Rel, health, and ease, for nothing but a name. Garth.

Presbyterian merit, during the reign of that weak, bigotted, and ill-advised prince, will easily be computed. Swift.

Bi'GOTRY, n. f. [from bigot.]

1. Blind zeal; prejudice; unreasonable warmth in favour of party or opinions: with the particle to.

Were it not for a bigotry to our own tenets, we could hardly imagine, that so many absurd, wicked, and bloody principles, should pretend to support themselves by the gospel. Watts.

2. The practice or tenet of a bigot.

Our silence makes our adversaries think we persist in those bigotries, which all good and sensible men despise. Pope.

Bi'GSWOLN, adj. [from big and swoln.] Turgid; ready to burst.

Might my bigswoln heart
Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow. Addison.

BiG-UDDERED, adj. [from big and udder.] Having large udders; having dugs swelled with milk.

Now, driv'n before him through the arching rock,
Came tumbling heaps on heaps th' unnumber'd flock,
Big-udder'd ewes, and goats of female kind. Pope.

Bi'LANDER, n. f. [belandre, Fr.] A small vessel of about eighty tons burden, used for the carriage of goods. It is a kind of hoy, manageable by four or five men, and has masts and sails after the manner of a hoy. They are used chiefly in Holland, as being particularly fit for the canals. Savary, Trevoux.

Like bianders to creep
Along the coast, and land in view to keep. Dryd.

Bi'LBERRY, n. f. [from bilig, Sax. a bladder, and berry, according to Skinner; vitis idæa.] A small shrub; and a sweet berry of that shrub; whortleberry.

Cricket, to Windfor's chimneys shalt thou leap;
There pinch the maids as blue as bilberries. Shakespeare.

Bi'LBO, n. f. [corrupted from Bilboa, where the best weapons are made.] A rapier; a sword.

To be compassed like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, hilt to point, heel to head. Shakespeare.

Bi'LBOES, n. f. A fort of stocks, or wooden shackles for the feet, used for punishing offenders at sea.

Methought I lay
Worse than the mutinies in the bilboes. Shaksp.

BILE, n. f. [bilis, Lat.] A thick, yellow, bitter liquor, separated in the liver, collected in the gall-bladder, and discharged into the lower end of the duodenum, or beginning of the jejunum, by the common duct. Its use is to sheathe or blunt the acids of the chyle, because they, being entangled with its sulphurs, thicken it so, that it cannot be sufficiently diluted by the viscous pancreaticus, to enter the lacteal vessels. Quincy.

In its progression, soon the labour'd chyle
Receives the confluent rills of bitter bile;
Which, by the liver fever'd from the blood,
And striving through the gall-pipe, here unload
Their yellow streams. Blackmore.

BILE, n. f. [bile, Sax. perhaps from bilis, Lat. This is generally spelt boil; but, I think, less properly.] A sore angry swelling.

But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daughter;

Or rather a disease that 's in my flesh;
Thou art a bile in my corrupted blood. Shaksp.

Those biles did run—lay so—did not the general run? were not that a botchy sore? Shaksp.

A funeulus is a painful tubercle, with a broad basis, arising in a cone. It is generally called a bile, and is accompanied with inflammation, pulsation, and tension. Wissman.

BILGE, n. f. The compass or breadth of a ship's bottom. Skinner.

To BILGE, v. n. [from the noun.] To spring a leak; to let in water, by striking upon a rock: a sea term; now bulge. Skinner.

Bi'LIARY, adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Belonging to the bile.

Voracious animals, and such as do not chew, have a great quantity of gall; and some of them have the bilinary duct inserted into the pylorus. Abuthnot.

Bi'LINGSGATE, n. f. [A cant word, borrowed from Bilingsgate in London, a place where there is always a crowd of low people, and frequent brawls and foul language.] Ribaldry; foul language.

There stript, fair rhetoric languish'd on the ground,
And shameful Bilingsgate her robes adorn. Pope.

Bi'LINGUOUS, adj. [bilinguis, Lat.] Having, or speaking, two tongues.

Bi'LIOUS, adj. [from bilis, Lat.] Consisting of bile; partaking of bile.

Why bilious juice a golden light puts on,
And floods of chyle in silver currents run. Garth.
When the taste of the mouth is bitter, it is a sign of a redundancy of a bilious alkali. Arbuth.

To BILK, v. a. [derived by Mr. Lye from the Gothick biluican.] To cheat; to defraud, by running in debt and avoiding payment.

Bilk'd stationers for yeomen flood prepar'd. Dryden.

What comedy, what farce can more delight,
Than grinning hunger, and the pleasing fight
Of your bilk'd hopes? Dryden.

BILL, n. f. [bile, Sax. See BALL.] The beak of a fowl.

Their bills were thwarted crossways at the end, and with these they would cut an apple in two at one snap. Carew.

It may be tried, whether birds may not be made to have greater or longer bills, or greater or longer talons. Bacon.

In his bill
An olive leaf he brings, pacifick sign! Milton.
No crowing cock does there his wings display,
Nor with his horny bill provoke the day. Dryden.

BILL, n. f. [bille, Sax. tribille, a two edged axe.]

1. A kind of hatchet with a hooked point, used in country work, as a hedging bill;

so called from its resemblance in form to the beak of a bird of prey.

Standing troops are servants armed, who use the lance and sword, as other servants do the sickle or the bill, at the command of those who entertain them. Temple.

2. A kind of weapon anciently carried by the foot; a battle-axe.

Ye dittaff women manage rusty bills;
Against thy feat both young and old rebel. Shaksp.

BILL, n. f. [billet, Fr.]

1. A written paper of any kind.

He does receive Particular addition from the bill
That writes them all alike. Shaksp.

2. An account of money.

Ordinary expence ought to be limited by a man's estate, and ordered to the best, that the bills may be less than the estimation abroad. Bacon.

3. A law presented to the parliament, not yet made an act.

No new laws can be made, nor old laws abrogated or altered, but by parliament; where bills are prepared, and presented to the two houses. Bacon.

How now for mitigation of this bill,
Urg'd by the commons? doth his majesty
Incline to it or no? Shaksp.

4. An act of parliament.

There will be no way left for me to tell you that I remember you, and that I love you, but that one, which needs no open warrant, or secret conveyance; which no bills can preclude, nor no kings prevent. Atterbury.

5. A physician's prescription.

Like him that took the doctor's bill,
And swallow'd it instead o' th' pill. Hudibras.
The medicine was prepared according to the bill. L'Estrange.

Let them, but under your superiours, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill. Dryden.

6. An advertisement.

And in despair, their empty pit to fill,
Set up some foreign monster in a bill. Dryden.

7. In law.

1. An obligation, but without condition, or forfeiture for non-payment. 2. A declaration in writing, that expresseth either the grief and the wrong that the complainant hath suffered by the party complained of; or else some fault that the party complained of hath committed against some law. This bill is sometimes offer justices errants in the general assizes; but more to the lord chancellor. It containeth the fact complained of, the damages thereby suffered, and petition of process against the defendant for redress. Cowell.

The fourth thing very maturely to be consulted by the jury, is, what influence their finding the bill may have upon the kingdom. Swift.

8. A bill of mortality. An account of the numbers that have died in any district.

Most who took in the weekly bills of mortality, made little other use of them, than to look at the foot, how the burials encreased or decreased. Grant.

So liv'd our fires, ere doctors learn'd to kill,
And multiply'd with theirs the weekly bill. Dryd.

9. A bill of fare. An account of the season of provisions, or of the dishes at a feast.

It may seem somewhat difficult to make out the bills of fare for some of the mentioned suppers. Abutimet.

10. A bill of exchange. A note ordering the payment of a sum of money in one place, to some person assigned by the drawer or remitter, in consideration of the value paid to him in another place.

The comfortable sentences are bill, of exchange, upon the credit of which we lay our cares down, and receive provisions. Taylor.

All that a bill of exchange can do, is to direct to whom money is due, or taken up upon credit, in a foreign country, shall be paid. Locke.

To BILL. v. n. [from bill, a beak.] To carefs, as doves by joining bills; to be fond.

Doves, they say, will bill, after their pecking, and their murmuring. Ben Jonson.

Still amorous, and fond, and billing, Like Philip and May on a shilling. Hudibras.

They bil, they tread; Aleyone compris'd Seven days fits brooding on her floating nest. Dryden.

He that bears th' artillery of Jove, The strong pounc'd eagle, and the billing dove. Dryden.

To BILL. v. a. [from bill, a writing.] To publish by an advertisement: a cant word.

His masterpiece was a composition that he billed about under the name of a sovereign antidote. L'Esrange.

BILLET. n. f. [billet, French.]

1. A small paper; a note.

When he found this little billet, in which was only written Remember Cæsar, he was exceedingly confounded. Clarendon.

2. A ticket directing soldiers at what house to lodge.

3. Billet-doux, or a soft billet; a love letter. 'Twas then, Belinda! if report say true, Thy eyes first open'd on a billet-doux. Pope.

4. [bilot, Fr.] A small log of wood for the chimney.

Let us then calculate, when the bulk of a fagot or billet is dilated and raised to the degree of fire, how vast a place it must take up. Digby on Boats.

Their billet at the fire was found. Prior.

To BILLET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To direct a soldier by a ticket, or note, where he is to lodge.

Retire thee; go where thou art billed: Away, I say. Shakespeare.

2. To quarter soldiers.

They remembered him of charging the kingdom, by billeting soldiers. Raleigh.

The counties throughout the kingdom were so incensed, and their affections poisoned, that they refused to suffer the soldiers to be billeted upon them. Clarendon.

BILLIARDS. n. f. without a singular. [billard, Fr. of which that language has no etymology; and therefore they probably derived from England both the play and the name, which is corrupted from ball-yards, yards or sticks with which a ball is driven along a table. Thus Spenser:

Ball-yards much usfit,
And shuttlecocks misseeming manly wit. Hubberd's Tale]

A game at which a ball is forced against another on a table.

Let it alone; let's to billiards. Shakespeare.

Even nose and cheek withal,
Smooth as is the billiard ball. Ben Jonson

Some are forced to bound or fly upwards, almost like ivory balls meeting on a billiard table. Boyle.

When the ball obeys the stroke of a billiard stick, it is not any action of the ball, but bare passion. Locke.

BILLOW. n. f. [bilge, Germ. bolg Dan. probably of the same original with blizg, Sax. a bladder.] A wave swollen, and hollow.

From whence the river Dee, as silver clean,
His tumbling billows rolls with gentle rore. Seyfer.

Billows sink by degrees, even when the wind is down that first stirred them. Wotton.

Chasing Nereus with his trident throws
The billows from the bottom. Dehnam.

To BILLOW. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell, or roll, as a wave.

The billowing snow, and violence of the show'r,
That from the hills disperse their dreadful store,
And o'er the vales collected ruin pour. Prior.

BILLOWY. adj. [from billow.] Swelling; turgid; wavy.

And whitening down the mossy-tinctur'd stream,
Descends the billowy foam. Thomson.

BIN. n. f. [banne, Sax.] A place where bread, or corn, or wine, is repositid.

The most convenient way of picking hops, is into a long square frame of wood, called a bin. Moistimer.

As when, from rooting in a bin,
All powder'd o'er from tail to chin,
A lively maggot fallies out,
You know him by his hazel snout. Swift.

BINARY. adj. [from binus, Lat.] Two; dual; double.

BINARY Arithmetick. A method of computation proposed by Mr. Leibnitz, in which, in lieu of the ten figures in the common arithmetick, and the progression from ten to ten, he has only two figures, and uses the simple progression from two to two. This method appears to be the same with that used by the Chinese four thousand years ago. Chambers.

To BIND. v. a. pret. bound; part. pass. bound, or bounden. [bindan, Sax.]

1. To confine with bonds; to enchain.

Swear by the solemn oath that binds the gods. Pope.

7. To oblige by duty or law; to compel; to constrain.

Though I am bound to every act of duty,
I am not bound to that all slaves are free to. Shakespeare.

Duties expressly required in the plain language of Scripture, ought to bind our consciences more than those that are but dubiously inferred. Watts.

8. To oblige by kindness.

9. To confine; to hinder; with in, if the refrain be local; with up, if it relate to thought or act.

Now I'm cabin'd, cribb'd, confin'd, bound in
To faucy doubts and fears. Shakespeare.

You will sooner, by imagination, bind a bird from singing, than from eating or flying. Bacon.

Though passion be the most obvious and general, yet it is not the only cause that binds up the understanding, and confines it, for the time, to one object, from which it will not be taken off. Locke.

In such a dismal place,
Where joy ne'er enters, which the sun ne'er cheers,
Bound in with darkness, overspread with damps. Dryden.

10. To hinder the flux of the bowels; to make costive.

Rhubarb hath manifestly in it parts of contrary operations; parts that purge, and parts that bind the body. Bacon.

The whey of milk doth loose, the milk doth bind. Herbert.

11. To restrain.

The more we are bound up to an exact narration, we want more life, and fire, to animate and inform the story. Folton.

12. To bind a book. To put it in a cover.

Was ever book, containing such vile matter,
So fairly bound? Shakespeare.

Those who could never read the grammar
When my dear volumes touch the hammer,
May think books best, as richest bound. Prior.

13. To bind to. To oblige to serve some one.

If still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden.

14. To bind to. To contract with any body.

Art thou bound to a wife, seek not to be loosed. 1 Corinthians.

BIRD'LIME. n. f. [from bird and lime.] A glutinous substance, which is spread upon twigs, by which the birds that light upon them are entangled.

Birdlime is made of the bark of holly: they pound it into a tough paste, that no fibres of the wood be left; then it is washed in a running stream, till no motes appear, and put up to ferment, and scummed, and then laid up for use; at which time they incorporate with it a third part of nut oil, over the fire. But the bark of our lantane, or wayfaring shrub, will make very good birdlime. Chambers.

Holly is of so viscous a juice, as they make birdlime of the bark of it. Bacon's Nat. History.

With stores of gather'd glue contrive
To stop the vents and crannies of their hive;
Not birdlime, or Idean pitch, produce
A more tenacious mass of clammy juice. Dryd.

I'm ensnar'd;
Heav'n's birdlime wraps me round, and glues my wings. Dryden.

The woodpecker, and other birds of this kind, because they prey upon flies which they catch with their tongue, have a couple of bags filled with a viscous humour, as if it were a natural birdlime, or liquid glue. Greco.

BIRD'MAN. n. f. [from bird and man.] A birdcatcher; a fowler.

BIRTH. n. f. [beorð, Sax.]

1. The act of coming into life.
But thou art fair, and at thy birth, dear boy,
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great. Shakspeare's King John.

In Spain, our springs like old men's children be,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy;
No kindly showers fall on our barren earth,
To hatch the seasons in a timely birth. Dryden.

2. Extraction; lineage.
Molt virtuous virgin, born of heavenly birth. Spenser.

All truth I shall relate: nor first can I Myself to be of Grecian birth deny. Denham.

3. Rank which is inherited by descent.
He doth object, I am too great of birth. Shak.
Be just in all you say, and all you do;
Whatever be your birth, you're sure to be A peer of the first magnitude to me. Dryden.

4. The condition or circumstances in which any man is born.

High in his chariot then Halesus came,
A foe by birth to Troy's unhappy name. Dryden.

5. Thing born; production: used of vegetables, as well as animals.

The people fear me; for they do observe Unfather'd heirs, and loathly births of nature. Shakspeare.

That poets are far rather births than kings,
Your noblest father prov'd. Ben Jonson.

Who of themselves
Abhor to join; and, by imprudence mix'd, Produce prodigious births of body or mind. Milt.

She, for this many thousand years,
Seems to have practis'd with much care
To frame the race of woman fair;
Yet never could a perfect birth
Produce before, to grace the earth. Waller.

His eldest birth
Flies, mark'd by heav'n, a fugitive o'er earth. Prior.

The vallies smile, and with their flow'ry face,
And wealthy births, confess the flood's embrace. Buckmore.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth, till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

6. The act of bringing forth.
That fair Syrian shepherdess
Who, after years of barrenness,
The highly favour'd Joseph bore
To him that serv'd for her before;
And at her next birth, much like thee,
Through pangs fled to felicity. Milton.

7. The seamen call a duc or proper distance between ships lying at an anchor, or under sail, a birth. Also the proper place on board for the masts to put their chests, &c. is called the birth of that masts. Also a convenient place to moor a ship in, is called a birth. Harris.

BIRTHDAY. n. f. [from birth and day.]
 1. The day on which any one is born.
 Orient light,
 Exhaling first from darkness, they beheld Birth-day of heaven and earth. Milton.
 2. The day of the year in which any one was born, annually observed.
 This is my birth-day; as this very day
 Was Caesar's born. Shakspeare.
 They tell me 'tis my birth-day, and I'll keep it
 With double pomp of fadnets:
 'Tis woe the day deserves, which gave me breath. Dryden.
 Your country dames,
 Whose cloaths returning birth-day claims. Prior.
BIRTHDOM. n. f. [This is erroneously, I think, printed in Shakspeare, birthdom.
 It is derived from birth and dom (see DOM) as kingdom, dukedom.] Privilege of birth.
 Let us rather
 Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men, Beside our downy birthdom. Shakspeare.
BIRTHNIGHT. n. f. [from birth and night.]

 Th' angelick song in Bethlehem field,
 On thy birth-night, that song the Saviour born.
Paradise Regained.
 2. The night annually kept in memory of any one's birth.
 A youth more glitt'ring than a birth-night beau.
Pope.
BIRTHPLACE. n. f. [from birth and place.]
 Place where any one is born.
 My birthplace hate I, and my love's upon
 This enemy's town. Shakspeare.
 A degree of stupidity beyond even what we have been charged with, upon the score of our birthplace and climate. Swift.
BIRTHRIGHT. n. f. [from birth and right.] The rights and privileges to which a man is born; the right of the first-born.
 Thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodnefs Shares with thy birthright. Shakspeare.
 Thou hast been found
 By merit, more than birthright, Son of God.
Milton.
 I lov'd her first, I cannot quit the claim,
 But will preserve the birthright of my passion.
Otway.
 While no baseness in this breast I find,
 I have not lost the birthright of my mind. Dryd.
 To say that liberty and property are the birth- right of the English nation, but that, if a prince invades them by illegal methods, we must upon no pretence resist, is to confound governments.
Addison.
BIRTHSTRANGLER. adj. [from birth and strangle.] Strangled or suffocated in being born.
 Finger of birthstrangled babe,
 Ditch-deliver'd by a drab. Shakspeare.

cuit, baked, Fr.]
 1. A kind of hard dry bread, made to be carried to sea: it is baked for long voyages four times.
 The biscuit also in the ships, especially in the Spanish gallees, was grown heavy and unwholesome. Kneller's History.
 Many have been cured of dropsies by absten-nence from drinks, eating dry biscuit, which creates no thirst, and strong frictions four or five times a-day. Abuthnot on Diet.

