprize. Shakesp.
How could'st thou drain the lifeblood of the child? Shakesp.

His forehead struck the ground,
Lifeblood and life rush'd mingled through the wound. Dryden.

They loved with that calm and noble value which dwells in the heart, with a warmth like that of lifeblood. Spectator.

Money, the lifeblood of the nation,
Corrupts and stagnates in the veins,
Unless a proper circulation
Its motion and its heat maintains. Swift.

LIFE EVERLASTING. n. s. An herb.
Ainsworth.

LIFE GIVING. n. s. [life and giving.]
Having the power to give life.

His own heat,
Kindled at first from heav'n's lifegiving fire. Spenser.

He sat devising death
To them who liv'd; nor on the virtue thought
Of that lifegiving plant. Milton's Paradise Lost.

LIFE GUARD. n. s. [life and guard.]
The guard of a King's person.

LIFELESS. adj. [from life.]
1. Dead; deprived of life.

I who make the triumph of to-day,
May of to-morrow's pomp one part appear,
Ghastly with wounds, and lifeless on the bier. Prior.

2. Unanimated; void of life.
Was I to have never parted from thy side?
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib! Milt.

Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things. Milton.
The power which produces their motions, springs from something without themselves; if this power were suspended, they would become a lifeless inactive heap of matter. Cheyne.

And empty words she gave, and sounding strain.
But senseless, lifeless! idol void and vain. Pope.

3. Wanting power, force, or spirit.
Hopeless and helpless doth Ægeon wend,
But to procreate his lifeless end. Shakesp.

Unknowing to command, proud to obey
A lifeless king, a royal shade I lay. Prior.

4. Wanting or deprived of physical energy.
The other victor-flame a moment stood,
Then fell, and lifeless left the extinguish'd wood. Dryden.

LIFELESSLY. adv. [from lifeless.] Without vigour; frigidly; jejune.

LIFE LIKE. adj. [life and like.] Like a living person.

Minerva, life-like, on embodied air
Impress'd the form of Ipbema the fair. Pope.

LIFE STRING. n. s. [life and string.]
Nerve; strings imagined to convey life.

These lines are the veins, the arteries,
The undecaying lifestrings of those hearts
That still shall pant, and still shall exercise
The motion spirit and nature both impart. Daniel.

LIFE TIME. n. s. [life and time.] Continuance or duration of life.

Jordan talked prose all his life-time, without knowing what it was. Addison on Medals.

LIFEWEARY. adj. [life and weary.]
Wretched; tired of living.

Let me have

A dram of poison, such soon speeding geer,
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the lifeweary taker may fall dead. Shakesp.

TO LIFT. v. a. [lyfta, Swed. loffter, Dan. lyfted, or lyft; I have lyfted, or lyft.]

1. To raise from the ground; to heave; to elevate; to hold on high.

Filial ingratitude!

Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand
For lyfting food to't? Shakesp. King Lear.

Your guests are coming;

Lift up our countenance, as 'twere the day
Of celebration of that nuptial. Shak. Winter's Tale.

Propp'd by the spring, it lyfts aloft the head,
But of a sickly beauty soon to shed,
In summer living, and in winter dead. Dryden.

2. To bear; to support. Not in use.
So down he fell, that th' earth him underneath
Did groan, as feeble so great load to lyft. Fairy Q.

3. To rob; to plunder. Whence the term shoplifter.
So weary bees in little cells repose,
But if night robbers lyft the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows. Dryden.

4. To exalt; to elevate mentally.
My heart was lyft up in the ways of the Lord. 2 Chron.

Of Orpheus now no more let poets tell,
To bright Cæcilia greater pow'r is given,
His numbers rais'd a shade from hell,
Hers lyft the soul to heav'n. Pope.

5. To raise in fortune.
The eye of the Lord lyfted up his head from misery. Eccles.

6. To raise in estimation.
Neither can it be thought, because some lessons are chosen out of the Apocrypha, that we do offer disgrace to the word of God, or lyft up the writings of men above it. Hooker.

7. To exalt in dignity.
See to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lyft up mortal man! Addison.

8. To elevate; to swell as with pride.
Lyfted up with pride. 1 Tim. iii. 6.

A lightning before death. Shak. Romeo and Juliet.
We were once in hopes of his recovery, upon a kind of message from the widow; but this only proved a lightning before death. Addison's Spect.

LIGHTS. n. s. [supposed to be called so from their lightness in proportion to their bulk.] The lungs; the organs of breathing; we say, lights of other animals, and lungs of men.

The complaint was chiefly from the lights, a part as of no quick sense, so no seat for any sharp disease. Hoyward.

LIGHTSOME. adj. [from light.]

1. Luminous; not dark; not obscure; not opaque.

Neither the sun, nor any thing sensible is that light itself, which is the cause that things are lightsome, though it make itself, and all things else, visible; but a body most enlightened, by whom the neighbouring region, which the Greeks call æther, the place of the supposed element of fire, is effected and qualified. Raleigh.

White walls make rooms more lightsome than black.
Equal posture, and quick spirits, are required to make colours lightsome. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The sun
His course exalted through the Ram had run, Through Taurus, and the lightsome realms of love. Dryden.

2. Gay; airy; having the power to exhilarate.

It suiteth so fitly with that lightsome affection of joy, wherein God delighteth when his saints praise him. Hooker.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that which now often usurps the name; that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds that apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

LIGHTSOMENESS. n. s. [from lightsome.]

1. Luminousness; not opacity; not obscurity; not darknessness.

It is to our atmosphere that the variety of colours, which are painted on the skies, the lightsomeness of our air, and the twilight, are owing. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

2. Cheerfulness; merriment; levity.

LIGNA'LOES. n. s. [lignum aloes, Lat.]

Aloes wood.
The vallies spread forth as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lignales which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar trees beside the water. Numb. xxiv. 6.

LIGNEOUS. adj. [ligneus, Lat. ligneus, Fr.] Made of wood; wooden; resembling wood.

It should be tried with shoots of vines, and roots of red roses; for it may be they, being of a more ligneous nature, will incorporate with the tree itself. Bacon's Natural History.

Ten thousand seeds of the plant harts-tongue, hardly make the bulk of a pepper-corn: now the covers, and the true body of each seed, the parenchymous and ligneous part of both, and the fibres of those parts, multiplied one by another, afford a hundred thousand millions of formed atoms, but how many more we cannot define. Greuv.

LIGNUMVITÆ. n. s. [Lat.] Guaiacum; a very hard wood.

LIGURE. n. s. A precious stone.
The third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst. Eiodus.

LIKE. adj. [lic, Sax. liik, Dut.]

1. Resembling; having resemblance.
Whom art thou like in thy greatness? Ezekiel, xxxi. 2.

His son, or one of his illustrious name,
How like the former, and almost the same. Dryden's Æneid.

As the earth was designed for the being of men, why might not all other planets be created for the like uses, each for their own inhabitants? Bentley.

This plan, as laid down by him, looks liker an universal art than a distinct logic. Baker.

2. Equal; of the same quantity.

More clergymen were impoverished by the late war, than ever in the like space before. Sprait.

3. [For likely.] Probable; credible.

The trials were made, and it is like that the experiment would have been effectual. Bacon.

4. Likely; in a state that gives probable expectations. This is, I think, an improper, though frequent use.

If the duke continues these favours towards you, you are like to be much advanced. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

He is like to die for hunger, for there is no more bread. Jeremiah, xxxviii. 9.

The yearly value thereof is already increased double of that it was within these few years, and is like daily to rise higher till it amount to the price of our land in England. Davies.

Hopton resolved to visit Waller's quarters, that he might judge whether he were like to pursue his purpose. Clarendon.

Many were not easy to be governed, nor like to conform themselves to strict rules. Clarendon.

If his rules of reason be not better suited to the mind than his rules for health are fitted to our bodies, he is not like to be much followed. Baker on Learning.

LIKE. n. s. [This substantive is seldom more than the adjective used elliptically; the like for the like thing, or like person.]

1. Some person or thing resembling another.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again. Shakesp.
Every like is not the same, O Cæsar! Shakesp.

Though there have been greater fleets for number, yet for the bulk of the ships never the like. Bacon's War with Spain.

Albeit an eagle did bear away a lamb in her talons, yet a raven endeavouring to do the like was held entangled. Hoyward.

One offers, and in offering makes a stay;
Another forward sets, and doth no more;
A third the like. Daniel's Civil War.

His desire
By conversation with his like to help,
Or solace his defects. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Two likes may be mistaken. L'Estrange.
She'd study to reform the men,
Or add some grains of folly more
To women than they had before;
This might their mutual fancy strike,
Since every being loves its like. Swift.

2. Used with had; near approach; a state like to another state. A sense common, but not just; perhaps had is a corruption for was.

Report being carried secretly from one to another in my ship, had like to have been my utter overthrow. Raleigh.

LIKE. adv.

1. In the same manner; in the same manner as: it is not always easy to determine whether it be adverb or adjective.

The joyous nymphs, and lightfoot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
Now hearing them so heavily lament,
Like heavily lamenting from them went. Spenser.

Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. Psal. ciii. 13.

Are we proud and passionate, malicious and revengeful? Is this to be like-minded with Christ, who was meek and lowly? Tillotson.

Amus, a river of Italy, is drawn like an old man, by his right side a lion, holding forth in his right paw a red lily, or flower-de-luce.

Peacham on Drawing.

Take but the humblest lily of the field;
And if our pride will to our reason yield,
It must by sure comparison be shown,
That on the regal seat great David's son,
Array'd in all his robes, and types of pow'r,
Shines with less glory than that simple flow'r.

Prior.
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die.
Pope.

LILY-DAFFODIL. n. s. [lilionarcissus.]
A foreign flower.

LILY-HYACINTH. n. s. [lilio-hyacinthus.]

LIMB. n. s. [lim, Sax. and Scott. lem, Dan.]

1. A member; a jointed or articulated part of animals.

A second Hector, for his grim aspect,
And large proportion of his strong knit limbs.

O! that I had her here, to tear her limb meal!
Shakesp.

Now am I come each limb to survey,
If thy appearance answer loud report.
Milton's Agonistes.

2. [Limbe, Fr. limbus, Lat.] An edge; a border. A philosophical word.

By moving the prisms about, the colours again emerged out of the whiteness, the violet and the blue at its inward limb, and at its outward limb the red and yellow.
Newton.

To LIMB. v. a. [from the noun]
1. To supply with limbs.

As they please,
They limb themselves, and colour, shape, and size
Assume, as likes them best, condense, or rare.
Milton.

2. To tear asunder; to dismember.

LIMBECK. n. s. [corrupted by popular pronunciation from alembick.] A still. Her cheeks, on which this streaming nectar fell, Still'd through the limbeck of her diamond eyes.
Fairfax.

Fires of Spain, and the line,
Whose countries limbecks to our bodies be,
Canst thou for gain bear?

Call up, unbound,
In various shapes, old Proteus from the sea,
Drain'd through a limbeck to his naked form.
Milton.

The earth, by secret conveyances, lets in the sea, and sends it back fresh, her bowels serving for a limbeck.
Havel.

He first survey'd the charge with careful eyes,
Yet judg'd, like vapours that from limbecks rise,
It would in richer showers descend again.
Dryden.

The warm limbeck draws Salubrious waters from the nocent brood.
Philips.

LIMBED. adj. [from limb.] Formed with regard to limbs.

A steer of five years' age. large limb'd, and fed,
To Jove's high altars Agamemnon led.
Pope's Iliad.

LIMBER. adj. Flexible; easily bent; pliant; lithe.

You put me off with limber vows.
Shakesp.
I wonder how, among these jealousies of court and state, Edward Atheling could subsist, being the indubitate heir of the Saxon line: but he had tried, and found him a prince of limber virtues; so as though he might have some place in his caution, yet he reckoned him beneath his fear.
Wotton.

At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those wav'd their limber fans
For wings; and smallest lineaments exact
In all the liveries deck'd of summer's pride.
Milton.

She durst never stand at the bay, having nothing but her long soft limber ears to defend her.
More on Atheism.

The muscles were strong on both sides of the aspera arteria, but on the under side, opposite to that of the oesophagus, very limber.
Ray on Creation.

LIMBERNESS. n. s. [from limber.] Flexibility; pliancy.

LIMBO. n. s. [Eo quod sit limbus inferorum. Du Cange.]

1. A region bordering upon hell, in which there is neither pleasure nor pain. Popularly hell.

No, he is in tartar limbo, worse than hell,
A devil in an everlasting garment bath him,
One whose hard heart is button'd up with steel.
Shakesp.

Oh what a sympathy of woe is this!
As far from help as limbo is from bliss.
All these up-whirl'd aloft

Fly o'er the backside of the world far off,
Into a limbo large, and broad, since call'd
The paradise of fools.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Any place of misery and restraint.

For he no sooner was at large,
But Trulla straight brought on the charge;
And in the self-same limbo put
The knight and squire, where he was shut.
Friar, thou art come off thyself, but poor I am left in limbo.
Hudib.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

LIME. n. s. [lim, gelyman, Sax. to glue.]

1. A viscous substance drawn over twigs, which catches and entangles the wings of birds that light upon it.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net or lime,
The pitfall, nor the gin.
You must lay lime, to tangle her desires,
By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
Should be full fraught with serviceable vows.
Shakesp.

Jollier of this state
Than are new-benefic'd ministers, he throws,
Like nets or lime twigs, wheresoe'er he goes,
His title of barrister on every wench.
A thrush was taken with a bush of lime twigs.
Donne.
L'Estrange.

Then toils for beasts, and lime for birds were found,
And deep-mouth'd dogs did forest walks surround.
Dryden.

Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows hearts.
Pope.

2. Matter of which mortar is made; so called because used in cement.

There are so many species of lime stone, that we are to understand by it in general any stone that, upon a proper degree of heat, becomes a white calx, which will make a great ebullition and noise on being thrown into water, falling into a loose white powder at the bottom. The lime we have in London is usually made of chalk, which is weaker than that made of stone.
Hill's Materia Medica.

They were now, like sand without lime, ill bound together, especially as many as were English, who were at a gaze, looking strange one upon another, not knowing who was faithful to their side.

Bacon.

As when a lofty pile is rais'd,
We never hear the workmen prais'd,
Who bring the lime, or place the stones,
But all admire Luigo Jones.
Swift.

Lime is commonly made of chalk, or of any sort of stone that is not sandy, or very cold.
Mortimer.

LIME tree, or LINDEN. n. s. [limb, Sax. tilia, Lat.]

1. The linden tree.

The flower consists of several leaves, placed orbicularly, in the form of a rose, having a long narrow leaf growing to the footstalk of each cluster of flowers, from whose cup rises the pointal, which becomes testiculated, of one capsule, containing an oblong seed. The timber is used by carvers and turners. These trees continue sound many years, and grow to a considerable bulk. Sir Thomas Brown mentions one, in Norfolk, sixteen yards in circuit.
Miller.

For her the limes their pleasing shades deny,
For her the lilies hang their heads, and die.
Pope.

2. A species of lemon. [lime, Fr.]

Bear me, Pomona! to thy citron groves!
To where the lemon and the piercing lime,
With the deep orange glowing through the green,
Their lighter glories blend.
Thomson's Summer.

To LIME. v. a. [from lime.]

1. To entangle; to ensnare.

Oh hosom, black as death!
Oh limed soul, that, struggling to be free,
Art more engaged.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Example, that so terribly shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot, for all that, dissuade succession, but that they are limed with the twigs that threaten them.
Shakesp.

The bird that hath been limed in a bush,
With trembling wings misdoubteth ev'ry bush,
And I, the hapless male of one sweet bird,
Have now the fatal object in my eye,
Where my poor young was lim'd, was caught, and kill'd.
Shakesp.

2. To smear with lime.

Myself have lim'd a bush for her,
And plac'd a quire of such enticing birds,
That she will light to listen to their lays.
Those twigs in time will come to be limed, and then you are all lost if you do but touch them.
Shakesp.
L'Estrange.

3. To cement. This sense is out of use.

I will not ruinate my father's house,
Who gave his blood to lime the stones together,
And set up Lancaster.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

4. To manure ground with lime.

Encouragement that abatement of interest gave to landlords and tenants, to improve by draining, marling, and liming.
All sorts of pease love limed or marled land.
Child.
Mortimer.

LIMEKILN. n. s. [lime and kiln.] Kiln where stones are burnt to lime.

The counter gate is as hateful to me, as the reek of a lime-kiln.
They were found in a lime-kiln, and having passed the fire, each is a little vitrified.
Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.
Woodward.

LIMESTONE. n. s. [lime and stone.] The stone of which lime is made.

Fire stone and lime stone, if broke small, and laid on cold lands, must be of advantage.
Mortimer.

LIME-WATER. n. s.
Lime-water, made by pouring water upon quick lime, with some other ingredients to take off its ill flavour, is of great service internally in all cutaneous eruptions, and diseases of the lungs.

He tried an experiment on wheat infused in lime water alone, and some in brandy and lime-water mixed, and had from each grain great increase.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

LYMIT. n. s. [limite, Fr. limitor, Lat.]

Bound; border; utmost reach.

The whole limit of the mountain round about shall be most holy.
Exod. xliiii. 12.

We went, great emperor! by thy command,
To view the utmost limits of the land:
Ev'n to the place where no more world is found,
But fuming billows heating on the ground. Dryd.
To LIMIT. v. a. [limiter, Fr. from the noun.]

1. To confine within certain bounds; to restrain; to circumscribe; not to leave at large.

They tempted God, and limited the Holy One of Israel. Psalms

Thanks I must you con, that you
Are thieves profess; for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch. Swift.

2. To restrain from a lax or general signification: as, the universe is here limited to this earth.

LIMITA'NEOUS. adj. [from limit.] Belonging to the bounds. Dict.

Proud limitary chernab! Milton's Par. Lost.

LIMITATION. n. s. [imitation, Fr. limitatio, Lat.]

1. Restriction; circumscription.

Limitation of each creature, is both the perfection and the preservation thereof. Hooker.

But, as it were, in sort of limitation? Shakesp.
I despair, how this limitation of Adam's empire to his line and posterity, will help us to one heir.

This limitation, indeed, of our author, will save those the labour, who would look for him amongst the race of brutes; but will very little contribute to the discovery amongst men. Locke.

If a king come in by conquest, he is no longer a limited monarch; if he afterwards consent to limitations, he becomes immediately king de jure. Swift.

2. Confinement from a lax or undetermined import.

The cause of error is ignorance, what restraints and limitations all principles have in regard of the matter whereunto they are applicable. Hooker.

LIMMER. n. s. A mongrel.

To LIMIN. v. a. [enluminer, Fr. to adorn books with pictures.] To draw; to paint any thing.

Most truly limin'd, and living in your face. Shak.
Emblems limin'd in lively colours. Peacham.

How are the glories of the field spun, and by what pencil are they limin'd in their unaffected bravery? Granville.

LIMNER. n. s. [corrupted from enluminer a decorator of books with initial pictures.] A painter; a picture-maker.

That divers limners at a distance, without either copy or design, should draw the same picture to an undistinguishable exactness, is more conceivable than that matter, which is so diversified, should frame itself so unerringly, according to the idea of its kind. Granville's Scopsis.

Poets are limners of another kind,
To copy out ideas in the mind;
Words are the paint by which their thoughts are shown,

And nature is their object to be drawn. Granville.
LIMOUS. adj. [limosus, Lat.] Muddy; slimy.

That country became a gained ground by the muddy and limous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

They esteemed this natural melancholick acidity to be the limous or slimy feculent part of the blood. Floyer.

LIMP. adj. [limpio, Ital.]

1. Vapid; weak. Not in use.

The chub eats waterish, and the flesh of him is not firm, limp, and tasteless. Walton's Angler.

2. It is used in some provinces, and in Scotland, for limber, flexible.

To LIMP. v. n. [limpen, Sax.] To halt; to walk lamely.

An old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step Limp'd in pure love. Shakesp. As you like it.
Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire. Shakesp.

How far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprising it; so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Shakesp.
When Pluto, with his riches, is sent from Jupiter, he limps and goes slowly; but when he is sent by Pluto, he runs, and is swift of foot. Bacon.

Limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.
The limping smith observ'd the sadden'd feast,
And hopping here and there put in his word. Dryden.

Can syllogism set things right?
No: majors soon with minors fight:
Or both in friendly consort join'd,
The consequence limps false behind. Prior.

LIMPET. n. s. A kind of shell-fish. Ainsworth.

LIMPID. adj. [limpide, Fr. limpidus, Lat.] Clear; pure; transparent.

Fairy Queen.
Unto them that add to the word of God what them listeth, and make God's will submit unto their will, and break God's commandments for their own tradition's sake, unto them it seemeth not good.

They imagine, that laws which permit them not to do as they would, will endure them to speak as they list.

Let other men think of your devices as they list, in my judgment they be mere fancies.

Now by my mother's son, and that's myself,
It shall be noon, or star, or what I list.

Kings, lords of time, and of occasions, may Take their advantage when, and how, they list.

When they list, into the womb
That bred them they return ; and howl, and gnaw
My bowels, their repast.

To LIST. v. a. [from list a roll.]

1. To enlist ; to enrol or register.
For a man to give his name to Christianity in those days, was to list himself a martyr, and to bid farewell not only to the pleasures, but also to the hopes of this life.

They list with women each degen'rate name,
Who dares not hazard life for future fame.

2. To retain and enrol soldiers ; to enlist.
The lords would, by listing their own servants, persuade the gentlemen in the town to do the like.

The king who raised this wall appointed a million of soldiers, who were listed and paid for the defence of it against the Tartars.

Two hundred horse he shall command ;
Though few, a warlike and well-chosen band ;
These in my name are listed.

3. [From list ; enclosed ground.] To enclose for combats.

How dares your pride presume against my laws,
As in a listed field to fight your cause ?
Unask'd the royal grant.

4. [From list a shred or border.] To sew together, in such a sort as to make a particoloured shew.

Some may wonder at such an accumulation of benefits, like a kind of embroidering or listing of one favour upon another.

5. [Contracted from listen.] To hearken to ; to listen ; to attend.

Then weigh, what loss your honour may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs ;
Or lose your heart, or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.

I, this sound I better know ;
List ! I would I could hear mo.

LISTED. adj. Striped ; particoloured in long streaks.

Over his head beholds
A dewy cloud, and in the cloud a bow
Conspicuous, with three listed colours gay, Betok'ning peace from God, and cov'nant new.

As the show'ry arch
With listed colours gay, or, azure, gules,
Delights and puzzles the beholders eyes.

To LISTEN. v. a. To hear ; to attend.
Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

One cried, God bless us ! and, Amen ! the other :
As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,
Listening their fear. I could not say, Amen !

He, that no more must say, is listened more Than they whom youth and ease have taught to
glose.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,
And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance,
At which I ceas'd and listen'd them a while.

To LISTEN. v. n. To hearken ; to give attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,
I'll tell you news.

Antigonus used often to go disguised, and listen
at the tents of his soldiers ; and at a time heard some that spoke very ill of him : whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off.

Listen, O isles, unto me, and hearken ye people.

It may be the palate of the soul is indisposed by listlessness or sorrow.

LIT, the preterite of light ; whether to light signifies to happen, or to set on fire, or guide with light.

Be lieve thyself, thy eyes,
That first is flam'd, and lit me to thy love,
Those stars, that still must guide me to my joy.

I lit my pipe with the pater. Addison's Spectator.

LITANY. n. s. [λῆτανια ; litanie, Fr.] A form of supplicatory prayer.

Supplications, with solemnity for the appeasing of God's wrath, were, of the Greek church, termed litanies, and recitations of the Latin.

Recollect your sins that you have done that week, and all your lifetime ; and recite humbly and devoutly some penitential litanies.

LITTEAL. adj. [literal, Fr. litera, Lat.]

1. According to the primitive meaning ; not figurative.

Through all the writings of the ancient fathers, we see that the words which were, do continue ; the only difference is, that whereas before they had a literal, they now have a metaphorical use, and are as so many notes of remembrance unto us, that what they did signify in the letter, is accomplished in the truth.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to an house, or other building ; nor figurative, but what is founded in that, and deduc'd from thence.

2. Following the letter, or exact words.

The fittest for publick audience are such as, following a middle course between the rigour of literal translations and the liberty of paraphrasts, do with greater shortness and plainness deliver the meaning.

3. Consisting of letters ; as, the literal notation of numbers was known to Europeans before the cyphers.

LITERAL. n. s. Primitive or literal meaning.

How dangerous it is in sensible things to use metaphorical expressions unto the people, and what absurd conceits they will swallow in their literals, an example we have in our profession.

LITERALITY. n. s. [from literal.] Original meaning.

Not attaining the true deuterosecopy and second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their superequences, coherences, figures, or tropo-logies, and are not sometimes persuaded beyond their literalities.

LITERALLY. adv. [from literal.]

1. According to the primitive import of words ; not figuratively.

That a man and his wife are one flesh, I can comprehend ; yet literally taken, it is a thing impossible.

2. With close adherence to words ; word by word.

Endeavouring to turn his Nisus and Euryalus as close as I was able, I have performed that episode to literally ; that giving more scope to Mezentius and Lausus, that version, which has more of the majesty of Virgil, has less of his conciseness.

So wild and ungovernable a poet cannot be translated literally ; his genius is too strong to hear a chain.

LITERARY. adj. [literarius, Lat.] Respecting letters ; regarding learning.

Literary history is an account of the state of learning and of the lives of learned men. Literary conversation, is talk about questions of learning.

Literary is not properly used of missive letters. It may be said, this epistolary

LISTEN. v. a. To hear ; to attend.

Obsolete.

Lady, vouchsafe to listen what I say.

One cried, God bless us ! and, Amen ! the other :

As they had seen me with these hangman's hands,

Listening their fear. I could not say, Amen !

He, that no more must say, is listened more

Than they whom youth and ease have taught to

glose.

The wonted roar was up amidst the woods,

And fill'd the air with barbarous dissonance,

At which I ceas'd and listen'd them a while.

To LISTEN. v. n. To hearken ; to give

attention.

Listen to me, and if you speak me fair,

I'll tell you news.

Antigonus used often to go disguised, and listen

at the tents of his soldiers ; and at a time heard

some that spoke very ill of him : whereupon he said, If you speak ill of me, you should go a little farther off.

Listen, O isles, unto me, and hearken ye people.

When we have occasion to listen, and give a more particular attention to some sound, the tympanium is drawn to a more than ordinary tension.

On the green bank I sat, and listen'd long ;

Nor till her lay was ended could I move,

But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove.

He shall be receiv'd with more regard,

And listen'd to, than modest truth is heard.

To this humour most of our late comedies owe their success : the audience listens after nothing else.

LISTENER. n. s. [from listen.] One that hearkens ; a hearkener.

They are light of belief, great listeners after news.

correspondence was political oftener than literary.

LITERATI. n. s. [Ital.] The learned.

I shall consult some literati on the project sent me for the discovery of the longitude. Spectator.

LITERATURE. n. s. [literatura, Lat.] Learning; skill in letters.

This kingdom hath been famous for good literature; and if preferment attend deservers, there will not want supplies. Bacon.

When men of learning are acted by a knowledge of the world, they give a reputation to literature, and convince the world of its usefulness. Addison's Freetholder.

LITHARGE. n. s. [litharge, Fr. lithargyrum, Lat.]

Litharge is properly lead vitrified, either alone or with a mixture of copper. This recrement is of two kinds, litharge of gold, and litharge of silver. It is collected from the furnaces where silver is separated from lead, or from those where gold and silver are purified by means of that metal. The litharge sold in the shops is produced in the copper works, where lead has been used to purify that metal, or to separate silver from it. Hill.

I have seen some parcels of glass alluring to the test or cupel as well as the gold or litharge. Boyle.

If the lead be blown off from the silver by the bellows, it will, in great part, be collected in the form of a darkish powder; which, because it is blown off from silver, they call litharge of silver. Boyle.

LITHE. adj. [lithē, Sax.] Limber; flexible; pliant; easily bent.

Th' unwieldy elephant,
To make them mirth, us'd all his might, and wreath'd

His lithe proboscis. Milton's Par. Lost.

LITHESS. n. s. [from lithe.] Limberness; flexibility.

LITHER. adj. [from lithe.] Soft; pliant.

Thou antick death,
Two Talbots winged through the lither sky,
In thy despite shall 'scape mortality. Shakesp.

LITIGANT. n. s. [litigans, Lat. litigant, Fr.] One engaged in a suit of law.

The cast litigant sits not down with one cross verdict, but recommences his suit. Decay of Piety.

The litigants tear one another to pieces for the benefit of some third interest. L'Estrange's Fables.

LITIGANT. adj. Engaged in a juridical contest.

Judicial acts are those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties litigant. Ayliffe's Parergon

To LITIGATE. v. a. [litigo, Lat.] To contest in law; to debate by judicial process.

To LITIGATE. v. n. To manage a suit; to carry on a cause.

The appellant, after the interposition of an appeal, still litigates in the same cause. Ayliffe's Parergon.

LITIGATION. n. s. [litigatio, Lat. from litigate.] Judicial contest; suit of law.

Never one clergyman had experience of both litigations, that hath not confessed, he had rather have three suits in Westminster-hall, than one in the arches. Clarendon.

LITIGIOUS. adj. [litigieux, Fr.]

1. Inclivable to law-suits; quarrelsome; wrangling.

Soldiers find wars, and lawyers find out still litigious men, who quarrels move. Donne.

His great application to the law had not infected his temper with any thing positive or litigious. Addison.

2. Disputable; controvertible.

In litigious and controverted causes, the will of God is to have them to do whatsoever the sentence of judicial and final decision shall determine. Hooker.

No fences parted fields, nor marks, nor bounds, Distinguish'd acres of litigious grounds. Dryden's Georg.

LITIGIOUSLY. adv. [from litigious.] Wranglingly.

LITIGIOUSNESS. n. s. [from litigious.] A wrangling disposition; inclination to vexatious suits.

scure terms, yet in their sermons were very liberal of all those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

Swift.

LITTLENESS. n. s. [from little.]

1. Smallness of bulk.

All trying, by a love of littleness,
To make abridgments, and to draw to less
Even that nothing which at first we were. Donne.

We may suppose a great many degrees of littleness and lightness in these earthly particles, so as many of them might float in the air. Burnet.

2. Meanness; want of grandeur.

The English and French, in verse, are forced to raise their language with metaphors, by the pomposness of the whole phrase, to wear off any littleness that appears in the particular parts.

Addison.

3. Want of dignity.

The angelick grandeur, by being concealed, does not awaken our poverty, nor mortify our littleness so much, as if it was always displayed.

Collier.

either appointeth no scripture at all, or very little to be read in the church. Hooker.

The blesseddest of mortal wights began to be imported, so that a great part of divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Henel.

It is the greatest solemnity of prayer, the most powerful liturgy and means of impetration in this world. Taylor.

TO LIVE. v. n. [λύψαν, λύψαν, Sax.]1. To be in a state of animation; to be not dead.

Is't night's predominance, or the day's shame,
That darkness does the face of earth intomb,
When living day should kiss it? Shakesp. Macbeth.

To save the living, and revenge the dead,
Against one warrior's arms all Troy they led.

Dryden.

2. To pass life in any certain manner with regard to habits, good or ill, happiness or misery.

O death, how bitter is the remembrance of thee to a man that liveth at rest! Eccles. xli. 1.

Dr. Parker, in his sermon before them, touched them so near for their living, that they went near to touch him for his life. Hayward.

The condition required of us is a conjunction of all gospel graces rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully lived and died in. Hammond.

A late prelate, of a remarkable zeal for the church, were religious to be tried by lives, would have lived down the pope, and the whole consistory. Atterbury.

If we act by several broken views, we shall live and die in misery. Addison's Spectator.

If we are firmly resolved to live up to the dictates of reason, without any regard to wealth and reputation, we may go through life with steadiness and pleasure. Addison.

3. To continue in life.

Our high-plac'd Macbeth
Shall live the lease of nature, and pay his breath
To time and mortal custom. Shakesp.

How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live? Shakesp.

The way to live long must be, to use our bodies
so as is most agreeable to the rules of temperance.
Ray on the Creation.

4. To live emphatically; to be in a state of happiness.

What greater curse could envious fortune give,
Than just to die when I began to live? Dryden.

Now three and thirty rolling years are fled
Since I began, nor yet begin to live. Brown.

Live while you live, the Epicure would say,
And snatch the pleasures of the present day;
Live while you live, the sacred preacher cries,
And give to God each moment as it flies:

Lord, in my views let both united be,
I live to pleasure when I live to thee. Doddridge.

5. To be exempt from death, temporal or spiritual.

My statutes and judgments, if a man do, he shall live in them. Lev. xviii. 5.

He died for us, that whether we wake or sleep,
we should live together with him. 1 Thess. v. 10.

6. To remain undestroyed.

It was a miraculous providence that could make a vessel, so ill manned, live upon sea; that kept it from being dashed against the hills, or overwhelmed in the deeps. Burnet.

Mark how the shifting winds from west arise,
And what collected night involves the skies!
Nor can our shaken vessels live at sea,
Much less against the tempest force their way.

Dryden.

7. To continue; not to be lost.

Men's evil manners live in brass, their virtues
We write in water. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Sounds which address the ear are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye Lives long upon the mind; the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with a beam of light.

Watts.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies grace.
There high in air, memorial of my name,
Fix the smooth oar, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

8. To converse; to cohabit: followed by with.

to find a livelhood out of her own estate. Clarendon.

He brings disgrace upon his character, to submit to the picking up of a livelhood in that strolling way of canting and begging. L'Estrange.

It is their profession and livelhood to get their living by practices for which they deserve to forfeit their lives. South.

They have been as often banished out of most other places; which must very much disperse a people, and oblige them to seek a livelhood where they can find it. Addison's Spectator.

Trade employs multitudes of hands, and furnishes the poorest of our fellow-subjects with the opportunities of gaining an honest livelhood: the skilful or industrious find their account in it.

Addison.

LIVELINESS. n. s. [from lively.]

1. Appearance of life.

That liveliness which the freedom of the pencil makes appear, may seem the living hand of nature. Dryden's Duressney.

2. Vivacity; sprightliness.

Extravagant young fellows, that have liveliness
and spirit, come sometimes to be set right, and so make able and great men; but time and low spirits very seldom attain to any thing. Locke.

LIVELODE. n. s. [live and lode, from lead; the means of leading life.] Maintenance; support; livelihood.

As well of worldly livelode as of life,
That there might be no difference nor strife.

Hubbera.

LIVELONG. adj. [live and long.]

1. Tedious; long in passing.

Many a time, and oft,
Have you climb'd up to walls and battlements,
Your infants in your arms; and there have sat
The livelong day, with patient expectation,
To see great Pompey pass. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

The obscure'd bird clamour'd the livelong night.

Shakesp.

Young and old came forth to play
On a sun-shine holiday,
'Till the livelong day-light fail.

Milton.

Seek for pleasure to destroy
The sorrows of this livelong night. Prior.
How could she sit the livelong day,
Yet never ask us once to play? Swift.

2. Lasting; durable. Not used.
Thou, in our wonder and astonishment,
Hast built thyself a livelong monument. Milton.

LIVELY. adj. [live and like.]

1. Brisk; vigorous; vivacious.
But wherefore comes old Manoa in such haste,
With youthful steps? much livelier than ere while
He seems; supposing here to find his son,
Or of him bringing to us some glad news? Milton.

2. Gay; airy.
Dulness delighted, ey'd the lively dunce,
Rememb'ring she herself was pertness once. Pope.
Form'd by thy converse, happily to steer
From grave to gay, from lively to severe. Pope.

3. Representing life.
Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure,
A lively imitation of it in poetry or painting must produce a much greater. Dryden's Divesion.

4. Strong; energetic.
His faith must be not only living, but lively too;
it must be brightened and stirred up by a particular exercise of those virtues specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South.

The colours of the prism are manifestly more full, intense, and lively, than those of natural bodies.
Imprint upon their minds, by proper arguments and reflections, a lively persuasion of the certainty of a future state. Atterbury.

LIVELILY. } adv.

LIVELY. } adv.

1. Briskly; vigorously.
They brought their men to the slough, who discharging lively almost close to the face of the enemy, did much amaze them. Hayward.

2. With strong resemblance of life.
That part of poetry must needs be best, which describes most lively our actions and passions, our virtues and our vices. Dryden.

LIVER. n. s. [from live.]

1. One who lives.
Be thy afflictions undisturb'd and clear,
Guided to what may great or good appear,
And try if life be worth the liver's care. Prior.

2. One who lives in any particular manner with respect to virtue or vice, happiness
or misery.
The end of his descent was to gather a church of holy christian livers over the whole world.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

If any loose liver have any goods of his own,
the sheriff is to seize thereupon. Spenser on Ireland.
Here are the wants of children, of distracted persons, of sturdy wandering beggars and loose disorderly livers, at one view represented.
Atterbury.

3. [From līpe, Sax.] One of the entrails.

With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come;
And let my liver rather heat with wine,
Than my heart cool with mortifying groans. Shakesp.

Reason and respect
Make livers pale, and lustibood dejected. Shakesp.

LIVERCOLOUR. adj. [liver and colour.]

Dark red.
The uppermost stratum is of gravel; then clay of various colours, purple, blue, red, livercolour.
Woodward.

LIVERGROWN. adj. [liver and grown.]

Having a great liver.
I enquired what other casualties were most like the rickets, and found that livergrown was nearest.
Graunt.

LIVERWORT. n. s. [liver and wort;
lichen.] A plant.

That sort of liverwort which is used to cure
the bite of mad dogs, grows on commons, and open heaths, where the grass is short, on declivities, and on the sides of pits. This spreads on the surface of the ground, and when in perfection, is of an ash colour; but, as it grows old, it alters, and becomes of a dark colour. Miller.

LIV'RY. n. s. [from livrer, Fr.]

1. The act of giving or taking possession.
You do wrongfully seize Hereford's right,
Call in his letters patents that he hath
By his attorneys general to sue
His liv'ry, and deny his offered homage. Shakesp.

2. Release from wardship.
Had the two houses first sued out their liv'ry, and once effectually redeemed themselves from the wardship of the tumults, I should then suspect my own judgment. King Charles.

3. The writ by which possession is obtained.

4. The state of being kept at a certain rate.

What liv'ry is, we by common use in England know well enough, namely, that it is an allowance of horse meat; as they commonly use the word stabling, as to keep horses at liv'ry; the which word, I guess, is derived of liv'ring or de- liv'ring forth their nightly food; so in great houses, the liv'ry is said to be served up for all night, that is, their evening allowance for drink; and liv'ry is also called the upper weed which a serving man wears; so called, I suppose, for that it was delivered and taken from him at pleasure: so it is apparent, that, by the word liv'ry, is there meant horse meat, like as by the cognizance is understood man's meat. Some say it is derived of coin, for that they used in their cognizance not only to take meat but money; but I rather think it is derived of the Irish, the which is a common use amongst landlords of the Irish to have a common spending upon their tenants, who being commonly but tenants at will, they used to take of them what victuals they list; for of victuals they were wont to make a small reckoning. Spenser on Ireland.

5. The cloaths given to servants.
My mind for weeds your virtue's liv'ry wears.
Sidney.

Perhaps they are by so much the more loth to forsake this argument, for that it hath, though nothing else, yet the name of scripture, to give it some kind of countenance more than the pretext of liv'ry coats affordeth. Hooker.

I think, it is our way,
If we will keep in favour with the king,
To be her men, and wear her liv'ry. Shakesp.
Yet do our hearts wear Timon's liv'ry,
That see I by our faces. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

Every lady cloath'd in white,
And crown'd with oak and laurel every knight,
Are servants to the leaf, by liv'ries known
Of innocence. Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

On others int'rest her gay liv'ry rings,
Interest that waves on party-colour'd wings;
Turn'd to the sun she casts a thousand dyes:
And as she turns the colours fall or rise. Dunnciad.
If your dinner miscarries, you were teized by the footmen coming into the kitchen; and to prove it true, throw a ladleful of broth on one or two of their liv'ries. Swift.

6. A particular dress; a garb worn as a token or consequence of any thing.

Of fair Urania, fairer than a green
Proudly bedeck'd in April's liv'ry. Sidney.
Mistake me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd liv'ry of the burning sun,
To whom I am a neighbour and near bred. Shak.
At once came forth whatever creeps the ground,
Insect, or worm: those way'd their limber fans
For wings, and smallest lineaments exact,
In all the liv'ries deck'd of summer's pride,
With spots of gold and purple, azure, green. Milton.

Now came still evening on, and twilight grey
Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.

LIV'RYMAN. n. s. [liv'ry and man.]

1. One who wears a liv'ry; a servant of an inferior kind.

The witnesses made oath, that they had heard some of the liv'rymen frequently railing at their mistress. Arbuthnot.

2. [In London.] A freeman of some standing in a company.

LIVES. n. s. [the plural of life.]
So short is life, that every peasant strives,
In a farm house or field, to have three lives. Donne.
LIVID. adj. [lividus, Lat. livide, Fr.]
Discoloured, as with a blow; black and blue.

It was a pestilent fever, not seated in the veins or humours, for that there followed no carbuncles, no purple or livid spots, the mass of the blood not being tainted. Bacon.

Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O, envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryd.
They beat their breasts with many a bruising blow,
Till they turn'd livid, and corrupt the snow. Dryden.

LIVIDITY. n. s. [lividité, Fr. from livid.]
Discoloration, as by a blow.

The signs of a tendency to such a state, are darkness or lividity of the countenance. Arbuthnot.

LIVING. participial adj.

1. Vigorous; active; as, a living faith.
2. Being in motion; having some natural energy, or principle of action: as, the living green, the living springs.

LIVING. n. s. [from live.]

1. Support; maintenance; fortune on which one lives.

The Arcadians fought as in unknown place, having no succour but in their hands; the Helots,
as in their own place, fighting for their livings, wives, and children. Sidney.

All they did cast in of their abundance; but she of her want did cast in all that she had, even all her living. Mark.

2. Power of continuing life.

There is no living without trusting some body or other, in some cases. L'Estrange.

3. Livelihood.

For ourselves we may a living make. Hubberd.
Tuen may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living. Shakesp.

Isaac and his wife, now dig for your life,
Or shortly you'll dig for your living. Denham.
Actors must represent such things as they are capable to perform, and by which both they and the scribbler may get their living. Dryden's Duf.

4. Benefice of a clergyman.

Some of our ministers having the livings of the country offered unto them, without pains, will, neither for any love of God, nor for all the good they may do, by winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

The parson of the parish preaching against adulters, Mrs. Bull told her husband that they would join to have him turned out of his living for using personal reflections. Arbuthnot.

LIVINGLY. adv. [from living.] In the living state.

In vain do they scruple to approach the dead, who livingly are cadaverous, or fear any outward pollution, whose temper pollutes themselves.
Brown's Vulgar Err.

LIVRE. n. s. [Fr.] The sum by which the French reckon their money, equal nearly to our ten-pence.

LIXIVIAL. adj. [from lixivium, Lat.]

1. Impregnated with salts like a lixivium.
The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vi-tiated, were a yellowish colour of the skin, and a lixivial urine. Arbuthnot.

2. Obtained by lixivium.

Helmont conjectured, that lixivial salts do not pre-exist in their alcalizate form. Boyle.

LIXIVIATE. adj. [lixivieux, Fr. from lixivium.] Making a lixivium.

In these the salt and lixiviated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and the bladder Brown.

Lixivate salts to which pot-ashes belong, by piercing the bodies of vegetables, dispose them to part readily with their tincture. Boyle.

LIXIVIUM. n. s. [Lat.] Lye; water impregnated with alkaline salt, produced from the ashes of vegetables; a liquor which has the power of extraction.

I made a lixivium of fair water and salt of worm-wood, and having frozen it with snow and salt, I could not discern any thing more like to worm-wood than to several other plants. Boyle.

LIZARD. n. s. [lisarde, Fr. lacertus, Lat.] An animal resembling a serpent, with legs added to it.

There are several sorts of lizards; some in Arabia of a cubit long. In America they eat lizards; it is very probable likewise that they were eaten in Arabia and Judæa, since Moses ranks them among the unclean creatures. Calmét.

Thou'rt like a foul mis-shapen stigmatick, Mark'd by the destinies to be avoided, As venomous toads, or lizards dreadful stings. Shakesp.

Adder's fork, and blind worm's sting, Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing. Shakesp. Macbeth.

LIZARDITAL. n. s. A plant.

LIZARDSTONE. n. s. [lizard and stone.] A kind of stone.

L.L.D. [legum doctor.] A doctor of the canon and civil laws.

LO. interj. [la, Sax.] Look; see; behold. It is a word used to recall the attention generally to some object of sight; sometimes to something heard, but not properly; often to something to be understood.

Lo! within a ken our army lies. Shakesp.
Now must the world point at poor Catherine,
And say, lo! there is mad Petruchio's wife. Shak.

Lo! I have a weapon,
A better never did itself sustain Upon a soldier's thigh. Shakesp. Othello.

Thou did'st utter,
I am yours for ever.
—Why lo you now, I've spoke to the purpose twice. Shakesp.

For lo! he sung the world's stupendous birth. Roscommon.

Lo! heav'n and earth combine
To blast our bold designs. Dryden's Albion.

LOACH. n. s. [loche, Fr.]

The loach is a most dainty fish; he breeds and feeds in little and clear swift brooks or rills, and lives there upon the gravel, and in the sharpest streams: he grows not to be above a finger long, and no thicker than is suitable to that length: he is of the shape of an eel, and has a beard of wattles like a barbel: he has two fins at his sides, four at his belly, and one at his tail, dappled with many black or brown spots; his mouth, barbel-like, under his nose. This fish is usually full of eggs or spawn, and is by Gesner, and other physicians, commended for great nourishment, and to be very grateful both to the palate and stomach of sick persons, and is to be fished for with a small worm, at the bottom, for he seldom rises above the gravel. Walton's Angler.

LOAD. n. s. [blade, Sax.]

1. A burthen; a freight; lading.

Fair plant with fruit surcharg'd,
Deigns none to ease thy load, and taste thy sweet? Milton.

Then on his back he laid the precious load,
And sought his wonted shelter. Dryden's Num's Tale.

Let India boast her groves, nor envy we
The weeping amber, and the balmy tree;
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which these trees adorn. Pope.

2. Weight; pressure; encumbrance.

Jove lighten'd of its load
Th' enormous mass, the labour of a God. Pope.

3. Weight; or violence of blows.

Like lion mov'd thy laid on load,
And made a cruel fight. Cheyv Chacc.

Far heavier load thyself expect to feel
From my prevailing arm. Milton.
And Mnestheus laid hard load upon his helm. Dryden.

4. Any thing that depresses.

How a man can have a quiet and cheerful mind under a great burden and load of guilt, I know not, unless he be very ignorant. Ray.

5. As much drink as one can bear.

There are those that can never sleep without their load, nor enjoy one easy thought, till they have laid all their cares to rest with a bottle. L'Estrange.

The thund'ring god,
Ev'n he withdrew to rest, and had his load. Dryd.

To LOAD. v. a. preterite, loaded; par.
loaden or laden. [bladan, Sax.]

1. To burden; to freight.

At last, laden with honour's spoils,
Returns the good Andronicus to Rome. Shakesp.
Your carriages were heavy loaden; they are a burden to the beast. Isa. xlvi. 1.

2. To encumber; to embarrass.

He that makes no reflections on what he reads, only loads his mind with a rhapsody of tales, fit in winter nights for the entertainment of others. Locke.

3. To charge a gun.

A mariner having discharged his gun, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wisem.

4. To make heavy by something appended or annexed.

Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still sounds
In my stunn'd ears. Addison's Cato.

LOAD. n. s. [more properly lode, as it was anciently written; from lædan, Sax. to lead.] The leading vein in a mine.

The tin lay couched at first in certain strakes amongst the rocks, like the veins in a man's body, from the depth whereof the main load spreadeth out his branches, until they approach the open air. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Their manner of working in the lead mines, is to follow the load as it lieth. Carew's Surv. of Corn.

LO'ADER. n. s. [from load.] He who loads.

LO'ADSMAN. n. s. [lode and man.] He who leads the way; a pilot.

LO'ADSTAR. n. s. [more properly as it is in Maundeville, lodestar, from lædan to lead.] The polestar; the cynosure;

the leading or guiding star.

She was the loadstar of my life; she the blessing of mine eyes; she the overthrow of my desires, and yet the recompence of my overthrow. Sidney.

My Helice, the loadstar of my life. Spenser.
O happy fair!
Your eyes are loadstars, and your tongue sweet air!
More tuneable than lark to shepherd's ear
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds appear. Shakesp.

That clear majesty
Which standeth fix'd, yet spreads her heavenly worth,

Lodestone to hearts, and lodestar to all eyes. Davies.

LO'ADSTONE. n. s. [properly lodestone or lading-stone. See LOADSTAR.] The magnet; the stone on which the mariners compass needle is touched to give it a direction north and south.

The loadstone is a peculiar and rich ore of iron, found in large masses, of a deep iron-grey where fresh broken, and often tinged with a brownish or reddish colour; it is very heavy, and considerably hard, and its great character is that of affecting iron. This ore of iron is found in England, and in most other places where there are mines of that metal. Hill's Mat. Med.

The use of the loadstone was kept as secret as any of the other mysteries of the art. Suyt.

LOAF. n. s. [from blap or lap, Sax.]

1. A mass of bread as it is formed by the baker: a loaf is thicker than a cake.

Easy it is
Of a cut loaf to steal a slave we know. Shakesp.

The bread corn in the town sufficeth not for six days: hereupon the soldiers entered into prophetion; and, to give example, the lord Clinton limited himself to a loaf a-day. Huyward.

With equal force you may break a loaf of bread into more and less parts than a lump of lead of the same bigness. Dighy.

2. Any thick mass into which a body is wrought.

Your wine becomes so limpid, that you may bottle it with a piece of loaf sugar in each bottle. Mortimer.

LOAM. n. s. [lum, laam, Sax. limus, Lat.

from λαμω a fen, Junius.] Fat, unctuo-us, tenacious earth; marl.

The purest treasure
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam or painted clay. Shakesp.

Alexander returneth to dust; the dust is earth;
of earth we make loam; and why of that loam might they not stop a beer barrel? Shakesp.

To LOAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To smear with loam, marl, or clay; to clay.

The joist ends, and girders which lie in the walls, must be loamed all over, to preserve them from the corroding of the mortar. Mason's Mech. Exerc.

LO'AMY. adj. [from loam.] Marly.

The mellow earth is the best, between the two extremes of clay and sand, if it be not loamy and binding. Bacon.

Auricula seedlings best like a loamy sand, or light moist earth; yet rich and shaded. Fretyn.

LOAN. n. s. [blæn, Sax.] Any thing lent;

any thing given to another, on condition of return or repayment.

The better such ancient revenues shall be paid,
the less need her majesty ask subsidies, fifteens, and loans. Bacon.

You're on the fret,
Because, in so debauch'd and vile an age,
Thy friend and old acquaintance dares disown
The gold you lent him, and forswear the loan. Dryden.

LOATH. adj. [lað, Sax.] Unwilling;

disliking; not ready; not inclined.
These fresh and delightful brooks, how slowly they slide away, as loth to leave the company of so many things united in perfection! Sidney.

With lofty eyes, half loth to look so low,
She thanked them in her disdainful wist,
Ne other grace vouchsafed them to show
Of princess worthy. Fairy Queen.

When he heard her answers loth, he knew
Some secret sorrow did her heart distract. Fairy Queen.

To speak so indirectly, I am loath;
I'd say the truth; but to accuse him so,
That is your part. Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

Long doth she stay, as loth to leave the land,
From whose soft side she first did issue make;
She tastes all places, turns to every hand,
Her flow'ry banks unwilling to forsake. Davies.

Then wilt thou not be loth
To leave this paradise, but shalt possess
A paradise within thee, happier far! Milton.

To pardon willing, and to punish loth;
You strike with one hand, but you heal with both;
Lifting up all that prostrate lie, you grieve
You cannot make the dead again to live. Water.

When Æneas is forced to kill Lausus, the poet shews him compassionate, and is loth to describe such a master-piece of nature. Dryden.

As some faint pilgrim standing on the shore,
First views the torrent he would venture o'er:

And then his inn upon the farther ground,
Loth to wade through, and lother to go round:
Then dipping in his staff does trial make How deep it is; and sighing, pulls it back. Dryd.
I know you shy to be oblig'd;
And still more loath to be oblig'd by me. Southerne.

To LOATHE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hate; to look on with abhorrence.
Parthena had learned both liking and misliking, loving and loathing. Sidney

The y with their filthiness
Polluted th is same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness. Spenser.

How am I caught with an unwary oath,
Not to reveal the secret which I loath!
For thee the lion loaths the taste of blood,
And roaring hunts his female through the wood. Dryden.

Now his exalted spirit loaths
Incumbrances of food and cloaths. Swift.

2. To consider with the disgust of satiety.
Loathing the honey'd cakes, I long'd for bread. Cowley.

Our appetite is extinguished with the satisfaction, and is succeeded by loathing and satiety. Rogers

3. To see food with dislike.
Loathing is a symptom known to attend disorders of the stomach; the cure must have regard to the cause. Quincy.

To LOATHE. v. n.

1. To create disgust; to cause abhorrence.
Obsolete.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grisly toadstool grown there might I see,
And loathing paddocks lording on the same. Spenser.

2. To feel abhorrence or disgust.
The fish in the river shall die, and the river stink; and the Egyptians shall loath to drink of the water. Exodus.

Why do I stay within this hated place,
Where every object shocks my loathing eyes? Rowe.

LO'ATHER. n. s. [from loath.] One that loaths.

LO'ATHFUL. adj. [loath and full.]

1. Abhorring; hating.
Which he did with loathful eyes behold,
He would no more endure. Hubberd's Talc.

2. Abhorred; hated.
Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect, through cowardly distrust
Of his weak wings, dare not to heaven fly. Spenser.

LO'ATHINGLY. adv. [from loath.] In a fastidious manner.

LO'ATHLY. adj. [from loath.] Hateful;
abhorred; exciting hatred.

An huge great dragon, horrible in sight,
Bred in the loathly lakes of Tartary,
With murd'rous ravin. Fairy Queen.
The people fear me; for they do observe Unfathered heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakesp.

Sonr-ey'd disdain and discord shall bestow
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it. Shakesp. Tempest.

LO'ATHLY. adv. [from loath.] Unwillingly; without liking or inclination.

The upper streams make such haste to have their part of embracing, that the nether, though loathly, must needs give place unto them. Sidney.
Loathly opposite I stood
To his unnatural purpose. Shakesp. King Lear.
This shews that a yoo from nature loathly stray,
That suffer not an artificial day. Donne.

LO'ATHNESS. n. s. [from loath.] Unwillingness.

The fair soul herself
Weigh'd between loathness and obedience,
Which end the beam should bow. Shakesp.

Should we be taking leave,
As long a term as yet we have to live,
The lothness to depart would grow. Shakesp.
After they had sat about the fire, there grew a general silence and lothness to speak amongst them; and immediately one of the weakest fell down in a swoon. Bacon.

LO'ATHSOME. adj. [from loath.]

1. Abhorred; detestable.
The fresh young fly
Did much disdain to subject his desire
To loathsome sloth, or hours in ease to waste. Spenser.

While they pervert pure nature's healthful rules
To loathsome sickness. Milton's Par. Lost.
If we consider man in such a loathsome and provoking condition, was it not love enough that he was permitted to enjoy a being? South.

2. Causing satiety or fastidiousness.
The sweetest honey
Is loathsome in its own deliciousness,
And in the taste confounds the appetite. Shakesp.

LO'ATHSOMENESS. n. s. [from loathsome.]
Quality of raising hatred, disgust, or abhorrence.

The catacombs must have been full of stench and loathsomeness, if the dead bodies that lay in them were left to rot in open niches. Addison.

LOAVES. plur. of loaf.
Democritus, when he lay a dying, caused loaves of new bread to be opened, poured a little wine into them; and so kept himself alive with the odour till a feast was past. Bacon.

LOB.

1. Any one heavy, clumsy, or sluggish.
Farewel, thou lob of spirits, I'll begone,
Our queen and all her elves come here anon. Shakesp.

2. Lob's pound; a prison. Probably a prison for idlers, or sturdy beggars.

Crowdero, whom in irons bound,
Thou basely threw'st into lob's pound. Hudibras.

3. A big worm.
For the trout the dew worm, which some also call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief. Walton's Angler.

To LOB. v. a. To let fall in a slovenly or lazy manner.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
And their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips. Shakesp.

LO'BBY. n. s. [laube, Germ.] An opening before a room.

His lobbies fill with 'tendance,
Rain sacrificial whisp'rings in his ear,
Make sacred even his stirrup. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

Before the duke's rising from the table, he stood expecting till he should pass through a kind of lobby between that room and the next, where were divers attending him. Wotton.

Try your backstairs, and let the lobby wait,
A stratagem in war is no deceit. King.

LOBE. n. s. [lobe, Fr. lobes.] A division;
a distinct part: used commonly for a part of the lungs.

Nor could the lobes of his rank liver swell
To that prodigious mass, for their eternal men. Dryden.

Air bladders form lobuli, which hang upon the bronchia like bunches of grapes; these lobuli constitute the lobes, and the lobes the lungs. Aybaton on Aliments.

From whence the quick reciprocating breath,
The lobe adhesive, and the sweat of death. Sevel.

LO'BSTER. n. s. [lobj-ter, Sax.] A crus-taceous fish.

Those that cast their shell, are the lobster, the crab, and craw fish. Bacon's Natural History.
It happeneth often that a lobster hath the great claw of one side longer than the other. Brown.

LOCAL. adj. [local, Fr. locus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of place.
By ascending, after that the sharpness of death was overcome, he took the very local possession of glory, and that to the use of all that are his, even as himself before had witnessed, I go to prepare a place for you. Hooker.

A higher flight the vent'rous goddess tries,
Leaving material world, and local skies. Prior.

2. Relating to place.
The circumstance of local nearness in them unto us, might haply enforce in us a duty of greater separation from them than from those other. Hooker.

Where there is only a local circumstance of worship, the same thing would be worshipped, supposing that circumstance changed. Stillingfleet.

3. Being in a particular place.
Dream not of their fight,
As of a duel, or of the local wounds
Of head, or heel. Milton's Paradise Lost.
How is the change of being sometimes here, sometimes there, made by local motion in vacuum, without a change in the body moved? Digby on Bodies.

LOCALITY. n. s. [from local.] Existence in place; relation of place, or distance.
That the soul and angels are devoid of quantity and dimension, and that they have nothing to do with grosser locality, is generally opinioned. Glanville.

LO'CALLY. adv. [from local.] With respect to place.
Whether things, in their natures so divers as body and spirit, which almost in nothing communicate, are not essentially divided, though not locally distant, I leave to the readers. Glanville.

LOCA'TION. n. s. [locatio, Lat.] Situation with respect to place; act of placing; state of being placed.
To say that the world is somewhere, means no more than it does exist; this, though a phrase borrowed from place, signifying only its existence, not location. Locke.

LOCH. n. s. A lake. Scottish.
A lake or loch, that has no fresh water running into it, will turn into a stinking puddle. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

LOCK. n. s. [loc, Sax. in both senses.]
1. An instrument composed of springs and bolts, used to fasten doors or chests.
No gate so strong, no lock so firm and fast,
But with that piercing noise flew open quit or brast. Fairy Queen.
We have locks, to safeguard necessities,
And pretty traps to catch the petty thieves. Shakesp.

As there are locks for several purposes, so are these several inventions in locks, in contriving their wards or guards. Mazon.

2. The part of the gun by which fire is struck.
A gun carries powder and bullets for seven charges and discharges: under the breech of the barrel is one box for the powder; a little before the lock, another for the bullets; behind the cock a charger, which carries the powder to the further end of the lock. Grew.

3. A hug; a grapple.
They must be practised in all the locks and gripes of wrestling, as need may often be in fight to tugg or grapple, and to close. Milton on Education.

4. Any inclosure.
Sergesthus, eager with his beak to press
Betwixt the rival galley and the rock,
Shuts up the unwieldy centaur in the lock. Dryden.

5. A quantity of hair or wool hanging together.
Well might he perceive the hanging of her hair in locks, some curled, and some forgotten. Sidney.
A goodly cypress, who bowing her fair head over the water, it seemeth she looked into it, and dressed her green locks by that running river. Sidney.

His grizly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.
The bottom was set against a lock of wool,
and the sound was quite deadened.
Bacon.
They nourish only a lock of hair on the crown of their heads
Smullys's Travels.
A lock of hair will draw more than a cable rope.
Grew.

Behold the locks that are grown white
Beneath a helmet in your father's battles.
Addison.
Two locks that graceful hung behind
In equal curls, and well-conspir'd to deck
With shining ringlets her smooth iv'ry neck.
Pope.

6. A tuft.
I suppose this letter will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay.
Addison.

To LOCK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with locks.
The garden, seated on the level floor,
She left behind, and locking ev'ry door,
Thought all secure.
Dryden.

2. To shut up or confine, as with locks.
I am lockt in one of them;
If you do love me, you will find me out.
Shakesp.
We do lock
Our former sample in our strong barr'd gates.
Shakesp.

Then seek to know those things which make us
blest,
And having found them, lock them in thy breast.
Denham.

The frighted dame
The log in secret lock'd.
Dryden's Ovid.
If the door to a council be kept by armed men, and all such whose opinions are not liked kept out, the freedom of those within is infringed, and all their acts are as void as if they were locked in.
Dryden.

One conduces to the poet's completing of his work; the other slackens his pace, and locks him up like a knight-errant in an enchanted castle.
Dryden's Dedication to the Æneid.
The father of the gods
Confin'd their fury to those dark abodes,
And lock'd 'em safe within, oppress'd with mountain loads.
Dryden's Æneid.

If one third of the money in trade were locked up, must not the landholders receive one third less?
Locke.
Always lock up a cat in a closet where you keep your china plates, for fear the mice may steal in and break them.
Swift.

Your wine lock'd up,
Plain milk will do the feat.
Pope's Horace.

3. To close fast.
Death blasts his bloom, and locks his frozen eyes.
Gay.

To LOCK. v. n.

1. To become fast by a lock.
For not of wood, nor of enduring brass,
Doubly parted it did lock and close,
That when it locked, none might through it pass.
Fairy Queen.

2. To unite by mutual insertion.
Either they lock into each other, or slip one upon another's surface; as much of their surfaces touches as makes them cohere.
Boyle.

LOCKER. n. s. [from lock.] Any thing that is closed with a lock; a drawer.
I made lockers or drawers at the end of the boat.
Robinson Crusoe.

LOCKET. n. s. [loquet, Fr.] A small lock; any catch or spring to fasten a necklace, or other ornament.
Where knights are kept in narrow lists,
With wooden lockets 'bout their wrists.
Hudibras.

LOCKRAM. n. s. A sort of coarse linen.
Hanmer.

The kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram about her reeky neck, Clamb'ring the walls to eye him.
Shakesp.

LOCKRON. n. s. A kind of ranunculus.

LOCOMOTION. n. s. [locus and motus,
Lat.] Power of changing place.
All progression or animal locomotion, is performed by drawing on, or impelling forward, some part which was before at quiet.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

LOCOMOTIVE. adj. [locus and motus, Lat.] Changing place; having the power of removing or changing place.
I shall consider the motion, or locomotive faculty of animals.
Derham's Physico-Theology.
In the night too oft he kicks,
Or shows his locomotive tricks.
Prior.
An animal cannot well be defined from any particular organical part, nor from its locomotive faculty, for some adhere to rocks.
Arbuthnot.

LOCUST. n. s. [locusta, Lat.] A devouring insect.
The Hebrews had several sorts of locusts, which are not known among us: the old historians and modern travellers remark, that locusts are very numerous in Africa, and many places of Asia; that sometimes they fall like a cloud upon the country, and eat up every thing they meet with:
Moses describes four sorts of locusts. Since there was a prohibition against using locusts, it is not to be questioned but that these creatures were commonly eaten in Palestine, and the neighbouring countries.
Calmct.
To-morrow will I bring the locusts into thy coast.
Isaïus.

Air replete with the steams of animals rotting, has produced pestilential fevers; such have likewise been raised by great quantities of dead locusts.
Arbuthnot on Air.

LOCUST-TREE. n. s.
The locust-tree hath a papilionaceous flower, from whose calyx arises the pointal, which afterwards becomes an unia, solar hard pod, including roundish hard seeds, which are surrounded with a fungous stringy substance.
Miller.

LODESTAR. See LOADSTAR.

LODESTONE. See LOADSTONE.

To LODGE. v. a. [logian, Sax. loger,
Fr.]

1. To place in a temporary habitation.
When he was come to the court of France, the king siled him by the name of the duke of York; lodged him, and accommodated him in great state.
Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To afford a temporary dwelling; to supply with harbour for a night.
Ev'ry house was proud to lodge a knight.
Dryd.

3. To place; to plant.
When on the brink the foaming boar I met,
And in his side thought to have lodg'd my spear,
The desperate savage rush'd within my force,
And bore me headlong with him down the rock.
Orcutt.

He lodg'd an arrow in a tender breast,
That had so often to his own been prest.
Addison.

In viewing again the ideas that are lodg'd in the memory, the mind is more than passive.
Locke.

4. To fix; to settle.
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd.
Shakesp.
I can give no reason,
More than a lodg'd hare, and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio.
Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

5. To place in the memory.
This cunning the king would not understand, though he lodg'd it and noted it, in some particulars.
Bacon's Henry VII.

6. To harbour or cover.
The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert;
Rush in at once.
Addison's Cato.

7. To afford place to.
The memory can lodge a greater store of images, than all the senses can present at one time.
Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

8. To lay flat.
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown down,
Though castles topple on their warders heads,
We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs, and they, shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Shakesp.

To LODGE. v. n.

1. To reside; to keep residence.
Care keeps his watch in ev'ry old man's eye,
And where care lodgeth, sleep will never lie.
Shakesp.

2. To take a temporary habitation.
Why commands the king,
That his chief followers lodge in towns about him,
While he himself keepeth in the cold field?
Shakesp.
I know not where he lodges; and for me to devise a lodging, and say, he lies here or he lies there, were to lie in mine own throat.
Shakesp.
Thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.
Samuel.

3. To take up residence at night.
My lords
And soldiers, stay and lodge by me this night.
Shakesp.
Oh, that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of wayfaring men, that I might leave my people!
Jeremia.

Here thou art but a stranger travelling to thy country; it is therefore a huge folly to be afflicted, because thou hast a less convenient inn to lodge in by the way.
Taylor.

4. To lay flat.
Long come wheat they reckon in Oxfordshire best for rark clays; and its straw makes it not subject to lodge, or to be mildew'd.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

LODGE. n. s. [logis, Fr.]

1. A small house in a park or forest.
He brake up his court, and retired him-self, his wife and children, into a certain forest thereby, which he calleth his desert, wherein he hath built two fine lodges.
Sidney.
I found him as melancholy as a lodge in a warren.
He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase.
Shakesp.

Thus at their shady lodge arriv'd, both stoop'd,
Both turn'd, and under open sky ad'r'd
The God that made both sky, air, earth, Mankind.
Whenever I am turn'd out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited family.
Swift.

2. Any small house appendant to a greater: as, the porter's lodge.

LODGEMENT. n. s. [from lodge, loge-ment, Fr.]

1. Disposition or collocation in a certain place.
The curious lodgement and inosculation of the auditory nerves.
Du Ham.

2. Accumulation; collection.
An oppressed diaphragm from a mere lodgement of extravasated matter.
Sharp's Surgery.

3. Possession of the enemy's work.
The military pedant is making lodgements, and fighting battles, from one end of the year to the other.
Addison.

LO'DGER. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. One who lives in rooms hired in the house of another.
Base tyke, call'st thou me host? now, I scorn
the term; nor shall my Ne3 keep lodgers.
Shakesp.

There were in a family, the man and his wife, three children, and three servants or lodgers.

Graunt's Bills.

Those houses are soonest infected that are crowded with multiplicity of lodgers, and nasty families.

Harvey.

The gentlewoman begged me to stop; for that a lodger she had taken in was run mad.

Tatler.

Sylla was reproached by his fellow lodger, that whilst the fellow lodger paid eight pounds one shilling and five pence halfpenny for the uppermost story, he paid for the rest twenty-four pounds four shillings and four pence halfpenny.

Arbuthnot.

2. One that resides in any place.

Look in that breast, most dirty dear;
Say, can you find but one such lodger there?

Pope.

LODGING. n. s. [from lodge.]

1. Temporary habitation; rooms hired in the house of another.

I will in Cassio's lodging lose this napkin,
And let him find it.

Shakesp. Othello.

Let him change his lodging from one end of the town to another, which is a great adamant of acquaintance.

Bacon.

At night he came

To his known lodgings, and his country dame.

Dryden.

He desired his sister to bring her away to the lodgings of his friend.

Addison's Guardian.

Wits take lodgings in the sound of Bow.

Pope.

2. Place of residence.

Fair bosom fraught with virtue's richest treasure,
The nest of love, the lodging of delight,
The bower of bliss, the paradise of pleasure,
The sacred harbour of that heavenly spright.

Spenser.

3. Harbour; covert.

The hounds were uncoupled; and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging.

Sianey.

4. Convenience to sleep on.

Their feathers serve to stuff our beds and pillows, yielding us soft and warm lodging.

Ray on the Creation.

LOFT. n. s. [lloft, Welsh; or from lift.]

1. A floor.

Eutychus fell down from the third loft.
There is a traverse placed in a loft above.

Bacon.

2. The highest floor.

To lull him in his slumber soft,
A trickling stream from high rock tumbling down,
And ever-drizzling rain upon the loft,
Mixt with a murmuring wind.

Fairy Queen.

3. Rooms on high.

Passing through the spheres of watchful fire,
And hills of snow, and lofts of piled thunder.

Milton.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn loft, through a chink.

Pope.

LOFTILY. a. v. [from lofty.]

1. On high; in an elevated place.

2. Proudly; haughtily.

They speak wickedly concerning oppression:
they speak loftily.

Psalms lxxiii. 8.

3. With elevation of language or sentiment; sublimely.

My lowly verse may loftily arise,
And lift itself unto the highest skies.

Fairy Queen.

LOFTINESS. n. s. [from lofty.]

1. Height; local elevation.

2. Sublimity; elevation of sentiment.

Three poets in three distant ages born;
The first in loftiness of thought surpass'd,
The next in majesty; in both the last.

Dryden.

3. Pride; haughtiness.

Augustus and Tiberius had loftiness enough in their temper, and affected to make a sovereign figure.

Collier.

LOFTY. adj. [from loft or lift.]

1. High; hovering; elevated in place.

Cities of men with lofty gates and tow'rs.

Milton.

See lofty Lebanon his head advance,
See nodding forests on the mountains dance.

2. Elevated in condition or character.

Thus saith the high and lofty One.

Isaiah.

3. Sublime; elevated in sentiment.

He knew

Himself to sing and build the lofty rhyme.

Milton.

4. Proud; haughty.

The eyes of the lofty shall be humbled.
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.

Shakesp.

Man, the tyrant of our sex, I hate,
A lowly servant, but a lofty mate.

Dryden.

LOG. n. s. [The original of this word is not known. Skinner derives it from lizzan, Sax. to lie; Junius from logge, Dut. sluggish; perhaps the Lat. lignum, is the true original.]

1. A shapeless bulky piece of wood.

Burnt up those logs that thou'rt enjoin'd to pile.

Shakesp.

The worms with many feet are bred under logs of timber, and many times in gardens where no logs are.

Bacon.

Some log, perhaps upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin.

Dryden.

2. An Hebrew measure, which held a quarter of a cab, and consequently five-sixths of a pint. According to Dr. Arbuthnot it was a liquid measure, the seventy-second part of the bath or ephah, and twelfth part of the hin.

Calmet.

A meat offering mingled with oil, and one log of oil.

Let.

LOGARITHMS. n. s. [logarithme, Fr. λόγος and ἀριθμός.]

Logarithms, which are the indexes of the ratios of numbers one to another, were first invented by Napier lord Merchison, a Scottish baron, and afterwards completed by Mr. Briggs, Savilian professor at Oxford. They are a series of artificial numbers contrived for the expedition of calculation, and proceeding in an arithmetical proportion,
as the numbers they answer to do in a geometrical
one; for instance,

0	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9
1	2	4	8	16	32	64	128	256	512

Where the numbers above, beginning with (9), and arithmetically proportional, are called logarithms.
The addition and subtraction of logarithms answers to the multiplication and division of the numbers they correspond with; and this saves an infinite deal of trouble. In like manner will the extraction of roots be performed, by dissecting the logarithms of any numbers for the square root, and trisection them for the cube, and so on.

