Laughing, if loud, ends in a deep sigh; and all pleasures have a sting in the tail, though they carry beauty on the face. Taylor.

In Venus' temple, on the sides were seen Issuing sighs, that smok'd along the wall. Dryden.

SIGHT. n. s. [geyrīde, Sax. sicht, gesicht, Dut.]

1. Perception by the eye; the sense of seeing.

If bees go forth right to a place, they must needs have sight. Bacon.

O loss of sight, of thee I most complain!
Blind among enemies, O worse than chains,
Dungeon, or beggary, decrepit age! Milton's Agon.

Things invisible to mortal sight. Milton.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape. Denham.

My eyes are somewhat dimish grown;
For nature, always in the right,
To your decays adapts my sight. Swift.

S I G

2. Open view; a situation in which nothing obstructs the eye.

Undaunted Hotspur
Brings on his army, eager unto fight,
And plac'd the same before the king in sight. Dan.
Æneas cast his wond'ring eyes around,
And all the Tyrrhene army had in sight,
Stretch'd on the spacious plain from left to right. Dryden.

I met Brutidius in a mortal fright;
He's dipt for certain, and plays least in sight. Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Act of seeing or beholding; view.

Nine things to sight required are;
The pow'r to see, the light, the visible thing,
Being not too small, too thin, too high, too far,
Clear space, and time, the form distinct to bring. Davies.

Mine eye pursued him still, but under shade
Lost sight of him. Milton's Paradise Lost.

What form of death could him affright,
Who unconcern'd, with stedfast sight,
Could view the surges mounting steep,
And monsters rolling in the deep? Dryd. Horace.

Having little knowledge of the circumstances of those St. Paul writ to, it is not strange that many things he concealed to us, which they who were concerned in the letter understood at first sight. Locke.

4. Notice; knowledge.

It was writ as a private letter to a person of piety, upon an assurance that it should never come to any one's sight but her own. Wake.

5. Eye; instrument of seeing.

From the depth of hell they lift their sight,
And at a distance see superior light. Dryden.

6. Aperture pervious to the eye, or other point fixed to guide the eye: as, the sights of a quadrant.

Their armed staves in charge, their beavers down,
Their eyes of fire sparkling through sights of steel. Shakespeare.

7. Spectacle; show; thing to be seen.

Thus are my eyes still captive to one sight;
Thus all my thoughts are slaves to one thought still. Sidney.

Them seem'd they never saw a sight so fair
Of fowls so lovely, that they sure did deem Them heavenly burn. Spenser.

Not an eye
But is a-weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desir'd to see thee more. Shakespeare.

Moses said, I will turn aside and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt. Exodus, iii. 3.

I took a felucca at Naples to carry me to Rome, that I might not run over the same sights a second time. Addison.

Not proud Olympus yields a nobler sight,
Though gods assembled grace his tow'ring height,
Than what more humble mountains offer here,
Where, in their blessings, all those gods appear. Pope.

Before you pass th' imaginary sights
Of lords, and cauls, and dukes, and garter'd knights,
While the spread fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.

SIGHTED. adj. [from sight.] Seeing in a particular manner. It is used only in composition, as quicksighted, short-sighted.

As they might, to avoid the weather, pull the joints of the coach up close, so they might put each end down, and remain as discovered and open sighted as on horseback. Sidney.

The king was very quick sighted in discerning difficulties, and raising objections, and very slow in mastering them. Clarendon.

SIGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from sight and full.] Perspicuity; clearness of sight.

Not in use.

But still, although we fail of perfect rightfulness,
Seek we to tame these childish superfluities;
Let us not wink, though void of purest sightfulness. Sidney.

SIGHTLESS. adj. [from sight.]

1. Wanting sight; blind.

The latest tracts, the giddy heights explore,
Of all who blindly creep or sightless soar. Pope.

2. Not sightly; offensive to the eye; displeasing to look at.

Full of displeasing blots and sightless stains,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending toarks.
Shakespeare.

SIGHTLY. adj. [from sight.] Pleasing to the eye; striking to the view.

It lies as sightly on the back of him,
As great Alcides shews upon an ass.

Their having two eyes and ears so placed, is more sightly and useful.

A great many have sightly horses were brought out, and only one plain nag that made sport.

We have thirty members, the most sightly of all her majesty's subjects; we elected a president by his height.

SIGIL. n. s. [sigillum, Lat.] Seal; signature.

Sorceries to raise th' infernal pow'rs,
And sigils fram'd in planetary hours.

SIGN. n. s. [signe, Fr. signum, Lat.]

1. A token of any thing; that by which any thing is shown.

Signs must resemble the things they signify.

Signs for communication may be contrived from any variety of objects of one kind appertaining to either sense.

To express the passions which are seated in the heart by outward signs, is one great precept of the painters, and very difficult to perform.

When any one uses any term, he may have in his mind a determined idea which he makes it the sign of, and to which he should keep it steadily annexed.

2. A wonder; a miracle; a prodigy.

If they will not hearken to the voice of the first sign, they will not believe the latter sign. Er. iv. 8.

3. A picture hung at a door to give notice what is sold within.

I found my miss, struck hands, and pray'd him tell,

To hold acquaintance still, where he did dwell;
He barely nam'd the street, promis'd the wine,
But his kind wife gave me the very sign. Donne.

Underneath an alehouse ' paltry sign.

True sorrow's like to wine,
That which is good does never need a sign-Suckling.

Wit and fancy are not employed in any one article so much as that of contriving signs to hang over houses.

4. A monument; a memorial.

An outward and visible sign of an inward and spiritual grace.

The fire devoured two hundred and fifty men,
and they became a sign.

5. A constellation in the zodiack.

There stay until the twelve celestial signs
Have brought about their annual reckoning.

Now did the sign reign, and the constellation was come, under which Perkin should appear.

After ev'ry foe subdued, the sun
Thrice through the signs his annual race shall run.

6. Note or token given without words.

They made signs to his father.

7. Mark of distinction; cognizance.

The ensign of Messiah blaz'd,
Aloft by angels borne, his sign in heav'n.

8. Typical representation; symbol.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative; but what they represent is as certainly delivered to us as the symbols themselves.

9. A subscription of one's name: as, a sign manual.

To SIGN. v. a. [signo, Lat.]

1. To mark.

You sign your place and calling in full seeming,
With meekness and humility, but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

2. [Signer, Fr.] To ratify by hand or seal.
Be pleas'd to sign these papers: they are all
Of great concern.

3. To betoken; to signify; to represent typically.

The sacraments and symbols are just such as they seem; but because they are made to be signs of a secret mystery, they receive the names of what themselves do sign.

SIGNAL. n. s. [signal, Fr. sennale, Span.] Notice given by a sign; a sign that gives notice.

The weary sun hath made a golden set,
And, by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives signal of a goodly day to-morrow.

Scarce the dawning day began to spring,
As, at a signal giv'n, the streets with clamours ring.

SIGNAL. adj. [signal, Fr.] Eminent; memorable; remarkable.

He was esteemed more by the parliament, for the signal acts of cruelty committed upon the Irish.

The Thames frozen twice in one year, so as men to walk on it, is a very signal accident.

SIGNALITY. n. s. [from signal.] Quality of something remarkable or memorable.

Of the ways whereby they enquired and determined its signality, the first was natural, arising from physical causes.

It seems a signality in providence, in erecting your society in such a juncture of dangerous humours.

To SIGNALIZE. v. a. [signaler, Fr.] To make eminent; to make remarkable.

Many, who have endeavoured to signalize themselves by works of this nature, plainly discover that they are not acquainted with arts and sciences.

Some one eminent spirit, having signalized his valour and fortune in defence of his country, or by popular arts at home, becomes to have great influence on the people.

SIGNALLY. adv. [from signal.] Eminently; remarkably; memorably.

Persons signally and eminently obliged, yet missing of the utmost of their greedy designs in swallowing both gifts and giver too, instead of thanks for received kindnesses, have betook themselves to barbarous threatenings.

SIGNATION. n. s. [from signo, Lat.]
Sign given; act of betokening.

A horseshoe Baptista Porta hath thought too low a signation, he raised unto a lunar representation.

SIGNATURE. n. s. [signature, Fr. sig-natura, from signo, Lat.]

1. A sign or mark impressed upon any thing; a stamp; a mark.

The brain being well furnished with various traces, signatures, and images, will have a rich treasure always ready to be offered to the soul.

That natural and indelible signature of God, which human souls, in their first origin, are supposed to be stamp'd with, we have no need of in disputes against atheism.

Vulgar parents cannot stamp their race
With signatures of such majestick grace.

2. A mark upon any matter, particularly upon plants, by which their nature or medicinal use is pointed out.

All bodies work by the communication of their nature, or by the impression and signatures of their motions; the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former, and the species audible of the latter.

Some plants bear a very evident signature of their nature and use.

Seek out for plants and signatures,
To quack of universal cures.

Herbs are described by marks and signatures, so far as to distinguish them from one another.

3. Proof drawn from marks.

The most despicable pieces of decayed nature are curiously wrought with eminent signatures of divine wisdom.

Some rely on certain marks and signatures of their election, and others on their belonging to some particular church or sect.

4. [Among printers.] Some letter or figure to distinguish different sheets.

SIGNATURIST. n. s. [from signature.]
One who holds the doctrine of signatures. A word little used.

Signaturists seldom omit what the ancients delivered, drawing unto inference received distinctions.

SIGNER. n. s. [from sign.] One that signs.

SIGNET. n. s. [signette, Fr.] A seal commonly used for the seal manual of a king.

I've been bold

To them to use your signet and your name.

Here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not, and the signet.

Give thy signet, bracelets, and staff.

He delivered him his private signet.
Proof of my life my royal signet made.
The impression of a signet ring.

SIGNIFICANCE, } n. s. [from signify.]
SIGNIFICANCY. }

1. Power of signifying; meaning.

Speaking is a sensible expression of the notions of the mind, by discriminations of utterance of voice, used as signs, having by consent several de-terminate significancies.

If he declares he intends it for the honour of another, he takes away by his words the significance of his action.

2. Force; energy; power of impressing the mind.

The clearness of conception and expression, the boldness maintained to majesty, the significancy and sound of words, not strained into bombast, must escape our transient view upon the theatre.

As far as this duty will admit of privacy, our Saviour hath enjoined it in terms of particular significancy and force.

I have been admiring the wonderful significancy of that word persecution, and what various interpretations it hath acquired.

5. Importance; moment; consequence.

How fatal would such a distinction have proved in former reigns, when many a circumstance of less significancy has been construed into an overt act of high treason.

SIGNIFICANT. adj. [significant, Fr. significans, Lat.]

1. Expressive of something beyond the exterior mark.

Since you are tongue-tied, and so loth to speak,
In dumb significants proclaim your thoughts.

2. Betokening; standing as a sign of something.

It was well said of Plotinus, that the stars were significant, but not efficient.

3. Expressive or representative in an eminent degree; forcible to impress the intended meaning.

Whereas it may be objected, that to add to religious duties such rites and ceremonies as are significant, is to institute new sacraments. Hooker.

Common life is full of this kind of significant expressions, by knocking, beckoning, frowning, and pointing; and dumb persons are sagacious in the use of them. Holder on Speech.

The Romans joined both devices, to make the emblem the more significant; as, indeed, they could not too much extol the learning and military virtues of this emperor. Addison.

4. Important; momentous. A low word.

SIGNIFICANTLY. adv. [from significant.] With force of expression.

Christianity is known in scripture by no name so significantly as by the simplicity of the gospel. South.

SIGNIFICATION. n. s. [signification, Fr. significatio, Lat. from signify.]

1. The act of making known by signs.

A lye is properly a species of injustice, and a violation of the right of that person to whom the false speech is directed; for all speaking, or signification of one's mind, implies an act or address of one man to another. South.

2. Meaning expressed by a sign or word.

An adjective requireth another word to be joined with him, to shew his signification. Accidence.
Brute animals make divers motions to have several significations, to call, warn, cherish, and threaten. Holder.

SIGNIFICATIVE. adj. [significatif, Fr. from signify.]

1. Betokening by an external sign.

The holy symbols or signs are not barely significative, but what by divine institution they represent and testify unto our souls, is truly and certainly delivered unto us. Brerewood.

2. Forcible; strongly expressive.

Neither in the degrees of kindred they were destitute of significative words; for whom we call grandfather, they called caldfader; whom we call great-grandfather, they called thirdafader. Camden's Remains.

SIGNIFICATORY. n. s. [from signify.] That which signifies or betokens.

Here is a double significatory of the spirit, a word and a sign. Taylor.

To SIGNIFY. v. a. [signifier, Fr. significo, Lat.]

1. To declare by some token or sign; sometimes simply to declare.

Stephano, signify

Within the house your mistress is at hand. Shak.

The maid from that ill omen turn'd her eyes,

Nor knew what signified the boding sign,

But found the pow'rs displeas'd. Dryden.

Those parts of nature, into which the chaos was divided, they signified by dark and obscure names; as the night, Tartarus, and Oceanus.

Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To mean; to express.

Life 's but a walking shadow; a poor player,

That struts and frets his hour upon the stage,

And then is heard no mor e! It is a tale.

Told by an ideot, full of sound and fury,

Signifying nothing! Shakesp. Macbeth.

By scripture, antiquity, and all ecclesiastical writers, it is constantly appropriated to Saturday the day of the Jews Sabbath, and but of late years used to signify the Lord's day. Nelson.

3. To import; to weigh. This is seldom used but interrogatively, what signifies? or with much, little, or nothing.

Though he that sins frequently, and repents frequently, gives reason to believe his repentances before God signify nothing, yet that is nothing to us. Taylor.

What signifies the splendour of courts, considering the slavish attendances that go along with it. L'Estrange.

He hath one way more, which, although it signify little to men of sober reason, yet unappolly hits the suspicious humour of men, that governors have a design to impose

If the first of these fail, the power of Adam, were it never so great, will signify nothing to the present societies in the world. Locke.

What signifies the people's consent in making and repealing laws, if the person who administers hath no tie? Swift.

4. To make known; to declare.

I'll to the king, and signify to him

That thus I have resign'd to you my charge.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

He sent and signified it by his angel unto John.

Rev. i. 1.

The government should signify to the protestants of Ireland, that want of silver is not to be remedied. Swift.

To SIGNIFY. v. n. To express meaning with force.

If the words be but comely and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin. Ben Jonson.

SIGNIORY. n. s. [signoria, Ital.]

1. Lordship; dominion.

At that time

Through all the signiories it was the first,

And Prospero the prime duke. Shakesp. Tempest.

The earls, their titles, and their signiories,

They must restore again. Daniel's Civil War.

My brave progenitors, by valour, zeal,

Gain'd those high honours, princely signiories,

And proud prerogatives. West.

2. It is used by Shakespeare for seniority.

If ancient sorrow be most reverent,

Give mine the benefit of signiory,

And let my griefs frown on the upper hand.

Shakesp. Richard III.

SIGNPOST. n. s. [sign and post.] That upon which a sign hangs.

He should share with them in the preserving

A shed or signpost. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This noble invention of our author's hath been copied by so many signpost dawbers, that now 'tis grown fulsome, rather by their want of skill than by the commonness. Dryden.

SIKER. adj. and adv. The old word for sure, or surely. Spenser.

SIKERNESS. n. s. [from siker.] Sureness; safety.

SILENCE. n. s. [silence, Fr. silentium, Lat.]

1. The state of holding peace; forbearance of speech.

Unto me men gave ear, and waited and kept silence at my counsel. Job, xxix. 21.

I suffer not a woman to teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

1 Timothy ii. 12.

First to himself he inward silence broke. Milton.

Speech submissively withdraws

From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause;

Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

Here all their rage and ev'n their murmurs cease,

And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.

2. Habitual taciturnity; not loquacity.

I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none but parrots. Shakesp.

3. Secrecy.

4. Stillness; not noise.

Hail, happy groves! calm and secure retreat

Of sacred silence, rest's eternal seat! Roscommon.

5. Not mention; oblivion; obscurity.

Nameless in dark oblivion let them dwell;

For strength from truth divided, and from just,

Ilaudable, nought merits but dispraise

And ignominy; yet to glory aspires,

Vain-glorious, and through infamy seeks fame; Therefore eternal silence be their doom. Milton.

Thus fame shall be achiev'd,

And what most merits fame in silence bid. Milton.

SILENCE. interj. An authoritative restraint of speech.

Sir, have pity; I'll be his surety.

—Silence! one word more

Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. Shak.

To SILENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To oblige to hold peace; to forbid to speak.

We must suggest the people, that to 's pow'r

He would have made them mules, silenc'd their pleaders, and Disproportioned their freedoms. Shakesp.

The ambassador is silenc'd. Shak. Henry VIII.

Silence that dreadful bell; it frights the isle

From her propriety. Shakespeare's Othello.

This passed as an oracle, and silenc'd those that moved the question. Bacon's Henry VII.

Thus could not the mouths of worthy martyrs be silenc'd, who being exposed unto wolves, gave loud expressions of their faith, and were heard as high as heaven. Brown.

This would silence all further opposition. Claren.

Since in dark sorrow I my days did spend,

I could not silence my complaints. Denham.

Had they duly considered the extent of infinite knowledge and power, these would have silenc'd their scruples, and they had adored the amazing mystery. Rogers.

If it please him altogether to silence me, so that I shall not only speak with difficulty, but wholly be disabled to open my mouth, to any articulate utterance; yet I hope he will give me grace, even in my thoughts, to praise him. Wake.

2. To still.

These dying lovers, and their floating sons,

Suspend the fight, and silence all our guns. Waller.

The thund'r'er spoke nor durst the queen reply;

A reverend horror silenc'd all the sky. Pope's Iliad.

SILENT. adj. [silens, Lat.]

1. Not speaking; mute.

O my God, I cry in the day time, and in the night season I am not silent. Psalms xxii. 2.

Silent, and in face

Confounded, long they sat as stricken mute. Milt.

2. Not talkative; not loquacious.

Ulysses, adds he, was the most eloquent and most silent of men; he knew that a word spoken never wrought so much good as a word concealed. Broom.

3. Still; having no noise.

Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,

The time of the night when Troy was set on fire.

The time when screech-owls cry, and ban-dogs howl. Shakespeare.

Now is the pleasant time,

The cool, the silent, save where silence yields

To the night-warbling bird. Milton.

4. Wanting efficacy. I think an Hebraism.

Second and instrumental causes, together with nature itself, without that operative faculty which

God gave them, would become silent, virtuelless, and dead. Raleigh's History.

The sun to me is dark,

And silent as the moon,

When she deserts the night,

Hid in her vaulting interlunar cave. Milton.

5. Not mentioning.

This new created world, whereof in hell

Fame is not silent. Milton.

SILENTLY. adv. [from silent.]

1. Without speech.

When with one three nations join to fight,

They silently confess that one more brave. Dryden.

For me they beg; each silently

Demands thy grace, and seems to watch thy eye. Dryden.

2. Without noise.

You to a certain victory are led;

Your men all arm'd stand silently within. Dryden.

3. Without mention.

S I L

The difficulties remain still, till he can show who is meant by right heir, in all those cases where the present possessor hath no son: this he silently passes over. Locke.

SIL'ICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, Lat. it should be therefore written cilicious.] Made of hair.

The silicious and hairy vests of the strictest orders of friars derive their institution from St. John and Elias. Brown.

A purer web the silk-worm never drew. Dryden.

SIL'KY. adj. [from silk.]

1. Made of silk.

2. Soft; pliant.

These kinds of knaves, in plainness,
Harbour more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silky ducking observants
That stretch their duties nicely. Shakesp. King Lear.

SILL. n. s. [ryl, Sax. sucil, Fr. sulle, Dut.] The timber or stone at the foot of the door.

The farmer's goose,
Grown fat with corn, and sitting still,
Can scarce get o'er the barn-door sill;
And hardly waddles forth. Swift.

SIL'LABUB. n. s. [This word has exercised the etymologists. Minshew thinks it corrupted from swilling bubbles. Junius omits it. Henshaw, whom Skinner follows, deduces it from the Dutch sulle a pipe, and buyck a paunch; because sillabubs are commonly drunk through a spout, out of a jug with a large belly. It seems more probably derived from esil, in old English, vinegar; esil a bouc, vinegar for the mouth, vinegar made pleasant.] Curds made by milking upon vinegar.

Joan takes her neat rubb'd pail, and now She trips to milk the sand-red cow;
Where, for some sturdy foot-ball swain,
Joan strokes a sillabub or twain. Wotton.

A feast,
By some rich farmer's wife and sister drest,
Might be resembled to a sick man's dream,
Where all ideas huddling run so fast,
That sillabubs come first, and soups the last. King.

SIL'LLY. adv. [from silly.] In a silly manner; simply; foolishly.

I wonder much what thou and I

But suck'd on childish pleasures silly?
Or slumber'd we in the seven sleepers den? Donne.
We are caught as silly as the bird in the net.

Do, do, look silly, good colonel; 'tis a decent melancholy after an absolute defeat. Dryden.

SIL'LLINESS. n. s. [from silly.] Simplicity; weakness; harmless folly.

The silliness of the person does not derogate from the dignity of his character. L'Estrange.

SIL'LLY. adj. [selig, Germ. Skinner.]

1. Harmless; innocent; inoffensive; plain; artless.

2. Weak; helpless.

After long storms,
In dread of death and dangerous dismay,
With which my silly bark was tossed sore,
I do at length descry the happy shore. Spenser.

3. Foolish; witless.

Perhaps their loves, or else their sheep,
Was that did their silly thoughts so busy keep. Milt.
The meanest subjects censure the action of the greatest prince; the silliest servants, of the wisest master. Temple.

I have no discontent at living here; besides what arises from a silly spirit of liberty, which I resolve to throw off. Swift.

Such parts of writings as are stupid or silly, false or mistaken, should become subjects of occasional criticism. Watts.

He is the companion of the silliest people in their most silly pleasure; he is ready for every impertinent entertainment and diversion. Law.

SIL'LYHOW. n. s. [Perhaps from ryly happy, and heoꝝ the head.] The membrane that covers the head of the fetus.

Great conceits are raised of the membranous covering called the sillyhow, sometimes found about the heads of children upon their birth.

Brown's Vul. Err.

SILT. n. s. Mud; slime.

Several trees of oak and fir stand in firm earth below the moor near Thorny, in all probability covered by inundation, and the silt and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

SIL'VAN. adj. [from silva, Lat.] Woody; full of woods.

Betwixt two rows of rocks, a silvan scene
Appears above, and groves for ever green. Dryden.

SIL'VER. n. s. [æolpæp, Sax. silver, Dut.]

1. Silver is a white and hard metal, next in weight to gold. Watts's Logick.

2. Any thing of soft splendour.

Pallas, piteous of her plaintive cries,
In slumber clos'd her silver-streaming eyes. Pope.

3. Money made of silver.

SIL'VER. adj.

1. Made of silver.

Put my silver cup in the sack's mouth. Gen. xlv. 2.

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow, Fair silver-shafted queen for ever chaste. Milton.
The silver-shafted goddess of the place. Pope's Odyssey.

2. White like silver.

Of all the race of silver-winged flies
Was none more favourable, nor more fair,
Than Clarion. Spenser.

Old Salisbury, shame to thy silver hair,
Thou mad misleader of thy brain-sick son. Shakesp.

The great in honour are not always wise,
Nor judgment under silver tresses lies. Sandys.
Others on silver lakes and rivers bath'd
Their downy breast. Milton.

3. Having a pale lustre.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-heams, when their fresh rays have smote

The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright,
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light. Shakesp.

4. Soft of voice. This phrase is Italian, voce argentina.

From all the groves, which with the heavenly noises
Of their sweet instruments were wont to sound,
And th' hollow hills, from which their silver voices

Were wont redoubled echoes to rebound,
Did now rebound with nought but rueful cries,
And yelling shrieks thrown up into the skies. Spenser.

It is my love that calls upon my name;
How silver sweet sound lovers tongues by night!
Like softest musick to attending ears. Shakesp.

To SIL'VER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover superficially with silver.

There he fools alive, I wis,
Silver'd o'er, and so was this. Shakesp.
The splendour of silver is more pleasing to some eyes than that of gold; as in cloth of silver, and silvered rapiers.

Silvering will sully and cawker more than gilding. Bacon.

A gilder shew'd me a ring silver'd over with mercurial fumes, which he was then to restore to its native yellow. Boyle.

2. To adorn with mild lustre.

Here retir'd, the sinking billows sleep,
And smiling calmness silver'd o'er the deep. Pope.

SIL'VERBEATER. n. s. [silver and beat.]

One that foliates silver.

Silverbeaters choose the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

S I M

SILVERLING. n. s. A silver coin.
A thousand vines, at a thousand silverlings, shall be for briars and thorns. Isaiah, vii. 23.

SILVERLY. adv. [from silver.] With the appearance of silver.

Let me wipe off this honourable dew
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks. Shakesp.
SILVERSMITH. n. s. [silver and smith.]
One that works in silver.

Demetrius, a silversmith, made shrines for Diana.
Acts, xix.

SILVERTHISTLE. n. s. [acanthium vul- gare, Lat.] A plant.

SILVERWEED. n. s. [argentina, Lat.] A plant.

SILVERTREE. n. s. [conocarpodendron.]
A plant. Miller.

SILVERY. adj. [from silver.] Besprinkled with silver.

A gritty stone, with small spangles of a white silvery tale in it. Woodward on Fossils.

Of all th' enamell'd race whose silvery wing
Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,
Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air.
Dunciad.

SIMAR. n. s. [simarre, Fr.] A woman's robe.

The ladies dress'd in rich simars were seen,
Of Florence satten, flower'd with white and green.
Dryden.

SIMILAR. } adj. [similaire, Fr. from SIMILARY. } similis, Lat.]

1. Homogeneous; having one part like another; uniform.

Minerals appear to the eye to be perfectly simi- lar, as metals; or at least to consist but of two or three distinct ingredients, as cinabar. Boyle.

2. Resembling; having resemblance.

The laws of England, relative to those matters, were the original and exemplar from whence those similar or parallel laws of Scotland were derived.
Hale's Common Law of England.

SIMILARITY. n. s. [from similar.] Likeness; uniformity.

The blood and chyle are mixed, and by attrition attenuated; by which the mixture acquires a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts. Arbutnot.

SIMILE. n. s. [simile, Lat.] A comparison by which any thing is illustrated or aggrandized.

Their rhimes,
Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Lucentio slipp'd me, like his greyhound,
Which runs himself, and catches for his master,
—A good swift simile, but something currish. Shak.

In argument,
Similes are like songs in love;
They much describe, they nothing prove. Prior.

Poets, to give a loose to a warm fancy, not only expatiate in their similes, but introduce them too frequently. Garth.

SIMILITUDE. n. s. [similitudo, Fr. simi- *litud*o, Lat.]

1. Likeness; resemblance.

Similitudo of substance would cause attraction, where the body is wholly freed from the motion of gravity; for then lead would draw lead.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Our immortal souls, while righteous, are by God himself beautified with the title of his own image and similitudo. Raleigh.

Let us make man in our image, man
In our similitudo, and let them rule
Over the fish and fowl. Milton.

Similitudo to the Deity was not regarded in the things they gave divine worship to, and looked on as symbols of the god they worshipped. Stillingfleet.

If we compare the picture of a man, drawn: at the years of seventeen, with that of the same person at the years of threescore, hardly the least trace of similitudo of one face can be found in the other.

S I M

South.

Fate some future hard shall join,
In sad similitudo of griefs to mine;
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more. Pope.

2. Comparison; simile.

Plutarch, in the first of his tractates, by sundry similitudes, shows us the force of education. Wotton.

Tasso, in his similitudes, never departed from the woods; that is, all his comparisons were taken from the country. Dryden.

SIMITAR. n. s. [See CIMETER.] A crooked or falcated sword with a convex edge.

To SIMMER. v. n. [A word made probably from the sound, but written, by Skin- ner, simber.] To boil gently; to boil with a gentle hissing.

Place a vessel, in warm sand, increasing the heat by degrees, till the spirit simmer or boil a little. Boyle.

Their vital heat and moisture may always not only simber in one sluggish tenour, but sometimes boil up higher, and seeth over; the fire of life being more than ordinarily kindled upon some emergent occasion. More against Atheism.

SIMNEL. n. s. [simnellus, low Lat.] A kind of sweet bread or cake.

SIMO'NIACK. n. s. [simoniaque, Fr. simo- niacus, Lat.] One who buys or sells preferment in the church.

If the bishop alleges that the person presented is a simoniack, or unlearned, they are to proceed to trial. Ayliffe.

SIMON'ACAL. adj. [from simoniae.]
Guilty of buying or selling ecclesiastical preferment.

Add to your criminals the simonicae ladies, who seduce the sacred order into the difficulty of breaking their troth. Spectator.

SIMONY. n. s. [simonie, Fr. simonia, Lat.] The crime of buying or selling church preferment.

One that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom; simony was fair play,
His own opinion was his law. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Many papers remain in private hands, of which one is of simony; and I wish the world might see it, that it might undeceive some patrons, who think they have discharged that great trust to God and man, if they take no money for a living, though it may be parted with for other ends less justifiable.
Walton's Life of Bishop Sanderson.

No simony nor sinecure is known;
There works the bee, no honey for the drone.
Garth.

To SIMPER. v. n. [from rymbelan, Sax. to keep holiday, Skinner. He derives simmer from the same word, and confirms his etymology by writing it simber.
It is perhaps derived from simmer, as it may seem to imitate the dimples of water gently boiling.] To smile; generally to smile foolishly.

A made countenance about her mouth between simpering and smiling, her head bowed somewhat down, seemed to languish with over-much idleness.
Sidney.

I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women, as I perceive by your simpering none of you hate them, to like as much as pleases them.
Shakesp As you like it.

Stars above simper and shine,
As having keys unto thy love, while poor I pine.
Herbert.

Let then the fair one beautifully cry,
Or drest in smiles of sweet Cecilia shine,
With simpering angels palms, and harps divine.
Pope.

S I M

SIMPER. n. s. [from the verb.] Smile;
generally a foolish smile.

The wit at his elbow stared him in the face, with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres into a kind of simper, and at length burst out into an open laugh. Addison.

Great Tibbaid nods: the proud Parnassian suer,
The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
Mix on his look. Pope's Dunciad.

SIMPLE. adj. [simplex, Lat. simple, Fr.]

1. Plain; artless; unskilled; undesigning; sincere; harmless.

Were it not to satisfy the minds of the simpler sort of men, these nice curiosities are not worthy the labour which we bestow to answer them.
Hooker.

They meet upon the way
A simple husbandman in garments grey.
Hubberd's Tale.

I am a simple woman, much too weak
To oppose your cunning. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

O Ethelinda,
My heart was made to fit and pair with thine,
Simple and plain, and fraught with artless tenderness. Rowe.

In simple manners all the secret lies;
Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise.
Young.

2. Uncompounded; unmingled; single;
only one; plain; not complicated.

To make the compound pass for the rich metal simple, is an adulteration or counterfeiting. Bacon.

Simple philosophically signifies single, but vulgarly foolish. Watts.

Among substances, some are called simple, some compound, whether taken in a philosophical or vulgar sense. If we take simple and compound in a vulgar sense, then all those are simple substances which are generally esteemed uniform in their natures: so every herb is called a simple, and every metal a mineral; though the chymist perhaps may find all his several elements in each of them.
Watts's Logic.

Let Newton, pure intelligence, whom God
To mortals lent, to trace his boundless works,
From laws, sublimely simple, speak thy fame
In all philosophy. Thomson's Summer

3. Silly; not wise; not cunning.

The simple believeth every word; but the prudent man looketh well to his going. Prov. xv.

Dick, simple odes too many shew ye
My servile complaisance to Cblue. Prior.

SIMPLE. n. s. [simple, Fr.] A single ingredient in a medicine; a drug. It is popularly used for an herb.

Of simples in these groves that grow,
We'll learn the perfect skill;
The nature of each herb to know,
Which cures, and which can kill.
Drayton's Cynth.

Our foster nurse of nature is repose
The which he lacks; that to provoke in him,
Are many simples operative, whose power
Will close the eye of anguish. Shakesp. King Lear.

He would ope his leathern scrip,
And shew me simples of a thousand names,
Telling their strange and vigorous faculties. Milton.

What virtue is in this remedy lies in the naked simple itself, as it comes over from the Indies.
Temple.

Around its entries nodding poppies grow,
And all cool simples that sweet rest bestow;
Night from the plants their sleepy virtue drains,
And passing sheds it on the silent plains. Dryden.

Med'cine is mine: what herbs and simples grow
In fields and forests, all their powers I know.
Dryden.

To SIMPLE. v. n. To gather simples.

As once the foaming boar he chas'd,
Lascivious Circe well the youth survey'd,
As simpling on the flow'ry hills he stray'd. Garth.

SIMPLENESS. n. s. [from simple.] The quality of being simple.

I will hear that play :

For never any thing can be amiss,
When simplicity and duty tender it. Shakesp.
Such perfect elements may be found in these four known bodies that we call pure ones; for they are least compounded, and approach most to the simplicity of the elements. Digby.

SIMPLER. n. s. [from simple.] A simplistic; an herbarist.

SIMPLESS. n. s. [simplesse, Fr.] Simplicity; silliness; folly. An obsolete word.

Their weeds been not so nighly were,
Such simplesse mought them shroud,
They beenyclad in purple and pall,
They reign and rulen over all. Spenser's Pastorals.

SIMPLETON. n. s. [from simple.] A silly mortal; a triffler; a foolish fellow.
A low word.

A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down.

Those letters may prove a discredit, as lasting as mercenary scribblers, or curious simpletons, can make it. L'Esrange.

SIMPLICITY. n. s. [simplicitas, Lat.
simplicité, Fr.]

1. Plainness; artlessness; not subtilty; not cunning; not deceit.

The sweet-minded Philoclea was in their degree of well-doing, to whom the not knowing of evil serveth for a ground of virtue, and hold their inward powers in better form, with an unspotted simplicity, than many who rather cunningly seek to know what goodness is, thar. willingly take unto themselves the following of it. Sidney.

They keep the reverend simplicity of ancient times. Hooker.

In low simplicity,
He lends out money gratis, and brings down
The rate of usance. Shakesp.

Marquis Dorset, a man for his harmless simplicity neither misliked nor much regarded, was created Duke. Hayward.

Suspicion sleeps
At wisdom's gate, and to simplicity
Resigns her charge. Milton.

Of manners gentle, of affections mild;
In wit a man, simplicity a child. Pope.

The native elegance and simplicity of her manners were accompanied with real benevolence of heart. Female Quixote.

2. Plainness; not subtilty; not abstruseness.

Those enter into farther speculation herein, which is the itch of curiosity, and content not themselves with the simplicity of that doctrine, within which this church hath contained herself.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

3. Plainness; not finery.

They represent our poet, when he left Mantua for Rome, dressed in his best habit, too fine for the place whence he came, and yet retaining part of its simplicity. Dryden.

4. Singleness; not composition; state of being uncompounded.

Mandrakes afford a papaverous unpleasant odour in the leaf or apple, discoverable in their simplicity and mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We are led to conceive that great machine of the world to have been once in a state of greater simplicity than now it is, as to conceive a watch once in its first and simple materials. Burnet.

5. Weakness; silliness.

Many that know what they should do, would nevertheless dissemble it, and, to excuse themselves, pretend ignorance and simplicity, which now they cannot. Hooker.

How long, ye simple ones, will ye love simplicity, and fools hate knowledge? Prov. i. 22.

SIMPLIST. n. s. [from simple.] One skilled in simples.

VOL II.

A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken
by some good simplists for amomum. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIMPLY. adv. [from simple.]

1. Without art; without subtlety; plainly; artlessly.

Accomplishing great things by things deem'd weak;

Subverting worldly strong and worldly wise
By simply meek. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Of itself; without addition.

This question about the changing of laws con-cerneth only such laws as are positive, and do make that now good or evil, by being commanded or forbidden, which otherwise of itself were not simply the one or the other. Hooker.

3. Merely; solely.

Under man, no creature in the world is capable of felicity and bliss; because their chiefest perfection consisteth in that which is best for them, but not in that which is simply best, as ours doth.

I will eat and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall; simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Shakesp.

To say or to do aught with memory and imitation, no purpose or respect should sooner move us, than simply the love of God and of mankind.

4. Foolishly; sillily.

SIMULAR. n. s. [from simulo, Lat.] One that counterfeits.

Wide thee, thou bloody band,
Thou perjurer, thou simular of virtue,
That art incestuous. Shakesp. King Lear.

SIMULATION. n. s. [simulation, Fr. simulatio, from simulo, Lat.] That part of hypocrisy which pretends that to be which is not.

Simulation is a vice rising of a natural falseness, or fearfulness; or of a mind that hath some main faults; which, because a man must needs disguise, it maketh him practise simulation. Bacon.

For the unquestionable virtues of her person and mind, he well expressed his love in an act and time of no simulation towards his end, bequeathing her all his mansion-houses, and a power to dispose of his whole personal estate. Wotton.

For distinction sake, a deceiving by word is commonly called a lye; and deceiving by actions, postures, or behaviour, is called simulation or hypocrisy. South.

SIMULTANEOUS. adj. [simultaneus, Lat.]

Acting together; existing at the same time.

If the parts may all change places at the same time, without any respect of priority or posteriority to each other's motion, why may not bullets, closely crowded in a box, move by a like mutual and simultaneous exchange? Glanville.

SIN. n. s. [jyn, Sax.]

1. An act against the laws of God; a violation of the laws of religion.

It is great sin to swear unto a sin,
But greater sin to keep a sinful oath. Shakesp.

Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin absolver, and my friend profest,
To mangle me with that word banishment?

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Thou knowest, Lord, that I am pure from all sin with man. Tob. iii. 14.

2. Habitual negligence of religion.

Sin, death, and hell, have set their marks upon him,

And all their ministers attend on him. Shakesp.

Dishonest shame
Of nature's works: honour dishonourable,
Sin-bred, how have ye troubled all mankind!

3. A plant so unlike a rose, it hath been mistaken
by some good simplists for amomum. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

4. I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould. Milton.

5. Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand? Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world; sin and holiness rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watts's Logick.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless
rohe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

6. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of the sin-worn mould. Milton.

Is there no means, but that a sin-sick land
Should be let blood with such a boist'rous hand? Daniel.

Vice or virtue chiefly imply the relation of our actions to men in this world; sin and holiness
rather imply their relation to God and the other world. Watts's Logick.

Light from her thought, a summer's careless
rohe,
Fell each affection of this sin-worn globe. Brooke.

3. It is used by Shakespeare emphatically for a man enormously wicked.

Thou scarlet sin, robb'd this bewailing land
Of noble Buckingham. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

TO SIN. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To neglect the laws of religion; to violate the laws of religion.

Stand in awe and sin not. Psaln iv. 4.
Many also have perish'd, err'd, and sinned for wemen. Esdras.

He shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death. 1 John, v. 16.

2. To offend against right.

I am a man
More sin'd against than sinning. Shakesp.

And who but wishes to invert the laws
Of order, sins against th' eternal cause. Pope's Essay on Man.

SINCE. adv. [formed by contraction from sithence, or sith thence, from sin + thence, Sax.]

1. Because that.

Since the clearest discoveries we have of other spirits, besides God and our own souls, are imparted by revelation, the information of them should be taken from thence. Locke.

Since truth and constancy are vain,
Since neither love, nor sense of pain,
Nor force of reason, can persuade,
Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

2. From the time that.

Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day?

He is the most improved mind since you saw him that ever was. Pope.

3. Ago; before this.

About two years since, it so fell out, that he was brought to a great lady's house. Sidney.

Spies held me in chace, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about; else had I, Sir,
Half an hour since, brought my report.

A law was made no longer since than the twenty-eighth of Henry the Eighth. Davies's Hist. of Irel.

How many ages since has Virgil writ? Roscommon.

SINCE. preposition. After; reckoning from some time past to the time present.

He since the morning hour set out from heav'n.
Milton.

If such a man arise, I have a model by which he may build a nobler poem than any extant since the ancients. Dryden.

SINCERE. adj. [sincerus, Lat. sincere, Fr.]

1. Unhurt; uninjured.

He tried a tough well chosen spear;
Th' inviolable body stood sincere. Dryden.

2. Pure; unmingled.

Pardon my tears, 'tis joy which bids them flow,
A joy which never was sincere till now;
That which my conquest gave I could not prize,
Or 'twas imperfect, till I saw your eyes. Dryden.

The pleasures of sense, beasts taste sincere and pure always, without mixture or alloy; without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Aterbury.

Animal substances differ from vegetable, in that,
being reduced to ashes, they are perfectly insipid,

and in that there is no sincere acid in any animal juice.

In English I would have all Gallicisms avoided, that our tongue may be sincere, and that we may keep to our own language. Felton on the Classics.

3. Honest; undissembling; uncorrupt.

This top proud fellow,
Whom from the flow of gall I name not, but
From sincere motions by intelligence
I do know to be corrupt. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Nor troubled at these tidings from the earth,
Which your sincerest care could not prevent;
Foretold so lately what would come to pass,
When first this tempter cross'd the gulf from hell.

The more sincere you are, the better it will fare with you at the great day of account. In the mean while, give us leave to be sincere too, in condemning heartily what we heartily disapprove.

Through the want of a sincere intention of pleasing God in all our actions, we fall into such irregularities of life as, by the ordinary means of grace, we should have power to avoid.

SINCERELY. adv. [from sincere.] Honestly; without hypocrisy; with purity of heart.

The purer and perfecter our religion is, the worthier effects it hath in them who stedfastly and sincerely embrace it.

That you may, fair lady,
Perceive I speak sincerely, the king's majesty Does purpose honour to you. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

SINCERENESS. } n. s. [sincerité, Fr.
SINCERITY. } from sincere.]

1. Honesty of intention; purity of mind.

Jesus Christ has purchased for us terms of reconciliation, who will accept of sincerity instead of perfection; but then this sincerity implies our honest endeavours to do our utmost.

2. Freedom from hypocrisy.

In thy consort cease to fear a foe;
For thee she feels sincerity of woe. Pope's Odyssey

SINDON. n. s. [Lat.] A fold; a wrapper.

There were found a book and a letter, both written in fine parchment, and wrapped in sindons of linen.

SINE. n. s. [simus, Lat.] A right sine, in geometry, is a right line drawn from one end of an arch perpendicularly upon the diameter drawn from the other end of that arch; or it is half the chord of twice the arch.

Whatever inclinations the rays have to the plane of incidence, the sine of the angle of incidence of every ray, considered apart, shall have to the sine of the angle of refraction a constant ratio.

SINECURE. n. s. [sine without, and cura care, Lat.] An office which has revenuē without any employment.

A sinecure is a benefice without cure of souls.

he has been over-ridden, and so fatigated that he becomes gaunt-bellied, by a stiffness and contraction of the two sinews which are under his belly.

SINEWY. adj. [from sinew.]

1. Consisting of a sinew; nervous. The nerves and sinews are in poetry often confounded, from nervus, Latin, which signifies a sinew.

The sinewy thread my brain lets fall
Through every part,
Can tie those parts, and make me one of all.

2. Strong; nervous; vigorous; forcible.

And for thy vigour,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yields
To sinewy Ajax.

Worthy fellows, and like to prove
Most sinewy swordsmen.

From hallow'd ground th' unholly.

2. Wicked; not observant of religion; contrary to religion. It is used both of persons and things.

Thrice happy man, said then the father grave,
Whose staggering steps thy steady hand doth lead,
And shews the way his sinful soul to save,
Who better can the way to heaven read.

Nature herself, though pure of sinful thought,
Wrought in her so, that seeing me, she turn'd.

SINFULLY. adv. [from sinful.] Wickedly; not piously; not according to the ordinance of God.

S I N

All this from my remembrance brutish wrath
Sinfully pluck'd, and not a man of you
Had so much grace to put it in my mind.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and difficultly, and perhaps unsuccessfully too.

SINFULNESS. n. s. [from sinful.] Alienation from God; neglect or violation of the duties of religion; contrariety to religious goodness.

To shew thee what shall come in future days
To thee, and to thy offspring: good with bad
Expect to hear; supernatural grace contending
With sinfulness of men.

Peevishness, the general fault of sick persons, is equally to be avoided for the folly and sinfulness.

participle pass. sung. [jangan, Sax.
singia, Island. siaghen, Dut.]

1. To form the voice to melody; to articulate musically.

Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing:
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever sprung, as sun and showers
There had made a lasting spring.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And some for sorrow sung.

Dissentious numbers pestering streets, than see
Our tradesmen singing in their shops, and going
About their functions friendly.

The morning stars sang together.
Then shall the trees of the wood sing out at the presence of the Lord.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
Some in heroick verse divinely sing.

2. To utter sweet sounds inarticulately.

Thy heart no ruder than the rugged stone,
I might, like Orpheus, with my num'rous moan
Melt to compassion: now my trait'rous song
With thee conspires to do the singer wrong. Waller.

The birds know how to chuse their fare;
To peck this fruit they all forbear:
Those cheerful singers know not why
They should make any haste to die. Waller.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of singers. Dryden.

SINGINGMASTER. n. s. [sing and master.] One who teaches to sing.

He employed an itinerant singingmaster to instruct them rightly in the tunes of the Psalms. Addison's Spectator.

SINGLE. adj. [singulus, Lat.]

1. One; not double; not more than one.

The words are clear and easy, and their originals are of single signification without any ambiguity. South.

Some were single acts, though each complete;
But every act stood ready to repeat. Dryden.
Then Theseus join'd with bold Pirithous came,
A single concord in a double name. Dryden.

A lonely desert, and an empty land,
Shall scarce afford, for needful hours of rest,
A single house to their benighted guest. Addison on Italy.

Where the poesy or oratory shines, a single reading is not sufficient to satisfy a mind that has a true taste; nor can we make the fullest improvement of them without proper reviews. Watts on the Mind.

2. Particular; individual.

As no single man is born with a right of controlling the opinions of all the rest, so the world has no title to demand the whole time of any particular person. Pope.

If one single word were to express but one simple idea, and nothing else, there would be scarce any mistake. Watts.

3. Not compounded.

As simple ideas are opposed to complex, and single ideas to compound, so propositions are distinguished: the English tongue has some advantage above the learned languages, which have no usual word to distinguish single from simple. Watts.

4. Alone; having no companion; having no assistant.

Servant of God, well hast thou fought
The better fight, who single hast maintain'd Against revolted multitudes the cause of truth. Milton.

His wisdom such,
Three kingdoms wonder, and three kingdoms fear,
Whilst single he stood forth. Denham.

In sweet possession of the fairy place,
Single, and conscious to myself alone
Of pleasures to th' excluded world unknown. Dryden.

5. Unmarried.

Is the single man therefore blessed? no: as a walled town is more worthier than a village, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor. Shakesp.

Pygmalion
Abhor'd all womankind, but most a wife;
So single chose to live, and shunn'd to wed,
Well pleas'd to want a consort of his bed. Dryden.

6. Not complicated; not duplicated.

To make flowers double, is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary, double flowers, by neglecting and not removing, prove single. Bacon's Natural History.

7. Pure; uncorrupt; not double-minded; simple. A scriptural sense.

The light of the body is the eye: if thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. Matt. vi. 22.

8. That in which one is opposed to one.

He, when his country, threaten'd with alarms,
Shall more than once the Panick bands affright,
Shall kill the Gaulish king in single fight. Dryden's Æneid.

To SINGLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To chuse out from among others.

I saw him in the battle range about,
And how he singled Clifford forth. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Every man may have a peculiar favour, which, although not perceptible unto man, is yet sensible unto dogs, who hereby can single out their master in the dark. Bacon.

Dost thou already single me? I thought Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee. Milton's Agonis.
Begin, auspicious boy, to cast about Thy infant eyes, and with a smile thy mother single out. Dryden.

Single the lowliest of the am'rous youth;
Ask for his vows, but hope not for his truth. Prior.

2. To sequester; to withdraw.

Yea simply, saith Basil, and universally, whether it be in works of nature, or of voluntary choice, I see not any thing done as it should be, if it be wrought by an agent singling itself from consorts. Hooker.

3. To take alone.

Many men there are, than whom nothing is more commendable when they are singled; and yet, in society with others, none less fit to answer the duties which are looked for at their hands. Hooker.

SINUATION. n. s. [from sinuate.] A bending in and out.

The human brain is, in proportion to the body, much larger than the brains of brotes, in proportion to their bodies, and fuller of anfracts, or sinuations. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

SINUOUSITY. n. s. [from sinuous.] The quality of being sinuous.

SINUOUS. adj. [sinuex, Fr. from sinus, Lat.] Bending in and out.

Try with what disadvantage the voice will be carried in an horn, which is a line arched; or in a trumpet, which is a line retorted; or in some pipe that were sinuous. Bacon.

These, as a line, their long dimension drew,
 Streaking the ground with sinuous trace. Milton's Paradise Lost

In the dissections of horses, in the concave or sinuous part of the liver, whereat the gall is usually seated in quadrupeds, I discover an hollow, long, membranous substance. Brown.

SINUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A bay of the sea; an opening of the land. Plato supposeth his Atlantis to have sunk all into the sea: whether that he true or no, I do not think it impossible that some arms of the sea, or sinuses, might have had such an original. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Any fold or opening.

To SIP. v. a. [sipan, Sax. sippen, Dut.]

1. To drink by small draughts; to take, at one apposition of the cup to the mouth, no more than the mouth will contain. Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
 And sip with nymphs their elemental tea. Pope.

2. To drink in small quantities.

S I R

Find out the peaceful hermitage;
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth swell,
 And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To drink out of.

The winged nation o'er the forest flies:
 Then stooping on the meads and leafy bow'rs,
 They skim the floods, and sip the purple flow'rs. Dry.
To SIP. v. n. To drink a small quantity.

She rais'd it to her mouth with sober grace;
 Then sipping, offer'd to the next. Dryden's Aeneid.
SIP. n. s. [from the verb] A small draught; as much as the mouth will hold.

Her face o' fire
 With labour, and the thing she took to quench it
 She would to each one sip. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
 One sip of this
 Will bathe the drooping spirits in delight,
 Beyond the bliss of dreams. Milton.

SIPHON. n. s. [σίφων; sipho, Lat. siphon, Fr.] A pipe through which liquors are conveyed.

Beneath th' incessant weeping of these drains
 I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
 The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
 Of stiff compacted clay. Thomson's Autumn.

SIPPER. n. s. [from sip.] One that sips.

SIPPET. n. s. [sop, sip, sippet.] A small sop.

SIR. n. s. [sire, Fr. seigneur, Ital. senor, Span. senior, Lat.]

1. The word of respect in compellation.

Speak on, sir,
 I dare your worst objections; if I blush,
 It is to see an nobleman want manners. Shak. H. VIII.
 But, sirs, be sudden in the execution;
 Withal obdurate; do not let him plead. Shakesp. Richard III.

Sir king,
 This man is better than the man he slew. Shakesp.
 At a banquet the ambassador desired the wise men to deliver every one of them some sentence or parable, that he might report to his king, which they did: only one was silent, which the ambassador perceiving, said to him, Sir, let it not displeas you; why do not you say somewhat that I may report? He answered, Report to your lord, that there are he can hold their peace. Bacon's Aphorizms.

2. The title of a knight or baronet. This word was aneiently so much held essential, that the Jews in their addresses expressed it in Hebrew characters.

Sir Horace Vere, his brother, was the principal in the active part. Bacon's War with Spain.
 The court forsakes him, and sir Balaam hangs. Pope.

3. It is sometimes used for man.

I have adventur'd
 To try your taking of a false report, which hath Honour'd with confirmation your great judgment,
 In the election of a sir so rare. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. A title given to the loin of beef, which one of our kings knighted in a fit of good humour.

He lost his roast-beef stomach, not being able to touch a sir-loin which was served up. Addison.
 And the strong table groans
 Beneath the smoaking sir-loin, stretch'd immense
 From side to side. Thomson's Autumn.

It would be ridiculous, indeed, if a spit, which is strong enough to turn a sir-loin of beef, should not be able to turn a lark. Swift.

SIRE. n. s. [sire, Fr. senior, Lat.]

1. A father. Used in poetry.
 He, but a duke, would have his son a king,
 And raise his issue like a loving sire. Shak. Hen. VI.
 A virgin is his mother, but his sire
 The pow'r of the most High. Milton's Par. Lost.
 And now I leave the true and just supports
 Of legal princes and of honest courts,

S I S

Whose sires, great part'ners in my father's cares, Saluted their young king at Hebron crown'd. Prior
 Whether his hoary sire he spies,
 While thousand grateful thoughts arise,
 Or meets his spouse's fondler eye. Pope's Chorus to Brutus.

2. It is used in common speech of beasts: as, the horse had a good sire, but a bad dam.

3. It is used in composition: as, grand-sire, great-grand-sire.

To SIRE. v. a. To beget; to produce.
 Cowards father cowards, and base things sire
 the base. Shakesp.

SIREN. n. s. [Lat.] A goddess who enticed men by singing, and devoured them; any mischievous enticer.

Oh train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
 To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:
 Sing, siren, to thyself, and I will dote;
 Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hair,
 And as a bed I'll take thee, and there lie. Shakesp.

SIRIASIS. n. s. [σιρίαις.] An inflammation of the brain and its membrane, through an excessive heat of the sun. Dict.

SIRIUS. n. s. [Lat.] The dogstar.

SIROCCO. n. s. [Italian; syrus ventus, Lat.] The south-east or Syrian wind.

Forth rosh the levant and the ponent winds,
 Eurus and Zephyr, with their lateral noise, Sirocco and Libeccio. Milton.

SIRRAH. n. s. [sir, ha! Minsheu.] A compellation of reproach and insult.

Go, sirrah, to my cell;
 Take with you your companions: as you look
 To have my pardon trim it handsomely. Shakesp. Tempest.

Sirrah, There's no room for faith, truth, or honesty in this bosom of t'bee. Shakesp. Henry IV.
 It runs in the blood of your whole race, sirrah,
 to hate our family. L'Estrange.

Guess how the goddess greets her son,
 Come hither, sirrah; no, begone. Prior.

SIRUP. } n. s. [Arabick.] The juice of SIRUP. } vegetables boiled with sugar.

 Shall I, whose ears her mournful words did seize,
 Her words in sirup laid of sweetest breath, Relent. Sidney.

Nor poppy, nor mandragora,
 Nor all the drowsy sirups of the world,
 Shall ever medicine thee to that sweep sleep,
 Which thou owed'st yesterday. Shakesp. Othello.

And first, behold this cordial julap here,
 That flames and dances in his crystal bounds,
 With spirits of balm, and fragrant syrups mixt. Milt.

Those expressed juices contain the true essential salt of the plant; for if they be boiled into the consistence of a sirup, and set in a cool place, the essential salt of the plant will shoot upon the sides of the vessels. Arbuthnot.

SIRUPED. adj. [from sirup.] Sweet, like sirup; bedewed with sweets.

Yet when there haps a honey fall,
 We'll lick the sirup leaves:
 And tell the bees that theirs is gall. Drayton

SIRUPY. adj. [from sirup.] Resembling sirup.

Apples are of a sirupy tenacious nature. Mortim.

SIZE. n. s. [contracted from assize.]

You said, if I return'd next size in Lent,
 I should be in remitter of your grace. Donne.

SISKIN. n. s. [chloris, Lat.] A bird; a greenfinch.

SISTER. n. s. [γερστερ, Sax. zuster, Dut.]

1. A woman born of the same parents; correlative to brother.
 Her sister began to scold. Shak. Taming of the Shrew.
 I have said to corruption, thou art my father:
 to the worm, thou art my mother and my sister.
Job, xvii. 14.

2. Woman of the same faith; a christian; one of the same nature; human being.

If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of food, and you say unto them, Depart in peace, be you warmed and filled; notwithstanding, you give them not those things which are needful to the body; what doth it profit? James, ii. 15.

3. A female of the same kind.

He chid the sisters,
And bade them speak to him. Shakesp. Macbeth.

4. One of the same kind; one of the same condition.

The women, who would rather wrest the laws
Than let a sister-plaintiff lose the cause,
As judges on the bench more gracious are,
And more attent to brothers of the bar,
Cried, one and all, the suppliant should have right;
And to the grandame had adjudg'd the knight. Dryden.

There grew two olives, closest of the grove,
With roots entwinn'd, and branches interwove:
Alike their leaves, but not alike they smil'd
With sister-fruits: one fertile, one was wild. Pope.

- SISTER in Law. n. s. A husband or wife's sister.

Thy sister in law is gone back unto her people:
return thou after thy sister in law. Ruth, i. 15.

- SISTERHOOD. n. s. [from sister.]

1. The office or duty of a sister.

She abhor'd
Her proper blood, and left to do the part Of sisterhood, to do that of a wife. Dan. Civil War.

2. A set of sisters.

3. A number of women of the same order.

I speak,
Wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votarists of Saint Clare. Shakesp.

A woman who flourishes in her innocence, amidst that spite and rancour which prevails among her exasperated sisterhood, appears more amiable. Addison's Freeholder.

- SISTERLY. adj. [from sister.] Like a sister; becoming a sister.

After much debatement,
My sisterly remorse confutes mine honour,
And I did yield to him. Shakesp.

- TO SIT. v. n. preterite Isat. [sitan, Goth. prittan, Sax. setten, Dut.]

1. To rest upon the buttocks.

Their wives do sit beside them, carding wool. Mary's Virgil.

Aloft, in awful state,
The godlike hero sat
On his imperial throne. Dryden.

2. To perch.

All new fashions be pleasant to me,
I will have them whether I thrive or thee;
Now I am a frisker, all men on me look,
What should I do but sit cock on the hoop?
What do I care if all the world me fail,
I will have a garment reach to my tail. Bourd.

3. To be in a state of rest, or idleness.

Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? Numb.

Why sit we here each other viewing idly? Milton.

4. To be in any local position.

I should be still
Plucking the grass, to know where sits the wind:
Peering in maps for ports. Shakesp. Merc. of Venice.

Those
Appointed to sit there had left their charge. Milton.
The ships are ready, and the wind sits fair. A. Philips.

5. To rest as a weight or burthen.

Your brother's death sits at your heart. Shakesp.
When God lets loose upon us a sickness, if we fear to die then the calamity sits heavy on us. Taylor.
The toss and fling, and to be restless, only galls our sores, and makes the burden that is upon us sit more uneasy. Tillotson.

Fear, the last of ills, remain'd behind,
And horror heavy sat on every mind. Dryden.
Our whole endeavours are intent to get rid of the present evil, as the first necessary condition to our happiness. Nothing, as we passionately think, can equal the uneasiness that sits so heavy upon us. Locke

6. To settle; to abide.

That this new comer, shame,
There sit not and reproach us. Milton.
When Thetis blush'd in purple not her own,
And from her face the breathing winds were blown;
A sudden silence sate upon the sea,
And sweeping oars with struggling urg'd their way. Dryden.

He to the void advanc'd his pace;
Pale horror sat on each Arcadian face. Dryden.

7. To brood; to incubate.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not, so he that getteth riches not by right, shall leave them in the midst of his days. Jer. xvii. 11.

The egg laid, and severed from the body of the hen, hath no more nourishment from the hen; but only a quickening heat when she sitteth. Bacon's Natural History.

She mistakes a piece of chalk for an egg, and sits upon it in the same manner. Addison.

8. To be adjusted; to be with respect to fitness or unfitness, decorum or indecorum.

This new and gorgeous garment, majesty,
Sits not so easy on me as you think. Shakesp.

Heav'n knows
By what by-paths and indirect crook'd ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well,
How troublesome it sate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet. Shakesp.
Your preferring that to all other considerations, does, in the eyes of all men, sit well upon you. Locke.

9. To be placed in order to be painted.

One is under no more obligation to extol every thing he finds in the author he translates, than a painter is to make every face that sits to him handsome. Garth.

10. To be in any situation or condition.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury. Bacon.

Suppose all the church-lands were thrown up to the laity; would the tenants sit easier in their rents than now? Swift.

11. To be convened, as an assembly of a publick or authoritative kind; to hold a session: as, the parliament sits; the last general council sate at Trent.

12. To be placed at the table.

Whether is greater, he that sitteth at meat, or he that serveth? Luke, xxii. 27.

13. To exercise authority.

The judgment shall sit, and take away his dominion. Daniel.
Asses are ye that sit in judgment. Judges, v. 10.
Down to the golden Chersonese, or where
The Persian in Ecaban sate. Milton.

One council sits upon life and death, the other is for taxes, and a third for the distributions of justice. Addison.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgment sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit. Rowe.

14. To be in any solemn assembly as a member.

Three hundred and twenty men sat in council daily. 1 Mac.

15. To sit down. Down is little more than emphatical.

Go and sit down to meat. Luke, xvii. 7.
When we sit down to our meal, we need not suspect the intrusion of armed uninvited guests. Decay of Piety.

16. To sit down. To begin a siege.

Nor would the enemy have sate down before it, till they had done their business in all other places. Clarendon.

17. To sit down. To rest; to cease as satisfied.

Here we cannot sit down, but still proceed in our search, and look higher for a support. Rogers.

- 18 To sit down. To settle; to fix abode.

From besides Tanais, the Goths, Huns, and Getae sat down. Spenser.

19. To sit out. To be without engagement or employment.

They are glad, rather than sit out, to play very small game, and to make use of arguments, such as will not prove a bare inexpectancy. Bishop Sanderson's Judgment.

20. To sit up. To rise from lying to sitting.

He that was dead, sat up, and began to speak. Luke, vii.

21. To sit up. To watch; not to go to bed.

Be courtly,
And entertain, and feast, sit up, and revel;
Call all the great, the fair, and spirited dames
Of Rome about thee, and begin a fashion
Of freedom. Ben Jonson.

Some sit up late at winter-fires, and fit
Their sharp-edg'd tools. May.

Must children shorten that time by sitting up with the company at night. Locke.

- TO SIT. v. a.

1. To keep the seat upon.

Hardly the muse can sit the head-strong horse,
Nor would she, if she could, check his impetuous force. Prior.

2. [When the reciprocal pronoun follows sit, it seems to be an active verb.] To place on a seat.

The happiest youth viewing his progress through
What perils past, what crosses to ensue,
Would shut the book, and sit him down and die. Shakesp.

He came to visit us, and, calling for a chair, sat him down, and we sat down with him. Bacon.

Thus fenc'd,
But not at rest or ease of mind,
They sat them down to weep. Milton.

3. To be settled to do business. This is rather neuter.

The court was sat before Sir Roger came, but the justices made room for the old knight at the head of them. Addison.

- SITE. n. s. [situs, Lat.]

1. Situation; local position.

The city self he strongly fortifies,
Three sides by site it well defenced has. Fairfax.
Manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

If we consider the heart in its constituent parts, we shall find nothing singular, but what is in any muscle. 'Tis only the site and posture of their several parts that give it the form and functions of a heart. Bentley.

Before my view ap; ear'd a structure fair;
Its site uncertain, if on earth or air. Pope.

2. It is taken by Thomson for posture or situation of a thing, with respect to itself; but improperly.

And leaves the semblance of a lover fix'd
In melancholy site, with head declin'd,
And love-defected eyes. Thomson's Spring.

- SITFAST. n. s. [sif and fast.] A hard knob growing under the saddle. Farrier's Dict.

- SITH. adv. [siðe, Sax.] Since; seeing that. Obsolete.

What ceremony of odours used about the bodies of the dead! after which custom, notwithstanding, sith it was their custom, our Lord was contented that his own most precious blood should be intomb'd. Hooker.

I thank you for this profit, and from hence
I'll love no friend, sith love breeds such offence. Sha.

- SITHE. n. s. [siðe, Sax.] This word is very variously written by authors: I have chosen the orthography which is at once most simple and most agreeable to etymology.] The instrument of mowing; a crooked blade joined at right angles to a long pole.

S I T

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs;
And then grace us in the disgrace of death:
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour, which shall 'late his scythe's keen edge,
And make us heirs of all eternity. Shakesp.
Time is commonly drawn upon tombs, in gardens, and other places, an old man, bald, winged, with a sithe and an hour-glass. Peacham on Drawing.
There rude impetuous rage does storm and fret;
And there, as master of this murd'ring brood,
Swinging a huge sithe, stands impartial death,
With endless business almost out of breath. Crashaw.
While the milk-maid singeth blithe,
And the mower whets his scithe. Milton.
The brazen trumpets kindle rage no more;
But useless lances into sythes shall bend,
And the broad faulchion in a ploughshare end. Pope.
Grav'd o'er their seats the form of Time was found
His scythe revers'd, and both his pinions bound. Pope.

But, Stella, say what evil tongue
Reports you are no longer young?
That Time sits with his sythe to mow
Where erst sat Cupid with his bow? Swift.

SITHE. n. s. Time. Obsolete.

The foolish man theret woxe wond'rous blith,
And humbly thanked him a thousand sithe. Spens.
SITHEENCE. adv. [now contracted to since.
See SINCE.] Since; in latter times.

This over-running and wasting of the realm was the beginning of all the other evils which sitheence have afflicted that land. Spenser's State of Ireland.

SITNESS. adv. Since. Spenser.

SITTER. n. s. [from sit.]

2. The act of resting on a seat.
Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising. Psalms.
3. A time at which one exhibits himself to a painter.
Few good pictures have been finished at one sitting; neither can a good play be produced at a heat. Dryden.

4. A meeting of an assembly.
I'll write you down;
The which shall point you forth at every sitting,
What you must say. Shakesp.
I wish it may be at that sitting concluded, unless the necessity of the time press it. Bacon.

5. A course of study unintermitted.
For the understanding of any one of St. Paul's epistles, I read it all through at one sitting. Locke.
6. A time for which one sits, as at play, or work, or a visit.

What more than madness reigns,
When one short sitting many hundreds drains!
And not enough is left him to supply
Board-wages, or a footman's livery. Dryden.

7. Incubation.
Whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male bird takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough, and amuses her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting. Addison.

SITUATE. part. adj. [from situs, Lat.]

1. Placed with respect to any thing else.
He was resolved to chuse a war, rather than to have Bretagne carried by France, being so great and opulent a duchy, and situate so opportunely to annoy England. Bacon.
Within a trading town they long abide,
Full fairly situate on a haven's side.
Dryden's Nun's Priest.

S I X

The eye is a part so artificially composed, and commodiously situate, as nothing can be contrived better for use, ornament, or security.
Ray on the Creation.

2. Placed; consisting.
Earth hath this variety from heav'n,
Of pleasure situate in hill and dale. Milt. Par. Lost.
SITUATION. n. s. [from situate; situa- tion, Fr.]

Prince Cesarini has a palace in a pleasant situa- tion, and set off with many beautiful walks.
Addison's Italy.

2. Condition; state.
Though this is a situation of the greatest ease and tranquillity in human life, yet this is by no means fit to be the subject of all men's petitions to God. Rogers's Sermons.

3. Temporary state; circumstances. Used of persons in a dramattick scene.

SIX. adj. [six, Fr.] Twice three; one more than five.

No incident in the piece or play but must carry on the main design; all things else are like six fingers to the hand, when nature can do her work with five. Dryden.

That of six hath many respects in it, not only for the days of the creation, but its natural consideration, as being a perfect number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIX and seven. n. s. To be at six and seven, is to be in a state of disorder and confusion. A ludicrous expression that has been long in use.

All is uneven,
And every thing is left at six and seven. Shakesp.
In 1588 there sat in the see of Rome a fierce thundering friar, that would set all at six and seven, or at six and five, if you allude to his name. Bacon.

What blunder bargain ere was driv'n,
Or wager laid at six and seven. Hudibras.
John once turned his mother out of doors, to his great sorrow; for his affairs went on at sixes and sevens. Arbuthnot.

The goddess would no longer wait;
But, rising from her chair of state,
Left all below at six and seven,
Harness'd her doves, and flew to heav'n. Swift.

SIX'PENNY. n. s. [six and peuce.] A coin; half a shilling.
Where have you left the money that I gave you?
Oh!—sixpence that I had. Shakesp.

The wisest man might blush,
If I—lov'd sixpence more than he. Pope.
SIXSCORE. adj. [six and score.] Six times twenty.

Sixscore and five miles it containeth in circuit. Sandys.

tisfied if they died about sixteen or eighteen. Taylor.

SIXTEENTH. adj. [ἕξάτοδα, Sax.] The sixth after the tenth; the ordinal of sixteen.

The first lot came forth to Jehoiarib, the six- teenth to Immer. 1 Chron. xxiv. 14.

SIXTH. adj. [ἕξτα, Sax.] The first after the fifth; the ordinal of six.

You are more clement than vile men,
Who of their broken debtors take
A sixth, letting them thrive again. Shakesp.
There succeeded to the kingdom of England
James the Sixth, then king of Scotland. Bacon.

SIXTH. n. s. [from the adjective.] A sixth part.

S I Z

Only the other half would have been a tolerable seat for rational creatures, and five sixths of the whole globe would have been rendered us less.

Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.
SIXTHLY. adv. [from six.] In the sixth place.

Sixthly, living creatures have more diversity of organs than plants. Bacon.

SIXTIETH. adj. [ἕξάτοδοδα, Sax.] The tenth six times repeated; the ordinal of sixty.

Let the appearing circle of the fire be three feet diameter, and the time of one entire circulation of it the sixtieth part of a minute, in a whole day there will be but 86,400 such parts. Digby on Bodies.

SIXTY. adj. [ἕξάτις, Sax.] Six times
ten.

When the boats were come within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, and could go no farther. Bacon.

Of which 7 times 9, or the year 63, is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SIZE. n. s. [perhaps rather cise, from incisa, Lat. or from assise, Fr.]

1. Bulk; quantity of superficies; comparative magnitude.

I ever verified my friends,
With all the size that verity
Would without lapsing suffer. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
If any decayed ship be new made, it is more fit to make her a size less than bigger. Raleigh.
The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires. Dryden.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of a larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

The martial goddess,
Like thee, Telemachus, in voice and size,
With speed divine, from street to street she flies. Pope.

2. [Assise, old Fr.] A settled quantity.
In the following passage it seems to signify the allowance of the table: whence they say a sizer at Cambridge.

'Tis not in thee
To cut off my train, to scant my sizes,
And, in conclusion, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Figurative bulk; condition.
This agrees too in the contempt of men of a less size and quality. L'Estrange.

They do not consider the difference between elaborate discourses, delivered to princes or parliaments, and a plain sermon, for the middling or lower size of people. Swift.

Reynard ransacketh every corner of his wily skonce, and bestirreth the utmost of his nimble stumps to quit his coat from their jaws. Carew.

SKREEN. n. s. [escran, escrein, Fr. which Minsheu derives from secerniculum, Lat. Nimis violenter, ut solet, says Skinner; which may be true as to one of the senses; but if the first sense of skreen be a kind of coarse sieve or riddle, it may perhaps come, if not from cribrum, from some of the descendants of cerno.]

1. A riddle or coarse sieve.

A skuttle or skreen to rid soil fro' the corn. Tusser.

2. Any thing by which the sun or weather is kept off.

To cheapen fans, or buy a skreens, Prior.
So long condemn'd to fires and skreen,
You dread the waving of these greens. Anon.

3. Shelter; concealment.
Fenc'd from day by night's eternal skreen;
Unknown to heav'n, and to myself unseen. Dryden.

To SKREEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To riddle; to sift. A term yet used among masons when they sift sand for mortar.

2. To shade from sun or light, or weather.

3. To keep off light or weather.
The curtains closely drawn, the light to skreen:
Thus cover'd with an artificial night,
Sleep did his office. Dryden.

The waters mounted up into the air: their interposition betwixt the earth and the sun skreen and fence off the heat, otherwise insupportable.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

4. To shelter; to protect.
Ajax interpos'd
His sevenfold shield, and skreen'd Laertes son,
When the insulting Trojans urg'd him sore. Philipp.

He that travels with them is to skreen them, and get them out when they have run themselves into the briars. Locke.

His majesty encouraged his subjects to make mouths at their betters, and afterwards skreened them from punishment. Spectator.

The scales, of which the scarf-skin is composed, are designed to fence the orifices of the secretory ducts of the military glands, and to skreen the nerves from external injuries. Cheyne.

SKUE. adj. [Of this word there is found no satisfactory derivation.] Oblique; sidelong. It is most used in the adverb askue.

Several have imagined that this skue posture of the axis is a most unfortunate thing; and that if the poles had been erect to the plane of the ecliptick, all mankind would have enjoyed a very paradise. Bentley.

To SKULK. v. n. To hide; to lurk in fear or malice.

Discover'd, and defeated of your prey,
You skulk'd behind the fence, and sneak'd away. Dryden.

While publick good aloft in pomp they wield,
And private interest skulks behind the shield. Young.

SKULL. n. s. [skiola, Island. skatti, Island. a head.]

1. The bone that incloses the head: it is made up of several pieces, which, being joined together, form a considerable cavity, which contains the brain as in a box, and it is proportionate to the bigness of the brain. Quincy.

Some lay in dead men's skulls; and in those holes

S K Y

Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept,
As 'twere in scorn of eyes, reflecting gems.

Shakesp. Richard III.

With redoubled strokes he plies his head;
But drives the batter'd skull within the brains.

2. [ræole, Sax. a company.] A shoal.
See SCULL.

Repair to the river, where you have seen them swim in skulls or shoals.

Walton.

SKU'LLCAP. n. s. A head-piece.

SKU'LLCAP. n. s. [cassida, Lat.] A plant.

SKY. n. s. [sky, Dan.]

1. The region which surrounds this earth beyond the atmosphere. It is taken for the whole region without the earth.

The mountains their broad backs upheave
Into the clouds, their tops ascend the sky.

Milton.

The maids of Argos, who with frantick cries,
And imitated lowings, fill'd the skies.

Roscommon.

Raise all thy winds, with night involve the skies.

Dryden.

2. The heavens.

The thunderer's bolt, you know,
Sky planted, batters all rebelling coasts.

Shak. Cym.

What is this knowledge but the sky stol'n fire,
For which the thief still chain'd in ice doth sit?

Davies.

Wide is the fronting gate, and, rais'd on high,
With adamantine columns threatens the sky.

Dryden.

3. The weather; the climate.

Thou wert better in thy grave, than to answer with thy uncovered body this extremity of the skies.

Shakesp. King Lear.

We envy not the warmer clime, that lies
In ten degrees of more indulgent skies;
Nor at the coarseness of our heav'n repine,
Though o'er our heads the frozen Pleiades shine.

Addison.

SKY'EY. adj. [from sky.] Not very elegantly formed. [Ethereal.]

A breath thou art,
Serve to all the skyeu influences,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Heavily afflict.

Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

SKY'COLOUR. n. s. [sky and colour.] An azure colour; the colour of the sky.

A solution as clear as water, with only a light touch of sky-colour, but nothing near so high as the ceruleous tincture of silver.

Boyle.

SKY'COLOURED. adj. [sky and colour.] Blue; and azure; like the sky.

This your Ovid himself has hinted, when he tells us that the blue water-nymphs are dressed in skycoloured garments.

Addison.

SKY'DYED. adj. [sky and dye.] Coloured like the sky.

Their figs, skydied, a purple hue disclose.

Pope.

SKYED. adj. [from sky.] Enveloped by the skies. This is unauthorised and inelegant.

The pale deluge floats
O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale.

Tho.

SKY'ISH. adj. [from sky.] Coloured by the ether; approaching the sky.

Of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'er top old Pelion, or the skyyish head
Of blue Olympus.

Shakesp. Hamlet.

SKY'LARK. n. s. [sky and lark.] A lark that mounts and sings.

He next proceeded to the skylark, mounting up by a proper scale of notes, and afterwards falling to the ground with a very easy descent.

Spectator.

SKY'LIGHT. n. s. [sky and light.] A window placed in a room, not laterally, but in the ceiling.

A monstrous fowl dropped through the sky-light, near his wife's apartment.

Arbuthnot and Pope.

SKY'ROCKET. n. s. [sky and rocket.] A kind of firework, which flies high, and burns as it flies.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a skyrocket discharged by an hand that is almighty.

Addison.

SLAB. n. s.

1. A puddle. Ainsworth.

2. A plane of stone: as, a marble slab.

SLAB. adj. [a word, I suppose, of the same original with slabber, or slaver.]

Thick, viscous; glutinous.

Nose of Turk, and Tartar's lips;

Finger of birth-strangled babe,
Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;

Make the gruel thick and slab. Shak. Macbeth.

To SLA'BBER. v. n. [slabben, slaberen,
Dut.]

1. To let the spittle fall from the mouth;
to drivel.

2. To shed or pour any thing.

To SLA'BBER v. a. [slaver is the word used.]

1. To smear with spittle.

He slabbered me all over, from cheek to cheek, with his great tongue. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

2. To shed; to spill.

The milk-pan and cream-pot so slabber'd and tost
That butter is wanting, and cheese is half lost.

Tusser.

SLA'BBERER. n. s. [from slabber.] He who slabbers; an idiot.

SLABBY. adj. [the same with slab.]

1. Thick; viscous. Not used.

In the cure of an ulcer, with a moist inten-peries, slabby and greasy medicaments are to be forborn, and drying to be used. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. Wetty; floody: in low language.

When waggish boys the stunted besom ply,
To rid the slabby pavements, pass not by.

Gay.

SLACK. adj. [reac, Sax. slaken, Island.
yslack, Welsh; laxus, Lat.]

1. Not tense; not hard drawn; loose.

The vein in the arm is that which Aræteus commonly opens; and he gives a particular caution, in this case, to make a slack compression, for fear of exciting a convulsion. Arbuthnot.

2. Relaxed; weak; not holding fast.

All his joints relax'd:
From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropp'd, and all the faded roses shed. Milt.

3. Remiss; not diligent; not eager; not fervent.

Thus much help and furtherance is more yielded, in that, if so be our zeal and devotion to God-ward be slack, the alacrity and fervour of others serveth as a present spur. Hooker.

Seeing his soldiers slack and timorous, he re-proved them of cowardice and treason. Knolles.

Nor were it just, would he resume that shape,
That slack devotion should his thunder 'scape.

Waller.

Rebellion now began, for lack
Of zeal and plunder, to grow slack.

Hudibras.

4. Not violent; not rapid.

Their pace was formal, grave, and slack:
His nimble wit outran the heavy pack. Dryden.

5. Not intense.

A handful of slack dried hops spoil many pounds, by taking away their pleasant smell.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SLACK. } v. n. [from the adjec-
To SLA'CKEN. } tive.]

1. To be remiss; to neglect.

When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord,
slack not to pay it. Deuteronomy, xxiii. 21.

2. To lose the power of cohesion.

The fire, in lime burnt, lies hid, so that it appears to be cold; but water excites it again, whereby it slacks and crumbles into fine powder.

Meason's Mechanical Exercises.

3. To abate.

Whence these raging fires
Will slacken, if his breath stir not their flames.

Milton.

4. To languish; to fail; to flag. Ainsw.

To SLACK. } v. a.

To SLACKEN. }

1. To loosen; to make less tight.

Ah! generous youth, that wish forbear;
Slack all thy sails and fear to come.

Dryden.

Had Ajax been employ'd, our slacken'd sails
Had still at Aulis waited happy gales. Dryden.

2. To relax; to remit.

This makes the pulses beat, and lungs respire;
This holds the sinews like a bridle's reins;
And makes the body to advance, retire,
To turn, or stop, as she them slacks or strains.

Davies.

Taught power's due use to people and to kings,
Taught nor to slack nor strain its tender strings.

Pope.

3. To ease; to mitigate. Philips seems to have used it by mistake for slake.

Men, having been brought up at home under a strict rule of duty, always restrained by sharp penalties from lewd behaviour, so soon as they come thither, where they see laws more slackly tended, and the hard restraint which they were used unto now slacked, they grow more loose.

Spenser.

If there be cure or charm
To respite, or deceive, or slack the pain
Of this ill mansion. Milton's Parad. Lost.

On our account has Jove,
Indulgent, to all moons some succulent plant
Allow'd, that poor helpless man might slack
His present thirst and matter find for toil. Philips.

4. To remit for want of eagerness.

My guards
Are you, great pow'rs, and the unbated strength
Of a firm conscience; which shall arm each step
Ta'en for the state, and teach me slack no pace.

Ben Jonson.

With such delay well pleas'd, they slack their course. Milton.

5. To cause to be remitted; to make to abate.

You may sooner by imagination quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower than make him stand still. Bacon.

This doctrine must supersede and slacken all industry and endeavour, which is the lowest degree of that which hath been promised to be accepted by Christ; and leave nothing to us to deliberate or attempt, but only to obey our fate. Hammond.

Extol not riches then, the toil of fool;
The wise man's cumbrance, if not snare; more apt
To slacken virtue, and abate her edge,
Than prompt her to do aught may merit praise.

Milton.

Balls of this metal slack'd Atlanta's pace,
And on the am'rous youth bestow'd the race.

Waller.

One conduces to the poet's aim, which he is driving on in every line: the other slackens his pace, and diverts him from his way. Dryden

6. To relieve; to unbend.

Here have I seen the king, when great affair
Gave leave to slacken and unbend his cares,
Attended to the chase by all the flow'r
Of youth, whose hopes a nobler prey devour.

Denham

7. To withhold; to use less liberally.

He that so generally is good, must of necessity hold his virtue to you, whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted, rather than slack it where there is such abundance. Shakesp.

8. To crumble; to deprive of the power of cohesion.

Some unslacked lime cover with ashes, and let it stand till rain comes to slack the lime; then spread them together. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To neglect.

Why might not you, my lord, receive attendance
From those that she calls servants, or from mine?
If then they chanc'd to slack ye,
We could controul them. Shakesp. King Lear.

This good chance, that thos much favoureth,
 He slacks not. Daniel's Civil War.
Slack not the good presage, while heav'n inspires
 Our minds to dare, and gives the ready fires. Dryd.

10. To repress; to make less quick or forcible.
 I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence
 Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to arms. Addison.

SLACK. n. s. [from the verb To slack.]
 Small coal; coal broken in small parts: as slack lime turns to powder.

SLACKLY. adv. [from slack.]
 1. Loosely; not tightly; not closely.
 2. Negligently; remissly.
 That a king's children should be so convey'd,
 So slackly guarded, and the search so slow
 That could not trace them. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

SLACKNESS. n. s. [from slack.]
 1. Looseness; not tightness.
 2. Negligence; inattention; remissness.
 It concerneth the duty of the church by law to provide, that the looseness and slackness of men may not cause the commandments of God to be unexecuted. Hooker.

These thy offices
 So rarely kind, are as interpreters
 Of my behind-hand slackness. Shak. Winter's Tale.
 From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
 Who should better hold his place
 By wisdom, and superior gifts receiv'd. Milton's Parad. Lost.

3. Want of tendency.
 When they have no disposition to shoot out above their lips, there is a slackness to heal, and a cure is very difficultly effected. Sharp's Surgery.

4. Weakness; not force; not intenseness.
 Through the slackness of motion, or long banishment from the air, it might gather some aptness to putrefy. Breewood.

SLAG. n. s. The dross, or recement of metal.
 Not only the calces but the glasses of metal may be of differing colours from the natural colour of the metal, as I have observed at the glass or slag of copper. Boyle.

SLAIE. n. s. A weaver's reed. Ainsw.

SLAIN. The participle passive of slay.
 The slain of the Lord shall be many. Is. lxxi. 16.
 The king grew vain,
 Fought all his battles o'er again;
 And thrice he routed all his foes, and thrice he slew the slain. Dryden.

To SLAKE. v. a. [from slack, Skinner; from stock, Island. to quench, Mr. Lyc.]
 1. 'To quench; to extinguish.
 He did always strive Himself with salves to health for to restore,
 And slake the heavenly fire that rag'd evermore. Spenser.
 If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
 And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
 It could not slake mine ire, nor ease my heart. Shakesp. Henry VI.
 She with her cold hand slakes
 His spirits, the sparks of life, and chills his heart. Crashaw.
 From Iilus' head
 A lambent flame arose, which gently spread Around his brow, and on his temples fed:
 Amaz'd, with running water we prepare
 To quench the sacred fire, and slake his hair. Dry.
 The fragrant fruit from bending branches shake,
 And with the crystal stream their thirst at pleasure slake. Blackmore's Creation.
 Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;
 Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst. Addison's Cato.

2. It is used of lime: so that it is uncertain whether the original notion of To slack or slake lime, be to powder or quench it.

That which he saw happened to be fresh lime, and gathered before any rain had fallen to slake it. Woodward.

To SLAKE. v. n. [This is apparently from slack.]
 1. 'To grow less tense; to be relaxed.
 If she the body's nature did partake,
 Her strength would with the body's strength decay;
 But when the body's strongest sinews slake,
 Then is the soul most active, quick, and gay. Davies.

2. To go out; to be extinguished.
 She perceiving that his flame did slake,
 And lov'd her only for his trophy's sake. Brown.

To SLAM. v. a. [tema, Island. schlagen, Dut.] To slaughter; to crush. A word not used but in low conversation.

To SLANDER. v. a. [esclaudric, Fr. scandalum, Lat.] To censure falsely; to belie.
Slander Valentine
 With falsehood, cowardice and poor descent. Shak.
 He hath slandered thy servant unto the king. 2 Sam. xix. 27.
 Give me leave to speak as earnestly in truly commending it, as you have done in untruly and unkindly defacing and slandring it. Whitgift.
 Thou dost with lies the throne invade,
 By practice harden'd in thy slandring trade;
 Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills betfall,
 And spott'ring under specious names thy gall. Dr.
 Of all her dears she never slander'd one,
 But cares not if a thousand are undone. Pope.

SLANDER. n. s. [from the verb.]
 1. False invective.
 When slanders do not live in tongues;
 When cut-purses come not to throongs. Shakesp. King Lear.
 Since that, we hear he is in arms,
 We think not so;
 Yet charge the consul with our harms,
 That let him go:
 So in our censure of the state
 We still do wander,
 And make the careful magistrate
 The mark of slander. Ben Jonson's Cataline.
 We are not to be dejected by the slanders and calumnies of bad men, because our integrity shall then be cleared by him who cannot err in judgment. Nelson.

2. Disgrace; reproach.
 Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
 Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins. Shakesp. Richard III.

3. Disreputation; ill name.
 You shall not find me, daughter,
 After the slander of most stepmothers,
 Ill-eyed unto you. Shakesp.

SLANDERER. n. s. [from slander.] One who belies another; one who lays false imputations on another.
 In your servants suffer any offence against yourself rather than against God: endure not that they should be railers, slanderers, telltales or sowers of dissession. Taylor.
 Thou shalt answer for this, thou slanderer! Dryd.

SLANDEROUS. adj. [from slander.]
 1. Uttering reproachful falsehoods.
 What king so strong
 Can tie the gall up in the slandrous tongue? Shak.
 To me belongs
 The care to shun the blast of slandrous tongues:
 Let malice, prone the virtuous to defame,
 Thus with vile censure taint my spotless name. Pope.

2. Containing reproachful falsehoods; calumnious.
 I was never able till now to choke the mouth of such detractors with the certain knowledge of their slandrous untruths. Spenser on Ireland.
 We lay these honours on this man,
 To ease ourselves of divers slandrous loads. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.
 As by flattery a man opens his bosom to his mortal enemy, so by detraction and a slandrous misreport he shuts the same to his best friends. South.

SLANDEROUSLY. adv. [from slandrous.]
 Calumniously; with false reproach.
 I may the letter satisfy them who object these doubts, and slandrously bark at the courses which are held against that traitorous earl and his adherents. Spenser on Ireland.
 They did slandrously object,
 How that they durst not hazard to present
 In person their defences. Daniel's Civil War.

SLANG. The preterite of sling.
 David slang a stone, and smote the Philistine. 1 Sam. xvii.

SLANK. n. s. [alga marina.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SLANT. } adj. [from slanghe, a SLANTING. } serpent, Dut. Skinner.
 Oblique; not direct; not perpendicular.
 Late the clouds
 Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the slant lightning; whose thwart flame driv'n down
 Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.
 The sun
 Around the globe describes th' æquator line;
 By which wise means he can the whole survey,
 With a direct or with a slanting ray,
 In the succession of a night and day. Blackmore.

SLANTLY. } adv. [from slant.] Ob-SLANTWISE. } liquely; not perpendicularly; slope.
 Some maketh a hollowness half a foot deep,
 With fewer sets in it, set slantwise asteeep. Tusser.

SLAP. n. s. [schlap, Germ.] A blow.
 Properly with the hand open, or with something rather broad than sharp.
 The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse go round. Thomson.

SLAP. adv. [from the noun.] With a sudden and violent blow.
 Peg's servants complained; and if they offered to come into the warehouse, then straight went the yard slap over their noddle. Arbutn. Hist. of J. Bull.

To SLAP. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with a slap.
 Dick, who thus long had passive sat,
 Here stroak'd his chin, and cock'd his hat;
 Then slap'd his hand upon the board,
 And thus the youth put in his word. Prior.

SLAPDASH. interj. [from slap and dash.]
 All at once: as any thing broad falls with a slap into the water, and dashes it about. A low word.
 And yet, slapdash, is all again
 In ev'ry sinew, nerve, and vein. Prior.

To SLASH. v. a. [slasa to strike, Island.]
 1. To cut; to cut with long cuts.
 2. To lash. Slash is improper.
 Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to slash
 The vig'rous steeds that drew his lord's calash,
 To Peggy's side inclin'd. King!

To SLASH. v. n. To strike at random with a sword; to lay about him.
 The knights with their bright burning blades
 Broke their rude troops, and order did confound, Hewing and slashing at their idle shades. Fairy Q.
 Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
 Like slashing Bentley with his desp'rate hook. Pope.

SLASH. n. s. [from the verb.]
 1. Cut; wound.
 Some few received some cuts and slashes that had drawn blood. Clarendon.
 2. A cut in cloth.
 What! this a sleeve?
 Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slish and slash,
 Like to a censor in a barber's shop. Shakesp.
 Distinguish'd slashes deck the great:
 As each excels in birth or state,

His oylet-holes are more and ampler;
The king's own body was a sampler. Prior.
SLATCH. n. s. [a sea term.] The middle part of a rope or cable that hangs down loose. Bailey.

SLATE. n. s. [from slit: slate is in some counties a crack; or from esclate, a tile, Fr.] A grey stone, easily broken into thin plates, which are used to cover houses, or to write upon.

A square cannot be so truly drawn upon a slate
as it is conceived in the mind. Greiv's Cosmologia.
A small piece of a flat slate the ants laid over the hole of their nest, when they foresaw it would rain. Addison's Spectator.

To SLATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover the roof; to tile.

Sonnets and elegies to Chloris

Would raise a house about two stories,
A lyric ode would slate. Swift.

SLATER. n. s. [from slate.] One who covers with slates or tiles.

SLATTER. n. s. [slactti, Swed.] A woman negligent, not elegant or nice.

Without the raising of which sun,
You dare not be so troublesome
To pinch the slatterns black and blue,
For leaving you their work to do. Hudibres.
We may always observe, that a gossip in politics is a slattern in her family. Addis. Frecholder.
The sallow skin is for the swarthy put,
And love can make a slattern of a slut. Dryden.
Beneath the lamp her tawdry ribbands glare,
The new-scour'd manteau, and the slattern air. Gay.

SLA'TY. adj. [from slate.] Having the nature of slate.

All the stone that is slaty, with a texture long,
and parallel to the site of the stratum, will split only lengthways, or horizontally; and if placed in any other position, 'tis apt to give way, start, and burst, when any considerable weight is laid upon it. Woodward on Fossils.

SLAVE. n. s. [esclave, Fr.] It is said to have its original from the Slavi, or Sclavonians, subdued and sold by the Venicians.]

1. One mancipated to a master; not a freeman; a dependant.

The banish'd Kent, who in disguise
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service Improper for a slave. Shakesp. King Lear.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell. Shakesp. Richard III.

Of guests we make them slaves
Inhospitably. Milton.

The condition of servants was different from what it is now, they being generally slaves, and such as were bought and sold for money. South.
Perspective a painter must not want; yet without subjecting ourselves so wholly to it, as to become slaves of it. Dryden.

To-morrow, should we thus express our friendship,
Each might receive a slave into his arms;
This sun perhaps, this morning sun, 's the last
That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty. Addis. Cato.

2. One that has lost the power of resistance.

Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men. Waller.

When once men are immersed in sensual things,
and are become slaves to their passions and lusts, then are they most disposed to doubt of the existence of God. Wilkins.

3. It is used proverbially for the lowest state of life.

Power shall not exempt the kings of the earth, and the great men, neither shall meanness excuse
the poorest slave. Nelson.

To SLAVE. v. n. [from the noun.] To drudge; to toil; to toil.

Had women been the makers of our laws,
The men should slave at cards from morn to night. Swift.

SLAVER. n. s. [saliva, Lat. slarfa, Island.]
Spittle running from the mouth; drivel.

Mathiolus hath a passage, that a toad communicates its venom not only by urine, but by the humidity and slaver of its mouth, which will not consist with truth. Brown.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
It is the slaver kills, and not the bite. Pope.

To SLAVER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To be smeared with spittle.

Should I
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falsehood as with labour. Shakesp.

2. To emit spittle.

Miso came with scowling eyes to deliver a slavering good-morrow to the two ladies. Sidney.

Why must he sputter, spawl, and slaver it,
In vain, against the people's favourite? Swift.

To SLAVER. v. a. To smear with drivel.

Twitch'd by the slave, he mouths it more and more,
Till with white froth his gown is slaver'd o'er. Dryd.

SLAVERER. n. s. [slabbaerd, Dut. from slaver.] One who cannot hold his spittle; a driveller; an idiot.

SLAVERY. n. s. [from slave.] Servitude;
the condition of a slave; the offices of a slave.

If my dissentings were out of error, weakness, or obstinacy, yet no man can think it other than the badge of slavery, by savage rudeness and im-portunate obtrusions of violence to have the mist of his error dispelled. King Charles.