 2. A composition of fine flower, almonds, and sugar, made by the confectioners.
TO BISULCER. v. a. [from binus and seco, to cut, Lat.] To divide into two parts.
 The rational horizon bisulceth the globe into two equal parts. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
BISECTION. n. f. [from the verb.] A geometrical term, signifying the division of any quantity into two equal parts.
BISHOP. n. f. [From episcopus, Lat. the Saxons formed biscop, which was afterward softened into bishop.] One of the head order of the clergy.
 A bishop is an overseer, or superintendent, of religious matters in the christian church. Ayliffe.
 You shall find him well accompany'd
 With reverend fathers, and well learned bishops.
Shakspeare.
 Their zealous superstition thinks, or pretends, they cannot do God a greater service, than to destroy the primitive, apostolical, and anciently universal government of the church by bishops.
K. Charles.
 In case a bishop should commit treason and felony, and forfeit his estate, with his life, the lands of his bishoprick remain still in the church.
South.
 On the word bishop, in French evêque, I would observe, that there is no natural connexion between the sacred office and the letters or sound;
 for evêque, and bishop, signify the same office,
 though there is not one letter alike in them.
Watts's Logic.
BISHOP. n. f. A cant word for a mixture of wine, oranges, and sugar.
 Fine oranges,
 Well roasted, with sugar and wine in a cup, They'll make a sweet bishop, when gentlefolks
 sop. Swift.
TO BISHOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To confirm; to admit solemnly into the church.
 They are prophane, imperfect, oh! too bad,
 Except confirm'd and bishoped by thee. Donne.
BISHOPRICK. n. f. [by copprice, Saxon.]
 The diocese of a bishop; the district over which the jurisdiction of a bishop extends.
 It will be fit, that, by the king's supreme power in causes ecclesiastical, they be subordinate under some bishop, and bishopricks, of this realm. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.
 A virtuous woman should reject marriage, as a good man does a bishoprick; but I would advise neither to persist in refusing. Speator.
 Those pastors had episcopal ordination, possessed preferments in the church, and were sometimes promoted to bishopricks themselves. Swift.
BISHOPSWED. n. f. [ammi, Lat.] A plant.
BISQUE. n. f. [bisque, Fr.] Soup; broth made by boiling several sorts of flesh.
 A prince, who in a forest rides astray,
 And, weary, to some cottage finds the way,
 Talks of no pyramids, or towers, or bisqs of fish,
 But hungry sups his cream serv'd up in earthen dish. King.
BISKET. See BISCUIT.
BISMUTH. n. f. The same as marcesite;
 a hard, white, brittle, mineral substance, of a metalline nature, found at Misnia; supposed to be a ricementen-tious matter thrown off in the formation of tin. Some esteem it a metal sui ge- neris; though it usually contains some silver. There is an artificial bismuth made, for the shops, of tin. Quincy.

BISSEXTILE. n. f. [from bis and sextilis, Lat.] Leap-year; the year in which the day, arising from six odd hours in each year, is intercalated.
 The year of the sun consisteth of three hundred and sixty-five days and six hours, wanting eleven minutes; which six hours omitted, will,
 in time, deprave the compute: and this was the occasion of bissextile, or leap year. Brown.
 Towards the latter end of February is the bissextile or intercalary day; called bissextile, because the sixth of the calends of March is twice repeated. Holder on Time.
BISSON. adj. [derived by Skinner from by and sin.] Blind.
 But who, oh! who hath seen the mobled queen Run barefoot up and down, threatening the flames
 With bisson rheum? Shakspeare's Hamlet.
 What harm can your bisson conspectivities glean out of this character? Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
BISTRE. n. f. [French.] A colour made of chimney foot boiled, and then diluted with water; used by painters in

 called also snakeweed; which see.
BISTOURY. n. f. [bistouri, Fr.] A surgeon's instrument, used in making in-cisions, of which there are three sorts;
 the blade of the first turns like that of a lancet; but the straight bistoury has the blade fixed in the handle; the crooked bistoury is shaped like a half moon, having the edge on the inside.
Chambers.
BISULCOUS. adj. [bifulcus, Lat.] Clo-venfooted.
 For the swine, although multiparous, yet being bifulcus, and only elevenfooted, are farrowed with open eyes, as other bifulcus animals.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.
BIT. n. f. [bitol, Saxon.] Signifies the whole machine of all the iron appurtenances of a bridle, as the bit-mouth, the branches, the curb, the fivel holes, the trancheil, and the cross chains; but sometimes it is used to signify only the bit-mouth in particular. Farrier's Dict.
 They light from their horses, pulling off their bit, that they might something refresh their mouths upon the grass. Sidney.
 We have strict statutes, and most biting laws,
 The needful bites and curbs of headstrong steeds.
Shakspeare.
 He hath the bit between his teeth, and away
 he runs. Still.
 Unus'd to the restraint
 Of curbs and bites, and fleetier than the winds.
Addison.
BIT. n. f. [from bite.]
 1. As much meat as is put into the mouth at once.
 How many prodigal bites have slaves and peasants
 This night englutied! Shakspeare.
 Follow your function, go and batten on cold bit. Shakspeare.
 The mice found it troublesome to be still climbing the oak for every bit they put in their bellies.
L'Estrange.
 John was the darling; he had all the good bites, was crammed with good pullet, chicken, and capon. Abuthnot.
 2. A small piece of any thing.
 By this the boiling kettle had prepar'd
 And to the table sent the smooching lord;
 A fav'ry bit, that serv'd to relish wine. Dryden.

Then clap four slices of pilaster on't,
That, lac'd with bits of rustick, makes a front.

He bought at thousands, what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit.
His majesty has power to grant a patent, for stamping round bits of copper, to every subject he hath.

3. A Spanish West Indian silver coin, valued at sevenpence halfpenny.

4. A bit the better or worse. In the finallest degree.

There are few that know all the tricks of these lawyers; for aught I can see, your case is not a bit clearer than it was seven years ago.

To BIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To put the bridle upon a horse.

BITCH. n. f. [bitze, Saxon.]

1. The female of the canine kind; as the wolf, the dog, the fox, the otter.

And at his feet a bitch wolf sack did yield
To two young babes.

I have been credibly informed, that a bitch will nurse, play with, and be fond of young foxes, as much as, and in place of, her puppies.

2. A name of reproach for a woman.

Them you'll call a dog, and her a bitch.
John had not run a madding so long, had it not been for an extravagant bitch of a wife.

To BITE. v. a. pret. I bit; part. pass.
I have bit, or bitten. [bitan, Saxon.]

1. To crush, or pierce with the teeth.

My very enemy's dog,
Though he had bit me, should have stood that night Against my fire.

Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain,
Too intricate t' unloose.

These are the youths that thunder at a playhouse, and fight for bitten apples.
He falls; his arms upon the body found,
And with his bloody teeth he bites the ground.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone, who is now indeed recovered.

Their foul mouths have not opened their lips without a salivity; though they have showed their teeth as if they would bite off my nose.

2. To give pain by cold.

Here feel we the icy pang,
And churlish chiding, of the winter's wind;
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile.

Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast,
And the feverer heats of parching summer.

3. To hurt or pain with reproach.

Each poet with a different talent writes;
One praises, one instructs, another bites.

4. To cut; to wound.

I have seen the day, with my good biting faulchion
I would have made them skip.

5. To make the mouth smart with an acid taste.

It may be the first water will have more of the scent, as more fragrant; and the second more of the taste, as more bitter, or biting.

6. To cheat; to trick; to defraud; a low phrase.

A sleep and naked as an Indian lay,
An honest factor stole a gem away;
He pledg'd it to the knight; the knight had wit,
So kept the diamond, and the rogue was bit.

If you had allowed half the fine gentlemen to have conversed with you, they would have been strangely bit, while they thought only to fall in love with a fair lady.

BITE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The seizure of any thing by the teeth.

Does he think he can endure the everlasting burnings, or arm himself against the bites of the never-dying worm?

Nor dog-days parching heat, that splits the rocks,
Is half so harmful as the greedy flocks;

Their venom'd bites, and fears indented on the stocks.

2. The act of a fish that takes the bait.

I have known a very good fisher angle diligently four or six hours for a river carp, and not have a bite.

3. A cheat; a trick; a fraud; in low and vulgar language.

Let a man be ne'er so wise,
He may be caught with sobber lies;
For, take it in its proper light,
'Tis just what coxcombs call a bite.

4. A sharper; one who commits frauds.

1. He that bites.
Great barkers are no biters.

2. A fish apt to take the bait.
He is so bold, that he will invade one of his own kind; and you may therefore easily believe him to be a bold biter.

3. A tricker; a deceiver.
A biter is one who tells you a thing you have no reason to disbelieve in itself, and perhaps has given you, before he bit you, no reason to disbelieve it for his saying it; and, if you give him credit, laughs in your face, and triumphs that he has deceived you. He is one who thinks you a fool, because you do not think him a knave.

BITTACLE. n. f. A frame of timber in the steerage of a ship, where the com-pafs is placed.

BITTEN. The part. pass. of To bite.

BITTER. adj. [bitzen, Saxon.]

1. Having a hot, acrid, biting taste, like wormwood.

Bitter things are apt rather to kill than engender putrefaction.
Though a man in a fever should, from sugar,
have a bitter taste, which, at another time, produces a sweet one; yet the idea of bitter, in that man's mind, would be as distinct from the idea of sweet, as if he had tasted only gall.

2. Sharp; cruel; severe.

Friends now fast sworn,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissolution of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity.

Husbands, love your wives, and be not bitter against them.
The word of God, instead of a bitter, teaches us a charitable zeal.

3. Calamitous; miserable.
Noble friends and fellows, whom to leave
Is only bitter to me, only dying;
Go with me, like good angels, to my end.

A dire induction am I witness to;
And will to France, hoping the consequence
Will prove as bitter, black, and tragical.

And thun the bitter consequence: for know,
The day thou eat'st thereof, my sole command
Transgress, inevitably thou shalt die.

Tell him, that if I bear my bitter fate,
'Tis to behold his vengeance for my son.

4. Painful; inclement.
The fowl the borders fly,
And thun the bitter blast, and wheel about the sky.

5. Sharp; reproachful; satirical.
Go with me,
And, in the breath of bitter words, let's smother
My damned son.

6. Mournful; afflicted.
Wherefore is light given unto him that is in misery, and life unto the bitter in soul.

7. In any manner unpleasing or hurtful.

Bitter is an equivocal word; there is bitter wormwood, there are bitter words, there are bitter enemies, and a bitter cold morning.

BITTERGOURD. n. f. [colocynthis, Lat.]
A plant.

BITTERLY. adv. [from bitter.]

1. With a bitter taste.

That my poor mistress, moved therewithal, Wept bitterly.

3. Sharply; severely.
His behaviour is not to censure bitterly the errors of their zeal.

BITTERN. n. f. [butour, Fr.] A bird with long legs, and a long bill, which feeds upon fish; remarkable for the noise which he makes, usually called bumping.

Sec BITTOR.

The poor fish have enemies enough, besides such unnatural fishermen as otters, the commorant, and the bittern.

So that scarce
The bittern knows his time, with bill ingulph'd,
To shake the sounding marsh.

BITTERN. n. f. [from bitter.] A very biter liquor, which drains off in making of common salt, and used in the preparation of Epsom salt.

BITTERNESS. n. f. [from bitter.]

1. A bitter taste.
The idea of whiteness, or bitterness, is in the mind, exactly answering that power which is in any body to produce it there.

2. Malice; grudge; hatred; implacability.
The bitterness and animosity between the commanders was such, that a great part of the army was marched.

3. Sharpness; severity of temper.
His sorrows have so overwhelm'd his wits,
Shall we be thus afflicted in his weaks,
His fits, his frenzy, and his bitterness?

Pierpoint and Crew appeared now to have contracted more bitterness and sourness than formerly, and were more reserved towards the king's commissioners.

4. Satire; piquancy; keenness of reproach.
Some think their wits have been asleep, except they dart out somewhat piquant, and to the quick: men ought to find the difference between falseness and bitterness.

5. Sorrow; vexation; affliction.
There appears much joy in him, even so much,
that joy could not show itself modest enough,
without a badge of bitterness.

They shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

Most pursue the pleasures, as they call them, of their natures, which begin in sin, are carried on with danger, and end in bitterness.

I oft, in bitterness of soul, deplor'd
My absent daughter, and my dearer lord.

BITTERSWEET. n. f. [from bitter and sweet.] An apple, which has a compound taste of sweet and bitter.

It is but a bittersweet at best, and the fine colours of the serpent do by no means make amends for the smart and poison of his sting.

When I express the taste of an apple, which we call the bittersweet, none can mistake what I mean.

BITTERTVETCH. n. f. [ervum, Lat.] A plant.

BITTERWORT. n. f. [gentiana, Lat.] An herb.

BITTOUR. n. f. [butour, Fr. ardea stellaris, Lat.] A bird, commonly called the bittern (see BITTERN) but perhaps as properly bittour.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head;
And, as a bittour bumps within a reed,
To thee alone, O lake, she said, I tell. Dryden.

BITUME. n. f. [from bitumen.] Bitumen. Mix with these

Idzean pitch, quick sulphur, silver's spume, Sea onion, hellebore, and black bitume. May.

BITUMEN. n. f. [Lat.] A fat unctuous matter dug out of the earth, or scummed off lakes, as the Asphaltis in Judæa, of various kinds: some so hard as to be used for coal; others so glutinous as to serve for mortar. Savary.

It is reported, that bitumen mingled with lime, and put under water, will make as it were an artificial rock, the substance becometh so hard. Bacon.

The fabrick seem'd a work of rising ground,
With sulphur and bitumen cast between. Dryden.

Bitumen is a body that readily takes fire, yields an oil, and is soluble in water. Woodward.

BITUMINOUS. adj. [from bitumen.] Having the nature and qualities of bitumen; compounded of bitumen.

Near that bituminous lake, where Sodom flami'd. Milton.

BIVALVE. adj. [from binus and valve, Lat.] Having two valves or shutters: a term used of those fish that have two shells, as oysters; and of those plants whose seed pods open their whole length, to discharge their seed, as peas.

In the cavity lies loose the shell of some sort of bivalve, larger than could be introduced in at those holes. Woodward.

BIVALVULAR. adj. [from bivalve.] Having two valves. DiA.

BI'XWORT. n. f. An herb.

BI'ZANTINE. n. f. [more properly spelt byzantine; from Byzantium.] A great piece of gold valued at fifteen pound, which the king offereth upon high festival days; it is yet called a byzantine, which anciently was a piece of gold coined by the emperours of Constanti-nople. Camden.

To BLAB. v. a. [blabberen, Dutch.]

1. To tell what ought to be kept secret: it usually implies rather thoughtlessness than treachery; but may be used in either sense.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea. Shakspeare.

Thy dues be done, and none left out,
Ere the blabbing eastern scout,
The nice morn on the Indian steep,
From her cabin'd loophole peep. Milton.

Nature has made man's breasts no windores,
To publish what he does within doors;
Nor what dark secrets there inhabit,
Unless his own rash folly blab it. Hudibras.

Sorrow not joy can be disguis'd by art,
Our foreheads blab the secrets of our heart. Dryd.

It is unlawful to give any kind of religious worship to a creature; but the very indices of the father's cannot escape the index expurgatorius, for blabbing to great truth. Stillington.

Nor whisper to the rattling reeds
The blackest of all female deeds;

Nor blab it on the lonely rocks,
Where echo sits, and list'ning mocks. Swift.

2. To tell: in a good sense. Not used.

That delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blab'd them with such pleasing eloquence,
Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage. Shak.

To BLAB. v. n. To tattle; to tell tales.

Your mate I'll be;
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not
see. Shakspeare.

BLAB. n. f. [from the verb.] A tattale; a thoughtless babbler; a treacherous be-trayer of secrets.

The secret man heareth many confessions; for who will open himself to a blab, or babbler?
Bacon.

To have reveal'd
Secrets of man, the secrets of a friend,
Contempt and scorn of all, to be excluded
All friendship, and avoided as a blab. Milton.

Whoever shews me a very inquisitive body, I'll shew him a blab, and one that shall make privacy as publick as a proclamation. L'Esfrange.

I should have gone about shewing my letters, under the charge of secrecy, to every blab of my acquaintance. Swift.

BLA'CKBERRY. n. f. The fruit of the bramble.

The policy of these crafty sneering rascals, that stale old mouse-eaten cheese Nestor, and that same dog-fox Ulysses, is not proved worth a black- berry. Shakspeare.

Then sad he sung the Children in the Wood;
How blackberries they pluck'd in deserts wild,
And fearless at the glittering saulchion smil'd. Gay.

BLA'CKBIRD. n. f. [from black and bird.] A bird.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers others. Carew.

A schoolboy ran unto 't, and thought
The crib was down, the blackbird caught. Swift.
To BLA'CKEN. v. a. [from black.]

1. To make of a black colour.
Bleas'd by aspiring winds, he finds the strand Blacken'd by crowds. Prior.
While the long fun'ral's blacken all the way. Pope.

2. To darken; to cloud.
That little cloud that appeared at first to Elijah's servant no bigger than a man's hand, but presently after grew, and spread, and blacken'd
the face of the whole heaven. South.

3. To defame, or make infamous.
Let us blacken him what we can, said that miscreant Harison of the blessed king, upon the wording and drawing up his charge against his approaching trial. South.

The morals blacken'd, when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape. Pope.
To BLA'CKEN. v. n. To grow black, or dark.

The hollow found
Sung in the leaves, the forest shook around,
Air blacken'd, roll'd the thunder, groan'd the ground. Dryden.

BLA'CKISH. adj. [from black.] Somewhat black.

Part of it all the year continues in the form of a blackish oil. Boyle.

BLA'CKMOOR. n. f. [from black and moor.]

A negro.
The land of Chus makes no part of Africa;
nor is it the habitation of Blackmoors; but the country of Arabia, especially the Happy and Stony. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

More to west
The realm of Baechus to the blackmoor sea. Milton.

BLA'CKNESS. n. f. [from black.]

1. Black colour.
Blackness is only a disposition to absorb, or sift, without reflection, most of the rays of every sort that fall on the bodies. Locke.

There would emerge one or more very black spots, and, within those, other spots of an interfer blackness. Newton.

His tongue, his prating tongue, had chang'd him quite
To sooty blackness from the purest white. Addis.

2. Darkness.
His faults in him seem as the spots of heav'n,
More fiery by night's blackness. Shakespeare.

3. Atrociousness; horribleness; wickedness.

BLA'CKSMITH. n. f. [from black and smith.]

A smith that works in iron; so called from being very smutty.
The blacksmith may forge what he pleases.

Shut up thy doors with bars and bolts; it will be impossible for the blacksmith to make them so fast, but a cat and a whoremaster will find a way through them. Spektor.

BLA'CKTAIL. n. f. [from black and tail.]

A fish; a kind of perch, by some called ruffs, or popes. See POPE. Did.

of which it is a species.

BLA'DDER. n. f. [bladder, Saxon; blader,
Dutch.]

1. That vessel in the body which contains the urine.
The bladder should be made of a membranous substance, and extremely dilatible for receiving and containing the urine till an opportunity of emptying it. Riv.

2. It is often filled with wind, to which allusions are frequently made.

That huge great body which the giant bore
Was vanquish'd quite, and of that monstrous ma's
Was nothing left, but like an empty bladder was. Spenser.