Harris.

LOGGATS. n. s.

Loggats is the ancient name of a play or game, which is one of the unlawful games enumerated in the thirty-third statute of Henry VIII. It is the same which is now called kittle-pins, in which boys often make use of bones instead of wooden pins, throwing at them with another bone instead of bowling.

Hunmer.

Did these bones cost no more the breeding, but to play at loggats with them?

Shakesp. Hamlet.

LOGGERHEAD. n. s. [logge, Dut. stupid, and head; or rather from log, a heavy motionless mass, as blockhead.] A dolt; a blockhead; a thickskull.

Where hasst been, Hal?

—With three or four loggerheads, amongst three or fourscore hogsheads.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

Says this loggerhead, what have we to do to quench other people's fires?

L'Estrange.

To fall to LOGGERHEADS. } To scuffle; To go to LOGGERHEADS. } to fight without weapons.

A couple of travellers that took up an ass, fell to loggerheads which should be his master.

L'Estrange.

LOGGERHEADED. adj. [from logger-head.] Dull; stupid; doltish.

You loggerheaded and unpolish'd groom, what!
no attendance?

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

LOGICK. n. s. [logique, Fr. logica, Lat. from λόγος.] The art of reasoning. One of the seven sciences.

Logick is the art of using reason well in our enquiries after truth, and the communication of it to others.

Hatt's Logick.

Talk logick with acquaintance,
And practise rhetorick in your common talk.

Shakesp.

By a logick that left no man any thing which he might call his own, they no more looked upon as the case of one man, but the case of the kingdom.

Clarendon.

Here foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound,
There stript fair rhetorick languish'd on the ground.

Pope.

LOGICAL. adj. [from logick.]

1. Pertaining to logick; taught in logick.

The heretic complained greatly of St. Augustine, as being too full of logical subtilties.

Those who in a logical dispute keep in general terms, would hide a fallacy.

Dryden.

We ought not to value ourselves upon our ability, in giving subtle rules, and finding out logical arguments, since it would be more perfection not to want them.

Baker.

2. Skilled in logick; furnished with logick.

A man who sets up for a judge in criticism, should have a clear and logical head.

Addison.

LOGICALLY. adv. [from logical.] According to the laws of logick.

How can her old good man
With honour take her back again?
From hence I logically gather,
The woman cannot live with either.

Prior.

LOGICIAN. n. s. [logicien, Fr. logicus, Lat.] A teacher or professor of logick; a man versed in logick.

If a man can play the true logician, and have as well judgment as invention, he may do great matters.

Bacon.

If we may believe our logicians, man is distinguished from all other creatures by the faculty of laughter.

Addison.

Each staunch polemick stubborn as a rock,
Each fierce logician still expelling Locke,
Came whip and spur.

Pope's Dunciad.

A logician might put a case that would serve for an exception.

Swift.

The Arabian physicians were subtle men, and most of them logicians; accordingly they have given method, and shed subtilty upon their author.

Baker.

LOGMAN. n. s. [log and man.] One whose business is to carry logs.

For your sake

Am I this patient logman.

Shakesp. Tempest.

LOGOMACHY. n. s. [λογομαχία.] A contention in words; a contention about words.

Forced terms of art did much puzzle sacred theology with distinctions, cavils, quiddities; and so transformed her to a meer kind of sophistry and logomachy.

Howell.

LOGWOOD. n. s.

Logwood is of a very dense and firm texture;
and is the heart only of the tree which produces it. It is very heavy, and remarkably hard, and of a deep, strong red colour. It grows both in the East and West Indies, but no where so plentifully as on the coast of the bay of Campeachy.

To make a light purple, mingle ceruse with logwood water.

LOHOCK. n. s.

Lohock is an Arabian name for those forms of medicines which are now commonly called clegmas, lambatives, or linctuses.

Lohocks and pectorals were prescribed, and venesection repeated.

LOIN. n. s. [Hwyn, Welsh.]

1. The back of an animal carved out by the butcher.

2. Loins; the reins.

Blanket my loins. Thou slander of thy heavy mother's womb! Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!

High in the love of Heav'n! yet from my loins Thou shalt proceed, and from thy womb the Son Of God most high.

A multitude! like which the populous north Pour'd never from her frozen loins, to pass Rhene, or the Danaw, when her barbarous sons Came like a deluge on the south.

To LOITER. v. n. [loteren, Dut.] To linger; to spend time carelessly; to idle.

Sir John, you loiter here too long, being you are to take soldiers up in the countries.

You loiter, while the spoils are thrown away.

Mark how he spends his time, whether he unactively loiters it away.

If we have gone wrong, let us redeem the mistake; if we have loitered, let us quicken our pace, and make the most of the present opportunity.

LOITERER. n. s. [from loiter.] A lingerer; an idler; a lazy wretch; one who lives without business; one who is sluggish and dilatory.

Give gloves to thy reapers a largess to cry, And daily to loiterers have a good eye.

The poor, by idleness or unthriftiness, are riotous spenders, vagabonds, and loiterers.

Though my eyes clos'd, my arms have still been open'd.

To search if thou wert come.

Providence would only enter mankind into the useful knowledge of her treasures, leaving the rest to employ our industry, that we live not like idle loiterers and truants.

Ever listless loit'ers, that attend No cause, no trust, no duty, and no friend.

To LOLL. v. n. [Of this word the etymology is not known. Perhaps it might be contemptuously derived from lollard, a name of great reproach before the reformation; of whom one tenet was, that all trades not necessary to life are unlawful.]

1. To lean idly; to rest lazily against any thing.

So hangs, and lolls, and weeps upon me; so shakes and pulls me.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed, But on his knees at meditation.

Close by a softly murr'ring stream, Where lovers us'd to loll and dream.

To loll on couches, rich with cytron steds, And lay your guilty limbs in Tyrian beds.

Void of care he lolls supine in state, And leaves his business to be done by fate.

But wanton now, and lolling at our ease, We suffer all the invet'rate ills of peace.

Of ever listless loit'ers.

2. To hang out. Used of the tongue hanging out in weariness or play.

The triple porter of the Stygian seat, With lolling tongue lay fawning at thy feet.

With harmless play amidst the bowls he pass'd, And with his lolling tongue assay'd the taste.

To LOLL. v. a. To put out: used of the tongue exerted.

All authors to their own defects are blind; Hadst thou but, Janus-like, a face behind, To see the people, when splay mouths they make,

To mark their fingers pointed at thy back, Their tongues loll'd out a foot.

Fierce tygers couch'd around, and loll'd their fawning tongues.

LOMP. n. s. A kind of roundish fish.

LONE. adj. [contracted from alone.]

1. Solitary; unfrequented; having no company.

Thus vanish sceptres, coronets, and balls, And leave you in lone woods, or empty walls.

2. Single; not conjoined or neighbouring to others.

No lone house in Wales, with a mountain and a rookery, is more contemplative than this court.

LO'NELINESS. n. s. [from lonely.]

1. Solitude; want of company.

The huge and sportful assembly grew to him a tedious loneliness, esteeming nobody since Daiphantus was lost.

2. Disposition to solitude.

The mystery of your loneliness, and find Your salt tears head.

LO'NELY. adj. [from lone.]

1. Solitary.

Like to a lonely dragon; that his fen Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

2. Addicted to solitude.

You lonely thus from the full court retire, Love and the graces follow to your solitude.

LO'NENESS. n. s. [from lone.] Solitude; dislike to company.

If of court-life you knew the good, You would leave loneness.

LO'NESOME. adj. [from lone.] Solitary; dismal.

You either must the earth from rest disturb, Or roll around the heavens the solar orb;

3. Having one of its geometrical dimensions in a greater degree than either of the other.

His branches became long because of the waters.

We made the trial in a long-neck'd plial left open at the top.

4. Of any certain measure in length.

These, as a line, their long dimensions drew, Streaking the ground with sinuous trace.

5. Not soon ceasing, or at an end.

Man goeth to his long home.

6. Dilatory.

Death will not be long in coming, and the covenant of the grave is not shewed unto thee.

7. Tedious in narration.

Chief mast'ry to dissect, With long and tedious havoc, fabled knights.

8. Continued by succession to a great series.

But first a long succession must ensue.

9. [From the verb, To long.] Longing; desirous; or perhaps long continued, from the disposition to continue looking at any thing desired.

Praying for him, and casting a long look that way, he saw the galley leave the pursuit.

10. [In music and pronunciation.] Protracted; as, a long note; a long syllable.

LONG. adv.

Grew's Mus.

LOON. n. s. [This word, which is now used only in Scotland, is the English word loon.] A sorry fellow; a scoundrel; a rascal.

Thou cream-fac'd loon!
Where got'st thou that goose look?
Shakesp. Macbeth.

The false loon, who could not work his will by open force, employ'd his flatt'ring skill: I hope, my lord, said he, I not offend; Are you afraid of me that are your friend?
Dryden.

This young lord had an old cunning rogue, or, as the Scots call it, a false loon of a grandfather, that one might call a Jaek of all trades.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

LOOP. n. s. [from loopen, Dut. to run.] A double through which a string or lace is drawn; an ornamental double or fringe.

Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring floc,
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this, so curious network, to compare.
Spenser.

Make me to see't, or at least so prove it,
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on.
Shakesp. Othello.

Bind our crooked legs in hoops
Made of shells with silver loops.
Ben Jonson.

An old fellow shall wear this or that sort of cut in his cloaths with great integrity, while all the rest of the world are degenerated into buttons, pockets, and loops.
Addison.

LOOPED. adj. [from loop.] Full of holes.

Poor naked wretches, whereso'er you are,
That 'bide the pelting of this pitiless storm!
How shall your houseless heads and unfed sides,
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend you
From seasons such as these?
Shakesp. King Lear.

LO'OPHOLE. n. s. [loop and hole.]

1. Aperture; hole to give a passage.

there are blunderbusses planted in every loophole,
that go off at the squeaking of a fiddle.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. A shift; an evasion.

Needless, or needful, I not now contend,
For still you have a loophole for a friend. Dryden.

LO'OPHOLED. adj. [from loophole.] Full of holes; full of openings or void spaces.

This uneasy loophol'd gaol,
In which y' are hamper'd by the fetlock,
Cannot but put y' in mind of wedlock. Hudibras.

LOORD. n. s. [loerd, Dut. lourdant, Fr. lurdan, Erse; a heavy, stupid, or witless fellow. D. Trevoux derives lourdant from Lorde or Lourde, a village in Gascoigny, the inhabitants of which were formerly noted robbers, say they. But dexterity in robbing implies some degree of subtilty, from which the Gascoigns are so far removed, that they are awkward and heavy to a proverb. The Erse imports some degree of knavery, but in a ludicrous sense, as, in English, you pretty rogue; though in general it denotes reproachful heaviness, or stupid laziness.—Spenser's Scholiast says, loord was wont, among the old Britons, to signify a lord; and therefore the Danes that usurped their tyranny here in Britain, were called, for more dread than dignity, lurdant, i. e. lord Danes, whose insolence and pride was so outrageous in this realm, that if it fortun'd a Briton to be going over a bridge, and saw the Dane set foot upon the same, he must return back till the Dane was clean over, else he must abide no less than present death: but being afterwards expelled, the name of lurdane became so odious unto the people whom they had long oppressed, that, even at this day, they use for more reproach to call the quartan ague the fever lurdane. So far the Scholiast, but erroneously. From Spenser's own words, it signifies something of stupid dullness rather than magisterial arrogance. Macbean.] A drone.

S'ker, thu's but a lazy loord,
And rekes much of thy swinke,
That with fond terms and witless words
To bleer mine eyes do'st think. Spenser's Pastorals.

These sharp encounters, where always many more men are lost than are killed or taken prisoners, put such a stop to Middleton's march, that he was glad to retire. Clarendon.
17. To be freed from; as, to lose a fever.
His scely back the bunch has got Which Edwin lost before. Parnel.
To LOSE. v. n.
1. Not to win.
We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's out. Shakesp.
2. To decline; to fail.
Wisdom in discourse with her Loses discountenanc'd, and like folly shews. Milt.
LO'SEABLE. adj. [from lose.] Subject to privation.
Consider whether motion, or a propensity to it, be an inherent quality belonging to atoms in general, and not loseable by them. Boyle.
LO'SEL. n. s. [from lojian to perish.] A scoundrel; a sorry worthless fellow. A word now obsolete.
Such loses and scatterlings cannot easily, by any sheriff, be gotten, when they are challenged for any such fact. Spenser.
A loset wand'ring by the way,
One that to bounty never cast his mind,
Ne thought of honour ever did assay
His baser breast. Fairy Queen.
Be not with work of loses wit defamed.
Ne lets such verses poetry be named. Hubberd's Tale.
By Cambridge a towne I do know,
Whose losses by loses doth shew
More heere then is needful to tell. Tusser's Husb.
A gross hag!
And, loset, thou art worthy to be hang'd,
That wilt not stay her tongue. Shakesp.
LO'SER. n. s. [from lose.] One that is deprived of any thing; one that forfeits any thing; one that is impaired in his possession or hope: the contrary to winner or gainer.
With the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win. Shakesp.
No man can be provident of his time that is not prudent in the choice of his company; and if one of the speakers be vain, tedious, and trifling, he that hears, and he that answers, are equal losers of their time. Taylor's Holy Living.
It cannot last, because that act seems to have been carried on rather by the interest of particular countries, than by that of the whole, which must be a loser by it. Temple.
A bull with gilded horns,
Shall be the portion of the conquering chief;
A sword and helm shall cheer the loser's grief. Dant.
Losers and malecontents, whose portion and inheritance is a freedom to speak. Scott.
LOSS. n. s. [from lose.]
1. Detriment; privation; diminution of good: the contrary to gain.
The only gain he purchased was to be capable of loss and detriment for the good of others. Hobbes.
An evil natured son is the dishonour of his father that begat him; and a foolish daughter's born to his loss. Levy.
The abatement of price of any of the landholder's commodities, lessens his loss and is a clear loss. Locke.
2. Miss; privation.

LOT

If he were dead, what would betide of me?
 —No other harm but loss of such a lord.
 —The loss of such a lord includes all harms. Shak.

3. Deprivation; forfeiture.
 Loss of Eden, till one greater man Restore it, and regain. Milton.

4. Destruction.
 Her fellow ships from far her loss descri'd;
 But only she was sunk, and all were safe beside.
Dryden.

There succeeded an absolute victory for the English, with the slaughter of above two thousand of the enemy, with the loss but of one man, though not a few hurt. Bacon.

5. Fault; puzzle: used only in the following phrase.

Not the least transaction of sense and motion in man, but philosophers are at a loss to comprehend.
South's Sermons.

Reason is always striving, and always at a loss, while it is exercised about that which is not its proper object. Dryden.

A man may sometimes be at a loss which side to close with. Ba'ler on Learning.

6. Useless application.

It would be loss of time to explain any farther our superiority to the enemy in numbers of men and horse. Addison.

LOST. participial adj. [from lasc.] No longer perceptible.

In seventeen days appear'd your pleasing coast,
 And woody mountains, half in vapours lost.
Pope.

LOT. n. s. [hlaut, Goth.] lotz, Sax. lot,
 Dut.]

1. Fortune; state assigned.
 Kala at length concludes my ling'ring lot:
 Disdain me not, although I be not fair,
 Who is an heir of many hundred sheep,
 Doth beauty keep which never sun can burn,
 Nor storms do turn. Sidney.

Our own lot is best; and by aiming at what we have not, we lose what we have already. L'Estran.

Prepar'd I stand; he was but born to try
 The lot of man, to suffer and to die.
Pope's Odyssey.

2. A die, or any thing used in determining chances.

Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scapegoat. Lev. xvi. 8.

Their tasks in equal portions she divides,
 And where unequal, there by lots decides. Dryd.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots, to skew, that he would not voluntarily expose them to so imminent danger. Broome.

3. It seems in Shakespeare to signify a lucky or wished chance.

If you have heard your general talk of Rome,
 And of his friends there, it is lots to blanks
 My name hath touch'd your ears; it is Menenius.
Shakesp.

4. A portion; a parcel of goods as being drawn by lot: as, what lot of silks had you at the sale?

5. Proportion of taxes: as, to pay scot and lot.

LOTE tree, or nettle tree. n. s. A plant.

The leaves of the lote tree are like those of the nettle. The fruit of this tree is not so tempting to us, as it was to the companions of Ulysses: the wood is durable, and used to make pipes for wind instruments: the root is proper for hafts of knives, and was highly esteemed by the Romans for its beauty and use. Miller.

LOTOS. n. s. [Lat.] See LOTE.

The trees around them all their food produce,
 Lotos, the name divine, nectareous juice. Pope.

LO'TION. n. s. [lotio, Lat. lotion, Fr.]

LOV

A lotion is a form of medicine compounded of aqueous liquids, used to wash any part with.

In lotions in women's cases, he orders two portions of hellebore macerated in two cotylæ of water. Quincy.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

LO'TTERY. n. s. [lotterie, Fr. from lot.]

A game of chance; a sortilege; distribution of prizes by chance; a play in which lots are drawn for prizes.

Let high-sighted tyranny range on,
 Till each man drop by lottery. Shakesp.

The lottery that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver, and lead, will never be chosen by any but whom you shall rightly love. Shakesp.

Fortune, that with malicious joy
 Does man, her slave, oppress, Still various and onconstant still,
 Promotes, degrades, delights in strife,
 And makes a lottery of life. Dryden's Horace.

Every warrior may be said to be a soldier of fortune, and the best commanders to have a lottery for their work. South.

LO'VAGE. n. s. [levisticum, Lat.] A plant.

LOUD. adj.

1. Noisy; striking the ear with great force.

Contending on the Lesbian shore,
 His prowess Philonclides confess'd,
 And loud acclaiming Greeks the victor bless'd.
Pope.

The numbers soft and clear,
 Gently steal upon the ear;
 Now louder, and yet louder rise,
 And fill with spreading sounds the skies. Pope.

2. Clamorous; turbulent.

She is loud and stubborn; her feet abide not in her house. Proverbs.

LO'UDLY. adv. [from loud.]

1. Noisily; so as to be heard far.

The soldier that philosopher well blam'd,
 Who long and loudly in the schools declaim'd.
Denham.

2. Clamorously; with violence of voice.

I read above fifty pamphlets, written by as many presbyterian divines, loudly disclaiming toleration. Swift.

LO'UDNESS. n. s. Noise; force of sound; turbulence; vehemence or furiousness of clamour.

Had any disaster made room for grief, it would have moved according to prudence, and the proportions of the provocation: it would not have sallied out into complaint or loudness. South.

To LOVE. v. a. [lucian, Sax.]

1. To regard with passionate affection, as that of one sex to the other.

Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to love.
 —It is to be made all of sighs and tears;
 It is to be made all of faith and service;
 It is to be all made of fantasy,
 All made of passion, and all made of wishes;
 All adoration, duty, and obedience;
 All humbleness, all patience, all impatience,
 All purity, all trial, all observance. Shakesp.

I could not love I'm sure
 One who in love were wise. Cowley.

The jealous man wishes himself a kind of deity to the person he loves; he would be the only employment of her thoughts. Addison.

2. To regard with the affection of a friend.

None but his brethren he, and sisters, knew,
 Whom the kind youth prefer'd to me,
 And much above myself I lov'd them too.
Cowley.

3. To regard with parental tenderness.

He that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. John.

4. To be pleased with; to delight in.

LOV

Fish used to salt water delight more in fresh;
 we see that salmon and smelts love to get into rivers, though against the stream.

Wit, eloquence, and poetry,
 Arts which I lov'd. Cowley.

He lov'd my worthless rhymes, and, like a friend,
 Would find out something to commend. Cowley.

5. To regard with reverent unwillingness to offend.

Love the Lord thy God with all thine heart.
Deut. vi. 5.

LOVE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The passion between the sexes.

Hearken to the birds love-learned song,
 The dewie leaves among! Spenser's Epithalam.

While idly I stood looking on,
 I found th' effect of love in idleness. Shakesp.

My tales of love were wont to weary you;
 I know you joy not in a love discourse. Shakesp.

I look'd upon her with a soldier's eye,
 That lik'd, but had a rougher task in hand
 Than to drive liking to the name of love. Shakesp.

What need a vermilion-tinctur'd lip for that,
 Love-darting eyes, or tresses like the morn? Milt.

Love quarrels oft in pleasing concord end,
 Not wedlock treachery, endangering life. Milton.

A love potion works more by the strength of charm than nature. Collier on Popularity.

You know y' are in my power by making love.
Dryden.

Let mutual joys our mutual trust combine,
 And love, and love-born confidence be thine.
Pope.

Cold is that breast which warm'd the world before,
 And these love-darting eyes must roll no more.
Pope.

2. Kindness; good-will; friendship.

What love, think'st thou, I sue so much to get?
 My love till death, my humble thanks, my prayers?
 That love which virtue begs, and virtue grants.
Shakesp.

God brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince. Daniel, i. 9.

The one preach Christ of contention, but the other of love. Phil. i. 17.

By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another.
John, xiii. 35.

Unwearing have we spent the nights,
 Till the Ledean stars, so fam'd for love,

3. Courtship.

Demetrius
 Made love to Nedar's daughter Helena,
 And won her soul. Shakesp. Mids. Night's Dream.

If you will marry, make your loves to me,
 My lady is bespoke. Shakesp. King Lear.

The enquiry of truth, which is the love-making or wooing of it; and the knowledge of truth, the preference of it; and the belief of truth, the enjoying of it, is the sovereign good of human nature. Bacon.

4. Tenderness; parental care.

No religion that ever was, so fully represents the goodness of God, and his tender love to mankind, which is the most powerful argument to the love of God. Tillotson.

5. Liking; inclination to: as, the love of one's country.

In youth, of patrimonial wealth possess,
 The love of science faintly warm'd his breast.
Fenton.

6. Object beloved.

Open the temple gates unto my love. Spenser.

If that the world and love were young,
 And truth in ev'ry shepherd's tongue;
 These pretty pleasures might me move,
 To live with thee, and be thy love.
 The banish'd never hopes his love to see.
Dryden.

The lover and the love of human kind.
Pope.

7. Lewdness.

He is not lolling on a lewd love bed,
But on its knees at meditation. Shakesp.

8. Unreasonable liking.
The love to sin makes a man sin against his own reason. Taylor.
Men in love with their opinions may not only suppose what is in question, but allege wrong matter of fact. Locke.

9. Fondness; concord.
Come, love and health to all!
Then I'll sit down: give me some wine; fill full. Shakesp.
Shall I come unto you with a rod, or in love, and in the spirit of meekness? 1 Cor. iv. 21.

10. Principle of union.
Love is the great instrument of nature, the bond and cement of society, the spirit and spring of the universe: love is such an affection as cannot so properly be said to be in the soul, as the soul to be in that: it is the whole man wrapt up into one desire. South.

11. Picturesque representation of love.
The lovely babe was born with ev'ry grace;
Such was his form as painters, when they show
Their utmost art, on naked loves bestow. Dryden.

12. A word of endearment.
'Tis no dishonour, trust me, love, 'tis none;
I would die for thee. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

13. Due reverence to God.
I know that you have not the love of God in you. John.
Love is of two sorts, of friendship and of desire; the one betwixt friends, the other betwixt lovers; the one a rational, the other a sensitive love: so our love of God consists of two parts, as esteeming of God, and desiring of him. Hammond.
The love of God makes a man chaste without the laborious arts of fasting, and exterior disciplines; he reaches at glory without any other arms but those of love. Taylor.

14. A kind of thin silk stuff. Ainsworth.
This leaf held near the eye, and obverted to the light, appeared so full of pores, with such a transparency as that of a sieve, a piece of cypress, or lovehood. Boyle on Colours.

 The breath, though strain'd, sounds flat and low;
 But if a trumpet take the blast,
 It lifts it high, and makes it last. Waller.

The theatre is so well contriv'd, that, from the very deep of the stage, the lowest sound may be heard distinctly to the farthest part of the audience; and yet, if you raise your voice as high as you please, there is nothing like an echo to cause confusion. Addison on Italy.

8. In latitudes near to the line.

They take their course either high to the north, or low to the south. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

9. Not rising to so great a sum as some other accumulation of particulars.

Who can imagine, that in sixteen or seventeen hundred years time, taking the lower chronology that the earth had then stood, mankind should be propagated no farther than Judæa? Burnet.

10. Late in time: as, the lower empire.

11. Dejected; depressed.

His spirits are so low his voice is drown'd,
 He hears as from afar, or in a swoon,
 Like the deaf murmur of a distant sound. Dryden.

Though he before had gall and rage,
 Which death or conquest must assuage;
 He grows dispirited and low,
 He hates the fight, and shuns the foe. Prior.

12. Impotent; subdued.

To be worst,
 The lowest, most dejected thing of fortune,
 Stands still in esperance. Shakesp.

Why but to awe,
 Why but to keep ye low and ignorant? Milton.
 To keep them all quiet, he must keep them in greater awe and less splendor; which power he will use to keep them as low as he pleases, and at no more cost than makes for his own pleasure. Graunt.

13. Not elevated in rank or station; abject.

He woos both high and low, both rich and poor.
 Try in men of low and mean education, who have never elevated their thoughts above the spade. Locke.

14. Dishonourable; betokening meanness of mind: as, low tricks.

Yet sometimes nations will decline so low from virtue, which is reason, that no wrong but justice, and some fatal course annexed, Deprives them of their outward liberty, Their inward lost. Milton.

15. Not sublime; not exalted in thought or diction.

He has not so many thoughts that are low and vulgar, but, at the same time, has not so many thoughts that are sublime and noble. Addison.

In comparison of these divine writers, the noblest wits of the heathen world are low and dull. Felton.

16. Submissive; humble; reverent.

I bring them to receive
 From thee their names, and pay their fealty
 With low subjection. Milton.

From the tree her step she turn'd,
 But first low reverence done, as to the pow'r
 That dwelt within. Milton.

Low. adv.

1. Not aloft; not on high.

There under Ebon shades and low-brow'd rocks
 As ragged as thy locks,
 In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell. Milton.
 My eyes an object met
 But low-hung clouds, that dip themselves in rain,
 To shake their fleeces on the earth again. Dryden.

No luxury found room
 In low-roof'd houses, and bare walls of lome. Dryd.
 Vast yellow off-springs are the German's pride;
 But hotter climates narrower frames obtain,
 And low-built bodies are the growth of Spain. Creech.

We wand'ring go through dreary wastes,
 Where round some mould'ring tow'r pale ivy creeps,
 And low-brow'd rocks hang nodding o'er the deeps. Pope.

2. Not at a high price; meanly. It is chiefly used in composition.

Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
 The confident and over-lusty French:
 Do the low-rated English play at dice? Shakesp.
 This is the prettiest low-born lass, that ever Ran the greensord; nothing she does or seems,
 But smacks of something greater than herself,
 Too noble for this place. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Whenever I am turned out, my lodge descends upon a low-spirited creeping family.
 Corruption, like a general flood,
 Shall deluge all; and av'rice creeping on,
 Spread like a low-born mist, and blot the sun. Pope.

3. In times approaching towards our own.

In that part of the world which was first inhabited, even as low down as Abraham's time, they wandered with their flocks and herds. Locke.

4. With a depression of the voice.

Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest. Addison.

5. In a state of subjection.

How comes it that, having been once so low brought, and thoroughly subjected, they afterwards lifted up themselves so strongly again? Spenser.

To Low. v. a. [from the adjective.] To sink; to make low. Probably mis-printed for lower.

The value of guineas was lowed from one-and-twenty shillings and sixpence to one-and-twenty shillings. Swift.

To Low. v. n. [ϕlopan, Sax. The adjective low, not high, is pronounced lo, and would rhyme to no: the verb low, to bellow, lou; and is by Dryden rightly rhymed to now.] To bellow as a cow.

Doth the wild ass bray when he has grass? or loweth the ox over his fodder? Job, vi. 5.

The maids of Argos, who, with frantick cries,
 And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies. Roscommon.
 Fair lö grac'd his shield, but lö now,
 With horns exalted stands, and seems to low. Dryden.

Had he been born some simple shepherd's heir,
 The lowing herd, or fleecy sheep his care. Prior.

LO'WBELL. n. s. [laeye, Dut. leg, Sax. or log, Islandick, a flame, and bell.] A kind of fowling in the night, in which the birds are wakened by a bell, and lured by a flame into a net. Lowe denotes a flame in Scotland; and to lowe, to flame.

LOWE. The termination of local names.

Lowe, loe, comes from the Saxon pleap a hill, heap, or barrow; and so the Gothick hlaw is a monument or barrow. Gibson.

To LOWER. v. a. [from low.]

1. To bring low; to bring down by way of submission.

As our high vessels pass their wat'ry way;
Let all the naval world due homage pay;
With hasty reverence their top-honours lower,
Confessing the asserted power. Prior.

2. To suffer to sink down.

When water issues out of the apertures with more than ordinary rapidity, it bears along with it such particles of loose matter as it met with in its passage through the stone, and it sustains those particles till its motion begins to remit, when by degrees it lowers them, and lets them fall. Woodw.

8. To lessen; to make less in price or value.

The kingdom will lose by this lowering of interest, if it makes foreigners withdraw any of their money. Locke.

Some people know it is for their advantage to lower their interest. Child on Trade.

To LOWER. v. n. To grow less; to fall; to sink.

The present pleasure,
By revolution low'ring, does become
The opposite of itself. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

To LOWER. v. n. [It is doubtful what was the primitive meaning of this word; if it was originally applied to the appearance of the sky, it is no more than to grow low, as the sky seems to do in dark weather; if it was first used of the countenance, it may be derived from the Dutch loeren, to look askance: the ow sounds as ou in hour; in the word lower, when it means to grow, or make low, the ow sounds as o in more.]

1. To appear dark, stormy, and gloomy; to be clouded.

Now is the winter of our discontent
Made glorious summer by this sun of York;
And all the clouds that lowered upon our house,
In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shakespeare.

The low'ring spring, with lavish rain,
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes. Addison.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

If on Swithin's feast the welkin low'rs,
And ev'ry penthouse streams with hasty show'rs,
Twice twenty days shall clouds their fleeces drain. Gay.

2. To frown; to pout; to look sullen.

There was Diana when Actæon saw her, and one of her foolish nymphs, who weeping, and withal lowering, one might see the workman meant to set forth tears of anger. Sidney.

He mounts the throne, and Juno took her place,
But sullen discontent sat low'ring on her face;
Then impotent of tongue, her silence broke,
Thus turbulent in rattling tone she spoke. Dryd.

LOWER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cloudiness; gloominess.

2. Cloudiness of look.

Philoctetes was jealous for Zelmane, not without so mighty a lower as that face could yield. Sidney.

LOWERINGLY. adv. [from lower.] With cloudiness; gloomily.

LOWERMOST. adj. [from low, lower, and most.] Lowest.

Plants have their seminal parts uppermost, living creatures have them lowermost. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

It will also happen, that the same part of the pipe which was now lowermost, will presently become higher, so that the water does ascend by descending; ascending in comparison to the whole instrument, and descending in respect of its several parts. Wilkins.

LOWLAND. n. s. [from low and land.] The country that is low in respect of neighbouring hills; the marsh.

What a devil is he?
His errand was to draw the lowland damps,
And noisome vapours, from the foggy fens,
Then breathe the baleful stench with all his force. Dryden.

No nat'ral cause she found from brooks or bogs,
Or marshy lowlands, to produce the fogs. Dryd.

LOWLY. adv. [from lowly.]

1. Humbly; without pride.

2. Meanly; without dignity.

LOWLINESS. n. s. [from lowly.]

1. Humility; freedom from pride.

Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face. Shak.

The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude;
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare. Macbeth.

With lowliness majestick, from her seat,
And grace, that won who saw to wish her stay, Rose. Milton's Par. Lost.

If with a true Christian lowliness of heart, and a devout fervency of soul, we perform them, we shall find, that they will turn to a greater account to us, than all the warlike preparations in which we trust. Aterbury.

2. Meanness; want of dignity; abject depression.

They continued in that lowliness until the division between the two houses of Lancaster and York arose. Spenser.

The lowliness of my fortune has not brought me to flatter vice; it is my duty to give testimony to virtue. Dryden.

LOWLY. adj. [from low.]

1. Humble; meek; mild.

Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart. Matt. xi. 29.

He did bend to us a little, and put up his arms abroad: we of our parts saluted him in a very lowly and submissive manner, as looking that from him we should receive sentence of life or death. Bacon.

With cries they fill'd the holy fane;
Then thus with lowly voice Ilioneus began. Dryd.

The heavens are not pure in his sight, and he charges even his angels with folly; with how lowly a reverence must we bow down our souls before so excellent a Being, and adore a Nature so much superior to our own! Rogers.

2. Mean; wanting dignity; not great.

For from the natal hour distinctive names,
One common right the great and lowly claims. Pope.

3. Not lofty; not sublime.

For all who read, and reading not disdain,
These rural poems, and their lowly strain,
The name of Varus oft inscrib'd shall see. Dryd.

LOWLY. adv. [from low.]

1. Not highly; meanly; without grandeur; without dignity.

I will shew myself highly fed, and lowly taught;
I know my business is but to the court. Shakespeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden scrow. Shakespeare. Henry VIII.

2. Humbly; meekly; modestly.

Heav'n is for thee too high
To know what passes there; be lowly wise:
Think only what concerns thee, and thy being. Milton.

Another crowd
Preferr'd the same request, and lowly bow'd. Pope.

LOWN. n. s. [liun, Irish; loen, Dut. a stupid drone.] A scoundrel; a rascal. Not in use.

King Stephen was a worthy peer,
His breeches cost him but a crown,
He thought them sixpence all too dear,
And therefore call'd the taylor loun. Shakespeare.

LOWNESS. n. s. [from low.]

1. Contrariety to height; small distance from the ground.

They know
By th' height, the lowness, or the mean, if dearth Or foison follow. Shakespeare. Ant. and Cleopatra.

The lowness of the bough where the fruit cometh, maketh the fruit greater, and to ripen better; for you shall even see, in apricots upon a wall, the greatest fruits towards the bottom. Bacon.

In Gothick cathedrals, the narrowness of the arch makes it rise in height, the lowness opens it in breadth. Addison.

2. Meanness of character or condition, whether mental or external.

Nothing could have subdu'd nature
To such a lowness but his unkind daughter. Shak.

Now I must
To the young man send humble treaties,
And palter in the shift of lowness. Shakespeare.

3. Want of rank; want of dignity.

The name of servants has of old been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Want of sublimity; contrary to loftiness of stile or sentiment.

His stile is accommodated to his subject, either high or low; if his fault be too much lowness, that of Persius is the hardness of his metaphors. Dryden.

5. Submissiveness.

The people were in such lowness of obedience as subjects were like to yield, who had lived almost four-and-twenty years under so polittick a king as his father. Bacon.

6. Depression; dejection.

Hence that poverty and lowness of spirit to which a kingdom may be subject, as well as a particular person. Swift.

LOWTHOUGHTED. adj. [low and thought.]

Having the thoughts with-held from sublime or heavenly meditations; mean of sentiment; narrow-minded.

Above the smock and stir of this dim spot,
Which men call earth, and with lowthoughted care,
Strive to keep up a frail and feverish being. Mist.

Oh grace serene! Oh virtue heav'nly fair!
Divine oblation of lowthoughted care!
Fresh blooming hope, gay daughter of the sky,
And faith our early immortality! Pope.

LOWSPIRITED. adj. [low and spirit.]

Dejected; depressed; not lively; not vivacious; not sprightly.

Severity carried to the highest pitch breaks the mind; and then, in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a lowspirited inoped creature. Lecke.

LOXODROMICK. n. s. [λοξός and δρόμος.]

Loxodromick is the art of oblique sailing by the rhomb, which always makes an equal angle with every meridian; that is, when you sail neither directly under the equator, nor under one and the same meridian, but across them: hence the table of rhombs, or the transverse tables of miles, with the table of longitudes and latitudes, by which the sailor may practically find his course, distance, latitude, or longitude, is called loxodromick. Harris.

LOYAL. adj. [loyal, Fr.]

1. Obedient; true to the prince.

Of Gloucester's treachery,
And of the loyal service of his son,
When inform'd him, then he call'd me sot. Shak.
The regard of duty in that most loyal nation
Overcame all other difficulties. Knolles.

Loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence. Dryden.

2. Faithful in love; true to a lady, or lover.

Hail, wedded love! by thee
Founded in reason loyal, just, and pure. Milton.
There Laodamia with Evadne moves,
Unhappy both! but loyal in their loves. Dryden.

LOYALIST. n. s. [from loyal.] One who professes uncommon adherence to his king.

The cedar, by the instigation of the loyalists, fell out with the homebians. Hewel's Vocal Forest.

LOYALLY. adv. [from loyal.] With fidelity; with true adherence to a king; with fidelity to a lover.

The circling year I wait, with ampler stores,
And fitter pomp, to hail my native shores;
Then by my realms due homage would be paid,
For wealthy kings are loyally obey'd. Pope's Odyssey.

LOYALTY. n. s. [loiauté, Fr.]

1. Firm and faithful adherence to a prince.

Though loyalty, well held, to fools does make
Our faith mere folly; yet he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer. Shakesp.

He had never had any veneration for the court, but only such loyalty to the king as the law re- quired. Clarendon.

Abdiel faithful found
Unshaken, unseduced, unterrify'd,
His loyalty he kept. Milton.

For loyalty is still the same,
Whether it win or lose the game;
True as the dial to the sun,
Although it be not shone upon. Hudibras.

2. Fidelity to a lady, or lover.

LOZENGE. n. s. [losenge, Fr. Of unknown etymology.]

1. A rhomb.

The best builders resolve upon rectangular squares, as a mean between too few and too many angles; and through the equal inclination of the sides, they are stronger than the rhomb or losenge. Wotton's Architecture.

2. Lozenge is a form of a medicine made into small pieces, to be held or chewed in the mouth till melted or wasted.

3. A cake of preserved fruit: both these are so denominated from the original form, which was rhomboidal.

LP. a contraction for lordship.

LUBBARD. n. s. [from lubber.] A lazy sturdy fellow.

Yet their wine and their victuals those curmudgeon lubbards
Lack up from my sight, in cellars and cupboards. Swift.

LUBBER. n. s. [Of this word the best derivation seems to be from lubbed, said by Junius to signify in Danish fat.] A sturdy drone; an idle, fat, bulky losel; a booby.

For tempest and showers deceiveth a many,
And lingering lubbers loose many a penny. Tusser.

These chase the smaller shoals of fish from the main sea into the havens, leaping up and down, puffing like a fat lubber out of breath. Curew.

They clap the lubber Ajax on the shoulder,
As if his feet were on brave Hector's breast,
And great Troy shrinking. Shakesp. Troil. and Cr.
A notable lubber thou reported him to be. Shak.
Tell how the drudging goblin sweat;
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
That ten day labourers could not end;
Then lies him down the lubber fend. Milton.
Venetians do not more uncouthly ride,
Than did your lubber state manking bestride. Dryd.
How can you name that superannuated lubber? Congreve.

LUBBERLY. adj. [from lubber.] Lazy and bulky.

I came to Eaton to marry Mrs. Anne Page; and she's a great lubberly boy. Shakesp.

Merry Andrew on the low rope copies lubberly
the same tricks which his master is so dexterously performing on the high. Dryden.

LU. n. s. A game at cards.

Ev'n mighty pam who kings and queens o'er-threw,
And mow'd down armies in the fights of lu. Pope.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To make smooth or slippery; to smooth.

There are aliments which, besides this lubricating quality, stimulate in a small degree. Arythm-t on Aliments.

The patient is relieved by the mucilaginous and the saponaceous remedies, some of which lubricate, and others both lubricate and stimulate. Sharp.

TO LUBRICATE. v. a. [from lubricus, Lat.] To smooth: to make slippery.

LUBRICITY. n. s. [from lubricus, Lat.] lubricité, Fr.]

1. Slipperiness; smoothness of surface.
2. Aptness to glide over any part, or to facilitate motion.

Both the ingredients are of a lubricating nature; the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation. Ray on Creation.

3. Uncertainty; slipperiness; instability.
The manifold impossibilities and lubricities of matter cannot have the same conveniences in any modification. More.

He that enjoyed crowns, and knew their worth, excepted them not out of the charge of universal vanity; and yet the politician is not discouraged at the inconsistency of human affairs, and the lubri- city of his subject. Glanville's Apology.

A state of tranquillity is never to be attained, but by keeping perpetually in our thoughts the certainty of death, and the lubricity of fortune. L'Estrange.

4. Wantonness; lewdness.

From the lechery of these fauns, he thinks that satyr is derived from them, as if wantonness and lubricity were essential to that poem which ought in all to be avoided. Dryden.

LUBBRICK. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; smooth on the surface.

Of short thick soles, whose thund'ring volleys float
And roul themselves over her lubrick throat
In panting murmurs. Crashaw.

2. Uncertain; unsteady.
I will deduce him from his cradle through the deep and lubrick waves of state, till he is swallowed in the gulph of fatality. Wotton

3. Wanton; lewd. [lubrique, Fr.]
Why were we hurry'd down
This lubrick and adol'trate age;
Nay, added fat pollutions of our own,
To increase the steaming ordures of the stage? Dryd.

LUBRICOUS. adj. [lubricus, Lat.]

1. Slippery; smooth.

The parts of water being voluble and lubricous as well as fine, it easily insinuates itself into the tubes of vegetables, and by that means introduces into them the matter it bears along with it. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertain.

The judgment being the leading power, if it be stored with lubricous opinions instead of clearly conceived truths, and peremptorily resolved in them, the practice will be as irregular as the conceptions. Glanville's Scep'sis.

LUBRIFICATION. n. s. [lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of smoothing.

A twofold liquor is prepared for the innunction and lubrification of the heads of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow; a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articu-lations. Ray on Creation.

LUBRIFICATION. n. s. [lubricus and facio, Lat.] The act of lubricating or smoothing.

They give the dozen white luces in their coat. Shakesp.

LUCENT. adj. [lucens, Lat.] Shining; bright; splendid.

I meant the day-star should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucent seat. Ben Jonson.

A spot like which perhaps Astronomer in the sun's lucent orb,
Through his glaz'd optic tube yet never saw. Milton.

LUCID. adj. [lucidus, Lat. lucide, Fr.]

1. Shining; bright; glittering.
Over his lucid arms
A military vest of purple flow'd;
Livelier than Melibœan. Milton.

It contracts it, preserving the eye from being injured by too vehement and lucid an object, and again dilates it for the apprehending objects more remote in a fainter light. Ray.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at the distance of about a quarter of an inch, or half an inch, from that part of the glass where it is most in motion, the electric vapour which is excited by the friction of the glass against the hand, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light, and make the white paper, cloth, or finger, appear lucid like a glow-worm. Newton.

The pearly shell its lucid globe unfold,
And Phœbus warm the rip'ning ore to gold. Pope.

2. Pellucid; transparent.
On the fertile banks
Of Abhana and Pharpar, lucid streams. Milton.
On the transparent side of a globe, half silver and half of a transparent metal, we saw certain strange figures circularly drawn, and thought we could touch them, till we found our fingers stopped by that lucid substance. Gulliver's Travels.

3. Bright with the radiance of intellect; not darkened with madness.

The long dissensions of the two houses, which,
although they had had lucid intervals and happy pauses, yet they did ever hang over the kingdom, ready to break forth. Bacon.

Some beams of wit on other souls may fall,
Strike through and make a lucid interval;
But Shadwell's genuine night admits no ray,
His rising fogs prevail upon the day. Dryden.

I believed him in a lucid interval, and desired
he would please to let me see his book. Tatler.

A few sensual and voluptuous persons may, for a season, eclipse this native light of the soul; but can never so wholly smother and extinguish it, but that, at some lucid intervals, it will recover itself

again, and shine forth to the conviction of their conscience. Bentley.

LUCIDITY. n. s. [from lucid.] Splendour; brightness.

LUCIFEROUS. adj. [Lucifer, Lat.] Giving light; affording means of discovery.

The experiment is not ignoble, and luciferous enough, as shewing a new way to produce a volatile salt. Boyle.

LUCIFICK. adj. [lux and facio, Lat.] Making light; producing light.

When made to converge, and so mixed together; though their lucifick motion be continued, yet by interfering, that equal motion, which is the colorific, is interrupted. Cru.

LUCK. n. s. [geluck, Dut.]

1. Chance; accident; fortune; hap; casual event.

For the large leap which Debon did compel Ceaulin to make, being eight lugs of ground. Spenser.

LUGGAGE. n. s. [from lug.] Any thing cumbrous and unwieldy that is to be carried away; any thing of more weight than value.

Come, bring your luggage nobly on your back. Shakesp.

What do you mean
To doat thus on such luggage? Shakesp. Tempest.

Think not thou to find me slack, or need
Thy politic maxims, or that cumbrous
Luggage of war there shewn me. Milton's Par. Reg.

How durst thou with that sullen luggage
O' th' self, old in, and other baggage,
T' oppose thy lumber against us? Hudibras.

The mind of man is too light to bear much certainty among the rattling winds of passion and opinion; and if the luggage be prized equally with the jewels, none will be cast out till all be shipwrecked. Glanville.

A lively faith will bear aloft the mind,
And leave the luggage of good works behind. Dryd.

I am gathering up my luggage, and preparing for my journey. Swift to Pope.

LUGUBRIOUS. adj. [lugubre, Fr. lugubris, Lat.] Mournful; sorrowful.

A demure, or rather a lugubrious look, a whining tone, makes up the sum of many men's humiliations. Decay of Piety.

LUKEWARM. adj. [The original of this word is doubted. Warmth, in Sax. is pleoð; in old Frisick hlj; in Dut. hente; whence probably our luke, to which warm may be added, to determine, by the first word, the force of the second; as we say, boiling hot.]

1. Moderately or mildly warm; so warm as to give only a pleasing sensation.

A dreary course, whose life away did pass,
All wallow'd in his own yet lukewarm blood,
That from his wound yet welled fresh alas! Fairy Queen.

May you a better feast never behold,
You knot of mouth friends! smoke and lukewarm water

Is your perfection. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

L U M

Bathing the body in lukewarm water is of great advantage to contemperate hot and sharp humours. Wiseman's Surgery.
 Whence is it but from this attractive power, that water, which alone distills with a gentle lukewarm heat, will not distil from salt of tartar without a great heat? Newton's Opticks.

2. Indifferent; not ardent; not zealous.
 If some few continue stedfast, it is an obedience so lukewarm and languishing, that it merits not the name of passion. Dryden.

This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
 In lukewarm patriots. Addison's Cato.

LU'KEWARMLY. adv. [from the adjective.]

1. With moderate warmth.

2. With indifference.

LU'KEWARMNESS. n. s. [from lukewarm.]

1. Moderate or pleasing heat.

2. Indifference; want of ardour.
 Some kind of zeal counts all merciful moderation lukewarmness. King Charles.

The defect of zeal is lukewarmness, or coldness in religion; the excess is inordinate heat and spiritual fury. Spratt.

Go dry your chaff and stubble, give fire to the zeal of your faction, and reproach them with lukewarmness. Swift.

To LULL. v. a. [lulu, Dan. lallo, Lat.]

1. To compose to sleep by a pleasing sound.

There trickled softly down
 A gentle stream, whose murmuring wave did play
 Amongst the pumy stones, and made a sound
 To lull him soft asleep, that by it lay. Fairy Queen.

Such sweet compulsion doth in music lie,
 To lull the daughters of necessity. Milton.
 These lull'd by nightingales embracing slept. Milton.

2. To compose; to quiet; to put to rest.

To find a foe it shall not be his hap,
 And peace shall lull him in her flow'ry lap. Milt.
 No more these scenes my meditations aid,
 Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.
 By the vocal woods and waters lull'd,
 And lost in lonely musing in a dream. Thomson.

LU'LLABY. n. s. [lullus, Lat. Quem nutrum fuisse deum contendit Turnebus, from lull: it is observable, that the nurses call sleep by, by; lullaby is therefore lull to sleep.] A song to still babes.

Only that noise heav'n's rolling circles keet,
 Sung lullaby, to bring the world to rest. Fairfax.
 Philomel, with melody,
 Sing in your sweet lullaby;
Lulla, lulla, lullaby; lulla, lulla, lullaby. Shakesp.

If you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her along with you, it may make my bounty further.
 —Marry, Sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. Shakesp.

Drinking is the lullaby used by nurses to still crying children. Locke on Education.

LU'NBAGO. n. s. [lumbi, Lat. the loins.]

Lumbago are pains very troublesome about the loins, and small of the back, such as precede ague fits and fevers; they are most commonly from fulness and acrimony, in common with a disposition to yawnings, shudderings, and erratic pains in other parts, and go off with evacuation, generally by sweat, and other critical discharges of fevers. Quincy.

LUMBER. n. s. [loma, zeloma, Sax. household-stuff; lonmering, the dirt of an house, Dut. Any thing useless or cumbersome; any thing of more bulk than value.

The very bed was violated
 By the coarse hands of filthy dungeon villains,
 And thrown amongst the common lumber. Otway.

L U M

One son at home
 Concerns thee more than many guests to come.
 If to some useful art he be not bred,
 He grows mere lumber, and is worse than dead. Dryden.

Thy neighbour has remov'd his wretched store,
 Few hands will rid the lumber of the poor. Dryd.

If God intended not the precise use of every single atom, that atom had been no better than a piece of lumber. Grew.

The poring scholiasts mark;
 Wits, who, like owls, see only in the dark;
 A lumber-house of books in ev'ry head. Pope.

To LUMBER. v. a. [from the noun.] To heap like useless goods irregularly.

In Rollo we must have so much stuff lumbered together, that not the least beauty of tragedy can appear. Rymer.

To LUMBER. v. n. To move heavily, as burthened with his own bulk.

First let them run at large,
 Nor lumber o'er the meads, nor cross the wood. Dryden.

LUMINARY. n. s. [luminare, Lat. luminaire, Fr.]

1. Any body which gives light.
 The great luminary
 Dispenses light from far. Milton.

2. Any thing which gives intelligence.
 Sir John Graham, I know not upon what luminaries he espied in his face, dissuaded him from marriage. Wotton.

3. Any one that instructs mankind.
 The circulation of the blood, and the weight and spring of the air, had been reserved for a late happy discovery by two great luminaries of this island. Bentley.

LUMINATION. n. s. [from lumen, Lat.] Emission of light. Dict.

LUMINOUS. adj. [lumineux, Fr.]

1. Shining; emitting light.
 Fire burneth loud, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly, broken and incinerate. Bacon.

Its first convex divides
 The luminous inferior orbs inclos'd,
 From chaos. Milton.

How came the sun to be luminous? Not from the necessity of natural causes. Bentley.

2. Enlightened.

Earth may, industrious of herself, fetch day,
 Travelling east; and with her part averse
 From the sun's beam, meet night; her other part Still luminous by his ray. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Shining; bright.

The most luminous of the prismatic colours are the yellow and orange; these affect the senses more strongly than all the rest together. Newton.

LUMP. n. s. [lompe, Dut.]

1. A small mass of any matter.
 The weed kal is by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians. Bacon.

Without this various agitation of the water, how could lumps of sugar or salt cast into it be so perfectly dissolved in it, that the lumps themselves totally disappear? Boyle.

A wretch is pris'ner made;
 Whose flesh torn off by lumps, the rav'nous foe
 In morsels cut. Tate.

Ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
 Were sorted well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.

To conceive thus of the soul's intimate union with an infinite being, and by that union receiving of ideas, leads one into as gross thoughts, as a country-maid would have of an infinite butter-print, the several parts whereof being applied to her lump of butter, left on it the figure or idea there was present need of. Locke.

2. A shapeless mass.

Hence, heap of wrath, foul indigested lump;
 As crooked in thy manners as thy shape. Shakesp.
 Why might there not have been, in this great mass, huge lumps of solid matter, which, without any form or order, might be jumbled together? Keil against Burnet.

3. Mass undistinguished.

All men's honours
 Lie like one lump before him, to be fashion'd
 Into what pinch he please. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
 It is rare to find any of these metals pure: but copper, iron, gold, silver, lead, and tin, all promiscuously in one lump. Woodward's Natural History.

4. The whole together; the gross.

If my readers will not go to the price of buying my papers by retail, they may buy them in the lump. Addison.

Other epidemical vices are rife and predominant only for a season, and must not be ascribed to human nature in the lump. Bentley.

The principal gentlemen of several counties are stigmatized in a lump, under the notion of being papists. Swift.

To LUMP. v. a. To take in the gross, without attention to particulars.

The expences ought to be lumped together. Aylife's Parergon.
 Boccacini, in his political balance, after laying France in one scale, throws Spain into the other, which wanted but very little of being a counterpoise: the Spaniards upon this reckoned, that if Spain of itself weighed so well, they could not fail of success when the several parts of the monarchy were lumped in the same scale. Addison.

LU'MPFISH. n. s. [lump and fish.] A sort of fish.

LUMPING. adj. [from lump.] Large; heavy; great. A low word.
 Nick, thou shalt have a lumping pennyworth. Arbutnot.

LU'MPISH. adj. [from lump.] Heavy; gross; dull; inactive; bulky.

Out of the earth was formed the flesh of man, and therefore heavy and lumpish. Raleigh.
 Sylvia is lumpish, heavy, melancholy. Shakesp.
 Love is all spirit; fairies sooner may Be taken tardy, when they night-tricks play,
 Than we; we are too dull and lumpish. Suckling.
 Little terrestrial particles swimming in it after the grossest were sunk down, which, by their heaviness and lumpish figure, made their way more speedily. Burnet.

How dull and how insensible a beast
 Is man, who yet would lord it o'er the rest?
 Philosophers and poets vainly strove
 In every age the lumpish mass to move. Dryden.

LU'MPISHLY. adv. [from lumpish.] With heaviness; with stupidity.

LU'MPISHNESS. n. s. [from the adjective.] Stupid heaviness.

LU'MPY. adj. [from lump.] Full of lumps; full of compact masses.

One of the best spades to dig hard lumpy clays, but too small for light garden mould. Mortimer.

LU'NACY. n. s. [from luna the moon.] A kind of madness influenced by the moon; madness in general.

Love is merely madness, and deserves as well a dark house and a whip as madmen do; and the reason why they are not so punished and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary, that the whippers are in love too. Shakesp. As you like it.
 Your kindred shun your house,
 As beaten hence by your strange lunacy. Shakesp.

There is a difference of lunacy: I had rather be mad with him, that, when he had nothing, thought all the ships that came into the haven his, than with you, who, when you have so much coming in, think you have nothing. Suckling.

LU'NAR. } adj. [lunaire, Fr. lunaris, LU'NARY. } Lat.]

1. Relating to the moon.

They that have resolved that these years were but lunary years, viz. of a month, or Egyptian years, are easily confuted. Raleigh.

Then we upon our globe's last verge shall go,
And view the ocean leaning on the sky;
From hence our rolling neighbours we shall know,

And on the lunar world securely pry. Dryden.

2. Being under the dominion of the moon.

They have denominated some herbs solar and some lunar, and such like toys put into great words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The figure of its seed much resembles a horse-shoe, which Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signification, and raised the same unto a lunary representation. Brown's Vulg. Fr.

LUNARY. n. s. [lunaria, Lat. lunaire, Fr.] Moonwort.

Then sprinkles she the juice of rue
With nine drops of the midnight dew,
From lunary distilling. Drayton's Nymphid.

LUNATED. adj. [from luna.] Formed like a half moon.LUNATICK. adj. [lunaticus, Lat.] Mad; having the imagination influenced by the moon.

Bedlam beggars, from low farms,
Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers, Enforce their charity. Shakesp.

LUNATICK. n. s. A madman.

The lunatick, the lover, and the poet,
Arc of imagination all compact:
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold:
The madman. Shakesp. Mids. Night's Dream.

I dare ensure any man well in his wits, for one in the thousand that he shall not die a lunatick in Bedlam within these seven years; because not above one in about one thousand five hundred have done so. Grannt's Bills.

See the blind beggar dance, the cripple sing,
The sot a hero, lunatick a king. Pope.

The residue of the yearly profits shall be laid out in purchasing a piece of land, and in building thereon an hospital for the reception of ideots and lunaticks. Swift.

LUNATION. n. s. [lunaison, Fr. luna, Lat.] The revolution of the moon.

If the lunations be observed for a cycle of nineteen years, which is the cycle of the moon, the same observations will be verified for succeeding cycles for years. Holder on Time.

LUNCH. } n. s. [Minshew derives it

LUNcheon. } from louja, Span. Skin- ner from kleinken a small piece, Teut.

It probably comes from clutch or clunch.]
As much food as one's hand can hold.

When hungry thou stood'st staring, like an oaf,
I slic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf;
With crumbled bread I thicken'd well the mess. Gay.

LUNE. n. s. [luna, Lat.]

1. Any thing in the shape of a half moon.

A troop of Janizaries strew'd the field,
Fall'n in just ranks or wedges, lunes, or squares,
Firm as they stood. Watts.

2. Fits of lunacy or frenzy; mad freaks.

The French say of a man fantastical or whimsical, Il a des lunes. Hanmer.

These dangerous unsafe lunes, o' th' king! besbrew them!

He must be told out, and he shall the office Becomes a woman best. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

3. A laish: as, the lune of a hawk.LUNETTE. n. s. [Fr.] A small half moon.

Lunette is a covered place made before the courtine, which consists of two faces that form an angle inwards, and is commonly raised in fosses full of water, to serve instead of a fausse braye, and to dispute the enemy's passage: it is six toises in extent, of which the parapet is four. Trevour.

LUNGS. n. s. [lungen. Sax. long, Dut.]

The lights; the part by which breath is inspired and expired.

More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me. Shakesp.

The bellows of his lungs begin to swell,
Nor can the good receive, nor bad expel. Dryden.
Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,
And throats of brass inspir'd with iron lungs;
I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,
Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryden.

LUNGED. adj. [from lungs.] Having lungs; having the nature of lungs; drawing in and emitting air, as the lungs in an animal body.

The smith prepares his hammer for the stroke,
While the lung'd bellows hissing fire provoke. Dryden.

LUNG-GROWN. adj. [lung and grown.]

The lungs sometimes grow fast to the skin that lines the breast within; whence such as are detained with that accident are lung-grown. Harvey.

LUNGWORT. n. s. [pulmonaria, Lat.] A plant. *Miller.*LUNISO'LAR. adj. [lunisolaire, Fr. luna solaris, Lat.] Compounded of the revolution of sun and moon.LUNT. n. s. [lonte, Dut.] The matchcord with which guns are fired.LUPINE. n. s. [lupin, Fr. lupinus, Lat.] A kind of pulse.

It has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterwards turns into a pod filled with either plain or spherical seeds: the leaves grow like fingers upon the foot stalks. Miller.

When Protagenes would undertake any excellent piece, he used to diet himself with peas and lupines, that his invention might be quick and refined. Peacham on Drawing.

Where stalks of lupines grew,
Th' ensuing season, in return, may bear
The bearded product of the golden year. Dryden.

LURCH. n. s. [This word is derived by Skinner from lourche a game of draughts, much used, as he says, among the Dutch; ourche he derives from arca; so that, I suppose, those that are lost are left in lorche, in the lurch or box; whence the use of the word.]

To leave in the LURCH. To leave in a forlorn or deserted condition; to leave without help. A ludicrous phrase.

Will you now to peace incline,
And languish in the main design,
And leave us in the lurch? Denham.

But though thou'rt of a different church,
I will not leave thee in the lurch. Hudibras.

Have a care how you keep company with those that, when they find themselves upon a pinch, will leave their friends in the lurch. L'Estrange.

Can you break your word with three of the honestest best meaning persons in the world? It is base to take advantage of their simplicity and credulity, and leave them in the lurch at last. Arbuth.

Flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world, and leave us in the lurch, by some of their late refinements. Addison's Guardian.

To LURCH. v. n. [loerven, Dut. or rather from the noun.]

1. To shift; to play tricks.

I myself, sometimes leaving goodness on my left hand, and hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch. Shakesp.

2. To lie in wait: we now rather use lurk

While the one was upon wing, the other stood lurching upon the ground, and flew away with the fish. L'Estrange.

To LURCH. v. a. [lurcor, Lat.]

1. To devour; to swallow greedily.

Too far off from great cities may hinder business; or too near lurcheth all provisions, and maketh every thing dear. Bacon.

2. To defeat; to disappoint. A word now used only in burlesque. [from the game lurch.]

He waxed like a sea,
And, in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurcht all swords o' th' garland. Shakesp.

God never designed the use of them to be continual; by putting such an emptiness in them, as should so quickly fail and lurch the expectation. South.

This is a sure rule, that will never deceive or lurch the sincere communicant. South.

3. To steal pively; to filch; to pilfer.

LUR'CHER. n. s. [from lurch.]

1. One that watches to steal, or to betray or entrap.

His thefts some tradesman spies,
Swift from his play the scudding lurcher flies;
Whilst ev'ry honest tongue Stop thief resounds. Gay.

2. A dog that watches for his game.

I cannot represent those worthies more naturally than under the shadow of a pack of dogs, made up of hinders, lurchers, and setters. Tuttler.

3. [Lurco, Lat.] A glutton; a gormandizer. Not used.LURE. n. s. [leurre, Fr. lore, Dut.]

1. Something held out to call a hawk.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And, till she stoop, she must not be full gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shakesp.

This lure she cast abroad, thinking that unk fame and belief would draw, at one time or other, some birds to strike upon it. Bacon's Henry VII.

A great estate to an heir is a lure to all the birds of prey round about to seize upon him. Bacon.

This stiff-neck'd pride, nor art nor force can bend,
Nor high-flown hopes to reason's lure descend. Denham.

A false'ner Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tartsels and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. Any enticement; any thing that promises advantage.

How many have with a smile made small account
Of beauty and her lures, easily scorn'd
All her assaults, on worthier things intent? Mit.

Luxury
Held out her lure to his superiour eye,
And griev'd to see him pass contemptuous by. Madd. n.

To LURE. v. u. [from the noun.] To call hawks.

Standing near one that lured loud and shrill,
I had suddenly an offence, as if somewhat had broken,
Or been dislocated in my ear, and immediately after a loud ringing. Bacon.

To LURE. v. a. To attract; to entice; to draw.

As when a flock
Of ravenous fowl, though many a league remote,
Against the day of battle, to a field
Where armies lie encamp'd, come flying, lur'd
With scent of living carcasses. Milton's Par. Lost.

A man spent one day in labour, that he might pass the other at ease; and lured on by the pleasure of this bait, when he was in vigour he would provide for as many days as he could. Temple.

Should you lure
From his dark haunt, beneath the tangled roots
Of pendant trees, the monarch of the brook,
Behoves you then to ply your finest art. Thomson.

Volumes on shelter'd stalls expanded lie,
And various science lures the learned eye. Gay.

LURID. adj. [luridus, Lat.] Gloomy; dismal. Not used.

Slow settling o'er the lurid ground,
Unusual darkness broods. Thomson's Summer.

To LURK. v. n. [probably lurch and lurk are the same word. See LURCH.] To lie in wait; to lie hidden; to lie close.

Far in land a savage nation dwelt,
That never tasted grace, nor goodness felt;
But like wild beasts, lurking in loathsome den,
And flying fast as roebuck through the fen,
All naked. Fairy Queen.

Millbrook lurketh between two hills, a village of some eighty houses, and borrowing his name from a mill and little brook running there through.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
They lay not to live by their worke,
But theevisly loiter and lurke. Tusser's Husb.
If sinners entice thee, consent not; if they say, let us lay wait for blood, let us lurk privily for the innocent. Prov. i. 11.

The wife, when danger or dishonour lurks,
Safest and seemliest by her husband stays. Milt.

The lurking gold upon the fatal tree. Dryden's Æn.

The king unseen
Lurk'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen;
He springs to vengeance. Pope.

I do not lurk in the dark: I am not wholly unknown to the world: I have set my name at length. Swift.

LURKER. n. s. [from lurk.] A thief that lies in wait.

LURKINGPLACE. n. s. [lurk and place.]
Hiding place; secret place.

Take knowledge of all the lurkingplaces where he hideth himself. 1 Sam. xxiii. 23.

LUSCIOUS. adj. [from delicious, say some;
but Skinner more probably derives it from luxurious, corruptly pronounced.]

1. Sweet, so as to nauseate.

2. Sweet in a great degree.

The food that to him now is as luscious as loches, shall shortly be as bitter as coluquintida. Shakesp.

With brandish'd blade rush on him, break his glass,

And shed the luscious liquor on the ground. Milton.

Blown roses hold their sweetness to the last,
And raisins keep their luscious native taste. Dryd.

3. Pleasing; delightful.

He will bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase. South.

LUSCIOUSLY. adv. [from luscious.] Sweet to a great degree.

LUSCIOUSNESS. n. s. [from luscious.]
Immoderate sweetness.

Can there be a greater indulgence in God, than to imbitter sensualities whose lusciousness intxicates us, and to clip wings which carry us from him? Decay of Piety.

play.

There might be many entertaining contrivances for the instruction of children in geometry, and geography, in such alluring and lutory methods, which would make a most agreeable and lasting impression. Watts on the Mind.

LUST. n. s. [lupt, Sax. lust, Dut.]

1. Carnal desire.

This our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace. Shakesp. K. Lear.

Lust, and rank thoughts. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

They are immoderately given to the lust of the flesh, making no conscience to get bastards. Abbot.

When a temptation of lust assaults thee, do not resist it by disputing with it, but fly from it, that is, think not at all of it. Taylor's Holy Living.

2. Any violent or irregular desire.

I will divide the spoil; my lust shall be satisfied upon them. Exodus, xv. 9.

The ungodly, for his own lust, doth persecute the poor: let them be taken in the crafty wiliness they imagined. Psalms.

Virtue was represented by Hercules: he is drawn offering to strike a dragon; by the dragon are meant all manner of lusts. Peachment on Drawing.

All weigh our acts, and whate'er seems unjust,
Impute not to necessity, but lust. Dryden.

The lust of lucre, Pope.

3. Vigour; active power; lustiness. Not used.

Trees will grow greater, and bear better fruit, if you put salt, or lees of wine, or blood, to the root; the cause may be, the increasing the lust or spirit of the root. Bacon.

To LUST. v. n.

1. To desire carnally.

Inconstant man, that loved all he saw,
And lusted after all that he did love. Roscommon.

2. To desire vehemently.

Giving sometimes prodigally; not because he loved them to whom he gave, but because he lusted to give. Sidney.

The christian captives in chains could no way move themselves, if they should unadvisedly lust
after liberty. Knolles.

3. To list; to like. Out of use.

Their eyes swell with fatness; and they do even what they lust. Psalms lxxiii. 7.

LUSTRATION. n. s. [lustration, Fr. lustratio,
Lat.] Purification by water.

Job's religious care
His sons assemble, whose united prayer,
Like sweet perfumes, from golden censers rise;
He with divine lustrations sanctifies. Sandys.

That spirits are corporeal seems a conceit derog-ative unto himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow; yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms.

Brown's Vulg. Er.

Should Io's priest command
A pilgrimage to Meroe's burning sand;
Through deserts they wou'd seek the secret spring,
And holy water for lustration bring. Dryden's Juv.

What were all their lustrations but so many solemn purifyings, to render both themselves and their sacrifices acceptable to their gods? South.

By ardent pray'r, and clear lustration,
Purge the contagious spots of human weakness;
Impure no mortal can behold Apollo Prior.

LUSTRE. n. s. [lustre, Fr.]

1. Brightness; splendour; glitter.

You have one eye left to see some mischief on him,
—Lest it see more, prevent it; out, vile jelly!
Where is thy lustre now? Shakesp. K. Lear.

To the soul time doth perfection give,
And adds fresh lustre to her beauty still. Davies.

The scorching sun was mounted high,
In all its lustre, to the noon-day sky. Addison's Ovid.

Pass but some fleeting years, and these poor eyes,
Where now without a boast some lustre lies,
No longer shall their little honours keep,
But only be of use to read or weep. Prior.

All nature laughs, the groves are fresh and fair,
The sun's mild lustre warms the vital air. Pope.

2. A scone with lights.

Ridotta sips, and dances till she see
The doubling lustres dance as quick as she. Pope.

3. Eminence; renown.

His ancestors continued about four hundred years, rather without obscurity than with any great lustre. Hotton.

I used to wonder how a man of birth and spirit could endure to be wholly insignificant and obscure in a foreign country, when he might live with lustre
in his own. Swift.

4. [From lustre, Fr. lustrum, Lat.] The space of five years.

LUSTRING. n. s. [from lustre.] A shining

MACHINA'TION. n. s. [machinatio, Lat. mackination, Fr. from machinate.] Artifice; contrivance; malicious scheme.

If you miscarry,
Your business of the world lieth so an end,
And machination ceases. Shakesp. King Lear.

O from their machinations free,
That would my guilty soul betray;
From those who in my wrongs agree,
And for my life their engines lay! Sandys.

Be frustrate all ye stratagems of hell,
And devilish machinations come to nought. Milton.

How were they zealous in respect of their temporal governours? Not by open rebellion, not by private machinations; but in blessing and submitting to their emperors, and obeying them in all things but their idolatry. Spratt.

MACH'INE. n. s. [machina, Lat. machine, Fr. This word is pronounced masheen.]

1. Any complicated work to which one part contributes to the motion of another.

We are led to conceive this great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity, as to conceive a watch to have been once in its first materials. Burnet.

In a watch's fine machine,
The added movements which declare
How full the moon, how old the year,
Derive their secondary pow'r
From that which simply points the hour. Prior.

2. An engine.

In the hollow side,
Selected numbers of their soldiers hide;
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode. Dryd.

3. Supernatural agency in poems.

The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

MACH'INERY. n. s. [from machinc.]

Alack, sir, he is mad.
—'Tis the tunc's plague when madmen lead the blind. Shakesp.

This musick mads me, let it sound no more;
For though it have help'd madmen to their wits,
In me, it seems, it will make wise men mad. Shak.

Cupid, of thee the poets sung,
Thy mother from the sea was sprung;
But they were mad to make thee young. Denham.

We must bind our passions in chains, lest like mad folks they break their locks and bolts, and do all the mischief they can. Taylor's Worthy Com.

A bear, enraged at the stinging of a bee, ran like mad into the bee-garden, and overturn'd all the hives. L'Estrange.

Madmen ought not to be mad;
But who can help his frenzy? Drazen's Sp. Friar.

But some strange graces and odd flights she had,
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.

2. Expressing disorder of mind.
His gestures fierce
He mark'd, and mad demaour when alone. Milt.

3. Over-run with any violent or unreasonable desire: with on, after, of, perhaps better for, before the object of desire.

It is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols. Jer. l. 38.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry, or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatick writing. Dryden.

The people are not so very mad of acorns, but that they could be content to eat the bread of civil persons. Rymer.

4. Enraged; furious.

Holy writ represents St. Paul as making havock of the church, and persecuting that way unto the death, and being exceedingly mad against them. Decny of Piety.

To MAD. v. a. [from the adjective.] To make mad; to make furious; to enrage. O villain! cried out Zehoane, maddened with finding an unlooked-for rival. Sidney.

This will witness outwardly, As strongly as the conscience does within, To the madding of her lord. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

This mads me, that perhaps ignoble hands Have overlaid him, for they cou'd not conquer. Dryden.

To MAD. v. n. To be mad; to be furious.

The madding wheels Of brazen chariots rag'd: dire was the noise Of conflicts! Milton's Par. Lost.

She, mixing with a throng Of madding matrons, bears the bride along. Dryd.

Spenser.

MA'GGOT. n. s. [magrod, Welch; millepeda, Lat. maðu, Sax.]

1. A small grub, which turns into a fly.
Out of the sides and back of the common caterpillar we have seen creep out small maggots.
Ray on Creation.

From the sore although the insect flies,
It leaves a brood of maggots in disguise. Garth.

2. Whimsey; caprice; odd fancy. A low word.

Taffata phrases, silken terms precise,
Three-pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical; these summer flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation:
I do forswear them.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express
In russet yeas, and honest kersy noes. Shakesp.

To reconcile our late dissenters,
Our brethren though by other venters,
Unite them and their different maggots,
As long and short sticks are in faggots. Hudibras.

She prick'd his maggot, and touch'd him in the tender point; then he broke out into a violent passion. Arbutnot.

with a maggoty unsettled head, is as ridiculous as to think to write strait in a jumbling coach. Norris.