SLAUGHTER. n. s. [on-laugz, Sax.
from plægan, plægan, to strike or kill.]
Massacre; destruction by the sword.

Sinful Macduff,
They were all struck for thee!
Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls. Shak. Macbeth.

On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Mil.
The pair you see,

Now friends below, in close embraces join;
But, when they leave the shady realms of night,
With mortal hate each other shall pursue:
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.

To SLAUGHTER. v. a. [from the noun.]
To massacre; to slay; to kill with the sword.

Your castle is surpris'd, your wife and babes Savagely slaughter'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

SLAUGHTERHOUSE. n. s. [slaughter and house.] House in which beasts are killed for the butcher.

Away with me, all you whose souls abhor
Th' uncleanly savour of a slaughterhouse;
For I am stiled with the smell of sin. Shakesp.

SLAUGHTERMAN. n. s. [slaughter and man.] One employed in killing.

The mad mothers with their howls confus'd
Do break the clouds; as did the wives of Jewry,
At Herod's bloody hunting slaughterman. Shak. Henry V.

Ten chas'd by one,
Are now each one the slaughterman of twenty. Shak.

See, thou fight'st against thy countrymen;
And join'st with them will be thy slaughtermen. Shakesp. Henry VI.

SLAUGHTEROUS. adj. [from slaughter.]
Destructive; murderous.

I have sapt full with horrors.
Direness familiar to my slaughterous thoughts Cannot once start me. Shakesp. Macbeth.

To SLA'VISH. adj. [from slave.] Servile; mean; base; dependant.

A thing
More slavish did I ne'er, than answering
A slave without a knock. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and mules,
You use in abject and in slavish part,
Because you bought them. Shak. Merch. of Venice.

The supreme God, t' whom all things ill
Are but as slavish officers of vengeance,
Would send a glist'ring guardian, if need were,
To keep my life and honour unassail'd. Milton.

Those are the labour'd births of slavish brains;
Not the effect of poetry, but pains. Denham.

Slavish bards our mutual loves rehearse
In lying strains and ignominious verse. Prior.

SLA'VISHLY. adv. [from slavish.] Servilely; meanly.

SLA'VISINESS. n. s. [from slavish.] Servility; meanness.

To SLAY. v. a. preter. slaw; part. pass.
slain. [slahan, Goth. plean, Sax.
slachten, Dut. to strike.] To kill; to butcher; to put to death.

Her father's brother
Would be her lord; or shall I say her uncle?
Or he that slaw her brothers and her uncle?
Shakesp. Richard III.

Tyrant, shew thy face:
If thou be'st slain, and with no stroke of mine,
My wife and children's ghosts will haunt me still. Shakesp.

I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God. Rev. vi. 2.

Slay and make ready. Gen. xliii. 16.

Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth
the silly one. Job, v. 2.

Of Trojan chiefs he view'd a numerous train;
All much lamented, all in battle slain. Dryd. Æn.

He must by blood and battles pow'r maintain,
And slay the monarchs ere he rule the plain. Prior.

SLA'YER. n. s. [from slay.] Killer; mur-derer; destroyer.

Witness the guiltless blood pour'd oft on ground;
The crowned often slain, the slayer crown'd. Fa. Qu.

They slew those that were slayers of their countrymen. Abbot.

The slayer of himself yet saw I there;
The gore congeal'd was clotted in his hair:
With eyes half clos'd and gaping mouth he lay,
And grim as when he breath'd his sullen soul away. Dryden.

SLEAVE. n. s. [Of this word I know not well the meaning: slave silk is explained by Gouldman, flocus sericus a lock of silk; and women still say, slave the silk, for untwist it. Ainsworth calls a weaver's shuttle or reed a slay. To slay is to part a twist into single fibres.]

I on a fountain light,
Whose brim with pinks was platted;
The banks with daffadillies dight
With grass like slave was matted. Drayt. Cynthia.

SLEAZY. adj. [often written sleazy.]
Weak; wanting substance. This seems to be of the same race with slave, or from To slay.

SLED. n. s. [slæd, Dan. slædde, Dut.] A carriage drawn without wheels.
The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles, and the slail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden.

SLE'DDED. adj. [from slæd.] Mounted on a sled.
So frown'd he once when in an angry parle,
He smote the stedded Polack on the ice. Shakesp.

SLEDGE. n. s. [pleeg, Sax. sleggia, Island.]

1. A large heavy hammer.
They him spying, both with greedy force
At once upon him ran, and him beset

With strokes of mortal steel, without remorse,
And on his shield like iron sledges bet. Fairy Queen.

The painful smith, with force of fervent heat,
The hardest iron soon doth mollify,
That with his heavy sledge he can it beat,
And fashion to what he it list apply. Spenser.

The uphand sledge is used by under workmen, when the work is not of the largest, yet requires help to batter and draw it out: they use it with both their hands before them, and seldom lift their hammers higher than their head. Moron.

It would follow that the quick stroke of a light hammer should be of greater efficacy than any softer and more gentle striking of a great sledge.
Wilkin's Mathemat. Magick.

2. A carriage without wheels, or with very low wheels: properly a sled. See SLED.

In Lancashire they use a sort of sledge made with thick wheels, to bring their marl out, drawn with one horse. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SLEEK. n. s. [sleech, Dut.]

1. Smooth; nitid; glossy.

Let me have men about me that are fat,
Steak-headed men, and such as sleep a-nights.
Shakesp.

How eagerly ye follow my disgrace,
As if it fed ye; and how sleek and wanton
Y' appear in ev'ry thing may bring my ruin. Shak.

What time the groves were clad in green,
The fields all drest in flowers,
And that the sleek-hair'd nymphs were seen
To seek them summer bowers. Drayton.

As in gaze admiring, oft he bow'd
His turret crest, and sleek enamell'd neck, Fawning. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Thy head and hair are sleek,
And then thou kemb'st the tuzzes on thy cheek. Dryden.

So sleek her skin, so faultless was her make,
Ev'n Juno did unwilling pleasure take
To see so fair a rival. Dryden.

2. Not rough; not harsh.

Those rugged names to our like mouths grow sleek
That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp. Milton.

To SLEEK. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To comb smooth and even.

Yet are the men more loose than they,
More kemb'd, and bath'd, and rubb'd, and trimm'd,
More sleek'd, more soft, and slacker limb'd. B. Jons.

By dead Parthenope's dear tomb,
And fair Ligea's golden comb,
Wherewith she sits on diamond rocks
Sleeking her soft alluring locks. Milton.

2. To render soft, smooth, or glossily.

Gentle, my lord, sleek o'er your rugged looks;
Be bright and jovial 'mong your guests to-night. Shakesp.

She does sleek
With crumbs of bread and milk, and lies a-nights
In her neat gloves. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

The persuasive rhetoric
That sleek'd his tongue, and won so much on Eve,
So little here, nay lost. Milton.

A sheet of well-sleek'd marble paper did not cast any of its distinct colours upon the wall. Boyle.

A cruise of fragrance form'd of burnish'd gold,
Odour divine! whose soft refreshing streams
Sleek the smooth skin, and scent the snowy limbs. Pope.

SLEEKLY. adv. [from sleek.] Smoothly; glossily.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, and their blue coats brush'd. Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.

SLEEKSTONE. n. s. [sleek and stone.] A smoothing stone.

The purest pasteboard with a sleekstone rub smooth, and as even as you can. Peacham.

To SLEEP. v. n. [slapan, Goth. slæpan, Sax. slæpen, Dut.]

1. To take rest, by suspension of the mental and corporal powers.

I've watch'd and travell'd hard:
Some time I shall sleep out; the rest I'll whistle. Shakesp.

Where's Pede?—go you, and where you find a maid,

That, ere she sleep, hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy;

But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, backs, shoulders, sides, and shins. Shak. Merry Wives of Windsor.

If the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his ledge. Deuteronomy.

Peace, good reader! do not weep;
Peace! the lovers are asleep:
They, sweet turtles! folded lie
In the last knot that love could tie.

Let them sleep, let them sleep on,
Till this stormy night be gone,
And th' eternal morn'g dawn;

Then the curtains will be drawn,
And they waken with that light
Whose day shall never sleep in night. Crashaw.

Those who at any time sleep without dreaming, can never be convinced that their thoughts are for four hours busy without their knowing it. Locke.

2. To rest; to be motionless.

Steel, if thou turn thine edge, or cut not out the burly-boned clown in chimes of beef ere thou sleep in thy sheath, I beseech Jove on my knees thou mayst be turned into hobnails. Shakesp. Henry VI.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this bank!
Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

The giddy ship, betwixt the winds and tides
Forc'd back and forwards, in a circle rides, Stunn'd with the different blows; then shoots
again,

Till counterbuff'd she stops, and sleeps again. Dry.

3. To live thoughtlessly.

We sleep over our happiness, and want to be roused into a quick thankful sense of it. Atterb.

4. To be dead: death being a state from which man will some time awake.

If we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him. 1 Thess.

A person is said to be dead to us, because we cannot raise from the grave; though he only sleeps unto God, who can raise from the chamber of death. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To be inattentive; not vigilant.

Heaven will one day open
The king's eyes, that so long have slept upon
This bold bad man. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

6. To be unnoticed, or unattended.

You ever
Have wish'd the sleeping of this business, never Desir'd it to be stirr'd. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

SLEEP. n. s. [from the verb.] Repose; rest; suspension of the mental or corporal power; slumber.

Methought I heard a voice cry, Sleep no more!
Macbeth doth murder sleep; the innocent sleep;
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care;

The birth of each day's life, sore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second course,
Chief nourisher in life's feast. Shakesp. Macbeth.

That sleep might sweetly seal
His restful eyes, he enter'd, and in his bed
In silence took. Chapman.

Cold calleth the spirits to succour, and therefore they cannot so well close and go together in the head, which is ever requisite to sleep. And, for the same cause, pain and noise hinder sleep;
and darkness furthereth sleep. Bacon.

Beasts that sleep in winter, as wild bears, during their sleep wax very fat, though they eat nothing. Bacon.

His fasten'd hands the rudder keep,
And, fix'd on heav'n, his eyes repel invading sleep. Dryden.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,
His hat adorn'd with wings compelling the god,
And in his hand the sleep controlling rod. Dryden.

Infants spend the greatest part of their time in sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat, or some pain forces the mind to perceive it. Locke.

SLEEPER. n. s. [from sleep.]

1. One who sleeps; one who is not awake.

Sound, musick; come, my queen, take hand with me,
And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Shak.

What's the business,
That such an hideous trumpet calls to parley
The sleepers of the house? Shakesp. Macbeth.

In some countries, a plant which shutteth in the night, openeth in the morning, and openeth wide at noon, the inhabitants say is a plant that sleepeth. There be sleepers enow then; for almost all flowers do the like. Bacon.

Night is indeed the province of his reign;
Yet all his dark exploits no more contain
Than a spy taken, and a sleeper slain. Dryden.

2. A lazy inactive drone.

He must be no great eater, drinker, nor sleeper, that will discipline his senses, and exert his mind;
every worthy undertaking requires both. Grew.

3. That which lies dormant, or without effect.

Let penal laws, if they have been sleepers of long, or if grown unfit for the present time, be by wise judges confined in the execution. Bacon.

1. [Exocetus.] A fish. *Ainsworth.*SLEEP'PLY. adv. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsily; with desire to sleep.

I rather chuse to endure the wounds of those darts which envy casteth at novelty, than to go on safely and sleepily in the easy ways of ancient mistakings. Raleigh.

3. Stupidly.

He would make us believe that Luther in these actions pretended to authority, forgetting what he had sleepily owned before. Atterbury.

SLEEP'INESS. n. s. [from sleepy.] Drowsiness; disposition to sleep; inability to keep awake.

Watchfulness precedes too great sleepiness, and is the most ill-boding symptoms of a fever. Arbuth.

SLEEP'PLESS. adj. [from sleep.] Wanting sleep.

The field
To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd, Though after sleepless night. Milton's Parad. Lost.

While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep. Pope.

SLEEP'PY. adj. [from sleep.]

1. Drowsy; disposed to sleep.

Why did you bring these daggers from the place?
They must lie there. Go, carry them, and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood. Shakesp. Macbeth.

She wak'd her sleepy crew,
And, rising hasty, took a short adieu. Dryden.

3. Soporiferous; somniferous; causing sleep.

We will give you sleepy drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benum not still. Milton.

I slept about eight hours, and no wonder for the physicians had mingled a sleepy potion in the wine. Gulliver.

SLEET. n. s. [perhaps from the Danish slæt.] A kind of smooth small hail or snow, not falling in flakes, but single particles.

Now van to van the foremost squadrons meet,
The midstmost battles hast'ning up behind,
Who view, far off, the storm of falling sleet,
And hear their thunder rattling in the wind. Dryd.

Perpetual sleet and driving snow
Obscure the skies, and hang on herbs below:
Huge oxen stand inclos'd in wintry walls
Of snow congeal'd. Dryden.

Rains would have been pour'd down, as the vapours became cooler; next sleet, then snow and ice. Cheyne.

To SLEET. v. n. [from the noun.] To

snow in small particles, intermixed with rain.

SLEETY. adj. [from the noun.] Bringing sleet.

SLEEVE. n. s. [ʒli:v, Sax.]

1. The part of a garment that covers the arms.

Once my well-waiting eyes espied my treasure,
With sleeves turn'd up, loose hair, and breast enlarged,
Her father's corn moving her fair limbs, measure.

The deep smock sleeve, which the Irish women use, they say, was old Spanish; and yet that should seem rather to be an old English fashion; for in armory, the fashion of the manche, which is given in arms, being nothing else but a sleeve, is fashioned much like to that sleeve; and knights, in ancient times, used to wear their mistress's or love's sleeve upon their arms. Sir Launcelot wore the sleeve of the fair maid of Asteloth in a tourney.

Your hose should be ungartered, your sleeve unbuttoned, your shoe untied, demonstrating a careless desolation.

You would think a smock a she-angel, he so chants to the sleeve band, and the work about the square on't.

He was clothed in cloth, with wide sleeves and a capa.

In velvet white as snow the troop was gown'd,
Their hoods and sleeves the same.

2. Sleeve, in some provinces, signifies a knot or skein of silk, which is by some very probably supposed to be its meaning in the following passage. [See SLEAVE.]

Sleep that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care.

3. Sleeve, Dut. signifies a cover; any thing spread over; which seems to be the sense of sleeve in the proverbial phrase.

A brace of sharpers laugh at the whole roguery in their sleeves.

Men know themselves utterly void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing.

John laughed heartily in his sleeve at the pride of the esquire.

4. To hang on a sleeve; to make dependent. It is not for a man which doth know, or should know, what orders, and what peaceable government required, to ask why we should hang our judgment upon the church's sleeve, and why in matters of orders more than in matters of doctrine.

5. [Lolligo, Lat.] A fish.

SLEEVED. adj. [from sleeve.] Having sleeves.

SLEEVELESS. adj. [from sleeve.]

1. Wanting sleeves; having no sleeves. His clothes were strange tho' coarse, and black tho' bare;

Sleeveless his jerkin was, and it had been velvet; but 'twas now, so much ground was seen, become tufttuffaty.

They put on sleeveless coats of home-spun cotton.

2. Wanting reasonableness; wanting propriety; wanting solidity. [This sense, of which the word has been long possessed, I know not well how it obtained. Skinner thinks it properly liveless or lifeless: to this I cannot heartily agree, though I know not what better to suggest. Can it come from sleeve a knot or skein, and so signify unconnected, hanging ill together?

or from sleeve a cover, and therefore means plainly absurd, foolish without palliation?

This sleeveless tale of transubstantiation was brought into the world by that other fable of the multipresence.

My landlady quarrelled with him for sending every one of her children on a sleeveless errand, as she calls it.

SLEIGHT. n. s. [slag'd cunning, Island.] Artful trick; cunning artifice; dexterous practice: as, sleight of hand, the tricks of a juggler. This is often written, but less properly, slight.

He that exhorted to beware of an enemy's policy, doth not give counsel to be impolite; but rather to be all prudent foresight, lest our simplicity be over-reached by cunning sleights. Hook.

Fair Una to the red cross knight
Betrothed is with joy;
Though false Duessa, it to bar,
Her false sleights do employ.

Upon the corner of the moon
There hangs a vap'rous drop profound;
I'll catch it ere it come to ground;
And that, distill'd by magic sleights,
Shall raise such artificial sprights,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion.

Out stept the ample size
Of mighty Ajax, huge in strength; to him, Laertes's son,
The crafty one as huge in sleight.

The crafty one as huge in sleight.
She could not so convey
The massy substance of that idol great;
What sleight had she the wardens to betray?
What strength to have the goddess from her seat?

In the wily snake
Whatever sleights, none would suspicions mark,
As from his wit and native subtilty Proceeding.

Doubtless the pleasure is as great
Of being cheated, as to cheat;
As lookers on feel most delight,
That least perceive the juggler's sleight.

Good humour is but a sleight of hand, or a faculty making truths look like appearances, or appearances like truths.

When we hear death related, we are all willing to favour the sleight, when the poet does not too grossly impose upon us.

While innocent he scorns ignoble flight,
His honest friends preserve him by a sleight.

SLENDER. adj. [slinder, Dut.]

1. Thin; small in circumference compared with the length; not thick. So thick the roses bushing round
About her glow'd; half stooping to support
Each flow'r of slender stalk.

2. Small in the waist; having a fine shape. What slender youth, bedew'd with liquid odours, Courts thee on roses in some pleasant cave?

3. Not bulky; slight; not strong. Love in these labyrinth his slaves detains,
And mighty hearts are held in slender chains.

4. Small; inconsiderable; weak. Yet they, who claim the general assent of the whole world unto that which they teach, and do not fear to give very hard and heavy sentence upon as many as refuse to embrace the same, must have special regard, that their first foundations and grounds be more than slender probabilities.

At my lodging,
The worst is this, that at so slender warning,
You're like to have a thin and slender pittance.

6. Not amply supplied. The good Ostorious often deign'd
To grace my slender table with his presence.

In obstructions inflammatory, the aliment ought to be cool, slender, thin, diluting.

SLENDERLY. adv. [from slender.]

1. Without bulk.

2. Slightly; meanly. If the debt be not just, we know not what may be deemed just, neither is it a sum to be slenderly regarded.

If I have done well, it is that which I desired; but if slenderly and meanly, it is that which I could attain to.

SLENDERNESS. n. s. [from slender.]

1. Thinness; smallness of circumference. Small whistles give a sound because of their extreme slenderness, the air is more pent than in a wider pipe.

Their colours arise from the thinness of the transparent parts of the feathers; that is, from the slenderness of the very fine hairs or capillamenta, which grow out of the sides of the grosser lateral branches or fibres of those feathers.

2. Want of bulk or strength. It is preceded by a spitting of blood, occasioned by its acrimony, and too great a projectile motion with slenderness and weakness of the vessels.

3. Slightness; weakness; inconsiderableness. The slenderness of your reasons against the book, together with the inconveniences that must of necessity follow, have procured a great credit upon it.

4. Want of plenty. SLEPT. The preterite of sleep.

Silence; coeval with eternity,
Thou wert ere nature first began to be,
'Twas one vast nothing all, and all slapt fast in thee.

SLEW. The preterite of slay. He slew Hamet, a great commander among the Numidians, and chased Benchades and Amida, two of their greatest princes, out of the country.

To SLEY. v. n. [See To SLEAVE.] To part or twist into threads. Why art thou then exasperate, thou immaterial skein of sley'd silk?

To SLICE. v. a. [ʒli:ʒan, Sax.]

1. To cut into flat pieces. Their cooks make no more ado, but, slicing it into little gobbets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace.

2. To cut into parts. Nature lost one by thee, and therefore must slice one in two to keep her number just.

3. To cut off in a broad piece. When hungry thou stood'st staring like an oaf, I stic'd the luncheon from the barley loaf.

4. To cut; to divide. Princes and tyrants slice the earth among them.

SLICE. n. s. [ʒli:ʒe, Sax. from the verb.]

1. A broad piece cut off. Hacking of trees in their bark, both downright and across, so as you may make them rather in slices than in continued backs, doth great good to trees.

You need not wipe your knife to cut bread; because in cutting a slice or two it will wipe itself.

He from out the chimney took
A hitch of bacon off the hook,
And freely, from the fattest side,
Cut out large slices to be fried.

S L I

At my lodging,

The upper part of him, the blow

Had slit, as sure as that below. Hudibras.

We slit the preternatural body open. Wisem. Surg.

A liberty might be left to the judges to inflict death, or some notorious mark, by slitting the nose, or brands upon the cheeks. Temple.

If a tinned or plated body, which, being of an even thickness, appears all over of an uniform colour, should be slit into threads, or broken into fragments of the same thickness with the plate,
I see no reason why every thread or fragment should not keep its colour. Newton's Opticks.

He took a freak

To slit my tongue, and make me speak. Swift.

SLIT. n. s. [slit, Sax.] A long cut, or narrow opening.

In St. James's fields is a conduit of brick, unto which joineth a low vault, and at the end of that a round house of stone: and in the brick conduit there is a window, and in the round house a slit or rift of some little breadth: if you cry out in the rift, it will make a fearful roaring at the window. Bacon.

Where the tender rinds of trees disclose
Their shooting gems, a swelling knot there grows:
Just in that place a narrow slit we make,
Then other buds from bearing trees we take:

Inserted thus, the wounded rind we close. Dryd.
I found, by looking through a slit or oblong hole, which was narrower than the pupil of my eye, and held close to it parallel to the prisms. I could see the circles much distincter, and visible to a far greater number, than otherwise. Newton.

To SLIVE. } v. a. [slive, Sax.] To
To SLIVER. } split; to divide longwise;

ering.] Trowsers; open breeches.

What said Mr. Dombledoo about the sattin for my short cloak and slops? Shakesp. Hen. IV.

SLOPE. adj. [This word is not derived from any satisfactory original. Junius omits it: Skinner derives it from slap lax, Dutch; and derives it from the curve of a loose rope. Perhaps its original may be latent in loopen, Dut. to run, slope being easy to the runner.] Oblique; not perpendicular. It is generally used of acclivity or declivity, forming an angle greater or less with the plane of the horizon.

Where there is greater quantity of water, and space enough, the water moveth with a sloper rise and fall. Bacon.

Murm'ring waters fall

Down the slope hills, dispers'd, or in a lake,
That to the fringed bank with myrtle crown'd
Her chrysal mirror holds, unite their streams. Milton.

SLOPE. n. s. [from the adjective.]
1. An oblique direction; any thing oblique-ly directed.

2. Declivity; ground cut or formed with declivity.

Growing upon slopes is caused for that moss, as it cometh of moisture, so the water must but slide, not lie in a pool. Bacon.

My lord advances with majestic mien,
And when up ten steep slopes you've dragg'd your thighs,

Just at his study door he'll bless your eyes. Pope.

SLOPE. adv. Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

Uriel

Return'd on that bright beam, whose point now rais'd

Bore him slope downward to the sun, now fall'n. Milton.

To SLOPE. v. a. [from the adjective.] To form to obliquity or declivity; to direct obliquely.

Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown
down;

Though palaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations. Shak. Macbeth.

On each hand the spires Driv'n backward, slope their pointing spires, and roll'd

In billows, leave i' th' midst a horrid vale. Milton.

The star, that rose at evening bright,
Toward heav'n's descent had slop'd his west'ring wheel. Milton.

All night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd, and Phœbus shi'd in vain:
Nor, till oblique he slop'd his evening ray,
Had Somnus dried the balmy dews away. Pope's Odyssey.

To SLOPE. v. n. To take an oblique or declivous direction.

Betwixt the midst and these, the gods assign'd
Two habitable seats for human kind;

And cross their limits cut a sloping way,
Which the twelve sigis in beauteous order sway. Dryden.

There is a handsome work of piles made sloping athwart the river, to stop the trees which are cut down and east into the river. Brown's Travels.

Up starts a palace, lo! th' obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace. Pope.

There is a straight hole in every ant's nest half an inch deep; and then it goes down sloping into a place where they have their magazine. Aldis. Spect.

On the fourth aspect of a sloping hill,
Whose skirts meandring Peneus washes still,

Our pious lab'rer pass'd his youthful days
In peace and charity, in pray'r and praise. Harte.

SLO'PENESS. n. s. [from slope.] Obliquity; declivity; not perpendicularity.

The Italians give the cover a graceful pendency of slopeness, dividing the whole breadth into nine parts, whereof two shall serve for the elevation of the highest ridge. Wotton's Architecture.

SLO'PEWISE. adv. [slope and wise.]
Obliquely; not perpendicularly.

The Wear is a frith, reaching slopewise through the Ose from the land to low-water mark, and having in it a bent or cod with an eye-hook; where the fish entering, upon their coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again; forsaken by the water, and left dry on the ose. Carew.

sloth. Milton.

Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth.
Thomson's Autumn.

3. An animal.
The sloth is an animal of so slow a motion that he will be three or four days at least in climbing up and coming down a tree; and to go the length of fifty paces on plain ground, requires a whole day. Grew.

SLO'THFUL. adj. [sloth and full.] Idle; lazy; sluggish; inactive; indolent; dull of motion.

He that is slothful in his work, is brother to him that is a great waster. Prov. xviii. 9.

The desire of the slothful killeth him; for his hands refuse to labour. Prov. xvi. 25.

To vice industrious; but to nobler deeds
Thouorous and slothful. Milton.

Flora commands those nymphs and knights,
Who liv'd in slothful ease and loose delights,
Who never acts of honour durst pursue,
The men inglorious knights, the ladies all untrue. Dryden.

The very soul of the slothful does effectually but lie drowsing in his body, and the whole man is totally given up to his senses. L'Estrange.

Another is deaf to all the motives to piety, by indulging an idle slothful temper. Law.

SLO'THFULLY. adv. [from slothful.] Idly;
lazily; with sloth.

SLO'THFULNESS. n. s. [from slothful.]
Idleness; laziness; sluggishness; inactivity.

To trust to labour without prayer, argueth impiety and prophaneness; it maketh light of the providence of God: and although it be not the intent of a religious mind, yet it is the fault of those men whose religion waiteth light of a nature judgment to direct it, when we join with our prayer slothfulness, and neglect of convenient labour. Hooker.

Slothfulness casteth into a deep sleep, and an idle soul shall suffer hunger. Prov. xix. 15.

SLOUCH. n. s. [sluff, Dan. stupid.]

1. A downcast look; a depression of the head. In Scotland, an ungainly gait, as also the person whose gait it is.

Our doctor has every quality that can make a man useful; but alas! he hath a sort of sloUCH in his walk. Swift.

2. A man who looks heavy and clownish.

Begin thy carols then, thou vaunting sloUCH;
Be thine the oaken staff, or mine the pouch. Gay.

To SLOUCH. v. n. [from the noun.] To have a downcast clownish look.

SLOVEN. n. s. [sloef, Dut. yslyrn, Welsh, nasty, shabby.] A man indecently negligent of cleanliness; a man dirtily dressed.

The ministers came to church in handsome holiday apparel, and that himself did not think them bound by the law of God to go like slovens. Hooker.

Affect in things about thee cleanliness,
That all may gladly board thee as a flow'r;
Slovens take up their stock of noisomeness
Beforehand, and anticipate their last hour. Herbert.

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand;
My wig half powder, and all snuff my hand. Pope.

Their methods various, but alike their aim;
The sloven and the fopling are the same. Young.

SLOVENLINESS. n. s. [from slovenly.] Indecent negligence of dress; neglect of cleanliness.

Slovenliness is the worst sign of a hard student, and civility the best exercise of the remiss; yet not to be exact in the phrase of compliment, or gestures of courtesy. Hutton.

SLOVENLY. adv. [from sloven.] Negligent of dress; negligent of neatness; not neat; not cleanly.

Æsop at last found out a slovenly lazy fellow, Lolling at his ease, as if he had nothing to do. L'Estrange.

SLOVENLY. adj. [from sloven.] In a coarse inelegant manner.

As I hang my clothes on somewhat slovenly, I no sooner went in but he frowned upon me. Pope.

SLOVENRY. n. s. [from sloven.] Dirtiness; want of neatness.

Our gayness and our guilt are all besmirch'd
With rainy marching in the painful field;
There's not a piece of feather in our host,
And time hath worn us into slovenry. Shakesp. Hen. V.

SLOUGH. n. s. [slough, Sax.]

1. A deep miry place; a hole full of dirt.

The Scots were in a fallow field, whereinto the English could not enter, but over a cross ditch and a slough; in passing whereof many of the English horse were plunged, and some mired. Hayward.

The ways being foul, twenty to one
He's here stuck in a slough, and overthrow'n. Milt.
A carter had laid his waggon fast in a slough. L'Estrange.

2. The skin which a serpent casts off at his periodical renovation.

Thy fates open their hands, let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough, and appear fresh. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

When the mind is quicken'd,
The organs, though defunct and dead before,
Break up their drowsy grave, and newly move,
With casted slough, and fresh legerity. Shakesp.

Oh let not sleep my closing eyes invade
In open plains, or in the secret shade,
When he, renew'd in all the speckled pride
Of pompous youth, has cast his slough aside;
And in his summer liv'ry rolls along
Erect, and brandishing his forked tongue. Dryden.

The slough of an English viper, that is, the cuticula, they cast off twice every year, at spring and fall: the separation begins at the head, and is finished in twenty-four hours. Greav.

The body, which we leave behind in this visible world, is as the womb or slough from whence we issue, and are born into the other. Greav's Cosmol.

3. It is used by Shakespeare simply for the skin.

As the snake, roll'd in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shakesp. Hen. VI.

4. The part that separates from a foul sore.

At the next dressing I found a slough come away with the dressings, which was the sordes. Wiseman on Ulcers.

To SLOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To part from the sound flesh. A surgical term.

SLOUGHY. adj. [from slough.] Miry; boggy; muddy.

That custom should not be allowed, of cutting scraws in low grounds sloughy underneath, which turn into bog. Swift.

SLOW. adj. [slap, pleap, Sax. slacuw, Frisick.]

1. Not swift; not quick of motion; not speedy; not having velocity; wanting celerity.

Me thou think'st not slow,
Who since the morning hour set out from heav'n,
Where God resides, and on mid-day arriv'd
In Eden, distance inexpressible! Milton.

Where the motion is so slow as not to supply a constant train of fresh ideas to the senses, the sense of motion is lost. Locke.

2. Late; not happening in a short time.

These changes in the heav'n's, though slow, produce'd
Like change on sea and land, sidereal blast. Milton.

3. Not ready; not prompt; not quick.

I am slow of speech, and a slow tongue. Erod. iv. 10.
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine eye not shut. Milton.

The slow of speech make in dreams unpremeditated harangues, or converse readily in languages that they are but little acquainted with. Addison.

For though in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I knew thou wert not slow to hear,
Nor impotent to save. Addison.

4. Dull; inactive; tardy; sluggish.

Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard their shore from an expected foe. Dryd.

5. Not hasty; acting with deliberation; not vehement.

The Lord is merciful, and slow to anger. Common Prayer.
He that is slow to wrath, is of great understanding. Prov.

The politick and wise
Are sly slow things with circumspect eyes. Pope.

6. Dull; heavy in wit.

The blockhead is a slow worm. Pope.

Slow, in composition, is an adverb; slawty.

This slow-pac'd soul, which late did cleave
T' a body, and went but, by the body's leave,
Twenty perchance or thirty mile a day,
Dispatches in a minute all the way
T'wixt heav'n and earth. Donne.

To the shame of slow endeavouring art
Thy easy numbers flow. Milton.

This day's death denounc'd, if aught I see,
Will prove no sudden but a slow-pac'd evil,
A long day's dying to augment our pain. Milton.
For eight slow-circling years by tempests tost. Pope.

Some demon urg'd
T' explore the fraud with guile oppos'd to guile, Slow-pacing thrice around th' insidious pile. Pope.

To SLOW. v. a. [from the adjective.] To omit by dilatoriness; to delay; to procrastinate. Not in use. The true word was forslow.

Now do you know the reason of this haste?
—I would I knew not why it should be slow'd. Shakesp.

SLOWLY. adv. [from slow.]

1. Not speedily; not with celerity; not with velocity.

The gnome rejoicing bears her gift away,
Spreads his black wings, and slowly mounts to day. Pope.

2. Not soon; not early; not in a little time.

The poor remnant of human seed peopled their country again slowly, by little and little. Bacon.

Our fathers bent their painful industry
To check a monarchy that slowly grew;
But did not France or Holland's fate foresee,
Whose rising power to swift dominion flew. Dryd.

We oft our slowly growing works impart,
While images reflect from art to art. Pope.

3. Not hastily; not rashly: as, he determines slowly.

4. Not promptly; not readily: as, he learns slowly.

5. Tardily; sluggishly.

The chapel of St. Laurence advances so very slowly, that 'tis not impossible but the family of Medicis may be extinct before their burial place is finished. Addison on Italy.

SLOWNESS. n. s. [from slow.]

1. Smallness of motion; not speed; want of velocity; absence of celerity or swiftness.

Providence hath confined these human hearts, that what any invention hath in the strength of its motion, is abated in the slowness of it: and what it hath in the extraordinary quickness of its motion, must be allowed for in the great strength that is required unto it. Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

Motion is the absolute mode of a body, but swiftness or slowness are relative ideas. Watts.

2. Length of time in which any thing acts or is brought to pass; not quickness.

Tyrants use what art they can to increase the slowness of death. Hooker.

3. Dulness to admit conviction or affection.

Christ would not heal their infirmities, because of the hardness and slowness of their hearts, in that they believed him not. Bentley's Sermons.

4. Want of promptness; want of readiness.

5. Deliberation; cool delay.

6. Dilatoriness; procrastination.

SLOWWORM. n. s. [slapwurm, Sax.] The blind worm; a large viper, not mortal, scarcely venomous.

Though we have found formed snakes in the belly of the caecilia, or slowworm, yet may the viper emphatically bear the name. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To SLUBBER. v. a. [probably from lubber.]

1. To do any thing lazily, imperfectly, or with idle hurry.

Nature shewed she doth not like men who slubber up matters of mean account. Sidney.

Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return: he answer'd, do not so,
Slubber not business for my sake.

Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
As they are slubbered over, the malignity that remains will show itself in some chronic disease. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. To stain; to daub. [This seems to be from slobber, slabber, or slaver.]

You must be content to slubber the gloss of your new fortunes with this more stubborn and boisterous expedition. Shakesp.

3. To cover coarsely or carelessly. This is now not in use, otherwise than as a low colloquial word.

A man of secret ambitious ends, and proportionate counsels, smothered under the habit of a scholar, and slubbered over with a certain rude and clownish fashion, that had the semblance of integrity. Wotton.

SLUBBERDEGULLION. n. s. [I suppose a cant word without derivation.] A paltry, dirty, sorry wretch.

Quoth she, although thou hast deserv'd,
Base slubberdegullion, to be serv'd
As thou didst vow to deal with me,
If thou hadst got the victory. Hudibras.

SLUDGE. n. s. [I suppose from flodg slough, Sax.] Mire; or dirt mixed with water.

The earth I made a mere soft sludge or mud.
Mortimer.

SLUG. n. s. [slug, Dan. and slock, Dut. signify a glutton, and thence one that has the sloth of a glutton.]

1. An idler; a drone; a slow, heavy, sleepy, lazy wretch.

Fie! what a slug is Hastings, that he comes not!
Shakesp.

2. An hindrance; an obstruction.

Usury dulls and damps all improvements, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for this slug. Bacon.

3. A kind of slow creeping snail.

4. [pleeg, an hammerhead, Sax.] A cylindrical or oval piece of metal shot from a gun.

When fractures are made with bullets or slugs,
there the scalp and cranium are driven in together.
Wise-man's Surgery.

As, forc'd from wind-guns, lead itself cau fly,
And pond'rous slugs cut swiftly through the sky.
Pope.

To SLUG. v. n. [from the noun] To lie idle; to play the drone; to move slowly.

All be did was to deceive good knights,
And draw them from pursuit of praise and fame,
To slug in sloth and sensual delights,
And end their days with irenownd shame.
Fairy Queen.

He lay not all night slugging in a cabin under his mantle, but used commonly to keep others waking to defend their lives. Spenser.

One went slugging on with a thousand cares.
L'Estrange.

SLUGGARD. n. s. [from slug.] An idler; a drone; an inactive lazy fellow.

Cry mercy, lords, and watchful gentlemen,
That you have ta'en a tardy sluggard here,
Shakesp. Rich. III.

This mightier sound shall make

The dead to rise,
And open tombs and open eyes,
To the long *sluggard*s of five thousand years. Cowley.

Up, up, says Avarice; thou snor'st again,
Stretch thy limbs, and yawn'st, but all in vain:
The tyrant Lucre no denial takes;
At his command th' unwilling sluggard wakes.
Dryden.

Sprightly May commands our youth to keep
The vigils of her night, and breaks their sluggard sleep. Dryden.

To SLUGGARDIZE. v. a. [from sluggard.]

To make idle; to make dronish.

Rather see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness. Shak.

SLUGGISH. adj. [from slug.] Dull; drowsy; lazy; slothful; idle; insipid; slow; inactive; inert.

Sluggish idleness, the nurse of sin,
Upon a slothful ass he chose to ride. Fairy Queen.

The dull billows, thick as troubled mire,
Whom neither wind out of their seat could force,
Nor tides did drive out of their sluggish source.
Spenser.

One, bolder than the rest,
With his broad sword provok'd the sluggish heast.
Waller.

Matter, being impotent, sluggish, and inactive, hath no power to stir or move itself. Woodward.

SLUGGISHLY. adv. [from sluggish.] Dully; not nimbly; lazily; idly; slowly.

SLUGGISHNESS. n. s. [from sluggish.] Dulness; sloth; laziness; idleness; inertness.

The most of mankind are inclined by her thither, if they would take the pains; no less than birds to fly, and horses to run; which if they lose, it is through their own sluggishness, and by that means become her prodigies, not her children.
Ben Jonson.

It is of great moment to teach the mind to shake off its sluggishness, and vigorously employ itself about what reason shall direct. Locke.

SLUICE. n. s. [sluyse, Dut. escluse, Fr. scusa, Ital.] A watergate; a floodgate; a vent for water.

Two other precious drops, that ready stood
Each in their crystal sluice, he, ere they fell,
Kiss'd, as the gracious signs of sweet remorse,
And pious awe, that fear'd to have offended. Milt.

Divine Alpheus, who, by secret sluice,
Stole under seas to meet his Arethuse. Milton.
If we receive them all, they were more than seven; if only the natural sluices, they were fewer.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

As waters from her sluices, flow'd Unbounded sorrow from her eyes. Prior.

Each sluice of affluent fortune open'd soon,
And wealth flow'd in at morning, night, and noon.
Harte.

To SLUICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To emit by floodgates.

Like a traitor coward,
Sluic'd out his imm'cent soul through streams of blood.
Shakesp.

Veins of liquid ore sluic'd from the lake. Milton.
You wrong me, if you think I'll sell one drop Within these veins for pageants; but let honour
Call for my blood, I'll sluice it into streams;
Turn fortune loose again to my pursuit,
And let me hunt her through her embattled foes,
In dusty plains; there will I be the first.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

SLUICY. adj. [from sluice.] Falling in streams as from a sluice or floodgate.

And oft whole sheets descend of sluicy rain,
Suck'd by the spongy clouds from off the main:
The lofty skies at once come pouring down,
The promis'd crop and golden labours drown.
Dryden.

To SLUMBER. v. n. [plumman, Sax. sluymeren, Dut.]

his conscience in the doing, he studied other incentives. Wotton.

SLUMBER. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Light sleep; sleep not profound.

And for his dreams, I wonder he's so fond
To trust the mock'ry of unquiet slumbers.
Shakesp. Richard III.

From carelessness it shall fall into slumber, and from a slumber it shall settle into a deep and long sleep; till at last, perhaps, it shall sleep itself into a lethargy, and that such an one, that nothing but hell and judgment shall awaken it. South.

Labour and rest, that equal periods keep;
Obedient slumbers that can wake and weep. Pope.

2. Sleep; to repose.

Boy! Lucius! fast asleep? It is no matter;
Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber.
Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Ev'n lust and envy sleep, but love denies Rest to my soul, and slumber to my eyes:
Three days I promis'd to attend my doom,
And two long days and nights are yet to come. Dry.

SLUMBEROUS. } adj. [from slumber.]

SLUMBERY. }
1. Inviting to sleep; soporiferous; causing sleep.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumberous weight, inclines
Our eyelids. Milton.

While pensive in the silent slumberous shade,
Sleep's gentle pow'r her drooping eyes invade;
Minerva, life-like, on embodied air
Impress'd the form of Iphthema. Pope's Odyssey.

There every eye with slumberous chains she bound,
And dash'd the flowing goblets to the ground. Pope.

2. Sleepy; not waking.

A great perturbation in nature! to receive at once the benefit of sleep, and do the effects of watching. In this slumbery agitation, what have you heard her say? Shak. Macbeth.

SLUNG. The preterite and participle passive of sling.

SLUNK. The preterite and participle passive of slink.

Silence accompany'd; for beast, and bird,
They to their grassy couch, these to their nests,
Were slunk. Milton's Par. Lost

1. To sully; to soil; to contaminate.

2. To pass lightly; to balk; to miss.

The atheists laugh in their sleeves, and not a little triumph, to see the cause of theism thus betrayed by its professed friends, and the grand argument sturred by them, and so their work done to their hands. Cudworth.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes, he slurs his crimes,
He robb'd not, but he borrow'd from the poor,
And took but with intention to restore. Dryden.

3. To cheat; to trick.

What was the publick faith found out for?
But to slur men of what they fought for? Hudib.

Come, seven's the main,
Cries Ganymede: the usual trick:
Seven, slur a six; eleven, a nick. Prior.

SLUR. n. s. [from the verb.] Faint reproach; slight disgrace.

Here is an ape made a king for shewing tricks; and the fox is then to put a slur upon him, in exposing him for sport to the scorn of the people.
L'Estrange.

No one can rely upon such an one, either with safety to his affairs, or without a slur to his reputation; since he that trusts a knave has no other recompence but to be accounted a fool for his pains. South's Sermons.

SLUT. n. s. [slodde, Dut.]

1. A dirty woman.

Cricket, to Windsor chimnies shalt thou leap;
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry;
Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery. Shakesp.
The veal's all rags, the butter's turn'd to oil;
And thus I buy good meat for sluts to spoil. King.

2. A word of slight contempt to a woman.

Hold up, you sluts,
Your aprons mountant; you're not oathable,
Although I know you'll swear. Shakesp. Timon.
The frogs were ready to leap out of their skins for joy, till one crafty old slut in the company advised them to consider a little better on't. L'Estr.

SLUTTERY. n. s. [from slut.] The qualities or practice of a slut.

Slutt'ry, to such neat excellence oppos'd,
Should make desire vomit emptiness. Shak. Cymb.
These make our girls their sluttery rue,
By pinching them both black and blue;
And put a penny in their shoe,
The house for cleanly sweeping. Drayton.
A man gave money for a black, upon an opinion that his swarthy colour was rather sluttery than nature, and the fault of his master that kept him no cleaner. L'Estrange.

SLUTTISH. adj. [from slut.]

1. Nasty; not nice; not cleanly; dirty; indecently negligent of cleanliness.

All preparations both for food and lodging, such as would make one detest niggardness, it is so sluttish a vice. Sidney.
Albeit the mariners do covet store of cabbins, yet indeed they are but sluttish dens that breed sickness in peace, serving to cover stealths, and in sight are dangerous to tear men with their splinters. Raleigh's Essays.

The nastiness of that nation, and sluttish course of life, hath much promoted the opinion, occasioned by their servile condition at first, and inferior ways of parsimony ever since. Brown.

Slothful disorder fill'd his stable,
And sluttish plenty deck'd her table. Prior.

That is only suitable in laying a foul complexion upon a filthy favour, setting forth both in sluttish-ness. Sidney.

I look on the instinct of this noisome and troublesome creature, the louse, of searching out foul and nasty clothes to harbour and breed in, as an effect of divine providence, designed to deter men and women from sluttishness and sordidness, and to provoke them to cleanliness and neatness.
Ray on the Creation.

SLY. adj. [𐌺𐌹𐍃, Sax. slippery, and metaphorically deceitful; slægur, Island.]

The curled whirlpools suck, smack, and embrace,
Yet down their souls. Donne.

2. To make to emit any quick smart noise.

More than one steed must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel;
And, as she guides it through th' admiring throng,
With what an air she smacks the silken thong!
Young.

SMACK. n. s. [smæck, Dut. from the verb.]

1. Taste; savour.

2. Tincture; quality from something mixed.

The child, that sucketh the milk of the nurse, learns his first speech of her; the which, being the first inured to his tongue, is ever after most pleasing unto him; inasmuch, that though he afterwards be taught English, yet the smack of the first will always abide with him. Spenser.

Your lordship, though not clean past your youth, bath yet some smack of age in you, some relish of the saltness of time, and have a care of your health.
Shaksp. Hen. IV.

It caused the neighbours to rue, that a petty smack only of popery opened a gap to the oppression of the whole. Carew.

As the Pythagorean soul
Runs through all beasts, and fish, and fowl,
And has a smack of every one,
So love does, and has ever done. Hudibras.

with great mercies will I gather thee. Isa. liv. 7.

Death only this mysterious truth unfolds,
The nightly soul how small a body holds. Dryd. Juu.

All numeration is but still the adding of one unit more, and giving to the whole together a distinct name, whereby to distinguish it from every smaller or greater multitude of units. Locke.

The ordinary smallest measure we have is looked on as an unit in number. Locke.

The danger is less when the quantity of the fluids is too small, than when it is too great; for a smaller quantity will pass where a larger cannot, but not contrariwise. Arbuthnot.

Good cooks cannot abide fiddling work: such is the dressing of small birds, requiring a world of cookery. Swift.

2. Slender; exile; minute.

After the earthquake a fire, and after the fire a still small voice. 1 Kings, xix. 12.

manage.

SNAG. n. s. [Of this word I know not the etymology or original.]

1. A jag, or sharp protuberance.

The one her other leg had lame,
Which with a staff, all full of little snags,
She did disport ; and Impotence her name. FairyQ.

The coat of arms,
Now on a naked snag in triumph born,
Was hung on high. Dryden's Æneid.

2. A tooth left by itself, or standing beyond the rest ; a tooth, in contempt.

In China none hold women sweet,
Except their snags are black as jet ;
King Chihu put nine queens to death,
Convict on statute, iv'ry teeth. Prior

SNA'GGED. adj. [from snag.] Full of SNA'GGY. } snags ; full of sharp pro-tuberances ; shooting into sharp points.

His stalking steps are stay'd
Upon a snoggy oak, which he had torn
Out of his mother's bowels, and it made His mortal mace, wherewith his foemen he dis-may'd. Spenser.

Naked men labouring one another with snagged sticks, or dully falling together by the ears at hasty-cuffs. More.

SNAIL. n. s. [ʃnæʒl, Sax. snægel, Dut.]

1. A slimy animal which creeps on plants, some with shells on their backs; the emblem of slowness.

I can tell why a snail has a house.—Why?—Why, to put's head in; not to give it away to his daughters, and leave his horns without a case. Shakesp. King Lear.

Fearful commenting
Is leaden servitor to dull delay;
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary. Shakesp. Richard III.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder:
Snail slow in profit, but he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat. Shakesp.

Seeing the snail, which every where doth roam,
Carrying his own house still, still is at home,
Follow, for he is easy-pac'd, this snail;
Be thine own palace, or the world's thy goal. Donne.

There may be as many ranks of beings in the invisible world superior to us, as we ourselves are superior to all the ranks of beings beneath us in this visible world, even though we descend below the snail and the otter. Watts.

2. A name given to a drone, from the slow motion of a snail.

Why prat'st thou to thyself, and answer'st not?
Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou sot!
Shakesp.

SNAIL-CLAUVER, or Snail-trefoil. n. s. [trifolium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SNAKE. n. s. [ʃnaka, Sax. snake, Dut.] A serpent of the oviparous kind, distinguished from a viper. The snake's bite is harmless. Snake in poetry is a general name for a serpent.

Glo'ster's shew beguiles him;
As the snake, rolled in a flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent. Shak. H. V.

We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it:
She'll close, and be herself; whilst our poor malice Remains in danger of her former teeth. Shak. Mac.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling the gliding of a snake upon the ground; they must be smooth and even. Dryd. Du Fresnoy.

Nor chalk, nor crumbling stones, the food of snakes,
That work in hollow earth their winding tracks. Dryden.

SNAKEROOT. n. s. [snake and root.] A species of birthwort growing in Virginia and Carolina.

SNAKESHEAD. Iris. n. s. [hermodactylus, Lat.] A plant.

Resign'd for conduct the choice youth of all their mortal brood. Chapman.

The true lovers knot had its original from nodus Herculeanus, or Hercules's knot, resembling the snaky complication in the caduceus, or rod of Hermes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles.
Milton's Paradise Regained.

2. Having serpents.

Look, look unto this snaky rod,
And stop your ears against the charming god.
Ben Jonson.

In his hand
He took caduceus, his snaky wand. Hubberd's Tale.
What was that snaky-headed gorgon shield
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin!
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone?
Milton.

His flying hat was fasten'd on his head;
Wings on his heels were lung, and in his hand—
He holds the virtue of the snaky wand. Dryden.

To SNAP. v. a. [the same with knap.]

1. To break at once; to break short.

If the chain of necessity be no stronger, but that it may be snapped so easily in sunder; if his will was no otherwise determin'd from without himself, but only by the signification of your desire, and my modest intreaty, then we may conclude, human affairs are not always governed by absolute necessity. Bramhall against Hobbes.

Light is broken like a body, as when 'tis snapped in pieces by a tougher body. Digby.

Dauntless as death, away he walks;
Breaks the doors open, snaps the locks;
Searches the parlour, chamber, study,
Nor stops till he has culprit's body. Prior.

All mungrel curs hawl, snarl, and snap, where the foe flies before them. L'Estrange.

A notion generally received, that a lion is dangerous to all women who are not virgins, may have given occasion to a foolish report, that my lion's jaws are so contrived as to snap the hauds of any of the female sex, who are not thus qualified. Addison's Spectator.

He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws,
The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws. Gay.

4. To catch suddenly and unexpectedly.

Sir Richard Graham tells the marquis he would snap one of the kids, and make some shift to carry him close to their lodgings. Wotton.

Some with a noise and greasy light
Are snapt, as men catch larks at night. Butler.
You should have thought of this before you was taken; for now you are in no danger to be snapt singing again. L'Estrange.

Did I not see you, rascal, did I not,
When you lay snug to snap young Damon's goat?
Dryden.

Belated seem on watch to lie,
And snap some cully passing by. Swift.

5. [Snappen, Dut.] To treat with sharp language.

Capoch'd your rabbins of the synod,
And snapp'd their canons with a why not. Hudibras.

A surly ill-bred lord,
That chides and snaps her up at every word. Granville.

To SNAP. v. n.

1. To break short; to fall asunder; to break without bending.

Note the ship's sicknesses; the mast
Shak'd with an ague, and the hull and waist
With a salt dropsy clogg'd; and our tacklings
Snapping, like to too high stretch'd treble strings. Donne.

The backbone is divided into so many vertebrae for commodious bending, and not one intire rigid bone, which, being of that length, would have been often in danger of snapping in sunder. Ray on Creation.

If your steel be too hard, that is, too brittle, if it be a spring, it will not bow; but with the least bending it will snap asunder. Mozon's Mech. Faer.

The makers of these needles should give them a due temper: for if they are too soft, they will bend; and if they are too brittle, they snap. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To make an effort to bite with eagerness.

If the young dace be a bait for the old pike, I see no reason but I may snap at him. Shak. Henry IV.
We snap at the bait without ever dreaming of the hook that goes along with it. L'Estrange.

Towzer snaps
At people's heels with frothy chaps. Swift.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

To SNARL. v. n. [snarren, Dut.]

1. To growl as an angry animal; to gnar.

What! were you snarling all before I came,
Ready to catch each other by the throat,
And turn you all your hatred now on me?
Shakesp. Richard III.

He is born with teeth!
And so I was; which plainly signified
That I should snarl, and bite, and play the dog.
Shakesp.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace.
Shakesp. King John.

The shes even of the savage herd are safe;
All, when they snarl or bite, have no return
But courtship from the male. Dryden's Don Sebast.

Snarls while he feeds. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.

2. To speak roughly; to talk in rude terms.

'Tis malicious and unmanly to snarl at the little lapses of a pen, from which Virgil himself stands not exempted.
Dryden.

The honest farmer and his wife,
Two years declin'd from prime of life,
Had struggled with the marriage noose,
As almost ev'ry couple does:

Sometimes, my plague! sometimes, my darling!
Kissing to-day, to-morrow snarling. Prior.
Where hast thou been snarling odious truths,
and entertaining company with discourse of their diseases?
Congreve.

To SNARL. v. a. To intangle; to embarrass. I know not that this sense is well authorised.

Confused snarled consciences render it difficult to pull out thread by thread.
Decay of Piety.

SNARLER. n. s. [from snarl.] One who snarls; a growling, surly, quarrelsome, insulting fellow.

Should stupid libels grieve your mind,
You soon a remedy may find;

To SNATCH. v. a. [snacken, Dut.]

1. To seize any thing hastily.

A virtuous mind should rather wish to depart this world with a kind of treatable dissolution, than to be suddenly cut off in a moment; rather to be taken than snatched away from the face of the earth. Hooker.

Death,
So snatch'd, will not exempt us from the pain.
Milton.

Life's stream hurries all too fast:
In vain sedate reflections we would make,
When half our knowledge we must snatch, not take.
Pope.

She snatch'd a sheet of Thule from her bed:
Sudden she flies, and whelms it o'er the pyre;
Down sink the flames. Pope's Dunciad.

They, sailing down the stream,
Are snatch'd inmediate by the quick-eyed trout,
Or darting salmon. Thomson's Seasons.

S N E

2. To transport or carry suddenly.

SNITE. n. s. [snita, Sax.] A snipe.

This is perhaps the true name; but snipe prevails.

Of tame birds Cornwall hath doves, geese, and ducks: of wild, quail, rail, snite, and wood-dove. Carew.

To SNITE. v. a. [snytan, Sax.] To blow the nose.

Nor would any one be able to snite his nose, or to sneeze; in both which the passage of the breath through the mouth, being intercepted by the tongue is forced to go through the nose. Grew's Cosmologia.

SNIVEL. n. s. [snavel, snerel, Germ.] Snot; the running of the nose.

To SNIVEL. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run at the nose.

2. To cry as children.

Funeral tears are hired out as mourning cloaks; and whether we go to our graves snivelling or singing, 'tis all mere form. L'Estrange.

Away goes he snivelling and yelping, that he had dropt his axe into the water. L'Estrange.

SNIVELLER. n. s. [from snivel.] A weeper; a weak lamenter.

S N O

He'd more lament when I was dead, Than all the snivellers round my bed. Swift.

To SNORE. v. n. [snorcken, Dut.] To breathe hard through the nose, as men in sleep.

I did unreverently blame the gods, Who wake for thee, though thou snore for thyself. Ben Jonson.

Whose railing heroes, and whose wounded gods, Makes some suspect he snores as well as nos. Roscommon.

He may lie in his shades, and snore on to doomsday for me; unless I see farther reason of disturbing his repose. Stillingfleet.

Is not yonder Proteus' cave? It is, and in it lies the god asleep; And snoring by We may descry

The monsters of the deep. Dryden's Albion.

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood, Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den, Belching raw gobbets from his maw, o'ercharg'd With purple wine and craddled gore confus'd. Addis.

SNORE. n. s. [snora, Sax. from the verb.] Audible respiration of sleepers through the nose.

The sarficed grooms Do mock their charge with snores: I've drugg'd their possets. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Her subtle snout Did quickly wind his meaning out. Hudibras.

But when the date of Nock was out, Off dropt the sympathetic snout. Hudibras.

What Æthiop lips he has, How foul a snout, and what a hanging face! Dryden's Juvenal.

Charm'd with his eyes, and chin, and snout, Her pocket-glass drew slyly out; And grew enamour'd with her phiz, As just the counterpart of his. Swift.

3. The nosel or end of any hollow pipe.

SNO'UTED. adj. [from snout.] Having a snout.

Their dogs snouted like foxes, but deprived of that property which the logicians call proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark. Heylun.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat. Grew.

SNOW. n. s. [snap, Sax. snee, Dut.] The small particles of water frozen before they unite into drops. Locke.

Drought and heat consume snow waters. Job, xxiv. 19.

He gives the winter's snow her airy birth, And bids her virgin fleeces clothe the earth. Sandys.

Soft as the fleeces of descending snous. Pope.

To SNOW. v. n. [napan, Sax. sneuwēu, Dut.] To fall in snow.

The hills being high about them, it snows at the tops of them oftener than it rains. Brown's Trav.

To SNOW. v. a. To scatter like snow.

If thou be'st born to see strange sights,
Tide ten thousand days and nights,
Till age snow white hairs on thee. Donne.

SNOWBALL. n. s. [snow and ball.] A round lump of congelated snow.

They passed to the east-riding of Yorkshire, their company daily increasing, like a snowball in rolling. Hayward.

His bulky folly gathers as it goes,
And, rolling o'er you, like a snowball grows. Dryd.

A snowball having the power to produce in us the ideas of white, cold, and round, the powers, as they are in the snowball, I call qualities; and, as they are sensations in our understandings, ideas. Locke.

SNOWBROTH. n. s. [snow and broth.] Very cold liquor.

Angelo, a man whose blood
Is very snowbroth, one who never feels
The wanton stings and motions of the sense. Shak.

SNOWDEEP. n. s. [viola bulbosa, Lat.] An herb.

SNOWDROP. n. s. [narcissoleucium, Lat.] An early flower.

When we tried the experiment with the leaves of those purely white flowers that appear about the end of winter, called snowdrops, the event was not much unlike that newly mentioned. Boyle on Colours.

The little shape, by magick pow'r,
Grew less and less, contracted to a flow'r;
A flow'r that first in this sweet garden smil'd.
To virgins sacred, and the snowdrop styl'd. Tickel.

SNOW-WHITE. adj. [snow and white.] White as snow.

A snow-white bull shall on your shore be slain;
His offer'd entrails cast into the main. Dryd. Æn.

SNOWY. adj. [from snow.]

1. White like snow.
So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellow shews. Shakesp.

Now I see thy jolly train:
Snowy headed winter leads,
Spring and summer next succeeds;
Yellow autumn brings the rear;
Thou art father of the year. Rowe.

The blushing ruby on her snowy breast,
Render'd its panting whiteness more confest. Prior.

2. Abounding with snow.
These first in Crete
And Ida known; thence on the snowy top
Of cold Olympus rul'd the middle air. Milt. Par. Lost.

As when the Tartar from his Russian foe,
By Astracan, over the snowy plains Retires. Milton's Paradise Lost.

SNUB. n. s. [from snebbe, Dut. a nose; or knubel a joint of the finger.] A jag; a snag; a knot in wood.

Lifting up his dreadful club on high,
All arm'd with ragged snubs, and knotty grain,
Him thought at first encounter to have slain. F. Q.

To SNUB. v. a. [rather To snib. See SNEAP, SNEB, SNIB.]

1. To check; to reprimand.
2. To nip.

Near the sea-shores, the heads and boughs of trees run out far to landward; but toward the sea are so snubbed by the winds, as if their boughs had been pared or shaven off. Ray on the Creation.

To SNUB. v. n. [snuffen, Dut.] To sob with convulsion.

To SNUDGE. v. n. [sniger, Dan.] To lie idle, close, or snug.

Now he will fight it out, and to the wars;
Now eat his bread in peace,
And sudge in quiet; now he scorns increase;
Now all day spares. Herbert.

SNUFF. n. s. [snuf, Dut. snot.]

1. Snot. In this sense it is not used.

2. The useless excrement of a candle: whence moucher la chandelle.

My snuff and loathed part of nature should Burn itself out. Shakesp. King Lear.

But dearest heart, and dearer image, stay!
Alas! true joys at best are dreams enough:
Though you stay here, you pass too fast away;
For even at first life's taper is a snuff. Donne.

If the liquor be of a close and glutinous consistency, it may burn without any snuff, as we see in camphire, and some other bituminous substances; and most of the ancient lamps were of this kind, because none have been found with such wicks. Wilkins.

3. A candle almost burnt out.
Lamentable!

To hide me from the radiant sun, and solace
P' th' dungeon by a snuff. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. The fired wick of a candle remaining after the flame.
A torch, snuff, and all, goes out in a moment, when dipped into the vapour. Addison on Italy.

5. Resentment expressed by sniffting; perverse resentment. Not used unless in low language.
What hath been seen
Either in snuffs or packings of the duke's,
Or the hard rain which both of them have borne Against the old kind king. Shakesp. King Lear.

Jupiter took snuff at the contempt, and punished him: he sent him home again. L'Estrange.

6. Powdered tobacco taken by the nose.
Just where the breath of life his nostrils drew,
A charge of snuff the wily virgin threw;
The gnomes direct, to every atom just,
The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

To SNUFF. v. a. [snuffen, Dut.]

1. To draw in with the breath.
A heifer will put up her nose, and snuff in the air, against rain. Bacon.

With delight he snuff'd the smell
Of mortal change on earth. Milton's Paradise Lost.

He snuffs the wind, his heels the sand excite;
But when he stands collected in his might,
He roars, and promises a more successful fight. Dry.

The youth,
Who holds the nearest station to the light,
Already seems to snuff the vital air,
And leans just forward on a shining spear. Dryden's Æneid.

My troops are mounted; their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind, and long to scour the desert. Addison.

My nag's greatest fault was snuffing up the air about Brackdenstown, whereby he became such a lover of liberty, that I could scarce hold him in. Swift.

2. To scent.
The cow looks up, and from afar can find
The change of heav'n, and snuffs it in the wind. Dryden.

For thee the bulls rebel through the groves,
And tempt the stream, and snuff their absent loves. Dryden.

O'er all the blood-hound boasts superior skill,
To scent, to view, to turn, and boldly kill!
His fellows vain alarms rejects with scorn,
True to the master's voice, and learned horn:
His nostrils oft, if ancient fame sing true,
Trace the sly felon through the tainted dew:
Once snuff'd, he follows with unalter'd aim,
Nor odours lure him from the chosen game;
Deep-mouth'd he thunders, and inflam'd he views,
Springs on relentless, and to death pursues. Tickel.

3. To crop the candle.
The late queen's gentlewoman!
To he her mistress' mistress!
This candle burns not clear: 'tis I must snuff it. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Against a communion-day our lamps should be dressed, our lights snuffed, and our religion more active. Taylor.

You have got
An office for your talents fit,
To snuff the lights, and stir the fire,
And get a dimer for your hire. Swift.

To SNUFF. v. n.

1. To snort; to draw breath by the nose.
The fury fires the pack; they snuff, they vent
And feed their hungry nostrils with the scent. Dryden's Æneid.

Says Humpus, Sir, my master bad me pray
Your company to dine with him to-day:
He snuffs, then follows, up the stairs he goes;
Never pulls off his hat, nor cleans his shoes. King.

2. To snift in contempt.
Ye said, what a weariness is it, and ye have snuffed at it. Mal. ii. 13.

SNUFFBOX. n. s. [snuff and box.] The box in which snuff is carried.

If a gentleman leaves a snuff box on the table, and goeth away, lock it up as part of your vails. Swift.

Sir Plume, of amber snuff box justly vain,
And the nice conduct of a clouded caue. Pope.

SNUFFER. n. s. [from snuff.] He that snuffs.

SNUFFERS. n. s. [from snuff.] The instrument with which the candle is clipped.

When you have snuffed the candle, leave the snuffers open. Swift's Directions to the Butler.

To SNUFFLE. v. n. [snufflen, Dut.] To speak through the nose; to breathe hard through the nose.

A water-spaniel came down the river, shewing that he hunted for a duck; and with a snuffling grace, disdaining that his smelling force could not as well prevail through the water as through the air, waited with his eye to see whether he could espie the duck's getting up again. Sidney.

Bagpipes of the loudest dromes,
With snuffling broken-winded tones,
Whose blasts of air, in pockets shut,
Sound filthier than from the gut. Hudibras.

It came to the ape to deliver his opinion, who smelt and sauffed, and considered on't. L'Estrange.

One clad in purple
Eats, and recites some lamentable rhyme,
Some senseless Phillis in a broken note,
Snuffling at nose, and croaking in his throat. Dryden.

SNUFFLER. n. s. [from snuffle.] He that speaks through the nose.

To SNUG. v. n. [sniger, Dut.] To lie close.

There snugging well, he well appear'd content,
So to have done amiss, so to be shent. Sidney.

As the loving couple lay snugging together,
Venus, to try if the cat had changed her manners with her shape, turned a mouse loose into the chamber. L'Estrange.

SNUG. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Close; free from any inconvenience, yet not splendid.

They spied a country farm,
Where all was snug, and clean, and warm;
For woods before, and hills behind,
Secur'd it both from rain and wind. Prior.

2. Close; out of notice.
At Will's
Lie snug, and hear what critics say. Swift

3. Slyly or insidiously close.
Did I not see you, rascal! did I not,
When you lay snug, to snap young Damon's goat? Dryden

To SNUGGLE. v. n. [from snug.] To lie close; to lie warm.

So. adv. [ypa, Sax. soo, Dut. so, Germ.]

1. In like manner. It answers to as either preceding or following. Noting comparison.

As whom the fables feign of monstrous size,
Titanian or earthborn, that warr'd on Jove,
So stretch'd out huge in length the arch fiend lay snug. Milton

Thick as autumnal leaves that strew the brooks
In Valomhrosa, where th' Etrurian shades
High over-arch'd embow'r, so thick bestrewn,
Abject and lost, lay these. Milton.

Fir'd at first sight with what the muse imparts,
In fearless youth we tempt the heights of arts;
So pleas'd at first the tow'ring Alps we try,
Mount o'er the vales, and seem to tread the sky. Pope.

As into air the purer spirits flow,
And sep'rate from their kindred dregs below,
So flew her soul to its congenial place. Pope.

2. To such a degree.

Why is his chariot so long in coming? Judg. v. 28.
Can nothing great, and at the height,
Remain so long, but its own weight,
Will ruin it? Or is 't blind chance
That still desires new states t' advance?
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

Amoret, my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie,
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye?
I viewed in my mind, so far as I was able, the beginning and progress of a rising world.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Since then our Arcite is with honour dead,
Why should we mourn that he so soon is freed.
Dryden.

Upon our first going into a company of strangers, our benevolence or aversion rises towards several particular persons, before we have heard them speak, or so much as know who they are.
Addison's Spectator.

We think our fathers fools, so wise we're grown:
Our wiser sons, no doubt, will think us so. Pope.

3. In such a manner.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cosenage all;
For though some long ago
Lik'd certain colours mingled so and so,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suck.

We may be certain that man is not a creature that lath wings; because this only concerns the manner of his existence; and we, seeing what he is, may certainly know that he is not so or so. Locke.

I shall minutely tell him the steps by which I was brought into this way, that he may judge whether I proceeded rationally, if so be any thing in my example is worth his notice. Locke.

This gentleman is a person of good sense, and knows that he is very much in Sir Roger's esteem, so that he lives in the family rather as a relation than dependent. Addison.

4. It is regularly answered by as or that,

but they are sometimes omitted.

So frown'd the mighty combatants, that hell
Grew darker at their frown. Milton.
There is something equivalent in France and Scotland; so as 'tis a very hard calumny upon our soil to affirm that so excellent a fruit will not grow here. Temple.

5. In the same manner.

Of such examples add me to the roll;
Me easily indeed mine may neglect,
But God's propos'd deliverance not so. Milton.

To keep up the tutor's authority, use him with great respect yourself, and cause all your family to do so too. Locke.

According to the multifariousness of this immutability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

6. Thus; in this manner.

Not far from thence the mournful fields appear,
So call'd from lovers that inhabit there. Dryden.
Does this deserve to be rewarded so?

Did you come here a stranger or a foe? Dryden.
It concerns every man, with the greatest seriousness, to enquire into those matters, whether they be so or not. Tillotson.

No nation ever complained they had too broad, too deep, or too many rivers; they understand better than so how to value those inestimable gifts of nature. Bentley.

So when the first bold vessel dar'd the seas,
High on the stern the Thracian rais'd his strain. Pope.

Whether this be from an habitual motion of the animal spirits, or from the alteration of the constitution by some more unaccountable way, this is certain, that so it is. Locke.

7. Therefore; for this reason; in consequence of this.

The god, though loth, yet was constrain'd t'
obey:

For longer time than that no living wight
Below the earth might suffer'd be to stay:
So back again him brought to living light. Fairy Q.
Trafficke, or rove ye, and like thieves oppress
Poor strange adventurers: exposing so
Your soules to danger, and your lives to wo;

Chapman.
If he set industriously and sincerely to perform the commands of Christ, he can have no ground of doubting but it shall prove successful to him; and so all that he hath to do is, to endeavour by prayer, and use of the means, to qualify himself for this blessed condition. Hammond's Fundamentals.

It leaves instruction, and so instructors, to the sobriety of the settled articles and rule of the church. Holyday.
Some are fall'n, to disobedience fall'n;
And so from heav'n to deepest hell.

God makes him in his own image an intellectual creature, and so capable of dominion. Locke.

8. On these terms; noting a conditional petition: answered by as.

O goddess! tell what I would say,
Thou know'st it, and I feel too much to pray;
So grant my suit, as I enforce my might,
In love to be thy champion. Dryd. Knight's Tale.
Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness:
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee, be all forgotten;
As here my soul acquits thee of my death,
As here I part without an angry thought. Rowe.
So may kind rains their vital moisture yield,
And swell the future harvest of thy field. Pope.

9. Provided that; on condition that: modo.

Be not sad:
Evil into the mind of God or man
May come and go, so unprov'd, and leave
No spot or blame behind. Milton's Paradise Lost.

So the doctrine be but wholesome and edifying, though there should be a want of exactness in the manner of speaking or reasoning, it may be overlooked. Atterbury.

Too much of love thy hapless friend has prov'd,
Too many giddy foolish hours are gone;
May the remaining few know only friendship:
So thou, my dearest, truest, best Alicia,
Vouchsafe to lodge me in thy gentle heart,
A partner there; I will give up mankind. Rowe.

10. In like manner; noting concession of one proposition and assumption of another; answering to as.

As a war should be undertaken upon a just motive, so a prince ought to consider the condition
he is in when he enters on it. Swift.

11. So sometimes returns the sense of a word or sentence going before, and is used to avoid repetition: as, the two brothers were valiant, but the eldest was more so; that is, more valiant.
The French article le is often used in the same manner. This mode of expression is not to be used but in familiar language, nor even in that to be commended.

The fat with plenty fills my heart,
The lean with love makes me too so. Cowley.
Who thinks his wife is virtuous, though not so,
'Is pleas'd and patient till the truth he know.

Not to admire is all the art I know
To make men happy, and to keep them so. Creach's Horace.

One may as well say, that the conflagration shall be only national, as to say that the deluge was so. Burnet.

However soft within themselves they are,
To you they will be valiant by despair;
For having once been guilty, well they know,
To a revengul prince they still are so. Dryden.

He was great ere fortune made him so. Dryden.
I laugh at every one, said an old cynick, who laughs at me. Do you so? replied the philosopher; then you live the merriest life of any man in Athens. Addison.

They are beautiful in themselves, and much more so in the noble language peculiar to that great port. Addison.

Common-place books have been long used by industrious young divines, and still continue so.
Swift.

As to his using ludicrous expressions, my opinion is, that they are not so. Pope.

The blest to-day is as completely so,
As who began a thousand years ago. Pope.

12. Thus it is; this is the state.

How sorrow shakes him!
So, now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin. Dryd.

13. At this point; at this time.

When
With wild wood-leaves and weeds I ha' strew'd his grave,

And on it said a century of prayers,
Such as I can, twice o'er, I'll weep and sigh;
And, leaving so his service, follow you. Shakesp.

14. It notes a kind of abrupt beginning;
well.

O, so, and had you a council
Of ladies too? Who was your speaker, Madam?
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

15. It sometimes is little more than an ex-pletive, though it implies some latent or surd comparison. In French si.

An astringent is not quite so proper, where relaxing the urinary passages is necessary. Arbut.

16. A word of assumption; thus be it.

There is Percy; if your father will do me any honour, so; if not, let him kill the next Percy himself. Shakesp.

I will never bear a base mind: if it be my destiny, so; if it be not, so. No man is too good to serve his prince. Shakesp.

17. A form of petition.

Ready are th' appelland and defendant,
The armourer and his man, to enter the lists;
So please your highness to behold the fight. Shak.

18. So much as. However much. This is, I think, an irregular expression.

So much as you admire the beauty of his verse,
his prose is full as good. Pope.

19. So so. An exclamation after something done or known. Corrupted, I think, from cessez.

I would not have thee linger in thy pain:
So so. Shakesp. Othello.
So so; it works: now, mistress, sit you fast.
Dryden.

20. So so. [cosi, cosi, Ital.] Indifferen-tly; not much amiss nor well.

He's not very tall, yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so, and yet 'tis well. Shakesp.

Deliver us from the nauseous repetition of As and So, which some so so writers, I may call them so, are continually sounding in our ears.
Felton on the Classics.

21. So then. Thus then it is that; therefore.

So then the Volscians stand but as at first Ready, when time shall prompt them to make road Upon's again. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

To a war are required a just quarrel, sufficient forces, and a prudent choice of the designs:
then, I will first justify the quarrel, balance the forces, and propound designs. Bacon.

To SOAK, v. n. [rocian, Sax.]

1. To lie steeped in moisture.
For thy conceit in soaking will draw in
More than the common blocks. Shakesp.

2. To enter by degrees into pores.
Lay a heap of earth in great frosts upon a hollow vessel, putting a canvass between, and pour water upon it, so as to soak through: it will make a harder ice in the vessel, and less apt to dissolve than ordinarily. Bacon.

S O A

Rain, soaking into the strata which lie near the surface, bears with it all such moveable matter as occurs. Woodward.

3. To drink gluttonously and intemperately. This is a low term.

Let a drunkard see that his health decays, his estate wastes, yet the habitual thirst after his cups drives him to the tavern, though he has in his view the loss of health and plenty; the least of which he confesses is far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a soaking club. Locke.

To SOAK. v. a.

1. To macerate in any moisture; to steep; to keep wet till moisture is imbibed; to drench.

Many of our princes Lie drown'd and soak'd in mercenary blood: So do our vulgar drench their peasant limbs In blood of princes. Shakesp. Henry V.
Their land shall be soaked with blood. Isa. xxxiv. 7. Dryden.

There deep Galesus soaks the yellow sands.

Wormwood, put into the brine you soak your corn in, prevents the birds eating it. Mortimer.

2. To draw in through the pores.

Thou, whose life 's a dream of lazy pleasure: 'Tis all thy bus'ness, bus'ness how to shun; To bask thy naked body in the sun, Suppling thy stiffen'd joints with fragrant oil; Then in thy spacious garden walk a while, To suck the moisture up and soak it in. Dryden.

3. To drain; to exhaust. This seems to be a cant term, perhaps used erroneously for suck.

Plants that draw much nourishment from the earth, and soak and exhaust it, hurt all things that grow by them. Bacon.

A greater sparer than a saver; for though he had such means to accumulate, yet his forts, and his garrisons, and his feastings, wherein he was only sumptuous, could not but soak his exchequer. Wotton.

SOAKER. n. s. [from soak.]

1. He that macerates in any moisture.
2. A great drinker. In low language.

SOAP. n. s. [sape, Sax. sapo, Lat.] A substance used in washing, made of a lixivium of vegetable alkaline ashes and any unctuous substance.

Soap is a mixture of a fixed alkaline salt and oil; its virtues are cleansing, penetrating, attenuating, and resolving; and any mixture of any oily substance with salt may be called a soap.

He is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers soap. Malachi.

A bubble blown with water, first made tenacious by dissolving a little soap in it, after a while will appear tinged with a great variety of colours. Newton's Opticks.

Soap-earth is found in great quantity on the land near the banks of the river Hermus, seven miles from Smyrna. Woodward.

Soap-ashes are much commended, after the soap-boilers have done with them, for cold or sour lands. Mortimer.

As rain-water diminishes their salt, so the moistening of them with chamber-lee or soap-suds adds thereto. Mortimer.

SOAPBOILER. n. s. [soap and boil.] One whose trade is to make soap.

A soapboiler condoles with me on the duties on castle-soap. Addison's Spectator.

SOAPWORT. n. s. [japonaria, Lat.] Is a species of campion. Miller.

To SOAR. v. n. [sorare, Ital.]

1. To fly aloft; to tower; to mount; properly to fly without any visible action of the wings. Milton uses it actively.

'Tis but a base ignoble mind That mounts no higher than a bird can soar. Shak.

S O B

Feather'd soon and fledg'd,
They summ'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.

2. To mount intellectually; to tower with the mind.

How high a pitch his resolution soars. Shakesp.
Valour soars above
What the world calls misfortune and afflictions. Addison.

3. To rise high.

Who aspires must down as low
As high he soar'd. Milton.
Flames rise and sink by fits; at last they soar
In one bright blaze, and then descend no more. Dryden.

When swallows fleet soar high, and sport in air,
He tells us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

SOAR. n. s. [from the verb.] Towering flight.

Of tower'ing eagles, to all the fowls he seems
A phoenix. Milton.

- To SOB. v. n. [reob complaining, Sax. Perhaps it is a mere onomatopæia copied from the sound.] To heave audibly with convulsive sorrow; to sigh with convulsion.

When thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death,
He twenty times made pause to sob and weep. Shakesp.

As if her life and death lay on his saying,
Some tears she shed, with sighs and sobbing mixt,
As if her hopes were dead through his delaying. Fairfax.

She sigh'd, she sobb'd, and furious with despair
She rent her garments, and she tore her hair. Dryden.

When children have not the power to obtain their desire, they will, by their clamour and sobbing, maintain their title to it. Locke on Education.
I sobb'd; and with faint eyes
Look'd upwards to the Ruler of the skies. Harte.

SOB. n. s. [from the verb.] A convulsive sigh; a convulsive act of respiration obstructed by sorrow.

Break, heart, or choak with sobs my hated breath;
Do thy own work, admit no foreign death. Dryd.

There oft are heard the notes of infant woe,
The short thick sob, loud screams, and shriller squall. Pope.

A wond'rous bag with both her hands she binds:
There she collects the force of female lungs,
Sighs, sobs, and passions, and the war of tongues. Pope.

To SOB. v. a. To soak. A cant word.

The tree being sobbed and wet, swells. Mortimer.

SOBER. adj. [sobrius, Lat. sobre, Fr.]

1. Temperate, particularly in liquors; not drunken.

Live a sober, righteous, and godly life. Com. Pr.
The vines give wine to the drunkard as well as to the sober man. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

No sober temperate person, whatsoever other sins he may be guilty of, can look with complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South's Sermons.

2. Not overpowered by drink.

A law there is among the Grecians, whereof Pittacus is author: that he which being overcome with drink did then strike any man, should suffer punishment double as much as if he had done the same being sober. Hooker.

3. Not mad; right in the understanding.

Another, who had a great genius for tragedy, following the fury of his natural temper, made every man and woman in his plays stark raging mad; there was not a sober person to be had; all was tempestuous and blustering. Dryden.

No sober man would put himself into danger, for the applause of escaping without breaking his neck. Dryden.

4. Regular; calm; free from inordinate passion.

S O B

This same young sober blooded boy a man cannot make him laugh. Shakesp.
Cieca travelled all over Peru, and is a grave and sober writer. Abbot's Description of the World.

Young men likewise exhort to be sober minded. Tit. ii. 6.

The governour of Scotland being of great courage and sober judgment, amply performed his duty both before the battle and in the field. Hayward.
These confusions disposed men of any sober understanding to wish for peace. Clarendon.

Among them some sober men confessed, that as his majesty's affairs then stood, he could not grant it. Clarendon.

To these that sober race of men, whose lives Religious titled them the sons of God,
Shall yield up all their virtue, all their fame
Ignobly to the trains and to the smiles
Of these fair atheists. Milton.

Be your designs ever so good, your intentions ever so sober, and your searches directed in the fear of God. Waterland.

5. Serious; solemn; grave.

Petruchio
Shall offer me, disguis'd in sober robes;
To old Baptista as a schoolmaster. Shakesp.

Thou sober-suited matron, all in black. Shakesp.
Twilight grey

Had in her sober liv'ry all things clad. Milton.

What parts gay France from sober Spain?
A little rising rocky chain:
Of men born south or north o' th' hill,
Those seldom move, these ne'er stand still. Prior.

For Swift and him despis'd the face of state,
The sober follies of the wise and great. Pope.

See her sober over a sampler, or gay over a jointed baby. Pope.

To SOBER. v. a. [from the adjective.]

To make sober.
A little learning is a dangerous thing;
Drink deep, or taste not the Pierian spring;
There shallow draughts intoxicate the brain,
And drinking largely sobers us again. Pope.

SOBERLY. adv. [from sober.]

1. Without intemperance.
2. Without madness.
3. Temperately; moderately.
Let any prince think soberly of his forces, except his militia of natives be valiant soldiers Bacon.

4. Coolly; calmly.
Whenever children are chastised, let it be done without passion, and soberly, laying on the blows slowly. Locke.

SOBERNESS. n. s. [from sober.]

1. Temperance in drink.
Keep my body in temperance, soberness, and chastity. Common Prayer.

2. Calmness; freedom from enthusiasm; coolness.
A person noted for his soberness and skill in spagyricl preparations, made Helmont's experiment succeed very well. Boyle.

The soberness of Virgil might have shewn the difference. Dryden.

SOBRIETY. n. s. [from sobriété, Fr. sobrius, Lat.]

1. Temperance in drink; soberness.
Drunkenness is more uncharitable to the soul, and in scripture is more declaimed against, than gluttony; and sobriety hath obtained to signify temperance in drinking. Taylor.

2. Present freedom from the power of strong liquor.

3. General temperance.
In setting down the form of common prayer, there was no need that the book should mention either the learning of a fit, or the unfitness of an ignorant, minister; more than that he which described the manner how to pitch a field, should speak of moderation and sobriety in diet. Hooker.

4. Freedom from inordinate passion.
The libertine could not prevail on men of virtue and sobriety to give up their religion. Rogers.

5. Calmness; coolness.

Enquire, with all sobriety and severity, whether there be in the footsteps of nature any such transmission of immaculate virtues, and what the force of imagination is.

Sobriety in our riper years is the effect of a well concocted warmth; but where the principles are only phlegm, what can be expected but an insipid mashood, and old infancy?

If sometimes Ovid appears too gay, there is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the stayedness and sobriety of age be wanting.

6. Seriousness; gravity.

A report without truth; and, I had almost said, without any sobriety or modesty.

Mirth makes them not mad;
Nor sobriety sad.

SOCCAGE. n. s. [soc, Fr. a ploughshare; soccagium, barbarous Lat.]

In law, is a tenure of lands for certain inferior or husbandly services to be performed to the lord of the see; all services due for land being knight's service, or soccage: so that whatever is not knight's service, is soccage. This soccage is of three kinds; a soccage is of free tenure, where a man holdeth by free service of twelve pence a-year for all manner of services. Soccage of ancient tenure is of land of ancient demesne, where no writ original shall be used, but the writ secundum consuetudinem manerii. Soccage of base tenure is where those who hold it may have none other writ but the monstraverunt, and such sockmen hold not by certain service.

The lands are not holden at all of her majesty, or not holden in chief, but by a mean tenure in soccage, or by knight's service.

SOCCAGER. n. s. [from soccage.] A tenant by soccage.

SOCCIABLE. adj. [sociable, Fr. sociabilis, Lat.]

1. Fit to be conjoined.

Another law toucheth them, as they are sociable parts united into one body; a law which bindeth them each to serve unto other's good, and all to prefer the good of the whole before whatsoever their own particular.

2. Ready to unite in a general interest.

To make man mild and sociable to man; To cultivate the wild licentious savage With wisdom, discipline.

3. Friendly; familiar; conversible.

Them thus employ'd beheld With pity heav'n's high King, and to him call'd Raphael, the sociable spirit that deign'd To travel with Tobias.

4. Inclined to company.

In children much solitude and silence I like not, nor any thing born before his time, as this must needs be in that sociable and exposed age.

SO'CIABLENESS. [from sociable.]

1. Inclination to company and converse.

Such as would call her friendship love, and feign To sociableness a name profane.

The two main properties of man are contemplation, and sociableness, or love of converse.

2. Freedom of conversation; good fellowship.

He always used courtesy and modesty, disliked of none; sometimes sociableness and fellowship, well liked by many.

SO'CIABLY. adv. [from sociable.] Conversationally; as a companion.

Yet not terrible,
That I should fear; nor sociably mild,

As Raphael, that I should much confide,
But solemn and sublime.

SOCIAL. adj. [socialis, Lat.]

1. Relating to a general or publick interest; relating to society.

To love our neighbour as ourselves, is such a fundamental truth for regulating human society, that by that alone one might determine all the cases in social morality.

True self-love and social are the same.

2. Easy to mix in friendly gaiety; companionable.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove Thy martial spirit or thy social love.

3. Consisting in union or converse with another.

Thou in thy secrecy although alone,
Best with thyself accompanied, seek'st not Social communication.

SO'CIALNESS. n. s. [from social.] The quality of being social.

SOCIETY. n. s. [société, Fr. societas, Lat.]

1. Union of many in one general interest.

If the power of one society extend likewise to the making of laws for another society, as if the church could make laws for the state in temporals, or the state make laws binding the church relating to spirituals, then is that society entirely subject to the other.

2. Numbers united in one interest; community.

As the practice of piety and virtue is agreeable to our reason, so it is for the interest of private persons and publick societies.

3. Company; converse.

The sweeter welcome, we will keep ourself Till supper-time alone.

Whilst I was big in clamour, there came a man, Who, having seen me in my worse state, Shun'd my abhor'd society.

Solitude sometimes is best society,
And short retirement urges sweet return.

4. Partnership; union on equal terms.

Among unequals what society can sort?
Heaven's greatness no society can bear;
Servants be made, and those thou want'st not here.

SOCK. n. s. [soccus, Lat. rocc, Sax. socke, Dut.]

1. Something put between the foot and shoe.

Ere I lead this life long, I'll sow nether socks and mend them, and foot them too.

A physician, that would be mystical, prescribeth for the rheum to walk continually upon a camomile alley; meaning he should put camomile within his socks.

2. The shoe of the ancient comick actors, taken in poems for comedy, and opposed to buskin or tragedy.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
If Jonson's learned sock be on,
Or sweetest Shakespear, fancy's child,
Warble his native wood-notes wild.

Great Fletcher never treads in buskins here,
Nor greater Jonson dares in socks appear;
But gentle Simpkin just reception finds
Amidst the monument of vanish'd miads.

On two figures of actors in the villa Mathei at Rome, we see the fashion of the old sock and larva.

SO'CKET. n. s. [souchette, Fr.]

1. Any hollow pipe; generally the hollow of a candlestick.

Two goodly heacons, set in watches stead,
Therein gave light, and flam'd continually;
For they of living fire most subtilly
Were made, and set in silver sockets bright.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve.

She at your flames would soon take fire,
And like a candle in the socket
Dissolve.

The nightly virgin sees
When sparkling lamps their spitting light advance,
And in the sockets only bubbles dance.

The stars amaz'd ran backward from the sight,
And, shrunk within their sockets, lost their light.

Two dire comets
In their own plague and fire have breath'd their last,
Or dimly in their sinking sockets frown.

To nurse up the vital flame as long as the matter will last, is not always good husbandry; it is much better to cover it with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket, and at length goes out in no perfume.

2. The receptacle of the eye.

His eye-balls in their hollow sockets sink;
Berect of sleep, he loaths his meat and drink;
He withers at his heart, and looks as wan
As the pale spectre of a murder'd man.

3. Any hollow that receives something inserted.

The sockets and supporters of flowers are figured: as in the five brethren of the rose, and sockets of gillyflowers.

Gomphosis is the connection of a tooth to its socket.

As the weight leans wholly upon the axis, the grating and rubbing of these axes against the sockets wherein they are placed, will cause some inaptitude and resistency to that rotation of the cylinder which would otherwise ensue.

On either side the head produce an ear,
And sink a socket for the shining share.

SOCKETCHISEL. n. s. A stronger sort of chisel.

Carpenters, for their rougher work, use a stronger sort of chisels, and distinguish them by the name of socketchisels; their shank made with a hollow socket a-top, to receive a strong wooden sprig made to fit into the socket.

SO'CLE. n. s. [With architects.] A flat square member under the bases of pedestals of statues and vases: it serves as a foot or stand.

Alas! the sexton is thy banker now.

Here fame shall dress a sweeter sod
Than fancy's feet have ever trod.

SOD. The preterite of seethe.

Never caldron sod
With so much fervour, fed with all the store
That could enrage it.

Jacob sod postage.
SODA'LITY. n. s. [sodalitas, Lat.] A fellowship; a fraternity.

A new confraternity was instituted in Spain, of the slaves of the blessed Virgin, and this sodalty established with large indulgencies.

SO'DDEN. [The participle passive of seethe.] Boiled; seethed.

Can sodden water, their barley broth,
Decoct their cold blood to such valiant heat?

Sodden business! there's a stew'd phrase indeed!
Thou sodden-witted lord, thou hast no more brain than I have in my elbows.

Try it with milk sodden, and with cream.
Mix it with sodden wines and raisins.

SO'FA. n. s. [I believe an eastern word.] A splendid seat covered with carpets.

The king leaped off from the sofa on which he sat, and cried out, "Tis my Abdallah. Guardian.

SOFT. adj. [roft, Sax. saft, Dut.]

1. Not hard.

Hard and soft are names we give things, only in relation to the constitutions of our own bodies; that being called hard, which will put us to pain sooner than change figure, by the pressure of any part of our bodies, and that soft, which changes the situation of its parts upon an easy touch. Locke.

Some bodies are hard, and some soft: the hardness is caused by the jejuneness of the spirits, which, if in a greater degree, make them not only hard, but fragile. Bacon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt, And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt. Dryden.

2. Not rugged; not rough.

What went ye out for to see? a man clothed in soft raiment? behold, they that wear soft raiment are in kings houses. Matthew.

3. Ductile; not unchangeable of form.

Spirits can either sex assume; so soft And uncompounded is their essence pure. Milton.

4. Facile; flexible; not resolute; yielding.

A few divines of so soft and servile tempers as disposed them to so sudden acting and compliance. King Charles.

One king is too soft and easy; another too fiery. L'Estrange.

5. Tender; timorous.

What he hath done famously, he did it to that end; though soft conscientious men can be content to say, it was for his country. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

However soft within themselves they are, To you they will be valiant by despair. Dryden.

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow, That tends to make one worthy man my foe; Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear, Or from the soft-eyed virgin steal a tear. Pope.

6. Mild; gentle; kind; not severe.

Would my heart were flint, like Edward's: Or Edward's soft and pitiful, like mine. Shakesp. Our torments may become as soft as now severe. Milton.

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay; His anger moral, and his wisdom gay. Pope.

7. Meek; civil; complaisant.

Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils, Hast not the soft way, which thou dost confess Were fit for thee to use, as thou dost claim, In asking their good loves. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

8. Placid; still; easy.

On her soft axle while she paces even, She bears thee soft with the smooth air along. Milt. There, soft extended to the murmuring sound Of the high porch, Ulysses sleeps profound. Pope.

S O F

9. Effeminate; vitiously nice.

This sense is also mistress of an art Which to soft people sweet perfumes doth sell; Though this dear art doth little good impart, Since they smell best that do of nothing smell. Davies.

An idle and soft course of life is the source of criminal pleasures. Broome.

10. Delicate; elegantly tender.

Her form more soft and feminine. Milton. Less winning soft, less amiably mild. Milton.

The deceiver soon found this soft place of Adam's, and innocency itself did not secure him. Glanville.

12. Gentle; not loud; not rough.

Her voice was ever soft, Gentle, and low; an excellent thing in women. Shakesp. The Dorian mood of flutes and soft recorders. Milton.

When some great and glorious monarch dies, Soft whispers first, and mournful murmurs, rise, Among the sad attendants; then the sound Soon gathers voice. Dryden. Soft whispering thus to Nestor's son, His head reclin'd, young Ithacus begun. Pope.

13. Smooth; flowing; not vehement; not rapid.

The solemn nightingale tun'd her soft lays. Milton. Soft were my numbers; who could take offence, When smooth description held the place of sense? Pope.

Hark! the numbers soft and clear Gently steal upon the ear. Pope.

14. Not forcible; not violent.

Sleep falls with soft slumb'rous weight. Milton.

15. Mild; not glaring.

The sun shining upon the upper part of the clouds, made them appear like fine down or wool, and made the softest sweetest lights imaginable. Brown's Travels.

SOFT. interj. Hold; stop; not so fast.

But soft, I pray you; did king Richard then Proclaim my brother? Shakesp. Henry IV. Oh! come in, Æmilia;

Soft, by and by, let me the curtains draw. Shakesp. But soft, my muse; the world is wide, And all at once was not described. Suckling.

TO SOFTEN. v. a. [from soft.]

1. To make soft; to make less hard.

Bodies, into which the water will enter, long seething will rather soften than indurate. Bacon's Natural History.

Their arrow's point they soften in the flame, And sounding hammers break its barbed frame. Cay.

2. To intenerate; to make less fierce or obstinate; to mollify.

I will soften stony hearts. Milton. Our friends see not our faults, or conceal them, or soften them by their representation. Addison. I would correct the harsh expressions of one party, by softening and reconciling methods. Watts.