A bladder but moderately filled with air, and strongly tied, being held near the fire, grew exceeding turgid and hard; but being brought nearer to the fire, it suddenly broke, with so loud a noise as made us for a while after almost deaf. Boyle.

3. It is usual for those, that learn to swim, to support themselves with blown bladders.

I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys that swim on bladders,
These many summers in a sea of glory,
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride
At length broke under me. Shakespeare.

4. A blifter; a pustule.

BLA'DDER-NUT. n. f. [Staphyloedendron, Lat.] A plant.

BLADDER-SENA. n. f. [coluca, Lat.] A plant.

BLADE. n. f. [blæd, bled, Sax. bled, Fr.]

The spike of grass before it grows to seed; the green shoots of corn which rise from the seed. This seems to me the primitive signification of the word blade; from which, I believe, the blade of a sword was first named, because of its similitude in shape; and, from the blade of a sword, that of other weapons or tools.

There is hardly found a plant that yieldeth a red juice in the blade or ear, except it be the tree that beareth sanguis draconis. Bacon.

Send in the feeding flocks betimes t' invade
The rising bulk of the luxuriant blade. Dryden.

If we were able to dive into her secret recesses, we should find that the smallest blade of grass, or most contemptible weed, has its particular use.

Hung on every spray, on every blade
Of grass, the myriad dewdrops twinkle round. Thomson.

BLADE. n. f. [blatte, Germ. blad, Dutch.]

1. The sharp or striking part of a weapon or instrument, distinct from the handle.

It is usually taken for a weapon, and so called probably from the likeness of a sword blade to a blade of grass. It is commonly applied to the knife.

He fought all round about, his thirsty blade
To bathe in blood of his less energy. F. Queen.

She knew the virtue of her blade, nor would Pollute her fabric with ignoble blood. Dryden.

Be his this sword, whose blade of brass displays
A ruddy gleam, whose hilt a silver blaze. Pope.

2. A brisk man, either fierce or gay, called so in contempt. So we say mettle for courage.

You'll find yourself mistaken, sir, if you'll take upon you to judge of their blades by their garbs, looks, and outward appearance. L'Esfrange.

Then turning about to the hangman, he said,
Dispatch me, I prithee, this troublesome blade. Prior.

BLADE of the shoulder. } n. f. The bone BLADEBONE. } called by anatomicists the scapula, or scapular bone.

He fell most furiously on the broiled relics of a shoulder of mutton, commonly called a bladebone. Pope.

furnish or fit with a blade

BLA'DED. adj. [from blade.] Having blades or spires.

Her silver visage in the wat'ry glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass. Shaks.

As where the lightning runs along the ground,
Nor bladed grass, nor bearded corn succeeds,
But scales of scurf and putrefaction breeds. Dryd.

BLAIN. n. f. [blezene, Sax. bleyne, Dutch.]
A pustule; a botch; a blister.

Itches, blains,
Sow all th' Athenian bosoms, and the crop
Be general leprosy. Shakspeare.
Botches and blains must all his flesh imbosh,
And all his people. Milton.

Whene'er I hear a rival nam'd,
I feel my body all inflam'd;
Which breaking out in boils and blains,
With yellow filth my linen stains. Swift.

BLA'MABLE. adj. [from blame.] Culpable; faulty.

Virtue is placed between two extremes, which are on both sides equally blamable. Dryden.

BLA'MABLENESS. n. f. [from blamable.] Fault; the state of being liable to blame; culpableness; faultiness.

BLA'MABLY. adv. [from blamable.] Cul-pably; in a manner liable to censure.

A process may be carried on against a person, that is maliciously or blamably absent, even to a definitive sentence. Ayliffe.

To BLAME. v. a. [blamer, Fr.]

1. To censure; to charge with a fault: it generally implies a slight censure.

Our pow'r
Shall do a court'ry to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

Porphyrius, you too far did tempt your fate; ;
'Tis true, your duty to me it became;
But, praising that, I must your conduct blame. Dryden.

Each finding, like a friend,
Something to blame, and something to commend. Pope.

2. To blame has usually the particle for before the fault.

The reader must not blame me for making use here all along of the word sentiment. Locke.

3. Sometimes, but rarely, of.
Tomoreus he blamed of inconsiderate rashness, for that he would busy himself in matters not belonging to his vocation. Knolls' History of the Turks.

BLAME. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Imputation of a fault.
In arms the praise of success is shared among many; yet the blame of misadventures is charged upon one. Hayward.

They lay the blame on the poor little ones, sometimes passionately enough, to divert it from themselves. Locke.

2. Crime; that which produces or deserves censure.

Who would not judge us to be discharged of all blame, which are content to have no great fault, even by their very word and testimony, in whose eyes no fault of ours hath ever hitherto been accustomed to seem small. Hobbes.

I unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I lay upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. Shakspeare.

3. Hurt. Not in use.

Therewith upon his crest
With rigour so outrageous he smit,
That a large share 't hew'd out of the rest,
And glancing down his shield, from blame him fairly best. Fairy Que. n.

4. There is a peculiar structure of this word, in which it is not very evident whether it be a noun or a verb, but I conceive it to be the noun. To blame, in French a tert; culpable; worthy of censure.

You were to blame, I must be plain with you,
To part too lightly with your wife's first gift. Shakspeare.

I do not ask whether they were mistaken; but, whether they were to blame in the manner.

Stillington.

Now we should hold them much to blame, if they went back before they came.

Prior.

BLAMEFUL. adj. [from blame and full.] Criminal; guilty; meriting blame.

Is not the cause of these timeless deaths As blameful as the executioner?

Shakespeare.

Bluntwitted lord, ignoble in demeanour, If ever lady wrong'd her lord so much, Thy mother took into her blameful bed Some stern untutor'd churl.

Shakespeare.

BLAMELESSLY. adv. [from blameless.] Innocently; without crime.

It is the willful opposing explicit articles, and not the not believing them when not revealed, or not with that conviction, against which he cannot blamelessly, without pertinacity, hold out, that will bring danger of ruin on any.

Hammond.

BLAMELESSNESS. n. f. [from blameless.] Innocence; exemption from censure.

Having resolved with him in Homer, that all is chargeable on Jupiter and fate, they infer, with him, the blamelessness of the inferior agent.

Hammond.

BLAMELESS. adj. [from blame.] 1. Guiltless; innocent; exempt from censure or blame.

She found out the righteous, and preserved him blameless unto God.

Wisdom.

BLAZER. n. f. [from blaze.] One that spreads reports.

Utterers of secrets he from thence debar'd,
Babblers of folly, and blazers of crime;
His larum-bell might loud and wide be heard,
When cause requir'd, but never out of time;
Early and late it rung, at evening and at prime.
Spenser.

To BLAZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To explain, in proper terms, the figures on ensigns armorial.

King Edward gave to them the coat of arms, which I am not herald enough to blazon into English.
Addison.

2. To deck; to embellish; to adorn.

She blazons in dread smiles her hideous form;
So lightning gilds the unrelenting storm.
Garth.

3. To display; to set to show.

O thou goddess,
Thou divine nature! how thyself thou blazest!
In these two princely boys! they are as gentle
As zephyrs blowing below the violet,
Not wagging his sweet head.
Shakespeare.

4. To celebrate; to set out.

One that excels the quirk of blazoning pens,
And, in th' essential vestiture of creation,
Does bear all excellency.
Shakespeare.

5. To blaze about; to make publick.

What's this but libelling against the senate,
And blazoning our injustice every where?
Shaksf.

BLAZON. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The art of drawing or explaining coats of arms.

Proceed unto beasts that are given in arms, and teach me what I ought to observe in their blazon.
Peasam.

2. Show; divulgation; publication.

But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood.
Shakespeare.

3. Celebration, proclamation of some quality.

I am a gentleman—I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, action, and spirit,
Shakespeare.

Do give thee five-fold blazon.
Men con over their pedigrees, and obtrude the blazon of their exploits upon the company.
Collier.

BLAZONRY. n. f. [from blazon.] The art of blazoning.

Give certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.
Peasam on Drawing.

To BLEACH. v. a. [bleichen, Germ.] To whiten; commonly to whiten by exposure to the open air.

When turtles tread, and rooks and daws;
And maidens bleach their summer smocks.
Should I not seek Shak.

The clemency of some more temperate climate,
To purge my gloom; and, by the sun refin'd,
Bask in his beams, and bleach me in the wind?
Dryden

To BLEACH. v. n. To grow white; to grow white in the open air.

The white sheet bleaching in the open field.
Shakespeare.

For there are various penances enjoind;
And some are hung to bleach upon the wind;
Some plung'd in waters.
Dryden.

The deadly winter freezes; shuts up sense;
Lays him along the snows, a stiffen'd corse,
Stretch'd out, and bleaching in the northern blast.
Thomson.

BLEAK. adj. [blac, blæc, Saxon.]

1. Pale.

2. Cold; chill; cheerless.

Intreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips,
And comfort me with cold.
Shakespeare.

Dwell'd here with Pan, or Sylvan, by blest song
Forbidding every bleak unkindly fog
To touch the prosperous growth of this tall wood.
Milton.

Her desolation presents us with nothing but bleak and barren prospects.
Addison.

Say, will ye bless the bleak Atlantick shore,
Or bid the furious Gaul be rude no more?
Pope.

BLEAK. n. f. [alburnus, from his white or bleak colour.] A small river fish.

The bleak, or freshwater sprat, is ever in motion, and therefore called by some the river swallow. His back is of a pleasant, sad sea water green; his belly white and shining like the mountain snow. Bleaks are excellent meat, and in best season in August.
Warton.

BLEAKNESS. n. f. [from bleak.] Coldness; chiliness.

The inhabitants of Nova Zembla go naked, without complaining of the bleakness of the air; as the armies of the northern nations keep the field all winter.
Addison.

BLEAKY. adj. [from bleak.] Bleak; cold;
chill.

On shrubs they browse, and, on the bleak top
Of rugged hills, the thorny bramble crop.
Dryden.

BLEAR. adj. [blacr, a blister, Dutch.]

1. Dim with rheum or water; sore with rheum.

It is a tradition that blear eyes affect sound eyes.
Bacon.

It is no more in the power of calumny to blast
the dignity of an honest man, than of the blear eyed owl to cast scandal on the sun. L'Estrange.

His blear eyes ran in gutters to his chin;
His beard was stubble, and his cheeks were thin.
Dryden.

When thou shalt see the blear eyed fathers teach
Their sons this harsh and mouldy sort of speech.
Dryden.

2. Dim; obscure in general, or that which makes dimness.

Thus I aurl
My dazzling spells into the spongy air,
Of power to cheat the eye with blear illusion,
And give it false presentments.
Milton.

To BLEAR. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To make the eyes watery, or sore with rheum.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleared fights
Are spectacl'd to see him.
Shakespeare.

The Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
The issue of th' exploit.
Shakespeare.

When I was young, I, like a lazy fool,
Would blear my eyes with oil to stay from school;
Averse to pains.
Dryden.

2. To dim the eyes.

This may stand for a pretty superficial argument, to blear our eyes, and lull us asleep in security.
Raleigh.

BLEAREDNESS. n. f. [from bleared.] The state of being bleared, or dimmed with rheum.

The defluxion falling upon the edges of the eyelids, makes a blearedness.
Wiseman.

To BLEAT. v. n. [blætan, Sax.] To cry as a sheep.

We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' th'
sun,
And bleat the one at th' other.
Shakespeare.

You may as well use question with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb.
Merchant of Venice.

While on sweet grafs her bleating charge does lie,
Our happy lover feeds upon her eye.
Roscommon.

What bull dares bellow, or what sheep dares bleat,
Within the lion's den?
Dryden.

BLEAT. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a sheep or lamb.

Set in my ship, mine ear reach'd, where we rode,
The bellowing of oxen, and the bleat
Of fleecy sheep.
Chapman.

bleed*.

To BLEED. v. n. pret. I bled; I have bled. [bledan, Saxon.]

1. To lose blood; to run with blood.

I bled inwardly for my lord.
Shakespeare.

Bleed, bleed, poor country!
Great tyranny, lay thou thy basis sure;
For goodness dare not check thee!
Shakespeare.

Many, upon the seeing of others bleed, or strangled, or tortured, themselves are ready to faint, as if they bled.
Bacon.

2. To die a violent death.

The lamb thy riot dooms to bleed to-day;
Had he thy reason, would he skip and play?
Pope.

3. To lose blood medicinally; as, he bled for a fever.

4. To drop, as blood. It is applied to any thing that drops from some body on incision, as blood from an animal.

The coral redden, and the ruby glow.
Pope.

To BLEED. v. a. To let blood; to take blood from.

That from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote.
Pope.

BLEIT. } adj. Bathful. It is used in Scot-BLATE. } land, and the bordering counties.

To BLEMISH. v. a. [from blame, Junius;
from blem, white, Fr. Skinner.]

1. To mark with any deformity.

Likelier that my outward face might have been disguised, than that the face of so excellent a mind could have been thus blemish'd.
Sidney.

2. To defame; to tarnish, with respect to reputation.

Not that my verse would blemish all the fair;
But yet if some be bad, 'tis wisdom to beware.
Dryden.

Those, who, by concerted defamations, endeavour to blemish his character, incur the complicated guilt of slander and perjury.
Addison.

BLEMISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A mark of deformity; a scar; a diminution of beauty.

As he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again.
Leviticus.

Open it so from the eye-lid, that you divide not that; for, in so doing, you will leave a re-mediless blemish.
Wiseman.

2. Reproach; disgrace; imputation.

That you have been earnest, should be no blemish or discredit at all unto you.
Hooker.

And if we shall neglect to propagate these blessed dispositions, what others can undertake it, without some blemish to us, some reflection on our negligence?
Spratt.

None more industriously publish the blemishes of an extraordinary reputation, than such as lie open to the same censures; raising applause to themselves, for resembling a person of an exalted reputation, though in the blameable parts of his character.
Addison.

3. A foil; turpitude; taint; deformity.

First shall virtue be vice, and beauty be counted
a blemish, Ere that I leave with song of praise her praise to solemnize.
Sidney.

Live thou, and to thy mother dead attest,
That clear the died from blemish criminal.
Fairy Q.

Is conformity with Rome a blemish unto the church of England, and unto churches abroad an ornament? Hooker.

Not a hair perish'd:

On their sustaining garments not a blemish,
But frether than before. Shakspeare.

Evadne's husband! 'tis a fault
To love, a blemish to my thought. Waller.

That your duty may no blemish take,
I will myself your father's captive make. Dryden.

Such a mirth as this is capable of making a beauty, as well as a blemish, the subject of devotion. Addison.

TO BLEND. v. n. To shrink; to start back; to give way. Not used.

I'll observe his looks;

I'll tent him to the quick; if he but blend,
I know my course. Shakspeare.

Patience herself, what goddess e'er she be,
Doth lesser blend at sufferance than I do. Shakf.

Hold you ever to our special trusts;

ciently, blent. [blendan, Saxon.]

I. To mingle together.

'Tis beauty truly blend, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand hath laid on. Shakspeare.

The mixture taught by the ancients is too slight or gross; for bodies mixed according to their hypothesis, would not appear such to the acute eyes of a lynx, who would discern the elements, if they were no otherwise mingled, than but blend'd but not united. Boyle.

He had his calmer influence, and his mien
Did love and majesty together blend. Dryden.

The grave, which even the great find rest,
And blended lie th' oppressor and th' oppress'd.

natural, and he both the creator and worker of all in all, alone to be blest, adored, and honoured by all for ever. Hooker.

But blest'd be that great pow'r, thath hath us blest'd

With longer life than earth and heav'n can have.
Davies.

5. It seems, in one place of Spenser, to signify the same as to wave; to brandish; to flourish. This signification is taken from an old rite of our Romish ancestors, who, blessing a field, directed their hands in quick succession to all parts of it.

Whom when the prince to battle new address,
And threat'ning high his dreadful stroke did see,
His sparkling blade about his head he blest,
And smote off quite his right leg by the knee.

All fell upon the high-bair'd oaks, and down their curled brows Fell huddling to the earth; and up went all the belys and boughs. Chapman.

But when the smoother bole from knots is free, We make a deep incision in the tree. Dryden.

View well this tree, the queen of all the grove: How vast her bole, how wide her arms are spread, How high above the rest the throat her head! Dryden.

2. A kind of earth.

Bole Armenian is an alighting earth, which takes its name from Armenia, the country from which we have it. Worswold.

3. A measure of corn, containing six bushels.

Of good barley put eight boles, that is, about six English quarters, in a stone trough. Marston.

Bo'LS. n. f. [Latin.]

Bolis is a great fiery ball, swiftly hurried through the air, and generally drawing a tail after it. Aristotle calls it capra. There have often been immense balls of this kind. Muschensroek.

BOLL. n. f. A round stalk or stem; as, a boll of flax.

To BOLL. v. n. [from the noun.] To rise in a stalk.

And the flax and the barley was smitten: for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was belled. Exodus.

Bo'LSTER. n. f. [bolster, Sax. bolster, Dutch.]

1. Something laid on the bed, to raise and support the head; commonly a bag filled with down or feathers.

Perhaps some cold bank is her bolster now, Or 'gainst the rugged bank of some broad elm Leans her unpillow'd head. Milton.

This arm shall be a bolster for thy head; I'll fetch clean straw to make a soldier's bed. Gay.

2. A pad, or quilt, to hinder any pressure, or fill up any vacancy.

Up goes her hand, and off the slips The bolsters that supply her hips. Swift.

3. A pad, or compress, to be laid on a wound.

The bandage is the girt, which hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends tacked firmly together. Wiseman.

4. In horsemanship.

The bolsters of a saddle are those parts raised upon the bows, to hold the rider's thigh. Furrier's Dict.

To Bo'LSTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To support the head with a bolster.

2. To afford a bed to.

Mortal eyes do see them bolster, More than their own. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. To hold wounds together with a compress.

The practice of bolstering the cheeks forward, does little service to the wound, and is very uneasy to the patient. Sharp.

4. To support; to hold up; to maintain.

This is now an expression somewhat coarse and obsolete.

We may be made wiser by the publick persuasions grafted in men's minds, so they be used to further the truth, not to bolster error. Hooker.

The lawyer sets his tongue to sale for the bolstering out of unjust causes. Hackerell.

It was the way of many to bolster up their crazy doating consciences with confidences. South.

BOLT. n. f. [boul, Dutch; βολα, South.]

1. An arrow; a dart shot from a cross-bow.

Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell; It fell upon a little western flower, Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound. Shakespeare.

The blunted bolt against the nymph he dress'd; But with the sharp transfix'd Apollo's breast. Dryden.

2. Lightning; a thunderbolt.

Sing'd with the flames, and with the bolts transfix'd, With native earth your blood the monsters mix'd. Dryden.

3. Bolt upright; that is, upright as an arrow.

Brush iron, native or from the mine, consisted of long stix, about the thickness of a small knitting needle, bolt upright, like the blades of a stall beam. Greene.

As I stood bolt upright upon one end, one of the ladies burst out. Addison.

4. The bar of a door, so called from being straight like an arrow. We now say, 2 D 2 shoot the bolt, when we speak of fastening or opening a door.

'Tis not in thee, to oppose the bolt Against my coming in. Shakspeare.