MA'GICAL. adj. [from magick.] Acting, or performed by secret and invisible powers, either of nature, or the agency of spirits.

I'll humbly signify what, in his name,
That magical word of war, we have effected. Shak.

They beheld unveiled the magical shield of your Ariosto, which dazzled the beholders with too much brightness; they can no longer hold up their arms. Dryden.

By the use of a looking-glass, and certain attire made of cambrick upon her head, she attained to an evil art and magical force in the motion of her eyes. Taiter.

MA'GICALLY. adv. [from magical.] According to the rites of magick; by enchantment.

In the time of Valens, divers curious men, by the falling of a ring, magically prepared, judged that one Theodorus should succeed in the empire. Camden.

MA'GICK. n. s. [magia, Lat.]

1. The art of putting in action the power of spirits: it was supposed that both good and bad spirits were subject to magick; yet magick was in general held unlawful: sorcery; enchantment.

She once being looft,
The noble ruin of her magick, Antony, Claps on his sea-wing. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.
What charm, what magick, can over-rule the force of all these motives? Rogers.

2. The secret operations of natural powers. The writers of natural magick attribute much to the virtues that come from the parts of living creatures, as if they did infuse immaterial virtue into the part severed. Bacon.

MA'GICK. adj.

1. Acting or doing by powers superior to the known power of nature; enchanted; necromantick.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground:
And that distill'd by magick slights
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shakesp.
Like castles built by magick art in air,
That vanish at approach, such thoughts appear. Granville.

2. Done or produced by magick. And the brute earth would lend her nerves, and shake,
'Till all thy magick structures rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps. Milton.

MAG'ICIAN. n. s. [magicus, Lat.] One skilled in magick; an enchanter; a necromancer.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shakesp.
An old magician, that did keep
Th' Hesperian fruit, and made the dragon sleep;
Her potent charms do troubled souls relieve,
And, where she lists, makes calmest souls to grieve. Waller.
There are millions of truth that a man is not concerned to know; as whether Roger Bacon was a mathematician or a magician. Locke.

MAGISTERIAL. adj. [from magister, Lat.]

1. Such as suits a master. Such a government is material, not magisterial. King Charles.
He bids him attend as if he had the rod over him; and uses a magisterial authority while he instructs him. Dryden.

2. Lofty; arrogant; proud; insolent; despotick. We are not magisterial in opinions, nor, dictator-like, obtrude our notions on any man. Brown's Vulg. Fr.

Pretences go a great way with men that take fair words and magisterial looks for current payment. L'Estrange.
Those men are but trepanned who are called to govern, being invested with authority, but bereaved of power; which is nothing else but to mock and betray them into a splendid and magisterial way of being ridiculous. South.

3. Chemically prepared, after the manner of a magistry.

Of corals are chiefly prepared the powder ground upon a marble, and the magisterial salt, to good purpose in some fevers: the tincture is no more than a solution of the magisterial salt. Grew.

MAGISTERIALLY. adv. [from magisterial.] Arrogantly; with an air of authority.

A downright advice may be mistaken, as if it were spoken magisterially. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
Over their pots and pipes they claim and engross all wholly to themselves, magisterially censuring the wisdom of all antiquity, scoffing at all piety, and new-modelling the world. South.

MAGISTERIALNESS. adj. [from magisterial.] Haughtiness; airs of a master.

Peremptoriness is of two sorts; the one a magisterialness in matters of opinion, the other a positiveness in relating matters of fact: in the one we impose upon men's understandings, in the other on their faith. Government of the Tongue.

MAG'ISTERY. n. s. [magisterium, Lat.]

Magistry is a term made use of by chemists to signify sometimes a very fine powder, made by solution and precipitation; as of bismuth, lead, &c. and sometimes resia and resinous substances; as those of jalap, scamony, &c. but the most genuine acceptance is to express that preparation of any body, wherein the whole, or most part, is, by the addition of somewhat, changed into a body of quite another kind; as when iron or copper is turned into crystals of Mars or Venus. Quincy.

Paracelsus extracteth the magistry of wine, exposing it unto the extremity of cold; whereby the aqueous parts will freeze, but the spirit be mingled in the centre. Brown.

The magistry of vegetables consists but of the more soluble and coloured parts of the plants that afford it. Boyle.

MAG'ISTRACY. n. s. [magistratus, Lat.]

Office or dignity of a magistrate. You share the world, her magistracies, priest-hoods, Wealth and felicity, amongst you, friends. Ben Jonson.

He had no other intention but to dissuade men from magistracy, or undertaking the publick offices of state. Brown.
Some have disputed even against magistracy itself. Atterbury.

Duelling is not only an usurpation of the divine prerogative, but it is an insult upon magistracy and good government. Clarissa.

MAG'ISTRALLY. adv. [magistralis, low Lat.] Despotically; authoritatively; magisterially.

What a presumption is this for one, who will not allow liberty to others, to assume to himself such a licence to controul so magisterially? Bramhall against Hobbes.

MAG'ISTRATE. n. s. [magistratus, Lat.]

A man publickly invested with authority; a governor; an executor of the laws.

They chuse their magistrate!
And such a one as he, who puts his shall,
His popular shall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd in Greece. Shak. Coriolanus.
I treat here of those legal punishments which magistrates inflict upon their disobedient subjects. Decay of Piety.

MAGNA'LITY. n. s. [magnalia, Lat.] A great thing; something above the common rate. Not used.

Too greedily of magnalities, we make hut favourable experiments concerning welcome truths. Brown.

MAGNAN'IMITY. n. s. [magnanimité, Fr.

magnanimus, Lat.] Greatness of mind; bravery; elevation of soul. With deadly hue, an armed corsé did lye,
In whose dead face he read great magnanimity. Spenser.

Let but the acts of the ancient Jews be but differently weighed, from whose magnanimity, in causes of most extreme hazard, those strange and unwonted resolutions have grown, which, for all circumstances, no people under the roof of heaven did ever hitherto match. Hooker.

They had enough reveng'd, having reduc'd
Their foe to misery beneath their fears;
The rest was magnanimity to remit,
If some convenient raiison was propos'd. Milton.
Exploding many things under the name of magnanimity, and a great check to virtuous actions with regard to fame. Swift.

MAGNA'NIMOUS. adj. [magnanimus, Lat.]

Great of mind; elevated of sentiment; brave.

To give a kingdom hath been thought
Greater and nobler done, and to lay down
Far more magnanimous, than to assume. Milton.
In strength

All mortals I excell'd, and great in hopes,
With youthful courage, and magnanimous thoughts
Of birth from heaven foretold, and high exploits. Milton.

Magnanimous industry is a resolved assiduity and care, answerable to any weighty work. Grew's Cos.

MAGNA'NIMOUSLY. adv. [from magnanimous.] Bravely; with greatness of mind.

A complete and generous education fits a man to perform justly, skilfully, and magnanimously, all the offices of peace and war. Milt. on Education.

MAGNET. n. s. [magnes, Lat.] The loadstone; the stone that attracts iron. Two magnets, heav'n and earth, allure to bliss,

The larger loadstone that, the nearer this. Dryd.
It may be reasonable to ask, Whether obeying the magnet be essential to iron? Locke.

MAGNETICAL. } adj. [from magnet.]

MAGNETICK. }
1. Relating to the magnet. Review this whole magnetick scheme. Blackmore.
Water is nineteen times lighter, and by consequence nineteen times rarer, than gold; and gold is so rare, as very readily, and without the least opposition, to transmit the magnetick effluvia, and easily to admit quicksilver into its pores, and to let water pass through it. Newton's Opticks.

2. Having powers correspondent to those of the magnet.

The magnet acts upon iron through all dense bodies not magnetick, nor red hot, without any diminution of its virtue; as through gold, silver, lead, glass, water. Newton's Opticks.

3. Attractive; having the power to draw things distant.

The moon is magnetical of heat, as the sun is of cold and moisture. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

She should all parts to reunion bow;
She, that had all magnetick force alone,
To draw and fasten hundred parts in one. Donne.
They, as they move tow'rd's his all-cheering lamp,

Turn swift their various motions, or are turn'd
By his magnetick beam. Milton's Par. Lost.

4. Magnetick is once used by Milton for magnet.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
At will the manliest, resolute breast,
As the magnetick hardest iron draws. Milton.

MAGNETISM. n. s. [from magnet.]

1. Power of the loadstone. Many other magnetisms and the like attractions through all the creatures of nature. Brown.

2. Power of attraction. By the magnetisms, of interest our affections are irresistibly attracted. Granville's Scepiss.

MAGNIFIABLE. adj. [from magnify.] Worthy to be extolled or praised. Unusual.

Number, though wonderful in itself, and sufficiently magnifiable from its demonstrable affection, hath yet received adjectives from the multiplying conceits of men. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

MAGNIFICAL. } adj. [magnificus, Lat.]
MAGNIFICENT. } Illustrious; grand; great; noble. Proper, but little used.

The house that is to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificial, of fame and glory throughout all countries. 1 Chron. xxii. 5.

Thrones, dominations, principedoms, virtues, powers!

If these magnifick titles yet remain,
Not merely titular. Milton's Paradise Lost.
O parent! these are thy magnifick deeds;
Thy trophies! Milton's Par. Lost.

MAGNIFICENCE. n. s. [magnificentia, Lat.] Grandeur of appearance; splendour.

This desert soil
Wants not her hidden lustre, gems, and gold,
Nor want we skill or art, from whence to raise Magnificence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not Babylon,
Nor great Alcairo, such magnificence
Equall'd in all her glories to inshrine
Belus or Serapis, their gods; or seat
Their kings, when Egypt with Assyria strove
In wealth and luxury. Milton's Paradise Lost.

One may observe more splendour and magnificence in particular persons houses in Genoa, than in those that belong to the publick. Addison on Italy.

MAGNIFICENT. adj. [magnificus, Lat.]

1. Grand in appearance; splendid; pompous.

Man he made, and for him built Magnificent this world. Milton's Paradise Lost.
It is suitable to the magnificent harmony of the universe, that the species of creatures should, by gentle degrees, ascend upward from us toward his perfection, as we see they gradually descend from us downwards. Locke.

Immortal glories in my mind revive,
When Rome's exalted beauties I descry, Magnificent in piles of ruin lie. Addison.

2. Fond of splendour; setting greatness to shew.

If he were magnificent, he spent with an aspiring intent: if he spared, he heaped with an aspiring intent. Sidney.

MAGNIFICENTLY. adv. [from magnificent.] Pompously; splendidly.

Beauty a monarch is,
Which kingly power magnificently proves,
By crowds of slaves and peopled empires loves. Dryden.

We can never conceive too highly of God; so neither too magnificently of nature, his handywork. Grew's Cosmol.

MAGNIFICO. n. s. [Ital.] A grandee of Venice.

The duke himself, and the magnificos
Of greatest port, have all proceeded with him. Shakesp.

2. To exalt; to elevate; to raise in estimation.

Greater now in thy return,
Than from the giant-angels: thee that day
Thy thunders magnify'd; but to create
Is greater than created to destroy. Milton.

3. To raise in pride or pretension.

He shall exalt and magnify himself above every god.
If ye will magnify yourselves against me, know now that God hath overthrown me. Job, xix. 5.
He shall magnify himself in his heart. Dan. viii. 5.

4. To encrease the bulk of any object to the eye.

How these red globules would appear, if glasses could be found that could magnify them a thousand times more, is uncertain. Locke.

By true reflection I could see my face;
Why brings the fool a magnifying glass? Granville.
The greatest magnifying glasses in the world are a man's eyes, when they lock upon his own person. Pope.

As things seem large which we through mists descry, Dulness is ever apt to magnify. Pope's Essay on Cri.

5. A cant word for to have effect.

My governess assured my father I had wanted for nothing; that I was almost eaten up with the green sickness: but this magnified but little with my father. Spectator.

MAGNITUDE. n. s. [magnitudo, Lat.]

He with plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigour arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemus. Milton.

2. Comparative bulk.

This tree hath no extraordinary magnitude, touching the trunk or stem; it is hard to find any one bigger than the rest. Raleigh.

Never repose so much upon any man's single counsel, fidelity, and discretion, in managing affairs of the first magnitude, that is, matters of religion and justice, as to create in yourself, or others, a diffidence of your own judgment. King Charles.
When I behold this goodly frame, this world,
Of heav'n and earth consisting; and compute
Their magnitudes; this earth, a spot, a grain,
An atom, with the firmament compar'd. Milton.

Convince the world that you're devout and true;

Whatever be you're birth, you're sure to be
A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

Conceive these particles of bodies to be so disposed amongst themselves, that the intervals of empty spaces between them may be equal in magnitude to them all; and that these particles may be composed of other particles much smaller, which have as much empty space between them as equals all the magnitudes of these smaller particles. Newton.

MAGPIE. n. s. [from pie, pica, Lat. and mag, contracted from Margaret, as phil is used to a sparrow, and poll to a parrot.] A bird sometimes taught to talk.

Angurs, that understood relations, have
By magpies and by choughs, and rooks brought forth

The secret'st man of blood. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Dissimulation is expressed by a lady wearing a vizard of two faces, in her right hand a magpie, which Spenser described looking through a lattice. Peacham on Drawing.

So have I seen in black and white,
A prating thing, a magpie light,
Majestically stalk;

A stately worthless animal,
That plies the tongue, and wags the tail,
All flutter, pride, and talk. Swift

Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shake p. M. cheth.

This is a man old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is. Shak p.
I am not solely led

By nice direction of a maiden's eye. Shake p.
She employed the residue of her life to repairing of high ways, building of bridges, and endowing of maidens. Carew.

Your deluded wife had been a maid;
Down on the bridal bed a maid she lay,
A maid she rose at the approaching day. Dryden.

Let me die, she said,
Rather than lose the spotless name of maid. Dryden.

2. A woman servant.

My maid Nerissa and myself, mean time,
Will live as maids and widows. Shakesp.
Old Tancred visited his daughter's bower;
Her cheek, for such his custom was, he kiss'd,
Then bless'd her kneeling, and her maids dismiss'd. Dryden.

Her closet and the gods share all her time,
Except when, only by some maids attended,
She seeks some shady solitary grove. Rowe.

A thousand maidens ply the purple loom,
To weave the bed, and deck the regal room. Priest.

MAIDENHEAD. } n. s. [from maiden.]
MAIDENHOOD. }
MAIDENHOOD. }

1. Virginity; virginal purity; freedom from contamination.

And, for the modest lore of maidenhood,
Bids me not sojourn with these armed men.
Oh whither shall I fly? what sacred wood Shall hide me from the tyrant? or what den? Tal. fcz.

She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhood. Faircl.

Example, that so terrible shews in the weeks of maidenhood, cannot for all that dissuade succession, but that they are lined with the twigs that threaten them. Shakesp.

Maidenhood she loves, and will be swift
To aid a virgin. Milton.

2. Newness; freshness; uncontaminated state. This is now become a low word.

The devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhood of our affairs. Shakesp.
Some who attended with much expectation,
At their first appearing have stained the maidenhead of their credit with some negligent performance.
Hotton.
Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no joys maidenhead,
The sponsal rites prejudge the marriage-bed.
Crashaw.

Dryden.

MANAGE. n. s. [mesnage, menuge, Fr.]

1. Conduct; administration.
 To him put
 The manage of my state. Shakesp. Tempest.
 This might have been prevented,
 With very easy arguments of love,
 Which now the manage of two kingdoms must
 With fearful, bloody issue arbitrate. Shakesp.
 For the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
 Expedient manage must be made, my liege,
 Ere further leisure yield them further means.
Shakesp.

Young men, in the conduct and manage of actions, embrace more than they can hold, and stir more than they can quiet. Bacon.
 The plea of a good intention will serve to sanc-tify the worst actions; the proof of which is but too manifest from that scandalous doctrine of the jesuits concerning the direction of the intention, and likewise from the whole manage of the late rebellion. South.

2. Use; instrumentality.
 To think to make gold of quicksilver is not to be hoped: for quicksilver will not endure the man- age of the fire. Bacon.

 A prince of great aspiring thoughts: in the main,
 a manager of his treasure, and yet bountiful, from his own motion, wherever he discerns merit.
Temple.
 The most severe censor cannot but be pleased with the prodigality of Ovid's wit; though he could have wished, that the master of it had been a better manager. Dryden.

MA'NAGERY. n. s. [menagerie, Fr.]

1. Conduct; direction; administration.
 They who most exactly describe that battle, give so ill an account of any conduct or discretion in the managery of that affair, that posterity would receive little benefit in the most particular relation of it. Clarendon.

2. Husbandry; frugality.
 The court of Rome has, in other instances, so well attested its good managery, that it is not credible crowns are conferred gratis. Decay of Piety.

3. Manner of using.
 No expert general will bring a company of raw, untrained men into the field, but will, by little bloody skirmishes, instruct them in the manner of the fight, and teach them the ready managery of their weapons. Decay of Piety.

MANA'TION. n. s. [manatio, Lat.] The act of issuing from something else.

MANCHE. n. s. [Fr.] A sleeve.

MAN'CHET. n. s. [nichet, Fr. Skinner.] A small loaf of fine bread.
 Take a small toast of manchet, dipped in oil of sweet almonds. Bacon.
 I love to entertain my friends with a frugal collation; a cup of wine, a dish of fruit, and a manchet. More's Dialogues.

MANCHINE'EL tree. n. s. [mancanilla, Lat.]

The manchineel tree is a native of the West Indies, and grows to the size of an oak; its wood is of a beautiful grain, will polish well and last long, and is therefore much esteemed: in cutting down those trees, the juice of the bark must be burnt out before the work is begun; for it will raise blis-ters on the skin, and burn holes in linen; and if it should fly into the eyes of the labourers, they are in danger of losing their sight: the fruit is of the colour and size of the golden pippin; many Europeans have suffered, and others lost their lives by eating it: the leaves abound with juice of the same nature; cattle never shelter themselves, and scarcely will any vegetable grow under their shade; yet goats eat this fruit without injury. Miller.

To MANCIPATE. v. a. [mancipo, Lat.] To enslave; to bind; to tie.

Although the regular part of nature is seldom varied, yet the meteors, which are in themselves more unstable, and less mancipated to stated motions, are oftentimes employed to various ends.
Hale.

MANCIPATION. n. s. [from mancipate.] Slavery; involuntary obligation.

MANCIPLE. n. s. [manceps, Lat.] The steward of a community; the purveyor: it is particularly used of the purveyor of a college.

Their maneiple fell dangerously ill,
Bread must be had, their grist went to the mill;
This sink in moderately stole before,
Their steward sick, he robb'd them ten times more,
Betterton's Miller of Trompington.

MANDAMUS. n. s. [Lat.] A writ granted by the king, so called from the initial word.

MANDARIN. n. s. A chinese nobleman or magistrate.

MANDATARY. n. s. [mandataire, Fr. from mando, Lat.] He to whom the pope has, by his prerogative, and proper right, given a mandate for his benefice. Ayliffe.

MANDATE. n. s. [mandatum, Lat.]

1. Command.

Her force is not any where so apparent as in express mandates or prohibitions, especially upon advice and consultation going before. Hooker.

The necessity of the times cast the power of the three estates upon himself, that his mandates should pass for laws, whereby he laid what taxes he pleased. Howell's Vocal Forest.

2. Precept; charge; commission; sent or transmitted.

Who knows,
If the scarce-bearded Caesar have not sent
His powerful mandate to you. Shakesp.

This Moor,
Your special mandate, for the state affairs,
Hath hither brought. Shakesp. Othello.

He thought the mandate forg'd, your death conceal'd. Dryden.

This dream all-powerful Juno sends, I bear
Her mighty mandates, and her words you hear. Dryden.

MANDATOR. n. s. [Lat.] Director.

A person is said to be a client to his advocate, but a master and mandator to his proctor. Ayliffe.

MANDATORY. adj. [mandare, Lat.] Perceptive; directory.

MANDIBLE. n. s. [mandibula, Lat.] The jaw; the instrument of mastication.

He saith, only the crocodile moveth the upper jaw, as if the upper mandible did make an articulation with the cranium. Crew.

MANDIBULAR. adj. [from mandibula, Lat.] Belonging to the jaw.

MANDILION. n. s. [mandiglione, Ital.] A soldier's coat. Skinner. A loose garment; a sleeveless jacket. Answe.

MANDREL. n. s. [mandrin, Fr.] An instrument to hold in the lathe the substance to be turned.

Mandrels are made with a long wooden shank, to fit stiff into a round hole that is made in the work that is to be turned; this mandrel is a shank, or pin-mandrel. Morton.

MANDRAKE. n. s. [mandragoras, Lat. mandragore, Fr.]

The flower of the mandrake consists of one leaf in the shape of a bell, and is divided at the top in several parts; the root is said to bear resemblance to the human form. The reports of tying a dog to this plant, in order to root it up, and prevent the certain death of the person who dares to attempt such a deed, and of the groans emitted by it when the violence is offered, are equally fabulous. Miller.

Among other virtues, mandrake has been falsely celebrated for rendering barren women fruitful: it has a soporifick quality, and the ancients used it when they wanted a narcotick of the most powerful kind. Hill's Materia Medica.

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's groan,
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curst, as harsh, and horrible to hear. Shakesp.

Not poppy, nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever med'cine thee to that sweet sleep. Shak.

And shrieks like mandra' es, torn out of the earth,
That living mortals hearing them run mad. Shak.

Go, and catch a falling star,
Get with child a mandrake root. Donne.

TO MANDUCATE. v. a. [manduco, Lat.] To chew; to eat.

MANDUCATION. n. s. [manducatio, Lat.] Eating.

Manducation is the action of the lower jaw in chewing the food, and preparing it in the mouth before it is received into the stomach. Quincy.

As he who is not a holy person does not feed upon Christ, it is apparent that our manducation must be spiritual, and therefore so must the food, and consequently it cannot be natural flesh. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

MANE. n. s. [maene, Dut.] The hair which hangs down to the neck of horses, or other animals.

Dametas was tossed from the saddle to the mane of the horse, and thence to the ground. Sidney.

A currie comb, mane comb, and whip for a jade. Tusser.

The weak wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold;
And like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

The horses breaking loose, ran up and down with their tails and manes on a light fire. Knolles.

A lion shakes his dreadful mane,
And angry grows. Waller.

For quitting both their swords and reins,
They grasp'd with all their strength the manes. Hudibras.

MANEATER. n. s. [man and eat.] A cannibal; an anthropophagite; one that feeds upon human flesh.

MANED. adj. [from the noun.] Having a mane.

I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage, or base treachery. Shakesp.

He that with this Christian armour manfully fights against, and repels, the temptations and assaults of his spiritual enemies; he that keeps his conscience void of offence, shall enjoy peace here, and for ever. Ray on the Creation.

MANFULNESS. n. s. [from manful.] Stoutness; boldness.

MANGCORN. n. s. [mengen, Dut. to mingle.] Corn of several kinds mixed: as, wheat and rye. It is generally pronounced mung corn.

MANGANESE. n. s. [mangaesia, low Lat.]

Manganese is a name the glassmen use for many different substances, that have the same effect in clearing the foul colour of their glass: it is properly an iron ore of a poorer sort. Hill.

Manganese is rarely found but in an iron vein. Woodward.

MANGE. n. s. [demangeaison, Fr.] The itch or scab in cattle.

The sheep died of the rot, and the swine of the mange. Ben Jonson.

Tell what crisis does divine
The rot in sheep, or mange in swine? Hudibras.

MANGER. n. s. [mangeoire, Fr.] The place or vessel in which animals are fed with corn.

A churlish cur got into mange, here by growling to keep the horses from mange.

TO MANGLE. v. a. [mangelen, Dut. to be wanting; mancus, Lat.] To lacerate; to cut or tear piecemeal; to butcher; to smooth linen by means of a mangle.

Cassio, may you suspect
Who they should be, that thus have mangled you? Shakesp.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shakesp.

Thoughts, my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb,
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton's Agonistes.

Mangle mischief. Don Sebastian.
The triple porter of the Stygian seat,
With lolling tongue, lay fawning at thy feet,
And, seiz'd with fear, I rot thy mangled meat. Dryden.

What could swords or poisons racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame?
More fatal Hemy's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

It is hard, that not one gentleman's daughter should read her own tongue; as any one may find, who can hear them when they are dispersed to mangle a play or a novel, where the least word out of the common road disconcerts them. Swift.

They have joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel, or by to shorten a syllable; so that most of the books we see nowadays, are full of those manglings and abbreviations. Swift.

Inextricable difficulties occur by mangling the sense, and curtailing authors. Barbon Learning.

MANGLER. n. s. [from mangle.] A hacker; one that destroys bunglingly.

Since after thee may rise an impious line,
Coarse manglers of the human face divine;
Paint on, till fate dissolve thy mortal part,
And live and die the monarch of thy art. Tibet.

MANGO. n. s. [mangostan, Fr.] A fruit of the isle of Java, brought to Europe pickled.

The fruit with the husk, when very young, makes a good preserve, and is used to pickle like mangos. Mortimer.

What lord of old wou'd bid his cook prepare Mangos, portargo, champignons, caviar? King.

MANGY. adj. [from mange.] Infected with the mange; scabby.

Away, thou issue of a mangy dog!
I swoon to see thee. Shakesp. Titus of Athens.

from whom Christ descended, as teaching us manhood. Raleigh.

N it therefore joins the Son
Manhood to Godhead, with more strength Thy enemy. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. Verility; not womanhood.

'Tis in my power to be a sovereign now,
And, knowing more, to make his manhood bow. Dryden.

3. Verility; not childhood.

*Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy;
Thy school days frightful, desp rate, wild, and furious;
Thy prime of manhood daring, bold, and venturous.
Shakesp.
By fraud or force the suitor train destroy,
And starting into manhood, scorn the boy. Pope.

4. Courage; bravery; resolution; fortitude.
Nothing so hard but his valour overcame;
which he so guided with virtue, that although no man was spoken of but he for manhood, he was called the courteous Amphialus. Sidney.

MAN'AC. } adj. [from maniacus, Lat.]

Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not;
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it. Shakesp.
He that loveth me I will love him, and manifest myself to him Johu, xiv. 21.
He was pleas'd himself to assume, and manifest his will in our flesh, and so not only as God from heaven, but God visible on earth, to preach reformation among us. Hammond.
This perverse commotion
Must manifest thee worthiest to be heir
Of all things. Milton's Par. Lost.
Were he not by law withstood,
He'd manifest his own inhuman blood. Dryden.
It may be part of our employment in eternity, to contemplate the works of God, and give him
the glory of his wisdom manifested in the creation.
Ray on the Creation.

MAN'IFESTA'TION. n. s. [manifestation, Fr from manifest.] Discovery; publication; clear evidence.
Though there be a kind of natural right in the noble, wise, and virtuous, to govern them which are of servile disposition; nevertheless, for manifestation of this their right, the assent of them who are to be governed seemeth necessary. Hooker.
As the nature of God is excellent, so likewise is it to know him in those glorious manifestations of himself in the works of creation and providence.
Tillotson.
The secret manner in which acts of mercy ought to be performed, requires this public manifestation of them at the great day. Atterbury.

MAN'IFESTIBLE. adj. [properly manifestable.] Easy to be made evident.

A most intelligency bawd! Shak. Winter's Tale.

MA'NLIKE. adj. [man and like.] Having the complexion and proper qualities of man.
Such a right manlike man, as nature often erring, yet shews she would fain make. Sidney.

MA'NLESS. adj. [man and less.] Without men; not manned.
Sir Walter Raleigh was wont to say, the Spaniards were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more but a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon the Armada at Calais by the favour of the wind in the night, that put them in such terror, as they cut their cables. Bacon.

MA'NLINESS. n. s. [from manly.] Dignity; bravery; stoutness.
Young master, willing to shew himself a man, lets himself loose to all irregularities; and thus courts credit and manliness in the casting off the modesty he has till then been kept in. Locke.

MA'NLY. adj. [from man.]
1. Manlike; becoming a man; firm; brave; stout; undaunted; undismayed.
As did Aeneas old Anchises hear,
So I bear thee upon my manly shoulders. Shakesp.

With a reed voice; and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

MA'NLY. adv. [from man.] With courage like a man.

MA'NNA. n. s.
Manna is properly a gum, and is honey-like juice concreted into a solid form, seldom so dry but it adheres to the fingers: its colour is whitish, or brownish, and it has sweetness, and with it a sharpness that renders it agreeable; manna is the product of two different trees, both varieties of the ash: when the heats are free from rain, these trees exsude a white juice. It is but lately that the world were convinced of the mistake of manna being an aerial produce, by covering a tree with sheets in the manna season, and the finding as much manna on it as on those which were open to the air. Hill.
It would be well inquired, whether manna doth fall but upon certain herbs, or leaves only. Bacon.
The manna in heaven will suit every man's palate. Locke.

MA'NNER. n. s. [maniere, Fr.]
1. Form; method.
In my divine Emilia make me blest.

Possession, more than conquest, is my care. Dryden.

2. Custom; habit; fashion.
As the manner of some is. New Testament.

3. Certain degree.
It is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath dispatched;
To the sea-side. Shakesp. King John.
The bread is in a manner common. 1 Sam. xxi. 5.

If the envy be general in a manner upon all the ministers of an estate, it is truly upon the state itself. Bacon's Essays.

This universe we have possess'd, and rul'd
In a manner at our will, th' affairs of earth. Milton.
Augustinus does in a manner confess the charge. Baker.

4. Sort; kind.

All manner of men assembled here in arms against God's peace and the king's: we charge you to repair to your dwelling-places. Shak. Henry VI.
A love that makes breath poor, and speech unable:
Beyond all manner of so much I love you. Shakesp.
What manner of men were they whom ye slew? Judges.

The city may flourish in trade, and all manner of outward advantages. Atterbury.

5. Mien; cast of the look.

Air and manner are more expressive than words. Clarissa.

Some men have a native dignity in their manner, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

6. Peculiar way; distinct mode of person.

It can hardly be imagined how great a difference was in the humour, disposition, and manner, of the army under Essex, and the other under Waller. Clarendon.

Some few touches of your lordship, which I have endeavour'd to express after your manner, have made whole poems of mine to pass with approbation. Dryden's Juvenal.

As man is known by his company, so a man's company may be known by his manner of expressing himself. Swift.

7. Way; mode: of things.

The temptations of prosperity insinuate themselves after a gentle, but very powerful, manner. Atterbury.

8. Manners in the plural: character of the mind.

His princes are as much distinguished by their manners as by their dominions; and even those among them, whose characters seem wholly made up of courage, differ from one another as to the particular kinds. Addison.

9. General way of life; morals; habits.

The kinds of music have most operation upon manners: as, to make them warlike; to make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.

Every fool carries more or less in his face the signature of his manners, more legible in some than others. L'Estrange.

We bring our manners to the blest abodes,
And think what pleases us must please the gods. Dryden.

10. [In the plural.] Ceremonious behaviour; studied civility.

The time will not allow the compliment,
Which very manners urge. Shakesp. K. Lear.
These bloody accidents must excuse my manners,

That so neglected you. Shakesp. Othello.
Our griefs and not our manners reason now. Shakesp.

Ungracious wretch,
Fit for the mountains and the barbarous caves,
Where manners ne'er were preach'd. Shakesp.

Dear Kate, you and I cannot be confined within the weak list of a country's fashion: we are the makers of manners, Kate. Shakesp.

Good manners bound her to invite
The stranger dame to be her guest that night. Dry.

None but the careless and the confident would rush rudely into the presence of a great man: and shall we, in our applications to the great God, take that to be religion, which the common reason of mankind will not allow to be manners? South.

Your passion bends
Its force against your nearest friends;
Which manners, decency, and pride,
Have taught you from the world to hide. Swift.

11. To take in the Manner. To catch in the actual commission of a crime.

If I melt into melancholy while I write, I shall be taken in the manner; and I sit by one too tender to these impressions. Donne.

MA'NNERLINESS. n. s. [from mannerly.] Civility; ceremonious complaisance.

Others out of mannerliness and respect to God, though they deny this universal soul of the universe, yet have devised several systems of the universe. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MA'NNERLY. adj. [from manner.] Civil; ceremonious; complaisant.

Tut; tut; here's a mannerly forbearance. Shak.
Tut me have
What thou think'st meet, and is most mannerly. Shakesp.

Fools make a mock at sin, affront the God whom we serve, and vilify religion; not to oppose them, by whatever mannerly names we may palliate the offence, is not modesty but cowardice, and a traitorous desertion of our allegiance to Christ. Rogers.

MA'NNERLY. adv. Civilly; without rudeness.

When we've supp'd,
We'll mannerly demand of thee thy story. Shakesp.

MA'NNIKIN. n. s. [man and klein, Germ.] A little man; a dwarf.

MA'NNISH. adj. [from man.] Having the appearance of a man; bold; masculine; impudent.

Nature had proportioned her without any fault; yet altogether seem'd not to make up that harmony that Cupid delights in; the reason whereof might seem a mannish countenance, which overthrew that lovely sweetness, the noblest power of womankind, far fitter to prevail by parity than by battle. Sidney.

A woman, impudent an mannish gown,
Is not more lath'd than an effeminate man. Shak.
When mannish Mevia, that two-handed whore, Astride on horseback hunts the Tuscan bar. Dry.

MA'NOR. n. s. [manoir, old Fr. manorium, low Lat. mauer, Armorick.]

Manor signifies, in common law, a rule or government which a man hath over such a hold land within his fee. Touching the original of those manors, it seems, that, in the beginning, there was a certain compass of ground granted by the king to some man of worth, for him and his heirs to dwell upon, and to exercise some jurisdiction, more or less, within that compass, as he thought good to grant; performing him such services, and paying such yearly rent for the same, as he by his grant required: and that afterward this great man parcelled his land to other meaner men, injoining them again such services and rents as he thought good; and by that means, as he became tenant to the king, so the inferiors became tenants to him: but those great men, or their posterity, have alienated these manors and lands so given them by their prince, and many for capital offences have forfeited them to the king; and thereby they still remain in the crown, or are bestowed again upon others. But whosoever possesses these manors, the liberty belonging to them is real and predial, and therefore remains, though the owners be changed. In these days, a manor rather signifies the jurisdiction and royalty incorporeal, than the land or site: for a man may have a manor in gross, as the law terms it, that is, the right and interest of a court-baron, with the perquisites thereto belonging. Cowell.

My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
Ev'n now forsake me; and of all my lands
Is nothing left me. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Kinsmen of mine,
By this so sicken'd their estates, that never They shall abound as formerly. O many Have broke their backs with laying manors on them
For this great journey. Shakesp. Rich. II.

MANQU'ELLER. n. s. [man and epellan, Sax.] A murderer; a mankiller; a manslayer.

2. Place of residence; abode; house.

All these are but ornaments of that divine spark within you, which being descended from heaven, could not elsewhere pick out so sweet a mansion. Sidney.

A fault no less grievous, if so be it were true, than if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

To leave his wife, to leave his babes,
His mansion, and his titles, in a place
From whence himself does fly! he loves us not. Shakesp.

Thy mansion wants thee, Adam; rise,
First man, of men innumerable ordain'd;
First father! called by thee, I come thy guide
To the garden of bliss, thy seat prepar'd. Milton.

A mansion is provided thee; more fair
Than this, and worthy Heaven's peculiar care,
Not fram'd of common earth. Dryden.

3. Residence; abode.

These poets near our princes sleep,
And in one grave their mansions keep. Denham.

Thou wilt beneath the burthen bow, And glad receive the manumitting blow On thy shav'd slavish head. Dryden's Juvenal.

MANURABLE. adj. [from manure.] Capable of cultivation. This book gives an account of the manurable lands in every manor. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

MANURANCE. n. s. [from manure.] Agriculture; cultivation. An obsolete word, worthy of revival. Although there should none of them fall by the sword, yet they being kept from manurance, and their cattle from running abroad, by this hard restraint they would quickly devour one another. Spenser on Ireland.

To MANURE. v. a. [manourrer, Fr.] 1. To cultivate by manual labour. They mock our scant manuring, and require More hands than ours to lop their wanton growth. Milton.

2. To dung; to fatten with composts. Fragments of shells, reduced by the agitation of the sea to powder, are used for the manuring of land. Woodward.

3. To fatten as a compost. Revenge her slaughter'd citizens, Or share their fate: the corps of half her senate Manure the fields of Thessaly, while we Sit here, deliberating in cold debates. Addison.

MAN'URE. n. s. [from the verb.] Soil to be laid on lands; dung or compost to fatten land. When the Nile from Pharian fields is fled, The fat manure with heav'nly fire is warm'd. Dryden.

Mud makes an extraordinary manure for land that is sandy. Mortimer's Husband.

1. Stone used in statues and elegant buildings, capable of a bright polish, and in a strong heat calcining into lime.

He plies her hard, and much rain wears the marble.

Thou marble hew'st, ere long to part with breath, And house-rear'st unmindful of thy death.

Some dry their corn infected with the brine, Then grind with marbles, and prepare to dine.

The two flat sides of two pieces of marble will more easily approach each other, between which there is nothing but water or air, than if there be a diamond between them; not that the parts of the diamond are more solid, but because the parts of water, being more easily separable, give way to the approach of the two pieces of marble.

2. Little balls supposed to be of marble, with which children play.

Marbles taught them percussation, and the laws of motion; natcrackers the use of the lever.

3. A stone remarkable for the sculpture or inscription: as, the Oxford marbles.

MA'RBLE. adj.

1. Made of marble.

Pignation's fate revert is mine, His marble love took flesh and blood, All that I worshipp'd as divine, That beauty, now 'tis understood, Appears to have no more of life, Than that whereof he fram'd his wife.

2. Variegated, or stained like marble.

Shall I see far-fetched inventions? shall I labour to lay marble colours over my ruinous thoughts? or rather, though the purity of my virgin mind be stained, let me keep the true simplicity of my word. The appendix shall be printed by itself, stitched, and with a marble cover.

To MA'RBLE. v. a. [marbrer, Fr. from the noun.] To variegate, or vein like marble.

Very well sleeked marbled paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall with an equal diffusion.

MARBLEHEARTED. adj. [marble and heart.] Cruel; insensible; hardhearted.

Ingratitude! thou marblehearted fiend, More hideous, when thou shew'st thee in a child, Than the sea monster.

MARCASTITE. n. s.

The term marcasite has been very improperly used by some for bismuth, and by others for zink: the more accurate writers however always express a substance different from either of these by it, sulphureous and metallic. The marcasite is a solid hard fossil, naturally found among the veins of ores, or in the fissures of stone: the variety of forms this mineral puts on is almost endless. There are however only three distinct species of it; one of a bright gold colour, another of a bright silver, and a third of a dead white: the silvery one seems to be peculiarly meant by the writers on the Materia Medica. Marcasite is very frequent in the mines of Cornwall, where the workmen call it mundick, but more in Germany, where they extract vitriol and sulphur from it.

The writers of minerals give the name pyrites and marcasites indifferently to the same sort of body: I restrain the name of pyrites wholly to the nodules, or those that are found lodged in strata that are separate: the marcasite is part of the matter that either constitutes the stratum, or is lodged in the perpendicular fissures. The acid salt dissolved in water is the same with oil of sulphur per campanam, and abounding much in the bowels of the earth, and particularly in marcasites, unites itself to the other ingredients of the marcasite, which are bitumen, iron, copper, and earth, and with them compounds alum, vitriol, and sulphur: with the earth alone it compounds alum; with the metal alone, and metal and earth together, it compounds vitriol; and with the bitumen and earth it compounds sulphur: whence it comes to pass, that marcasites abound with those three minerals.

Here marcasites in various figures wait, To ripen to a true metallic state.

MARCH. n. s. [from Mars.] The third month of the year.

March is drawn in tawny, with a fierce aspect, a helmet upon his head, to shew this month was dedicated to Mars.

To MARCH. v. n. [marcher, Fr. varicare, Menage; from Mars, Junius.]

1. To move in military form.

Well march we on, To give obedience where 'tis truly ow'd. He marched in battle array with his power against Arbaxad. Maccabeus marched forth, and slew five-and-twenty thousand persons.

My father, when some days before his death He order'd me to march for Utica, Wept o'er me.

2. To walk in a grave, deliberate, or stately manner.

Plexirtus finding that if nothing else, famine would at last bring him to destruction, thought better by humbleness to creep where by pride he could not march. Doth York intend no harm to us, That thus he marcheth with thee arm in arm?

Our bodies ev'ry footstep that they make, March towards death, until at last they die.

Like thee, great son of Jove, like thee, When clad in rising majesty, Thou marchest down o'er Delos' hills. The power of wisdom march'd before.

To MARCH. v. a.

1. To put in military movement.

Cyrus marching his army for divers days over mountains of snow, the dazzling splendor of its whiteness prejudiced the sight of very many of his soldiers.

2. To bring in regular procession.

March them again in fair array, And bid them form the happy day; The happy day design'd to wait On William's fame, and Europe's fate.

MARCH. n. s. [marcher, Fr.]

1. Military movement; journey of soldiers.

These troops came to the army harassed with a long and wearisome march, and cast away their arms and garments, and fought in their shifts.

Who should command, by his Almighty nod, These chosen troops, unconscious of the road, And unacquainted with th' appointed end, Their marches to begin, and thither tend.

2. Grave and solemn walk.

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join } The varying verse, the full resounding line, } The long majestic march, and energy divine. }

3. Deliberate or laborious walk.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to gain the top of it.

4. Signals to move.

The drums presently striking up a march, they make no longer stay, but forward they go directly.

5. Marches, without singular. [marcu, Goth, maep, Sax. marche, Fr.] Borders; limits; confines.

They of those marches Shall be a wall sufficient to defend Our inland from the pilfering borderers. The English colonies were enforced to keep continual guards upon the borders and marches round them.

It is not fit that a king of an island should have any marches or borders but the four seas.

MA'RCHER. n. s. [from marcheur, Fr.]

President of the marches or borders.

Many of our English lords made war upon the Welshmen at their own charge; the lands which they gained they held to their own use; they were called lords marchers, and had royal liberties.

MA'RCHIONESS. n. s. [feminine, formed by adding the English female termination to the Latin marchio.] The wife of a marquis.

The king's majesty Does purpose honour to you, no less flowing Than marchioness of Pembroke.

From a private gentleman he made me a marchioness, and from a marchioness a queen, and now he intends to crown my innocency with the glory of martyrdom.

The lady marchioness, his wife, solicited very diligently the timely preservation of her husband.

MA'RCHPANE. n. s. [massepance, Fr.] A kind of sweet bread or biscuit.

Along whose ridge such bones are met, Like comfits round in marchpane set.

MA'RCID. adj. [marcidus, Lat.] Lean; pining; withered.

A burning colliquative fever, the softer parts being melted away, the heat continuing its adustion upon the drier and fleshy parts, changes into a marcid fever.

He on his own fish pours the noblest oil; That to your marcid dying herbs assign'd, By the rank smell and taste betrays its kind.

MA'RRCOUR. n. s. [marcor, Lat.] Leanness; the state of withering; waste of flesh.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing the action of venery in some, the extenuation and marcour in others, it much abridgeth our days.

A marcour is either imperfect, tending to a lesser withering, which is curable; or perfect, that is, an entire wasting of the body, excluding all means of cure.

MARE. n. s. [mape, Sax.]

1. The female of a horse.

A pair of coursers born of heav'nly breed, Whom Circe stole from her celestial sire, By substituting mares, produc'd on earth, Whose wombs conceiv'd a more than mortal birth.

2. [From mara, the name of a spirit imagined by the nations of the north to torment sleepers.] A kind of torpor or stagnation, which seems to press the stomach with a weight; the night hag.

Mah, his merry queen by night, B. strides young folks that lie upright, In elder times the mare that light, Which plagues them out of measure.

Mushrooms cause the incubus, or the mare in the stomach.

MA'RESCHAL. n. s. [mareschal, Fr. derived by Junius from mare, the female of an horse.] A chief commander of an army.

O William, may thy arms advance, That he may lose Dinant next year, And so be mareschal of France.

At him so fiercely, that the upper marge
Of his sevenfold shield away it took. Fairy Queen.
Never since

Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
Or on the beached margin of the sea. Shakesp.

An airy crowd came rushing where he stood,
Which fill'd the margin of the fatal flood. Druden.

2. The edge of a page left blank, or filled with a short note.

As much love in rhyme,
As would he cram'd up in a sheet of paper
Writ on both sides the leaf, margin and all.

Reconcile those two places, which both you and the margins of our bibles acknowledge to be parallel. Hammond.

He knows in law, nor text, nor margin. Swift.

3. The edge of a wound or sore.
All the advantage to be gathered from it is only from the evenness of its margin, the purpose will be as fully answered by keeping that under only.

MARGINAL. adj. [marginal, Fr. from margin.] Placed, or written on the margin.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of these words than pope Leo himself expoundeth them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

What remarks you find worthy of your riper observation note with a marginal star, as being worthy of your second year's review. Watts.

MARGINATED. adj. [marginatus, Lat. from margin.] Having a margin.

Shakesp.

Whom nothing can procure, When the wide world runs bias from his will, To writhe his limbs, and share, not mend the ill: This is the marksman, safe and sure, Who still is right, and prays to be so still.

Herbert.

An ordinary marksman may know certainly when he shoots less wide at what he aims.

Dryden.

MARL. n. s. [marl, Welsh; mergel, Dut. marga, Lat. marle, marne, Fr. in Sax. meng is marrow, with an allusive signification, marle being the fatness of the earth.]

Marl is a kind of clay, which is become fatter, and of a more enriching quality, by a better fermentation, and by its having lain so deep in the earth as not to have spent or weakened its fertilizing quality by any product. Marl is supposed to be much of the nature of chalk, and is believed to be fertile from its salt and oily quality.

Quincy.

We understand by the term marls simple native earths, less heavy than the boles or clays, not soft and unctuous to the touch, nor ductile while moist, dry and crumbly between the fingers, and readily diffusible in water.

Hill.

Marl is the best compost, as having most fatness, and not heating the ground too much.

Bacon.

Uneasy steps Over the burning marl, not like those steps On heaven's azure.

Milton.

To MARL. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with marl.

The marriage with his brother's wife Has crept too near his conscience. Shakesp.

If that thy bent of love be honourable, Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-morrow. Shakesp.

The French king would have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception, that he should not marry her himself. Bacon.

Some married persons, even in their marriage, do better please God than some virgins in their state of virginity: they, by giving great example of conjugal affection, by preserving their faith unbroken, and by educating children in the fear of God, please God in a higher degree than those virgins whose piety is not answerable to their opportunities. Taylor.

I propose that Palamon shall be
 In marriage join'd with beautiful Emily. Dryd.

MARRIAGE is often used in composition. In a late draught of marriage-articles, a lady stipulated with her husband, that she shall be at liberty to patch on which side she pleases. Addison's Spectator.

I by the honour of my marriage-bed,
 After young Arthur claim this land for mine. Shakesp.

To these whom death again did wed,
 This grave's the second marriage-bed,
 For though the hand of fate could force
 Twixt soul and body a divorce,
 It could not sever man and wife,
 Because they both liv'd but one life. Crashaw.

There on his arms and once-lov'd portrait lay,
 Thither our fatal marriage-bed convey. Denham.
 Thou shalt come into the marriage-chamber. Tib. vi. 16.

Neither her worthiness, which in truth was great, nor his own suffering for her, which is wont to endear affection, could fetter his fickleness; but, before the marriage-day appointed he had taken to wife Baccha, of whom she complained. Sidney.
 Virgin, awake! the marriage-hour is nigh. Pope.
 Give me, to live and die,
 A spotless maid, without the marriage-tie. Dryd.

MARRIAGEABLE. adj. [from marriage.]

1. Fit for wedlock; of age to be married. Every wedding, one with another, produces four children, and that is the proportion of children, which any marriageable man or woman may be presumed shall have. Granul.

I am the father of a young heiress, whom I begin to look upon as marriageable. Spectator.
 When the girls are twelve years old, which is the marriageable age, their parents take them home. Swift.

Thus have you shut'n'd the married state. Dry.

MARROW. n. s. [μερρ, Sax. smerr, Erse; smerrgh, Scott.]

All the bones of the body which have any considerable thickness have either a large cavity, or they are spongy, and full of little cells: in both the one and the other there is an oleaginous substance, called marrow, contained in proper vesicles or membranes, like the fat: in the larger bones this fine oil, by the gentle heat of the body, is exhaled through the pores of its small bladders, and enters some narrow passages, which lead to some fine canals excavated in the substance of the bone, that the marrow may supple the fibres of the bones, and render them less apt to break. Quincy.

Would he were wasted, marrow, bones, and all
 That from his loins no hopeful branch may spring. Shakesp.

The skull hath brains as a kind of marrow within it: the back bone hath one kind of marrow,— and other bones of the body have another: the jaw-bones have no marrow severed, but a little pulp of marrow diffused. Bacon.

Pamper'd and edify'd their zeal
 With marrow puddings many a meal. Hudibras.

He bit the dart, and wrench'd the wood away,
 The point still buried in the marrow lay. Addison.

MARROW, in the Scottish dialect, to this day, denotes a fellow, companion, or associate; as also equal match, he met with his marrow. [mar, husband, Fr.]

Though buying and selling doth wonderful wel,
 Yet chopping and changing I cannot commend
 With thee or his marrow for fear of ill end. Tusser.

1. Bone boiled for the marrow.

2. In burlesque language, the knees.

Upon this he fell down upon his marrowbones, and begged of Jupiter to give him a pair of horns. L'Estrange.

Down on your marrowbones, upon your allegiance; and make an acknowledgment of your offences; for I will have ample satisfaction. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

MARROWFAT. n. s. A kind of pea.

MARROWLESS. adj. [from marrow.] Void of marrow.

Avaunt!
 Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
 Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
 Which thou dost glare with. Shakesp. Macbeth.

TO MARRY. v. a. [marier, Fr. maritor, Lat.]

1. To join a man and woman, as performing the rite.

What! shall the curate controul me? Tell him, that he shall marry the couple himself. Gay's What d'ye call it.

2. To dispose of in marriage.

When Augustus consulted with Mecenas about the marriage of his daughter Julia, Mecenas took the liberty to tell him, that he must either marry his daughter to Agrippa, or take away his life; there was no third way, he had made him so great. Bacon.

3. To take for husband or wife.

You'd think it strange if I should marry her. Shakesp.

As a mother shall she meet him, and receive him as a wife married of a virgin. Eccles. xv. 2.

TO MARRY. v. n. To enter into the conjugal state.

He hath my good will,
 And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. Shakesp.

Let them marry to whom they'll ink best. Numb. xxxvi. 6.

Virgil concludes with the death of Turnus; for after that difficulty was removed, Aeneas might marry, and establish the Trojans. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Miller.

MARSH-MARIGOLD. n. s. [populago, Lat.] This flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose, in the middle of which rises the pointal, which becomes a membranaceous fruit, in which there are several cells, for the most part bent downwards, collected into little heads, and full of seeds. Miller.

And set soft hyacinths with iron-blue,
 To shade marsh-marigolds of shining hue. Dryden.

MARSHAL. n. s. [mareschal, Fr. mareschallus, low Lat. from *mar*scale, old Fr. a word compounded of mare, which, in old French, signified a horse, and scale, a sort of servant; one that has the charge of horses.]

1. The chief officer of arms.

The duke of Suffolk claims
 To be high steward; next the duke of Norfolk
 To be earl marshal. Shakesp.

2. An officer who regulates combats in the lists.

Dares their pride presume against my laws
 As in a listed field to fight their cause?
 Unask'd the royal grant; no marshal by,
 As kingly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

3. Any one who regulates rank or order at a feast, or any other assembly.

Through the hall there walked to and fro
 A jolly yeoman, marshal of the same,
 Whose name was Appetite; he did bestow
 Both guests and meats, whenever in they came,
 And knew them how to order without blame. Fairy Queen.

4. An harbinger; a pursuivant; one who goes before a prince to declare his coming, and provide entertainment.

Her face, when it was fairest, had been but as a marshal to lodge the love of her in his mind, which now was so well placed as it needed no help of outward harbinger. Sidney.

To MARSHAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To arrange; to rank in order.

Multitude of jealousies, and lack of some predominant desire, that should marshal and put in order all the rest, maketh any man's heart hard to find or sound. Bacon.

It is as unconceivable how it should be the directrix of such intricate motions, as that a blind man should marshal an army. Glanville's Scepis.

Anchises look'd not with so pleas'd a face, In numbering o'er his future Roman race, And marshalling the heroes of his name, As in their order next to light they came. Dryd.

2. To lead as an harbinger.

Thou marshallest me the way that I was going. Shakesp.

MA'RTIAL. adj. [martial, Fr. martialis, Lat.]

1. Warlike; fighting; given to war; brave.

Into my feeble breast

Come gently, but not with that mighty rage

Wherewith the martial troops thou dost infest,

And hearts of great heroes dost enrage. F. Queen.

The queen of martials,

And Mars himself conducted them. Chapman.

It hath seldom been seen, that the far southern people have invaded the northern, but contrariwise; whereby it is manifest, that the northern tract of the world is the more martial region. Bacon.

His subjects call'd aloud for war;

But peaceful kings o'er martial people set,

Each other's poize and counterbalance are. Dry.

2. Having a warlike shew; suiting war.

See

His thousands, in what martial equipage

They issue forth! Steel bows and shafts their arms,

Of equal dread in fight or in pursuit. Milton.

When our country's cause provokes to arms,

How martial musick every bosom warms. Pope.

3. Belonging to war; not civil; not according to the rules or practice of peaceable government.

Let his neck answer for it, if there is any martial law in the world. Shakesp. Henry V.

MA'RTLET. } kind of swallow.

This guest of Summer,

The temple-haunting martlet, does at prove,

By his lov'd mansionary, that heaven's breath

Smells wondrously here. No jutting frieze,

Buttrice, nor coigne of vantage, but this bird

Hath made his pendant bed, and procreant cradle.

Where they most breed and haunt, I have observ'd

The air is delicate. Shakesp. Macbeth.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain;

Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,
And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

MA'RTNETS. n. s. They are small lines fastened to the leetch of the sail, to bring that part of the leetch which is next to the yard-arm close up to the yard, when the sail is to be furled. Bailey.

MARTYR. n. s. [μαρτυρ; martyr, Fr.] One who by his death bears witness to the truth.

Prayers and tears may serve a good man's turn; if not to conquer as a soldier, yet to suffer as a martyr. King Charles.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenced. Brown.

Nearer heav'n his virtues shone more bright,
Like rising flames expanding in their height,
The martyr's glory crown'd the soldier's fight. Dryden.

To be a martyr signifies only to witness the truth of Christ: but the witnessing of the truth was then so generally attended with persecution, that martyrdom now signifies not only to witness, but to witness by death. South's Sermons.

The first martyr for Christianity was encouraged, in his last moments, by a vision of that divine person for whom he suffered. Addison.

Secrates,

Truth's early champion, martyr for his God. Thom.

To MARTYR. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To put to death for virtue, or true profession.

2. To murder: to destroy.

You could not beg for grace.

Hark, we citizens, how I mean to martyr you:

This one hard yet is left to cut your throats. Shak.

If to every common funeral,

By your eyes martyr'd, such grace were allow'd,

Your face would wear not patches, but a cloud. Suckling.

Martyr'd with the gout

MARTYRDOM. n. s. [from martyr.] The death of a martyr; the honour of a martyr: testimony born to truth by voluntary submission to death.

If an infidel should pursue to death an heretick professing Christianity only for Christian profession's sake, could we deny unto him the honour of martyrdom? Hooker.

Now that he hath left no higher degree of earthly honour, he intends to crown their innocency with the glory of martyrdom. Bacon.

Here'd, whose unblest

Hand, O! what dares not jealous greatness' tore

A thousand sweet babes from their mother's breast,

The bloom of martyrdom. Crashaw.

Wars, hitherto the only argument

Heroick deem'd, chief mastery to dissect,

With long and tedious travail, fabled knights

In battles feign'd; the better fortitude

Of patience and heroick martyrdom

Unsung. Milton.

What mists of providence are these?

So saints, by supernatural pow'r set free,

Are left at last in martyrdom to die. Dryden.

MARTYROLOGY. n. s. [martyrologe, Fr. martyrologium, Lat.] A register of martyrs.

In the Roman martyrlogy we find at one time many thousand martyrs destroyed by Dioclesian, being met together in a church, rather than escape by offering a little incense at their coming out. Stillingfleet.

MARTYROLOGIST. n. s. [martyrologiste, Fr.] A writer of martyrlogy.

MA'RVEL. n. s. [merveille, Fr.] A wonder; any thing astonishing. Little in use.

A marvel it were, if a man could espy, in the whole scripture, nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable. Hooker.

I am scarce in breath, my lord,
 —No marvel, you have so bestir'd your valour,
 you cowardly rascal! Shakesp. King Lear.
 No marvel
 My lord protector's hawks do towre so well. Shakesp.

MA'RVEL of Peru. n. s. A flower. Ainsworth.

To MA'RVEL. v. n. [merveiller, Fr.] To wonder; to be astonished. Disused.

 Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accompanied. Shakesp.
 The army marvelled at it. Shakesp.
 The countries marvelled at thee for thy songs, proverbs, and parables. Eccles. xvii. 17.

MA'RVELLOUS. adj. [marveilleux, Fr.]

1. Wonderful; strange; astonishing.
 She has a marvellous white hand, I must confess. Shakesp.
 This is the Lord's doing; it is marvellous in our eyes. Psalms.

2. Surpassing credit.
 The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope's Preface to the Iliad.

3. The marvellous is used, in works of criticism, to express any thing exceeding natural power, opposed to the probable.

MA'RVELLOUSLY. adv. [from marvellous.] Wonderfully; strangely.

You look not well, seignior Antonio;
 You have too much respect upon the world;
 They lose it that do buy it with much care.
 Believe me, you are marvellously chang'd. Shakesp.

The encouragement of his too late successes, with which he was marvellously elated. Clarendon.

MA'RVELLOUSNESS. n. s. [from marvellous.] Wonderfulness; strangeness; astonishingness.

MA'SCULINE. adj. [masculin, Fr. masculinus, Lat.]

1. Male; not female.
 Pray God, she prove not masculine ere long! Shakesp.

His long beard noteth the air and fire, the two masculine elements, exercising their operations upon nature, being the feminine. Peacham on Drawing.

O! why did God,
 Creator wise, that peopl'd highest heav'n
 With spirits masculine, create at last
 This novelty on earth, this fair defect
 Of nature? Milton's Parad. Lost.

2. Resembling man; virile; not soft; not effeminate.

You find something bold and masculine in the air and posture of the first figure, which is that of Virtue. Addison.

3. In grammar.] It denotes the gender appropriated to the male kind in any word, though not always expressing sex.

MA'SCULINELY. adv. [from masculine.]

 Mannishness; male figure or behaviour.

MASH. n. s. [masche, Dut.]

1. The space between the threads of a net, commonly written mesh.

To defend against the stings of bees, have a net knit with so small mashes, that a bee cannot get through. Mortimer.

2. Any thing mingled or beaten together into an undistinguished, or confused body. [from mischen, Dut. to mix, or mascher, Fr.]

3. A mixture for a horse.

Put half a peck of ground malt into a pail, then put to it as much scalding water as will wet it well; stir it about for half an hour till the water is very sweet, and give it the horse lukewarm. this mash is to be given to a horse after he has taken a purge, to make it work the better; or in the time of great sickness, or after hard labour. Farrier's Dictionary.

When mares foal, they feed them with mashes, and other moist food. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To MASH. v. a. [mascher, Fr.]

1. To beat into a confused mass.

The pressure would be intolerable, and they would even mash themselves and all things else apieces. More.

To break the claw of a lobster, clap it between the sides of the dining-room door: thus you can do it without mashing the meat. Swift.

2. To mix malt and water together in brewing.

What was put in the first mashing-tub draw off, as also that liquor in the second mashing-tub. Mortimer's Husbandry.

MASK. n. s. [masque, Fr.]

1. A cover to disguise the face; a visor.

Now Love pulled off his mask, and shewed his face unto her, and told her plainly that she was his prisoner. Sidney.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
 And throw her sun-expelling mask away;
 The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
 And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakesp.

Could we suppose that a mask represented never so naturally the general humour of a character, it can never suit with the variety of passions that are incident to every single person in the whole course of a play. Addison on Italy.

2. Any pretence or subterfuge.

Too plain thy nakedness of soul espy'd,
 Why dost thou strive the conscious shame to hide,
 By masks of eloquence, and veils of pride? Prior.

3. A festive entertainment, in which the company is masked.

Will you prepare for this masque to-night? Shak.

4. A revel; a piece of mummery; a wild bustle.

They in the end agreed,
 That at a masque and common revelling,
 Which was ordain'd, they should perform the deed. Daniel.

This thought might lead me through this world's vain mask,
 Content, though blind, had I no other guide. Milt.

5. A dramatick performance, written in a tragick style without attention to rules or probability.
 Thus I have broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets in their pictures, poems, comedies, and masks. Peacham.

To MASK. v. a. [masquer, Fr.]

1. To disguise with a mask or visor.

What will grow of such errors as go masked under the cloke of divine authority, impossible it is that the wit of man should imagine, till time have brought forth the fruits of them. Hooker.

'Tis not my blood
 Wherein thou see'st me mask'd. Shak. Coriolanus.

Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she; But being mask'd he was not sure. Shakesp.

The old Vatican Terence has, at the head of every scene, the figures of all the persons, with their particular disguises; and I saw an antique statue mask'd, which was perhaps designed for Gaitho in the Eunuch, for it agrees exactly with the figure he makes in the manuscript. Addison.

2. To cover; to hide.

I to your assistance do make love,
 Masking the business from the common eye,
 For sundry weighty reasons. Shakesp. Macbeth.

As when a piece of wanton lawn,
 A thin aerial veil is drawn O'er beauty's face, seeming to hide,
 More sweetly shows the blushing bride;
 A soul whose intellectual beams
 No mists do mask, no lazy steams. Crashaw.

To MASK. v. n.

1. To revel; to play the mummer.

'Tis gown? Why, ay; come, taylor, let us see't;
 What masking stuffs here! Shakesp.

Masking habits, and a borrow'd name,
 Contrive to hide my plenitude of shame. Prior.

2. To be disguised any way.

MA'SKER. n. s. [from mask.] One who revels in a mask; a mummer.

Tell false Edward,
 That Lewis of France is sending over maskers,
 To revel it with him and his new bride. Shakesp.

Let the scenes about wit light, and let the maskers that are to come down from the scene have some motions upon the scene before their coming down. Bacon.

The maskers come late, and I think will stay,
 Like fairies, till the cock crow them away. Donne.

MA'SLIN. adj. [corrupted from miscellane.] Composed of various kinds; as maslin bread, made of wheat and rye.

MA'SON. n. s. [maçon, Fr. machio, low Lat.] A builder with stone.

Many find a reason very wittily before the thing be true; that the materials being left rough, are more manageable in the mason's hand than if they had been smooth. Hutton.

A mason that makes a wall, meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and places it in his work. More.

MA'SONRY. n. s. [maçonnerie, Fr.] The craft or performance of a mason.

MASQUERADE. n. s. [from masque.]

1. A diversion in which the company is masked.

What guards the purity of melting maids,
 In courtly balls and midnight masquerades,
 Safe from the treacherous friend, and daring spark,
 The glance by day, the whisper in the dark? Pope.

2. Disguise.

I was upon the frolick this evening, and came to visit thee in a masquerade. Dryden's Span. Fryar.

Truth, of all things the plainest and since est, is forced to gain admittance in disguise, and court us in masquerade. Felton.

To MASQUERADE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To go in disguise.

A freak took an ass in the head, and he goes into the woods, masquerading up and down in a lion's skin. L'Estrange.

2. To assemble in masks.

I find that our art hath not gained much by the happy revival of masquerading among us. Swift.

MASQUERADE. n. s. [from masquerade.] A person in a mask.

The most dangerous sort of cheats are but masqueraders under the visor of friends. L'Estrange.

MASS. n. s. [masse, Fr. massa, Lat.]

1. A body; a lump; a continuous quantity.

If it were not for these principles, the bodies of the earth, planets, comets, sun, and all things in them, would grow cold and freeze, and become inactive masses. Newton's Opticks.

Some passing into their pores, others adhering in lumps or masses to their outsides, so as wholly to cover and involve it in the mass they together constituted. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. A large quantity.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
 Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shakesp.

He discovered to me the richest mines which the Spaniards have, and from whence all the mass of gold that comes into Spain is drawn. Raleigh.

He had spent a huge mass of treasure in transporting his army. Davies on Ireland.

3. Bulk; vast body.
The Creator of the world would not have framed so huge a mass of earth but for some reasonable creatures to have their habitation. Abbot.
This army of such mass and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince. Shak. Haml.

4. Congeries; assemblage indistinct.
The whole knowledge of groupes, of the lights and shadows, and of those masses which Titian calls a bunch of grapes, is, in the prints of Rubens, exposed clearly to the sight. Dryden.
At distance, through an artful glass,
To the mind's eye things well appear;
They lose their forms and make a mass
Confus'd and black, if brought too near. Prior.
Where flowers grow, the ground at a distance seems covered with them, and we must walk into it before we can distinguish the several weeds that spring up in such a beautiful mass of colours. Addison.

5. Gross body; the general; the bulk.
Comets have power over the gross and mass of things; but they are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects. Bacon.
Where'er thou art, he is; th' eternal mind Acts through all places; is to none confin'd:
Fills ocean, earth, and air, and all above,
And through the universal mass does rove. Dryden.
The mass of the people have opened their eyes, and will not be governed by Clodius and Curio. Swift.
If there is not sufficient quantity of blood and strength of circulation, it may infect the whole mass of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

6. [Missa, Lat.] The service of the Romish church.
Burnish'd gold is that manner of gilding which we see in old parchment and mass books, done by monks and priests; who were very expert therein. Peachment on Drawing.
He infers, that then Luther must have been unparadoxically wicked in using masses for fifteen years. Atterbury.

To MASS. v. n. [from the noun.] To celebrate mass.
Their massing furniture they took from the law, lest having an altar and a priest, they should want vestments. Hooker.

To MASS. v. a. [from the noun.] To strengthen once to have signified to thicken; to strengthen.
They feared the French might, with filling or massing the house, or else by fortifying, make such a piece as might amoy the haven. Hayward.

MASSACRE. n. s. [massacre, Fr. from mazzare, Ital.]

1. Carnage; slaughter; butchery; indiscriminate destruction.
Of whom such massacre
Make they, but of their brethren, men of men. Milton.
Slaughter grows murder, when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden.

2. Murder.
The tyrannous and bloody act is done;
The most arch deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of. Shakesp.

To MASSACRE. v. a. [massacrer, Fr. from the noun.] To butcher; to slaughter indiscriminately.
I'll find a day to massacre them all,
And raze their faction and their family. Shakesp.
Christian religion, now crumbled into fractions, may, like dust, be irrecoverably dissipated, if God do not countermine us, or we recover so much sobriety as to forbear to massacre what we pretend to love. Decay of Piety.
After the miserable slaughter of the Jews, at the destruction of Jerusalem, they were scattered into all corners, oppressed and detested, and sometimes massacred and extirpated. Atterbury.

MASSICOT. n. s. [Fr.]
Massicot is ceruss calcined by a moderate degree of fire; of this there are three sorts, arising from the different degrees of fire applied in the operation. White massicot is of a yellowish white, and is that which has received the least calcination; yellow massicot has received more, and gold-colored massicot still more. Trevour.

MASSINESS. } n. s. [from massy, MASSIVENESS. } sive.] Weight; bulk; ponderousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision served in it, than for the massiness of the dish. Hakewill.

MASSIVE. } adj. [massif, Fr.] Heavy; MASSY. } weighty; ponderous; bulky; continuous.
If you would hurt,
Your words are now too massy for your strength,
And will not be uplifted. Shakesp. Tempest.
Perhaps these few stones and slings, used with invocation of the Lord of Hosts, may countervail the massive armour of the uncircumcised Philistine. Government of the Tongue.
No sideboards then with gilded plate were press'd,
No sweating slaves with massive dishes dress'd. Dryden.
The more gross and massive parts of the terrestrial globe, the strata of stone, owe their order to the deluge. Woodward.
If these liquors or glasses were so thick and mossy that no light could get through them, I question not but that they would, like all other opaque bodies, appear of one and the same colour in all positions of the eye. Newton's Opticks.
Th' intrepid Theban hears the bursting sky,
Sees yawning rocks in massy fragments fly,
And views astonish'd from the hills afar,
The floods descending, and the wat'ry war. Pope.

MAST. n. s. [mast, mât, Fr. mætz, Sax.]

1. The beam or post raised above the vessel, to which the sail is fixed.
Ten masts attach'd make not the altitude
That thou hast perpendicularly fallen. Shakesp.
He dropp'd his anchors, and his oars he ply'd;
Furl'd every sail, and drawing down the mast,
His vessel moor'd. Dryden's Homer.

2. The fruit of the oak and beach. It has in this sense no plural termination.
The oaks bear mast, the briars scarlet pins:
The hounteous housewife, nature, on each bush Lays her full mess before you. Shak. Tim. of Ath.
Trees that bear mast, and nuts, are more lasting than those that bear fruits; as oaks and beeches last longer than apples and pears. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
When sheep fed like men upon acorns, a shepherd drove his flock into a little oak wood, and up he went to shake them down some mast. L'Estrange's Fables
The breaking down an old frame of government, and erecting a new, seems like the cutting down an old oak and planting a young one: it is true, the grandson may enjoy the shade and the mast, but the planter, besides the pleasure of imagination, has no other benefit. Temple's Miscellanies.
Wond'ring dolphins o'er the palace glide;
On leaves and mast of mighty oaks they brouze,
And their broad fins entangle in the boughs. Dryd.

MASTED. adj. [from mast.] Furnished with masts.

MASTER. n. s. [mcester, Dut. maistre, Fr. magister, Lat.]

1. One who has servants: opposed to man or servant.
But now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants, and this same myself
Are yours, my lord. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.
Take up thy master. Shakesp. King Lear.
My lord Bassanio gave his ring away Unto the judge that begg'd it;
'The boy, his clerk, begg'd mine;
And neither man or master would take aught
But the two rings. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

2. A director; a governor.
If thou be made the master of a feast, be among them as one of the rest. Ecclus. xxxii. 1.
O thou, my friend, my genius, come along,
Thou master of the poet, and the song. Pope.

3. Owner; proprietor; with the idea of governing.
An orator, who had undertaken to make a panegyrick on Alexander the Great, and who had employed the strongest figures of his rhetoric in the praise of Bocephalus, would do quite the contrary to that which was expected from him; because it would be believed, that he rather took the horse for his subject than the master. Dryden's Dufresney.

4. A lord; a ruler.
Wisdom and virtue are the proper qualifications in the master of a house. Guardian.
There Cæsar, grac'd with both Miervas, shone, Cæsar, the world's great master, and his own. Pope.
Excuse
The pride of royal blood, that checks my soul:
You know, alas! I was not born to kneel,
To sue for pity, and to own a master. Phillips.

5. Chief; head.
Chief master-gunner am I of this town,
Something I must do to procure me grace. Shakesp.
As a wise master-builder I have laid the foundation, and another buildeth thereon. 1 Cor. iii. 10.
The best sets are the heads got from the very tops of the root; the next are the runners, which spread from the master roots. Mortimer's Husb.

6. Possessor.
When I have thus made myself master of a hundred thousand drachms, I shall naturally set myself on the foot of a prince, and will demand the grand vizir's daughter in marriage. Addison.
The duke of Savoy may make himself master of the French dominions on the other side of the Rhone. Addison.

7. Commander of a trading ship.
An unhappy master is he that is made cunning by many shipwrecks; a miserable merchant, that is neither rich nor wise, but after some bankrupts. Ascham's Schoolmaster.
A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap;
Her husband's to Aleppo gone, master o' th' Tyger. Shakesp.

8. One uncontroled.
Let ev'ry man be master of his time Till seven at night. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Great, and increasing; but by sea
He is an absolute master. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

9. A compellation of respect.
Master doctor, you have brought those drugs. Shakesp.
Stand by, my masters, bring him near the king. Shakesp.
Masters, play here, I will content your pains,
Something that's brief; and bid good morrow. Shakesp.

10. A young gentleman.
If gaming does an aged sire entice,
Then my young master swiftly learns the vice. Dryden.
Master lay with his bedchamber towards the south sun; miss lodg'd in a garret, exposed to the north wind. Arbuthnot.
Where there are little masters and misses in a house, they are impediments to the diversions of the servants; the remedy is to bribe them, that they may not tell tales. Swift.