3. To make easy; to compose; to make placid; to mitigate; to palliate; to alleviate.

Call round her tomb each object of desire; Bid her be all that cheers or softens life, The tender sister, daughter, friend, and wife. Pope. Musick the fiercest griefs can charm;

Misic can soften pain to ease, And make despair and madness please. Pope.

4. To make less harsh, less vehement, less violent.

He bore his great commission in his look, But sweetly temper'd awe, and soften'd all he spoke. Dryden.

5. To make less glaring.

6. To make tender; to enervate.

TO SOFTEN. v. n.

1. To grow less hard.

S O F

Many bodies that will hardly melt, will soften: as iron in the forge. Bacon's Natural History.

2. To grow less obdurate, cruel, or obstinate.

He may soften at the sight of the child; The silence often of pure innocence Persuades, when speaking fails. Shakesp.

SO'FTLY. adv. [from soft.]

1. Without hardness.

2. Not violently; not forcibly. Solid bodies, if very softly percussed, give no sound; as when a man treadeth very softly upon boards. Bacon.

3. Not loudly.

Ahab rent his clothes, and went softly. 1 Kings, xxi. 27. In this dark silence softly leave the town, And to the general's tent direct your steps. Dryden.

4. Gently; placidly.

Death will dismiss me, And lay me softly in my native dust, To pay the forfeit of ill-manag'd trust. Dryden. She with a wreath of myrtle crowns his head, And softly lays him on a flow'ry bed. Dryden. Æneid.

5. Mildly; tenderly.

The king must die; Though pity softly plead within my soul, Yet he must die, that I may make you great. Dryden.

SO'FTNER. n. s. [from soft.]

1. That which makes soft.

2. One who palliates.

Those softners and expedient-mongers shake their heads so strongly, that we can hear their pockets jingle. Swift.

SO'FTNESS. n. s. [from soft.]

1. The quality of being soft; quality contrary to hardness.

Softness cometh by the greater quantity of spirits, which ever induce yielding and cession; and by the more equal spreading of the taugible parts, which thereby are more sliding and following; as in gold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Mildness; kindness.

A wise man, when there is a necessity of expressing any evil actions, should do it by a word that has a secondary idea of kindness or softness; or a word that carries in it rebuke and severity. Watts's Logic.

3. Civility; gentleness.

They turn the softness of the tongue into the hardness of the teeth. Holyday. Improve these virtues with a softness of manners, and a sweetness of conversation. Dryden.

4. Effeminacy; vitious delicacy.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy, are prevented; and there is but little room for temptation. Taylor. He was not delighted with the softnesses of the court. Clarendon.

5. Timorousness; pusillanimity.

This virtue could not proceed out of fear or softness; for he was valiant and active. Bacon's Henry VII.

6. Quality contrary to harshness.

Softness of sounds is distinct from the exility of sounds. Bacon.

7. Facility; gentleness; candour; easiness to be affected.

Such was the ancient simplicity and softness of spirit which sometimes prevailed in the world, that they, whose words were even as oracles amongst men, seemed evermore loth to give sentence against any thing publicly received in the church of God. Hooker.

8. Contrariety to energetick vehemence. Who but thyself the mind and ear can please With strength and softness, energy and ease? Harte.

9. Mildness; meekness.

S O I

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness she and sweet attractive grace. Milton.
Her stubborn look

This softness from thy finger took. Waller.

SOHO. interj. A form of calling from a distant place.

To SOIL. v. a. [rihan, Sax. soelen, old Germ. souiller, Fr.]

1. To foul; to dirt; to pollute; to stain; to sully.

A silly man in simple weeds forlorn,
And soil'd with dust of the lung dried way.

Although some hereticks have abus'd this text, yet the sun is not soil'd in passage. Bacon's H. War.

If I soil
Myself with sin, I then but vainly toil. Sandys.
I would not soil these pure ambrosial weeds
With the rank vapours of this sin-worn mould. Milton.

Bad fruit of knowledge, if this be to know,
Which leaves us naked thus, of honour void,
Of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd. Milton.

One, who could not for a taste o' th' flesh come in,
Licks the soil'd earth,
While reeking with a mangled Ombit's blood. Tate.

If the eye-glass he tinted faintly with the smoke of a lamp or torch, to obscure the light of the star, the fainter light in the circumference of the star ceases to be visible; and the star, if the glass be sufficiently soiled with smoke, appears something more like a mathematical point. Newton.

An absent hero's bed they sought to soil,
An absent hero's wealth they made their spoil. Pope.

2. To dung; to manure.

Men now present, just as they soil their ground;
not that they love the dirt, but that they expect a crop. South.

3. To soil a horse; to purge him by giving him grass in the spring. It is in Shakespeare to glut. [saouller, Fr.]
The soil'd horse. Shakesp.

SOIL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Dirt; spot; pollution; foulness.

By indirect ways
I met this crown; and I myself know well
How troublesome it sate upon my head;
To thee it shall descend with better quiet:
For all the soil of the achievement goes
With me into the earth. Shakesp. Henry IV.
That would be a great soil in the new gloss of your marriage. Shakesp.

Vex'd I am with passions,
Which give some soil perhaps to my behaviour. Shakesp.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil. Dryd.

2. [sol. Fr. solum, Lat.] Ground; earth considered with relation to its vegetative qualities.

Judgment may be made of waters by the soil whereupon they run. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Her spots thou see'st
As clouds, and clouds may rain, and rain produce Fruits in her soften'd soil. Milton's Par. Lost.

The first cause of a kingdom's thriving is the fruitfulness of the soil, to produce the necessaries and conveniences of life; not only for the inhabitants, but for exportation. Swift.

3. Land; country.

Dorset, that with fearful soil
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance shall call home
To high promotions. Shakesp.

O unexpected stroke, worse than of death!
Must I thus leave thee, Paradise! thus leave
Thee, native soil! these happy walks and shades, Fit haunts of gods? Milton.

4. Dung; compost.

The haven has been stopped up by the great heaps of dirt that the sea has thrown into it; for all the soil on that side of Ravenna has been left there insensibly by the sea. Addison.

Improve land by dung, and other sort of soils.

SOILINESS. n. s. [from soil.] Stain; foul-
ness.

Make proof of the incorporation of silver and tin, whether it yield no soiliness more than silver. Bacon.

SOILURE. n. s. [from soil.] Stain; pollution.

He merits well to have her.
Not making any scruple of her soilure. Shakesp.

To SO'JOURN. v. n. [sejourner, seggiornare, Ital.] To dwell any where for a time; to live as not at home; to inhabit as not in a settled habitation. Almost out of use.

If, till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shak.

Th' advantage of his absence took the king,
And in the mean time sojourn'd at my father's. Shak.

How comes it he is to sojourn with you? how creeps acquaintance? Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Here dwells he; though he sojourn every where
In progress, yet his standing house is here. Donne.

The sojourning of Israel, who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. Exodus, xii. 40.

The soldiers first assembled at Newcastle, and there sojourn'd three days. Hayward.

To sojourn in that land
He comes invited. Milton's Par. Lost.

He who sojourns in a foreign country, refers what he sees abroad to the state of things at home. Atterb.

SO'JOURN. n. s. [sejour, Fr. from the verb.] A temporary residence; a casual and no settled habitation. This word was anciently accented on the last syllable: Milton accents it indifferently.

The princes, France and Burgundy,
Long in our court have made their am'rous sojourn. Shakesp.

Thee I revisit now,
Escap'd the Stygian pool, though long detain'd
In that obscure sojourn. Milt. Par. Lost.

Scarce view'd the Galilean towns,
And once a-year Jerusalem, few days
Short sojourn. Milt. Par. Regained.

SO'JOURNER. n. s. [from sojourn.] A temporary dweller.

We are strangers and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on earth are as a shadow. 1 Chron. xxix. 16.

Waves o'erthrew
Busiris, and his Memphian chivalry,
While with perfidious hatred they pursued
The sojourners of Goshen. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Not for a night, or quick revolving year;
Welcome an owner, not a sojourner. Dryden.

To SO'LACE. v. a. [solacior, old Fr. solazzare, Ital. solatium, Lat.] To comfort; to cheer; to amuse.

We will with some strange pastime solace them. Shakesp.

The birds with song
Solac'd the woods. Milton.

To SO'LACE. v. n. To take comfort; to be recreated. The neutral sense is obsolete.

One poor and loving child,
But one thing to rejoice and solace in,
And cruel death hath catch'd it from my sight. Shakesp.

Were they to be rul'd, and not to rule,
This sickly land might solace as before. Shak. R. III.

SO'LACE. n. s. [solatium, Lat.] Comfort; pleasure; alleviation; that which gives comfort or pleasure; recreation; amusement.

Therein sat a lady fresh and fair,
Making sweet solace to herself alone;

Sometimes she sung as loud as lark in air, Sometimes she laugh'd, that nigh her breath was gone. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

If we have that which is meet and right, although they be glad, we are not to envy them this their solace: we do not think it a duty of ours to be in every such thing their tormentors. Hooker.

Give me leave to go;
Sorrow would solace, and my age would ease. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Great joy he promis'd to his thoughts, and new Solace in her return. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If I would delight my private hours
With musick or with poem, where so soon
As in our native language can I find That solace? Milton's Paradise Regained.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eye-sight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Through waters and through flames I'll go,
Suff'r and solace of thy woe. Prior.

SOLA'NDER. n. s. [soulandrcs, Fr.] A disease in horses. Dict.

SOLAR. } adj. [solaire, Fr. solaris, Lat.]
SOLARY. } adj. [solaire, Fr. solaris, Lat.]

1. Being of the sun.

The corpuscles that make up the beams of light be solary effluvioms, or minute particles of some ethereal substance, thrusting on one another from the lucid body. Boyle.

Instead of golden fruits,
By genial show'rs and solar heat supplied,
Unsuferable winter had defac'd
Earth's blooming charms, and made a barren waste. Blackmore.

2. Belonging to the sun.

They denominate some herbs solar, and some lunar. Bacon.

Scripture hath been punctual in other respects, concerning solary miracles. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

3. Born under or in the predominant influence of the sun.

The cock was pleas'd to hear him speak so fair,
And proud beside, as solar people are. Dryden.

4. Measured by the sun.

The rule to find the moon's age, on any day of any solar month, cannot shew precisely an exact account of the moon, because of the inequality of the motions of the sun and moon, and the number of days of the solar months. Holder on Time.

SOLD. The preterite and participle passive of sell.

SOLD. n. s. [souldée, old Fr. Trevoux.]
Military pay; warlike entertainment.

But were your will her sold to entertain,
And number'd be 'mongst knights of maidenhead,
Great guerdon, well I wot, should you remain,
And in her favour high be reckon'd. Fairy Queen.

SO'LDAN. n. s. [for sultan.] The emperor of the Turks.

They at the soldan's chair defied the best. Milton.

S'OLDANEL. n. s. [soldanella, Lat.] A plant. Miller

To SOLDER. v. a. [souder, Fr. soldare, Ital. solidare, Lat.] See SODER.

1. To unite or fasten with any kind of metallick cement.

A concave sphere of gold, filled with water, and solder'd up, has, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.

2. To mend; to unite any thing broken.

It booteth them not thus to solder up a broken cause, whereof their first and last discourses will fall asunder. Hooker.

Wars 'twixt you twain would be
As if the world should cleave, and that slain men Should solder up the rift. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

Thou visible god,
That sold'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss! Shakesp. Timon.

Learn'd he was in med'e'nal lore;
For by his side a pouch he wore
Replete with strange hermetick powder,
That wounds nine miles point-blank would solder. Hudibras.

The naked cynick's jar ne'er flames; if broken,
'Tis quickly solder'd, or a new bespoken.
Dryd. jun. Juvenal.

At the restoration the presbyterians, and other sects, did all unite and solder up their several schemes, to join against the church. Swift.

SO'LDER. n. s. [from the verb.] Metallick cement; a metallick body that will melt with less heat than the body to be soldered.

Goldsmiths say, the coarsest stuff
Will serve for solder well enough Swift.

SO'LDERER. n. s. [from solder.] One that solders or mends.

SO'LDIER. n. s. [soldat, Fr. from solidarius, low Lat. of solidus a piece of money, the pay of a soldier; souldée, Fr.]

1. A fighting man; a warrior. Originally one who served for pay.

Your sister is the better soldier. Shak. K. Lear.
Good Sward,

An older and a better soldier none. Shak. Macbeth.
A soldier,

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Ev'n in the cannon's mouth. Shakesp.

A hateful service, that dissolv'd the knees
Of many a soldier. Chapman.

I have not yet forgot I am a king:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier.
Dryden's Don Sebastian.

2. It is generally used of the common men, as distinct from the commanders.

It were meet that any one, before he came to be a captain, should have been a soldier. Spens. on Ire.

SO'LDIERLIKE. } adj. [soldier and like.]
SO'LDIERLY. } Martial; warlike; military; becoming a soldier.

Although at the first they had fought with beastly fury rather than any soldierly discipline, practice had now made them comparable to the best. Sidney.

I will maintain the word with my sword to be a soldierlike word, and a word of good command.
Shakesp. Henry IV.

They, according to a soldierly custom, in cases of extremity, by interchange of a kiss by every of them upon the swords of others, sealed a resolution to maintain the place. Hayward.

Enemies as well as friends confessed, that it was as soldierly an action as had been performed on either side. Clarendon.

SO'LDIERSHIP. n. s. [from soldier.] Military character; martial qualities; behaviour becoming a soldier; martial skill.

Thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership: he did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciple of the bravest.

Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
By sea you throw away

The absolute soldiership you have by land,
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen. Shakesp.

SO'LDIERY. n. s. [from soldier.]
1. Body of military men; soldiers collectively.

The Memphian soldiery,
That swell'd the Erythrean wave, when wall'd
The unfroze waters marvellously stood. Philips.

I charge not the soldiery with ignorance and contempt of learning, without allowing exceptions.
Swift.

2. Soldiership; military service.

Offering him, if he would exercise his courage in soldiery, he would commit some charge unto him under his lieutenant Philanax. Sidney.

SOLE. n. s. [solum, Lat.]

1. The bottom of the foot.

I will only be bold with Benedict for his company; for from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot he is all mirth.

Shakesp. Much ado about Nothing.
Tickling is most in the soles of the feet: the cause is, the rareness of being touched there.

The soles of the feet have great affinity with the head and the mouth of the stomach; as going wet-shod, to those that use it not, affecteth both.
Bacon's Natural History.

Such resting found the sole of unblest feet. Mil.
In the make of the camel's foot, the sole is flat and broad, being very fleshy, and covered only with a thick, soft, and somewhat callous skin, fit to travel in sandy places. Ray.

2. The foot.

To redeem thy woeful parent's head
From tyrant's rage and ever-dying dread,
Hast wander'd through the world now long a day,
Yet ceasest not thy weary soles to lead. Fairy Q.

3. [Sola, Lat.] The bottom of the shoe.

Nay, gentle Romeo, we must have you dance.
—Not I, believe me: you have dancing shoes,
With nimble soles. Shakesp.

On fortune's cap we are not the very bottom.
—Nor the soles of her shoes. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The caliga was a military shoe, with a very thick sole, tied above the instep with leather thongs. Arbutnot on Coins.

4. The part of any thing that touches the ground.

The strike-block is a plane shorter than the jointer, having its sole made exactly flat and straight, and is used for the shooting of a short joint. Moxm's Mechanical Exercises.

Elm is proper for mills, soles of wheels, and pipes. Mortimer.

5. A kind of sea-fish.

Of flat fish, rays, thornbacks, soles, and flawks.
Carew.

To SOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To furnish with soles; as, to sole a pair of shoes.

His feet were soled with a treble tuft of a close short tawny down. Crew's Muscum.

SOLE. adj. [sot, old Fr. solus, Lat.]

1. Single; only.

Take not upon thee to be judge alone: there is no sole judge but only one: say not to others, Receive my sentence, when their authority is above mine. Hooker.

Orpheus every where expressed the infinite and sole power of our God, though he used the name of Jupiter. Raleigh.

To me shall be the glory sole among
Th' infernal pow'rs. Milton's Par. Lost.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,
That stripp'd them bare, and one sole way they rent. Dryden.

He, sole in power, at the beginning said,
Let sea, and air, and earth, and heav'n be made;
And it was so: and, when he shall ordain
In other sort, has but to speak again,
And they shall be no more. Prior.

2. [In law.] Not married.

Some others are such as a man cannot make his wife, though he himself be sole and unmarried.
Ayliffe.

SO'LEICISM. n. s. [σολοικισμός.] Unfitness of one word to another; impropriety in language. A barbarism may be in one word, a solecism must be of more.

There is scarce a solecism in writing which the best author is not guilty of, if we be at liberty to read him in the words of some manuscript. Addis.

SO'LELY. adv. [from sole.] Singly; only.
You knew my father well, and in him me,

Left solely heir to all his lands.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew

This night's great business
Shall to all our nights and days to come Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shak.
That the intemperate heat of the climate solely occasions this complexion, experience admits not.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This truth is pointed chiefly, if not solely, upon sinners of the first rate, who have cast off all regard for piety. Atterbury.

They all chose rather to rest the cause solely on logical disputation, than upon the testimonies of the ancients. Waterland.

SOLEMN. adj. [sollemn, Fr. solemnis,
Lat.]

1. Anniversary; observed once a year with religious ceremonies.

The worship of this image was advanced, and a solemn supplication observed every year. Stillingfl.

2. Religiously grave; awful.

His holy rites and solemn feasts profan'd. Milton.

3. Formal; ritual; religiously regular.
The necessary business of a man's calling, with some, will not afford much time for set and solemn prayer. Duty of Man.

4. Striking with seriousness; sober; serious.

'Then 'gan he loudly through the house to call,
But no one care to answer to his cry;

There reign'd a solemn silence over all. Fairy Q.

'T' swage with solemn touches troubled thoughts.
Milton.

Nor then the solemn nightingales ceas'd warbling.
Milton.

5. Grave; affectedly serious.

When Steele reflects upon the many solemn strong barriers to our succession, of laws and oaths, he thinks all fear vanisheth: so do I, provided the epithet solemn goes for nothing; because, though I have heard of a solemn day, and a solemn coxcomb, yet I can conceive no idea of a solemn barrier. Swift.

SO'LEMNNESS. } n. s. [solemnité, Fr. from SO'LEMNITY. } solemn.]

1. Ceremony or rite annually performed.
Were these annual solemnities only practised in the church? Nelson.

Though the days of solemnity, which are but few, must quickly finish that outward exercise of devotion which appertains to such times; yet they increase men's inward dispositions to virtue for the present, and, by their frequent returns, bring the same at length to perfection. Nelson.

Great was the cause; our old solemnities
From no blind zeal or fond tradition rise;
But, sav'd from death, our Argives yearly pay
These grateful honours to the god of day. Pope.

2. Religious ceremony.

3. Awful ceremony or procession.

The lady Constance,
Some speedy messenger bid repair
To our solemnity. Shakesp. King John.

The moon, like to a silver bow
New bent in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities. Shakesp.

There may be greater danger in using such compositions in churches, at arraigments, plays, and solemnities. Bacon.

What fun'ral pomp shall floating Tiber see,
When rising from his bed he views the sad solemnity? Dryden.

Though the forms and solemnities of the last judgment may bear some resemblance to those we are acquainted with here, yet the rule of proceeding shall be very different. Atterbury.

4. Manner of acting awfully serious.

With much more skilful cruelty, and horrible solemnity, he caused each thing to be prepared for his triumph of tyranny. Sidney.

5. Gravity; steady seriousness.

The stateliness and gravity of the Spaniards shews itself in the solemnity of their language.
Addison's Spectator

6. Awful grandeur; grave stateliness; sober dignity.

A diligent decency was in Polycletus, above others; to whom though the highest praise be attributed by the most, yet some think he wanted solemnness. Holton's Architecture.

7. Affected gravity.

Pr'ythee, Virgilia, turn thy solemnness out o' door, And go along with us. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Be this truth eternal ne'er forgot, Solemnity's a cover for a sot. Young.

This speech ended with a solemnity of accent. Female Quixote.

SOLEMNIZA'TION. n. s. [from solemnize.]

The act of solemnizing; celebration.

Soon followed the solemnization of the marriage between Charles and Anne dutchess of Bretagne, with whom he received the dutchy of Bretagne. Bacon's Henry VII.

To SOLEMNIZE. v. a. [solemniser, Fr. from solemn.]

1. To dignify by particular formalities; to celebrate.

Dorilus in a great battle was deprived of life; his obsequies being no more solemnized by the tears of his partakers than the blood of his enemies. Sidney.

Baptism to be administered in one place, and marriage solemnized in another. Hooker.

Theo'gan they sprinkle all the parts with wine, And make great feast to solemnize that day. Fairy Queen.

The multitude of the celestial host were heard to solemnize his miraculous birth. Boyle's Scraph. Love.

Their choice nobility and flower Met from all parts to solemnize this feast. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To perform religiously once a year.

What commandment the Jews had to celebrate their feast of dedication, is never spoken of in the law, yet solemnized even by our Saviour himself. Hooker.

SOLEMNLY. adv. [from solemn.]

1. With annual religious ceremonies.

2. With formal gravity and stateliness; with affected gravity.

There are, in points of wisdom and sufficiency, that do nothing or little very solemnly. Bac. Essays.

The ministers of state, who gave us law, In corners, with selected friends, withdraw; There in deaf murmurs solemnly are wise, Whisp'ring like winds ere hurricanes arise. Dryd.

3. With formal state.

Let him land And solemnly see him set on to London. Shak. H. V.

4. With religious seriousness.

To demonstrate how much men are blinded by their own partiality, I do solemnly assure the reader, that he is the only person from whom I ever heard that objection. Swift.

To SOLICIT. v. a. [solicito, Lat.]

1. To importune; to intreat.

If you bethink yourself of any crime, Unreconcil'd as yet to heav'n and grace, Solicit for it straight. Shakesp. Othello.

How he solicits heav'n Himself best knows; but strangely visited people, The mere despair of surgery, he cures. Shakesp.

Did I request thee, Maker! from my clay To mold me man? Did I solicit thee From darkness to promote me? Milton's Par. Lost.

The guardian of my faith so false did prove, As to solicit me with lawless love. Dryd. Aureng.

2. To call to action; to summon; to awake; to excite.

This supernatural soliciting Cannot be ill, cannot be good. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Solicit Henry with her wondrous praise;

Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount Her nat'ral graces, that extinguish art. Shakesp. Henry VI.

That fruit solicited her longing eye. Milton

Sounds and some tangible qualities solicit their proper senses, and force an entrance to the mind. Locke.

He is solicited by popular custom to indulge himself in forbidden liberties. Rogers's Sermons.

3. To implore; to ask.

With that she wept again; till he again soliciting the conclusion of her story, 'Then must you, said she, know the story of Amphialus?' Sidney.

4. To attempt; to try to obtain.

I view my crime, but kindle at the view; Repent old pleasures, and solicit new. Pope.

5. To disturb; to disquiet. A Latinism.

Solicit not thy thoughts with matters hid. Milt.

I find your love, and would reward it too; But anxious fears solicit my weak breast. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

SOLICITA'TION. n. s. [from solicit.]

The stone itself, whether naked or invested with earth, is not by its solidity secured, but washed down. Woodward

3. Truth; not fallaciousness; intellectual strength; clarity.

The most known rules are placed in so beautiful a light, that they have all the graces of novelty; and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. Addison's Spectator

His fellow-peers have attended to his eloquence, and have been convinced by the solidity of his reasoning. Prior

This pretence has a great deal more of art than of solidity in it. Waterland

SOLIDLY. adv. [from solid.]

1. Firmly; densely; compactly.

2. Truly; on good grounds.

A complete brave man ought to know solidly the main end he is in the world for. Digby

I look upon this as a sufficient ground for any rational man to take up his religion upon, and which I defy the subtlest atheist in the world solidly to answer; namely, that it is good to be sure. South

SOLIDNESS. n. s. [from solid.] Solidity; firmness; density.

It beareth missestoe: the cause may be the closeness and solidness of the wood and pith of the oak. Bacon

It is built with that unusual solidness, that it seems he intended to make a sacrifice to perpetuity, and to contest with the iron teeth of time. Hewel's Vocal Forest

SOLIDUNGULOUS. adj. [solidus and ungula, Lat.] Whole-hoofed.

It is set down by Aristotle and Pliny, that an horse, and all solidungulous or whole-hoofed animals, have no gall; which we find repugnant unto reason. Brown's Vulgar Errors

SOLIFIDIAN. n. s. [solus and fides, Lat.]

One who supposes only faith, not works, necessary to justification.

It may be justly feared, that the title of fundamentals, being ordinarily confined to the doctrines of faith, hath occasioned that great scandal in the church of God, at which so many myriads of solifidians have stumbled, and fallen irreversibly, by conceiving heaven a reward of true opinions. Hammond

SOLILOQUY. n. s. [soliloque, Fr. solus and loquor, Lat.] A discourse made by one in solitude to himself.

The whole poem is a soliloquy: Solomon is the person that speaks: he is at once the hero and the author; but he tells us very often what others say to him. Prior

He finds no respite from his anxious grief, Then seeks from his soliloquy relief. Garth's Disp.

If I should own myself in love, you know lovers are always allowed the comfort of soliloquy. Spect.

1. Living alone; not having company.

Those rare and solitary, these in flocks. Milton

2. Retired; remote from company; done or passed without company.

In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Shakesp.

Satan explores his solitary flight. Milton

Him fair Lavinia Shall breed in groves to lead a solitary life. Dryden's Æneid

3. Gloomy; dismal.

Let that might be solitary, let no joyful voice come therein. Job

4. Single.

Nor did a solitary vengeance serve: the cutting off one head is not enough; the eldest son must be involved. King Charles

Relations alternately relieve each other, their mutual concurrences supporting their solitary instabilities. Brown

SOLITARY. n. s. [from the adjective.]

One that lives alone; an hermit.

You describe so well your hermetical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you, for a cave with a spring, or any of the accommodations that befit a solitary. Pope's Letters

SOLITUDE. n. s. [solitude, Fr. solitudo, Lat.]

1. Lonely life; state of being alone.

It had been hard to have put more truth and untruth together, in few words, than in that speech, Whosoever is delighted with solitude, is either a wild beast or a god. Bacon

What call'st thou solitude? Is not the earth With various living creatures, and the air, Replenish'd, and all these at thy command, To come and play before thee? Milton's Par. Lost

Such only can enjoy the country, who are capable of thinking when they are there; then they are prepared for solitude, and in that solitude are prepared for them. Dryden

2. Loneliness; remoteness from company.

The solitude of his little parish is become matter of great comfort to him, because he hopes that God has placed him and his flock there, to make it their way to heaven. Law

2. Matter dissolved; that which contains any thing dissolved.

Aretæus, to procure sleep, recommends a solution of opium in water to foment the forehead. Arbutnot

When salt of tartar per deliquium, poured into the solution of any metal, precipitates the metal, and makes it fall down to the bottom of the liquor in the form of mud, does not this argue that the acid particles are attracted more strongly by the salt of tartar than by the metal, and by the stronger attraction go from the metal to the salt of tartar?
Newton's Opticks,

3. Resolution of a doubt; removal of an intellectual difficulty.

Something yet of doubt remains,
Which only thy solution can resolve.

Milton's Paradise Lost.
They give the reins to wand'ring thoughts,
Till, by their own perplexities involv'd,
They ravel more, still less resolv'd,
But never find self-satisfying solution. Milton.

With hope and fear
The woman did the new solution hear;
The man diffides in his own augury,
And doubts. Dryden.

This will instruct you to give a plainer solution of any difficulties that may attend the theme, and refute objections. Watts.

SO'LUTIVE. adj. [from solvo, Lat.] Laxative; causing relaxation.

Though it would not be so absterive, opening, and solutive as mead, yet it will be more lenitive in sharp diseases. Bacon.

SONGSTER. n. s. [from song.] A singer.

Used of human singers, it is a word of slight contempt.

The pretty songsters of the spring, with their various notes, did seem to welcome him as he passed. Houel.

Some songsters can no more sing in any chamber but their own, than some clerks read in any book but their own. L'Estrange.

Either songster holding out their throats,
And folding up their wings, renew'd their notes. Dryden.

SONGSTRESS. n. s. [from song.] A female singer.

Through the soft silence of the listening night
The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson's Summer.

SONNET. n. s. [sonnet, Fr. sonnetto, Ital.]

1. A short poem consisting of fourteen lines, of which the rhymes are adjusted by a particular rule. It is not very suitable to the English language; and has not been used by any man of eminence since Milton, of whose sonnets this is a specimen.

A book was writ of late call'd Tetrachordon,
And woven close, both matter, form, and stile;
The subject new: it walk'd the town a-while,

Num'ring good intellects, now seldom por'd on:
Cries the still-reader, Bless us, what a word on
A title-page is this! and some in file

Stand spelling false, while one might walk to Mile-End-green. Why is it harder, sirs, than Gordon, Colkitto, or Macdonnel, or Galasp?

Those ragged names to our like mouths grow sleek,

That would have made Quintilian stare and gasp;
Thy age, like ours, soul of Sir John Cheek,
Hated not learning worse than toad or asp,

When thou taught'st Cambridge and King Edward Greek. Milton.

2. A small poem.

Let us into the city presently,
To sort some gentlemen well skill'd in ausick;
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn. Shakesp.

SONNETTEER. n. s. [sonnetier, Fr. from sonnet.] A small poet, in contempt.

Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme; for I am sure I shall turn sonnetteer.

Shakesp. Love's Labour Lost.

There are as many kinds of gardening as of poetry: your makers of parterres and flower-gardens are epigrammatists and sonnetteers in this art.

Spectator.

What woful stuff this madrigal would be,
In some starv'd hackney sonnetteer or me!
But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the wit brightens! how the style refines!

Pope.

SONIFEROUS. adj. [sonus and fero, Lat.] Giving or bringing sound.

This will appear, let the subject matter of sounds be what it will; either the atmosphere, or the ethereal part thereof, or soniferous particles of bodies. Derham.

SONORIFICK. adj. [sonorus and facio, Lat.] Producing sound.

If he should ask me why a clock strikes, and points to the hour; and I should say, it is by an indicating form and sonorifick quality, this would be unsatisfactory. Watts's Logic.

SONOROUS. adj. [sonore, Fr. sonorus, Lat.]

1. Loud sounding; giving loud or shrill sound. Bodies are distinguished as sonorous or unsonorous.

All the while

Sonorous metal blowing martial sounds;
At which the universal host up sent
A shout that tore hell's concave.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. High sounding; magnificent of sound.

The Italian opera, amidst all the meanness and familiarity of the thoughts, has something beautiful and sonorous in the expression. Addison on Italy.

The vowels are sonorous. Dryden.

SONOROUSLY. adv. [from sonorous.] With high sound; with magnificence of sound.

SONOROUSNESS. n. s. [from sonorous.]

1. The quality of giving sound.

Enquiring of a maker of viols and lutes of what age he thought lutes ought to be, to attain their full and best seasoning for sonorousness, he replied, That in some twenty years would be requisite, and in others forty. Boyle.

2. Magnificence of sound.

SOON. adv. [suns, Goth. rona, Sax. saen, Dut.]

1. Before long time be past; shortly after any time assigned or supposed.

Nor did they not perceive their evil plight,
Yet to their general's voice they soon obey'd. Milton.

You must obey me, soon or late;
Why should you vainly struggle with your fate? Dryden.

2. Early; before any time supposed: opposed to late.

O boy! thy father gave thee life too soon,
And hath bereft thee of thy life too late.

Shakesp. Henry VI.

Do this, that I may be restored to you the sooner.

Heb. xiii.

How is it that you are come so soon to-day?

Ex. ii. 18.

The earlier stayeth for the later, and not that the later cometh sooner. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Readily; willingly.

I would as soon see a river winding through woods and meadows, as when it is tossed up in so many whimsical figures at Versailles. Addison's Guardian.

4. It has in Sidney the signification of an adjective, whether licentiously or according to the custom of his time.

He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

5. Soon as. Immediately; at the very time.

As soon as he came nigh unto the camp, he saw the calf and the dance. Ex. xxxii. 19.

Nor was his virtue poison'd, soon as born,
With the too early thoughts of being king. Dryd.
Feasts, and business, and pleasures, and enjoyments, seem great things to us, whilst we think of nothing else; but as soon as we add death to them, they all sink into an equal littleness. Law.

SO'ONLY. adv. [from soon.] Quickly; speedily. This word I remember in no other place: but if soon be, as it seems once to have been, an adjective, soonly is proper.

A mason meets with a stone that wants no cutting, and, soonly approving of it, places it in his work. More.

SO'OPBERRY. n. s. [sapindus, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

SOOT. n. s. [ꝛoz, Sax. soet, Island. soet Dut.] Condensed or embodied smoke.

Soot, though thin spread in a field, is a very good compost. Bacon.

If the fire be not kept within the tunnel of the chimney, and some appointed to sweep down the soot, the house will be in danger of burning. Howel.

Of they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drogg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, writ'h'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Our household gods, that droop upon our hearths,
Each from his venerable face shall brush
The Macedonian soot, and shine again.
Dryden's Cleomene s.

SO'OTED. adj. [from soot.] Smeared, manured, or covered with soot.

The land was sooted before. Mortimer.

SO'OTERKIN. n. s. A kind of false birth fabled to be produced by the Dutch women from sitting over their stoves.

When Jove was, from his teeming head,
Of wit's fair goddess brought to bed,
There follow'd at his lying-in,
For after-birth a sooterkin. Swift.

SOOTH. n. s. [ꝛoð, Sax.] Truth; reality. Obsolete.

Sir, understand you this of me in sooth,
The youngest daughter, whom you hearken for,
Her father keeps from all access of suitors,
Until the eldest sister first be wed.
He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter.
Shakesp.

I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand and read
My daughter's eyes. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
If I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change caps. Camden's Remains.

The very sooth of it is, that an ill habit has the force of an ill fate. L'Estrange.

I did not mean to chide you;
For sooth to say, I hold it noble in you
To cherish the distress'd. Rowe.

SOOTH. adj. [ꝛoð, Sax.] Pleasing; delightful.

Some other means I have,
Which once of Melibæus old I learn'd,
The soothest shepherd that e'er pip'd on plains.
Milton.

SOOTH. n. s. Sweetness; kindness. This seems to be the meaning here.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakesp. Richard II.

To SOOTH. v. a. [ꝛeꝛoðian, Sax.]

1. To flatter; to please with blandishments.

In soothing them, we nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition. Shak.
Can I sooth tyranny?
Seem pleas'd to see my royal master murder'd,
His crown usurp'd, a distaff in the throne? Dryd.

By his fair daughter is the chief confin'd,
Who sooths to dear delight his anxious mind;
Successful all her soft caresses prove,
To banish from his breast his country's love.
Pope's Odyssey.

Thinks he that Memnon, soldier as he is,
Thoughtless and dull, will listen to his soothing?
Rowe.

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd, been angry, sooth'd again;
Laid safety, life, and interest in his sight;
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato.
Addison's Cato.

2. To calm; to soften; to mollify.

The beldame
Sooths her with blandishments, and frights with threats.
Dryden.

3. To gratify; to please.

This calm'd his cares; sooth'd with his future fame
And pleas'd to hear his propagated name. Dryden.

SO'OTHER. n. s. [from sooth.] A flatterer; one who gains by blandishments.

I cannot flatter: I defy
The tongues of soothers. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

To SOO'THSAY. v. n. [sooth and say.] To predict; to foretel.

A damsel, possessed with a spirit of divination, met us, which brought her masters much gain by soothsaying. Acts, xvi.

SOO'THSAYER. n. s. [from soothsay.] A foreteller; a predictor; a prognosticator.

Scarcely was Musidorus made partaker of this oft blinding light, when there were found numbers of soothsayers, who affirmed strange and incredible things should be performed by that child. Sidney.
A soothsayer bids you beware the ides of March.
Shakesp.

He was animated to expect the papacy by the prediction of a soothsayer, that one should succeed Pope Leo, whose name should be Adrian, an aged man of mean birth, and of great learning and wisdom.
Bacon's Henry VII.

SOO'TINESS. n. s. [from sooty.] The quality of being sooty; fuliginousness.

SOO'TY. adj. [from soot.]

1. Breeding soot.

By fire of sooty coal the alchymist turns Metals to gold. Milton.

2. Consisting of soot; fuliginous.

There may be some chymical way so to defecate this oil, that it shall not spend into a sooty matter. Wilkins.

3. Black; dark; dusky.

All the grisly legions that troop
Under the sooty flag of Acheron;
Harpies and Hydras, and all monstrous forms.
Milton.

Swift on his sooty pinions flits the gnome,
And in a vapour reach'd the gloomy dome. Pope.

To SOO'TY. v. a. [from soot.] To make black with soot.

Then (for his own weeds) shirt and coat all rent,
Tann'd and all sootied with noisome smoke
She put him on; and over all a cloke. Chapman.

SOP. n. s. [ꝛop, Sax. sopa, Span. soppe, Dut.]

1. Any thing steeped in liquor, commonly to be eaten.

The bounded waters
Would lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
And make a sop of all this solid globe. Shakesp.

Draw, you rogue! for though it be night, yet the moon shines: I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you. Shakesp.

Sops in wine, quantity for quantity, inebriate more than wine of itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Any thing given to pacify, from the sop given to Cerberus.

The prudent Sibyl had before prepar'd
A sop, in honey steep'd, to charm the guard;
Which, mix'd with powerful drugs, she cast before
His greedy grinning jaws, just op'd to roar. Dryd.
Ill nature is not cured with a sop; quarrelsome men, as well as quarrelsome curs, are worse for fair usage. L'Estrange.

To Cerberus they give a sop,
His tripple barking mouth to stop. Swift.

To SOP. v. a. To steep in liquor

SOPE. n. s. [See SOAP.]

SOPH. n. s. [from sophista, Lat.] A young man who has been two years at the university.

Three Cambridge sophs and three pery templars came,
The same their talents, and their tastes the same;
Each prompt to que ry, answer, and debate,
And smit with love of poesy and prate. Pope's Dun.

SOPH. n. s. [Persian.] The emperor of Persia.

By this scimitar
That slew the sophi and a Persian prince. Shakesp.
A fig for the sultan and sophi. Congreve.

SOPHISM. n. s. [sophisma, Lat.] A fallacious argument; an unsound subtilty; a fallacy.

When a false argument puts on the appearance of a true one, then it is properly called a sophism or fallacy. Watts.

I, who as yet was never known to show
False pity or premeditated woe,
Will graciously explain great nature's laws,
And hear thy sophisms in so plain a cause. Hurte.

SOPHIST. n. s. [sophista, Lat.] A professor of philosophy.

The court of Ceresus is said to have been much resorted to by the sophists of Greece, in the happy beginning of his reign. Temple.

SOPHISTER. n. s. [sophiste, Fr. sophista, Lat.]

1. A disputant fallaciously subtle; an artful but insidious logician.

A subtle traitor needs no sophister. Shak. H. VI.
If a heathen philosopher brings arguments from reason, which none of our atheistical sophisters can confute, for the immortality of the soul, I hope they will so weigh the consequences, as neither to talk nor live as if there was no such thing. Denh.

Not all the subtle objections of sophisters and rabbies, against the gospel, so much prejudiced the reception of it, as the reproach of those crimes with which they aspersed the assemblies of christians.
Rogers.

2. A professor of philosophy; a sophist.

This sense is antiquated.
Alicidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hacker.

SOPHISTICAL. adj. [sophistique, Fr. from sophist.] Fallaciously subtle; logically deceitful.

Neither know I when I should prefer for madness, and sophistical cozenage, that the same body of Christ should be in a thousand places at once of this sublimary world. Hall.

When the state of the controversy is well understood, the difficulty will not be great in giving answers to all his sophistical cavils. Stillingfleet.

That may seem a demonstration for the present, which to posterity will appear a mere sophistical knot. More.

SOPHISTICALLY. adv. [from sophistical.] With fallacious subtilty.

Bollingbroke argues most sophistically. Swift.

To SOPHISTICATE. v. a. [sophistiquer, Fr. from sophist.] To adulterate; to corrupt with something spurious.

If the passions of the mind be strong, they easily sophistate the understanding; they make it apt to believe upon every slender warrant, and to inu-gine infallible truth where scarce any probable shew appeareth. Hooker.

Here's three of us are sophistated. Shal'esp.
Divers experiments succeeded not, because they were at one time tried with genuine materials, and at another time with sophistated ones. Boyle.

The only persons amongst the heathens, who sophisticated nature and philosophy, were the Stoicks; who affirmed a fatal, unchangeable, concatenation of causes, reaching even to the elicit acts of man's will. South's Sermons.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare; They purchase but sophisticated ware: 'Tis prodigality that buys deceit, Where both the giver and the taker cheat. Dryd.

The eye hath its coats and humours transparent and colourless, lest it should tinge and sophisticate the light that it lets in by a natural jaundice. Bentley.

SOPHISTICATE. part. adj. [from the verb.] Adulterate; not genuine.

Wine sparkles brighter far than she, 'Tis pure and right, without deceit, And that no woman e'er will be; No, they are all sophisticate. Cowley.

Since then a great part of our scientific treasure is most likely to be adulterate, though all bears the image and superscription of truth; the only way to know what is sophisticate and what is not so, is to bring all to the examen of the touchstone. Glan.

So truth, when only one supplied the state, Grew scarce and dear, and yet sophisticate. Dryden.

SOPHISTICATION. n. s. [sophistication, Fr. from sophisticate.] Adulteration; not genuineness.

Sophistication is the act of counterfeiting or adulterating any thing with what is not so good, for the sake of unlawful gain. Quincy.

The drugs and simples sold in shops generally are adulterated by the fraudulent avarice of the sellers, especially if the preciousness may make their sophistication very beneficial. Boyle.

Besides easy submission to sophistications of sense, we have inability to prevent the miscarriages of our junior reasons. Glanville.

SOPHISTICATOR. n. s. [from sophisticate.] Adulterator; one that makes things not genuine.

SOPHISTRY. n. s. [from sophist.]

1. Fallacious ratiocination.

His sophistry prevailed; his father believed. Sid. These men have obscured and confounded the natures of things by their false principles and wretched sophistry; though an act be never so sinful, they will strip it of its guilt. South.

2. Logical exercise.

The more youthful exercises of sophistry, the memes and declamations. Felton.

TO SOPORATE. v. n. [soporo, Lat.] To lay asleep. Dict.

SOPORIFEROUS. adj. [sopor and fero.] Productive of sleep; causing sleep; narcotick; opiate; dormitive; somniferous; anodyne; sleepy.

The particular ingredients of those magical ointments are opiate and soporiferous; for anointing of the forehead, neck, feet, and back-bone, procures dead sleeps. Bacon.

While the whole operation was performing, I lay in a profound sleep, by the force of that soporiferous medicine infused into my liquor. Swift.

SOPORIFEROUSNESS. n. s. [from soporiferous.] The quality of causing sleep.

SOPORIFICK. adj. [sopor and facio.] Causing sleep; opiate; narcotick.

The colour and taste of opium are, as well as its soporifick or anodyne virtues, mere powers depending on its primary qualities. Locke.

SOPPER. n. s. [from sop.] One that steeps any thing in liquor.

SORB. n. s. [sorbun, Lat.] The berry of the sorb or service-tree.

SORBILE. adj. [from sorbeo, Lat.] That may be drunk or sipped.

SORBITION. n. s. [sorbitio, Lat.] The act of drinking or sipping.

SORCERER. n. s. [sorcier, Fr. sortarius, low Lat.] A conjurer; an enchanter; a magician.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Drug-working sorcerers that change the mind, Soul-killing witches that deform the body, And many such like libertines of sin. Shakesp.

The weakness of the power of witches upon kings and magistrates may be ascribed to the weakness of imagination; for it is hard for a witch or a sorcerer to put on a belief that they can hurt such. Bacon's Natural History.

He saw a sable sorcerer arise, All sudden gorgons hiss, and dragons glare, And ten horn'd fiends. Pope.

The Egyptian sorcerers contended with Moses; but the wonders which Moses wrought did so far transcend the power of magicians, as made them confess it was the finger of God. Watts's Logick.

SORCERESS. n. s. [female of sorcerer.] A female magician; an enchantress.

Bring forth that sorceress condemn'd to burn. Shak. Divers witches and sorceresses have fed upon man's flesh, to aid their imagination with high and foul vapours. Bacon.

The snaky sorceress that sat, Just by hell-gate, and kept the fatal key, Ris'n, and with hideous ontry rush'd between. Milton.

How cunningly the sorceress displays Her own transgressions, to upbraid me mine! Milt.

SORCEROUS. adj. Containing enchantments. A word not used.

Th' art ent'ring Circe's house, Where by her med'cines, black and sorceroous, Thy souldiers all are shut in well-arm'd sties, And turn'd to swine. Chapman.

SORCERY. n. s. Magic; enchantment; conjuration; witchcraft; charms.

This witch Sycorax, For mischiefs manifold, and sorceries terrible, Was banish'd. Shakesp.

Adds wisdom I have learn'd, To fence my ears against thy sorceries. Milton. Actæon has long tracts of rich soil; but had the misfortune in his youth to fall under the power of sorcery. Tatler.

SORD. n. s. [corrupted from ward.] Turf; grassy ground.

This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever ran on the green sord. Shakesp. Winter's Tale. An altar of grassy sord. Milton.

SORDES. n. s. [Lat.] Foulness; dregs. The sea washes off the soil and sordes wherein mineral mosses were involved and concealed, and thereby renders them more conspicuous. Woodw.

SORDET. } n. s. [sourdine, Fr. sordina, SORDINE. } Ital.] A small pipe put into the mouth of a trumpet, to make it sound lower or shriller. Bailey.

SORDID. adj. [sordidus Lat.]

1. Foul; gross; filthy; dirty. There Charon stands, A sordid god; down from his hoary chin A length of beard descends, uncomb'd, unclean. Dryden.

2. [Sordide, Fr.] Intellectually dirty; mean; vile; base.

Thou canst not those exceptions make, Which vulgar sordid mortals take. Cowley. It is strange, since the priest's office heretofore was always splendid, that it is now looked upon as a piece of religion, to make it low and sordid. South's Sermons.

3. [Sordide, Fr.] Covetous; niggardly. He may be old,

And yet not sordid, who refuses gold. Denham. If one should cease to be generous and charitable, because another is sordid and ungrateful, it would be much in the power of vice to extinguish christian virtues. L'Estrange.

SOR'DIDLY. adv. [from sordid.] Meanly; poorly; covetously.

SOR'DIDNESS. n. s. [from sordid.]

1. Meanness; baseness. I omit the madnesses of Caligula's delights, and the execrable sordidness of those of Tiberius. Cowley.

2. Nastiness; not neatness. Providence deters people from sluttishness and sordidness, and provokes them to cleanliness. Ray.

SORE. n. s. [saur, Sax. saur, Dan.] A place tender and painful; a place excoriated; an ulcer. It is not used of a wound, but of a breach of continuity, either long continued, or from internal cause; to be a sore, there must be an excoriation; a tumour or bruise is not called a sore before some disruption happen. Let us hence provide A salve for any sore that may betide. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Receipts abound; but searching all thy store, The best is still at hand, to lance the sore, And cut the head; for, till the core be found, The secret vice is fed and gathers ground. Dryden.

By these all fest'ring sores her councils heal, Which time or has disclos'd or shall reveal. Dryd. Lice and flies, which have a most wonderful instinct to find out convenient places for the hatching and nourishment of their young, lay their eggs upon sores. Bentley!

SORE. adj. [from the noun.] 1. Tender to the touch. It has sometimes of before the casual noun. We can ne'er be sure, Whether we pain or not endure; And just so far are sore and griev'd, As by the fancy is believ'd. Hudibras. While sore of battle, while our wounds are green, Why should we tempt the doubtful die again? Dryden.

It was a right answer of the physician to his patient, that had sore eyes: If you have more pleasure in the taste of wine than in the use of your sight, wine is good; but if the pleasure of seeing be greater to you than that of drinking, wine is naught. Locke.

2. Tender in the mind; easily vexed. Malice and hatred are very fretting and vexatious, and apt to make our minds sore and uneasy; but he that can moderate these affections will find ease in his mind. Tillotson.

Laugh at your friends; and, if your friends are sore So much the better, you may laugh the more. Pope.

3. Violent with pain; affectively vehement. See SORE, adverb. Threescore and ten I can remember well, Within the volume of which time I've seen Hours dreadful and things strange; but this sore night Hath trifled former knowings. Shakesp. I will persevere in my course of loyalty, though the conflict be sore between that and my blood. Shakesp. King Lear.

My loins are filled with a sore disease; and there is no whole part in my body. Common Prayer. As likeliest was, when two such foes met arm'd. Milton.

Gentle lady, may thy grave Peace and quiet ever have; After this day's travel sore, Sweet rest seize thee evermore. Milton.

They are determined to live up to the holy rule, though sore evils and great temporal inconveniences should attend the discharge of their duty. Atterbury.

4. Criminal. Out of use. To lapse in fullness Is sorer than to lye for need; and falsehood Is worse in kings than beggars. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

SORE. n. s. [from saur, Fr.] The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a sorel; and the fourth year, a sore. Shakesp.

SORE. adv. [This the etymologists derive from seer, Dut. but seer means only an intension of any thing; sore almost always includes pain.] With painful or dangerous vehemence; in a very painful degree; with afflictive violence or pertinacity. It is now little used.

Thine arrows stick fast in me, and thy hand presseth me sore. Common Prayer.

The knight then lightly leaping to the prey,
With mortal steel him smote again so sore,
That headless his unwieldy body lay. Fairy Q.

He this and that, and each man's blow
Doth eye, defend, and sluff, being laid to sore. Dan.

Though iron hew and mangle sore,
Would wounds and bruises honour more. Hudibras.
Distrust shook sore their minds. Milton.

So that, if Palamon were wounded sore,
Arcite was hurt as much. Dryden's Knight's Tale.
Sore sigh'd the knight, who this long sermon heard:

At length, considering all, his heart he cheer'd. Dry.
How, Didus, shall a Roman, sore repuls'd,
Greet your arrival to this distant isle?
How bid you welcome to these shatter'd legions?

A. Philips.

SOREHON. } n. s. [Irish and Scott.] A SORN. } kind of arbitrary exaction or servile tenure, formerly in Scotland, as likewise in Ireland. Whenever a chieftain had a mind to revel, he came down among the tenants with his followers, by way of contempt called in the lowlands giliwitfits, and lived on free quarters; so that ever since, when a person obtrudes himself upon another, stays at his house, and hangs upon him for bed and board, he is said to sorn, or be a sorner. Macbean.

They exact upon them all kind of services; yea, and the very wild exactions, coignie, livery, and sorchon: by which they poll and utterly undo the poor tenants and freeholders under them.

Spenser's Ireland.

SOREL. n. s. [diminutive of sore.]

The buck is called the first year a fawn; the second, a pricket; the third, a sorel. Shakesp.

SORELY. adv. [from sore.]

1. With a great degree of pain or distress.
Here's the smell of the blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little band. Oh! oh! oh!—What a sigh is there! the heart is sorely overcharged. Shakesp.

Of the warrior train,
Though most were sorely wounded, none were slain. Dryden.

2. With vehemence dangerous or afflictive.

I have done ill,
Of which I do accuse myself so sorely,
That I will enjoy no more. Shakesp.

SORENESS. n. s. [from sore.] Tenderness of a hurt.

He that, whilst the soreness of his late pangs of conscience remains, finds himself a little indisposed for sin, presently concludes repentance hath had its perfect work. Decay of Piety.

My foot began to swell, and the pain asswaged, though it left such a soreness, that I could hardly suffer the clothes of my bed. Temple.

SORITES. n. s. [σωριτες.] Properly an heap. An argument where one proposition is accumulated on another.

Chrysippus the Stoick invented a kind of argument, consisting of more than three propositions, which is called sortes, or a heap. Dryden.

Sortes is when several middle terms are chosen to connect one another successively in several propositions, till the last proposition connects its predicate with the first subject. Thus, All men of revenge have their souls often uneasy; uneasy souls are a plague to themselves; now to be one's own plague is folly in the extreme. Watts's Logic.

SORO'RICIDE. n. s. [soror and caedo.]

The murder of a sister.

SOR'RAGE. n. s. The blades of green wheat or barley. Dict.

SOR'RANCE. n. s. [In farriery.] Any disease or sore in horses. Dict.

SOR'REL. n. s. [rupe, Sax. sorel, Fr. oralis, Lat.] This plant agrees with the dock in all its characters, and only differs in having an acid taste. Miller.

Of all roots of herbs the root of sorrel goeth the farthest into the earth. It is a cold and acid herb, that loveth the earth, and is not much drawn by the sun. Bacon.

Acid austere vegetables contract and strengthen the fibres, as all kinds of sorrel, the virtues of which lie in acid astringent salt, a sovereign antidote against the putrescent bilious alkali. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SOR'RILY. adv. [from sorry.] Meanly; poorly; despicably; wretchedly; pitifully.

Thy pipe, O Pan, shall help, though I sing *sorri*ly. Sidney.

SOR'RINESS. n. s. [from sorry.] Meanness; wretchedness; pitiableness; despicableness.

SOR'RROW. n. s. [sorg, Dan.] Grief; pain for something past; sadness; mourning. Sorrow is not commonly understood as the effect of present evil, but of lost good.

Sorrow is uneasiness in the mind, upon the thought of a good lost, which might have been enjoyed longer; or the sense of a present evil. Locke.

Sorrow on thee, on all the pack of you;
That triumph thus upon my misery! Shakesp.

A world of woe and sorrow. Milton.

Some other hour I will to tears allow;
But, having you, can shew no sorrow now. Dryd.

But peace was theirs, and harmony within,
They knew no sorrow, for they knew no sin.

Whyte's Poems.

To SOR'RROW. v. n. [saurgan, Goth. ropzan, Sax.] To grieve; to be sad; to be dejected.

The miserable change, now at my end,
Lament nor sorrow at. Shakesp. Antony and Cleop.

Wherever sorrow is, relief would be;
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakesp.

Now I rejoice, not that ye were made sorry, but that ye sorrowed to repentance. 2 Cor. vii. 9.

I neither fear to die, nor desire to live; and having mastered all grief in myself, I desire no man to sorrow for me. Hayward.

Send them forth, though sorrowing, yet in peace. Milton.

Sad the prince explores
The neighb'ring main, and sorrowing treads the shores. Pope.

SOR'RROWED. adj. [from sorrow.] Accompanied with sorrow. Out of use.

Now the publick body, which doth seldom
Play the recanter, feeling in itself
A lack of Timon's aid, hath sense withal
Of its own fall, restraining aid to Timon,
And sends forth us to make their sorrowed tender. Shakesp.

SOR'RROWFUL. adj. [sorrow and full.]

1. Sad for something past; mournful; grieving.

Blessed are they which have been sorrowful for all thy scourges; for they shall rejoice for thee, when they have seen all thy glory. Tob. xiii. 14.

2. Deeply serious. Not in use.

Hannah said, No my lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit: I have poured out my soul before the Lord. 1 Samuel.

3. Expressing grief; accompanied with grief.

The things that my soul refused to touch, are as my sorrowful meat. Job, vi. 7.

SOR'RRY. adj. [sarpig, Sax.]

1. Grieved for something past. It is generally used of slight or casual miscarriages or vexations, but sometimes of greater things. It does not imply any long continuance of grief.

O, forget

What we are sorry for ourselves in thee.

Timon of Athens.

The king was sorry: nevertheless, for the oath's sake, he commanded the Baptist's head to be given her. Matthew, xiv. 9.

I'm sorry for thee, friend; 'tis the duke's pleasure. Shakesp.

We are sorry for the satire interspersed in some of these pieces, upon a few people, from whom the highest provocations have been received. Swift.

2. [From saur filth, Island.] Vile; worthless; vexatious.

How now, why do you keep alone?

Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakesp. Macbeth.

If the union of the parts consist only in rest, it would seem that a bag of dust would be of as firm a consistence as that of marble; and Bajazet's cage had been but a sorry prison. Glanville.

Coarse complexions,
And cheeks of sorry grain, will serve to ply
The sampler, and to teize the housewife's wool. Milton.

How vain were all the ensigus of his power, that could not support him against one slighting look of a sorry slave! L'Estrange.

If this innocent had any relation to his Thiebaïs, the poet might have found some sorry excuse for detaining the reader. Dryden.

If such a slight and sorry business as that could produce one organical body, one might reasonably expect, that now and then a dead lump of dough might be leavened into an animal. Bentley's Scribn.

SORT. n. s. [sorte, Fr.]

1. A kind; a species.

Disfigur'd more than spirit of happy sort. Milton.
A substantial and unaffected piety not only gives a man a credit among the sober and virtuous, but even among the vicious sort of men. Tillotson.

I come to thee for charitable licence,
 To sort our nobles from our common men. Shak.
 A piece of cloth made of white and black threads, though the whole appear neither white nor black, but grey, yet each remains what it was before, if the threads were pulled asunder, and sorted each colour by itself. Boyle.
 Shell-fish have been by some of the ancients, compared and sorted with the insects. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

With this desire, she hath a native might
 To find out ev'ry truth, if she had time;
 Th' innumerable effects to sort aright,
 And by degrees from cause to cause to climb. Davies.

The number of simple ideas, that make the nominal essence of the lowest species, or first sorting of individuals, depends on the mind of man. Locke
 The rays which differ in refrangibility may be parted and sorted from one another; and that either by refraction, or by reflection. Newton's Opticks.

But grant that actions best discover man;
 Take the most strong, and sort them as you can;
 The few that glare, each character must mark;
 You balance not the many in the dark. Pope.

2. To reduce to order from a state of confusion.

These they sorted into their several times and places; some to begin the service of God with, and some to end; some to be interlaced between the divine readings of the law and prophets. Hooker.

Let me not be light;
 For a light wife doth make a heavy husband;
 And never be Bassanio so from me;
 But God sort all! Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.

3. To conjoin; to put together in distribution.

For, when she sorts things present with things past,
 And thereby things to come doth oft foresee;
 When she doth doubt at first, and chuse at last,
 These acts her own, without her body, be. Davies.
 The swain perceiving, by her words ill sorted,
 That she was wholly from herself transported. Brown.

4. To cull; to chuse; to select.

Send his mother to his father's house,
 That he may sort her out a worthy spouse. Chopman.

To SORT. v. n.

1. To be joined with others of the same species.
 Ner do metals only sort and herd with metals in the earth, and minerals with minerals; but both in common together. Woodward.

2. To consort; to join.
 The illiberality of parents towards their children, makes them base, and sort with any company. Bacon.

3. To suit; to fit.
 A man cannot speak to a son but as a father;
 whereas a friend may speak as the case requires,
 and not as it sorteth with the person. Bacon.

They are happy whose natures sort with their vocations. Bacon.
 Among unequals, what society
 Can sort, what harmony, or true delight?
 Which must be mutual, in proportion due Giv'n and receiv'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

S O T

The Creator calling forth by name
 His mighty angels, gave them several charge,
 As sorted best with present things. Milt. Par. Lost.
 For different stiles with different subjects sort,
 As several garbs with country, town, and court. Pope.

4. [Sortir to issue, Fr.] To terminate; to issue.

It sorted not to any fight, but to a retreat. Bacon.
 Princes cannot gather this fruit, except they raise some persons to be companions; which many times sorteth to inconvenience. Bacon.

The slips of their vines have been brought into Spain, but they have not sorted to the same purpose as in their native country. Abbot's Description of the World.

It was tried in a blown bladder, whereinto flesh and a flower were put, and it sorted not; for dry bladders will not blow, and new bladders further putrefaction. Bacon.

6. To fall out. [from sort a lot, Fr.]
 And so far am I glad it did so sort,
 As this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shakesp.

SORTAL adj. A word formed by Locke, but not yet received.

As things are ranked under names, into sorts or species, only as they agree to certain abstract ideas, the essence of each sort comes to be nothing but that idea which the sortal, if I may so call it from sort, as I do general from genus, name stands for. Locke.

SORTANCE. n. s. [from sort.] Suitableness; agreement.

Here doth he wish his person, with such power
 As might hold sortance with his quality,
 The which he could not levy. Shakesp. Henry IV.

 When I inform'd him, then he call'd me sot,
 And told me I had turn'd the wrong side out. Shak.

Either our brags
 Were crackt of kitchen trulls, or his description
 Prov'd us unspeaking sots. Shakesp.
 Soul blinded sots, that creep
 In dirt, and never saw the wonders of the deep. Drayton.

Tell him that no history or antiquity can match his conduct; and presently the sot, because he knows neither history nor antiquity, shall begin to measure himself by himself, which is the only sure way for him not to fall short. South.

2. A wretch stupified by drinking.
 Every sign
 That calls the staring sots to nasty wine. Roscom.
 A surly ill-bred lurd,
 That chides and snaps her up at every word;
 A brutal sot, who, while she holds his head,
 With drunken filth bedaubs the nuptial bed. Granville.

To SOT. v. a. To stupify; to besot; to infatuate.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
 Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
 A driveling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

S O V

The potion
 Turns his brain, and stupifies his mind;
 The sotted moon-calf gapes. Dryden
To SOT. v. n. To tuppel to stupidity.

SO'TTISH. adj. [from sot.]

1. Dull; stupid; senseless; infatuate; doltish.
 All's but naught;
 Patience is sottish, and impatience does Become a dog that's mad. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
 Upon the report of his approach, more than half fell away and dispersed; the residue, being more desperate or more sottish, did abide in the field, of whom many were slain. Hayward.

He gain'd a king,
 Ahaz his sottish conqueror. Milton.
 'Tis sottish to offer at things that cannot be brought about. L'Estrange.

The inhabitants of Soldania in Africk are so sottish and grossly ignorant, that they differ very little from brutes. Wilkins.
 How ignorant are sottish pretenders to astrology! Swift.

2. Dull with intemperance.

SO'TTISHLY. adv. [from sottish.] Stupidly; dully; senselessly.

Northumberland, sottishly mad with over great fortune, procured the king, by his letters patent under the great seal, to appoint the lady Jane to succeed him in the inheritance of the crown. Hayward.

Atheism is impudent in pretending to philosophy; and superstition sottishly ignorant, in fancying that the knowledge of nature tends to irreligion. Glanville.

So sottishly to lose the purest pleasures and comforts of this world, and forego the expectation of immortality in another; and so desperately to run the risk of dwelling with everlasting burnings, plainly discovers itself to be the most pernicious
 folly and deplorable madness in the world. Bentley.

SO'TTISHNESS. n. s. [from sottish.]

1. Dullness; stupidity; insensibility.
 Sometimes phlegm putrifies into sottishness, so- tishness into an ignorance or neglect of all religion.
Holiday.

Few consider what a degree of sottishness and confirmed ignorance men may sin themselves into.
South.

The first part of the text, the folly and sottish- ness of atheism, will come home to their case; since they make such a noisy pretence to wit and sagacity. Bentley.

2. Drunken stupidity.
 No sober temperate person can look with any complacency upon the drunkenness and sottishness of his neighbour. South.

SOUCE. n. s. See SOUSE.

SO'VERIGN. adj. [souverain, Fr. sorrano, Span.]

1. Supreme in power; having no superior.
 As teaching bringeth us to know that God is our supreme truth; so prayer testifieth that we acknowledge him our sovereign good. Hooker.
 You my sovereign lady,
 Causeless have laid disgraces on my head. Shakesp. Hen. IV.

None of us who now thy grace implore,
 But held the rank of sovereign queen before;
 Till giddy chance, whose malice never bears
 That mortal bliss should last for length of years,
 Cast us down headlong from our high estate. Dryd.

Whether Esau, then, were a vassal to Jacob, and Jacob his sovereign prince by birthright, I leave the reader to judge. Locke.

2. Supremely efficacious; predominant over diseases.

A memorial of fidelity and zeal, a sovereign preservative of God's people from the venomous infection of heresy. Hooker.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick; and, to this preservative, of no better report than a horse drench. Shakesp. Coriolanus
 Love-wounded Protheus,
 My bosom, as a bed,

Shall lodge thee, till thy wound be thoroughly heal'd;
 And thus I search it with a sov'reign kiss. Shakesp.
 A water we call water of paradise, by that we do to it, is made very sovereign for health. Bacon.
 Like the scum starv'd men did draw
 From parboil'd shoes and boots, and all the rest
 Which were with any sovereign fatness blest. Donne.
 Be cool, my friend, and hear my muse dispense
 Some sovereign comforts drawn from common sense. Dryden.

SOVEREIGN. n. s. Supreme lord.

O, let my sovereign turn away his face,
 And bid his ears a little while be deaf. Shakesp.
 By my sovereign, and his fate, I swear,
 Renown'd for faith in peace, for force in war,
 Oft our alliance other lands desir'd. Dryden.

SOVEREIGNLY. adv. [from sovereign.]

Supremely; in the highest degree.

He was sovereignly lovely in himself. Boule.

SOVEREIGNTY. n. s. [souveraineté. Fr.]

Supremacy; highest place; supreme power; highest degree of excellence.

Give me pardon,

That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
 Your unknown sovereignty. Shakesp.

Happy were England, would this virtuous prince Take on his grace the sovereignty thereof. Shakesp.

To give laws unto a people, to institute magistrates and officers over them; to punish and pardon malefactors; to have the sole authority of making war and peace, are the true marks of sovereignty. Davies.

A mighty hunter thence he shall be still'd
 Before the Lord; as in despite of heav'n,
 Or from heav'n, claiming second sovereignty. Milton.

Nothing does so gratify a haughty humour, as this piece of usurped sovereignty over our brethren.
Government of the Tongue.

Jove's own tree,

That holds the woods in awful sovereignty,
 Requires a depth of lodging in the ground;
 High as his topmost boughs to heav'n ascend,
 So low his roots to hell's dominion tends. Dryden.

I will foresee, when'er thy suit I grant,
 That I my much-lov'd sovereignty shall want,
 And her new beauty may thy heart invade. Dryd.

Let us above all things possess our souls with awful apprehensions of the majesty and sovereignty of God. Rogers.

Alexander's Grecian colonies in the Indies were almost exterminated by Sandrocottus; Seleucus recovered the sovereignty in some degree, but was forced to abandon to him the country along the Indus. Arbuthnot on Coins.

SOUGH. n. s. [from sous, Fr.] A subterraneous drain.

Yet could not such mines, without great pains and charges, if at all, be wrought; the delfs would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any addits or soughs to drain them, that no gins or machines could suffice to lay and keep them dry. Ray on the Creation.

Another was found in sinking a sough-pit. Woodward.

SOUGHT. The preterite and participle pass. of seek.

I am sought of them that asked not for me;

I am found of them that sought me not. Isa. lxx. 1.

SOUL. n. s. [zæl], Sax. sæl, Dan. sual, Island. siel, Dut.]

1. The immaterial and immortal spirit of man.

When death was overcome, he opened heaven as well to the believing Gentiles as Jews: heaven till then was no receptacle to the souls of either. Hooker.

Perhaps, for want of food, the soul may pine; But that were strange, since all things bad and good Since all God's creatures mortal and divine, Since God himself, is hereternal food. Davies.

He remembered them of the promises, seals, and oaths, which by public authority had passed for concluding this marriage; that these, being religious bonds betwixt God and their souls, could not by any pollick act of state be dissolved. Hayward.

So natural is the knowledge of the soul's immortality, and of some ubi for the future reception of it, that we find some tract or other of it in most barbarous nations. Heylyn.

2. Intellectual principle.

Eloquence the soul, song charms the sense. Milt.
 The eyes of our souls only then begin to see, when our bodily eyes are closing. Law.

3. Vital principle.

Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
 To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
 That souls of animals infuse themselves
 Into the trunks of men. Shak. Merchant of Venice.
 Thou sun, of this great world both eye and soul. Milton.

Join voices, all ye living souls! ye birds,
 That singing up to heaven-gate ascend,
 Bear on your wings, and in your notes, his praise. Milton.

In common discourse and writing we leave out the words vegetative, sensitive and rational; and make the word soul serve for all these principles. Hatts.

4. Spirit; essence; quintessence; principal part.

He has the very soul of bounty. Shakesp.
 Charity, the soul of all the rest. Milton.

5. Interior power.

There is some soul of goodness in things evil,
 Would men observingly distil it out. Shakesp.

6. A familiar appellation expressing the qualities of the mind.

Three wenchs where I stood, cry'd,
 "Alas, good soul!" Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
 This is a poor mad soul; and she says, up and down the town, that her eldest son is like you. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The poor soul sat singing by a sycamore tree,
 Sing all a green willow:
 Her hand on her bosom, her head on her knee. Shakesp.

Keep the poor soul no longer in suspense,
 Your charge is such as does not need defence. Dryden.

Unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders of the microscope, discovering animals which equal not a peppercorn. Watts.

7. Human being.

The moral is the case of every soul of us. L'Estr.

SOUND. adj. [rumb, Sax.]

1. Healthy; hearty; not morbid; not diseased; not hurt.

I am fall'n out with my more headier will,
 To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
 For the sound man. Shakesp. King Lear.

He hath a heart as sound as a bell, and his tongue is the clapper; for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks. Shakesp.

He hath receiv'd him safe and sound. Luke, xv. 27.

We can preserve

Unhurt our winds, and understanding sound. Milt.
 The king visits all around,
 Comforts the sick, congratulates the sound;
 Honours the princely chiefs. Dryden.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
 The fatal present to the flames design'd,
 Or to the deep. Dryden.

When a word, which originally signifies any particular object, is attributed to several other objects, on account of some evident reference or relation to the original idea, this is peculiarly called an analogical word; so a sound or healthy pulse, a sound digestion, sound sleep, are all so called, with reference to a sound and healthy constitution; but if you speak of sound doctrine, or sound speech, this is by way of resemblance to health, and the words are metaphorical. Futts's Logick.

2. Right; not erroneous; orthodox.

Whom although to know be life, and joy to make mention of his name; yet our soundest knowledge is to know that we know him not as indeed he is, neither can know him; and our safest eloquence concerning him is silence. Hooker.

Let my heart be sound in thy statutes. Psalm cxix. 80.

Sound, and yet not trivial, catechetic institution. Felton.

The rules are sound and useful, and may serve your devotion. Wake.

And find 'em ripe for a revolt.
Addison's Cato.
To SOUND. v. n. To try with the sound-ing-line.

The shipmen deemed that they drew near to some country, and sounded, and found it near twenty fathoms.
Beyond this we have no more a positive distinct notion of infinite space than a mariner has of the depth of the sea, where having let down a large portion of his sounding line, he reaches no bottom.
Locke

SOUND. n. s. [sepia, Lat.] The cuttle-fish.
Ainsworth.

SOUND. n. s. [son Fr. sonus, Lat.]
1. Any thing audible; a noise; that which is perceived by the ear.

Heaps of huge words uphoarded hideously
With horrid sound, though having little sense,
And thereby wanting due intelligence,
Have marr'd the face of goodly poesy,
And made a monster of their fantasy.
Spenser.
Come, sisters, cheer we up his sprights,
And shew the best of our delights;
I'll charm the air to give a sound,
While you perform your antick round.

Dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, and it maketh a sound: so a long pole struck upon gravel, in the bottom of the water, maketh a sound.
Bacon's Natural History.

The warlike sound of trumpets loud,
Whene'er he spoke, his voice was heard around,
Loud as a trumpet with a silver sound.
That which is conveyed into the brain by the ear is called sound; though, till it affect the perceptive part, it be nothing but motion.
Locke.

2. Mere empty noise opposed to meaning.

He contented himself with doubtful and general terms, which might make no ill sound in men's ears.
Let us consider this proposition as to its meaning; for it is the sense not sound that must be the principle.
O lavish land! for sound at such expence?
But then, she saves it in her hills for sense.
Locke. Young.

To SOUND. v. n.

1. To make a noise; to emit a noise.
Trumpet once more to sound at general doom.
Milton.

That with one blast through the whole house
Does hoond,
And first taught speaking-trumpets how to sound.
Dryden.

2. To exhibit by sound, or likeness of sound.
Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires.
Pope.

Why do you start, and seem to fear
Things that do sound so fair?
They being told there was small hope of ease
To be expected to their evils from hence,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty.
B. Jonson's Catil.

3. To be conveyed in sound.
From you sounded out the word of the Lord.
1 Thess. i. 8.

As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership.
Shakesp.

2. Truth; rectitude; incorrupt state.
In the end, very few excepted, all became subject to the sway of time: other odds there was none amongst them, saving only that some fell sooner away, and some later, from the soundness of belief.
Lesly is misled in his politics; but he hath given proof of his soundness in religion.
Swift.

As the health and strength, or weakness of our bodies, is very much owing to their methods of treating us when we were young; so the soundness or folly of our minds are not less owing to those first tempers and ways of thinking, which we eagerly received from the love, tenderness, authority, and constant conversation of our mothers.
Law.

3. Strength; solidity.
This presupposed, it may stand then very well with strength and soundness of reason, even thus to answer.
Hooker.

SOUP. n. s. [soupe, Fr.] Strong decoction of flesh for the table.

S O U

Spongy morells in strong ragouts are found,
And in the soup the slimy snail is drown'd.
Gay's Triv.

Let the cook daul the hack of the footman's new livery; or, when he is going up with a dish of soup, let her follow him softly with a ladle-full.
Swift.

SOUR. adj. [sur, surus, Sax. sur, Welsh.]

1. Acid; austere; pungent on the palate with astringency, as vinegar, or unripe fruit.

All sour things, as vinegar, provoke appetite.
Their drink is sour.
But let the bounds of licences be fix'd,
Not things of disagreeing natures mix'd,
Not sweet with sour, nor birds with serpents join'd.
Both ways deceitful is the wine of pow'r;
When new 'tis heady, and when old 'tis sour.
Bacon. Hosea, iv. 18. Dryden. Harte.

2. Harsh of temper; crabbed; peevish; morose; severe.
He was a scholar,
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not.

Sullen and sour, with discontented mien
Jocasta frown'd.
The lord treasurer often looked on me with a sour countenance.
Tatler. Pope. Swift.

SOUR. n. s. [from the adjective.] Acid substance.
A thousand sours to temper with one sweet,
To make it seem more dear and dainty.
Spenser.

To SOUR. v. a.
1. To make acid.
His angelick nature had none of that carnal leaven which ferments the souring of ours.
Thus kneaded up with milk, the new made man
His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
Till knowledge misapplied, misunderstood,
And pride of empire, sour'd his balmy blood.
Decay of Piety. Dryd.

One passion, with a different turn,
Makes wit inflame or anger burn:
So the sun's heat, with different pow'rs,
Ripens the grape, the liquor sours.
Swift.

2. To be harsh, or seem unkindly.
Tufts of grass sour land.
3. To make uneasy; to make less pleasing.
Hail, great king!
To sour your happiness, I must report
The queen is dead.
He brought envy, malice, and ambition, into Paradise, which soured to him the sweetness of the place.
Mortimer's Husbandry. Shakesp. Cymbelinc. Dryden.

4. To make discontented.
Not my own disgrace
Hath ever made me sour my patient cheek,
Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign's face.
Three crabbed months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand.
In me, as yet, ambition had no part;
Pride had not sour'd, nor wrath debas'd, my heart.
Shak. Harte.

To SOUR. v. n.
1. To become acid.
Asses milk, when it sours in the stomach, and when it turned sour, will purge strongly.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

SO'URNESS. n. s. [from sour.]

1. Acidity; austereness of taste.

Sourness consisteth in some grossness of the body; and incorporation doth make the mixture of the body more equal, which induceth a milder taste. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

I th' spring, like youth, it yields an acid taste;
But summer doth, like age, the sourness waste. Den.

He knew

For fruit the grafted pear-tree to dispose,
And tame to plumbs the sourness of the sloes.

Dryden's Virgil.

Of acid or sour one has a notion from taste, sourness being one of those simple ideas which one cannot describe. Arbutnot.

Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end? Pope.

2. Asperity; harshness of temper.

Pelagius carp'd at the curious neatness of men's apparel in those days, and, through the sourness of his disposition, spoke somewhat too hardly thereof. Hooker.

He was never thought to be of that superstitious sourness, which some men pretend to in religion.

King Charles.

Her religion is equally free from the weakness of superstition and the sourness of enthusiasm: it is not of an uncomfortable melancholy nature.

Addison's Freeholder.

Take care that no sourness and moroseness minge with our serious frame of mind. Nelson.

SO'URSOP. n. s. [guanubanus, Lat.] Cus-

But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart. Pope.

2. To throw into water. A ludicrous sense.

They soused me into the Thames with as little remorse as they drown blind puppies. Shakesp.

Who those were that ran away,
And yet gave out th' had won the day;
Although the rabble sous'd them for 't
O'er head and ears in mud and dirt. Butler.

They soused me over head and ears in water when a boy, so that I am now one of the most case-hardened of the Ironsides. Addis. Guardian.

To SOUSE. v. n. [Of this word I know not the original: it must come from sous, or dessous down, Fr.] To fall as a bird on its prey.

Thos on some silver swan, or timorous hare,
Jove's bird comes sousing down from upper air;
Her crooked talons truss the fearful prey,
Then out of sight she soars. Dryden's Æneid.

Jove's bird will souse upon the tim'rous hare,
And tender kids with his sharp talons tear.

Dryd. jun.

To SOUSE. v. a. To strike with sudden violence, as a bird strikes his prey.

sun-set.

Phenice is an haven of Crete, and lieth toward the southwest. Acts, xxvii. 12.

The planting of trees warm upon a wall against the south or southeast sun, doth hasten their coming on and ripening; and the southeast is found to be better than the southwest, though the southwest be the hotter coast. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

SOUVENANCE, n. s. [French.] Remembrance; memory. A French word which, with many more, is now happily disused.

If thou wilt renounce thy miscreance,
Life will I grant thee for thy valiance,
And all thy wrongs will wipe out of my souvenance.

Gave wondrous great countenance to the knight,
That of his way he had no souvenance,
Nor care of vow'd revenge.

SOW, n. s. [ʒʊn, Sax. soeg, souwe, Dut.]

1. A female pig; the female of a boar.

Boars have great fangs, sows much less.

A sow beneath an oak shall lie along,
All white herself, and white her thirty young.

For which they scorn and hate them worse
Than dogs and cats do sow gelders.

The sow gelder's horn has something musical in it, but this is seldom heard.

2. Perhaps from sow might come sowen, swen, swine; ʒpina, Sax.

And wast thou fair
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw?

3. An oblong mass of lead.

SOWBREAD, n. s. [cyclamen, Lat.] A plant.

To SOW, v. n. [saiaw, Goth. ʒapan, Sax. sayen, Dut.] To scatter seed in order to a harvest.

The one belongeth unto them that seek, the other unto them that have found happiness: they that pray do but yet sow, they that give thanks declare they have reaped.

They that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

He that soweth to his flesh, shall reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall reap life everlasting.

Sow to yourselves in righteousness, and reap in mercy.

To SOW, v. a. part. pass. sown.

1. To scatter in the ground, in order to growth; to propagate by seed.

Like was not to be found,
Save in that soil where all good things did grow,
And freely sprung out of the fruitful ground
As incorrupted nature did them sow.

From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.

I sow my law in you, and it shall bring fruit in you.

Many plants which grow in the hotter countries, being set in the colder, will, being sown of seeds late in the spring, come up, and abide most part of the summer.

The fruitful soil, and when to sow the corn,
I sing, Mecenas.

The proud mother views her precious brood,
And happier branches, which she never sow'd.

2. To spread; to propagate.

Forwardness is in his heart: he deviseth mischief continually, he smeweth discord.

To sow a jangling noise of words unknown.

Since then they stand secur'd by being join'd,

'Twere worthy a king's head to sow division,
And seeds of jealousy, to loose those bonds.

Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers.

3. To impregnate or stock with seed.

He shall give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground withal.

SO'WTHISTLE, n. s. [sonchius, Lat.] A weed.

Southistles though coney's eat, yet sheep and cattle will not touch; the milk of which, rubbed on warts, weareth them away, which sheweth it is corrosive.

SPAAD, n. s. [stella terræ, Lat.] A kind of mineral.

English tale, of which the coarser sort is called plaister; the finer, spaad, earth-flax, or salamander's hair.

SPACE, n. s. [spatium, Lat.]

1. Room; local extension.

Space is the relation of distance between any two bodies or points.

Oh undistinguished space of woman's wit!

This which yields or fills all space.

Pure space is capable neither of resistance nor motion.

Space and motion can never be actually infinite: they have a power only and a capacity of being increased without end: so that no space can be assigned so vast, but still a larger may be imagined; no motion so swift or languid, but a greater velocity or slowness may still be conceived.

2. Any quantity of place.

I would not be the villain that thou think'st

For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,

And the rich east to boot.

There was but two ways to escape; the one through the woods, about ten miles space to Walpo.

In such a great ruin, where the fragments are great and hard, it is not possible they should be so adjusted in their fall, but that they would lie hollow, and numerous unfilled spaces would be intercepted amongst them.

Measuring first with careful eyes

The space his spear could reach, aloud he cries.

3. Quantity of time.

There is a competent time allowed every man; and, as it is certain death is the conclusion of it, 'tis possible some space before death.

Nine times the space that measures day and night

To mortal men, he, with his horrid crew

Lay vanquish'd, rolling in the fiery gulph,

Confounded, though immortal.

In a lever the motion can be continued only for so short a space, as may be answerable to that little distance betwixt the fulcimum and the weight.

God may defer his judgments for a time, and give a people a longer space of repentance; he may stay till the iniquities of a nation be full; but sooner or later they have reason to expect his vengeance.

The lives of great men cannot be writ with any tolerable degree of elegance or exactness, within a short space after their decease.

4. A small time; a while.

Sith for me ye fight, to me this grace

Both yield, to stay your deadly strife a space.

Compassion quell'd

His best of man, and gave him up to tears

A space, till firmer thoughts restrain'd excess.

SPACIOUS, adj. [spacicus, Fr. spatiosus, Lat.] Wide; extensive; roomy; not narrow.

The former buildings, which were but mean, contented them not: spacious and ample churches they erected throughout every city.

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty;

And yet seem cold.

Merab with spacious beauty fills the sight,

But too much awe elastics'd the bold delight.

Like an English gen'ral will I die,

And all the ocean make my spacious grave:

Women and cowards on the land may lie:

The sea 's a tomb that 's proper for the brave.

SPACIOUSLY, adv. [from spacious.] Extensively.

SPACIOUSNESS, n. s. [from spacious.] Roominess; wide extension.

SPA'DDLE, n. s. [diminutive of spade.] A little spade.

Others destroy moles with a spaddle, waiting in the mornings and evenings for them.

SPADE, n. s. [ʒpad, Sax. spade, Island. and Dut.]

1. The instrument of digging.

Take the air of the earth new turned up, by digging with the spade, or standing by him that diggeth.

Many learned men affirm, that some isthmes have been eat through by the sea, and others cut by the spade.

His next advance was to the soldier's trade,

Where, if he did not nimble ply the spade,

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack

His knotty cudgel on his tougher back.

Here nature never difference made

Between the sceptre and the spade.

2. A deer three years old.

3. A suit of cards.

SPA'DEBONE, n. s. [named from the form.] The shoulder-blade.

By th' shoulder of a ram from off the right side

par'd,

Which usually they boil, the spade-bone being hard.

SPADICEOUS, adj. [spadivcus, Lat.]

Of those five Scalliger beheld, though one was spadivcus, or of a light red, and two inclining to red, yet was there not any of this complexion among them.

SPADILLE, n. s. [spadille, or espadille, Fr.] The ace of spades at ombre.

SPAGYRICK, adj. [spagyricus, Lat.] A word coined by Paracelsus from spaher, a searcher, Teuton.] Chymical.

SPA'GYRIST, n. s. A chymist.

This change is so unexampled, that though among the more curious spagurists it be very well known, yet many naturalists cannot easily believe it. Boyle.

SPAKE. The old preterite of speak.

So spake th' archangel Michael, then paus'd
Milton.

SPALL. n. s. [espaule, Fr.] Shoulder. Out of use.

Their mighty strokes their habergions dismay'd,
And naked made each other's manly spalles. Fairf.

SPALT or Spelt. n. s. A white, scaly, shining stone, frequently used to promote the fusion of metals. Bailey.

SPAN. n. s. [span, spanne, Sax. spannu, Ital. span, Dut. Perhaps originally the expansion of the hand.]

1. The space from the end of the thumb to the end of the little finger extended; nine inches.

A foot, the length of it, is a sixth part of the fathom; a span, one-eighth; a palm, or hand's breadth, one twenty-fourth; a thumb's breadth, or inch, one seventy-second; and a forefinger's breadth, one ninety-sixth. Holder on Time.

Will you with counters sum
The vast proportion of his infinite,
And buckle in a waste most fathomless
With spans and inches so diminutive
As fears and reasons? Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.
Sum how brief the life of man
Runs bis erring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sum of age. Shakesp.

When I removed the one, although but at the distance of a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillar. Brown.

2. Any short duration.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual leisure a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
The virgin's part, the mother, and the wife,
So well she acted in this span of life. Waller.
Then conscience, unrestrain'd by fears, began
To stretch her limits, and extend the span. Dryden.
Life's but a span, I'll every inch enjoy. Farquh.

To SPAN. v. a.

1. To measure by the hand extended.

Of on the well-known spot I fix my eyes,
And span the distance that between us lies. Tickel.

2. To measure.

My surveyor is false; the o'er-great cardinal
Hath shew'd him gold; my life is spann'd already. Shakesp.

This soul doth span the world, and hang content
From either pole unto the centre;
Where in each room of the well-furnished tent
He lies warm, and without adventure. Herbert.
Harry, whose tuneful and well-measured song
First taught our English musick how to span
Words with just note and accent, not to scan
With Midas' ears, counting short and long. Milt.

SPAN. The preterite of spin. See SPIN.

Together furiously they ran,
That to the ground came horse and man;
The blood out of their helmets span,
So sharp were their encounters. Drydt. Nymphiad.

SPAN-COUNTER. } n. s. [from span, count-
SPAN-FARTHING. } ter, and farthing.] A play at which money is thrown within a span or mark.

Tell the king, that for his father's sake, Henry
V. in whose time boys went to spancounter for French crowns, I am content he shall reign. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Boys shall not play
At spancounter or blowpoint, but shall pay Toll to some courtier. Donne.
His chief solace is to steal down, and play at spanfartthing with the page. Swift.

To SPANE. v. a. To wean a child.

SPANG. n. s. [spange, Dut.] This word seems to have signified a cluster of shining bodies.

The colours that shew best by candlelight are white, carnation, and a kind of sea-water green; and oouches or spangs, as they are of no great cost, so they are of most glory. Bacon.

SPANGLE. n. s. [spange, Germ. a buckle, a locket; whence oher spangen earrings.

1. A small plate or boss of shining metal.

2. Any thing sparkling and shining.

As hoary frost with spangles doth attire
The mossy branches of an oak half dead. F. Qu.
Thus in a starry night found children cry
For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.

The twinkling spangles, the ornaments of the upper world, lose their beauty and magnificence; vulgar spectators see them but as a confused huddle of petty illuminants. Glanville.

That now the dew with spangles deck'd the ground.
A sweeter spot of earth was never found. Dryden.

To SPANGLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To besprinkle with spangles or shining bodies.

It has wherewithal: in him
Sparing would show a worse sin than ill doctrine.
Shakesp.

Those wants, which they rather feared than felt, would well enough be overcome by sparing and patience. Knolles.

In these relations, although he be more sparing, his predecessors were very numerous.

Our 'abours late and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then, clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils. Otway.

God has not been so sparing to men to make them barely two-legged creatures, and left it to Aristotle to make them rational. Locke.

When they discover the passionate desire of fame in the ambitious man, they become sparing and saving in their commendations; they envy him the satisfaction of an applause. Addison.

Now a reservoir, to keep and spare;
The next a fountain spouting through his heir. Pope.

No statute in his favour says
How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
I who at sometimes spend, at others spare,
Divided between carelessness and care. Pope.

with so much zeal, were approached more sparingly. Atterbury.

5. Cautiously; tenderly.

Speech of touch towards others should be sparingly used; for discourse ought to be as a field, without coming home to any man. Bacon's Essays.

SPARK, n. s. [spracca, Sax. sparke, Dut.]

1. A small particle of fire, or kindled matter.

If any marvel how a thing, in itself so weak, could import any great danger, they must consider not so much how small the spark is that flieth up, as how apt things about it are to take fire.
Hooker.

I am about to weep; but thinking that
We are a queen, my drops of tears I'll turn
To sparks of fire. Shakesp.

I am not forgetful of the sparks which some men's distempers formerly studied to kindle in parliaments. King Charles.

In this deep quiet, from what source unknown
Those seeds of fire that fatal birth disclose;

And first few scatt'ring sparks about were blown,
Big with the flames that to our ruin rose. Dryden.

Oh, may some spark of your celestial fire
The last, the meanest, of your sons inspire! Pope.

2. Any thing shining.

We have, here and there, a little clear light, some sparks of bright knowledge. Locke.

all the gay feathers he could muster. L'Estrange.

SPARKLE, n. s. [from spark.]

1. A spark; a small particle of fire.

It, with repeated strokes
Of clashing flints, their hidden fires provokes;
Shoot flame succeeds; a bed of wither'd leaves
The dying sparkles in their fall receives:
Caught into life, in fiery fumes they rise.
And, fed with stronger food, invade the skies. Dry.

2. Any luminous particle.

To detract from the dignity thereof, were to injure even God himself, who, being that light which none can approach unto, hath sent out these lights whereof we are capable, even as so many sparkles resembling the bright fountain from which they rise. Hooker.

When reason's lamp, which, like the sun in sky,
Throughout man's little world her beams did spread,

Is now become a sparkle which doth lie
Under the ashes, half extinct and dead. Davies.

Ah! then thy once-loved Eloisa see!
It will be then no crime to gaze on me:
See from my cheek the transient roses die,
See the last sparkle languish in my eye. Pope

SPEAKING Trumpet. n. s. A stentorophonick instrument; a trumpet by which the voice may be propagated to a great distance.

That with one blast through the whole house does bound,
And first taught speaking trumpet how to sound. Dryden.

SPEAR. n. s. [ys-per, Welsh, ppere, Sax. spere, Dut. spare, old Fr. sparum, low Lat.]

1. A long weapon with a sharp point, used in thrusting or throwing; a lance.

Those brandishers of speares,
From many cities draws, are they that are our hinderers. Chapman.

The Egyptian like a bill himself did rear;
Like some tall tree upon it seem'd his spear. Cowley.
Nor wanted in his grasp
What seem'd both shield and spear. Milton.

The flying spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

The rous'd up lion, resolute and slow,
Advances full on the protended spear. Thomson.

2. A lance, generally with prongs, to kill fish.

The borderers watching, until they be past up into some narrow creek, below them cast a strong corded net athwart the stream, with which, and their loud shouting, they stop them from retiring, until the ebb have abandoned them to the hunters mercy, who, by an old custom, share them with such indifferency, as, if a woman with child be present, the babe in her womb is gratified with a portion: a point also observed by the spear hunters in taking of salmon. Carew.

To SPEAR. v. a. [from the noun.] To kill or pierce with a spear.

To SPEAR. v. n. To shoot or sprout. This is commonly written spire.

Let them not lie lest they should spear, and the air dry and spoil the shoot. Mortimer's Husbandry.

SPEARGRASS. n. s. [spear and grass.]

Long stiff grass.
Tickle our noses with speargrass to make them bleed; and then beslobber our garments with it. Shakesp. Henry IV.

SPEARMAN. n. s. [spear and man.] One who uses a lance in fight.

The spearman's arm, by thee, great God, directed,
Sends forth a certain wound. Prior.

SPEARMINT. n. s. [mentha Romana, Lat.]

A plant; a species of mint.

SPEARWORT. n. s. [ranunculus flammus, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

SPECIAL. adj. [special, Fr. specialis, Lat.]

1. Noting a sort or species.
A special idea is called by the schools a species. Watts.

2. Particular; peculiar.

Most commonly with a certain special grace of her own, wagging her lips, and grinning instead of smiling. Sidney.

The several books of scripture having had each some several occasion and particular purpose which caused them to be written, the contents thereof are according to the exigence of that special end whereunto they are intended. Hooker.

Of all men alive,
I never yet beheld that special face,
Which I could fancy more than any other. Shak.
Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give. Shak.

The fourth commandment, in respect of any one definite and special day of every week, was not simply and perpetually moral. White.

Our Saviour is represented every where in scripture as the special patron of the poor and the afflicted, and as laying their interest to heart more nearly than those of any other of his members. Atterbury.

3. Appropriate; designed for a particular purpose.

O'Neal, upon his marriage with a daughter of Kildare, was made deizem by a special act of parliament. Davies.

Such things are evident by natural light, which men of a mature age, in the ordinary use of their faculties, with the common help of mutual society, may know and be sufficiently assured of without the help of any special revelation. Wilkins.

4. Extraordinary; uncommon.

That which necessity of some special time doth cause to be enjoined, bindeth no longer than during that time, but doth afterward become free. Hooker.

The other scheme takes special care to attribute all the work of conversion to grace. Hammond.

Though our charity should be universal, yet as it cannot be actually exercised but on particular times, so it should be chiefly on special opportunities. Spratt's Sermons.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakesp. Henry IV.

SPECIALLY. adv. [from special.]

1. Particularly, above others.

Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord. Deut.
A brother beloved, specially to me. Phil, xvi.

2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it specially. Hale.

He bore
A paunch of the same bulk before;
Which still he had a special care
To keep well cramm'd with thrifty fare. Hudibras.