5. An iron to fasten the legs of a prisoner. This is, I think, corrupted from bought, or link.

Away with him to prison; lay bolts enough upon him. Shakspeare.

TO BOLT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut or fasten with a bolt.

The bolted gates flew open at the blast;
The storm rush'd in, and Aëte stood aghast. Dryden.

2. To blurt out, or throw out precipitantly.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

3. To fasten, as a bolt or pin; to pin; to keep together.

That I could reach the axle, where the pins are Which bolt this frame, that I might pull them out! Ben Jonson.

4. To fetter; to shackle.

It is great
To do that thing that ends all other deeds,
Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change. Shakspeare.

5. To sift, or separate the parts of any thing with a sieve. [blater, Fr.]

He now had bolted all the flour. Spenser.
In the bolting and sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal. Wotton.

I cannot bolt this matter to the braun,
As Bradwardin and holy Austin can. Dryden.

6. To examine by sifting; to try out; to lay open.

It would be well bolted out, whether great reflections may not be made upon reflections, as upon direct beams. Bacon.

The judge, or jury, or parties, or the council, or attorneys, propounding questions, beats and bolts out the truth much better than when the witness delivers only a formal series. Hale.

Time and nature will bolt out the truth of things, through all disguises. L'Esrange.

7. To purify; to purge. This is harsh.

The tanned snow,
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er. Shakspeare.

TO BOLT. v. n. To spring out with speed and suddenness; to start out with the quickness of an arrow.

This Puck seems but a creaming dolt,
Still walking like a ragged colt,
And oft out of a bush doth bolt,
Of purpose to deceive us. Drayton.

They erected a fort, and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest, sometimes into the forest, sometimes into the woods and fallowes, and sometimes back to their den. Bacon.

As the house was all in a flame, out bolts a mouse from the runs to save herself. L'Esrange.
I have reflected on those men who, from time to time, have thrust themselves into the world. I have seen many successions of them; some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off. Dryden.

The birds to foreign seats repair'd;
And beasts, that bolted out, and saw the forest hard. Dryden.

BOLT-ROPE. n. f. [from bolt and rope.] The rope on which the sail of a ship is sewed and fastened. Sea Dict.

BOLTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sieve to separate meal from bran or husks; or to separate finer from coarser parts.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers wives, and they have made bolters of them. Shakspeare.

With a good strong chopping-knife mince the two capons, bones and all, as small as ordinary minced meat; put them into a large neat bolter. Faxon's Natural History.

When superciliously he fits
Through coarsest bolter others gifts. Hudibras.

2. A kind of net.

These lakes, and divers others, of the fore-cited, are taken with threads, and some of them with the bolter, which is a spiler of a bigger size. Caveo.

BOLT-HEAD. n. f. A long strait-necked glass vessel, for chymical distillations, called also a matrass, or receiver.

This spirit abounds in salt, which may be separated, by putting the liquor into a bolt-head with a long narrow neck. Boyle.

BOLTING-HOUSE. n. f. [from bolt and house.] The place where meal is sifted.

The jade is returned as white, and as powdered, as if he had been at work in a bolting-house. Dennis.

BOLTS-PRIT. } n. f. A mast running out
BO'WSPRIT. } at the head of a ship, not standing upright, but aslope. The but end of it is generally set against the foot of the foremast; so that they are a stay to one another. The length without board is sufficient to let its sails hang clear of all incumbrances. If the bolt-sprit fail in bad weather, the foremast cannot hold long after. Boysprit is perhaps the right spelling. Sea Dictionary.

Sometimes I'd divide,
And burn in many places; on the topmast,
The yards and boltsprit would I flame distinctly. Shakspeare.

BO'LUS. n. f. [βόλος.] A form of medicine, in which the ingredients are made up into a soft mass, larger than pills, to be swallowed at once.

Keep their bodies soluble the while by clysters, lenitive boluses of cassia and manna, with syrup of violets. Wifeman.

By poets we are well assur'd,
That love, alas! can ne'er be cur'd;
A complicated heap of ills,
Defying boluses and pills. Swift.

BOMB. n. f. [bombus, Lat.]

1. A loud noise.

An upper chamber being thought weak, was supported by a pillar of iron, of the bigness of one's arm in the midst; which, if you had struck, would make a little flat noise in the room, but a great bomb in the chamber beneath. Bacon.

2. A hollow iron ball, or shell, filled with gunpowder, and furnished with a vent for a fusce, or wooden tube filled with combustible matter, to be thrown out from a mortar, which had its name from the noise it makes. The fusce, being set on fire, burns slowly till it reaches the gunpowder, which goes off at once, bursting the shell to pieces with incredible violence: whence the use of bombs in besieging towns. The largest are about eighteen inches in diameter. By whom they were invented is not known, and the time is uncertain; some fixing it to 1588, and others to 1495. Chambers.

The loud cannon missive iron pours,
And in the slaughter'ing bomb Gradivos roars. Rowe.

TO BOMB. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall upon with bombs; to bombard.

Our king thus trembles at Namur, Whilst Villeroi, who ne'er afraid is,
To Bruxelles marches on secure,
To bomb the monks, and scare the ladies. Prior.

BOMB-CHEST. n. f. [from bomb and chest.] A kind of chest filled usually with bombs, and sometimes only with gunpowder, placed under ground, to tear and blow it up in the air, with those who stand on it. Chambers.

BOMB-KETCH. } n. f. A kind of ship,
BOMB-VESSEL. } strongly built, to bear the shock of a mortar, when bombs are to be fired into a town.

Nor could an ordinary fleet, with bomb-vessels, hope to succeed against a place that has in its arsenal gallees and men of war. Adijon.

BO'MBARD. n. f. [bombardus, Latin.]

1. A great gun; a cannon. Obsolete.

They planted in divers places twelve great bombards, wherewith they threw huge stones into the air, which, falling down into the city, might break down the houses. Knolles.

2. A barrel. Obsolete.

TO BOMBA'RD. v. a. [from the noun.] To attack with bombs.

A medal is struck on the English failing in their attempts on Dunkirk, when they endeavoured to blow up a fort, and bombard the town. Adijon.

BOMBARDI'ER. n. f. [from bombard.] The engineer whose employment is to shoot bombs.

The bombardier tosses his ball sometimes into the midst of a city, with a design to fill all around him with terror and combustion. Teller.

BOMBA'RDMENT. n. f. [from bombard.] An attack made upon any city, by throwing bombs into it.

Genoa is not yet secure from a bombardment, though it is not so exposed as formerly. Adijon.

BOMBASIN. n. f. [bombasin, Fr. from bombycinus, silken, Latin.] A slight silken stuff, for mourning.

BOMBA'ST. n. f. [A stuff of soft loose texture used formerly to swell the garment, and thence used to signify bulk or show without solidity.] Fustian; big words, without meaning.

Not pedants motley tongue, soldiers bombast,
Mountebanks drug-tongue, nor the terms of law,
Are strong enough preparatives to draw
Me to hear this. Donne.

Are all the flights of heroick poetry to be concluded bombast, unnatural, and mere madness, because they are not affected with their excellencies? Dryden.

BO'MBAST. adj. [from the substantive.] High sounding; of big sound without meaning.

He, as loving his own pride and purpose,
Evades them with a bombast circumstance,
Horribly fluff'd with epithets of war. Shakspeare.

BOMBILA'TION. n. f. [from bombus, Lat.] Sound; noise; report.

How to abate the vigour, or silence the bombilation of guns, a way is said to be by borax and butter, mixt in a due proportion, which will almost take off the report, and also the force of the charge. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BOMBY'CINOUS. adj. [bombycinus, Lat.] Silken; made of silk.

6. A writing of obligation to pay a sum, or perform a contract.

Go with me to a notary, seal me there Your single bond. Shakspeare.

What if I ne'er consent to make you mine; My father's promise ties me not to time;

And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.

7. Obligation; law by which any man is obliged.

Unhappy that I am! I cannot leave My heart into my mouth: I love your majesty According to my bond, no more nor less. Shakspeare.

Take which you please, it dissolves the bonds of government and obedience. Locke.

BOND. adj. [from bind, perhaps for bound; from æbonben, Saxon.] Captive; in a servile state.

Whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free. I Corinthians.

BONDAGE. n. f. [from bond.]

1. Captivity; imprisonment; state of restraint.

You only have overthrown me, and in my bondage consists my glory. Sidney.

Say, gentle prince, would you not suppose Your bondage happy, to be made a queen?

—To be a queen in bondage, is more vile Than is a slave in base servility. Shakspeare.

Our cage We make a choir, as doth the prison'd bird,

And sing our bondage freely. Shakspeare.

The king, when he design'd you for my guard, Resolv'd he would not make my bondage hard. Dryden.

2. Obligation; tie of duty.

If she has a struggle for honour, she is in a bondage to love; which gives the story its turn that way. Pope.

He must resolve by no means to be enslaved, and brought under the bondage of observin oaths, which ought to vanish when they stand in competition with eating and drinking, or taking money. South.

BONDMAID. n. f. [from bond, captive, and maid.] A woman slave.

Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong yourself, To make a bondmaid and a slave of me. Shakspeare.

BONDMAN. n. f. [from bond and man.] A man slave.

Amongst the Romans, in making of a bondman free, was it not wondered wherefore so great ado should be made? the matter to present his slave in some court, to take him by the hand, and not only to say, in the hearing of the public magistrate, I will that this man become free; but, after those solemn words uttered, to strike him on the cheek, to turn him round, the hair of his head to be shaved off, the magistrate to touch him thrice with a rod; in the end, a cap and a white garment given him. Hooker.

O freedom! first delight of human kind; Not that which bondmen from their masters find. Dryden.

BONDSE'RVANT. n. f. [from bond and servant.] A slave; a servant without the liberty of quitting his master.

And if thy brother, that dwelleth with thee, be waxen poor, and he sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bondservant. Leviticus.

My lords, the senators Are sold for slaves, and their wives for bondswomen. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

BONE. n. f. [ban, Saxon.]

1. The solid part of the body of an animal.

The bones are made up of hard fibres, tied one to another by small transverse fibres, as those of the muscles. In a fetus they are porous, soft, and easily discerned. As their pores fill with a substance of their own nature, so they increase, harden, and grow close to one another. They are all spongy, and full of little cells; or are of a considerable firm thickness, with a large cavity, except the teeth; and where they are articulated, they are covered with a thin and strong membrane, called the periosteum. Each bone is much bigger at its extremity than in the middle, that the articulations might be firm, and the bones not easily put out of joint. But, because the middle of the bone should be strong, to sustain its allotted weight, and resist accidents, the fibres are there more closely compacted together, supporting one another; and the bone is made hollow, and consequently not so easily broken, as it must have been had it been solid and smaller. Quincy.

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold. Macbeth.

There was lately a young gentleman bit to the bone. Tatler.

2. A fragment of meat; a bone with as much flesh as adheres to it.

Like Æliop's hounds contending for the bone, Each pleaded right, and would be lord alone. Dryden.

3. To be upon the bones. To attack.

Puffs had a month's mind to be upon the bones of him, but was not willing to pick a quarrel. L'Estrange.

4. To make no bones. To make no scruple: a metaphor taken from a dog, who readily swallows meat that has no bones.

5. Bones. A sort of bobbins, made of trotter bones, for weaving bonelace.

6. Bones. Dice.

But then my study was to cog the dice, And dextrously to throw the lucky dice: To shun ames ace, that swept my stakes away; And watch the box, for fear they should convey False bones, and put upon me in the play. Dryden.

To BONE. v. a. [from the noun.] To take out the bones from the flesh; as, the cooks boned the veal.

BONELACE. n. f. [from bone and lace; the bobbins with which lace is woven being frequently made of bones.] Flaxen lace, such as women wear on their linen.

The things you follow, and make songs on now, should be sent to knit, or sit down to bobbins or bonelace. Tatler.

We destroy the symmetry of the human figure, and foolishly continue to call off the eye from great and real beauties, to childish gewgaw ribbands and bonelace. Spears.

BONELESS. adj. [from bone.] Wanting bones.

I would, while it was smiling in my face, Have pluckt my nipple from his boneless gums, And dalt the brains out. Shakspeare.

To BONESET. v. n. [from bone and set.]

To restore a bone out of joint to its place; or join a bone broken to the other part.

A fractured leg set in the country by one pretending to bonesetting. Wife's Surgery.

BONESETTER. n. f. [from boneset.] A chirurgeon; one who particularly professes the art of restoring broken or luxated bones.

At present my desire is to have a good bone setter. Dehann.

BONFIRE. n. f. [from bon, good, Fr. and fire.] A fire made for some public cause of triumph or exultation.

Ring ye the bells to make it wear away, And bonfires make all day. Spenser.

How came so many bonfires to be made in queen Mary's days? Why, she had abused and deceived her people. South.

Full soon by bonfire and by bell, We leant our liege was passing well. Guy.

BONGRACE. n. f. [bonne grace, Fr.] A forehead-cloth, or covering for the forehead. Not used.

I have seen her beset all over with emeralds and pearls, ranged in rows about her cawl, her peruke, her bongrace, and chaplet. Hakerwell.

BONNET. n. f. [bonet, Fr.] A covering for the head; a hat; a cap.]

Go to them with this bonnet in thy hand, And thus far having stretch'd it, here be with them,

Thy knee bussing the bonnet; for, in such business, Action is eloquence. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

They had not probably the ceremony of vailing the bonnet in their salutations; for, in medals, they still have it on their heads. Adelphi.

BO'NNET. [In fortification.] A kind of little ravelin, without any ditch, having a parapet three feet high, anciently placed before the points of the saliant angles of the glacis.

BO'NNET à presse, or priest's cap, is an outwork, having at the head three saliant angles, and two inwards.

BO'NNETS. [In the sea language.] Small sails set on the courses on the mizzen, mainfail, and forefail of a ship, when these are too narrow or shallow to clothe the mast, or in order to make more way in calm weather. Chambers.

BO'NNILY. adv. [from bonny.] Gayly; handsomely; plumply.

BO'NNINESS. n. f. [from bonny.] Gayety; handfomeness; plumpness.

BO'NNY. adj. [from bon, bonne, Fr.] It is a word now almost confined to the Scottish dialect.

1. Handsome; beautiful.

Match to match I have encountered him,
And made a prey for carrion kites and crows,
Even of the bonny beast he lov'd so well. Shaksp.
Thou wait'd the louts in melancholy strain,
Till bonny Susan sped across the plain. Gay.

2. Gay; merry; frolicsome; cheerful; blithe.

Then sigh not so, but let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny. Shaksp.

3. It seems to be generally used in conversation for plump.

BONNY-CLABBER. n. f. A word used in Ireland for four buttermilk.

We scorn, for want of talk, to jabber
Of parties o'er our bonny-clabber;
Nor are we studious to enquire,
Who votes for manors, who for hire. Swift.

BONUM MAGNUM. n. f. A species of plum.

BO'NY. adj. [from bone.]

1. Consisting of bones.

At the end of this hole is a membrane, fastened to a round bonny limb, and stretched like the head of a drum; and therefore, by anatomists, called compansum. Ray.

2. Full of bones.

BO'ONY. n. f. [A word of no certain etymology. Henshaw thinks it a corruption of bull-beef, ridiculously; Skinner imagines it to be derived from bobo, foolish, Spanish. Janius finds bowward to be an old Scottish word for a coward, a contemptible fellow; from which he naturally deduces booby; but the original of bowward is not known.] A dull, heavy, stupid fellow; a lubber.

But one exception to this fact we find;
That booby Phaon only was unkind,
An ill-bred boatman, rough as waves and wind. Prior.

Young master next must rise to fill him wine,
And starve himself to see the booby dine. King.

BOOK. n. f. [boc, Sax. supposed from boc, a beech, because they wrote on beechen boards; as liber, in Latin, from the rind of a tree.]

1. A volume in which we read or write.

See a book of prayer in his hand;
True ornaments to know a holy man. Shaksp.
Receive the sentence of the law for sins,
Such as by God's book are adjudg'd to death. Shaksp. a. e.

In the coffin that had the book, they were found as fresh as if they had been but newly written;

being written on parchment, and covered over with watch candles of wax. Bacon.

Books are a sort of dumb teachers; they cannot answer sudden questions, or explain present doubts: this is properly the work of a living instructor. Watts.

2. A particular part of a work.

The first book we divide into sections; whereof the first is these chapters part. Burnet's Theory.

3. The register in which a trader keeps an account of his debts.

Prouder than rustling in unpaid-for silk;
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book unros'd. Shaksp.

4. In books. In kind remembrance.

I was too much in his books, that, at his decease, he left me the lamp by which he used to write his lucubrations. Aldijon.

5. Without book. By memory; by repetition; without reading.

Sermons read they abhor in the church; but sermons without book, sermons which spend their life in their brain, and may have publick audience but once. Locke.

TO BOOK. v. a. [from the noun.] To register in a book.

I beseech your grace, let it be booked with the rest of this day's deeds; or I will have it in a particular ballad else, with mine own picture on the top of it. Shaksp.

He made wilful murder high treason; he caused the marchers to book their men, for whom they should make answer. Duaries on Ireland.

BOOK-KEEPING. n. f. [from book and keep.] The art of keeping accounts, or recording pecuniary transactions, in such a manner, that at any time a man may thereby know the true state of the whole, or any part of his affairs, with clearness and expedition. Harris.

This Armado is a Spaniard that keeps here in court,

A phantasm, a monarch, and one that makes sport
To the prince and his bookmates. Shaksp.

BOOKSELLER. n. f. [from book and sell.] He whose profession it is to sell books.

He went to the bookseller, and told him in anger, he had sold a book in which there was false divinity. Walton.

BOOKWORM. n. f. [from book and worm.] 1. A worm or mite that eats holes in books, chiefly when damp.

My lion, like a moth or bookworm, feeds upon nothing but paper, and I shall beg of them to diet him with wholesome and substantial food. Guard.

2. A student too closely given to books; a reader without judgment.

Among those venerable galleries and solitary scenes of the university, I wanted but a black gown, and a salary, to be as mere a bookworm as any there. Pope's Letters.

BO'OLY. n. f. [An Irish term.]

All the Tatarsians, and the people about the Caspian Sea, which are naturally Scythians, live in herds; being the very same that the Irish boobies are, driving their cattle with them, and feeding only on their milk and white meats. Spenser.

BOOM. n. f. [from boom, a tree, Dutch.]

1. [In sea language.] A long pole used to spread out the clue of the fludding sail; and sometimes the clues of the mainfail and forefail are boomed out.

2. A pole with bushes or baskets, set up as a mark to show the sailors how to steer in the channel, when a country is overflowed. Sea Dictionary.

When booming billows clos'd above my head. Pope.

BOON. n. f. [from bene, Sax. a petition.] A gift; a grant; a benefaction; a present.

Vouchsafe me for my meed but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg,
And less than this, I'm sure, you cannot give. Shaksp.

That courtier, who obtained a boon of the emperor, that he might every morning whisper him in the ear, and say nothing, asked no unprofitable suit for himself. Bacon.