11. One who teaches; a teacher; correlative to scholar or learner.
Very few men are wise by their own counsel, or learned by their own teaching; for he that was only taught by himself had a fool to his master. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.
To the Jews join the Egyptians, the first masters of learning. South.
Masters and teachers should not raise difficulties to their scholars; but smooth their way, and help them forwards. Locke.

12. A man eminently skilful in practice or science.

The great mocking master mock'd not then,
When he said, Truth was buried here below.

Davies.

Spenser and Fairfax, great masters of our language, saw much farther into the beauties of our numbers than those who followed.

Dryden.

A man must not only be able to judge of words and style, but he must be a master of them too; he must perfectly understand his author's tongue, and absolutely command his own.

Dryden.

He that does not pretend to painting, is not touched at the commendation of a master in that profession.

Collier.

No care is taken to improve young men in their own language, that they may thoroughly understand, and be masters of it.

Locke.

Davies.

Then comes some third party, that masters both plaintiff and defendant, and carries away the booty.

L'Estrange.

Honour burns in me, not so fiercely bright,
But pale as firs when master'd by the light.

Dryden.

Obstinaity and wilful neglects must be mastered, even though it costs blows.

Locke on Education.

A man can no more justly make use of another's necessity, than he that has more strength can seize upon a weaker, master him to his obedience, and, with a dagger at his throat, offer him death or slavery.

Locke.

The reformation of an habitual sinner is a work of time and patience: evil customs must be mastered and subdued by degrees.

Calamy's Sermons.

3. To execute with skill.

I do not take myself to be so perfect in the transactions and privileges of Bohemia, as to be fit to handle that part: and I will not offer at that I cannot master.

Bacon.

MA'STERDOM. n. s. [from master.]

Dominion; rule. Not in use.

You shall put

This night's great business into my dispatch,
Which shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom.

Shakesp.

MASTER-HAND. n. s. The hand of a man eminently skilful.

Musick resembles poetry; in each

Dryden.

MASTER-SINEW. n. s.

The master-sinew is a large sinew that surrounds the hough, and divides it from the bone by a hollow place, where the wind-galls are usually seated, which is the largest and most visible sinew in a horse's body; this oftentimes is relaxed or restrained.

Furrier's Dictionary.

MASTER-STRING. n. s. Principal string.

He touch'd me
Ev'n on the tender'st point, the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast.

MASTER-STROKE. n. s. Capital performance.

Ye skilful masters of Machaon's race,
Who nature's mazy intricacies trace:
Tell how your search has here eluded been,
How oft amaz'd and ravish'd you have seen
The conduct, prudence, and stupendous art,
And master-strokes in each mechanic part.

Blackmore.

MA'STERLESS. adj. [from master.]

1. Wanting a master or owner.

When all was past he took his forlorn weed,
His silver shield now idle masterless.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

MA'STERY. n. s. [from maîtrise, Fr. from master.]

1. Dominion; rule.

If divided by mountains, they will fight for the mastery of the passages of the tops, and for the towns that stand upon the roots.

Raleigh's Essays.

2. Superiority; pre-eminence.

If a man strive for mastery, yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully.

2 Tim. ii. 5.

This is the case of those that will try mastery with their superiors, and bite that which is too hard.

L'Estrange.

Good men I suppose to live in a state of mortification, under a perpetual conflict with their bodily appetites, and struggling to get the mastery over them.

Atterbury.

3. Skill; dexterity.

Chief masterly to dissect,
With long and tedious havock, fabled knights
In battles feign'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

He could attain to a mastery in all languages, and found the depths of all arts and sciences.

Tillotson.

To give sufficient sweetness, a mastery in the language is required: the poet must have a magazine of words, and have the art to manage his few vowels to the best advantage.

Dryden.

4. Attainment of skill or power.

The learning and mastery of a tongue being unpleasant in itself, should not be cumbered with other difficulties.

Locke.

MA'STFUL. adj. [from mast.] Abounding in mast, or fruit of oak, beech, or chesnut.

Some from seeds inclin'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut mates the skies.

Dryden.

MASTICATION. n. s. [from masticatio, Lat.]

The act of chewing.

In birds there is no mastication, or comminution of the meat in the mouth; but in such as are not carnivorous it is immediately swallowed into the crop or craw, and thence transferred into the gizzard.

Ray on the Creation.

Mastication is a necessary preparation of solid aliment, without which there can be no good digestion.

Arbuthnet.

MA'STICATORY. n. s. [from masticatoire, Fr.]

A medicine to be chewed only, not swallowed.

Remember masticatories for the mouth.

Bacon.

Salivation and masticatories evacuate considerably; salivation many pints of phlegm in a day, and very much by chewing tobacco.

Floyer on Hum.

MA'STICH. n. s. [from mastic, Fr.]

1. A kind of gum gathered from the trees of the same name in Scio.

We may apply interipients upon the temples of mastich; frontals may also be applied.

Wiseman.

2. A kind of mortar or cement.

As for the small particles of brick and stone, the least moistness would join them together, and turn them into a kind of mastich, which those insects could not divide.

Addison.

MA'STICOT. n. s. [marum, Lat.] See MA'SSICOT.

Grind your masticot with saffron in gum water.
Peacham.

Masticot is very light because it is a very clear yellow, and very near to white. Dryden's Dufres.

MA'STIFF. n. s. mastives, plural. [mastin, Fr. mastino, Ital.] A dog of the largest size; a bandog; dog kept to watch the house.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore, Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore.
Spenser.

When rank Thersites opes his mastiff jaws,
We shall hear musick, wit, and oracle. Shakesp.
When we knock at a farmer's door, the first answer shall be his vigilant mastiff.
More's Antidote against Atheism.

Soon as Ulysses near th' enclosure drew,
With open mouths the furious mastives flew. Pope.
Let the mastiffs amuse themselves about a sheep's skin stuffed with hay, provided it will keep them from worrying the flock. Swift.

MA'STLESS. adj. [from mast.] Bearing no mast.

Her shining hair, uncomb'd, was loosely spread,
A crown of mastless oak adorn'd her head. Dryd.

MA'STLIN. n. s. [from msler, Fr. to mingle; or rather corrupted from miscellane.] Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye.

The tother for one lofe hath twaine
Of maslin, of rie and of wheat. Tusser's Hush.

MAT. n. s. [ματτα, Sax. matta, Ger. matta, Lat.] A texture of sedge, flags, or rushes.

The women and children in the west of Cornwall make mats of a small and fine kind of bents three growing, which serve to cover floors and walls. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

In the worst inn's worst room, with mat half hung,

The floors of plaister, and the walls of dung Pope.

To MAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with mats.

Keep the doors and windows of your conservatories well matted and guarded from the piercing air. Evelyn's Kalendar.

2. To twist together; to join like a mat.

I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was plated;
The banks with daffadillies dight,
With grass like sleeve was matted. Drayton.

Sometimes beneath an ancient oak,
Or on the matted grass he lies;

No god of sleep he did invoke:
The stream that o'er the pebbles flies,
With gentle slumber crows his eyes. Dryden.

He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eye-brows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

The spleen consisteth of muscular fibres, all matted, as in the skin, but in more open work. Grew's Cosmol.

MATADORE. n. s. [matador a murderer, Spau.] One of the three principal cards in the games of ombre and quadrille, which are always the two black aces, and the deuce in spades and clubs, and the seventh in hearts and diamonds.

Now move to war her sable matadores,
In show like leaders of the swarthy Mours. Pope.

MATACHIN. n. s. [Fr.] An old dance.

Who ever saw a matachin dance to imitate fighting; this was a fight that did imitate the matachin; for they being but three that fought, every one had two adversaries striking him, who struck the third. Sidney.

MATCH. n. s. [meche, Fr. miccia, Ital.]

probably from mico to shine, Lat. surely not, as Skinner conjectures, from the Sax. maca a companion, because a match is companion to a gun.]

1. Any thing that catches fire; generally a card, rope, or small chip of wood dipped in melted sulphur.

Try them in several bottles matches, and see which of them last longest without stench. Bacon.

He made use of trees as matches to set Druina a fire. Howel.

Being willing to try something that would not cherish much fire at once, and would keep fire much longer than a coal, we took a piece of match, such as soldiers use. Boyle.

2. [From μαχη a fight; or from maca, Sax. one equal to another.] A contest; a game; any thing in which there is contest or opposition.

Shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some pretty match with shedding tears? Shakesp.

The goat was mine, by singing fairly wot.
A solemn match was made; he lost the prize. Dryden.

3. [From maca, Sax.] One equal to another; one able to contest with another.

Government mitigates the inequality of power, and makes an innocent man, though of the lowest rank, a match for the mightiest of his fellow-subjects. Addison.

The old man has met with his match. Spectator.

The natural shame that attends vice, makes them zealous to encourage themselves by numbers, and form a party against religion: it is with pride they survey their increasing strength, and begin to think themselves a match for virtue. Rogers.

4. One that suits or tallies with another.

5. A marriage.

The match
Were rich and honourable; besides, the gentleman
Is full of virtue, bounty, worth, and qualities, Beseeeming such a wife as your fair daughter. Shakesp.

Love doth seldom suffer itself to be confined by other matches than those of its own making. Boyle.

With him she strove to join Lavinia's hand,
But dire portents the purpos'd match withstand. Dryden.

6. One to be married.

She inherited a fair fortune of her own, and was very rich in a personal estate, and was looked upon as the richest match of the West. Clarendon.

To MATCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To be equal to.

No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Shakesp.

O thou, good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. To shew an equal.

No history or antiquity can match his policies and his conduct. South.

3. To oppose as equal.

Eternal might
To match with their inventions they presum'd
So easy, and of his thunder made a scorn. Milt.

What though his heart be great, his actions gallant,
He wants a crown to poise against a crown,
Birth to match birth, and power to balance power. Dryden.

The shepherd's kalendar of Spenser is not to be matched in any modern language. Dryden.

4. To suit; to proportion.

Let poets match their subject to their strength,
And often try what weight they can support. Roscommon.

Mine have been still Match'd with my birth; a younger brother's hopes. Rowe.

Employ their wit and humour in chusing and matching of patterns and colours. Swift.

5. To marry; to give in marriage.

Great king,
I would not from your love make such a stray,
To match you where I hate. Shakesp. King Lear.
Thou dost protest thy love, and would'st it show
By matching her, as she would match her foe. Donne.

Them willingly they would have still retain'd,
And match'd outo the prince. Daniel's Civil War.

When a man thinks himself match'd to one who should be a comfort to him, instead thereof he finds in his bosom a beast. South.

A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king. Addison.

To MATCH. v. n.

1. To be married.

A thing that may luckily fall out to him that hath the blessing to match with some heroic-minded lady. Sidney.

I hold it a sin to match in my kindred. Shakesp.
Let tygers match with hinds, and wolves with sheep,

And every creature couple with his foe. Dryden.
All creatures else are much unworthy thee,
They match'd, and thou alone art left for me. Dryden.

2. To suit; to be proportionate; to tally.

MATCHABLE. adj. [from match.]

1. Suitable; equal; fit to be joined.

Ye, whose high worths surpassing paragon,
Could not on earth have found one fit for mate,
Ne but in heaven matchable to none, Spenser.

2. Correspondent.

Those at land that are not matchable with any upon our shores, are of those very kinds which are found no where but in the deepest parts of the sea. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

MATCHLESS. adj. [from match.] Having no equal.

This happy day two lights are seen,
A glorious saint, a matchless queen. Haller.

Much less, in arms, oppose thy matchless force,
When thy sharp spurs shall urge thy foaming horse. Dryden.

MATCHLESSLY. adv. In a manner not to be equalled.

MATCHLESSNESS. n. s. [from matchless.]

State of being without an equal.

MATCHMAKER. n. s. [match and make.]

1. One who contrives marriages.

You came to him to know
If you should carry me, or no;
And would have hir'd him and his imps,
To be your matchmakers and pimps. Hudibras.

2. One who makes matches to burn.

MATE. n. s. [maca, Sax. maet, Dut.]

1. A husband or wife.

I that am frail flesh and earthly wight,
Unworthy mate for such immortal mate,
Myself well wote, and mine unequal fate. Fairy Queen.

2. A companion, male or female.

Go, base intruder! over-weening slave!
Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. Shakesp.

My competitor
In top of all design, my mate in empire, Friend and companion in the front of war. Shakesp.

You knew me once no mate
For you; there sitting where you durst not soar. Milton.

Damon, behold yon breaking purple cloud;
Hear'st thou not hymns and songs divinely loud;
There mounts Amyntas, the young cherubs play
About their godlike mate, and sing him on his way. Dryden.

Leave thy bride alone:
Go, leave her with her maiden mates to play
At sports more harmless, till the break of day. Dryden.

3. The male or female of animals.

Part single, or with mate,
Grazed the sea-weed their pasture, and through groves
Of coral stray. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Pliny tells us, that elephants know no copulation with any other than their own proper mate.
Ayliffe.

4. One that sails in the same ship.
What vengeance on the passing fleet she pour'd,
The master frighted, and the mates devour'd.
Roscommon.

5. One that eats at the same table.
6. The second in subordination in a ship:
as, the master's mate; the chirurgeon's mate.

To MATE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To match; to marry.
Ensample make of him your hapless joy,
And of myself now mated as you see,
Whose prouder vaunt, that proud avenging boy
Did soon pluck down, and curb my liberty.
Fairy Queen.

The hind that would be mated by the lion,
Must die for love. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.

2. To be equal to.
Some from seeds inclos'd on earth arise,
For thus the mastful chesnut mates the skies.
Dryden.

Parnassus is its name; whose forky rise
Mounts through the clouds, and mates the lofty skies:

High on the summit of this dubious cliff,
Deucalion waiving moor'd his little skiff. Dryden.

3. To oppose; to equal.
I'll th' way of loyalty and truth,
Dare mate a sounder man than Surrey can be,
And ail that love his follies. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

4. [Matter, Fr. matar, Span.] To subdue; to confound; to crush. Not in use.

That is good deceit
Which mates him first, that first intends deceit.
Shakesp.
My sense she's mated, and amaz'd my sight.
Shakesp.

Why this is strange; go call the abbess hither;
I think you are all mated, or stark mad. Shakesp.
The great effects that may come of industry and perseverance who knoweth not? For audacity dull almost bind and mate the weaker sort of minds. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

MATERIA. adj. [materiel, Fr. materi- alis, Lat.]

1. Consisting of matter; corporeal; not spiritual.

When we judge, our minds we mirrors make,
And as those glasses which material be,
Forms of material things do only take,
For thoughts or minds in them we cannot see.
Davies.

That these trees of life and knowledge were material trees, though figures of the law and the gospel, it is not doubted by the most religious and learned writers. Raleigh.

2. Important; momentous; essential:
with to before the thing to which relation is noted.

We must propose unto all men certain petitions incident, and very material in causes of this nature. Hooker.

Hold them for catholicks or hereticks, it is not a thing either one way or another, in this question, material. Hooker.

What part of the world soever we fall into, the ordinary use of this very prayer hath, with equal continuance, accompanied the same, as one of the principal and most material duties of honour done to Christ. Hooker.

It may discover some secret meaning and intent therein, very material to the state of that government. Spenser.

The question is not, whether you allow or disallow that hook, neither is it material. Whitgift.
He would not stay at your petitions made;
His business more material. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Neither is this a question of words, but infinitely material in nature. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
I pass the rest, whose every race and name,
And kinds, are less material to my theme. Druid.
As for the more material faults of writing, though
I see many of them, I want leisure to amend them.
Druid n.

I shall, in the account of simple ideas, set down only such as are most material to our present purpose. Locke.

In this material point, the constitution of the English government far exceeds all others. Seyt.

3. Not formal: as, though the material action was the same, it was formally different.

MATERIALS. n. s. [this word is scarcely used in the singular; materialia, Fr.]
The substance of which any thing is made.

The West-Indians, and many nations of the Africans, finding means and materials, have been taught, by their own necessities, to pass rivers in a boat of one tree. Raleigh.

Intending an accurate enumeration of medical materials, the omission hereof affords some probability it was not used by the ancients. Brown.

David, who made such rich provision of mate- rials for the building of the temple, because he had dipt his hands in blood, was not permitted to lay a stone in that sacred pile. South.

That lamp in one of the heathen temples the art of man might make of some such material as the stone abestus, which being once enkindled will burn without being consumed. Wilkins.

The materials of that building very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them.
Tillotson.

Simple ideas, the materials of all our knowledge, are suggested to the mind only by sensation and reflection. Locke.

Such a fool was never found,
Who pull'd a palace to the ground,
Only to have the ruins made Materials for an house decay'd. Swift.

MATERIALIST. n. s. [from material.]
One who denies spiritual substances.

He was bent upon making Memmius a mate- rialist. Dryden.

MATERIALITY. n. s. [materialité, Fr.
from material.] Corporeity; material existence; not spirituality.

Considering that corporeity could not agree with this universal subsistent nature, abstracting from all materiality in his ideas, and giving them an actual subsistence in nature, he made them like angels, whose essences were to be the essence, and to give existence to corporeal individuals; and so each idea was embodied in every individual of its species. Digby.

MATERIALLY. adj. [from material.]

1. In the state of matter.
I do not mean, that any thing is separable from a body by fire that was not materially pre-existent in it. Boyle.

2. Not formally.
Though an ill intention is certainly sufficient to spoil and corrupt an act in itself materially good, yet no good intention whatsoever can rectify or infuse a moral goodness into an act otherwise evil.
South.

3. Importantly; essentially.
All this concerneth the customs of the Irish very materially; as well to reform those which are evil, as to confirm and continue those which are good. Spenser on Ireland.

MATERIALNESS. n. s. [from material.]
State of being material.

MATERIATE. } adj. [materiatas, Lat.]
MATERIATED. } Consisting of matter.

After long enquiry of things in matter interpose some subject which is inmaterial or less material, such as this is of sounds, to the end that the intellect may be rectified, and become not partial. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

MATERIATION. n. s. [from materia,
Lat.] The act of forming matter.

Creation is the production of all things out of nothing; a formation not only of matter but of form, and a materiation even of matter itself.
Brown.

MATERNAL. adj. [materna, Fr. mater- nus, Lat.] Motherly; befitting or pertaining to a mother.

The babe had all that infant care beguiles,
And early knew I is mother in her smiles:
At his first aptness the maternal love
Those rudiments of reason did improve. Dryden.

MATERNIFY. n. s. [maternité, Fr. from maternus, Lat.] The character or relation of a mother.

MAT-FÉLON. n. s. [matter to kill, and felon a thief.]

A species of knap-weed growing wild.
MATHEMATICAL. } adj. [mathema- MATHEMATICK. } ticus, Lat.] Considered according to the doctrine of the mathematicians.

The East and West
Upon the globe, a mathematick point
Only divides: thus happiness and misery,
And all extremes, are still contiguous. Denham.

It is as impossible for an aggregate of finites to comprehend or exhaust one infinite, as it is for the greatest number of mathematick points to amount to, or constitute a b. dy. Boyle.

I suppose all the particles of matter to be situate in an exact and mathematical evenness. Bentley.

MATHEMATICALLY. adv. [from mathe- matick.] According to the laws of the mathematical sciences.

We may be mathematically certain, that the heat of the sun is according to the density of the sunbeams, and is reciprocally proportional to the square of the distance from the body of the sun.
Bentley.

MATHEMATICIAN. n. s. [mathematicus, Lat. mathematicien, Fr.] A man versed in the mathematicks.

One of the most eminent mathematicians of the age assured me, that the greatest pleasure he took in reading Virgil was in examining Aeneas's voyage by the map. Adison's Spectator.

MATHEMATICKS. n. s. [μαθηματικα.]

That science which contemplates whatever is capable of being numbered or measured; and it is either pure or mixt:
pure considers abstracted quantity, without any relation to matter; mixt is interwoven with physical considerations.
Harris.

The mathematicks and the metaph'ysicks
Fall to them, as you find your stomach serves you,
Shakesp.

See mystery to mathematicks fly.
Pope.

MATHES. n. s. [chamaemelum sylvestre.]
An herb. Ainsworth.

MATHESIS. n. s. [μαθησις.] The doctrine of mathematicks.

Mad mathesis alone was use defin'd. Pope.

MATIN. adj. [matin, Fr. matutinus,
Lat.] Morning; used in the morning.

Up rose the victor angels, and to arms
The matin trumpet sung. Milton's Parad. Lost.
I waste the matin lamp in sighs for thee;
Thy image steals between my God and me. Pope.

MATIN. n. s. Morning.

The glow-worm shews the mat'n to be near,
And 'gins to pale his unreflectual fire. Shakesp.

MATINS. n. s. [matins, Fr.] Morning worship.

The winged chorists began
 To chirp their matins. Cleveland.
 By the pontifical, no altar is consecrated without reliques; the vigils are celebrated before them, and the nocturn and matins, for the saints whose the reliques are. Stillingfleet.
 That he should raise his mitred crest on high,
 And clap his wings, and call his family
 To sacred rites; and vex th' etherial powers
 With midnight matins, at unceasing hours. Dryden.

MATRASS. n. s. [matras, Fr.]
Matrass is the frame of a chemical glass vessel made for digestion or distillation, being sometimes bellied, and sometimes rising gradually tapered into a conical figure. Quincy.

Protect from violent storms, and the too parching darts of the sun, your pennached tulips and ranunculus's, covering them with matrasses.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

MATRICE. n. s. [matrrix, Lat.]
 1. The womb; the cavity where the fœtus is formed.

If the time required in vivification be of any length, the spirit will exhale before the creature be mature, except it be enclosed in a place where it may have continuance of the heat, and closeness that may keep it from exhaling; and such places are the wombs and matrices of the females. Bacon.

2. A mould; that which gives form to something inclosed.

Stones that carry a resemblance of cockles, were formed in the cavities of shells; and these shells have served as matrices or moulds to them.
Woodward.

MATRICIDE. n. s. [matricidium, Lat.]

1. Slaughter of a mother.
 Nature compunates the death of the father by the matricide and murder of the mother. Brown.

2. [Matricida, Lat. matricide, Fr.] A mother killer. Ainsworth.

TO MATRICULATE. v. a. [from matriculula: a matrix, quod ea velut matrice contineantur militum nomina. Ainsw.]
 To enter or admit to a membership of the universities of England; to enlist; to enter into any society by setting down
 the name.

He, after some trial of his manners and learning, thought fit to enter himself of that college, and after to matriculate him in the university.
Walton's Life of Sanderson.

MATRICULATE. n. s. [from the verb.]
 A man matriculated.

Suffer me, in the name of the matriculates of that famous university, to ask them some plain questions. Arbutnot.

MATRICULATION. n. s. [from matriculate.] The act of matriculating.

A scholar absent from the university for five years, is struck out of the matriculation book; and upon his coming de novo to the university, ought to be again matriculated. Ayliffe.

MATRIMONIAL. adj. [matrimonial, Fr.
 from matrimonium, Lat.] Suitable to marriage; pertaining to marriage; connubial; nuptial; hymeneal.

If he relied upon that title, he could be but a king at courtesy, and have rather a matrimonial than a regal power, the right remaining in his queen. Bacon's Henry VII.

So spake domestick Adam in his care,
 And matrimonial love. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Since I am turn'd the husband, you the wife;
 The matrimonial victory is mine,
 Which, having fairly gain'd, I will resign. Dryden.

MATRIMONIALLY. adv. [from matrimonial.] According to the manner or laws of marriage.

He is so matrimonially wedded into his church, that he cannot quit the same, even on the score of going into a religious house. Ayliffe.

MATRIMONY. n. s. [matrimonium, Lat.] Marriage; the nuptial state; the contract of man and wife; nuptials.

If any know cause why this couple should not be joined in holy matrimony, they are to declare
 it. Common Prayer.

MATRIX. n. s. [Latin; matrice, Fr.] Womb; a place where any thing is generated or formed; matrice.

If they be not lodged in a convenient matrix,
 they are not excited by the efficacy of the sun.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

MATRON. n. s. [matrone, Fr. matrona,
 Lat.]

1. An elderly lady.
 Come, civil night,
 Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakesp.
 Your wives, your daughters,
 Your matrons and your maids, could not fill up
 The cistern of my lust. Shakesp. Macbeth.

She was in her early bloom, with a discretion very little inferior to the most experienced matrons.
Tatler.

2. An old woman.
 A matron sage Supports with homely food his drooping age. Pope.

MATRONAL. adj. [matroualis, Lat.]
 Suitable to a matron; constituting a matron.

He had heard of the beauty and virtuous behaviour of the queen of Naples, the widow of Ferdinando the younger, being then of matronal years of seven and twenty. Bacon.

MATRONLY. adj. [matron and like.]
 Elderly; ancient.

The matronly wife plucked out all the brown hairs, and the younger the white. L'Estrange.

MATROSS. n. s.
Matrosses, in the train of artillery, are a sort of soldiers next in degree under the gunners, who assist about the guns in traversing, sponging, firing, and loading them: they carry firelocks, and march along with the store-waggons as a guard, and as assistants, in case a waggon should break.
Bailey.

MATTER. n. s. [matiere, Fr. materia,
 Lat.]

1. Body; substance extended.
 If then the soul another soul do make,
 Because her pow'r is kept within a bound,
 She must some former stuff or matter take,
 But in the soul there is no matter found. Davies.

It seems probable to me, that God in the beginning formed matter in solid, massy, hard, impenetrable, moveable particles, of such sizes and figures, and with such other properties, and in such proportion to space as most conduced to the end for which he formed them; and that those primitive particles being solids, are incomparably harder than any porous bodies compounded of them, even so very hard as never to wear or break in pieces, no ordinary power being able to divide what God himself made one in the first creation.
Newton.

Some have dimensions of length, breadth, and depth, and have also a power of resistance, or exclude every thing of the same kind from being in the same place: this is the proper character of matter or body. Watts's Logic.

2. Materials; that of which any thing is composed.

The upper regions of the air perceive the collection of the matter of tempests before the air here below. Bacon.

3. Subject; thing treated.

The subject or matter of laws in general is thus far forth constant, which matter is that for the ordering whereof laws were instituted. Hooker.

I have words to speak in thy ear will make thee dumb; yet are they much too light for the matter.
Shakesp. Hamlet.

Shakesp.
 What's the matter, you dissentions rogues,
 That rubbing the poor itch of your opinion,
 Make yourselves scabs? Shakesp. Coriolanus.

7. Subject of suit or complaint.

Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?
 —Marry, Sir, I have matter in my head against
 you. Shakesp.
 If the craftsmen have a matter against any man,
 the law is open; let them implead one another.
Acts, xii. 38.

In armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if tried by the gross, it would go on the other. Bacon.

8. Import; consequence; importance; moment.

If I had had time to have made new liveries, I would have bestowed the thousand I borrowed of you: but it is no matter, this poor shew doth better. Shakesp. Henry IV.

And please yourselves this day;
 No matter from what hands you have the play.
Dryden.

A prophet some, and some a poet cry,
 No matter which, so neither of them lye,
 From steepy Othrys' top to Pilus drove His herd. Dryden.

Pleas'd or displeas'd, no matter now 'tis past;
 The first who dares he angry breathes his last.
Granville.

MAZE. n. s. [missen, Dut. to mistake; mape a whirlpool, Skinner.]

1. A labyrinth; a place of perplexity and winding passages.

Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a surging maze.

The ways of Heav'n are dark and intricate,
Puzzled with mazes and perplex'd with error,
Our understanding searches them in vain.

He, like a copious river, pour'd his song
O'er all the mazes of enchanted ground.

2. Confusion of thought; uncertainty; perplexity.

He left in himself nothing but a maze of longing, and a dungeon of sorrow.

While they study how to bring to pass that religion may seem but a matter made, they lose themselves in the very maze of their own discourses, as if reason did even purposely forsake them, who of purpose forsake God, the author thereof.

I have thrust myself into this maze,
Haply to wive and thrive as best I may.

Others apart sat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will and fate,
Fix'd fate, free-will, foreknowledge absolute,
And found no end, in wand'ring mazes lost.

To MAZE. v. a. [from the noun.] To bewilder; to confuse.

Much was I maz'd to see this monster kind,
In hundred forms to change his fearful hue.

MA'ZY. adj. [from maze.] Perplexed with windings; confused.

How from that saphire fount the crisped brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
With mazy error, under pendant shades, Ran nectar. Milton.

The Lapithæ to chariots add the state
Of bits and bridles, taught the steed to bound,
To run the ring, and trace the mazy round. Dryden.

MA'ZER. n. s. [macer, Dut. a knot of maple.] A maple cup.

Then, lo! Perigot, the pledge which I plight,
A mazer wrought of the maple ware,
Wherein is enchased many a fair fight

Of bears and tigers that make fierce war. Spenser.
Virgil observes, like Theocritus, a just decorum, both of the subject and persons, as in the third pastoral, where one of his shepherds describes a bowl, or mazer, curiously carved. Dryden.

M. D. Medicinæ doctor, doctor of physick.

ME.

1. The oblique case of I.

Me, only me, the hand of fortune bore,
Unblest to tread an interdicted shore. Pope.

For me the fates severely kind, ordain
A cool suspense. Pope.

2. Me is sometimes a kind of ludicrous expletive.

He thrust me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table. Shakesp.

He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Steps me a little higher than his vow
Made to my father, while his blood was poor. Shakesp.

I, acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs. Shakesp.

I followed me close, came in foot and hand, and,
with a thought, seven of the eleven I paid. Shakesp.

3. It is sometimes used ungrammatically for I: as, methinks.

Me rather had, my heart might feel your love,
Than my unpleas'd eye see your courtesy. Shakesp.

ME'ACOCK. n. s. [mes coq, Skinner.] An uxorious or effeminate man.

ME'ACOCK. adj. Tame; timorous; cowardly.

'Tis a tongue to see,
How tame, when men and women are alone,
A meacock wretch can make the curstest shrew. Shakesp.

MEAD. n. s. [mædo, Sax. meethe, Dut. meth. Germ. hydromeli, Lat.] A kind of drink made of water and honey.

Though not so solutive a drink as mead, yet it will be more grateful to the stomach. Bacon.

He sheers his over-burden'd sheep;
Or mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

MEAD. } n. s. [mæde, Sax.] Ground

ME'ADOW. } somewhat watery, not plowed, but covered with grass and flowers. Mead is a word chiefly poetical.

Where all things in common do rest,
Corne feed with the pasture and mead,
Yet what doth it stand you in stead? Tusser's Husb.

A band select from forage drives
A herd of beeves, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Paints her, 'tis true, with the same hand which spreads,
Like glorious colours, through the flow'ry meads,
When lavish Nature with her best attire
Cloaths the gay spring, the season of desire. Waller.

Yet ere to-morrow's sun shall shew his head,
The dewy paths of meadows we will tread,
For crowns and chaplets to adorn thy bed. Dryden.

MEADOW-SAFFRON. n. s. [colchicum, Lat.] A plant.

The meadow-saffron hath a flower consisting of one leaf, shaped like a lily, rising in form of a small tube, and is gradually widened into six segments; it has likewise a solid, bulbous root, covered with a membranous skin. Miller.

MEADOW-SWEET. n. s. [ulmaria, Lat.] A plant.

ME'AGER. adj. [maigre, Fr. macer, Lat.] 1. Lean; wanting flesh; starven.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gate. Hub.
Now will the canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit. Shakesp.

Meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones. Shakesp.
Whatsoever their neighbour gets, they lose, and the very bread that one eats makes t'other meager. L'Estrange.

Fierce famine with her meagre face,
And fevers of the fiery race,
In swarms th'offending wretch surround,
All brooding on the blasted ground:
And limping death, lash'd on by fate,
Comes up to shorten half our date. Dryden.

2. Poor; hungry.

Canaan's happy land, when worn with toil,
Requir'd a Sabbath year to mend the meagre soil. Dryden.

To ME'AGER. v. a. [from the noun.] To make lean.

It cannot be, that I should be so shamefully betrayed, and as a man meagered with long watching and painful labour, laid himself down to sleep. Knolles's History of the Turks.

ME'AGERNESS. n. s. [from meager.]

1. Leanness; want of flesh.

Like a gay insect, in his summer shine,
The fop light fluttering spreads his mealy wings. Thomson.

MEALY-MO'UTHEd. adj. [imagined by Skinner to be corrupted from mild-mouthed or mellow-mouthed: but perhaps from the sore mouths of animals, that, when they are unable to comminute their grain, must be fed with meal.]

Soft mouthed; unable to speak freely.

She was a fool to be mealy-mouthed where nature speaks so plain. L'Estrange.

MEALY-MO'UTHEdNESS. n. s. [from the adjective.] Bashfulness; restraint of speech.

MEAN. adj. [mæne, Sax.]

1. Wanting dignity; of low rank or birth.

She was stricken with most obstinate love to a young man but of mean parentage, in her father's court, named Antiphilus; so mean, as that he was but the son of her nurse, and by that means, without other desert, became known of her. Sidney.

This fairest maid of fairer mind;
By fortune mean, in nature born a queen. Sidney.
Let pale-fac'd fear keep with the mean-born man,
And find no harbour in a royal heart. Shakesp.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow-wings:
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings. Shakesp.

2. Low-minded; base; ungenerous; spiritless.

The shepherd knows not thunder from a tabor,
More than I know the sound of Marcus's tongue
From every meaner man. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Their contrary dislikes with loved means,
Did place them all in order, and compell
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Off 'tis seen

Our mean securities, and our mere defects Prove our commodities. Shakesp. King Lear.

Temperance with golden square,

Between the n both can measure out a mean. Shak.

There is a mean in all things, and a certain measure wherein the good and the beautiful consist, and out of which they never can depart. Dryden.

But no authority of gods or men
Allow of any mean in poesie. Roscommon.

Against her then her forces prudence joins,

And to the golden mean herself confines. Denham.

2. Measure; regulation; Not used.

The rolling sea resounding soft,
In his big base them fitly answered,
And on the rock the waves breaking aloft,

A solemn mean unto them measured. Fairy Q.

3. Interval; interim; mean time.

But sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish rather than of crime hath been,
Reserve her cause to her eternal doom,
And in the mean vouchsafe her honourable tomb.

Spenser.

4. Instrument; measure; that which is used in order to any end.

Pamela's noble heart would needs gratefully make known the valiant mean of her safety. Sidney.

As long as that which Christians did was good,
and no way subject to just reproof, their virtuous conversation was a mean to work the heathens conversion unto Christ. Hooker.

It is no excuse unto him who, being drunk, commiteth incest, and alledgeth that his wits were not his own; or, as much as himself might have chosen whether his wits should by that mean have been taken from him. Hooker.

I'll devise a mean to draw the Moor
Out of the way, that your converse and business
May be more free. Shakesp. Othello.

No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar and by you cut off. Shakesp.

Nature is made better by no mean,

But nature makes that mean; so over that art
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

5. It is often used in the plural, and by some not very grammatically with an adjective singular: the singular is in this sense now rarely used.

The more base art thou,

To make such means for her as thou hast done,
And leave her on such slyly conditions. Shakesp.

By this means he had them the more at vantage, being tired and harassed with a long march.

Bacon's Henry III.

Because he wanted means to perform any great action, he made means to return the sooner.

Davies on Ireland.

Their parties great, means good, the season fit,
Their practice close, their faith suspected not.

Daniel.

By this means not only many helpless persons will be provided for, but a generation will be bred up not perverted by any other hopes.

Spratt's Scrm.

Who is there that hath the leisure and means to collect all the proofs concerning most of the opinions he has, so as safely to conclude that he hath a clear and full view. Locke.

A good character, when established, should not be rested in as an end, but only employed as a means of doing still farther good. Atterbury.

It renders us careless of approving ourselves to God by religious duties, and, by that means, securing the continuance of his goodness. Atterbury.

6. By all means. Without doubt; without hesitation; without fail.

7. By no means. Not in any degree; not at all.

The wine on this side of the lake is by no means so good as that on the other. Addison on Italy.

8. Means are likewise used for revenue; fortune; probably from desmenes.

Your means are slender, your waste is great.

Shakesp.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil;
And, as we hear you do reform yourselves,
Give you advancement. Shakesp. Henry IV.

Essex did not build or adorn any house; the queen perchance spending his time, and himself his means. Watton.

9. Mean-time. } In the intervening time:

Mean-while. } sometimes an adverbial mode of speech.

Mean-while

The world shall burn, and from her ashes spring
New heav'n and earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mean-time the rapid heav'n's rowl'd down the light,

And on the shaded ocean rush'd the night.

Dryden.

Mean-time her warlike brother on the seas,
His waving streamers to the winds displays. Dryd.

Mean-time, in shades of night Æneas lies;
Care seiz'd his soul, and sleep forsook his eyes.

Dryden.

Mean-while I'll draw up my Numidian troops,
And, as I see occasion, favour thee. Addison's Cato.

The Roman legions were all recalled to help their country against the Goths; mean-time the Britons, left to shift for themselves, and harassed by inroads from the Picts, were forced to call in the Saxons for their defence. Swift.

To MEAN. v. n. [meenen, Dut.]

1. To have in the mind; to purpose.

These delights if thou canst give,
Mirth, with thee I mean to live. Milton.

2. To think; to have the power of thought.

And he who now to sense, now nonsense leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning.

Pope.

To MEAN. r. a.

1. To purpose; to intend; to design.

Ye thought evil against me; but God meant it unto good, to save much people alive. Gen. i. 20.
And life more perfect have attain'd than fate
Meant me, by venturing higher than my lot.

Milton.

I practis'd it to make you taste your cheer
With double pleasure, first prepar'd by fear:
So loyal subjects often seize their prince,
Yet mean his sacred person not the least offence.

Dryden.

2. To intend; to hint covertly; to understand.

When your children shall say, What mean you by this service? ye shall say, It is the passover.

Exod. xii. 26.

I forsake an argument on which I could delight to dwell; I mean your judgment in your choice of friends.

Dryden.

Whatever was meant by them, it could not be that Cain, as elder, had a natural dominion over Abel. Locke.

MEANDER. n. s. [Meander is a river in Phrygia remarkable for its winding course.] Maze; labyrinth; flexuous passage; serpentine winding; winding course.

Physicians, by the help of anatomical dissections, have searched into those various meanders of the veins, arteries, and integrals of the body. Hale.

'Tis well, that while mankind
Through fate's perverse meander errs,
He can imagin'd pleasures find,
To combat against real cares. Prior.

While ling'ring rivers in meanders glide,
They scatter verdant life on either side;

The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births confess the floods embrace.

Blackmore.

Law is a bottomless pit: John Bull was flattered by the lawyers, that his suit would not last above a year; yet ten long years did Hocus steer his cause through all the meanders of the law, and all the courts. Arbutnot.

MEANDROUS. adj. [from meander.] Winding; flexuous.

MEANING. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Purpose; intention.

I am no honest man, if there be any good meaning towards you. Shakesp. King Lear.

2. Habitual intention.

Some whose meaning hath at first been fair,
Grow knaves by use, and rebels by despair.

Rosc.

3. The sense; the thing understood.

The meaning, not the name, I call: for thou,
Not of the muses nine. Milton's Paradise Lost.

These lost the sense their learning to display,
And those explain'd the meaning quite away.

Pope.

No word more frequently in the mouths of men than conscience; and the meaning of it is, in some measure, understood; however, it is a word extremely abused by many, who apply other meanings to it which God Almighty never intended.

Swift.

4. Sense; power of thinking.

He was not spiteful though he wrote a satyr,
For still there goes some meaning to ill-nature.

Dryden.

—True no meaning puzzles more than wit. Pope.

MEANLY. adv. [from mean.]

1. Moderately; not in a great degree.

Dr. Metcalfe, master of St. John's College, a man meanly learned himself, but not meanly affec-tioned to set forward learning in others. Ascham.

In the reign of Domitian, poetry was but meanly cultivated, but painting eminently flourished.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Without dignity; poorly.

It was the winter wild,
While the heav'n-born child,
All meanly wrapt in the rude manger lies. Milton.

The Persian state will not endure a king
So meanly born. Denham's Sophy.

3. Without greatness of mind; ungenerously.

Would you meanly thus rely On power, you know, I must obey? Prior.

4. Without respect.

Our kindred, and our very names, seem to have something desirable in them: we cannot bear to have others think meanly of them. Watts's Logick.

MEANNESS. n. s. [from mean.]

1. Want of excellence.

The minister's greatness or meanness of knowledge to do other things, standeth in this place as a stranger, with whom our form of Common Prayer hath nothing to do. Hooker.

This figure is of a later date by the meanness of the workmanship. Addison on Italy.

2. Want of dignity; low rank; poverty.

No other nymphs have title to mens hearts,
But as their meanness larger hopes imparts.

Waller.

Poverty, and meanness of condition, expose the wisest to scorn, it being natural for men to place their esteem rather upon things great than good.

South.

3. Lowness of mind.

The name of servants has been reckoned to imply a certain meanness of mind, as well as lowness of condition. South.

4. Sordidness ; niggardliness.

MEANT. perf. and part. pass. of To mean.

By Silvia if thy charming self be meant ;
If friendship be thy virgin vows extent :
O ! let me in Aminta's praises join ;
Her's my esteem shall be, my passion thine. Prior.

MEASE. n. s. [probably a corruption of measure : as, a mease of herrings is five hundred.] Ainsworth.

MEASLES. n. s. [morbilli, Lat.]

1. Measles are a critical eruption in a fever, well known in the common practice. Quincy.

My lungs
Coin words till their decay, against those measles,
Which we disdain should tetter us, yet seek
The very way to catch them. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
Before the plague of London, inflammations of the lungs were rife and mortal, as likewise the measles. Arbuthnot.

2. A disease of swine.

One, when he had an unlucky old grange, would needs sell it, and proclaimed the virtues of it ; nothing ever thrived on it, no owner of it ever died in his bed ; the swine died of the measles, and the sheep of the rot. Ben Janson's Discovery.

3. A disease of trees.

Fruit-bearers are often infected with the measles,
by being scorched with the sun. Mortimer's Husband.

MEASLED. adj. [from measles.] Infected with the measles.

Thou vermin wretched,
As e'er in measled pork was hatched ;
Thou tail of worship, that dost grow
On rump of justice as of cow. Hudibras.

MEASLY. adj. [from measles.] Scabbed with the measles.

Last trotted forth the gentle swine,
To ease her against the stump,
And dismally was heard to whine,
All as she scrubb'd her measly rump. Swift.

MEASURABLE. adj. [from measure.]

1. Such as may be measured ; such as may admit of computation.

God's eternal duration is permanent and invisible, not measurable by time and motion, nor to be computed by number of successive moments. Bentley's Sermons.

2. Moderate ; in small quantity.

MEASURABLENESS. n. s. [from measurable.] Quality of admitting to be measured.

MEASURABLY. adv. [from measurable.] Moderately.

Wine measurably drunk, and in season, bringeth gladness of the heart. Ecclus. xxxi. 28.

MEASURE. n. s. [mesure, Fr. mensura, Lat.]

1. That by which any thing is measured.

A taylor's news,
Who stood with shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet, Told of many a thousand. Shakesp. King John.
A concave measure, of known and denominated capacity, serves to measure the capaciousness of any other vessel. Holder.

All magnitudes are capable of being measured ;
but it is the application of one to another which makes actual measure. Hobler.

When Moses speaks of measures, for example, of an ephah, he presumes they knew what measure
he meant : that he himself was skilled in weights and measures, arithmetic and geometry, there is no reason to doubt. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. The rule by which any thing is adjusted or proportioned.

He lived according to nature, the other by ill customs, and measures taken by other men's eyes and tongues. Taylor.

God's goodness is the measure of his providence. More.
I expect, from those that judge by first sight and rash measures, to be thought fond or insolent.
Granville's Scepis.

3. Proportion ; quantity settled.

Measure is that which perfecteth all things, because every thing is for some end ; neither can that thing be available to any end, which is not proportionable thereunto ; and to proportion as well excesses as defects are opposite. Hooker.

I enter not into the particulars of the law of nature, or its measures of punishment ; yet there is such a law. Locke.

4. A stated quantity : as, a measure of wine.

Be large in mirth, anon we'll drink a measure.
The table round. Shakesp. Macbeth.

5. Sufficient quantity.

I'll never pause again,
Till either death hath clos'd these eyes of mine,
Or fortune given me measure of revenge. Shakesp.

6. Allotment ; portion allotted.

Good Kent, how shall I live and work
To match thy goodness ? life will be too short,
And every measure fail me. Shakesp. King Lear.
We will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you. 2 Cor. x. 13.

If else thou seek'st
Ought, not surpassing human measure, say. Milt.
Our religion sets before us not the example of a stupid stoick, who had, by obstinate principles, hardened himself against all pain beyond the common measures of humanity, but an example of a man like ourselves. Tillotson.

7. Degree ; quantity.

I have laid down, in some measure, the description of the old world. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.
There is a great measure of discretion to be used in the performance of confession, so that you neither omit it when your own heart may tell you that there is something amiss, nor over scrupulously pursue it when you are not conscious to yourself of notable failings. Taylor.
The rains were but preparatory in some measure, and the violence and consummation of the deluge depended upon the disruption of the great abyss.
Burnet's Theory.

8. Proportionate time ; musical time.

Amaryllis breathes thy secret pains,
And thy fond heart beats measure to thy strains. Prior.

9. Motion harmonically regulated.

My legs can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief :
Therefore no dancing, girl, some other sport. Shak.
As when the stars in their æthereal race,
At length have roll'd around the liquid space,
From the same point of heav'n their course advance,
And move in measures of their former dance. Dryd.

10. A stately dance. This sense is, I believe, obsolete.

Wooing, wedding, and repenting, is as a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque pace ; the first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical ; the wedding mannerly, modest as a measure, full of state and aneignty. Shakesp.
Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths,
Our stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings,
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures. Shak.

11. Moderation ; not excess.

O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy ;
In measure reign thy joy, scant this excess ;
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Hell hath enlarged herself, and opened her mouth without measure. Isa. vi. 14.

12. Limit ; boundary. In the same sense is

Μέτρον
Τρεῖς ἰσίων δεκάδας τριάδας δύο, μέτρον ἰσθμῶν
Ἡμετέρας Βιότης μάστιγος αἰθέριου.
Ἀρχέμαι τέτοισι.

Lord, make me to know mine end, and the measure of my days what it is, that I may know how frail I am. Psalms.

13. Any thing adjusted.

Christ reveals to us the measures according to which God will proceed in dispensing his rewards. Smalbridge's Sermon.

14. Syllables metrically numbered ; metre.

I addressed them to a lady, and affected the softness of expression, and the smoothness of measure, rather than the height of thought. Dryden.
The numbers themselves, though of the heroick measure, should be the smoothest imaginable. Pepe.

15. Tune ; proportionate notes.

The joyous nymphs and light-foot fairies,
Which thither came to hear their music sweet,
And to the measures of their melodies
Did learn to move their nimble-shifting feet. Spens.

16. Mean of action ; mean to an end. The original of this phrase refers to the necessity of measuring the ground upon which any structure is to be raised, or any distant effect to be produced, as in shooting at a mark. Hence he that proportioned his means to his end was said to take right measures. By degrees measures and means were confounded, and any thing done for an end, and sometimes any transaction absolutely, is called a measure, with no more propriety than if, because an archer might be said to have taken wrong measures when his mark was beyond his reach, we should say that it was a bad measure to use a heavy arrow.

His majesty found what wrong measures he had taken in the conferring that trust, and lamented his error. Clarendon.

17. To have hard measure ; to be hardly treated.

To MEASURE. v. a. [mesurer, Fr. mesuro, Lat.]

1. To compute the quantity of any thing by some settled rule.

Archidamus having received from Philip, after the victory of Cheronæ, proud letters, writ back, that if he measured his own shadow he would find it no longer than it was before his victory. Bacon.

2. To pass through ; to judge of extent by marching over.

A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps. Shak.
I'll tell thee all my whole device
At the park-gate ; and therefore haste away,
For we must measure twenty miles to-day. Shakesp.
The vessel ploughs the sea,
And measures back with speed her former way. Dry.

3. To judge of quantity or extent, or greatness.

Great are thy works, Jehovah ! in finite Thy pow'r ! What thought can measure thee, or tongue Relate thee ? Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To adjust ; to proportion.

To secure a contented spirit, measure your desires by your fortunes, not your fortunes by your desires. Taylor.
Silver is the instrument as well as measure of commerce ; and 'tis by the quantity of silver he gets for any commodity in exchange, that he measures the value of the commodity he sells. Locke.

5. To mark out in stated quantities.

What thou seest is that portion of eternity which is called time, measured out by the sun, and reaching from the beginning of the world to its consummation. Addison's Spectator

6. To allot or distribute by measure.

With what measure you mete, it shall be measured to you again. Matth. vii. 2.

MEASURELESS. adj. [from measure.] Immense; immeasurable.
He shut up in measureless content. Shakesp.

MEASUREMENT. n. s. [from measure.]
Mensuration; act of measuring.

MEASURER. n. s. [from measure.] One that measures.

MEASURING. adj. [from measure.] It is applied to a cast not to be distinguished in its length from another but by measuring.
When lusty shepherds throw
The bar by turns, and none the rest out-go
So far, but that the best are measuring casts,
Their emulation and their pastime lasts. Waller.

MEAT. n. s. [met, Fr.]

1. Flesh to be eaten.
To his father he sent ten she asses laden with corn, and bread, and meat for his father by the way. Gen. xlv. 23.
Carnivora, and birds of prey, are no good meat;
but the reason is, rather the choleric nature of those birds than their feeding upon flesh; for pewets and ducks feed upon flesh, and yet are good meat. Bacon's Natural History
There was a multitude of excises; as, the vegetical macelli, a tax upon meat. Arbuthnot.

2. Food in general.
Never words were musick to thine ear,
And never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake or carv'd. Shak. Comedy of Errors.
Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats;
but God shall destroy both. 1 Cor. vi. 13.

MEATED. adj. [from meat.] Fed; foddered.
Strong oxen and horses, wel shod and wel clad,
Wel meated and used. Tusser's Husbandry.

MEATHE. n. s. [medd, Welsh, unde mede, meddwi ebrius sum.] Drink, properly of honey.
For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive must, and meathes
From many a berry. Milton's Paradise Lost.

MEAZLING. part. generally called miz-zling.
The air feels more moist when the water is in small than in great drops; in meazling and suaking rain, than in great showers. Arbuthnot on Air.

MECHANICAL. } adj. [mechanicus, Lat.
MECHANICK. } mechanique, Fr. from μηχανη]

1. Constructed by the laws of mechanicks.
Many a fair precept in poetry, is like a seeming demonstration in mathematicks, very specious in the diagram, but failing in the mechanick operation. Dryden.
The main business of natural philosophy, is to argue from phenomena without feigning hypotheses, and to deduce causes from effects till we come to the very first cause, which certainly is not mechanical; and not only to unfold the mechanism of the world, but chiefly to resolve these,
and such like questions. Newton.

2. Skilled in mechanicks; bred to manual labour.

3. Mean; servile; of mean occupation.
Know you not, being mechanical, you ought not to walk upon a labouring day, without the sign of your profession? Shakesp.
Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will bew him with my cudgel. Shakesp.
Mechanick slaves,
With greasy aprons, rules, and hammers, shall Uplift us to the view. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.
To make a god, a hero, or a king,
Descend to a mechanick dialect. Roscommon.

MECHANICK. n. s. A manufacturer; a low workman.

Do not bid me
Dismiss my soldiers, or capitulate
Again with Rome's mechanicks Shakesp. Coriolanus.
A third proves a very heavy philosopher, who possibly would have made a good mechanick, and have done well enough at the useful philosophy of the spade or the anvil. South.

MECHANICKS. n. s. [mechanica, Lat.]
Dr. Wallis defines mechanicks to be the geometry of motion, a mathematical science, which shews the effects of powers, or moving forces, so far as they are applied to engines, and demonstrates the laws of motion. Harris.
The rudiments of geography, with something of mechanicks, may be easily conveyed into the minds of acute young persons. Watts's Impr. of the Mind.
Salmeus was a great proficient in mechanicks, and inventor of a vessel which imitated thunder.
Broome.

MECHANICALLY. adv. [from mechanick.]
According to the laws of mechanism.
They suppose even the common animals that are in being, to have been formed mechanically among the rest. Ray
Later philosophers feign hypotheses for explaining all things mechanically, and refer other causes to metaphysics. Newton.

MECHANICALNESS. n. s. [from mechanick.]

1. Agreeableness to the laws of mechanism.

2. Meanness.

MECHANICIAN. n. s. [mechanicien, Fr.]

struction of machines.
Some were figured like male, others like female screws, as mechanicians speak. Boyle.

MECHANISM. n. s. [mechanisme, Fr.]

1. Action according to mechanick laws.
After the chyle has passed through the lungs, nature continues her usual mechanism, to convert it into animal substances. Arbuthnot on Aliments.
He acknowledged nothing besides matter and motion; so that all must be performed either by mechanism or accident, either of which is wholly unaccountable. Bentley.

2. Construction of parts depending on each other in any complicated fabrick.

MECHOACAN. n. s. [from the place.]
Mechoacan is a large root, twelve or fourteen inches long; the plant which affords it is a species of bindweed, and its stalks are angular: the root in powder is a gentle and mild purgative. Hill.

MECONIUM. n. s. [μηκώνιον]

1. Expressed juice of poppy.

2. The first excrement of children.
Infants new-born have a meconium, or sort of dark-coloured excrement in the bowels. Arbuthnot.

MEDAL. n. s. [medaille, Fr. probably from metallum, Lat.]

1. An ancient coin.
The Roman medals were their current money:
when an action deserved to be recorded on a coin,
it was stamp'd, and issued out of the mint. Addison.

2. A piece stamped in honour of some remarkable performance.

MEDALLICK. adj. [from medal.] Pertaining to medals.
You will never, with all your medallick eloquence, persuade Eugenius, that it is better to have a pocketful of Otho's than of Jacobus's. Addison.

MEDALLION. n. s. [medaillon, Fr.] A large antique stamp or medal.
Medallions, in respect of the other coins, were the same as modern medals in respect of modern money. Addison.

MEDALLIST. n. s. [medailliste, Fr.] A man skilled or curious in medals.

As a medallist, you are not to look upon a cabinet of medals as a treasure of money, but of knowledge. Addison on Medals.

To MEDDLER. v. n. [middelem, Dut.]

1. To have to do: in this sense it is always followed by with.
It is reported that cassia, when gathered, is put into the skins of beasts newly flayed, which breeding worms, they devour the pith and marrow, and so make it hollow; but meddle nut with the back, because it is bitter. Bacon.
With the power of it upon the spirits of men we will only meddle. Bacon's Natural History.
I have thus far been an upright judge, not meddling with the design or disposition. Dryden.

2. To interpose; to act in any thing.
For my part, I'll not meddle nor make any farther. Shakesp.
In every turn of state, without meddling on either side, he has always been favourable to merit. Dryd.
The civil lawyers have pretended to determine concerning the succession of princes; but, by our author's principles, have meddled in a matter that belongs not to them. Locke.
What hast thou to do to meddle with the affairs of my family? to dispose of my estate, old boy?
Arbuthnot.

3. To interpose or intervene impudently or officiously.
Why shouldst thou meddle to thy hurt?
2 Kings, xiv. 10.
It is an honour for a man to cease from strife:
but every fool will be meddling. Prov. xx. 3.
This meddling priest longs to be found a fool.
Rowe.
Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,
And lay the meddling senses all aside. Thomson.

To MEDDLE. v. a. [from mesler, Fr.] To mix; to mingle. Obsolete.
He that had well ycon'd his here,
Thus meddled his talk with many a tear. Spenser.
A meddled state of the orders of the gospel, and ceremonies of popery, is not the best way to banish popery. Hooker.

MEDDLER. n. s. [from meddle.] One who busies himself with things in which he has no concern.
Do not drive away such as bring thee information, as meddlers, but accept of them in good part.
Bacon.
This may be applied to those that assume to themselves the merits of other men's services, meddlers, boasters, and impertinents. L'Strange.

MEDDLESOME. adj. Intermeddling; as, a meddlesome busy body. Ainsw.

MEDIASTINE. n. s. [French; mediastinum, Lat.] The fimbriated body about which the guts are convolved.
None of the membranes which invest the inside

He adviseth to observe the equinoxes and solstices, and to decline medication ten days before and after. Brown.

MEDICINABLE. adj. [medicinalis, Lat.] Having the power of physick.

Old oil is more clear and hot in medicinable use. Bacon.

Accept a bottle made of a serpentine stone, which gives any wine infused therein for four and twenty hours the taste and operation of the Spaw water, and is very medicinable for the cure of the spleen. Watton.

The hearts and galls of pikes are medicinable. Walt.

MEDICINAL. adj. [medicinalis, Lat.] This word is now commonly pronounced medicinal, with the accent on the second syllable; but more properly, and more agreeably to the best authorities, medicinal.

1. Having the power of healing; having physical virtue.

Come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either; to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep. Shakesp. II inter's Tale.
Thoughts my tormentors arm'd with deadly stings,

Mangle my apprehensive tender parts;
Exasperate, exculcerate and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb Nor medicinal liquor can assuage. Milt. Agonistæ.
The second causes took the swift command,
The medicinal head, the ready hand;
All but eternal doom was conquer'd by their art. Dryden.

2. Belonging to physick.

Learn'd he was in med'cinal lore,
For by his side a pouch he wore,
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank with solder. Butler.

Such are call'd medicinal-days by some writers, wherein no crisis or change is expected, so as to forbid the use of medicines: but it is most properly used for those days wherein purging, or any other evacuation, is more conveniently complied with. Quincy.

Medicinal-hours are those wherein it is supposed that medicines may be taken, commonly reckoned in the morning fasting, about an hour before dinner, about four hours after dinner, and going to bed; but times are to be governed by the symptoms and aggravation of the distemper. Quincy.

MEDICINALLY. adv. [from medicinal.] Physically.

The witnesses that leech-like liv'd on blood,
Sucking for them were med'cinally good. Dryden.

MEDICINE. n. s. [medicene, Fr. medicina, Lat.] It is generally pronounced as if only of two syllables, med'cine.

Physick; any remedy administered by a physician.

O, my dear father! restauration, hang Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss Repair those violent harms. Shakesp. King Lear.

A merry heart doth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones. Prov. xvii. 22.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure;
Detest the med'cine, yet desire the cure. Dryden.

To MEDICINE. v. a. [from the noun.] To operate as physick. Not used.

Not all the drowsy syraps of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou owedst yesterday. Shakesp.

MEDIETY. n. s. [medieté, Fr. medietas, Lat.] Middle state; participation of two extremes; half.

They contained no fishy composure, but were made up of man and bird; the human mediety variously placed not only above but below. Brown's Vulgar Err.

MEDIOCRITY. n. s. [mediocrité, Fr. mediocritas, Lat.]

1. Moderate degree; middle rate.

Men of age seldom drive business home to the full period, but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.
There appeared a sudden and marvellous conversion in the duke's case, from the most exalted to the most depressed, as if his expedition had been capable of no mediocritas. Watton.

He likens the mediocrity of wit to one of a mean fortune, who manages his store with great parsimony; but who, with fear of running into profuseness, never arrives to the magnificence of living. Dryden's State of Innocence.

Getting and improving our knowledge in substances only by experience and history, is all that the weakness of our faculties in this state of mediocrity, while we are in this world, can attain to. Locke.

2. Moderation; temperance.

Lest appetite, in the use of food, should lead us beyond that which is meet, we owe obedience to that law of reason which teacheth mediocrity in meats and drinks. Hooker.

M E D

When they urge us to extreme opposition against the church of Rome, do they mean we should be drawn unto it only for a time, and afterwards return to a mediocrity? Hooker.

To MÉDITATE. v. a. [mediter, Fr. meditor, Lat.]

- To plan; to scheme; to contrive. Some affirmed that I meditated a war; God knows, I did not then think of war. K. Charles.
Like a lion that unheeded lay,
Dissembling sleep, and watchful to betray,
With inward rage he meditates his prey. Dryd.
Before the memory of the flood was lost, men meditated the setting up a false religion at Babel. Forbes.

MEDITERRANEAN. } terra; mediter- MEDITERRANEOUS. } ranée, Fr.

- Encircled with land. In all that part that lieth on the north side of the mediterrane sea, it is thought not to be the vulgar tongue. Brewerwood.

- Inland; remote from the sea. It is found in mountains and mediterranean parts; and so it is a fat and unctuous sublimation of the earth. Brown.

We have taken a less height of the mountains than is requisite, if we respect the mediterranean mountains, or those that are at a great distance from the sea. Burnet.

MÉDIUM. n. s. [medium, Lat.]

- Any thing intervening.

M E D

Whether any other liquors, being made mediums, cause a diversity of sound from water, it may be tried. Bacon.

I must bring together All these extremes; and must remove all mediums, That each may be the other's object. Denham.

Seeing requires light and a free medium, and a right line to the objects; we can hear in the dark, unmured, and by curve lines. Holder.

He, who looks upon the soul through its outward actions, often sees it through a deceitful medium, which is apt to discolour the object. Addison's Spectator.

The parts of bodies on which their colours depend, are denser than the medium which pervades their interstices. Newton.

Against filling the heavens with fluid mediums, unless they be exceeding rare, a great objection arises from the regular and very lasting motions of the planets and comets in all manner of courses through the heavens. Newton's Opticks.

- Any thing used in ratiocination, in order to a conclusion; the middle term in an argument, by which propositions are connected. This cannot be answered by those mediums which have been used. Dryden's Juvenal.
We, whose understandings are short, are forced to collect one thing from another, and in that process we seek out proper mediums. Baker on Learning.

- The middle place or degree; the just temperature between extremes. The just medium of this case lies betwixt the pride and the abjection, the two extremes. L'Estrange.

MÉDLAR. n. s. [mespilus, Lat.]

- A tree. The leaves of the medlar are either whole, and shaped like those of the laurel, as in the manured sorts; or lacinated, as in the wild sorts. The flower consists of five leaves, which expand in form of a rose: the fruits are umbilicated, and are not eatable till they decay; and have, for the most part, five hard seeds in each. Miller.
Now will he sit under a medlar tree,
And wish his mistress were that kind of fruit,
Which maids call medlars. Shakesp. Romeo and Jul.

- The fruit of that tree. You'll be rotten ere you be half ripe,
And that's the right virtue of the medlar. Shakesp.

October is drawn in a garment of yellow and carnation; with a basket of services, medlars, and chestnuts. Peacham.

No rotten medlars, whilst there be Whole orchards in virginity. Cleveland.

These little emissaries, united together at the cortical part of the brain, make the medullar part, being a bundle of very small, thread-like chanellets or fibres. Cheyne's Phil. Principles.

The back, for the security of that medullary substance that runs down its cavity, is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve. Cheyne.

MEED. n. s. [med, Sax. miete, Teutonick.]

- Reward; recompence. Now rarely used. He knows his meed, if he be spite,
To be a thousand deaths, and shame beside. Spenser.

Whether in beauties glory did exceed,
A rosy garland was the victor's meede. Fairy Qu.

Of noble minds is honourable meed. Shakesp.
He must not flout upon his wat'ry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear. Milton.

If so, a cloak and vesture be my meed,
Till his return no title shall I plead. Pope's Odyssey.

- Present; gift. Plutus, the god of gold,
Is but his steward; no meed but he reveys
Seven-fold above itself. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

MEEK. adj. [minker, Islandick.]

- Mild of temper; not proud; not rough; not easily provoked; soft; gentle. Moses was very meek above all men. Numb. xii. 3.

But he her fears to cease,
Sent down the meek-ey'd peace. Milton.

We ought to be very cautious and meek-spirited, till we are assured of the honesty of our ancestors. Collier.

- Expressing humility and gentleness. Both confess'd Humbly their faults, and pardon begg'd, with tears
Watering the ground, and with their sighs the air
Frequenting, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milt.

TO MÉEKEN. v. a. [from meek.] To make meek; to soften. This word I have found no where else.

The glaring lion saw, his horrid heart
Was mecken'd, and he join'd his sullen joy. Thomson.

MÉEKLY. adv. [from meek.] Mildly; gently; not ruggedly; not proudly.

Be therefore, O my dear lords, pacify'd,

When shall we three meet again,

In thunder, lightning, or in rain? Shakesp. Macb.

Chance may lead where I may meet

Some wand'ring Spirit of Heav'n by fountain side,

Or in thick shade retir'd. Milton.

I knew not till I met

My friends, at Ceres' now deserted seat. Dryden.

Not look back to see,

When what we love we ne'er must meet again. Dryden.

5. To close one with another.

The nearer you come to the end of the lake,

the mountains on each side grow higher, till at last they meet. Addison.

6. To find; to be treated with; to light on.

Had I a hundred mouths, a hundred tongues,

I could not half those horrid crimes repeat,

Nor half the punishments those crimes have met. Dryd.

Of vice or virtue, whether blest or curst,

Which meets contempt, or which compassion first. Pope.

To me no greater joy,

Than that your labours meet a prosperous end. Granville.

To MEET. r. n.

1. To encounter; to close face to face.

2. To encounter in hostility.

Then born to distance by the tides of men, Like adamant and steel they meet again. Dryden.

3. To assemble; to come together.

They appointed a day to meet in together. 2 Mac.

Their choice nobility and flower

Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton.

The materials of that building happily met together, and very fortunately ranged themselves into that delicate order, that it must be a very great chance that parts them. Tillotson.

4. To meet with. To light on; to find: it includes, sometimes obscurely, the idea of something unexpected.

When he cometh to experience of service abroad, he maketh as worthy a soldier as any nation he meeteth with. Spenser.

We met with many things worthy of observation. Bacon.

Hercules' meeting with pleasure and virtue, was invented by Prodicus, who lived before Socrates. Addison.

What a majesty and force does one meet with in these short inscriptions: are not you amazed to see so much history gathered into so small a compass? Addison on ancient Medals.

5. To meet with. To join.

Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us. Shakesp.

6. To meet with. To suffer unexpectedly.

He, that hath suffered this disordered spring,

hath now himself met with the fall of leaf. Shakesp.

A little sum you mourn, while most have met

With twice the loss, and by as vile a cheat. Creech.

7. To encounter; to engage.

Royal mistress,

Prepare to meet with more than brutal fury

From the fierce prince. Rowe's Ambitious Stepm.

8. A latinism. To obviate; occurrere

objecto.

Before I proceed farther, it is good to meet with an objection, which if not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the present will not be found. Bacon.

9. To advance half way.

He yields himself to the man of business with reluctance, but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of desire. South.

Our meeting hearts

Consented soon, and marriage made us one. Rowe.

10. To unite, to join: as, these rivers meet at such a place and join.

ME'ETER. n. s. [from met.] One that accosts another.

There are beside

Lascivious meeters, to whose venom'd sound

The open ear of youth doth always listen. Shak.

ME'ETING. n. s. [from meet.]

1. An assembly; a convention.

If the fathers and husbands of those, whose relief this your meeting intends, were of the household of faith, then their relicks and children ought not to be strangers to the good that is done in it, if they want it. Spratt's Sermons.

Since the ladies have been left out of all meetings except parties at play, our conversation hath degenerated. Swift.

2. An interview.

Let's be revenged on him; let's appoint him a meeting, and lead him on with a fine baited delay. Shakesp.

3. A conventicle; an assembly of Dissenters.

4. A conflux: as the meeting of two rivers.

MEETING-HOUSE. n. s. [meeting and house.] Place where Dissenters assemble to worship.

His heart misgave him that the churches were so many meetinghouses; but I soon made him easy. Addison.

ME'ETLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Fitly; properly.

ME'ETNESS. n. s. [from meet.] Fitness; propriety.

ME'GRIM. n. s. [from Hemycranyn, megrain, megrim, ημικραλιν] Disorder of the head.

In every megrim or vertigo there is an obtenebration joined with a semblance of turning round. Bacon's Natural History.

There screen'd in shades from day's detested glare,

Spleen sighs for ever on her pensive bed,

Pain at her side, and megrim at her head. Pope.

To MEINE. r. a. To mingle Ainsw.

ME'INY. n. s. [μεινυ, Sax. See MANY. Mesnie, Fr.] A retinue; domestick servants.

They summon'd up their meiny; strait took horse; Commanding me to follow, and attend. Shakesp.

MELANAGOGUES. n. s. [from μελανος and αγω.] Such medicines as are supposed particularly to purge off black choler.

MELANCHOL'ICK. adj. [from melancholy.]

1. Disordered with melancholy; fanciful; hypochondriacal; gloomy.

If he be mad, or angry, or melancholick, or sprightly, he will paint whatsoever is proportionable to any one. Dryden.

The commentators on old Aristotle, 'tis urg'd, in judgement vary: They to their own conceits have brought

The image of his general thought:

Just as the melancholick eye

Sees fleets and armies in the sky. Prior.

2. Unhappy; unfortunate; causing sorrow.

The king found himself at the head of his army, after so many accidents and melancholick perplexities. Clarendon.

MELANCHOLY. n. s. [melancolie, Fr. from μελανος and χολη.]

1. A disease, supposed to proceed from a redundance of black bile; but it is better known to arise from too heavy and too viscid blood: its cure is in evacuation, nervous medicines, and powerful stimuli. Quincy.

2. A kind of madness, in which the mind is always fixed on one object.

I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation; nor the musician's, which is fantastical; nor the courtier's, which is proud; nor the soldier's, which is ambitious; nor the lawyer's, which is politic; nor the lady's which is nice; nor the lover's, which is all these; but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often rumination wraps me in a most humorous sadness. Shakesp.

Moonstruck madness, moping melancholy. Milt.

3. A gloomy, pensive, discontented temper.

He protested, that he had only been to seek solitary places by an extreme melancholy that had possessed him. Stancy.

All these gifts come from him; and if we murmur here, we may at the next melancholy be troubled that God did not make us angels. Taylor's Holy Living.

This melancholy flatters, but unmans you;

What is it else but penury of soul,

A lazy frost, a numbness of the mind? Dryden.

In those deep solitudes and awful cells,

Where heav'nly pensive contemplation dwells,

And ever musing melancholy reigns. Pope.

R 121

MELANCHOLY. adj. [melancholique, Fr.]

1. Gloomy; dismal.

Think of all our miseries
But as some melancholy dream, which has awak'd us
To the renewing of our joys. Denham.

If in the melancholy shades below,
The flames of friends and lovers cease to glow;
Yet mine shall sacred last, mine undecay'd,
Burn on through death, and animate my shade. Pope.

2. Diseased with melancholy; fanciful;
habitually dejected.

How now, sweet Frank; art thou melancholy?
Shakesp.

He observes Lamech more melancholy than usual, and imagines it to be from a suspicion he has of his wife Adah, whom he loved. Locke.

MELICERIS. n. s. [μυλικερις.]

Meliceris is a tumour inclosed in a cystis, and consisting of matter like honey. The matter resembles milk curds, the tumour is called atheroma; if like honey, meliceris; and if composed of fat, or a suety substance, steatoma. Sharp.

MELILOT. n. s. [melilot, Fr. melilotus, Lat.] A plant.

TO MELIORATE. v. a. [meliorer, Fr.
from melior.] To better; to improve.

Grafting meliorates the fruit; for that the nourishment is better prepared in the stock than in the crude earth. Bacon.

But when we graft or buds inoculate,
Nature by art we nobly meliorate. Denham.

A man ought by no means to think that he should be able so much as to alter or meliorate the humour of an ungrateful person by any acts of kindness. South.

Castration serves to meliorate the flesh of those leasts that suffer it. Graunt.

Much labour is requir'd in trees;
Well must the ground be digg'd, and better
dress'd,

New soil to make, and meliorate the rest. Dryden.

MELIORATION. n. s. [melioration, Fr.
from meliorate.] Improvement; act of bettering.

For the melioration of musick there is yet much left, in this point of exquisite consorts, to try. Bacon.

MELIORITY. n. s. [from melior.] State of being better. A word very elegant, but not used.

Men incline unto them which are softest, and least in their way, in despite of them that hold them hardest to it; so that this colour of meliorty and pre-eminence is a sign of weakness. Bacon.

The order and beauty of the inanimate parts of the world, the discernible ends of them, the meliorty above what was necessary to be, do evince, by a reflex argument, that it is the workmanship not of blind mechanism, but of an intelligent and benign agent. Bentley.

TO MELL. v. n. [meler, se meler, Fr.]

To mix; to meddle. Obsolete.