5. Chief in excellence.

The king hath drawn
The special head of all the land together. Shakesp. Henry IV.

SPECIALLY. adv. [from special.]

1. Particularly, above others.

Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord. Deut.
A brother beloved, specially to me. Phil, xvi.

2. Not in a common way; peculiarly.

If there be matter of law that carries any difficulty, the jury may, to deliver themselves from an attain, find it specially. Hale.

SPECIALTY. } n. s. [specialité, Fr. from SPECIALITY. } special.] Particularity.

On these two general heads all other specialties are dependent. Hooker.

The packet is not come
Where that and other specialties are bound. Shakesp.

Specialty of rule hath been neglected. Shakesp.
When men were sure, that, in case they rested upon a bare contract without specialty, the other party might wage his law, they would not rest upon such contracts without reducing the debt into a specialty, which accorded many suits. Hale.

SPECIES. n. s. [species, Lat.]

1. A sort; a subdivision of a general term.
A special idea is called by the schools a species; it is one common nature that agrees to several singular individual beings: so horse is a special idea or species, as it agrees to Bucephalus, Trot, and Snowball. Watts.

2. Class of nature; single order of beings.

He intendeth the care of species or common natures, but letteth loose the guard of individuals or single existencies. Brown.
The Phenix Pindar is a whole species alone. Cowley.

For we are animals no less,
Although of different species. Hudibras.

Thou nam'st a race which must proceed from me,
Yet my whole species in myself I see. Dryden.

A mind of superior or meaner capacities than human, would constitute a different species, though united to a human body in the same laws of connexion: and a mind of human capacities would make another species, if united to a different body in different laws of connexion. Bentley's Serm.

3. Appearance to the senses; any visible or sensible representation.

An apparent diversity between the species visible and audible is, that the visible doth not mingle in the medium, but the audible doth. Bacon.

It is a most certain rule, how much any body hath of colour, so much hath it of opacity, and by so much the more unfit it is to transmit the species. Ray on the Creation.

The species of the letters illuminated with blue, were nearer to the lens than those illuminated with deep red, by about three inches, or three and a quarter; but the species of the letters illuminated with indigo and violet appeared so confused and indistinct, that I could not read them. Newton's Op.

4. Representation to the mind.

Wit in the poet, or wit-writing, is no other than the faculty of the imagination in the writer, which searches over all the memory for the species or ideas of those things which it designs to represent. Dryden.

5. Show; visible exhibition. Not in use; and perhaps, in the following quotation, misprinted for spectacles.

Shews and species serve best with the people. Bacon

6. Circulating money.

As there was in the splendour of the Roman empire, a less quantity of current species in Europe than there is now, Rome possessed a much greater proportion of the circulating species of its time than any European city. Arbutnot.

7. Simples that have place in a compound medicine.

SPECIFICALLY. } adj. [specificque, Fr. spec- SPECIFICK. } cies and facio, Lat.]

1. That which makes a thing of the species of which it is.

That thou to truth the perfect way may'st know,
To thee all her specifick forms I'll show. Denham.

The understanding, as to the exercise of this power, is subject to the command of the will, though, as to the specifick nature of its acts, it is determined by the object. South.

By whose direction is the nutriment so regularly distributed into the respective parts, and how are they kept to their specifick uniformities? Glanville.

These principles I consider not as occult qualities, supposed to result from the specifick forms of things, but as general laws of nature, by which the things themselves are formed; their truth appearing to us by phenomena, though their causes be not yet discovered. Newton's Opticks.

As all things were formed according to these specifick platforms, so their truth must be measured from their conformity to them. Norris.

Specifick gravity is the appropriate and peculiar gravity or weight which any species of natural bodies have, and by which they are plainly distinguishable from all other bodies of different kinds. Quincy.

The specifick qualities of plants reside in their native spirit, oil, and essential salt: for the water, fixt salt, and earth, appear to be the same in all plants. Arbutnot.

Specifick difference is that primary attribute which distinguishes each species from one another, while they stand ranked under the same general nature or genus. Though wine differs from other liquids, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit, yet this is but a general or generic difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry: the specifick difference of wine therefore is its pressure from the grape; as cyder is pressed from apples, and perry from pears. Watts.

2. [In medicine.] Appropriated to the cure of some particular distemper. It is usually applied to the arcana, or medicines that work by occult qualities.

The operation of purging medicines has been referred to a hidden propriety, a specifick virtue, and the like shifts of ignorance. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

If she would drink a good decoction of sarsa, with the usual specificks, she might enjoy a good health. Wiseman.

SPECIFICALLY. adv. [from specifick.] In such a manner as to constitute a species; according to the nature of the species.

His faith must be not only living, but lively too; it must be put into a posture by a particular exercise of those several virtues that are specifically requisite to a due performance of this duty. South's Sermons.

Human reason doth not only gradually, but specifically, differ from the fantastick reason of brutes, which have no conceit of truth, as an aggregate of divers simple conceits, nor of any other universal. Grew.

He must allow that bodies were endowed with the same affections then as ever since; and that, if an axe head be supposed to float upon water, which is specifically lighter, it had been supernatural. Bentley.

To SPECIFY. v. a. [from species and facio, Lat.] To mark by notation of distinguishing particularities.

Man, by the instituted law of his creation, and the common influence of the divine goodness, is enabled to act as a reasonable creature, without any particular, specifying, concurrent, new imperate act of the divine special providence. Hale.

SPECIFICATION. n. s. [from specifick; specification, Fr.]

1. Distinct notation; determination by a peculiar mark.

This specification or limitation of the question, hinders the disputers from wandering away from the precise point of enquiry. Watts.

2. Particular mention.

The constitution here speaks generally, without the specification of any place. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To SPECIFY. v. a. [from species; specificer, Fr.] To mention; to show by some particular marks of distinction.

As the change of such laws as have been specified is necessary, so the evidence that they are such must be great. Hooker.

St. Peter doth not specify what these waters were. Burnet.

He has there given us an exact geography of Greece, where the countries, and the uses of their soils, are specified. Pope.

SPECIMEN. n. s. [specimen, Lat.] A sample; a part of any thing exhibited, that the rest may be known.

Several persons have exhibited specimens of this art before multitudes of beholders. Addison's Spec.

SPECIOUS. adj. [specieus, Fr. speciosus, Lat.]

1. Showy; pleasing to the view.

The rest, far greater part,
Will deem in outward rites and specious forms Religion satisfied. Milton.

She next I took to wife,
O that I never had! fond wish too late!
Was in the vale of Sorec, Dalila,
That specious monster, my accomplish'd snare. Milt.

2. Plausible; superficially, not solidly right; striking at first view.

Bad men boast
Their specious deeds on earth which glory excites,
Or close ambition varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

Somewhat of specious they must have to recommend themselves to princes; for folly will not easily go down in its natural form. Dryden.

Temptation is of greater danger, because it is covered with the specious names of good nature and good manners. Rogers.

This is the only specious objection which our Romish adversaries urge against the doctrine of this church in the point of celibacy. Aterbury.

Thus in the glebe the deadly nightshade grows,
Flaunts in the sun and mingles with the rose,
The specious bane the prowling urchin spies;
Touch, touch it not!—He gorges it, and dies. White's Poems.

SPECIOUSLY. adv. [from specious.] With fair appearance.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity; especially to that personated devotion under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised, and put off more speciously. Hammond.

SPECK. n. s. [specc, Sax.] A small discoloration; a spot.

Every speck does not blind a man. Gov. of the To.

Then are they happy, when
No speck is left of their habitual stains;
But the pure æther of the soul remains. Dry. Æn.

To SPECK. v. a. To spot; to stain in drops.

Flow'r
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold. Milton.

SPECKLE. n. s. [from speck.] Small speck; little spot.

To SPECKLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with small spots.

So dreadfully he towards him did pass,
Forelifting up aloft his speckled breast,
And often bounding on the bruised grass,
As for great joy of his new comen guest. Fairy Qu.

Speckled vanity
Will sicken soon and die,

And leprous sin will melt from earthly mould. Milton.

Saw'st thou not late a speckled serpent rear
His gilded spires to climb on yon fair tree?
Before this happy minute I was he. Dryden.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forked tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

The tortoise here and elephant unite,
Transform'd to combs, the speckled and the white.

SPECKT or Speight. n. s. A woodpecker. Ainsworth.

SPECTACLE. n. s. [spectacle, Fr. spectaculum, Lat.]

1. A show; a gazing stock; any thing exhibited to the view as eminently remarkable.

In open place produc'd they me,
To be a publick spectacle to all. Shak. Henry VI.
We are made a spectacle unto angels and men. 1 Cor. iv. 9.

2. Any thing perceived by the sight.

Forth riding underneath the castle wall,
A dunghill of dead carcasses he spy'd,
The dreadful spectacle of that sad house of pride. Fairy Queen.

When pronouncing sentence, seem not glad;
Such spectacles, though they are just, are sad. Denham.

3. [In the plural.] Glasses to assist the sight.

The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on nose, and pouch on side. Shak.
We have helps for sight above spectacles and glasses. Bacon.

Shakespeare was naturally learned: he needed not the spectacles of books to read nature; he looked inwards and found her there. Druden on Dramatick Poesy.

The first spectacle-maker did not think that he was leading the way to the discovery of new planets. Grew.

This is the reason of the decay of sight in old men, and shews why their sight is mended by spectacles. Newton.

This day then let us not be told,
That you are sick, and I grown old;
Nor think on your approaching ills,
And talk of spectacles and pills. Sveift.

SPECTACLED. adj. [from the noun.] Furnished with spectacles.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared sights
Are spectacled to see him. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

SPECTATION. n. s. [spectatio, Lat.] Regard; respect.

This simple spectation of the lungs is differenced from that which concomitates a pleurisy. Harvey.

SPECTATOR. n. s. [spectateur, Fr. spectator, Lat.] A looker-on; a beholder.

More
Than history can pattern, though devis'd
And play'd to take spectators. Shakesp.

If it proves a good repast to the spectators, the dish pays the shot. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

An old gentleman mounting on horseback, got up heavily; but desired the spectators that they would count fourscore and eight before they judged him. Dryden.

He mourns his former vigour lost so far
To make him now spectator of a war. Dryden.

What pleasure hath the owner more than the spectator? Sead.

SPECTATORSHIP. n. s. [from spectator.] Act of beholding.

Thou stand'st i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering. Shakesp.

SPECTRE. n. s. [spectre, Fr. spectrum, Lat.] Apparition; appearance of persons dead.

The ghosts of traitors from the bridge descend,
With bold fanatic spectres to rejoice. Dryden.
The very poetical use of the word, for a spectre doth imply an exact resemblance to some real being it represents. Stillingfleet.

These are nothing but spectres the understanding raises to itself, to flatter its own laziness. Locke.
SPECTRUM. n. s. [Lat.] An image; a visible form.

This prism had some veins running along within the glass, from the one end to the other, which scattered some of the sun's light irregularly, but had no sensible effect in increasing the length of the coloured spectrum. Newton's Opt.

SPECULAR. adj. [specularis, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a mirror or looking-glass.

It were but madness now t' impart
The skill of specular stone. Donne.
Quicksilver may, by the fire alone, in glass vessels, be turned into a red body; and from this red body may be obtained a mercury, bright and specular as before. Boyle.

A speculum of metal without glass, made some years since for optical uses, and very well wrought, produced none of those rings; and thence I understood that these rings arise not from the specu-lar surface alone, but depend upon the two surfaces of the plate of glass, whereof the speculum was made, and upon the thickness of the glass between them. Newton.

2. Assisting sight. Improper.

The hidden way
Of nature wouldst thou know, how first she frames
All things in miniature, thy specular orb
Apply to well-dissected kernels; lo!
In each observe the slender threads
Of first-beginning trees. Philips.

To SPECULATE. v. n. [speculer, Fr. speculor, Lat.] To meditate; to contemplate; to take a view of any thing with the mind.

Consider the quantity, and not speculate upon an intrinsic relation. Digby on Bodies.
As news-writers record facts which afford great matter of speculation, their readers speculate accordingly, and by their variety of conjectures, become consummate statesmen. Addison.

To SPECULATE. v. a. To consider attentively; to look through with the mind.

Man was not meant to gape, or look upward, but to have his thoughts sublime; and not only behold, but speculate their nature with the eye of the understanding. Brown.

SPECULATION. n. s. [speculation, Fr.
from speculate.]

1. Examination by the eye; view.
2. Examiner; spy. This word is found no where else, and probably is here mis-printed for speculator.

They who have, as who have not, whom their great stars
Throne and set high? servants
Which are to France the spies and speculations, Intelligent of our state. Shakesp. King Lear.

3. Mental view; intellectual examination;
contemplation.

In all these things being fully persuaded, that what they did, it was obedience to the will of God, and that all men should do the like; there remained, after speculation, practice whereunto the whole world might be framed. Hooker.

Thenceforth to speculations high or deep
I turn'd my thoughts; and with capacious mind
Consider'd all things visible. Milton.
News-writers afford matter of speculation. Addison.

4. A train of thoughts formed by meditation.

From him Socrates derived the principles of morality, and most part of his natural speculations.
Temple.

5. Mental scheme not reduced to practice.

This terrestrial globe, which before was only found in speculation, has since been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators Temple.

This is a consideration not to be neglected, of thought an indifferent matter of mere speculation.
Lesley.

6. Power of sight. Not in use.

Thy bones are marrowless; thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes
Thou star'st with. Shakesp.

SPECULATIVE. adj. [speculatif, Fr. from speculate.]

1. Given to speculation; contemplative.
If all other uses were utterly taken away, yet the mind of man being by nature speculative, and delighted with contemplation in itself, they were to be known even for mere knowledge sake.
Hooker.

It encourages speculative persons, who have no turn of mind to increase their fortunes. Addison.

2. Theoretical; notional; ideal; not practical.

Some take it for a speculative platform, that reason and nature would that the best should govern, but nowise to create a right. Bacon's Holy War.

These are not speculative flights or imaginary notions, but are plain and undeniable laws, that are founded in the nature of rational beings. Law.

SPECULATIVELY. adv. [from speculative.]

1. Contemplatively; with meditation.
2. Ideally; notionally; theoretically; not practically.

SPECULATOR. n. s. [from speculate.]

He is dextrous in puzzling others, if they be not through-paced speculators in those great theories.
More.

2. [Speculator, Fr.] An observer; a contemplator.

Although lapidaries and questuary enquirers affirm it, yet the writers of minerals, and natural speculators, conceive the stones which bear this name to be a mineral conviction. Brown.

3. A spy; a watcher.

All the boats had one speculator, to give notice
when the fish approached. Braune on the Odyssey.

SPECULATORY. adj. [from speculate.]

Exercising speculation.
SPECULUM. n. s. [Lat.] A mirror;
a looking-glass; that in which representations are formed by reflection.

A rough and coloured object may serve for a speculum, to reflect the artificial rainbow. Boyle on C.

SPED. The pret. and part. pass. of speed.

His horse full of windgalls, sped with the spavins, and rayed with the fellows. Shakesp.
Barbarossa, sped of that he desired, staid not long at Constantinople, but shaped his course towards Italy. Knolles.

With all his harness soon the god was sped;
His flying hat, his wings upon his heels. Dryden.

SPEECH. n. s. [from speak.]

1. The power of articulate utterance; the power of expressing thoughts by vocal words.

There is none comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith man alone is endowed, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.

Though our ideas are first acquired by various sensations and reflections, yet we convey them to each other by the means of certain sounds, or written marks, which we call words; and a great part of our knowledge is both obtained and communicated by these means, which are called speech.
Watts.

2. Language; words considered as expressing thoughts.

In speech be eight parts. Accidence.

The acts of God to human cars
Cannot without process of speech be told. Milton.

3. Particular language, as distinct from others.

There is neither speech nor language, but their voices are heard among them. Ps. Common Prayer

4. Any thing spoken.
A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches as I were a fool?
Shakesp. King Lear

5. Talk; mention.
The duke did of me demand
What was the speech among the Londoners, Concerning the French journey. Shakesp.
Speech of a man's self ought to be seldom.
Bacon's Essays.

6. Oration; harangue.
The constant design of these orators, in all their speeches, was to drive some one particular point.
Swift.

7. Declaration of thoughts.
1, with leave of speech implor'd, reply'd. Milton.
SPEECHLESS. adj. [from speech.]

1. Deprived of the power of speaking;
made mute or dumb.
He fell down, foam'd at mouth, and was speechless. Shakesp.
The great god Pan hath broken his pipes, and Apollo's priests are become speechless. Raleigh.
A single vision transports them: it finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate when it departs. Dryden.
Speechless with wonder, and half dead with fear.
Addison.

2. Mute; dumb.
I kneel'd before him;
'Twas very faintly he said, rise; I dismiss'd me
Thus, with his speechless hand. Shakesp. Coriolanus.
From her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages. Shakesp.
He that never hears a word spoken, it is no wonder he remains speechless; as any one must do, who from an infant should be bred up among mutes. Holder on Speech.

To SPEED. v. n. pret. and part. pass.
sped and speeded. [spoden, Dut.]

1. To make haste; to move with celerity.
So well they sped, that they be come at length
Unto the place whereas the Paynim lay
Devoid of outward sense and native strength,
Cover'd with charmed cloud from view of day.
Fairy Queen.

Do you think me a swallow, an arrow, or a bullet? Have I, in my poor and cold motion, the expedition of thought? I speeded hither with the very extremest inch of possibility. Shakesp.
If pray'st
Could alter high decrees, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard.
Milton.

See where Idwall speeds! a trusty soldier.
A. Philips.

2. [rpedian, to grow rich, Sax.] To have good success.
Timon is shrunk, indeed;
And he, that's once denied, will hardly speed. Shak.
Now if this suit lay in Bianca's pow'r,
How quickly should you speed. Shakesp.
When first this tempter cross'd the gulph from hell,
I told you then he should prevail, and speed
In his bad errand. Milton.

3. To succeed well or ill.
Make me not sighted like the basilisk:
I've look'd on thousands, who have sped the better
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Shakesp. W. Tale.
Maccieus shewed them what an offence it was rashly to depart out of the city, which might be unto them dangerous, although they should speed never so well. Knolles.
These were violators of the first temple; and those that profaned and abused the second, sped no better. South.

4. To have any condition, good or bad.
Ships heretofore in seas like fishes sped,
The mightiest still upon the smallest fed. Waller.

To SPEED. v. a.

1. To dispatch in haste; to send away quickly.

The tyrant's self, a thing unus'd, began
To feel his heart relent with meer compassion;
But, not dispos'd to ruth or mercy then,
He sped him thence home to his habitation. Fairf.

2. To hasten; to put into quick motion.

She,
Hearing so much, will speed her foot again,
Led hither by pure love.
Shakesp. All's well that ends well.
Satan, tow'rd the coast of earth beneath,
Down from th' ecliptick sped with hop'd success,
Throws his steep flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.

The priest replied no more,
But sped his steps along the hoarse-rousounding shore. Dryden.

3. To furnish in haste.

4. To dispatch; to destroy; to kill; to mischief; to ruin.

With a speeding thrust his heart he found;
The lukewarm blood came rushing thro' the wound. Dryden.
A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped;
If foes they write, if friends they read, me dead. Pope.

5. To execute; to dispatch.

Judicial acts are all those writings and matters which relate to judicial proceedings, and are sped in open court at the instance of one or both of the parties. Ayliffe's Pargemon.

6. To assist; to help forward.

Lucina
Reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes. Dryden.
Propitious Neptune steer'd their course by night
With rising gales, that sped their happy flight. Dry.
Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

7. To make prosperous; to make to succeed.

If any bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither hid him God speed. St. P.
He was chosen, though he stood low upon the roll, by a very unusual concurrence of providential events, happened to be sped. Fell.

SPEED. n. s. [spod, Dut.]

1. Quickness; celerity.
Earth receives
As tribute, such a sunless journey brought
Of incorporeal speed, her warmth and light;
Speed! to describe whose swiftness number fails. Milton.

We observe the horse's patient service at the plough, his speed upon the highway, his docibleness, and desire of glory. Morse.

2. Haste; hurry; dispatch.

When they strain to their utmost speed, there is still the wonted distance between them and their aims: all their eager pursuits bring them no acquets. Decay of Piety.

3. The course or pace of a horse.

He that rides at high speed, and with a pistol kills a sparrow flying. Shakesp. Henry IV.

4. Success; event of any action or incident.

The prince your son, with meer conceit and fear
Of the queen's speed, is gone. Shakesp.
O Lord, I pray thee send me good speed. Gen. xxiv. 12.

SPE'EDILY. adv. [from speedy.] With haste; quickly.

Post speedily to your husband,
Shew him this letter. Shakesp. King Lear.
Send speedily to Bertran; charge him strictly Not to proceed. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

SPE'EDINESS. n. s. [from speedy.] The quality of being speedy.

SPE'EDWELL. n. s. [veronica, Lat.] Fluellin. A plant.

In a scarcity in Silesia a rumour was spread of its raining millet seed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit. Derham's Physico-Theology.

SPE'EDY. adj. [from speed.] Quick; swift; nimble; quick of dispatch.

How near 's the other army?
—Near, and on speedy foot: the main descry Stands on the hourly thought. Shakesp. K. Lear.
Back with speediest sail
Zophiel, of cherubim the swiftest wing,
Came flying. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let it be enough what thou hast done,
When spotted deaths ran arm'd through ev'ry street,
With poison'd darts, which not the good could shun,
The speedy could outfly, or valiant meet. Dryden.

SPEIGHT. n. s. [picus martius, Lat.] A bird.

SPELL. n. s. [spel, Sax. a word.]

1. A charm consisting of some words of occult power. Thus Horace uses words:

Sunt verba & voces quibus hunc lenire dolorcm Possis.
Start not; her actions shall be holy:
You hear my spell is lawful: do not shun her,
Until you see her die again; for then
You kill her double. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
Some have delivered the polity of spirits, that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations, letters, characters, notes, and dashes. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Thou durst not thus disparage glorious arms,
Had not spells
And black enchantments, some magician's art,
Arm'd thee or charm'd thee strong. Milt. Agonist.
Begin, begin; the mystic spell prepare. Milton
Yourself you so excel,
When you vouchsafe to breathe my thought,
That, like a spirit, with this spell
Of my own teaching I am caught. Waller.

Mild Lucina
Then reach'd her midwife hands to speed the throes,
And spoke the pow'ful spells that babes to birth disclose. Dryden

2. A turn of work; a vicissitude of labour.

A low word.
Their toil is so extreme as they cannot endure it above four hours in a day, but are succeeded by spells: the residue of the time they wear out at coytes and kayles. Carew.

To SPELL. v. a. pret. and part. pass. spelled or spelt. [spellen, Dut.]

1. To write with the proper letters.
In the criticism of spelling, the word satire ought to be with i, and not with y; and if this be so, then it is false spelled throughout. Dryden's Juo. Ded.

2. To read by naming letters singly.
I never yet saw man,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featur'd,
But she would spell him backward; if fair fac'd,
She'd swear the gentleman should be her sister. Shakesp.

3. To charm.
I have you fast:
Unchain your spirits now with spelling charms,
And try if they can gain your liberty. Shak. H. VI.
This, gather'd in the planetary hour,
With noxious weeds, and spell'd with words of pow'r,
Dire stepdames in the magic bowl infuse. Dryd.

To SPELL. v. n.

1. To form words of letters.
What small knowledge was, in them did dwell;
And he a god who could but read or spell. Dryden.
By pasting on the vowels and consonants on the sides of four dice, he has made this a play for his children, whereby his eldest son in coats has played himself into spelling. Locke.
The Latin being written of the same character with the mother tongue, by the assistance of a spelling book it is legible. Spectator.
Another cause which hath maimed our language, is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Suiff.

2. To read.
If I read aught in heaven,
Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrrows and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee. Milton's Par. Lost.

When gowns, not arms, repell'd
The fierce Epirote, and the African bold,
Whether to settle peace, or to unfold
The drift of hollow states, hard to be spell'd. Milt.
And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heaven doth shew,
And every herb that sips the dew. Milton.

3. To read unskilfully.
As to his understanding, they bring him in void of all notion; a rude unwritten blank, sent into the world only to read and spell out a God in the works of creation. South.

To SPELT. v. n. To split; to break. A bad word.
Feed geese with oats, spelted beans, barley meal, or ground malt mixed with beer. Mortimer's Hush.

SPELTER. n. s. A kind of semi-metal.
Metals in fusion do not flame, for want of a copious fume; except spelter, which fumes copiously, and thereby flames. Newton.

To SPEND. v. a. [spendan, Sax. spender, Ital.]

1. To consume; to exhaust; to waste.
Our canons malice vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds. Shakesp.
I will very gladly spend and be spent for you. 2 Cor. xii. 15.
There is oil in the dwelling of the wise, but a foolish man spendeth it up. Prov. xxi. 20.
We must exasperate
The almighty Victor to spend all his rage. Milton.
Money is brought into England by nothing but spending here less of foreign commodities than what we carry to market can pay for. Locke.

2. To bestow, as expence; to expend, as cost.
Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? Isaiah, iv. 2

3. To bestow for any purpose: often with upon.
When we can intreat an hour to serve,
Would spend it in some words upon that business,
If you would grant the same. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Eleutherius, perceiving that he was unwilling to spend any more time upon the debate, thought not fit to make any mention to him of the proposed opposition. Boyle.

4. To effuse.
Coward dogs
Most spend their mouths, when what they seem to threaten Runs far before them. Shak. Henry V.

5. To squander; to lavish.
The whole of our reflections terminate in this, what course we are to take to pass our time; some to get, and others to spend, their estates. Hoke.

6. To pass; to suffer to pass away.
In those pastoral pastimes a great many days were spent, to follow their flying predecessors. Sidnev.
They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave. Job, xxi. 13.
He spends his life with his wife, and remembereth neither father nor mother. 1 Esdras, iv. 21
Say, for you saw us, ye immortal lights!
How oft unwearied have we spent the nights,
Till the Lædæan stars, so fain'd for love,
When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force.

is a foolish opinion that we ought to spell exactly as we speak. Suiff.

2. To read.
If I read aught in heaven,
Or heav'n write aught of fate, by what the stars,
Voluminous or single characters,
In their conjunction met, give me to spell,
Sorrrows and labours, opposition, hate,
Attend thee. Milton's Par. Lost.

Till the Lædæan stars, so fain'd for love,
When he was of riper years, for his farther accomplishment, he spent a considerable part of his time in travelling. Pope.

7. To waste; to wear out; to exhaust of force.

The waves ascended and descended, till their violence being spent by degrees, they settled at last Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

They bend their bows, they whirl their slings around;
Heaps of spent arrows fall, and strew the ground.
Dryden.

The winds are rais'd, the storm blows high;
Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury, and direct it right,
Till it has spent itself on Cato's head.
Addison's Cat.

8. To fatigue; to harass.
Nothing but only the hope of spoil did relieve them, having scarce clothes to cover their nakedness, and their bodies spent with long labour and thirst.
Knolles's Hist. of the Turks.

Or come your shipping in your ports to lay,
Spent and disabled in so long a way? Dryd. En.
Our walls are thinly mann'd, our best men slain;
The rest, an heartless number, spent with watching,
And harass'd out with duty. Dryden.

Some spent with toil, some with despair oppress'd,
Leap'd headlong from the heights; the flames consume the rest.
Dryden's Encid.

Thou oft hast seen me
Wrestling with vice and faction; now thou see'st me
Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success.
Addison's Cato.

To SPEND. v. n.

1. To make expence.
Henceforth your tongue must spend at lesser rate,
Than in its flames to wrap a nation's fate. Dryden.
He spends as a person who knows that he must come to a reckoning. South.

2. To prove in the use.
Butter spent as if it came from the richer soil.
Temple.

3. To be lost or wasted.
The sound spendeth, and is dissipated in the open air; but in such concaves it is conserved and contracted.
Bacon.
On mountains, it may be, many dews fall, that spend before they come to the valleys. Bacon.

4. To be employed to any use.
There have been cups and an image of Jupiter made of wild vines; for the vines that they use for wine are so often cut, that their sap spendeth into the grapes. Bacon.

SPENDER. n. s. [from spend.]

1. One who spends.
Let not your recreations be lavish spenders of your time; but healthful, short, and apt to refresh you. Taylor.

2. A prodigal; a lavisher.
Bishop Morton told the commissioners, who were to levy the benevolence, if they met with any that were sparing, to tell them that they must needs have, because they laid up; and if they were spenders, they must needs have, because it was seen in their port and manner of living. Bac. Hen. VII.

SPENDTHRIFT. n. s. [spend and thrift.]
A prodigal; a lavisher.

Bitter cold weather starved both the bird and the spendthrift. L'Estrange.
Some fawning usurer does feed
With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need.
Dryden.

Most men, like spendthrift heirs, judge a little in hand better than a great deal to come. Locke.
The son, bred in sloth, becomes a spendthrift, a profligate, and goes out of the world a beggar. Swift.

SPERABLE. adj. [sperabilis, Lat.] Such as may be hoped. Not in use.

We may cast it away, if it be found but a bladder, and discharge it of so much as is vain and not sperable. Bacon.

SPEERM. n. s. [sperme, Fr. sperma, Lat.] Seed; that by which the species is continued.

Some creatures bring forth many young ones at a burthen, and some but one: this may be caused by the quantity of sperm required, or by the partitions of the womb which may sever the sperm. Bac.

There is required to the preparation of the sperm of animals a great apparatus of vessels, many secretions, concoctions, reflections, and circulations. Ray.

SPERMACEÏ. n. s. [Lat.] Corruptedly pronounced parmasitty.

A particular sort of whale affords the oil whence this is made; and that is very improperly called sperm, because it is only the oil which comes from the head of which it can be made. It is changed from what it is naturally, the oil itself being very brown and rank. The peculiar property of it is, to shoot into flakes, not much unlike the crystallization of salts; but in this state 'tis yellow, and has a certain rankness, from which it is freed by squeezing it between warm metalline plates: at length it becomes perfectly pure, inodorous, flaky, smooth, white, and in some measure transparent. Quincy.

SPERMA'TICAL. } adj. [spermatique, Fr.]
SPERMA'TICK. } from sperm.]

1. Seminal; consisting of seed.
The primordials of the world are not mechanical, but spermatical or vital. More's Dialogues.
Metals and sundry meteors rude shap'es have no need of any particular principle of life, or spermatical form, distinct from the rest or motion of the particles of the matter. More.

2. Belonging to the sperm; containing sperm.
The moisture of the body, which did before irrigate the parts, is drawn down to the spermatical vessels. Bacon.
Two different sexes must concur to their generation: there is in both a great apparatus of spermatick vessels, wherein the more spirituous part of the blood is by many digestions and circulations exalted into sperm. Ray on the Creation.

To SPERMATIZE. v. n. [from sperm.] To yield seed.

Aristotle affirming that women do not spermatize, and confer a receptacle, rather than essential principles of generation, deductively includes both sexes in mankind. Brown.

SPERMATOCEÏE. n. s. [σπέρμα and κελύ.]
A rupture caused by the contraction of the seminal vessels, and the semen falling into the scrotum. Bailey.

SPERMO'LOGIST. n. s. [σπερμολόγος.] One who gathers or treats of seeds. Dict.

To SPERSE. v. a. [sperus, Lat.] To disperse; to scatter. A word not now in use.

The wrathful wind,
Which blows cold storms, burst out of Scythian mew,
That spers those clouds, and in so short a thought
This dreadful shape was vanished to nought. Spem.
He making speedy way through spersed air,
And through the world of waters wide and deep,
To Morpheus' house doth hastily repair. F. Queen.

To SPET. v. a. [Spet, in Scotland, is a superabundance of water: as, that tide or fresh was a high spet.] To bring or pour abundantly.

Mysterious dame,
That ne'er est call'd but when the dragon womb
Of Stygian darkness spets her thickest gloom,
And makes one blot of all the air,
Stop thy cloudy ebon chair. Milton.

To SPEW. v. a. [rpepan, Sax speuwen, Dut.]

1. To vomit; to eject from the stomach.
A swordfish small him from the rest did sunder,
That in his throat him pricking softly under,
His wide abyss, him forced forth to spew,
That all the sea did roar like heaven's thunder,
And all the waves were stain'd with filthy hue. Spenser.

2. To eject; to cast forth.
When earth with slime and mud is cover'd o'er,
Or hollow places spew their wat'ry store. Dry. Geor.

S P H

When yellow sands are sifted from below,
The glittering billows give a golden show;
And when the fouler bottom spews the black,
The Stygian dye the tainted waters take. Dryden.

5. To eject with loathing.
Keep my statutes, and commit not any of these abominations, that the land spew not you out. Lev. xviii. 28.
Contentious suits ought to be spewed out, as the surfeit of courts. Bacon's Essays.

To SPEW. v. n. To vomit; to ease the stomach.

He could have haul'd in
The drunkards, and the noises of the inn:
But better 'twas that they should sleep or spew,
Than in the scene to offend or him or you. Ben Jon.

SPEWY. adj. [from spew.] Wet; foggy. A provincial word.

The lower vallies in wet winters are so spewy, that they know not how to feed them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SPHA'CELATE. v. a. [from sphacelus, medical Lat.] To affect with a gangrene.

The long retention of matter sphacelates the brain. Sharp.

To SPHA'CELATE. v. n. To mortify; to suffer the gangrene.

The skin, by the great distention, having been rendered very thin, will, if not taken away, sphacelate, and the rest degenerate into a cancerous ulcer. Sharp's Surg.

SPHA'CELUS. n. s. [σφάκελος; sphacelus, Fr.] A gangrene; a mortification.

It is the ground of inflammation, gangrene, sphacelus. Wiseman.

SPHERE. n. s. [sphere, Fr. sphaera, Lat.]

1. A globe; an orbicular body; a body of which the center is at the same distance from every point of the circumference.

First the sun, a mighty sphere he fram'd. Milton.

2. Any globe of the mundane system.
What if within the moon's fair shining sphere,
What if in every other star unseen,
Of other worlds he happily should bear. Fairy Qu.
And then mortal ears
Had heard the musick of the spheres. Druden.

3. A globe representing the earth or sky.
Two figures on the sides emboss'd appear;
Conon, and what's his name who made the sphere,
And shew'd the seasons of the sliding year. Dryd.

4. Orb; circuit of motion.
Half unsung, but narrower bound
Within the visible diurnal sphere. Milton.

5. [From the sphere of activity ascribed to the power emanating from bodies.] Province; compass of knowledge or action; employment.

To be call'd into a huge sphere, and not to be seen to move in't. Shak. Ant. and Cleopatra.

Of enemies he could not but contract good store, while moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre. King Charles.

Every man, versed in any particular business, finds fault with these authors, so far as they treat of matters within his sphere. Addison's Frechelder.

Ye know the spheres and various tasks assign'd
By laws eternal to th' ætherial kind. Pope.

The hermit's pray'r permitted, not approv'd,
Soon in an higher sphere Eulogius mov'd. Harte.

To SPHERE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To place in a sphere.
The glorious planet Sol,
In noble eminence enthron'd and spheer'd
Amidst the rest, whose med'cinable eye
Corrects the ill aspects of planets evil. Shakeep.

2. To form into roundness.
Light from her native east
To journey through the airy gloom began,
Spher'd in a radiant cloud; for yet the sun
Was not. Milton's Par. Lost

SPHERICAL. } adj. [spherique, Fr. from SPHERICK. } sphere.]

1. Round; orbicular; globular.

What descent of waters could there be in a spherical and round body, wherein there is nor high nor low? Raleigh.

Though sounds spread round, so that there is an orb or spherical area of the sound, yet they go farthest in the forelines from the first local impulsion of the air. Bacon.

By discernment of the moisture drawn up in vapours, we must know the reason of the spherical figures of the drops. Glanville.

A fluid mass necessarily falls into a spherical surface. Keil.

Where the central nodule was globular, the inner surface of the first crust would be spherick; and if the crust was in all parts of the same thickness, that whole crust would be spherical. Woodward.

2. Planetary; relating to the orbs of the planets.

We make guilty of our disasters the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains by spherical predominance. Shakesp.

SPHERICALLY. adv. [from spherical.]
In form of a sphere.

SPHERICALNESS. } n. s. [from sphere.]
SPHERICITY. } Roundness; rotundity.

Such bodies receive their figure and limits from such lets as hinder them from attaining to that sphericalness they aim at. Digby.

Water consists of small, smooth, spherical particles: their smoothness makes 'em slip easily upon one another; the sphericity keeps 'em from touching one another in more points than one. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SPHEROID. n. s. [σφαιρα and ιδω; spheroid, Fr.] A body oblong or oblate, approaching to the form of a sphere.

They are not solid particles, by the necessity they are under to change their figures into oblong spheroids, in the capillary vessels. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

SPHEROIDICAL. adj. [from spheroid.]
Having the form of a spheroid.

If these corpuscles be spheroidical, or oval, their shortest diameters must not be much greater than those of light. Cheyne.

SPHERULE. n. s. [spharula, Lat.] A little globe.

Mercury is a collection of exceeding small, vastly heavy spherules. Cheyne's Philosophical Principles.

SPHINX. n. s. [σφιγξ]

The sphinx was a famous monster in Egypt, that remained by conjoined Nilus, having the face of a virgin, and the body of a lion. Peach. on Drawing.

SPIAL. n. s. [espial, Fr.] A spy; a scout; a watcher. Obsolete.

His ears be as spials, alarm to eie. Tuss. Husb.
He privy spials plac'd in all his way,
To weet what course he takes, and how he fares. Spenser.

For he by faithful spial was assur'd
That Egypt's king was forward on his way. Fairfax.

Their trust towards them hath rather been as to good spials and good whisperers, than good magistrates and officers. Bacon.

SPICE. n. s. [espices, Fr.]

1. A vegetable production, fragrant to the smell and pungent to the palate; an aromattick substance used in sauces.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream. Shakesp.
Is not manhood, learning, gentleness, and virtue, the spice and salt that seasons a man?
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

Garlick, the northern spice, is in mighty request among the Indians. Temple.

High sauces and rich spices are fetched from the Indies. Baker.

2. A small quantity, as of spice to the thing seasoned.

Think what they have done,
And then run stark mad; for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were but spices of it. Shakesp.
It containeth singular relations, not without some spice or sprinkling of all learning.

So in the wicked there 's no vice,
Of which the saints have not a spice. Hudibras

TO SPICE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To season with spice; to mix with aromattick bodies.

His mother was a vot'ress of my order,
And in the spiced Indian air by night
Full often she hath gossip'd by my side. Shakesp.

With a festival
She'll first receive thee; but will spice thy bread
With flowrie poysons. Chapman.

These hymns may work on future wits, and so
May great-grandchildren of thy praises grow;
And so, though not revive, embalm and spice
The world, which else would putrify with vice. Donne.

What though some have a fraught
Of cloves and nutmegs, and in cinnamon sail,
If thou hast wherewithal to spice a draught,
When griefs prevail? Herbert.

SPICER. n. s. [from spice.] One who deals in spice.

Names have been derived from occupations, as Salter and Spicer. Camden.

SPICERY. n. s. [espiceries, Fr. from spice.]
1. The commodity of spices.

Their camels were laden with spicery, and balm and myrrh. Raleigh's History of the World.

She in whose body
The western treasure, eastern spicery,
Europe and Africk, and the unknown rest,
Were easily found. Donne.

2. A repository of spices.

The spicery, the cellar and its furniture, are too well known to be here insisted upon. Add. on Italy.

SPICK and SPAN. [This word I should not have expected to have found authorized by a polite writer. Span-new is used by Chaucer, and is supposed to come from spannan to stretch, Sax. expandere, Lat. whence span. Span-new is therefore originally used of cloth new extended or dressed at the clothiers, and spick and span is newly extended on the spikes or tenters: it is however a low word.]
Quite new; now first used.

While the honour thou hast got
Is spick and span new, piping bot,
Strike her up bravely. Butler.

They would have these reduced to nothing, and then others created spick and span new out of nothing. burnet.

I keep no antiquated stuff;
But spick and span I have enough. Swift.

SPICKNEL. n. s. [meum, Lat.] The herb maldmoy or bearwort. Dict.

SPICY. adj. [from spice.]

1. Producing spice; abounding with aromatticks.

Off at sea north-east winds blow
Sabæan odour, from the spicy shore
Of Araby the blest; with such delay
Well pleas'd they slack their course; and many a league, Cheer'd with the grateful smell, old ocean smiles. Milton.

For them the Idumæan balm did sweat,
And in hot Ceylon spicy forests grew. Dryden.

2. Aromattick; having the qualities of spice.

The regimen in this disease ought to be of spicy and cephalick vegetables, to dispel the viscosity. Arbuthnot on Diet.

Under southern skies exalt their sails,
Led by new stars, and borne by spicy gales! Pope.

SPICO'SITY. n. s. [spica, Lat.] The quality of being spiked like ears of corn; fullness of ears. Dict.

SPIDER. n. s. [Skinner thinks this word softened from spinder, or spinner, from spiu. Junius, with his usual felicity, dreams that it comes from σπίζω to extend; for the spider extends his web. Perhaps it comes from spieden, Dut. speyden, Dan. to spy, to lie upon the catch. Dop, donar, Sax. is a beetle, or properly an humble bee, or stingless bee. May not spider be spy dor, the insect that watches the dor?] The animal that spins a web for flies.

More direful hap betide that hated wretch,
Than I can wish to adders, spiders, toads. Shakesp.
The spider's web to watch we'll stand,

And, when it takes the bee,
We'll help out of the tyrant's hand
The innocent to free. Droyton.

Insidious, restless, watchful spider,
Fear no officious damsel's broom;
Extend thy artful fabrick wider,

And spread thy banners round my room:
While I thy curious fabrick stare at,
And think on hapless poet's fate,

Like thee confin'd to noisome garret,
And rudely battish'd rooms of state. Littleton.
The spider's touch how exquisitely true!

Feels at each thread, and lives along the line. Pope.

SPIDERCATCHER. n. s. [from spider and catcher; picus murarius, Lat.] A bird.

SPIDERWORT. n. s. [phalangium, Lat.] A plant with a lily-flower, composed of six petals. Miller.

The gleaners,
Spike after spike, their sparring harvest pick. Thoms.

2. A long nail of iron or wood; a long rod of iron sharpened: so called from its similitude to an ear.

For the body of the ships, no nation equals England for the oaken timber; and we need not horrow of any other iron for spikes or nails to fasten them. Bacon.

The head of your medal would be seen to more advantage, if it were placed on a spike of the tower. Dryden.

He wears on his head the corona radiata, another type of his divinity: the spikes that shoot out represent the rays of the sun. Addison.

SPIKE. n. s. The name of a plant. This is a smaller species of lavender.

The oil of spike is much used by our artificers in their varnishes; but it is generally adulterated. Hill's Materia Medica.

Be satisfied, dear God, with our true blood, Which, as thou know'st, unjustly must be spilt. Shakesp.

Friend or brother,

He forfeits his own blood that spills another. Shakesp. Timon.

Themselves exact their cruelty,

And I constrained am this blood to spill. Daniel's Civil War.

They having spill'd much blood, and done much waste,

Subduing nations; and achiev'd thereby Fame in the world, high titles, and rich prey; Shall change their course to pleasure, ease, and sloth. Milton.

Medea must not draw her murth'ring knife, And spill her children's blood upon the stage. Roscommon.

Orbellan did disgrace

With treach'rous deeds our mighty mother's race; And to revenge his blood, so justly spilt, What is it less than to partake his guilt? Dryden.

Nor the Centaur's tale

Be here repeated; how with lust and wine Inflam'd, they fought and spilt their drunken souls At feasting hour. Philips.

2. To destroy; to mischief.

Thus is our thought with pain of thistle tilled, Thus be our noblest parts dried up with sorrow; Thus is our mind with too much minding spilled. Sidney.

Why are you so fierce and cruel?

Is it because your eyes have power to kill? Then know that mercy is the Mighty's jewel, And greater glory think to save than spill. Spenser.

Thou all-shaking thunder,

Crack nature's mould, all germins spill at once That make ingrateful man. Shakesp. King Lear.

Be not angry with these fires;

For then their threats will kill me: Nor look too kind on my desires;

For then my hopes will spill me. Ben Jonson.

All bodies are with other bodies fill'd; But she receives both heav'n and earth together;

Nor are their forms by rash encounters spill'd;

For there they stand, and neither toucheth either. Davies.

For this Alcides learn'd to spin; His cluh laid down, and lion's skin. Prior.

2. [Spingare, Ital.] To stream out in a thread or small current.

Together furiously they ran, That to the ground came horse and man; The blood out of their helmets span, So sharp were their encounters. Drayt. Nymph.

3. To move round as a spindle.

Whether the sun, predominant in heav'n, Rise on the earth, or earth rise on the sun; He from the east his flaming road begin,

Or she from west her silent course advance With inoffensive pace, that spinning sleeps

On her soft axle, while she paces ev'n And bears thee soft with the smooth air along, Solicit not thy thoughts. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As when a shipwright stands his workmen o'er, Who ply the wimble some huge beam to bore;

Urg'd on all hands, it nimbly spins about, The grain deep piercing till it scoops it out. Pope.

SP'INACH. } n. s. [spinachia, Lat.] A SP'INAGE. } plant.

It hath an apetalous flower, consisting of many stamina included in the flower-cup, which are produced in spikes upon the male plants which are barren; but the embryos are produced from the wings of the leaves on the female plants, which afterward become roundish or angular seeds, which in some sorts have thorns adhering to them. Miller.

SP'INAL. adj. [spina, Lat.] Belonging to the backbone.

All spinal, or such as have no ribs, but only a back bone, are somewhat analogons thereto.

Those solids are entirely nervous, and proceed from the brain and spinal marrow, which by their bulk appear sufficient to furnish all the stamina or threads of the solid parts. Arbuthnot.

Descending careless from his couch, the fall Lux'd his joint neck, and spinal marrow bruis'd. Phillips.

SP'INDLE. n. s. [spinbl, spindel, Sax.]

1. The pin by which the thread is formed, and on which it is conglomerated.

Bodies fibrous by moisture it incorporate with other thread, especially if there be a little wreathing; as appeareth by the twisting of thread, and twirling about of spindles. Bacon.

Sing to those that hold the vital sheers, And turn the adamantine spindle round On which the fate of gods and men is wound. Milton.

Upon a true repentance, God is not so fatally tied to the spindle of absolute reprobation, as not to keep his promise, and seal merciful pardons. Jasper Maine.

So Pallas from the dusty field withdrew, And, when imperial Jove appear'd in view, Resum'd her female arts, the spindle and the clew Forgot the sceptre she so well had sway'd, And, with that mildness she had rul'd, obey'd. Stepney.

Do thou take me for a Roman matron, Bred tamely to the spindle and the loom? A. Phillips.

2. A long slender stalk.

The spindles must be tied up, and, as they grow in height, rods set by them, lest by their bending they should break. Mortimer.

3. Any thing slender. In contempt.

Repose yourself, if those spindle legs of yours will carry you to the next chair. Dryd. Span. Fryar.

The marriage of one of our heresses with an eminent courtier gave us spindle shanks and cramps. Tatler.

To SP'INDLE. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into a long small stalk.

Another ill accident in drought is the spindling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the stalk. Bacon.

When the flowers begin to spindle, all but one or two of the biggest, at each root, should be nipped off. Mortimer.

His head
Crested aloft, and caruncle his eyes;
With burnish'd neck of verdant gold, erect Amidst his circling spires, that on the grass Floated redundant. Milton.

A dragon's fiery form belied the god,
Sublime on radiant spires he rode. Dryden.

Air seems to consist of spires contorted into small spheres, through the interstices of which the particles of light may freely pass; it is light, the solid substance of the spires being very small in proportion to the spaces they take up. Chevre.

2. Any thing growing up taper; a round pyramid, so called, perhaps, because a line drawn round and round in less and less circles would be a spire; a steeple.

With glist'ring spires and pinnacles adorn'd. Milton.

He cannot make one spire of grass more or less than he hath made. Hale's Origin of Mankind.
These pointed spires that wound the ambient sky,
In glorious change! shall in destruction lie. Prior.

3. The top or uppermost point.

'Twere no less than a traducement to silence, that
Which to the spire and top of praises vouch'd,
Would seem but modest. Shakesp.

TO SPIRE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shoot up pyramidally.

It is not so apt to spire up as the other sorts, being more inclined to branch into arms. Mortimer.

2. [Spiro, Lat.] To breathe. Not in use. Spenser.

SPIRIT. n. s. [spiritus, Lat.]

1. Breath; wind.

All purges have in them a raw spirit or wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach. Bacon.

All bodies have spirits and pneumatical parts within them; but the main difference between animate and inanimate are, that the spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and branched in veins as blood is; and the spirits have also certain seats where the principal do reside and whereunto the rest do resort: but the spirits in things inanimate are shut in and cut off by the tangible parts, as air in snow. Bacon's Natural History.

The balmy spirit of the western breeze. Anon.

2. [Esprit, Fr.] An immaterial substance; an intellectual being.

Spirit is a substance wherein thinking, knowing, doubting, and a power of moving, do subsist. Locke.

She is a spirit; yet not like air or wind,
Nor like the spirits about the heart or brain;
Nor like those spirits which alchemists do find,
When they in ev'ry thing seek gold in vain:
For she all natures under heav'n doth pass,
Being like those spirits which God's bright face do see;

Or like himself, whose image once she was,
Though now, alas! she scarce his shadow be.
For of all forms she holds the first degree,
That are to gross material bodies knit;

Yet she herself is bodyless and free,
And though confin'd is almost infinite. Davies.

I shall depend upon your constant friendship; like the trust we have in benevolent spirits, who, though we never see or hear them, we think are constantly praying for us. Pope.

If we seclude space, there will remain in the world but matter and mind, or body and spirit. Watts's Logick.

You are all of you pure spirits. I don't mean that you have not bodies that want meat and drink, and sleep and cloathing; but that all that deserve to be called you, is nothing else but spirit. Luc.

S P I

3. The soul of man.

The spirit shall return unto God that gave it. Bib.
Look, who comes here? a grave unto a soul,
Holding th' eternal spirit 'gainst her will
In the vile prison of afflicted death. Shak. K. John.

Every thing that you call yours, besides this spirit, is but like your cloathing: sometimes that is only to be used for a while, and then to end, and die, and wear away. Luc.

4. An apparition.

They were terrified, and supposed that they had seen a spirit. Luke, xxiv. 37.

Perhaps you might see the image, and not the glass; the former appearing like a spirit in the air. Bacon.

Whilst young, preserve his tender mind from all impressions of spirits and goblins in the dark. Locke.

5. Temper; habitual disposition of mind. He sits

Upon their tongues a various spirit, to raise Quite out their native language. Milton.

That peculiar law of Christianity, which forbids revenge, no man can think grievous, who considers the restless torment of a malicious and revengeful spirit. Tillotson.

Nor once disturb their heav'nly spirits
With Scapin's cheats, or Cæsar's merits. Prior.

Let them consider how far they are from that spirit which prays for its most unjust enemies, if they have not kindness enough to pray for those, by whose labours and service they live in ease themselves. Luc.

He is the devout man, who lives no longer on his own will, or the way and spirit of the world, but to the sole will of God. Luc.

6. Ardour; courage; elevation; vehemence of mind.

'Tis well blown, lads;
This morning, like the spirit of a youth
That means to be of note, begins betimes. Shakesp.

The spirit stirring drum, th' ear piercing fife. Shakesp.

The king's party, called the cavaliers, began to recover their spirits. Swift.

7. Genius; vigour of mind.

More ample spirit than hitherto was wont
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestors
Of my most dreaded sovereign I recount,
By which all earthly princes she doth far surmount. Fairy Queen.

To a mighty work thou goest, O king,
That equal spirits and equal pow'rs shall bring. Daniel.

A wild Tartar, when he spies
A man that's handsome, valiant, wise,
If he can kill him, thinks t'inherit
His wit, his beauty, and his spirit. Putler.

The noblest spirit or genius cannot deserve enough of mankind, to pretend to the esteem of heroick virtue. Temple.

8. Turn of mind; power of mind moral or intellectual.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear. Shakesp.

I ask but half thy mighty spirit for me. Cowley.

A perfect judge will read each work of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ;
Survey the whole, nor seek slight fault to find,
Where nature moves, and rapture warms, the mind. Pope.

9. Intellectual powers distinct from the body.

These discourses made so deep impression upon the mind and spirit of the prince, whose nature was inclined to adventures, that he was transported with the thought of it. Clarendon.

In spirit perhaps he also saw Rich Mexico, the seat of Montezume. Milton.

10. Sentiment; perception.

You are too great to be by me gaisaid
Your spirit is too true, your fears too certain. Shakesp.

11. Eagerness; desire.

God has changed men's tempers with the times, and made a spirit of building succeed a spirit of pulling down. South.

12. Man of activity; man of life, fire, and enterprize.

The watry kingdom is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come. Shakesp.

13. Persons distinguished by qualities of the mind. A French word, happily growing obsolete.

Romish adverb-aries, from the rising up of some schismatical spirits amongst us, conclude that the main body of our church is schismatical, because some branches of members thereof were such. White.

Of pitying God did well-form'd spirits raise,
Fit for the toilsome business of their days,
To free the groaning nation, and to give
Peace first, and then the rules in peace to live.

Such spirits as he desired to please, such would
I chuse for my judges. Dryden.

14. That which gives vigour or cheerfulness to the mind; the purest part of the body, bordering, says Sydenham, on immateriality. In this meaning it is commonly written with the plural termination.

Though thou didst hut jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake. Shakesp. King John.

When I sit and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out Into my story. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

Alas! when all our lamps are burn'd,
Our bodies wasted, and our spirits spent,
When we have all the learned volumes turn'd,
Which yield men's wits both help and ornament;
What can we know, or what can we discern? Dav.
It was the time when gentle night began
T' indrench with sleep the busy spirits of man.

To sing thy praise, would heav'n my breath prolong,
Infusing spirits worthy such a song,
Not Thracian Orpheus should transcend my lays.

All men by experience find the necessity and aid of the spirits in the business of concoction.

By means of the curious inoculation of the auditory nerves, the organs of the spirits should be allayed. Derham.

In some fair body thus the secret soul
With spirits feeds, with vigour fills, the whole;
Each motion guides, and ev'ry nerve sustains,
Itself unseen, but in th' effects remains. Pope.

He is always forced to drink a hearty glass, to drive thoughts of business out of his head, and make his spirits drowsy enough for sleep. Law.

15. Characteristical likeness; essential qualities.

Italian pieces will appear best in a room where the windows are high, because they are commonly made to a descending light, which of all other doth set off men's faces in their truest spirit. Wotton.

16. Any thing eminently pure and refined.

Nor doth the eye itself,
That most pure spirit of sense, behold itself.

17. That which hath power or energy.

There is in wine a mighty spirit, that will not be congealed. South.

18. An inflammable liquor raised by distillation; as brandy, rum.

What the chymists call spirit, they apply the name to so many different things, that they seem to have no settled notion of the thing. In general, they give the name of spirit to any distilled volatile liquor. Boyle.

All spirits, by frequent use, destroy, and at last extinguish the natural heat of the stomach. Temple.
In distillations, what trickles down the sides of the receiver, if it will not mix with water, is oil;
if it will, it is spirit. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

19. It may be observed, that in the poets spirit was a monosyllable, and therefore was often written sprite, or, less properly, spright.

The charge thereof unto a courteous spright
Commanded was. Speuser.

And from the rocks leap down for shipwreck'd gold,
And seek the tempests which the others fly. Dryden.

4. To divide; to break into discord.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power splits their counsels, and sinites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse. South.

To SPLIT. v. n.

1. To burst in sunder; to crack; to suffer disruption.

A huge vessel of exceeding hard marble split
asunder by congealed water. Boyle.

What is 't to me,
Who never sail on her unfaithful sea,
If storms arise and clouds grow black,
If the mast split and threaten wrack? Dryden.

The road that to the lungs this store transmits,
Into unnumber'd narrow channels splits. Blackmore.

2. To burst with laughter.

Each had a gravity would make you split,
And shook his head at M—y as a wit. Pope.

3. To be broken against rocks.

After our ship did split,
When you, and the poor number sav'd with you,
Hung on our driving boat. Shakesp.

These are the rocks on which the sanguine tribe of lovers daily split, and on which the politician, the alchymist, and projector are cast away.

The seamen spied a rock, and the wind was so strong that we were driven directly upon it, and immediately split. Swift.

SPLITTER. n. s. [from split.] One who splits.

How should we rejoice, if, like Judas the first,
Those splitters of parsons in sunder should burst! Swift.

SPLUTTER. n. s. Bustle; tumult. A low word.

To SPOIL. v. a. [spolio, Lat. spolier, Fr.]

1. To seize by robbery; to take away by force.

Ye took joyfully the spoiling of your goods, knowing in yourselves that ye have in heaven an enduring substance. Hebrews.

This mount,
With all his verdure spoild, and trees adrift. Milton.

2. To plunder; to strip of goods: with of before the thing taken.

Yielding themselves upon the Turks faith, for the safeguard of their liberty and goods, they were most injuriously spoiled of all that they had.

Thou shalt not gain what I deny to yield,
Nor reap the harvest, though thou spoilst the field. Prior.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoild of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

3. To corrupt; to mar; to make useless.

[This is properly spill; ɣpillan, Sax.]
Beware lest any man spoil you, through philosophy and vain deceit. Col. ii. 8.

Spiritual pride spoils many graces. Taylor.
Women are not only spoiled by this education, but we spoil that part of the world which would otherwise furnish most instances of an eminent and exalted piety. Law.

To SPOIL. v. n.

1. To practise robbery or plunder.

England was infested with robbers and outlaws, which, lurking in woods, used to break forth to rob and spoil. Spenser.

They which hate us spoil for themselves. Psalms xlv. 14.

2. To grow useless; to be corrupted.

He that gathered a hundred bushels of acorns or apples, had thereby a property in them: he was only to look that he used them before they spoiled, else he robbed others. Locke.

SPOIL. n. s. [spolium, Lat.]

1. That which is taken by violence; that which is taken from an enemy; plunder;
pillage; booty.

The cry of Talbot serves me for a sword;
For I have loaden me with many spoils,
Using no other weapon but his name. Shakesp. Henry VI.

2. That which is gained by strength or effort.

But grant our hero's hopes long toil
And comprehensive genius crown,
Each science and each art his spoil,
Yet what reward, or what renown? Bentley.

3. That which is taken from another.

Gentle gales,
Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole Those balmy spoils. Milton.

4. The act of robbery; robbery; waste.

The man that hath not musick in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils. Shakesp.
Too late, alas! we find

The softness of thy sword, continued through thy soil,
To be the only cause of unrevolv'd spoils. Drayton.
Go and speed!

Havock, and spoil, and ruin are my gain. Milton.

5. Corruption; cause of corruption.

Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me. Shakesp.

6. The slough; the cast-off skin of a serpent.

Snakes, the rather for the casting of their spoil, live till they be old. Bacon.

SPOILER. n. s. [from spoil.]

1. A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Such ruin of her manners Rome
Doth suffer now, as she 's become Both her own *spoil*er and own prey. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

Providence, where it loves a nation, concerns itself to own and assert the interest of religion, by blasting the *spoil*ers of religious persons and places. South.

Came you then here, thus far, thro' waves, to conquer,

To waste, to plunder, out of mere compassion?
Is it humanity that prompts you on?
Happy for us, and happy for you *spoil*ers,
Had your humanity ne'er reach'd our world! A. Phillips.

2. One who mars or corrupts any thing.

SPOILFUL. adj. [spoil and full.] Wasteful; rapacious.

Having oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful Picts, and swarming Easterlings Long time in peace his realm established. Fairy Queen.

SPOKE. n. s. [ɣpaca, Sax. speiche, Germ.]

The bar of a wheel that passes from the nave to the felly.

All you gods,
In general synod take away her power;
Break all the spokes and felines of her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n. Shakesp.

No heir e'er drove so fine a coach:
The spokes, we are by Ovid told,
Were silver, and the axle gold. Swift.

SPOKE. The preterite of speak.

They spoke best in the glory of their conquest. Spratt.

SPOKEN. Participle passive of speak.

Wouldst thou be spoken for to the king?
2 Kings, iv. 13.

The original of these signs for communication is found in viva voce, in spoken language. Holder on Speech.

SPOKESMAN. n. s. [spoke and man.]

One who speaks for another.

'Tis you that have the reason.
—'to do what?
—'to be a spokesman from Madam Silvia. Shakesp.
He shall be thy spokesman unto the people. Exod. iv. 16.

To SPOLIATE. v. a. [spolio, Lat.] To rob; to plunder. Dict.

SPOLIATION. n. s. [spoliation, Fr. spoliation, Lat.] The act of robbery or privation.

An ecclesiastical benefice is sometimes void de jure & facto, and sometimes de facto, and not de jure; as when a man suffers a spoliation by his own act. Ayliffe's Parergon.

SPOONDEE. n. s. [spondée, Fr. spondeus, Lat.] A foot of two long syllables.

We see in the choice of the words the weight of the stone, and the striving to heave it up the mountain: Homer clogs the verse with spondees, and leaves the vowels open. Broomie.

S P O

SPONDYLE. n. s. [σπονδυλῶς; spondile, Fr. spondylus, Lat.] A vertebra; a joint of the spine.

It hath for the spine or back-bone a cartilaginous substance, without any spondyles, processes, or protuberances. Bacon.

SPONGE. n. s. [spongia, Lat.] A soft porous substance, supposed by some the nidus of animals. It is remarkable for sucking up water. It is too often written sponge. See SPUNGE.

Sponges are gathered from the sides of rocks, being as a large but tough moss. Bacon.
They opened and washed part of their sponges. Sandys.

Great officers are like sponges: they suck till they are full, and, when they come once to be squeezed, their very heart's blood comes away. L'Estrange.

To SPONGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To blot; to wipe away as with a sponge.

Except between the words of translation and the mind of Scripture itself there be contradiction, very little difference should not seem an intolerable blemish necessarily to be sponged out. Hooker.

To SPONGE. v. n. To suck in as a sponge; to gain by mean arts.

The ant lives upon her own, honestly gotten; whereas the fly is an intruder, and a common smell-feast, that sponges upon other people's trenchers. L'Estrange.

Here went the dean, when he 's to seek,
To sponge a breakfast once a week. Swift.

SPONGER. n. s. [from sponge] One who hangs for a maintenance on others.

A generous rich man, that kept a splendid and open table, would try which were friends, and which only trencher-flies, and spongers. L'Estrange.

SPONGINESS. n. s. [from spongy.] Softness, and fulness of cavities, like a sponge.

The lungs are exposed to receive all the droppings from the brain; a very fit cistern, because of their sponginess. Harvey.

SPONGIOUS. adj. [spongioux, Fr. from sponge.] Full of small cavities, like a sponge.

All thick bones are hollow or spongeous, and contain an oleaginous substance in little vesicles, which by the heat of the body is exhaled through these bones to supply their fibres. Cheyne.

SPONGY. adj. [from sponge.] 1. Soft and full of small interstitial holes.

The lungs are the most spongy part of the body, and therefore ablest to contract and dilate itself. Bacon's Natural History.

A spongy excrescence groweth upon the roots of the laser-tree, and upon cedar, very white, light, and friable, called agarick. Bacon's Nat. History.

The body of the tree being very spongy within, though hard without, they easily contrive into canoes. More.

Into earth's spongy veins the ocean sinks,
Those rivers to replenish which he drinks. Denh.
Return, unhappy swain!

The spongy clouds are fill'd with gathering rain. Dryden.

Her bones are all very spongy, and more remarkably those of a wild bird, which flies much, and long together. Grew.

2. Wet; drenched; soaked; full like a sponge.

When their drench'd natures lie as in a death,
What cannot you and I perform upon
Th' unguarded Duncan? What not put upon His spongy officers, who shall bear the guilt? Shak.

SPONK. n. s. [a word in Edinburgh which denotes a match, or any thing dipt in sulphur that takes fire: as, Any sponks will ye buy?] Touchwood.

S P O

SPONSION. n. s. [sponsio, Lat.] The act of becoming surety for another.

SPONSOR. n. s. [Lat.] A surety; one who makes a promise or gives security for another.

In the baptism of a male there ought to be two males and one woman, and in the baptism of a female child two women and one man; and these are called sponsors or sureties for their education in the true christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

The sponsor ought to be of the same station with the person to whom he becomes surety. Broome.

The rash hermit, who with impious pray'r
Had been the sponsor of another's care. Harte.

SPONTANEITY. n. s. spontaneitas, school Lat. spontanéité, Fr. from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; willingness; accord un-compelled.

Necessity and spontaneity may sometimes meet together, so may spontaneity and liberty; but real necessity and true liberty can never.

Strict necessity they simple call;
It so binds the will, that things foreknown
By spontaneity, not choice, are done. Dryden.

SPONTANEOUS. adj. [spontaneé, Fr. from sponte, Lat.] Voluntary; not compelled; acting without compulsion or restraint; acting of itself; acting of its own accord.

Many analogal motions in animals, though I cannot call them voluntary, yet I see them spontaneous: I have reason to conclude, that these are not simply mechanical. Hale.

They now came forth
Spontaneous; for within them spirit mov'd Attendant on their lord. Milton.

While John for nine-pins does declare,
And Roger loves to pitch the bar,
Both legs and arms spontaneous move,
Which was the thing I meant to prove. Prior.

Begin with sense, of ev'ry art the soul,
Parts answering parts shall slide into a whole;
Spontaneous beauties all around advance,
Start ev'n from difficulty, strike from chance;
Nature shall join you, time shall make it grow. Pope.

SPONTANEOUSLY. adv. [from spontaneous.] Voluntarily; of its own accord.

This would be as impossible as that the lead of an edifice should naturally and spontaneously mount up to the roof, while lighter materials employ themselves beneath it. Bentley.

Whey turns spontaneously acid, and the curd into cheese as hard as a stone. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SPONTANEOUSNESS. n. s. [from spontaneous.] Voluntariness; freedom of will; accord unforced.

The sagacities and instincts of brutes, the spontaneousness of many of their animal motions, are not explicable, without supposing some active determinate power commixed to and inherent in their spirits, of a higher extraction than the bare natural modification of matter. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

SPOOL. n. s. [spuhl, Germ. spohl, Dut.] A small piece of cane or reed, with a knot at each end; or a piece of wood turned in that form to wind yarn upon; a quill.

To SPOOM. v. n. [probably from spume, or foam, as a ship driven with violence spumes, or raises a foam.] To go on swiftly. A sea term.

When virtue spooms before a prosperous gale,
My heaving wishes help to fill the sail. Dryden.

SPOON. n. s. [spaan, Dut. spone, Dan. spoonn, Island.] A concave vessel with a handle, used in eating liquids.

Wouldst thou drown thyself,
Put but a little water in a spoon,

S P O

And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up. Shakesp. K. John.

This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him; I have no long spoon. Shakesp. Tempest.

Or o'er cold coffee trifle with the spoon,
Count the slow clock, and dine exact at noon. Pope.

SPOONBILL. n. s. [spoon and bill; platea, Lat.] A bird.

The shoveller, or spoonbill; the former name the more proper, the end of the bill being broad like a shovel, but not concave like a spoon, but perfectly flat. Grew's Museum.

Ducks and geese have such long broad bills to quaffer in water and mud; to which we may reckon on the bill of the spoonbill.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

SPOONFUL. n. s. [spoon and full.] 1. As much as is generally taken at once in a spoon. A medical spoonful is half an ounce.

Prescribe him, before he do use the receipt, that he take such a pill, or a spoonful of liquor. Bocon.

2. Any small quantity of liquid.

Surely the choice and measure of the materials of which the whole body is composed, and what we take daily by pounds, is at least of as much importance as of what we take seldom, and only by grains and spoonfuls. Arbuthnot.

SPOONMEAT. n. s. [spoon and meat.] Liquid food; nourishment taken with a spoon.

We prescribed a slender diet, allowing only spoonmeats. Wiseman.

Wretched
Are mortals born to sleep their lives away!
Go back to what thy infancy began,
Eat pap and spoonmeat; for thy gurgaws cry,
Be sullen, and refuse the lullaby. Dryden's Persius.

Diet most upon spoonmeats, as veal or cock broths. Harvey.

SPOONWORT. n. s. Scurvygrass.

Spoonwort was there, scorbutsy to supply;
And centaury, to clear the jaundic'd eye. Harte.

To SPOON. v. n. In sea language, is when a ship, being under sail in a storm, cannot bear it, but is obliged to put right before the wind. Bailey.

SPORA'DICAL. adj. [σποραδικός; sporadique, Fr.] A sporadical disease is an endemial disease, what in a particular season affects but few people.

Arbuthnot.

SPORT. n. s. [spott a make-game, Island.] 1. Play; diversion; game; frolick and tumultuous merriment.

Her sports were such as carried riches of knowledge upon the stream of delight. Sidney.

As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shakesp. King Lear.

When their hearts were merry, they said, Call for Samson, that he may make us sport; and they called for him, and he made them sport. Judges, xvi. 25.

As a mad-man who casteth fire-brands, arrows, and death, so is the man that deceiveth his neighbour, and saith, Am not I in sport? Prov. xxvi. 18, 19.

The discourse of fools is irksome, and their sport is in the wantonness of sin. Eccles. xxvii. 13.

2. Mock; contemptuous mirth.

If I suspect without cause, why then make sport at me, then let me be your jest. Shakesp.

They had his messengers in derision, and made a sport of his prophets. 1 Esdr. i. 51.

To make sport with his word, and to endeavour to render it ridiculous, by turning that holy book into rallery, is a direct affront to God. Tillotson.

3. That with which one plays.

Each on his rock transfix'd, the sport and prey
Of wrecking whirlwinds. Milton.

Commit not thy prophetic mind
To flitting leaves, the sport of every wind,
Lest they disperse in air. Dryden

Some grave their wrongs on marble; he, more just,

Stoop'd down serene, and wrote them on the dust,
Tro'd under foot, the sport of ev'ry wind,
Swept from the earth, and blotted from his mind;
There secret in the grave he bade them lie,
And griev'd they could not 'scape th' Almighty's eye.
Dr. Madden on Ep. Boulter.

4. Play; idle gingle.

An author who should introduce such a sport of words upon our stage, would meet with small applause.
Brown.

5. Diversion of the field, as of fowling, hunting, fishing.

Now for our mountain sport, up to yon hill,
Your legs are young.
Shakesp. Cymbeline.
The king, who was excessively affected to hunting, and the sports of the field, had a great desire to make a great park, for red as well as fallow deer, between Richmond and Hampton Court.
Clarendon.

To SPORT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To divert; to make merry. It is used only with the reciprocal pronoun.

The poor man wept and bled, cried and prayed, while they sported themselves in his pain, and delighted in his prayers, as the argument of their victory.
Sidney.

Away with him, and let her sport herself
With that she's big with.
Shak. Winter's Tale.
Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom make ye a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue?
Isaiah, lvii. 4.

What pretty stories these are for a man of his seriousness to sport himself withal!
Atterbury.
Let such writers go on at their dearest peril, and sport themselves in their own deceivings.
Watts.

2. To represent by any kind of play.

Now sporting on the lyre thy love of youth,
Now virtuous age and venerable truth;
Expressing justly Sappho's wanton art
Of odes, and Pindar's more majestic part.
Dryd.

To SPORT. v. n.

1. To play; to frolick; to game; to wanton.

They, sporting with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wad'd coats dropt with gold.
Milton.

Larissa, as she sported at this play, was drowned in the river Peneus.
Broome on the Odyssey.

2. To trifle.

If any man turn religion into raillery, by bold jests, he renders himself ridiculous, because he sports with his own life.
Tillotson.

SPORTFUL. adj. [sport and full.]

1. Merry; frolick; wanton; acting in jest.

How with a sportful malice it was follow'd,
May rather pluck on laughter than revenge.
Shak.
Down he alights among the sportful herd
Of those four-footed kinds.
Milton.

2. Ludicrous; done in jest.

His highness, even in such a slight and sportful damage, had a noble sense of just dealing.
Wotton.
Behold your own Ascanius, while he said,
He drew his glittering helmet from his head,
In which the youth to sportful arms he led.
Dryd.

They are no sportful productions of the soil, but did once belong to real and living fishes; seeing each of them doth exactly resemble some other shell on the sea-shore.
Bentley.

A catalogue of this may be had in Albericus Gentilis; which, because it is too sportful, I forbear to mention.
Baker.

SPORTFULLY. adv. [from sportful.]

Wantonly; merrily.

SPORTFULNESS. n. s. [from sportful.]

Wantonness; play; merriment; frolick.
The otter got out of the river, and inweeded himself so, as the ladies lost the further marking of his sportfulness.
Sidney.

SPORTIVE. adj. [from sport.] Gay; merry; frolick; wanton; playful; ludicrous.

VOL. II.

I am not in a sportive humour now,
Tell me, and daily not, where is the money?
Shak.
Is it I

That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark of smoky muskets?
Shak. All's well that ends well.

While thus the constant pair alternate said,
Joyful above them and around them play'd
Angels and sportive loves, a numerous crowd,
Smiling they clapt their wings, and low they bow'd
Prior.

We must not hope wholly to change their original tempers; nor make the gay pensive and grave, nor the melancholy sportive, without spoiling them.
Locke.

No wonder savages or subjects slain,
Were equal crimes in a despotick reign;
Both doom'd alike for sportive tyrants bled,
But subjects starv'd while savages were fed.
Pope.

SPORTIVENESS. n. s. [from sportive.]

Gaiety; play; wantonness.

Shall I conclude her to be simple, that has her time to begin, or refuse sportiveness as freely as I have?
Walton's Angler.

SPORTSMAN. n. s. [sport and man.]

One who pursues the recreations of the field.

Manilius lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron, as the Christians have their St. Hubert; he speaks of the constellation which makes a good sportsman.
Addison.

SPORTULE. n. s. [sportule, Fr. sportula, Lat.] An alms; a dole.

The bishops, who consecrated the ground, had a spill or sportule from the credulous laity.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

SPOT. n. s. [spette, Dan. spotte, Flem.]

1. A blot; a mark made by discoloration.

This three years day, these eyes, though clear
To outward view of blemish or of spot,
Berest of sight, their seeing have forgot.
Milton.
A long series of ancestors shews the native lustre with advantage; but if he any way degenerate from his line, the least spot is visible on ermine.
Dryden.

2. A taint; a disgrace; a reproach; a fault.

Yet Chloe sure was form'd without a spot;
'Tis true, but something in her was forgot.
Pope.

3. I know not well the meaning of spot in this place, unless it be a scandalous woman, a disgrace to her sex.

Let him take thee,
And hoist thee up to th' shouting plebeians;
Follow his chariot, like the greatest spot
Of all thy sex.
Shakesp. Antony and Cleopatra.

4. A small extent of place.

That spot to which I point is Paradise,
Adam's abode; those lofty shades, his bow'r.
Milton.

He who, with Plato, shall place beatitude in the knowledge of God, will have his thoughts raised to other contemplations than those who looked not beyond this spot of earth, and those perishing things in it.
Locke.

About one of these breathing passages is a spot of myrtles, that flourish within the steam of these vapours.
Addison.

Abdallah converted the whole mountain into a kind of garden, and covered every part of it with plantations or spots of flowers.
Guardian.

He that could make two ears of corn grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind than the whole race of politicians.
Swift.

5. Any particular place.

I would be busy in the world, and learn;
Not, like a coarse and useless dunghill weed,
Fix'd to one spot, and rot just as I grow.
Otway.
As in this grove I took my last farewell,
As on this very spot of earth I fell,
So she my prey becomes ev'n here.
Dryden.

Here Adrian fell: upon that fatal spot
Our brother died.
Cranville.

The Dutch landscades are, I think, always a representation of an individual spot, and each in its kind a very faithful, but very confined, portrait.
Regnolds.

6. Upon the spot. Immediately; without changing place. [sur le champ.]

The lion did not chop him up immediately upon the spot; and yet he was resolved he should not escape.
L'Esrange.

It was determined upon the spot, according as the oratory on either side prevailed.
Swift.

To SPOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To mark with discolorations; to maculate.

They are polluted off rings, more abhor'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.
Shakesp.

Have you not seen a handkerchief,
Spotted with strawberries, in your wife's hand?
Shakesp.

But serpents now more amity maintain;
From spotted skins the leopard does refrain;
No weaker lion's by a stronger slain.
Tate's Juv.

2. To patch by way of ornament.

I counted the patches on both sides, and found the tory patches to be about twenty stronger than the whig; but next morning the whole puppet-show was filled with faces spotted after the whiggish manner.
Addison's Spectator.

3. To corrupt; to disgrace; to taint.

This vow receive, this vow of God maintain,
My virgin life no spotted thoughts shall stain.
Sid.
The people of Armenia have retained the christian faith from the time of the apostles; but at this day it is spotted with many absurdities.
Abbot's Description of the World.

SPOTLESS. adj. [from spot.]

1. Free from spots.

2. Free from reproach or impurity; immaculate; pure; untainted.

So much fairer
And spotless shall mine innocence arise,
When the king knows my truth.
I dare my life lay down, that the queen is spotless Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

You grac'd the several parts of life,
A spotless virgin, and a faultless wife.
Waller.

We sometimes wish that it had been our lot to live and converse with Christ, to hear his divine discourses, and to observe his spotless behaviour; and we please ourselves perhaps with thinking, how ready a reception we should have given to him and his doctrine.
Atterbury.

Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind,
Each pray'r accepted, and each wish resign'd.
Pope.

SPOTTER. n. s. [from spot.] One that spots; one that maculates.

SPOTTY. adj. [from spot.] Full of spots; maculated.

The moon, whose orb
Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views
In Valombrosa to descry new lands,
Rivers, or mountains, on her spotted globe.
Milton.

SPOUSAL. adj. [from spouse.] Nuptial; matrimonial; conjugal; connubial; bridal.

There shall we consummate our spousal rites.
Shak.
Hope's chaste kiss wrongs no more joy's maid-head,
Than spousal rites prejudice the marriage bed.
Crash.

This other, in her prime of love,
Spousal embraces vitiated with geld.
Milton.

Sleep'st thou, careless of the nuptial day?
Thy spousal ornament neglected lies;
Arise, prepare the bridal train, arise.
Pope's Ody.

SPOUSAL. n. s. [espousailles, Fr. sponsalia, Lat.] Marriage; nuptials.

S P O

As man and wife, being two, are one in love,
So be there 'twixt your kingdoms such a spousal,
That never may ill office, or fell jealousy,
Thrust in between the paction of these kingdoms,
To make divorce of their incorporate league. Shak.

The amorous bird of night
Sang spousal, and hid baste the evening star,
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton
The spousals of Hippolita the queen,
What tilts and tourneys at the feasts were seen!
Dryden.

Ethereal musick did her death prepare,
Like joyful sounds of spousals in the air:
A radiant light did her crown'd temples gild. Dry.
SPOUSE. n. s. [sponsa, sponsus, Lat. espouse, Fr.] One joined in marriage; a husband or wife.

She is of good esteem;
Beside, so qualified as may beseeem
The spouse of any noble gentleman. Shak.
At once, Farewel, O faithful spouse! they said;
At once th' encroaching rinds their closing lips invade. Dryden.

SPOU'ED. adj. [from the noun.] Wedded; espoused; joined together as in matrimony.

They led the vine
To wed her elm; she spous'd about him twines
Her marriageable arms. Milton.

SPOUSELESS. adj. [from spouse.] Wanting a husband or wife.

To tempt the spouseless queen with am'rous wiles,
Resort the nobles from the neighb'ring isles. Pope.

SPOUT. n. s. [from spuyt, Dut.]

1. A pipe, or mouth of a pipe or vessel, out of which any thing is poured.

She gasping to begin some speech, her eyes Became two spouts. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

In whales that breathe, lest the water should get unto the lungs, an ejection thereof is contrived by a fistula or spout at the head. Brown's Vulgar Err.

If you chance it to lack,
Be it claret or sack,
I'll make this snout
To deal it about,
Or this to run out,
As it were from a spout. Ben Jonson.

As watersidid in storms, now pitch runs out,
As lead, when a fir'd church becomes one spout.
Donne.

In Gaza they couch vessels of earth in their walls, to gather the wind from the top, and to pass it down in spouts into rooms. Bacon.

Let the water be fed by some higher than the pool, and delivered into it by fair spouts, and then discharged by some equality of bores, that it stay little. Bacon.

In this single cathedral, the very spouts are loaded with ornaments. Addison on Italy.
From silver spouts the grateful liquors glide,
And China's earth receives the smoking tide. Pope.

2. Water falling in a body; a cataract, such as is seen in the hot climates, when clouds sometimes discharge all their water at once.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Constring'd in mass by the almighty sun,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword Falling on Diomed. Shak. Troilus and Cressida.

The force of these motions pressing more in some places than in others, there would fall not showers, but great spouts or cascades of water.
Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To SPOUT. v. a. [from the noun.] To pour with violence, or in a collected body, as from a spout.

We will bear home that lusty blood again,
Which here we came to spout against your town.
Shak.

I intend two fountains, the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water, the other a fair receipt of water.
Bacon.

She swims in blood, and blood does spouting throw
To heav'n, that heav'n men's cruelties might know. Waller.

Next on his belly floats the mighty whale;
He twists his back, and rears his throat'ning tail:
He spouts the tide. Creech.

To SPOUT. v. n. To issue as from a spout.

They laid them down hard by the murmuring musick of certain waters, which spouted out of the side of the hills. Sidney.

No hands could force it thence, so fixt it stood,
'Till out it rush'd, expell'd hy streams of spouting
blood. Dryden.

It spouts up out of deep wells, and flies forth at the tops of them, upon the face of the ground.
Woodward.

All the glittering hill
Is bright with spouting rills. Thomson's Autumn.
SPRAG. adj. Vigorous; spritely. A provincial word.

A good sprag memory. Shakesp. Merry Wives.

To SPRAIN. v. a. [corrupted from strain.]

To stretch the ligaments of a joint without dislocation of the bone.

Should the big last extend the shoe too wide,
The sudden turn may stretch the swelling vein,
Thy cracking joint unhinge, or ancle sprain. Gay.

SPRAIN. n. s. [from the verb.] Extension of the ligaments without dislocation of the joint.

I was in pain, and thought it was with some sprain at tennis. Temple.

SPRAINTS. n. s. The dung of an otter. Dict.

SPRANG. The preterite of spring.

Mankind sprang from one common original;
whence this tradition would be universally diffused. Tillotson.

SPRAT. n. s. [sprot, Dut. sarda, Lat.] A small sea fish.

So oft, in feasts with costly changes clad,
To crammed maws a sprat new stomach brings.
Sidney.

All-saints do lay for porke and sowse,
For sprats and spurlings for their house. Tusser.
Of round fish there are brit, sprat, barn, smelts.
Carew.

To SPRAWL. v. n. [spradde, Dan. spar-telen, Dut.]

1. To struggle, as in the convulsions of death.

Hang the child, that he may see it sprawl;
A sight to vex the father's soul. Shakesp.
Some lie sprawling on the ground,
With many a gash and bloody wound. Hudibr.

2. To tumble or creep with much agitation and contortion of the limbs.

The birds were not fledged; but, upon sprawling and struggling to get clear of the flame, down they tumbled. L'Ettrange.

Telemon hap'd to meet
A rising root that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound. Dry.

Hence, long before the child can crawl,
He learns to kick, and wince, and sprawl. Prior.
Did the stars do this feat once only, which gave beginning to human race? who were there then in the world, to observe the births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches? Bentley.

He ran, he leapt into a flood,
There sprawl'd a while, and scarce got out,
All cover'd o'er with slime. Swift.

SPRAY. n. s. [of the same race with sprit and sprint.]

1. The extremity of a branch.
At sight whereof each bird that sits on spray,
And every beast that to his den was fled,
Came forth afresh out of their late dismay,
And to the light lift up their drooping head.
Hubbert's Tale.

Thus droops this lofty pine, and hangs his sprays,
Thus Eleanor's pride dies in her younger days.
Shakesp.

The wind that whistles through the sprays
Maintains the consort of the song;
And hidden birds, with native lays,
The golden sleep prolong. Dryden.

2. The foam of the sea, commonly written spry.

Winds raise some of the salt with the spray.
Arbutnot.

They, when departed, spread abroad his fame in all that country. Matthw., ix. 31.

6. To emit as effluvia or emanations; to diffuse.

Their course thro' thickest constellations held,
They spread their bane. Milton.

To SPREAD. v. n. To extend or expand itself.

Can any understand the spreadings of the clouds, or the noise of his tabernacle? Job, xxxvi. 29.
The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension only of their spreading and ambitious designs.
Bacon.

Plants, if they spread much, are seldom tall.
Bacon.
Great Pan, who went to chase the fair,
And lov'd the spreading oak, was there. Addis. Cato.
The valley opened at the farther end, spreading forth into an immense ocean. Addison.

SPREAD. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Extent; compass.
I have got a fine spread of improveable lands;
and am already ploughing up some, fencing others.
Addison.

2. Expansion of parts.
No flower hath that spread of the woodbind.
Bacon.

SPREA'DER. n. s. [from spread.]

1. One that spreads.
By conforming ourselves we should be spreaders of a worse infection than any we are likely to draw from papists, by our conformity with them in ceremonies. Hooker.

2. Publisher; divulger; disseminator.
If it be a mistake, I desire I may not be accused for a spreader of false news. Swift.

SPRENT. part. [from sprene to sprinkle; ŷprenzan, ŷprenan, Sax. sprengen, Dut.] Sprinkled. Obsolete.

O lips, that kiss'd that hand with my tears sprent. Sidney.

SPRIG. n. s. [ysbrig, Welsh; so Darvies: but it is probably of the same race with spring.] A small branch; a spray.

The substance is true ivy; after it is taken down, the friends of the family are desirous to have some spring to keep. Bacon.

Our chilling climate hardly bears

A spring of bays in fifty years;

While ev'ry fool his claim alleges,

As if it grew in common hedges. Swift.

SPRIG Chrystal. n. s.

In perpendicular fissures, chrystal is found in form of an hexangular column, adhering at one end to the stone, and near the other lessening gradually, till it terminates in a point: this is called by lapidaries spring or rock chrystal. Woodw.

SPRIGGY. adj. [from spring.] Full of small branches.

SPRIGHT. n. s. [contraction of spirit; spiritus, Lat. It was anciently written sprete or spryte; and spirit, as now written, was long considered in verse as a monosyllable: this word should therefore be spelled sprite, and its derivatives spritely, spriteful; but custom has determined otherwise.]

1. Spirit; shade; soul; incorporeal agent.

She doth display

The gate with pearls and rubies richly dight,
Through which her words so wise do make their way,

To bear the message of her sprite. Spenser.

Forth he called out of deep darkness dread
Legions of sprights, the which, like little flies
Flaunting about his ever damned head,
Await whereto their service he applies. Fairy Q.

While with heav'nly charity she spoke,
A streaming blaze the silent shadows broke;
The birds obscene to forests wing'd their flight,
And gaping graves receiv'd the guilty sprite. Dry.

Of these am I who thy protection claim;
A watchful sprite, and Ariel is my name. Pope.

2. Walking spirit; apparition.

The ideas of goblins and sprights have no more to do with darkness than light; yet let but a foolish maid insinuate these often on the mind of a child, possibly he shall never be able to separate them again. Locke.

3. Power which gives cheerfulness or courage.

O chastity! the chief of heav'nly lights,
Which mak'st us most immortal shape to wear,
Hold thou my heart, establish thou my sprights;
To only thee my constant course I bear,
Till spotless soul unto my bosom fly;
Such life to lead, such death I vow to die. Sidney.

4. An arrow. Not in use.

We had in use for sea fight short arrows called sprights, without any ether heads save wood sharpened; which were discharged out of muskets, and would pierce through the sides of ships where a bullet would not. Bacon's Natural History.

To SPRIGHT. v. a. To haunt as a sprite.

A ludicrous use.

I am sprighted with a fool. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

SPRIGHTEFUL. adj. [spright and full.]

Lively; brisk; gay; vigorous.

The spirit of the time shall teach me speed,

—Spoke like a sprightful noble gentleman. Shak.

Sneeds sprightful as the light. Cowley.

Happy my eyes when they behold thy face:

My heavy heart will leave its doleful beating

At sight of thee, and bound with sprightful joys. Otway.

SPRIGHTEFULLY. adv. [from sprightful.]

Briskly; vigorously.

Norfolk, sprightfully and hold,
Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet. Shakesp.

SPRIGHTELESS. adj. [from spright.]

Dull; enervated; sluggish.

Are you grown

Benumb'd with fear, or virtue's sprightless cold?
Cowley.

SPRIGHTELNESS. n. s. [from sprightly.]

Liveliness; briskness; vigour; gaiety; vivacity.

The soul is clogged when she acts in conjunction with a companion so heavy; but, in dreams, observe with what a sprightliness and alacrity does she exert herself. Addison.

SPRIGHTELY. adj. [from spright.] Gay;

brisk; lively; vigorous; airy; vivacious.

Produce the wine that makes us bold,

And sprightly wit and love inspires. Dryden.

When now the sprightly trumpet, from afar,

Had giv'n the signal of approaching war. Dryden.

Each morn they wak'd me with a sprightly lay:

Of opening heav'n they sung, and gladsome day. Prior.

The sprightly Sylvia trips along the green;

She runs, but hopes she does not run unseen. Pope.

To SPRING. v. n. preterite sprung or sprang, anciently sprung; part. sprung.

[ŷpringan, Sax. springen, Dut.]

1. To arise out of the ground, and grow, by vegetative power.

All blest secrets,

All you unpublish'd virtues of the earth,

Sprung with my tears; be aidant and remediate

In the good man's distress. Shakesp.

To his musick plants and flowers

Ever sprung, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring. Shak. H. VIII.

To satisfy the desolate ground, and cause the bud of the tender herb to sprung forth. Jub. xxxviii. 27.

Other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprung up and increased. Mark, iv. 8.

Tell me, in what happy fields

The thistle springs, to which the lily yields? Pope.

2. To begin to grow.

That the nipples should be made with such perforations as to admit passage to the milk when drawn, otherwise to retain it; and the teeth of the young not sprung, are effects of providence. Ray.

3. To proceed as from seed.

Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves; and in the second year that which sprung eth of the same. 2 Kings.

Much more good of sin shall sprung. Milton.

4. To come into existence; to issue forth.

Hadst thou sway'd as kings should do,

Giving no ground unto the house of York,

They never then had sprung like summer flies

Ev'n thought meets thought, ere from the lips

it part,

And each warm wish springs mutual from the heart. Pope.

5. To arise; to appear; to begin to appear or to exist.

When the day began to sprung, they let her go.

Judges.

To them which sat in the region and shadow of death, light is sprung up. Matthew, iv. 16.

Fly, fly, prophane fogs! far hence fly away,

Taint not the pure streams of the sprung day

With your dull influence: it is for you

To sit and scoules upon night's heavy brow. Cras.

Do not blast my sprung hopes,

Which thy kind hand has planted in my soul. Rowe.

6. To issue with effect or force.

Swift fly the years, and rise th' expected morn!

Oh sprung to light, auspicious babe, be born! Pope.

7. To proceed as from ancestors, or a country.

How youngly he began to serve his country,
How long continued; and what stock he springs of;
The noble house of Marcus. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Our Lord sprung out of Judea. Heb. vii. 14.

All these

Shall, like the brethren sprung of dragon's teeth,

Ruin each other, and he fall amongst 'em. B. Jones.

Heroes of old, by rapine and by spoil,

In search of fame did all the world embroil;

Thus to their gods each then allied his name,

This sprung from Jove, and that from Titan came. Graville.

8. To proceed as from a ground, cause, or reason.

They found new hope to sprung

Out of despair. Milton.

Some have been deceived into an opinion, that the inheritance of rule over men, and property in things, sprung from the same original, and descend by the same rules. Locke.

9. To grow; to thrive.

What makes all this but Jupiter the king,

At whose command we perish and we sprung?

Then 'tis our best, since thus ordain'd to die,

To make a virtue of necessity. Dryd. Knight's Tale.

10. To bound; to leap; to jump; to rush hastily; to appear suddenly.

Some strange commotion

Is in his brain; he bites his lip, and starts;

Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,

Then lays his finger on his temple; straight

Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

I sprung not more in joy at first hearing he was a man child, than now in first seeing he had proved himself a man. Shakesp.

He called for a light, and sprung in, and fell before Paul. Acts.

When heav'n was nam'd, they loos'd their hold

again;

Then sprung she forth, they follow'd her again. Dryden.

Afraid to sleep,

Her blood all fever'd, with a furious leap

She sprung from bed. Dryden.

Nor lies she long; but, as her fates ordain,

Springs up to life; and, fresh to second pain,

Is sav'd to-day, to-morrow to be slain. Dryden.

See, aw'd by heav'n, the blooming Hebrew flies

Her artful tongue, and more persuasive eyes;

And, sprung from her disappointed arms,

Prefers a dungeon to forbidden charms. Blackmore.

The mountain stag that springs

From height to height, and bounds along the plains,

Nor has a master to restrain his course,

That mountain stag would Vanoe rather be

Than he a slave. Philip's Briton.

11. To fly with elastic power; to start.

A link of horsehair, that will easily slip, fasten to the end of the stick that springs. Mort. Husband.

12. To rise from a covert.

My doors are hateful to my eyes,

Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,

Watchful as fowlers when their game will sprung. Otway.

A covey of partridges sprung in our front, put our infantry in disorder. Addison.

13. To issue from a fountain.

Israel's servants digged in the valley, and found a well of sprung water. Gen. xxvi. 19.

Let the wide world his praises sing,

Where Tagus and Euphrates sprung;

And from the Danube's frust banks to those

Where from an unkuown head great Nilus flows. Roscommon.