The blust'ring fool has satisfy'd his will;
His boon is given; his knight has gain'd the day,
But lost the prize. Dryden's Fables.
What rhetoric dost thou use
To gain this mighty boon? she pities me! Addis.
BOON. adj. [bon, Fr.] Gay; merry: as,
a boon companion.

Satiate at length,
And heighten'd as with wine, jocund and boon,
Thus to herself the pleasing began. Par. Lost.
I know the infirmity of our family; we play
the boon companion, and throw our money away in our cups. Abithnot.

BOOR. n. f. [beer, Dutch; gebure, Sax.] A ploughman; a country fellow;
a lout; a clown.
The bare sense of a calamity is called grumbling; and if a man does but make a face upon the boor, he is presently a malecontent.

He may live as well as a boor of Holland, whose cares of growing still richer waste his life.
Temple.
To one well-born, th' affront is worse and more,
When he's abus'd and baffled by a boor. Dryden.

BO'ORISH. adj. [from boor.] Clownish;
rustick; untaught; uncivilized.
Therefore, you clown, abandon, which is, in the vulgar, leave the society, which, in the boorish, is company of this female. Shakspeare.

He is þir þ bot and boze,
And bet bivoþen dome.]

1. To profit; to advantage: it is commonly used in these modes, it boots, or what boots it.

It shall not boot them, who derogate from reading, to excuse it, when they see no other remedy; as if their intent were only to deny that citizens and strangers from the family of God are won, or that belief doth use to be wrought at the first in them without sermons. Hooker.

For what I have, I need not to repent;
And what I want, it boots not to complain. Shakf.

If we thun
The jurgan'd end, or here lie, fixed all,
What boots it us these wars to have begun? Fairfax.

What boots the regal circle on his head,
That long behind he trails his pompous robe?
Pep.

2. To enrich; to benefit.
And I will boot thee with what gift beside,
That modesty can beg. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

BOOT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Profit; gain; advantage; something given to mend the exchange.

My gravity
Wherein let no man hear me, I take pride,
Could I, with boot, change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. Shakspeare.

2. To boot. With advantage; over and above; besides.

Canst thou, O partial sleep, give thy repose
To the wet seaboy, in an hour so rude;
And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
With all appliances and means to boot,
Deny it to a king? Shakspeare.
Man is God's image; but a poor man is Christ's stamp to boot: both images regard.
Herbert.

He might have his mind and manners formed,
and be instructed to boot in several sciences. Locke.

That my leg is too long—
—No; that it is too little—
I'll wear a boot to make it somewhat rounder.

Shew'd him his room, where he must lodge that night,
Pull'd off his boots; and took away the light. Milt.
Bishop Wilkins says, he does not question but it will be as usual for a man to call for his wings, when he is going a journey, as it is now to call for his boots. Addison's Guardian.

2. A kind of rack for the leg, formerly used in Scotland for torturing criminals.
BOOT of a coach. The space between the coachman and the coach.

When cowardice pursues, and valour flies. Shakf.

I'll follow him no more with bootless pray'rs:
He seeks my life. Shakspeare.

2. Without success.

Doth not Brutus bootless kneel? Shakspeare.
Thrice from the banks of Wye,
And fancy bottom'd Severn, have I sent Him bootless home, and weather beaten back.
Shakspeare.

BO'OTY. n. f. [boot, Dutch; butin, Fr.]

1. Plunder; pillage; spoils gained from the enemy.

One way a band select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
Their booty. Milton.

His conscience is the hue and cry that pursues him; and when he reckons that he has gotten a booty, he has only caught a Tartar. L'Estrange.
For, should you to extortion be inclin'd,
Your cruel guilt will little booty find. Dryden.

2. Things gotten by robbery.

If I had a mind to be honest, I see fortune would not suffer me; she drops booties in my mouth. Shakspeare.

3. To play booty. To play dishonestly, with an intent to lose. The French use, Je suis botte, when they mean to say, I will not go.

We understand what we ought to do; but when we deliberate, we play booty against ourselves; our consciences direct us one way, our corruptions hurry us another. L'Estrange.

I have set this argument in the best light, that the ladies may not think that I write booty.
Dryden.

BOPE'EP. n. f. [from bo and peep.] The act of looking out, and drawing back as if frighted, or with the purpose to fright some other.

Then they for sudden joy did weep,
And I for sorrow fang,
That such a king should play bopeep,
And go the fools among. Shakspeare.

That serve instead of peaceful barriers,
To part th' engagements of their warriors,
Where both from side to side may leap,
And only encounter at bopeep. Hudibras.
There devil plays at bopeep, puts out his horns to do mischief, then shrinks them back for safety.
Dryden.

BO'RABLE. adj. [from bore.] That may be bored.

BORACHIO. n. f. [borachio, Span.] A drunkard.

absolute borachio. Constance.

BORAGE. n. f. [from borago, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

BORAMEZ. n. f. The Scythian lamb, generally known by the name of Agnus Scythicus.

Much wonder is made of the boramez, that strange plant-animal, or vegetable lamb of Tar-tary, which wolves delight to feed on: which hath the shape of a lamb, affordeth a bloody juice upon breaking, and liveth while the plants be consumed about it. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

BORAX. n. f. [borax, low Latin.] An artificial salt, prepared from sal ammoniac, nitre, calcined tartar, sea salt, and a school of lewdness, to instill vice into the unwary years of his poor children. South.

BORDER. n. f. [bord, Germ. borz, Fr.]

1. The outer part or edge of any thing.

They have looking glasses bordered with broad *border*s or crystals, and great counterfeit precious stones. Baron.

The light must strike on the middle, and extend its greatest rays on the principal figures; diminishing by degrees, as it comes nearer and nearer to the borders. Dryden.

2. The march or edge of a country; the confine.

If a prince keep his residence on the border of his dominions, the remote parts will rebel; but if he make the centre his seat, he shall easily keep them in obedience. Spenser.

3. The outer part of a garment, generally adorned with needlework, or ornaments.
4. A bank raised round a garden, and set with flowers; a narrow rank of herbs or flowers.

There he arriving, round about doth fly
From bed to bed, from one to other border;
And takes survey, with curious busy eye,
Of every flower and herb there set in order.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty crown'd;
Such various ways the spacious alleys lead,
My doubtful muse knows not what path to tread.

To BORDER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To confine upon; to touch something else at the side or edge: with upon.

It bordereth upon the province of Croatia, which, in time past, had continual wars with the Turk's garisons. Knoles.

To BORDER. v. a.

1. To adorn with a border of ornaments.
2. To reach; to touch; to confine upon; to be contiguous to.

Sheba and Raamah are those parts of Arabia, which border the sea called the Persian gulf. Raleigh.

BORDERER. n. f. [from border.] He that dwells on the borders, extreme parts, or confines; he that dwells next to any place.

They of those marches, gracious sovereign!
Shall be a wall sufficient to defend
Our inland from the piteous borderers. Shakspeare.

An ordinary horse will carry two ficks of sand; and, of such, the borderers on the sea do bestow sixty at least in every acre; but most husbands double that number. Carew.

The easiest to be drawn
To our society, and to aid the war;
The raiet for their feat being next borderers
On Italy; and that they abound with horse.

The king of Scots in person, with Perkin in his company, entered with a great army, though it chiefly consisted of borderers, being raised somewhat suddenly. Bacon.

Sends opposite, in shaggy armour clad,
Her borderers; on mutual slaughter bent,
They rend their countries. Philips.

To BORDERAGE. v. n. [from border.] To plunder the borders. Not in use.

Long time in peace his realm establish'd,
Yet oft annoy'd with sundry borderings
Of neighbour Scots, and foreign scattellings.

To BORE. v. a. [borean, Sax.]

1. To pierce in a hole.
I'll believe as soon,
This whole earth, may be bor'd; and that the moon
May through the centre creep. Shakspeare.

Mulberries will be bore, if you bore the trunk of the tree through, and thru, into the pieces bore'd, wedges of some hot tie s.

But Capys, and the graver sort, thought fit
The Greeks suspected present to commit
To seas or flames; at least, to search and bore
The sides, and what that space contains to explore.
Denham.

2. To hollow.

Take the barrel of a long gun, perfectly bored, and set it upright, and take a bullet exactly fit for it; and then, if you suck at the mouth of the barrel never so gently, the bullet will come up so forcibly, that it will hazard the striking out your teeth. Digby.

3. To make by piercing.

These diminutive caterpillars are able, by degrees, to pierce or bore their way into a tree, with very small holes; which, after they are fully entered, grow together. Ray.

4. To pierce; to break through.

Consider, reader, what fatigues I've known,
What riots seen, what bustling crowds I bor'd,
How oft I cross'd where cuts and coaches roar'd.
Gay.

To BORE. v. n.

That one might bourgeon where another fell!
Still would I give thee work. Dryden.

BOURN. n. f. [borne, Fr.]

1. A bound; a limit.
Bourn, bound of land, tith, vineyard, none.
Shakspeare.

That undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
No traveller returns. Shakspeare.

False,
As dice are to be with'd by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine. Shakspeare.
I know each lane, and every alley green,
And every bowky bourn from side to side. Miln.

2. [from burn, Saxon.] A brook; a torrent: whence many towns, seated near brooks, have names ending in bourn. It is not now used in either sense; though the second continues in the Scottish dialect.

Ne swelling Neptune, ne loud thund'ring
Jove,
Can change my cheer; or make me ever mourn:
My little boat can safely pass this perilous bourn.
Spenser.

To BOUSE. v. n. [buysen, Dutch.] To drink lavishly; to tope.

As he rode, he somewhat still did eat,
And in hand did bear a boufing can,
Of which he sipt. Fairy Queen.

BOU'SY. adj. [from bouffe.] Drunken.

With a long legend of romantick things,
Which in his cup the boufy poet sings. Dryd.

The guests upon the day appointed came,
Each boufy farmer with his snip'ring dame. King.

BOU. n. f. [botta, Ital.] A turn; as much of an action as is performed at one time, without interruption; a single part of any action carried on by successive intervals.

The play began: Pas durst not Cosma chace;
But did intend next bout with her to meet. Sidney.

Ladies, that have your feet
Unplagued with corns, we'll have a bout. Shaksp.

When in your motion you are hot,
As make your bouts more violent to that end,
He calls for drink. Shakspeare.

If he chance to 'scape this dismal bout,
The former legates are blotted out. Dryden.

A weasel seized a bat; the bat begged for life:
says the weasel, I give no quarter to birds: says the bat, I am a mouse; look on my body: so he got off for that bout. L'Esrange.

We'll see when 'tis enough,
Or if it want the nice concluding bout. King.

BOUIEFEU. n. f. [French.] An incendiary; one who kindles feuds and discontents. Now disused.

Animated by a base fellow, called John à Chamber, a very boutefeu, who bore much sway among the vulgar, they entered into open rebellion. Bacon.

Nur could ever any order be obtained impartially to punish the known boutefeus, and open incendiaries. King Charles.

Besides the herd of boutefeus,
We set on work within the house. Hudibras.

BOUTISALE. n. f. [I suppose from bouty
or booty, and sale.] A sale at a cheap rate, as booty or plunder is commonly fold.

BOUITS RIMEZ. [French.] The last words or rhimes of a number of verses given to be filled up.

To BOW. v. a. [buzen, Saxon]

1. To bend, or infect. It founds as now, or bow.

A threepence bow'd would hire me,
Old as I am, to queen it. Shakspeare.

Orpheus, with his lute, made trees,
And the mountain tops that freeze,
Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.

Some bow the vines, which bury'd in the plain,
Their tops in distant arches rise again. Dryden.

The mind has not been made obedient to discipline, when at first it was most tender and most easy to be bow'd. Locke.

2. To bend the body in token of respect or submission.

They came to meet him, and bow'd themselves to the ground before him. 2 Kings.

Is it to bow down his head as a bulrush, and to spread sackcloth and ashes under him? wilt thou call this a fast, and an acceptable day to the Lord? Isaiah.

3. To bend, or incline, in condescension.

Let it not grieve thee to bow down thine ear to the poor, and give him a friendly answer. Ecclesi.

4. To depress; to crush.

Are you to gospel'd,
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave
And beggar'd yours for ever? Shakspeare.

Now waiting years my former strength confound,
And added woes may bow me to the ground. Pope.

To Bow. v. n.

1. To bend; to suffer flexure.

2. To make a reverence.

Rather let my head
Stoop to the block, than these knees bow to any,
Save to the God of heav'n, and to my king. Shakspeare.

This is the great idol to which the world bows;
to this we pay our devoutest homage. D of Piety.

Admir'd, ador'd, by all the circling crowd,
For where'er she turn'd her face, they bow'd. Dryden.

3. To stoop.

The people bow'd down upon their knees to drink. Judges.

4. To sink under pressure.

They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden. Isaiah.

Bow. n. f. [from the verb. It is pronounced, like the verb, as now, bow.]

An act of reverence or submission, by bending the body.

Some clergy too he would allow,
Nor quarrel'd at their awkward bow. Swift.

Bow. n. f. [pronounced as no, lo, without any regard to the v.]

1. An instrument of war, made by holding wood or metal bent with a string, which, by its spring, shoots arrows with great force.

Take, I pray thee, thy weapons, thy quiver, and thy bow, and go out to the field, and take me some venison. Genesis.

The white faith of his'try cannot show,
That e'er the market yet could beat the bow. Alleyne's Henry VII.

BOX. n. f. [box, Saxon; busius, Lat.] A tree.

The leaves are pennate, and evergreen; it hath male flowers, that are produced at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree; the fruit is shaped like a porridge-pot inverted, and is divided into three cells, containing two seeds in each, which, when ripe, are cast forth by the elasticity of the vessels. The wood is very useful for engraving, and mathematical instrument makers; being so hard, close, and ponderous, as to sink in water. Müller.

There are two sorts; the dwarf box, and a taller sort. The dwarf box is good for borders, and is easily kept in order, with one clipping in the year. It will increase of slips set in March, or about Bartholomew tide; and will prosper on cold barren hills, where nothing else will grow. Montmer.

Box. n. f. [box, Sax. byfle, Germ.]

1. A case made of wood, or other matter, to hold any thing. It is distinguished from chest, as the less from the greater. It is supposed to have its name from the box wood.

A magnet, though but in an ivory box, will, through the box, send forth his embracing virtue to a beloved needle. Sidney.

About his shelves

A beggarly account of empty boxes. Shakspeare.

The lion's head is to open a most wide voracious mouth, which shall take in letters and papers. There will be under it a box, of which the key will be kept in my custody, to receive such papers as are dropped into it. Steele.

This casket India's glowing gems unlocks,
And all Arabia breathes from yonder box. Pope.

2. The case of the mariners compass.
3. The chest into which money given is put.
So many more, so every one was us'd,
* That to give largely to the box refus'd. Spenser.
4. The seats in the playhouse, where the ladies are placed.

'Tis left to you; the boxes and the pit
Are sovereign judges of this sort of wit. Dryden.
She glares in balls, front boxes, and the ring;
A vain, unquiet, glittering, wretched thing. Pope.

BRACHYGRAPHY. n. f. [βρ χυρ, short, and γράφω, to write.] The art or practice of writing in a short compass.

All the certainty of those high pretenders, bating what they have of the first principles, and the word of God, may be circumscribed by as small a circle as the creed, when brachygraphy had confined it within the compass of a penny. Glanville.

BRACK. n. f. [from break.] A breach; a broken part.

The place was but weak, and the bracks fair; but the defendants, by resolution, supplied all the defects. Hayward.

Let them compare my work with what is taught in the schools, and if they find in theirs many bracks and short ends, which cannot be spun into an even piece; and, in mine, a fair coherence throughout; I shall promise myself an acquiescence. Digby.

BRACKET. n. f. [a term of carpentry.] A piece of wood fixed for the support of something.

Let your shelves be laid upon bracket, being about two feet wide, and edged with a small lath. Mortimer.

BRACKISH. adj. [brack, Dutch.] Salt; somewhat salt: it is used particularly of the water of the sea.

Pits upon the sea shore turn into fresh water, by percolation of the salt through the sand; but it is farther noted, after a time, the water in such pits will become brackish again. Bacon.

When I had gain'd the brow and top,
A lake of brackish waters on the ground
Was all I found. Herbert.

The wise contriver, on his end intent,
Mix'd them with salt, and season'd all the feat.
What other cause could this effect produce?
The brackish tincture through the main diffuse?
Blackmore.

BRACKISHNESS. n. f. [from brackish.] Saltness in a small degree.

All the artificial stainings hitherto leave a brackishness in salt water, that makes it unfit for animal uses. Cheyne.

BRAD, being an initial, signifies broad, spacious, from the Saxon brad, and the Gothic brad. Gibson.

BRAD. n. f. A sort of nail to floor rooms with. They are about the size of a tenpenny nail, but have not their heads made with a shoulder over their shank, as other nails, but are made pretty thick towards the upper end, that the very top may be driven into, and buried in, the board they nail down; so that the tops of these brads will not catch the thrums of the mops, when the floor is washing. Mason.

To BRAG. v. n. [braggeren, Dutch.]

1. To boast; to display ostentatiously; to tell boastful stories.

Thou coward! art thou bragging to the stars?
Telling the bushes that thou look'dst for wars,
And wilt not come? Shakespeare.

Mark me, with what violence she first loved the Moor, but for bragging, and telling her fantastical liss. Shakespeare.

In bragging out some of their private tenets, as if they were the established doctrine of the church of England. Sanderson.

The rebels were grown so strong there, that they intended then, as they already bragged, to come over and make this the seat of war. Clarend.

Mrs. Bull's condition was looked upon as desperate by all the men of art: but there were those that bragged they had an infallible ointment. Arbutnot.

2. It has of before the thing boasted.

Knowledge being the only thing wherof we poor old men can brag, we cannot make it known but by utterance. Sidney.

Verona brags of him,

To be a virtuous and well-govern'd youth. Shak.

Every Lufy little terribler now

Swells with the praises which he gives himself,
And taking sanctuary in the crowd,
Brags of his impudence, and seems to mend. Roscommon.

3. On is used, but improperly.

Yet lo! in me what authors have to brag on,
Reduce'd at last to his in my own dragon. Pope.

BRAG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A boast; a proud expression.

A kind of conceit

Cæsar made here; but made not here his brag
Of came, and saw, and overcame. Shakespeare.

It was such a new thing for the Spaniards to receive so little hurt, upon dealing with the English, as Avellaneda made great brags of it, for no greater matter than the waiting upon the English afar off. Bacon.

2. The thing boasted.

Beauty is nature's brag, and must be shewn
In courts, at feasts, and high solemnities,
Where most may wonder. Milton.

BRAGGADO'CIO. n. f. [from brag.] A puffing, swelling, boasting fellow.

The world abounds in terrible fanfarons, in this masque of men of honour; but these braggadocios are easy to be detected. L'Esrange.

By the plot, you may guess much of the characters of the persons; a braggadocio captain, a parasite, and a lady of pleasure. Dryden.

BRAGGARDISM. n. f. [from brag.] Boastfulness; vain ostentation.

BRAGGART. adj. [from brag.] Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

Shall I, none's slave, of high born or rais'd men

Fear frowns; and my mistress, truth, betray thee
To th' huffing, braggart, puff nobility? Donne.

BRAGGART. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster.

Who knows himself a braggart

Let him tear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass. Shakespeare.