It fathers fits not with such things to mell. Spem.
Here is a great deal of good matter
Lost for lack of telling;

Now I see thou dost but clatter,
Harm may come of melling. Spenser's Pastorals.

MELLI'FEROUS. adj. Productive of honey. Dict.

MELLIFICATION. n. s. [mellifico, Lat.]
The art or practice of making honey; production of honey.

In judging of the air, many things besides the weather ought to be observed: in some countries, the silence of grass-hoppers, and want of mellifi-cation in bees. Arbuthnot.

MELLI'FLUENCE. n. s. [mcl and fluo, Lat.] A honied flow; a flow of sweetness.

MELLI'FLUENT. } adj. [mcl and fluo, MELLI'FLUOUS. } Lat.] Flowing with honey; flowing with sweetness.

A mellifluous voice, as I am a true knight. Shak.
As all those things which are most mellifluous are soonest changed into choler and bitterness, so are our vanities and pleasures converted into the bitterest sorrows. Raleigh.

Innumerable songsters in the freshening shade
Of new sprung leaves, their modulations mix Mellifluous. Thomson's Spring.

MELLOW. adj. [meapp soft, Sax. Skin- ner more nearly from mollis, molle, mol- low, mellow: though r is indeed easily changed into l in common speech.]

1. Soft with ripeness; full ripe.

A storm, a robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay my leaves. Shakesp.

An apple in my hand works different effects upon my senses: my eye tells me it is green; my nose, that it hath a mellow scent; and my taste, that it is sweet. Digby.

A little longer,
And Nature drops him down without your sin,
Like mellow fruit, without a winter storm. Dryden.

2. Soft in sound.

Of seven smooth joints a mellow pipe I have,
Which with his dying breath Danaëtas gave. Dry.

3. Soft; unctuous.

Canomile sheweth mellow grounds fit for wheat. Bacon.

4. Drunk; melted down with drink.

Greedy of physicians frequent fees,
From female mellow praise he takes degrees. Rosc.
In all thy humours, whether grave or mellow,
Thou'rt such a testy, touchy, pleasant fellow;
Hast so much wit, and mirth, and spleen about thee,
There is no living with thee, nor without thee. Addison.

TO MELLOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To ripen; to mature; to soften by ripeness; to ripen by age.

Lord Aubrey Vere

Was done to death, and more than so, my father;
Even in the downfall of his mellow'd years. Shak.
The royal tree hath left us royal fruit,
Which mellow'd by the stealing hours of time,
Will well become the seat of majesty. Shakesp.

On foreign mountains may the sun refine
The grapes soft juice, and mellow it to wine. Addis.

2. To soften.

They plow in the wheat stubble in December; and if the weather prove frosty to mellow it, they do not plow it again till April. Mortimer's Husband.

3. To mature to perfection.

This episode, now the most pleasing entertainment of the Aeneis, was so accounted in his own age, and before it was mellowed into that reputation which time has given it. Dryden.

TO MELLOW. v. n. To be matured; to ripen

Though no stone tell thee what I was, yet thou
In my grave's inside see'st, what thou art now;
Yet thou'rt not yet so good, till us death lay
To ripe and mellow thee, we're stubborn clay. Donne.

MELLOWNESS. n. s. [from mellow.]

1. Maturity of fruits; ripeness; softness by maturity.

My reason can consider greenness, mellowness, sweetness, or coldness, singly, and without relation to any other quality that is painted in me by the same apple. Digby of Bodies.

The spring, like youth, fresh blossoms doth produce,

But Autumn makes them ripe, and fit for use:
So age a mature mellowness doth set
On the green promises of youthful heat. Denham.

2. Maturity; full age.

MELOCO'TON. n. s. [melocotone, Span.
malum cotoneum, Lat.] A quince.
Obsolete.

In apricots, peaches, or melocotones upon a wall,
the greatest fruits are towards the bottom. Bacon.

MELODIOUS. adj. [from melody.] Musical; harmonious.

Fountains! and ye that warble, as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs; warbling tune his praise. Milton.

And oft with holy hymns he charm'd their ears;
A musick more melodious than the spheres. Dryd.

MELODIOUSLY. adv. [from melodious.]
Musically; harmoniously.

MELODIOUSNESS. n. s. [from melodious.]
Harmoniousness; musicalness.

MELODY. n. s. [μελωδία.] Musick;
sweetness of sound.

The prophet David having singular knowledge not in poetry alone but in musick also, judging them both to be things most necessary for the house of God, left behind him a number of divinely indited poems, and was farther the author of adding unto poetry melody in public prayer, melody both vocal and instrumental, for the raising up of men's hearts, and the sweetening of their affections towards God. Hooker.

Singing and making melody in your hearts to the Lord. Ephesians.

Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky critics,
And hush'd with buzzing night flies to thy slumber;
Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shak.

Lend me your songs, ye nightingales: Oh pour
The mazy-running soul of melody
Into my varied verse! Thomson's Spring.

MELON. n. s. [melon, Fr. melo, Lat.]

1. A plant.

The flower of the melon consists of one leaf, which is of the expanded bell shape, cut into several segments, and exactly like those of the cucumber: some of these flowers are barren, not adhering to the embryo; others are fruitful, growing upon the embryo, which is afterwards changed into a fruit, for the most part of an oval shape, smooth or wrinkled, and divided into three semi-apartments, which seem to be cut into two parts, and contain many oblong seeds. Miller.

2. The fruit.

We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers and the melons. Num. xi. 5

MELON-THISTLE. n. s. [melococcus,
Lat.]

The whole plant of the melon-thistle hath a singular appearance. Miller.

TO MELT. v. a. [meltan, Sax.]

1. To dissolve; to make liquid; commonly by heat.

How they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop, and liquor fishermen's boots with me. Shak.

When the melting fire burneth, the fire causeth
the waters to boil. Isa. lxiv. 2.

This price, which is given above the value of the silver in our coin, is given only to preserve our coin from being melted down. Locke.

The rock's high summit in the temple's shade,
Nor heat could melt, nor beating storm invade. Pope.

If your butter when melted tastes of brass, it is your master's fault, who will not allow you a silver saucepan. Swift.

2. To dissolve; to break in pieces.

To take in pieces this frame of nature, and melt it down into its first principles; and then to observe how the divine wisdom wrought all these things into that beautiful composition; is a kind of joy, which pierceth the mind. Burnet.

3. To soften to love or tenderness.

The mighty master smil'd to see
That love was in the next degree:
'Twas but a kindred sound to move,
For pity melts the mind to love. Dryden.

- Alas! the story melts away my soul. Addison.
 4. To waste away.
 Thou would'st have plunged thyself
 In general riot, melted down thy youth
 In different beds of lust. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
 To MELT. v. n.

1. To become liquid; to dissolve; to be made fluid.

Let them melt away as waters which run continually. Psalm.

The rose is fragrant, but it fades in time;
 The violet sweet, but quickly past the prime;
 While lilies hang their heads and soon decay,
 And whiter snow in minutes melts away. Dryden.

2. To be softened to pity, or any gentle passion; to grow tender, mild, or gentle.

I melt, and am not
 Of stronger earth than others. Shakesp.

Dighton and Forrest;
 Albeit, they were flesh villains, bloody dogs,
 Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
 Wept like two children in their death's sad story. Shakesp.

This said; the mov'd assistants melt in tears. Dryden.

Melting into tears, the pious man
 Deplor'd so sad a sight. Dryden.

3. To be dissolved; to lose substance.

Whither are they vanish'd?
 —To the air: and what seem'd corporal Melted as breath into the wind. Shak. Macbeth.

Beauty is a witch,
 Against whose charms faith melts into blood. Shakesp.

4. To be subdued by affliction.

My soul melts for heaviness: strengthen thou me. Psalm.

- MELTER. n. s. [from melt.] One that melts metals.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswat melts, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

This the author attributes to the remissness of the former melts, in not exhausting the ore. Derham's Physico-Theology.

- MELTINGLY. adv. [from melting.] Like something melting.

Zelmae lay upon a bank, that her tears falling into the water, one might have thought she began meltingly to be metamorphos'd to the running river. Sidney.

- MELWEL. n. s. A kind of fish.

- MEMBER. n. s. [membre, Fr. membrum, Lat.]

1. A limb; a part appendant to the body.

It is profitable for thee that one of thy members should perish, and not that thy whole body should be cast into hell. Matth.

The tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Jam. iii. 5.

If shape it might be call'd, that shape had none, Distinguishable in member, joint, or limb. Milton.

2. A part of a discourse or period; a head; a clause.

Where the respondent limits or distinguishes any proposition, the opponent must prove his own proposition according to that member of the distinction in which the respondent denied it. Watts.

3. Any part of an integral.

In poetry as in architecture, not only the whole but the principal members, should be great. Addis.

4. One of a community.

My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with obloquies. King Charles.

Mean as I am, yet have the Muses made Me free, a member of the tuneful trade. Dryden.

Sienna is adorned with many towers of brick, which, in the time of the commonwealth, were erected to such of the members as had done service to their country. Addison.

- MEMBRANE. n. s. [membrane, Fr. membrana, Lat.]

A membrane is a web of several sorts of fibres, interwoven together for the covering and wrapping up some parts; the fibres of the membranes give them an elasticity, whereby they can contract, and closely grasp the parts they contain, and their nervous fibres give them an exquisite sense, which is the cause of their contraction; they can, therefore, scarcely suffer the sharpness of medicines, and are difficultly united when wounded. Quincy.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth after tear asunder.

They obstacle find none
 Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace, Total they mix. Milton.

The inner membrane that involved the several liquors of the egg remained unbroken. Boyle.

- MEMBRANACEOUS. } adj. [membranaceus, MEMBRANEOUS. } Fr. from mem- MEMBRANOUS. } brana, Lat.]

Consisting of membranes.

Lute-strings which are made of the membranaceous parts of the guts strongly wreathed, swell so much as to break in wet weather. Boyle.

Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-hew. Brown.

Such birds as are carnivorous have no gizzard, or muscular, but a membranous stomach; that kind of food being torn into small flakes by the beak, may be easily concocted by a membranous stomach. Ray on the Creation.

Anodyne substances, which take off contractions of the membranous parts, are diuretick. Arbuthnot.

Birds of prey have membranaceous, not muscular stomachs. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

- MEMENTO. n. s. [Lat.] A memorial; notice; a hint to awaken the memory.

Our master, for his learning and piety, is not only a precedent to his own subjects, but to foreign princes; yet he is but a man, and seasonable mementos may be useful. Bacon.

Is not the frequent spectacle of other people's deaths a memento sufficient to make you think of your own? L'Estrange.

- MEMOIR. n. s. [memoire, Fr.]

1. An account of transactions familiarly written.

Be our great master's future charge
 To write his own memoirs, and leave his heirs
 High schemes of government and plans of wars. Prior.

2. Hint; notice; account of any thing.

There is not in any author a computation of the revenues of the Roman empire, and hardly any memoirs from whence it might be collected. Arbuthnot on Coins.

- MEMORABLE. adj. [memorable, Fr. memorabilis, Lat.] Worthy of memory; not to be forgotten.

Nothing I so much delight to recount, as the memorable friendship that grew betwixt the two princes. Sidney.

From this desire, that main desire proceeds,
 Which all men have surviving fame to gain,
 By tombs, by books, by memorable deeds,
 For she that this desires doth still remain. Davies.

Dares Ulysses for the prize contend,
 In sight of what he durst not once defend;
 But basely fled that memorable day,
 When I from Hector's hands redeem'd the flaming prey? Dryden.

- MEMORABLY. adv. [from memorable.] In a manner worthy of memory.

- MEMORANDUM. n. s. [Lat.] A note to help the memory.

I resolved to new pave every street, and entered a memorandum in my pocket-book accordingly. Guardian.

Nature's fair table-book, our tender souls,
 We scrawl all o'er with old and empty rules,
 Stale memorandums of the schools. Swift.

- MEMORIAL. adj. [memorial, Fr. memorialis, Lat.]

1. Preservative of memory.

Thy master now lies thinking in his bed
 Of thee and me, and sighs, and takes my glove,
 And gives memorial dainty kisses to it. Shakesp.

May I, at the conclusion of a work, which is a kind of monument of Pope's partiality to me, place the following lines as an inscription memorial of it. Broomer.

The tomb with manly arms and trophies raise;
 There high in air memorial of my name
 Fix the smooth ear, and bid me live to fame. Pope.

2. Contained in memory.

The case is with the memorial possessions of the greatest part of mankind: a few useful things mixed with many trifles fill up their memories. Watts.

- MEMORIAL. n. s.

1. A monument; something to preserve memory.

Churches have names; some as memorials of peace, some of wisdom, some in memory of the Trinity itself, some of Christ under sundry titles; of the blessed Virgin not a few; many of one apostle, saint, or martyr; many of all. Hooker.

A memorial unto Israel, that no stranger offer incense before the Lord. Num. xvi. 43.

All the laws of this kingdom have some monuments or memorials thereof in writing, yet all of them have not their original in writing; for some of those laws have obtained their force by immemorial usage. Hale.

In other parts like deeds deserv'd
Memorial, where the might of Gabriel fought. Milton.

Reflect upon a clear, unblotted, acquitting conscience, and feed upon the ineffable comforts of the memorial of a conquered temptation. South.

Medals are so many monuments consigned over to eternity, that may last when all other memorials of the same age are worn out or lost. Addison.

2. Hint to assist the memory.

He was a prince sad, serious, and full of thoughts and secret observations, and full of notes and memorials of his own hand touching persons. Bacon.

Memorials written with king Edward's hand shall be the ground of this history. Hanward.

3. An address; reminding of services and soliciting reward.

- MEMORIALIST. n. s. [from memorial.] One who writes memorials.

I must not omit a memorial setting forth, that the memorialist had, with great dispatch, carried a letter from a certain lord to a certain lord. Spectator.

- To MEMORIZE. v. a. [from memory.]

1. To record; to commit to memory by writing.

They neglect to memorize their conquest of the Indians, especially in those times in which the same was supposed. Spenser.

Let their names that were bravely lost be rather memorized in the full table of time; for my part, I love no ambitious pains in an eloquent description of miseries. Wotton.

2. To cause to be remembered.

They meant
 To memorize another Golgotha. Shakesp.

- MEMORY. n. s. [memoire, Fr. memoria, Lat.]

1. The power of retaining or recollecting things past; retention; reminiscence; recollection.

Memory is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas which after imprinting have disappeared, or have been laid aside out of sight. Locke.

123

The memory is perpetually looking back, when we have nothing present to entertain us: it is like those repositories in animals that are filled with stores of food, on which they may ruminate, when their present pasture fails. Addison's Spectator.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

That ever-living man of memory,
Henry the Fifth! Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. Time of knowledge.

Thy request think now fulfill'd, that ask'd
How first this world, and face of things, began,
And what, before thy memory, was done. Milton.

4. Memorial; monumental record.

Be better suited;
These weeds are memories of those worse hours:
I pry thee put them off. Shakesp. King Lear.

5. Reflection; attention. Not in use.

When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassel so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakesp. Macbeth.

MEN. the plural of man.

Wits live obscurely, men know not how; or die obscurely, men mark not when. Ascham.

For men, there are to be considered the val'ur and number: the old observation is not untrue, that the Spaniards valour lieth in the eye of the looker-on; but the English valour lieth about the soldier's heart. Bacon's War with Spain.

He thought fit that the king's affairs should entirely be conducted by the soldiers and men of war. Clarendon.

MEN-PLEASER. n. s. [men and pleaser.]

One too careful to please others.
Servants be obedient to them that are your masters: not with eye-service, as men-pleasers;
but as the servants of Christ, doing the will of God from the heart. Eph. vi. 6.

To MENACE. v. a. [menacer, Fr.] To threaten; to threaten.

Who ever knew the heavens menace so? Shakesp.
Your eyes do menace me: why look you pale?
Shakesp.

My master knows not but I am gone hence,
And fearfully did menace me with death,
If I did stay to look on his intents. Shakesp.

From this league
Peep'd harms that menac'd him. Shakesp.
What shou'd he do? 'Twas death to go away,
And the god menac'd if he dar'd to stay. Dryden.

MENACE. n. s. [menace, Fr. from the verb.] Threat.

He that would not believe the menace of God at first, it may be doubted whether, before an ocular example, he believed the curse at last. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The Trojans view the dusty cloud from far,
And the dark menace of the distant war. Dryden.

MENACER. n. s. [menaceur, Fr. from menace.] A threatener; one that threatens.

Hence, menacer! nor tempt me into rage!
This roof protects thy rashness. But begone!

and mend the house. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 10.

2. To correct; to alter for the better.

The best service they could do to the state, was to mend the lives of the persons who composed it.
Temple.

You need not despair, by the assistance of his growing reason, to mend the weakness of his constitution. Locke.

Name a new play and he's the poet's friend;
Nay, show'd his faults—but when would poets mend? Pope.

Their opinion of Wood, and his project, is not mended. Swift.

3. To help; to advance.

Whatever is new is unlooked for; and ever it mends some, and impairs others; and he that is helpen takes it for a fortune, and he that is hurt for a wrong. Bacon.

If, to avoid succession in eternal existence, they recor to the punctum stans of the schools, they will thereby very little mend the matter, or help us to a more positive idea of infinite duration. Locke.

Though in some lands the grass is but short, yet it mends garden herbs and fruit. Mort. Hus.

4. To improve; to increase.

Death comes not at call; justice divine
Mends not her slowest pace, for pray'r, or cries. Milton.

When upon the sands the traveller
Sees the high sea come rolling from afar,
The land grow short, he mends his weary pace,
While death behind him covers all the place. Dryden.

He saw the monster mend his pace; he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings. Dryden.

To MEND. v. n. To grow better; to advance in any good; to be changed for the better.

MENDABLE. adj. [from mend.] Capable of being mended. A low word.

MENDACITY. n. s. [from mendax, Lat.]

Now like a menstruous woman art remov'd. Sandys.

2. Happening to women at certain times.
Many, from being women, have proved men at the first point of their menstruous eruptions. Brown.

MENSTRUUM. n. s. [This name probably was derived from some notion of the old chemists about the influence of the moon in the preparation of dissolvents.]

All liquors are called menstruums which are used as dissolvents, or to extract the virtues of ingredients by infusion, decoction. Quincy.

Enquire what is the proper menstruum to dissolve metal, what will touch upon the one and not upon the other, and what several menstrua will dissolve any metal. Boccon.

White metalline bodies must be excepted, which, by reason of their excessive density, seem to reflect almost all the light incident on their first superficies, unless by solution in menstruums they be reduced into very small particles, and then they become transparent. Newton's Opticks.

MENSURABILITY. n. s. [mensurabilité,

Fr.] Capacity of being measured.

MENSURABLE. adj. [mensura, Lat.]

Measurable; that may be measured.
We measure our time by law and not by nature.
The solar month is no periodical motion, and not easily mensurable, and the months unequal among themselves, and not to be measured by even weeks or days. Holder.

MENSURAL. adj. [from mensura, Lat.]

Relating to measure.

To MENSURATE. v. a. [from mensura,

Lat.] To measure; to take the dimension of any thing.

MENSURATION. n. s. [from mensura, of Dr. Cumberland, it would not have been fair to have suppressed those of another prelate. Arbuthnot.

MENTAL. adj. [mentale, Fr. mentis, Lat.]

Intellectual; existing in the mind.

What a mental power

This eye shoots forth? How big imagination Moves in this lip? To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
So deep the pow'r of these ingredients pierc'd,
Ev'n to the inmost seat of mental sight,
That Adam now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton.

The metaphor of taste would not have been so general, had there not been a conformity between the mental taste and that sensitive taste that affects the palate. Addison.

If the ideas be not innate, there was a time when the mind was without those principles; for when the ideas are not, there can be no knowledge, no assent, no mental or verbal propositions about them. Locke.

She kindly talk'd, at least three hours,
Of plastick forms, and mental pow'rs. Prior.
Those inward representations of spirit, thought love, and hatred, are pure and mental ideas, belonging to the mind, and carry nothing of shape or sense in them. Watts.

MENTALLY. adv. [from mental.] Intellectually; in the mind; not practically or externally, but in thought or meditation.

If we consider the heart the first principle of life, and mentally divide it into its constituent parts, we find nothing but what is in any muscle of the body. Bentley.

MENTION. n. s. [mention, Fr. mentio,
Lat.]

1. Oral or written expression, or recital of any thing.

Think on me when it shall be well with thee;
and make mention of me unto Pharaoh. Gen. xl. 14

The Almighty introduces the proposal of his laws rather with the mention of some particular acts of kindness, than by reminding mankind of his severity. Rogers.

2. Cursory or incidental nomination.

Haply mention may arise
Of something not unreasonable to ask. Milton.

TO MENTION. v. a. [mentionner, Fr.
from the noun.] To write or express

The practice of buying and selling.

MERCENARINESS. n. s. [from merce- nary.] Venality; respect to hire or reward.

To forego the pleasures of sense, and undergo the hardships that attend a holy life, is such a kind of mercenariness, as none but a resigned, believing soul is likely to be guilty of: if fear itself, and even the fear of hell, may be one justifiable motive of men's actions. Boyle.

MERCENARY. adj. [mercenarius, Fr.
mercenarius, Lat.]

1. Venal; hired; sold for money.

Many of our princes, woe the while!
Lie drown'd, and soak'd in mercenary blood. Shak.

ness, by your rule, should be imposed upon his father. Shakesp. Henry V.

If he pay thee to the utmost farthing, thou hast forgiven nothing: it is merchandise, and not forgiveness, to restore him that does as much as you can require. Taylor.

2. Wares; any thing to be bought or sold.

Fair when her breast, like a rich laden bark
With precious merchandise, she forth doth lay.
Spenser.

Thou shalt not sell her at all for money; y
thou shalt not make merchandise of her. Deut. xxi. 14.
As for any merchandise you have brought, ye shall have your return in merchandise or in gold.
Bacon.

So active a people will always have money, whilst they can send what merchandises they please to Mexico. Addison.

TO MERCHANTISE. v. n. To trade;

from merchant.] Fit to be bought or sold.

Why they placed this invention in the beaver, beside the medical and merchantable commodity of castor, or parts conceived to be bitten away, might be the sagacity of that animal.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MERCIALE. adj. [from mercy.] This word in Spenser signifies merciful. Not used.

Nought but well mought him betight;
He is so meek, wise, merciable,
And with his word his work is convenable.

Spenser.

MERCIFUL. adj. [mercy and full.] Compassionate; tender; kind; unwilling to punish; willing to pity and spare.

Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people thou hast redeemed. Deut. xxi. 8.

His providence, and on him sole depend,
Merciful over all his works; with good Still overcoming evil. Milton.

MERCIFULLY. adv. [from merciful.]
Tenderly; mildly; with pity; with compassion.

Make the true use of those afflictions which his hand, mercifully severe, hath been pleased to lay upon thee. Atterbury.

MERCIFULNESS. n. s. [from merciful.]
Tenderness; willingness to spare.

The hand that ought to knit all these excellencies together is a kind mercifulness to such a one,
as is in his soul devoted to such perfections. Sidney.

I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall. Shakesp.

Thou remembrest,
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakesp.

Did sense persuade Ulysses not to hear
The mermaids songs, which so his men did please,
That they were all persuaded, through the ear,
To quit the ship and leap into the seas? Davies.

Few eyes have escaped the picture of a mermaid: Horae his monster, with woman's head above, and fishy extremity below, answers the shape of the ancient syrens that attempted upon Ulysses. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

MESENTERICK. adj. [mesenterique, Fr. from mesentery.] Relating to the mesentery.

They are carried into the glands of the mesentery, receiving a fine lymph from the lymphatic ducts, which dilutes this chylous fluid, and severs its containing vessels, which, from the mesenterick glands, unite in large channels, and pass directly into the common receptacle of the chyle. Cheyne.

MESH. n. s. [maesche, Dut. maeche, old French: it were therefore better written, as it is commonly pronounced, mesh.] The interstice of a net; the space between the threads of a net.

The drovers hang square nets athwart the tide, thorough which the shoal of pilchard passing, leave many behind entangled in the meshes. Carew.

Such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. Shakesp.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight,
With twinkling glasses to betray

The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

With all their mouths theeves the spirits drink,
Which through the cells of the fine strainers sink:
These all the channel'd fibres ev'ry way,
For motion and sensation, still convey:
The greatest portion of th' arterial blood,
By the close structure of the parts withstood,
Whose narrow meshes stop the grosser flood. Blackmore.

To MESH. v. a. [from the noun.] To catch in a net; to ensnare.

The flies by chance mesh in her hair,
By the bright radiance thrown From her clear eyes, rich jewels were,
They so like diamonds shone. Drayton.

with respect to his own knowledge, into the most regular and methodical repositories. Rogers.

METHO'DICALLY. adv. [from methodical.] According to method and order.

To begin methodically, I should enjoy you travel; for absence doth remove the cause, removing the object. Suckling.

All the rules of painting are methodically, concisely, and clearly delivered in this treatise. Dryd.

To METHODIZE. v. a. [from method.]

To regulate; to dispose in order.
Resolv'd his unripe vengeance to defer,
The royal spy retir'd again unseen,
To brood in secret on his gather'd spleen,
And methodize revenge. Dryden's Boccace.

The man who does not know how to methodize his thoughts, has always a barren superfluity of words; the fruit is lost amidst the exuberance of leaves. Spectator.

One who brings with him any observations which he has made in his reading of the poets, will find his own reflections methodized and explained, in the works of a good critic. Addis. Spe.

Those rules of old discover'd, not devis'd,
Are nature still, but nature methodis'd. Pope.

METHODIST. n. s. [from method.]

1. A physician who practices by theory.

Our wariest physicians, not only chemists but methodists, give it inwardly in several constitutions and distempers. Boyle.

2. One of a new kind of puritans lately arisen, so called from their profession to live by rules and in constant method.

METHOUGHT, the preterite of methinks.

See METHINKS and MESEEMS. I thought; it appeared to me. I know not that any author has methought, though it is more grammatical, and deduced analogically from methinks.

Methought, a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey. Shakesp.
Since I sought

By pray'r th' offended deity t' appease;
Kneel'd, and before him humbled all my heart,
Methought, I saw him placable, and mild,
Bending his ear: persuasion in me grew
That I was heard with favour; peace return'd
Home to my breast; and to my memory
His promise, "That thy seed shall bruise our foe."
Milton

In these
I found not what, methought, I wanted still. Milt.
Methought I stood on a wide river's bank,
Which I must needs o'erpass, but knew not how. Dryden.

METONY'MICAL. adj. [from metonymy.] Put by metonymy for something else.

METONY'MICALLY. adv. [from metonymical.] By metonymy; not literally.

The disposition of the coloured body, as that modifies the light, may be called by the name of a colour metonymically, or efficiently; that is, in regard of its turning the light that rebounds from it, or passes through it, into this or that particular colour. Boyle.

METONY'MY. n. s. [metonymic, Fr. μετωνυμία.] A rhetorical figure, by which one word is put for another, as the matter for the matriciate; he died by steel, that is, by a sword.

They differ only as cause and effect, which, by a metonymy usual in all sorts of authors, are frequently put one for another. Tillotson.

METOPÓSCOPY. n. s. [metoposeopic, Fr. μετωποσκόπια and σκόπια.] The study of physiognomy; the art of knowing the characters of men by the countenance.

METRE. n. s. [metrum, Lat. μέτρον.] Speech confined to a certain number and harmonick disposition of syllables; verse; measure; numbers.

For the metre sake, some words be driven awry which require a straighter placing in plain prose. Aschum's Schoolmaster.

Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
To laugh at lords. Pope.

METRICAL. adj. [metricus, Lat. metrique, Fr.]

1. Pertaining to metre or numbers.
2. Consisting of verses: as, metrical precepts.

METROPOLIS. n. s. [metropolis, Lat. metropole, Fr. μητρος and πολις.] The mother city; the chief city of any country or district.

His eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen: or some renown'd metropolis,
With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

Reduc'd in careful watch Round their metropolis. Milton's Par. Lost.

We stopped at Pavia, that was once the metropolis of a kingdom, but at present a poor town. Addison on Italy.

METROPÓLITAN. n. s. [metropolitannus, Lat.] A bishop of the mother church; an archbishop.

He was promoted to Canterbury upon the death of Dr. Bancroft, that metropolitan, who understood the church excellently, and countenanced men of the greatest parts in learning. Clarendon.

METROPÓLITAN. adj. Belonging to a metropolis.

Their patriarch, of a covetous desire to enrich himself, had forborn to institute metropolitan bishops. Raleigh.

METROPÓLITICAL. adj. [from metropolis.] Chief or principal of cities.

He fearing the power of the Christians was gone as far as Gratia, the metropolitocal city of Siria. Knolles.

METTLE. n. s. [corrupted from metal, but commonly written so when the metaphorical sense is used.]

1. Spirit; spriteliness; courage.

What a blunt fellow is this grown to be?
He was quick mettle when he went to school. Shakesp.

I had rather go with sir priest than sir knight:
I care not who knows so much of my mettle. Shak. Twelfth Night

Upon this heaviness of the king's forces, interpreted to be fear and want of mettle, divers resorted to the seditions. Hayward's Edward VI.

He had given so frequent testimony of signal courage in several actions, that his mettle was never suspected. Clarendon.

'Tis more to guide than spur the muse's steed,
Restrain his fury, than provoke his speed;
The winged courser, like a generous horse,
Shows most true mettle when you check his course. Pope.

2. Substance: this at least should be mettal.

Oh thou! whose self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puffed,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue. Shak.

METTLED. adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; courageous; full of ardour; full of fire.

Such a light and mettal'd dance Saw you never. Ben Jonson.

Not would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steeds, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison.

METTLESOME. adj. [from mettle.] Spritely; lively; gay; brisk; airy; fiery; courageous.

Their voice differs from true spirit, as much as a vicious from a mettlesome horse. Tatler.

METTLESOMELY. adv. [from mettlesome.] With spriteliness.

MEW. n. s. [mue, Fr.]

1. A cage; an inclosure; a place where anything is confined.

Forth-coming from her darksome mew,
Where she all day did hide her hated lew. Spens.
There then she does transform to monstrous hues,
And horribly mis-shapes with ugly sights,
Captiv'd eternally in iron mews,
And darksome dens, where Titan his face never shews. Spenser.

Her lofty hand would of itself refuse
To touch the dainty needle or nice thread,
She hated chambers, closets, secret mews,
And in broad fields preserv'd her maidenhead. Fairfax.

2. [Mæp, Sax.] A sea-fowl.
Among the first sort we reckon coots, sanderlings, and mews. Carew.

The vessel sticks, and shews her open'd side,
And on her shatter'd mast the mews in triumph ride. Dryden.

To MEW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut up; to confine; to imprison; to inclose.

He in dark corners mew'd, Mutter'd of matters as their books them shew'd. Hubberd.

Why should your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, then move you to mew up Your tender kinsman. Shakesp. King John.

Fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold, fruitless moon. Shakesp.

More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakesp.
Feign them sick,
Close mew'd in their sedans, for fear of air. Dryden's Juvenal.

It is not possible to keep a young gentleman from vice by a total ignorance of it, unless you will all his life mew him up in a closet, and never let him go into company. Locke.

2. To shed the feathers. It is, I believe, used in this sense, because birds are, by close confinement, brought to shed their feathers.

I should discourse of hawks, and then treat of their ayries, mewings, casting, and renovation of their feathers. Walton.

The sun hath mew'd his beams from off his lamp,
And majesty defac'd the royal stamp. Cloveland.

Nine times the moon hath mew'd her horns, at length
With travel weary, unsupply'd with strength,
And with the burden of her womb oppress'd,
Sabeian fields afford her needful rest. Dryden.

3. [Miauler, Fr.] To cry as a cat.

Let Hercules himself do what he may,
The cat will mew, the dog will have his day. Shak.

They are not improveable beyond their own genius: a dog will never learn to mew, nor a cat to bark. Grew.

To MEWL. v. n. [miauler, Fr.] To squall as a child.

The infant
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms. Shakesp.

MEZEREON. n. s. A species of spurge lawrel.

Mezereon is common in our gardens, and on the Alps and Pyreneau mountains: every part of this shrub is acrid and pungent, and inflames the mouth and throat. Hill.

MEZZOTINTO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of graving, so named as nearly resembling paint, the word importing half

M I C

Painted: It is done by beating the whole into asperity with a hammer, and then rubbing it with a stone to the resemblance intended.

MEYNT. adv. Mingle. Obsolete.

The salt M-dway, that trickling streams

Adown the dales of Kent,

Till with the elder brother Thames

His brackish waves be meynt. Spenser's Past.

MI'ASM. n. s. [from μιασμή, iniquo to infect.] Such particles or atoms as are supposed to arise from distempered, putrefying, or poisonous bodies, and to affect people at a distance.

The plague is a malignant fever, caused through pestilential miasms insinuating into the humoral and consistent parts of the body. Harvey on Cons.

MICE, the plural of mouse.

Mice that mar the land. 1 Sam. vi. 5.

MICHA'ELMASS. n. s. [Michael and mass.] The feast of the archangel Michael, celebrated on the twenty-ninth of September.

They compounded to furnish ten oxen after Michaelmas for thirty pounds price. Carew.

To MICHE. v. n. To be secret or covered; to lie hid.

Marry this is miching malicho; it means mischief. Shakesp.

MICHER. n. s. [from miche.] A lazy loiterer, who skulks about in corners and by-places, and keeps out of sight; a hedge-creeper.

Mich or mick is still retained in the cant language for an indolent, lazy fellow. It is used in the western countie for a truant boy.

How tenderly her tender hands between
In ivory cage she did the micher bind. Sidney.

Shall the blessed son of heav'n prove a micher,
and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked.
Shall the son of England prove a thief, and take purses? a question to be asked. Shakesp.

MICKLE. adj. [micel, Sax.] Much; great. Obsolete. In Scotland it is pronounced muckle.

This reade is rife that oftentime

Great cumbers fall unsoft:

In humble dales is foting fast,

The trode is not so tickle,

And though one fall through heedless haste,
Yet is his miss not mickle. Spenser's Pastorals.

Many a little makes a mickle. Camden's Remains.

If I to-day don't die with Frenchmen's rage,

To-morrow I shall die with mickle age. Shakesp.

O, mickle is the pow'ful grace, that lies

In plants, berbs, stones, and their true qualities. Shakesp.

All this tract that fronts the falling sun,

A noble peer, of mickle trust and power,

Has in his charge. Milton.

MICROCO'SM. n. s. [μίκρο and κόσμος.] The little world. Man is so called as being imagined, by some fanciful philosophers, to have in him something analogous to the four elements.

You see this in the map of my microcosm. Shak.

She to whom this world must itself refer,

As suburbs, or the microcosm of her;

She, she is dead; she's dead, when thou know'st
this,

Thou know'st how lame a creeper this world is. Donne.

As in this our microcosm, the heart

Heat, spirit, motion gives to every part,

So Rome's victorious influence did disperse

All her own virtues through the universe. Denham.

Philosophers say, that man is a microcosm, or little world, resembling in miniature every part of the great; and the body natural may be compared to the body politic. Suiff.

M I D

MICROGRAPHY. n. s. [μίκρο; and γραφω.] The description of the parts of such very small objects as are discernible only with a microscope.

The honey bag is the stomach, which they always fill to satisfy and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter; a curious description and figure of the sting see in Mr. Hook's micrography. Grew's Museum.

MICROSCOPE. n. s. [μίκρο and σκοπεω; microscope, Fr.] An optick instrument, contrived various ways to give to the eye a large appearance of many objects which could not otherwise be seen.

If the eye were so acute as to rival the finest microscopes, and to discern the smallest hair upon the leg of a gnat, it would be a curse, and not a blessing to us; it would make all things appear rugged and deformed; the most finely polished crystal would be uneven and rough; the sight of our own selves would affright us; the smoothest skin would be beset all over with ragged scales and bristly hairs. Bentley.

The critick eye, that microscope of wit,
Sees hairs and pores, examines bit by bit. Dunciad.

MICROMETER. n. s. [μίκρο and μέτρον; micrometre, Fr.] An instrument contrived to measure small spaces.

MICROSCOPICAL. } adj. [from micro- MICROSCOPICK. } cope.]

1. Made by a microscope.

Make microscopical observations of the figure and bulk of the constituent parts of all fluids. Arbutnot and Pope.

2. Assisted by a microscope.

Evading even the microscopic eye!
Full nature swarms with life. Thomson's Summer.

3. Resembling a microscope.

Why has not man a microscopic eye?
For this plain reason. Man is not a fly:
Say what the use, were finer opticks giv'n,
I inspect a mite, not comprehend the heav'n? Pope.

MID. adj. [contracted from middle, or derived from mid, Dut.]

1. Middle; equally between two extremes.
No more the mounting larks, while Daphne sings,
Shall, lifting in mid air, suspend their wings. Pope.
Ere the mid hour of night, from tent to tent,
Unweary'd, through the numerous host be past. Rowe.

2. It is much used in composition.

MID-COURSE. n. s. [mid and course.] Middle of the way.

Why in the East
Darkness ere day's mid-course? and morning light,
More orient in yon western cloud, that draws O'er the blue firmament a radiant white. Milton.

MID-DAY. adj. [mid and day.] Meridional, being at noon.

Who shoots at the mid-day sun, though he be sure he shall never hit the mark, yet as sure he is he shall shoot higher than he who aims but at a hush. Sidney.

His sparkling eyes, replete with awful fire,
More dazzled and drove back his enemies,
Than mid-day sun fierce bent against their faces. Shakesp.

Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats? Addison.

MID-DAY. n. s. Noon; meridian.

Who have before, or shall write after thee,
Their works, though toughly labour'd, will be Like infancy or age to man's firm stay,
Or early or late twilights to mid-day. Donne.

MIDDEST. superl. of mid, middest, midst.

Yet the stout fairy 'mongst the middest crowd,
Thought all their glory vain in knightly view. Spenser.

M I D

MIDDLE. adj. [middle, Sax.]

1. Equally distant from the two extremes.

The lowest virtues draw praise from the common people; the middle virtues work in them astonishment; but of the highest virtues they have no sense. Bacon's Essays.

A middle station of life, within reach of those conveniences which the lower orders of mankind must necessarily want, and yet without embarrassment of greatness. Rogers.

To deliver all his fleet to the Romans, except ten middle-sized brigantines. Arbutnot on Cons.

I like people of middle understanding and middle rank. Swift.

2. Intermediate; intervening.

Will, seeking good, find many middle ends. Davies.

3. Middle finger; the long finger.

You first introduce the middle finger of the left-hand. Sharp.

MIDDLE. n. s.

1. Part equally distant from two extremities; the part remote from the verge.

There come people down by the middle of the land. Judges.

With roof so low that under it
They never stand, but lie or sit;
And yet so foul, that who so is in,
Is to the middle leg in prison. Hudibras.

2. The time that passes, or events that happen, between the beginning and end.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning; the effects of these causes and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unavailing and resolution of these difficulties are the end. Dryden.

MIDDLE-AGED. adj. [middle and age.]

Placed about the middle of life.

A middle-aged man, that was half grey, half brown, took a fancy to marry two wives. L'Estrange.

The middle-aged support fasting the best, because of the oily parts abounding in the blood. Arbutnot on Aliments.

I found you a very young man, and left you a middle-aged one: you knew me a middle-aged man, and now I am an old one. Swift.

MIDDLEMOST. adj. [from middle.] Being in the middle.

Why have not some beasts more than four feet, suppose six, and the middlemost shorter than the rest? More.

The outmost fringe vanished first, and the middlemost next, and the innermost last. Newton's Opt.

The outward stars, with their systems of planets, must necessarily have descended towards the middlemost system of the universe, whither all would be most strongly attracted from all parts of a finite space. Bentley's Sermons.

MIDDLING. adj. [from middle.]

1. Of middle rank; of condition equally remote from high and low.

A middling sort of a man, left well enough to pass by his father, could never think he had enough so long as any man had more. L'Estrange's Fables.

2. Of moderate size; having moderate qualities of any kind.

The bigness of a church ought to be no greater than that into which the voice of a preacher of middling lungs will easily extend. Graunt.

Longinus preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs, to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to any excellence. Dryden.

MIDLAND. adj. [mid and land.]

1. That which is remote from the coast.

The same name is given to the inlanders, or midland inhabitants of this island, by Caesar. Bacon's Vulg. Er.

The midland towns abounding in wealth, shew that their riches are inland and comesuck. Hovel.

M I D

The various dialects of the English in the North and West, render their expressions many times unintelligible to the other, and both scarce intelligible to the midland. Hale.

2. In the midst of the land; mediterranean.

There was the Plymouth squadron now come in, Which twice on Biscay's working bay had been, And on the midland sea the French had aw'd. Dryden.

MIDGE. n. s. [mæge, Sax.] A gnat.

MID-HEAVEN. n. s. [mid and heaven.] The middle of the sky.

But the hot hell that always in him burns, Though in mid-heaven, soon ended his delight. Milton.

MIDLEG. n. s. [mid and leg.] Middle of the leg.

He had fifty attendants, young men all, in white satten, loose coats to the midleg, and stockings of white silk. Bacon.

MIDMOST. adj. [from mid, or contracted from middlemost: this is one of the words which have not a comparative, though they seem to have a superlative degree.] The middle.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet, The midmost battles hasting up behind. Dryden.

Hear himself repine At fate's unequal laws; and at the clue, Which, merciless in length, the midmost sister drew. Dryden.

What dulness dropt among her sons imprest, Like motion, from one circle to the rest: So from the midmost the nutation spreads Round, and more round o'er all the sea of heads. Pope.

MIDNIGHT. n. s. [mid and night. Milton seems to have accented this last syllable.] The noon of night; the depth of night; twelve at night.

To be up after midnight, and to go to bed then, is early; so that to go to bed after midnight, is to go betimes. Shakesp.

By night he fled, and at midnight return'd From compassing the earth; cautious of day. Milton.

After this time came on the midnight of the church, wherein the very names of the councils were forgotten, and men did only dream of what had past. Stillingfleet.

In all that dark midnight of popery there were still some gleams of light, some witnesses that arose to give testimony to the truth. Atterbury.

They can tell what altitude the dog-star had at midnight or midnoon in Rome when Julius Cæsar was slain. Watts.

MIDNIGHT. adj. Being in the middle of the night.

How now, you secret, black and midnight hags? What is't you do? Shakesp. Macbeth.

I hope my midnight studies, to make our countries flourish in mysterious and beneficent arts, have not ungratefully affected your intellects. Bacon.

Some solitary cloister will I chuse, Coarse my attire, and short shall be my sleep, Broke by the melancholy midnight bell. Dryden.

MIDRIFF. n. s. [midriff, Sax.] The diaphragm

The midriff divides the trunk of the body into two cavities; the thorax and abdomen: it is composed of two muscles: the first and superior of these arises from the sternum, and the ends of the last ribs on each side. The second and inferior muscle comes from the vertebra of the loins by two productions, of which that on the right side comes from the first, second, and third vertebra of the loins: that on the left side is somewhat shorter; and both these productions join and make the lower part of the midriff. Quincy.

M I D

Whereat he inly rag'd, and as they talk'd, Smote him into the midriff with a stone That heat out life. Milton's Par. Lost.

- mony corrodes, gnaws, and soils the plant: or, mildew is rather a concrete substance, which exudes through the pores of the leaves. What the gardeners commonly call mildew is an insect, found in great plenty, preying upon this exsudation. Others say, that mildew is a thick, clammy vapour, exhaled in the Spring and Summer from the plants, blossoms, and even the earth itself, in close, still weather, where there is neither sun nor wind. Miller thinks the true cause of the mildew appearing most upon plants which are exposed to the East, is a dry temperature in the air when the wind blows from that point, which stops the pores of the plants, and prevents their perspiration; whereby the juices of the plants are concreted upon the surface of their leaves, which being of a sweetish nature, insects are incited thereto. Hill.
Down fell the mildew of his sugar'd words. Fairfax.
The mildew cometh by closeness of air; and therefore in hills, or champaign grounds, it seldom cometh. Bacon.
Soon blasting mildews blacken'd all the grain. Dryden.
- To MILDEW. v. a. To taint with mildew.
Here is your husband, like a mildew'd ear, Blasting his wholesome brother. Shakesp. Hamlet.

MILITANT. adj. [milicans, Lat. militante, Fr.]

1. Fighting; prosecuting the business of a soldier.

Against foul fiends they aid us militant;
They for us fight; they watch and duly ward,
And their bright squadrons round about us plant.

2. Engaged in warfare with hell and the world. A term applied to the church of Christ on earth, as opposed to the church triumphant.

Then are the publick duties of religion best ordered, when the militant church doth resemble, by sensible means, that hidden dignity and glory wherewith the church triumphant in Heaven is beautified.

The state of a Christian in this world is frequently compared to a warfare: and this allusion has appeared so just, that the character of militant has obtained, as the common distinction of that part of Christ's church sojourning here in this world, from that part of the family at rest.

MILITAR. } adj. [militaris, Lat. militari.
MILITARY. } taire, Fr. Militar is now wholly out of use.]

1. Engaged in the life of a soldier; soldierly.

He will maintain his argument as well as any military man in the world.

2. Suiing a soldier; pertaining to a soldier; warlike.

In the time of Severus and Antoninus, many, being soldiers, had been converted unto Christ, and notwithstanding continued still in the military course of life.

Although he were a prince in militar virtue approved, yet his cruelties weighed down his virtues.

The city gates out-prur'd, light-armed troops
In coats of mail and military pride,
The wreaths his grand sire knew to reap
By active toil, and military sweat,
Pining incline their sickly leaves.

3. Effected by soldiers.

He was with general applause, and great cries of joy, in a kind of militar election or recognition, saluted king.

MILITIA. n. s. [Lat.] The trainbands; the standing force of a nation.

Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia be good and valiant soldiers.

The militia was so settled by law, that a sudden army could be drawn together.

Unnumbered spirits round thee fly,
The light militia of the lower sky.

MILK. n. s. [meelc, Sax. melck, Dut.]

1. The liquor with which animals feed their young from the breast.

He is better acquainted with the *milk*score than his steward's accounts.

MILKSOP. n. s. [milk and sop.] A soft, mild, effeminate, feeble-minded man.

Of a most notorious thief, which lived all his life-time of spoils, one of their bards will say, that he was none of the idle *milk*sops that was brought up by the fire-side, but that most of his days he spent in arms, and that he did never eat his meat before he had won it with his sword.

A *milk*sop, one that never in his life Felt so much cold as over shoes in snow.
We have as good passions as yourself; and a woman was never designed to be a *milk*sop.
But give him port and potent sack;
From *milk*sop he starts up moback.

MILKTOOTH. n. s. [milk and tooth.]

Milkteeth are those small teeth which come forth before when a foal is about three months old, and which he begins to cast about two years and a half after, in the same order as they grew.

Which the kind soil with *milk*y sap supplies,
Can move the god.
Some plants upon breaking their vessels yield a *milk*y juice.

3. Yielding milk.

Perhaps my passion he disdains,
And courts the *milk*y mothers of the plains.

4. Soft; gentle; tender; timorous.
Has friendship such a faint and *milk*y heart,
It turns in less than two nights?
This *milk*y gentleness and course of yours,
You are much more at task for want of wisdom,
Than prais'd for harmful mildness.

MILKY-WAY. n. s. [*milk*y and way.] The galaxy.

The *milk*y-way, or via lactea, is a broad white path or track, encompassing the whole heavens, and extending itself in some places with a double path, but for the most part with a single one. Some of the ancients, as Aristotle, imagined that this path consisted only of a certain exhalation hanging in the air; but, by the telescopical observations of this age, it hath been discovered to consist of an innumerable quantity of fixed stars, different in situation and magnitude, from the confused mixture of whose light its whole colour is supposed to be occasioned.

Nor need we with a prying eye survey
The distant skies to find the *milk*y-way:
It forcibly intrudes upon our sight.

How many stars there must be, a naked eye may give us some faint glimpse, but much more a good telescope, directed towards that region of the sky called the milky-way. Cheyne.

MILL. n. s. [μύλη; mola, Lat. melin, Welsh; mýln, Sax. moulin, Fr. molen, Dut.] An engine or fabrick in which corn is ground to meal, or any other body is comminuted. In general an engine in which any operation is performed by means of wind or water; sometimes it is used of engines turned by the hand, or by animal force.

MILLET. n. s. [milium, Lat. mil and mil-let, Fr.]

1. A plant.

The millet hath a loose divided panicle, and each single flower hath a calyx, consisting of two leaves, which are instead of petals, to protect the stamina and pistillum of the flower which afterwards becomes an oval shining seed. This plant was originally brought from the eastern countries, where it is still greatly cultivated, from whence we are annually furnished with this grain, which is by many persons much esteemed for puddings. Miller.

In two ranks of cavities is placed a roundish seed, about the bigness of a grain of millet. Woodward on Fossils.

Millet is diarrhetic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbuthnot on Alim.

2. A kind of fish; unless it be misprinted for mullet.

Some fish are gutted, split, and kept in pickle; as whiting, mackerel, millet. Carew.

MILLINER. n. s. [I believe from Milano, an inhabitant of Milan, as a Lombard is a banker.] One who sells ribbands and dresses for women.

He was perfumed like a milliner; And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held A pounce-box, which ever and anon He gave his nose. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The mercers and milliners complain of her want of publick spirit. Tuttler.

If any one asks Flavia to do something in charity, she will toss him half a crown, or a crown, and tell him, if he knew what a long milliner's bill she had just received, he would think it a great deal for her to give. Law.

MINCINGLY. adv. [from mince.] In small parts ; not fully.

Justice requireth nothing mincingly, but all with pressed and heaped, and even over-enlarged measure. Hooker.

MIND. n. s. [gemind, Sax.]

1. The intelligent power.

I am a very foolish, fond old man ;
I fear I am not in my perfect mind. Shakesp.

This word being often used for the soul giving life, is attributed abusively to madmen, when we say that they are of a distracted mind, instead of a broken understanding : which word, mind, we use also for opinion ; as, I am of this or that mind ; and sometimes for men's conditions or virtues ; as, he is of an honest mind, or a man of a just mind ; sometimes for affection ; as, I do this for my mind's sake ; sometimes for the knowledge of principles, which we have without discourse : often-times for spirits, angels, and intelligences ; but as it is used in the proper signification, including both the understanding agent and passible, it is described to be a pure, simple, substantial act, not depending upon matter, but having relation to that which is intelligible, as to its first object, or more at large thus ; a part or particle of the soul, whereby it doth understand, not depending upon matter, nor needing any organ, free from passion coming from without, and apt to be dissevered as eternal from that which is mortal. Raleigh.

I thought th' eternal Mind
Had made us masters. Dryden.

2. Intellectual capacity.

We say that learning's endless, and blame fate
For not allowing life a longer date,
He did the utmost bounds of knowledge find,
He found them not so large as was his mind. Cowley.

3. Liking ; choice ; inclination ; propensity ; affection.

Our question is, Whether all be sin which is done without direction by scripture, and not whether the Israelites did at any time amiss, by following their own minds, without asking counsel of God ? Hooker.

We will consider of your suit,
And come some other time to know our mind. Shakesp.

Being so hard to me that brought your mind,
I fear she'll prove as hard to you in telling her mind. Shakesp.

I will have nothing else but only this ;
And now methinks I have a mind to it. Shakesp.

Be of the same mind one towards another. Rom. xii. 16.

In these mysterious words, his mind express,
Some truths reveal'd, in terms involv'd the rest. Dryden.

5. Opinion.

The earth was not of my mind,
If you suppose as fearing you, it shook. Shakesp.

These men are of the mind, that they have clearer ideas of infinite duration than of infinite space, because God has existed from all eternity ; but there is no real matter coextended with infinite space. Locke.

The gods permitting traitors to succeed,
Become not parties in an impious deed ;
And, by the tyrant's murder, we may find,
That Cato and the gods were of a mind. Granville.

6. Memory ; remembrance.

The king knows their disposition ; a small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

When he brings

Over the earth a cloud, will therein set
His triple-coloured bow, whereon to look,
And call to mind his covenant. Milton's Par. Lost.

These, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menalcus has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

The cavern's mouth alone was hard to find,
Because the path disus'd was out of mind. Dryden.

They will put him in mind of his own waking thoughts, ere these dreams had as yet made their impressions on his fancy. Atterbury's Sermons.

I converse in full freedom with many considerable men of both parties; and if not in equal number, it is purely accidental, as happening to have made acquaintance at court more under one ministry than another. Swift.

MINIUM. n. s. [Lat.] Red lead.

Melt lead in a broad earthen vessel unglazed, and stir it continually till it be calcinated into a grey powder; this is called the calx of lead; continue the fire, stirring it in the same manner, and it becomes yellow; in this state it is used in painting, and is called massicot or massicot; after this put it into a reverberatory furnace, and it will calcine further, and become of a fine red, which is, the common minium or red lead; among the ancients, minium was the name for cinnabar; the modern minium is used externally, and is excellent in cleansing and healing old ulcers. Hill's Mat. Med.

MINNOCK. n. s. Of this word I know not the precise meaning. It is not unlikely that minnock and mint are originally the same word.

An ass's nose I fixed on his head;
Anon his Thisbe must be answered,
And forth my minnock comes. Shakesp.

MINNOW. n. s. [menue, Fr.] A very small fish; a pink: a corruption of minim, which see.

Hear you this triton of the minnows? Shakesp.
The minnow, when he is in perfect season, and not sick, which is only presently after spawning, hath a kind of dappled or waved colour, like a panther, on his sides, inclining to a greenish and sky-colour, his belly being milk-white, and his back almost black or blackish: he is a sharp biter at a small worm in hot weather, and in the Spring they make excellent minnow tansies; for being washed well in salt, and their heads and tails cut off, and their guts taken out, being fried with yolks of eggs, primroses and tansy. Walton's Angler.

The nimble turning of the minnow is the perfection of minnow fishing. Walton's Angler.

MINOR. adj. [Lat.]

1. Petty; inconsiderable.

If there are petty errors and minor lapses, not considerably injurious unto faith, yet is it not safe to condemn inferior falsities. Brown.

2. Less; smaller.

They altered this custom from cases of high concernment to the most trivial debates, the minor part ordinarily entering their protest. Clarendon.
The difference of a third part in so large and collective an account 's not strange, if we consider how differently they are set in minor and less mistakeable numbers. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

MINOR. n. s.

1. One under age; one whose youth cannot yet allow him to manage his own affairs.

King Richard the Second, the first ten years of his reign, was a minor. Davies on Ireland.

Long as the year's dull circle seems to run,
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one. Pope.
The noblest blood of England having been shed in the grand rebellion, many great families became extinct, or supported only by minors. Swift.

A minor or infant cannot be said to be contumacious, because he cannot appear as a defendant in court, but by his guardian. Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. The second or particular proposition in the syllogism.

M I N

The second or minor proposition was, that this kingdom hath cause of just fear of overthrow from Spain. Bacon.

He supposed that a philosopher's brain was like a forest, where ideas are ranged like animals of several kinds; that the major is the male, the minor the female, which copulate by the middle term, and engender the conclusion. Arbuthnot.

To MINORATE. v. a. [from minor, Lat.]

To lessen; to diminish. A word not yet admitted into the language.

This it doth not only by the advantageous assistance of a tube, but by shewing in what degrees distance minorates the object. Glanville.

MINORATION. n. s. [from minorate.]

The act of lessening; diminution; decrease. A word not admitted.

Bodies emit virtue without abatement of weight, as is most evident in the loadstone, whose efficiencies are communicable without a minoration of gravity. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

We hope the mercies of God will consider our degenerated integrity unto some minoration of our offences. Brown.

MINORITY. n. s. [minorité, Fr. from minor, Lat.]

1. The state of being under age.

I mov'd the king, my master, to speak in the behalf of my daughter, in the minority of them both. Shakesp.

He is young, and his minority
Is put into the trust of Richard Gloster. Shakesp.
These changes in religion should be staid, until the king were of years to govern by himself: this the people apprehending worse than it was, a question was raised, whether, during the king's minority, such alterations might be made or no. Hayward.

Henry the Eighth, doubting he might die in the minority of his son, recured an act to pass, that no statute made during the minority of the king should bind him or his successors, except it were confirmed by the king at his full age. But the first act that passed in king Edward the Sixth's time, was a repeal of that former act; at which time nevertheless the king was minor. Bacon.

If there be evidence that it is not many ages since nature was in her minority, this may be taken for a good proof that she is not eternal. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Their counsels are warlike and ambitious, though something tempered by the minority of their king. Temple.

2. The state of being less.

From this narrow time of gestation may ensue a minority, or smallness in the exclusion. Brown.

3. The smaller number: as, the minority held for that question in opposition to the majority.

MINOTAUR. n. s. [minotaure, Fr. minos and taurus.] A monster invented by the poets, half man and half bull, kept in Dædalus's labyrinth.

Thou may'st not wander in that labyrinth,
There minotaurs, and ugly treasons lurk. Shakesp.

A monastery; an ecclesiastical fraternity; a cathedral church. The word is yet retained at York and Lichfield.

MINSTREL. n. s. [menestrel, Spanish; menestrallus, low Lat.] A musician; one who plays upon instruments.

Hark how the minstrels 'gin to shrill aloud
Their merry musick that resounds from far,
The pipe, the tabor, and the trembling croud,
That well agree withouten breach or jar. Spenser.

I will give you the minstrel.
—Then I will give you the serving creature. Shak. sp.

M I N

I to the vulgar am become a jest;
Esteemed as a minstrel at a feast. Sandys's Paraph.

These fellows
Were once the minstrels of a country show;
Follow'd the prizes through each paltry town,
By trumpet-cheeks and bloated faces known. Dryden.

Often our seers and poets have confess'd,
That musick's force can tame the furious beast.
Can make the wolf, or foaming boar restrain
His rage; the lion drop his crested mane,
Attentive to the song; the lynx forget
His wrath to man, and lick the minstrel's feet. Prior.

MINSTRELEY. n. s. [from minstrel.]

1. Musick; instrumental harmony.

Apollo's self will envy at his play,
And all the world applaud his minstrelsey. Davies.

That loving wretch that swears,
'Tis not the bodies marry, but the minds,
Which he in her angelick finds,
Would swear as justly, that he hears,
In that day's rude hoarse minstrelsey, the spheres. Donne.

I began,
Wrapt in a pleasing fit of melancholy,
To meditate my rural minstrelsey,
Till fancy had her fill. Milton.

2. A number of musicians.

Ministring spirits train'd up in feast, and song!
Such hast thou arm'd the minstrelsey of heav'n. Milton.

MINT. n. s. [minte, Sax. menthe, Fr. mentha, Lat.] A plant.

Then rubb'd it o'er with newly-gather'd mint,
A wholesome herb, that breath'd a grateful scent. Dryden.

MINT. n. s. [munte, Dut. mynetian to coin, Sax.]

1. The place where money is coined.

What is a person's name or face, that receives all his reputation from the mint, and would never have been known had there not been medals. Addison on Medals.

2. Any place of invention.

A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain. Shakesp.

As the *mint*s of calumny are at work, a great number of curious inventions are issued out, which grow current among the party. Addison.

To MINT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To coin; to stamp money.

Another law was, to bring in the silver of the realm to the mint, in making all clipped coins of silver not to be current in payments, without giving any remedy of weight; and so to set the mint on work, and to give way to new coins of silver which should be then minted. Bacon's Henry VII.

2. To invent; to forge.

Look into the titles whereby they hold these new portions of the crown, and you will find them of such natures as may be easily minted. Bacon.

MIN'TAGE. n. s. [from mint.]

MIRROR. n. s. [miroir, Fr. mirar, Span. to look.]

1. A looking-glass; any thing which exhibits representations of objects by reflection.

And in his waters which your mirror make, Behold your faces as the crystal bright. Spenser.

That pow'r which gave me eyes the world to view, To view myself infus'd an inward light, Whereby my soul, as by a mirror true, Of her own form may take a perfect sight. Davies.

Less bright the moon,
But opposite in level'd West was set
His mirror, with full face borrowing her light
From him. Milton's Parad. Lost.
Mirror of poets, mirror of our age,
Which her whole face beholding on thy stage, Pleas'd and displeas'd with her own faults, endures
A remedy like those whom musick cures. Waller.
By chance he spy'd a mirror while he spoke,
And gazing there beheld his alter'd look;
Wond'ring, he saw his features and his hue
So much were chang'd, that scarce himself he knew. Dryden.
Late as I rang'd the crystal wilds of air,
In the clear mirror of thy ruling star,
I saw, alas! some dread event impend. Pope.
2. It is used for pattern; for that on which the eye ought to be fixed; as, men look in a glass to adjust their mien or dress:
an exemplar; an archetype.
The works of nature are no less exact, than if she did both behold and study how to express some absolute shape or mirror always present before her. Hooker.
O goddess, heavenly bright,
Mirror of grace and majesty divine. Fairy Queen.
How far'st thou, mirror of all martial men?
Shakesp.

MIRTHLESS. adj. [from mirth.] Joyless;
cheerless.
MIRY. adj. [from mir.]
1. Deep in mud; muddy.
Thou should'st have heard how her horse fell, and she under her horse: thou should'st have heard in how miry a place, how she was benoiled.
Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
All men who lived lazy lives, and died natural deaths, by sickness or by age, went into vall caves under-ground, all dark and miry, full of noisome creatures, and there grovelled in endless stench and misery. Temple.
Deep, through a miry lane she pick'd her way,
Above her ankle rose the chalky clay. Gay's Trivia.
So have I seen ill-coupled hounds Drag diff'rent ways in miry grounds. Swift.
2. Consisting of mire.
Shall thou and I sit round about some fountain
Looking all downwards to behold our cheeks,
How they are stain'd like meadows, yet not dry,
With miry slime left on them by a flood? Shakesp.
MIS, an inseparable particle used in composition to mark an ill sense, or depravation of the meaning: as, chance, luck;
mischance, ill luck; computation, reckoning; miscomputation, false reckoning; to like, to be pleased; to dislike, to be offended; from mcs in Teutonick and French, used in the same sense. Of this it is difficult to give all the examples; but those that follow will sufficiently explain it.

MISACCEPTATION. n. s. [mis and accep-tation.] The act of taking in a wrong sense.
MISADVENTURE. n. s. [mesaventure, think impossible, or else impossible loves need not misbecome me. Sidney.

What to the dauphin from England?
—Scorn and defiance, slight regard, contempt,
And any thing that may not misbecome
The mighty sender. Shakesp. Henry V.
That boldness which lads get amongst play-fellows, has such a mixture of rudeness and ill-turned confidence, that those misbecoming and disingenuous ways of shifting in the world must be unlearned to make way for better principles. Locke.
Portius, thou may'st rely upon my conduct;
Thy father will not act what misbecomes him. Addison.
MISBEGOT, } adj. [begot or begot- MISBEGOTTEN. } ten with mis.] Unlawfully or irregularly begotten.
Contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood, I spill of thine. Shakesp.
Your words have taken such pains, as if they labour'd
To bring man-slaughter into form, set quarrelling
Upon the head of valour; which, indeed,
Is valour misbegot, and came into the world
When sects and factions were but newly born. Shakesp.
The misbegotten infant grows,
And, ripe for birth, distends with deadly throes
The swelling rind, with unavailing strife,
To leave the wooden womb, and pushes into life. Dryden.
To MISBEHAVE. v. n. [mis and behave.]
To act ill or improperly.
MISBEHAVED. adj. [mis and behaved.]
Untaught; ill bred; uncivil.
Happiness courts thee in her best array;
But, like a misbehav'd and sullen wench,
Thou pou'st upon thy fortune and thy love. Shakesp.
MISBEHAVIOUR. n. s. [mis and behariour.] Ill conduct; bad practice.
The misbehaviour of particular persons does not at all affect their cause, since a man may act laud-ably in some respects, who does not so in others. Addison's Frecholder.

After all the care I have taken, there may be, in such a multitude of passages, several misquoted, misinterpreted, and miscalculated.

Arbutnot on Coins.

To MISCAL. v. a. [mis and call.] To name improperly.

My heart will sigh when I miscal it so,
Shakespeare.

The third act, which connects propositions and deduceth conclusions from them, the schools call discourse; and we shall not miscal it if we name it reason.

Glanville's Scepis.

What you miscal their folly is their care.
Dryden.

MISCARRIAGE. n. s. [mis and carriage.]

1. Unhappy event of our undertaking; failure; ill conduct.

Resolutions of reforming do not always satisfy justice, nor prevent vengeance for former miscarriages.

King Charles.

When a counsellor, to save himself, Would lay miscarriages upon his prince, Exposing him to publick rage and hate, 'Tis an act as infamously base, As, should a common soldier sculk behind, And thrust his general in the front of war.
Dryden.

If the neglect or abuse of the liberty he had, to examine what would really make for his happiness, misleads him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election.

Locke.

A great part of that time which the inhabitants of the former earth had to spare, and whereof they made so ill use, was now employed in digging and plowing; and the excess of fertility which contributed so much to their miscarriages, was retracted and cut off.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

Your cures aloud you tell, But wisely your miscarriages conceal.
How, alas! will he appear in that awful day, when even the failings and miscarriages of the righteous shall not be concealed, though the mercy of God be magnified in their pardon.
Garth.
Rogers.

2. Abortion; act of bringing forth before the time.

There must be miscarriages and abortions; for there died many women with child.
Graunt.

To MISCARRY. v. n. [mis and carry.]

1. To fail; not to give the intended event; not to succeed; to be lost in an enterprise; not to reach the effect intended.

Have you not heard of Frederick, the great soldier, who miscarried at sea?
Our sister's man is certainly miscarried.

Shakespeare.

Is it concluded he shall be protector? —It is determin'd, not concluded yet: But so it must be if the king miscarry.

Shakespeare.

If you miscarry, Your business of the world hath so an end, And machination ceases.
Sweet Bassanio, my ships have all miscarried, my creditors grow cruel, my estate is very low.

Shakespeare.

I could mention some projects which I have brought to maturity, and others which have miscarried.

Addison's Guardian.

No wonder that this expedient should so often miscarry, which requires so much art and genius to arrive at any perfection in it.

Swift.

2. To have an abortion.
Give them a miscarrying womb and dry breasts.

Hos. ix. 14.

So many politic conceptions so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for a delivery, do yet, in the issue, miscarry and prove abortive.

South's Sermons.

His wife miscarried; but the abortion proved a female fetus.

Pope and Arbuthnot.

You have proved yourself more tender of another's embryos, than the fondest mothers are of their own; for you have preserved every thing that I miscarried of.

Pope.

MISCELLA'NE. n. s. [miscellaneous, Lat.]

This is corrupted into mastlin or mestlin. Mixed corn; as, wheat and rye.

It is thought to be of use to make some miscellane in corn; as if you sow a few beans with wheat, your wheat will be the better.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.

MISCELLA'NEOUS. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.] Mingled; composed of various kinds.

Being miscellaneous in many things, he is to be received with suspicion; for such as amass all relations must err in some, and without offence be unbeliever in many.

Brown.

And what the people but a herd confus'd, A miscellaneous rabble, who extol

Things vulgar, and well weigh'd scarce worth the praise.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

MISCELLA'NEOUSNESS. n. s. [from miscellaneous.] Composition of various kinds.

MISCELLANY. adj. [miscellaneous, Lat.] Mixed of various kinds.

The power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations.

Bacon.

MISCELLANY. n. s. A mass formed out of various kind.

I acquit myself of the presumption of having lent my name to recommend miscellanies or works of other men.

Pope.

When they have join'd their pericranies, Out skips a book of miscellanies.

Swift.

To MISCA'ST. v. a. [mis and cast.] To take a wrong account of.

Men miscast their days; for in their age they deduce the account not from the day of their birth, but the year of our Lord wherein they were born.

Brown's Vulg. Errors.

MISCHANCE. n. s. [mis and chance.]

Ill luck; ill fortune; misfortune; mishap.

The lady Cecropia sent him to excuse the mischance of her beasts ranging in that dangerous sort.

Sidney.

View these letters, full of bad mischance, France is revolted.

Shakespeare. Henry VI.

And never come mischance between us twain.

Shakespeare.

Nothing can be a reasonable ground of despising a man but some fault chargeable upon him; and nothing can be a fault that is not naturally in a man's power to prevent; otherwise it is a man's unhappiness, his mischance or calamity, but not his fault.

South.

MISCHIEF. n. s. [meschef, old Fr.]

1. Harm; hurt; whatever is ill and injuriously done.

The law in that case punisheth the thought; for better is a mischief than an inconvenience.

Spenser on Ireland.

Come, you murth'ring ministers! Wherever in your sightless substances

You wait on nature's mischiefs.

Shakespeare. Macbeth.

Thy tongue deviseth mischiefs.

Psal. lii. 2.

Was I the cause of mischiefs, or the man, Whose lawless lust the fatal war hegan?

Dryden.

2. Ill consequence; vexatious affair.

States call in foreigners to assist them against a common enemy; but the mischiefs was, these allies would never allow that the common enemy was subdued.

Swift.

To MISCHIEF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hurt; to harm; to injure.

If the greatest inward heat be not sweetened by meekness, or not governed by prudence, can it

M I S

This false, wily, doubling disposition is intolerably mischievous to society.

South's Sermons.

I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet; But mougrel mischievous.

Dryden.

He had corrupted or deluded most of his servants, telling them that their master was run mad; that he had disinherited his heir, and was going to settle his estate upon a parish-boy; that if he did not look after their master he would do some very mischievous thing.

Arbutnot's Hist. of J. Bull.

2. Spiteful; malicious.

Ainsworth.

MISCHIEVOUSLY. adv. [from mischiefs.]

Noxiously; hurtfully; wickedly.

Nor was the cruel destiny content To sweep at once her life and beauty too;

But like a barden'd felon took a pride To work more mischievously slow,

And plundered first, and then destroy'd.

Dryden.

MISCHIEVOUSNESS. n. s. [from mischievous.] Hurtfulness; perniciousness; wickedness.

Compare the harmless, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliability, which is in youth, with the mischievousness, the slyness, the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy found in an aged, long-practised sinner.

South's Sermons.

MISCI'BLE. adj. [from miscio, Lat.] Possible to be mingled.

MISER. n. s. [miser, Lat.]

1. A wretched person; one overwhelmed with calamity.

Do not disdain to carry with you the woful words of a miser now despairing; neither be afraid to appear before her, bearing the base title of the sender. Sidney.

I wish that it may not prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune to have met with such a miser as I am. Sidney.

Fair son of Mars, that seek with warlike spoil
And great achievements, great yourself to make, Vouchsafe to stay your steed for humble miser's sake. Spenser.

2. A wretch; a mean fellow.

Decrepit miser! base ignoble wretch!
I am descended of a gentler blood. Shakesp.

3. A wretch covetous to extremity; one who in wealth makes himself miserable by the fear of poverty. This is the only sense now in use.

Though she be dearer to my soul than rest
To weary pilgrims, or to misers gold,
Rather than wrong Castallo I'd forget her. Otway.

No silver saints by dying misers giv'n,
Here brib'd the rage of ill-requited heav'n;
But such plain roofs as piety could raise,
And only vocal with the Maker's praise. Pope.

MISERABLE. adj. [miserable, Fr. miser, Lat.]

1. Unhappy; calamitous; wretched.

O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody scepter'd!
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Shakespeare.

Most miserable is the desire that's glorious. Shakesp.

What's more miserable than discontent? Shakesp.
There will be a future state, and then how miserable is the voluptuous unbeliever left in the lurch. South.

MISERABLY. adv. [from miserable.]

1. Unhappily; calamitously.

Of the five employed by him, two of them quarrell'd, one of which was slain, and the other banged for it; the third drowned himself; the fourth, though rich, came to beg his bread; and the fifth was miserably stabbed to death. South.

2. Wretchedly; meanly.

As the love I bear you makes me thus invite you, so the same love makes me ashamed to bring you to a place where you shall be so, not spoken by ceremony but by truth, miserably entertained. Sidney.

3. Covetously. Ainsworth.

MISERY. n. s. [miseria, Lat. misere, Fr.]

1. Wretchedness; unhappiness.

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery. Shakesp.

Happiness, in its full extent, is the utmost pleasure we are capable of, and misery the utmost pain.

Perhaps it may be found more easy to forget the language than to part entirely with those tempers which we learnt in misery. Law.

2. Calamity; misfortune; cause of misery.

When we our betters see bearing our woes,
We scarcely think our miseries our foes. Shakesp.
The gods from heav'n survey the fatal strife,
And mourn the miseries of human life. Dryden.

3. [From miser.] Covetousness; avarice.

Not in use. Miser now signifies not an unhappy but a covetous man; yet misery now signifies not covetousness but unhappiness.