14. To proceed as from a source.

'Tis true from force the noblest title springs,

I therefore hold from that which first made kings. Dryden.

15. To shoot; to issue with speed and violence.

Then shook the sacred shrine, and sudden light

Sprung thro' the vaulted roof, and made the temple

bright:

The pow'r, behold! the pow'r in glory shone

By her bent bow and her keen arrows known. Dryden.

The friendly gods a springing gale enlarg'd ;
The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew,
Till Grecian cliffs appear'd. Pope.

To SPRING. r. a.

1. To start ; to rouse game.

Thus I reclaim'd my buzzard love to fly
At what, and when, and how, and where I chose ;
Now negligent of sport I lie ;
And now, as other fawknars use,
I spring a mistress, swear, write, sigh, and die ;
And the game kill'd, or lost, go talk or lie. Donne.

That spring the game you were to set,
Before you'd time to draw the net. Hudibros.
A large cock pheasant he spring in one of the neighbouring woods. Addison's Spectator.

Here I use a great deal of diligence before I can spring any thing ; whereas in town, whilst I am following one character, I am crossed by another, that they puzzle the chase. Addison.

See how the well-taught pointer leads the way !
The scent grows warm ; he stops, he springs the prey. Gay.

2. To produce quickly or unexpectedly.

The nurse, surpris'd with fright,
Starts up and leaves her bed, and springs a light.
Dryden.

Thus man by his own strength to heav'n would soar,
And would not be oblig'd to God for more :
Vain, wretched creature, how art thou misled,
To think thy wit these godlike notions bred !
These truths are not the product of thy mind,
But dropt from heav'n, and of a nobler kind :
Reveal'd religion first inform'd thy sight,
And reason saw not, till faith spring the light.
Dryden.

He that has such a burning zeal, and springs
such mighty discoveries, must needs be an admirable patriot.
Collier.

3. To make by starting : applied to a ship.

People discharge themselves of burdensome reflections, as of the cargo of a ship that has spring
a leak. L'Estrange.

No more accuse thy pen ; but charge the crime
On native sloth, and aegligence of time :
Beware the publick laughter of the town,
Thou spring'st a leak already in thy crown. Dryd.
Whether she spring a leak, I cannot find,
Or whether she was overset with wind,
But down at once with all her crew she went.
Dryden.

4. To discharge : applied to a mine.

Our miners discovered several of the enemies mines, who have spring divers others which did little execution. Tatler.

I spring a mine, whereby the whole nest was overthrown. Addison's Spectator.

5. To contrive on a sudden ; to produce hastily ; to offer unexpectedly.

The friends to the cause spring a new project ;
and it was advertised that the Crisis could not appear,
till the ladies had shewn their zeal against the Pretender.
Swift.

6. To pass by leaping. A barbarous use.

Unbesecming skill
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed.
Thomson.

7. Of the verb spring the primary sense is to grow out of the ground : so plants spring, thence spring for the season ; so water springs, thence spring for a fountain. Plants rise unexpectedly, and waters break out violently ; thence any thing done suddenly, or coming hastily, is said to spring ; thence spring means an elastick body. Thus the active significations all import suddenness or force.

SPRING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The season in which plants rise and vegetate ; the vernal season.
Orpheus with his lute made trees,
And the mountain-tops that freeze,

Bow themselves when he did sing :
To his musick plants and flowers
Ever spring, as sun and showers

There had made a lasting spring. Shak. H. VIII.
The spring visiteth not these quarters so timely as the eastern parts. Carcw.

Come, gentle spring, ethereal mildness, come,
And from the bosom of yon dropping cloud
Upon our plains descend. Thomson's Spring.

2. An elastick body ; a body which, when distorted, has the power of restoring itself to its former state.

This may be performed by the strength of some such spring as is used in watches : this spring may be applied to one wheel, which shall give an equal motion to both the wigs. Wilkins.

The spring must be made of good steel, well tempered ; and the wider the two ends of the spring stand asunder, the milder it throws the chape of the vice open. Maxon's Mechanical Exerc.

He that was sharp-sighted enough to see the configuration of the minute particles of the spring of a clock, and upon what peculiar impulse its elastick motion depends, would no doubt discover something very admirable. Locke.

3. Elastick force.

Heav'n's, what a spring was in his arm, to throw !
How high he held his shield, and rose at every blow ! Dryden.

Bodies which are absolutely hard, or so soft as to be void of elasticity, will not rebound from one another : impenetrability makes them only stop.
If two equal bodies meet directly in vacuo, they will by the laws of motion stop where they meet, lose their motion, and remain in rest ; unless they be elastick, and receive new motion from their spring. Newton.

The soul is gathered within herself, and recovers that spring, which is weakened when she operates more in concert with the body. Addison.

In adult persons, when the fibres cannot any more yield, they must break, or lose their spring.
Arbuthnot.

4. Any active power ; any cause by which motion or action is produced or propagated.

My heart sicks in me while I hear him speak,
And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
Like nature letting down the *spring*s of life ;
So much the name of father awes me still. Dryden.
Nature is the same, and man is the same, has the same affections and passions, and the same *spring*s that give them motion. Rymer.
Our author shuns by vulgar *spring*s to move.
Pope.

5. A leap ; a bound ; a jump ; a violent effort ; a sudden struggle.

The pris'n'r with a spring from prison broke ;
Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,
And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight.
Dryden.

With what a spring his furious soul broke loose,
And left the limbs still quivering on the ground !
Addison's Cato.

6. A leak ; a start of plank.

Each petty hand
Can steer a ship becalm'd ; but he that will Govern, and carry her to her ends, must know
His tides, his currents ; how to shift his sails ;
Where her *spring*s are, her leaks, and how to stop
'em. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

7. A fountain ; an issue of water from the earth.

Now stop thy *spring*s ; my sea shall suck them
dry,
And swell so much the higher by their ebb.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

Springs on the tops of hills pass through a great deal of pure earth, with less mixture of other waters. Bacon's Natural History.

When in th' effects she doth the causes know,
And seeing the stream, thinks where the spring
doth rise ;
And seeing the branch, conceives the root below ;
These things she views without the body's eyes.
Davies.

He adds the running *spring*s and standing lakes,
And bounding banks for winding rivers makes.
Dryden.

Nile hears him knocking at his sevenfold gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

He bathed himself in cold spring water in the midst of winter. Locke.

The water that falls down from the clouds, sinking into beds of rock or clay, breaks out in *spring*s commonly at the bottom of hilly ground. Locke.

8. A source ; that by which any thing is supplied.

To that great spring which doth great kingdoms move,
Thesacred spring whence right and honour streams ;
Distilling virtue, shedding peace and love

In every place, as Cynthia sheds her beams. Dav.
I move, I see, I speak, discourse, and know ;
Though now I am, I was not always so :

Then that from which I was must be before,
Whom, as my spring of being, I adore. Dryden.

Rolling down through so many barbarous ages,
from the spring of Virgil, it bears along with it the filth of the Goths and Vandals. Dryden.

He has a secret spring of spiritual joy, and the continual feast of a good conscience within, that forbids him to be miserable. Bentley.

9. Rise ; beginning.

About the spring of the day, Samuel called Saul to the top of the house. 1 Sam. ix. 26.

10. Cause ; original.

The reason of the quicker or slower termination of this distemper, arises from these three *spring*s.
Blackmore.

The first *spring*s of great events, like those of great rivers, are often mean and little. Swift.

SPRING. } n. s. A youth. Obsolete.

SPRINGAL. }
Before the bull she pictur'd winged love,
With his young brother sport, light fluttering
Upon the waves, as each had been a dove ;
The one his bow and shafts, the other spring
A burning tead about his head did move,
As in their sire's new love both triumphing. Spens.

SPRINGE. n. s. [from spring.] A gin ; a noose which, fastened to any elastick body, catches by a spring or jerk.

As a woodcock to my own springe, Osrick,
I'm justly kill'd with mine own treachery. Shak.
Let goats for food their loaded udders lend ;
But neither *spring*s, nets, nor snares employ. Dry.
With hairy *spring*s we the birds betray,
Slight lines of hair surprise the finny prey. Pope.

SPRINGER. n. s. [from spring.] One who rouses game.

SPRINGINESS. n. s. [from springy.] Elasticity ; power of restoring itself.

Where there is a continued endeavour of the parts of a body to put themselves into another state, the progress may be much more slow ; since it was a great while before the texture of the corpuscles of the steel were so altered as to make them lose their former springiness. Boyle.

The air is a thin fluid body, endowed with elasticity and springiness, capable of condensation and rarefaction. Bentley.

SPRINGHALT. n. s. [spring and halt.] A lameness by which the horse twitches up his legs.

They've all new legs, and lame ones ; one would take it,
That never saw them pace before, the spavin
And springhalt reign'd among them. Shak. H. VIII.

SPRINGLE. n. s. [from spring.] A springe ; an elastick noose.

Woodcocks arrive first on the north coast, where every plash-shoot serveth for springles to take them.
Carew.

To SPRINGLE. r. a. Misprinted, I suppose, for sprinkle.

This is Timon's last,
Who, stuck and spangled with your flatteries,
Washes it off, and springles in your faces
Your reeking villany. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.

SPRINGTIDE. n. s. [spring and tide.]
Tide at the new and full moon; high tide.

Love, like springtides, full and high,
Swells in every youthful vein;
But each tide does less supply,
Till they quite shrink in again:
If a flow in age appear,
'Tis but rain, and runs not clear.

Dryden's Tyrannick Love.
Most people die when the moon chiefly reigns;
that is, in the night, or upon or near a springtide.
Grew's Cosmologia.

SPRINGY. adj. [from springe.]
1. Elastick; having the power of restoring itself.

Had not the Maker wrought the springy frame,
Such as it is, to fan the vital flame,
The blood, defrauded of its nitrous food,
Had cool'd and languish'd in th' arterial road;
While the tir'd heart had strove, with fruitless pain,
To push the lazy tide along the vein.

Blackmore's Creation.
This vast contraction and expansion seems unintelligible, by feigning the particles of air to be springy and ramous, or rolled up like houns, or by any other means than a repulsive power. Newton.

Though the bundle of fibres which constitute the muscles may be small, the fibres may be strong and springy. Arbuthnot.

If our air had not been a springy body, no animal could have exercised the very function of respiration; and yet the ends of respiration are not served by that springiness, but by some other unknown quality. Bentley's Sermons.

2. [From spring.] Full of springs or fountains. Not used.

Where the sandy or gravelly lands are springy or wet, rather marl them for grass than corn.

To SPRINKLE. v. a. [sprinkelen, Dut.]
1. To scatter; to disperse in small masses.

Take handfuls of ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle it towards the heaven. Ex ix. 8.

2. To scatter in drops.
Sprinkle water of purifying upon them.

Nun. viii. 7.
3. To besprinkle; to wash, wet, or dust by sprinkling.

Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience. Hebrews.

Wings he wore
Of many a colour'd plume sprinkled with gold.

The prince with living water sprinkled o'er
His limbs and body; then approach'd the door, Possess'd the porch. Dryden's Æneid.

To SPRINKLE. v. n. To perform the act of scattering in small drops.

The priest shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger. Lev. xiv.

Baptism may well enough be performed by sprinkling, or effusion of water. Ayliffe's Paragon.
When dextrous damsels twirl the sprinkling mop,

And cleanse the spatter'd sash, and scrub the stairs, Know Saturday appears. Gay's Trivia.

SPRINKLER. n. s. [from sprinkle.] One that sprinkles.

To SPRIT. v. a. [sprytzen, Sax. spruyten, Dut.] To throw out; to eject with force. Commonly spirt.

Toads sometimes exclude or spirt out a dark and liquid matter behind, and a venomous condition there may be perhaps therein; but it cannot be called their urine. Brown.

To SPRIT. v. u. [sprytzen, Sax. spruyten, Dut.] To shoot; to germinate; to sprout. Used of barley wetted for malt.

SPRIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Shoot; sprout.

The barley, after it has been couched four days, will sweat a little, and shew the chit or sprit at the root-end of the corn. Mortimer's Husband.

SPRITSAIL. n. s. [sprit and sail.] The sail which belongs to the boltsprit mast. Dict.

Our men quitted themselves of the fireship, by cutting the spritsail tackle off with their short hatchets. Wiseman.

SPRITE. n. s. [contracted from spirit.] A spirit; an incorporeal agent.

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame mount up, and take a salamander's name. Pope.

SPRITEFULLY. adv. [See SPRIGHTFULLY.] Vigorously; with life and ardour.

The Grecians spritefully drew from the darts the corse,
And heast it, hearing it to fleet. Chapman's Iliad.

SPRITELY. adv. [from sprite.] Gaily.

You have not seen young heifers, highly kept,
Fill'd full of daisies at the field, and driven home to their hovels; all so *sprite*ly given,
That no room can containe them. Chapman.

SPRONG. The preterite of spring. Obsolete.

Not mistrusting, till these new curiosities sprung up, that ever any man would think our labour herein mispent, or the time wastefully consumed. Hooker.

To SPROUT. v. n. [sprytzen, Sax. spruyten, Dut. Sprout, sprit, and by a very frequent transposition spirt or spurt, are all the same word.]

1. To shoot by vegetation; to germinate.

The sprouting leaves that saw you here,
And call'd their fellows to the sight. Cowley.
Try whether these things in the sprouting do increase weight; by weighing them before they are hanged up; and afterwards again, when they are sprouted. Bacon.

That leaf faded, but the young buds sprouted on, which afterwards opened into fair leaves. Bacon's Natural History.

We find no security to prevent germination, having made trial of grains, whose ends, cut off, have notwithstanding sprouted. Brown's Vulg. Err.
Old Baucis is by old Philemon seen Sprouting with sudden leaves of sprightly green. Dryden.

Hence sprouting plants enrich the plain and wood;

For physick some, and some design'd for food. Blackmore.

Envied Britannia, sturdy as the oak
Which on her mountain top she proudly bears,
Eludes the ax, and sprouts against the stroke,
Strong from her wounds, and greater by her wars. Prior.

Rub malt between your hands to get the come or sprouting clean away. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To shoot into ramifications.

Vitriol is apt to sprout with moisture. Bacon.

3. To grow.
Th' culliv'ning dust its head begins to rear,
And on the ashes sprouting plumes appear. Tickel.

SPROUT. n. s. [from the verb.] A shoot of a vegetable.

Stumps of trees, lying out of the ground, will put forth sprouts for a time. Bacon.

Early, ere the odorous breath of morn
Awakes the slumbering leaves, or tassel'd horn
Shakes the high thicket, haste I all about,
Number my ranks, and visit every sprout. Milton.

To this kid, taken out of the womb, were brought in the tender sprouts of shrubs; and, after it had tasted, it began to eat of such as are the usual food of goats. Ray on the Creation.

SPROUTS. n. s. pl. [from sprout.] Young coleworts.

S P U

SPRUCE. adj. [Skinner derives this word from preux, Fr. but he proposes it with hesitation: Junius thinks it comes from sprout. Casaubon trilles yet more contemptibly. I know not whence to deduce it, except from pruce. In ancient books we find furniture of pruce a thing costly and elegant, and thence probably came spruce.] Nice; trim; neat without elegance. It was anciently used of things with a serious meaning; it is now used only of persons, and with levity.

The tree
That wraps that crystal in a wooden tomb,
Shall be took up spruce, fill'd with diamond. Don.
Thou wilt not leave me in the middle street,
Tho' some more spruce companion thou dost meet. Donne.

Along the crisped shades and bow'st
Revels the spruce and jocund spring,
The graces, and the rosy-bosom'd hours,
Thither all their bounties bring. Milton.
I must not slip into too spruce a style for serious matters; and yet I approve not that dull insipid way of writing practised by many chynists. Boyle.
He put his band and heard in order,
The sprucer to accost and board her. Hudibras.
He is so spruce, that he can never be gentle. Tatler.

This Tim make a strange figure with that ragged coat under his livery: can't he go spruce and clean? Arbuthnot.

SPRUCE. n. s. A species of fir.

SPRUCEBEER. n. s. [from spruce, a kind of fir.] Beer tinctured with branches of fir.

In ulcers of the kidneys, sprucebeer is a good balsamick. Arbuthnot.

SPRUCELEATHER. n. s. [corrupted from Prussian leather.] The leather was of Pruce. Dryden's Fables.

SPRUCELY. adv. [from spruce.] In a nice manner.

SPRUCENESS. n. s. [from spruce.] Neatness without elegance.

SPRUNG. The preterite and participle passive of spring.

Tall Norway fir their masts in battle spent,
And English oaks sprung leaks and planks restore. Dryden.

Now from beneath Maleas' airy height
Aloft she sprung, and steer'd to Thebes her flight. Pope.

Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I. Pope.

SPRUNT. n. s. Any thing that is short, and will not easily bend.

SPUD. n. s. A short knife; any short thick thing, in contempt.

My love to Sheelah is more firmly fixt
Than strongest weeds that grow these stones betwixt;

My spud these nettles from the stones can part,
No knife so keen towed thee from my heart. Swift.

SPOOLERS of Yarn. n. s. [perhaps properly spoolers.] Are such as are employed to see that it be well spun and fit for the loom. Dict.

SPUME. n. s. [spuma, Lat.] Foam; froth.

Materials dark and crude,
Of spirituous and fiery spume, till touch'd
With heaven's ray, and temper'd, they shont forth
So beauteous, op'ning to the ambient light. Mil.

S P U

Waters frozen in pans, after their dissolution, leave a froth and spume upon them, which are caused by the airy parts diffused by the congealable mixture. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
To SPUME. v. n. [spumo, Lat.] To foam; to froth.

SPUMOUS. adj. [spumens, Lat. from the SPUMY. } noun.] Frothy; foamy.

The cause is the putrefaction of the body by unnatural heat: the putrifying parts suffer a torrescence, and becoming airy and spumous, ascend unto the surface of the water. Brown.

Not with more madness, rolling from afar,
 The spumy waves proclaim the wat'ry war;
 And inunting upwards with a mighty roar,
 March onwards, and insult the rocky shore. Dry.
 The spumous and florid state of the blood, in passing through the lungs, arises from its own elasticity, and its violent motion, the aerial particles expanding themselves. Arbuthnot.

SPUN. The preterite and part. pass. of spin.

The nymph nor spun, nor dress'd with artful pride;
 Her vest was gather'd up, her hair was tied. Addis.

SPUNGE. n. s. [spongia, Lat.] A sponge.

See SPONGE.
 When he needs what you have gleaned, it is but squeezing you, and, spunge, you shall be dry again. Shakesp Hamlet.

Considering the motion that was impressed by the painter's hand upon the spunge, compounded with the specific gravity of the spunge and the resistance of the air, the spunge did mechanically and unavoidably move in that particular line of motion. Bentley's Sermons.

To SPUNGE. v. n. [rather To sponge.] To hang on others for maintenance.

This will maintain you, with the perquisite of spunging while you are young. Swift to Gay.

SPUNGINGHOUSE. n. s. [spunge and house.] A house to which debtors are taken before commitment to prison, where the bailiffs sponge upon them, or riot at their cost
 A bailiff kept you the whole evening in a spunginghouse. Swift.

SPUNGY. adj. [from spunge.]
 1. Full of small holes, and soft like a sponge.

Some English wool, vex'd in a Belgian loom,
 And into cloth of spungy softness made,
 Did into France or colder Denmark roam,
 To ruin with worse air our staple trade. Dryden.
 2. Wet; moist; watery.

I saw Jove's bird, the Roman eagle, wing'd
 From the spungy south to this part of the west,
 There vanish'd in the sun-beams. Shak. Cymbeline.
 3. Having the quality of imbibing.

There is no lady of more softer bowels,
 More spungy to suck in the sense of fear. Shak.

SPUNK. n. s. Rotten wood; touch-wood.
 See SPONK.

To make white powder, the best way is by the powder of rotten willows: spunk, or touchwood prepared, might perhaps make it russet. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SPUR. n. s. [ypupa, Sax. spore, Dan. Islan. and Dut. esperon, Fr.]

1. A sharp point fixed in the rider's heel, with which he pricks his horse to drive him forward.

He borrowing that homely armour for want of a better, had come upon the spur to redeem Philoclea's picture. Sidney.

Whether the body politick be
 A horse whereon the governour doth ride,
 Who, newly in the seat, that it may know
 He can command it, lets it straight feel the spur. Shakesp.

He presently set spurs to his horse, and departed with the rest of the company. Knolles's History of the Turks.

S P U

Was I for this intitled Sir,
 And girt with rusty sword and spur,
 For fame and honour to wage battle? Hudibras

2. Incitement; instigation. It is used with to before the effect. Dryden has used it with of; but, if he speaks properly, he means to make the following word personal.

Seeing then that nothing can move, unless there be some end, the desire whereof provoketh unto motion, how should that divine power of the soul, that spirit of our mind, ever stir itself into action, unless it have also the like spur? Hooker.

What need we any spur, but our own cause,
 To prick us to redress? Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

His laws are deep, and not vulgar; not made upon the spur of a particular occasion, but out of providence of the future, to make his people more and more happy. Bacon.

Reward is the spur of virtue in all good arts, all laudable attempts; and emulation, which is the other spur, will never be wanting, when particular rewards are proposed. Dryden.

The chief, if not only, spur to human industry and action, is meanness. Lacke.

The former may be a spur to the latter, till age makes him in love with the study, without any childish bait. Cheyne.

3. A stimulus; a prick; any thing that galls and teazes.

Grief and patience, rooted in him both,
 Mingle their spurs together. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

4. The sharp points on the legs of a cock with which he fights.

Of birds the bill is of like matter with the teeth; as for their spur, it is but a nail. Bacon.

Animals have natural weapons to defend and offend; some talons, some claws, some spurs and beaks. Ray.

5. Any thing standing out; a snag.

The strong-bas'd promontory
 Have I made shake, and pluckt up by the spurs
 The pine and cedar. Shakesp.

To SPUR. r. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick with the spur; to drive with the spur.

My friend, who always takes care to cure his horse of starting fits, spurred him up to the very side of the coach. Addison.

Your father, when he mounted,
 Rein'd 'em in strongly, and he spurr'd them hard. Dryden.

Who would be at the trouble of learning, when he finds his ignorance is earested? But when you brow-beat and maul them, you make them men; for though they have no natural mettle, yet, if they are spurred and kicked, they will mend their pace. Collier on Pride.

2. To instigate; to incite; to urge forward.

Lovers break not hours,
 Unless it be to come before their time:
 So much they spur their expedition. Shakesp.

Let the awe he has got upon their minds be so tempered with the marks of good will, that affection may spur them to their duty. Locke.

3. To drive by force.

Love will not be spurr'd to what it loaths. Shak.

To SPUR. r. n.

1. To travel with great expedition.

With backward bows the Parthians shall be there,
 And, spurring from the fight, confess their fear:
 A double wreath shall crown our Caesar's brows. Dryden.

2. To press forward.

Ascanius took th' alarm, while yet he led,
 And, spurring on, his equals soon o'erpass'd. Dryden's Æneid.

Some hold men, though they begin with infinite ignorance and error, yet, by spurring on, refine themselves. Grew.

SPUR'GALLED. adj. [spur and gall.]

Hurt with the spur.

S P U

I was not made a horse,
 And yet I bear a burthen like an ass,
Spurgall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shak.

What! shall each spurgall'd hackney of the day,
 Or each new-pension'd sycophant, pretend
 To break my windows, if I treat a friend? Pope.

SPURGE. n. s. [espurge, Fr. spurgie, Dut. from purgo, Lat.] A plant violently purgative. Spurge is a general name in English for all milky purgative plants. Skinner.

Every part of the plant abounds with a milky juice. There are seventy-one species of this plant, of which wartwort is one. Broadleaved spurge is a biennial plant, and used in medicine under the name of cataputia minor. The milky juice in these plants is used by some to destroy warts; but particular care should be taken in the application because it is a strong caustick. Miller.

That the leaves of cataputia, or spurge, being plucked upwards or downwards, perform their operations by purge or vomit, is a strange conceit, ascribing unto plants positional operations. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SPURGE Flax. n. s. [thymelæa, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE Laurel or Mezereon. n. s. [chamaedaphne, Lat.] A plant.

SPURGE Olive. n. s. [chamaelea, Lat.] A shrub.

SPURGE Wort. n. s. [xiphion, Lat.] A plant.

SPURIOUS. adj. [spurius, Lat.]

1. Not genuine; counterfeit; adulterine. Reformed churches reject not all traditions, but such as are spurious, superstitious, and not consonant to the prime rule of faith. White.

The coin that shows the first is generally rejected as spurious, nor is the other esteemed more authentic by the present Roman medalists. Addison on Italy.

If any thing else has been printed, in which we really had any hand, it is loaded with spurious additions. Swift.

2. Not legitimate; bastard.

Your Scipios, Cæsars, Pompeys, and your Catos, These gods on earth, are all the spurious brood Of violated maids. Addison's Cato.

SPURIOUSNESS. n. s. [from spurious.] Adulterateness; state of being counterfeit.

You proceed to Hippolytus, and speak of his spuriousness with as much confidence as if you were able to prove it. Waterland.

SPURLING. n. s. [esperlan, Fr.] A small sea-fish.

All-saints, do lay for porke and sowse,
 For sprats and spurlings for your house. Tusser.

To SPURN. v. a. [ypponnan, Sax.]

1. To kick; to strike or drive with the foot.

They suppos'd I could read bars of steel,
 And spurn in pieces post of adamant. Shak. H. VI.

Say my request's unjust,
 And spurn me back; but if it be not so,
 Thou art not honest. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

You that did void your rheum upon my beard,
 And foot me as you spurn a stranger cur
 Over your threshold. Shak. Merchant of Venice.

He in the surging smoke
 Uplifted spurn'd the ground. Milton.

To do a sovereign justice to myself,
 And spurn thee from my presence. Dry. Don. Seb.

Then will I draw up my legs, and spurn her from me with my foot. Addison's Spectator.

A milk-white bull shall at your altars stand,
 That threatens a fight, and spurns the rising sand. Pope.

When Athens sinks by fates unjust,
 When wild barbarians spurn her dust. Pope.
 Now they, who reach Parnassus' lofty crown;
 Employ their pains to spurn some others down. Pope.

S P U

2. To reject ; to scorn ; to put away with contempt ; to disdain.

In wisdom I should ask your name ;
But since thy outside looks so fair and warlike,
What safe and nicely I might well delay,
By rule of knighthood, I disdain and spurn. Shak.

3. To treat with contempt.

Domesticks will pay a more cheerful service,
When they find themselves not spurned because fortune has laid them at their masters feet. Locke.

To SPURN. v. a.

1. To make contemptuous opposition ; to make insolent resistance.

A son to blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person ;
Nay more, to spurn at your most royal image. Shak.
I, Pandulph, do religiously demand
Why thou against the church, our holy mother,
So wilfully dost spurn ? Shakesp. King John.

Instruct me why
Vanoc should spurn against our rule, and stir
The tributary provinces to war. Phillips's Briton.

2. To toss up the heels ; to kick or struggle.

The drunken chairman in the kennel spurns,
The glasses shatters, and his charge o'erturns. Gay.

spurting out of the blood will shew it. Wesem. Surg.

SPURWAY. n. s. [spur and way.] A horse-way ; a bridle road ; distinct from a road for carriages.

SPUTATION. n. s. [sputum, Lat.] The act of spitting.

A moist consumption receives its nomenclature from a moist sputation, or expectoration : a dry one is known by its dry cough. Harvey on Consumption.

To SPUTTER. v. n. [sputo, Lat.]

1. To emit moisture in small flying drops.

If a manly drop or two fall down,
It scalds along my cheeks, like the green wood,
That, sputtering in the flame, works outwards into tears. Dryden.

2. To fly out in small particles with some noise.

The nightly virgin, while her wheel she plies,
Foresees the storms impending in the skies,
When sparkling lamps their sputtering light advance,
And in the sockets oily bubbles dance. Dryden.

3. To speak hastily and obscurely, as with the mouth full ; to throw out the spittle by hasty speech.

A pinking owl sat sputtering at the sun, and asked him what he meant, to stand staring her in the eyes ? L'Estrange.
They could neither of them speak their rage ;
and so fell a sputtering at one another, like two roasting apples. Congreve.

Though he sputter through a session,
It never makes the least impression ;
Whate'er he speaks for madness goes. Swift.

To SPUTTER. v. a. To throw out with noise and hesitation.

Thou dost with lies the throne invade ;
Obtending heav'n for whate'er ills befall,
And sputtering under specious names thy gall. Dry.

In the midst of caresses, and without the least pretended incitement, to sputter out the basest accusations ! Swift.

S Q U

SPUTTER. n. s. Moisture thrown out in small drops.

SPUTTERER. n. s. [from sputter.] One that sputters.

SPY. n. s. [yspio, Welsh ; espion, Fr. spie, Dut. speculator, Lat. It is observed by a German, that spy has been in all ages a word by which the eye, or office of the eye, has been expressed : thus the Arimasprians of old, fabled to have but one eye, were so called from ari, which among the nations of Caucasus still signifies one, and spi, which has been received from the old Asiatick languages for an eye, sight, or one that sees.] One sent to watch the conduct or motions of others ; one sent to gain intelligence in an enemy's camp or country.

We'll hear poor rogues
Talk of court news, and we'll talk with them too,
And take upon's the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies. Shakesp. King Lear.

Spies of the Volscians
Held me in chase, that I was forc'd to wheel
Three or four miles about. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Every corner was possessed by diligent spies upon their master and mistress. Clarendon.

I come no spy,
With purpose to explore, or to disturb,
The secrets of your realm. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issued forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work. Milton.

Nothing lies hid from radiant eyes ;
All they subdue become their spies :
Secrets, as chosen jewels, are Presented to oblige the fair.

Over my men I'll set my careful spies,
To watch rebellion in their very eyes. Dryden.

These wretched spies of wit must then confess,
They take more pains to please themselves the less. Dryden.

Those who attend on their state, are so many spies placed upon them by the publick to observe them nearly. Atterbury.

To SPY. v. a. [See SPY. n. s.]

1. To discover by the eye at a distance, or in a state of concealment ; to espy.

Light hath no tongue, but is all eye ;
If it could speak as well as spy,
This were the worst that it could say,
That being well I fain would stay. Donne.

As tyger spied two gentle fawns.
A countryman spied a snake under a hedge,
half frozen to death. L'Estrange.

My brother Guyomar, methinks, I spy ;
He ste in his steps, and wonder in his eye. Dryd.

One in reading skipped over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration. Swift.

2. To discover by close examination.

Let a lawyer tell he has spied some defect in an entail, how solicitous are they to repair that error ! Decay of Piety.

3. To search or discover by artifice.

Moses sent to spy out Jaazar, and took the villages. Numbers.

To SPY. v. n. To search narrowly.

It is my nature's plague
To spy into abuse ; and oft my jealousy Shapes faults that are not. Shakesp. Othello.

SPY'BOAT. n. s. [spy and boat.] A boat sent out for intelligence.

Giving the colour of the sea to their spyboats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti. Arbutnot.

Why must old pigeons, and they stale, be drest,
When there's so many squab ones in the nest ? King

2. Fat ; thick and stout ; awkwardly bulky.

S Q U

The nappy ale goes round ;
Nor the squab daughter nor the wife were nice,
Each health the youths began, Sim pledg'd it twice. Betterton.

SQUAB. n. s. A kind of sofa or couch ; a stuffed cushion.

On her large squab you find her spread,
Like a fat corpse upon a bed. Pope.

SQUAB. adv. With a heavy sudden fall, plump and flat. A low word.

The eagle took the tortoise up into the air, and dropt him down, squab, upon a rock, that dashed him to pieces. L'Estrange.

Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle, were enow
To purge this field of such a hilding foe.

Shakesp.

7. A square number is when another, called its root, can be exactly found, which multiplied by itself produces the square. The following example is not accurate.

Advance thy golden mountains to the skies,
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise:
Add one round hundred; and, if that 's not fair,
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square.

Pope.

8. Quaterniou; number four: though perhaps, in the following lines, square may mean only capacity.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys
Which the most precious square of sense possesses,

And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear love.

Shakesp.

9. Level; equality.

Men should sort themselves with their equals;
for a rich man that converses upon the square with a poor man, shall certainly undo him. L'Estrange.
We live not on the square with such as these,
Such are our betters who can better please. Dryd.

10. Quartile; the astrological situation of planets, distant ninety degrees from each other.

Dreams are toys;
Yet for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be square'd by this. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Shak.

How frantically I square my talk?
Thou 'rt said to have a stubborn soul,
That apprehends no further than this world,
And square'st thy life accordingly.

Shakesp.

He employs not on us the hammer and the chizel, with an intent to wound or mangle us, but only to square and fashion our hard and stubborn hearts.

God has designed us a measure of our undertakings; his word and law, by the proportions whereof we are to square our actions.

The oracle was enforced to proclaim Socrates to be the wisest man in the world; because he applied his studies to the moral part, the squaring men's lives.

His preaching much, but more his practise wrought;

A living sermon of the truths he taught;
For his by rules severe his life he square'd,
That all might see the doctrine which they heard.

Dryden.

This must convince all such who have, upon a wrong interpretation, presumed to square opinions by theirs, and have in loud exclamations shew'd their abhorrence of university education.

5. To accommodate; to fit.

Eye me, blest providence, and square my trial
To my proportion'd strength.

the accidents of body. Watts's Logick.

SQUASH. n. s. [from quash.]

1. Any thing soft and easily crushed.

Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before it is a peascod, or a codling when it is almost an apple. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

2. [Melopepo.] A plant. Miller.
Squash is an Indian kind of pumpkin that grows apace. Boyle.

3. Any thing unripe; any thing soft. In contempt.
How like I then was to this kernel,
'This squash, this gentleman. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

4. A sudden fall.
Since they will overload my shoulders, I shall throw down the burden with a squash among them. Arbuthnot.

5. A shock of soft bodies.
My fall was stopped by a terrible squash, that sounded louder than the cataract of Niagara. Swift.

To SQUASH. v. a. To crush into pulp.
To SQUAT. v. n. [quattare, Ital.] To sit covering; to sit close to the ground.

SQUAT. adj. [from the verb.]
1. Covering; close to the ground.

Him there they found,
Squat like a toad close at the ear of Eve. Milton
Her dearest comrades never caught her Squat on her hams. Swift.

2. Short and thick; having one part close to another, as those of an animal contracted and covering.

The squill-insect is so called from some similitude to the squillfish: the head is broad and squat. Grew.

Alma in verse, in prose the mind,
Throughout the body, squat or tall,
Is bana fide all in all. Prior.

SQUAT. n. s.
1. The posture of cowering or lying close.

A stitch-fall'n cheek that hangs below the jaw;
Such wrinkles as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when with a grace
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face. Dryden.

2. A sudden fall.
Bruises, squats, and falls, which often kill others, can bring little hurt to those that are temperate. Herbert.

SQUAT. n. s. A sort of mineral.
The squat consists of tin ore and spar incorporated. Woodward.

To SQUEAK. v. n. [squaka, Swed.]

I see the new Arion sail,
The lute still trembling underneath thy nail;
At thy well sharpen'd thumb from shore to shore,
The trebles squeak for fear, the bases roar. Dryden.
Blunderbosses, planted in every loop-hole, go off at the squeaking of a fiddle, and the thrumming of a guitar. Dryden.

Who can endure to hear one of the rough old Romans squeaking through the mouth of an eunuch?
Addison.

How like brutes organs are to ours:
They grant, if higher powers think fit,
VOL. 11.

A bear might soon be made a wit;
And that, for any thing in nature,
Pigs might squeak love-odes, dogs bark satire. Prior.
In florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks. Pope.

Zoilus calls the companions of Ulysses the squeaking pigs of Homer. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To break silence or secrecy for fear or pain.

If he be obstinate, put a civil question to him upon the rack, and he squeaks, I warrant him. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

SQUEAK. n. s. [from the verb.] A shrill quick cry; a cry of pain.

Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In panick horror of pursuing dogs:
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Pour swine! as if their pretty hearts would break. Dryden.

To SQUEAL. v. n. [squala, Swed.] To cry with a shrill sharp voice; to cry with pain. Squeak seems a short sudden cry, and squeal a cry continued.

SQUEA'MISH. adj. [for quawmish, or qualmish, from qualm.] Nice; fastidious; easily disgusted; having the stomach easily turned; being apt to take offence without much reason. It is used always in dislike either real or ironical.

Yet, for countenance sake, he seemed very squamish in respect of the charge he had of the princess Pamela. Stidney.

Quoth he, that honour's very squeamish,
That takes a basting for a blemish;
For what's more honourable than scars,
Or skin to tatters rent in wars? Hudibras.

His nose is rustick, and perhaps too plain
The men of squeamish taste to entertain. Southern.
It is rare to see a man at once squeamish and vo-cacious. South.

There is no occasion to oppose the ancients and the moderns, or to be squeamish on either side. He that wisely conducts his mind in the pursuit of knowledge, will gather what lights he can from either. Locke.

SQUEA'MISHLY. adv. [from squeamish.]
In a fastidious manner.

SQUEA'MISHNESS. n. s. [from squeamish.]
Niceness; delicacy; fastidiousness.

The thorough-paced politician must laugh at the squeamishness of his conscience, and read it another lecture. South.

Upon their principles they may revive the worship of the host of heaven; it is but conquering a little squeamishness of stomach. Stillingfleet.

To administer this dose, fifty thousand operators, considering the squeamishness of some stomachs, and the peevishness of young children, is but reasonable. Swift.

To SQUEEZE. v. a. [sqiran, Sax. ysgwasgu, Welsh.]

1. To press; to crush between two bodies.
It is applied to the squeezing or pressing of things downwards, as in the presses for printing. Wilkins.

The sinking of the earth would make a convulsion of the air, and that crack must so shake or squeeze the atmosphere, as to bring down all the remaining vapours. Burnet.

He reap'd the product of his labour'd ground,
And squeez'd the combs with golden liquor crown'd. Dryden.

None acted mournings forc'd to show,
Or squeeze his eyes to make the torrent flow. Dryden.
When Florio speaks, what virgin could withstand,
If gentle Damon did not squeeze her hand? Pope.

2. To oppress; to crush; to harass by extortion.

In a civil war people must expect to be crushed and squeezed toward the burden. L'Estrange.

3. To force between close bodies.
To SQUEEZE. v. n.

1. To act or pass, in consequence of compression.

A concave sphere of gold filled with water and soldered up, upon pressing the sphere with great force, let the water squeeze through it, and stand all over its outside in multitudes of small drops, like dew, without bursting or cracking the body of the gold. Newton's Opticks.

What crowds of these, impenitently bold,
In sounds and jingling syllables grown old,
Still run on poets, in a raging vein,
E'en to the dregs and squeezings of the brain. Pope.

2. To force way through close bodies.
Many a public minister comes empty in; but when he has crammed his guts, he is fain to squeeze hard before he can get off. L'Estrange.

SQUEEZE. n. s. [from the verb.] Compression; pressure.

A subtle artist stands with wond'rous bag,
That bears imprison'd winds, of gentler sort
Than those that erst Laertes' son enclos'd:
Peaceful they sleep; but let the tuneful squeeze
Of lab'ring elbow rouse them, out they fly
Melodious, and with spritely accents charm. Philips.

SQUELCH. n. s. Heavy fall. A low ludicrous word.

He tore the earth which he had sav'd
From squelch of knight, and storm'd and rav'd. Hudibras.

So soon as the poor devil had recovered the squelch, away he scampers, bawling like mad. L'Estrange.

SQUIB. n. s. [schieben, Germ. to push forward. This etymology, though the best that I have found, is not very probable.]

1. A small pipe of paper filled with wild fire. Used in sport.

The armada at Calais, Sir Walter Raleigh was wont prettily to say, were suddenly driven away with squibs; for it was no more than a stratagem of fire-boats manless, and sent upon them. Bacon's War with Spain.

The forest of the south compareth the French valour to a squib, or fire of flax, which burns and crackles for a time, but suddenly extinguishes. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Lampoons like squibs, may make a present blaze;
But time, and thunder, pay respect to bays. Walter.
Furious he begins his march,
Drives rattling o'er a brazen arch;
With squibs and crackers arm'd, to throw
Among the trembling crowd below. Swift.

Criticks on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,
Proclaim the glory, and augment the state. Young.

2. Any petty fellow. Not in use.
Asked for their pass by every squib,
That list at will them to revile or snub. Spenser.

The squibs, in the common phrase, are called libellers. Tatler.

SQUILL. n. s. [squilla, scilla, Lat. squille,
French.]

1. A plant.
It hath a large acrid bulbous root, like an onion;
the leaves are broad; the flowers are like those of ornithogalum, or the starry hyacinth: they grow in a long spike, and come out before the leaves. Miller.

Seed or kernels of apples and pears, put into a squill, which is like a great onion, will come up earlier than in the earth itself. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

'Twill down like oxymel of squills. Roscommon.
The self-same atoms

Can, in the truffle, furnish out a feast;
And nauseate, in the scaly squill, the taste. Garth.

2. A fish.

3. An insect.
The squill insect is so called from some similitude to the squill fish, in having a long body covered with a crust, composed of several rings:
the head broad and squat. Grew.

SQUINANCY. n. s. [squinance, squi-nancie, Fr. squinantia, Ital.] An inflammation in the throat; a quinsy.

S Q U

STABILITY. n. s. [stabilité, Fr. from stabilitas, Lat.]

1. Stableness; steadiness; strength to stand.

By the same degrees that either of these happen, the stability of the figure is by the same lessened. Temple.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind, These ribs robust and vast in order join'd, Such strength and such stability impart, That storms above, and earthquakes under ground, Break not the pillars. Blackmore.

He began to try This and that hanging stone's stability. Cotton.

S T A

2. Fixedness; not fluidity.

Since fluidness and stability are contrary qualities, we may conceive that the firmness or stability of a body consists in this, that the particles which compose it do so rest, or are intangled, that there is among them a mutual cohesion. Boyle.

3. Firmness of resolution.

STABLE. adj. [stable, Fr. stabilis, Lat.]

1. Fixed; able to stand.

2. Steady; constant; fixed in resolution or conduct.

If man would be invariable, He must be like a rock, or stone, or tree;

STAFF. n. s. plur. staves. [stæp, Sax. s aff, Dan. staf, Dut.]

1. A stick with which a man supports himself in walking.

It much would please him,
That of his fortunes you would make a staff
To lean upon. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.
Grant me and my people the benefit of thy chastisements,
That thy rod as well as thy staff may comfort us. King Charles.

Is it probable that he, who had met whole armies in battle, should now throw away his staff out of fear of a dog? Broomie.

2. A prop; a support.

Hope is a lover's staff; walk hence with that,
And manage it against despairing thoughts. Shak.
The boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop. Shakespeare.

If a subject be a son, then ought he to be a staff unto his father, wherewith not to strike, but to sustain him. Holidau.

3. A stick used as a weapon; a club; the handle of an edged or pointed weapon. A club properly includes the notion of weight, and the staff of length.

I cannot strike at wretched kernes, whose arms
Are hir'd to bear their staves. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He that bought the skin ran greater risque than
't'other that sold it, and had the worse end of the staff. L'Estrange.

With forks and staves the felon they pursue. Dryd.

4. Any long piece of wood.

He forthwith from the glitt'ring staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign. Milton.

To his single eye, that in his forehead glar'd
Like a full moon, or a broad burnish'd shield,
A forky staff we dextrously applied,
Which, in the spacious socket turning round,
Scoop out the big round gelly from its orb. Addis.

5. Round or step of a ladder.

Descending and ascending by ladders, I ascended at one of six hundred and thirty-nine staves, or eighty-nine fathoms. Brown's Travels.

6. An ensign of an office; a badge of authority.

Methought this staff, mine office badge in court,
Was broke in twain. Shakesp. Henry VI.

All his officers brake their staves; but at their return new staves were delivered unto them. Hayward ou Eduard VI.

7. [Stef, Island.] A stanza; a series of verses regularly disposed, so as that, when the series is concluded, the same order begins again.

Cowley found out that no kind of staff is proper for an heroic poem, as being all too lyrical; yet though he wrote in couplets, where rhyme is freer from constraint, he affects half verses. Dryden.

When Crito once a panegyric show'd,
He beat him with a staff of his own ode. Harte.

STAFFISH. adj. [from staff.] Stiff; harsh. Obsolete.

A wit in youth not over dull, heavy, knotty, and lumpish, but hard, tough, and, though somewhat staffish, both for learning and whole course of living proveh always best. Ascham.

STAFFTREE. n. s. A sort of ever-green privet.

STAG. n. s. [Of this word I find no derivation.] The male red deer; the male of the hind.

To the place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish. Shakesp. As you like it.

The swift stag from under ground
Bore up his branching head. Milton.

Th' inhabitants of seas and skies shall change;
And fish on shore, and stags in air shall range. Dry.

The stag
Hears his own feet, and thinks they sound like more,
And fears his hind legs will o'ertake his fore. Pope.

STAGE. n. s. [estage, Fr.]

1. A floor raised to view, on which any show is exhibited; a raised floor of temporary use.

2. The theatre; the place of scenick entertainments.

And much good do't you then,
Brave plush and velvet men;
Can feed on ort; and, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. Ben Jonson.

Those two Mytilene brethren, basely born, crept out of a small galliot unto the majesty of great kings. Herein admire the wonderful changes and chances of these worldly things, now up, now down, as if the life of man were not of much more certainty than a stage play. Knolles's History.

I maintain, against the enemies of the stage, that patterns of piety, decently represented, may second the precepts. Dryden.

One Livius Andronicus was the first stage player in Rome. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

Knights, squires, and steeds must enter on the stage. Pope.

3. Any place where any thing is publicly transacted or performed.

When we are born, we cry that we are come
To this great stage of fools. Shakesp. King Lear.

4. [Statio, Lat.] A place in which rest is taken on a journey; as much of a journey as is performed without intermission.

I shall put you in mind where it was you promised to set out, or begin your first stage; and beseech you to go before me as my guide. Hammond's Practical Catechism.

Our next stage brought us to the mouth of the Tiber. Addison.

From thence compell'd by craft and age,
She makes the head or latest stage. Prior.

We must not expect that our journey through the several stages of this life should be all smooth and even. Atterbury.

By opening a passage from Muscovy to China, and marking the several stages, it was a journey of so many days. Baker.

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive as dead. Young.

5. A single step of gradual process.

The changes and vicissitudes in wars are many; but chiefly in the feats or stages of the war, the weapons, and the manner of the conduct. Bacon's Essays.

This is by some called the first stage of a consumption, but I had rather call it an ill habit preparatory to that distemper. Blackmore.

To prepare the soul to be a fit inhabitant of that holy place to which we aspire, is to be brought to perfection by gradual advances through several hard and laborious stages of discipline. Rogers.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp's Surg.

To STAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exhibit publicly. Out of use.

I love the people;
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause. Shakesp. Meas. for Meas.

The quick comedians
Extemp'rally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

STAGECOACH. n. s. [stage and coach.]

A coach that keeps its stages; a coach that passes and repasses on certain days for the accommodation of passengers.

The story was told me by a priest, as we travelled in a stagecoach. Addison.

When late their mirth sides stagecoaches show,
And their stiff horses through the town move slow,
Then let the prudent walker shoes provide. Gay.

STAGEPLAY. n. s. [stage and play.]

Theatrical entertainment.

This rough-cast unlearn'd poetry was instead of stageplays for one hundred and twenty years. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

STAGEPLAYER. n. s. One who publicly represents actions on the stage.

Among slaves who exercised polite arts, none sold so dear as stageplayers or actors. Arbutnot on Coins.

STAGER. n. s. [from stage.]

1. A player.

You, safe in your stage clothes,
Dare quit, upon your oaths,
The stagers and the stage wrights too. B. Jonson.

2. One who has long acted on the stage of life; a practitioner; a person of cunning.

I've heard old cunning stagers
Say, fools for argument use wagers. Hudibras.

One experienced stager, that had baffled twenty traps and tricks before, discovered the plot. L'Estrange.

Some stagers of the wiser sort
Made all these idle wonderments their sport:
But he, who heard what ev'ry fool could say,
Would never fix his thought but trim his time away. Dryden.

One cries out, these stagers,
Come in good time to make more work for wagers.
Dryden.

Be by a parson cheated!
Had you been cunning stagers,
You might yourselves be treated
By captains and by majors.
Swift.

STA'GGEVIL. n. s. A disease in horses.
Dict.

STA'GGARD. n. s. [from stag.] A four year old stag.
Ainsworth.

To STAGGER. v. n. [staggeren, Dut.]

1. To reel; not to stand or walk steadily.

He began to appear sick and giddy, and to stag- ger; after which he fell down as dead.
Boyle.

He struck with all his might
Full on the helmet of th' unwary knight;
Deep was the wound; he staggered with the blow.
Dryden.

Them revelling the Tentyrites invade,
By giddy heads and staggering legs betray'd.
The immediate forerunners of an apoplexy are a vertigo, staggering, and loss of memory.
Arbuth.

2. To faint; to begin to give way.

The enemy stagers: if you follow your blow, he falls at your feet; but if you allow him respite, he will recover his strength.
Addison.

3. To hesitate; to fall into doubt; to become less confident or determined.

A man may, if he were fearful, stagger in this attempt.
Shakespeare.

He staggered not at the promise of God through unbelief; but was strong in faith. Romans, iv. 20.

Three means to fortify belief are experience, reason, and authority: of these the most potent is authority; for belief upon reason, or experience, will stagger.
Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread
Their light opinions like these Epicures;

For so their staggering thoughts are comforted,
And other men's assent their doubt assures. Davies.

If thou confidently depend on the truth of this, without any doubting or staggering, this will be accepted by God.
Hammond.

But let it inward sink and drown my mind:
Falsehood shall want its triumph: I begin
To stagger; but I'll prop myself within.
Dryden.

To STA'GGER. v. a.

1. To make to stagger; to make to reel.

That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire,
That staggers thus my person. Shakesp. Rich. II.

2. To shock; to alarm; to make less steady or confident.

The question did at first so stagger me,
Bearing a state of mighty moment in't.
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Whosoever will read the story of this war, will find himself much staggered, and put to a kind of riddle.
Howel.

When a prince fails in honour and justice, 'tis enough to stagger his people in their allegiance.
L'Estrange.

The shells being lodged with the belemnites, se-lenites, and other like natural fossils, it was enough to stagger a spectator, and make him ready to entertain a belief that these were so too. Woodward.

STA'GGERS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A kind of horse apoplexy.

His horse past cure of the fives, stark spoil'd with the stagers.
Shakesp.

2. Madness; wild conduct; irregular behaviour. Out of use.

I will throw thee from my care for ever
Into the stagers, and the careless lapse
Of youth and ign'rance.
Shakespeare.

STA'GNANCY. n. s. [from stagnant.] The state of being without motion or ventilation.

STAGNANT. adj. [stagnans, Lat.] Mottionless; still; not agitated; not flowing; not running.

What does the flood from putrefaction keep.

Should it be stagnant in its ample seat,
The sun would through it spread destructive heat.
Blackmore.

'Twas owing to this hurry and action of the water, that the sand now was cast into layers, and not to a regular settlement, from a water quiet and stagnant.
Woodward.

Immur'd and buried in perpetual sloth,
That gloomy slumber of the stagnant soul. Irene.

To STAGNATE. v. n. [stagnum, Lat.]
To lie motionless; to have no course or stream.

The water which now arises must have all stag- nated at the surface, and could never possibly have been refunded forth upon the earth, had not the strata been thus raised up.
Woodward.

The aliment moving through the capillary tubes stagnates, and unites itself to the vessel through which it flows.
Arbuthnot.

Where creeping waters ooze,
Where mashes stagnate.
Thomson.

STAGNATION. n. s. [from stagnate.]

Stop of course; cessation of motion. It is often applied figuratively to moral or civil images.

As the Alps surround Geneva on all sides, they form a vast basin, where there would be a constant stagnation of vapours, did not the north wind scatter them from time to time.
Addison.

To what great ends subservient is the wind!
Behold, where'er this active vapour flies,
It drives the clouds, and agitates the skies:
This from stagnation and corruption saves
Th' aerial ocean's ever-rolling waves. Blackmore.

STAI'D. part. adj. [from stay.] Sober; grave; regular; composed; not wild;
not volatile.

Put thyself
Into a 'haviour of less fear, ere wildness
Vanish my *staid*er senses. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

This seems to our weaker view,
O'erlaid with black, staid wisdom's hue. Milton.

I should not be a persuader to them of studying much in the spring, after three years that they have well laid their grounds; but to ride out, with prudent and staid guides, to all the quarters of the land.
Milton on Education.

I am the more at ease in sir Roger's family, because it consists of sober and staid persons. Addis.

STAI'DNESS. n. s. [from staid.] Sobriety; gravity; regularity; contrariety to wildness.

The boiling blood of youth, fiercely agitating the fluid air, hinders that serenity and fixed staidness which is necessary to so severe an intensesness.
Glanville's Scepis.

If sometimes he appears too gay, yet a secret gracefulness of youth accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting.
Dryden's Preface to Ovid.

To STAIN. v. a. [ystaenio, Welsh, from ys and taenu.

Rhag Gwyar or Gnawd,
Afar ystaenawd.
Taliessyn, an old British poet.]

1. To blot; to spot; to maculate.

Lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why then she lives. Shakespeare's King Lear.

From the gash a stream
His armour stain'd, erewhile so bright. Milton.

Embrace again, my sons: be foes no more,
Nor stain your country with your children's gore.
Dryden.

2. To dye.

3. To disgrace; to spot with guilt or infamy.

Of honour void, of innocence, of faith, of purity,
Our wonted ornaments now soil'd and stain'd.
Milton.

STAIN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Blot; spot; discoloration.

We nowhere meet with a more pleasing show than what appears in the heavens at the rising and setting of the sun, which is wholly made up of those different stains of light that shew themselves in clouds of a different situation.
Addison.

Swift trouts, diversified with crimson stains:
And pikes, the tyrants of the wat'ry plains. Pope.

2. Taint of guilt or infamy.

Nor death itself can wholly wash their stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains.
The reliques of inveterate vice they wear,
And spots of sin. Dryden's Aeneid.

To solemn actions of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty: are they only in religion a stain?
Hooker.

Our opinion, concerning the force and virtue which such places have, is, I trust, without any blemish or stain of heresy.
Hooker.

Then heav'n and earth, renew'd, shall be made pure

To sanctity, that shall receive no stain. Milton.

Ulysses bids his friends to cast lots; for if he had made the choice himself, they whom he had rejected might have judged it a stain upon them for want of merit. Broomer.

3. Cause of reproach; shame.

Hereby I will lead her that is the praise, and yet
the stain, of all womankind. Sidney.

STAINER. n. s. [from stain.] One who stains; one who blots; one who dyes;
a dyer.

STAINLESS. adj. [from stain.]

1. Free from blots or spots. Not in use.

The phenix wings are not so rare
For faultless length and stainless hue. Sidney.

2. Free from sin or reproach

I cannot love him;
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth. Shak.

STAIR. n. s. [stæger, Sax. steghe, Dut.]

Steps by which we rise in ascent from the lower part of a building to the upper.

Stair was anciently used for the whole order of steps; but stair now, if it be used at all, signifies, as in Milton, only one flight of steps.

A good builder to a high tower will not make his stair upright, but winding almost the full compass about, that the steepness be the more insensible. Sidney.

How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, weary yet upon their chins

The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars!
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs

That mount the capitol. Shakesp.

I would have one only goodly room above stairs, of some forty foot high. Bacon's Essays.

Sir James Tirrel repairing to the Tower by night, attended by two servants, stood at the stair-foot,
and sent these two villains to execute the murder.
Bacon.

The stairs were such as whereon Jacob saw Angels ascending and descending. Milt. Par. Lost.

Satan now on the lower stair,
That seal'd by steps of gold to heaven gate,
Looks down with wonder at the sudden view
Of all this world. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Trembling he springs,
As terror had increas'd his feet with wings;
Nor staid for stairs, but down the depth he threw
His body; on his back the door he drew. Dryden.

STAIRCASE. n. s. [stair and case.] The part of a fabrick that contains the stairs.

To make a complete staircase is a curious piece of architecture. Watton.

I cannot forbear mentioning a staircase, where the easiness of the ascent, the disposition of the lights, and the convenient landing, are admirably contrived. Addison on Italy.

STAKE. n. s. [stæca, Sax. stæck, Dut.
estaca, Span.]

1. A post or strong stick fixed in the ground.

The more I shook the stake which he had planted in the ground of my heart, the deeper still it sunk into it. Sidney.

His credit in the world might stand the poor town in great stead, as hitherto their ministers foreign estimation hath been the best stake in their hedge. Hooker.

He wanted pikes to set before his archers; Instead whereof sharp stakes, pluck'd out of hedges, They pitched in the ground. Shakesp. Henry VI.

In France the grapes that make the wine grow upon low vines bound to small stakes, and the raised vines in arbors make but verjuice. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Or sharpen stakes, or head the forks, or twine The fallow twigs to tie the straggling vine. Dryden.

2. A piece of long rough wood.

While he whirl'd in fiery circles round The brand, a sharpen'd stake strong Dryas found, And in the shoulder's joint inflicts the wound. Dryden.

3. Any thing placed as a palisade or fence.

That hollow I should know: what are you? speak: Come not too near, you fall on iron stakes else. Milton.

4. The post to which a beast is tied to be baited.

We are at the stake, And bay'd about with many enemies. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Have you not set mine honour at the stake, And baited it with all th' unmuzzled thoughts That tyrannous heart can think? Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

5. Any thing pledged or wagered.

I know not well whence it has this meaning: I suppose it is so named from being at stake, that is, in a state of hazard like an animal baited, and in hazard from which it cannot be withdrawn.

'Tis time short pleasure now to take, Of little life the best to make, And manage wisely the last stake. Cowley.

O then, what interest shall I make To save my last important stake, When the most just have cause to quake? Rosc.

He ventures little for so great a stake. More. Th' increasing sound is borne to either shore, And for their stakes the throwing nations fear. Dryden.

The game was so contrived, that one particular cast took up the whole stake; and, when some others came up, you laid down. Arbutnot.

6. The state of being hazarded, pledged, or wagered.

When he heard that the lady Margaret was declared for it, he saw plainly that his kingdom must again be put to the stake, and that he must fight for it. Bacon's Henry VII.

I have seen staples of doors and nails born.

The silver ring she pull'd, the door reclos'd:
The hilt, obedient to the silken cord,
To the strong staple's inmost depth restor'd,
Secur'd the valves.

STAR. n. s. [stereon, Sax. sterre, Dut.]

1. One of the luminous bodies that appear in the nocturnal sky.

When an astronomer uses the word stars in its strict sense, it is applied only to the fixt stars; but in a large sense it includes the planets.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beech
Fillop the stars;

Murdering impossibility, to make
What cannot be, slight work.

Either the Syracusan's art translates Heaven's form, the course of things, and human fates;

Th' included spirit, serving the star-deck'd signs,
The living work in constant motions winds.

As from a cloud his fulgent head,
And shape star bright, appear'd.

2. The pole star.

Well, if you be not turned Turk, there is no more sailing by the star.

1. To look with fixed eyes; to look with wonder, impudence, confidence, stupidity, or horror.

Her modest eyes, abashed to behold
So many gazers on her do stare,

Upon the lowly ground affixed are.
Their staring eyes sparkling with fervent fire,
And ugly shapes, did nigh the man dismay,
That, were it not for shame, he would retire.

Look not big, nor stare nor fret:
I will be master of what is mine own.

They were never satisfied with staring upon their masts, sails, cables, ropes, and tacklings.

The tread of many feet steering this way;
Perhaps my enemies, who come to stare

At my affliction, and perhaps t'insult.
A satyr, that comes staring from the woods,
Must not at first speak like an orator.

And, while he stares around with stupid eyes,
His brows with berries and his temples dyes.
What dost thou make a shipboard?

Art thou of Bethlem's noble college free,
Stark staring mad, that thou shouldst tempt the sea?

Struggling, and wildly staring on the skies
With scarce recover'd sight.

Trembling the miscerent staid;
He stare'd and roll'd his baggard eyes around.

Break out in crackling flames to shun thy snare,
Or hiss a dragon, or a tyger stare.

Why dost thou not
Try the virtue of that gorgon face,
To stare me into statue?

I was unluckily prevented by the presence of a bear, which, as I approached with my present, threw his eyes in my way, and stared me out of my resolution.

The wit at his elbow gave him a touch upon the shoulder, and stared him in the face with so bewitching a grin, that the whistler relaxed his fibres.

She paid a tradesman once, to make him stare.

Gods! shall the ravisher display your hair,
While the fops envy, and the ladies stare?

Through nature and through art she rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd:
In vain; her hearers had no share
In all she spoke, except to stare.

2. To stare in the face. To be undeniably evident.

Is it possible for people without scruple to offend against the law which they carry about them in indelible characters, and that stares them in the face whilst they are breaking it?

3. To stand out.
Take off all the staring straws and jaggs in the hive, and make them smooth.

STARE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Fixed look.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red:
He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair.

2. [Sturnus, Lat.] Starling. A bird.

To START. v. n. [startzen, Germ.]

1. To feel a sudden and involuntary twitch or motion of the animal frame, on the apprehension of danger.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that kind it is a motion of shrinking; and likewise an inquisition, in the beginning, what the matter should be, and in that kind it is a motion of erection; and, therefore, when a man would listen suddenly to any thing, he starteth; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend.

A shape appear'd
Bending to look on me: I started back,
It started back.

An open enemy to flattery, especially from a friend, from whom he started to meet the slightest appearance of that servile kindness.

I start as from some dreadful dream,
And often ask myself if yet awake.

As his doubts decline,
He dreads just vengeance, and he starts at sin.

S T A

He starts at every new appearance, and is always waking and solicitous for fear of a surprize.

2. To rise suddenly; commonly with up.

There started up, in queen Elizabeth's reign, a new presbyterian sect, which tendered a form of discipline to the queen and to the state.

Charm'd by these strings, trees starting from the ground,
Have followed with delight the powerful sound.

They starting up beheld the heavy sight.

The mind often works in search of some hidden idea, though sometimes they start up in our minds of their own accord.

3. To move with sudden quickness.

The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start, and raise up their drowsy heads.

4. To shrink; to winch.

What trick, what starting hole, canst thou find out, to hide thee from this open shame?

With trial fire touch me his finger end;
If he be chaste, the flame will back descend,
And turn him to no pain; but, if he start,
It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

5. To deviate.

The lords and gentlemen take all the meanest sort upon themselves; for they are best able to bring them in, whensoever any of them starteth out.

Th' old drudging sun from his long-beaten way
Shall at thy voice start and misguide the day;
The jocund orbs shall break their measur'd pace,
And stubborn poles change their allotted place.

I rank him with the prodigies of fame,
With things which start from nature's common rules,
With bearded infants, and with teeming mules.

Keep your soul to the work when ready to start aside, unless you will be a slave to every wild imagination.

6. To set out from the barrier at a race.

It seems to be rather a terminus a quo than a true principle, as the starting post is none of the horse's legs.

Should some god tell me, that I should be born
And cry again, his offer I should scorn;
Asham'd, when I have ended well my race,
To be led back to my first starting place.

The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race.

The clangor of the trumpet gives the sign;
At once they start, advancing in a line.

7. To set out on any pursuit.

Fair course of passion, where two lovers start,
And run together, heart still yok'd with heart.

People, when they have made themselves weary, set up their rest upon the very spot where they started.

When two start into the world together, he that is thrown behind, unless his mind proves generous, will be displeas'd with the other.

To START. v. a.

1. To alarm; to disturb suddenly; to startle.

Direness familiar to my slaughterous thoughts,
Cannot once start me.

Being full of supper and distemp'ring draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come
To start my quiet?

The very print of a fox-foot would have start'd ye.

2. To make to start or fly hastily from a hiding-place; to rouse by a sudden disturbance.

The blood more stirs,
To rouse a lion than to start a hare, Shakesp.
I started from its vernal bow'r
The rising game, and chac'd from flow'r to flow'r. Pope.

3. To bring into motion; to produce to view or notice; to produce unexpectedly.

Conjure with 'em!
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar. Shakesp.

START. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A motion of terrou; a sudden twitch or contraction of the frame from fear or alarm.

These flaws and starts would well become
A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shakesp.

The fright awaken'd Arcite with a start;
Against his bosom bound'd his heaving heart. Dry.

2. A sudden rousing to action; excitement.

How much had I to do to calm his rage!
Now fear I this will give it start again. Shak. Haml.

3. Sally; vehement eruption; sudden effusion.

'Thou art like enough, through vassal fear,
Base inclination, and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay. Shakesp.

Several starts of fancy, off-hand, look well enough; but bring them to the test, and there is nothing in 'em. L'Estrange.

Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul? Addison's Cata.

We were well enough pleased with this start of thought. Addison.

4. Sudden fit; intermitted action.

Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For she did speak in starts distractedly. Shakesp.

Thy forms are studied arts,
Thy subtle ways be narrow straits,
Thy curtesy but sudden starts,
And what thou call'st thy gifts are haits. Ben Jonson.

Nature does nothing by starts and leaps, or in a hurry; but all her motions are gradual. L'Estrange.

An ambiguous expression, a little chagrin, or a start of passion, is not enough to take leave upon. Collier.

5. A quick spring or motion; a shoot; a push.

In strings, the more they are wound up and strained, and thereby give a more quick start back, the more treble is the sound; and the slack-er they are, or less wound up, the baser is the sound. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Both cause the string to give a quicker start. Bacon.

How could water make those visible starts upon freezing, but by some subtle freezing principle which as suddenly shoots into it? Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

6. First emission from the barrier; act of setting out.

You stand like greyhounds in the slips,
Straining upon the start. Shak. esp. Hen. V.

All leapt to chariot,
And every man then for the start cast in his proper lot. Chapman.

If a man deal with another upon conditions,
The start of first performance is all. Bacon.

7. To get the start. To begin before another; to obtain advantage over another.

Get the start of the majestick world.
Shak. Julius Cæsar.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party during that time doth cautiously get the start and advantage at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

Doubtless some other heart
Will get the start;
And, stepping in before,
Will take possession of the sacred store
Of hidden sweets. Crashaw.

Ere the knight could do his part,
The squire had got so much the start,
If ad to the lady done his errand,
And told her all his tricks aforehand. Hudibras.

She might have forsaken him, if he had not got the start of her. Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

The reason why the mathematics and mechanical arts have so much got the start in growth of other sciences, may be resolved into this, that their progress hath not been retarded by that reverential awe of former discoveries. Glanville.

The French year has got the start of ours more in the works of nature than in the new style. Addison.

STARTER. n. s. [from start.]

1. One that shrinks from his purpose.

Stand to it boldly, and take quarter,
To let thee see I am no starter. Hudibras.

2. One who suddenly moves a question or objection.

To STARTLE. v. n. [from start.] To shrink; to move on, feeling a sudden impression of alarm or terrou.

The startling steed was seiz'd with sudden fright,
And, bounding, o'er the pommel cast the knight. Dryden.

Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
Addison's Cato.

My frighted thoughts run back,
And startle into madness at the sound. Addis. Cato.

To STARTLE. v. a.

1. To fright; to shock; to impress with sudden terrou, surprise, or alarm.

Such whisp'ring wak'd her, but with startled eye
On Adam. Milton.

To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing startle the dull night
From his watch-tower in the skies,
Till the dappled dawn doth rise. Milton.

The supposition that angels assume bodies needs not startle us, since some of the most ancient and most learned lathers seemed to believe that they had bodies. Locke.

Incest! Oh name it not!
The very mention shakes my inmost soul:
The gods are startled in their peaceful mansions,
And nature sickens, at the shocking sound. Smith.

His books had been solemnly burnt at Rome as heretical: some people, he found, were startled at it; so he was forced boldly to make reprisals, to buoy up their courage. Aterbury.

Now the leaf
Incessant rustles, from the mournful grove
Of startling such as studious walk below,
And slowly circles through the waving air. Thoms.

No state can be named wherein any part of the body of those imperial laws hath the just force of a law, otherwise than as custom hath particularly induced it. Selden.

6. The community; the publick; the commonwealth.

If any thing more than your sport
Did move your greatness, and this noble state,
To call on him, he hopes it is no other
But for your health's sake. Shak. Troilus and Cress.

A state's anger
Should not take knowledge either of fools or women. Ben Jonson.

I hear her talk of state matters and the senate. Ben Jonson.

What he got by fortune,
It was the state that now must make his right. Dan.
The state hath given you licence to stay on land for the space of six weeks. Bacon.

S T A

It is better the kingdom should be in good estate, with particular loss to many of the people, than that all the people should be well, and the state of the kingdom altogether lost. Hayward.

It is a bad exchange to wound a man's own conscience, thereby to salve state sores. King Charles.

For you we stay'd, as did the Grecian state Till Alexander came. Waller.

Since they all live by begging, it were better for the state to keep them. Graunt.

These are the realms of unrelenting fate;
And awful Rhadamanthus rules the state;
He hears and judges. Dryden's Æneid.

7. Hence single state, in Shakespeare, for individuality.

When in triumphant state the British muse,
True to herself, shall barb'rous aid refuse. Roscommon.

There kings receiv'd the marks of sov'reign pow'r:
In state the monarchs march'd; the victors bore
The awful axes and the rods before. Dryden's Æn.

Let my attendants wait; I'll be alone:
Where least of state, there most of love is shown. Dryden.

To appear in their robes would be a troublesome piece of state. Collier.

At home surrounded by a servile crowd,
Prompt to abuse, and in detraction loud;
Abroad begirt with men, and swords, and spears,
His very state acknowledging his fears. Prim.

If God has delivered me up to evil spirits, to be dragged by them to places of torments, could it be any comfort to me that they found me upon a bed of state? Law.

12. Dignity; grandeur.

She instructed him how he should keep state, and yet with a modest sense of his misfortunes. Bacon's Hen. VII.

Of ripest years, and hairs all hoary gray,
That with a staff his feeble steps did steer,
Lest his long way his aged limbs should tire. Spens.

If a pilot cannot see the pole star, it can be no fault in him to steer his course by such stars as do best appear to him. King Charles.

To STEER. v. n.

1. To direct a course at sea.

As when a ship, by skilful steersman wrought,
Nigh river's mouth, or foreland, where the wind
Veers oft, as oft so steers, and shifts her sail. Milton.

In a creature, whose thoughts are more than the sands and wider than the ocean, fancy and passion must needs run him into strange courses, if reason, which is his only star and compass, be not that he steers by. Locke.

2. To conduct himself.

STEERAGE. n. s. [from steer.]

selling of a thing otherwise than it really is; as, if a man should sell that for his own estate which is actually another man's.

It discerneth of crimes of stellionate, and the inchoations towards crimes capital, not actually committed. Bacon.

STEM. n. s. [stemma, Lat.]

1. The stalk; the twig.

Two lovely berries molded on one stem,
So with two seeming bodies, but one heart. Shak.
After they are first shot up thirty foot in length, they spread a very large top, having no bough
nor twig in the trunk or stem. Raleigh's History.

Set them aslope a reasonable depth, and then they will put forth many roots, and so carry more shoots upon a stem. Bacon.

This, ere it was in th' earth,
God made, and ev'ry herb before it grew
On the green stem. Milton.

The stem thus threaten'd and the sap in thee,
Drops all the branches of that noble tree. Waller.
Farewell you flow'rs, whose buds with early care
I watch'd, and to the cheerful sun did rear:

Who now shall bind your stems? or, when you fall,
With fountain streams your fainting souls recall? Dryden.

The low'ring spring with lavish rain
Beats down the slender stem and bearded grain. Dryden.

2. Family; race; generation. Pedigrees are drawn in the form of a branching tree.

I will assay her worth to celebrate;
And so attend ye toward her glittering state,
Where ye may all, that are of noble stem, Approach. Milton.

Whosoever will undertake the imperial diadem, must have of his own wherewith to support it;
which is one of the reasons that it hath continued
th' se two ages and more in that stem, now so much spoken of. Howel's Vocal Forest.

Dost thou in hounds aspire to deathless fame?
Learn well their lineage and their ancient stem. Tickell.

3. Progeny; branch of a family.

This is a stem
Of that victorious stock, and let us fear
His native mightiness. Shakesp. Henry V.

4. [Stammen, Swed.] The prow or forepart of a ship.

Orante's barque, ev'n in the hero's view,
From stem to stern by waves was overborn. Dryd.

To STEM. v. a. [stemma, Island.] To oppose a current; to pass cross or forward notwithstanding the stream.

They on the trading flood,
Through the wide Ethiopian to the cape,
Ply, stemming nightly tow'rd the pole. Milton.

Above the deep they raise their scaly crests,
And stem the flood with their erected breasts. Denham.

In shipping such as this, the Irish kern
And untaught Indian on the stream did glide,
Ere sharp-keel'd boats to stem the flood did learn,
Or fin-like oars did spout from either side. Dryd.
At length Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age,
And drove those holy Vandals off the stage. Pope.

STENCH. n. s. [from stencan, Sax.]

1. A stink; a bad smell.

Death, death, oh amiable and lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench, sound rottenness,
Arise forth from thy couch of lasting night.

Shakesp. King John.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noisome stench,

Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shak.

Physicians, by the stench of feathers, cure the rising of the mother. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The ministry will be found the salt of the earth,
the thing that keeps societies of men from stench
and corruption. South.

The hoary Nar

Corrupted with the stench of sulphur flows,
And into Tiber's streams th' infected current throws. Addison.

2. I find it used once for a good smell.

Black bulls and bearded goats on altars lie,
And clouds of sav'ry stench involute the sky. Dryd.

TO STENCH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make to stink. Not proper, or in use.
The foulness of the ponds only stencheth the water. Mortimer.

2. [For staunch, corruptly.] To stop; to hinder to flow.

They had better skill to let blood than stench it.
King Charles.

Restringtons to stench, and incussatives to thicken the blood. Harvey on Consumptions.

STENOGRAPHY. n. s. [στενός and γραφία.]
Short-hand.

O the accurst stenography of state!

The princely eagle shrunk into a bat. Cleveland.

STENTOROPHONICK. adj. [from Sten- tor, the Homeric herald, whose voice was as loud as that of fifty men, and φωνή, a voice.] Loudly speaking or sounding.

Of this stentorophonick horn of Alexander there is a figure preserved in the Vatican.

Derham's Physico-Theology.

TO STEP. v. n. [stæppan, Sax. stappen,
Dut.]

1. To move by a single change of the place of the foot.

One of our nation hath proceeded so far, that he was able, by the help of wings, in a running pace, to step constantly ten yards at a time.

Wilkins's Mathematical Magick.

2. To advance by a sudden progression.

Whosoever first, after the troubling the water, stepped in, was made whole. John, v. 4.

Ventidius lately

Buried his father, by whose death he 's stepp'd into a great estate. Shakesp. Timon.

3. To move mentally.

When a person is hearing a sermon, he may give his thoughts leave to step back so far as to recollect the several heads. Watts.

They are stepping almost three thousand years back into the remotest antiquity, the only true mirrour of that ancient world.

Pope's Pref. to the Iliad.

4. To go; to walk.

I am in blood

Stept in so far, that should I wade no more,
Returning were as tedious as go o'er. Shak. Macb.

5. To come as it were by chance.

The old poets step in to the assistance of the medalist. Addison.

6. To take a short walk.

See where he comes, so, please you, step aside:
I'll know his grievance. Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

My brothers, when they saw me wearied out,
Stepp'd, as they said, to the next thicket side.

To bring me berries. Milton.

When your master wants a servant who happens to be abroad, answer, that he had but that minute stept out. Suift.

7. To walk gravely, slowly, or resolutely.

Pyrrhus, the most ancient of all the bashaws, stept forth, and, appealing unto his mercies, earnestly requested him to spare his life.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

When you stepp'd forth, how did the monster rage,

In scorn of your soft looks and tender age! Cowl.

Home the swain retreats,

His flock before him stepping to the fold. Thomson's Summer.

STEP. n. s. [στῆπ, Sax. stap, Dut.]

1. Progression by one removal of the foot.

Thou sound and firm-set earth,
Hear not my steps, which way they walk.

Shakesp. Macbeth.

Ling'ring perdition, worse than any death
Can be at once, shall step by step attend

You and your ways. Shakesp. Tempest.

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden path,
When life was hazarded in every step? Addis. Cato.

2. One remove in climbing; hold for the foot; a stair.

While Solyman lay at Buda, seven bloody heads of bishops slain in battle were set in order upon a wooden step. Knolles.

The breadth of every single step or stair should be never less than one foot, nor more than eighteen inches. Wotton.

Those heights where William's virtue might have staid,

And on the subject world look'd safely down,
By Marlbro' pass'd, the props and steps were made

Sublimar yet to raise his queen's renown. Prior.

It was a saying among the ancients, Truth lies in a well; and to carry on this metaphor, we may justly say, that logic does supply us with steps, whereby we may go down to reach the water. Watts.

3. Quantity of space passed or measured by one removal of the foot.

The gradus, a Roman measure, may be translated a step, or the half of a passus or pace.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

4. A small length; a small space.

There is but a step between me and death.

1 Sam. xx. 3.

5. [In the plural.] Walk; passage.

O may thy pow'r, propitious still to me,
Conduct my steps to find the fatal tree

In this deep forest. Dryden's Æneid.

6. Gradation; degree.

The same sin for substance hath sundry steps and degrees, in respect whereof one man be-cometh a more heinous offender than another.

Perkins.

7. Progression; act of advancing.

To derive two or three general principles of motion from phenomena, and afterwards to tell us how the properties and actions of all corporeal things follow from those manifest principles, would be a very great step in philosophy, though the causes of those principles were not yet discovered. Newt.

One injury is best defended by a second, and this by a third: by these steps the old masters of the palace in France became masters of the kingdom; and by these steps a general during pleasure might have grown into a general for life, and a general for life into a king. Swift.

The querist must not proceed too swiftly towards the determination of his point, that he may with more ease draw the learner to those principles step by step, from whence the final conclusion will arise. Watts.

8. Footstep; print of the foot.

From hence Astrea took her flight, and here
The prints of her departing steps appear. Dry. Virg.

9. Gait; manner of walking.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

10. Action; instance of conduct.

The reputation of a man depends upon the first step he makes in the world. Pope.

STEP, in composition, signifies one who is related only by marriage. [στῆπ, Sax. from stæpan to deprive or make an orphan; for the Saxons not only said a step-mother, but a step-daughter or step- son; to which it indeed, according to this etymology, more properly belongs: but as it is now seldom applied but to the mother, it seems to mean, in the mind of those who use it, a woman who has stepped into the vacant place of the true mother.]

How should their minds chuse but misdoubt, lest this discipline, which always you match with divine doctrine as her natural and true sister, be found unto all kinds of knowledge a step-mother?
Hooker.

His wanton step-dame loved him the more;
But when she saw her offer'd sweets refuse,
Her love she turn'd to hate. Spenser.

You shall not find me, daughter,
After the slander of most step-mothers,
Ill-eyed unto you. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

A father cruel, and a step-dame false. Shakesp.
Cato the elder being aged, buried his wife, and married a young woman: his son came to him, and said, Sir, what have I offended, that you have brought a step-mother into your house? The old man answered, Nay, quite the contrary, son; thou pleasest me so well, as I would be glad to have more such. Bacon.

The name of stepdame, your practis'd art,
By which you have estrang'd my father's heart,
All you have done against me, or design,
Shows your aversion, but begets not mine.

Dryden's Aureng.

A step-dame too I have, a curs'd she,
Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dryden.

Any body would have guessed Miss to have been bred up under the influence of a cruel step- dame and John to be the fondling of a tender mother. Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.

STEPPINGSTONE. n. s. [step and stone.]

Stone laid to catch the foot and save it from wet or dirt.

Like stepping-stones to save a stride,
In streets where kennels are too wide. Swift.

STERCORACEOUS. adj. [stercora, Lat.] Belonging to dung; partaking of the nature of dung.

Green juicy vegetables, in a heap together, acquire a heat equal to that of a human body: then a putrid stercoraceous taste and odour, in taste resembling putrid flesh, and in smell human faeces.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

STERCORATION. n. s. [from stercora, Lat.] The act of dunging; the act of manuring with dung.

The first help is stercoration: the sheeps dung is one of the best, and the next, dung of kine and that of horses. Bacon.

Stercoration is seasonable. Evelyn's Kalendar.

The exterior pulp of the fruit serves not only for the security of the seed, whilst it hangs upon the plant, but, after it is fallen upon the earth, for the stercoration of the soil, and promotion of the growth, though not the first germination of the seminal plant. Ray on the Creation.

STEREOGRAPHY. n. s. [στερεός and γραφία;
stereographie, Fr.] The art of drawing the forms of solids upon a plane. Harris.

STEREOMETRY. n. s. [στερεός and μετρίω.]
stereometrie, Fr.] The art of measuring all sorts of solid bodies. Harris.

STERIL. adj. [sterile, Fr. sterilis, Lat.]

Barren; unfruitful; not productive; wanting fecundity.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
The sea marge steril, and rocky hard.

Shakesp. Tempest.

In very steril years, corn sown will grow to another kind. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To separate seeds, put them in water: such as are corrupted and steril swim. Brown's Vulg. Err. She is grown steril and barren, and her births of animals are now very inconsiderable.

More against Atheism.

When the vegetative stratum was once washed off by rains, the hills would have become barren, the strata below yielding only mere sterile and mineral matter, such as was inept for the formation of vegetables. Woodward.

STERILITY. n. s. [sterilité, Fr. sterilitas, from sterilis, Lat.] Barrenness; want of fecundity; unfruitfulness.

Spain is thin soil and people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and because their natives are exhausted by so many employments in such vast territories. Bacon's War with Spain.

An eternal sterility must have possessed the world, where all things had been fastened everlastingly, with the adamant chains of specific gravity, if the Almighty had not said, Let the earth bring forth grass, the herb yielding seed, and the fruit-tree yielding fruit. Bentley's Sermons.

He had more frequent occasion for repetition than any poet; yet one cannot ascribe this to any sterility of expression, but to the genius of his times, which delighted in these reiterated verses. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To STERILIZE. v. a. [from steril.] To make barren; to deprive of fecundity, or the power of production.

May we not as well suppose the sterilizing the earth was suspended for some time, till the deluge became the executioner of it? Woodw. Nat. Hist. Go! sterilize the fertile with thy rage. Savage.

STERLING. adj. [Of this word many derivations have been offered; the most probable of which is that offered by Camden, who derives it from the Easterlings, who were employed as coiners.]

1. An epithet by which genuine English money is discriminated.

The king's treasure, that he left at his death, amounted unto eighteen hundred thousand pounds sterling. Bacon.

Several of them would rather chuse to count out a sum in sesterces than in pounds sterling. Addison.

2. Genuine; having passed the test.

There is not one single witty phrase in this collection, which hath not received the stamp and approbation of one hundred years: he may therefore be secure to find them all genuine, sterling, and authentick. Swift's Polite Conversation.

STERLING. n. s. [sterlingum, low Lat. from the adjective.]

1. English coin; money.

This visionary various projects tries, And knows that to be rich is to be wise: By useful observation he can tell

The sacred charms that in true stirling dwell; How gold makes a patrician of a slave, A dwarf an Atlas, a Thersites brave. Garth.

Great name! which in our rolls recorded stands, Leads honours, and protects the learned bands, Accept this offering to thy bounty due, And Roman wealth in English sterling view. C. Arbuthnot.

2. Standard rate.

STERN. adj. stern, Sax.]

1. Severe of countenance; truculent of aspect.

Why look you still so stern and tragical?

Shakesp. Henry VI.

I would outstare the sternest eyes that look, Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth, Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear, Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey, To win thee, lady. Shakesp. Merch. of Venice.

It shall not be amiss here to present the stern but lively countenance of this so famous a man.

Knolles's History of the Turks.

Gods and men

Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th' woods. Milton.

The judge supreme soon cast a stedfast eye, Stern, yet attempter'd with benignity. Harte.

2. Severe of manners; harsh; unrelenting; cruel.

Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible; Thou, stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless. Shakesp.

The common executioner, Whose heart th' accustom'd sight of death makes hard,

Falls not the ax upon the humbled neck, But first begs pardon: will you stern be Than he that deals and lives by bloody drops? Shakesp.

Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious? When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept; Ambition should be made of sterner stuff. Shakesp. Julius Cæsar.

Then shall the war, and stern debate, and strife Immortal be the bus'ness of my life; And in thy fame, the dusty spoils among, High on the burnish'd roof my banner should be hung. Dryden.

How stern as tutors, and as uncles hard, We lash the pupil, and defraud the ward. Dryden's Persius.

3. Hard; afflictive.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time, Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key, All cruels else subscrib'd Shakesp. King Lear.

Mischief stood, And with his stern steele drew in streames the blood. Chapman.

STERN. n. s. [stern, Sax. of the same original with steer.]

1. The hind part of the ship where the rudder is placed.

Let a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, as the prow and stern, the ribs, masts, ropes, and shrouds, he would form but a very lame idea of it. Watts on the Mind.

They turn their heads to sea, their sterns to land. Dryden.

2. Post of management; direction.

The king from Eltam I intend to send, And sit at chiefest stern of publick weal. Shakesp. Henry VI.

3. The hinder part of anything.

She all at once her beastly body rais'd With doubled forces high above the ground, Though wrapping up her wreathed stern around. Spenser.

STERNAGE. n. s. [from stern.] The steerage or stern. Not used.

Grapple your minds to sternage of this navy, And leave your England as dead midnight still. Shakesp.

STERNLY. adv. [from stern.] In a stern manner; severely; truculently.

No mountaine lion tore Two lambs so sternly. Chapman.

The rigid interdiction. Milton's Parad. Lost.

Yet sure thou art not, nor thy face, the same, Nor thy limbs moulded in so soft a frame; Thou look'st more sternly, dost more strongly move, And more of awe thou bear'st, and less of love.

STERNNESS. n. s. [from stern.]

1. Severity of look.

Of stature huge, and eke of courage bold, That sons of men amaz'd their sternness do behold. Spenser.

How would he look to see his work so noble Wildly bound up! or how Should I, in these my borrow'd flaunts, behold The sternness of his presence! Shakesp.

2. Severity or harshness of manners.

I have sternness in my soul enough To hear of soldiers work. Dryden's Clemenes.

STERNON. n. s. [sternon.] The breast-bone.

A soldier was shot in the breast through the sternon. Wiseman.

STERNUTATION. n. s. [sternutatio, Lat.]

The act of sneezing.

Sternutation is a convulsive shaking of the nerves and muscles, occasioned by an irritation of those in the nostrils. Quincy.

Concerning sternutation, or sneezing, and the custom of saluting upon that motion, it is generally believed to derive its original from a disease wherein sternutation proved mortal, and such as sneezed died. Brown's Vulg. Err.

STERNUTATIVE. adj. [sternutatif, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Having the quality of provoking to sneeze.

STERNUTATORY. n. s. [sternutatoire, Fr. from sternuto, Lat.] Medicine that provokes to sneeze.

Physicians, in persons near death, use sternutatories, or such medicines as provoke unto sneezing; when, if the faculty arise, and sternutation ensueth, they conceive hopes of life. Brown.

STEVEN. n. s. [stæfen, Sax.] A cry, or loud clamour.

Ne sooner was out, but swifter than thought, Fast by the hide the wolf Lowder caught; And had not Roffy renne to the steven, Lowder had been slaid thilke same even. Spenser.

To STEW. v. a. [estuver, Fr. stoven, Dut.]

To seeth any thing in a slow moist heat, with little water.

Ere I was risen from the place, that show'd My duty kneeling, came a reeking post, Stew'd in his haste, half breathless. Shakesp. King Lear.

I bruised my skin with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence, three venays for a dish of stew'd prunes. Shakesp.

To STEW. v. n. To be seethed in a slow and moist heat.

STEW. n. s. [estuve, Fr. stufa, Ital. estufa, Span.]

1. A bagnio; a hot-house.

As burning Ætna from his boiling stew Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke, And ragged ribs of mountains molten new, Enwrap't in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Spenser.

The Lydians were inhibited by Cyrus to use any armour, and give themselves to baths and stews. Abbot.

2. A brothel; a house of prostitution.

[This signification is by some imputed to this, that there were licensed brothels near the stews or fishponds in Southwark; but probably stew, like bagnio, took a bad signification from bad use. It may be doubted whether it has any singular. South uses it in a plural termination with a singular sense. Shakespeare makes it singular.]

There be that hate harlots, and never were at the stews; that abhor falsehood, and never brake promise. Ascham.

I have seen corruption boil and bubble, Till it o'er-run the stew. Shakesp.

With them there are no stews, no dissolute houses, no courtesans. Bacon's New Atlantis.

Her, though sev'n years she in the stews had laid A nunnery durst receive and think a maid; And, though in childbirth's labour she did lie, Midwives would swear t'were but a tympany. Donne.

What mod'rate fop would rake the park or stews, Who among troops of faultless nymphs can choose? Roscommon.

Making his own house a stew, a bordel, and a school of lewdness, to instill the rudiments of vice into the unwary flexible years of his poor children. South.

3. [Stowen, Dut. to store.] A storepond;

a small pond where fish are kept for the table.

STEWARD. n. s. [ἑταρῆς, Sax.]

1. One who manages the affairs of another.

There sat yclad in red
Down to the ground a comely personage,
That in his hand a white rod managed;
He steward was, high diet, ripe of age,
And in demeanour sober, and in council sage.

Spenser.
Whilst I have gold, I'll be his steward still.
Shakesp. Timon.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
Or lowly factor for another's gain. Shak. Rich. III.
How is it that I hear this of thee? Give an account of thy stewardship; for thou mayest be no longer steward.

Improve all those talents the providence of God hath intrusted us with, because we are but stewards, and must give an account of them. Nelson.

When a steward defrauds his lord, he must continue at the rest of the servants while they are following the same practice. Swift.

What can be a greater honour than to be chosen one of the stewards and dispensers of God's bounty to mankind? What can give a generous spirit more complacency, than to consider that great numbers owe to him, under God, their subsistence, and the good conduct of their lives? Swift.

Just steward of the bounty he receiv'd,
And dying poorer than the poor reliev'd. Harte.

2. An officer of state.

The duke of Suffolk is the first, and claims to be high steward. Shakesp.

STEWARDSHIP. n. s. [from steward.]

The office of a steward.

The earl of Worcester
Hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship.
Shakesp. Richard II.

Shew us the hand of God
That hath dismiss'd us from our stewardship.
Shakesp.

If they are not employed to such purposes, we are false to our trust, and the stewardship committed to us, and shall be one day severely accountable to God for it. Calamy's Sermons.

STEW'PAN. n. s. [from stew and pan.] A pan used for stewing.

STIBIAL. adj. [from stibium, Lat.] Antimonial.

Sticks at the sound. Smith's Phædra and Hippolitus.

5. To resist emission.

Wherefore could I not pronounce amen?
I had most need of blessing, and amen
Stuck in my throat. Shakesp. Macbeth.

6. To be constant to; to adhere with firmness: sometimes with to, and sometimes with by.

The knave will stick by thee, I can assure thee that: he will not out, he is true bred. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The first contains a sticking fast to Christ, when the Christian profession is persecuted; and the second a rising from sin, as he rose to a new Christian life. Hammond.

Some stick to you, and some to t'other side. Dryden.

They could not but conclude that to be their interest, and, being so convinced, pursue it and stick to it. Tillotson.

We are your only friends; stick by us, and we will stick by you. Davenant.

The advantage will be on our side, if we stick to its essentials. Addison's Freeholder.

7. To be troublesome by adhering: with by or to.

I am satisfied to trifle away my time, rather than let it stick by me. Pope's Letters.

8. To remain; not to be lost.

Proverbial sentences are formed into a verse, whereby they stick upon the memory. Watts.

9. To dwell upon; not to forsake.

If the matter be knotty, the mind must stop and buckle to it, and stick upon it with labour and thought, and not leave it till it has mastered the difficulty. Locke.

Every man, besides occasional affections, has beloved studies which the mind will more closely stick to. Locke.

10. To cause difficulties or scruple.

This is the difficulty that sticks with the most reasonable of those who, from conscience, refuse to join with the revolution. Swift.

11. To scruple; to hesitate.

It is a good point of cunning for a man to shape the answer he would have in his own words and propositions; for it makes the other party stick the less. Bacon.

The church of Rome, under pretext of exposition of scripture, doth not stick to add and alter. Bacon.

Rather than impute our miscarriages to our own corruption, we do not stick to arraign providence itself. L'Estrange.

Every one without hesitation supposes eternity, and sticks not to ascribe infinity to duration. Locke.

That two bodies cannot be in the same place, is a truth, that no body any more sticks at, than at this maxim, that it is impossible for the same thing to be, and not to be. Locke.

To stick at nothing for the publick interest, is represented as the refined part of the Venetian wisdom. Addison on Italy.

Some stick not to say, that the parson and attorney forged a will. Arbutnot.

12. To be stopped; to be unable to proceed.

If we should fail.
—We fail!

But screw your courage to the sticking place,
And we'll not fail. Shakesp. Macbeth.

They never doubted the commons; but heard all stuck in the lords house, and desired the names of those who hindered the agreement between the lords and commons. Clarendon.

He threw: the trembling weapon pass'd
Through nine bull-hides, each under other plac'd
On his broad shield, and stuck within the last. Dry.

13. To be embarrassed; to be puzzled.

Where they stick, they are not to be farther puzzled by putting them upon finding it out themselves. Locke.

They will stick long at part of a demonstration, for want of perceiving the connexion of two ideas, that, to one more exercised, is as visible as any thing. Locke.

Souls a little more capacious can take in the connexion of a few propositions; but if the chain be prolix, here they stick and are confounded. Watts on the Mind.