BRAGGER. n. f. [from brag.] A boaster; an ostentatious fellow.

Such as have had opportunity to sound these braggers thoroughly, by having sometimes endured the penance of their sottish company, have found them, in converse, empty, and insipid. Souch.

BRAGLESS. adj. [from brag.] Without a boast; without ostentation.

The brut is, Hector's slain, and by Achilles.—
—If it is so, bragless let it be,
Great Hector was as good a man as he. Shaksp.

BRAGGLY. adv. [from brag.] Finely; so as it may be bragged.

See't not think hawthorn stud,

How braggly it begins to bud,
And utter his tender head?

Flora now ca leth forth each flower,
And bids him make ready Marat's tower. Spenser.

To BRAID. v. a. [bjardan, Saxon.] To weave together.

Clothe the serpent fly,

Insinuating, wove with gordian twine
His braided train, and of his fatal gule Gave proof unheeded. Mason.

Other wands, lying loosely, may each of them be easily dissociated from the rest; but, when braided into a basket, they cohere strongly. Bosc.

A ribband did the braided tresses bind,
The rest was loose; and wanton'd in the wind.
Dryden.

Since in braided gold her foot is bound,
And a long trailing manteau sweeps the ground,
Her shoes disdain the street. Gay.
BRAID. n. f. [from the verb.] A texture;
a knot, or complication of something woven together.

Listen where thou art sitting,
Under the glassy, cool, translucent wave,
In twisted braids of lilies knitting
The luscious train of thy amber-dropping hair.
Milton.

No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck,
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids, with various ribbon bound.
Prior.

BRAID. adj. [To brede, in Chaucer, is to deceive.] An old word, which seems to signify deceitful.

Since Frenchmen are so braid,
Marry 'em that will. I'll live and die a maid.
Shakespeare.

BRAILS. n. f. [sea term.] Small ropes reeved through blocks, which are seized on either side the ties, a little off upon the yard; so that they come down before the sails of a ship, and are fastened at the skirt of the sail to the crengles.
Their use is, when the sail is furled across, to haul up its bunt, that it may the more readily be taken up or let fall.
Harris.

BRAIN. n. f. [brægen, Sax. bræyne,
Dutch.]

1. That collection of vessels and organs in the head, from which sense and motion arise.

The brain is divided into cerebrum and cerebel-lum. Cerebrum is that part of the brain which possesses all the upper and forepart of the crastium, being separated from the cerebellum by the second process of the dura mater, under which the cerebellum is situated. The substance of the Brain is distinguished into outer and inner; the former is called corticalis, cinerea, or glandulosa; the latter, medullaris, alba, or nervea.
Chefelden.

If I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out, and battered, and give them to a dog for a new year's gift. Shakespeare.

That man proportionably hath the largest brain,
I did, I confess, somewhat doubt, and conceived it might have failed in birds, especially such as having little bodies, have yet large craniums, and seem to contain much brain, as snipes and wood-cocks; but, upon trial, I find it very true.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. That part in which the understanding is placed; therefore taken for the understanding.

The force they are under is a real force, and that of their fate but an imaginary conceived one; the one but in their brains, the other on their shoulders. Hammond.

A man is first a geometrician in his brain, before he be such in his hand. Hale.

3. Sometimes the affections: this is not common, nor proper.

My son Egeus! had he a hand to write this, a heart and brain to breed it in? Shakespeare.

To BRAIN. v. a. [from the noun.] To dash out the brains; to kill by beating out the brains.

Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him
i' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou may'st brain
him. Shakespeare.

Outlaws of nature,
Fit to be shot and brain'd, without a process,

To stop infection; that's their proper death.
Dryden.

Next seiz'd two wretches more, and headlong cut,

Brain'd on the rock, his second dire repast. Pope.
BRAINISH. adj. [from brain.] Hotheaded;
furious; as cerebrofus in Latin.

In his lawless fit,
Behind the arras hearing something stir,
He whips his rapier out, and cries, a rat!
And in his brainish apprehension, kills
The unseen good old man. Shakespeare.

BRAINLESS. adj. [from brain.] Silly;
thoughtless; witless.

Some brainless men have, by great travel and labour, brought to pass, that the church is now ashamed of nothing more than of saints. Hooker.

If the dull brainless Ajax come safe off,
We'll dress him up in voices. Shakespeare.

The brainless tripling, who, expell'd the town,
Damn'd the stiff college and pedantick gown,
Aw'd by thy name, is dumb. Tieckel.

BRAINPAN. n. f. [from brain and pan.]
The skull containing the brains.

With those huge bellows in his hands, he blows
New fire into my head; my brainpan glows.
Dryden.

BRAIN-SICK. adj. [from brain and sick.]
Diseas'd in the understanding; addle-headed; giddy; thoughtless.

Nor once deject the courage of our minds,
Because Cassandra's mad; her brain-sick raptures Cannot distaste the goodness of a quarrel. Shaksp.
They were brain-sick men, who could neither endure the government of their king, nor yet thankfully receive the authors of their deliverance. Knolles.

BRAIN-SICKLY. adv. [from brain-sick.]
Weakly; headily.

Why, worthy Thane,
You do unbend your noble strength to think
So brain-sickly of things. Shakespeare.

choleric speech. Knolles.

BRAKE. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
1. A thicket of brambles, or of thorns.

A dog of this town used daily to fetch meat, and to carry the same onto a blind mastiff, that lay in a brake without the town. Carew.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues, which neither know

My faculties nor person; let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakespeare.

In every bush and brake, where hap may find
The serpent sleeping. Milton.

Full little thought of him the gentle knight,
Who, flying death, had there conceal'd his flight;
In brake, and brambles hid, and shunning mortal fight. Dryden's Fables.

2. It is said originally to mean fern.

BRAKE. n. f.

horses, unwilling to be shod, are confined during that operation.

BRAKY. adj. [from brake.] Thorny;
prickly; rough.

Redeem arts from their rough and braky seats,
where they lie hid and overgrown with thorns, to a pure open light, where they may take the eye, and may be taken by the hand. Ben Jonson.

BRA'MBLE. n. f. [bræmblay; Sax. rubus,
Lat.]

1. The blackberry bush; the raspberry bush, or hindberry. Miller.

Content with food which nature freely bred,
On wildings and on strawberries they led;
Cornels and bramble berries gave the rest,
And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

2. It is taken, in popular language, for any rough prickly shrub.

The bush my bed, the bramble was my bow'r,
The woods can witness many a woful store.

Spenser.
There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, desying the name of Rosalind. Shakespeare.

Thy younglings, Cuddy, are but just awake,
No shrutles shall the bramble bush forsake. Gay.

BRA'MBLING. n. f. A bird, called also a mountain chaffinch. Diſt.

BRAN. n. f. [brænna, Ital.] The husks of corn ground; the refuse of the sieve.

From me do back receive the flow'r of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shakespeare.

The citizens were driven to great distress for want of victuals; bread they made of the coarsest bran, moulded in cloaths; for otherwise it would not cleave together. Hoyward.

In the sifting of fourteen years of power and favour, all that came out could not be pure meal, but must have among it a certain mixture of padar and bran, in this lower age of human fragility. Watson.

Then water him, and drinking what he can,
Encourage him to thirst again with bran. Dryden.

BRANCH. n. f. [branche, French.]

1. The shoot of a tree from one of the main boughs.

Why grow the branches, when the root is gone?
Why wither not the leaves that want their tap?
Shakespeare.

2. Any member or part of the whole; any distinct article; any section or subdivision.

Your oaths are past, and now subscribe your names,

That his own hand may strike his honour down,
That violates the smallest branch herein. Shaksp.

The belief of this was of special importance, to confirm our hopes of another life, on which so many branches of christian piety do immediately depend. Hammond.

In the several branches of justice and charity, comprehended in those general rules, of loving our neighbour as ourselves, and of doing to others as we would have them do to us, there is nothing but what is most fit and reasonable. Tillotson.

This precept will oblige us to perform our duty, according to the nature of the various branches of
it. Rogers.

3. Any part that shoots out from the rest.

And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side. Exodus.

Farrier's Dict.
9. [In architecture.] The arches of Gothic vaults; which arches transferring from one angle to another, diagonal wife, form a cross between the other arches, which make the sides of the square, of which the arches are diagonals.
Harris.

To BRANCH, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To spread in branches.
They were trained together in their childhoods,
and there rooted betwixt them such an affection,
which cannot chouse but branch now. Shakspeare.
The cause of scattering the boughs, is the hasty breaking forth of the sap; and therefore those trees rise not in a body of any height, but branch near the ground. The cause of the pyramis, is the keeping in of the sap, long before it branch, and the spending of it, when it beginneth to branch, by equal degrees. Bacon.
Plant it round with shade
Of laurel, evergreen, and branching plain. Milt.
Straight as a line in beauteous order stood
Of oaks unhorn a venerable wood;
Fifth was the grass beneath, and ev'ry tree
At distance planted, in a due degree,
Their branching arms in air, with equal space,
Sturch'd to their neighbours with a long embrace.
Dryden.
One sees her thighs transform'd, another views
Her arms shot out, and branching into boughs.
Addison.
2. To spread into separate and distinct parts and subdivisions.
The Alps at the one end, and the long range of Appenines that passes through the body of it, branch out, on all sides, into several different divisions. Addison.
If we would weigh, and keep in our minds,
what it is we are considering, that would best instruct us when we should, or should not, branch into father distinctions. Locke.

Bore up his branching head. Milton.
- To BRANCH, v. a.
1. To divide as into branches.
The spirits of things animate are all continued within themselves, and are branch-ed into canals, as blood is; and the spirits have not only branches, but certain cells or seats, where the principal spirits do reside. Bacon.
2. To adorn with needlework, representing flowers and sprigs.
In robe of lily white she was array'd,
That from her shoulder to her heel down raught,
The train whereof loose far behind her stray'd, Branch-d with gold and pearl, most richly wrought. Spenser.
- BRANCHER, n. f. [from branch.]
1. One that shoots out into branches.
If their child be not such a speedy spreader and brancher, like the vine, yet he may yield, with a little longer expectation, as useful and more sober fruit than the other. Wotton.
2. [branchier, Fr.] In falconry, a young hawk.

- I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the eyes, the brancher, and the two sorts of leitners. Walton.

I lose myself; better I were not yours,
Than yours to branchless. Shakspeare.
- BRANCHY, adj. [from branch.] Full of branches; spreading.
Trees on trees o'erthrown
Fall crackling round him, and the forests groan;
Sudden full twenty on the plain are throw'd,
And lopp'd and lighten'd of their branchy load.
Pope.
What carriage can bear away all the various, rude, and unwieldy loppings of a branchy tree at once? Watts.
- BRAND, n. f. [brand, Saxon.]
1. A stick lighted, or fit to be lighted, in the fire.
Have I caught thee?
He that parts us shall bring a brand from heav'n,
And fire us hence. Shakspeare.
Take it, she said, and when your needs require,
This little brand will serve to light your fire.
Dryden.
If, with double diligence, they labour to retrieve the hours they have lost, they shall be saved;
though this is a service of great difficulty, and like a brand plucked out of the fire. Rogers.
2. [brando, Ital. brandar, Runick.] A sword, in old language.
They looking back, all th' eastern side beheld
Of Paradise, so late their happy seat!
Wav'd over by that flaming brand; the gate
With dreadful faces throng'd, and fiery arms.
Milton.
3. A thunderbolt.
The fire omnipotent prepares the brand,
By Vulcan wrought, and arms his potent hand.
Gramville.
4. A mark made by burning a criminal with a hot iron, to note him as infamous; a stigma.
Clerks convict should be burned in the hand,
both because they might taste of some corporal punishment, and that they might carry a brand of infamy. Bacon.
The rules of good and evil are inverted, and a brand of infamy passes for a badge of honour.
L'Estrange.
5. Any note of infamy.
Where did his wit on learning fix a brand,
And rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.
- To BRAND, v. a. [brandn, Dutch.] To mark with a brand, or note of infamy.
Have I liv'd thus long a wife, a true one,
Never yet branded with suspicion? Shakspeare.
The king was after branded, by Peikin's proclamation, for an execrable breaker of the rights of holy church. Bacon.
Brand not their actions with so foul a name;
Pitv, at least, what we are forc'd to blame. Dryd.
Ha! dare not for thy life, I charge thee, dare not
To brand the spotless virtue of my prince. Rowe.
Our Punick faitu
Is infamous, and branded to a proverb. Addison.
The speaker of the pardons answered him an easier way, by branding him with heresy. Atterb.
- BRANDGOOSE, n. f. A kind of wild fowl, less than a common goose, having its breast and wings of a dark colour. Dict.
- To BRANDISH, v. a. [from brand, a sword.]
1. To wave, or shake, or flourish, as a weapon.

- Brave Macbeth,
Disdaining fortune, with his brand'd steel,
Like valour's minion, carved out his passage.
Shakspeare.
He said, and brand'sing at once his blade,
With eager pace pursued the flaming shade. Dryd.
Let me march their leader, not their prince.
And at the head of your renown'd Cydonians Brandish this sword. Smith.

warmed with coals on brasiers. Arbuthnot.
- BRAS'IL, } n. f. An American wood, BRAZ'IL, } commonly supposed to have been thus denominated, because first brought from Brasil, though Huet shews it had been known by that name many years before the discovery of that country; and the best sort comes from Fernambuc. It is used by turners, and takes a good polish; but chiefly in dying, though it gives but a spurious red.
Chambers.
- BRASS, n. f. [bray, Sax. prás, Welsh.]
1. A yellow metal made by mixing copper with lapis calaminaris. It is used, in popular language, for any kind of metal in which copper has a part.

And pluck commination of his fate
From brassy bosoms, and rough hearts of flint. Shakspeare.

3. Impudent.

BRAST. particip. adj. [from burst.] Burst; broken. Obsolete.

Their creature never past,
That back returned without heavenly grace,
But dreadful furies which their chains have brast,
And damned sprights sent forth to make ill men agast. Spenser.

BRAU. n. f. [its etymology is uncertain; braut, in Saxon, signifies a blanket; from which, perhaps, the modern signification may have come.]

1. A child, so called in contempt.

He leads them like a thing
Made by some other deity than nature,
That shapes man better; and they follow him,
Against us brats, with no less confidence,
Than boys pursuing summer butterflies. Shaksp.

This brat is none of mine:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shakspeare.

The friends, that got the brats, were poison'd too;

In this sad case what could our vermin do? Roscom.
Jupiter summoned all the birds and beasts before him, with their brats and little ones, to see which of them had the prettiest children. L'Espr.

I shall live to see the invisible lady, to whom I was obliged, and whom I never beheld since she was a brat in hanging sleeves. Swift.

The Trojan hero did affright,
Who bravely twice renew'd the fight. DeVaux.

Your valour bravely did th' assault sustain,
And fill'd the moats and ditches with the slain. Dryden.

BRA'VERY. n. f. [from brave.]

1. Courage; magnanimity; generosity; gallantry.

It denotes no great bravery of mind, to do that out of a desire of fame, which we could not be prompted to by a generous passion for the glory of him that made us. Spectator.

Juba, to all the bravery of a hero,
Aids softest love and more than female sweetness. Addison.

2. Splendour; magnificence.

Where all the bravery that eye may see,
And all the happiness that heart desire,
Is to be found. Spenser.

3. Show; ostentation.

Nor is the church the murderer's refuge made. Gay.

TO BRAWL. v. n. [from brouiller, or brauler, French.]

1. To quarrel noisily and indecently.

She troubled was, alas! that it might be,
With tedious brawlings of her parents dear. Sidney.

Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent. Shakf.
How now? Sir John! what, are you brawling
here?

Does this become your place, your time, your business? Shakspeare's Henry iv.

Their bawling cannon enrag'd to the mouths,
Till their soul-tearing clamours have brawl'd
down

The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city. Shakf.
In council he gives licence to her tongue,
Loquacious, brawling, even in the wrong. Dryden.

Leave all noisy contest, all immodest clamours, brawling language, and especially all personal scandal and scurrility, to the meanest part of the vulgar world. Watts.

win;
Equal your merits, equal is your din!
But that this well-disputed game may end,
Sound forth my brayers! and the welkin rend.
Pope.

2. [With printers; from To bray, or beat.] An instrument to temper the ink.

TO BRAZE. v. a. [from brass.]
1. To folder with brass.

If the nut be not to be cast in brass, but only hath a worm brazed into it, this niceness is not so absolutely necessary, because that worm is first tun'd up, and how'd into the grooves of the spindle; and you may try that before it is brazed in the nut. Mason.

2. To harden to impudence.

I have so often blushed to acknowledge him,
that now I am braz'd to it. Shaksp. K. Lear.

If damned custom hath not braz'd it to,
That it is proof and bulwark against sense. Shak.

Slew friends and foes, and in the smoke retir'd.
Dryden.

4. The violation of a law or contract.

That oath would sure contain them greatly, or the breach of it bring them to shorter vengeance.
Spenser.

What are those breaches of the law of nature and nations, which do forfeit all right in a nation to govern? Bacon.

Breach of duty towards our neighbours, still involves in it a breach of duty towards God.
South.

The laws of the gospel are the only standing rules of morality; and the penalties affixed by God to the breach of those laws, the only guards that can effectually restrain men within the true bounds of decency and virtue. Rogers.

5. The opening in a coast.

But th' heedful boatman strongly forth did stretch
His brawny arms, and all his body strain;
That th' utmost sandy breach they shortly fetch,
While the dread danger does behind remain.
Spenser.

plicity of the inquisitive fools, the trade would not find them bread. L'Esperance.

This dowager, on whom my tale I found,
A simple sober life in patience led,
And had but just enough to buy her bread.
Dryden.

When I submit to such indignities,
Make me a citizen, a senator of Rome;
To sell my country, with my voice, for bread.
Philips.

I neither have been bred a scholar, a soldier, nor to any kind of business; this creates uncertainty in my mind, fearing I shall in time want bread. Spectator.

3. Support of life at large.

God is pleas'd to try our patience by the ingratitude of those who, having eaten of our bread, have lift up themselves against us.
King Charles.

But sometimes virtue starves, while vice is fed;
What then? is the reward of virtue bread? Pope.

BREAD-CHIPPER. n. f. [from bread and chip.] One that chips bread; a baker's servant; an under butler.

No abuse, Hal, on my honour; no abuse.—

She had her breeding at my father's charge,
A poor physician's daughter. Shakspeare.

I am a gentleman of blood and breeding. Shak.
I hope to see it a piece of none of the nicest breeding, to be acquainted with the laws of nature.
Glanvill's Sceptis, Pref.

2. Manners; knowledge of ceremony.

As men of breeding, sometimes men of wit,
T' avoid great errors, must the less commit.
Pope.

The Graces from the court did next provide Breeding, and wit, and air, and decent pride.
Swift.

3. Nurture; care to bring up from the infant state.

Why was my breeding order'd and prescrib'd,
As of a person separate to God,
Design'd for great exploits? Milton's Agonistes.

BRESE. n. f. [bṛṣa, Saxon.] A stinging fly; the gadfly.

The breeze upon her, like a cow in June,
Hoists sail, and flies. Shakspeare.