He look'd upon things precious, as they were
The common muck o' th' world: he covets less Than misery itself would give. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

In a fabrick of forty thousand pounds charge,
I wish thirty ponn'd laid out before in an exact model; for a little misery may easily breed some absurdity of greater charge. Wotton.

MISESTEEM. n. s. [mis and esteem.] Disregard; slight.

TO MISFA'SHION. v. a. [mis and fashion.] To form wrong.

A thing in reason impossible, through their mish-fashioned preconceit, appeared unto them no less certain, than if nature had written it in the very foreheads of all the creatures of God. Hakewill.

TO MISFO'RM. v. a. [mis and form.] To put in an ill form.

His monstrous scalp down to his teeth it tore,
And that mishformed shape misshaped more. Spenser.

MISFO'RTUNE. n. s. [mis and fortune.] Calamity; ill luck; want of good fortune.

Fortune thus 'gan say, misery and misfortune is all one,
And of misfortune, fortune hath only the gift. Sidney.

What world's delight, or joy of living speech,
Can heart so pling'd in sea of sorrows deep,
And heaped with so huge misfortunes reach? Spenser.

Consider why the change was wrought,
You'll find it his misfortune, not his fault. Addison.

TO MISGIVE. v. a. [mis and give.] To fill with doubt; to deprive of confidence. It is used always with the reciprocal pronoun.

As Henry's late presaging prophesy
Did glad my heart with hope of this young Richmond;
So doth my heart misgive me in these coulticks
What may befall him, to his harm or ours. Shak.

This is strange! Who hath got the right Anne?
My heart misgives me. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Yet oft his heart divine of something ill, Misgave him. Milton.

His heart misgave him, that these were so many meeting-houses; but, upon communicating his suspicions, I soon made him easy. Addison's Freeholder.

MISGIVING. n. s. [from misgive.] Doubt; distrust.

If a conscience thus qualified and informed, be not the measure by which a man may take a true estimate of his absolution, the sinner is left in the plunge of infinite doubts, suspicions, and misgivings, both as to the measures of his present duty, and the final issues of his future reward. South.

TO MISGOVERN. v. a. [mis and govern.] To govern ill; to administer unfaithfully.

Slyman charged him bitterly, that he had misgoverned the state, and inverted his treasures to his own use. Knolles.

1. Ill administration of publick affairs.

Men lay the blame of those evils whereof they know not the ground, upon public misgovernment. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Ill management.

Men are miserable, if their education hath been so undisciplined, as to leave them unfurnished of skill to spend their time; but most miserable, if such misgovernment and unskilfulness make them fall into vicious company. Taylor.

3. Irregularity; inordinate behaviour.

There is not chaosity enough in language,
Without offence, to alter them: thus, pretty lady,
I am sorry for thy much misgovernment. Shakesp.

MISGUIDANCE. n. s. [mis and guidance.] False direction.

The Nicene council fixed the equinox the twenty-first of March for the finding out of Easter: which has caused the misguidance from the sun which we lie under in respect of Easter, and the moveable feasts. Holder on Time.

Whosoever deceives a man makes him ruin himself; and by causing an error in the great guide of his actions, his judgment, he causes an error in his choice, the misguidance of which must naturally engage him to his destruction. South.

TO MISGUIDE. v. a. [mis and guide.] To direct ill; to lead the wrong way.

Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect those which favour the other, is wilfully to misguide the understanding; and is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it. Locke.

Misguided prince! no longer urge thy fate,
Nor tempt the hero to unequal war. Prior.

Of all the causes which conspire to blind
Man's erring judgment, and misguide the mind,
What the weak head with strongest bias rules
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

MISHAP. n. s. [mis and hap.] Ill chance; ill luck; calamity.

To tell you what miserable mishaps fell to the young prince of Macedon his cousin, I should too much fill your ears with strange horrors. Sidney.

Since we are thus far entered into the consideration of her mishaps, tell me, have there been any more such tempests wherein she hath thus wretchedly been wrecked? Spenser.

Sir knight, take to you wonted strength,
And master these mishaps with patient night. Spenser.

Rome's readiest champions, repose you here,
Secure from worldly chances and mishaps. Shakesp.

But that success attends him; if mishap,
Ere this he had return'd, with fury driv'n
By his avengers; since no place like this Can fit his punishment, or your revenge. Milton.

If the worst of all mishaps hath fallen Speak; for he could not die unlike himself. Denh.

MISHMASH. n. s. Ainsworth. A low word. A mingle or hotch potch.

TO MISINFER. v. a. [mis and infer.] To infer wrong.

Nestorius teaching rightly, that God and man are distinct natures, did thereupon misinfer, that in Christ those natures can by no conjunction make one person. Hooker.

TO MISINFORM. v. a. [mis and inform.] To deceive by false accounts.

Some belonged to a man of great dignity, and not as that wicked Simon had misinformed. 2 Mac. iii. 11.

By no means trust to your servants, who mislead you, or misinform you; the reproach will lie upon yourself. Bacon.

Bid her well beware,
Lest by some fair appearing good surpriz'd,
She dictate false; and misinform the will
To do what God expressly hath forbid. Milton.

MISINFORMATION. n. s. [from misinform.] False intelligence; false accounts.

Let not such be discouraged as deserve well, by misinformation of others, perhaps out of envy or treachery, Bacon.

The vengeance of God, and the indignation of men, will join forces against an insulting baseness, when backed with greatness, and set on by misinformation. South's Sermons.

To MISINTERPRET. v. a. [mis and interpret.] To explain to a wrong sense, or wrong intention.

The gentle reader rests happy to hear the worstiest works misinterpreted, the clearest actions obscured, and the innocentest life traduced, Ben Jonson.

To Miss. v. n.

1. To fly wide; not to hit.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage, appear too slow
They miss or sweep but common souls away. Waller.

2. Not to succeed.

The general root of superstition is, that men observe when things hit, and not when they miss; and commit to memory the one, and forget and pass over the other. Bacon.

3. To fail; to mistake.

4. To be lost; to be wanting.

My lord,
Upon my lady's missing, came to me
With his sword drawn. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
Thy shepherds we hurt not, neither was there ought missing unto them. 1 Sam. xxv. 7.

For a time caught up to G. d, as once
Moses was in the mount, and missing long,
And the great Thibite, who on fiery wheels
Rode up to heav'n, yet once again to come. Milt.

5. To miscarry; to fail, as by accident.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each, who he
To be th' inventor miss'd, so easy it seem'd,
Once found, which yet unfound most would have thought Impossible. Milton's Paradise Lost.

6. To fail to obtain, learn, or find: sometimes with of before the object.

Critus missing of the Moldavian fell upon Maylat. Knolles.
The moral and relative perfections of the Deity are easy to be understood by us; upon the least reflection we cannot miss of them. Atterbury.

Tell o'er thy tale again. Shakesp. King Lear.

MIST. n. s. [mīst, Sax.]

1. A low thin cloud; a small thin rain not perceived in single drops.

Old Chaucer, like the morning star,
To us discovers day from far;
His light those mists and clouds dissolv'd
Which our dark nation long involv'd. Denham.
And mists condens'd to clouds obscure the sky,
And clouds dissolv'd the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend to that height, in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist, or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain. Greu.

But hovering mists around his brows are spread,
And night with sable shades involves his head. Dryden.

A cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.

2. Any thing that dims or darkens.

My peoples eyes once blinded with such mists of suspicion, they are misled into the most desperate actions.
His passion cast a mist before his sense,
And either made or magnify'd th' offence.

King Charles.
Dryden.

To MIST. v. a. [from the noun.] To cloud; to cover with a vapour or steam.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives.

Shakes. King Lear.

MISTA'KEABLE. adj. [from mistake.] Liable to be conceived wrong.

It is not strange to see the difference of a third part in so large an account, if we consider how differently they are set forth in minor and less mistakeable numbers.

Brown.

To MISTA'KE. v. a. [mis and take.] To conceive wrong; to take something for that which it is not.

These did apprehend a great affinity between their invocation of saints and the heathen idolatry, or else there was no danger one should be mistaken for the other.

Stillingfleet.

This will make the reader very much mistake, and misunderstand his meaning.
Fancy passes for knowledge, and what is prettily said is mistaken for solid.

Locke.

Locke.

Fools into the notion fall,
That vice or virtue there is none at all:
Ask your own heart, and nothing is so plain,
'Tis to mistake them costs the time and pain.

Pope.

To MISTA'KE. v. n. To err; not to judge right.

Seeing God found folly in his angels; mens judgments, which inhabit these houses of clay, cannot be without their mistakings.
Seldom any one mistakes in his names of simple ideas, or applies the name red to the idea green.

Locke.

Servants mistake, and sometimes occasion misunderstanding among friends.

Swift.

MISTA'EN. pret. and part. pass. of mistake for mistaken, and so retained in Scotland.

This dagger hath mista'en, for lo! the sheath
Lies empty on the back of Montague,
The point misshathed in my daughter's bosom.

Shakesp.

To be MISTA'KEN. To err. [To mistake has a kind of reciprocal sense; I mistake, je me trompe. I am mistaken, means, I misconceive, I am in an error; more frequently than I am ill understood; but, my opinion is mistaken, means, my opinion is not rightly understood.]

The towns, neither of the one side nor the other, willingly opening their gates to strangers, nor strangers willingly entering for fear of being mistaken.

Sidney.

England is so idly king'd:
—You are too much mistaken in this king;

Question, your grace, the late ambassadors,
How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution.
Mistaken Brutus thought to break their yoke,
But cut the bond of union with that stroke.

Shakesp.

Waller.

MISTA'KE. n. s. [from the verb.] Misconception; error.

He never shall find out fit mate; but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake.

Milton.

Infallibility is an absolute security of the understanding from all possibility of mistake in what it believes.

MISTINESS. n. s. [from misty.] Cloudiness; state of being overcast.

The speedy depeadation of air upon watry moisture, and version of the same into air, appeareth in the sudden vanishing of vapours from glass, or the blade of a sword, such as doth not at all detain or imbihe the moisture, for the mistiness scattereth immediately.

Bacon.

MISTION. n. s. [from mistus, Lat.] The state of being mingled.

In animals many actions are mixt, and depend upon their living form as well as that of mistion, and though they wholly seem to retain unto the body, depart upon disunion.

Brown.

Both bodies do, by the new texture resulting from their mistion, produce colour.

Boyle on Colours.

MISTLETO'E. n. s. [mýrteletan, Sax. mistel, Dan. bird-lime, and tan a twig.] A plant.

The flower of the mistletoe consists of one leaf, which is shaped like a bason, divided into four parts, and beset with warts; the ovary which is reproduced in the female flowers is placed in a reproducted part of the plant from the male flowers, and mote part of the plant from the female flowers, and consists of four shorter leaves; this becomes a round berry full of a glutinous substance, inclosing a plain heart-shaped seed; this plant is always produced from seed, and is not to be cultivated in the earth, but will always grow upon trees; from whence the ancients accounted it a super-plant, who thought it to be an exerescence the tree without seed. The manner of its propagation is as follows: the mistletoe thrush, which feeds upon the berries of this plant in winter when it is ripe, doth open the seed from tree to tree;

for the viscous part of the berry, which immediately surrounds the seed, doth sometimes fasten it to the outward part of the bird's beak, which, to get disengaged of, he strikes his beak at the branches of a neighbouring tree, and so leaves the seed sticking by this viscous matter to the bark, which, if it lights upon a smooth part of the tree, will fasten itself, and the following winter put out and grow: the trees which this plant doth most readily take upon are the apple, the ash, and some other smooth rind trees: whenever a branch of an oak tree hath any of these plants growing upon it, it is cut off, and preserved by the curious in their collections of natural curiosities.

Miller.

If snowe do continue, sheepe hardly that fare
Crave mistle and ivie for them for to spare.

Tusser.
A barren and detested vale, you see it is:
The trees, though Summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful missetta.

Missettoe growth chiefly upon crab trees, apple trees, sometimes upon hazles, and rarely upon oaks; the missettoe whereof is counted very medicinal: it is ever green Winter and Summer, and beareth a white glistening berry; and it is a plant utterly differing from the plant upon which it groweth.

Bacon.

All your temples strow
With laurel green, and sacred missettoe.

Gay.

MISTLIKE. adj. [mist and like.] Resembling a mist.

Good Romeo, hide thyself.
—Not I, not the breath of heart-sick groans Mistlike infold me from the search of eyes.

Shakesp.

MISTOLD. particip. pass. of mistake.

Look, nymphs, and shepherds, look,
What sudden blaze of majesty,
Too divine to be mistook.

Milton.

MISTRESS. n. s. [maistresse, maitresse, Fr.]

Let us prepare
Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Shak.
Like the lily,
That once was mistress of the field and flourish'd,
I'll hang my head and perish.

Shak. Henry VIII.
He'll make your Paris louvre shake for it,
Were it the mistress court of mighty Europe.

Shakesp.
I will not charm my tongue; I'm bound to speak;
My mistress here lies murder'd in her bed.

Shakesp. Othello.
The late queen's gentlewoman! a knight's daughter!

To be her mistress' mistress! the queen's queen.

Shakesp.
Rome now is mistress of the whole world, sea and land, to either pole.

Ben Jonson's Catiline.
Wonder not, sov'reign mistress! if perhaps Thou can'st, who art sole wonder; much less arm
Thy looks, the heav'n of mildness, with disdain.

Milton.
Those who assert the lunar orb presides
O'er humid bodies, and the ocean guides;
Whose waves obsequious ebb, or swelling run
With the declining or increasing moon;
With reason seem her empire to maintain
As mistress of the rivers and the main.

Blackmore.
What a miserable spectacle, for a nation that had been mistress at sea so long!

Arbutnot on Coins.
2. A woman who has something in possession.

There had she enjoyed herself while she was mistress of herself, and had no other thoughts but such as might arise out of quiet senses.

Sidney.
Ages to come, that shall your bounty hear,
Will think you mistress of the Indies were;
Though straighter bounds your fortune did confine,
In your large heart was found a wealthy mine.

Waller.

The mobile are uneasy without a ruler, they are restless with one. L'Estrange.

MOBILITY. n. s. [mobilité, Fr. mobilitas, Lat.]

1. Mobility is the power of being moved. Locke.

Iron, having stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude. Hutton.

The present age hath attempted perpetual innovations, whose revolutions might out-last the exemplary mobility, and out-measure time itself. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

You tell, it is ingenite, active force, Mobility, or native power to move;

Words which mean nothing. Blackmore.

2. Nimbleness; activity.

The Romans had the advantage by the bulk of their ships, and the fleet of Antiochus in the swiftness and mobility of theirs, which served them in great stead in the flight. Arbutnot.

3. [In cant language.] The populace.

She singled you out with her eye as commander in chief of the mobility. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

4. Fickleness; inconstancy. Ainsworth.

MOCHO STONE. n. s. [from Mocha, therefore more properly Mocha-stone.]

Mocha-stones are related to the agat, of a clear horny grey, with declinations representing mosses, shrubs, and branches, black, brown, red, in the substance of the stone. Woodward.

To MOCK. v. a. [mocquer, Fr. moccio, Welsh.]

1. To deride; to laugh at; to ridicule.

All the regions
Do seemingly revolt; and who resist
Are mock'd for valiant ignorance,
And perish constant fools. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Many thousand widows
Shall this his mock mock out of their dear husbands;
Mock mothers from their sons, mock castles down. Shakesp.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakesp.

I am as one mocked of his neighbour; the just,
upright man is mocked to scorn. Job, xii. 4.

I long, till Edward fall by war's mischance,
For mocking marriage with a dame of France. Shakesp.

3. To defeat; to elude.

My father is gone into his grave,
And with his spirit sadly I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out Rotten opinion. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. To fool; to tantalize; to play on contemptuously.

He will not Mock us with his blest sight, then snatch him
hence,
Soon shall we see our hope return. Milton.

Why do I overlive?
Why am I mock'd with death, and lengthen'd out
To deathless pain? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Heav'n's fuller influence mocks our dazzl'd sight,
Too great its brightness, and too strong its light. Prior.

To MOCK. v. n. To make contemptuous sport.

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;
For now a time is come to mock at form. Shakesp.

A stallion horse is as a mocking friend; he neigheth under every one. Eccclus. xxiii. 6.

A reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries. Ezek. xxii. 4.

When thou mockest, shall no man make thee asham'd? Job.

MOCK. n. s. [from the verb.]

great and holy an ordinance, in which God is so seldom mocked but it is to the mockers' confusion. South's Sermons.

2. A deceiver; an elusory impostor.

MO'CKERY. n. s. [mocquerie, Fr.]

1. Derision; scorn; sportive insult.

The forlorn maiden, whom your eyes have seen,
The laughing-stock of fortune's mockeries,
And the only daughter of a king and queen. Fairy Queen.

Why should publick mockery in print be a better test of truth than severe railing sarcasms. Hatts.

Grace at meals is now generally so performed,
as to look more like a mockery upon devotion, than any solemn application of the mind unto God. Law.

2. Ridicule; contemptuous merriment.

A new method they have of turning things that are serious into mockery; an art of contradiction by way of scorn, wherewith we were long since forewarned. Hooker.

MO'CKINGLY. adv. [from mockery.] In contempt; petulantly; with insult.

MOCKING-STOCK. n. s. [mocking and stock.] A butt for merriment.

MO'DAL. adj. [modale, Fr. modalis, Lat.]

Relating to the form or mode, not the essence.

When we speak of faculties of the soul, we assert not with the schools their real distinction from it, but only a modal diversity. Glanville.

MODALITY. n. s. [from modal.] Accidental difference; modal accident.

The motions of the mouth by which the voice is discriminated, are the natural elements of speech; and the application of them in their several compositions, or words made of them, to signify things, or the modalities of things, and so to serve for communication of notions, is artificial. Holdcr.

MODE. n. s. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]

1. External variety; accidental discrimination; accident.

A mode is that which cannot subsist in and of itself, but is always esteemed as belonging to, and subsisting by, the help of some substance, which,
for that reason, is called its subject. Hatts's Logic.

Few allow mode to be called a being in the same perfect sense as a substance is, and some modes have evidently more of real entity than others. Hatts.

2. Gradation; degree.

What modes of sight betwixt each wide extreme,
The mole's dim curtain, and the linx's beam;
Of smell, the headlong lioness between,
And hoard sagacious on the tainted green. Pope.

3. Manner; method; form; fashion.

Our Saviour beheld
A table richly spread, in regal mode,
With dishes pil'd. Milton's Paradise Regained.

The duty itself being resolved upon, the mode of doing it may easily be found. Taylor's Guide.

4. State; quality.

My death
Changes the mode; for what in me was purchas'd, Falls upon thee in a much fairer sort,
For thou the garland wear'st successively. Shakesp.

5. [Mode, Fr.] Fashion; custom.

There are certain garbs and modes of speaking which vary with the times; the fashion of our clothes being not more subject to alteration than that of our speech. Deham.

We are to prefer the blessings of Providence before the splendid curiosities of mode and imagination. L'Estrange.

They were invited from all parts; and the favour of learning was the humour and mode of the age. Temple.

As we see on coins the different faces of persons,
we see too their different habits and dresses, according to the mode that prevailed. Addis. on Medals

Tho' wrong the mode, comply; more sense is shewn
 In wearing others follies than your own. Young.
 If faith itself has dit' rent dresses worn,
 What wonder modes in wit should take their turn? Pope.

MO'DEL. n. s. [modele, Fr. modulus, Lat.]

1. A representation in little of something made or done.

I'll draw the form and model of our battle;
 Limit each leader to his several charge,
 And part in just proportion our small strength. Shakesp.

You have the models of several ancient temples, though the temples and the gods are perished. Addison.

2. A copy to be imitated.

A fault it would be if some king should build his mansion-house by the model of Solomon's palace. Hooker.

They cannot see sin in those means they use, with intent to reform to their models what they call religion. King Charles.

3. A mould; any thing which shews or gives the shape of that which it in-closes.

Nothing can we call our own but death;
 And that small model of the barren earth,
 Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. Shakesp.

4. Standard; that by which any thing is measured.

As he who presumes steps into the throne of God, so he that despairs measures providence by his own little contracted model. South.

5. In Shakespeare it seems to have two unexampled senses: Something representative.

I have commended to his goodness
 The model of our chaste loves, his young daughter. Shakesp.

6. Something small and diminutive; for module a small measure: which, perhaps, is likewise the meaning of the example affixed to the third sense.

England! model to thy inward greatness,
 Like little body with a mighty heart. Shakesp.

TO MO'DEL. v. a. [modeler, Fr.] To plan; to shape; to mould; to form; to delineate.

When they come to model heav'n,
 And calculate the stars, how they will wield
 The mighty frame. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The government is modelled after the same manner with that of the Cantons, as much as so small a community can imitate those of so large an extent. Addison on Italy.

MO'DELER. n. s. [from model.] Planner;
 schemer; contriver.

Our great modellers of gardens have their magazines of plants to dispose of. Spectator.

MODERATE. adj. [moderatus, Lat.
modéré, Fr.]

1. Temperate; not excessive.

Sound sleep cometh of moderate eating, but pangs of the belly are with an insatiable man. Ecclus. xxxi. 20.

2. Not hot of temper.

A number of moderate members managed with so much art as to obtain a majority, in a thin house, for passing a vote, that the king's concessions were a ground for a future settlement. Swift.

Fix'd to one part, but mod'rote to the rest. Pope.

3. Not luxurious; not expensive.

There's not so much left as to furnish out
 A moderate table. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

4. Not extreme in opinion; not sanguine in a tenet.

These are tenets which the moderatest of the Romanists will not venture to affirm. Smalbridge.

5. Placed between extremes; holding the mean.

Quietly consider the trial that hath been thus long had of both kinds of reformation; as well this moderate kind, which the church of England hath taken, as that other more extreme and rigourous, which certain churches elsewhere have better liked. Hooker.

6. Of the middle rate.

More moderate gifts might have prolong'd his date, Dryden.

TO MO'DERATE. v. a. [moderor, Lat.
moderer, Fr.]

1. To regulate; to restrain; to still; to pacify; to quiet; to repress.

With equal measure she did moderate
 The strong extremities of their rage. Spenser.

2. To make temperate; to qualify.

Ye swarthy nations of the torrid zone,
 How well to you is this great bounty known?
 For frequent gales from the wide ocean rise
 To fan your air, and moderate your skies. Blackmore.
 By its astringent quality it moderates the relaxing quality of warm water. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MO'DERATELY. adv. [from moderate.]

1. Temperately; mildly.

2. In a middle degree.

Each nymph but moderately fair,
 Commands with no less rigor here. Waller.
 Blood in a healthy state, when let out, its red part should congeal strongly and soon, in a mass moderately tough, and swim in the serum. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

MO'DERATENESS. n. s. [from moderate.]

State of being moderate; temperateness.
Moderateness is commonly used of things, and moderation of persons.

MODERATION. n. s. [moderatio, Lat.]

1. Forbearance of extremity; the contrary temper to party violence; state of keeping a due mean betwixt extremes.

Was it the purpose of these churches, which abolished all popish ceremonies, to come back again to the middle point of evenness and moderation? Hooker.

A zeal in things pertaining to God, according to knowledge, and yet duly temper'd with candour and prudence, is the true notion of that much talked of, much misunderstood virtue, moderation. Atterbury.

In moderation placing all my glory,
 While totes call me whig, and whigs a toty. Pope.

2. Calmness of mind; equanimity. [moderation, Fr.]

Equally inur'd
 By moderation either state to bear, Prosperous, or adverse. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Frugality in expence. Ainsworth.

MODERATOR. n. s. [moderator, Lat.
moderatur, Fr.]

1. The person or thing that calms or restrains.

Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, and a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

2. One who presides in a disputation, to restrain the contending parties from indecency, and confine them to the question.

Sometimes the moderator is more troublesome than the actor. Bacon's Essays.

How does Philopolis seasonably commit the opponent with the respondent, like a long-practised moderator? More.

The first person who speaks when the court is set, opens the case to the judge, chairman, or moderator of the assembly, and gives his own reasons for his opinion. Watts.

MO'DERN. adj. [moderne, Fr. from modernus, low Lat. supposed a casual corruption of hodiernus. Vel potius ad adverbio modò. modernus, ut a die diurnus. Ainsworth.]

1. Late; recent; not ancient; not antique.

Some of the ancient, and likewise divers of the modern writers, that have laboured in natural ma-gick, have noted a sympathy between the sun and certain herbs. Bacon.

The glorious parallels then downward bring
 To modern wonders, and to Britain's king. Prior.

2. In Shakespeare, vulgar; mean; common.
 Trifles, such as we present modern friends withal. Shakesp.

The justice,
 With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
 Full of wise saws and modern instances. Shakesp.

We have our philosophical persons to make modern and familiar things supernatural and causeless. Shakesp.

MO'DERNS. n. s. Those who have lived lately, opposed to the ancients.

There are moderns who, with a slight variation, adopt the opinion of Plato. Boyle on Colours.

Some by old words to fame have made pretence;
 Ancients in phrase, mere moderns in their sense! Pope.

MO'DERNISM. n. s. [from modern.] Deviation from the ancient and classical manner. A word invented by Swift.

Scribblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

TO MO'DERNISE. v. a. [from modern.]

To adapt ancient compositions to modern persons or things; to change ancient to modern language.

MO'DERNNESS. n. s. [from modern.]

Novelty.

MO'DEST. adj. [modeste, Fr. modestus,
 Lat.]

1. Not arrogant; not presumptuous; not boastful; bashful.

Of boasting more than of a tomb afraid;
 A soldier should be modest as a maid. Young.

2. Not impudent; not forward.

Resolve me with all modest haste, which way
 Thou might'st deserve, or they impose this usage. Sha esp.

Her face, as in a nymph, display'd
 A fair fierce boy, or in a boy betray'd
 The blushing beauties of a modest maid. Dryden.

3. Not loose; not unchaste.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife; the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband. Shakesp.

4. Not excessive; not extreme; moderate;
 within a mean.

There appears much joy in him, even so much that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakesp.

During the last four years, by a modest computation, there have been brought into Brest above six millions sterling in bullion. Addison.

MO'DESTLY. adv. [from modest.]

1. Not arrogantly; not presumptuously.

I may modestly conclude, that whatever errors there may be in this play, there are not those which have been objected to it. Dryd. Sebastian.

First he modestly conjectures,
 His pupil might be tir'd with lectures:
 Which help'd to mortify his pride,
 Yet gave him not the heart to chide. Swift.

Tho' learn'd, well-bred; and tho' well-bred, sincere,
Modestly bold, and humanly severe. Pope.

2. Not impudently; not forwardly; with respect.

I, your glass,
 Will modestly discover to yourself
 That of yourself, which yet you know not of. Shak.

- 4. Not excessively ; with moderation.

MO'DESTY. n. s. [modestie, Fr. modestas, Lat.]

- 1. Not arrogance ; not presumptuousness. They cannot, with modesty, think to have found out absolutely the best which the wit of men may devise. Hooker.
- 2. Not impudence ; not forwardness ; as, his petition was urged with modesty.
- 3. Moderation ; decency. A lord will hear you play ; But I am doubtful of your modesties, Lest over-eying of his odd behaviour, You break into some merry passion. Shakesp.

4. Chastity ; purity of manners. Would you not swear, All you that see her, that she were a maid, By these exterior shews ? But she is more, Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Shakesp.
Of the general character of women, which is modesty, he has taken a most becoming care ; for his amorous expressions go no farther than virtue may allow. Dryden.
Talk not to a lady in a way that modesty will not permit her to answer. Clarissa.

MO'DESTY-PIECE. n. s.
A narrow lace which runs along the upper part of the stays before, being a part of the tucker, is called the modesty-piece. Addison.

MO'DICUM. n. s. [Lat.] Small portion ; pittance.

What modicums of wit he utters : his evasions have ears thus long. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Though hard their fate,
A cruise of water, and an ear of corn,
Yet still they grudge'd that modicum. Dryden.

MODIFI'ABLE. adj. [from modify.] That may be diversified by accidental differences.

It appears to be more difficult to conceive a distinct, visible image in the uniform, invariable essence of God, than in variously modifiable matter ; but the manner how I see either still escapes my comprehension. Locke.

MODIFI'ABLE. adj. [from modify.] Diversifiable by various modes.

MODIFI'ATION. n. s. [modification, Fr.] The act of modifying any thing, or giving it new accidental differences of external qualities or mode.

The chief of all signs is human voice, and the several modifications thereof by the organs of speech, the letters of the alphabet, formed by the motions of the mouth. Holder.

The phenomena of colours in refracted or reflected light are not caused by new modifications of the light variously impressed, according to the various terminations of the light and shadow. Newton.

If these powers of cogitation, volition and sensation, are neither inherent in a matter as such, nor acquirable to matter by any motion and modification of it, it necessarily follows that they proceed from some cognitive substance, some incorporeal inhabitant within us, which we call spirit. Bentley.

To MO'DIFY. v. a. [modifier, Fr.]

- 1. To change the external qualities or accidents of any thing ; to shape.

Yet there is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words through the voluble motions of the organs, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder.

The middle parts of the broad beam of white light which fell upon the paper, did, without any confine of shadow to modify it, become coloured all over with one uniform colour, the colour being always the same in the middle of the paper as at the edges. Newton.

- 2. To soften ; to moderate.

MOD

Of his grace
He modifies his first severe decree,
The keener edge of battle to rebate. Dryden.

To MO'DIFY. v. n. To extenuate.

After all this disanting and modifying upon the matter, there is hazard on the yielding side. L'Estrange.

MODILLON. n. s. [Fr. modiolus, Lat.]

Modillons, in architecture, are little brackets which are often set under the corinthian and composite orders, and serve to support the projecture of the larnier or drip : this part must be distinguished from the great model, which is the diameter of the pillar ; for, as the proportion of an edifice in general depends on the diameter of the pillar, so the size and number of the modillons, as also the interval between them, ought to have due relation to the whole fabric. Harris.
The modillons or dentelli make a noble shew by their graceful projections. Spectator.

MO'DISH. adj. [from mode.] Fashionable ; formed according to the reigning custom.

But you, perhaps, expect a modish feast,
With airy songs, and wanton dances grac'd. Dryden.

Hypocrisy, at the fashionable end of the town, is very different from hypocrisy in the city ; the modish by puerile endeavours to appear more virtuous than he really is, the other kind of hypocrite more virtuous. Addison's Spectator.

MO'DISHLY. adv. [from modish.] Fashionably.

Young children should not be much perplexed about putting off their hats, and making legs modishly. Locke.

MO'DISHNESS. n. s. [from modish.] Affectation of the fashion.

To MO'DULATE. v. a. [modulor, Lat.] To form sound to a certain key, or to certain notes.

The nose, lips, teeth, palate, jaw, tongue, weasan, lungs, muscles of the chest, diaphragm, and muscles of the body, all serve to make or modulate the sound. Grew's Cosmol.

Could any person so modulate her voice as to deceive so many. Brnoine.
Echo propagates around
Each charm of modulated sound. Anon.

MODULATION. n. s. [from modulate; modulation, Fr.]

- 1. The act of forming any thing to certain proportion.

The number of the simple original minerals have not been rightly fixed : the matter of two or more kinds being mixed together, and by the different proportion and modulation of that matter variously diversified, have been reputed all different kinds. Woodward.

The speech, as it is a sound resulting from the modulation of the air, has most affinity to the spirit, but as it is uttered by the tongue, has immediate cognation with the body, and so is the fittest instrument to manage a commerce between the invisible powers and human souls clothed in flesh. Government of the Tongue.

- 2. Sound modulated ; harmony ; melody.

Innumerable songsters in the freshening shade,
Their modulations mix, mellifluous. Thomson's Spring.

MO'DULATOR. n. s. [from modulate.] He who forms sounds to a certain key ; a tuner ; that which modulates.

The tongue is the grand instrument of taste, the faithful judge of all our nourishment, the artful modulator of our voice, and the necessary servant of mastication. Derham.

MO'DULE. n. s. [modulus, Lat.] An empty representation ; a model ; an external form.

My heart hath one poor string to stay it by,
Which holds but till thy news be uttered ;

MOI

And then, all this thou see'st, is but a cloud
And module of confounded royalty. Shakesp.

MO'DUS. n. s. [Lat.] Something paid as a compensation for tithes on the supposition of being a moderate equivalent.

One terrible circumstance of this bill, is turning the title of flax and hemp into what the lawyers call a modus, or a certain sum in lieu of a tenth part of the product. Swift.

MO'DWALL. n. s. [picus.] A bird. Ainsworth.

MOE. adj. [ma, Sax. Sec Mo.] More ; a greater number.

The chronicles of England mention no moe than only six kings bearing the name of Edward since the conquest, therefore it cannot be there should be more. Hooker.

MO'HAIR. n. s. [mohere, moire, Fr.] Thread or stuff made of camels or other hair.

She, while her lover pants upon her breast,
Can mark the figures on an Indian chest,
And when she sees her friend in deep despair,
Observes how such a chintz exceeds mohair. Pope.

MO'HOCK. n. s. The name of a cruel nation of America given to ruffians who infested, or rather were imagined to infest, the streets of London.

From milk-sop he starts up mohock. Prior.

3. An indivisible particle of time.

If I would go to hell for an eternal moment, or so, I could be knighted. Shakesp. Merry Wives.

The flighty purpose never is o'ertook,
Unless the deed go with it: from this moment
The very firstlings of my heart shall be
The firstlings of my hand. Shakesp. Macbeth.

The imaginary reasoning of brutes is not a distinct reasoning, but performed in a physical moment. Hale.

While I a moment name, a moment's past;
I'm nearer death in this verse than the last;
What then is to be done? Be wise with speed;
A fool at forty is a fool indeed. Young.

Yet thus receiving and returning bliss
In this great moment, in this golden now,
When ev'ry trace of what, or when, or how,
Shou'd from my soul by raging love be torn. Prior.

His talents to employ for nobler ends,
He turns to politics his dang'rous wit. Swift.

MONITOR. n. s. [Lat.] One who warns of faults, or informs of duty; one who gives useful hints. It is used of an upper scholar in a school commissioned by the master to look to the boys in his absence.

You need not be a monitor to the king; his learning is eminent: he but his scholar, and you are safe. Bacon.

It was the privilege of Adam innocent to have these notions also firm and untainted, to carry his monitor in his bosom, his law in his heart, and to have such a conscience as might be its own casuist.
South's Sermons.

We can but divine who it is that speaks; whether Persius himself, or his friend and monitor, or a third person. Dryden.

The pains that come from the necessities of nature, are monitors to us to beware of greater mis-chiefs. Locke.

MO'NITORY. adj. [monitoire, Fr. monito-rius, Lat.] Conveying useful instruction; giving admonition.

Losses, miscarriages, and disappointments, are monitory and instructive. L'Estrange.

He is so taken up still, in spite of the monitory hint in my essay, with particular men, that he neglects mankind. Pope.

MO'NITORY. n. s. Admonition; warning.

A king of Hungary took a bishop in battle, and kept him prisoner; whereupon the pope writ a monitory to him, for that he had broken the privilege of holy church. Bacon.

MONK. n. s. [monac, Sax. monachus, Lat-μοναχός.] One of a religious community bound by vows to certain observances.

I would prove the verity of certain words,
Spoke by a holy monk. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Abdemeleck, as one weary of the world, gave over all, and betook himself to a solitary life, and became a melancholy Mahometan monk. Knolles.

The drossish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
And nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

Monks, in some respects, agree with regulars, as in the substantial vows of religion; but in other respects, monks and regulars differ; for that regulars, vows excepted, are not tied up to so strict a rule of life as monks are. Ayliffe's Patergon.

MO'NKEY. n. s. [monikin a little man.]

1. An ape; a baboon; a jackanapes. An animal bearing some resemblance of man.

One of them shewed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey:—Tübal, it was my turquoise; I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys. Shakesp.

More new-fangled than an ape; more giddy in my desires than a monkey. Shakesp. As you like it.
Other creatures, as well as monkeys, destroy their young ones by senseless fondness.

With glittering gold and sparkling gems they shine. Locke on Educat en.

But apes and monkeys are the gods within. Granv.

2. A word of contempt, or slight kindness.

This is the monkey's own giving out; she is persuaded I will marry her. Shakesp.
Poor monkey! how wilt thou do for a father?
Shakesp.

MO'NKERY. n. s. [from monk.] The monastic life.

Neither do I meddle with their evangelical perfection of vows, nor the dangerous servitude of their rash and impotent votaries, nor the inconvenienencies of their monkery. Hall.

MO'NKHOOD. n. s. [monk and hood] The character of a monk.

He had left off his monkhood too, and was no longer obliged to them. Atterbury.

MO'NKISH. adj. [from monk] Monastick;
pertaining to monks; taught by monks.

Those publick charities are a greater ornament to this city than all its wealth, and do more real honour to the reformed religion, than redounds to the church of Rome from all those monkish and superstitious foundations of which she vainly boasts. Atterbury.

Rise, rise, Roscommon, see the Bienheim muse,
The dull constraint of monkish rhyme refuse.

Smith.

dock: its roots are used in medicine.

MO'NOCHORD. n. s. [μόνοχρον and χορδή.]

1. An instrument of one string: as, the trumpet marine. Harris.

2. A kind of instrument anciently of singular use for the regulating of sounds:
the ancients made use of it to determine the proportion of sounds to one another. When the chord was divided into two equal parts, so that the terms were as one to one, they called them unisons; but if as two to one, they called them octaves or diapasons; when they were as three to two, they called them fifths or diapentes; if they were as four to three, they called them fourths, or diatessérons; if as five to four, they called it diton, or a tierce-major; but if as six to five, then they called it a demi-diton, or a tierce minor; and lastly, if the terms were as twenty-four to twenty-five, they called it a demiton or dieze; the monochord being thus divided, was properly that which they called a system, of which there were many kinds, according to the different divisions of the monochord. Harris.

MONOCULAR. } adj. [μόνος and oculus.]
MONOCULOUS. } One-eyed; having only one eye.

He was well served who, going to cut down an ancient white hawthorn tree, which, because she budded before others, might be an occasion of superstitution, had some of the prickles flew into his eyes, and made him monocular. Hovell.
Those of China repute the rest of the world monoculous. Glanville's Scepis.

MONOSYLLABLE. n. s. [monosyllabe, Fr. μόνος and συλλαβή.] A word of only one syllable.

My name of Ptolemy!
It is so long it asks an hour to write it:
I'll change it into Jove or Mars!
Or any other civil monosyllable,
That will not tire my hand. Dryden's Cleomenes.

Poets, although not insensible how much our language was already overstocked with monosyllables, yet, to save time and pains, introduced that barbarous custom of abbreviating words, to fit them to the measure of their verses. Swift.

Monosyllable lines, unless artfully managed, are stiff or languishing; but may be beautiful to express melancholy. Pope.

MONOSYLLABLED. adjective. [monosyllabe, Fr. from monosyllable.] Consisting of one syllable.

Nine taylor, if rightly spell'd,
Into one man are monosyllabled. Cleveland.

MONOTONY. n. s. [μονωτονία; μόνος and τόνος; monotonic, Fr.] Uniformity of sound; want of variety in cadence.

I could object to the repetition of the same rhymes within four lines of each other as tiresome to the ear through their monotony. Pope's Letters.

MONSIEUR. n. s. [Fr.] A term of reproach for a Frenchman.

A Frenchman his companion;
An eminent monsieur, that, it seems, much loves
A Gallian girl. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

MONSOON. n. s. [monson, monçon, Fr.] Monsoons are shifting trade winds in the East Indian ocean, which blow periodically; some for half a year one way, others but for three months, and then shift and blow for six or three months directly contrary. Harris.

The monsoons and trade winds are constant and periodical even to the thirtieth degree of latitude all around the globe, and seldom transgress or fall short of those bounds. Ray.

MONSTER. n. s. [monstre, Fr. monstrum, Lat.]

1. Something out of the common order of nature.

Methinks heroic poesie till now,
Like some fantastic fairy land did shew,
Gods, devils, nymphs, witches, and giants race,
And all but man in man's chief work had place.
Then like some worthy knight with sacred arms,
Dust drive the monsters thence, and end the charms. Cowley.

It ought to be determined whether monsters are really a distinct species; we find, that some of these monstrous productions have none of those qualities that accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive. Locke.

2. Something horrible for deformity, wickedness, or mischief.

If she live long,
And, in the end, meet the old course of death,
Women will all turn monsters. Shakesp. King Lear.

All human virtue to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquer'd but by death:
The great Alcides, ev'ry labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last. Pope.

To MONSTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put out of the common order of things. Not in use.

Her offence
Must be of such unnatural degree
That monsters it. Shakesp. King Lear.
I had rather have one scratch my head 't' his sun,

When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

MONSTROUSITY. } n. s. [from monstrous.]
MONSTRUOUSITY. } strous.] The state of being monstrous, or out of the common order of the universe. Monstrosity is more analogous.

This is the monstrosity in love, that the will is infinite, and the execution confin'd. Shakesp.

Such a tacit league is against such routs and shoals of people, as have utterly degenerated from nature, as have in their very body and frame of estate a monstrosity. Bacon.

We read of monstrous births, but we often see a greater monstrosity in education: thus, when a father has begot a man, he trains him up into a beast. South's Sermons.

By the same law monstrosity could not inappreciate from marriage, witness the case of hermaphrodites. Arbuthnot and Pope.

MONSTROUS. adj. [monstreux, Fr. monstrous, Lat.]

1. Deviating from the stated order of nature.

Nature there perverse,
Brought forth all monstrous, all prodigious things,
Hydras, and gorgons, and chimeras dire. Milton.

Every thing that exists has its particular constitution; and yet some monstrous productions have few of those qualities which accompany the essence of that species from whence they derive their originals. Locke.

2. Strange; wonderful. Generally with some degree of dislike.

Is it not monstrous that this player here,
But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
Could force his soul so to his conceit,
That, from her working, all his visage wan'd? Shakesp.

O monstrous! but one halfpennyworth of bread to this intolerable deal of sack. Shakesp.

3. Irregular; enormous.

No monstrous height, or breadth, or length appear,

The whole at once is hold and regular. Pope.

4. Shocking; hateful.

This was an invention given out by the Spaniards to save the monstrous scorn their nation received. Bacon.

MONSTROUSLY. adv. Exceedingly; very much. A cant term.

Oil of vitriol and petroleum, a dram of each, turn into a mouldy substance, there residing a fair cloud in the bottom, and a monstrous thick oil on the top. Bacon.

She was easily put off the hooks, and monstrous hard to be pleased again. L'Estrange.

Add, that the rich have still a gibe in store,
And will be monstrous witty on the poor. Dryden.

MON

MO'NSTROUSLY. adv. [from monstrous.]

1. In a manner out of the common order of nature; shockingly; terribly; horribly. Tiberius was bad enough in his youth, but superlatively and monstrously so in his old age. South's Sermons.

2. To a great or enormous degree.

He walks;
And that self-chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most monstrously to have. Shak.
These truths with his example you disprove,
Who with his wife is monstrously in love. Dryden.

MO'NSTROUSNESS. n. s. [from monstrous.] Enormity; irregular nature or behaviour.

When he looks out in an ungrateful shape! Shak.

MONTANT. n. s. [Fr.] A term in fencing.

Vat be all you, one, two, tree, four, come for?
—To see thee fight, to see thee pass thy puncto, thy stock, thy traverse, thy distance, thy montant. Shakesp.

MONTE'RO. n. s. [Span.] A horseman's cap.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

MONTE'RH. n. s. [from the name of the inventor.] A vessel in which glasses are washed.

New things produce new words, and thus Monteh.

Has by one vessel sav'd his name from death. King.

MONTH. n. s. [monað, Sax.] A space of time either measured by the sun or moon: the lunar month is the time between the change and change, or the time in which the moon comes to the same point: the solar month is the time in which the sun passes through a sign of the zodiack: the calendar months, by which we reckon time, are unequally of thirty or one-and-thirty days, except February, which is of twenty-eight, and in leap year of twenty-nine.

Till the extirpation of your month,
Sojourn with my sister. Shakesp. King Lear.
From a month old even unto five years old. Lev. xxvii. 6.

Months are not only lunary, and measured by the moon, but also solar, and terminated by the motion of the sun, in thirty degrees of the ecliptic. Brown's Vulg. Err.

As many months as I sustain'd her hate,
So many years is she condemn'd by fate
To daily death. Dryden's Theo. and Honoria.

MONTH'S mind. n. s. Longing desire.

You have a month's mind to them. Shakesp.
For if a trumpet sound, or drum beat,
Who has not a month's mind to combat? Hudibras.

MONTHLY. adj. [from month.]

1. Continuing a month; performed in a month.

I would ask concerning the monthly revolutions of the moon about the earth, or the diurnal ones of the earth upon its own axis, whether these have been finite or infinite. Bentley.

2. Happening every month.

The youth of heav'nly birth I view'd,
For whom our monthly victims are renew'd. Dryd.

MONTHLY. adv. Once in a month.

If the one may very well monthly, the other may as well even daily, be iterated. Hooker.
O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant moon,
That changes monthly in her circl'd orb;
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable. Shakesp.

MONTU'IR. n. s. [Fr.] In horsemanship, a stone as high as the stirrups, which Italian riding-masters mount their horses

MOO

In his time there remained the monument of his tomb in the mountain Jasius. Raleigh.
He is become a notable monument of unprosperous disloyalty. King Charles.

So many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Or monument to ages: and thereon Offer sweet-smelling gums. Milton's Par. Lost.

Of ancient British: art
A pleasing monument, not less admir'd
Than what from Attick or Etruscan hands Arose. Philips.

Collect the best monuments of our friends, their own images in their writings. Pope to Swift.

2. A tomb; a cenotaph; something erected in memory of the dead.

On your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs, and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial. Shakesp.
The flowers which in the circling valley grow,
Shall on his monument their odours throw. Santlys.

In a heap of slain,
Two youthful knights they found beneath a load
opprest
Of slaughter'd foes, whom first to death they sent,
The trophies of their strength, a bloody monument. Dryden.

With thee on Raphael's monument I mourn,
Or wait inspiring dreams at Maro's urn. Pope.

MONUMENTAL. adj. [from monument.]

1. Memorial; preserving memory.

When the sun begins to fling
His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
To arch'd walks of twilight groves,
And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
Of pine or monumental oak. Milton.

The destruction of the earth was the most monumental proof that could have been given to all the succeeding ages of mankind. Woodward.

The polish'd pillar different sculptures grace,
A work outlasting monumental brass. Pope.

2. Raised in honour of the dead; belonging to a tomb.

Perseverance keeps honour bright:
To have done, is to hang quite out of fashion
Like rusty mail in monumental mockery. Shakesp.

I'll not scar that whiter skin of hers than soow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster. Shakesp.
Therefore if he needs must go,
And the fates will have it so,
Softly may he be possess'd
Of his monumental rest. Crashaw.

MOOD. n. s. [mode, Fr. modus, Lat.]

1. The form of an argument.

Mood is the regular determination of propositions according to their quantity and quality, i. e. their universal or particular affirmation or negation. Watts's Logic.
Aristotle reduced our loose reasonings to certain rules, and made them conclude in mode and figure. Baker on Learning.

2. Stile of musick.

They move
In perfect phalanx, to the Durian mood
Of flutes, and soft recorders. Milton's Par. Lost.
Their sound seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his complaint. Milton.

3. The change the verb undergoes in some languages, as the Greek, Latin and French, to signify various intentions of the mind, is called mood.

Clarke's Latin Grammar.

MOO

4. [From mod, Goth. mod, Sax. moed, Dut. and generally in all Teutonic dialects.] Temper of mind; state of mind as affected by any passion; disposition.

The trembling ghosts, with sad amazed mood,
Chattering their iron teeth, and staring wide
With stony eyes. Fairy Queen.
The kingly beast upon her gazing stood,
With pity calm'd, down fell his angry mood. Fairy Queen.

Eyes nause'd to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakesp. Othello.
Clorinda changed to ruth her warlike mood,
Few silver drops her vernil cheeks depaint. Fairf.

Solyman, in a melancholy mood, walked up and down in his tent a great part of the night. Knolles.
She was in fittest mood
For cutting corns, or letting blood. Hudibras.

These two kids, t'appease his angry mood,
I bear, of which the furies give him good. Dryden.
He now profuse of tears,
In suppliant mood fell prostrate at our feet. Addison.

5. Anger; rage; heat of mind. Mod, in Gothic, signifies habitual temper.

That which we move for our better instruction's sake, tumeth into anger and choler in them; yet in their mood they cast forth somewhat wherewith, under pain of greater displeasure, we must rest contented. Hooker.

MO'ODY. adj. [from mood.]

1. Angry; out of humour.

How now, moody?
What is't thou can'st demand? Shakesp. Tempest.
Hide him rev'rently,
When you perceive his blood incline to mirth,
But being moody, give him line and scope,
Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
Confound themselves with working. Shakesp.

Ev'ry peevish, moody malecontent
Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar. Rowe.

2. Mental; intellectual: moö in Saxon signifies the mind.

1. The changing luminary of the night, called by poets Cynthia or Phæbe.

The moon shines bright: 'twas such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakesp.
Diana hath her name from moisten, which is the property of the moon, being by nature cold and moist, and is feigned to be a goddess huntress. Peachment.

Beneath the mighty ocean's wealthy caves,
Beneath th' eternal fountain of all waves,
Where their vast court the mother waters keep,
And undisturb'd by moons, in silence sleep. Cowley.
Ye moon and stars, bear witness to the truth!
Dryden.

2. A month.

3. [In fortification.] It is used in composition to denote a figure resembling a crescent: as a half moon.

MOON-BEAM. n. s. [moon and beam.]

Rays of lunar light.
The division and quavering, which please so much in musick, have an agreement with the glittering of light, as the moon beams playing upon a wave. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
On the water the moon-beams played, and made it appear like floating quicksilver. Dryden.

MOON-CALF. n. s. [moon and calf.]

1. A monster; a false conception: supposed perhaps anciently to be produced by the influence of the moon.

MOO

How cam'st thou to be the siege of this moon-calf?
Shakesp.

2. A dolt; a stupid fellow.
 The potion works not on the part design'd,
 But turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
 The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden's Juvenal.

MOP

haps, as it is a law term, from mot. Fr.]
 To plead a mock cause; to state a point of law by way of exercise, as was commonly done in the inns of court at appointed times.

MOOT case or point. A point or case unsettled and disputable, such as may properly afford a topic of disputation.
 In this moot case your judgment to refuse,
 Is present death. Dryden's Juvenal.
 Would you not think him crack'd, who would require another to make an argument on a moot point, who understands nothing of our laws? Locke on Education.
 Let us drop both our pretences; for I believe it is a moot point, whether I am more likely to make a master Bull, or yon a master Strutt. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

MOOTED. adj. Plucked up by the root. Ainsworth.

MOOTER. n. s. [from moot.] A disputer of moot points.

MOP. n. s. [moppa, Welsh; mappa, Lat.]

1. Pieces of cloth, or locks of wool, fixed to a long handle, with which maids clean the floors.
 Such is that sprinkling which some careless quean
 Flirts on you from her mop, but not so clean.
 You fly, invoke the gods; then turning, stop
 To rail; she singing, still whirls on her mop. Swift.

2. [Perhaps corrupted from mock.] A wry mouth made in contempt.
 Each one tripping on his toe
 Will be here with mop and now. Shakesp.

To MOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To rub with a mop.

To MOP. v. n. [from mock.] To make wry mouths in contempt.
 Five fiends have been in poor Tom at once; of lust, as Obedicut; Hobbiddiden, prince of dumbness; Mabu, of stealing; Mohu, of murder; and Fibbertigibbet, of mopping and mowing, who since possesses chamber-maids. Shakesp.
 An ass fell a mopping and braying at a lion. L'Estrange.

To MOPE. v. n. [Of this word I cannot find a probable etymology.] To be stupid; to drowse; to be in a constant day-dream; to be spiritless, inactive and inattentive; to be stupid and delirious.
 What a wretched and peevish fellow is this king of England, to mope with his fat-brain'd followers. Shakesp.
 Eyes without feeling, feeling without sight,
 Ears without hands or eyes, smelling sans all,
 Or but a sickly part of one true sense
 Could not so mope. Shakesp. Hamlet.
 Ev'n in a dream, were we divided from them,
 And were brought moping hither. Shakesp.
 Intestate stone, and ulcer, cholick pangs,
 Demoniack frenzy, moping melancholy,
 And moon-struck madness. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The busy craftsman and o'erlabour'd hind Forget the travel of the day in sleep;
 Care only wakes, and moping pensiveness;
 With meagre discontented looks they sit,
 And watch the wasting of the midnight taper. Rowe.

To MOPE. v. a. To make spiritless; to deprive of natural powers.
 They say there are charms in herbs, said he,
 and so threw a handful of grass; which was so ridiculous, that the young thief took the old man to be moped. L'Estrange.
 Severity breaks the mind; and then in the place of a disorderly young fellow, you have a low-spirited moped creature. Locke.

MOPE-EYED. adj. Blind of one eye. Ainsworth.

MO'PPET. } n. s. [perhaps from mop.] A MO'PSEY. } puppet made of rags, as a mop is made; a fondling name for a girl.

Our sovereign lady: made for a queen?
 With a globe in one hand, and a sceptre in 't'other?
 A very pretty moppet! Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

MO'PUS. n. s. [A cant word from mope.]
 A drone; a dreamer.

I'm grown a mere mopus; no company comes
 But a rabble of tenants. Swift's Miscel.

MORAL. adj. [moralis, Lat.]

1. Relating to the practice of men towards each other, as it may be virtuous or criminal;
 good or bad.

Keep at the least within the compass of moral actions, which have in them vice or virtue. Hooker.

Laws and ordinances positive he distinguisheth from the laws of the two tables, which were moral.
Hooker.

In moral actions divine law helpeth exceedingly the law of reason to guide life, but in supernatural it alone guideth. Hooker.

Now, brandish'd weapons glitt'ring in their hands,

Mankind is broken loose from moral bands;
 No rights of hospitality remain,
 The guest, by him who harbour'd him, is slain.
Dryden.

2. Reasoning or instructing with regard to vice and virtue.

France spreads his banners in our noiseless land,
 With plumed helm thy slay'r begins his threats,
 Whilst thou, a moral fool, sit'st still and criest.
Shakesp.

3. Popular; customary; such as is known or admitted in the general business of life.

Physical and mathematical certainty may be stiled infallible; and moral certainty may properly be stiled indubitable. Wilkins.

We have found, with a moral certainty, the seat of the Mosaic abyss Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Mathematical things are capable of the strictest demonstration; conclusions in natural philosophy are capable of proof by an induction of experiments; things of a moral nature by moral arguments, and matters of fact by credible testimony.
Tillotson.

A moral universality, is when the predicate agrees to the greatest part of the particulars which are contained under the universal subject. Watts.

MORAL. n. s.

1. Morality; practice or doctrine of the duties of life; this is rather a French than English sense.

Their moral and economy,
 Most perfectly they made agree. Prior.

2. The doctrine inculcated by a fiction; the accommodation of a fable to form the morals.

Benedictus! why benedictus? you have some moral in this benedictus.

—Moral! No, thy my troth I have no moral meaning; I meant plain holy thistle. Shakesp.

Expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as beiof the groundwork of his instruction; this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral. Dryden's Difes.
 I found a moral first, and then studied for a fable, but could do nothing that pleased me Swift.

To MORAL. v. n. [from the adjective.] To moralise; to make moral reflections. Not in use.

When I did hear
 The motley fool thus moral on the time,
 My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
 That fools should be so deep contemplative. Shk.

MORALIST. n. s. [moraliste, Fr.] One who teaches the duties of life.

The advice given by a great moralist to his friend was, that he should compose his passions; and let that be the work of reason, which would certainly be the work of time. Addison.

MORALITY. n. s. [moralité, Fr. from moral.]

1. The doctrine of the duties of life; ethicks.

The system of *moral*ity, to be gathered out of the writings of ancient sages, falls very short of that delivered in the gospel. Swift's Miscellany.

A necessity of sinning is as impossible in mora- lity, as any the greatest difficulty can be in nature.
Baker on Learning.

2. The form of an action which makes it the subject of reward, or punishment.

The *moral*ity of an action is founded in the freedom of that principle, by virtue of which it is in the agent's power, having all things ready and requisite to the performance of an action, either to perform or not perform it. South's Sermons.

To MORALIZE. v. a. [moraliser, Fr.]

1. To apply to moral purposes; to explain in a moral sense.

He has left me here behind to expound the meaning or moral of his signs and tokens.
 I pray thee moralize them. Shakesp.

—O, yes, into a thousand similies. Shakesp.

This fable is moralized in a common proverb.
L'Estrange.

2. In Spenser it seems to mean, to furnish with manners or examples.

Fierce warres and faithful loves shall moralize
 my song. Fairy Queen.

3. In Prior, who imitates the foregoing line, it has a sense not easily discovered, if indeed it has any sense.

High as their trumpets tune his lyre he strung,
 And with his prince's arms he moralized his song.
Prior.

To MORALIZE. v. n. To speak or write on moral subjects.

MORALIZER. n. s. [from moralize.] He who moralizes.

MORALLY. adv. [from moral.]

1. In the ethical sense.

By good, good morally so called, bonum honestum, ought chiefly to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure, the bonum utile or ju-cundum, hardly come into any account here. South.

Because this, of the two brothers killing each other, is an action morally unnatural; therefore, by way of preparation, the tragedy would have begun with heaven and earth in disorder, something physically unnatural. Rymer.

2. According to the rules of virtue.

To take away rewards and punishments, is only pleasing to a man who resolves not to live morally.
Dryden.

3. Popularly; according to the common occurrences of life; according to the common judgment made of things.

It is morally impossible for an hypocrite to keep himself long upon his guard. L'Estrange.

I am from the nature of the things themselves morally certain, and cannot make any doubt of it, but that a mind free from passion and prejudice is more fit to pass a true judgment than such a one as is hyassed by affections and interests. Wilkins.

The concurring accounts of many such witnesses render it morally, or, as we might speak, absolutely impossible that these things should be false.
Atterbury's Sermons.

MORALS. n. s. [without a singular.] The practice of the duties of life; behaviour with respect to others.

Some, as corrupt in their morals as vice could make them, have yet been solicitous to have their children soberly, virtuously, and piously brought up. South's Sermons.

Learn then what morals critics on. It to shew:
 'Tis not enough wit, art, and learning join;
 In all you s, eak, let truth and candour shine. Pope.

MORA'SS. n. s. [morais, Fr.] Fen; bog;
 moor.

 of being diseased.

MORBI'FICAL. } adj. [morbis and facio,
MORBI'FICK. } Lat. morbifique, Fr.]

Causing diseases.

The air appearing so malicious in this morbifick conspiracy, exacts a more particular regard; wherefore initiate consumptives must change their air. Harvey on Consumptions.

This disease is cured by the critical resolution, concoction, and evacuation of the morbifick matter.
Arbuthnot.

MORBO'SE. adj. [morbosus, Lat.] Proceeding from disease; not healthy.

Malphigi, under galls, comprehends all pre-natural and morbos tumours and excrescences of plants. Ray on the Creation.

MORBO'SITY. n. s. [morbosus, Lat.] Diseased state. A word not in use.

The inference is fair, from the organ to the action, that they have eyes, therefore some sight was designed, if we except the casual impediments or morbosities in individuals. Brown.

MORDA'CIOUS. adj. [mordax, Lat.] Biting; apt to bite.

MORDA'CITY. n. s. [mordacité, Fr. mor- dacitas, from mordax, Lat.] Biting quality.

It is to be inquired, whether there be any menstruum to dissolve any metal that is not fretting or corroding, and openeth the body by sympathy, and not by mordacity, or violent penetration. Bacon.

MOR'DICANT. adj. [mordeo, Lat. mordi- cant, Fr.] Biting; acrid.

He presumes, that the mordicant quality of bodies must proceed from a fiery ingredient; whereas the light and inflammable parts must be driven away by that time the fire has reduced the body to ashes. Boyle.

MORDICA'TION. n. s. [from mordicant.]

The act of corroding or biting.

Another cause is mordication of the orifices, especially of the mesentery veins; as any thing that is sharp and biting doth provoke the part to expel, and mustard provoketh sneezing. Bacon.

MORE. adj. [mape, Sax. the comparative of some or great.]

1. In greater quantity; in greater degree.

MORTAR. n. s. [morter, Dut. mortier, Fr.] Cement made of lime and sand with water, and used to join stones or bricks.

Mortar, in architecture, is a preparation of lime and sand mixed up with water, serving as a cement, and used by masons and bricklayers in building of walls of stone and brick. Wolfius observes, that the sand should be dry and sharp, so as to prick the hands when rubbed, yet not earthy, so as to foul the water it is washed in: he also finds fault with masons and bricklayers as committing a great error, in letting their lime slacken and cool before they make up their mortar, and also in letting their mortar cool and die before they use it; therefore he advises, that if you expect your work to be well done, and to continue long, to work up the lime quick, and but a little at a time, that the mortar may not lie long before it be used.

I will tread this unbolted villain into mortar, and daub the wall of a jakes with him.

Shakesp. K. Lear.

They had brick for stone, and slime for mortar.

Gen. xi. 3.

Lime hot out of the kiln mixed soft with water, putting sand to it, will make better mortar than other.

Why in that rawness left you wife and children, These precious motives, those strong knots of love, Without leave-taking?

What can be a stronger motive to a firm trust on our Maker, than the giving us his Son to suffer for us?

The motive for continuing in the same state is only the present satisfaction in it; the motive to change is always some uneasiness.

2. Mover. Not in use. Heaven brought me up to be my daughter's dowry;

As it hath fated her to be my motive And helper to a husband.

Her wanton spirits look out At every joint, and motive of her body.

MO'TLEY. adj. [supposed to be corrupted from medley, perhaps from mothlike, coloured, spotted or variegated like a garden moth.] Mingled of various colours.

They that come to see a fellow In a long motley coat, guarded with yellow, Will be deceiv'd.

Experience and after-thought, and idle care, And doubts of motley hue, and dark despair.

Enquire from whence this motley style Did first our Roman purity defile.

Traulus, of amphibious breed, Motley fruit of mongrel seed; By the dam from lordlings sprung, By the sire exhal'd from dung.

MO'TOR. n. s. [motetur, Fr. from moveo, Lat.] A mover.

Those bodies being of a congenerous nature, do readily receive the impressions of their motor, and, if not lettered by their gravity, conform themselves to situations, wherein they best unite unto their animator.

MO'TORY. adj. [motorius, Lat.] Giving motion.

The bones, were they dry, could not, without great difficulty, yield to the plucks and attractions of the motory muscles.

MO'TTO. n. s. [motto, Ital.] A sentence or word added to a device, or prefixed to any thing written.

It may be said to be the motto of human nature, rather to suffer than to die.

We ought to be meek-spirited, till we are assured of the honesty of our ancestors; for covetousness and circumvention make no good motto for a coat.

It was the motto of a bishop eminent for his piety and good works in king Charles the second's reign, Inservi Deo & laetare, Serve God and be cheerful.

To MOVE. v. a. [moveo, Lat.]

1. To put out of one place into another; to put in motion.

Sinai itself was moved at the presence of God.

At this my heart trembleth, and is moved out of his place.

2. To give an impulse to.

He sorrows now, repents, and prays contrite, My motions in him; longer than they move; His heart I know, how variable and vain Self-left.

The pretext of piety is but like the hand of a clock, set indeed more conspicuously, but directed wholly by the secret morings of carnality within.

3. To propose; to recommend.

If the first consultation be not sufficient, the will may move a review, and require the understanding to inform itself better.

They are to be blamed alike, who move and who decline war upon particular respects.

M O V

They find a great inconvenience in moving their suits by an interpreter. Davies on Ireland.
To Iudamora you my suit most move. Dryden.

4. To persuade; to prevail on; to dispose by something determining the choice.

A thousand kucees,
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still Winter
In storm perpetual, could not move the Gods
To look that way thou wert. Shakesp.
Grutus offered the Transylvanians money; but minds desirous of revenge were not moved with gold. Knolles.

Sometimes the possibility of preferment prevailing with the credulous, expectation of less expense with the covetous, opinion of ease with the fond, and assurance of remoteness with the unkind parents, have moved them without discretion, to engage their children in adventures of learning, by whose return they have received but small contentment. Wotton.

Could any power of sense the Roman move
To burn his own right hand? Davies.

That which moves a man to do any thing, must be the apprehension and expectation of some good from the thing which he is about to do. South.

When she saw her reasons idly spent,
And could not move him from his fix'd intent,
She flew to rage. Dryden's Æn.
But when no female arts his mind could move,
She turn'd to furious hate her nuptious love. Dryden's Æn.

What can thy mind to this long journey move,
Or need'st thou absence to renew thy love? Dryd.

5. To affect; to touch pathetically; to stir passion.

If he see aught in you that makes him like,
That any thing he sees, which moves his liking,
I can with ease translate it to my will. Shakesp.

It was great ign'rance, Gloster's eyes being out,
To let him live; where he arrives he moves
All hearts against us. Shakesp. King Lear.

Should a shipwreck'd sailor sing his woe,
Would'st thou be mov'd to pity, or bestow
An alms? Dryden's Persius.

Images are very sparingly to be introduced:
their proper place is in poems and orations, and their use is to move pity or terror, compassion and resentment. Felton on the Classics.

O let thy sister, daughter, handmaid move,
Or all those tender names in one, thy love. Pope.

6. To make angry.

From those bloody hands
Throw your distemper'd weapons to the ground,
And hear the sentence of your mov'd prince. Shakesp.

7. To put into commotion.

When they were come to Bethlehem, all the city was mov'd about them. Ruth, i. 19.

8. To incite; to produce by incitement.

Then feed on thoughts, that voluntary move Harmonious numbers. Milton.

9. To conduct regularly in motion.

They, as they move
Their starry dance in numbers that compute Days, months, and years, towards his all-cheering lamp,
Turn swift their various motions. Milton.

To MOVE. v. n.

1. To be in a state of changing place; not to be at rest.

Whether Heav'n move or Earth
Imports not, if thou reckon right. Milton.
The seas represent the earth as immoveable; for though it do move in itself, it rests to us who are carried with it. Glanville.

2. To have a particular direction of passage.

The sun
Had first his precept so to move, so shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat. Milton.

2. To go from one place to another.

M O V

I look'd toward Birnam, and anon, methought,
The wood began to move.
—Within this three mile may you see it coming;
I say a moving grove. Shakesp. Macbeth.

On the green bank I sat and listen'd long,
Nor till her lay was ended could I move,
But wish'd to dwell for ever in the grove. Dryden.

This saying, that God is the place of spirits, being literal, makes us conceive that spirits move up and down, and have their distances and intervals in God, as bodies have in space. Locke.

When we are come to the utmost extremity of body, what is there that can put a stop, and satisfy the mind, that it is at the end of space, when it is satisfied that body itself can move into it? Locke.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move, but seems to be a perfect entire circle of that matter. Locke.

The goddess moves
To visit Paphos, and her blooming groves. Pope.

4. To have vital action.

In him we live, move, and have our being.
Every moving thing that liveth shall be meat for
you. Acts, xvii. 28.

5. To walk; to bear the body.

See great Marcellus! how inur'd in toils
He moves with manly grace, how rich with regal spoils. Dryden's Æneis.

6. To march as an army.

In perfect phalanx to the Dorian mood. Milton.

7. To go forward.

Through various hazards and events we move
To Latium. Dryden's Æneis.

8. To change the posture of the body in ceremony.

When Haman saw Mordecai that he stood not up, nor mov'd for him, he was full of indignation. Esther, v. 9.

MOVE. n. s. The act of moving, commonly used at chess.

I saw two angels play'd the mate;
With man alas no otherwise it proves,
An unseen hand makes all their moves. Cowley.

MOVEABLE. adj. [from move.]

1. Capable of being moved; not fixed; portable; such as may be carried from place to place.

In the vast wilderness when the people of God had no settled habitation, yet a moveable tabernacle they were commanded of God to make. Hooker.

When he made his prayer, he found the boat he was in moveable and unbound, the rest remain'd still fast. Bacon.

Any heat whatsoever promotes the ascent of mineral matter, which is subtiler, and is consequently moveable more easily. Woodward's Natural History.

Any who sees the Teverone must conclude it to be one of the most moveable rivers in the world, that it is so often shifted out of one channel into another. Addison on Italy.

2. Changing the time of the year.

The lunar month is natural and periodical, by which the moveable festivals of the Christian church are regulated. Holder.

MOVEABLES. n. s. [meubles, Fr.] Goods; furniture: distinguished from real or immoveable possessions, as lands or houses.

We seize
The plate, coin, revenues, and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd. Shakesp.

Let him that mov'd you hither,
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first,
You were a moveable.

—Why, what's a moveable?
—A join'd stool. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

M O V

Surveys rich moveables with curious eye,
Beats down the price, and threatens still to buy. Dryden.

MOVEABLENESS. n. s. [from moveable.]
Mobility; possibility to be moved.

MOVEABLY. adv. [from moveable.] So as it may be moved.

His back-piece is composed of eighteen plates, moveably joined together by as many intermediate skins. Grew.

MOVELESS. adj. Unmoved; not to be put out of the place.

The lungs, though untouched, will remain moveless as to any expansion or contraction of their substance. Boyle.

The Grecian phalanx, moveless as a tow'r,
On all sides batter'd, yet resists his pow'r. Pope.

MOVEMENT. n. s. [mouvement, Fr.]

1. Manner of moving.

What farther relieves descriptions of battles, is the art of introduc'g pathetick circumstances about the heroes, which raise a different movement in the mind, compassion and pity. Pope's Essays.

Under workmen are expert enough at making a single wheel in a clock, but are utterly ignorant how to adjust the several parts, or regulate the movement. Swjt.

2. Motion.

Could he whose laws the rolling planets bind,
Describe or fix one movement of the mind. Pope.

MOVENT. adj. [movens, Lat.] Moving.

If it be in some part movent, and in some part quiescent, it must needs be a curve line, and so no radius. Grew's Cosmol.

MOVENT. n. s. [movens, Lat.] That which moves another.

That there is a motion which makes the vicissitudes of day and night, sense may assure us; but whether the sun or earth be the common movent, cannot be determined but by a further appeal. Glanville's Scyphis.

MOV'ER. n. s. [from move.]

1. The person or thing that gives motion.

O thou eternal mover of the heav'n's,
Look with a gentle eye upon this wretch. Shakesp.

The strength of a spring were better assisted by the labour of some intelligent mover, as the heavenly orbs are supposed to be turned. Wilkins.

2. Something that moves, or stands not still.

You as the soul, as the first mover, you Vigour and life on ev'ry part bestow. Waller.
So orbs from the first mover motion take,
Yet each their proper revolutions make. Dryden.

3. A proposer.

See here these movers, that do prize their honours
At a crack'd drachm; cushions, leaden spoons,
Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shakesp.

If any question be mov'd concerning the doctrine of the church of England expressed in the thirty-nine articles, give not the least ear to the movers thereof. Bacon.

MOVING. participial adj. [from move.]

Pathetick; touching; adapted to affect the passions.

Great Jupiter,
The moving pray'r of Æacus did grant,
And into men and women turn'd the ant. Blackm.

MOVINGLY. adv. [from moving.] Pathetically; in such a manner as to seize the passions.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly and more movingly express, by reason of that poetical form wherewith they are written. Hooker.

I would have had them write more movingly. Shakesp.

His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk. Addison.

MOUGHT, for might. Obsolete.

MOULD. n. s. [moezel, Swed.]

1. A kind of concretion on the top or outside of things kept motionless and damp; now discovered by microscopes to be perfect plants.

All moulds are inceptions of putrefaction, as the moulds of pies and flesh, which moulds turn into worms. Bacon.

Moss is a kind of mould of the earth and trees, but may be better sorted as a rudiment of germination. Bacon.

Another special affinity is between plants and mould, or putrefaction; for all putrefaction, if it dissolve not in arefaction, will, in the end, issue into plants. Bacon's Natural History.

The malt made in Summer is apt to contract mould. Mortimer.

A hermit, who has been shut up in his cell in a college, has contracted a sort of mould and rust upon his soul, and all his airs have awkwardness in them. Watts.

2. [Mold, Sax.] Earth; soil; ground in which any thing grows.