STOOL. n. s. [stols, Goth. stool, Sax. stool, Dut.]

1. A seat without a back, so distinguished from a chair.
If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back. Watts's Logic.
Thou fearful fool,
Why takest not of the same fruit of gold?
Ne sittest down on that same silver stool.
To rest thy weary person in the shadow cold? Spens.
Now which were wise, and which were fools?
Poor Alma sits between two stools;
The more she reads, the more perplex. Prior.

2. Evacuation by purgative medicines.
There be medicines that move stools, and not urine; some other urine, and not stools: those that purge by stool, are such as enter not at all, or little, into the mesenteric veins; but either at the first are not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts; or else are afterwards rejected by the mesenteric veins, and so turn likewise downwards to the guts. Bacon's Natural Histor.
The peristaltick motion, or repeated changes of contraction and dilatation, is not in the lower guts, else one would have a continual needing of going to stool. Arbutnot on Aliments.

3. Stool of Repentance, or Cutty Stool, in the kirks of Scotland, is somewhat analogous to the pillory. It is elevated above the congregation. In some places there may be a seat in it; but it is generally without, and the person stands therein, who has been guilty of fornication, for three Sundays, in the forenoon; and after sermon is called upon by name and surname, the beadle or kirk-officer bringing the offender, if refractory, forwards to his post; and then the preacher proceeds to admonition. Here too are set to public view adulterers; only these are habited in a coarse canvass, analogous to a hairy or monastick vest, with a hood to it, which they call the sack, or sackcloth; and that every Sunday throughout a year, or longer.
Unequal and unreasonable judgments of things brings many a great man to the stool of repentance. L'Estrange.

STOOLBALL. n. s. [stool and ball.] A play where balls are driven from stool to stool.

He stooping open'd my left side, and took
From thence a rib. Milton.

3. To yield; to bend; to submit.
I am the son of Henry the Fifth,
Who made the dauphin and the French to stoop. Shak.

Mighty in her ships stood Carthage long,
And swept the riches of the world from far;
Yet stoop'd to Rome, less wealthy, but more strong.
Dryden.

4. To descend from rank or dignity.

Where men of great wealth stoop to husbandry,
It multiplieth riches exceedingly. Bacon.
He that condescended so far, and stooped so low, to invite and to bring us to heaven, will not refuse us a gracious reception there. Boyle's Seraph. Love.

5. To yield; to be inferiour.

Death his death-wound shall then receive,
And stoop inglorious. Milton.
These are arts, my prince,
In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome. Addis.

6. To sink from resolution or superiority; to condescend.

They, whose authority is required unto the satisfying of your demand, do think it both dangerous to admit such concourse of divided minds; and unmeet that their laws, which, being once solemnly established, are to exact obedience of all men, and to constrain thereunto, should so far stoop as to hold themselves in suspense from taking any effect upon you, till some disputer can persuade you to be obedient. Hooker.

7. To come down on prey as a falcon.

The bird of Jove stoop'd from his airy tour,
Two birds of gayest plume before him drove. Milt.

8. To alight from the wing.

10. To obstruct; to encumber.

Mountains of ice that stop th' imagin'd way. Milton.

To STOP. v. n.

1. To cease to go forward.

Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple; straight
Springs out into fast gait, then stops again. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

When men pursue their thoughts of space, they stop at the confines of body, as if space were there at an end. Locke.

2. To cease from any course of action.

Encroachments are made by degrees from one step to another; and the best time to stop is at the beginning. Lesley.

STOP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Cessation of progressive motion.

Thought's the slave of time, and life time's fool;
And time, that makes survey of all the world,
Must have a stop. Shakesp.

The marigold, whose courtier's face
Echoes the sun, and doth unlace
Her at his rise, at his full stop Packs and shuts up her gaudy shop. Cleaveland.

A lion, ranging for his prey, made a stop on a sudden at a hideous yelling noise, which startled him. L'Estrange.

2. Hindrance of progress; obstruction; act of stopping.

In weak and tender minds we little know what misery this strict opinion would breed, besides the stops it would make in the whole course of all men's lives and actions. Hooker.

These gates are not sufficient for the communication between the walled city and its suburbs, as daily appears by the stops and embarrases of coaches near both these gates. Graunt.

My praise the Fabii claim,
And thou, great hero, greatest of thy name,
Ordain'd in war to save the sinking state,
And, by delays, to put a stop to fate. Dryden's Æn.

Occult qualities put a stop to the improvement of natural philosophy, and therefore have been rejected. Newton's Opticks.

Brokers hinder trade, by making the circuit which the money goes larger, and in that circuit more stops, so that the returns must necessarily be slower and scantier. Locke.

Female zeal, though proceeding from so good a principle, if we may believe the French historians, often put a stop to the proceedings of their kings, which might have ended in a reformation. Addison.

3. Repression; hindrance of operation.

'Tis a great step towards the mastery of our desires, to give this stop to them, and shut them up in silence. Locke.

4. Cessation of action.

Look you to the guard to-night;
Let's teach ourselves that honourable stop,
Not to outspout discretion. Shakesp.

5. Interruption.

Thou art full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them
breath;
Therefore these stops of thine fright me the more. Shakesp.

6. Prohibition of sale.

If they should open a war, they foresee the consumption France must fall into by the stop of their wine and salts, wholly taken off by our two nations. Temple.

7. That which obstructs; obstacle; impediment.

The proud Duessa, full of wrathful spight
And fierce disdain to be affronted so,
Inforc'd her purple beast with all her might,
That stop out of the way to overthrow. Spenser.
On indeed they went: but O! not far;
A fatal stop travers'd their headlong course. Daniel.

Blessed be that God who cast rubs, stops, and hindrances in my way, when I was attempting the commission of such a sin. South.

So melancholy a prospect should inspire us with zeal to oppose some stop to the rising torrent, and check this overflowing of ungodliness. Rogers.

8. Instrument by which the sounds of wind-musick are regulated.

You would play upon me, you would seem to know my stops; you would pluck out the heart of my mystery. Shakesp.

Best are those,
Whose blood and judgment are so well commingled
That they are not a pipe for fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The harp
Had work, and rested not; the solemn pipe,
And dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton

The sound
Of instruments, that made melodious chime,
Was heard of harp and organ; and who mov'd
Their stops, and chords, was seen; his volent touch
Instinct through all proportion, low and high,
Fled, and pursued transverse the resonant fugue. Milton.

A variety of strings may be observed on their harps, and of stops on their tibix; which shews the little foundation that such writers have gone upon, who, from a short passage in a classick author, have determined the precise shape of the ancient musical instruments, with the exact number of their pipes, strings, and stops. Addison on Italy.

9. Regulation of musical chords by the fingers.

The further a string is strained, the less superstraining goeth to a note; for it requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note at all: and in the stops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets. Bacon.

10. The act of applying the stops in music.

The organ-sound a time survives the stop,
Before it doth the dying note give up.

Daniel's Civil War.

11. A point in writing, by which sentences are distinguished.

Even the iron-pointed pen,
That notes the tragick dooms of men,
Wet with tears still'd from the eyes
Of the flinty destinies,
Would have learn'd a softer style,
And have been asham'd to spoil
His life's sweet story by the haste
Of a cruel stop ill-plac'd.

Crashaw.

STO'P'COCK. n. s. [stop and cock.] A pipe made to let out liquor, stopped by a turning cock.

No man could spit from him without it, but would drive like some paralytick or fool; the tongue being as a stopcock to the air, till upon its removal the spittle is driven away. Grew's Cosmol.

STO'P'GAP. n. s. [from stop and gap.] Something substituted; a temporary expedient.

STO'P'PAGE. n. s. [from stop.] The act of stopping; the state of being stopped.

STORE. n. s. [stör, in old Swedish and Runick, is much, and is prefixed to other words to intend their signification; stor, Dan. stoor, Island. is great. The Teutonick dialects nearer to English seem not to have retained this word.]

1. Large number; large quantity; plenty.

The ships are fraught with store of victuals, and good quantity of treasure. Bacon.

None yet, but store hereafter from the earth
Up hither like aerial vapours flew,
Of all things transitory and vain, when sin
With vanity had filled the works of men. Milton.

Jove, grant me length of life, and years good store
Heap on my bended back. Dryden's Juvenal.

2. A stock accumulated; a supply hoarded.

We liv'd supine amidst our flowing store,
We slept securely, and we dreamt of more. Dryd.

Divine Cecilia came,

Inventress of the vocal fame:

The sweet enthusiast from her sacred store

Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,

And added length to solemn sounds. Dryden.

Thee, goddess, thee, Britannia's isle adores:
How has she oft exhausted all her stores!

How oft in fields of death thy presence sought,
Nor thinks the mighty prize too dearly bought!

Addison.

Their minds are richly fraught
With philosophick stores. Thomson.

3. The state of being accumulated; hoard.

Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? Deut. xxxii. 34.

4. Storehouse; magazine.

Sulphurous and nitrous foam,
Concocted and adusted, they reduc'd
To blackest grain, and into store convey'd. Milton.

STORE. adj. Hoarded; laid up; accumulated.

What floods of treasure have flowed into Europe by that action, so that the cause of Christendom is raised since twenty times told: of this treasure the gold was accumulate and store treasure; but the silver is still growing. Bacon's Holy War.

To STORE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To furnish; to replenish.

Wise Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.
Her face with thousand beauties blest;
Her mind with thousand virtues stor'd;
Her pow'r with boundless joy confest,
Her person only not ador'd. Prior.

2. To stock against a future time.

Some were of opinion that it were best to stay where they were, until more aid and store of victuals were come; but others said the enemy were but barely stor'd with victuals, and therefore could not long hold out. Knolles's History.

One having stor'd a pond of four acres with carps, tench, and other fish, and only put in two small pikes, at seven years end, upon the draught, not one fish was left, but the two pikes grown to an excessive bigness. Hale.

The mind reflects on its own operations about the ideas got by sensation, and thereby stores itself with a new set of ideas, which I call ideas of reflection. Locke.

To store the vessel let the care be mine
With water from the rocks, and rosy wine,
And life-sustaining bread. Pope's Odyssey.

3. To lay up; to hoard.

Let the main part of the corn be a common stock, laid in and stor'd up, and then delivered out in proportion. Bacon.

STO'REHOUSE. n. s. [store and house]

1. Magazine; treasury; place in which things are hoarded and reposit against a time of use.

By us it is willingly confessed, that the scripture of God is a storehouse abounding with inestimable treasures of wisdom and knowledge, in many kinds over and above things in this kind barely necessary. Hooker.

Suffer us to famish, and their storehouses cramm'd with grain! Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Joseph open'd all the storehouses, and sold unto the Egyptians. Gen. xli. 56.

To these high pow'rs a storehouse doth pertain,
Where they all arts and gen'ral reasons lay;
Which in the soul, ev'n after death, remain,
And no Lethean flood can wash away. Davies.

My heart hath been a storehouse long of things
And sayings laid up, portending strange events. Milton.

The image of God was resplendent in man's practical understanding, that storehouse of the soul, in which are treasured up the rules of action and the seeds of morality. South.

As many different sounds as can be made by single articulations, so many letters there are in the storehouse of nature. Holder.

2. A great mass reposit.

They greatly joyed merry tales to feign,
Of which a storehouse did with her remain. Fairy Queen.

STORER. n. s. [from store] One who lays up.

STO'RIED. adj. [from story.] Furnished with stories; adorned with historical pictures.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister pale,
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;
And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Some greedy minion or imperious wife
The trophy'd arches, storied halls, invade. Pope.

STORK. n. s. [στρὸς, Sax. ciconia, Lat.]

A bird of passage, famous for the regularity of its departure.

Its beak and legs are long and red; it feeds upon serpents, frogs, and insects; its plumage would be quite white, were not the extremity of its wings, and also some part of its head and thighs, black: it sits for thirty days, and lays but four eggs: they go away in the middle of August, and return in spring. Cabmet.

The stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times. Ieremial.

Who hid the stork, Columbus like, explore
Heavens not his own, and worlds unknown before?
Who calls the council, states the certain day,
Who forms the phalanx, and who points the way?
Pope.

STORKSBILL. n. s. [geranium, Lat.] An herb. Ainsworth.

STORM. n. s. [ystorm, Welsh; strom, Sax. storm, Dut. stormo, Ital.]

1. A tempest; a commotion of the elements.

O turn thy rudder hitherward a while,
Here may thy storm-beat vessel safely ride. Spens.
We hear this fearful tempest sin,
Yet seek no shelter to avoid the storm. Shakesp.
Them she upstays, mindless the while Herself, though fairest unsupported flower,
From her best prop so far, and storm so nigh. Milton.

Sulphurous hail shot after us in storm. Milton.
Then stay, my child! storms beat, and rolls the main;

Oh beat those storms, and roll the seas, in vain! Pope.

2. Assault on a fortified place.

How by storm the walls were won,
Or how the victor sack'd and burnt the town. Dryd.

3. Commotion; sedition; tumult; clamour; bustle.

Whilst I in Ireland nourish a mighty band,
I will stir up in England some black storm. Shak.

Her sister
Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din. Shakesp.

4. Affliction; calamity; distress.

A brave man struggling in the storm of fate. Pope.

5. Violence; vehemence; tumultuous force.

As oft as we are delivered from those either imminent or present calamities, against the storm and tempest whereof we all instantly craved favour from above, let it be a question what we should render unto God for his blessings, universally, sensibly, and extraordinarily bestowed. Hooker.

To STORM. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack by open force.

From ploughs and harrows sent to seek renown,
They fight in fields, and storm the sbaken town. Dryden.

There the brazen tow'r was storm'd of old,
When Jove descended in almighty gold. Pope.

To STORM. v. n.

1. To raise tempests.

So now he storms with many a sturdy stoure,
So now his blustering blast each coast doth scour. Spenser.

2. To rage; to fume; to be loudly angry.

Hoarse, and all in rage,
As mock'd they storm. Milton's Paradise Lost.

When you return, the master storms, the lady scolds. Swift.

While thus they rail, and scold, and storm,
It passes but for common form. Swift.

STORMY. adj. [from storm.]

1. Tempestuous.

Bellowing clouds burst with a stormy sound,
And with an armed winter strew the ground. Addis.
The tender apples, from their parents rent
By stormy shocks, must not neglected lie. Philips.

2. Violent; passionate.

STORY. n. s. [στῆριον, Sax. storie, Dut. storia, Ital. istoria.]

1. History; account of things past.

The fable of the dividing of the world between the three sons of Saturn, arose from the true story of the dividing of the earth between the three brethren, the sons of Noah. Raleigh.

There I have heard relating what was done Ere my remembrance: nor hear me relate My story, which perhaps thou hast not heard. Milt.

The four great monarchies make the subject of ancient story, and are related by the Greek and Latin authors. Temple.

Matters of fact, concerning times, places, persons, actions, which depend upon story, and the relation of others, these things are not capable of being proved by such scientific principles. Wilkins.

Governments that once made such a noise, as founded upon the deepest counsels and the strongest force, yet by some slight miscarriage, which let in ruin upon them, are now so utterly extinct, that nothing remains of them but a name; nor are there the least traces of them to be found, but only in story. South.

2. Small tale; petty narrative; account of a single incident.

In the road between Bern and Seleurre, a monument erected by the republic of Bern tells us the story of an Englishman not to be met with in any of our own writers. Addison.

3. An idle or trifling tale; a petty fiction.

These flaws and starts would well become A woman's story at a winter's fire, Author'd by her grandame. Shakesp. Mucheth.

This scene had some bold Greek or British bard Beheld of old, what stories had we heard Of fables, satyrs, and the nymphs their dames, Their feasts, their revels, and their am'rous flames! Denham.

My maid left on the table one of her story books, which I found full of strange impertinence, of poor servants who came to be ladies. Swift.

4. [ῥτορ place, Sax.] A floor; a flight of rooms.

Avoid enormous heights of seven stories, and the contrary fault of low distended fronts. Wotton.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris Might raise a house about two stories; A lyrick ode would slate; a catch Would tide; an epigram would thatch. Swift.

TO STORY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tell in history; to relate.

How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than story him in his own hearing. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

'Tis not vain or fabulous

What the sage poets taught by th' heav'nly muse, Storied of old in high immortal verse, Of dire chimeras and enchanted isles, And rifted rocks whose entrance leads to hell. Milt.

It is storied of the brazen Colossus, in the island of Rhodes, that it was seventy cubits high; and the thumbs of it being so big, that no man could grasp one of them with both his arms. Wilkins.

Recite them, nor in erring pity fear To wound with storied griefs the filial ear. Pope.

2. To range one under another.

Because all the parts of an undisturbed fluid are of equal gravity, or gradually placed or storied according to the difference of it, any concretion that can be supposed to be naturally and mechanically made in such a fluid, must have a like structure of its several parts; that is, either he all over of a similar gravity, or have the more ponderous parts nearer to its basis. Bentley's Sermons.

STORYTELLER. n. s. [story and tell.]

One who relates tales in conversation; an historian, in contempt.

In such a satire all would seek a share, And every fool will fancy he is there; Old storytellers too must pine and die, To see their antiquated wit laid by; Like her who miss'd her name in a lampoon, And griev'd to find herself decay'd so soon. Dryd.

Company will be no longer pestered with dull, dry, tedious storytellers. Swift's Polite Conversation.

STOVE. n. s. [stoo, Island. a fire-place; ῥτορσα, Sax. estuve, Fr. stove, Dut.]

1. A hot-house; a place artificially made warm.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice, to dip up such fish with their nets as resort thither for breathing, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance, and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth recovereth them to life and flight. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Stoves, which could autumn of cold winter make; Fountains in autumn to bring winter back. Beaum. Psyche.

The heat which arises out of the lesser spiracles brings forth nitre and sulphur; some of which it affixes to the tops and sides of the grottos, which are usually so hot as to serve for natural stoves or sweating-vaults. Woodward.

The most proper place for unction is a stove. Wiseman.

2. A place in which fire is made, and by which heat is communicated.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, in your great house kindle some charcoals; and when they have done smoaking, put them into a hole sunk a little into the floor, about the middle of it. This is the safest stove. Evelyn.

TO STOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To keep warm in a house artificialy heated.

For December, January, and the latter part of November, take such things as are green all winter; orange trees, lemon trees, and myrtles, if they be stowed; and sweet marjoram warm set. Bacon.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy stour, The faulty souls from thence brought to his heav'nly bow'r. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Love, that long since has to thy mighty pow'r Per force subdued my poor captivated heart,

And raging now therein with restless stouere, Dost tyrannize in every weaker part. Spenser.

The giant struck so mainly merciless, That could have overthrown a stonny tow'r;

And, were not heav'nly grace him did bless, He had been pouldered all as thin as flower, But he was weary of that deadly stouere. Spenser.

STOUT. adj. [stout, Dut. stolz proud, Germ. stautan, Gothic, is to strike.]

1. Strong; lusty; valiant.

When I was young, I do remember how my father said, A stouter champion never handled sword. Shakesp. Henry VI.

Some captain of the land or fleet, Stout of his hands, but of a soldier's wit, Cries, I have sense to serve my turn, in store,

And he's a rascal who pretends to more. Dryden.

2. Brave; bold; intrepid.

The stout-hearted are spoiled. Psalm lxxvi. 5. He lost the character of a bold, stout, and magnanimous man, which he had been long reputed to be. Clarendon.

In every vessel is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion, or merchandise of as great a value. Addison.

2. The state of being laid up.

'Tis plate of rare device, and jewels Of rich and exquisite form; their value's great; And I am something curious, being strange,

To have them in safe stowage. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

3. Money paid for stowing of goods.

STOWE, STOE, whether singly or jointly, are the same with the Sax. ῥτορ a place. Gibson's Camden.

STRABISM. n. s. [strabisme, Fr. strabismus, Lat.] A squinting; act of looking asquint.

TO STRADDLE. v. n. [supposed to come from striddle or stride.] To stand or walk with the feet removed far from each other to the right and left; to part the legs wide.

Let the man survey himself, divested of artificial charms, and he will find himself a forked straddling animal, with bandy legs. Arbuthnot and Pope.

TO STRAGGLE. v. a. [Of this word no etymology is known: it is probably a frequentative of stray, from strarviare, Ital. of extra viam, Lat.]

1. To wander without any certain direction; to rove; to ramble.

But stay; like one that thinks to bring his friend A mile or two, and sees the journey's end, I straggle on too far. Suckling.

A wolf spied out a *straggl*ing kid, and pursued him. L'Estrange.

Children, even when they endeavour their utmost, cannot keep their minds from *straggl*ing. Locke.

2. To wander dispersedly.

He likewise enriched poor *straggl*ing soldiers with great quantity. Shakesp. Timon.
They found in Būrford some of the *straggl*ing soldiers, who out of weariness stayed behind. Clarendon.

Form *straggl*ing mountaineers, for public good, To rank in tribes, and quit the savage wood; Houses to build, and them contiguous make, For cheerful neighbourhood and safety's sake. Tate.

3. To exuberate; to shoot too far.

Were they content to prune the lavish vine Of *straggl*ing branches, and improve the wine.

Trim off the small superfluous branches on each side of the hedge, that straggle too far out. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. To be dispersed; to be apart from any main body; to stand single.

Having passed the Syrens, they came between Scylla and Charybdis, and the *straggl*ing rocks, which seemed to cast out great store of flames and smoke. Raleigh.

Bottles missing are supposed to be half stolen by *straggl*ers, and the other half broken. Swift.

2. Any thing that pushes beyond the rest, or stands single.

Let thy hand supply the pruning knife, And crop luxuriant *straggl*ers, nor be loth To strip the branches of their leafy growth. Dryd.

His pruning hook corrects the vines, And the loose *straggl*ers to their ranks confines. Pope.

STRAIGHT. adj. [strack, old Dut. It is well observed by Ainsworth, that for not crooked we ought to write straight, and for narrow, strait; but for straight, which is sometimes found, there is no good authority.]

1. Not crooked; right.

Beauty made barren the swell'd boast Of him that best could speak; feature, laming The shrine of Venus, or straight-pight Minerva. Shakesp.

A hunter's horn and cornet is oblique; yet they have likewise straight horns; which, if they be of the same bore with the oblique, differ little in sound, save that the straight require somewhat a stronger blast. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

There are many several sorts of crooked lines; but there is one only which is straight. Dryden.

Water and air the varied form confound; The straight looks crooked, and the square grows round. Prior.

When I see a strait staff appear crooked while half under the water, the water gives me a false idea. Hatt's Logick.

2. Narrow; close. This should properly be strait. [estroit, Fr. See STRAIT.]

Queen Elizabeth used to say of her instructions to great officers, that they were like to garments, strait at the first putting on, but did by and by wear loose enough. Bacon.

3. Tense; tight. Of this sense it is doubtful whether it belongs to strait, close, narrow; or to straight, not crooked. Pull the cord straight, may mean, draw it till it has no flexure; tie it strait about you, may mean, draw it into a narrower compass. This ambiguity has perhaps confounded the orthography.

STRAIGHT. adv. [strax, Dan. strack, Dut.] Immediately; directly. This sense is naturally derived from the adjective, as a straight line is the shortest line between two points.

If the devil come and roar for them, I will not send them. I will after straight, And tell him so. Shakesp. Henry IV.
Those stinks which the nostrils straight abhor and expel, are not the most pernicious. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

With chalk I first describe a circle here, Where the ætherial spirits must appear: Come in, come in; for here they will be strait: Around, around the place I fumigate. Dryden.

I know thy generous temper well; Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it, It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze. Addison.

To STRAIGHTEN. v. n. [from straight.]

1. To make not crooked; to make straight.

A crooked stick is not straightened, except it be as far bent on the clean contrary side. Hooker.

Of ourselves being so apt to err, the only way which we have to straighten our path is, by following the rule of his will, whose footsteps naturally are right. Hooker.

2. To make tense; to tighten.

STRAIGHTLY. adv. [from straight.]

1. In a right line; not crookedly.

2. Tightly; with tension.

STRAIGHTNESS. n. s. [from straight.]

1. Rectitude; the contrary to crookedness.

Some are for masts, as fir and pine, because of their length and straightness. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Tension; tightness.

STRAIGHTWAY. adv. [straight and way.]

It is very often written staightways, and therefore is perhaps more properly written straightwise.] Immediately; straight.

Let me here for ay in peace remain, Or straightway on that last long voyage fare. Spens.
Soon as he enter'd was, the door straightway Did shut. Spenser.

Like to a ship, that, having 'scap'd a tempest, Is straightway claim'd and boarded with a pirate. Shakesp.

The Turks straightway breaking in upon them, made a bloody fight. Knolles.
As soon as iron is out of the fire, it deadeth straightways. Bacon.

The sound of a hell is strong; continueth some time after the percussion; but ceaseth straightways if the bell or string be touched. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The sun's power being in those months greater, it then straightways hurries steams up into the atmosphere. Woodward.

Old Evander with a close embrace Strain'd his departing friend, and tears o'erflow'd his face. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To sprain: to weaken by too much violence.

The jury make no more scruple to pass against an Englishman and the queen, though it be to strain their oaths, than to drink milk unstrained. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Prudes decay'd about may tack, Strain their necks with looking back. Swift.

5. To put to its utmost strength.

By this we see, in a cause of religion, to how desperate adventures men will strain themselves for relief of their own part, having law and authority against them. Hooker.

Too well I wote my humble vaine, And how my rhimes been rugged and unkept; Yet as I can my cunning I will strain. Spenser.

Thus mine enemy fell, And thus I set my foot on's neck;—even then The princely blood flows in his cheek; he sweats, Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in posture

That acts my words. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd, Which it had long stood under, strain'd to th' height,

In that celestial colloquy sublime, As with an object that excels the sense, Dazzled and spent, sunk down. Milton's Par. Lost.

The lark and linnet sing with rival notes; They strain their warbling throats To welcome in the spring. Dryden.

Nor yet content, she strains her malice more, And adds new ills to those contrived before. Dry.

It is the worst sort of good husbandry for a father not to strain himself a little for his son's breeding. Locke.

Our words flow from us in a smooth continued stream, without those strainings of the voice, motions of the body, and majesty of the hand, which are so much celebrated in the orators of Greece and Rome. Atterbury.

Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves. Thomson.

6. To make strait or tense.

A bigger string more strained, and a lesser string less strained, may fall into the same tone. Bacon.

Thou, the more he varies forms, beware To strain his fetters with a stricter care. Dryd. Vir.

7. To push beyond the proper extent.

See they suffer death; But in their deaths remember they are men, Strain not the laws to make their torture grievous. Addison.

There can be no other meaning in this expression, however some may pretend to strain it. Swift.

Your way is to wrest and strain some principles, maintained both by them and me, to a sense repugnant with their other known doctrines. Waterland.

8. To force; to constrain; to make uneasy or unnatural.

The lark sings so out of tune, Straining harsh discords and displeasing sharps. Shakesp.

He talks and plays with Fatima, but his mirth Is forc'd and strained: in his looks appears A wild distracted fierceness. Denham.

To STRAIN. v. n.

1. To make violent efforts.

To build his fortune I will strain a little, For 'tis a bond in men. Shakesp. Timon.

That death may not them idly find t' attend Their certain last, but work to meet their end. Daniel.

Straining with too weak a wing, We needs will write epistles to the king. Pope.

2. To be filtered by compression.

Cæsar thought that all sea sands had natural springs of fresh water: but it is the sea-water; because the pit filled according to the measure of the tide; and the sea-water, passing or straining thro' the sands, leaveth the saltness behind them. Bacon.

STRAIN. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An injury by too much violence.

Credit is gained by custom, and seldom recovers a strain; but if broken, is never well set again. Temple.

In all pain there is a deformity by a solution of continuity, as in cutting; or a tendency to solution, as in convulsions or strains. Greuv.

2. [Ætunge, Sax.] Race; generation; descendant.

Thus far I can praise him; he is of a noble strain, Of approv'd valour. Shakesp.

Twelve Trojan youths, born of their noblest strains,

I took alive; and, yet enrag'd, will empty all their veins

Of vital spirits. Chapman's Iliad.

Why dost thou falsely feign Thyself a Sidney? from which noble strain He sprung, that could so far exalt the name Of love. Haller.

Turn then to Pharamond and Charlemagne, And the long heroes of the Gallic strain. Prior.

3. Hereditary disposition.

Amongst these sweet knaves and all this courtesy! the strain of man's bred out into baboon and monkey. Shakesp.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely inn. Shakesp. Macbeth.
What mean those colour'd streaks in heav'n,
Distended, as the brow of God appears'd? Milton.

S T R

The night comes on, we eager to pursue
Till the last streaks of dying day withdrew,
And doubtful moonlight did our rage subdue.
Dryden.

Ten wildings have I gather'd for my dear;
How ruddy, like your lips, their streaks appear!
Dryden.

While the fantastick tulip strives to break
In two-fold beauty, and a parted streak.
Prior.
To STREAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To stripe; to variegate in hues; to dapple.

All the yearlings which were streak'd and pied Should fall as Jacob's hire. Shakesp. Mer. of Venice.
A mule admirably streaked and dappled with white and black. Sandy's Journey.

To-morrow, ere fresh morning streak the east,
When first approach of light we must be ris'n,
And at our pleasant labour, to reform
Yon flowery arbores. Milton.

Now let us leave this earth, and lift our eye
To the large convex of yon' azure sky;
Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red,
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sable for the peaceful night. Prior.

2. To stretch. Obsolete.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghastly whirlpool all her necks;
Where, glotting round her rock, to fish she falls.
Chapman.

STREAKY. adj. [from streak.] Striped; variegated by hues.

When the hoary head is hid in snow,
The life is in the leaf, and still between
The fits of falling snows appears the streaky green.
Dryden.

STREAM. n. s. [stream, Sax. strum,
Island. stroom, Dut.]

1. A running water; the course of running water; current.

As plays the sun upon the glassy stream,
Twinkling another counterfeited beam.
Shakesp. Henry VI.

He brought streams out of the rock, and caused waters to run down like rivers. Psalms lxxviii. 16.
Cocitus nam'd, of lamentation loud

Heard in the rueful stream; fierce Phlegethon,
Whose waves of torrent fire inflame with rage;
Far off from these, a slow and silent stream,
Lethe, the river of oblivion, rolls
Her wat'ry labyrinth. Milton.

O could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as thou art my theme!
Tho' deep yet clear, tho' gentle yet not dull,
Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full.
Denham.

Thus from one common source our streams divide;
Ours is the Trojan, yours th' Arcadian side. Dryden.
Divided interests, while thou think'st to sway,
Draw like two brooks thy middle stream away.
Dryden.

2. Any thing issuing from a head, and moving forward with continuity of parts.

The breath of the Lord is like a stream of brimstone. Isaiah.
You, Drances, never want a stream of words.
Dryden.

The stream of beneficence hath, by several rivulets which have since fallen into it, wonderfully enlarged its current. Atterbury.

3. Any thing forcible and continued.

Had their cables of iron chains had any great length, they had been unportable; and, being short, the ships must have sunk at an anchor in any stream of weather. Raleigh.

It is looked upon as insolence for a man to adhere to his own opinion, against the current stream of antiquity. Locke.

4. Course; current.

The very stream of his life, and the business he hath helmed, must give him a better proclamation.
Shakesp.

To STREAM. v. n. [streyma, Island.]

1. To flow; to run in a continuous current.

S T R

God bad the ground be dry,
All but between those banks where rivers now
Stream, and perpetual draw their humid train.
Milton.

On all sides round
Screams the black blood, and smokes upon the ground. Pope.

With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning.
Shakesp.

The rosy morn began to rise,
And wav'd her saffron streamer through the skies.
Dryden.

Brave Rupert from far appears,
Whose waving streamers the glad general knows.
Dryden.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flow'rs:
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie, and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

STREAMY. adj. [from stream.]

1. Abounding in running water.

Arcadia,
However streamy now, adust and dry,
Denied the goddess water: where deep Melas
And rocky Cratis flow, the chariot smok'd Obscure with rising dust. Prior.

2. Flowing with a current.

Before him flaming, his enormous shield
Like the broad sun illumin'd all the field;
His nodding helm emits a streamy ray. Pope's Iliad.

1. A way, properly a paved way between two rows of houses.

He led us through fair streets; and all the way we went there were gathered people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.
The streets are no larger than alleys. Sandys.
When night

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons
Of Belial, flown with insolence and wine;
Witness the streets of Sodom. Milton.

The Italians say the ancients always considered the situation of a building, whether it were high or low, in an open square, or in a narrow street, and more or less deviated from their rule of art.
Addison on Italy.

When you tattle with some crony servant in the same street, leave your own street-door open. Swift.

2. Proverbially, a publick place.

That there be no leading into captivity, and no complaining in our streets. Psalms cxliv. 14.
Our publick ways would be so crowded, that we should want street-rooms. Addison's Spectator.
Let us reflect upon what we daily see practis'd in the world; and can we believe, if an apostle of Christ appeared in our streets, he would retract his caution, and command us to be conform'd to the world? Rogers's Sermons.

STREETWALKER. n. s. [street and walk.]

A common prostitute, that offers herself to sale in the open street.

STRENGTH. n. s. [strengð, Sax.]

1. Force; vigour; power of the body.

S T R

But strength from truth divided, and from just,
Illaudable, nought merits but dispraise. Milton.

Thou must outlive
Thy youth, thy strength, thy beauty, which will change
To wither'd, weak, and grey. Milton.

The insulting Trojan came,
And menac'd us with force, our fleet with flame:
Was it the strength of this tongue-valiant lord,
In that black hour, that sav'd you from the sword?
Dryden.

2. Power of endurance; firmness; durability; toughness; hardness.

Not founded on the brittle strength of bones.
Milton.

Firm Dorick pillars found the solid base,
The fair Corinthian crown the higher space,
And all below is strength, and all above is grace.
Dryden.

3. Vigour of any kind; power of any kind.

Strength there must be either of love or war, even such contrary ways leading to the same unity. Holyday.

God, in all things wise and just,
Hinder'd not Satan to attempt the mind
Of man, with strength entire and free-will arm'd.
Milton.

This act
Shall crush the strength of Satan. Milton.

Thy counsel, in this uttermost distress,
My only strength and stay. Milton.

6. Power of mind; force of any mental faculty.

Aristotle's large views, acuteness, and penetration of thought, and strength of judgment, few have equalled. Locke.

He enjoyed the greatest strength of good sense,
and the most exquisite taste of politeness. Addison.
We, like friendly colours, found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light. Pope.

7. Spirit; animation.

Methinks I feel new strength within me rise,
Wings growing, and dominion given. Milton.
Adam and first matron Eve

Had ended now their orisons, and found Strength added from above, new hope to spring
Out of despair. Milton.

8. Vigour of writing; nervous diction; force, opposed to softness, in writing or painting.

Leave such to tune their own dull rhymes, and know
What's roundly smooth, or languishingly slow;
And praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

Caracci's strength, Correggio's softer line,
Paulo's free stroke, and Titian's warmth divine.
Pope.

9. Potency of liquors.

10. Fortification; fortress.

The rashness of talking should not only be retarded by the guard of our heart, but fenced in by certain strengths placed in the mouth.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

He thought
This inaccessible high strength to have seiz'd. Milt.
Betray'd in all his strengths, the wood beset;
All instruments, all arts of ruin met. Denham.

Edward's happy-order'd reign most fertile breeds
Plenty of mighty spirits, to strengthen his state. Daniel.

To STRENGTHEN. v. a. [from strength.]

1. To make strong.

Authority is by nothing so much strengthened and confirmed as by custom; for no man easily distrusts the things which he and all men have been bred up to. Temple.

They, bold Longinus! all the Nine inspire,
And bless your critic with a poet's fire;
And ardent judge, who, zealous in his trust,
With warmth gives sentence, yet is always just;
Whose own example strengthens all his laws,
And is himself that great sublime he draws. Pope.

If it were true that women were thus naturally vain and light, then how much more blameable is that education, which seems contrived to strengthen and increase this folly! Law.

2. To animate; to fix in resolution.

This fiery speech inflames his fearful friends:
They tug at ev'ry oar, and ev'ry stretcher heids. Dryden.

To STREW. v. a. [The orthography of this word is doubtful. It is sometimes written strew, and sometimes strout; I have taken both: Skinner proposes strow, and Junius writes straw. Their reasons will appear in the word from which it may be derived. Strawan, Goth. stroy-en, Dut. ſtrēapian, Sax. strawen, Germ. strôcr, Dan. Perhaps strow is best, being that which reconciles etymology with pronunciation. See STROW.]

1. To spread by being scattered.

The snow which does the top of Pindus strew,
Did never whiter shew. Spenser.
Is thine alone the seed that strews the plain?
The birds of heav'n shall vindicate their grain
Pope.

2. To spread by scattering.

I thought thy bride-bed to have deck'd, sweet maid!
And not have strew'd thy grave. Shakesp. Hamlet.

kill'd,
And straw'd his mangled limbs about the field.
Dryden.

STREWMENT. n. s. [from strew.] Any thing scattered in decoration.

Her death was doubtful.—For charitable prayers,
Shards, flints, and pebbles should be thrown on her;
Yet here she is allow'd her virgin charms,
Her maiden strewments, and the bringing home
Of bell and burial. Shakesp. Hamlet.

STRÆ. n. s. [Lat.] In natural history, the small channels in the shells of cockles and scallops.

The salt, leisurely percoited to shoot of itself in the liquor, exposed to the open air, did shoot into more fair crystalline stræ than those that were gained out of the remaining part of the same liquor by a more hasty evaporation. Boyle.

STRÏATE. } adj. [from strïa, Lat. strïc, STRÏATED. } Fr.] Formed in strïa.

These effluvioms fly by strïated atoms and winding particles, as Des Cartes conceiveth; or glide by streams attracted from either pole into the equator. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Des Cartes imagines this earth once to have been a sun, and so the centre of a lesser vortex, whose axis still kept the same posture, by reason of the strïate particles finding no fit pores for their passages, but only in this direction. Ray.

Crystal, when incorporated with the fibrous tales, shews, if broke, a strïated or fibrous texture, like those tales. Woodward.

STRÏCT. adj. [strictus, Lat.]

1. Exact; accurate; rigorously nice.

Thou 'lt fall into deception unaware,
Not keeping strictest watch. Milton.
As legions in the field their front display,
To try the fortune of some doubtful day,
And move to meet their foes with sober pace,
Strict to their figure, though in wider space.
He checks the bold desigu;
And rules as strict his labour'd works confine,
As if th' Stagyrite o'erlook'd each line. Pope.

2. Severe; rigorous; not mild; not indulgent.

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends
To the strict deputy. Shakesp. Meas. for Measure.
Thy will
By nature free, not over-ru'd by fate
Inextricable, or strict necessity. Milton.

If a strict hand be kept over children from the beginning, they will in that age be tractable; and if, as they grow up, the rigour be, as they deserve it, gently relaxed, former restraints will increase their love. Locke.

Yuma the rites of strict religion knew;
On ev'ry altar laid the incense due. Prior.

3. Confined; not extensive.

As they took the compass of their commission stricter or larger, so their dealings were more or less moderate. Hooker.

Not to proceed, but wait my farther pleasure. Dry.

2. Rigorously; severely; without remission or indulgence.

In the discharge of thy place, set before thee
the best examples; and after a time set before thee thine own, and examine thyself strictly whether thou didst not best at first. Bacon.

God may with the greatest justice strictly require endeavours from us, and, without any inconsistency with his goodness, inflict penalties on those who are wanting. Rogers.

A weak prince again disposed the people to new attempts, which it was the clergy's duty to endeavour to prevent, if some of them had not proceeded upon the topic that, strictly followed, would enslave all mankind. Swift.

3. Closely; tightly; with tenseness.

STRÏCTNESS. n. s. [from strict.]

1. Exactness; rigorous accuracy; nice regularity.

I could not grant too much, or distrust too little, to men that pretended singular piety and religious strictness. King Charles.
Such of them as cannot be concealed, connive at, though in the strictness of your judgment you cannot pardon. Dryden.

Who were made privy to the secrets of heaven, but such as performed his revealed will at an higher rate of strictness than the rest? South.

Eusebius, who is not in strictness to be reckoned with the Ante Nicenes. Waterland.

strike sail, and, like swelling streams running different courses, should yet all make haste into the sea of common safety. Temple.

They strike sail where they know they shall be mastered, and murder where they can with safety.
Dryden.

Now, did I not sit near my labour's end
Strikesail, and hast'ning to the harbour tend,
My song to flow'ry gardens might extend. Dryden.

7. To alarm; to put into emotion; to surprise.

The rest struck with horror stood,
To see their leader cover'd o'er with blood. Waller.
Jack Straw at London-stone, with all his rout,
Struck not the city with so loud a shout. Dryden.

His virtues render our assembly awful,
They strike with something like religious fear
Addison's Cato.

Didst thou but view him right, shouldst see him black

With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes
That strike my soul with horror but to name them.
Addison.

We are no sooner presented to any one we never saw before, but we are immediately struck with the idea of a proud, a reserved, an affable, or a good-natured man. Addison.

Nice works of art strike and surprise us most upon the first view; but the better we are acquainted with them, the less we wonder. Atterb.

Court virtues bear, like gems, the highest rate,
Born where heav'n's influence scarce can penetrate;

In life's low vale, the soil the virtues like,
They please as beauties, here as wonders strike.
Pope.

8. [Fædus ferire.] To make a bargain.

Sign but his peace, he vows he'll ne'er again
The sacred names of fops and beaux profane:
Strike up the bargain quickly; for I swear,
As times go now, he offers very fair. Dryden.

I come to offer peace; to reconcile
Past enmities; to strike perpetual leagues
With Vanoc. A. Philips's Briton.

9. To produce by a sudden action.

land. Milton.

These men are fortune's jewels moulded bright,
Brought forth with their own fire and light;
If I her vulgar stone for either took,
Out of myself it must be struck. Cowley.

Take my caduceus!
With this th' infernal ghosts I can command,
And strike a terror through the Stygian strand. Dry.

10. To affect suddenly in any particular manner.

When verses cannot be understood, nor a man's good wit seconded with the forward child understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Shakesp.

Strike her young bones,
Ye taking airs, with lameness. Shakesp.

He that is stricken blind cannot forget
The precious treasure of his eyesight lost. Shakesp.

So ceas'd the rival crew, when Purell came,
They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd. Dryden.

Humility disarms envy, and strikes it dead.
Collier.

Then do not strike him dead with a denial,
But hold him up in life. Addison's Cato.

Scarce credible it is how soon they were stript and laid naked on the ground. Hayward.

Hadst thou not committed

Notorious murder on those thirty men

At Askelon, who never did thee harm,

Then like a robber stripp'dst them of their robes. Milton.

You cloath all that have no relation to you, and strip your master that gives you food. L'Estrange.

A rattling tempest through the branches went,

That stript them bare. Dryden's Knight's Tale.

He saw a beauteous maid,

With hair disbevell'd issuing through the shade,

Strip of her cloaths. Dryden.

He left the pillagers, to rapine hred,

Without controul to strip and spoil the dead. Dryden.

The bride was put in form to bed;

He follow'd, stript. Swift.

2. To deprive; to divest.

The apostle, in exhorting men to contentment, although they have in this world no more than bare food and raiment, giveth us to understand that those are even the lowest of things necessary; that, if we should be stript of all these things, without which we might possibly be, yet these must be left. Hooker.

Now this curious built Phœacian ship,

Returning from her convoy, I will strip

Of all her fleeting matter. Chapman.

We strip and divest ourselves of our own will,

and give ourselves entirely up to the will of God. Duppa.

It is difficult to lead another by words into the thoughts of things, stripped of those specific differences we give them. Locke.

One would imagine these to be the expressions of a man blessed with ease and affluence, not of one just stript of all those advantages, and plunged in the deepest miseries, and now sitting naked upon a dunghill. Atterbury.

3. To rob; to plunder; to pillage: as, a thief stripped the house.

That which lays a man open to an enemy, and that which strips him of a friend, equally attacks him in all those interests that are capable of being weakened by the one, and supported by the other. South.

STROKE. n. s. [from strook, the preterite of strike.]

1. A blow; a knock; a sudden act of one body upon another.

The oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and made
The water which they beat to follow faster, Asamorons of their strokes. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

His white-man'd steeds, that bow'd beneath the yoke,
He cheer'd to courage with a gentle stroke;
Then urg'd his fiery chariot on the foe,
And rising shook his lance in act to throw. Dryden.

2. A hostile blow.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shakesp.

He entered, and won the whole kingdom of Naples, without striking a stroke. Bacon.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure. Dryden.

I had a long design upon the ears of Curl;
but the rogue would never allow me a fair stroke at them, though my penknife was ready. Swift.

3. A sudden disease or affliction.

Take this purse, thou whom the heav'n's plagues
Have humbled to all strokes. Shakesp. King Lear.

Within Troy's strong immures
The ravish'd Helen with wanton Paris sleeps. Shakesp.

An army of English engaged between an army of a greater number, fresh and in vigour on the one side, and a town strong in fortification, and strong in men, on the other. Bacon.

It is no matter how things are; so a man observe but the agreement of his own imaginations, and talk conformably, it is all truth: such castles in the air will be as strong holds of truth as the demonstrations of Euclid. Locke.

3. Powerful; mighty.

While there was war between the houses of Saul and David, Abner made himself strong for Saul. 2 Sam. iii. 6.

The merchant-adventurers being a strong company, and well enderret with rich men and good order, held out bravely. Bacon.

Those that are strong at sea may easily bring them to what terms they please. Addison.

The weak, by thinking themselves strong, are induced to proclaim war against that which ruins them; and the strong, by conceiting themselves weak, are thereby rendered as useless as if they really were so. South's Sermons.

4. Supplied with forces. It has in this sense a very particular construction. We say, a thousand strong; as we say, twenty years old, or ten yards long.

When he was not six-and-twenty strong,
Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low,
My father gave him welcome to the shore. Shakesp. Henry IV.

He was, at his rising from Exeter, between six and seven thousand strong. Bacon.

In Britain's lovely isle a shining throng
War in his cause, a thousand beauties strong. Tickell.

5. Violent; forcible; impetuous.

A river of so strong a current, that it suffereth not the sea to flow up its channel. Heylyn.

But her own king she likens to his Thames,
Serene yet strong, majestic yet sedate,
Swift without violence, without terror great. Prior.

6. Hale; healthy.

Better is the poor being sound and strong in constitution, than a rich man afflicted in his body. Eccles. xxx. 14.

7. Forcibly acting on the imagination.

This is one of the strongest examples of a perso-nation that ever was. Bacon.

8. Ardent; eager; positive; zealous.

Her mother, ever strong against that match,
And firm for doctor Caius, hath appointed
That he shall shuffle her away. Shakesp.

In choice of committees for ripening business for the council, it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifferency by putting in those that are strong on both sides. Bacon.

The knight is a much stronger tory in the country than in town, which is necessary for the keeping up his interest. Addison.

9. Full; having any quality in a great degree; affecting the sight forcibly.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper;
but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

Thus shall there be made two hews of colours;
an interior and stronger by one reflexion in the drops, and an exterior and fainter by two; for the light becomes fainter by every reflexion. Newton's Opticks.

10. Potent; intoxicating.

Get strong beer to rub your horses heels. Swift.

11. Having a deep tincture; affecting the taste forcibly.

Many of their propositions savour very strong of the old leaven of innovations. King Charles.

12. Affecting the smell powerfully.

The prince of Cambay's daily food
Is asps, and basilisk, and toad;
Which makes him have so strong a breath,
Each night he stinks a queen to death. Hudibras
Add with Cecropian thyme strong-scented cen-taury. Dryden.

The heat of a human body, as it grows more intense, makes the urine smell more strong. Arbuthnot.

In process of time, an ungodly custom grown strong was kept as a law. Wisdom, xiv. 16.

16. Violent; vehement; forcible.

In the days of his flesh he offered up prayers, with strong crying and tears. Heb. v. 7.

The scriptures make deep and strong impressions on the minds of men; and whosoever denies this, as he is in point of religion atheistical, so in understanding brutish. J. Corbet.

17. Cogent; conclusive.

Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth. Shakesp.

Produce your cause; bring forth your strong reasons. Isaiah.

What strong cries must they he that shall drown
so loud a clamour of impieties! Decay of Piety.

The strongest and most important texts are these which have been controverted; and for that very reason, because they are the strongest. Waterland.

18. Able; skilful; of great force of mind.

There is no English soul
More stronger to direct you than yourself,
If with the sap of reason you would quench,
Or but allay, the fire of passion. Shakesp. Hen. VIII.

19. Firm; compact; not soon broken.

Full on his ankle fell the pond'rous stone,
Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the solid bone. Pope.

20. Forcibly written; comprising much meaning in few words.

Like her sweet voice is thy harmonious song,
As high, as sweet, as easy, and as strong. Smith.

STRONGFISTED. adj. [strong and fist.]
Stronghanded.

John, who was pretty strongfisted, gave him such a squeeze as made his eyes water. Arbuthnot.

STRONGHAND. n. s. [strong and hand.]
Force; violence.

When their captain dieth, if the senjory should descend to his child, and an infant, another would thrust him out by stronghand, being then unable to defend his right. Spenser.

They wanting land wherewith to sustain their people, and the Tuscans having more than enough, it was their meaning to take what they needed by stronghand. Raleigh.

STRONGLY. adv. [from strong.]

Metals receive in readily strongwaters; and strongwaters do readily pierce into metals and stones; and some will touch upon gold, that will not touch upon silver. Bacon's Natural History.

STROOK. The preterite of strike, used in poetry for struck.

A sudden tempest from the desert flew
With horrid wings, and thunder'd as it blew.
Then, whirling round, the quins together strook. Sandys.

That conq'ring look,
When next beheld, like lightning strook
My blasted soul, and made me bow. Waller.

He, like a patient angler, ere he strook,
Would let them play a while upon the hook. Dryd.

STROPHE. n. s. [strophe, Fr. εσοφν.] A stanza.

STROVE. The preterite of strive.

Having quite lost the way of nobleness, he strove to climb to the height of terribleness. Sidney.

To STROUT. v. n. [strussen, Germ.] To swell with an appearance of greatness;
to walk with affected dignity; to strut.

This is commonly written strut, which seems more proper.

To STROUT. v. a. To swell out; to puff out; to enlarge by affectation.

I will make a brief list of the particulars in an historical truth nowise stroued, nor made greater by language. Bacon.

To STROW. v. n. [See To STREW.]

1. To spread by being scattered.

Angel forms lay entranc'd,
Thick as autumnal leaves that strow the brooks
In Valombrosa. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. To spread by scattering; to be-sprinkle.

All the ground
With shiver'd armour strown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Come, shepherds, come, and strow with leaves
the plain;

Such funeral rites your Daphnis did ordain. Dryden.

With osier floats the standing water strow,
With massy stones make bridges if it flow. Dryden.

3. To spread.

There have been three years dearth of corn, and every place strow'd with beggars. Swift.

4. To scatter; to throw at random.

Synah, can I tell thee more?
And of our ladies bowie;

But little need to strow my store,
Suffice this bill of our. Spenser.

The tree in storms
The glad earth about her strows

With treasure from her yielding boughs. Waller.

Possession kept the beaten road,
And gather'd all his brother strow'd. Swift.

To STROWL. v. n. To range; to wander.

[See STROLL.]

'Tis she who nightly strowls with saunt'ring pace. Garr.

STRUCK. The old preterite and participle passive of strike.

This message bear: the Trojans and their chief
Bring holy peace, and beg the king's relief;
Struck with so great a name, and all on fire,

The youth replies, whatever you require. Druden.

In a regular plantation, I can place myself in its several centers, so as to view all the walks struck from them. Spectator.

S T R

High on his car Sesostris struck my view,
Whom scepter'd slaves in golden harness drew,
Pope.

Some to conceal alone their taste confine,
And glitt'ring thoughts struck out at ev'ry line,
Pope.
STRUCKEN. The old participle passive of strike.

Down fell the duke, his joints dissolv'd asunder,
Blind with the light, and strucken dead with wonder,
Fairfax.

All liquors strucken make round circles, and dash,
Bacon.

Silent, and in face
Confounded, long they sat as strucken mute,
Milton.
STRUCTURE. n. s. [structure, Fr. structura from structus, Lat.]

1. Act of building; practice of building.

His son builds on, and never is content,
Till the last farthing is in structure spent,
Dryden.

2. Manner of building; form; make.

Several have come about to inform them; but,
for want of insight into the structure and constitution of the terraqueous globe, have not given satisfaction, Woodward.

3. Edifice; building.

Pope.

STRUDE or Strode. A stock of breeding mares.
Bailey.

To STRUGGLE. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. To labour; to act with effort.

No man is guilty of an act of intemperance but he might have forborne it; not without some trouble from the strugglings of the contrary habit, but still the thing was possible,
South.

2. To strive; to contend; to contest.

In the time of Henry VIII. differences of religion tore the nation into two mighty factions; and, under the name of Papist and Protestant, struggled in her bowels with many various events,
Temple.

I repent, like some despairing wretch
That boldly plunges in the frightful deep,
Then pants and struggles with the whirling waves,
And catches every slender reed to save him,
Smith.

3. To labour in difficulties; to be in agonies or distress.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still,
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill,
Dryden.
'Tis wisdom to beware,
And better shun the bait than struggle in the snare,
Dryden.

If men struggle through as many troubles to be miserable as to be happy, my readers may be persuaded to be good,
Spectator.

STRUGGLE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Labour; effort.

When, in the division of parties, men only strove for the first place in the prince's favour, an honest man might look upon the struggle with indifference,
Addison.

2. Contest; contention.

It began and ended without any of those unnatural struggles for the chair, which have disturbed the peace of this great city,
Atterbury.

3. Agony; tumultuous distress.

Blackmore.

STRUMPET. n. s. [Of doubtful original.]

S T U

Stropo vieux mot palliardise: stuprum, Lat.] A whore; a prostitute. Trevoux.

How like a yonker or a prodigal
The skarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!
Shakesp.

Ne'er could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art, and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid Subdues me quite,
Shakesp. Measure for Measure.

If to preserve this vessel for my lord
From any other foul unlawful touch,
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none,
Common fame is as false and impudent as a common strumpet, Shak. Othello.
L'Estrange.

Honour had his due;
Before the holy priest my vows were tied;
So came I not a strumpet, but a bride,
Dryden.

To STRUMPET. v. a. To make a whore; to debauch.

If we two be one, and thou play false,
I do digest the poison of thy flesh,
Being strumpeted by the contagion,

As thy strutting bags with money rise,
The love of gain is of an equal size,
Dryden.

STRUT. n. s. [from the verb.] An affection of stateliness in the walk.

Certain gentlemen, by smirking countenances and an ungainly strut in their walk, have got preferment,
Swift.

STUB. n. s. [ræb, Sax. stubbe, Dan. stob, Dut. stipes, Lat.]

1. A thick short stock left when the rest is cut off.

Dametas guided the horses so ill, that the wheel coming over a great stub of a tree, overturned the coach,
Sidney.

All about old stocks and stubs of trees,
Whereon nor fruit nor leaf was ever seen,
Did hang upon the ragged rocky knees,
Spenser.

'To buy at the stub is the best for the buyer,
More timely provision, the cheaper is fire,
Tusser.
Upon cutting down of an old timber tree, the stub hath put out sometimes a tree of another kind,
Bacon's Natural History.

We here
Live on tough roots and stubs, to thirst inar'd,
Men to much misery and hardships born,
Milton.

Prickly stubs instead of trees are found,
Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold,
Dryden.

2. A log; a block.

You shall have more ado to drive our dullest and laziest youth, our stocks and stubs, from the infinite desire of such a happy nurture, than we have now to haul our choicest wits to that asinine feast of sow-thistles and brambles,
Milton.

To STUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To force up; to extirpatc.

S T U

His two tusks serve for fighting and leeding; by the help whereof he stubs up edible roots out of the ground, or tears off the bark of trees, Grew's Musæum.

The other tree was griev'd,
Grew scabby, dried a-top, was stunted;
So the next parson stubb'd and burnt it,
Swift.

STUBBED. adj. [from stub.] Truncated; short and thick.

A pain he in his head-piece feels,
Against a stubb'd tree he reels,
And up went poor Hobgoblin's heels,
To spite the eny nymphs,
Hang upon our stubb'd horns
Garlands, ribbons, and fine poesies,
Ben Jonson.

STUBBEDNESS. n. s. [from stubb'd.] The state of being short, thick, and truncated.

STUBBLE. n. s. [estouble; Fr. stoppel, Dut. stipula, Lat.] The stalks of corn left in the field by the reaper.

This suggested
At some time, when his suaring insolence
Shall reach the people, will be the fire
To kindle their dry stubble, and their blaze
Shall darken him for ever,
Shakesp.

You, by thus much seen,
Know by the stubble what the come hath bene,
Chapman.

If a small red flower in the stubble fields, called the wincope, open in the morning, be sure of a fair day,
Bacon.

His succeeding years afford him little more than the stubble of his own harvest,
Dryden.
Thrice happy Duck, employ'd in threshing stubble,
Thy toil is lessen'd, and thy profits double,
Swift.
After the first crop is off, they plow in the wheat stubble, Mortimer's Husbandry.

STUBBORN. adj. [This word, of which no obvious etymology appears, is derived by Minshew from stoutborn; referred by Junius to σκαρπος; and deduced better by Mr. Lye, from stub, perhaps from stub-horn.]

1. Obstinate; inflexible; contumacious. Strife! Atin in their stubborn mind
Coals of contention and hot vengeance tin'd,
Shakesp.

Then stood he neere the doore, and proud to draw
The stubborne bow, thrice tried, and thrice gave law, Chapman.

The queene is obstinate,
Disdainful to be tried by 't,
Shakesp. Henry VIII.

To do no contriv'd murder. Shakesp. Othello.
6. Any mixture or medicine.
I did compound for her
A certain stuff, which being ta'en would seize
The present power of life. Shakesp. Cymbeline.
7. Cloth or texture of any kind.
8. Textures of wool thinner and slighter than cloth.
Let us turn the wools of the land into cloaths and stuffs of our own growth, and the hemp and flax growing here into linen cloth and cordage.
Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
9. Matter or thing. In contempt.
O proper stuff !
This is the very painting of your fear. Shakesp. Macbeth.
Such stuff as madmen
Tongue and brain not. Shakesp.
At this fusty stuff
The large Achilles, on his prest bed lolling,
From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.
Shakesp.
Please not thyself the flat'ring crowd to hear ;
'Tis fulsome stuff to feed thy itching ear.
Dryden's Persius.
Anger would indite
Such woful stuff as I or Shadwell write.
Dryden's Juvenal.
To-morrow will be time enough
To hear such mortifying stuff. Swift.
The free things that among rakes pass for wit and spirit, must be shocking stuff to the ears of persons of delicacy. Clarissa.
10. It is now seldom used in any sense but in contempt or dislike.
- To STUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fill very full with any thing.
When we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls.
Shakesp.
Each thing beheld did yield
Our admiration : shelves with cheeses heapt ;
Sheds stuff with lambs and goats, distinctly kept.
Chapman.
Though plenteous, all too little seems
To stuff this maw, this vast unhide-bound corps.
Milton.
What have we more to do than to stuff our guts with these figs ?
This crook drew hazel-boughs adown,
And stuff'd her apron wide with nuts so brown.
Gay.
2. To fill to uneasiness.
With some sweet oblivious antidote
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart. Shakesp.

Put roses into a glass with a narrow mouth, stuffing them close together, but without bruising,
and they retain smell and colour fresh a year.
Bacon's Natural History.

4. To fill by being put into any thing.
Grief fills the room up of my absent child,
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me,
Stuff's out his vacant garments with his form.
Shakesp.
With inward arms the dire machine they load,
And iron bowels stuff the dark abode.
Dryden's Æneid.
Officious Baucis lays
Two cushions, stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise.
Dryden.
A bed,
The stuffing leaves, with hides of bears o'erspread.
Dryden.
5. To swell out by putting something in.
I will be the man that shall make you great.—
I cannot perceive how, unless you give me your doublet, and stuff me out with straw.
Shakesp. Henry IV.
The gods for sin
Should with a swelling dropsy stuff thy skin.
Dryden.
6. To fill with something improper or superfluous.
It is not usual among the best patterns to stuff
the report of particular lives with matter of public record.
Those accusations are stuffed with odious generals, that the proofs seldom make good. Clarendon.
For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head
With all such reading as was never read. Pope.

contracted from mustum, Lat.]
1. Wine yet unfermented ; must.
An unctuous clammy vapour, that arises from the stum of grapes when they lie mashed in the vat, puts out a light when dipped into it.
Addison on Italy.
2. New wine used to raise fermentation in dead and rapid wines.

Let our wines without mixture or stum be all fine,
Or call up the master, and break his dull noddle.
Ben Jonson.

3. Wine revived by a new fermentation.
Drink ev'ry letter on 't in stum,
And make it brisk champagne become. Hudibras.
To STUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To renew wine by mixing fresh wine and raising a new fermentation.

Vapid wines are put upon the lees of noble wines to give them spirit, and we stum our wines to renew their spirits. Floyer.

- To STUMBLE. v. n. [This word Junius derives from stup, and says the original meaning is to strike, or trip, against a stump. I rather think it comes from tumble.]

1. To trip in walking.

When she will take the rein, I let her run ;
But she'll not stumble. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.
A headstall being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst.

Shakesp. Taming of the Shrew.
As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches,
Methought that Gloster stumbled ; and in falling Struck me, that sought to stay him, overboard.
Shakesp.

The way of the wicked is as darkness ; they know not at what they stumble. Prov. iv. 19.

Cover'd o'er with blood,
Which from the patriot's breast in torrents flow'd,
He faints ; his steed no longer bears the rein,
But stumbles o'er the heap his hand had slain. Prior.

2. To slip ; to err ; to slide into crimes or blunders.

He that loveth his brother abiding in the light,
and there is none occasion of stumbling in him.
1 John, ii. 10.

This my day of grace
They who neglect and scorn, shall never taste ;
But hard be harden'd, blind be blinded more,
That they may stumble on, and deeper fall. Milton.

3. To strike against by chance ; to light on by chance ; with upon.

This extreme dealing had driven her to put herself with a great lady of that country, by which occasion she had stumbled upon such mischances as were little for the honour of her or her family.
Sidney.

What man art thou, that thus bescreen'd in night,
So stumblest on my counsel ? Shak. Romeo and Juliet.

A mouse, bred in a chest, dropped out over the side, and stumbled upon a delicious morsel.

Ovid stumbled, by some inadvertency, upon Livia in a bath. Dryden.

Many of the greatest inventions have been accidentally stumbled upon by men busy and inquisitive.
Ray.

Write down p and b, and make signs to him to endeavour to pronounce them, and guide him by shewing him the motion of your own lips ; by which he will, with a little endeavour, stumble upon one of them. Holder's Elements of Speech.

- To STUMBLE. v. a.

1. To obstruct in progress ; to make to trip or stop.

2. To make to boggle ; to offend.

Such terms amus'd them all,
And stumbled many. Milton's Paradise Lost.

noise.]

1. To confound or dizzy with noise.
An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Assaults his ear. Milton.
Still shall I hear, and never quit the score,
Stunn'd with hoarse Codrus' Theseid o'er and o'er.
Dryden.
Too strong a noise stuns the ear, and 'one too weak does not act upon the organ. Cheyne.
So Aloia, wearied of being great,
And nodding in her chair of state,
Stunn'd and worn out with endless chat
Of Will did this, and Nan said that. Prior.
Shouts as thunder loud afflict the air,
And stun the birds releas'd. Prior.
The Britons, once a savage kind,
Descendants of the barbarous Huns,
With limbs robust, and voice that stuns,
You taught to modulate their tongues,
And speak without the help of lungs. Swift.

2. To make senseless or dizzy with a blow.

One hung a pole-ax at his saddle-bow,
And one a heavy mace to stun the foe. Dryden.
STUNG. The preterite and participle passive of sting.
To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Are of the adder. Shakespeare. King Lear.
With envy stung, they view each other's deeds;
The fragrant work with diligence proceeds.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To make senseless or dizzy with a blow.

STUNG. The preterite of stink.
To STUNT. v. a. [stunta, Island.] To hinder from growth.

Though this usage stunted the girl in her growth, it gave her a hardy constitution; she had life and spirit. Arbuthnot.

There he stopt short, nor since has writ a tittle,
But has the wit to make the most of little;
Like stunted hide-bound trees, that just have got Sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Pope.

The tree
Grew scrubby, dried a-top, and stunted;
And the next parson stubb'd and horn'd it. Swift.

STUPE. n. s. [stupa, Lat.] Cloth or flax dipped in warm medicaments, and applied to a hurt or sore.

A fomentation was by some pretender to sur-

Where'er she passes fix their wond'ring eyes. Dryd.
If I by chance succeed,
Know, I am not so stupid, or so hard,
Not to feel praise, or fame's deserv'd reward. Dryd.

With wild surprise
A moment stupid, motionless, he stood. Thomson.

2. Performed without skill or genius.

Wit, as the chief of virtue's friends,
Disdains to serve ignoble ends:
Observe what loads of stupid rhimes
Oppress us in corrupted times. Swift.

STUPIDITY. n. s. [stupidité, Fr. stupiditas, Lat.] Dulness; heaviness of mind;
sluggishness of understanding.

Shadwel alone, of all my sons, is he
Who stands confus'd in full stupidity. Dryden.

STUPIDLY. adv. [from stupid.]

1. With suspension or inactivity of understanding.
That space the evil one abstracted stood
From his own evil, and for the time remain'd Stupidly good. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Dull; without apprehension.
On the shield there were engraven maps of countries, which Ajax could not comprehend, but looked on as stupidly as his fellow-beast the lion.
Dresden.

STUPIFIER. n. s. [from stupify.] That which causes stupidity.

To STUPIFY. v. a. [stupefacio, Latin: this word should therefore be spelled stupefy;
but the authorities are against it.]

1. To make stupid; to deprive of sensibility; to dull.

Those
Will stupefy and dull the sense a while.
Shakespeare. Cymbeline.

Consider whether that method, used to quiet some consciences, does not stupefy more. Decay of Piety.

The fumes of his passion do as really intoxicate his discerning faculty, as the fumes of drink dis-compose and stupefy the brain of a man overcharged with it. South.

Envy, like a cold poison, benumbs and stupefies;
and, conscious of its own impotence, folds its arms
in despair. Collier.

STURDILY. adv. [from sturdy.]

1. Stoutly; hardily.
2. Obstinately; resolutely.
Then withdraw
From Cambridge, thy old nurse: and, as the rest,
Here toughly chew and sturdily digest
Th' immense vast volumes of our common law.
Donne.

STURDINESS. n. s. [from sturdy.]

1. Stoutness; hardiness.
Sacrifice not his innocency to the attaining some little skill of bustling for himself, by his conversation with vitious boys, when the chief use of that sturdiness, and standing upon his own legs, is only for the preservation of his virtue. Locke.

2. Brutal; strength.

STURDY. adj. [estourdi, Fr.]

1. Hardy; stout; brutal; obstinate. It is always used of men, with some disagreeable idea of coarseness or rudeness.

That must be done, and I would fain see Mortal so sturdy as to gainsay. Hudibras.
Aw'd by that horse, accustom'd to command,
The sturdy kerns in due subjection stand,
Nor bear the reins in any foreign hand. Dryden.
A sturdy hardened sinner shall advance to the utmost pitch of impiety with less reluctance than he took the first steps, whilst his conscience was yet vigilant and tender. Atterbury.

2. Strong; forcible.

The ill-apparell'd knight now had gotten the reputation of some sturdy lout, he had so well defended himself. Sidney.

How the wit brightens, how the style refines! Pope.

2. Manner of speaking appropriate to particular characters.

No style is held for base, where love well named is. Sidney.

There was never yet philosopher
That could endure the toothach patiently,
However they have writ the style of gods,
And make a pish at chance and sufferance. Shak.

3. Mode of painting.

The great stile stands alone, and does not require, perhaps does not as well admit, any addition from inferior beauties. The ornamental stile also possesses its own peculiar merit; however, though the union of the two may make a sort of composite stile, yet that stile is likely to be more imperfect than either of those which go to its composition. Reynolds.

4. It is likewise applied to musick.

5. Title; appellation.

Ford's a knave, and I will aggravate his stile;
thou shalt know him for knave and cuckold. Shak.

The king gave them in his commission the style and appellation which belonged to them. Clarend.

O virgin! or what other name you bear
Above that style, O more than mortal fair!
Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain. Dryd. Zen.

Let not an humble suppliant sue in vain. Dryd. Zen.
Propitious hear our pray'r,
Whether the style of Titan please thee more,
Whose purple rays th' Achæmenes adore.

observed by any court in its way of proceeding.
Ayliffe's Parergon.

8. A pointed iron used anciently in writing on tables of wax.

9. Any thing with a sharp point; as a graver, the pin of a dial.

Placing two stiles or needles of the same steel, touch'd with the same loadstone, when the one is removed but half a span, the other would stand like Hercules's pillars. Brown.

10. The stalk which rises from amid the leaves of a flower.

Style is the middle prominent part of the flower of a plant, which adheres to the fruit or seed: 'tis usually slender and long, whence it has its name.
Quincy.

The figure of the flower-leaves, stamina, apices, stile, and seed-vessel. Ray.

To STYLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To call; to term; to name.

The chancellor of the exchequer they had no mind should be styled a knight. Clarendon.

Err not that so shall end
The strife which thou call'st evil, but we style

The strife of glory. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Fortune's gifts, my actions
May stile their own rewards. Denham's Sophy.

Whoever backs his tenets with authorities, thinks he ought to carry the cause, and is ready to stile it impudence in any one who shall stand out.
Locke.

His conduct might have made him stil'd
A father, and the nymph his child. Swift.

STYPTICK. } adj. [στυπτικός; styptique, STYPTICAL. } Fr. This is usually,

though erroneously, written stiptick.]

The same as astringent; but generally expresses the most efficacious sort of astringents, or those which are applied to stop hæmorrhages.

Quincy.
Fruits of trees and shrubs contain phlegm, oil,
and an essential salt, by which they are sharp,
sweet, sour, or styptick. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

There is a sour styptick salt diffus'd through the earth, which passing a concoction in plants, becometh milder. Brown.

From spirit of salt, carefully dephlegm'd and removed into lower glasses, having gently abstracted the whole, there remained in the bottom, and the neck of the retort, a great quantity of a certain dry and styptical substance, mostly of a yellowish colour. Boyle.

In an effusion of blood, having dossils ready dip't in the royal styptick, we applied them. Wisem. Surg.

STYPTICITY. n. s. The power of stanching blood.

Catharticks of mercurials precipitate the viscidities by their stypticity, and mix with all animal acids. Floyer.

To STY'PHY. v. a. [See STITHY.] To forge on an anvil.

By the forge that stythied Mars his helm,
I'll kill thee every where, yea, o'er and o'er. Shak.

SUA'SIBLE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Easy to be persuaded.

SUA'SIVE. adj. [from suadeo, Lat.] Having ing power to persuade.

It had the passions in perfect subjection; and though its command over them was but suasive and political, yet it had the force of coercion, and despotical. South.

SUA'SORY. adj. [suasorius, Lat.] Having tendency to persuade.

SUA'VITY. n. s. [suavitè, Fr. suavitas, Lat.]

She desired them for rarity, pulchritude, and suavity. Brown.

2 Sweetness to the mind.

SUB, in composition, signifies a subordinate degree.

SUBA'CID. adj. [sub and acidus, Lat.]
Sour in a small degree.

The juice of the stem is like the chyle in the animal body, nor sufficiently concocted by circulation, and is commonly subacid in all plants.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

SUBA'CRID. adj. [sub and acrid.] Sharp and pungent in a small degree.

The green cholera of a cow tasted sweet, bitter, subacid, or a little pungent, and turned syrup of violets green. Floyer.

To SUBA'CT. v. a. [subactus, Lat.] To reduce; to subdue.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

SUBA'CTION. n. s. [subactus, Lat.] The act of reducing to any state, as of mixing two bodies completely, or beating any thing to a very small powder.

There are of concoction two periods; the one assimilation, or absolute conversion and subaction;
the other maturation: whereof the former is most conspicuous in living creatures, in which there is an absolute conversion and assimilation of the nourishment into the body. Bacon's Natural History.

SUBA'LTERN. adj. [subalterne, Fr.] Inferiour; subordinate; that which in different respects is both superiour and inferiour. It is used in the army of all officers below a captain.

Love's subalterns, a duteous band,
Like watchmen round their chief appear;
Each had his lantern in his hand,
And Venus, mask'd, brought up the rear. Prior.

There had like to have been a duel between two subalterns, upon a dispute which should be governor of Portsmouth. Addison.

One, while a subaltern officer, was every day complaining against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, after he received his commission for a regiment, he confessed the spirit of colonel-ship was coming fast upon him, and it daily increased to his death. Swift.

This sort of universal ideas, which may either be considered as a genus or species, is called subaltern.

SUBALTE'RNATE. adj. [subaltermus, Lat.]

They ought not to execute those precepts by simple messengers, or subbeadles, but in their own persons. Ayliffe.

SUBCELE'STIAL. adj. [sub and caelestial.]
Placed beneath the heavens.

The most refined glories of subcelestial excellencies are but more faint resemblances of these.

Glavinille.

SUBCHA'NTER. n. s. [sub and chanter; succentor, Lat.] The deputy of the precentor in a cathedral.

SUBCLAVIAN. adj. [sub and clavus, Lat.]

Subclavian is applied to any thing under the armpit or shoulder, whether artery, nerve, vein, or muscle.

The liver, though seated on the right side, yet, by the subclavian division, doth equidistantly communicate its activity unto either arm.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The chyle first mixeth with the blood in the subclavian vein, and enters with it into the heart, where it is very imperfectly mixed, there being no mechanism nor fermentation to convert it into blood, which is effected by the lungs. Arbuthnot.

SUBCONSTELLATION. n. s. [sub and constellation.] A subordinate or secondary constellation.

As to the picture of the seven stars, if thereby he meant the Pleiades, or subconstellation upon the back of Taurus, with what congruity they are described, in a clear night an ordinary eye may discover.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

SUBCONTRACTED. part. adj. [sub and contracted.] Contracted after a former contract.

Your claim,

I bat it in the interest of my wife ;

'Tis she is subcontracted to this lord,

And I her husband contradict your banes.

Shakesp. King Lear.

SUBCONTRARY. adj. [sub and contrary.] Contrary in an inferior degree.

If two particular propositions differ in quality, they are contraries: as, some vine is a tree ; some vine is not a tree. These may be both true together, but they can never be both false.

Watts.

SUBCUTANEOUS. adj. [sub and cutaneous.] Lying under the skin.

SUBDEACON. n. s. [subdiaconus, Lat.]

Who in the Romish church they have a subdeacon, who is the deacon's servant.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

SUBDEAN. n. s. [subdecanus, Lat.] The vicegerent of a dean.

Whenever the dean and chapter confirm any act, that such confirmation may be valid, the dean must join in person, and not in the person of a deputy or subdean only.

Ayliffe.

SUBDECUPLE. adj. [sub and decuplus, Lat.] Containing one part of ten.

SUBDERISORIOUS. adj. [sub and derisorius.] Scoffing or ridiculing with tenderness and delicacy. Not used.

The subderisorious mirth is far from giving any offence to us : it is rather a pleasant condiment of our conversation.

More.

SUBDITITIOUS. adj. [subdititius, Lat.] Put secretly in the place of something else.

To SUBDIVERSIFY. v. a. [sub and diversify.] To diversify again what is already diversified.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into arras ; and these variously subdiversified according to the fancy of the artificer.

Hale.

To SUBDIVIDE. v. a. [subdiviser, Fr. sub and divide.] To divide a part into yet more parts.

In the rise of eight, in tones, there be two be-mols, or half notes ; so as if you divide the tones equally, the eight is but seven whole and equal notes ; and if you subdivide that into half notes, as in the staves of a lute, it maketh the number thirteen.

Bacon's Natural History.

When Brutus and Cassius were overthrown, soon after Antonius and Octavianus brake and subdivided.

Brown.

The glad father glories in his child,

When he can subdivide a fraction.

Roscommon.

When the progenies of Cham and Japhet swarmed into colonies, and those colonies were subdivided in many others, in time their descendants lost the primitive rites of divine worship, retaining only the notion of one deity. Dryden.

SUBDIVISION. n. s. [subdivision, Fr. from subdivide.]

1. The act of subdividing.

When any of the parts of any idea are farther divided, in order to a clear explication of the whole, this is called a subdivision ; as when a year is divided into months, each month into days, and each day into hours, which may be farther subdivided into minutes and seconds. Watts's Logick.

2. The parts distinguished by a second division.

How can we see such a multitude of souls cast under so many subdivisions of misery, without reflecting on the absurdity of a government that sacrifices the happiness of so many reasonable beings to the glory of one.

Addison.

In the decimal table the subdivisions of the cubit, as span, palm, and digit, are deduced from the shorter cubit.

Arbuthnot.

SUBDOLOUS. adj. [subdolos, Lat.] Cunning ; sly ; sly.

In his own case he might have thought it a subdulous evasion ; a forced succession wholly nugatory on the footing of worldly success.

Whyte's Poems, Notes.

To SUBDUCE. } v. u. [sabduco, subductus,

To SUBDUCT. } Lat.]

1. To withdraw ; to take away.

Or nature fail'd in me, and left some part

Not proof enough such object to sustain ;

Or, from my side subducting, took perhaps

More than enough. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To subtract by arithmetical operation.

Take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction : if out of that supposed infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before, and yet still the quotient must be infinite.

Hale.

SUBDUCTION. n. s. [from subduct.]

1. The act of taking away.

Possibly the Divine beneficence subducting that influence which it communicated from the time of their first creation, they were kept in a state of immortality till that moment of the subduction.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. Arithmetical subtraction.

Suppose we take the other operation of arithmetick, subduction : if out of that infinite multitude of antecedent generations we should subduce ten, the residue must be less by ten than it was before that subduction, and yet still the quotient be infinite.

Hale.

To SUBDUE. v. a. [from subdo, or subjugo, Lat.]

1. To crush ; to oppress ; to sink ; to overpower.

Nothing could have subdued nature

To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.

Shakesp.

Them that rose up against me hast thou subdued

under me, 2 Sam. xxii. 40.

If aught were worthy to subdue

The soul of man. Milton.

2. To conquer ; to reduce under a new dominion.

Be fruitful and replenish the earth, and subdue it.

Gen. i. 28.

Augustus Cæsar subdued Egypt to the Roman empire.

Peach.

To overcome in battle, and subdue

Nations, and bring home spoils. Milton.

The Romans made those times the standard of their wit, when they subdued the world. Spratt.

3. To tame ; to subact ; to break.

Nor 'st unwholesome to subdue the land

By often exercise ; and where before

You broke the earth, again to plow. May's Virgil.

SUBDUEMENT. n. s. [from subdue.] Conquest. A word not used, nor worthy to be used.

I have seen thee,

As hot as Persens, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Bravely despising forfeits and subduements.

SUBDUER. n. s. [from subdue.] Conqueror ; tamer.

Great god of might, that reigneth in the mind,
And all the body to thy best dost frame :

Victor of gods, subduer of mankind,

That dost the lions and fell tygers tame,

Who can express the glory of thy might ?

Spenser.

Their curious eye

Discerns their great subduer's awful mien

And corresponding features fair. Phillips.

Figs are great subducers of acrimony, useful in hoarseness and coughs, and extremely emollient.

Arbuthnot.

SUBDUPE, } adj. subdupe, Fr. sub-SUBDUPLICATE. } dupe, Fr. sub and duplus, Lat.] Containing one part of two.

As one of these under pulleys doth abate half of that heaviness which the weight hath in itself, and cause the power to be in a subdupe proportion unto it, so two of them do abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, and three a subseptuple. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

The motion, generated by the forces in the whole passage of the body or thing through that space, shall be in a subduplicate proportion of the forces.

Newton's Opticks.

SUBJACENT. adj. [subjaccens, Lat.] Lying under.

The superficial parts of mountains are washed away by rains, and borne down upon the subjacent plains.

Woodward.

To SUBJECT. v. a. [subjectus, Lat.]

1. To put under.

The angel

Led them direct, and down the cliff as fast

To the subjected plain. Milton.

The medal bears each form and name ;

In one short view, subjected to our eye,

Gods, emperors, heroes, sages, beauties lie. Pope.

2. To reduce to submission ; to make subordinate ; to make submissive.

Think not, young warriors, your diminish'd

name

Shall lose of lustre, by subjecting rage

To cool the dictates of experienc'd age. Dryden.

3. To enslave ; to make obnoxious.

I live on bread like you, feel want like you,

Taste grief, need friends, like you : subjected thus,

How can you say to me I am a king ?

Shakesp. Richard II.

I see thee, in that fatal hour,

Subjected to the victor's cruel pow'r,

Led hence a slave Dryden.

The blind will always be led by those that see, or fall into the ditch : and he is the most subjected,

the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding.

Locke.

4. To expose ; to make liable.

If the vessels yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniencies of an erroneous circulation.

Arbuthnot.

5. To submit ; to make accountable.

God is not bound to subject his ways of operation to the scrutiny of our thoughts, and confine himself to do nothing but what we must comprehend.

Locke.

6. To make subservient.

He subjected to man's service angel wings. Milt.

SUBJECT. adj. [subjectus, Lat.]

1. Placed or situated under.

The eastern tower,

Whose height commands, as subject, all the vale

To see the fight. Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

2. Living under the dominion of another.

Esau was never subject to Jacob, but founded a distinct people and government, and was himself

prince over them. Locke.

Christ, since his incarnation, has been subject to the Father ; and will be so also in his human capacity, after he has delivered up his mediatorial

3. Exposed; liable; obnoxious.
 Most subject is the fattest soil to weeds;
 And he the noble image of my youth
 Is overspread with them. Shakesp.
 All human things are subject to decay,
 And when fate summons monarchs must obey. Dryden.
4. Being that on which any action operates, whether intellectual or material.
 I enter into the subject matter of my discourse. Dryden.

SUBJECT. n. s. [sujet, Fr.]

1. One who lives under the dominion of another: opposed to governor.
 Every subject's duty is the king's,
 But every subject's soul is his own. Shak. Hen. V.
 Never subject long'd to be a king,
 As I do long and wish to be a subject. Shak. H.VI.
 Those I call subjects which are governed by the ordinary laws and magistrates of the sovereign. Davies.
- We must understand and confess a king to be a father, a subject to be a son; and therefore honour to be by nature most due from the natural subject to the natural king. Holyday.
 The subject must obey his prince, because God commands it, human laws require it. Swift.
 Were subjects so but only by their choice,
 And not from birth did forc'd dominion take,
 Our prince alone would have the public voice. Dryden.
- Heroick kings whose high perfections have made them awful to their subjects, can struggle with and subdue the corruption of the times. Davenant.

2. That on which any operation, either mental or material, is performed.
 Now spurs the lated traveller apace
 To gain the timely inn, and near approaches
 The subject of our watch. Shakesp. Macbeth.
 This subject for heroick song pleased me. Milton.
 Here he would have us fix our thoughts; nor are they too dry a subject for our contemplation. Decay of Piety.
- I will not venture on so nice a subject with my severe style. More.
 Make choice of a subject beautiful and noble, which, being capable of all the graces that colours and elegance of design can give, shall afford a perfect art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate. Dryden.
- The subject of a proposition is that concerning which any thing is affirmed or denied. Watts's Logic.

My real design is, that of publishing your praises to the world; not upon the subject of your noble birth. Swift.

3. That in which any thing inheres or exists.
 Anger is certainly a kind of busness, as it appears well in the weakness of those subjects in whom it reigns, children, women, old folks, sick folks. Bacon.

4. [In grammar.] The nominative case to a verb is called by grammarians the subject of the verb.
Clark's Latin Grammar.

SUBJECTION. n. s. [from subject.]

1. The act of subduing.
 After the conquest of the kingdom, and subjection of the rebels, enquiry was made who there were, that, fighting against the king, had saved themselves by flight. Hale.
2. [Soujettion, Fr.] The state of being under government.
 Because the subjection of the body to the will is by natural necessity, the subjection of the will unto God voluntary, we therefore stand in need of direction after what sort our wills and desires may be rightly conformed to his. Hooker.
 How hard it is now for him to frame himself to subjection, that, having once set before his eyes the hope of a kingdom, hath found encouragement t. Spenser.
- Both in subjection now to sensual appetite. Milt.

SUBJECTIVE. adj. [from subject.] Relating not to the object, but the subject.

Certainty, according to the schools, is distinguished into objective and subjective: objective is when the proposition is certainly true in itself, and subjective, when we are certain of the truth of it. Watts.

SUBINGRESSION. n. s. [sub and ingressus, Lat.] Secret entrance.

The pressure of the ambient air is strengthened upon the accession of the air sucked out; which forceth the neighbouring air to a violent subingression of its parts. Boyle.

To SUBJOIN. v. a. [sub and joindre, Fr. subjungo, Lat.] To add at the end; to add afterwards.

He makes an excuse from ignorance, the only thing that could take away the fault; namely, that he knew not that he was the high-priest, and subjoins a reason. South.

SUBITANEOUS. ads. [subitanicus, Lat.] Sudden; hasty.

To SUBJUGATE. v. a. [subjuguer, Fr. subjugo, Lat.] To conquer; to subdue; to bring under dominion by force.

O fav'rite virgin, that hast warm'd the breast,
 Whose sov'reign dictates subjugate the east!
 He subjugated a king, and called him his vassal. Bacon.

SUBJUGATION. n. s. [from subjugate.] The act of subduing.

This was the condition of the learned part of the world, after their subjugation by the Turks. Hale.

SUBJUNCTION. n. s. [from subjungo, Lat.] The state of being subjoined; the act of subjoining.

The verb undergoes in Greek a different formation; and in dependence upon, or subjunction, to, some other verb. Clarke.

SUBJUNCTIVE. adj. [subjunctivus, Lat. subjunctif, Fr.]

1. Subjoined to something else.
 2. [In grammar.]
 The verb undergoes a different formation, to signify the same intentions as the indicative, yet not absolutely, but relatively to some other verb, which is called the subjunctive mood. Clarke.

SUBLAPSARIAN. } adj. [sub and lapsus,
 SUBLAPSARY. } Lat.] Done after the fall of man.

The degree of reprobation, according to the sublapsarian doctrine, being nothing else but a mere preterition or non-election of some persons whom God left as he found, involved in the guilt of the first Adam's transgression, without any actual personal sin of their own, when he withdrew some others as guilty as they. Hammond.

SUBLATION. n. s. [sublatio, Lat.] The act of taking away.

SUBLEVATION. n. s. [sublego, Lat.] The act of raising on high.

SUBLIMABLE. adj. [from sublime.] Possible to be sublimed.

SUBLIMABLENESS. n. s. [from sublimable.] Quality of admitting sublimation.

He obtained another concrete as to taste and smell, and easy sublimableness, as common sal armoniac. Boyle.

To SUBLIMATE. v. a. [from sublime.]

1. To raise by the force of chemical fire.
 2. To exalt; to heighten; to elevate.
 And as his actions rose, so raise they still their veil
 In words, whose weight best suits a sublimated strain. Drayton.
 Not only the gross and illiterate souls, but the most aerial and sublimated, are rather the more proper fuel for an immaterial fire. Decay of Piety.

 The precepts of Christianity are so excellent and refined, and so apt to cleanse and sublimate the more gross and corrupt, as shews flesh and blood never revealed it. Decay of Piety.

SUBLIMATE. n. s. [from sublime.]
 1. Any thing raised by fire in the retort.

Enquire the manner of subliming, and what metals endure subliming, and what body the sublimate makes. Bacon.

2. Quicksilver raised in the retort.

SUBLIMATE. adj. Raised by fire in the vessel.
 The particles of mercury, uniting with the acid particles of spirit of salt, compose mercury sublimate; and, with the particles of sulphur, cinnabar. Newton's Opticks.

SUBLIMATION. n. s. [sublimation, Fr. from sublimate.]

1. A chemical operation which raises bodies in the vessel by the force of fire.

Sublimation differs very little from distillation, excepting that in distillation only the fluid parts of bodies are raised, but in this the solid and dry; and that the matter to be distilled may be either solid or fluid, but sublimation is only concerned about solid substances. There is also another difference, namely, that rarefaction, which is of very great use in distillation, has hardly any room in sublimation; for the substances which are to be sublimed, being solid, are incapable of rarefaction; and so it is only impulse that can raise them. Quincy.

Separation is wrought by weight, as in the settlement of liquors, by heat, by precipitation, or sublimation; that is, a calling of the several parts up or down, which is a kind of attraction. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Since oil of sulphur per campanam is of the same nature with oil of vitriol, may it not be infered that sulphur is a mixture of volatile and fixed parts, so strongly cohering by attraction, as to ascend together by sublimation? Newton's Opticks.

2. Exaltation; elevation; act of heightening or improving.

She turns
 Bodies to spirits, by sublimation strange. Davies.
 Shall he pretend to religious attainments, who is defective and short in moral, which are but the rudiments and first draught of religion, as religion is the perfection, refinement, and sublimation of morality? South.

SUBLIME. adj. [sublimis, Lat.]

1. High in place; exalted aloft.
 They sum'd their pens, and soaring th' air sublime
 With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.
Sublime on these a tower of steel is rear'd,
 And dire Tisiphone there keeps the ward. Dryden.

2. High in excellence; exalted by nature.
 My earthly strained to the height
 In that celestial colloquy sublime. Milton.
 Can it be, that souls sublime
 Return to visit our terrestrial clime?
 And that the gen'rous mind, releas'd by death,
 Can covet lazy limbs? Dryden.

3. High in style or sentiment; lofty; grand.

Easy in stile thy work, in sense sublime. Prior.

4. Elevated by joy.
 All yet left of that revolted rout,
 Heav'n-fall'n, in station stood or just array,
Sublime with expectation. Milton.

Their hearts were jocund and sublime,
 Drunk with idolatry, drunk with wine. Milton.

5. Lofty of mien; elevated in manner.
 He was sublime, and almost tumorous, in his looks and gestures.
 His fair large front and eye sublime declar'd Absolute rule. Milton.

SUBLIME. n. s. The grand or lofty style.
 The sublime is a Gallicism, but now naturalized.

S U B

Longinus strengthens all his laws,
And is himself the great sublime he draws. Pope.
The sublime rises from the nobleness of thoughts, the magnificence of the words, or the harmonious and lively turn of the phrase; the perfect sublime arises from all three together. Addison.

TO SUBLIME. v. a. [sublimar, Fr. from the adjective.]

1. To raise by a chemical fire.
Study our manuscripts, those myriads
Of letters, which have past 'twixt thee and me;
Thence write our annals, and in three lessons be
To all, whom love's subliming fire invades. Donne.

2. To raise on high.
Although thy trunk be neither large nor strong,
Nor can thy head, not help'd itself sublime,
Yet, like a serpent, a tall tree can climb. Denham.

3. To exalt; to heighten; to improve.
Flow'rs, and then fruit,
Man's nourishment, by gradual scale sublim'd,
To vital spirits aspire. Milton.

The fancies of most are moved by the inward springs of the corporeal machine, which, even in the most sublimed intellectuals, is dangerously influential. Glanville.

Art, being strengthened by the knowledge of things, may pass into nature by slow degrees, and so be sublimed into a pure genius, which is capable of distinguishing betwixt the beauties of nature and that which is low in her. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Meanly they seek the blessing to confine,
And force that sun but on a part to shine;
Which not alone the southern wit sublimes,
But ripens spirits in cold northern climes. Pope.

TO SUBLIME. v. n. To rise in the chemical vessel by the force of fire.

The particles of sal ammoniac in sublimation carry up the particles of antimony, which will not sublime alone. Newton's Opticks.

This salt is fixed in a gentle fire, and sublimes
in a great one. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBLIMELY. adv. [from sublime.] Loftily; grandly.
In English lays, and all sublimely great,
Thy Homer charms with all his ancient heat. Parnell.

Fustian's so sublimely bad,
It is not poetry, but prose run mad. Pope.

SUBLIMENESS. n. s. [sublimitas, Lat.]
The same as sublimity.

SUBLIMITY. n. s. [from sublime; sublimité, Fr. sublimitus, Lat.]

1. Height of place; local elevation.
2. Height of nature; excellence.

As religion looketh upon him who in majesty and power is infinite, as we ought we account not of it, unless we esteem it even according to that very height of excellency which our hearts conceive, when divine sublimity itself is rightly considered. Hooker.

In respect of God's incomprehensible sublimity and purity, this is also true, that God is neither a mind nor a spirit like other spirits, nor a light such as can be discerned. Raleigh.

3. Loftiness of style or sentiment.
Milton's distinguishing excellence lies in the sublimity of his thoughts, in the greatness of which he triumphs over all the poets, modern and ancient,
Homer only excepted. Addison.

SUBLINGUAL. adj. [sublingual, Fr. sub and lingua, Lat.] Placed under the tongue.

Those subliming humours should be intercepted, before they mount to the head by sublingual pills. Harvey.

SUBLUNAR. } adj. [sublunaire, Fr. sub
SUBLUNARY. } and luna, Lat.] Situated beneath the moon; earthly; terrestrial; of this world.

Dull sublunary lovers! love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

S U B

Night measur'd, with her shadowy cone,
Half way up hill this vast sublunar vault. Milton.
Thro' seas of knowledge we our course advance,
Discovering still new worlds of ignorance;
And these discoveries make us all confess
That sublunary science is but guess. Denham.

The celestial bodies above the moon, being not subject to chance, remain in perpetual order, while all things sublunary are subject to change.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

Ovid had warn'd her to beware
Of strolling gods, whose usual trade is,
Under pretence of taking air,
To pick up sublunary ladies. Swift.