The learned write, the insect breeze
Is but the mongrel prince of bees. Hudibras.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze, their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.
Dryden.

BREEZE. n. f. [bressa, Ital.] A gentle gale; a soft wind.

We find that these hottest regions of the world, seated under the equinoctial line, or near it, are so refreshed with a daily gale of easterly wind, which the Spaniards call breeze, that doth ever more blow stronger in the heat of the day.
Raleigh.

From land a gentle breeze arose by night,
Serenely shone the stars, the moon was bright,
And the sea trembled with her silver light. Dryd.

Gradual sinks the breeze
Into a perfect calm; that not a breath
Is heard to quiver through the closing wood.
Thomson.

BRE'EZY. adj. [from breeze.] Fanned with gales.

The sea, while zephyrs curl the swelling deep,
Basks on the breezy shore, in grateful sleep,
His oozy limbs. Pope.

BRE'HON. n. f. An Irish word.
In the case of murder, the brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a compense, which they call an eriaeh. Spenser.

BREME. adj. [from bremman, Sax. to rage or fume.] Cruel; sharp; severe.
Not used.

And when the shining sun laugheth once,
You deem the spring come at once;
But est, when you count, you flee from fear,
Comes the breme winter with chanifed brows,
Full of wrinkles, and frosty furiows. Spenser.

BRENT. adj. [from brennan, Sax. to burn.]
Burnt. Obsolete.

What flames, quoth he, when I thee present see
In danger rather to be drent than brent. F. Queen.

BREVIER. n. f. A particular size of letter used in printing; so called, probably, from being originally used in printing a breviary.

BRE'VITY. n. f. [brevitas, Lat.] Conciseness; shortness: contraction into few words.

Virgil, studying brevity, and having the command of his own language, could bring those words into a narrow compass, which a translator cannot render without circumlocutions. Dryden

To BREW. v. a. [brouwen, Dutch;
braven, German; bripan, Saxon.]

1. To make liquors by mixing several ingredients.

We have drinks also brewed with several herbs, and roots, and spices. Bacon.

Mercy guard me!
Hence with thy brew'd enchantments, foul deceiver!
Milton.

Take away these chalices; go, brew me a pottle of sack finely. Shakspeare.

4. Pope seems to use the word indeterminately.
Or brew fierce tempests on the waty main,
Or o'er the globe distil the kindly rain. Pope.

5. To contrive; to plot.
I found it to be the most malicious and fran-tick surmise, and the most contrary to his nature, that, I think, had ever been brewed from the beginning of the world, howsoever countenanced by a libellous pamphlet of a fugitive physician, even in print. Watson.

To BREW. v. n. To perform the office of a brewer.

I keep his house, and wash, wring, brew,
bake, scour, dress meat, and make the beds,
and do all myself. Shakspeare.

BREW. n. f. [from the verb.] Manner of brewing; or thing brewed.

Trial would be made of the like brew with potatoe roots, or burr roots, or the pith of anti-chokes, which are nourishing meats. Bacon.

BRE'WAGE. n. f. [from brew.] Mixture of various things.

Go, brew me a pottle of sack finely.
—With eggs, fir?—
—Simple of itself: I'll no pallet-sperm in my brewage. Shakspeare.

BRE'WER. n. f. [from brew.] A man whose profession it is to make beer.
When brewers mar their malt with water.
Shakspeare.

Men every day eat and drink, though I think no man can demonstrate out of Euclid, or Apullonius, that his baker, or brewer, or cook, has not conveyed poison into his meat or drink.
Tilletson.

BRE'WHOUSE. n. f. [from brew and house.] A house appropriated to brewing.

In our brew-houses, bakehouses, and kitchens, are made divers drinks, breads, and meats. Bacon.

What an ocean of brewis shall I swim in!
Beau. and Flete. Dicc.

BRI'AR. n. f. See BRIER.

BRIBE. n. f. [Bribe, in French, originally signifies a piece of bread, and is applied to any piece taken from the rest; it is therefore likely, that a bribe originally signified, among us, a share of any thing unjustly got.] A reward given to pervert the judgment, or corrupt the conduct.

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
For taking bribes here of the Sardians. Shaksp.

Nor lets my Jupiter to gold ascribe,
When he turn'd himself into a bribe. Waller.

If a man be covetous, profits or bribes may put him to the test. L'Esfrange.

There's joy when to wild will you laws prescribe,
When you bid fortune carry back her bribe.
Dryden.

To BRIBE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gain by bribes; to give bribes, rewards, or hire, to bad purposes.

The great, 'tis true, can still th' electing tribe;
The bard may supplicate, but cannot bribe.

Prologue to Good-natured Man.

2. It is seldom, and not properly, used in a good sense.

How powerful are chaste vows! the wind and tide

You brib'd to combat on the English side. Dryd.

BRIBER. n. f. [from bribe.] One that pays for corrupt practices.

Affection is still a briber of the judgment; and it his hard for a man to admit a reason against the thing he loves; or to confess the force of an argument against an interest. South.

BRIBERY. n. f. [from bribe.] The crime of taking or giving rewards for bad practices.

There was a law made by the Romans, against the bribery and extortion of the governors of provinces: before, says Cicero, the governors did bribe and extort as much as was sufficient for themselves; but now they bribe and extort as much as may be enough not only for themselves, but for judges, jurors, and magistrates. Bacon.

No bribery of courts, or cabals of factions, or advantages of fortune, can remove him from the solid foundations of honour and fidelity. Dryden.

BRICK. n. f. [brick, Dutch; brique, Fr. according to Menage, from imbrex, Lat. whence brica.]

1. A mass of burnt clay, squared for the use of builders.

For whatsoever doth to alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteratio major; as coals made of wood, or bricks of earth. Bacon.

They generally gain enough by the rubbish and bricks, which the present architects value much beyond those of a modern make, to defray the charges of their search. Addison.

But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
On passive paper, or on solid brick. Pope.

2. A loaf shaped like a brick.

To BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.] To lay with bricks.

I observed it in pits wrought for tile and brick-clay. Woodward.

BRICKDUST. n. f. [from brick and dust.] Dust made by pounding bricks.

This ingenious author, being thus sharp set, got together a convenient quantity of brickdust, and disposed of it into several papers. Spectator.

BRICKEARTH. n. f. [from brick and earth.] Earth used in making bricks.

They grow very well both on the hazelly brick-earths, and on gravel. Meritimer.

BRICK-KILN. n. f. [from brick and kiln.] A kiln; a place to burn bricks.

Like the Israelites in the brick-kiln, they multiplied the more for their oppression. Decay of Piety.

BRICKLAYER. n. f. [from brick and lay.] A man whose trade it is to build with bricks; a brick-mason.

The elder of them, being put to nurse, and ignorant of his birth and parentage, became a bricklayer when he came to age. Shaksp.

If you had liv'd, sir,

Time enough to have been interpreter

To Babel's bricklayers, sure the tow'r had flood.

Donne.

BRICKMAKER. n. f. [from brick and make.] One whose trade it is to make bricks.

They are common in clay pits; but the brick-makers pick them out of the clay. Woodward.

BRIDAL. adj. [from bride.] Belonging to a wedding; nuptial; connubial.

Our wedding cheer to a sad funeral feast,

Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change,

Our bridal flowers serve for a buried corpse. Shaksp.

Come, I will bring thee to thy bridal chamber.

Shakspere.

The amorous bird of night

Sung spoutal, and bid haste the evening star,

On his hill-top to light the bridal lamp. Milton.

Your ill-meaning politician lords,

Under pretence of bridal friends and guests,

Appointed to await me thirty spies. Milton.

When to my arms thou brought'st thy virgin love,

Fair angels sung our bridal hymn above. Dryden.

With all the pump of woe, and sorrow's pride!

Oh early lost! oh fitter to be led

In cheerful splendour to the bridal bed! Wolfs.

For her the spouse prepares the bridal ring,

For her white virgins hymeneals sing. Pope.

BRIDAL. n. f. The nuptial festival.

Nay, we must think men are not gods;

Nor of them look for such observance always,

As fits the bridal. Shakspere's Othello.

Sweet day, so cool, so calm, so bright,

The bridal of the earth and sky,

Sweet dews shall weep thy fall to-night;

For thou must die. Herbert.

In death's dark how'rs our brideals we will keep,

And his cold hand

Shall draw the curtain when we go to sleep. Dryden.

BRIDE. n. f. [byj'd, Saxon; brudur, in Runick, signifies a beautiful woman.]

A woman new married.

Help me mine own love's praises to refund,

Ne let the fame of any be envy'd;

So Orpheus did for his own bride. Spenser.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide

Th' important enterprize, and give the bride. Dryden.

These are tributes due from pious brides,

From a chaste matron, and a virtuous wife. Smith.

BRIDEBED. n. f. [from bride and bed.] Marriage-bed.

Now until the break of day,

Through this house each fairy stray;

To the best bridebed will we,

Which by us shall blessed be. Shakspere.

Would David's son, religious, just, and brave,

To the first bridebed of the world receive

A foreigner, a heathen, and a slave? Prior.

BRIDECAKE. n. f. [from bride and cake.] A cake distributed to the guests at the wedding.

With the phant'ies of hey-troll,

Troll about the bridal bowl,

And divide the broad bridecake

Round about the bridgetake. Ben Jonson.

The writer, resolved to try his fortune, fasted all day, and, that he might be sure of dreaming upon something at night, procured an handsome slice of bridecake, which he placed very conveniently under his pillow. Spectator.

BRIDEGROOM. n. f. [from bride and groom.] A new married man.

As are those sweet sounds in break of day,

That creep into the dreaming bridegrooms ear,

And summon him to marriage. Shakspere.

Why, happy bridegroom!

Why dost thou steal so soon away to bed? Dryd.

BRIDEMEN. } n. f. The attendants on

BRIDEMAIDS. } the bride and bridegroom.

BRIDESTAKE. n. f. [from bride and stake.]

You bride faction, and our hearts command. Waller.

To BRIDLE. v. n. To hold up the head.

BRIDLEHAND. n. f. [from bride and hand.] The hand which holds the bridle in riding.

In the tuning, one might perceive the bride-hand something gently stir; but, indeed, so gently, as it did rather dilate virtue than use violence. Steele.

The heat of summer put his blood into a ferment, which affected his bridehand with great pain. Hogson.

BRIEF. adj. [brevis, Lat. brief, Fr.]

1. Short; concise. It is now seldom used but of words.

A play there is my lord, some ten words long,

Which is as brief as I have known a play;

But by ten words, my lord, it is too long,

Which makes it tedious. Shakspere.

I will be mild and gentle in my words,—

—And brief, good mother, for I am in haste. Shakspere.

I must begin with rudiments of art,

To teach you gamut in a brifer sort,

More pleasant, pretty, and effectual. Shaksp.

They nothing doubt prevailing, and to make it brief wars. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

The brief is that which expresseth much in little.

Ben Jonson.
If I had quoted more words, I had quoted more profaneness; and therefore Mr. Congreve has reason to thank me for being brief.

2. Contracted; narrow.

The shrine of Venus, or fraught pight Minerva,
Postures beyond brief nature.

Shakespeare.
BRIEF. n. f. [brief, Dutch, a letter.]

1. A writing of any kind.

There is a brief, how many sports are ripe:
Make choice of which your nightings will see first.

The apostol' call letters are of a twofold kind and difference; viz. some are called briefs, because they are comprised in a short and compendious way of writing.

2. A short extract, or epitome.

But how you must begin this enterprize,
I will your highness thus in brief advise.

I doubt not but I shall make it plain, as far as a sum or brief can make a cause plain.

The brief of this transaction is, these springs that arise here are impregnated with vitriol.

3. In law.

A writ whereby a man is summoned to answer to any action; or it is any precept of the king in writing, issuing out of any court, whereby he commands any thing to be done.

4. The writing given the pleaders, containing the case.

The brief with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd.

5. Letters patent, giving licence to a charitable collection for any publick or private loss.

BRIGANDINE. } n. f. [from brigand.]
BRIGANTINE. } n. f. [from brigand.]

1. A light vessel; such as has been formerly used by corsairs or pirates.

Like as a warlike brigantine, apply'd
To fight, lays forth her threatful pikes afore
The engines, which in them sad death do hide.

In your brigantine you sail'd to see
The Adriatick wedded.

The consul-obliged him to deliver up his fleet, and restore the ships, reserving only to himself two brigantines.

2. A coat of mail.

Then put on all thy gorgeous arms, thy helmet
And brigantine of brags, thy broad habergeon, Vantbrats, and greves.

BRIGHT. adj. [beorht, Saxon.]

1. Shining; full of light.

Through a cloud
Drawn round about the like a radiant shrine,
Dark, with excessive bright thy skirts appear.

Then shook the sacred shrine and sudden light Sprung through the roof, and made the temple bright.

2. Shining, as a body reflecting light.

Bright brags, and brighter domes.
Thy eyes are seen in diamonds bright.
Bright as the sun her eyes the gazers strike.

3. Clear; transparent.

From the brightest wines
He'd turn abortive.
While the bright Scime, t' exalt the soul,
With sparkling plenty crowns the bowl.

4. Clear; evident.

He must not proceed too swiftly, that he may with more ease, with brighter evidence, and with surer success, draw the learner on.

5. Replendent with charms.

Thy beauty appears,
In its graces and airs,
All bright as an angel new diopt from the sky.

O Liberty, thou goddess heav'nly bright,
Profuse of bliss, and pregnant with delight!

Bright as the sun, and like the morning fair,
Such Chloe is, and common as the air.

To-day black onions threat the brightest fair
That e'er engag'd a watchful spirit's care.
Thou more dreaded foe, bright beauty, shine.

6. Illuminated with science; sparkling with wit.

Gen'rous, gay, and gallant nation,
Great in arms, and bright in art.
If parts allure thee, think how Bacon thin'd,
The wisest, brightest, meanest of mankind.

7. Illustrious; glorious.

This is the world, if not the only stain,
I'th' brightest annals of a female reign.

TO BRIGHTEN. v. a. [from bright.]

1. To make bright; to make to shine.

The purple morning, rising with the year,
Salutes the spring, as her celestial eyes
Adorn the world, and brighten up the skies.

2. To make luminous by light from without.

An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart, and brightens all my sorrow,
Like gleams of sunshine in a lowering sky.

3. To make gay, or cheerful.

Hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest.

4. To make illustrious.

The present queen would brighten her character, if she would exert her authority to infuse virtues into her people.

Yet time ennobles or degrades each line;
It brighten'd Craggs's, and may darken thine.

5. To make acute, or witty.

TO BRIGHTEN. v. n. To grow bright; to clear up; as, the sky brightens.

But let a lord once own the happy lines,
How the file brightens, how the sense refines!

2. The upper edge of any vessel.

How my head in ointment swims!
How my cup o'erlooks her brims!

So when with crackling flames a cauldron fries,
The bubbling waters from the bottom rise,
Above the brims they force their fiery way.

Thus in a basin drop a fluting,
Then fill the vessel to the brim,
You shall observe as you are filling,

The pond'rous metal seems to swim. Swift.

3. The top of any liquor.

The feet of the priests, that bare the ark, were dipped in the brim of the water. J. Hall.

4. The bank of a fountain.

It told me it was Cynthia's own,
Within whose cheerful brims
That curious nymph had oft been known
To bathe her snowy limbs. Dryden.

To BRIM. v. a. [from the noun.] To fill to the top.

May thy brimmed waves for this,
Their toll tribute never miss,
From a thousand hills. Milton.

This said, a double wreath Evander twin'd;
And poplars black and white his temples bmd:
Then brims his ample bowl; with like design,
The rest invoke the gods with sprinkled wine. Dryden.

To BRIM. v. n. To be full to the brim.

Now horrid frays
Commence, the brimming glasses now are hurl'd
With dire intent. Philips.

BRIMFUL. adj. [from brim and full.]

Full to the top; overcharged.
Measure my case, how by thy beauty's filling
With seed of woes my heart brimful is chang'd. Sidney.

We have try'd the utmost of our friends;
Our legions are brimful, our cause is ripe. Shaksp.
Her brimful eyes, that ready flood,
And only wanted will to weep a flood,
Releas'd their watry store. Dryden's Fables.

The good old king at parting wrung my hand,
His eyes brimful of tears; then sighing cry'd, Prithce, be careful of my son. Addison's Cato.

BRIMFULNESS. n. f. [from brimful.] Fullness to the top.

The Seat on his unfurnish'd kingdom

The question for bringing the king to justice was immediately put, and carried without any opposition, that I can find. Swift.

7. To lead by degrees.

A due consideration of the vanities of the world, will naturally bring us to the contempt of it; and the contempt of the world will as certainly bring us home to ourselves. L'Esfrange.

The understanding should be brought to the difficult and knotty parts of knowledge by insensible degrees. Locke.

8. To recal; to summons.

But those, and more than I to mind can bring,
Menaeas has not yet forgot to sing. Dryden.

9. To induce; to prevail upon.

The nature of the things, contained in those words, would not suffer him to think otherwise, low, or whensoever, he is brought to reflect on them. Locke.

It seems so preposterous a thing to men, to make themselves unhappy in order to happiness; that they do not easily bring themselves to it. Locke.

Profitable employments would no less a diversion than any of the idle sports in fashion, if men could be brought to delight in them. Locke.

10. To bring about. [See ABOUT.] To bring to pass; to effect.

This he conceives not hard to bring about, if all of you would join to help him out. Dryden.

This turn of mind threw off the oppositions of envy and competition; it enabled him to gain the most vain and impracticable into his designs, and to bring about several great events, for the advantage of the publick. Addison's Frecholder.

11. To bring forth. To give birth to; to produce.

The good queen,
For she is good, hath brought you forth a daughter:
Here 'tis; commend it to your blessing. Shaksp.

More wonderful
Than that which, by creation, first brought forth Light out of darkness! Paradise Lost.

Bewail thy falsehood, and the pious works
It hath brought forth, to make thee memorable
Among illustrious women, faithful wives. Milton's Agonist.

Bellona leads thee to thy lover's hand;
Another queen brings forth another brand,
To burn with foreign fires her native land! Dryden.

Idleness and luxury bring forth poverty and want; and this tempts men to injustice, and that causeth enmity and animosity. Tillotson.

The value of land is raised, when it is fitted to bring forth a greater quantity of any valuable product. Locke.

For now I stand, as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by wave;
Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will, in his brinish bowels, swallow him. Shaks.

BRINISHNESS. n. f. [from brinish.] Saltiness; tendency to saltiness.

BRINK. n. f. [brink, Danish.] The edge of any place, as of a precipice or a river.

Th' amazed flames stand gather'd in a heap,
And from the precipice's brink retire,
Afraid to venture on so large a leap. Dryden.

We stand therefore on the brinks and confines
Of those states at the day of doom. Atterbury.

So have I seen, from Severn's brink,
A flock of geese jump down together;
Swim where the bud of Jove would sink,
And, swimming, never wet a feather. Swift.

BRINY. adj. [from brine.] Salt.

He, who first the passage try'd,
In harden'd oak his heat did hide;
Or his, at least, in hollow wood,
Who tempted first the briny flood. Dryden.

Then, briny seas, and tasteful springs, farewell,
Where fountain nymphs, confus'd with Nereids, dwell. Addison.