Those moulds that are of a bright chestnut or hazelly colour are accounted the best; next to that the dark grey and russet moulds are accounted best; the light and dark ash-colour are reckoned the worst, such as are usually found on common or heathy ground: the clear tawny is by no means to be approved, but that of a yellowish colour is reckoned the worst of all; this is commonly found in wild and waste parts of the country, and for the most part produces nothing but goss, furz, and fern. All good lands after rain, or breaking up by the spade, will emit a good smell; that being always the best that is neither too unctuous or too lean, but such as will easily dissolve; of a just consistence between sand and clay. Miller.

Though worms devour me, though I turn to mould,

Yet in my flesh I shall his face behold. Sandys.
The black earth every where obvious on the surface of the ground, we call mould. Woodward.

3. Matter of which any thing is made.

When the world began,
One common mass compos'd the mould of man. Dryden.

Nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my weak sex. Addison.

4. [Molde, Span. moule, Fr.] The matrix in which any thing is cast; in which any thing receives its form.

If the liturgies of all the ancient churches be compared, it may be perceived they had all one original mould. Hooker.

A dangerous president were left for the casting of prayers into certain poetical moulds. Hooker.

French churches all cast according unto that mould which Calvin had made. Hooker.

My wife comes foremost; then the honour'd mould

Wherein this trunk was fram'd. Shakesp.
You may have fruit in more accurate figures, according as you make the moulds. Bacon.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit moulds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then what might else be wrought

Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

We may hope for new heavens and a new earth, more pure and perfect than the former; as if this was a refiner's fire, to purge out the dross and coarse parts, and then cast the mass again into a new and better mould. Burnet.

Sure our souls were near allied, and thine
Cast in the same poetick mould with mine. Dryden.

Here in fit moulds to Indian nations known,
Are cast the several kinds of precious stone. Blackmore.

5. Cast; form.

No mates for you,
Unless you were of gentler, milder mould. Shakesp.

William earl of Pembroke was a man of another mould and making, being the most universally beloved of any man of that age; and, having a great office, he made the court itself better esteemed, and more revered in the country. Clarendon.

Nor virtue, wit, nor beauty, could Preserve from death's hand this their heav'nly mould. Carew.

Learn
What creatures there inhabit, of what mould,
Or substance, how endur'd, and whist their pow'r.
And where their weakness. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So must the writer, whose productions should Take with the vulgar, be of vulgar mould. Waller.

From their main-top joyful news they hear
Of ships, which by their mould bring new supplies. Dryden.

Hans Carvel, impotent and old,
Married a lass of London mould. Prior.

6. The suture or contexture of the skull.

It is used in a sense a little strained by Shakespeare.

New honours come upon him,
Like our strange garments cleave not to their mould,
But with the end of use. Shakesp. Macbeth.

7. To MOULD. v. n. [from the noun.] To contract concreted matter; to gather mould.

In woods, in waves, in wars she wants to dwell,
And will be found with peril and with pain;
Ne can the man that moulds an idle cell
Unto her happy mansion attain. Fairy Queen.

There be some houses wherein sweet meats will relent, and baked meats will mould, more than in others. Bacon.

To MOULD. v. a. To cover with mould; to corrupt by mould.

Very coarse, hoary, moulded bread the soldiers thrust upon their spears, railing against Ferdinand, who made no better provision. Knolles.

To MOULD. v. a. [from the noun.] To form; to shape; to model.

I feel
Of what coarse metal ye are moulded. Shakesp.

Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.
—Why this was moulded on a porringer;
A velvet dish; fie, fie! 'tis lewd. Shakesp.

The king had taken such liking of his person, that he resolved to make him a master-piece, and to mould him platonically to his own idea. Wotton.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay
To mould me man? Milton's Paradise Lost.

He forgeth and mouldeth metals, and builds houses. Hale.

By education we may mould the minds and manners of youth into what shape we please, and give them the impressions of such habits as shall ever afterwards remain. Atterbury.

Then rose the seed of chaos, and of night,
Of dull and vernal a new world to mould,
And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold. Dunciad.

A faction in England, under the name of puritan, moulded up their new schemes of religion with republican principles in government. Swift.

For you alone he stole
The fire that forms a manly soul;
Then, to compleat it ev'ry way,
He moulded it with female clay. Swift's Miscell.

Fabelus would never learn any moral lessons till they were moulded into the form of some fiction or fable like those of Æsop. Watts.

2. To knead: as, to mould bread. Ainsw.

MO'ULDALE. adj. [from mould.] That may be moulded.

The differences of figurable and not figurable, mouldable and not mouldable, are plebeian notions. Bacon's Natural History.

MO'ULDER. n. s. [from mould.] He who moulds.

To MO'ULDER. v. n. [from mould.] To be turned to dust; to perish in dust; to be diminished; to wear or waste away.

If he had sat still, the enemy's army would have mouldered to nothing, and been exposed to any advantage he would take. Clarendon.

Whatever moulders, or is wasted away, is carried into the lower grounds, and nothing brought back again. Burnet.

Those formed stones despoiled of their shells, and exposed upon the surface of the ground, in time decay, wear, and moulder away, and are frequently found defaced, and broken to pieces. Woodward's Natural History.

To them by smiling Jove 'twas given,
Great William's glories to recall,
When statues moulder, and when arches fall. Prior.

Finding his congregation moulder every Sunday, and hearing what was the occasion of it, he resolved to give his parish a little Latin in his turn. Addison's Spectator.

To turn to dust; to crumble.

The natural histories of Switzerland talk of the fall of those rocks when their foundations have been mouldered with age, or rent by an earthquake. Addison on Italy.

With nodding arches, broken temples spread,
The very tombs now vanish'd like their dead;
Some felt the silent stroke of mould'ring age,
Some, hostile fury. Pope.

MO'ULDINESS. n. s. [from mouldy.] The state of being mouldy.

Flesh, fish, and plants, after a mouldiness, rottenness, or corrupting, will fall to breed worms. Bacon's Natural History.

MO'ULDING. n. s. [from mould.] Ornamental cavities in wood or stone.

Hollow mouldings are required in the work Moxon.

MO'ULDWARP. n. s. [mold and peoppan, Sax. This is I believe the proper and original name of the talpa: a mouldwarp is a creature that turns mould.

The word is still retained, though sometimes pronounced mouldywarp.] A mole; a small animal that throws up the earth.

Above the reach of loathful sinful lust,
Whose base effect through cowardly distrust
Of his own wings, dare not to heaven fly,
But like a mouldwarp in the earth doth lie. Spenser.

While they play the mouldwarps, unsavory damps distemper their heads with annoyance only for the present. Carew.

With gins we betray the vermin of the earth, namely, the fitch and the mouldwarp. Wotton.

MO'ULDY. adj. [from mould.] Overgrown with concretions.

Is thy name mouldy?
—Yea.
—'Tis the more time thou wert us'd.
—Ha, ha, ha! most excellent. Things that are mouldy lack use. Well said, Sir John. Shakesp.

The marble looks white, as being exposed to the winds and salt sea-vapours, that by continually fretting it preserve it from that mouldy colour which others contract. Addison.

To MOULT. v. n. [muyten, Dut.] To shed or change the feathers; to lose feathers.

Some birds upon moulting turn colour, as Robin-red-breast, after their moulting, grow to be red again by degrees. Bacon.

Time shall moult away his wings,
Ere he shall discover
In the whole wide world again
Such a constant lover. Suckling.

The widow'd turtle hangs her moulting wings,
And to the woods in mournful murmur sings. Garth.

To MOUNCH. } v. a. [mouch to eat much.
To MAUNCH. } Ainsworth. This word is retained in Scotland, and denotes the obliterated action of toothless gums on a hard crust, or any thing eatable: it seems to be a corruption of the French word manger. Macbean.
A sailor's wife had chesnuts in her lap,
And moucht, and moucht, and moucht. Shakesp.

MOUND. n. s. [mundian, Sax. to defend.]
Any thing raised to fortify or defend:
usually a bank of earth or stone.
His broad branches laden with rich fee,
Did stretch themselves without the utmost bound
Of this great garden, compass'd with a mound.
Fairy Queen.
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The mounds into salt tears. Shakesp.
God had thrown
That mountain as his garden mound, high rais'd.
Milton.
Such as broke through all mounds of law, such as laughed at the sword of vengeance which divine justice brandished in their faces.
South's Sermons.
Nor cold shall hinder me with horns and hounds
To thrud the thickets, or to leap the mounds. Dryd.
The state of Milan is like a vast garden surrounded by a noble mound-work of rocks and mountains. Addison.

To MOUND. v. a. [from the noun.] To fortify with a mound.

MOUNT. n. s. [mont, Fr. mons, Lat.]
1. A mountain; a hill.
Jacob offered sacrifice upon the mount.
Gen. xxxi. 54.
Behold yon mountain's hoary height,
Made higher with new mounds of snow. Dryden.

2. An artificial hill raised in a garden, or other place.
He might see what mounds they had in short time east, and what a number there was of warlike soldiers. Knolles.

3. A publick treasure; a bank. Now obsolete.
These examples confirmed me in a resolution to spend my time wholly in writing; and to put forth that poor talent God hath given me, not to particular exchanges, but to banks or mounds of perpetuity, which will not break. Bacon.

To MOUNT. v. n. [monter, Fr.]
1. To rise on high.
Doth the eagle mount up at thy command, and make her nest on high? Job, iii. 27.
I'll strive, with troubl'd thoughts, to take a nap;
Lest leaden slumber poize me down to-morrow,
When I should mount with wings of victory.
Shakesp.

A base ignoble mind,
That mounds no higher than a bird can soar.
Shakesp.
The fire of trees and houses mounts on high,
And meets half-way new fires that show'r from sky. Cowley.
If the liturgy should be offered to them, it would kindle jealousy, and as the first range of that ladder, which should serve to mount over all their customs. Clarendon.
Ambitious meteors set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun; not considering, that they have no more time allowed them in their mounting than the single revolution of a day; and that when the light goes from them, they are of necessity to fall. Dryden.

2. To tower; to be built up to great elevation.
Though his excellency mount up to the heavens, and his head reach unto the clouds, yet he shall perish. Job, xx. 6.

3. To get on horseback.
He cry'd, oh! and mounted. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
4. [For amount.] To attain in value.
Bring then these blessings to a strict account,
Make fair deductions, see to what they mount.
Pope.

To MOUNT. v. a.
1. To raise aloft; to lift on high.
The fire that mounts the liquor till it runs o'er,
Seeming to augment, wastes it. Shakesp.
What power is it which mounts my love so high;
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
Shakesp.
The air is so thin, that a bird has therein no feeling of her wings, or any resistance of air to mount herself by. Ruleigh.

2. To ascend; to climb.
Shall we mount again the rural throne,
And rule the country kingdoms, once our own?
Dryden.

3. To place on horseback; to furnish with horses.
Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Of these he chose the fairest and the best,
To mount the Trojan troop. Dryden's Æneid.
Clear reason, acting in conjunction with a well-disciplined, but strong and vigorous fancy, seldom fail to attain their end: fancy without reason, is like a horse without a rider; and reason without fancy is not well mounted. Grey's Cosmol.

4. To embellish with ornaments.
5. To mount guard. To do duty and watch at any particular post.
6. To mount a cannon. To set a piece on its wooden frame for the more easy carriage and management in firing it.

MO'UNTAIN. n. s. [montaigne, Fr.]
1. A large hill; a vast protuberance of the earth.
And by his false worship such pow'r he did gain,
As kept him o' th' mountain, and us on the plain.
Raleigh.
The ark no more now flotes, but seems on ground,
Fast on the top of some high mountain fix'd. Milt.
From Aemon's hands a rolling stone there came,
So large, it half deserv'd a mountain's name!
Dryd.

2. Any thing proverbially huge.
I had been drownded; a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man, and what should I have been when I had been swelled? I should have been a mountain of mummy. Shakesp.
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe,
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body. Shakesp.

MO'UNTAIN. adj. [from mountain.]
1. Hilly; full of mountains.
The ascent of the land from the sea to the foot of the mountains, and the height of the mountains from the bottom to the top, are to be computed, when you measure the height of a mountain, or of a mountainous land, in respect of the sea.
Burnet.
2. Large as mountains; huge; bulky.
What custom wills in all things, should we do't,
Mountainous error wou'd be too highly heapt
For truth to o'erpeer. Shakesp.
On earth, in air, amidst the seas and skies,
Mountainous heaps of wonders rise;
Whose tow'ring strength will ne'er submit
To reason's batteries, or the mines of wit. Prior.

3. Inhabiting mountains.
In destructions by deluge and earthquake, the remnant which hap to be reserved are ignorant and mountainous people, that can give no account of the time past. Bacon's Essays

And with their mistress join'd in close debate.
Dryden.

3. Any assignable quantity or degree.

The waters covered the chariots and horsemen;
there remained not so much as one. Exod. xiv. 28.

We will cut wood out of Lebanon as much as thou shalt need. 2 Chron. ii. 16.

The matter of the universe was created before the flood; and if any more was created, then there must be as much annihilated to make room for it. Burnet's Theory.

Who is there of whom we can with any rational assurance, or perhaps so much as likelihood, affirm, here is a man whose nature is renewed, whose heart is changed. South.

4. An uncommon thing; something strange.

It was much that one that was so great a lover of peace should be happy in war.

Bacon's Henry VII.
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing all that long duration which had past before that time.
Tillotson.

5. To make much of. To treat with regard; to fondle; to pamper.

Though he knew his discourse was to entertain him from a more straight parley, yet he durst not but kiss his rod, and gladly make much of that entertainment which she allotted unto him. Sidney.

The king understanding of their adventure, suddenly falls to take a pride in making much of them, extolling them with infinite praises. Sidney.

When thou camest first,
Thou stroak'd'st, and mad'st much of me; and would'st give me

Water with cherries in't. Shakesp. Tempest.

MUCH at one. Nearly of equal value;
of equal influence.

Then prayers are vain as curses, much at one
In a slave's mouth, against a monarch's pow'r.
Dryden.

MUCHWHAT. adv. [much and what.]
Nearly.

The motion being conveyed from the brain of man to the fancy of another, it is there received; and the same kind of strings being moved, and muchwhat after the same manner as in the first imaginant. Glanville's Sceptis.

The bigness of her body and bill, as likewise the form of them, is muchwhat as follows. More.

If we will disbelieve every thing, because we cannot know all things, we shall do muchwhat as wisely as he who would not use his legs because he had no wings to fly. Locke.

M U C

Unless he can prove calibatum a man or a woman, this Latin will be muchwhat the same with a solecism. Atterbury.

MUCH is often used in a kind of composition with participles both active and passive: when it is joined with a passive, as much loved, it seems to be an adverb; when it is joined with an active, as much enduring, it may be more properly considered as a noun.

MUCHEL. adj. for muckle or mickle.
[mýcel, Sax.] Much.

He had in arms abroad won michel fame.
And fill'd far lands with glory of his might. Fair. Q.

ness; mustiness. Ainsworth.

MUCILAGE. n. s. [mucilage, Fr.] A slimy or viscous mass; a body with moisture sufficient to hold it together.

Dissolution of gum tragacanth, and oil of sweet almonds, do communicating, the oil remaining on the top till they be stirred, and make the mucilage somewhat more liquid. Bacon.

Your alaternus seed move with a broom, that the seeds clog not together, unless you will separate it from the mucilage, for then you must a little bruise it wet. Evelyn.

Both the ingredients improve one another; for the mucilage adds to the lubricity of the oil, and the oil preserves the mucilage from inspissation.
Ray on the Creation.

MUCILAGINOUS. adj. [mucilagineus, Fr.
from mucilage.] Slimy; viscous; soft with some degree of tenacity.

There is a twofold liquor prepared for the inunction and lubrication of the heads or ends of the bones; an oily one, furnished by the marrow;
and a mucilaginous, supplied by certain glandules seated in the articulations. Ray on the Creation.

There is a sort of magnetism in all, not mucilaginous but resinous gums, even in common rosin.
Grew's Cosmol.

MUCILAGINOUS glands.

Mucilaginous glands are of two sorts: some are small, and in a manner miliary glandules; the other sort are conglomerated, or many glandules collected and planted one upon another. Quincy.

MUCILAGINOUSNESS. n. s. [from muci-laginous.] Sliminess; viscosity.

MUCK. n. s. [meox, Sax. myer, Islandick.]

1. Dung for manure of grounds.

Plow out thy mucke, and plow out thy ground.
Tusser.

It is usual to help the ground with muck, and likewise to recomfort with muck put to the roots;
but to water it with muck water, which is like to be more forcible, is not practised. Bacon.

The swine may see the pearl, which yet he va-loes but with the ordinary muck. Glanv. Apology.

There are, who
Rich foreign mould, on their ill-natur'd land Induce laborious, and with fat'ning muck Besmear the roots. Philips.

Morning insects, that in muck begun,
Shine, buzz, and fly-blow in the setting sun. Pope.

2. Any thing low, mean, and filthy.

Reward of worldly muck doth foully blend,
And low abase the high heroic spirit
That joys for crowns. Fairy Queen.

3. To run a muck, signifies, I know not from what derivation, to run madly and attack all that we meet.

Frontless and satire-proof he scow'rs the streets,
And runs an Indian muck at all he meets. Dryden.

Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet. Pope's Hor.

To MUCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with muck; to dung.

M U D

Thy garden plot lately wel trencht and muckt
Would now be twifallowd. Tusser.

MUCKENDER. n. s. [mouchoir, Fr. mo-cadero, Span. muccinum, low Lat.] A handkerchief.

For thy dull fancy a muckender is fit,
To wipe the slabbings of thy snotty wit. Dorset.

that muckers.

MUCKHILL. n. s. [muck and hill.] A dunghill.

Old Euclio in Plautus, as he went from home, seeing a crow scrat upon the muck-hill, returned in all haste, taking it for an ill sign his money was digged up. Burton.

MUCKINESS. n. s. [from mucky.] Nastiness; filth.

MUCKLE. adj. [mýcel, Sax.] Much.

MUCKSWEAT. n. s. [muck and sweat; in this low word muck signifies wet, moist.] Profuse sweat.

MUCKWORM. n. s. [muck and worm.]

1. A worm that lives in dung.

2. A miser; a curmudgeon.

Worms suit all conditions;
Misers are muckworms, silkworms beans,
And death-watches physicians. Swift's Miscell.

MUCKY. adj. [from muck.] Nasty; filthy.

Mucky filth his branching arms annoys,
And with uncomely weeds the gentle wave accloys.
Fairy Queen.

MUCOUS. adj. [mucosus, Lat.] Slimy;
viscous.

The salamander being cold in the fourth, and moist in the third degree, and having also a mucous humidity above and under the skin, may a while endure the flame. Brown.

About these the nerves and other vessels make a fine web, covered over with a mucous substance, to moisten these papillæ pyramidales. Cheyne.

MUCOUSNESS. n. s. [from mucous.] Slime;
viscosity.

MUCRO. n. s. [Lat.] A point.

The muero or point of the heart inclineth unto the left, by this position it giving way unto the ascension of the midriff. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

MUCRONATED. adj. [muero, Lat.] Narrowed to a sharp point.

Gems are here shot into cubes consisting of six sides, and mucronated or terminating in a point.
Woodward.

MUCULENT. adj. [from mucus, Lat.]
Viscous; slimy. Dict.

MUCUS. n. s. [Lat.] It is more properly used for that which flows from the papillary processes through the os cribriforme into the nostrils; but it is also used for any slimy liquor or moisture, as that which daubs over and guards the bowels and all the chief passages in the body; and it is separated by the mucilaginous glands. Quincy.

In the action of chewing, the mucus mixeth with the aliment: the mucus is a fluid, different from the spittle, and the great quantity of air which it contains helps to dissolve the aliment.
As both not on Aliments.

MUD. n. s. [modder, Dut.] The slime and uliginous matter at the bottom of still water.

M U D

The purest spring is not so free from mud,
As I am clear from treason. Shakesp. Henry VI.
Water in mud doth putrefy, as not able to preserve itself. Bacon.
The channel was dried up, and the fish left dead and stinking in the mud. L' Estrange.
The force of the fluid will separate the smallest particles, so as to leave vacant interstices, which will be again filled up by particles carried on by the succeeding fluid, as a bank by the mud of the current, which must be reduced to that figure which gives least resistance to the current. Arbuth.
A fountain in a darksome wood,
Nor stain'd with falling leaves nor rising mud. Addison.

To MUD. r. a. [from the noun.]

- To bury in the slime or mud.
I wish
Myself were mudded in that oozy bed,
Where my son lies. Shakesp. Temp.
- To make turbid; to pollute with dirt; to dash with dirt; to foul by stirring up the sediment.
I shall not stir in the waters which have been already mudded by so many contentious enquiries. Glanville's Scepis.

MUDDILY. adv. [from muddy.] Turbidly; with foul mixture.

Lucilius writ not only loosely and muddily, with little art, and much less care, but also in a time which was not yet sufficiently purged from barbarism. Dryden.

MUDDINESS. n. s. [from muddy.] Turbidity; foulness caused by mud, dregs, or sediment.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber: the season of the year, the muddiness of the stream, with the many green trees hanging over it, put me in mind of the delightful image that Virgil has given when Æneas took the first view of it. Addison on Italy.

Turn the bottle upside down; by this means you will not lose one drop, and the froth will conceal the muddiness. Suiff.

To MUDDLE. v. a. [from mud.]

- To make turbid; to foul; to make muddy.
The neighbourhood told him, he did ill to muddle the water and spoil the drink. L' Estrange.
Yet let the goddess smile or frown,
Bread we shall eat, or white or brown;
And in a cottage, or a court,
Drink fine champagne, or mudd'd port. Prior.
- To make half drunk; to cloud or stupefy.
I was for five years often drunk, always muddled; they carried me from tavern to tavern. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
Epicurus seems to have had his brains so muddled and confounded, that he scarce ever kept in the right way, though the main maxim of his philosophy was to trust to his senses, and follow his nose. Bentley's Sermons.

MUDDY. adj. [from mud.]

- Turbid; foul with mud.
A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty. Shak.
Her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pul'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Carry it among the whitsters in Datchet mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames. Shakesp.
Who can a pure and crystal current bring
From such a muddy and polluted spring? Sandys.
I strove in vain th' infected blood to cure,
Streams will run muddy where the spring's impure. Roscommon.
Till by the fury of the storm full blown,
The muddy bottom or the clouds is thrown. Dryden.
Out of the true fountains of science painters and statuary are bound to draw, without amusing themselves with dipping in streams which are often muddy, at least troubled: I mean the manner of their masters after whom they creep. Dryden.

M U F

- Impure; dark; gross.
There's not the smallest orb which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young ey'd cherubims;
Such harmony is in immortal sounds;
But whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close us in, we cannot hear it. Shakes.
If you choose, for the composition of such ointment, such ingredients as do make the spirits a little more gross or muddy, thereby the imagination will fix the better. Bacon.
- Soiled with mud.
His passengers
Expos'd in muddy weeds, upon the miry shore. Dryden.
- Dark; not bright.
The black
A more inferior station seeks,
Leaving the fiery red behind,
And mingles in her muddy cheeks. Swift's Miscel.
- Cloudy in mind; dull.
Do'st think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Yet I,
A dull and muddy mettled rascal, peak,
Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant in my cause,
And can say nothing. Shakesp. Hamlet.

To MUDDY. v. a. [from mud.] To make muddy; to cloud; to disturb.

The people mudded
Thick and unwholesome in their thoughts and whispers. Shakespeare.
Excess, either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground, or if it flames not out, charks him to a coal; muddies the best wit, and makes it only to flutter and froth high. Crew's Cosmol.

MUDSUCKER. n. s. [mud and suck.] A sea fowl.

In all water-fowl, their legs and feet correspond to that way of life; and in mudsuckers, two of the toes are somewhat joined, that they may not easily sink. Derham.

MUDWALL. n. s. [mud and wall.]

- A wall built without mortar, by throwing up mud and suffering it to dry.
If conscience contract rust or soil, a man may as well expect to see his face in a mudwall, as that such a conscience should give him a true report of his condition. South.
- [apiaster.] A bird so called. Ainsw.

MUDWALLED. adj. [mud and wall.] Having a mudwall.

As folks from mudwall'd tenement
Bring landlords pepper-corn for rent;
Present a turkey, or a hen,
To those might better spare them ten. Prior.

TA MUE. v. a. [muer, Fr.] To moult; to change feathers.

MUFF. n. s. [muff, Swed.] A soft cover for the hands in winter.

Feel but the difference soft and rough,
This a gantlet, that a muff. Cleaveland.
What! no more favours, not a ribbon more,
Not fin, not muff. Suckling.
The lady of the spotted muff began. Dryden.
A child that stands in the dark upon his mother's muff, says he stands upon something, he knows not what. Locke.

To MUFFLE. v. a. [from moufle, Fr.] To winter glove.]

M U G

Alas that love, whose view is muffled still,
Should without eyes see pathways to his ill. Shak.
We've caught the woodcock, and will keep him muffled. Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
Our understandings lie grovelling in this lower region, muffled up in mists and darkness. Glanv.
Loss of sight is the misery of life, and usually the forerunner of death: when the malefactor comes once to be muffled, and the fatal cloth drawn over his eyes, we know that he is not far from his execution. South.

Bright Lucifer
That night his heavily form obscur'd with tears;
And since he was forbid to leave the skies,
He muffled with a cloud his mournful eyes. Dryden.
One muffled up in the infallibility of his sect, will not enter into debate with a person that will question any of those things which to him are sacred. Locke.

To conceal; to involve.

This is one of the strongest examples of a personation that ever was: although the king's manner of shewing things by pieces, and by dark lights, hath so muffled it, that it hath left it almost as a mystery. Bacon's Henry VII.
No muffling clouds, nor shades infernal, can
From his inquiry hide offending man. Sandys.
The thoughts of kings are like religious groves,
The walks of muffled gods. Dryden's Don Sebast.
They were in former ages muffled up in darkness and superstition. Arbuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

To MUFFLE. v. n. [muffelen, moffelen, Dut.] To speak inwardly; to speak without clear and distinct articulation.

The freedom or apertness and vigour of pronouncing, as in the Bocca Romana, and giving somewhat more of aspiration; and the closeness and muffling, and laziness of speaking, render the sound of speech different. Holder.

MUFFLER. n. s. [from muffle.]

- A cover for the face.
Fortune is painted with a muffer before her eyes, to signify to you that Fortune is blind. Shakesp. Henry V.

Restore to us, and pay the mulet, that by your vows is due. Chapman.

Because this is a great part, and Eusebius hath said nothing, we will, by way of mulet or pain, lay it upon him. Bacon.

Look lumble upward, see his will disclose
The forfeit first, and then the fine impose;
A mulet thy poverty could never pay,
Had not eternal wisdom found the way. Druden.

To MULCT. v. a. [mulcto, Lat. muletter, Fr.] To punish with fine or forfeiture.

Marriage without consent of parents they do not make void, but they mulet it in the inheritors; for the children of such marriages are not admitted to inherit above a third part of their parents inheritance. Bacon's New Atlantis.

MULE. n. s. [mule, mulet, Fr. mula, Lat.]

An animal generated between a he ass and a mare, or sometimes between a horse and a she ass.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs, and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part. Shaksp.

Five hundred asses yearly took the horse,
Producing mules of greater speed and force. Sandys.

Those effluvia in the male seed have the greatest stroke in generation, as is demonstrable in a mule, which doth more resemble the parent, that is, the ass, than the female. Ray.

Twelve young mules, a strong laborious race. Pope.

MULETEER. n. s. [muletier, Fr. mulio, Lat.] Mule-driver; horse-boy.

Base muleteers,

MULTIPLICATION. n. s. [multiplication, Fr. multiplicatio, Lat.]

1. The act of multiplying or increasing any number by addition or production of more of the same kind.

Although they had divers stiles for God, yet milder many appellations they acknowledged one divinity; rather conceiving thereby the evidence or acts of his power in several ways than a multiplication of essence, or real distractions of unity in any one. Brown.

2. [In arithmetick.]
Multiplication is the increasing of any one number by another, so often as there are units in that number, by which the one is increased.

Cocker's Arithmetick.

A man had need be a good arithmetician to understand this author's works: his description runs on like a multiplication table. Addison on Medals.

MULTIPLICATOR. n. s. [multiplicateur, Fr. from multiplico, Lat.] The number by which another number is multiplied.

MULTIPLICITY. n. s. [multiplicité, Fr.]

1. More than one of the same kind.
Had they discoursed rightly but upon this one principle, that God was a being infinitely perfect, they could never have asserted a multiplicity of gods: for, can one God include in him all perfection, and another God include in him all perfections too? Can there be any more than all? And if this all be in one, can it be also in another? South.

Company, he thinks, lessens the shame of vice, by sharing it; and abates the torrent of a common odium, by deriving it into many channels; and therefore if he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it at least by a multiplicity of the object. South's Sermons.

2. State of being many.
You equal Dome in the variety, multiplicity, and choice of thoughts. Dryden's Ded. to Juv.

MULTIPLICIOUS. adj. [multiplax, Lat.]

And sorrows only real be. Wotton.

This open day-light doth not shew the masques and mummeries, and triumphs of the world, half so stately as candle-light. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Your fathers
Disdain'd the mummery of foreign strollers. Fenton.

MUMMY. n. s. [mumie, Fr. mumia, Lat. derived by Salmasius from amomum, by Bochart from the Arabick.]

1. A dead body preserved by the Egyptian art of embalming.

We have two substances for medicinal use under the name of mummy: one is the dried flesh of human bodies embalmed with myrrh and spice; the other is the liquor running from such mummies when newly prepared, or when affected by great heat, or by damps; this is sometimes of a liquid, sometimes of a solid form, as it is preserved in vials, or suffered to dry: the first kind is brought in large pieces, of a friable texture, light and spongy, of a blackish brown colour, and often black and clammy on the surface; it is of a strong but not agreeable smell: the second, in its liquid state, is a thick, opaque, and viscous fluid, of a blackish and a strong, but not disagreeable smell: in its indurated state it is a dry, solid substance, of a fine shining black colour and close texture, easily broken, and of a good smell: this sort is extremely dear, and the first sort so cheap, that we are not to imagine it to be the ancient Egyptian mummy. What our druggists are supplied with is the flesh of any bodies the Jews can get, who fill them with the common bitumen so plentiful in that part of the world, and adding aloes, and some other cheap ingredients, send them to be baked in an oven till the juices are exhale, and the embalming matter has penetrated. Hill's Mat. Med.

The silk
Was dy'd in mummy, which the skilful Conserv'd of maidens' hearts. Shakesp. Othello.
It is strange how long carcasses have continued uncorrupt, as appeareth in the mummies of Egypt, having lasted some of them three thousand years. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

MURDER. n. s. [morðor, morðen, Sax. murdrum, law Latin: the etymology requires that it should be written, as it anciently often was, murthor; but of late the word itself has commonly, and its derivatives universally, been written with d.] The act of killing a man unlawfully; the act of killing criminally.

Blood hath been shed ere now, i' th' olden time,
Ere human statute purg'd the general weal;
Ay, and since t' o, murders have been perform'd Too terrible for th' ear. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Slaughter grows murder when it goes too far,
And makes a massacre what was a war. Dryden.

The killing of their children had, in the account of God, the guilt of murder, as the offering them to idols had the guilt of idolatry. Locke.

To MURDER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1 To kill a man unlawfully.
If he dies, I murder him, not they. Dryden.

2. To destroy; to put an end to.

Can'st thou quake and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again? Shakesp.
Let the furious winds

Murdr'ring impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work. Shakespeare's Coriol.

MURDER. interj. An outcry when life is in danger.

Kill men i' th' dark! where be these bloody thieves?

Ho, murder! murder! Shakesp. Othello.

MURDERER. n. s. [from murder.] One who has shed human blood unlawfully; one who has killed a man criminally.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood, and it grieves me not to die; but it grieves me that thou art the murderer. Sidney.

I am his host,
Who should against his murderer snut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eyes;
'Tis pretty sure,
That eyes, that are the fraill'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers. Shak.

The very honour of the fact had stupified all curiosity, and so dispersed the multitude, that even the murderer himself might have escaped. Flotton.

Like some rich or mighty murderer,
Too great for prison, which he breaks with gold,
Who fresher for new mischiefs does appear,
And dares the world to tax him with the old. Dry.

This stranger having had a brother killed by the conspirator, and having sought in vain for an opportunity of revenge, chanced to meet the murderer in the temple. Addison.

With equal terrors, not with equal guilt,
The murderer dreams of all the blood he spilt. Swift.

MURDERESS. n. s. [from murder.] A woman that commits murder.

When by thy scorn, O murdr'ess! I am dead,
Then shall my ghost come to thy bed,
And thee feign'd vestal in worse arms shall see. Donne.

through which the hare goes to relief. Bailey.

MUSEUM. n. s. [μυσειον.] A repository of learned curiosities.

MUSHROOM. n. s. [muschroom, Fr.]

1. Mushrooms are by curious naturalists esteemed perfect plants, though their flowers and seeds have not as yet been discovered: the true champignon or mushroom appears at first of a roundish form like a button, the upper part of which, as also the stalk, is very white, but being opened, the under part is of a livid flesh colour, but the fleshy part, when broken, is very white; when they are suffered to remain undisturbed, they will grow to a large size, and explicate themselves almost to a flatness, and the red part underneath will change to a dark colour: in order to cultivate them, open the ground about the roots of the mushrooms, where you will find the earth very often full of small white knobs, which are the offsets or young mushrooms; these should be carefully gathered, preserving them in lumps with the earth about them, and planted in hotbeds. Miller.

2. An upstart; a wretch risen from a dunghill.

Mushrooms come up in a night, and yet they are unown; and therefore such as are upstarts in state, they call in reproach mushrooms. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Tully, the humble mushroom scarcely known,
The lowly native of a country town. Dryden.

Fifteen mushroomstones of the same shape. Woodward.

MUSICK. n. s. [μουσική; musique, Fr.]

1. The science of harmonical sounds.

The man that hath no musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

Now look into the musick-master's gains,
Where noble youth at vast expence is taught,
But eloquence not valu'd at a groat. Dryden.

2. Instrumental or vocal harmony.

Sweet words, like dropping honey, she did shed;
And 'twixt the pearls and rubies softly brake
A silver sound, that heavenly musick seem'd to make. Fairy Queen.

Such musick
Before was never made,
But when of old the sons of morning sung. Milton

By musick minds an equal temper know,
Nor swell too high, nor sink too low;
Warriours she fires with animated sounds,
Pours balm into the bleeding lover's wounds. Pope.
We have dancing-masters and musick-masters. Arbuthnot and Pope.

3. Entertainments of instrumental harmony.
What musick, and dancing and diversions, and songs, are to many in the world, that prayers and devotions, and Psalms are to you. Lau.

MUSICAL. adj. [musical, Fr. from musick.]

1. Harmonious; melodious; sweet sounding.

The merry birds
Chanted above their cheerful harmony,
And made amongst themselves a sweet consort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical con-fort. Fairy Queen.

Sweet bird that shun'st the noise of fully,
Most musical, most melancholy;
Thee, chauntress, oft the wood among,
I woo to hear thy even song. Milton.

Neither is it enough to give his author's sense, in poetical expressions and in musical numbers. Dryden.

2. Belonging to musick.
Several musical instruments are to be seen in the hands of Apollo's muses, which might give great light to the dispute between the ancient and modern musick. Addison.

MUSICIAN. n. s. [musicus, Lat. musicien, Fr.] One skilled in harmony; one who performs upon instruments of musick.
Though the musicians that should play to you,
Stand in the air a thousand leagues from hence;
Yet strait they shall be here. Shakesp. Hen. IV.
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren. Shakesp.
A painter may make a better face than ever was; but he must do it by a kind of felicity, as a musician that maketh an excellent air in musick, and not by rule. Bacon's Essays.
The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung;
Of Bacchus ever fair and ever young. Dryden.

MUSK. n. s. [muschio, Ital. musc, Fr.]
Musk is a dry, light, and friable substance of a dark blackish colour, with some tinge of a purplish or blood colour in it, feeling somewhat smooth or unctuous: its smell is highly perfumed, and too strong to be agreeable in any large quantity: its taste is bitterish: it is brought from the East Indies, mostly from the kingdom of Bantam, some from Tonquin and Cochinchina: the animal which produces it is of a very singular kind, not agreeing with any established genus:
it is of the size of a common goat but taller: the bag which contains the musk is three inches long and two wide, and situated in the lower part of the creature's belly. Hill.
Some putrefactions and excrements yield excellent odours; as civet and musk. Bacon.

from the heat of the earth or sun; we see some leading of this in muskmelons, which are sown upon a hot bed danged below, upon a bank turned upon the south sun. Bacon.

MUSKPEAR. n. s. [musk and pear.] A fragrant pear.MUSKROSE. n. s. [musk and rose.] A rose so called, I suppose, from its fragrance.

In May and June come roses of all kinds, except the musk, which comes later. Bacon.

Thyrsis, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale. Milton.
The muskrose will, if a lusty plant, bear flowers in Autumn without cutting. Boyle.

MUSKY. adj. [from musk.] Fragrant; sweet of scent.

There eternal summer dwells,
And west winds, with musky wing,
About the cedar'n allies fing Nard and Cassia's balmy smells. Milton.

MUSLIN. n. s. [mousselin, Fr.] A fine stuff made of cotton.

whence thou camest? Shakesp. Gen. xxiv. 5.

Fade, flowers, fade, nature will have it so;

'Tis but what we must in our Autumn do. Waller.

Because the same self-existent being necessarily is what he is, 'tis evident that what he may be, or hath the power of being, he must be. Grew.

Every father and brother of the convent has a voice in the election, which must be confirmed by the pope. Addison.

MUST. n. s. [mustum, Lat.] New wine; new wort.

If in the must of wine, or wort of beer, before it be tunned, the hurrage stay a small time, and be often changed, it makes a sovereign drink for melancholy. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

As a swarm of flies in vintage time,
About the wine-press where sweet must is pour'd,
Beat off, returns as oft with humming sound. Milton.

The wine itself was suiting to the rest,
Still working in the must, and lately press'd. Dryden.

13. Of this word which occurs so frequently, with significations so various, and so difficultly defined, Boyle has given an explication, which deserves to be epitomised.

Nature sometimes means the Author of Nature, or natura naturans; as, nature hath made man partly corporeal and partly immaterial. For nature in this sense may be used the word creator.

Nature sometimes means that on whose account a thing is what it is, and is called, as when we define the nature of an angle. For nature in this sense may be used essence or quality.

Nature sometimes means what belongs to a living creature as its nativity, or accrues to it by its birth, at when we say, a man is noble by nature, or a child is naturally forward. This may be expressed by saying, the man was born so; or, the thing was generated such.

Nature sometimes means an internal principle of local motion, as we say, the stone falls, or the flame rises by nature; for this we may say, that the motion up or down is spontaneous, or produced by its proper cause.

Nature sometimes means the established course of things corporeal; as, nature makes the night succeed the day. This may be termed established order or settled course.

Nature means sometimes the aggregate of the powers belonging to a body, especially a living one; as when physicians say, that nature is strong, or nature left to herself will do the cure. For this may be used, constitution, temperament, or structure of the body.

Nature is put likewise for the system of the corporeal works of God; as there is no phoenix or chimera in nature. For nature thus applied, we may use the world, or the universe.

Nature is sometimes indeed commonly taken for a kind of semi-deity. In this sense it is best not to use it at all.

Boyle's Free Inquiry into the received Notion of Nature.

NATURITY. n. s. [from nature.] The state of being produced by nature. A word not used.

This cannot be allowed, except we impute that unto the first cause which we impose not on the second; or what we deny unto nature we impute unto naturity.

To NAUSEATE. v. a.

1. To loath; to reject with disgust.

While we single out several dishes, and reject others, the selection seems arbitrary; for many are cry'd up in one age, which are decayed and nauseated in another. Brown.

Old age, with silent pace, comes creeping on,
Nauseates the praises, which in her youth she won,
And hates the muse by which she was undone. Dryden.

The patient nauseates and loaths wholesome foods. Black.

Those heads, as stomachs, are not sure the best,
Which nauseate all, and nothing can digest. Pope.

2. To strike with disgust.
He let go his hold and turned from her, as if he were nauseated, then gave her a lash with his tail. Swift.

NAUSEOUS. adj. [from nausea, Lat.] nausée, Fr.] Loathsome; disgustful; regarded with abhorrence.

Those trifles wherein children take delight,
Grow nauseous to the young man's appetite:
And from those gaieties our youth requires
To exercise their minds, our age retires. Denham.
Food of a wholesome juice is pleasant to the taste and agreeable to the stomach, 'till hunger and thirst be well appeased, and then it begins to be less pleasant, and at last even nauseous and loathsome. Roy.

Old thread-bare phrases will often make you go out of your way to find and apply them, and are nauseous to rational hearers. Swift.

NAUSEOUSLY. adv. [from nauseous.] Loathsomely; disgustfully.

This, though cunningly concealed, as well knowing how nauseously that drug would go down in a lawful monarchy, which was prescribed for a rebellious commonwealth, yet they always kept in reserve. Dryden.

Their satire's praise;
So nauseously and so unlike they paint. Garth.

NAUSEOUSNESS. n. s. [from nauseous.] Loathsome; quality of raising disgust.

The nauseousness of such company disgusts a reasonable man, when he sees he can hardly approach greatness but as a moated castle; he must first pass through the mud and filth with which it is encompassed. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

NAUTICAL. } adj. [nauticus, Lat.] Per-NAUTICK. } taining to sailors.

He elegantly shewed by whom he was drawn, which depainted the nautical compass with aut magnæ, aut magna. Cam.

ern world. Drayton.

2. At hand; not far off. Unless it be rather in this sense an adjective.

Thou art near in their mouth, and far from their reins. Jer. xii. 2.

He serv'd great Hector, and was ever near,
Not with his trumpet only, but his spear. Dryden.

3. Within a little.

Self-pleasing and humorous minds are so sensible of every restraint, as they will go near to think their girdles and garters to be bonds and shackles.
Bacon's Essays.

This eagle shall go near, one time or other, to take you for a hare. L'Estrange.

He that paid a bushel of wheat per acre, would pay now about twenty-five pounds per annum; which would be near about the yearly value of the land. Locke.

The Castilian would rather have died in slavery than paid such a sum as he found would go near to ruin him. Addison.

NEAR. adj.

1. Not distant, in place or time. [Sometimes it is doubtful whether near be an adjective or adverb.]

This city is near to flee into. Gen. xix. 20.

Accidents, which however dreadful at a distance, at a nearer view lost much of their terror. Fell.

The will, free from the determination of such desires, is left to the pursuit of nearer satisfactions.
Locke.

After he has continued his doubling in his thoughts, and enlarged his idea as much as he pleases, he is not one jot nearer the end of such addition than at first setting out. Locke.

Whether they nearer liv'd to the best times,
When man's Redeemer bled for human crimes;
Whether the hermits of the desert fraught
With living practice, by example taught. Harte.

2. Advanced towards the end of an enterprise or disquisition.

Unless they add somewhat else to define more certainly what ceremonies shall stand for best, in such sort that all churches in the world should know them to be the best, and so know them that there may not remain any question about this point; we are not a whit the nearer for that they have hitherto said. Hooker.

3. Direct; straight; not winding.

Taught to live the nearest way. Milton.

To measure life, learn then betimes, and know
Tow'rd solid good what leads the nearest way.
Milton.

4. Close; not rambling; observant of style or manner of the thing copied.

Haunibal Caro's, in the Italian, is the nearest, the most poetical, and the most sonorous of any translation of the Æneid. Yet though he takes the advantage of blank verse, he commonly allows two lines for one in Virgil, and does not always hit his sense. Dryden.

5. Closely related.

If one shall approach to any that is near of kin to him. Lev. xviii. 6.

6. Intimate; familiar; admitted to confidence.

If I had a suit to master Shallow, I would humour his men with the imputation of being near their master. Shakesp.

7. Touching; pressing; affecting; dear.

deceived than not, in a matter of so great and near concernment. Locke.

8. Parsimonious; inclining to covetousness: as, a near man.

NEAR hand. Closely; without acting or waiting at a distance.

The entering near hand into the manner of performance of that which is under deliberation, hath overturned the opinion of the possibility or impossibility. Bacon's Holy War.

NEARLY. adv. [from near.]

1. At no great distance; not remotely.

Many are the enemies of the priesthood; they are diligent to observe whatever may nearly or remotely blemish it. Atterbury.

2. Closely; pressingly.

Nearly it now concerns us, to be sure
Of our omnipotence. Milton's Paradise Lost.

It concerneth them nearly, to preserve that government which they had trusted with their money. Swift.

3. In a niggardly manner.

NEARNESS. n. s. [from near.]

1. Closeness; not remoteness; approach.

God, by reason of nearness, forbade them to be like the Canaanites or Egyptians. Hooker.

Delicate sculptures be helped with nearness, and gross with distance; which was well seen in the controversy between Phidias and Alcmenes about the statue of Venus. Watton.

Those blessed spirits that are in such a nearness to God, may well be all fire and love, but you at such a distance cannot find the effects of it. Duppa.

The best rule is to be guided by the nearness or distance at which the repetitions are placed in the original. Pope.

2. Alliance of blood or affection.

Whether there be any secret passages of sympathy between persons of near blood; as, parents, children, brothers and sisters. There be many reports in history, that upon the death of persons of such nearness, men have had an inward feeling of it. Bacon.

3. Tendency to avarice; caution of expence.

It shews in the king a nearness, but yet with a kind of justness. So these little grains of gold and silver, helped not a little to make up the great heap. Bacon's Henry VII.

—What say you to a neat's foot?
—'Tis passing good; I prythee, let me have it.
Shakesp.

NEAT. adj. [net, Fr. nitidus, Lat.]

1. Elegant, but without dignity.

The thoughts are plain, yet admit a little quickness and passion; the expression humble, yet as pure as the language will afford; neat, but not florid; easy, and yet lively. Pope.

2. Cleanly.

Herbs and other country messes,
Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses. Milton.

If you were to see her, you would wonder what poor body it was, that was so surprisingly neat and clean. Law.

3. Pure; unadulterated; unmingled: now used only in the cant of trade, but formerly more extensive.

Tuns of sweet old wines, along the wall;
Neat and divine drink. Chapman's Odyssey.

When the best of Greece besides, mixe ever, at our cheere,

My good old ardent wine, with small; and our inferiour mates

Drinke even that mixt wine measured too; thou drinkst without those crutes

Our old wine, neate. Chapman.

NEATHERD. n. s. [neadhyrd, Sax.] A cowkeeper; one who has the care of black cattle. Βάκελος, bubulcus.

There nethered with cur and his horn,
Be a fence to the meadow and corn. Tusser.

cloudy.

NECESSARIES. n. s. [from necessary.]

Things not only convenient but needful; things not to be left out of daily use. Quibus doleat natura negatis

The supernatural necessities are, the preventing, assisting, and renewing grace of God, which we suppose God ready to annex to the revelation of his will, in the hearts of all that with obedient humble spirits receive and sincerely embrace it.
Hannond.

We are to ask of God such necessities of life as are needful to us, while we live here. Dutty's Man.

The right a son has, to be maintained and provided with the necessities and conveniences of life, out of his father's stock, give him a right to succeed to his father's property for his own good.
Locke.

NECESSARILY. adv. [from necessary.]

1. Indispensably.

I would know by some special instance, what one article of Christian faith, or what duty required necessarily unto all mens salvation there is, which the very reading of the word of God is not apt to notify. Hooker.

Every thing is endowed with such a natural principle, whereby it is necessarily inclined to promote its own preservation and well-being. Wilkins.

2. By inevitable consequence.

They who recall the church unto that which was at the first, must necessarily set bounds and limits unto their speeches. Hooker.

3. By fate ; not freely.

The church is not of such a nature as would necessarily, once begun, preserve itself for ever. Pearson.

They subjected God to the fatal chain of causes, whereas they should have resolved the necessity of all inferior events into the free determination of God himself ; who executes necessarily, that which he first proposed freely. South.

 To live like Adam midst an herd of brutes!

NEIGHBOURLY. adj. [from neighbour.] Becoming a neighbour; kind; civil.

The Scottish lord hath a neighbourly charity in him; for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman, and swore he would pay when he was able.

The Woodberry so nigh, and neighbourly doth live,
 With Abberley his friend.

He steals my customers; twelve he has under bonds never to return: judge if this he neighbourly dealing.

NEIGHBOURLY. adv. [from neighbour.] With social civility.

NEITHER. conjunct. [napðer, Sax. ne either.]

1. Not either. A particle used in the first branch of a negative sentence, and answered by nor.

Fight neither with small nor great, save only with the king.

Men lived at home, neither intent upon any foreign merchandize, nor inquisitive after the lives and fortunes of their neighbours.

2. It is sometimes the second branch of a negative or prohibition to any sentence.

Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it.

This commandment standeth not for a cypher, neither is it read and expounded in vain among Christians.

3. Sometimes at the end of a sentence it follows as a negative; and though not very grammatically, yet emphatically, after another negative; in old English two negatives denied.

If it be thought that it is the greatness of distance, whereby the sound cannot be heard; we see that lightnings and coruscations, near at hand, yield no sound neither.

Men come not to the knowledge of which are thought innate, 'till they come to the use of reason, nor then neither.

NEITHER. pronoun. Not either; nor one nor other.

He neither loves,
 Nor either cares for him.

Which of them shall I take Both, one, or neither? neither can be enjoy'd
 If both remain alive.

The balance, by a propensity to either side, inclined to neither.

Suffice it that he's dead; all wrongs die with him:

Thus I absolve myself, and excuse him,
 Who sav'd my life and honour, but praise neither.

Experience makes us sensible of both, though our narrow understandings can comprehend neither.

They lived with the friendship and equality of brethren, neither lord, neither slave to his brother; but independent of each other.

NE'NUFIAR. n. s. [nymphæa, Lat.] Water lily, or water rose.

NEOPHYTE. n. s. [neophyte, Fr. né; and φύω.] One regenerated; a convert.

NEOTERICK. adj. [neotericus, Lat.] Modern; novel; late.

We are not to be guided either by the misreports of some ancients, or the capricious of one or two neotericks.

NEP. n. s. [nepeta, Lat.] An herd.

NEPENTHE. n. s. [νη and πενθος.] A drug that drives away all pains.

There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
 Lull'd with the sweet nepenthe of a court;

There where no fathers, brothers, friends disgrace,
 Once break their rest, nor stir them from their place.

NEPHEW. n. s. [nepos, Lat. neveu, Fr.]

1. The son of a brother or sister.
 Immortal offspring of my brother Joe:
 My brightest nephew and whom best I love.

I ask, whether in the inheriting of this paternal power, the grandson by a daughter, hath a right before a nephew by a brother?

2. The grandson. Out of use.
 With what intent they were first published, those words of the nephew of Jesus do plainly signify, after that my grandfather Jesus had given himself to the reading of the law and the prophets, and other books of our fathers, and had gotten therein sufficient judgment, he proposed also to write something pertaining to learning and wisdom.

Her sire at length is kind,
 Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
 And for his latching nephews smooths the seas.

3. Descendant, however distant. Out of use.

All the sons of these five brethren reign'd
 By due success, and all their nephews late,
 Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd.

NEPHRITICK. adj. [νεφρῖτις; nephretique, Fr.]

1. Belonging to the organs of urine.
 2. Troubled with the stone.

The diet of nephritic persons ought to be opposite to the alkaliescent nature of the salts in their blood.

3. Good against the stone.

The nephritic stone is commonly of an uniform dusky green; but some samples I have seen of it that are variegated with white, black, and sometimes yellow.

NEPOTISM. n. s. [nepotisme, Fr. nepos, Lat.] Fondness for nephews.

To this humour of nepotism Rome owes its present splendor; for it would have been impossible to have furnished out so many glorious palaces with such a profusion of pictures and statues, had not the riches of the people fallen into different families.

NERVE. n. s. [nervus, Lat. nerf, Fr.]

1. The organs of sensation passing from the brain to all parts of the body.

The nerves do ordinarily accompany the arteries through all the body; they have also blood vessels, as the other parts of the body. Wherever any nerve sends out a branch, or receives one from another, or where two nerves join together, there is generally a ganglio or plexus. Quincy.

What man dare, I dare:

Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves Shall never tremble. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. It is used by the poets for sinew or tendon.

If equal powers
Thou wouldst inflame, amidst my nerves, as then
I could encounter with three hundred men. Chapman.

Strong Thyrsmid discharged a speeding blow
Full on his neck, and cut the nerves in two. Pope.

NE'ERVELESS. adj. [from nerve.] Without strength.

There sunk Thalia, nerveless, faint and dead,
Had not her sister Saire held her head. Dunciad.

NE'RVIOUS. adj. [nervosus, Lat.]

1. Well strung; strong; vigorous.

What nervous arms he boasts, how firm his tread,
His limbs how turn'd. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Relating to the nerves; having the seat in the nerves.

The venal torrent, murmur'ing from afar,
Whisper'd no peace to calm this nervous war;
And Philomel, the siren of the plain,
Sung soporific unisons in vain. Harte.

3. [In medical cant.] Having weak or diseased nerves.

Poor, weak, nervous creatures. Cheyne.

NE'RVY. adj. [from nerve.] Strong; vigorous. Not in use.

Death, that dark spirit, in his nervy arm doth lie,
Which being advanc'd, declines, and then men die. Shakesp.

NE'SCIENCE. n. s. [from nescio, Lat.]

Ignorance; the state of not knowing.
Many of the most accomplished wits of all ages have resolved their knowledge into Socrates his sum total, and after all their pains in quest of science, have sat down in a professed nescience. Glanville.

NESH. adj. [nerc, Sax.] Soft; tender; easily hurt. Skinner.

NESS.

1. A termination added to an adjective to change it into a substantive, denoting state or quality; as, poisonous, poisonousness; turbid, turbidness; lovely, loveliness; from nyppe, Sax.

2. The termination of many names of places where there is a headland or promontory; from nepe, Sax. a nose of land, or headland.

NEST. n. s. [nejt, Sax.]

1. The bed formed by the bird for incubation and feeding her young.

If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way, thou shalt not take the dam with the young. Deuteronomy, xxii. 6.

Th' example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark,
Above the skies let thy proud music sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

2. Any place where animals are produced.

Redi found that all kinds of putrefaction did only afford a nest and aliment for the eggs and young of those insects he admitted. Bentley.

3. An abode; place of residence; a receptacle. Generally in a bad sense: as, a nest of rogues and thieves.

Come from that nest
Of death, contagion, and unnatural sleep. Shak.

4. A warm close habitation, generally in contempt.

Some of our ministers having livings offered unto them, will neither, for zeal of religion, nor winning souls to God, be drawn forth from their warm nests. Spenser.

5. Boxes or drawers; little pockets or repositories.

To NEST. v. n. [from the noun.] To build nests.

The cedar stretched his branches as far as the mountains of the moon, and the king of birds nested within his leaves. Howel.

NE'STEGG. n. s. [nest and egg.] An egg left in the nest to keep the hen from forsaking it.

Books and money laid for shew,
Like nesteggs, to make clients lay. Hudibrass.

To NESTLE. v. n. [from nest.] To settle; to harbour; to lie close and snug, as a bird in her nest.

Their purpose was, to fortify in some strong place of the wild country, and there nestle 'till succours came. Bacon.

A cock got into a stable was nestling in the straw among the horses. L'Estrange.

The king's fisher wents commonly by the water-side, and nestles in hollow banks. L'Estrange.

Flutt'ring there they nestle near the throne,
And lodge in habitations not their own. Dryden.

The floor is strow'd with several plants, amongst which the snails nestle all the winter. Addison.

Mark where the shy directors creep,
Nor to the shore approach too high;
The monsters nestle in the deep,
To seize you in your passing by. Swift's Miscell.

To NESTLE. v. a.

1. To house, as in a nest.

Poor heart!
That labour'st yet to nestle thee,
Thou think'st by hov'ring here to get a part,
In a forbidden or forbidding tree. Donne.
Cupid found a downy bed,
And nestl'd in his little head. Prior.

2. To cherish, as a bird her young.

This Ithacus, so highly is endear'd
To this Minerva, that her hand is ever in his deeds:
She, like his mother nestles him. Chapman's Iliad.

NE'STLING. n. s. [from nestle.] A bird just taken out of the nest.

NET. n. s. [nati, Goth. netz, Sax.]

1. A texture woven with large interstices or meshes, used commonly as a snare for animals.

Poor bird! thou'dst never fear the net, nor lime,
The pitfall nor the gin. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Impatience intangles us like the fluttering of a bird in a net, but cannot at all ease our trouble. Taylor.

2. Any thing made with interstitial vacuities.

He made nets of chequered work for the clappers, upon the top of the pillars. 1 Kings, vii. 17.
The vegetative tribes,
Wrap in a filmy net, and clad with leaves. Thomson.

NETHER. adj. [neoθep, Sax. nedder, Dut.] It has the form of a comparative, but is never used in expressed, but only in implied comparison; for we say the nether part, but never say this part is nether than that, nor is any positive in use, though it seems comprised in the word beneath. Nether is not now much in use.]

1. Lower; not upper.

No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; for he taketh a man's life to pledge. Deuteronomy, xxiv. 6.

In his picture are two principal errors, the one in the complexion and hair, the other in the mouth, which commonly they draw with a full and nether great lip. Peacham.

This odious offspring,
Thine own begotten, breaking violent way

N E V

Tore through my entrails; that with fear and pain
Distorted, all my nether shape thus grew Transform'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

The upper part whereof was whey,
The nether, orange mix'd with grey. Hudibras.
A heauteous maid above, but magic arts,
With barking dogs deform'd her nether parts. Roscommon.

As if great Atlas from his height
Shou'd sink beneath his heav'nly weight,
And with a mighty flaw, the flaming wall Shou'd gape immense, and rushing down o'erwhelm this nether ball. Dryden.

Two poles turn round the globe;
The first sublime in heaven, the last is whirl'd
Below the regions of the nether world. Dryden.

2. Being in a lower place.

This shews you are above,
You justices, that these our nether crimes,
So speedily can venge. Shakesp. King Lear.
Numberless were those had angels, seen Hov'ring on wing under the cope of hell,
'Twixt upper, nether, and surrounding fires. Milt.

3. Infernal; belonging to the regions below.

No less desire
To found this nether empire, which might rise,
In emulation, opposite to heav'n. Milton.
The gods with hate beheld the nether sky,
The ghosts repine. Dryden's Æneid.

NETHERMOST. adj. [superl. of nether.]

Lowest.

Great is thy mercy toward me, and thou hast delivered my soul from the nethermost hell. Psalms.
Undaunted to meet there whatever pow'r,
Or spirit, of the nethermost abyss

Might in that noise reside. Milton's Paradise Lost.
All that can be said of a liar lodged in the very nethermost hell, is this, that if the vengeance of God could prepare any place worse than hell for sinners, hell itself would be too good for him. South.

Heraclitus tells us, that the eclipse of the sun was after the manner of a boat, when the concave, as to our sight, appears uppermost, and the convex nethermost. Keil against Burnet.

NETTING. n. s. A reticulated piece of work.

NETTLE. n. s. [netel, Sax.] A stinging herb well known.

The strawberry grows underneath the nettle. Shakesp.

Some so like to thorns and nettles live,
That none for them can, when they perish grieve. Waller.

To NETTLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To sting; to irritate; to provoke.

The princes were so nettled at the scandal of this affront, that every man took it to himself. L'Estr.
Although at every part of the Apostles discourse some of them might be uneasy and nettled, yet a moderate silence and attention was still observed. Bentley.

NETWORK. n. s. [net and work.] Any thing reticulated or decussated, at equal distances, with interstices between the intersections.

Nor any skill'd in workmanship emboss'd;
Nor any skill'd in loops of fing'ring fine;
Might in their diverse cunning ever dare,
With this so curious network to compare. Spenser.

A large cavity in the sinicuput was filled with ribbons, lace, and embroidery, wrought together in a curious piece of network. Addison.

Whoever contemplates with becoming attention this curious and wonderful net-work of veins, must be transported with admiration. Blackmore.

NEVER. adv. [ne ever, nappre, Sax. ne appre not ever.]

1. At no time.

Nether, alas, the dreadful name
That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.
Nether any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

By its own force destroy'd, fruition ceas'd,
And always weary'd, I was nether pleas'd. Prior.
Death still draws nearer, nether seeming near. Pope.

2. It is used in a form of speech handed down by the best writers, but lately accused, I think, with justice, of solecism: as, he is mistaken though never so wise. It is now maintained, that propriety requires it to be expressed thus, he is mistaken though ever so wise; that is he is mistaken how wise soever he be. The common mode can only be defended by supplying a very harsh and unprecedented ellipsis; he is mistaken though so wise, as never was any: such however is the common use of the word amongst the best authors.

Be it never so true which we teach the world to believe, yet if once their affections begin to be alienated, a small thing persuadeth them to change their opinions. Hooker.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as ye shall say. Genesis.

In a living creature, though never so great, the sense and the effects of any one part of the body, instantly make a transcurion throughout the whole body. Bacon.

They destroyed all, were it never so pleasant, within a mile of the town. Knolles.

Death may be sudden to him, though it comes by never so slow degrees. Duty of Man.

He that shuts his eyes against a small light, would not be brought to see that which he had no mind to see, let it be placed in never so clear a light, and never so near him. Atterbury.

That prince whom you espouse, although never so vigorously, is the principal in war, you but a second. Swift.

3. In no degree.

Whosoever has a friend to guide him, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse. South.

4. It seems in some phrases to have the sense of an adjective. Not any; but in reality it is not ever.

He answered him to never a word, insomuch that the governour marvelled. Matthew, xvii. 14.

5. It is much used in composition: as, never-ending, having no end; of which some examples are subjoined.

Nature assureth us by never-failing experience, and reason by infallible demonstration, that our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Raleigh.

But a smooth and stedfast mind,
Gentle thoughts and calm desires,
Hearts with equal love combin'd,
Kindle never-dying fires. Carew.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never sear,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude. Milton.

Your never-failing sword made war to cease,
And now you heal us with the acts of peace. Waller.

So corn in fields, and in the garden flow'rs,
Revive and raise themselves with mod'rate show'rs;
But over-charge'd with never-ceasing rain,
Become too moist. Waller.

Our heroes of the former days,
Deserv'd and gain'd their never-fading bays. Roscommon.

Not Phracian Orphens should transcend my lays,
Nor Linnus crown'd with never-fading bays. Dryd.

Leucippus, with his never-erring dart. Dryden.

Farewell, ye never-opening gates. Dryden.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find;
Meet stores of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food. Blaekm.

Norton hung down his never-blushing head,
And all was hush'd, as folly's self lay dead. Pope.

What the weak head with strongest bias, rules,
Is pride, the never-failing vice of fools. Pope.

Thy busy never-meaning face,
Thy screw'd up front, thy state grimace. Swift.

NEVERTHELESS. adv. [never the less.] Notwithstanding that.

They plead that even such ceremonies of the church of Rome as contain in them nothing which is not of itself agreeable to the word of God, ought nevertheless to be abolished. Hooker.

Many of our men were gone to land, and our ships ready to depart: nevertheless the admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth towards them. Bacon.

Creation must needs infer providence; and God's making the world, irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of a dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

NEUROLOGY. n. s. [νευρον and λογος.] A description of the nerves.

NEUROLOGY. n. s. [νευρον and τεμνω.] The anatomy of the nerves.

NEUTER. adj. [neuter, Lat. neutre, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not engaged on either side.

The general division of the British nation is into whigs and Tories; there being very few, if any, who stand neuter in the dispute, without ranging themselves under one of these denominations. Addison's Freeholder.

2. [In grammar.] A noun that implies no sex.

The adjectives are neuter, and animal must be understood to make it grammar. Dryden.

A verb neuter is that which signifies neither action nor passion, but some state or condition of being; as, sedeo, I sit. Clark.

NEUTER. n. s. One indifferent and unengaged.

The learned heathens may be looked upon as neuters in the matter, when all these prophecies were new to them, and their education had left the interpretation of them indifferent. Addison.

NEUTRAL. adj. [neutral, Fr.]

1. Indifferent; not acting; not engaged on either side.

Who can be wise, amaz'd, temp'rate and furious, Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man. Shakesp.

He no sooner heard that king Henry was settled by his victory, but forthwith he sent ambassadors unto him, to pray that he would stand neutral. Bacon's Henry VII.

The allies may be supplied for money, from Denmark and other neutral states. Addison on the II^{ar}.

2. Indifferent; neither good nor bad.

Some things good, and some things ill do seem, And neutral some, in her fantastick eye. Davies.

3. Neither acid nor alkaline.

Salts which are neither acid nor alkaline, are called neutral. Arbutnot.

NEUTRAL. n. s. One who does not act nor engage on either side.

The treacherous who have misled others, and the neutrals and the false-hearted friends and followers, who have started aside like a broken bow, are to be noted. Bacon.

NEUTRALITY. n. s. [neutralité, Fr.]

1. A state of indifference; of neither friendship nor hostility.

Men who possess a state of neutrality in times of publick danger, desert the interest of their fellow-subjects. Addison.

The king, late griefs revolving in his mind, These reasons for neutrality assign'd. Garth's Ovid.

All pretences to neutrality are justly exploded, only intending the safety and ease of a few individuals, while the publick is embroiled. This was the opinion and practice of the latter Cato. Swift.

2. A state between good and evil.

There is no health: physicians say, that we At best enjoy but a neutrality. Donne.

NEUTRALLY. adv. [from neutral.] Indifferently; on either part.

NEW. adj. [newyd, Welsh; neop, Sax. neuf, Fr.]

1. Not old; fresh; lately produced, made, or had; novel. New is used of things, and young of persons.

What's the newest grief?
—That of an hour's age doth hiss the speaker;
Each minute teems a new one. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Not being before.

Do not all men complain how little we know, and how much is still unknown? And can we ever know more, unless something new be discovered? Burnet.

3. Modern; of the present time.

Whoever converses much among old books, will be something hard to please among new. Temple.

4. Different from the former.

Steadfastly purposing to lead a new life. Common Prayer.

5. Not antiquated; having the effect of novelty.

Three names inscrib'd unnumber'd ages past,
From time's first birth, with time itself shall last;
These ever new, nor subject to decays,
Spread and grow brighter with the length of days. Pope.

6. Not habituated; not familiar.

Such assemblies, though had for religion's sake, may serve the turn of hereticks, and such as privily will instil their poison into new minds. Hooker.

Seiz'd with wonder and delight,
Gaz'd all around me, new to the transporting sight. Dryden.

Twelve mules, a strong laborious race,
New to the plough, unpractic'd in the trace. Pope.

7. Renovated; repaired, so as to recover the first state.

Men, after long emaciating diets, wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon's Nat. History.

8. Fresh after any thing.

Nor dare we trust so soft a messenger,
New from her sickness to that northern air. Dryd.

9. Not of ancient extraction.

A superior capacity for business, and a more extensive knowledge, are steps by which a new man often mounts to favour, and outshines the rest of his contemporaries. Addison.

NEW. adv. This is, I think, only used in composition for newly, which the following examples may explain.

As soon as she had written them, a new swarm of thoughts stinging her mind, she was ready with her foot to give the new-horn letters both to death and burial. Sidney.

God hath not then left this to chuse that, neither would reject that to chuse this, were it not for some new-grown occasion, making that which hath been better worse. Hooker.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joyance of his new-come guest. Spenser.

Your master's lines
Are full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear this paper. Shakesp.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriend'd, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,

Take her or leave her? Shakesp. King Lear.

Lest by a multitude
The new-heal'd wound of malice should break out. Shakesp.

Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I a gasping, new-delivered mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd. Shakesp.

He saw heav'n blossom with a new-born light,
On which, as on a glorious stranger gaz'd
The golden eyes of night; whose beams made bright

The way to Beth'lem, and as boldly blaz'd;
Nor ask'd leave of the sun, by day as night. Crashaw.

I've seen the morning's lovely ray
Hover o'er the new-born day;
With rosy wings so richly bright,
As if she scorn'd to think of night,
When a ruddy storm, whose scout
Made heaven's radiant face look foul,
Call'd for an untimely night
To blot the newly blossom'd light. Crashaw.

Some tree, whose broad smooth leaves together
sow'd,

And girded on our loins, may cover round
Those middle parts; that this new-comer shame,
There sit not, and reproach us as unclean. Milton.

Their father's state,
And new-entrusted sceptre. Milton.

The new-created world, which fame in heav'n Long had foretold. Milton's Par. Lost.

Thou usest, and from thence createst more good;
Witness this new-made world, another heav'n. Milton.

All clad in liveliest colours, fresh and fair
As the bright flowers that crown'd their brighter hair;

All in that new-blown age which does inspire Warmth in themselves, in their beholders fire. Cowley.

If it could, yet that it should always run then into such a machine as is already extant, and not often into some new-fashioned one, such as was never seen before, no reason can be assigned or imagined. Ray on the Creation.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition, there being several additional chapters in it, and several new-moulded. Barnet's Theory.

New-found lands accrue to the prince whose subject makes the first discovery. Barnet's Theory.
Let this be nature's frailty, or her fate,
Or Isgrim's counsel, her new-chosen mate. Dryden.

Shewn all at once you dazzled so our eyes,
As new-born Pallas did the gods surprise;
When springing forth from Jove's new-closing wound,
She struck the warlike spear into the ground. Dryden.

A bird new-made, about the banks she plies,
Not far from shore, and short excursions tries. Dryden.

Our house has sent to day
T' insure our new-built vessel, call'd a play. Dryden.

Then curds and cream,
And new-laid eggs, which Baucis' busy care
Turn'd by a gentle fire, and roasted rare. Dryden.

When pleading Matho, borne abroad for air,
With his fat paunch fills his new-fashioned chair. Dryden.

A new-form'd faction does your power oppose,
The fight's confus'd, and all who met were foes. Dayden.

If thou ken'st from far
Among the Pleiads a new-kindled star;
If any sparkles from the rest more bright,
'Tis she that shines in that propitious light. Dryden.

If we consider new-born children, we shall have little reason to think that they bring many ideas into the world with them. Locke.

Drummers with vellum-thunder shake the pile,
To greet the new-made bride. Gay's Trivia.

Ah Blouzefind! I love thee more by half,
Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fallen calf. Gay.

The proctor exhibits his proxy from the dean and chapter, and presents the new-elected bishop to the vicar-general. Ayliffe.

The new-fallen young here bleating for their dams,
The larger here, and there the lesser lambs. Poppe.

Learn all the new-fashion words and oaths. Swift.

NEWF'ANGLED, adj. [new and fangle.]
Formed with vain or foolish love of novelty.

At Christmas I no more desire a rose,
Than wish a snow in May's newfangled shows;
But like of each thing, that in season grows. Shakesp.

Those charities are not newfangled devices of yesterday, but are most of them as old as the reformation. Atterbury.

NEWF'ANGLEDNESS, n. s. [from new- NEWF'ANGLENESSE.] fangled. Vain and foolish love of novelty.

So to newfangledness both of manner, apparel, and each thing else, by the custom of self-guilty evil, glad to change though often for a worse. Sidney.

Yet he them in newfangledness did pass. Hubberd.

The women would be loth to come behind the fashion in newfangledness of the manner, if not in costliness of the matter. Carew.

NEWEL, n. s.

1. The compass round which the staircase is carried.

Let the stairs to the upper rooms be upon a fair

NIGHTFLY. n. s. [night and fly.] Moth that flies in the night.

Why rather, sleep, lies thou in smoky cribs,
 And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy slumber;
 Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
 And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody? Shak.

NIGHTFOUNDERED. adj. [from night and founder.] Lost or distressed in the night.

Either some one like us nightfoundered here,
 Or else some neighbour woodman, or at worst,
 Some roving robber calling to his fellows. Milton.

NIGHTGOWN. n. s. [night and gown.] A loose gown used for an undress.

Since his majesty went into the field,
 I have seen her rise from her bed, throw
 Her night-gown upon her. Shakesp. Macbeth.

They have put me in a silk night-gown, and a gaudy fool's cap. Addison's Guardian.
 To meagre muse-rid mope, adust and thin,
 In a dou night-gown of his own loose skin. Pope.

NIGHTHAG. n. s. [night and hag.] Witch supposed to wander in the night.

Nor uglier follows the night-hag, when called
 In secret, riding through the air, she comes Lur'd with the smell of infant-blood, to dance
 With Lapland witches. Milton's Par. Lost.

NIGHTINGALE. n. s. [from night and galan, Sax. to sing; galn, Teut. is a sound or echo.]

1. A small bird that sings in the night with remarkable melody; Philomel.

I think,
 The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
 When every goose is cackling, would be thought
 No better a musician than the wren. Shakesp.