The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies:
She sees the planets in their turns advance,
And scorns, Poitier, this sublunary dance. Young.

SUBMARINE. adj. [sub and mare, Lat.]
Lying or acting under the sea.

This contrivance may seem difficult, because these submarine navigators will want winds and tides for motion, and the sight of the heavens for direction. Wilkins.

Not only the herbaceous and woody submarine plants, but also the lithopata, affect this manner of growing, as I observed in corals. Ray on the Creation.

TO SUBMERGE. v. a. [submerger, Fr. submergo, Lat.] To drown; to put under water.

So half my Egypt was submerg'd, and made
A cistern for scald'd snakes. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

SUBMERSION. n. s. [submersion, Fr. from submersus, Lat.] The act of drowning; state of being drowned.

The great Atlantick island is mentioned in Plato's Timæus, almost contiguous to the western parts of Spain and Africa, yet wholly swallowed up by that ocean; which, if true, might afford a passage from Africa to America by land before that submersion. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO SUBMINISTER. } v. a. [subminis-
TO SUBMINISTRATE. } tro, Lat.] To supply; to afford. A word not much in use.

Some things have been discovered, not only by the industry of mankind, but even the inferior animals have subministered unto man the invention of many things, natural, artificial, and medicinal.
Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Nothing subministrates apter matter to be converted into pestilent seminaries, than steams of nasty folks. Harvey.

TO SUBMINISTER. v. n. To subserv.

Passions, as fire and water, are good servants, but bad masters, and subminister to the best and worst purposes. L'Estrange.

SUBMISS. adj. [from submissus, Lat.]
Humble; submissive; obsequious.

King James, mollified by the bishop's submit and eloquent letters, wrote back, that though he were in part moved by his letters, yet he should not be fully satisfied except he spake with him.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Nearer his presence, Adam, though not aw'd,
Yet with submit approach, and reverence meek,
As to a superior nature bow'd low. Milton's Par. Lost.

Rejoicing, but with awe,
In adoration at his feet I fell Submit: he rear'd me. Milton.

SUBMISSION. n. s. [soumission, Fr. from submissus, Lat.]

1. Delivery of himself to the power of another.
Submission, dauphin! 'tis a mere French word;
We English warriors wot not what it means. Shakesp.

2. Acknowledgment of inferiority or dependence; humble or suppliant behaviour

S U B

In all submission and humility
York doth present himself unto your highness. Shakesp.

Great prince, by that submission you'll gain more Than e'er your haughty courage won before. Halifax.

3. Acknowledgment of a fault; confession of error.
Be not as extreme in submission, as in offence. Shakesp.

4. Obsequiousness; resignation; obedience.
No duty in religion is more justly required by God Almighty, than a perfect submission to his will in all things. Temple.

SUBMISSIVE. adj. [submissus, Lat.]
Humble; testifying submission or inferiority.

On what submissive message art thou sent? Shak.
Her at his feet submissive in distress
He thos with peaceful words uprais'd. Milton.

Sudden from the golden throne
With a submissive step I hasted down;
The glowing garland from my hair I took,
Love in my heart, obedience in my look. Prior.

SUBMISSIVELY. adv. [from submissive.]
Humbly; with confession of inferiority.

The goddess,
Soft in her tone, submissively replies. Dryd. Æneid.
But speech ev'n there submissively withdraws
From rights of subjects, and the poor man's cause
Then pompous silence reigns, and stills the noisy laws. Pope.

SUBMISSIVENESS. n. s. [from submissive.]
Humility; confession of fault or inferiority.

If thou dost sin in wine and wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Fraught gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts shuts that out of his story;
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his poor clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

SUBMISSLY. adv. [from submit.] Humbly; with submission.

Humility consists, not in wearing mean cloaths, and going softly and submitly, but in mean opinion of thyself. Taylor.

TO SUBMIT. v. a. [soumettre, Fr. submitto, Lat.]

1. To let down; to sink.
Sometimes the hill submits itself a while
In small descents, which do its height beguile;
And sometimes mounts, but so as billows play,
Whose rise not hinders but makes short our way. Dryden.

Neptune stood,
With all his hosts of waters at command,
Beneath them to submit th' officious flood,
And with his trident shuv'd them off the sand. Dryden.

2. To subject; to resign without resistance to authority.
Return to thy mistress, and submit thyself under her hands. Genesis xvi. 9.

Christian people submit themselves to conformable observance of the lawful and religious constitutions of their spiritual rulers. White.

Will ye submit your neck and chuse to bend
The supple knee? Milton.

3. To leave to discretion; to refer to judgment.
Whether the condition of the clergy be able to bear a heavy burden, is submitted to the house. Suiff.

TO SUBMIT. v. n. To be subject; to acquiesce in the authority of another; to yield.

To thy husband's will Thine shall submit: he over thee shall rule. Milt.
Our religion requires from us, not only to forego pleasure, but to submit to pain, disgrace, and even death. Rogers.

SUBMULTIPLE. n. s. A submultiple number or quantity is that which is contained in another number a certain number of times exactly; thus 3 is submultiple of 21, as being contained in it seven times exactly. Harris.

SUBOCTAVE. } adj. [sub and octavus, SUBOCTUPLE. } Lat. and octuple.] Containing one part of eight.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness of the weight, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion: so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion, three a sextuple, four a suboctuple. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magic.

Had they erected the cube of a foot for their principal conceive, and geometrically taken its suboctave, the congius, from the cube of half a foot, they would have divided the congius into eight parts, each of which would have been regularly the cube of a quarter foot, their well-known palor: this is the course taken for our gallon, which has the pint for its suboctave. Arbuthnot on Coins.

SUBORDINACY. } n. s. [from subordi-
SUBORDINANCY. } nate. Subordinacy is the proper and analogical word.

1. The state of being subject.
Pursuing the imagination through all its extravagancies, is no improper method of correcting, and bringing it to act in subordinacy to reason. Spectator.

2. Series of subordination.
The subordinacy of the government changing hands so often, makes an unsteadiness in the pursuit of the public interests. Temple.

SUBORDINATE. adj. [sub and ordinatus, Lat.]

1. Inferiour in order, in nature, in dignity, or power.

It was subordinate, not enslaved, to the understanding; not as a servant to a master, but as a queen to her king, who acknowledges a subjection, yet retains a majesty. South.

Whether dark presages of the night proceed from any latent power of the soul during her abstraction, or from any operation of subordinate spirits, has been a dispute. Addison.

2. Descending in a regular series.
The two armies were assigned to the leading of two generals, rather courtiers than martial men, yet assisted with subordinate commanders of great experience. Bacon.

His next subordinate awakening, thus to him in secret spake. Milton.

These carry such plain characters of disagreement or affinity, that the several kinds and subordinate species of each are easily distinguished. Woodward.

To SUBORDINATE. v. a. [sub and ordino, Lat.] To range under another. Not in use, but proper and elegant.

If I have subordinated picture and sculpture to architecture, as their mistress, so there are other inferior arts subordinate to them. Wotton.

SUBORDINATELY. adv. [from subordinate.] In a series regularly descending.

It being the highest step of ill, to which all others *subordinate*ly tend, one would think it could be capable of no improvement. Decay of Piety.

SUBORDINATION. n. s. [subordination, Fr. from subordinate.]

1. The state of being inferiour to another.
Nor can a council national decide,
But with subordination to her guide. Dryden.

2. A series regularly descending.
The natural creatures having a local subordination, the rational having a political, and sometimes a sacred. Holyday.

3. Place of rank.
If we would suppose a ministry, where every single person was of distinguished piety, and all great officers of state and law diligent in chusing persons who in their several subordinations would be obliged to follow the examples of their superiors, the empire of irreligion would be soon destroyed. Swift.

To SUBORN. v. a. [suborner, Fr. suborno, Lat.]

1. To procure privately; to procure by secret collusion.

His judges were the self-same men by whom his accusers were suborned. Hooker.

Fond wretch! thou know'st not what thou speak'st,
Or else thou art suborn'd against his honour
In hateful practice. Shakesp.

Reason may meet
Some specious object, by the foe suborn'd,
And fall into deception. Milton.

His artful bosom heaves dissembl'd sighs;
And tears suborn'd fall dropping from his eyes. Prior.

2. To procure by indirect means.

Behold
Those who by ling'ring sickness lose their breath.
And those who by despair suborn their death. Dryd.

SUBORNATION. n. s. [subornation, Fr. from suborn.] The crime of procuring any to do a bad action.

Thomas earl of Desmond was through false subornation of the queen of Edward IV. brought to his death at Tredah most unjustly. Spem. Ireland.

You set the crown
Upon the head of this forgetful man,
And for his sake wear the detested blot
Of murd'rous subornation. Shakesp. Henry IV.

The fear of punishment in this life will preserve men from few vices since some of the blackest often prove the surest steps to favour; such as ingratitude, hypocrisy, treachery, and subornation. Swift.

SUBORNER. n. s. [suborneur, Fr. from suborn.] One that procures a bad action to be done.

SUBPOENA. n. s. [sub and pœna, Lat.]
A writ commanding attendance in a court, under a penalty.

SUBQUADRUPLE. adj. [sub and quadruple.] Containing one part of four.

As one of these under pulleys abates half of that heaviness the weight hath in itself, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, so two of them abate half of that which remains, and cause a subquadruple proportion. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

SUBQUINTUPLE. adj. [sub and quintuple.] Containing one part of five.

If unto the lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion. Wilkins's Math. Magic.

SUBRECTOR. n. s. [sub and rector.] The rector's vicegerent.

He was chosen subrector of the college. Walton.

The king gone to-night 'I subscrib'd his pow'r!
Confin'd to exhibition! all is gone. Shakesp.

To SUBSCRIBE. v. n.

1. To give consent.

Osius, with whose hand the Nicene creed was set down, and framed for the whole christian world to subscribe unto, so far yielded in the end, as even with the same hand to ratify the Arians confession. Hooker.

Advise thee what is to be done,
And we will all subscribe to thy advice. Shakesp.

If wolves had at my gate howl'd that stern tone,
Thou shouldst have said, Go, porter, turn the key,
All eroels else subscrib'd. Shakesp. King Lear.

So spake much humbl'd Eve; but fate
Subscrib'd not: nature first gave signs, impress'd
On bird, beast, air. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To promise a stipulated sum for the promotion of any undertaking.

SUBSCRIBER. n. s. [from subscriptio, Lat.]

1. One who subscribes.

3. One who contributes to any undertaking.

If unto this lower pulley there were added another, then the power would be unto the weight in a subquintuple proportion; if a third, a subseptuple. Wilkins.

SUBSEQUENCE. n. s. [from subsequor, Lat.]
The state of following; not precedence.

By this faculty we can take notice of the order of precedence and subsequence in which they are past. Greav.

SUBSEQUENT. adj. [subsequent, Fr. subsequens, Lat.]
This word is improperly pronounced long in the second syllable by Shakespeare.] Following in train; not preceding.

In such indexes, although small pricks
To their subsequent volumes, there is seen

The baby figure of the giant mass
Of things to come, at large. Shak. Troil. ana. Cress.
The subsequent words came on before the precedent vanish. Bacon.

Why does each consenting sign
With prudent harmony combine
In turns to move, and subsequent appear
To gird the globe and regulate the year? Prior.
This article is introduced as subsequent to the treaty of Munster, made about 1648, when England was in the utmost confusion. Swijt.

SUBSEQUENTLY. adv. [from subsequent.]
Not so as to go before; so as to follow in train.

To men in governing most things fall out accidentally, and come not into any compliance with their preconceived ends: but they are forced to comply subsequently, and to strike in with things as they fall out, by postliminious after-applications of them to their purposes. South.

TO SUBSERVE. r. a. [subservio, Lat.]
To serve in subordination; to serve instrumentally.

Not made to rule
But to subserve where wisdom bears command. Milton.

It is a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glanville.

The memory hath no special part of the brain devoted to its own service, but uses all those parts which subserve our sensations, as well as our thinking powers. Walsh.

SUBSERVIENCE. } n. s. [from subserve.]
SUBSERVIENCY. } Instrumental fitness, use, or operation.

Wicked spirits may by their cunning carry farther in a seeming confederacy or subserviency to the designs of a good angel. Dryden.

There is an immediate and agil subserviency of the spirits to the empire of the soul. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

We cannot look upon the body, wherein appears so much fitness, use, and subserviency to infinite functions, any otherwise than as the effect of contrivance. Bentley.

There is a regular subordination and subserviency among all the parts to beneficial ends. Cheyne's Philosoph. Principles.

SUBSERVIENT. adj. [subserviens, Lat.]
Subordinate; instrumentally useful.

Hammond had an incredible dexterity, scarce ever reading any thing which he did not make subservient in one kind or other. Fell.

Philosophers and common heathens believed one God, to whom all things are referred; but under this God they worshipped many inferior and subservient gods. Stillingfleet.

These ranks of creatures are subservient one to another, and the most of them serviceable to man. Ray.

While awake, we feel none of those motions continually made in the disposal of the corporeal principles subservient herein. Grew.

Sense is subservient unto fancy, fancy unto intellect. Grew.

We are not to consider the world as the body of God; he is an uniform being, void of organs, members, or parts; and they are his creatures, subordinate to him, and subservient to his will. Newton's Opticks.

Most criticks, fond of some subservient art, Still make the whole depend upon a part; They talk of principles, but notions prize, And all to one lov'd folly sacrifice. Pope.

SUBSEXTUPLE. adj. [sub and sextuplus, Lat.]
Containing one part of six.

One of these under pallies abates half of that heaviness the weight lieth, and causes the power to be in a subduple proportion unto it, two of them a subquadruple proportion, three a subseptuple. Wilkins's Mathemat. Magic.

TO SUBSIDE. r. n. [subsideo, Lat.]
To sink; to tend downwards. It is commonly used of one part of a compound, sinking in the whole. Pope has used it rather improperly.

He shook the sacred honours of his head,
With terror trembled heav'n's subsiding hill,
And from his shaken curls ambrosial dews distill. Dryden.

Now Jove suspends his golden scales in air,
Weights the men's wits against the lady's hair:
The doubtful beam long nods from side to side;
At length the wits mount up, the hairs subside. Pope.

SUBSIDENCE. } n. s. [from subsideo.]
SUBSIDENCY. } act of sinking; tendency downward.

This gradual subsidence of the abyss would take up a considerable time. Burnet's Theory.

This miscellany of bodies being determined to subsidence merely by their different specifick gravities, all those which had the same gravity subsided at the same time. Woodward.

By the alternate motion of those air bladders, whose surfaces are by turns freed from mutual contact, and by a sudden subsidence meet again by the ingress and egress of the air, the liquor is still farther attenuated. Arbutnot.

SUBSIDIARY. adj. [subsidiare, Fr. subsidiarius, Lat. from subsidium.]
Assistant; brought in aid.

Bitter substances burn the blood, and are a sort of subsidiary gall. Arbutnot on Aliments.

SUBSIDY. n. s. [subsideo, Fr. subsidium, Lat.]
Aid, commonly such as is given in money.

They advised the king to send speedy aids, and with much alacrity granted a great rate of subsidy. Bacon.

'Tis all the subsidy the present age can raise. Dryden.

It is a celebrated notion of a patriot, that a house of commons should never grant such subsidies as give no pain to the people, lest the nation should acquiesce under a burden they did not feel. Addison.

TO SUBSIGN. r. a. [subsigno, Lat.]
To sign under.

Neither have they seen any deed, before the conquest, but subsigned, with crosses and single names without surnames. Camden.

TO SUBSIST. r. n. [subsister, Fr. subsisto, Lat.]

1. To be; to have existence.
2. To continue; to retain the present state or condition.

Firm we subsist, but possible to swerve. Milton.
The very foundation was removed, and it was a moral impossibility that the republick could subsist any longer. Swijt.

3. To have means of living; to be maintained.

He shone so powerfully upon me, that, like the heat of a Russian summer, he ripened the fruits of poetry in a cold climate; and gave me where-withal to subsist in the long winter which succeeded. Dryden.

Let us remember those that want necessities, as we ourselves should have desired to be remembered, had it been our sad lot to subsist on other men's charity. Atterbury.

4. To inhere; to have existence by means of something else.

Though the general natures of these qualities are sufficiently distant from one another, yet when they come to subsist in particulars, and to be clothed with several accidents, then the discernment is not so easy. South.

SUBSISTENCE, or SUBSISTENCY. n. s. [subsistence, Fr. from subsist.]

1. Real being.
The flesh, and the conjunction of the flesh with God, began both at one instant; his making and taking to himself our flesh was but one act; so that in Christ there is no personal subsistence but one, and that from everlasting. Hooker.

We know as little how the union is dissolved, that is, the chain of these differing subsistencies that compound us, as how it first commenced. Glanville.

Not only the things had subsistence, but the very images were of some creatures existing. Stillingfleet.

2. Competence; means of supporting life.

His viceroy could only propose to himself a comfortable subsistence out of the plunder of his province. Addison.

3. Inherence in something else.

SUBSISTENT. adj. [subsistens, Lat.]

1. Having real being.
Such as deny spirits subsistent without bodies, will with difficulty affirm the separate existence of their own. Brown.
2. Inherent.
These qualities are not subsistent in those bodies, but are operations of fancy begotten in something. Bentley.

SUBSTANCE. n. s. [substantia, Fr. substantia, Lat.]

1. Being; something existing; something of which we can say that it is.

Since then the soul works by herself alone, Springs not from sense, nor humours well agreeing; Her nature is peculiar, and her own; She is a substance, and a perfect being. Davies.

The strength of gods,
And this empyreal substance, cannot fail. Milton.

2. That which supports accidents.
What creatures there inhabit, of what mold And substance? Milton.
Every being is considered as subsisting in and by itself, and then it is called a substance; or it subsists in and by another, and then it is called a mode or manner of being. Watts.

3. The essential part.

It will serve our turn to comprehend the substance, without confining ourselves to scrupulous exactness in form. Digby.

This edition is the same in substance with the Latin. Burn.
They are the best epitomes, and let you see with one cast of the eye the substance of a hundred pages. Addison.

4. Something real; not imaginary; something solid, not empty.

Shadows to-night
Have struck more terror to the soul of Richard,
Than can the substance of ten thousand soldiers
Arm'd all in proof, and led by shallow Richmond. Shaksp.

He the future evil shall no less
In apprehension than in substance feel. Milton.
Heroick virtue did his actions guide,
And he the substance, not th' appearance, chose.
To rescue one such friend he took more pride,
Than to destroy whole thousands of such foes. Dryden.

5. Body; corporeal nature.

Between the parts of opaque and coloured bodies are many spaces, either empty or replenished with mediums of other densities; as, water between the tinging corpuscles wherewith any liquor is impregnated, air between the aqueous globules that constitute clouds or mists, and for the most part spaces void of both air and water; but yet perhaps not wholly void of all substance between the parts of hard bodies. Newton.

The qualities of plants are more various than those of animal substances. Arbutnot on Aliments.

There may be a great and constant cough, with an extraordinary discharge of phlegmatick matter, while, notwithstanding, the substance of the lungs remains sound. Blackmore.

6. Wealth; means of life.

He hath eaten me out of house and home, and hath put all my substance into that fat belly of his; but I will have some of it out again.

Shakesp. Henry IV.

We are destroying many thousand lives, and exhausting our substance, but not for our own interest.

Swift.

SUBSTANTIAL. adj. [substantiel, Fr. from substance.]

1. Real; actually existing.

If this atheist would have his chance to be a real and substantial agent, he is more stupid than the vulgar.

Bentley.

2. True; solid; real; not merely seeming.

O blessed, blessed night! I am afraid, Being in night, all this is but a dream; Too flattering sweet to be substantial.

Shakesp.

To give thee being, I lent Out of my side to thee, nearest my heart, Substantial life.

Milton.

If happiness be a substantial good, Not fram'd of accidents, nor subject to them, I err'd to seek it in a blind revenge.

Denham.

Time, as a river, hath brought down to us what is more light and superficial, while things more solid and substantial have been immersed.

Glenn.

The difference betwixt the empty vanity of ostentation, and the substantial ornaments of virtue.

L'Estrange.

Observations are the only sure grounds whereon to build a lasting and substantial philosophy.

Woodw.

A solid and substantial greatness of soul looks down with neglect on the censures and applauses of the multitude.

Addison.

This useful, charitable, humble employment of yourselves, is what I recommend to you with greatest earnestness, as being a substantial part of a wise and pious life.

Law.

3. Corporeal; material.

Now shine these planets with substantial rays? Does innate lustre gild their measur'd days?

Prior.

The sun appears flat like a plate of silver, the moon as big as the sun, and the rainbow a large substantial arch in the sky; all which are gross falsehoods.

Watts.

4. Strong; stout; bulky.

Substantial doors,

Cross-barr'd and bolted fast, fear no assaults.

Milt.

5. Responsible; moderately wealthy; possessed of substance.

Trials of crimes and titles of right shall be made by verdict of a jury, chosen out of the honest and most substantial freeholders.

Both gloried to have 'scap'd the Stygian flood, As gods, and by their own recover'd strength; Not by the sufferance of supernal pow'r.

Sufferer. n. s. [from suffer.]

1. One who endures or undergoes pain or inconvenience. This evil on the Philistines is fall'n, The sufferers then will scarce molest us here; From other hands we need not much to fear.

He, when his love was wounded in a few, That were unhappy that they might be true,

Made you the favourite of his last sad times,
That is, a sufferer in his subjects crimes. Dryden.
She returns to me with joy in her face, not from the sight of her husband, but from the good luck
she had at cards; and if she has been a loser,
I am doubly a sufferer by it: she comes home out of humour, because she has been throwing away my estate. Addison's Spectator.

The history of civil wars and rebellions does not make such deep and lasting impressions, as events of the same nature in which we or our friends have been sufferers. Addison.

Often these unhappy sufferers expire for want of sufficient vigour and spirit to carry on the animal regimen. Blackmore.

2. One who allows; one who permits.
SUFFERING, n. s. [from suffer.] Pain

the hearts of all men, there would need be no other restraint from evil. Hooker.

Seem I to thee sufficiently possess'd
Of happiness? Milton.

All to whom they are proposed, are by his grace sufficiently moved to attend and assent to them; sufficiently, but not irresistibly; for if all were irresistibly moved, all would embrace them; and if none were sufficiently moved, none would embrace them. Rogers.

In a few days or hours, if I am to leave this carcase to be buried in the earth, and to find myself either for ever happy in the favour of God, or eternally separated from all light and peace; can any words sufficiently express the littleness of every thing else? Law.

Which borne before him on his steed he brought. Dryden.

2. Clothes made one part to answer another.

What a beard of the general's cut, and a horrid suit of the camp, will do among foaming hostles, and ale-wash'd wits, is wonderful. Shak. Henry V.

Him all repute
For his device in handsoning a suit,
To judge of lace, pink, panes, print, cut and plait,
Of all the court to have the best conceit. Donne.

Three or four suits one winter there does waste,
One suit does there three or four winters last. Cowt.

His majesty was supplied with three thousand suits of cloths, with good proportions of shoes and stockings. Clarendon.

3. Consecution; series; regular order.

Every five and thirty years the same kind and suit of weather comes about again; as great frost, great wet, great droughts, warm winters, summers with little heat; and they call it the prime. Bacon.

4. Out of suits. Having no correspondence. A metaphor, I suppose, from cards.

Wear this for me; one out of suits with fortune,
That would give more, but that her hand lacks means. Shakesp.

5. [Suite, Fr.] Retinue; company. Obsolete.

home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition. Shaksppeare.

8. In Spenser it seems to signify pursuit; prosecution.

High amongst all knights hast hong thy shield,
Thenceforth the suit of earthly conquest shoono,
And wash thy hands from guilt of bloody field. Spenser.

9. [In law.] Suit is sometimes put for the instance of a cause, and sometimes for the cause itself deduced in judgment. Ayliffe.

All that had any suits in law came unto them. Susanna.

Wars are suits of appeal to the tribunal of God's justice, where there are no superiors on earth to determine the cause. Bacon's War with Spain.

Involve not thyself in the suits and parties of great personages. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

To Alibech alone refer your suit, Dryden.

And let his sentence finish your dispute. Dryden.

A suit of law is not a thing unlawful in itself, but may be innocent, if nothing else comes in to make a sin thereof; but then it is our sin, and a matter of our account, when it is either upon an unjustifiable ground, or carried on by sinful management. Kettlewell.

John Bull was flattered by the lawyers that his suit would not last above a year, and that before that time he would be in quiet possession of his business. Arbutnot.

To SUIT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fit; to adapt to something else.

Suit the action to the word, the word to the action, with this special observance, that you o'erstep not the modesty of nature. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The matter and manner of their tales, and of their telling, are so suited to their different educations and humours, that each would be improper in any other. Dryden.

2. To be fitted to; to become.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal, Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well. Dryden.

Raise her notes to that sublime degree, Which suits a song of piety and thee. Prior.

3. To dress; to clothe.

Such a Sebastian was my brother too, So went he suited to his watry tomb; If spirits can assume both form and soot, You come to fright us. Shakesp. Twelfth Night.

Be better suited; These weeds are memories of those misfortunes: I pry thee put them off to worse than suits. Shakesp.

I'll disrobe me Of these Italian weeds, and suit myself As does a Briton peasant. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

To SUIT. v. n. To agree; to accord.

Dryden uses it both with to and with.

The one intense, the other still remiss, Cannot well suit with either; but soon prove tedious alike. Milton.

The place itself was suiting to his care, Uncouth and savage as the cruel fair. Dryden.

Pity does with a noble nature suit. Constraint does ill with love and beauty suit. Dryden.

This says, because it suits with his hypothesis, but proves it not. Locke.

Give me not an office That suits with me so ill; thou know'st my temper. Addison.

SUITABLE. adj. [from suit.] Fitting; according with; agreeable to; with to.

Through all those miseries, in both there appeared a kind of nobleness not suitable to that affection. Sidney.

What he did purpose, it was the pleasure of God that Solomon his son should perform, in manner suitable to their present and ancient state. Hooker.

To solemn acts of royalty and justice, their suitable ornaments are a beauty; are they only in religion a stain? Hooker.

It is very suitable to the principles of the Roman church; for why should not their science as well as service be in an unknown tongue? Tillotson.

As the blessings of God upon his honest industry had been great, so he was not without intentions of making suitable returns in acts of charity. Atterbury.

Expression is the dress of thought, and still appears more decent, as more suitable;

A vile conceit in pompous words express'd, Is like a clown in regal purple dress'd. Pope.

It is as great an absurdity to suppose holy prayers and divine petitions without an holiness of life suitable to them, as to suppose an holy and divine life without prayers. Law.

SUITABLENESS. n. s. [from suitable.] Fitness; agreeableness.

In words and styles, suitableness makes them acceptable and effective. Glanville.

With ordinary minds, it is the suitableness, not the evidence of a truth that makes it to be yielded to; and it is seldom that any thing practically convince a man that does not please him first. South.

He creates those sympathies and suitablenesses of nature that are the foundation of all true friendship, and by his providence brings persons so affected together. South.

Consider the laws themselves, and their suitableness or unsuitableness to those to whom they are given. Tillotson.

SUITABLY. adv. [from suitable.] Agreeably; according to.

Cauminate stoutly; for though we wipe away with never so much care the dirt thrown at us, there will be left some sullage behind.

Decay of Piety.
To SULLY. v. a. [souillur, Fr.] To soil; to tarnish; to dirt; to spot.

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding.
The falling temples which the gods provoke,
And statues sully'd yet with sacrilegious smoke.

He's dead, whose love had sully'd all your reign,
And made you empress of the world in vain.
Lab'ring years shall weep their destin'd race,
Charg'd with ill omens, sully'd with disgrace.

Publick justice may be done to those virtues their humility took care to conceal, which were sullied by the calumnies and slanders of malicious men.

Let there be no spots to sully the brightness of this solemnity.

Ye walkers too, that youthful colours wear,
Three sullying trades avoid with equal care;
The little chimney-sweeper skulks along,
And marks with sooty stains the heedless throng.

SULLY. n. s. [from the verb.] Soil; tarnish; spot.

You laying these light sullies on my son,
As 'twere a thing a little soil'd i' th' working.

TO SWADDLE. v. a. [ɹ-pedan, Sax.]

1. To swathe; to bind in cloaths, generally used of binding new-born children.

Invested by a veil of clouds,
And swaddled as new-born in sable shrouds;
For these a receptacle I design'd. Sundys.

How soon doth man decay!
When cloths are taken from a chest of sweets,
To swaddle infants, whose young breath
Scarce knows the way;
Those cloths are little winding sheets,
Which do consign and send unto death. Herbert.

They swaddled me up in my night-gown with long pieces of linen, till they had wrapt me in about a hundred yards of swathe. Addison.

2. To beat; to cudgel. A low ludicrous word.

Great on the bench, great in the saddle,
That could as well bind o'er as swaddle. Hudibras.

SWADDLE. n. s. [from the verb.] Cloaths bound round the body.

I hegged them to uncase me: no, no, say they; and upon that carried me to one of their houses, and put me to bed in all my swaddles. Addison.

SWADDLINGBAND. } n. s. [from

SWADDLINGCLOUT. } swaddle.] Cloth wrapped round a new-born child.

From thence a fairy thee unwheeting rest,
There as thou slept'st in tender swaddlingband,
And her base elfin brood there for thee left:
Such men do changlings call, so changed by fairies theft. Spenser.

That great baby you see there is not yet out of his swaddling-clouts. Shakesp. Hamlet.

The swaddlingbands were purple, wrought with gold. Dryden.

TO SWAG. v. n. [ɹ-igan, Sax. swelgia, Island.] To sink down by its weight; to hang heavy.

They are more apt, in swagging down, to pierce with their points, than in the jacent posture, and crevice the wall. Wotton.

Being a tall fish, and with his sides much compressed, he hath a long fin upon his back, and another answering to it on his belly; by which he is the better kept upright, or from swagging on his sides. Crew.

To SWAGE. v. a. [from assuage.] To ease; to soften; to mitigate.

Apt words have pow'r to swage
The tumours of a troubled mind,
And are as balm to fester'd wounds. Milton.
Nor wanting pow'r to mitigate and swage,
With solemn touches, troubled thoughts, and chase
Anguish, and doubt, and fear from mortal minds. Milton.

I will love thee:
Though my distracted senses should forsake me,
I'd find some intervals, when my poor heart
Should swage itself, and be let loose to thine. Otway.

To SWA'GGER. v. n. [swadderen, Dut. to make a noise; ppagan, Sax.] To bluster; to bully; to be turbulent and tumultuously proud and insolent.

Drunk? squabble? swagger? and discourse sustain with one's own shadow? Oh thou invincible spirit of wine!
'Tis the gage of one that I should fight withal, if he be alive; a rascal that swaggered with me last night. Shakesp.
The lesser size of mortals love to swagger for opinions, and to boast infallibility of knowledge. Glanville's Scepis.

Many such asses in the world huff, look big, stare, dress, cock, and swagger at the same noisy rate. L'Estrange.

He chuck'd,
And scarcely deign'd to set a foot to ground,
But swagger'd like a lord. Dryden.

Confidence, how weakly soever founded, hath some effect upon the ignorant, who think there is something more than ordinary in a swaggering man, that talks of nothing but demonstration. Tuloston.

To be great, is not to be starched, and formal, and supercilious; to swagger at our footmen, and browbeat our inferiours. Collier on Pride.

What a pleasure is it to be victorious in a cause?
to swagger at the bar? for a lawyer I was burn, and a lawyer I will be. Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

SWA'GGERER. n. s. [from swagger.] A blusterer; a bully; a turbulent noisy fellow.

He's no swaggerer, hostess; a tame cheater:
you may stroke him as gently as a puppy greyhound. Shakesp. Henry IV.

SWAGGY. adj. [from swag.] Dependent by its weight.

The beaver is called animal ventricosum, from his swaggy and prominent belly. Brown's Vulg. Err.

SWAIN. n. s. [ppain, Sax. and Runic.]

SWA'LLOW. n. s. [ppalepe, Sax. hirundo.]

A small bird of passage; or, as some say, a bird that lies hid and sleeps in the winter.

The swallow follows not summer more willingly than we your lordship. Shakesp. Timon.

That come before the swallow dares. Shakesp.
The swallows make use of celendine, and the linnet of ephragia. More.

When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air,
He told us that the welkin would be clear. Gay.

To SWA'LLOW. v. a. [ppelgan, Sax. swelgen, Dut.]

1. To take down the throat.

If little faults
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
Whose capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear before us! Shakesp. Henry V.

Men are, at a venture, of the religion of the country; and most therefore swallow down opinions, as silly people do enperick pills, and have nothing to do but believe that they will do the cure. Locke.

2. To receive without examination.

Consider and judge of it as a matter of reason, and not swallow it without examination as a matter of faith. Locke.

3. To engross; to appropriate: often with up emphatical.

Far be it from me, that I should swallow up or destroy. 2 Samuel.

SWAN. n. s. [ppau, Sax. swan, Dan.
swacn, Dut. cycnus, Lat.]

The swan is a large water-fowl, that has a long neck, and is very white, excepting when it is young. Its legs and feet are black, as is its bill, which is like that of a goose, but something rounder, and a little hooked at the lower end of it: the two sides below its eyes are black and shining like ebony. Swans use wings like sails, which catch the wind, so that they are driven along in the water. They feed upon herbs and some sort of grain like a goose, and some are said to have lived three hundred years. There is a species of swans with the feathers of their heads, towards the breast, marked at the ends with a gold colour inclining to red. The swan is reckoned by Moses among the unclean creatures; but it was consecrated to Apollo the god of music, because it was said to sing melodiously when it was near expiring; a tradition generally received, but fabulous. Cabinet.

With untainted eye
Compare her face with some that I shall show,
And I will make thee think thy swan a crow. Shak.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice;
Then if he lose, he makes a swan-like end. Shak.

The fearful matrons raise a screaming cry,
Old feeble men with fainter groans reply;
A jarring sound results, and mingles in the sky,
Like that of swans returning to the floods. Dryd.

The idea which an Englishman signifies by the name swan, is a white colour, long neck, black beak, black legs, and whole feet, and all these of a certain size, with a power of swimming in the water, and making a certain kind of noise. Locke.

SWA'NSKIN. n. s. [swan and skin.] A kind of soft flannel, imitating for warmth
the down of a swan.

SWAP. adv. [ad suipa to do at a snatch,
Island.] Hastily; with hasty violence;

other small animals, particularly those bees that migrate from the hive.

A swarm of bees that cut the liquid sky,
Upon the topmost branch in clouds ablight. Dryden's Æneid.

2. A multitude; a crowd.

From this swarm of fair advantages,
You grip'd the general sway into your hand. Shak.
If we could number up those prodigious swarms that had settled themselves in every part of it, they would amount to more than can be found.

Addison on Italy.
This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
Let others sing. Young.

To SWARM. v. n. [ƿearman, Sax. swermen, Dut.]

1. To rise as bees in a body, and quit the hive.

All hands employ'd,
Like labouring bees on a long summer's day;
Some sound the trumpet for the rest to swarm.

Dryden.
Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spied. Gay.
When bees hang in swarming time, they will presently rise, if the weather hold. Mortim. Husb.

2. To appear in multitudes; to crowd; to throng.

The merciless Macdonel,
The multiplying villainies of nature
Do swarm upon. Shakesp. Macbeth.

Our superfluous lacqueys, and our peasants,
Who in unnecessary action swarm
About our squares of battle. Shakesp. Henry V.

What a multitude of thoughts at once
Awaken'd in me swarm, while I consider
What from within I feel myself, and hear
What from without comes often to my ears! Milt.

Then mounts the throne, high plac'd before the shrine;
In crowds around the swarming people join.

3. To be crowded; to be over-run; to be thronged.

These garrisons you have now planted throughout all Ireland, and every place swarms with soldiers.

Her lower region swarms with all sort of fowl,
her rivers with fish, and her seas with whole shoals.

Those days swarmed with fables, and from such grounds took hints for fictions, poisoning the world ever after.

Life swarms with ill, the boldest are afraid,
Where then is safety for a tender maid? Young.

4. To breed multitudes.

Not so thick swarm'd once the soil
Bedropp'd with blood of Gargon. Milt. Par. Lost.

And courage fierce, that all men did af fray,
Through the world then swarm'd in every part.

A man
Of swarth complexion, and of crabbed hue,
That him full of melancholy did shew. Spenser.

Whereas I was black and swart before;
With those clear rays which she infus'd on me,
That beauty am I blest with, which you see.

No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful power o'er true virginity. Milton.

2. In Milton it seems to signify gloomy; malignant.

Ye valleys low,
On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks.

To SWART. v. a. [from the noun.] To blacken; to dusk.

Sworn ashore, man, like a duck; I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn. Shak. Tempest.

Let me swear you all to secrecy;
And, to conceal my shame, conceal my life. Dryden.

2. To declare upon oath: as, he swore treason against his friend.

3. To obtest by an oath.

Now, by Apollo, king, thou swear'st thy gods in vain.

—O vassal! miscreant! Shakesp.

SWEARER. n. s. [from swear.] A wretch who obtests the great name wantonly and profanely.

And must they all be hang'd that swear and lie?
—Every one.

—Who must hang them?

—Why, the honest men.

—Then the liars and swearers are fools; for there are liars and swearers enow to beat the honest men, and hang them up. Shakesp.

Take not his name, who made thy mouth, in vain;

It gets thee nothing, and hath no excuse:
Lust and wine plead a pleasure, avarice a gain;
But the cheap swearer through his open sluice
Lets his soul run for naught. Herbert.

Of all men a philosopher should be no swearer; for an oath, which is the end of controversies in law, cannot determine any here, where reason only must induce. Brown.

It is the opinion of our most refined swearers, that the same oath or curse cannot, consistently with true politeness, be repeated above nine times in the same company by the same person. Swift's Polite Conversation.

SWEAT. n. s. [ŕpeaz, Sax. sweet, Dut.]

1. The matter evacuated at the pores by heat or labour.

Sweat is salt in taste; for that part of the nourishment which is fresh and sweet, turneth into blood and flesh; and the sweat is that part which is excerned. Bacon.

Some insensible effluvium, exhaling out of the stone, comes to be checked and condensed by the air on the superficies of it, as it happens to sweat on the skins of animals. Boyle.

Soft on the flow'ry herb I found me laid
In balmy sweat. Milton.

When Lucilius brandishes his pen,
And flashes in the face of guilty men,
A cold sweat stands in drops on ev'ry part,
And rage succeeds to tears, revenge to smart. Dryden.

Sweat is produced by changing the balance between the fluids and solids, in which health consists, so as that projectile motion of the fluids overcome the resistance of the solids. Arbuthnot.

2. Labour; toil; drudgery.

This painful labour of abridging was not easy, but a matter of sweat and watching. 2 Mac. ii. 26.

The field

To labour calls us, now with sweat impos'd. Milton.
What from Jonson's oil and sweat did flow,
Or what more easy nature did bestow
On Shakespeare's gentler muse, in these full grown Their graces both appear. Denham.

3. Evaporation of moisture.

Beans give in the mow; and therefore those that are to be kept are not to be thrashed till March, that they have had a thorough sweat in the mow. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To SWEAT. v. n. preterite swet, sweated; sweaten. [from the noun.]

1. To be moist on the body with heat or labour.

Let them be free, marry them to your heirs,
Why sweat they under burthens?

Mistress Page at the door, sweating and blowing, and looking wildly, would needs speak with you. Shakesp.

When he was brought again to the bar, to hear His knell rung out, his judgment, he was stir'd With such an agony, he sweat extremely. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

About this time in autumn, there reigned in the city and other parts of the kingdom a disease then new; which, of the accidents and manner thereof, they called the sweating sickness. Bacon's Henry VII.

A young tall squire
Did from the camp at first before him go;
At first he did, but scarce could follow strait,
Sweating beneath a shield's unruly weight. Cowley.

2. To toil; to labour; to drudge.

How the drudging goblin swet
To earn his cream how duly set;
When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thrash'd the corn. Milton.

Our author, not content to see
That others write as carelessly as he;
Though he pretends not to make things complete,
Yet, to please you, he'd have the poets sweat. Waller.

3. To emit moisture.

Wainscots will sweat so that they run with water.
In cold evenings there will be a moisture or sweating upon the stool. Mortimer.

To SWEAT. v. a.

Such cleanliness from head to heel,
No humours gross, or frowzy steams,
No noisome whiffs, or sweaty steams. Swift.

3. Laborious; toilsome.

Those who labour
The sweaty forge, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour, Acknowledge Vulcan's aid. Prior.

To SWEEP. v. a. part. and part. pass. swept. [ŕpapan, Sax.]

1. To drive away with a besom.

1. To drive away with a besom. What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one, doth not sweep the house, and seek diligently, till she find it? Luke, xv. 8.

3. To carry with pomp.

Let frantick Falbot triumph for a while,
And, like a peacock, sweep along his tail. Shakesp. Henry VI.

4. To drive or carry off with celerity and violence.

Though I could,
With barefac'd power, sweep him from my sight,
And hid my will avouch it; yet I must not. Shak.
The river of Kishon swept them away. Jud. v.

The blustering winds striving for victory swept the snow from off the tops of those high mountains, and cast it down unto the plains in such abundance, that the Turks lay as men buried alive. Knolles's History.

Flying bullets now
To execute his rage appear too slow;
They miss or sweep but common souls away;
For such a loss Opdam his life must pay. Waller.
My looking is the fire of pestilence,
That sweeps at once the people and the prince. Dryden.

I have already swept the stakes, and with the common good fortune of prosperous gamblers can be content to sit. Dryden.

Is this the man who drives me before him
To the world's ridge, and sweeps me off like rubbish? Dryden.

Fool! time no change of motion knows;
With equal speed the torrent flows.

To sweep fame, power, and wealth away ;
The past is all by death possest,
And frugal fate that guards the rest,
By giving, hides them live, to-day. Fenton.
A duke holding in a great many hands, drew a huge heap of gold ; but never observed a sharper, who under his arm swept a great deal of it into his hat. Swift.

5. To pass over with celerity and force.
6. To rub over.

Their long-descending train,
With rubies edg'd and sapphires, swept the plain. Dryden.

7. To strike with a long stroke.

Descend, ye nine ; descend, and sing ;
The breathing instrument inspire,
Wake into voice each silent string,
And sweep the sounding lyre. Pope.

TO SWEEP. v. n.

1. To pass with violence, tumult, or swiftness. Perhaps in the first quotation we should read swoop.

Haste me to know it, that I with wings as swift,
As meditation or the thoughts of love
May sweep to my revenge. Shakesp.
A poor man that oppresseth the poor, is like a sweeping rain which leaveth no food. Prov. xxviii 3.

Cowen in her course
Tow'rd's the Sabrinian shores, as sweeping from her source, Takes Towa. Drayton.

Before tempestuous winds arise,
Stars shonting through the darkness gild the night
With sweeping glories, and long trails of light. Dryden.

2. To pass with pomp ; to pass with an equal motion.

She sweeps it through the court with troops of ladies,
More like an empress than Duke Humphrey's wife. Shakesp.

In gentle dreams I often will be by,
And sweep along before your closing eye. Dryden.

3. To move with a long reach.

Nor always errs ; for off the gauntlet draws
A sweeping stroke along the crackling jaws. Dryd.

SWEEP. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of sweeping.
2. The compass of any violent or continued motion.

A door drags, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, or by the ill boarding of the room, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon's Mech. Exercises.

A torrent swell'd
With wintry tempests, that disdains all mounds, Breaking away impetuous, and involves Within its sweep, trees, houses, men. Philips.

8. Violent and general destruction.

In countries subject to great epidemical sweeps, men may live very long ; but where the proportion of the chronical distemper is great, it is not likely to be so. Graunt.

4. Direction of any motion not rectilinear.

Having made one incision a little circularly, being a second, bringing it with an apposite sweep to meet the other. Sharp.

with great speed and violence over a great compass at once.

They rush along, the rattling woods give way,
The branches bend before their sweepy sway. Dry.

SWEET. adj. [γρῆτε. Sax. soet, Dut.]

1. Pleasing to any sense.

Sweet expresses the pleasant perceptions of almost every sense : sugar is sweet, but it hath not the same sweetness as musick ; nor hath musick the sweetness of a rose, and a sweet prospect differs from them all : nor yet have any of these the same sweetness as discourse, counsel, or meditation hath ; yet the royal psalmist saith of a man, we took sweet counsel together : and of God, my meditation of him shall be sweet. Watts.

2. Luscious to the taste.

This honey tasted still is ever sweet. Davies.

3. Fragrant to the smell.

Balm his foul head with warm distilled waters,
And burn sweet wood, to make the lodging sweet. Shakesp.

there breatheth a sweet smell ; for that this happeneth but in certain matters which have some sweetness, which the dew of the rainbow draweth forth. Bacon.

Shred very small with thyme, sweet-margory, and a little winter savoury. Walton's Angler.

The balmy zephyrs, silent since her death,
Lament the ceasing of a sweeter breath. Pope.

The streets with treble voices ring,
To sell the homiteous product of the spring ;
Sweet-smelling flowers, and elders early bud. Gay.

4. Melodious to the ear.

The dulcimer, all organs of sweet stop. Milton.
Her speech is grac'd with sweeter sound
Than in another's song is found. Waller.

No more the streams their murmurs shall forbear,
A sweeter musick than their own to hear ;
But tell the reeds, and tell the vocal shore,
Fair Daphne's dead, and musick is no more. Pope.

5. Beautiful to the eye.

Heav'n bless thee ;
Thou hast the sweetest face I ever look'd on. Shak.

6. Not salt.

The white of an egg, or blood mingled with salt water, gathers the saltness, and maketh the water sweeter ; this may be by adhesion. Bacon's Nat. H.

The sails drop with rain,
Sweet waters mingle with the briny main. Dryden.

7. Not sour.

Time changeth fruits from more sour to more sweet ; but contrariwise liquors, even those that are of the juice of fruit, from more sweet to more sour. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Trees whose fruit is acid last longer than those whose fruit is sweet. Bacon.

When metals are dissolved in acid menstrooms, and the acids, in conjunction with the metal, act
after a different manner, so that the compound has a different taste, much milder than before, and sometimes a sweet one ; is it not because the acids adhere to the metallic particles, and thereby lose much of their activity? Newton's Opticks.

8. Mild ; soft ; gentle.

Let me report to him
Your sweet dependency, and you shall find
A conqueror that will pray in aid of kindness. Shakesp.

The Pleiades before him danc'd,

Have tasted vengeance, and the sweets of blood, Speak. Dryden's Æneid.

Can Ceyx then sustain to leave his wife,
And unconcern'd forsake the sweets of life? Dryd.

We have so great an abhorrence of pain, that a little of it extinguishes all our pleasures : a little bitter mingled in our cup leaves no relish of the sweet. Locke.

Love had ordain'd that it was Abra's turn
To mix the sweets, and minister the urn. Prior.

2. A word of endearment.

Sweet! leave me here a while ;
My spirits grow dull, and fain I would beguile
The tedious day with sleep. Shakesp.

Wherefore frowns my sweet?
Have I too long been absent from these lips?
Ben Jonson.

3. A perfume.

As, in perfumes,
'Tis hard to say what scent is uppermost ;
Nor this part musk or civet can we call,
Or amber, but a rich result of all :
So she was all a sweet. Dryden.

Innumerable, by the soft south-west
Open'd, and gather'd by religious hands,
Rebound their sweets from th' odoriferous pavement. Prior.

- SWEE'TBREAD. n. s. The pancreas of the Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly with several distinguishable distances of their motion, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

It preserves the ends of the bones from incalcescency, which they, being solid bodies, would contract from any swift motion. Ray.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the doll eel moves nimbler in the mud,
Than all the swift-fin'd racers of the flood. Dorset.

Clouded in a deep abyss of light,
While present, too severe for human sight,
Nor staying longer than one swift-wing'd night. Prior.

Mantiger made a circle round the chamber, and the swift-footed martin pursued him. Arbutnot.

There too my son—ah once my hest delight,
Once swift of foot, and terrible in fight. Pope's Od.
Swift they descend, with wing to wing conjoint'd,
Stretch their broad plumes, and float upon the wind. Pope.

2. Ready.

Swifts and swallows have remarkably short legs, and their toes grasp any thing very strongly. Derham.

SWIFTLY. adv. [from swift.] Fleetly; rapidly; nimbly; with celerity; with velocity.

These move swiftly, and at great distance; but then they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon's Nat. H.

Pleas'd with the passage, we slide swiftly on,
And see the dangers which we cannot shun. Dryd.

In decent order they advance to light;
Yet then too swiftly fleet by human sight,
And meditate too soon their everlasting flight. Prior.

SWIFTNESS. n. s. [from swift.] Speed; nimbleness; rapidity; quickness; velocity; celerity.

Let our proportions for these wars
Be soon collected, and all things thought upon,
That may with reasonable swiftness add
More feathers to our wings. Shakesp. Henry V.

We may outrun
By violent swiftness that which we run at;
And lose by over-running. Shakesp. H. VIII.

Speed to describe whose swiftness number fails. Milton.

Exulting, till he finds their nobler sense
Their disproportion'd speed does recompense;
Then curses his conspiring feet, whose scent
Betrays that safety which their swiftness lent. Denham.

Such is the mighty swiftness of your mind,
That, like the earth's, it leaves our sense behind. Dryden.

To SWIG. v. n. [swiga, Island.] To drink by large draughts.

To SWILL. v. a. [ἄγρις, Sax.]

1. To drink luxuriously and grossly.
The wretched, bloody, and usurping hoar,
That spoil'd your summer fields and fruitful vines,
Swills your warm blood like wash, and makes his trough

In your embowell'd bosoms. Shakesp. Rich. III.

The most common of these causes are an hereditary disposition, and swilling down great quantities of cold liquors. Arbutnot.

Such is the poet, fresh in play,
The third night's profits of his play;
His morning draughts till noon can swill,
Among his brethren of the quill. Swift.

2. To wash; to drench.

As fearfully as doth a galled rock,
O'erhang and jutting his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shakesp.

With that a German oft has swill'd his throat,
Deloded, that imperial Rhine bestow'd
The generous rommer. Philips.

3. To inebriate; to swell with plentitude.

I should be loth
To meet the rudeness and swill'd insolence
Of such late wassailers. Milton.

He drinks a swilling draught; and, lin'd within,
Will supple in the bath his outward skin. Dryden.

SWILL. n. s. [from the verb.] Drink luxuriously poured down.

Give swine such swill as you have. Mortimer.

Thus as they swim in mutual swill, the talk

We have ships and boats for going under water, and brooking of seas; also swimming-girdles and supporters. Bacon.

2. To move progressively in the water by the motion of the limbs.

Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth. Shak. Henry VIII.

The soldiers counsel was to kill the prisoners, lest any of them should swim out and escape. Acts, xxvii. 42.

The rest, driven into the lake, were seeking to save their lives by swimming; they were slain in coming to land by the Spanish horsemen, or else in their swimming shot by the harquebusiers. Knolles.

Animals swim in the same manner as they go, and need no other way of motion for natation in the water, than for progression upon the land. Brown's Vulg. Err.

The frightened wolf now swims among the sheep,
The yellow lion wanders in the deep;
The stag swims faster than he ran before. Dryden.

Blue Triton gave the signal from the shore;
The ready Nereids heard, and swam before
To smooth the seas. Dryden.

3. To be conveyed by the stream.

With tenders of our protection of them from the fury of those who would soon drown them, if they refused to swim down the popular stream with them. King Char. es.

I swoom with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

4. To glide along with a smooth or dizzy motion.

She with pretty and with swimming gate
Following, her womb then rich with my young squire, Shakesp.

Would imitate. Shakesp.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his sight,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night. Dryden.
My slack hand dropt, and all the idle pomp,
Priests, altars, victims swam before my sight!

The fainting soul stood ready wing'd for flight,
And o'er his eye-balls swam the shades of night.
Pope.

5. To be dizzy; to be vertiginous.

I am taken with a grievous swimming in my head, and such a mist before my eyes, that I can neither hear nor see. Dryden.

6. To be floated.

When the heavens are filled with clouds, when the earth swims in rain, and all nature wears a lowering countenance, I withdraw myself from these uncomfortable scenes into the visionary worlds of art. Addison's Spectator.
Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim.
Thomson.

7. To have abundance of any quality; to flow in any thing.

They now swim in joy,
Ere long to swim at large, and laugh; for which
The world a world of tears must weep. Milton.

Sometimes he thought to swim the stormy main,
By stretch of arms the distant shore to gain. Dryd.

SWIMM. n. s. [from the verb.] The bladder of fishes by which they are supported in the water.

The braces have the nature and use of tendons, in contracting the swim, and thereby transfusing
the air out of one bladder into another, or discharging it from them both. Grew.

SWIMMER. n. s. [from swim.]

1. One who swims.

Birds find ease in the depth of the air, as swimmers do in a deep water. Bacon.
Latrostrous and flat-billed birds being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived for action.
Brown.

Life is oft preserv'd
By the bold swimmer, in the swift illapse
Of accident disastrous. Thomson.

2. The swimmer is situated in the fore legs of a horse, above the knees, and upon the inside, and almost upon the back parts of the hind legs, a little below the ham: this part is without hair, and resembles a piece of hard dry horn.

Farrier's Dict.

SWIMMINGLY. adv. [from swimming.] Smoothly; without obstruction. A low word.

John got on the battlements, and called to Nick,
I hope the cause goes on swimmingly. Arbuthnot.

If one approach to dare his force,
He swings his tail, and swiftly turns him round.
Dryden.

SWING. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Motion of any thing hanging loosely.

In casting of any thing, the arms, to make a greater swing, are first cast backward.

Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Men use a pendulum, as a more steady and regular motion than that of the earth; yet if any one should ask how he certainly knows that the two successive swings of a pendulum are equal, it would be very hard to satisfy him. Locke.

2. A line on which any thing hangs loose.

3. Influence or power of a body put in motion.

The ram that batters down the wall,
For the great swing and rudeness of his poise,
They place before his hand that made the engine.
Shakesp.

In this encyclopædia, and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we are to observe two circles, that, while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown.

The descending of the earth to this orbit is not upon that mechanical account Cartesius pretends, namely, the strong swing of the more solid globuli that overflow it. More.

4. Course; unrestrained liberty; abandonment to any motive.

Facts unjust
Commit, even to the full swing of his lust. Chapm.
Take thy swing:

For not to take, is but the self-same thing. Dryd.
These exuberant productions only excited and fomented his lusts; so that his whole time lay upon his hands, and gave him leisure to contrive, and with full swing pursue his follies. Woodward.

Let them all take their swing
To pillage the king.

And get a blue ribband instead of a string. Swift.

5. Unrestrained tendency.

Where the swing goeth, there follow, fawn, flatter, laugh, and lie lustily at other men's liking.
Ascham's Schoolmaster.

Those that are so persuaded, desire to be wise in a way that will gratify their appetites, and so give up themselves to the swing of their unbounded propensions. Glanville.

Were it not for these, civil government were not able to stand before the prevailing swing of corrupt nature, which would know no honesty but advantage. South.

On a brown george with lousy swobbers fed.
Dryden.

2. Four privileged cards that are only incidentally used in betting at the game of whist.

The clergyman used to play at whist and swob- bers: playing now and then a sober game at whist for pastime, it might be pardon'd; but he could not digest those wicked swobbers.
Swift.

SWOLLEN. } The participle passive of SWOLN. } swell.

Unto his aid she hastily did draw
Her dreadful beast, who, swoln with blood of late,
Came ramping forth with proud presumptuous gait.
Spenser.

When thus the gather'd storms of wretched love
In my swoln hosom with long war had strove,
At length they broke their bounds: at length their force

Bore down whatever met its stronger course;
Laid all the civil bonds of manhood waste,
And scatter'd ruin as the torrent past.
Prior.
Whereas at first we had only three of these principles, their number is already swoln to five.

Baker on Learning.
SWOM. The preterite of swim.

To SWOON. v. n. [aypanan, Sax.] To suffer a suspension of thought and sensation; to faint.

So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive.
Shakesp.

If thou stands not i' th' state of hanging, or of some death more long in spectatorship, and crueller in suffering, behold now pres ntly, and swoon for what's to come upon thee.
Shakesp.

We see the great and sudden effect of smells in fetching men again, when they swoon.
Bacon.
The most in years swoon'd first away for pain;
Then, scarce recover'd, spoke,
Dryden.

The woman finds it all a trick,
That he could swoon when she was sick;
And knows that in that grief he reckon'd
On black-eyed Susan for his second.
Prior.

There appeared such an ecstasy in his action, that he seemed ready to swoon away in the sur-

a mouse.
Wilkins.

S W O

This mould'ring picemeal in your hands did fall,
And now at last you came to swoop it all.
Dryden.

2. To prey upon; to catch up.
The physician looks with another eye on the medicinal herb, than the grazing ox, which swoops it in with the common grass.
Glanville's Scepis.

3. To pass with violence. Not used.
The nine-ston'd trophy thus whilst she doth entertain,
Proud Famer swoops along with such a lusty train,
As fits so brave a flood.
Drayton.

SWOOP. n. s. [from the verb.] Fall of a bird of prey upon his quarry.

All my pretty ones?
Did you say all? What all? O hellkite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens and their dam,
At one fell swoop?
Shakesp. Macb.
The eagle fell into the fox's quarters, and carried away a whole litter of cubs at a swoop.
L. Estrange.

To SWOP. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation.]
To change; to exchange one thing for another. A low word.

When I drove a thrust home, he put it by,
And cri'd, as in derision, Spare the stripling;
Oh that insulting word! I would have swoop'd
Youth for old age, and all my life behind,
To have been then a momentary man
Dry. Cleom.

SWORD. n. s. [γρῆονδ, Sax. swærd, Dut.]

1. A weapon used either in cutting or thrusting; the usual weapon of fights hand to hand.

Old unhappy traitor, the sword is out
That must destroy thee.
Shakesp. K. Lear.
Each man took his sword, and slew all the males.
Genesis.

But the sword
Of Michael from the armoury of God
Was giv'n him temper'd so, that neither keen
Nor solid might resist that edge: it met
The sword of Satan with steep force to smite
Descending, and in half cut sheer; nor stay'd,
But with swift wheel reverse, deep ent'ring shar'd
All his right side: then Satan first knew pain,
And writ'h'd him to and fro convolv'd; so sore
The griding sword with discontinuous wound
Pass'd through him.
Milton.

2. Destruction by war: as fire and sword.
The sword without, and terror within.
Deut. xxxii. 25

3. Vengeance of justice.

SY'CAMINE. } n. s. A tree. The syc-SY'CAMORE. } more of Scripture is not the same with ours.

Sycamore is our acer majus, one of the kinds of maples: it is a quick grower.
Mortimer's Husb.
If ye had faith as a grain of mustard-seed, ye might say unto this sycamine tree, Be thou plucked up, and it should obey you.
Luke. xvii. 6.

I was no prophet, but an herdman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit.
Amos, vii. 14.
Go to yonder sycamore tree, and hide your bottle of drink under its hollow root.
Walden's Angler.
Sycamores with eglantine were spread;
A hedge about the sides a covering over head.
Dryden.

SYCOPHANT. n. s. [συκοφαντής; sycophanta, Lat.] A talebearer; a makebate; a malicious parasite.

Accusing sycophants, of all men, did best surt to his nature; but therefore not seeming sycophants, because of no evil they said, they could bring any new or doubtful thing unto him, but such as already he had been apt to determine; so as they came but as proofs of his wisdom, fearful and more secure, while the fear he had figured in his mind had any possibility of event. Sidney.

Men know themselves void of those qualities which the impudent sycophant, at the same time, both ascribes to them, and in his sleeve laughs at them for believing. South.

To SYCOPHANT. v. n. [συκοφαντώ; from the noun.] To play the sycophant. A low bad word.

His sycophanting arts being detected, that game is not to be played a second time; whereas a man of clear reputation, though his barque be split, has something left towards setting up again. Governm. of the Tongue.

SYCOPHANTICK. adj. [from sycophant.] Talebearing; mischievously officious.

To SYCOPHANTIZE. v. n. [συκοφαντικός; from sycophant.] To play the talebearer. Dict.

SYLLABICAL. adj. [from syllable.] Relating to syllables; consisting of syllables.

SYLLABICALLY. adv. [from syllabical.] In a syllabical manner.

SYLLABICK. adj. [syllabique, Fr. from syllable.] Relating to syllables.

SYLLABLE. n. s. [σλλαβή; syllabe, Fr.] 1. As much of a word as is uttered by the help of one vowel, or one articulation.

Each syllable that breath made up between them. Shakesp.

There is that property in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Any thing proverbially concise. Abraham, Job, and the rest that lived before any syllable of the law of God was written, did they not sin as much as we do in every action not commanded? Hooker.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow, Creeps in this petty pace from day to day, To the last syllable of recorded time; And all our yesterdays have lighted fools The way to dusty death. Shakesp. Macb.

He hath told so many melancholy stories, without one syllable of truth, that he hath blunted the edge of my fears. Swift.

To SYLLABLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To utter; to pronounce; to articulate. Not in use.

Airy tongues that syllable men's names On sands, and shores, and desert wildernesses. Milton.

SYLLABUB. n. s. [rightly SILLABUB, which see.] Milk and acids.

No syllabubs made at the milking pail, But what are compos'd of a pot of good ale. Beaum.

Two lines would express all they say in two pages: 'tis nothing but whipt syllabub and froth, without solidity. Felton.

SYLLABUS. n. s. [σλλαβός.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse.

SYLLOGISM. n. s. [συλλογισμός; sylogisme, Fr.] An argument composed of three propositions; as, every man thinks; Peter is a man, therefore Peter thinks.

A piece of rhetoric is a sufficient argument of logick, an apologue of Æsop beyond a sylogism in Barbara. Brown.

What a miraculous thing should we count it, if the flint and the steel, instead of a few sparks, should chance to knock out definitions and sylogisms! Bentley.

SYLLOGISTICAL. adj. [συλλογιστικός; from sylogism.]

Retaining to a sylogism; consisting of a sylogism.

Though we suppose subject and predicate, and copula, and propositions and sylogistical connexions in their reasoning, there is no such matter; but the entire business is at the same moment present with them, without deducing one thing from another. Hale's Origin of Mank.

Though the terms of propositions may be complex, yet where the composition of the whole argument is thus plain, simple, and regular, it is properly called a simple sylogism, since the complex ion does not belong to the sylogistical form of it. Watts's Logick.

SYLLOGISTICALLY. adv. [from sylogistical.] In the form of a sylogism.

A man knows first, and then he is able to prove sylogistically; so that sylogism comes after knowledge, when a man has no need of it. Locke.

To SYLLOGIZE. v. n. [sylogizer, Fr. συλλογίζειν.] To reason by sylogism.

Logick is, in effect, an art of sylogizing. Baker. Men have endeavoured to transform logick into a kind of mechanism, and to teach boys to sylogize, or frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYLVAN. adj. [better silvan.] Woody; shady; relating to woods.

Cedar and pine, and fir and branching palm, A silvan scene! and, as the ranks ascend, Shade above shade, a woody theatre Of stateliest view. Milton's Par. Lost.

Eternal greens the mossy margin grace, Watch'd by the silvan genius of the place. Pope.

SYLVAN. n. s. [silvain, Fr.] A wood-god, or satyr; perhaps sometimes a rustick.

Her private orchards wall'd on ev'ry side, To lawless silvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYMBOL. n. s. [symbole, Fr. σύμβολον; symbolum, Lat.]

1. An abstract; a compendium; a comprehensive form. Beginning with the symbol of our faith, upon that the author of the gloss enquires into the nature of faith. Baker.

2. A type; that which comprehends in its figure a representation of something else.

Salt, as incorruptible, was the symbol of friendship; which, if it casually fell, was accounted ominous, and their amity of no duration. Brown.

Words are the signs and symbols of things; and as, in accounts, cyphers and figures pass for real sums, so words and names pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.

The heathens made choice of these lights as apt symbols of eternity, because, contrary to all sublunary beings, though they seem to perish every night, they renew themselves every morning. Addison on Metals.

SYMBOLICAL. adj. [symbolique, Fr. συμβολικός; from symbol.] Representative; typical; expressing by signs; comprehending something more than itself.

By this encroachment idolatry first crept in, men converting the symbolical use of idols into their proper worship, and receiving the representation of things unto them as the substance and thing itself. Brown.

The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as himself appointed. Taylor.

SYMBOLICALLY. adv. [from symbolical.] Typically; by representation.

This distinction of animals was hieroglyphical, in the inward sense implying an abstinence from certain vices, symbolically intimated from the nature of those animals. Brown.

It symbolically teaches our duty, and promotes charity by a real signature and a sensible reason. Taylor.

SYMBOLIZATION. n. s. [from symbolize.] The act of symbolizing; representation; resemblance.

The hieroglyphical symbols of Scripture, excellently intended in the species of things sacrificed in the dreams of Pharaoh, are oftentimes rack'd beyond their symbolizations. Brown's Vulg. Err.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. n. [symboliser, Fr. from symbol.] To have something in common with another by representative qualities.

Our king finding himself to symbolize in many things with that king of the Hebrews, honoured him with the title of his foundation. Bacon.

The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of any single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.

Aristotle and the schools have taught, that air and water, being symbolizing elements, in the quality of moisture, are easily transmutable into one another. Boyle.

They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Houel.

I affectedly symbolized in careless mirth and freedom with the libertines, to circumvent libertinism. More.

The soul is such, that it strangely symbolizes with the thing it mightily desires. South's Sermons.

To SYMBOLIZE. v. a. To make representative of something.

Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Brown's Vulg. Err.

SYMMETRIAN. n. s. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.

SYMMETRICAL. adj. [from symmetry.] Proportionate; having parts well adapted to each other.

SYMMETRIST. n. s. [from symmetry.] One very studious or observant of proportion.

Some exact symmetrists have been blamed for being too true. Wotton's Architecture.

SYMMETRY. n. s. [symmetrie, Fr. συν and μέτρον] Adaptation of parts to each other; proportion; harmony; agreement of one part to another.

She by whose lines proportion should be Examined, measure of all symmetry; Whom had that ancient seen, who thought souls made

Of harmony, he would at next have said That harmony was she. Dannce.

And in the symmetry of her parts is found A pow'r, like that of harmony in sound. Haller.

Symmetry, equality, and correspondence of parts, is the discernment of reason, not the object of sense. More.

Nor were they only animated by him, but their measure and symmetry were owing to him. Dryden.

SYMPATHETICAL. adj. [sympathetique, Fr. sympathy.]

Having mutual sensation; being affected either by what happens to the other; feeling in consequence of what another feels.

Hereupon are grounded the gross mistakes in the cure of diseases, not only from sympathetick receipts, but amulets, charms, and all incantatory applications. Brown.

S Y M

United by this sympathetick bond,
You grow familiar, intimate, and fond.

Roscommon.
To confer at the distance of the Indies by sympathetick conveyances, may be as usual to future times as to us in a literary correspondence. Glanville.

To you our author makes her soft request,
Who speak the kindest, and who write the best;
Your sympathetick hearts she hopes to move,
From tender friendship and endearing love. Prior.

All the ideas of sensible qualities are not inherent in the inanimate bodies; but are the effects of their motion upon our nerves, and sympathetical and vital passions produced within ourselves. Bentley.

SYMPATHE'TICALLY. adv. [from sympathetick.] With sympathy; in consequence of sympathy.

TO SYMPATHIZE. v. n. [sympatiser, Fr. from sympathy.]

1. To feel with another; to feel in consequence of what another feels; to feel mutually.

The men sympathize with the mastiffs in robustious and rough coming on. Shakesp.

The thing of courage,
As rous'd with rage, with rage doth sympathize.

Nature, in awe to him,
Hath doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize. Milton.
The limbs of his body is to every one a part of himself: he sympathizes, and is concerned for them. Locke.

Their countrymen were particularly attentive to all their story, and sympathized with their heroes in all their adventures. Addison's Spectator.

Though the greatness of their mind exempts them from fear, yet none condole and sympathize more heartily. Collier.

2. To agree; to fit. Not proper.

Green is a pleasing colour, from a blue and a yellow mixed together, and by consequence blue and yellow are two colours which sympathize. Dryden.

SYMPATHY. n. s. [sympathie, Fr. συμπάθεια.] Fellowfeeling; mutual sensibility; the quality of being affected by the affection of another.

A world of earthly blessings to my soul,
If sympathy of love unite our thoughts. Shakesp.

You art not young; no more am I: go to, then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha! ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I: would you desire better sympathy? Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

But what it is,
The action of my life is like it, which I'll keep,
If but for sympathy. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

I started back;
It started back: but, pleas'd, I soon return'd;
Pleas'd it return'd as soon, with answering looks
Of sympathy and love. Milton's Par. Lost.

They saw, but other sight instead, a crowd
Of ugly serpents: horror on them fell,
And horrid sympathy. Milton.

Or sympathy, or some conat'ral force,
Pow'rful at greatest distance to unite,
With secret amity, things of like kind,
By secretest conveyance. Milton's Par. Lost.

There never was any heart truly great and generous, that was not also tender and compassionate: it is this noble quality that makes all men to be of one kind; for every man would be a distinct species to himself, were there no sympathy among individuals. South's Sermons.

Can kindness to desert like your's be strange?
Kindness by secret sympathy is ty'd;
For noble souls in nature are ally'd. Dryden.

There are such associations made in the minds of most men; and to this might be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies observable in them. Locke.

SYMPHO'NIUS. adj. [from symphony.] Harmonious; agreeing in sound.

Up he rode,
Follow'd with acclamation, and the sound
Symphonious of ten thousand harps, that tun'd Angelick harmonies. Milton.

SYMPHONY. n. s. [symphonie, Fr. σύν and φωνή.] Concert of instruments; harmony of mingled sounds.

A learned searcher from Pythagoras's school, where it was a maxim that the images of all things are latent in numbers, determines the comeliest proportion between breadths and heights reducing symmetry to symphony, and the harmony of sound to a kind of harmony in sight. Wotton.

Speak, ye who best can tell, ye sons of light,
Angels! for ye behold him, and with songs
And choral symphonies, day without night, Circle his throne rejoicing. Milton's Par. Lost.

The trumpets sound,
And warlike symphony is heard around;
The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl marshal orders their array. Dryden.

SYMPHYSIS. n. s. [σύν and φύσις.] Symphysis, in its original signification, denotes a connascency, or growing together; and perhaps is meant of those bones which in young children are distinct, but after some years unite and consolidate into one bone. Wiseman.

SYMPO'SIACK. adj. [symposiaque, Fr. συμποσιακός.] Relating to merry makings; happening where company is drinking together.

By desiring a secrecy to words spoke under the rose, we only mean in society and comotation, from the ancient custom of symposiack meetings to wear chaplets of roses about their heads. Brown.

In some of those symposiack disputations amongst my acquaintance, I affirmed that the dietetick part of medicine depended upon scientifick principles. Arbutnot.

SYMPTOM. n. s. [symptomc, Fr. σύμπτωμα.]

1. Something that happens concurrently with something else, not as the original cause, nor as the necessary or constant effect.

The symptoms, as Dr. Sydenham remarks, which are commonly scurbitick, are often nothing but the principles or seeds of a growing, but unripe gout. Blackmore.

2. A sign; a token.

Ten glorious campaigns are passed, and now, like the sick man, we are expiring with all sorts of good symptoms. Saift.

SYMPTOM'ATICAL. } adj. [sympmatique,
SYMPTOM'ATICK. } Fr. from symptom.]

Happening concurrently or occasionally.

Symptomatical is often used to denote the difference between the primary and secondary causes in diseases; as a fever from pain is said to be symptomatical, because it arises from pain only; and therefore the ordinary means in fevers are not in such cases to be had recourse to, but to what will remove the pain; for when that ceases, the fever will cease, without any direct means taken for that. Quincy.

By fomentation and a cataplasm the swelling was discussed; and the fever, then appearing but symptomatical, lessened as the heat and pain mitigated. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYMPTOM'ATICALLY. adv. [from symptomatical.] In the nature of a symptom.

The causes of a bubo are vicious humours abounding in the blood, or in the nerves, excreted sometimes critically, sometimes symptomatically. Wiseman.

SYNAGO'GICAL. adj. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

S Y N

SYNAGOGUE. n. s. [synagogue, Fr. συναγωγή.] An assembly of the Jews to worship.

Go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue. Shakesp. Gospel.

As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the sabbath. Shakesp. Gospel.

SYNALE'PHA. n. s. [συναλειφή.] A contraction, or excision of a syllable in Latin verse, by joining together two vowels in the scanning or cutting off the ending vowel; as, ill' ego. Bailey.

Virgil, though smooth, is far from affecting it: he frequently uses synalephas, and concludes his sense in the middle of his verse. Dryden.

SYNARTHRO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and ἄρθρον.] A close conjunction of two bones.

There is a conspicuous motion where the conjunction is called diarthrosis, as in the elbow; an obscure one, where the conjunction is called synarthrosis, as in the joining of the carpus to the metacarpus. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYNCHONTHRO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and χόνδρος.] Synchondrosis is an union by gristles of the sternon to the ribs. Wiseman.

SYNCHRO'NICAL. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.] Happening together at the same time.

It is difficult to make out how the air is conveyed into the left ventricle of the heart, the systole and diastole of the heart and lungs being far from synchronous. Boyle.

SYNCHRONISM. n. s. [σύν and χρόνος.] Concurrence of events happening at the same time.

The coherence and synchronism of all the parts of the Mosaical chronology, after the Flood, bear a most regular testimony to the truth of his history. Hale.

SYNCHRONOUS. adj. [σύν and χρόνος.] Happening at the same time.

The variations of the gravity of the air keep both the solids and fluids in an oscillatory motion, synchronous and proportional to their changes. Arbutnot on Air.

SYNCOPE. n. s. [syncope, Fr. συνκοπή.]

1. Fainting fit.
The symptoms attending gunshot wounds are pain, fever, delirium, and syncope. Wiseman.

2. Contraction of a word by cutting off a part in the middle.

SYNCOPIST. n. s. [from syncope.] Contractor of words.

To outshine all the modern syncopists, and thoroughly content my English readers, I intend to publish a Spectator that shall not have a single vowel in it. Spectator.

TO SYN'DICATE. v. n. [syndiquer, Fr. σύν and δική.] To judge; to pass judgment on; to censure. An unusual word. Not in use.

Aristotle undertook to censure and syndicate his master, and all law-makers before him. Hakewill.

SYNDROME. n. s. [σύνδρομή.] Concurrent action; concurrence.

All things being linked together by an uninterrupted chain of causes, every single motion owns a dependance on such a syndrome of prerequired motors. Glanville's Sceptis.

SYNE'CDOCHE. n. s. [synecdoche, Fr. συνεκδοχή.] A figure by which part is taken for the whole, or the whole for part.

Because they are instruments of grace in the hand of God, and by these his holy spirits changes our hearts; therefore the whole work is attributed to them by a synecdoche; that is, they do in this manner the work for which God ordained them. Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

SYNECDÓCHICAL. adj. [from synecdoche.] Expressed by a synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

Should I, Lindamer, bring you into hospitals, and shew you there how many souls, narrowly lodged in synecdochical bodies, see their earthen cottages moulder away to dust, those miserable persons, by the loss of one limb after another, surviving but part of themselves, and living to see themselves dead and buried by piecemeal? Boyle.

SYNEURO'SIS. n. s. [σύν and νεῦρον.]

Syneurosis is when the connexion is made by a ligament. Of this in symphysis we find instances, in the connexion of the ossa pubis together, especially in women, by a ligamentous substance. In articulation, it is either round, as that which unites the head of the os femoris to the coxa; or broad, as the tendon of the patella, which unites it to the os tibie. Wiseman's Surgery.

SYNOD. n. s. [synode, Fr. συνέδος.]

1. An assembly called for consultation: it is used particularly of ecclesiasticks. A provincial synod is commonly used, and a general council.

The glorious gods sit in hourly synod about thy particular prosperity. Shakesp. Coriolanus.

Since the mortal and intestine jars 'Twixt thy seditious countrymen and us, It hath in solemn synod been decreed, T' admit no traffick to our adverse towns. Shak.

The opinion was not only condemned by the synod, but imputed to the emperor as extreme madness. Bacon.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd Of clerks and elders ana, like the rude Chaos of presby'try, where laymen guide, With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleveland.

His royal majesty, according to these presby'terian rules, shall have no power to command his clergy to keep a national synod. White.

We'll have ye judg'd, well ended long debate, Synod of gods! and, like to what ye are, Great things resolv'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let us call to synod all the blest Through heav'n's wide bounds. Milton.

The second council of Nice, he saith, I most irreverently call that wise synod; upon which he falls into a very tragical exclamation, that I should dare to reflect so much dishonour on a council. Stillingfleet

Parent of gods and men, propitious Jove! And you bright synod of the pow'rs above, On this my son your gracious gifts bestow. Dryden.

2. Conjunction of the heavenly bodies.

How'er love's native hours are set, Whatever starry synod met, 'Tis in the mercy of her eye, If poor love shall live or die. Crashaw.

Their planetary motions and aspects Of noxious efficacy, and when to join In synod unbenign. Milton.

As the planets and stars have, according to astrologers, in their great synods, or conjunctions, much more powerful influences on the air than are ascribed to one or two of them out of that aspect; so divers particulars, which, whilst they lay scattered among the writings of several authors, were inconsiderable, when they come to be laid together, may oftentimes prove highly useful to physiology in their conjunctions. Boyle

SYNODAL. n. s. [from synod.] Money paid anciently to the bishop, &c. at Easter visitation.

SYNODAL } adj. [synodique, Fr. from SYNODICAL } synod]
SYNODICK. }

1. Relating to a synod; transacted in a synod.

The various dignity of their several churches, and of their many functions, rules, and orders in them, by reason of the frequency of their synodical and processional meetings, have necessarily raised many questions of place among them. Selden.

St. Athanasius writes a synodical epistle to those of Antioch, to compose the differences among them upon the ordination of Paulinus. Stillingfleet.

2. [Synodique, Fr.] Reckoned from one conjunction with the sun to another.

The diurnal and annual revolutions of the sun, to us are the measures of day and year; and the synodick revolution of the moon measures the month. Holder.

The moon makes its synodical motion about the earth in twenty-nine days twelve hours and about forty-four minutes. Locke's Elem. of Nat. Philos.

SYNODICALLY. adv. [from synodical.] By the authority of a synod or publick assembly.

It shall be needful for those churches synodically to determine something in those points. Saunders.

The alterations made by the commissioners were brought to the convocation, then sitting, where they were synodically agreed upon. Nelson.

SYNONYMA. n. s. [Latin; συνώνυμα.] Names which signify the same thing.

To SYNONYMISE. v. a. [from synonyma.] To express the same thing in different words.

This word fortis we may synonymise after all these fashions, stout, hardy, valiant, doughty, courageous, adventurous, brave, bold, daring, intrepid. Camden's Remains.

SYNONYMOUS. adj. [synonime, Fr. συνώνυμοι.] Expressing the same thing by different words.

When two or more words signify the same thing, as wave and billow, mead and meadow, they are usually called synonymous words. Watts's Logick.

These words consist of two propositions, which are not distinct in sense, but one and the same thing variously expressed; for wisdom and understanding are synonymous words here. Tillotson.

Fortune is but a synonymous word for fortune and necessity. Bentley's Sermons.

SYNONYMY. n. s. [συνωνυμία.] The quality of expressing by different words the same thing.

SYNOPSIS. n. s. [συνόψις.] A general view; all the parts brought under one view.

SYNOPTICAL. adj. [from synopsis.] Affording a view of many parts at once.

SYNTAX. } n. s. [συNTAXIS.]
SYNTAXIS. }

1. A system; a number of things joined together.

They owe no other dependance to the first than what is common to the whole syntax of beings. Glanville.

2. That part of grammar which teaches the construction of words.

I can produce a hundred instances to convince any reasonable man, that they do not so much as understand common grammar and syntax. Swift.

SYNTHESIS. n. s. [σύνθεσις.] The act of joining: opposed to analysis.

The synthesis consists in assuming the causes discovered and established as principles, and by them explaining the phenomena proceeding from them, and proving the explanations. Newton's Opticks.

SYNTHETICK. adj. [συνθετικός.] Conjoining; compounding; forming composition: opposed to analytick.

Synthetic method is that which begins with the parts, and leads onward to the knowledge of the whole: it begins with the most simple principles and general truths, and proceeds by degrees to that which is drawn from them, or compounded of them; and therefore it is called the method of composition. Watts's Logick.

SYPHON. n. s. [This should be written siphon; σιφών.] A tube; a pipe.

Take your glass, siphon, or crane; and draw it off from its last faces into small bottles. Mortimer.

SYRINGE. n. s. [συριγγή.] A pipe through which any liquor is squirted.

The heart seems not designed to be the fountain or conservatory of the vital flame, but as a machine to receive the blood from the veins, and force it out by the arteries through the whole body, as a syringe doth any liquor, though not by the same artifice. Ray.

To SYRINGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To spout by a syringe.
A flux of blood from the nose, mouth, and eye, was stopt by the syringing up of sycrate. Wiseman's Surgery.

2. To wash with a syringe.

SYRINGOTOMY. n. s. [συριγγή and τόμα.] The act or practice of cutting fistulas or hollow sores.

SYRTIS. n. s. [Lat.] A quick sand; a bog.

A boggy syrtis, neither sea, nor good dry land. Milton.

SYSTEM. n. s. [système, Fr. σύστημα.]

1. Any complexure or combination of many things acting together.

2. A scheme which reduces many things to regular dependence or co-operation.

3. A scheme which unites many things in order.

He presently bought a system of divinity, with design to apply himself straightway to that study. Fell.

Aristotle brings morality into system, by treating of happiness under heads, and ranges it in classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

The best way to learn any science is to begin with a regular system, or a short and plain scheme of that science well drawn up into a narrow compass. Watts.

SYSTEMATICAL. adj. [systematique, Fr. συστηματικός; from system.] Methodical; written or formed with regular subordination of one part to another.

It will be necessary, in a discourse about the formation of the world, to give you a brief account of some of the most principal and systematical phenomena that occur in it. Bentley.

Now we deal much in essays, and unreasonably despise systematical learning; whereas, our fathers had a just value for regularity and systems. Watts.

SYSTEMATICALLY. adv. [from systematical.] In form of a system.

I treat of the usefulness of writing books of essay, in comparison of that of writing systematically. Boyle.

Aristotle brings morality into system, and ranges it into classes according to its different objects, distinguishing virtues into their several kinds, which had not been handled systematically before. Baker.

SYSTOLE. n. s. [systole, Fr. σύστολη.]

1. [In anatomy.] The contraction of the heart.

The systole resembles the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural size. Ray.

2. [Systole, Fr.] In grammar, the shortening of a long syllable.

T.

T A B

T A mute consonant, which, at the beginning and end of words, has always the same sound, nearly approaching to that of d; but before an i, when followed by a vowel, has the sound of an obscure s; as, nation, salvation; except when s precedes t: as, Christian, question.

TA'BBY. n. s. [tabi, tabino, Ital. tabis, Fr.] A kind of waved silk.

Made all of heben and white ivory,
The sails of gold, of silk the tackle were,
Mild was the wind, calm seem'd the sea to be.

Spenser.

At the helm

A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackles
Swell with the touches of those flower-sott hands
That rarely frame the office.

Shakesp.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't; though thy tackle's torn,
Thou shew'st a noble vessel.

Shakesp. Coriolanus

A stately ship

With all her bravery on, and tackle trim,
Sails fill'd, and streamers waving,

Courted by all the winds that hold them play.

As for tackle, the Bæotians invented the oar;

Dædalus, and his son Icarus, the masts and sails.

Heylin.

Ere yet the tempest roars
Stand to your tackle, mates, and stretch your oars.

Dryden.

bly of divines, to settle some church controversies, of which many were unfit to judge. Sanderson.

118. This verb, like prendre in French, is used with endless multiplicity of relations. Its uses are so numerous that they cannot easily be exemplified; and its references to the words governed by it so general and lax, that they can hardly be explained by any succedaneous terms.
But commonly that is hardest to explain which least wants explication. I have expanded this word to a wide diffusion, which, I think, is all that could be done.

To TAKE. v. n.

1. To direct the course; to have a tendency to.

The inclination to goodness, if it issue not towards men, it will take unto other things. Bacon.

fellow of thy hands. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

TALLAGE. n. s. [tallage, Fr.] Impost; excise.

The people of Spain were better affected unto Philip than to Ferdinand, because he had imposed upon them many taxes and tallages. Bacon's Henry VII.

TALLOW. n. s. [talge, Dan.] The grease or fat of an animal; coarse suet.

She's the kitchen wench, and all grease; and I know not what use to put her to, but to make a lamp of her, and run from her by her own light.
I warrant her rags, and the tallow in them, will burn a Lapland winter. Shakesp.

The new world is stocked with such store of kine and bulls, brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery, that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only. Heylyn.

Snuff the candles close to the tallow, which will make them run. Swift.

To TALLOW. v. a. [from the noun.] To grease; to smear with tallow.

TALLOWCHANDLER. n. s. [tallow and chandelier, Fr.] One who makes candles of tallow, not of wax.

Nastiness, and several nasty trades, as tallowchandlers, butchers, and neglect of cleansing of gutters, are great occasions of a plague. Harvey on the Plague.

TALLY. n. s. [from tailler to cut, Fr.]

1. A stick notched or cut in conformity to another stick, and used to keep accounts by.

So right his judgment was cut fit,
And made a tally to his wit. Hudibras.

The only talents in esteem at present are those of Exchange Alley; one tally is worth a grove of bays. Garth.

Have you not seen a baker's maid
Between two equal panniers sway'd?
Her tallies useless lie and idle,
If plac'd exactly in the middle. Prior.

From his rug the skew'r he takes,
And on the stick ten equal notches makes;
With just resentment flings it on the ground,
There take my tally of ten thousand pound. Swift.

2. Any thing made to suit another.

So suited in their minds and persons,
That they were fram'd the tallies for each other:
If any alien love had interpos'd,
It must have been an eye-sore to beholders. Dryden.

To TA'LLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To fit; to suit; to cut out, so as to answer any thing.

Nor sister either had, nor brother;
They seem'd just tally'd for each other. Prior.
They are not so well tallied to the present conjuncture. Pope.

To TA'LLY. v. n. To be fitted; to conform; to be suitable.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison on Italy.

TA'LMUD. } n. s. The book containing the Jewish traditions, the rabbinical constitutions and explications of the law.

TA'LNES. n. s. [from tall.] Height of stature; procerity.

An hideous giant, horrible and high,
That with his talness seem'd to threaten the sky. Spenser.

The eyes behold so many naked bodies, as for talness of stature could hardly be equalled in any country. Hayward.

TALON. n. s. [talon, Fr.] The claw of a bird of prey.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer talons. Bacon's Natural History.

Upward the noble bird directs his wing,
And, towing round his master's earth-born foes,
Swift he collects his fatal stock of ire, Lifts his fierce talon high, and darts the forked fire. Prior.

TAMARIND tree. n. s. [tamarindus, Lat.]

The flower of the tamarind-tree consists of several leaves, which are so placed as to resemble a papilionaceous one in some measure; but these expand circularly, from whose many-leaved flower-cup rises the pointal, which afterward becomes a flat pod, containing many flat angular seeds surrounded with an acid blackish pulp. Miller.

Lenitives are cassia, tamarindus, manna. Wiseman's Surgery.

Lay me reelin'd
Beneath the spreading tamarind, that shakes,
Fain'd by the breeze, its fever-cooling fruit. Thomson.

TAMARISK. n. s. [tamarice, Lat.]

The flowers of the tamarisk are rosaceous. Miller.
Tamarisk is a tree that grows tall, and its wood is medicinal. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TAMBARINE. n. s. [tambourin, Fr.] A tabour; a small drum. It should be tambourin.

Calliope with muses moe,
Soon as thy oaten pipe began to sound,
Their ivory lutes and tambarines forego. Spenser's Pastorals.

TAME. adj. [tame, Sax. taem, Dut. tam, Dan.]

1. Not wild; domestick.

Thales the Milesian said, That of all wild beasts a tyrant is the worst, and of all tame beasts a flatterer. Addison.

2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; dejected; spiritless; heartless.

If you should need a pin,
You could not with more tame a tongue desire it. Shakespeare.

And now their pride and mettle is asleep,
Their courage with hard labour tame and dull. Shakespeare.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakespeare. King Lear.

Praise him, each savage furious beast,
That on his stores do daily feast;
And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough,
Your weary knees to your Creator bow. Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated: as, a tame poem. A low phrase.

To TAME. v. n. [gatangan, Goth. temean, Sax. tammen, Dut.]

1. To reduce from wildness; to reclaim; to make gentle.

Those that tame wild horses,
Pace 'em not in their hands to make 'em gentle;
But stop their mouths with stubborn bits. Shakespeare.

2. To subdue; to crush; to depress; to conquer.

If the heavens do not their visible spirits
Send quickly down to tame the offences,
Humanity must perforce prey on itself. Shakespeare. King Lear.

They cannot tame
Or overcome their riches; not by making
Baths, orchards, fish-pools, letting in of seas
Here, and then there forcing him out again. Ben Jonson.

A puling cuckold, would drink up
The lees and dregs of a flat tamed piece. Shakespeare.

A race unconquer'd, by their clime made bold,
The Caledonians, arm'd with want and cold,
Have been for ages kept for you to tame. Waller.

TAMEABLE. adj. [from tame.] Susceptive of taming.

Ganzas are supposed to be great f-wls, of a strong flight, and easily tameable; divers of which may be so brought up as to join together in carrying the weight of a man. Wilkins.

TAMELY. adv. [from tame.] Not wildly; meanly; spiritlessly.

True obedience, of this madness cur'd,
Stoop tamely to the foot of majesty. Shakespeare. H. IV.

What courage tamely could to death consent,
And not by striking first the blow prevent? Dryden.

Once a champion of renown,
So tamely can you bear the ravish'd crown? Dryden.

Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let them pass? Addison.

Can you love and reverence your prelate, whom you tamely suffer to be abused? Swift.

TAMENESS. n. s. [from tame.]

1. The quality of being tame; not wildness.

Such a conduct must appear rather like tameness than beauty, and expose his authority to insults. Rogers.

2. Want of spirits; timidity.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TAMER. n. s. [from tame.] Conqueror; subduer.

He, great tamer of all human art,
Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend. Pope.

TAMINY. n. s. A woollen stuff.

TAMKIN. n. s. The stoppel of the mouth of a great gun.

To TAMPER. v. a. [Of uncertain derivation, derived by Skinner from tempero, Lat.]

1. To be busy with physick.

'Tis in vain
To tamper with your crazy brain,
Without trepanning of your skull
As often as the moon's at full. Hudibras.

He tried washes to bring him to a better complexion, but there was no good to be done; the very tampering cast him into a disease. L'Estrange.

2. To meddle; to have to do without fitness or necessity.

That key of knowledge, which should give us entrance into the recesses of religion, is by so much tampering and wrenching made useless. Decay of Piety.

'Tis dangerous tampering with a nuisance,
The profits small, and you have much to lose:
For though true wit adorns your birth or place,
Degenerate lines degrade the attained race. Roscommon.

Earl Waltheof being overtaken with wine, engaged in a conspiracy; but, repenting next morning, repaired to the king, and discovered the whole matter: notwithstanding which he was beheaded.

upon the defeat of the conspiracy, for having but thus far tampered in it. Addison's Freeholder.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tamper'd
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.

To TAN. v. a. [tannen, Dut. tanner, Fr.]

1. To impregnate or imbue with bark.

A human skull covered with the skin, having been buried in some limy soil, was tanned or turned into a kind of leather. Crew's Masa wa.

Black cattle produce tallow, hides, and beef; but the greatest part of the hides are exported raw for want of bark to tan them. Swift.

They sell as their bark at a good price for tanning our hides into leather. Saiff's Miscellanies.

2. To imbrown by the sun.

His face all tann'd with scorching sunny ray,
As he had travell'd many a summer's day
Through boiling sands of Araby and Ind. Spenser.

Like sun-parch'd quarters on the city gate,
Such is thy tann'd skin's lamentable state. Donne.

A brown for which heaven would dishand
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd. Cleaveland.

TANE for taken, ta'en. Ill spelt.

Two trophies tane from th' east and western shore,
And both those nations twice triumphed o'er. May's Virgil.

TANG. n. s. [tanghe, Dut. acid.]

1. A strong taste; a taste left in the mouth.

Sin tann'd into the soul, is like a liquor poured into a vessel; so much of it as it fills it also seasons: so that although the body of the liquor should be poured out again, yet still it leaves that tang behind it. South.

It is strange that the soul should never once rec. l over any of its pure native thoughts, before it borrowed any thing from the body; never bring into the waking man's view any other ideas but what have a tang of the cask, and derive their original from that union. Locke.

2. Relish; taste. A low word.

There was not the least tang of religion, which is indeed the worst affectation in any thing he said or did. Atterbury.

3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind it.

She had a tongue with a tang,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang. Shakespeare. Tempest.

4. Sound; tone: this is mistaken for tone or twang.

There is a pretty affectation in the Allema'n, which gives their speech a different tang from ours. Holder.

To TANG. v. n. [This is, I think, mistaken for twang.] To ring with.

Be opposite with a kinsman, surly with thy servants; let thy tongue tang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity. Shakespeare. Twelfth Night.

TANGENT. n. s. [tangent, Fr. tangens, Lat.]

Tangent, in trigonometry, is a right line perpendicularly raised on the extremity of a radius, and which touches a circle so as not to cut it; but yet intersects another line without the circle called a secant, that is drawn from the centre, and which cuts the arc to which it is a tangent. Treatise.