Although the wezon, throtle, and tongue, be the instruments of voice, and by their agitations concur in those delightful modulations, yet cannot we assign the cause unto any particular formation; and I perceive the nightingale hath some disadvantage in the tongue. Brown.

Thus the wise nightingale that leaves her home,
 Pursuing constantly the cheerful spring,
 To foreign groves does her old musick bring.
Wallr.

2. A word of endearment.

My nightingale!
 We'll beat them to their beds. Shakesp.

NIGHTLY. adv. [from night.] 1. By night.

Thee, Sion! and the flowry brooks beneath,
 That wash thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow, Nightly I visit. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Let all things suffer,
 Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep
 In the affliction of those terrible dreams
 That shake us nightly. Shakesp. Macbeth.

2. Every night.

Soon as the evening shades prevail,
 The moon takes up the wondrous tale,
 And nightly to the list'ning earth.
 Repeats the story of her birth. Addison's Spectator

NIGHTLY. adj. [from night.] Done by night; acting by night; happening by night.

May the stars and shining moon attend
 Your nightly sports, as you vouchsafe to tell What nymphs they were who mortal forms excel.
Dryden.

Soon as the flocks shook off the nightly dews,
 Two swains, whom love kept wakeful and the muse,
 Pour'd o'er the whit'ning vale their fleecy care.
Pope.

NIGHTMAN. n. s. [night and man.] One who carries away ordure in the night.

NIGHTMARE. n. s. [night, and according to Temple, marā, a spirit that, in the northern mythology, was related to torment or suffocate sleepers.] A morbid oppression in the night, resembling the pressure of weight upon the breast.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world,
 He met the nightmare, and her name he told;
 Bid her alight, and her troth plight. Shakesp.
 The fore-runners of an apoplexy are, dulness, drowsiness, vertigoes, tremblings, oppressions in sleep, and night-mares. Arbuthnot.

NIGHTPIECE. n. s. [night and piece.] A picture so coloured as to be supposed seen by candle light; not by the light of the day.

He hung a great part of the wall with night-pieces, that seemed to show themselves by the candles which were lighted up; and were so inflamed by the sun-shine which fell upon them, that I could scarce forbear crying out fire. Addison.

NIGHTTRAIL. n. s. [night and trail, Sax. a gown or robe.] A loose cover thrown over the dress at night.

An antiquary will scorn to mention a pinner or night-rail; but will talk as gravely as a father of the church on the vitta and peplus. Addison on Med.

NIGHTRAVEN. n. s. [night and raven; nycticorax.] A bird supposed of ill omen, that cries loud in the night.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger,
 The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful dreer.
Spenser

I pray his bad voice bode no mischief:
 I had as lief have heard the night-raven,
 Come what plague would have come after it. Shak.

NIGHTROBBER. n. s. [night and robber.] One who steals in the dark.

Highways should be fenced on both sides, whereby thieves and night-robbers might be more easily pursued and encountered. Spenser.

NIGHTRULE. n. s. [night and rule.] A tumult in the night.

How now, mad sprite,
 What night-rule now about this haunted grove?
Shakesp.

NIGHTSHRIEK. n. s. [night and shriek.] A cry in the night. I have almost forgot the taste of fears: The time has been, my senses would have cool'd To hear a night-shriek; and my fell of hair Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir, As life were in't. Shakesp. Macbeth.

NIGHTTRIPPING. adj. [night and trip.] Going lightly in the night. Could it be prov'd, That some night-tripping fairy had exchange'd In cradle cloaths, our children where they lay, Then would I have his Harry, and he mine. Shak.

NIGHTWALK. n. s. [night and walk.] Walk in the night. If in his night-walk he met with irregular scholars, he took their names, and a promise to appear unsent for, next morning. Walton's Life of Sanders.

NIGHTWALKER. n. s. [night and walk.] One who roves in the night upon ill designs. Men that hunt so, be privy stealers, or night-walkers. Ascham.

NIGHTWARBLING. adj. [night and warble.] Singing in the night. Now is the pleasant time, The cool, the silent, save where silence yields To the night-warbling bird. Milton's Paradise Lost.

NIGHTWARD. adj. [night and ward.] Approaching towards night. Their night-ward studies, wherewith they close the day's work. Milton on Education.

NIGHTWATCH. n. s. [night and watch.] A period of the night as distinguished by change of the watch. I remember thee upon my bed, and meditate on thee in the night-watches. Psalms lxxiii. 6.

NIGRESCENT. adj. [nigrescens, Lat.] Growing black; approaching to blackness.

NIGRIFICATION. n. s. [niger and facio, Lat.] The act of making black.

NIHILITY. n. s. [nihilité, Fr. nihilum, Lat.] Nothingness; the state of being nothing. Not being is considered as excluding all substance, and then all modes are also necessarily excluded; and this we call pure nihility, or mere nothing. Hatts.

To NILL. v. a. [from ne will, millan, Sax.] Not to will; to refuse; to reject. Certes, said he, I will thine offer'd grace, Ne to be made so happy do intend, Another bliss before mine eyes I place, Another happiness, another end. In all affections sue concurreth still; If now, with man and wife to will and nill The self-same things, a note of concord be, I know no couple better can agree. Ben Jonson.

NILL. n. s. The shining sparks of brass in trying and melting the ore.

To NIM. v. a. [nemen, Dut. to take.] To take. In cant, to steal. They'll question Mars, and by his look Detect who 'twas that nimm'd a cloak. Hudibras. They could not keep themselves honest of their fingers, but would be nimming something or other for the love of thieving. L'Estrange.

NIMBLE. adj. [from nim or numan, Sax.

tractable.] Quick; active; ready; speedy; lively; expeditious. NINESCORE. adj. [nine and score.] Nine times twenty. Engenius has two hundred pounds a-year; but never values himself above nine-score, as not thinking he has a right to the tenth part, which he always appropriates to charitable uses. Addison.

NINETEEN. adj. [niunontyne, Sax.] Nine and ten; one less than twenty. Nineteen in twelf of perplexing words might be changed into easy ones, such as occur to ordinary men. Swift.

NINETEENTH. adj. [niunontzeoda, Sax.] The ordinal of nineteen; the ninth after the tenth. In the nineteenth year of king Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzaradan. 2 Kings.

NINETIETH. adj. [niunniunontzeoda, Sax.] The ordinal of ninety; the tenth nine times told.

NINETY. adj. [niundniunontiz, Sax.] Nine times ten. Enos lived ninety years and begat Cainan. Gen.

NINNY. n. s. [niino a child, Span] A fool; a simpleton. What a baby ninny's this? Shakesp. Tempest. The dead was so shabby, and look'd like a ninny, That the captain suppos'd he was curate. Swift.

NINNYHAMMER. n. s. [from ninny.] A simpleton. Have you no more manners than to rail at Hoccus, that has saved that clod-pated, numskull'd, ninny-hammer of yours from ruin, and all his family. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

NINTH. adj. [nezoða, Sax.] That which precedes the tenth; the first after the eighth; the ordinal of nine. Upon a strict observation of many, I have not found any that see the ninth day. Brown.

To NIP. v. a. [nippen, Dut.]

- To pinch off with the nails; to bite with the teeth. In oranges and lemons, the nippings of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Nat. History.
- To cut off by any slight means. The small shoots that extract the sap of the most leading branches, must be nipt off. Mortimer.
- To blast; to destroy before full growth. This is the state of man; to-day he puts forth The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms, And bears his blushing honours thick upon him; The third day comes a frost, a killing frost; And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely His greatness is a-ripening, nips his root; And then he falls, as I do. Shakesp. Henry VIII. A flower doth spread and dye, That would'st extend me to some good, Before I were by frost's extremity nipt in the bud. Herb. His delivery now proves Abortive, as the first-born bloom of spring. Nipt with the lagging rear of winter's frost. Milton. Had he not been nipped in the bud, he might have made a formidable figure in his own works among posterity. Addison. From such encouragement it is easy to guess to what perfection I might have brought this work, had it not been nipt in the bud. Arbuth. J. Bull.
- To pinch as frost. The air bites shrewdly, it is very cold. —It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakesp. Hamlet.

N I S

When isicles hang by the wall,
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
When blood is *nip*t, and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl.

Shakesp.

5. To vex; to bite.
And sharp remorse his heart did prick and nip,
That drops of blood thence like a well did play.

Spenser.

6. To satirise; to ridicule; to taunt sarcastically.

But the right gentle mind would bite his lip
To hear the javel so good men to nip.

Hubberd.

Quick wits commonly be in desire new faugled;
in purpose unconstant; bold with any person;
busy in every matter; soothing such as be present, nipping any that is absent. Ascham's Schoolmaster.

NIP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A pinch with the nails or teeth.

I am sharply taunted, yea, sometimes with pinches, nips, and bobs.

Ascham's Schoolmaster.

2. A small cut.

What? this a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon;
What, up and down, carv'd like an apple-tart?
Here's snip, and nip, and cut, and slash, and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop.

Shakesp.

3. A blast.

So hasty fruits and too ambitious flow'rs,
Scorning the midwifery of rip'ning show'rs,
In spite of frosts, spring from th' unwilling earth,
But find a nip untimely as their birth.

Stepney.

4. A taunt; a sarcasm.

NIPPER. n. s. [from nip.] A satirist.
Out of use.

Ready backbiters, some nippers, and spiteful reporters
privily of good men.

NIPPLE. n. s. [nypele, Sax.]

1. The teat; the dug; that which the sucking young take into their mouths.

The babe that milks me:

I would, while it was smiling in my face,
Have pluck'd my nipple from his boneless gums.

Shakesp.

In creatures that nourish their young with milk, are adapted the nipples of the breast to the mouth and organs of suction.

Ray on the Creation.

2. It is used by Chapman of a man.

As his foe, went then suffic'd away,

Thos. Etolius threw a dart, that did his pile convey Above his nipple, through his lungs.

Chapman.

3. The orifice at which any animal liquor is separated.

In most other birds there is only one gland, in which are divers little cells ending in two or three larger cells, lying under the nipple of the oil bag.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

NIPPLEWORT. n. s. [Lampsana.] A weed.

NISI PRIUS. n. s. [In law.] A judicial writ, which lieth in case where the inquest is panelled and returned before the justices of the bank; the one party or the other making petition to have this writ for the ease of the country. It is directed to the sheriff, commanding that he cause the men impanelled to come before the justices in the same county, for the determining of the cause there, except it be so difficult that it need great deliberation: in which case, it is sent again to the bank. It is so called from the first words of the writ nisi apud talem locum prius venerint; whereby it appeareth, that justices of assizes and justices of nisi prius differ.

N I T

So that justices of nisi prius must be one of them before whom the cause is depending in the bench, with some other good men of the county associated to him.

Cowell.

NIT. n. s. [nitru, Sax.] The egg of a louse, or small animal.

The whame, or burrel-fly, is vexatious to horses in summer, not by stinging them, but only by their bomyblious noise, or tickling them in sticking their nits, or eggs, on the hair.

Derham.

NITENCY. n. s. [nitentia, Lat.]

1. Lustre; clear brightness.

2. [From the Latin, nitore.] Endeavour; spring to expand itself.

The atoms of fire accelerate the motion of these particles; from which acceleration their spring, or endeavour outward, will be augmented: that is, those zones will have a strong nitency to fly wider open.

Boyle.

NITING. n. s. [or niding; see NIDING.]

A coward, dastard, poltroon.

NITID. adj. [nitidus, Lat.] Bright; shining; lustrous.

We restore old pieces of dirty gold to a clean and nitid yellow, by putting them into fire and aqua fortis, which take off the adventitious filth.

Boyle on Colours.

NITRE. n. s. [nitre, Fr. nitrum, Lat.]

The salt which we know at this time, under the name of nitre or salt-petre, is a crystalline pellucid, but somewhat whitish substance, of an acid and bitterish taste, impressing a peculiar sense of coldness upon the tongue. This salt, though it affords, by means of fire, an acid spirit capable of dissolving almost every thing, yet manifests no sign of its containing any acid at all in its crude state. Nitre is of the number of those salts which are naturally blended in imperceptible particles in earth, stones, and other fossil substances, as the particles of metals are in their ores: it is sometimes however found pure, in form of an efflorescence, either on its ores or on the surface of old walls; these efflorescences dissolved in proper water, shooting into regular and proper crystals of nitre. The earth from which nitre is made, both in Persia and the East-Indies, is a kind of yellowish marl found in the bare cliffs of the sides of hills exposed to the northern and eastern winds, and never in any other situation. The natron or nitre of the ancients, is a genuine, native, and pure salt, extremely different from our nitre, and from all other native salts; being a fixed alkali plainly of the nature of those made by fire from vegetables, yet being capable of a regular crystallization, which those salts are not. It is found on or very near the surface of the earth, in thin flat cakes, spongy, light, and friable; and when pure, of a pale brownish white colour. In scripture we find that the salt called nitre would ferment with vinegar, and had an absterive quality, properties which perfectly agree with this salt, but not with salt-petre, as do many different qualities ascribed to it by the ancients. Hill on Fossils.

Some tumultuous cloud,

Instinct with fire and nitre, hurried him.

Milton.

Some steep their seed, and some in cauldrons boil,
With vigorous nitre and with lees of oil.

Dryden.

NITROUS. adj. [nitroux, Fr. from nitre.] Impregnated with nitre; consisting of nitre.

Earth and water, mingled by the heat of the sun, gather nitrous fatness more than either of them have severally.

Bacon.

The northern air being more fully charged with those particles supposed nitrous, which are the aliment of fire, is fittest to maintain the vital heat in that activity which is sufficient to move such an unwieldy bulk with due celerity.

Ray.

He to quench his drought so much inclin'd,
May snowy fields and nitrous pastures find.

Met. stones of cold so greedily pursu'd,
And be refresh'd with never-wasting food.

Blackm.

NITRY. adj. [from nitre.] Nitrous.

N O B

Winter my theme confines; whose nitry wind
Shall crust the slabby mire, and kennels bind.

Gay.

NITTYLY. adv. [from nitty.] Lousily.

One Bell was put to death at Tyburn for moving a new rebellion; he was a man nittily needy, and therefore adventurous.

Hayward.

NITTY. adj. [from nit.] Abounding with the eggs of lice.

NIVAL. adj. [nivalis, Lat.] Abounding with snow.

Dict.

NIVEOUS. adj. [niveus, Lat.] Snowy; resembling snow.

Brown.

NIZY. n. s. [from niais.] A dunce; a simpleton. A low word.

True critics laugh, and bid the trifling nisy
Go read Quintilian.

Anon.

NO. adv. [na, Sax.]

1. The word of refusal: contrary to yea or yes.

Our courteous Antony,
Whom ne'er the word of no, woman heard speak,
Being barber'd ten times o'er, goes to the feast.

Shakesp.

Henceforth my wooing mind shall be express'd,
In russet yeas and honest kersy noes.

Shakesp.

If you will not consider these things now, the time will shortly come when you shall consider them whether you will or no.

Calamy's Sermons.

2. The word of denial, opposite to concession or affirmation.

I think it would not sort amiss, to handle the question, whether a war for the propagation of the Christian faith, without another cause of hostility, be lawful or no, and in what cases? Bacon.

3. It sometimes confirms a foregoing negative.

My name's Macbeth.
—The Devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

Shakesp.

—No, nor more fearful.

Never more

This band shall combat on the crooked shore:
No; let the Grecian pow'rs oppress in fight,
Unpity'd perish in their tyrant's sight.

Dryd. Il. m.

4. It sometimes strengthens a following negative; no not, not even.

No not the bow which so adorns the skies,
So glorious is, or boasts so many dies.

Waller.

NO. adj.

1. Not any; none.

Let there be no strife between thee and me.

Genesis.

Some dire misfortune to portend,
No enemy can match a friend.

Suffit.

Woman and fool are two hard things to hit,
For true no meaning puzzles more than wit.

Pope.

No wit to flatter left of all his store,
No fool to laugh at, which he valued more.

Pope.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or imblaze the floors.

Pope.

No common object to your sight displays.

Pope.

Poor Edwin was no vulgar boy.

Beattie.

2. It seems an adjective in these phrases, no longer, no more, no where; though sometimes it may be so commodiously changed to not, that it seems an adverb: as, the days are yet no shorter.

When we saw that they were no where, we came to Samuel.

1 Samuel, x. 14.

In vain I reach my feeble hands to join
In sweet embraces; ah! no longer thine.

Dryden.

3. No one; none; not any one.

No one who doeth good to those only from whom he expects to receive good, can ever be fully satisfied of his own sincerity.

Smalridge.

TO NOBILITATE. v. a. [nobilita, Lat.]

To ennoble; to make noble.

NOBILITY. n. s. [nobilitas, Lat.]

1. Antiquity of family joined with splendor.

When I took up Boccace unawares, I fell on the same argument of preferring virtue to nobility of blood, and titles, in the story of Sigismunda. Dryden.

Long galleries of ancestors, Challenge, nor wonder, or esteem from me, "Virtue alone is true nobility." Dryden.

2. Rank or dignity of several degrees, conferred by sovereigns. Nobility in England is extended to five ranks; duke, marquis, earl, viscount, baron.

3. The persons of high rank; and the persons who are exalted above the commons.

It is a purpos'd thing, To curb the will of the nobility. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

4. Dignity; grandeur; greatness.

Though she hated Amphialus, yet the nobility of her courage prevailed over it; and she desired he might be pardoned that youthful error; considering the reputation he had to be the best knight in the world; so as hereafter he governed himself, as one remembering his fault. Sidney.

But ah, my muse, I would thou had'st facility To work my goddess so by thy invention, On me to cast those eyes where shine nobility. Sidney.

Base men, being in love, have then a nobility in their natures more than is native to them. Shak. They thought it great their sov'reign to controul, And nam'd their pride, nobility of soul. Dryden.

NOBLE. adj. [noble, Fr. nobilis, Lat.]

1. Of an ancient and splendid family.

2. Exalted to a rank above commonalty.

From virtue first began, The difference that distinguish'd man from man: He claim'd no title from descent of blood, But that which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

3. Great; worthy; illustrious: both men and things.

Thus this man died, leaving his death for an example of a noble courage, and a memorial of virtue. 2 Mac. vi. 31.

To vice industrious, but to nobler deeds Tim'rous. Milton.

A noble stroke he lifted high, Which hung not, but with tempest fell. Milton.

Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

4. Exalted; elevated; sublime.

My share in pale Pyrene I resign, And claim no part in all the mighty nine: Statues, with winding ivy crown'd belong To nobler poets, for a nobler song. Dryden.

5. Magnificent; stately: as, a noble parade.

6. Free; generous; liberal.

7. Principal; capital: as, the heart is one of the noble parts of the body.

NOBLE. n. s.

1. One of high rank.

Upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand. Exodus.

How many nobles then should hold their places, That must strike sail to spirits of vile sort! Shakesp.

What the nobles once said in parliament, Nolumus leges Angliæ mutari, is imprinted in the hearts of all the people. Bacon.

The nobles amongst the Romans took care in their last wills, that they might have a lamp in their monuments. Wilkins.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves, See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

It may be the disposition of young nobles, that they expect the accomplishments of a good education without the least expence of time or study. Swift's Modern Education.

The second natural division of power, is of such men who have acquired large possessions, and consequently dependencies; or descend from ancestors who have left them great inheritances, together with an hereditary authority: these easily unite in thoughts and opinions. Thus commences a great council or senate of nobles, for the weighty affairs of the nation. Swift.

Men should press forward in Fame's glorious chace, Nobles look backward, and so lose the race. Young.

2. A coin rated at six shillings and eight-pence; the sum of six and eight-pence.

He coined nobles, of noble, fair, and fine gold. Camden.

Many fair promotions Are daily given, to ennoble those That scarce, some two days since, were worth a noble. Shakesp.

Upon every writ procured for debt or damage, amounting to forty pounds or more, a noble, that is six shillings and eight-pence, is, and usually hath been paid to fine. Bacon.

The watry plantations fall not under that nomenclature of Adam, which onto terrestrious animals assigned a name appropriate unto their natures. Brown.

NO'MINAL. adj. [nominalis, Lat.] Referring to names rather than to things; not real; titular.

Profound in all the nominal,
And real ways beyond them all. Hudibras.
The nominal definition or derivation of the word is not sufficient to describe the nature of it.

The nominal essence of gold is that complex idea the word gold stands for; as a body yellow, of a certain weight, malleable, fusible and fixed.
But the real essence is the constitution of the insensible parts of that body on which those qualities depend. Locke.

Were these people as anxious for the doctrines essential to the church of England, as they are for the nominal distinction of adhering to its interests.
Addison.

NO'MINALLY. adv. [from nominal.] By name; with regard to a name; titularly.

To NO'MINATE. v. a. [nominio, Lat.]

The forty-one immediate electors of the duke, must be all of several families, and of them twenty-five at least concur to this nomination. Wotton.

Hammond was named to be of the assembly of divines; his invincible loyalty to his prince, and obedience to his mother, the church, not being so valid arguments against his nomination, as the repute of his learning and virtue were on the other part, to have some title to him. Fell.

2. The power of appointing.

The nomination of persons to places, being so principal and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

In England the king has the nomination of an archbishop; and after nomination, he sends a congé d'elire to the dean and chapter, to elect the person elected by him. Ayliffe.

NO'MINATIVE. n. s. [in grammar, nominativ, Fr.] The case that primarily designates the name of any thing, and is called right, in opposition to the other called oblique.

NOX. adv. [Lat.] Not. It is never used separately, but sometimes prefixed to words with a negative power.

Since you to non-regardance cast my faith,
Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still. Shakesp.
Behold also there a lay non-residency of the rich, which in times of peace, too much neglecting their habitations, may seem to have provoked God to neglect them. Holyday.

A mere inclination to matters of duty, men reckon a willing of that thing; when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of what the law requires. South.

For an account at large of bishop Sanderson's last judgment, concerning God's concurrence, or non-concurrence with the actions of men, and the positive entity of sins of commission, I refer you to his letters. Pierce.

The third sort of agreement or disagreement in our ideas, which the perception of the mind is employed about, is co-existence, or non-existence in the same subject. Locke.

It is not a non-act, which introduces a custom, a custom being a common usage. Ayliffe's Patergon.

In the imperial chamber this answer is not admitted, viz. I do not believe it as the matter is alleged. And the reason of this non-admission is, its great uncertainty. Ayliffe.

An apparitor came to the church, and informed the parson, that he must pay the tithes to such a man; and the bishop certified the ecclesiastical court under his seal on the non-payment of them, that he refused to pay them. Ayliffe.

The non-appearance of persons to support the united sense of both houses of parliament, can never be construed as a general diffidence of being able to support the charge against the patent and patentee. Swift.

This may be accounted for by the turbulence of passions upon the various and surprising turns of good and evil fortune, in a long evening at play;
the mind being wholly taken up, and the consequence of non-attention so fatal. Swift.

NO'NAGE. n. s. [non and age.] Minority;
time of life before legal maturity.

In him there is a hope of government;
Which in his nonage, counsel under him,
And in his full and ripen'd years, himself Shall govern well. Shakesp. Richard III.

Be love but there, let poor six years
Be pos'd with the maturest fears Man trembles at, we straight shall find Love knows no nonage, nor the mind. Crashaw.

We have a mistaken apprehension of antiquity, calling that so which in truth is the world's nonage.
Glanville.

'Tis necessary that men should first be out of their nonage, before they can attain to an actual use of this principle; and withal, that they should be ready to exert and exercise their faculties.

Those charters were not avoidable for the king's nonage; and if there could have been any such pretence, that alone would not avoid them. Wilkins.

After Chaucer there was a Spenser, a Harrington, a Fairfax, before Waller and Denham were in being; and our numbers were in their nonage
'till these last appeared. Dryden.

In their tender nonage, while they spread
Their springing leaves, and lift their infant head, Indulge their childhood, and the nursing spare. Dryden.

NONCE. n. s. [The original of this word is uncertain; Skinner imagines it to come from own or onee; or from nutz, Germ. need or use; Junius derives it less probably from noiance, to do for the nonce; being, according to him, to do it merely for mischief.] Purpose; intent; design. Not now in use.

I saw a wolf
Nursing two whelps; I saw her little ones
In wanton dalliance the teat to crave, While she her neck wreath'd from'them for the nonce. Spenser.

They used at first to fume the fish in a house built for the nonce. Carew.

When in your motion you are hot,
And that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd
him

A chalice for the nonce. Shakesp. Hamlet.
Such a light and metall'd dance;
Saw you never;

And they lead men for the nonce,
That turn round like grindle-stones. Ben Jonson.
A voider for the nonce,
I wrong the devil should I pick their bones.
Cleveland.

Coming ten times for the nonce,
I never yet could see it flow but once. Cotton.
NON-CONFORMITY. n. s. [non and con- formity.]

1. Refusal of compliance.

The will of our Maker, whether discovered by reason or revelation, carries the highest authority with it; a conformity or nonconformity to it, determines their actions to be morally good or evil.
Hatt's Logick.

2. Refusal to join in the established religion.

Since the liturgy, rites, and ceremonies of our church, are so much struck at, and all upon a plea of conscience, it will concern us to examine the force of this plea, which our adversaries are still setting up as the grand pillar and buttress of nonconformity.
South.

The lady will plead the toleration which allows her nonconformity in this particular. Addison's Spect.
NONCONFORMIST. n. s. [non and con- formist.] One who refuses to join in the established worship.

On his death-bed he declared himself a nonconformist, and had a fanatic preacher to be his spiritual guide. Swift.

NONE. adj. [ne one, nan, ne ane, Sax.]

1. Not one: used both of persons and things.

Ye shall flee when none pursueth you. Leviticus.

I gave it to thy voice and eyes:

Thy sweets, thy graces, all are mine;
Thou art my star, shin'st in my skies. Carew.

That fowl, which is none of the lightest, can easily move itself up and down in the air without stirring its wings. Wilkins.

Another, which is none of the least advantages of hope is, its great efficacy in preserving us from setting too high a value on present enjoyments.
Addison's Spectator.

2. Not any: no was in this sense used anciently before a consonant, and none before a vowel.

Six days shall ye gather it, but on the sabbath there shall be none. Exodus xvii. 26.

Thy life shall hang in doubt, and thou shalt have none assurance of this life. Deuteronomy xxviii.

Before the deluge, the air was calm; none of those tumultuary motions of vapours, which the mountains and winds cause in ours. Burnet's Theory.

The most glaring and notorious passages, are none of the finest. Felton on the Classics.

3. Not other.

This is none other but the house of God, and the gate of heaven. Genesis xxviii. 17.

4. None of sometimes signifies only emphatically nothing.

My people would not hearken to my voice: and Israel would none of me. Psaln lxxxi. 11.

5. None is always used when it relates to a substantive going before; as, we shall have no wine: wine we shall have none.

6. None seems originally to have signified, according to its derivation, not one, and therefore to have had no plural, but it is now used plurally.

Terms of peace were none
Vouchsaf'd. Milton.

In at this gate none pass
The vigilance here plac'd, but such as come
Well known from heav'n. Milton.

Nor think though men were none
That heav'n would want spectators, God want praise. Milton.

NONENTITY. n. s. [non and entity.]

1. Nonexistence; the negation of being.

When they say nothing from nothing, they must understand it as excluding all causes. In which sense it is most evidently true; being equivalent to this proposition, that nothing can make itself, or, nothing cannot bring its nonself out of nonentity into something. Bentley.

2. A thing not existing.

There was no such thing as rendering evil for evil, when evil was truly a nonentity, and no where to be found. South.

We have heard, and think it pity that your inquisitive genius should not be better employed, than in looking after that theological nonentity.
Arbutnot and Pope.

NONEXISTENCE. n. s. [non and exist- ence.]

1. Inexistence; negation of being.

2. The thing not existing.
A method of many writers, which depreciates the esteem of miracles, is, to salve not only real verities, but also nonexistences. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Neither love will twine, nor hay. Marvel.

2. Two negatives are sometimes joined, but not according to the propriety of our present language, though rightly in the Saxon.

Mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Nor, I am sure there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt. Shakesp. As you like it.

3. Neither is sometimes included in nor, but not elegantly.

Before her gates, hill wolves and lions lay;
Which with her virtuous drags so tame she made,
That wolfe, nor lion, would one man invade. Chapman.

Pow'r, disgrace, nor death could ought divert Thy glorious tongue thus to reveal thy heart. Daniel.

Simois nor Xanthus shall be wanting there;
A new Achilles shall in arms appear. Dryden.

4. Nor is in poetry used in the first branch for neither.

Idle nymph, I pray thee, be Modest, and not follow me,
I nor love myself, nor thee. Ben Jonson.
Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Or the fierce pains not feel. Milton.
But how perplex, alas! is human fate?
I whom nor avarice, nor pleasures move;
Yet must myself be made a slave to love. Walsh.

NORTH. n. s. [nonð, Sax.] The point opposite to the sun in the meridian.

More inconstant than the wind; who woos
Ev'n now the frozen bosom of the north;
And being anger'd puffs away from thence,

NO'STRIL. n. s. [nose and στρίλη, a hole, Sax.] The cavity in the nose.

Turn then my freshest reputation to
A favour that may strike the dullest nostril. Shak.
Stinks which the nostrils straight abhor, are not the most pernicious. Bacon's Natural History.
He form'd thee, Adam, and in thy nostrils breath'd

The breath of life. Milton.
The secondary action subsisteth in concomitan-cy with the other; so the nostrils are useful both for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.

These ripe fruits recreate the nostrils with their aromatic scent. More's Divine Dialogues.

NO'STRUM. n. s. [Lat.] A medicine not yet made publick, but remaining in some single hand.

Very extraordinary, and one of his nostrums, let it be writ upon his monument, Hic jacet auctor hujus argumenti; for no body ever used it before.

Stillin'fleet,
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?
Pope.

NOT. adv. [ne auzt, Sax. nict, Dut.]

1. The particle of negation, or refusal.

If thou be the world's great parent,
How falls it then that with thy furious fervour
Thou dost afflict as well the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise? Spenser.
His countenance likes me not. Shak. King Lear.
The man held his peace, to wit, whether the Lord had made his journey prosperous or not. Gen.
The question is, may I do it, or may I not do it?
Sanderson.

He is invulnerable, I not. Milton.
Let each man do as to his fancy seems;
I wait, not I, till you have better dreams. Dryden.

This objection hinders not but that the heroic action enterpris'd for the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well executed now as it was of old. Dryden.

Grammar being to teach men not to speak, but to speak correctly: where rhetoric is not necessary, grammar may be spared. Locke on Education.

This day, be bread and peace my lot;
All else beneath the sun
Thou know'st if best bestow'd or not,
And let thy will be done. Pope's Universal Prayer.

2. The first member of a negative sentence followed by nor or neither.

I was not in safety, neither had I rest. Job.
Not for price nor reward. Isaiah.

more.

Thine eyes are upon me, and I am not. Job. vii.

NO'TABLE. adj. [notable, Fr. notabilis,
Lat.]

1. Remarkable; memorable; observable:
it is now scarcely used, but in irony.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears; which, it seems, all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.
The same is notified in the notablest places of the diocess. Whitegift.
At Kilkenny, many notable laws were enacted, which shew, for the law doth best discover enormities, how much the English colonies were corrupted. Davies.

Two young men appeared notable in strength, excellent in beauty, and comely in apparel. 2 Mac.
They bore two or three charges from the horse with notable courage, and without being broken.

Both armies lay still without any notable action,
for the space of ten days. Clarendon.

Varro's aviary is still so famous, that it is reckoned for one of those notables which foreign nations record. Addison.

It is impossible but a man must have first passed this notable stage, and got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

2. Careful; bustling: in contempt and irony.

This absolute monarch was as notable a guardian of the fortunes, as of the lives of his subjects.
When any man grew rich, to keep him from being dangerous to the state, he sent for all his goods. Addison's Freeholder.

NO'TABLENESS. n. s. [from notable.] Appearance of business; importance:
in contempt.

NO'TABLY. adv. [from notable.] Memorably; remarkably.

This we see notably proved, in that the oft polling of hedges conduces much to their lasting.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Herein doth the endless mercy of God notably appear, that he vouchsafeth to accept of our repentance, when we repent, though not in particular as we ought to do. Perkins.

2. With consequence; with shew of importance; ironically.

Mention Spain or Poland, and he talks very notably; but if you go out of the gazette, you drop him. Addison.

NOTA'RIAL. adj. [from notary.] Taken by a notary.

It may be called an authentick writing, though not a publick instrument, through want of a notarial evidence. Ayliffe.

NO'TARY. n. s. [notaire, Fr. from nota-rius, Lat.] An officer whose business it is to take notes of any thing which may concern the publick.

There is a declaration made to have that very book, and no other set abroad, wherein their present authorised notaries do write those things fully and only, which being written and there read, are by their own open testimony acknowledged to be their own. Hooker.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your bond. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

One of those with him, being a notary, made an entry of this act. Bacon's New Atlantis.

So I but your recorder am in this,
Or mouth and speaker of the universe,
A ministerial notary; for 'tis
Not I, but you and fame that make this verse.

They have in each province, intendants and notaries. Donne.
Temple.

NOTA'TION. n. s. [notatio, Lat.]

1. The act or practice of recording any thing by marks; as by figures or letters.

Notation teaches how to describe any number by certain notes and characters, and to declare the value thereof being so described, and that is by degrees and periods. Cocker.

2. Meaning; signification.

A foundation being primarily of use in architecture, hath no other literal notation but what belongs to it in relation to a building. Hammond.

Conscience, according to the very notation of the word, imports a double knowledge; one of a divine law, and the other of a man's own action; and so is the application of a general law, to a particular instance of practice. South.

NOTCH. n. s. [nocchia, Ital.]

1. A nick; a hollow cut in any thing; a nock.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces in the margin, of a pyramidal figure appositely set, and with transverse notches. Grew.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.

2. It seems to be erroneously used for nich.

He shew'd a comma ne'er could claim
A place in any British name;
Yet making here a perfect notch,
Thrusts your pour vowel from his notch. Swift.

To NOTCH. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut in small hollows.

He was too hard for him directly; before Corioli, he scotch'd him and notch'd him like a carbonado. Shakesp.

The convex work is composed of black and citrin pieces, cancelled and transversely notched.
Grew's Musæum.

From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster. Pope.

NOTCHWEE'D. n. s. [notch and weed;
artiplex olida.] An herb called orach.

NOTE. [for ne note.] May not.

Ne let him then admire,
But yield his sense to be too blunt and base
That note without an hound fine footing trace. Spenser.

NOTE. n. s. [nota, Lat. notte, Fr.]

1. Mark; token; as Bellarmine's notes of the church.

Whosoever appertain to the visible body of the church, they have also the notes of external profession, whereby the world knoweth what they are. Hooker.

2. Notice; heed.

Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence. Shakesp.
I will bestow some precepts on this virgin, Worthy the note. Shakesp.

3. Reputation; consequence.

Divers men of note have been brought into England. Abbot.
Andronicus and Junia are of note among the apostles. Romans.

As for metals, authors of good note assure us,
that even they have been observed to grow. Boyle.

4. Reproach; stigma.

The more to aggravate the note,
With a foul traytor's name stuff I thy throat. Shak.

5. Account; information; intelligence; notice. Not used.

She that from Naples
Can have no note; unless the sun were post,
The man i' th' moon's too slow. Shakesp. Tempest.
In suits of favour, the first coming ought to take little place; so far forth consideration may be had of his trust, that if intelligence of the matter could not otherwise have been had but by him, advantage he not taken of the note, but the party left to his other means, and in some sort recompensed for his discovery. Bacon.

6. State of being observed.

Small matters come with great commendation, because they are continually in use and in note;
whereas the occasion of any great virtue cometh
but on festivals. Bacon.

7. Tune; voice; harmonick or melodious sound.

These are the notes wherewith are drawn from the hearts of the multitude so many sighs; with these tunes their minds are exasperated against the lawful guides and governors of their souls.
Hooker.

The wakeful bird tunes her nocturnal note.

I now must change those notes to tragick. Milt.
You that can tune your sounding string so well,
Of ladies beauties and of love to tell;
Once change your note, and let your lute report
The justest grief that ever touch'd the court.
Waller.

One common note on either lyre did strike,
And knaves and fools we both abhor'd alike. Dryden.

8. Single sound in musick.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony!
This universal frame began:
From harmony to harmony,
Thro' all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

9. Short hint; small paper; memorial register.

He will'd me
In heedfull'st reservation to bestow them,
As notes whose faculties inclusive were,
More than they were in note. Shakesp.
In the body's prison so she lies,
As through the body's windows she must look,
Her divers powers of sense to exercise,
By gathering notes out of the world's great book. Davies.

10. Abbreviation; symbol; musical character.

Contract it into a narrow compass by short notes and abbreviations. Baker on Learning.

11. A small letter.

A hollow cane within her hand she brought,
But in the concave had inclosed a note. Dryden.

12. A written paper.

I cannot get over the prejudice of taking some little offence at the clergy, for perpetually reading their sermons; perhaps my frequent hearing of foreigners, who never make use of notes, may have added to my disgust. Swift.

13. A paper given in confession of a debt.

His note will go farther than my bond. Arbut.

14. Explanatory annotation.

The best writers have been perplexed with notes, and obscured with illustrations. Felton on the Classics
This put him upon a close application to his studies. He kept much at home, and writes notes upon Homer and Plantus. Law.

To NOTE. v. a. [note, Lat. noter, Fr.]

1. To observe; to remark; to heed; to attend; to take notice of.

The fool hath much pined away.
—No more of that, I have noted it well. Shakesp.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Some things may in passing be fitly noted. Hamm.
I began to note
The stormy Hyades, the rainy goat. Addison's Ov.
Wand'ring from clime to clime, observant
stray'd,
Their manners noted, and their states survey'd. Pope.

2. To deliver; to set down.

Saint Augustin speaking of devout men, noteth
how they daily frequented the church, how attentive ear they gave unto the lessons and chapters read. Hooker.

Note it in a book, that it may be for ever and ever. Isaiah, xxx. 8

3. To charge with a crime: with of or for.

Sine veste Dianam, agrees better with Livia, who thor, have not the force of laws in France or Holland. Baker.

NOTER. n. s. [from note.] He who takes notice.

NOTHING. n. s. [no and thing; nothing,
Scott.]

1. Negation of being; nonentity; universal negation: opposed to something.

It is most certain, that there never could be nothing. For if there could have been an instant, wherein there was nothing, then either nothing made something, or something made itself; and so was, and acted, before it was. But if there never could be nothing; then there is, and was, a being of necessity, without any beginning. Grew.

We do not create the world from nothing and by nothing; we assert an eternal God to have been the efficient cause of it. Bentley.

This nothing is taken either in a vulgar or philosophical sense; so we say there is nothing in the cup in a vulgar sense, when we mean there is no liquor in it; but we cannot say there is nothing in the cup, in a strict philosophical sense, while there is air in it. Watts.

2. Nonexistence.

Mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

3. Not any thing; no particular thing.

There shall nothing die. Erodus ix. 4.
Yet had his aspect nothing of severe,
But such a face as promis'd him sincere. Dryden.
Philosophy wholly speculative is barren, and produces nothing but vain ideas.

Nothing at all was done, while any thing remained undone. Addison on the War.

4. No other thing.

Nothing but a steady resolution brought to practice; God's grace used, his commandments obeyed, and his pardon begged; nothing but this will intitle
you to God's acceptance. Wake's Prep. for Death.

Words are made to declare something; where they are, by those who pretend to instruct, otherwise used, they conceal indeed something; but that which they conceal, is nothing but the ignorance, error, or sophistry of the talker, for there is, in truth, nothing else under them. Locke.

5. No quantity or degree.

The report which the troops of horse make,
would add nothing of courage to their fellows.
Clarendon.

6. No importance; no use; no value.

The outward shew of churches, draws the rude people to the reverencing and frequenting thereof, whatever some of our late too nice fools say, there is nothing in the seemly form of the church.
Spenser's Ireland.

Behold, ye are of nothing, and your work of naught. Isaiah.

7. No possession of fortune.

A most homely shepherd; a man that from very nothing is grown into an unspeakable estate.
Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

8. No difficulty; no trouble.

We are industrious to preserve our bodies from slavery, but we make nothing of suffering our souls to be slaves to our lusts. Ray.

9. A thing of no proportion

The charge of making the ground, and otherwise, is great, but nothing to the profit. Bacon.

10. Trifle; something of no consideration or importance.

I had rather have one scratch my head i' th' sun,
When the alarum were struck, than idly sit
To hear my nothings monster'd. Shakesp.

My dear nothings, take your leave,
No longer must you me deceive. Crashaw.

'Tis nothing, sir, will bring you to your end.
Do I not see your dropsy belly swell? Dryden.

That period includes more than a hundred sentences that might be writ to express multiplication of nothings, and all the fatiguing perpetual business of having no business to do. Pope's Letters.

Narcissus is the glory of his race;
For who does nothing with a better grace? Young.

11. Nothing has a kind of adverbial signification. In no degree; not at all.

Who will make me a liar, and make my speech nothing worth? Job xxiv. 25.

Auria, nothing dismayed with the greatness of the Turk's fleet, still kept on his course. Knolles.
But Adam with such counsel nothing sway'd. Milton.

NOTHINGNESS. n. s. [from nothing.]

I a nothingness in deed and name,
Did scorn to hurt his forfeit carcase. Hudibras.

NOTICE. n. s. [notice, Fr. notitia, Lat.]

1. Remark; heed; observation; regard.

The thing to be regarded in taking notice of a child's miscarriage is, what root it springs from.
Locke.

This is done with little notice: very quick the actions of the mind are performed. Locke.
How ready is envy to mingle with the notices which we take of other persons! Watts.

2. Information; intelligence given or received.

I have given him notice, that the duke of Cornwall and his duchess will be here. Shakesp. K. Lear.

NOTIFICATION. n. s. [notification, Fr.
from notify.] Act of making known;

representation by marks or symbols.

Four or five torches (elevated or depressed out of their order, either in breadth or longways, may,
by agreement, give great variety of notifications.
Holder m Speech.

To NOTIFY. v. a. [notifier, Fr. notifico, Lat.] To declare; to make known; to publish.

There are other kind of laws, which notify the will of God. Hooker.

Good and evil operate upon the mind of man, by those respective appellations by which they are notified and conveyed to the mind. South.

This solar month is by civil sanction notified in authentic calendars the chief measure of the year:
a kind of standard by which we measure time.
Holder.

NOTION. n. s. [notion, Fr. notio, Lat.]

1. Thought; representation of any thing formed by the mind; idea; image; conception.

Being we are at this time to speak of the proper notion of the church, therefore I shall not look upon it as comprehending any more than the sons of men. Pearson.

The fiction of some beings which are not in nature, second notions, as the logicians call them, has been founded on the conjunction of two natures, which have a real separate being. Dryden.

Many actions are punished by law, that are acts of ingratitude; but this is merely accidental to them, as they are such acts; for if they were punished properly under that notion, and upon that account, the punishment would equally reach all actions of the same kind. South.

What hath been generally agreed on, I content myself to assume under the notion of principles, in order to what I have farther to write. Newton.

There is nothing made a more common subject of discourse than nature and its laws; and yet few agree in their notions about these words. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

That notion of hunger, cold, sound, colour, thought, wish, or fear, which is in the mind, is called the idea of hunger, cold, sound, wish, &c. Watts's Logick.

2. Sentiment; opinion.

God hath bid dwell far off all anxious cares, And not molest us; unless we ourselves Seek them with wand'ring thoughts and notious vain. Milton.

It would be incredible to a man who has never been in France, should one relate the extravagant notion they entertain of themselves, and the mean opinion they have of their neighbours. Addison.

Sensual wits they were, who, it is probable, took pleasure in ridiculing the notion of a life to come. Atterbury.

3. Sense; understanding; intellectual power. This sense is frequent in Shakespeare, but not in use.

His notion weakens, his discernings Are lethargy'd. Shakesp. King Lear.
So told, as earthly notion can receive. Milton.

NOTIONAL. adj. [from notion.]

1. Imaginary; ideal; intellectual; subsisting only in idea; visionary; fantastical.

The general and indefinite contemplations and notions, of the elements and their conjugations, of the influences of heaven, are to be set aside, being but notional and ill-limited; and definite axioms are to be drawn out of measured instances. Bacon.

Happiness, object of that waking dream Which we call life, mistaking; fugitive theme Of my pursuing verse, ideal shade, Notional good, by fancy only made. Prior.

We must be wary, lest we ascribe any real substance or personality to this notion or chance; for it is merely a notional and imaginary thing; an abstract universal, which is properly nothing; a conception of our own making, occasioned by our reflecting upon the settled course of things; denoting only thus much, that all those bodies move and act according to their essential properties, without any consciousness or intention of so doing. Bentley.

2. Dealing in ideas, not realities.

The most forward notional dictators sit down in a contented ignorance. Glanville's Scepis.

NOTIONALITY. n. s. [from notional.]

Of wheat there are two sorts; French, which is bearded, and requireth the best soil, and notwheat, so termed because it is unbarbed, being contented with a meaner earth. Carew.

NOTWITHSTANDING. conj. [This word, though in conformity to other writers called here a conjunction, is properly a participial adjective, as it is compounded of not and withstanding, and answers exactly to the Latin non obstante; it is most properly and analogically used in the ablative case absolute with a noun; as, he is rich notwithstanding his loss; it is not so proper to say, he is rich notwithstanding he has lost much; yet this mode of writing is too frequent. Addison has used it: but when a sentence follows, it is more grammatical to insert that; as, he is rich notwithstanding that he has lost much. When notwithstanding is used absolutely, the expression is elliptical, this or that being understood, as in the following passages of Hooker.]

1. Without hindrance or obstruction from.

Those on whom Christ bestowed miraculous cures, were so transported, that their gratitude made them, notwithstanding his prohibition, proclaim the wonders he had done for them. Decay of Piety.

2. Although. This use is not proper.

A person languishing under an ill habit of body, may lose several ounces of blood, notwithstanding it will weaken him for a time, in order to put a new ferment into the remaining mass, and draw into it fresh supplies. Addison.

3. Nevertheless; however.

They which honour the law as an image of the wisdom of God himself, are notwithstanding to know that the same had an end in Christ. Hooker.

The knowledge is small, which we have on earth concerning things that are done in heaven notwithstanding this much we know even of saints in heaven, that they pray. Hooker.

He hath a tear for pity, and a hand Open as day, for melting charity: Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint; As humorous as winter. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

3. At one time; at another time.

Now high, now low, now master up, now miss. Pope.

4. It is sometimes a particle of connection, like the French or, and Latin autem: as, if this be true, he is guilty; now this is true, therefore he is guilty.

Now whatsoever he did or suffered, the end thereof was to open the doors of the kingdom of heaven, which our iniquities had shut up. Hooker.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him. Now to affect the malice of the people, is as bad as that which he dislikes, to flatter them. Shakesp.

Then cried they all again, saying, Not this man but Barabbas; now Barabbas was a robber. St. John.

Natural reason persuades man to love his neighbour, because of similitude of kind; because mutual love is necessary for man's welfare and preservation, and every one desires another should love him. Now it is a maxim of Nature, that one do to others, according as he would himself be done to. White.

Pheasants which are granivorous birds, the young live mostly upon ants eggs. Now birds, being of a hot nature, are very voracious, therefore there had need be an infinite number of insects produced for their sustenance. Rav.

The other great and undoing mischief, which befalls men, is by their being misrepresented. Now by calling evil good, a man is misrepresented to others in the way of slander and detraction. South.

Helim bethought himself, that the first day of the full moon of the month Tizpa, was near at hand. Now it is a received tradition among the Persians, that the souls of the royal family, who are in a state of bliss, do, on the first full moon after their decease, pass through the eastern gate of the black palace. Addison's Guardian.

The praise of doing well
Is to the ear, as ointment to the smell.
Now if some flies, perchance, however small,
Into the alabaster urn should fall,
The odours die. Prior.

The only motives that can be imagined of obedience to laws, are either the value and certainty of rewards, or an apprehension of justice and severity. Now neither of these, exclusive of the other, is the true principle of our obedience to God. Rogers.

A human body forming in such a fluid in any imaginable posture, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law. There will be always something lighter beneath, and something heavier above. Now what can make the heavier particles of bone ascend above the lighter ones of flesh, or depress these below those, against the tendency of nature. L'Estrange.

5. After this; since things are so, in familiar speech.

Now shall any man distinguish now betwixt a parasite and a man of honour, where hypocrisy and interest look so like duty and affection? L'Estrange.

6. Now and then; at one time and another uncertainly. This word means, with regard to time, what is meant by here and there, with respect to place.

Now and then they ground themselves on human authority, even when they most pretend divine. Hooker.

Now and then something of extraordinary, that is any thing of your production, is requisite to refresh your character. Dryden.

A most effectual argument against spontaneous generation is, that there is no new species produced, which would now and then happen, were there any such thing. Ray.

He who resolves to walk by the gospel rule of forbearing all revenge, will have opportunities every now and then to exercise his forgiving temper. Atterbury.

They now and then appear in the offices of religion, and avoid some scandalous enormities. Rogers.

7. Now and then are applied to places considered as they rise to notice in succession.

A mead here, there a heath, and now and then a wood. Drayton.

NOW. n. s. Present moment. A poetical use.

Nothing is there to come, and nothing past, But an eternal now does ever last. Cowley.

She vanish'd, we can scarcely say she dy'd,
For but a now did heav'n and earth divide;
This moment perfect health, the next was death. Dryden.

Not less ev'n in this despicable now,
Than when my name fill'd Africk with affrights. Dryden.

NOWADAYS. adv. [This word, though common and used by the best writers, is perhaps barbarous.] In the present age.

Not so great as it was wont of yore,
It's nowadays, ne half so strait and sure. Spenser.

Reason and love keep little company together nowadays. Shakesp.

It was a vestal and a virgin fire, and differed as much from that which passes by this name nowadays, as the vital heat from the burning of a fever. South.

Such are those principles, which by reason of the bold cavils of perverse and unreasonable men, we are nowadays put to defend. Tillotson.

What men of spirit nowadays,
Come to give suber judgment of new plays. Garrick.

NOWED. adj. [noué, Fr.] Knotted; intertwined.

Reuben is conceived to bear three harres waded,
Judah a lion rampant, Dan a serpent nowed. Brown.

NOWES. n. s. [from nou, old Fr.] The marriage knot. Out of use.

Thou shalt look round about and see Thousands of crown'd souls throng to be Themselves thy crown, sons of thy nowes;
The virgin births with which they spouse
Made fruitful thy fair soul. Crashaw.

NOWHERE. adv. [no and where.] Not in any place.

Some men, of whom we think very reverently, have in their books and writings nowhere mentioned or taught that such things should be in the church. Hooker.

True pleasure and perfect freedom are nowhere to be found but in the practice of virtæ. Tillotson.

This faculty may be more conveniently used by the multiplication of several wheels, together with nuts belonging unto each, that are used for the roasting of meat.
Wilkins.

Clocks and jacks, though the screws and teeth of the wheels and nuts be never so smooth, yet if they be not oiled, will hardly move.
Ray.

NUTBROWN. adj. [nut and brown.]

Brown like a nut kept long.
Young and old come forth to play,
Till the live-long day light fail,
Then to the spicy nutbrown ale.
Milton's Poems.

When this nutbrown sword was out,
With stomach lunge he laid about.
Hudibras.

Two milk-white kids run frisking by her side,
For which the nutbrown lass, Eriethais,
Full often offer'd many a savoury kiss.
Dryden.

King Hardicnutte, midst Danes and Saxons stout,
Carous'd in nutbrown ale, and din'd on groud.
King.

NUTCRACKERS. n. s. [nut and crack.]

An instrument used to enclose nuts and break them by pressure.

He cast every human feature out of his countenance, and became a pair of nutcrackers.
Addison's Spectator.

NUTGALL. n. s. [nut and gall.] Hard excrement of an oak.

In vegetable excretions, maggots terminate in flies of constant shapes, as in the nutgalls of the outlandish oak.
Brown.

NUTHATCH. } n. s. [picus martius.] A NUTJOBBER. } bird.
NUTPECKER. } Ainsworth.

NUTHOOK. n. s. [nut and hook.]

1. A stick with a hook at the end to pull down boughs that the nuts may be gathered.

2. It was anciently, I know not why, a name of contempt.
Nuthook, nuthook, you lie. Shakesp. Henry IV.

NUTMEG. n. s. [nut and muguët, Fr.]

The nutmeg is a kernel of a large fruit not unlike the peach, and separated from that and from its investient coat, the mace, before it is sent over to us; except that the whole fruit is sometimes sent over in preserve, by way of sweet-meat, or as a curiosity. There are two kinds of nutmeg; the male, which is long and cylindrical, but it has less of the fine aromatick flavour than the female, which is of the shape of an olive.
Hill.

The second integument, a dry and flosculous coat, commonly called mace; the fourth, a kernel included in the shell, which lieth under the mace, is the same we call nutmeg.
Brown.

NUT

I to my pleasant gardens went,
Where nutmegs breathe a fragrant scent.
Sandys.

NUTSHELL. n. s. [nut and shell.]

1. The hard substance that incloses the kernel of the nut.

I could be bounded in a nutshell, and count myself a king of infinite space.
Shakesp.

It seems as easy to me, to have the idea of space empty of body, as to think of the hollow of a nutshell without a kernel.
Locke.

2. It is used proverbially for any thing of little value.

A fox had me by the back, and a thousand pound to a nutshell, I had never got off again.
L'Estrange.

NUTTREE. n. s. [nut and tree.] A tree that bears nuts.

Of trees you shall have the nuttree and the oak.
Peucham.

Like beating nuttrees, make a larger crop.
Dryd.

NUTRICATION. n. s. [nutricatio, Lat.]

Manner of feeding or being fed.

Besides the teeth, the tongue of this animal is a second argument to overthrow this airy nutrition.
Brown.

NUTRIMENT. n. s. [nutrimentum, Lat.]

That which feeds or nourishes; food; aliment.

This slave
Has my lord's meat in him,
Why should it thrive and turn to nutriment?
Shakesp.

The stomach returns what it has received, in strength and nutriment, diffused into all the parts of the body.
South.

Does not the body thrive and grow,
By food of twenty years ago?
And is not virtue in mankind,
The nutriment that feeds the mind? Swift's Miscel.

NUTRIMENTAL. adj. [from nutriment.]

Having the qualities of food; alimental.

By virtue of this oil vegetables are nutrimental, for this oil is extracted by animal digestion as an emulsion.
Arbutnot.

NUTRITION. n. s. [from nutritio, nutritio, Lat. nutrition, Fr.]

1. The act or quality of nourishing, supporting strength, or increasing growth.

New parts are added to our substance to supply our continual decays; nor can we give a certain account how the aliment is so prepared for nutrition, or by what mechanism it is so regularly distributed.
Glanville's Scepis.

The obstruction of the glands of the mesentery is a great impediment to nutrition; for the lymph in those glands is a necessary constituent of the aliment before it mixeth with the blood.
Arbutnot.

2. That which nourishes; nutriment. Less properly.

Fix'd like a plant on his peculiar spot,
To draw nutrition, propagate, and rot.
Pope.

NUTRITIOUS. adj. [from nutritio, Lat.]

Having the quality of nourishing.

O may'st thou often see Thy furrows whiten'd by the woolly rain Nutritious! secret nitre lurks within.
Philips.

The heat equal to incubation is only nutritious; and the nutritious juice itself resembles the white of an egg in all its qualities.
Arbutnot.

NUTRITIVE. adj. [from nutritio, Lat.]

Nourishing; nutrimental; alimental.

While the secretory, or separating glands, are too much widened and extended, they suffer a great quantity of nutritive juice to pass through.
Blackmore.

NUTRITURE. n. s. [from nutritio, Lat.]

The power of nourishing. Not used.

Never make a meal of flesh alone, have some other meat with it of less nutriture.
Harey.

To NUZZLE. v. a. [This word, in its original signification, seems corrupted from nursle; but when its original meaning was forgotten, writers supposed it to come from nozzle or nose, and in that sense used it.]

1. To nurse; to foster.
Old men long nozzled in corruption, scorning them that would seek reformation. Sidney.
2. To go with the nose down like a hog.
He charged through an army of lawyers, sometimes with sword in hand, at other times nuzzling like an eel in the mud. Arbutnot.

N Y M

Sir Roger shook his ears, and nuzzled along, well satisfied that he was doing a charitable work. Arbutnot's John Bull.
The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind. Pope.

NYMPH. n. s. [νύμφη; nymphæ, Lat.]

1. A goddess of the woods, meadows, or waters.
And as the moisture which the thirsty earth
Sucks from the sea to fill her empty veins,
From out her womb at last doth take a birth,
And runs a nymph along the grassy plains. Davies.

2. A lady. In poetry.

This resolve no mortal dame,
None but those eyes cou'd have o'erthrown;
The nymph I dare not, need not name. Waller.

NYMPHISH. adj. [from nymph.] Relating to nymphs; ladylike.

Tending all to nymphish war. Drayton.

NYs. [A corruption of ne is.] None is; not is. Obsolete.]

Thou findest fault, where *ny*s to be found,
And buldest strong work upon a weak ground. Spenser.

O.

O A K

O HAS in English a long sound; as, drone, groan, stone, alone, cloke, broke, coal, droll; or short, got, knot, shot, prong, long. It is usually denoted long by a servile a subjoined; as, moan, or by e at the end of the syllable; as, bone: when these vowels are not appended, it is generally short, except before ll; as, droll, scroll, and even then sometimes short; as, loll.

1. O is used as an interjection of wishing or exclamation.

O that we, who have resisted all the designs of his love, would now try to defeat that of his anger! Decay of Piety.

O! were he present, that his eyes and hands Might see, and urge the death which he commands. Dryden.

2. O is used with no great elegance by Shakespeare for a circle or oval.

Can this cockpit hold
The vasty field of France? or may we cram Within this wooden O, the very casks
That did affright the air at Agincourt. Shakesp.

OAF. n. s. [This word is variously written; auff, ofe, and oph; it seems a corruption of ouph a demon or fairy; in German alf, from which elf: and means properly the same with changeling; a foolish child left by malevolent ouphs or fairies, in the place of one more witty, which they steal away.]

1. A changeling; a foolish child left by the fairies.

These, when a child haps to be got,
Which after proves an idiot,
When folk perceives it thriveth not,
The fault therein to smother:
Some silly doating brainless calf,
That understands things by the half,
Says that the fairy left this oaf,
And took away the other. Drayton's Nyraphid.

2. A dolt; a blockhead; an idiot.

OAFISH. adj. [from oaf.] Stupid; dull; doltish.

OAFISHNESS. n. s. [from oafish.] Stupidity; dullness.

OAK. n. s. [æc, æc, Sax. which, says Skinner, to shew how easy it is to play the fool, under a shew of literature and deep researches, I will, for the diversion of my reader, derive from οικος a house; the oak being the best timber for building. Skinner seems to have had Junius in his thoughts, who on this very word has shewn his usual fondness for Greek etymology, by a derivation more ridiculous than that by which Skinner has ridiculed him. Ac or oak, says the grave critic, signified among the Saxons, like robur among the Latins, not only an oak but strength, and may be well enough derived, non incommode deduci potest, from ἀλκη strength; by taking the three first letters, and then sinking the λ, as is not uncommon; quercus.]

The oak-tree hath male flowers, or katkins, which consist of a great number of small slender threads. The embryos, which are produced at remote distances from these on the same tree, do afterwards become acorns, which are produced in hard scaly cups: the leaves are situated. The species are five. Miller.

He return'd with his brows bound with oak. Shakesp.

Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out Upon the brook that brawls along this wood. Shak.
No tree beareth so many bastard fruits as the oak: for besides the acorns, it beareth galls, oak apples, oak nuts, which are inflammable, and oak berries, sticking close to the body of the tree without stalk. Bacon's Natural History

The monarch oak, the patriarch of the trees,
Shoots rising up, and spreads by slow degrees:
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state; and in three more decays. Dryden.

An oak growing from a plant to a great tree, and then lopped, is still the same oak. Locke.

A light earthy, stony, and sparry matter incrustated and affixed to oak leaves. Woodw. on Foss.

Let India boast her plants, nor envy we
The weeping amber and the balm tree,
While by our oaks the precious loads are born,
And realms commanded which those trees adorn. Pope.

OAK Evergreen. n. s. [ilex.]

The fruit is an acorn like the common oak. The wood of this tree is accounted very good for many sorts of tools and utensils; and affords the most durable charcoal in the world. Miller.

OAKAPPLE. n. s. [oak and apple.] A kind of spongy excrescence on the oak.

Another kind of excrescence is an exudation of plants joined with putrefaction, as in oakapples, which are found chiefly upon the leaves of oaks. Facon's Natural History.

N Y S

OAKEN. adj. [from oak.] Made of oak; gathered from oak.

No nation doth equal England for oaken timber wherewith to build ships. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

By lot from Jove I am the pow'r
Of this fair wood, and live in oaken bow'r. Milton.
Clad in white velvet all their troop they led,
With each an oaken chaplet on his head. Dryden.

An oaken garland to be worn on festivals, was the recompense of one who had covered a citizen in battle. Addison.

He snatched a good tough oaken cudgel, and began to brandish it. Arbutnot's John Bull.

OAKENPIN. n. s. An apple.

Oakenpin, so called from its hardness, is a lasting fruit, yields excellent liquor, and is near the nature of the Westbury apple, though not in form. Mortim r.

OAKUM. n. s. [A word probably formed by some corruption.] Cords untwisted and reduced to hemp, with which, mingled with pitch, leaks are stopped.

They make their oakum, wherewith they calk the seams of the ships of old scer and weather-beaten ropes, when they are over spent and grown so rotten as they serve for no other use but to make rotten oakum, which moulders and washes away with every sea as the ships labour and are tossed. Raleigh.

Some drive old oakum thro' each seam and rift;
Their left hand does the calking-iron guide;
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryd.

OAR. n. s. [ajæ, Sax. perhaps by allusion to the common expression of plowing the water, from the same root with ear to plow; aro, Lat.] A longpole with a broad end, by which vessels are driven in the water, the resistance made by water to the oar pushing on the vessel.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

So tow'rds a ship the oar-finn'd gallees ply,
Which wanting sea to ride, or wind to fly,
Stands but to fall reveng'd. Denham's Poems.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian, on the stream did glide,
E'er sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,

Or fin-like oars did spread from either side. Dryd.

Its progressive motion may be effected by the help of several oars, which in the outward ends of them shall be like the fins of a fish to contract and dilate. Wilkins.

To OAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To row.

He more undaunted on the ruin rode,
And oar'd with labouring arms along the flood. Pope.

To OAR. v. a. To impel by rowing.
His bold head

'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes
To th' shore. Shakesp. Tempest.

OARY. adj. [from oar.] Having the form or use of oars.

The swan with arched neck,
Between her white wings mantling, proudly rows
Her state with oary feet. Milton.

His hair transforms to down, his fingers meet,
In skinny films, and shape his oary feet. Addison.

OAST. n. s. A kiln. Not in use.

Empty the bin into a hog-bag, and carry them immediately to the oost or kiln, to be dried. Mortimer.

OATCAKE. n. s. [oat and cake.] Cake made of the meal of oats.

Take a blue stone they make haver or ootcakes upon, and lay it upon the cross bars of iron. Peacham.

OATEN. adj. [from oat.] Made of oats; bearing oats.

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks. Shakesp.

OATH. n. s. [aith, Goth. að, Sax. The distance between the noun outh, and the verb swear, is very observable as it may shew that our oldest dialect is formed from different languages.] An affirmation, negation, or promise, corroborated by the attestation of the Divine Being.

Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love,
For whose dear sake thou then did'st rend thy faith
Into a thousand oaths; and all those oaths Descended into perjury to love me. Shakesp.

All the oath-rites said,
I then ascended her adomed bed. Chapman.

We have consultations, which inventions shall be published, which not: and take an oath of secrecy for the concealing of those which we think fit to keep secret. Baron.

Those called to any office of trust, are bound by an oath to the faithful discharge of it: but an oath is an appeal to God, and therefore can have no influence, except upon those who believe that he is. Swift.

OATHABLE. adj. [from oath. A word not used.] Capable of having an oath administered.

You're not oathable,
Altho' I know you'll swear
Into strong shudders th' immortal gods. Shakesp.

OATHBREAKING. n. s. [oath and break.] Perjury; the violation of an oath.

His oathbreaking he oended thus,
By now forswearing that he is forsworn. Shakesp.

OATMALT. n. s. [oat and malt.] Malt made of oats.

In Kent they brew with one half oatmalt, and the other half barley-malt. Mortimer.

OATMEAL. n. s. [oat and meal.] Flower made by grinding oats.

Oatmeal and butter, outwardly applied, dry the scab on the head. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Our neighbours tell me oft, in joking talk,
Of ashes, leather, oatmeal, bran, and chalk. Gay.

OATMEAL. n. s. [panicum.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OATS. n. s. [aten, Sax.] A grain, which in England is generally given to horses, but in Scotland supports the people.

It is of the grass-leaved tribe; the flowers have no petals, and are disposed in a loose panicle: the grain is eatable. The meal makes tolerable good bread. Miller.

The oats have eaten the horses. Shakesp.

It is bare mechanism, no otherwise produced than the turning of a wild oatbeard, by the insinuation of the particles of moisture. Loche.

For your lean cattle, fodder them with barley straw first, and the oat straw last. Mortimer's Husbandry.

His horse's allowance of oats and beans, was greater than the journey required. Swift.

OATTHISTLE. n. s. [oat and thistle.] An herb. Ainsworth.

OBAMBULATION. n. s. [obambulatio, from obambulo, Lat.] The act of walking about. Dict.

To OBDUCE. v. a. [obduco, Lat.] To draw over as a covering.

No animal exhibits its face in the native colour of its skin but man; all others are covered with feathers, hair, or a cortex that is obduced over the cutis. Hale.

OBDUCTION. n. s. [from obductio, obduco, Lat.] The act of covering, or laying a cover.

OBDU'RACY. n. s. [from obdurate.] Inflexible wickedness; impenitence; hardness of heart.

Thou think'st me as far in the Devil's book, as thou and Falstaff, for obduracy and persistency. Shakesp. Henry IV.

God may, by a mighty grace, hinder the absolute completion of sin in final obduracy. South.

OB DURATE. adj. [obduratus, Lat.]

1. Hard of heart; inflexibly obstinate in ill; hardened; impenitent.

Oh! let me teach thee for thy father's sake,
That gave thee life, when well he might have slain thee;

Be not obdurate, open thy deaf ears. Shakesp.

If when you make your prayers,
God should be so obdurate as yourselves,
How would it fare with your departed souls?

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakesp.

To convince the proud what signs avail,
Or wonders move th' obdurate to relent;
They harden'd more, by what might more reclaim. Milton.

Obdurate as you are, oh! hear at least
My dying prayers, and grant my last request. Dryden.

2. Hardned; firm; stubborn: always with some degree of evil.

Sometimes the very custom of evil makes the heart obdurate against whatsoever instructions to the contrary. Hooker.

A pleasing sorcery could charm
Pain for a while, or anguish, and excite Fallacious hope, or arm th' obdurate breast
With stubborn patience, as with triple steel. Milton.

No such thought ever strikes his marble, obdurate heart, but it presently flies off and rebounds from it. It is impossible for a man to be thorough-paced in ingratitude, till he has shook off all fetters of pity and compassion. South.

3. Harsh; rugged.

They joined the most obdurate consonants without one intervening vowel. Swift.

OB DU'RATELY. adv. [from obdurate.] Stubbornly; inflexibly; impenitently.

OB DU'RATENESS. n. s. [from obdurate.] Stubbornness; inflexibility; impenitence.

OB DURATION. n. s. [from obdurate.] Hardness of heart; stubbornness.

What occasion it had given them to think, to their greater obduration in evil, that through a forward and wanton desire of innovation, we did constrainedly those things, for which conscience was pretended? Hooker.

This barren season is always the reward of obstinate obduration. Hanmond.

OB DU'RED. adj. [obduratus, Lat.] Hardened; inflexible; impenitent.

This saw his hapless foes, but stood obdur'd,
And to rebellious fight rallied their powers Insensate. Milton's Paradise Lost.

OBE'DIENCE. n. s. [obediencia, Fr. obedientia, Lat.] Obediency; submission to authority; compliance with command or prohibition.

If you violently proceed against him, it would shake in pieces the heart of his obedience. Shakesp.

Thy husband
Craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience. Shakesp.

His servants ye are, to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness. Rom. iv. 16.

It was both a strange commission, and a strange obedience to a commission, for men so furiously assailed, to hold their hands. Bacon.

In vain thou bidst me to forbear, Obedience were rebellion here. Cowley.

Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling that which thou didst want,
Obedience to the law of God, imposed On penalty of death. Milton's Par. Lost.

We must beg the grace and assistance of God's spirit to enable us to forsake our sins, and to walk in obedience to him. Duty of Man.

The obedience of men is to imitate the obedience of angels, and rational beings on earth are to live unto God, as rational beings in heaven live unto him. Law.

OBE'DIENT. adj. [obediens, Lat.] Submissive to authority; compliant with command or prohibition; obsequious.

To this end did I write, that I might know the proof of you, whether ye be obedient in all things. 2 Cor. ii. 9.

To this her mother's plot
She, seemingly obedient, likewise hath Made promise. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Religion hath a good influence upon the people, to make them obedient to government, and peaceable one towards another. Tillotson.

The chief his orders gives; the obedient band,
With due observance, wait the chief's command. Popc.

OBE'DIENTIAL. adj. [obediencial, Gr. from obedient.] According to the rule of obedience.

Faith is such as God will accept of, when it affords fiducial reliance on the promises, and obediential submission to the command. Hanmond.

Faith is then perfect, when it produces in us a fiducial assent to whatever the gospel has revealed, and an obediential submission to the commands. Wake's Preparation for Death.

OBE'DIENTLY. adv. [from obedient.] With obedience.

We should behave ourselves reverently and obediently towards the Divine Majesty, and justly and charitably towards men. Tillotson.

OBE'ISANCE. n. s. [obeisance, Fr. This word is formed by corruption from abaisance an act of reverence.] A bow; a courtsey; an act of reverence made by inclination of the body or knee.

Bartholomew my page,
See dress in all suits like a lady;
Then call him Madam, do him all obeisance. Shak.

Bathsheba bowed and did obeisance unto the king. 1 Kings, i. 10.

O B J

The lords and ladies paid
Their homage, with a low obesance made;
And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryd.

OBELISK. n. s. [obeliscus, Lat.]

1. A magnificent high piece of solid marble, or other fine stone, having usually four faces, and lessening upwards by degrees, till it ends in a point like a pyramid. Harris.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd,
And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. A mark of censure in the margin of a book, in the form of a dagger [†].

He published the translation of the Septuagint, having compar'd it with the Hebrew, and not'd by asterisks what was defective, and by obelisks
what redundant. Grew.

OBEQUITATION. n. s. [from obequito, Lat.] The act of riding about.

OBERRATION. n. s. [from oberro, Lat.] The act of wandering about.

OBESE. adj. [obesus, Lat.] Fat; loaden with flesh.

OBE'SENESS. } n. s. [from obese.] Mor-OBE'SITY. } bid fatness; incumbrance of flesh.

On these many diseases depend; as on the straitness of the chest, a pthisis; on the largeness of the veins, an atrophy; on their smallness, obesity. Grew's Cosmol.

To OBEY. v. a. [obeir, Fr. obedio, Lat.]

1. To pay submission to; to comply with, from reverence to authority.

The will of Heaven
Be done in this and all things! I obey. Shakesp.
I am ashamed, that women are so simple
To seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey. Shakesp.

Let not sin reign in your mortal body, that she should obey it in the lusts thereof. Romans, vi. 12.
The ancient Britons yet a sceptred king obeyed. Drayton.

Was she thy God, that her thou didst obey,
Before his voice? Milton's Paradise Lost.
Africk and India shall his pow'r obey,
He shall extend his propagated sway
Beyond the solar year, without the starry way. Dryden.

2. It had formerly sometimes to before the person obeyed, which Addison has mentioned as one of Milton's latinisms; but it is frequent in old writers; when we borrowed the French word we borrowed the syntax, odeir au roi.

He commanded the trumpets to sound; to which the two brave knights obeying, they performed their courses, breaking their staves. Sidney.

The flit bark, obeying to her mind,
Forth launched quickly, as she did desire. Spenser.
His servants ye are, to whom ye obey. Romans.
Nor did they not perceive the evil plight
In which they were, or the fierce pains not feel,