Nothing in this hypothesis can retain the planets in their orbits, but they would immediately desert them and the neighbourhood of the sun, and vanish away in tangents to their several circles into the mundane space. Bentley's Sermons.

TANGIBILITY. n. s. [from tangible.]

The quality of being perceived by the touch.

TANGIBLE. adj. [from tango, Lat.] Perceptible by the touch.

Tangible bodies have no pleasure in the consort of air, but endeavour to subact it into a more dense body. Bacon.

T A N

By the touch, the tangible qualities of bodies are discern'd, as hard, soft, smooth. Locke.
To TANGLE. v. a. [See entangle.]
 1. To implicate; to knit together.
 2. To ensnare; to entrap.
 She means to tangle mine eyes too,
 'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
 Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream. Shakesp.
 I do, quoth he, perceive
 My king is tangled in affection to
 A creature of the queen's, lady Anne Bullen. Shakesp.
 You must lay lime to tangle her desires
 By wailful sonnets, whose composed rhimes
 Shall be full fraught with serviceable vows. Shakesp.
 If thou retire, the dauphin, well appointed,
 Stands with the snares of war to tangle thee. Shakesp.
 Now ly'st victorious
 Among thy slain self-kill'd,
 Not willingly, but tangled in the fold
 Of dire necessity. Milton's Agonistes.
 Skill'd to retire, and in retiring draw Hearts after them, tangled in amorous nets. Milton.
 With subtle cobweb cheats,
 They're catch'd in knotted law-like nets;
 In which when once they are entangled,
 The more they stir, the more they're tangled. Hudibras.
 3. To embroil; to embarrass.
 When my simple weakness strays,
 Tangled in forbidden ways,
 He, my shepherd! is my guide,
 He's before me, on my side. Crashaw.
To TANGLE. v. n. To be entangled.
 Shrobs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
 All path of man or beast. Anon.

These rumours begot scandal against the king, taxing him for a great taxer of his people. Bacon's Henry VII.

TEA. n. s. [a word, I suppose, Chinese; thé, Fr.] A Chinese plant, of which the infusion has lately been much drunk in Europe.

The muses' friend, tea, does our fancy aid,
Repress those vapours which the head invade. Waller.

One has a design of keeping an open tea table. Addison.
I have filled a tea pot, and received a dish of it. Addison.

He swept down a dozen tea dishes. Spectator.
Nor will you encourage the common tea table talk. Spectator.

Green leaves of tea contain a narcotick juice, which exudes by roasting: this is performed with great care before it is exposed to sale. Arbutnot on Aliments.

A living tea pot stands; one arm held out,
One bent; the handle this, and that the spout. Pope.

The mistress of the tea shop may give half an ounce. Swift.
The fear of being thought pedants hath taken many young divines off from their severer studies, which they have exchanged for plays, in order to qualify them for tea tables. Swift.

When you sweep, never stay to pick up tea spoons. Swift.

To TEACH. v. a. pret. and part. pass.

taught, sometimes teached, which is now obsolete. [tæcan, Sax.]

1. To instruct; to inform, as a master, correlative to learn.

I am too sudden bold:
To teach a teacher ill beseemeth me. Shakesp.
The Lord will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. Isaiah, ii. 3.
They teach all nations what of him they learn'd. Milton.

2. To deliver any doctrine or art, or words to be learned.

Moses wrote this song, and taught it. Dent. xxxi. 22.
In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men. Matt. xv. 9.
Teach us by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons. Milton.

3. To show; to exhibit so as to impress upon the mind.

He is a good divine that follows his own instructions; I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than to be one of the twenty to follow my own teaching. Shakesp.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others should practise them. South's Sermons.

4. To tell; to give intelligence.

Inswives are teached, instead of a clocke,
How winter night passeth by crowing of cocke. Tusser.

To TEACH. v. n. To perform the office of an instructor.

I have labour'd,
And with no little study, that my teaching,
And the strung course of my authority,
Might go one way. Shakesp.

The heads judge for reward, the priests teach for hire, and the prophets divine for money. Mic. iii. 11.

TE'ACHABLE. adj. [from teach.] Docile; susceptible of instruction.

'Tis sufficient that matters of faith and religion be propounded in such a way, as to render them highly credible, so as an honest and teachable man may willingly and safely assent to them, and according to the rules of prudence be justified in so doing. Wilkins.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed, and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TE'ACHABLENESS. n. s. [from teachable.]

Docility; willingness to learn; capacity to learn.

TE'ACHER. n. s. [from teach.]

1. One who teaches; an instructor; preceptor.

Nature is no sufficient teacher what we should do that may attain onto life everlasting. Hooker.
I went into the temple, there to hear
The teachers of our law, and to propose
What might improve my knowledge or their own. Milton.

These were notions born with us; such as we were taught without the help of a teacher. South's Sermons.

Imperious, with a teacher's air,
Boastful he claims a right to wisdom's chair. Blackmore.

2. One who without regular ordination assumes the ministry.

Dissenting teachers are under no incapacity of accepting civil and military employments. Swift.

3. A preacher; one who is to deliver doctrine to the people.

For the choice of a governor more sufficient, the teachers in all the churches assembled themselves. Raleigh.

Our lecture men, and some others, whom precise people stile powerful teachers, do seldom honour it. White.

Wolves shall succeed for teachers. Milton.
He may teach his diocese who ceases to be able to preach to it; he may do it by appointing teachers, and by a vigilant exacting from them the instruction of their flocks. South.

TEAD, or TEDE. n. s. [tæda, Lat.] A torch; a flambeau. Not in use.

A bushy tead a groom did light,
And sacred lamp in secret chamber hide. Spenser.
Hymen is awake,
And long since ready from his mask to move,
With his bright tead that flames with many a flake. Spenser.

TEAGUE. n. s. A name of contempt used for an Irishman.

TEAL. n. s. [teelingh, Dut.] A wild fowl.

Some serve for food to us, and some but to feed themselves; amongst the first sort we reckon the dip-chick, coots, teal, wigeon. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

TEAM. n. s. [temo the team of a carriage, Lat. tème, Sax. a yoke.]

1. A number of horses or oxen drawing at once the same carriage.

These a ploughman all unwitting found,
As he his toilsome team that way did guide,
And brought thee up in ploughman's state to bide. Spenser.

We fairies that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolick. Shak. Mids. Night's Dream.

T E A

Making such difference betwixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heav'nly harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east. Shak. II. IV.
I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me, nor who 'tis I love. Shakesp.

After the declining sun
Had chang'd the shadows, and their task was done,
Home with their weary team they took their way.

Roscommon.
He heav'd with more than human force to move
A weighty stone, the labour of a team. Dryden.
In stiff clays they may plow one acre of wheat with a team of horse. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. Any number passing in a line.
Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky.
Dryden.

TEAR. n. s. [ea in this word is pronounced ee; tear, Sax. taare, Dan. tear rhymes to cheer.]

1. The water which violent passion forces from the eyes.

She comes; and I'll prepare
My tear-stain'd eyes to see her miseries. Shakesp.
The pretty vaulting sea refus'd to drown me,
Knowing that thou wouldst have me drown'd on shore
With tears as salt as sea, through thy unkindness. Shakesp.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forced me.
Let's dry our eyes. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Tears are the effects of compression of the moisture of the brain upon dilatation of the spirits.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. Any moisture trickling in drops.
Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her fragrant flowers, her trees with precious tears,
Her second harvests. Dryden.

To TEAR. v. a. pret. toare, anciently tare; part. pass. *tor*n. [tearan, Sax. tara, Swedish: ea is pronounced as a; tear rhymes to square.]

1. To pull in pieces; to lacerate; to rend; to separate by violent pulling.

Come, feeling night!
And with thy bloody and invisible hand
Cancel and tear to pieces that great bond
Which keeps me pale. Shakesp. Macbeth.
The one went out from me; and I said, Surely he is *tor*n in pieces, and I saw him not since.

Gen. xlv. 23.
John *tor*e off lord Strat's servants clothes: now and then they came home naked.

Arbuth. Hist. of John Bull.
Ambassadors sent from Carthage were like to be *tor*n to pieces by the populace. Arbuthnot.

2. To laniate; to wound with any sharp point drawn along.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair,
The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tear. Shakesp.
Neither shall men tear themselves for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead.

Jer. xvi. 7.
3. To break, or take away by violence.

As storms the skies, and torrents tear the ground
Thus rag'd the prince, and scatter'd death around.
Dryden.

4. To divide violently; to shatter.

Is it not as much reason to say, that God destroys fatherly authority, when he suffers one in possession of it to have his government *tor*n in pieces, and shared by his subjects? Locke.

5. To pull with violence; to drive violently.

He roar'd, he beat his breast, he *tor*e his hair.
Dryden.
From harden'd oak, or from a rock's cold womb,
At least thou art from some fierce tygress come;
Or on rough seas from their foundation *tor*n,
Got by the winds, and in a tempest born. Dry.

T E A

Blush rather, that you are a slave to passion,
Which, like a whirlwind, tears up all your virtues,
And gives you not the leisure to consider. A. Philips.

G. To take away by sudden violence.

Rhodes and Bada from the Christians *tor*e. Waller.
The hand of fate
Has *tor*n thee from me, and I must forget thee. Addison.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shakesp. Ant. and Cleop.

To TEAR. v. n. [tieren, Dut.] To fume; to rave; to rant turbulently.

All men transported into outrages for small trivial matters, fall under the incendo of this bull, that ran tearing mad for the pinching of a mouse.
L'Esrange.

TEAR. n. s. [from the verb.] A rent; a fissure.

TEARER. n. s. [from To tear.] He who rends or tears; one who blusters.

TEARFALLING. adj. [tear and full.] Tender; shedding tears.

I am in
So far in blood, that sin will pluck on sin:
*Tear*falling pity dwells not in this eye. Shakesp.

TEARFUL. adj. [tear and full.] Weeping; full of tears.

Is't meet that he Should leave the helm, and, like a fearful lad,
With *tear*ful eyes add water to the sea? Shakesp.
And dries the *tear*ful cloud of wrinkled care,
And dries the *tear*ful smiles of despair:
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted
mind

All sense of woe delivers to the wind. Pope's Ody.

To TEASE. v. a. [tearan, Sax.]

1. To comb or unravel wool or flax.

2. To scratch cloth in order to level the nap.

3. To torment with importunity; to vex with assiduous importunence.

Not by the force of carnal reason,
But indefatigable teasing. Butler.
My friends always tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.
After having been present in public debates, he was *teas*ed by his mother to inform her of what had passed. Addison.

We system-makers can sustain
The thesis, which you grant was plain;
And with remarks and comments tease ye,
In case the thing before was easy. Prior.

TEASEL. n. s. [teajl, Sax. dipsacus, Lat.] A plant.

The species are three: one is called carduus follonum, and is of singular use in raising the nap upon woollen cloth. Miller.

TEASER. n. s. [from tease.] Any thing that torments by incessant importunity.

A fly buzzing at his ear makes him deaf to the best advice. If you would have him come to himself, you must take off his little teaser, which holds his reason at bay. Collier.

TEAF. n. s. [teth, Welsh; tez, Sax. tette, Dut. teton, Fr.] The dug of a beast; anciently the pap of a woman.

Even at thy teat thou hadst thy tyranny. Shak.
Snows cause a fruitful year, watering the earth better than rain; for the earth sucks it as out of the teat. Bacon.
When we perceive that bats have teats, we infer,
that they suckle their younglings with milk.
Brown's Vulg. Err.

It more pleas'd my sense,
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe or goat dropping with milk at even. Milton.

Infants sleep, and are seldom awake but when hunger calls for the teat. Locke.

T E D

The goat, how bright amidst her fellow stars,
Kind Amalthea, reach'd her teat distant
With milk, thy early food. Prior

TECHILY. adv. [from techy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TECHINESS. n. s. [from techy.] Peevishness; fretfulness.

TECHNICAL. adj. [τεχνικός; technique, Fr.] Belonging to arts; not in common or popular use.

In technical words, or terms of art, they refrain not from calling the same substance sometimes the sulphur, and sometimes the mercury, of a body. Locke.

TECHY. adj. Peevish; fretful; irritable; easily made angry; froward.

I cannot come to Cressid but by Pandar,
And he is as techy to be woo'd to wooe,
As she is stubborn-chaste against all sute. Shakesp.
When it did taste the wormwood on the nipple, and felt it bitter, pretty fool, to see it techy, and fall out with the dog! Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet.

TECTONICK. adj. [τεκτονικός.] Pertaining to building. Bailey.

To TED. v. a. [teadan, Sax. to prepare.] To lay grass newly mown in rows.

The smell of grain, or tedded grass, or kine,
Or dairy, each rural sight, each rural sound. Milt.
Hay-makers following the mowers, and casting it abroad, they call tedding. Mortimer's Husbandry.
Prudent his fall'n heaps Collecting, cherish'd with the tepid wreaths
Of tedded grass, and the sun's mellowing beams, Rival'd with artful heats. Philips.

TEDDER, or TETHER. n. s. [tudder, Dut. tindt, a rope, Island.]

1. A rope with which a horse is tied in the field that he may not pasture too wide. Teigher, Erse.

2. Any thing by which one is restrained.

We lived joyfully, going abroad with our tedder. Bacon.

We shall have them against the wall; we know the length of their tedder; they cannot run far from us. Child.

TE DEUM. n. s. An hymn of the church, so called from the two first words of the Latin.

The choir,
With all the choicest musick of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. Shakesp. Henry VIII.
Te Deum was sung at Saint Paul's after the victory.

Bacon.
TEDIOUS. adj. [tedicus, Fr. tædium, Lat.]

1. Wearisome by continuance; troublesome; irksome.

The one intense, the other still remiss,
Cannot well suit with either, but soon prove Tedious alike. Milton.
Pity only on fresh objects stays,
But with the tedious sight of woes decays. Dryd.

2. Wearisome by prolixity. Used of authors or performances.

They unto whom we shall seem tedious are in nowise injured by us, because it is in their own hands to spare that labour, which they are not willing to endure. Hooker.
That I be not further tedious unto thee, hear us of thy clemency a few words. Acts, xxiv. 4.
Chief mastery to dissect
With long and tedious havock fabled knights. Mil.

3. Slow.

But then the road was smooth and fair to see,
With such insensible declivity,
That what men thought a tedious course to run,
Was finish'd in the hour it first began. Harte.

TEDIOUSLY. adv. [from tedious.] In such a manner as to weary.

TEDIOUSNESS. n. s. [from tedious.]

T E E

1. Wearisomeness by continuance.
 She distastes them all within a while;
 And in the sweetest finds a tediousness. Davies.
2. Wearisomeness by prolixity.
 In vain we labour to persuade them, that any thing can take away the tediousness of prayer, except it be brought to the same measure and form which themselves assign. Hooker.
3. Prolixity; length.
 Since brevity's the soul of wit,
 And tediousness the limbs and outward flourishes,
 I will be brief. Shakesp. Hamlet.
4. Uneasiness; tiresomeness; quality of wearying.
 In those very actions whereby we are especially perfected in this life, we are not able to persist; forced we are with very weariness, and that often,
 to interrupt them, which tediousness cannot fall into those operations, that are in the state of bliss when our union with God is complete. Hooker.
 More than kisses, letters mingle souls,
 For thus friends absent speak: this ease controuls
 The tediousness of my life. Donne.
- To TEEM, v. n. [team, Sax. offspring.]
1. To bring young.
 If she must teem,
 Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
 And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her. Shak.
2. To be pregnant; to engender young.
 Have we more sons? or are we like to have?
 Is not my teeming date drunk up with time,
 And wilt thou pluck my fair son from mine age?
Shakesp.
 When the rising spring adorns the mead,
Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.
 There are fundamental truths, the basis upon which a great many others rest: these are teeming truths, rich in store, with which they furnish the mind, and, like the lights of heaven, give light and evidence to other things. Locke.
3. To be full; to be charged as a breeding animal.
 We live in a nation where there is scarce a single head that does not teem with politicks. Addison.
- To TEEM, v. a.
1. To bring forth; to produce.
 What's the newest grief?
 —Each minute teems a new one. Shakesp. Macb.
 Common mother, thou
 Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast, Teems and feeds all. Shakesp. Timon of Athens.
 The earth obey'd; and strait
 Op'ning her fertile womb, teem'd at a birth Innumerable living creatures. Milton's Parad. Lost.
 The deluge wrought such a change, that the earth did not then teem forth its increase, as formerly, of its own accord, but required culture.
Woodward's Nat. Hist.
2. To pour. A low word, imagined by Skinner to come from tommen, Danish, to draw out; to pour. The Scots retain it: as, teem that water out; hence Swift took this word.
Teem out the remainder of the ale into the tankard, and fill the glass with small beer.
Swift's Direct. to the Butler.
- TE'EMER, n. s. [from teem.] One that brings young.
- TE'EMFUL, adj. [teampful, Sax.]
1. Pregnant; prolific.
2. Brimful. Ainsworth.
- TE'EMLESS, adj. [from teem.] Unfruitful; not prolific.
 Such wars, such waste, such fiery tracks of dearth,
 Their zeal has left, and such a teemless earth. Dryd.
- TEEN, n. s. [teian, Sax. to kindle; to tenen, Flem. to vex; teonan, Sax. injuries.]
 Sorrow; grief. Not in use.
 Arrived there,
 That bare-head knight for dread and doleful teen
 Would fain have fled, ne durst approachen near.
Spenser.

T E L

- Fry not in heartless grief and doleful teen. Spens.
 My heart bleeds
 To think o' th' teene that I have turn'd you to.
Shakesp.
- Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
 And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen.
Shakesp.
- To TEEN, v. a. [from teian to kindle, Sax.] To excite; to provoke to do a thing. Not in use. Spenser.
- TEENS, n. s. [from teen for ten.] The years reckoned by the termination teen;
 as thirteen, fourteen.
 Our author would excuse these youthful scenes,
 Begotten at his entrance in his teens;
 Some childish fancies may approve the toy,
 Some like the muse the more for being a boy.
Granville.
- TEETH, the plural of tooth.
 Who can open the doors of his face? his teeth are terrible round about. Job. xli. 14.
- To TEETH, v. n. [from the noun.] To breed teeth; to be at the time of dentition.
 When the symptoms of teething appear, the gums ought to be relaxed by softening ointment.
Arbuthnot on Diet.
- TEGUMENT, n. s. [tegumentum, Lat.]
Cover; the outward part. This word is seldom used but in anatomy or physicks.
 Clip and trim those tender strings in the fashion of beard, or other hairy teguments. Brown's Vul. Err.
 Proceed by section, dividing the skin,
 and separating the teguments. Wiseman's Surgery.
 In the nutmeg another tegument is the mace between the green pericarpium and the hard shell.
Ray on the Creation.
- To TEH-HE, v. n. [a cant word made from the sound.] To laugh with a loud and more insolent kind of cachinnation;
 to titter.
 They laugh'd and teh-he'd with derision,
 To see them take your deposition. Hudibras.
- TEIL, Tree, n. s. [tilia, Lat.] The same with linden, or lime tree; which see.
- A teiltree and an oak have their substance in them when they cast their leaves. Isaiah, vi. 13.
- TEINT, n. s. [teinte, Fr.] Colour; touch of the pencil.
 Glazed colours have a vivacity which can never be imitated by the most brilliant colours, because the different teints are simply laid on, each in its place, one after another. Dryden.
- TELARY, adj. [tela a web, Lat.] Spinning webs.
 The pictures of telary spiders, and their position in the web, is commonly made lateral, and regarding the horizon; although we shall commonly find it downward, and their heads respecting the center. Brown's Vulg. Err.
- TELESCOPE, n. s. [telescope, Fr. τῆλε and σκοπέω.] A long glass by which distant objects are viewed.
 The telescope discovers to us distant wonders in the heavens, and shews the milky way, and the bright cloudy spots, in a very dark sky, to be a collection of little stars. Watts.
- TELESCO'PICAL, adj. [from telescope.]
 Belonging to a telescope; seeing at a distance.
- To TELL, v. a. preterite and part. pass.
told. [zellan, Sax. taelen, tellen, Dut.
talen, Dan.]
1. To utter; to express; to speak.
 I will not eat till I have told mine errand.
Gen. xxiv. 33.
 Thy message might in telling wound,
 And in performing end us. Milton.
2. To relate; to rehearse.

T E L

- I will declare what wise men have told from their fathers, and have not hid. Job, xv. 18.
 When Gideon heard the telling of the dream, and the interpretation, he worshipped. Judges, vii. 13.
 He longer will delay to hear thee tell
 His generation. Milton.
 You must know; but break, O break my heart,
 Before I tell my fatal story out,
 Th' usurper of my throne is my wife! Dryden.
 The rest are vanish'd, none repass'd the gate,
 And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope's Od.
3. To teach; to inform.
 He gently ask'd, where all the people be,
 Which in that stately building went to dwell?
 Who answer'd him full oft, he could not tell. Spens.
 I told him of myself; which was as much
 As to have ask'd him pardon. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
Tell me now, what lady is the same,
 To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
 That you to-day promise to tell me of? Shakesp.
 The fourth part of a shekel of silver will I give to the man of God to tell us our way. 1 Sam. ix. 8.
 Saint Paul telleth us, we must needs be subject not only for fear, but also for conscience sake.
Bishop Sanderson.
Tell me how may I know him, how adore. Milton.
4. To discover; to betray.
 They will tell it to the inhabitants. Num. xiv. 14.
5. To count; to number.
 Here lies the learned Savile's heir,
 So early wise, and lasting fair,
 That none, except her years they told,
 Thought her a child, or thought her old. Waller.
 Numerous sails the fearful only tell;
 Courage from hearts, and not from numbers, grows.
Dryden.
 A child can tell twenty before he has any idea of infinite. Locke.
 She doubts if two and two make four,
 Though she has told them ten times o'er. Prior.
6. To make excuses. A low word.
 Tush, never tell me: I take it much unkindly,
 That thou, Iago, who hast had my purse,
 As if the strings were thine, shouldst know of this.
Shakesp.
- To TELL, v. n.
1. To give an account; to make report.
 I will compass thine altar, O Lord, that I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works. Psaln xxvi. 7.
 Ye that live and move, fair creatures! tell,
Tell, if ye saw, how came I thus, how here? Milt.
2. To tell on. To inform of. A doubtful phrase.
 David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David. 1 Sam. xxvii. 11.
- TELLER, n. s. [from tell.]
1. One who tells or relates.
2. One who numbers; a numberer.
3. A teller is an officer of the exchequer, of which there are four in number:
 their business is to receive all monies due to the king, and give the clerk of the pell a bill to charge him therewith:
 they also pay all persons any money payable to them by the king, by warrant from the auditor of the receipt: they also make books of receipts and payments, which they deliver to the lord treasurer.
Cowell.
- TELLTALE, n. s. [tell and tale.] One who gives malicious information; one who carries officious intelligence.
 You speak to Casca, and to such a man
 That is no fearing telltale. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.
 What, shall these papers lie like telltales here?
Shakesp.
 Let not the heavens hear these telltale women Rail on the Lord's anointed. Shakesp.
 'Tis done: report displays her telltale wings,
 And to each ear the news and tidings brings.
Fairfax.

T E M

had better go up to the top of the next hill, than remove into a far more northern country.

Brown's Travels.

Memory depends upon the consistence and the temperature of the brain.

Watts.

2. Mediocrity; due balance of contrarieties.

As the world's sun doth effects beget Different in divers places ev'ry day;

Here autumn's temperature, there summer's heat, Here flow'ry spring-tide, and there winter grey.

Davies.

If, instead of this variation of heat, we suppose an equality or constant temperature of it before the deluge, the case would be much altered.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

3. Moderation; freedom from predominant passion.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth, Most goodly temperature you may descry.

Spenser.

TEMPERED. adj. [from temper.] Disposed with regard to the passions.

When was my lord so much ungently tempered, To stop his ears against admonishment?

Shakesp.

TEMPEST. n. s. [tempeste, Fr. tempestas, Lat.]

1. The utmost violence of the wind; the names by which the wind is called according to the gradual increase of its force seem to be, a breeze; a gale; a gust; a storm; a tempest.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds Have riv'd the knotty oaks.

Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

Some have been driven by tempest to the south.

Abbot.

What at first was call'd a gust, the same Hath now a storm's, anon a tempest's name.

A quickness and tenderness of sight could not endure bright sunshine. Locke.

Any zealots for his country, must conquer that tenderness and delicacy which may make him afraid of being spoken ill of. Addison.

There are examples of wounded persons, that have roared for anguish at the discharge of ordinance, though at a great distance; what insupportable torture then should we be under upon a like concussion in the air, when all the whole body would have the tenderness of a wound! Bentley's Sermons.

3. Susceptibility of the softer passions.

Weep no more, lest I give cause

To be suspected of more tenderness

Than doth become a man. Shakesp.

Well we know your tenderness of heart,

And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse

To your kindred. Shakesp. Richard III.

With what a graceful tenderness he loves!

And breathes the softest, the sincerest vows!

Addison.

4. Kind attention; anxiety for the good of another.

Having no children, she did with singular care and tenderness intend the education of Philip and Margaret. Bacon.

5. Scrupulousness, caution.

My conscience first receiv'd a tenderness,
Scruple, and prick, on certain speeches utter'd
By th' bishop of Bayon. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

Some are unworthily censured for keeping their own, whom tenderness how to get honestly teacheth to spend discreetly; whereas such need no great thriftiness in preserving their own, who assume more liberty in exacting from others. Watson.

True tenderness of conscience is nothing else but an awful and exact sense of the rule which should direct it; and while it steers by this compass, and is sensible of every declination from it, so long it is properly tender. South.

6. Cautious care.

There being implanted in every man's nature a great tenderness of reputation, to be careless of it is looked on as a mark of a degenerate mind.

Government of the Tongue.

7. Soft pathos of expression.

TENDINOUS. adj. [tendineux, Fr. tendinis, Lat.] Sinewy; containing tendons, consisting of tendons.

Nervous and tendinous parts have worse symptoms, and are harder of cure than fleshy ones. Hiseman.

TENDON. n. s. [tendon, Lat.] A sinew; a ligature by which the joints are moved.

A struma in her instep lay very hard and big amongst the tendons. Hiseman's Surgery.

The entrails these embrace in spiral strings,
Those clasp th' arterial tubes in tender rings;

The tendons some compacted close produce,
And some thin fibres for the skin diffuse. Blackm.

TENDRIL. n. s. [tendrillon, Fr.] The clasp of a vine or other climbing plant.

In wanton ringlets wav'd,

As the vine curls her tendrils; which imply'd

Subjection. Milton's Parad. Lost.

So may thy tender blossoms fear no bite;

Nor goats with venom'd teeth thy tendrils bite.

Dryden.

The tendrils or clasps of plants are given only to such as have weak stalks, and cannot raise up or support themselves. Ray on the Creation.

TENE'BRICOSE. } adj. [tenebricosus, te-

TENET. n. s. [from tenet, Lat. he holds.
It is sometimes written tenent or they hold.] Position; principle; opinion.

That all animals of the land are in their kind in the sea, although received as a principle, is a tenet very questionable. Brown's Vul. Err.

While in church matters, profit shall be the touch-stone for faith and manners, we are not to wonder if no gainful tenet be deposited.

Decay of Piety.

This savours of something ranker than Socinianism, even the tenets of the fifth monarchy, and of sovereignty founded only upon saintship. South.

They wonder men should have mistook
The tenets of their master's book. Prior.

TENFOLD. adj. [ten and fold.] Ten times increased.

Fire kindled into tenfold rage. Milton.

TENNIS. n. s. [This play is supposed by Skinner to be so named from the word tenez take it, hold it, or there it goes, used by the French when they drive the ball.] A play at which a ball is driven with a racket.

The barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already stuffed tennis balls. Shakesp.

A prince, by a hard destiny, became a tennis ball long to the blind goddess. Howel's Vocal Forest.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to play at tennis with his page. Peacham.

The inside of the uvea is blacked like the walls of a tennis court, that the rays falling upon the retina may not, by being rebounded thence upon the uvea, be returned again; for such a repercussion would make the sight more confused. More against Atheism.

We conceive not a tennis ball to think, and consequently not to have any volition, or preference of motion to rest. Locke.

We have no exedra for the philosophers adjoining to our tennis court, but there are alehouses. Arbuthnot and Pope.

To TENNIS. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive as a ball. Not used.

Those four garrisons issuing forth upon the enemy, will so drive him from one side to another, and tennis him amongst them, that he shall find no where safe to keep his feet in, nor hide himself. Spenser on Ireland.

TENON. n. s. [Fr.] The end of a timber cut to be fitted into another timber.

Such variety of parts, solid with hollow; some with cavities as mortises to receive, others with tenons to fit them. Ray.

The tenant saw being thin, hath a back to keep it from bending. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TENOR. n. s. [tenor, Lat. tenor, Fr.]

1. Continuity of state; constant mode; manner of continuity; general currency.

We might perceive his words interrupted continually with sighs, and the tenor of his speech not knit together to one constant end, but dissolved, in itself, as the vehemency of the inward passion prevailed. Sidney.

When the world first out of chaos sprang,
So smil'd the days, and so the tenor ran
Of their felicity; a spring was there,
An everlasting spring the jolly year

Led round in his great circle; no winds breath
As now did smell of winter or of death. Crashaw.

Still I see the tenor of man's woe

Held on the same, from woman to begin. Milton.

Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men. Spratt.

Inspire my numbers,

Till I my long laborious work complete,

And add perpetual tenor to my rhimes,

Deduc'd from nature's birth to Cæsar's times.

Dryden.

This success would look like chance, if it were not perpetual, and always of the same tenor. Dry.

Can it be poison! poison's of one tenor,

Or hot, or cold. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

There is so great an uniformity amongst them, that the whole tenor of those bodies thus preserved, clearly points forth the month of May.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,

Correctly cold, and regularly low,

That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep,

We cannot blame indeed—but we may sleep.

Pope.

2. Sense contained; general course or drift.

Hast not the divine Apollo said,

Is't not the tenor of his oracle,

That king Leontes shall not have an heir,

Till his lost child be found? Shak. Winter's Tale.

By the stern brow and waspish action,

Which she did use as she was writing of it,

It bears an angry tenor. Shal. esp. As you like it.

Bid me tear the bond.

—When it is paid according to the tenor. Shakesp.

Reading it must be repeated again and again, with a close attention to the tenor of the discourse, and a perfect neglect of the divisions into chapters and verses. Locke.

3. A sound in musick.

The treble cutteth the air too sharp to make the sound equal; and therefore a mean or tenor is the sweetest part. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Water and air he for the tenor chose,

Earth made the base, the treble flame arose.

Cowley.

TENSE. adj. [tensus, Lat.] Stretched; stiff; not lax.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense, and hard stretched, otherwise the laxness of the membrane will certainly dead and damp the sound. Holder.

TENSE. n. s. [tempus, Fr. tempus, Lat.] In grammar, tense, in strict speaking, is only a variation of the verb to signify time. Clarke.

As foresight, when it is natural, answers to memory; so when methodical it answers to reminiscence, and may be called forecast; all of them expressed in the tenses given to verbs. Memory saith, I did see; reminiscence, I had seen; forecast, I shall see; forecast, I shall have seen. Greac.

Ladies, without knowing what tenses and participles are, speak as properly and as correctly as gentlemen. Locke.

T E N

He should have the Latin words given him in their first case and tense, and should never be left to seek them himself from a dictionary. Watts.

TENSENESS. n. s. [from tense.] Contraction; tension; the contrary to laxity.

Should the pain and tenseness of the part continue, the operation must take place. Sharp's Surg.

They said, What is that to us? see thou to that.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren. 1 Cor. iv. 8.
Yet for all that, when they be in the laud of their enemies I will not cast them away.

Leviticus, xxvi. 44.

We must direct our prayers to right ends; and that either in respect of the prayer itself, or the things we pray for. Duty of Man.

They weep, as if they meant
That way at least proud Nabas to prevent. Cowley.

This ruminic subject will occur upon that of poetry. Temple.

What is inviting in this sort of poetry, proceeds not so much from the idea of a country life itself, as from that of its tranquillity. Pope.

5. Opposed to this, as the other to one.

This is not fair; nor profitable that;
Nor t' other question proper for debate.

Dryden's Persius.

6. When this and that relate to foregoing words, this is referred like hic or cecū to the latter, and that like ille or cetera to the former.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie,
The weight of that mounts this so high. Cowley.

7. Such as.

By religion is meant a living up to those principles, that is, to act conformably to our best reason, and to live as becomes those who believe a God and a future state. Tillotson.

Secure proud Nabas slept,
And dreamt, vain man, of that day's barb'rous sport. Cowley.

11. By way of eminence.

This is that Jonathan, the joy and grace,
That Jonathan, in whom does mixt remain
All that fond mothers wish. Cowley.

Hence love himself, that tyrant of my days.
Cowley.

12. In that. Because; in consequence of.

Things are preached not in that they are taught,
but in that they are published. Hooker.

THAT. conjunction.

1. Because.

It is not that I love you less
Than when before your feet I lay;
But to prevent the sad increase
Of hopeless love, I keep away. Waller.

Forgive me that I thus your patience wrong.
Cowley.

2. Noting a consequence.

That he should dare to do me this disgrace!
Is fool or coward writ upon my face? Dryden.

The custom and familiarity of these tongues do sometimes so far influence the expressions in these epistles, that one may observe the force of the Hebrew conjugations. Locke.

3. Noting indication.

We answered, that we held it so agreeable, as we both forgot dangers past and fears to come, that we thought an hour spent with him was worth years of our former life. Bacon's New Atlantis.

In the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the stars. Heylyn.

I have shewed before, that a mere possibility to the contrary can by no means hinder a thing from being highly credible. Wilkins.

4. Noting a final end.

Treat it kindly, that it may Wish at least with us to stay. Cowley.

THATCH. n. s. [ῥάξ, Sax. straw, Skinner,

from ῥάξ a roof; in Island. thak, Mr.
Lye.] Straw laid upon the top of a house to keep out the weather.

Hard by a sty, beneath a roof of thatch,
Dwelt Obloquy, who in her early days
Baskets of fish at Billingsgate did watch,
Cod, whiting, oyster, mackerel, sprat, or plaice.

A plough-boy, who has never seen any thing but thatched houses, naturally imagines that thatch belongs to the very nature of a house. Watts.

Then came rosy Health from her cottage of thatch,
Where never physician had lifted the latch. Smart.

To THATCH. v. a. [ῥάξ, Sax.] To cover as with straw.

Make false hair, and thatch
Your poor thin roofs with burthens of the dead.

Moss growth chiefly upon ridges of houses tiled or thatched. Bacon's Natural History.

Then Rome was poor, and there you might behold
The palace thatch'd with straw. Dryden.

Sonnets or elegies to Chloris
Might raise a house above two stories:
A lyric ode would slate, a catch
Would tile, an epigram would thatch. Swift.

THATCHER. n. s. [from thatch.] One whose trade is to cover houses with straw.

You merit new employments daily;
Our thatcher, ditcher, gard'ner, bailly, Swift.
Ash is universal timber; it serves the soldier,
seaman, carpenter, thatcher, and husbandman.
Mortimer.

To THAW. v. n. [ῥάξ, Sax. degen,

Dut.]

1. To grow liquid after congelation; to melt.

When thy melted maid
His letter at thy pillow hath laid:
If thou begin'st to thaw for this,
May my name step in. Donne.

It on firm land
Thaws not, but gathers heap, and ruin seems
Of ancient pile; all else deep snow and ice.

Having let that ice thaw of itself, and frozen the liquor a second time, we could not discern any thing. Boyle.

O Solitude! romantick maid
Whether by nodding tow'rs you tread,
Or climb the Andes' clifted side,
Or by the Nile's coy source abide,
Or, starting from a half year's sleep,
From Hecla view the thawing deep,
Or Tadmor's marble wastes survey,
Or in yon roofless cloister pierce;
Thee, fond nymph! again I woo,
And again thy steps pursue. Grainger.

2. To remit the cold which had caused frost.

To THAW. v. a. To melt what was congealed.

Bring me the fairest creature northward born,
Where Phæbus' fire scarce thaws the isicles. Shak.

Think not that Cæsar bears such rebel blood,
That will be thaw'd from the true quality
With that which melteth fools. Shak. Julius Cæsar.

My love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was. Shakesp.

She can unlock
The clasping charm, and thaw the numbing spell.
Milton.

Burrish'd steel, that cast a glare
From far, and seem'd to thaw the freezing air.
Dryden.

Her icy heart is thaw'd
Granville.

THE. article. [de, Dut.]

1. Liquefaction of any thing congealed.

A man of my kidney, that am as subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw. Shakesp.

Harden his subborn heart, but still as ice
More harden'd after thaw. Milton.

2. Warmth such as liquifies congelation.

I was the prince's jester, and duller than a great thaw. Shakesp. Much ada about Nothing.

That cold country where discourse doth freeze in the air all winter, and may be heard in the next summer, or at a great thaw. Wilkins's Math. Mag.

When sharp frosts had long constrain'd the earth,
A kindly thaw unlocks it with cold rain,
First the tender blade peeps. Dryden.

THE. article. [de, Dut.]

1. The article noting a particular thing.

Your son has paid a soldier's debt:
He only liv'd but till he was a man;
The which no sooner had his prowess confirm'd,
In the unshrinking station where he fought,
But like a man he dy'd. Shakesp. Macbeth.

He put him in mind of the long pretence he had to be groom of the bed-chamber, for the which he could not chuse but say, that he had the queen's promise. Clarendon.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Unhappy till the last the kind releasing knell.

I 'll march the muses, Hannibal. Cowley.
The fair example of the heav'nly lark,
Thy fellow poet, Cowley, mark;
Above the stars let thy bold music sound,
Thy humble nest build on the ground. Cowley.

The fruit
Of that forbidden tree, whose mortal taste
Brought death into the world. Milton.

Night shades the groves, and all in silence lie,
All but the mournful Philomel and I. Pope.

2. Before a vowel e is commonly cut off in verse.

Who had th' especial engines been to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

Th' adorning thee with so much art
Is but a barb'rous skill:
'Tis like the pois'ning of a dart,
Too apt before to kill. Cowley.

3. Sometimes he is cut off.

In this scale gold, in t' other fame does lie.
Cowley.

4. It is used by way of consequential reference.

The longer sin hath kept possession of the heart,
the harder it will be to drive it out. Duty of Man.

5. In the following passage the is used according to the French idiom.

As all the considerable governments among the Alps are commonwealths, so it is a constitution the most adapted of any to the poverty of these countries. Addison on Italy.

THEATRICAL. adj. [theatral, Fr. theatralis, Lat.] Belonging to a theatre.

THEATRE. n. s. [theatre, Fr. theatrum, Lat.]

1. A place in which shews are exhibited; a playhouse.

This wise and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play. Shakesp. As you like it.

When the boats came within sixty yards of the pillar, they found themselves all bound, yet so as they might go about, so as they all stood as in a theatre beholding this light. Bacon.

2. A place rising by steps or gradations like a theatre.

Shade above shade, a woody theatre
Of stateliest view. Milton.
In the midst of this fair valley stood
A native theatre, which, rising flow,
By just degrees o'erlook'd the ground below. Dry.
No theatres of oaks around him rise,
Whose roots earth's centre touch, whose heads
the skies. Harte.

THEATRICAL. } adj. [theatrum, Lat.]

THEATRICK. } Scenick; suiting a theatre; pertaining to a theatre.

Theatrical forms stickle hard for the prize of religion: a distorted countenance is made the mark of an upright heart. Decay of Piety.

Load some vain church with old theatrick state,
Turn arcs of triumph to a garden gate. Pope.

THEATRICALY. adv. [from theatrical.]

In a manner suiting the stage.
Dauntless her look, her gesture proud,
Her voice theatrically loud. Pope.

THEE. the oblique singular of thou.

Poet and saint, to thee alone were giv'n
The two most sacred names of earth and heav'n. Cowley.

THEFT. n. s. [from thief.]

1. The act of stealing.

Theft is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's goods against the owner's knowledge or will. Cowell.

His thefts were too open; his filching was like an unskilful singer, he kept not time. Shakesp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

Their nurse Euripbile, Whom for the theft I wedded, stole these children. Shakesp.

Deceit in trade, a secret theft: extortion, an impudent theft. Holyday.

The thefts upon the public can be looked into and punished. Davenant.

2. The thing stolen.

If the theft be certainly found in his hand alive, whether ox, ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. Exodus, xvii. 4.

THEIR. pronoun. [ðeora of them, Sax.]

1. Of them: the pronoun possessive, from they.

The round world should have shook Lions into civil streets, and citizens into their dens. Shakesp.

For the Italians, Dante had begun to file their language in verse before Boccace, who likewise received no little help from his master Petrarch; but the reformation of their prose was wholly owing to Boccace. Dryden.

2. Theirs is used when any thing comes in construction between the possessive and substantive.

Prayer we always have in our power to bestow; and they never in theirs to refuse. Hooker.

They gave the same names to their own idols which the Egyptians did to theirs. Raleigh.

The penalty to thy transgression due,
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow. Milton.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears

'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

Vain are our neighbours hopes, and vain their cares;
The fault is more their language's than theirs. Roscommon.

Which established law of theirs seems too strict at first, because it excludes all secret intrigues. Dryden.

And, reading, wish like theirs our fate and fame. Pope.

THEM. the oblique of they.

The materials of them were not from any herb. Wilkins.

THEME. n. s. [theme, Fr. from θήμα.]

1. A subject on which one speaks or writes.

Every object of our idea is called a theme, whether it be a being or not being. Watts.

Two truths are told,
As happy prologues to the swelling act
Of the imperial theme. Shakesp. Macbeth.

When a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off. Shakesp. Cymbeline.

O! could I flow like thee, and make thy stream
My great example, as it is my theme:
Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull;

Strong without rage, without o'erflowing full. Denham.

Whatever near Eurota's happy stream,
With laurels crown'd, had been Apollo's theme. Roscommon.

Though Tyber's streams immortal Rome behold;
Though foaming Hermus swells with tides of gold,
From heav'n itself though seven-fold Nilus flows,
And harvests on a hundred realms bestows;

These now no more shall be the muse's themes,
Lost in my fame, as in the sea their streams. Pope.

2. A short dissertation written by boys on any topick.

Forcing the empty wits of children to compose themes, verses, and orations. Milton.

3. The original word whence others are derived.

Let scholars daily reduce the words to their original or theme, to the first case of nouns, or first tense of verbs. Watts.

THEMSELVES. n. s. [See THEY and SELF.]

1. These very persons: in this sense it is nominative.

Whatesoever evil befalleth in that, themselves have made themselves worthy to suffer it. Hooker.

2. The oblique case of they and selves.

They open to themselves at length the way. Milton.

Such things as in themselves are equally true and certain, may not yet be capable of the same kind or degree of evidence as to us. Wilkins.

Waken children out of sleep with a low call, and give them kind usage till they come perfectly to themselves. Locke.

THEN. adv. [than, Goth. ðan, Sax. dan, Dut.]

1. At that time.

The then bishop of London, Dr. Laud, attended on his majesty throughout that journey. Clarendon.

Thee, then a boy, with my arms I laid. Dryden.

2. Afterwards; immediately afterwards; soon afterwards.

If an herb be cut off from the roots in winter, and then the earth be trodden down hard, the roots will become very big in summer. Bacon's Natural History.

3. In that case; in consequence.

If God's immediate speaking and writing argueth precepts, thus spoken or written, to be perpetual moral; then his not writing of precepts argueth them to be temporary. White.

Had not men been fated to be blind,
Then had our lances pierc'd the treach'rous wood. Dryden.

Had fate so pleas'd I had been eldest born,
And then without a crime the crown had won. Dryden.

If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4. Therefore; for this reason.

While then the apostle moves us to unity, and moves us also to an endeavour to it, he bestows upon us as well a discovery, as an exhortation, shewing us not only the end, but also the means. Holyday.

If then his providence
Out of our evil seek to bring forth good. Milton.

Now then be all thy weighty cares away,
Thy jealousies and fears; and, while you may,
To peace and soft repose give all the day. Dryden.

5. At another time: as now and then, at one time and other.

Now shaves with level wing the deep, then snars. Milton.

One while the master is not aware of what is done, and then in other cases it may fall out to be his own act. L'Estrange.

6. That time: it has here the effect of a noun.

Till then who knew
The force of those dire a then. Milton.

TENCE. adv. [contracted, according to Minshew, from there hence.]

1. From that place.

Fast by the oracle of God; I tence
Invoke thy aid. Milton.

Surat he took, and tence preventing fame,
By quick and painful marches thither came. Dryden.

2. From that time.

There shall be no more tence an infant of days. Isaiah, lxxv.

3. For that reason.

Not to sit idle with so great a gift
Useless, and tence ridiculous, about him. Milt. Ag.

4. From tence is a barbarous expression, tence implying the same; yet it wants not good authorities.

From tence; from him, whose daughter
His tears proclaim'd his parting with her; tence
We have cross'd. Shakesp.

There plant eyes, all mist from tence
Purge and disperse. Milton.

TENCEFORTH. adv. [tence and forth.]

1. From that time.

Tenceforth this land was tributary made
T' ambitious Rome. Spenser.

They shall be placed in Leinster, and have land given them to live upon, in such sort as shall become good subjects, to labour tenceforth for their living. Spenser on Ireland.

Wrath shall be no more Tenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire. Milton.

2. From tenceforth is a barbarous corruption, though it has crept into books where it ought not to be found.

Avert
His holy eyes; resolving from tenceforth
To leave them to their own polluted ways. Milton.

Men grow acquainted with these self-evident truths upon their being proposed; but whosoever does so, finds in himself that he then begins to know a proposition which he knew not before, and which from tenceforth he never questions. Locke.

TENCEFORWARD. adv. [tence and forward.] On from that time.

When he comes to the Lord's table, every communicant professes to repent, and promises to lead a new life tenceforward. Kettlewell.

THEOCRACY. n. s. [theocratic, Fr. θεοκρατία and ἡγεμονία.] Government immediately superintended by God.

The characters of the reign of Christ are chiefly justice, peace, and divine presence or conduct, which is called theocracy. Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

T H E

THEOCRATICAL. adj. [theocratique, Fr. from theocracy.] Relating to a government administered by God.

The government is neither human nor angelical, but peculiarly theocratical.

Burnet's Theo. of the Earth.

THEORICAL. } adj. [thorique, Fr.] }
THEORICK. } from θεωρία. } Speculative; depending on theory or speculation; termination in theory or speculation; not practical.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences:
So that the act and practick part of life
Must be the mistress to this theorique. Shakesp.

The theoretical part of the inquiry being interwoven with the historical conjectures, the philosophy of colours will be promoted by indisputable experiments. Boyle on Colours.

For theoretical learning and sciences, there is nothing yet complete. Bu net's Theory of the Earth.

THERE. adv. [thar, Goth. ðær, Sax. daer, Dut. der, Dan.]

1. In that place.
If they come to sojourn at my house,
I'll not be there. Shakesp. King Lear.

T H E

Exil'd by thee from earth to deepest hell,
In brazen bonds shall barb'rous discord dwell;
Gigantick pride, pale terror, gloomy care,
And mad ambition shall attend her there. Pope.

2. It is opposed to here.
To see thee fight, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakesp. Merry Wives.

Could their relishes be as different there as they are here, yet the manna in heaven will suit every palate. Locke.

Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.

3. An exclamation directing something at a distance.

Your fury hardens me.

A guard there; seize her. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. It is used at the beginning of a sentence with the appearance of a nominative case, but serves only to throw the nominative behind the verb: as, a man came, or there came a man. It adds however some emphasis, which, like many other idioms in every language, must be learned by custom, and can hardly be explained. It cannot always be omitted without harshness: as, in old times there was a great king.

For reformation of error there were that thought it a part of christian charity to instruct them.

Hooker.

There are delivered in holy scripture many weighty arguments for this doctrine. White.

There cannot in nature be a strength so great, as to make the least moveable to pass in an instant, or all together, through the least place.

Digby on the Soul.

THILL-HORSE. } n. s. [thill and horse.]
THILLER. } The last horse; the horse that goes between the shafts.
 Whose bridle and saddle, whitlether and nall,
 With collars and harness for thiller and all. Tusser.
 What a beard hast thou got! thou hast got more hair on thy chin, than Dobbin my thill horse has on his tail. Shakesp.
THIMBLE. n. s. [This is supposed by Minsheu to be corrupted from thumb bell.] A metal cover by which women secure their fingers from the needle when they sew.
 Your ladies and pale visag'd maids,
 Like Amazons, come tripping after drums;
 Their thimbles into armed gantlets change,
 Their needles to lances. Shakesp. King John.
 Examine Venus and the Moon,
 Who stole a thimble or a spoon. Hudibras.
 Veins that run perpendicular to the horizon have valves sticking to their sides like so many thimbles; which, when the blood presses back, stop its passage, but are compressed by the forward motion of the blood. Cheyne.
THIME. n. s. [thymus, Lat. thym, Fr.] A fragrant herb from which the bees are supposed to draw honey. This should be written thyme.

 Else how could he that host seduce to sin,
 Whose fall has left the heav'nly nation thin? Dry.
 Northward, beyond the mountains we will go,
 Where rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow,
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields;
 The sand no gold, the mine no silver yields. Dry.
Thin on the tow'rs they stand; and ev'n those few,
 A feeble, fainting, and dejected crew. Dryden.
 Already Cæsar
 Has ravag'd more than half the globe; and sees Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword. Addison.
 Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour in,
 Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin! Young.
 4. Not closely compacted or accumulated.

T H I

8. Not fat; not bulky; lean; slim; slender.

A slim thin-gutted fox made a hard shift to wriggle his body into a hen-roost; and when he had stuffed his guts well, the hole was too little to get out again. L'Estrange.

THIN. adv. Not thickly.

Spain is thin sown of people, by reason of the sterility of the soil, and the natives being exhausted in such vast territories as they possess. Bacon.

Remove the swelling epithets, thick laid As varnish on a harlot's cheek; the rest Thin sown with aught of profit or delight. Milton.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise, That last infirmity of noble mind, To scorn delights, and love laborious days;

But the fair guerdon when we hope to find, And think to burst out into sudden blaze, Comes the blind fury with the' abhorred sheers, And slits the thin-span life. Milton.

Thin-leaved arbutus hazle grafts receives, And planes huge apples bear, that bore but leaves, Dryden.

A country gentlew man, if it be like to rain, goes not abroad thin clad. Locke.

To THIN. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make thin or rare; to make less thick.

The serum of the blood is neither acid nor alkaline: oil of vitriol thickens, and oil of tartar thins it a little. Arbuthnot.

2. To make less close or numerous.

The bill against root and branch never passed, till both houses were sufficiently thinned and overawed. King Charles.

To unload the branches, or the leaves to thin, That suck the vital moisture of the vine. Dryden.

'Tis Caesar's sword has made Rome's senate little, And thin'd its ranks. Addison's Cato.

3. To attenuate.

The vapours, by the solar heat Thin'd and exhald, rise to their airy seat. Blackm.

THINE. pronoun. [thine, Goth. Thu, Sax. dijn, Dut.] Belonging or relating to thee; the pronoun possessive of thou.

It is used for thy when the substantive is divided from it: as, this is thy house; thine is this house; this house is thine.

'Thou hast her, France; let her be thine, for we have no such daughter. Shakesp. King Lear.

THING. n. s. [ding, Sax. ding, Dut.]

Says the master, You devour the same things that they would have eaten, mice and all. L'Estrange.

When a thing is capable of good proof in any kind, men ought to rest satisfied in the best evidence for it which that kind of things will bear, and beyond which better would not be expected, supposing it were true. Wilkins.

I should blush to own so rude a thing, As 'tis to shun the brother of my king. Dryden.

Wicked men, who understand any thing of wisdom, may see the imprudence of worldly and irreligious courses. Tillotson.

Princes, when they come to know the true state of things, are not unwilling to prevent their own ruin. Davenant.

2. It is used in contempt.

I have a thing in prose, begun about twenty-eight years ago, and almost finished: it will make a four shilling volume. Swift.

3. It is used of persons in contempt, or sometimes with pity.

T H I

See, sons, what things you are! how quickly nature

Falls to revolt, when gold becomes her object! For this the foolish over-careful fathers Have broke their sleeps with thought, their brains with care. Shakesp. Henry IV.

A thing by neither man nor woman priz'd, And scarcely known enough to be despis'd. Dry.

Never any thing was so unbred as that odious man. Congreve.

I'll be this abject thing no more, Love, give me back my heart again. Granville.

4. It is used by Shakespeare once in a sense of honour.

I lov'd the maid I married; never man Sigh'd truer breath: but that I see thee here, Thou noble thing! more dances my wrapt heart. Shakesp.

To THINK. v. n. preter. thought. [thankgan, Goth. Dencean, Sax. dencken, Dut.]

1. To have ideas; to compare terms or things; to reason; to cogitate; to perform any mental operation, whether of apprehension, judgment, or illation.

Thinking, in the propriety of the English tongue, signifies that sort of operation of the mind about its ideas, wherein the mind is active; where it, with some degree of voluntary attention, considers any thing. Locke.

What am I? or from whence? for that I am I know, because I think; but whence I came, Or how this frame of mine began to be, What other being can disclose to me? Dryden.

Those who perceive dully, or retain ideas in their minds ill, will have little matter to think on. Locke.

It is an opinion, that the soul always thinks, and that it has the actual perception of ideas in itself constantly, and that actual thinking is as inseparable from the soul, as actual extension is from the body. Locke.

These are not matters to be slightly and superficially thought upon. Tillotson's Sermons.

His experience of a good prince must give great satisfaction to every thinking man. Addis. Freehold.

2. To judge; to conclude; to determine. Let them marry to whom they think best; only to their father's tribe shall they marry. Numb. xxxvi. 6.

I fear we shall not find This long desired king such as was thought. Dan.

Can it be thought that I have kept the gospel terms of salvation, without ever so much as intending, in any serious and deliberate manner, either to know them, or keep them? Law.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me, and such thanks I give, As one near death to those that wish him live. Shakesp.

4. To imagine; to fancy.

Something since his coming forth is thought of, which Imports the kingdom so much fear and danger, That his return was most requir'd. Shak. K. Lear.

Edmund, I think, is gone, In pity of his misery, to dispatch His ighted life. Shakesp. King Lear.

We may not be startled at the breaking of the exterior earth; for the face of nature bath provoked men to think of and observe such a thing. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

Those who love to live in gardens, have never thought of contriving a winter garden. Spectator.

5. To muse; to meditate.

You pine, you languish, love to be alone, Think much, speak little, and in speaking sigh. Dryden.

6. To recollect; to observe.

T H I

Any one may think with himself, how then can any thing live in Mercury and Saturn? Bentley's Sermons.

9. To think on. To contrive; to light upon by meditation.

Still the work was not complete, When Venus thought on a deceit. Swift's Miscell.

10. To think of. To estimate.

The opinions of others whom we know and think well of are no ground of assent. Locke.

To THINK. v. a.

1. To imagine; to imagine in the mind; to conceive.

Charity thinketh no evil. 1 Cor. xiii. 5.

Nor think superfluous others aid. Milton.

Think nought a trifle, though it small appear. Young.

2. To think much. To grudge.

He thought not much to elude his enemies. Milt.

If we consider our infinite obligations to God, we have no reason to think much to sacrifice to him our dearest interest in this world. Tillotson.

3. To think scorn. To disdain.

He thought scorn to lay hands on Mordecai alone. Ester, iii.

4. { Me thinketh. It seems to me. { Me thought. It appeared to me.

These are anomalous phrases of long continuance and great authority, but not easily reconciled to grammar. In me thinketh, the verb being of the third person, seems to be referred not to the thing, and is therefore either active, as signifying to cause to think; or has the sense of seems, methinks it seems to me.

Me thought I saw the grave where Laura lay. Sidney.

Me thinketh the running of the foremost is like that of Ahinuaaz. 2 Sam. xviii. 27.

THINKER. n. s. [from think.] One who thinks in a certain manner.

No body is made any thing by hearing of rules, or laying them up in his memory; practice must settle the habit; you may as well hope to make a good musician by a lecture on the art of musick, as a coherent thinker, or strict reasoner, by a set of rules. Locke.

If a man had an ill-favoured nose, deep thinkers would impute the cause to the prejudice of his education. Swift.

THINKING. n. s. [from think.] Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

He put it by once; but, to my thinking, he would fain have had it. Shakesp. Julius Caesar.

If we did think His contemplations were above the earth, And fix'd on spiritual objects, he should still Dwell in his musings; but I am afraid His thinkings are below the moon, nor worth His serious considering. Shakesp. Henry VIII.

I heard a bird so sing, Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shakesp.

I was a man, to my thinking, very likely to get a rich widow. Addison.

THINLY. adv. [from thin.]

Quench their dire thirst; alas! they thirst for blood. Denham.

Thus occurs'd,
In midst of water I complain of thirst. Dryden.

Thirst and hunger denote the state of spittle and liquor of the stomach. Thirst is the sign of an acrimony commonly alkaliescent or muriatick. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

For forty years
I've liv'd an anchorite in pray'rs and tears;
Yon spring which bubbles from the mountain's side,
Has all the luxury of thirst supply'd. Harte.

T H I

2. Eagerness; vehement desire: with of, for, or after.

Not hope of praise, nor thirst of worldly good,
Enticed us to follow this empirize. Fairfax.
Thou hast allay'd the thirst I bad of knowledge. Milton.

Say, is't thy bounty, or thy thirst of praise? Granville.

This is an active and ardent thirst after happiness, or after a full beatifying object. Cheyne.

3. Draught.

The rapid current, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst up drawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton.

2. To have a vehement desire for any thing: with for or after.

My soul thirsteth for the living God. Ps. xlii. 2.
Till a man hungers and thirsts after righteousness, till he feels an uneasiness in the want of it, his will will not be determined to any action in pursuit of this confessed, greater good. Locke.

But furious thirsting thus for gore,
The sons of men shall ne'er approach thy shore. Pope.

To THIRST. v. a. To want to drink. This structure is not usual.

Untan'd and fierce the tyger still remains;
For the kind gifts of water and of food,
He seeks his keeper's flesh, and thirsts his blood. Prior.

THIRSTINESS. n. s. [from thirst.] The state of being thirsty.

Next they will want a sucking and soaking thirstiness, or a fiery appetite to drink in the lime. Wotton.

THIRSTY. adj. [δῖρστῖγ, Sax.]

1. Suffering want of drink; pained for want of drink.

Thy brother's blood the thirsty earth hath drank,
Broach'd with the steely point of Clifford's lance. Shakesp.

Give me a little water to drink, for I am thirsty. Judges, iv.

Unworthy was thy fate,
To fall beneath a base assassin's stab,
Whom all the thirsty instruments of death
Had in the field of battle sought in vain. Rowe.

2. Possessed with any vehement desire; as, blood thirsty.

THIRTEEN. adj. [δρεοζῖνε, Sax.] Ten and three.

He did not desire a thorough engagement till he had time to reform some, whom he resolved never more to trust. Clarendon.
A thorough translator must be a thorough poet.
Dryden.
A thorough practice of subjecting ourselves to the wants of others, would extinguish in us pride.
Swift.
How can I call a general disregard and a thor- ough neglect of all religious improvements a frailty or imperfection, when it was as much in my power to have been exact, and careful, and diligent? Law.
2. Passing through.
Let all three sides be a double house, without thorough lights on the sides. Bacon.

THOROUGHFARE. n. s. [thorough and fare.]

1. A passage through; a passage without any stop or let.
The Hyrcanian deserts are as thoroughfares now
F... p... n... to come view fair Portia. Shakesp.
His body is a passable carcase, if he be not hurt:
it is a thoroughfare for steel, if it be not hurt.
Shakesp.
The ungrateful person is a monster, which is all throat and belly; a kind of thoroughfare, or common shore for the good things of the world to pass into. South.
The courts are fill'd with a tumultuous din
Of crowds, or issuing forth, or entering in:
A thoroughfare of news; where some devise Things never heard; some mingle truth with lies.
Dryden.

2. Power of passing.
Hell, and this world, one realm, one continent
Of easy thoroughfare. Milton's Paradise Lost.

THOROUGHLY. adv. [from thorough.]
Completely; fully.
Look into this business thoroughly. Shakesp.
We can never be grieved for their miseries who are thoroughly wicked, and have thereby justly called their calamities on themselves. Dryd. Dufres.
One would think, that every member of the community who embraces with vehemence the principles of either party, had thoroughly sifted and examined them. Addison.

T H O

They had forgotten their solemn vows as thor- oughly as if they had never made them. Atterbury.
THOROUGHPA'CED. adj. [thorough and pace.] Perfect in what is undertaken; complete; thoroughsped. Generally in a bad sense.

When it was proposed to repeal the test clause, the ablest of those who were reckoned the most staunch and thoroughpaced Whigs fell off at the first mention of it. Swift.

THOROUGHSPED. adj. [thorough and sped.] Finished in principles; thorough-paced: commonly, finished in ill.

Our thoroughsped republic of Whigs, which contains the bulk of all boppers, pretenders, and professors, are most highly useful to princes. Swift.

THOROUGHSTITCH. adv. [thorough and stitch.] Completely; fully. A low word.
Perseverance alone can carry us thoroughstitch.
L'Estrange.

THORP. n. s. Thorp, throp, threp, trep, trop, are all from the Saxon ðorp, which signifies a village. Gibson's Camden.

THOSE. pronoun.

1. The plural of that.
Make all our trumpets speak, give them all
breath,
Those clam'rous harbingers of blood and death.
Shakesp.
Sure there are poets which did never dream
Upon Parnassus, nor did taste the stream
Of Helicon; we therefore may suppose
Those made not poets, but the poets those. Denham.
The fibres of this muscle act as those of others.
Cheyne.
2. Those refers to the former, these to the latter noun.
Neither their sighs nor tears are true,
Those idly blow, these idly fall,
Nothing like to ours at all,
But sighs and tears have sexes too. Cowley.

THOU. pronoun. [ðu, Sax. du, Dut. in the oblique cases singular thee, ðe, Sax.
in the plural ye, ze, Sax. in the oblique cases plural you, eop, Sax.] You is now commonly used for the nominative plural.

1. The second pronoun personal.
Is this a dagger which I see before me,
The handle toward my hand? Come, let me clutch thee.
I have thee not, and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling as to sight? Shakesp. Macbeth.
I am as like to call thee so again,
To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too:
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friend. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice.
Thou, if there be a thou in this base town,
Who dares with angry Eupolis to frown;
Who at enormous villainy turns pale,
And steers against it with a full-blown sail. Dryd.

2. It is used only in very familiar or very solemn language. When we speak to equals or superiours, we say you; but in solemn language, and in addresses of worship, we say thou.

[Familiar.]
[Solemn.]
For thou in dreadful whirls we hung
High on the broken wave,
I know thou wert not slow to hear,
Not impotent to save. Addison.

To THOU. v. a. [from thou.] To treat with familiarity.
Taunt him with the licence of ink; if thou thou'st him some thrice, it shall not be amiss. Shak.

T H O

THOUGH. conjunction. [Sea], Sax. thauh, Goth.]

1. Notwithstanding that; although.
Not that I so affirm, though so it seem. Milton.
The sound of love makes your soft heart afraid,
And guard itself, though but a child invade. Waller.
I can desire to perceive those things that God has prepared for those that love him, though they be such as eye hath not seen, ear heard, nor hath it entered into the heart of man to conceive. Locke.
Though the name of abstracted ideas is attributed to universal ideas, yet this abstraction is not great.
Watts's Logic.
2. As though. As if; like as if.
In the vine were three branches; and it was as though it budded. Genesis, xl. 10.
3. It is used in the end of a sentence in familiar language; however; yet.
You shall not quit Cydaria for me:
'Tis dang'rous though to treat me in this sort,
And to refuse my offers, though in sport. Dryden.
A good cause would do well though;
It gives my sword an edge. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

THOUGHT. the prt. and part. pass. of think.

- I told him what I thought. Shakesp. Othello.
Are my friends embark'd?
Can any thing be thought of for their service?
Whilst I yet live, let me not live in vain. Addison.
No other tax could have been thought of, upon which so much money would have been immediately advanced. Addison.

THOUGHT. n. s. [from the preterite of To think.]

1. The operation of the mind; the act of thinking.
And cards are dealt, and chessboards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.
2. Idea; image formed in the mind.
For our instruction to impart
Things above earthly thought. Milton.
3. Sentiment; fancy; imagery; conceit.
Thought, if translated truly, cannot be lost in another language; but the words that convey it to our apprehension, which are the image and ornament of that thought, may be so ill chosen as to make it appear unhandsome. Dryden.
One may often find as much thought on the reverse of a medal as in a canto of Spenser.

Addison on Medals.
Thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me,
that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject.
Dryden.

The thoughts of a soul that perish in thinking.
Locke.

One only couplet fraught
With some unmeaning thing they call a thought.
Pope.

4. Reflexion; particular consideration.
Why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companions making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died
With them they think on. Shakesp. Macbeth.
5. Conception; preconceived notion.
Things to their thought
So unimaginable as hate in heaven. Milton.
6. Opinion; judgment.
He that is ready to slip, is a lamp despised in the thought of him that is at ease. Job, xii. 5.
They communicated their thoughts on this subject to each other; and therefore their reasons are little different. Dryden.
Thus Bethiel spoke, who always speaks his thought,
And always thinks the very thing he ought. Pope.
7. Meditation; serious consideration.
Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
Proceeds from want of sense, or want of thought.
Roscommon.
8. Design; purpose.
The thoughts I think towards you are thoughts of peace, and not evil. Jeremiah, xxix. 11.
Nor was godhead from her thought. Milton.
9. Silent contemplation.

T H O

Who is so gross
That cannot see this palpable device?
Yet who so bold, but says, he sees it not?
Bad is the world; and all will come to nought,
When such ill dealings must be seen in thought.
Shakesp.

10. Solicitude; care; concern.
Let us return, lest he leave caring for the asses,
and take thought for us. 1 Samuel, ix. 5.
Hawis was put in trouble, and died with thought and anguish before his business came to an end.
Bacon's Henry VII.
Adam took no thought, eating his fill. Milton.
11. Expectation.
The main descriv
Stands on the hourly thought. Shakesp. King Lear.

12. A small degree; a small quantity. It seems a loose term, but is used by good writers.

His face was a thought longer than the exact symmetrians would allow. Sidney.
If our own be but equal, the law of common indulgence alloweth us to think them at the least half a thought the better, because they are our own. Hooker.

A needle pierc'd through a globe of cork, cut away by degrees, will swim under water, yet not sink unto the bottom: if the cork be a thought too light to sink under the surface, the water may be attenuated with spirits of wine. Brown.
My giddiness seized me; and though I now totter, yet I think I am a thought better. Swift.

THOUGHTFUL. adj. [from thought and full.]

1. Contemplative; full of reflection; full of meditation.
On these he mus'd within his thoughtful mind,
And then resolv'd what Faunus had divin'd. Dry.
2. Attentive; careful.
Thoughtful of gain, I all the live-long day
Consume in meditation deep. Phillips.
3. Promoting meditation; favourable to musing.
War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades,
And steel now glitters in the muses' shades. Pope.
4. Anxious; solicitous.
In awful pomp, and melancholy state,
See settled Reason on the judgment-seat;
Around her crowd Distrust, and Doubt and Fear,
And thoughtful Foresight, and tormenting Care.
Prior.

THOUGHTFULLY. adv. [from thought-ful.]
With thought or consideration;
with solicitude.

THOUGHTFULNESS. n. s. [from thought-ful.]

1. Deep meditation.
While the nervous fibres preserve their due tension and firmness, and the spirits are transmitted to them from the brain, endowed with due strength, swiftness, and vivacity, and suffered to attend their duty, without the avocations of thoughtfulness and intense contemplation, the concoction of the meats is well performed. Blackmore.
2. Anxiety; solicitude.

THOUGHTLESS. adj. [from thought.]

1. Airy; gay; dissipated.
2. Negligent; careless.
It is something peculiarly shocking to see gray hairs without remorse for the past, and thoughtless of the future. Rogers.
3. Stupid; dull.
His goodly fabrick fills the eye,
And seems design'd for thoughtless majesty:
Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain,
And spread in solemn state supinely reign. Dryden.

THOUGHTLESSLY. adv. [from thought.]
Without thought; carelessly; stupidly.

In restless buries thoughtlessly they live,
At substance oft unmov'd, for shadows grieve. Gar.

THOUGHTLESSNESS. n. s. [from thought-ful.]
Want of thought; absence of thought.

T H O

THOUGHTSICK. adj. [thought and sick.]
Uneasy with reflection.

Heav'n's face duth glow
With tristful visage; and, as 'gainst the doom
Is thoughtsick at the act. Shakesp. Hamlet.

THOUSAND. adj. or n. s. [Dyrend,
Sax. duysend, Dut.]

1. The number of ten hundred.
About three thousand years ago, navigation of the world for remote voyages was greater than at this day. Bacon.
2. Proverbially, a great number.
So fair, and thousand, thousand times more fair
She seem'd, when she presented was to sight.
Spenser.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was lock'd. Dryden.
Search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree,
Drawn from the root of some old Tuscan tree,
And thou, a thousand off, a fool of long degree.
Dryden.

Though he regulates himself by justice, he finds a thousand occasions for generosity and compassion. Addison's Spectator.
How many thousands pronounce boldly on the affairs of the publick, whom God nor men never qualified for such judgment. Watts.

THOUSANDTH. adj. [from thousand.]

The hundredth ten times told; the ordinal of a thousand; proverbially, very numerous.

He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts, and break but a part of a thousandth part in the affairs of love, it may be said of him, that Cupid hath clapt him o' th' shoulder, but I'll warrant him heart whole. Shakesp. As you like it.
Such is the poet's lot: what luckier fate
Does on the works of grave historians wait?
More time they spend, in greater toils engage,
Their volumes swell beyond the thousandth page.
Dryden.

The French hugonots are many thousand witnesses to the contrary; and I wish they deserved the thousandth part of the good treatment they have received. Swift's Miscellanies.

THOWL. n. s. A piece of timber by which oars are kept in their places when rowing. Ainsworth.

THRALDOM. n. s. [from thrall.] Slavery;
servitude.

How far am I inferior to thee in the state of the mind! and yet know I that all the heavens cannot bring me to such thralldom. Sidney.
He swore with sobs,
That he would labour my delivery.
—Why so he doth, when he delivers you
From this earth's thralldom to the joys of heav'n.
Shakesp.

This country, in a great part desolate, groaneth under the Turkish thralldom. Sandys.
He shall rule, and she in thralldom live. Dryden.
They tell us we are all born slaves; life and thralldom we entered into together, and can never be quit of the one till we part with the other. Locke.

THRALL. n. s. [Dyæl, Sax.]

1. A slave; one who is in the power of another. Not much in use.
No thralls like them that inward bondage have.
Sidney.
But sith she will the conquest challenge need,
Let her accept me as her faithful thrall. Shakesp.
Look gracious on thy prostrate thrall. Shakesp.
The two delinquents
That were the slaves of drink, and thralls of sleep.
Shakesp.

I know I'm one of Nature's little kings;
Yet to the least and vilest things am thrall. Dav.
That we may so suffice his vengeful ire,
Or do him mightier service, as his thralls
By right of war, whate'er his business be. Milton.

2. Bondage; state of slavery or confinement.

T H R

Her men took land,
And first wrought forth Ulysses, bed, and all
That rich y furnish it; he still in thrall
Of all-subduing sleepe. Chapman.

And laid about him, till his nose
From thrall of ring and cord broke loose. Hudibras.
To THRALL. v. a. Spenser. [from the noun.] To enslave; to bring into the power of another. Out of use.

Let me be a slave t' achieve the maid,
Whose sudden sight hath thrall'd my wounded
eye. Shakesp.

Statesmen purge vice with vice, and may corrode
The bad with bad, a spider with a toad.
For so ill thralls not them, but they tame ill,
And make her do much good against her will. Don.
The author of nature is not thrall'd to the laws of nature. Drummond.

THRAPPLE. n. s. The windpipe of any animal. They still retain it in the Scottish dialect; we say rather throttle.

To THRASH. v. a. [Ōnyean, Sax. ders-chen, Dut.]

1. To beat corn to free it from the chaff.
This is written variously thrash or thresh,
but thrash is agreeable to etymology.

First thrash the corn, then after burn the straw.
Shakesp.

Gideon threshed wheat to hide it. Jud. viii. 11.
Here be oxen for burnt sacrifice, and threshing instruments for wood. 2 Samuel, xxiv. 22.

In the sun your golden grain display,
And thrash it out, and winnow it by day. Dryden.
This is to preserve the ends of the bones from an incalcescency, which they being hard bodies would contract from a swift motion; such as that of running or threshing. Ray.

Out of your clover well dried in the sun, after the first threshing, get what seed you can. Mortim.

2. To beat; to drub.
Thou scurvy valiant ass! thou art here but to thresh Trojans, and thou art bought and sold among those of any wit like a Barbarian slave.
Shakesp. Troilus and Cressida.

To THRASH. v. n. To labour; to drudge.
I rather would be Mevius, thresh for rhimes
Like his, the scorn and scandal of the times,
Than that Philippick fatally divine,
Which is inscrib'd the second, should be mine. Dry.

THRASHER. n. s. [from thrash.] One who thrashes corn.

Our soldiers, like a lazy thrasher with a flail,
Fell gently down, as if they struck their friends. Shak.

Not barely the plowman's pains, the reaper's and thrasher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat: the labour of those employed about the utensils must all be charged.
Locke.

THRASHINGFLOOR. n. s. An area on which corn is beaten.

In vain the hinds the threshing-floor prepare,
And exercise their flails in empty air. Dryden.

Delve of convenient depth your threshing-floor
With temper'd clay, then fill and face it o'er. Dry.

THRASONICAL. adj. [from Thraso a boast-er in old comedy.] Boastful; bragging.

His humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thraso-nical. Shakesp.

THRAVE. n. s. [Ōnyaf, Sax.]

1. A herd; a drove. Out of use.
2. The number of two dozen. I know not how derived.

THREAD. n. s. [Ōnyæð, Sax. draed, Dut.]

1. A small line; a small twist; the rudiment of cloth.
Let not Bardolph's vital thread be cut
With edge of penny cord and vile reproach. Shak.
Though the slender thread of dyed silk looked on single seem devoid of redness, yet when numbers of these threads are brought together, their colour becomes notorious Boyle.

T H R

Though need urg'd me never so,
He not receive a thread, but naked go. Chapman.
He who sat at a table with a sword hanging over his head but by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. Smith.

The art of pleasing is the skill of cutting to a thread betwixt flattery and ill-manners. L'Estrange.

2. Anything continued in a course; uniform tenor.

The eagerness and trembling of the fancy doth not always regularly follow the same even thread of discourse, but strikes upon some other thing that hath relation to it. Burnet.

The gout being a disease of the nervous parts, makes it so hard to cure; diseases are so as they are more remote in the thread of the motion of the fluids. Arbuthnot.

To THREAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To pass through with a thread.
The largest crooked needle, with a ligature of the size of that I have threaded it with, in taking up the spermatiek vessels. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To pass through; to pierce through.
Thus out of season threading dark-eyed night.
Shak.

Being prest to th' war,
Ev'n when the nave of the state was touch'd,
They would not thread the gates. Shak. Coriolanus.

THREADBARE. adj. [thread and bare.]

1. Deprived of the nap; wore to the naked threads.
Threadbare coat, and cobbled shoes he ware.
Spenser.

The clothier means to dress the commonwealth, and set a new nap upon it: so he had need; for
'tis threadbare. Shakesp.

Will any freedom here from you be borne,
Whose cloaths are threadbare, and whose cloaks are torn? Dryden's Juvenal.
He walk'd the streets, and wore a threadbare
cloak;

He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk. Swift.
A Thracian slave the porter's place maintain'd,
Sworn foe to threadbare suppliants, and with pride
His master's presence, nay, bis name, deny'd. Harte.

2. Worn out; trite.
A hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A mere anatomy, a mountebank,
A threadbare juggler, and a fortune-teller. Shak.

Many writers of moral discourses run into stale topics and threadbare quotations, not handling their subject fully and closely. Swift.
If he understood trade, he would not have mentioned this threadbare and exploded project.
Child on Trade.

THREADEN. adj. [from thread.] Made of thread.

Behold the threaden sails,
Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the ſorrow'd sea.
Shakesp.

To THREAP. v. a. A country word denoting to argue much or contend. Ainsw.

THREAT. n. s. [from the verb.] Menace;
denunciation of ill.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats. Shak.
The emperor perceiving that his threats were little regarded, regarded little to threaten any more. Hayward.

Do not believe
Those rigid threats of death: ye shall not die. Milt.

To THREAT. } v. a. [Ōnyreatian, Sax.
To THREATEN. } threat is seldom used but in poetry.]

1. To menace; to denounce evil.
Death to be wish'd

Though threaten'd, which no worse than this can bring. Milton.

2. To menace; to terrify, or attempt to terrify, by shewing or denouncing evil.
It has with before the thing threatened,
if a noun; to, if a verb.

T H R

What, threat you me with telling of the king?
Tell him, and spare not. Shakesp. Richard 11.
That it spread no further, straitly threaten them that they speak henceforth to no man in this name.
Acts, iv. 18.

The void profound
Wide gaping, and with utter loss of being Threatens him. Milton.

This day black omens threat the brightest fair
That e'er deserv'd a watchful spirit's care. Pope.

3. To menace by action.
Void of fear,

He threaten'd with his long protended spear. Dry.
The noise increases as the billows roar,
When rowling from afar they threat the shore. Dry.

THREATENER. n. s. [from threaten.]
Menacer; one that threatens.

Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire;
Threaten the threatener, and outface the brow
Of bragging horrour. Shakesp. King John.
The fruit, it gives you life
To knowledge by the threat'nér. Milt. Paradise Lost.

THREATENING. n. s. [from threaten.]
A menace; a denunciation of evil.

Aeneas their assault undaunted did abide,
And thus to Lausus loud with friendly threat'nér
cry'd. Dryden's Virgil.

How impossible would it be for a master, that thus interceded with God for his servants, to use any unkind threat'nings towards them, to damn and curse them as dogs and scoundrels, and treat them only as the dregs of the creation! Law.

THREATENINGLY. adv. [from threaten.]
With menace; in a threatening manner.

The honour that thus flames in your fair eyes,
Before I speak, too threat'ningly replies. Shakesp.

THREATFUL. adj. [threat and full.]
Full of threats; minacious.

Like as a warlike brigandine applide
To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore,
The engines which in them sad death do hide.
Spenser.

THREE. adj. [Ōnyie, Sax. dry, Dut. tri,
Welsh and Erse; tres, Lat.]

1. Two and one.

Prove this a prosperous day, the three-nook'd world

Shall bear the olive freely. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.
If you speak three words, it will three times report you the whole three words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Great Atreus' sons, Tydides fixt above,
With three-ag'd Nestor. Creech's Manlius.

Jove hurls the three-fork'd thunder from above.
Addison.

These three and three with usier bands we ty'd.
Pope.

Down to these worlds I trod the dismal way,
And dragg'd the three-mouth'd dog to upper day.
Pope.

A strait needle, such as glovers use, with a three-edged point, useful in sewing up dead bodies.
Shurp.

2. Proverbially a small number.
Away, thou three-inch'd fool; I am no beast.
Shakesp.

A base, proud, shallow, beggarly, three-suited, filthy, worsted-stocking knave. Shak. King Lear.

THREEFOLD. adj. [Ōnyofoald, Sax.]
Thrice repeated; consisting of three.

A threefold cord is not easily broken.
Eccles. iv. 12.

By a threefold justice the world hath been govern'd from the beginning; by a justice natural, by which the parents and elders of families govern'd their children, in which the obedience was called natural piety; again, by a justice divine, drawn from the laws of God; and the obedience was called conscience; and lastly, by a justice civil, begotten by both the former; and the obedience to this we call duty. Raleigh.

A threefold offering to his altar bring,
A bull a ram, a goat. Pope's Odyssey.

Fair marching forth in honourable wise,
Him at the threshold met she well did enterprize. Spenser.

Many men, that stumble at the threshold,
Are well foretold that danger lurks within. Shak.

Not better
Than still at hell's dark threshold t' have sat watch, Unnam'd, undreaded, and thyself half-starv'd? Milton.

Before the starry threshold of Jove's court
My mansion is, where those immortal shapes
Of bright aerial spirits live inspher'd

In regions mild, of calm and serene air. Milton.
There sought the queen's apartment, stoud before

The peacefold threshold, and besieg'd the door. Dryden.

THREW. preterite of throw.

A broken rock the force of Pyrrhus threw:
Full on his ankle fell the pond'rous stone,
Burst the strong nerves, and crash'd the solid bone. Pope.

THRICE. adv. [from three.]

1. Three times.
Thrice he assay'd it from his foot to draw,
And thrice in vain to draw it did assay,
It booted nought to think, to rob him of his prey. Spenser.

Thrice within this hour
I saw him down; thrice up again and fighting. Shak.
Thrice did he knock his iron teeth; thrice howl,
And into frowns his wrathful forehead rowl. Cowley.

Idly, while Satan, our great author, thrives
In other worlds, and happier seats provides
For us, his offspring dear? Milton's Paradise Lost.

Those who have resolved upon the thriving sort of piety, seldom embark all their hopes in one bottom. Decay of Piety.

A careful shepherd not only turns his flock into a common pasture, but with particular advertence observes the thriving of every one. Decay of Piety.

Growth is of the very nature of some things:
to be and to thrive is all one with them; and they know no middle season between their spring and their fall. South.

Experienc'd age in deep despair was lost,
To see the rebel thrive, the loyal crost. Dryden.
Seldom a thriving man turns his land into money to make the greater advantage. Lacke.

The thriven calves in meads their food forsake,
And render their sweet souls before the plenteous rack. Dryden's Virgil.

A little hope—but I have none.
On air the poor camellions thrive:
Deny'd ev'n that, my love can live. Granville.

Such a care hath always been taken of the city charities, that they have thriven and prospered gradually from their infancy down to this very day. Atterbury's Sermons.

In the fat age of pleasure, wealth, and ease, Spring the rank weed, and thriv'd with large increase. Pope's Essay on Criticism:

Dryden.

He sigh'd, breath'd short, and won'd have spoke,
But was too fierce to throw away the time. Dryden.

The next in place and punishment are they
Who prodigally throw their souls away;
Fools who, repining at their wretched state,
And loathing anxious life, suborn'd their fate.
Dryden.

In poetry the expression beautifies the design:
if it be vicious or unpleasing, the cost of colouring is thrown away upon it. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

The well-meaning man should rather consider what opportunities he has of doing good to his country, than throw away his time in deciding the rights of princes. Addison.

She threw away her mouey upon roaring bullies that went about the streets.
Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

15. To throw away. To reject.

He that will throw away a good book because not gilded, is more curious to please his eye than understanding. Taylor.

16. To throw by. To reject; to lay aside as of no use.

It can but shew
Like one of Juno's disguises; and,
When things succeed, be thrown by, or let fall.
Ben Jonson.

He that begins to have any doubt of his tenets, received without examination, ought, in reference to that question, to throw wholly by all his former notions. Locke.

17. To throw down. To subvert; to overturn.

Must one rash word, th' infirmity of age,
Throw down the merit of my better years?
This the reward of a whole life of service? Addis.

18. To throw off. To expel.

The salts and oils in the animal body, as soon as they putrefy, are thrown off, or produce mortal distempers. Arbuthnot.

19. To throw off. To reject; to discard: as, to throw off an acquaintance.

'I would he better
Could you provoke him to give you th' occasion,
And then to throw him off. Dryden's Span. Fryar.
Can there be any reason why the household of God alone should throw off all that orderly dependence and duty, by which all other houses are best governed? Sprott.

20. To throw out. To exert; to bring forth into act.

She throws out thrilling shrieks, and shrieking cries. Spenser.
The gods in bounty work up storms about us,
That give mankind occasion to exert
Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice Virtues which shun the day. Addison.

21. To throw out. To distance; to leave behind.

When e'er did Juba, or did Portius, show
A virtue that has cast me at a distance,
And thrown me out in the pursuits of honour?
Addison.

22. To throw out. To eject; to expel.

The other two whom they had thrown out, they were content should enjoy their exile. Swift.

23. To throw out. To reject; to exclude.

The oddness of the proposition taught others to reflect a little; and the bill was thrown out. Swift.

24. To throw up. To resign angrily.

Bad games are thrown up too soon,
Until they're never to be won. Hudibras.
Experienced gamblers throw up their cards when they know the game is in the enemy's hand, without unnecessary vexation in playing it out. Addison's Freeholder.

Life we must not part with foolishly: it must not be thrown up in a pet, nor sacrificed to a quarrel. Collier.

25. To throw up. To emit; to eject; to bring up.

Judge of the cause by the substances the patient throws up. Arbuthnot.

26. This is one of the words which is used with great latitude; but in all its uses, whether literal or figurative, it retains from its primitive meaning some notion of haste or violence.

To THROW. v. n.

1. To perform the act of casting.

2. To cast dice.

3. To throw about. To cast about; to try expedients.

Now unto despair I 'gin to grow,
And mean for better wind about to throw. Spenser.

THROW. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A cast; the act of casting or throwing.

The top he tore
From off a huge rock; and so right a throw
Made at our ship, that just before the prow
It overflowed and fell. Chapman.

He heav'd a stone, and, rising to the throw,
He sent it in a whirlwind at the foe:
A tow'r assaulted by so rude a stroke,
With all its lofty battlements had shook. Addison.

2. A cast of dice; the manner in which the dice fall when they are cast.

If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand.
So is Alcides beaten by his page. Shakesp.
If they err finally, it is like a man's missing his cast when he throws dice for his life; his being, his happiness, and all is involved in the error of one throw. South.

Suppose any particular order of the alphabet to be assigned, and the twenty-four letters cast at a venture, so as to fall in a line; it is many million of millions odds to one against any single throw, that the assigned order will not be cast. Bentley's Sermons.

The world, where lucky throws to blockheads fall,
Knaves know the game, and honest men pay all. Young.

3. The space to which any thing is thrown.

Like to a bowl upon a subtle ground,
I've tumbled past the throw; and in his praise
Have, almost, stamp'd the leasing. Shak. Coriol.

The Sireum Scopoli are sharp rocks that stand about a stone's throw from the south side of the island. Addison.

4. Stroke; blow.

So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows
On either side, that neither mail could hold,
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spenser.

5. Effort; violent sally.

Your youth admires
The throws and swellings of a Roman soul;
Cato's bold flights, the extravagance of virtue. Addison.

6. The agony of childbirth; in this sense it is written throe. See THROE.

The most pregnant wit in the world never brings forth any thing great without some pain and travail, pangs and throws, before the delivery. South.
But when the mother's throws begin to come,
The creature, pent within the narrow room,
Breaks his blind prison. Dryden.

Say, my friendship wants him
To help me bring to light a manly birth,
Which to the wond'ring world I shall disclose,
Or, if he fail me, perish in my throws. Dryden.

THROWER. n. s. [from throw.] One that throws.

Fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower out
Of my poor babe. Shakesp. Winter's Tale.

Quail, crush, conclude and quell. Shakesp.
All moss hath here and there little stalks, besides the low thrum. Bacon's Not. Hist.

Would our thrum capp'd ancestors find fault
For want of sugar-tongs, or spoons for salt? King.

To THRUM. v. a. To grate; to play coarsely.

Blunderbusses planted in every loop-hole, go off constantly at the squeaking of a fiddle and the thrumming of a guitar. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

THRUSH. n. s. [þrusc, Sax. turdus, Lat.]

1. A small singing-bird.

Of singing-birds they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds, and thrushes. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.
Pain, and a fine thrush, have been severally endeavouring to call off my attention; but both in vain. Pope.

2. [From thrust: as we say, a push; a breaking out.] By this name are called small, round, superficial ulcerations, which appear first in the mouth; but as they proceed from the obstruction of the emissaries of the saliva, by the lentor and viscosity of the humour, they may affect every part of the alimentary duct, except the thick guts: they are just the same in the inward parts as scabs in the skin, and fall off from the inside of the bowels like a crust: the nearer they approach to a white colour, the less dangerous. Arbuthnot on Diet.

To THRUST. v. a. [trusito, Lat.]

1. To push any thing into matter, or between close bodies.

Thrust in thy sickle, and reap. Rev. xiv. 15.

2. To push; to move with violence; to drive. It is used of persons or things.

THUNDER. n. s. [Dunden, Sunep, Sax. dunder, Swed. donder, Dut. tonnerre, French.]

1. Thunder is a most bright flame rising on a sudden, moving with great violence, and with a very rapid velocity, through the air, according to any determination, upwards from the earth, horizontally, obliquely, downwards in a right line, or in several right lines, as it were in serpentine tracts, joined at various angles, and commonly ending with a loud noise or rattling. Muschenbroek.

2. In popular and poetick language, thunder is commonly the noise, and lighting the flash; though thunder is sometimes taken for both.

I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove. Shakesp.
The revenging gods
'Gainst parricides all the thunder bend. Shakesp.

The thunder,
Wring'd with red lightning and impetuous rage,
Perhaps hath spent his shafts, and ceases now
To bellow thro' the vast and boundless deep. Milt.

3. Any loud noise or tumultuous violence.
So fierce he laid about him, and dealt blows,
On either side, that neither mail could hold
Ne shield defend the thunder of his throws. Spens.

Here will we face this storm of insolence,
Nor fear the noisy thunder; let it roll,
Then burst, and spend at once its idle rage. Rowe.

To THUNDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To make thunder.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for's power to thunder. Shak. Coriolanus.

2. To make a loud or terrible noise.

So soon as some few notable examples had thunder'd a duty into the subjects hearts, he soon shewed no baseness of suspicion. Sidney.
His dreadful name late through all Spain did thunder,
And Hercules' two pillars standing near Did make to quake and fear. Spenser.

His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton.
Like a black sheet the whelming billow spread,
Burst o'er the float, and thunder'd on his head. Pope.

To THUNDER. v. a.

1. To emit with noise and terrour.

Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our general ear,
That by his daughter's blood we must appease
Diana's kindled wrath. Dryden.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.

THUNDERBOLT. n. s. [thunder and bolt, as it signifies an arrow.]

1. Lightning; the arrows of heaven.

If I had a thunderbolt in mine eye, I can tell who should down. Shakesp.
Let the lightning of this thunderbolt, which hath been so severe a punishment to one, be a terrour to all. King Charles.

My heart does beat,
As if 'twere forging thunderbolts for Jove. Den.
Who can omit the Graechi, who declare
The Scipios' worth, those thunderbolts of war? Dryd.

The most remarkable piece in Antonine's pillar is Jupiter Pluvius sending down rain on the fainting army of Marcus Aurelius, and thunderbolts on his enemies; which is the greatest confirmation of the story of the Christian legion. Addison.

2. Fulmination; denunciation; properly ecclesiastical.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill on Providence.

THUNDERCLAP. n. s. [thunder and clap.]

Explosion of thunder.
The kindly bird that bears Jove's thunderclap,
One day did scorn the simple scarebee,
Proud of his highest service, and good hap,
That made all other fowls his thralls to be. Spens.
When some dreadful thunderclap is nigh,
The winged fire shoots swiftly through the sky;
Strikes and consumes ere scarce it does appear,
And, by the sudden ill, prevents the fear. Dryden.

T H U

When suddenly the thunderclap was heard,
It took us unprepar'd, and out of guard. Dryden.
THUNDERER. n. s. [from thunder.] The power that thunders.

How dare you, ghosts,
Accuse the thunderer, whose bolt you know,
Sky-planted, batters all rebelling coasts? Shakesp.
Had the old Greeks discover'd your abode,
Crete had n't been the cradle of their god;
On that small island they had look'd with scorn,
And in Great Britain thought the thunderer Lorn. Waller.

When the bold Tytheos
Forc'd great Jove from his own heav'n to fly,
The lesser gods, that shar'd his prosp'rous state,
All suffer'd in the exil'd thunderer's fate. Dryden.

THUNDEROUS. adj. [from thunder.]

Producing thunder.

Look in and see each blissful deity,
How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. Milt.

THUNDERSHOWER. n. s. [thunder and shower.]

A rain accompanied with thunder.

The conceit is long in delivering, and at last it comes like a thundershower, full of sulphur and darkness, with a terrible crack. Stillingfleet.

In thundershowers the winds and clouds are oftentimes contrary to one another, especially if hail falls, the sultry weather below directing the wind one way, and the cold above the clouds another. Derham's Physico-Theology.

THUNDERSTONE. n. s. [thunder and stone.]

A stone fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder; thunderbolt.

Fear no more the lightning flash,
Nor th' all-dreaded thunderstone. Shak. Cymbeline.

To THUNDERSTRIKE. v. a. [thunder and strike.]

1. To blast or hurt with lightning.

I remained as a man thunderstricken, not daring,
nay not able, to behold that power. Sidney.
The overthrow he rais'd, and as a herd
Of goats, or tim'rous flock, together throng'd, Drove them before him thunderstruck. Milton.

With the voice divine
Nigh thunderstruck, th' exalted man, to whom
Such high attest was giv'n, a while survey'd
With wonder. Milt. Par. Regained.

'Tis said that thunderstruck Enceladus Lies stretch'd supine. Addison.

2. To astonish with any thing terrible.

Fears ere our hearts tooke
The very life; to be so thunderstrooke
With such a voice. Chapman.

If thou hast the heart to try 't, I'll lend thee back thyself awhile, And once more for that carcase vile Fight upon tick. Hudibras.

T I C

When the money is got into hands that have brought all that they have need of, whoever needs any thing else must go on tick, or barter for it. Locke.

You would see him in the kitchen weighing the beef and butter, paying ready money, that the maids might not run a tick at the market. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.