A musick or briny taste seems to be produced by a mixture of an acid and alkaline salt; for spirit of salt, and salt of tartar, mixed, produce a salt like sea salt. Arbutnot.

BRIVONY. See BRONY.

BRISK. adj. [brusque, French.]

1. Lively; vivacious; gay; sprightly: applied to men.

Pr'ythee, die, and set me free,

1. To spit; to pierce as with a spit.

Were now the general of our gracious empress,
As in good time he may, from Ireland coming,
Bringing rebellion broached on his sword. Shaksp.

He felled men as one would mow hay, and sometimes broached a great number of them upon his pike, as one would carry little birds spitted upon a stick. Hakewill.

2. To pierce a vessel in order to draw the liquor; to tap.

3. To open any store.

I will notably provide, that you shall want neither weapons, victuals, nor aid; I will open the old armouries, I will broach my store, and bring forth my stores. Knolles.

4. To let out any thing.

And now the field of death, the lists,
Were enter'd by antagonists,
And blood was ready to be broach'd,
When Hudibras in haste approach'd. Hudibras.

5. To give out, or utter any thing.

This error, that Pilon was Ganges, was first broach'd by Josephus. Religh.

Those who were the chief instruments of raising the noise, made use of those very opinions themselves had broached, for arguments to prove, that the change of ministers was dangerous.
Swift's Examiner.

BRO'ACHER. n. f. [from broach.]

1. A spit.

The youth approach'd the fire, and, as it burn'd,

On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they tear'd;

These morsels stay'd their stomachs. Dryden.

2. An opener, or utterer of any thing;
the suit author.

There is much pride and vanity in the affectation of being the first broacher of an heretical opinion. L'Esfrange.

Numerous parties denominate themselves, not from the grand Author and Finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions. Decay of Piety.

This opinion is commonly, but falsely, attributed to Aristotle, not as its first broacher, but as its ablest patron. Cheyne.

BROAD. adj. [brad, Saxon.]

1. Wide; extended in breadth, distinguished from length; not narrow.

The weeds that his broad spreading leaves did shelter

Are pull'd up, root and all. Shakspere.

The top may be justly said to grow broader,
as the bottom narrower. Temple.

Of all your knowledge this vain fruit you have,
To walk with eyes broad open to your grave.
Dryden.

So lofty was the pile, a Parthian bow,
With vigour drawn, must lend the shaft below,
The bottom was full twenty fathom broad. Dryd.

He launch'd the fiery bolt from pole to pole,
Broad burst the lightnings, deep the thunders roll.
Pope.

2. Large.

To keep him at a distance from falsehood, and cunning, which has always a broad mixture of falsehood; this is the fittest preparation of a child for wisdom. Locke.

3. Clear; open; not sheltered; not affording concealment.

In mean time he, with cunning to conceal
All thought of this from others, himself bore
In broad house, with the wooers, us before.
Chapman.

It no longer seeks the shelter of night and darkness, but appears in the broadest light.
Decay of Piety.

If children were left alone in the dark, they would be no more afraid than in broad sunshine.
Locke.

4. Gross; coarse.

The reeve and the miller are distinguished from each other, as much as the lady priores and the broad-speaking, gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryd.

Love made him doubt his broad barbarian sound;

By love, his want of words and wit he found.
Dryden.

If open vice be what you drive at,
A name to broad will ne'er connive at. Dryden.

The broadest mirth unfeeling folly wears,
Less pleasing far than virtue's very tears. Pope.

Room for my loud! three jockeys in his train;
Six huntmen with a shout precede his chair;
He grins, and looks broad nonsense with a stare.
Pope.

5. Obscene; fulsome; tending to obscenity.

As chaste and modest as he is esteem'd, it cannot be denied, but in some places he is broad and fulsome. Dryden.

Though now arraign'd, he read with some delight;

Because he seems to chew the cud again,
When his broad comment makes the text too plain. Dryden.

6. Bold; not delicate; not reserved.

Who can speak broader than he that has no house to put his head in? Such may rail against great buildings. Shakspere.

From broad words, and 'cause he fail'd
His presence at the tyrant's feast, I hear,
Macduff lives in disgrace. Shakspere.

BROAD as long. Equal upon the whole.

The mobile are still for levelling; that is to say, for advancing themselves: for it is as broad as long, whether they rise to others, or bring others down to them. L'Esfrange.

BROAD-CLOTH. n. f. [from broad and clath.] A fine kind of cloth.

Thus, a wife taylor is not pinching,
But turns at ev'ry seam an inch in:

Or else, be sure, your broad-cloth breeches
Will ne'er be smooth, nor hold their fitches. Swift.

BROAD-EYED. adj. [from broad and eye.]
Having a wide survey.

In despite of broad-eyed watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:

But, ah! I will not. Shakspere.

Should you the rich brocaded suit unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold.
Gay.

BRO'CAGE. n. f. [from broke.]

1. The gain gotten by promoting bargains.

Yet sure his honesty,

Got him small gains, but thameless flattery,
And filthy brocage, and unseemly thifts,
And borrow hate, and some good ladies gifts.
Spenser.

2. The hire given for any unlawful office.

As for the politick and wholesome laws, they were interpreted to be but brocage of an usurer, thereby to woo and win the hearts of the people.
Bacon.

3. The trade of dealing in old things; the trade of a broker.

Poor poet ape, that would be thought our chief,
Whose works are e'en the stippety of wit,
From brocage is become to bald a thief,
As we, the robb'd, leave rage, and pity it.
Ben Jonson.

4. The transaction of business for other men.

So much as the quantity of money is lessened, so much must the share of every one that has a right to this money be the less; whether he be landholder, for his goods; or labourer, for his hire; or merchant, for his brocage. Locke.

BROCCOLI. n. f. [Italian.] A species of cabbage.

Content with little, I can piddle here
On broccoli and mustard round the year;
But ancient friends, tho' poor or out of play,
That touch my bell, I cannot turn away. Pope.

The common hen, all the while she is broody, sits, and leads her chickens, and uses a voice which we call clogging. Ruy.

BROOK. n. f. [bꝛoc, or bꝛoca, Sax.] A running water, less than a river.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Shakspeare.

Or many grateful altars I would rear
Of grassy turf; and pile up every stone
Of lustre from the brook; in memory,
Of monument to ages. Milton.

And to Cephissus' brook their way pursue:
The stream was troubled, but the ford they knew. Dryden.

Springs make little rivulets; those united,
make brooks; and those coming together, make rivers, which empty themselves into the sea. Locke.

To BROOK. v. a. [bꝛucan, Sax.] To bear; to endure; to support.

Even they, which brook it worst that men should tell them of their duties, when they are told the same by a law, think very well and reasonably of it. Hooker.

A thousand more mischances than this one
Have learned me to brook this patiently. Shakf.

How use doth laced a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns. Shakspeare.

Heav'n, the seat of bliss,
Brooks not the works of violence and war. Milton.

Most men can much rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools. South.

Restraint thou wilt not brook; but think it hard,
Your prudence is not trusted as your guard. Dryd.

To BROOK. v. n. To endure; to be content.

He, in these wars, had flatly refused his aid;

And heal the harms of thwarting thunder blew. Milton.

The receptacle of waters, into which the mouths of all rivers must empty themselves, ought to have so spacious a surface, that as much water may be continually brushed off by the winds, and exhaled by the sun, as, besides what falls again, is brought into it by all the rivers. Bentley.

5. To move as the brush.

A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy wings
Over these eyes. Dryden.

To BRUSH. v. n.

1. To move with haste: a ludicrous word, applied to men.

Nor wept his fate, nor cast a pitying eye,
Nor took him down, but brush'd regardless by. Dryden.

The French had gather'd all their force,
And William met them in all way;
Yet off they brush'd, both foot and horse. Prior.

2. To fly over; to skim lightly.

Nor love is always of a vicious kind,
But oft to virtuous acts inflames the mud,
Awakes the sleepy vigour of the soul,
And, brushing o'er, adds motion to the pool. Dryden.

BRUSHER. n. f. [from brush.] He that uses a brush.

Sir Henry Wotton used to say, that critics were like brushers of noblemen's cloaths. Bacon.

BRUSHWOOD. n. f. [from brush and wood.] I know not whether it may not be corrupted from rowserwood.

Rough, low, close, shrubby thickets; small wood fit for fire.

It smokes, and then with trembling breath the blows,
Till in a cheerful blaze the flames arose.

With brasswood, and with chips, she strengthens these,
And adds at last the boughs of rotten trees.

Dryden.

BRUSHY. adj. [from brush.] Rough or shaggy, like a brush.

I suspected, that it might have proceeded from some small unheeded drop of blood, wiped off by the brushy substance of the nerve, from the knife, wherewith it was cut.

Poyle.

TO BRUSTLE. v. a. [braysthan, Sax.] To crackle; to make a small noise. Skinner.

BRUTAL. adj. [brutal, French; from brute.]

1. That belongs to a brute; that we have in common with brutes.

There is no opposing brutal force to the stratagems of human reason.

L'Esrange.

2. Savage; cruel; inhuman.

The brutal business of the war

Is manag'd by thy dreadful servants care. Dryd.

BRUTA'LITY. n. f. [brutalité, Fr.] Savagencess; churlishness; inhumanity.

Courage, in an ill-bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality.

Locke.

TO BRUTALIZE. v. n. [brutaliser, Fr.] To grow brutal or savage.

Upon being carried to the Cape of Good Hope, he mixed, in a kind of transport, with his countrymen, brutalized with them in their habit and manners, and would never again return to his foreign acquaintance.

Addison.

TO BRUTALIZE. v. a. To make brutal or savage.

BRUTALLY. adv. [from brutal.] Churlishly; inhumanly; cruelly.

Mrs. Bull aimed a knife at John, though John threw a bottle at her head, very brutally indeed.

Arbutnot.

BRUTE. adj. [brutus, Latin.]

1. Senseless; unconscious.

Nor yet are we so low and base as their atheism would depress us; not walking statues of clay, not the sons of brute earth, whose final inheritance is death and corruption.

Bentley.

2. Savage; irrational; ferine.

Even brute animals make use of this artificial way of making divers motions, to have several significations to call, warn, chide, cherish, threaten.

Helder.

In the promulgation of the Mosaic law, if so much as a brute beast touched the mountain, it was to be struck through with a dart.

South.

3. Bestial; in common with beasts.

Then to subdue, and quell, through all the earth,
Brute violence, and proud tyrannick pow'r. Milt.

4. Rough; ferocious; uncivilized.

The brute philosopher, who ne'er has prov'd
The joy of living, or of being lov'd. Pope.

BRUTE. n. f. [from the adjective.] An irrational creature; a creature without reason; a savage.

What may this mean? Language of man pronounced

By tongue of brute and human sense express'd!

Milton.

To those three present impulses, of sense, memory, and instinct, most, if not all, the sagacities of brutes may be reduced.

Hale.

Brutes may be considered as either aerial, terrestrial, aquatic, or amphibious. I call those aerial which have wings, wherewith they can support themselves in the air; terrestrial are those, whose only place of rest is upon the earth; aquatic are those, whose constant abode is upon the water.

Locke.

Heav'n from all creatures hides the book of fate,
All but the page prescribed, this present state;
From brutes what men, from men what spirits know;

Or who could suffer being here below? Pope.

VOL. I.

TO BRUTE. v. a. [written ill for bruit.]

To report.

This, once bruted through the army, filled them all with heaviness.

Knolles.

O thou fallacious woman! am I then brutified?
Ay; I feel it here; I spout, I bud, I am ripe
To bear him.

Congreve.

BRUTISH. adj. [from brute.]

1. Bestial; resembling a beast.

Of is, Isis, Orus, and their train,

With numinous snakes and soceries abus'd

Phaetick Egypt, and her priests, to seek

Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms.

Milton.

2. Having the qualities of a brute; rough; savage; ferocious.

Brutes, and brutish men, are commonly more able to bear pain than others.

Grew.

3. Gross; carnal.

For thou thyself hast been a libertine,

As sensual as the brutish sting itself. Shakespeare.

After he has slept himself into some use of himself, by much ado he staggers to his table again, and there acts over the same brutish scene.

South.

4. Ignorant; untaught; uncivilized.

They were not so brutish, that they could be ignorant to call upon the name of God. Hooker.

BRUTISHLY. adv. [from brutish.] In the manner of a brute; savagely; irrationally; grossly.

I am not so diffident of myself, as brutishly to submit to any man's dictates.

King Charles.

For a man to found a confident practice upon a disputable principle, is brutishly to outrun his reason.

South.

BRUTISHNESS. n. f. [from brutish.] Brutality; savageness.

Or if it be his fate to meet

With folks who have more wealth than wit,

He loves cheap port, and double hub,

And settles in the humdrum club. Prior.

BUBBLE. n. f. [bobbel, Dutch.]

1. A small bladder of water; a film of water filled with wind.

Bubbles are in the form of a hemisphere; air within, and a little skin of water without; and it seemeth somewhat strange, that the air should rise so swiftly, while it is in the water, and when it cometh to the top, should be stayed by so weak a cover as that of the bubble's.

Bacon.

The colours of bubbles with which children play, are various, and change their situation variously, without any respect to confine or shadow.

Newton.

2. Any thing which wants solidity and firmness; any thing that is more specious than real.

The earl of Lincoln was induced to participate, not lightly upon the strength of the proceedings there, which was but a bubble, but upon letters from the lady Margaret.

Bacon.

Then a soldier,

Seeking the bubble's reputation,

Even in the cannon's mouth. Shakespeare.

War, he sang, is toil and trouble,

Honour but an empty bubble,

Fighting still, and still destroying. Dryden.

3. A cheat; a false show.

The nation then too late will find,
Directors promises but wind,
South-sea at best a mighty bubble. Swift.

4. The person cheated.

Cease dearest mother, cease to chide;

Gany's a cheat, and I'm a bubble;

Yet why this great excess of trouble? Prior.

He has been my bubble these twenty years, and, to my certain knowledge, understands no more of his own affairs, than a child in swaddling clothes.

Arbutnot.

TO BUBBLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To rise in bubbles.

Alas! a crimson river of warm blood,

Like to a bubbling fountain stir'd with wind,

Doth rise and fall. Shakespeare.

Adder's fork, and Hindworm's sting,

Lizard's leg, and owlet's wing;

For a charm of powerful trouble,

Like a hellbroth boil and bubble. Shakespeare.

Still bubble on, and pour forth blood and tears.

Dryd n.

The same spring suffers at some times a very manifest remission of its heat; at others, as manifest an increase of it; yea, sometimes to that excess, as to make it boil and bubble with extreme heat.

Woodward.

2. To run with a gentle noise.

For thee the bubbling springs appear'd to mourn,
And whispering pines made vows for thy return.

Dryden.

Not bubbling fountains to the thirfty swain,

Not show'rs to lakes, or sunshine to the bee,

Are half so charming as thy sight to me. Pope.

TO BUBBLE. v. a. To cheat; a cant word.

He tells me, with great passion, that she has bubbled him out of his youth; and has drilled him on to five and fifty.

Addison.

Charles Mather could not bubble a young beau better with a toy.

Arbutnot.

BUBBLER. n. f. [from bubble.] A cheat.

What words can suffice to express, how infinitely I esteem you, above all the great ones in this part of the world; above all the Jews, jobbers, and bubblers!

Digby to Pope.

BUBBY. n. f. A woman's breast.

Poh! say they, to see a handsome, brisk, genteel, young fellow, so much govern'd by a doating old woman; why don't you go and suck the bubby?

Arbutnot.

BUBO. n. f. [Lat. from βουβων, the groin.]

That part of the groin from the bending of the thigh to the scrotum; and therefore all tumours in that part are called buboes.

BUCKET. n. f. [baquet, French.]

- The vessel in which water is drawn out of a well.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well,
That owes two buckets, filling one another;
The emptier ever dancing in the air,
The other down unfeen, and full of water. Shak.
Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Bentley.
- The vessels in which water is carried, particularly to quench a fire.
Now buckets grow throng'd, and, busy as by day,
Some run for buckets to the hallow'd quire;
Some out the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.
The porringers, that in a row
Hung high, and made a glitt'ring show,
To a less noble substance chang'd,
Were now but leathern buckets rang'd. Swift.

BUCKLE. n. f. [bwcel, Welsh, and the same in the Armorick; boucle, French.]

- A link of metal, with a tongue or catch, made to fasten one thing to another.
Fair lined slippers for the cold,
With buckles of the purest gold. Shakspeare.
The chlamys was a sort of short cloak tied with a buckle, commonly to the right shoulder.
Three seal-rings; which after, melted down,
Form'd a wait buckle for his widow's gown. Pope.
- The state of the hair crisped and curled, by being kept long in the same state.
The greatest beau was dressed in a flaxen periwig; the wearer of it goes in his own hair at home, and lets his wig lie in buckle for a whole half year. Spectator.
That live-long wig, which Gorgon's self might own, Eternal buckle takes in Parian stone. Pope.

To BUCKLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

- To fasten with a buckle.
Like saphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knight-hood's bending nose. Shakspeare.

BUD. n. f. [bouton, Fr.] The first shoot of a plant; a gem.
Be as thou wast wont to be,
See as thou wast wont to see:
Dian's bud o'er Cupid's flower
Hath such force and blessed power. Shakspeare.
Writes say, as the most forward bud
Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly, blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime. Shakspeare.
When you the flow'rs for Chloë twine,
Why do you to her garland join
The meanest bud that falls from mine? Prior.
Insects wound the tender buds, with a long hollow trunk, and deposit an egg in the hole, with a sharp corroding liquor, that causeth a swelling in the leaf, and closeth the orifice. Bentley.

To BUD. v. n. [from the noun.]

- To put forth young shoots, or gems.
Bud forth as a rose growing by the brook of the field. Eccles.

BU'DGET. n. f. [bogette, French.]

- A bag, such as may be easily carried.
If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sowkin budget;
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it. Shakspeare.
Sir Robert Clifford, in whose bosom, or budget, most of Perkin's secrets were laid up, was come into England. Bacon.
His budget with corruptions cramm'd,
The contributions of the damn'd. Swift.
- It is used for a store, or stock.
It was nature, in fine, that brought off the cat, when the fox's whole budget of inventions failed him. L'Esfrange.

BUFF. n. f. [from buffalo.]

- A sort of leather prepared from the skin of the buffalo; used for waist belts, pouches, and military accoutrements.
A rosy chain of rheums, a visage rough,
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff. Dryden.

2. The skin of elk, and oxen dressed in oil, and prepared after the same manner as that of the buffalo.

3. A military coat made of thick leather, so that a blow cannot easily pierce it.
A hind, a fairy, pallels and rough,
A wolf, may worse, a fellow all in his. Shaksp.
To BUFF. v. a. [buffe, Fr.] To strike. Not in use.

There was a flock,
To have buff'd out the blood
From aught but a block. Ben Jonson.

Become the unworthy browe
Of buffaloes, salt goats, and hungry cows. Dryd.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffette, Fr.] A kind of cupboard; or set of shelves, where plate is set out to show, in a room of entertainment.

The rich buffet well-colour'd serpents grace,
And gaping Tritons spew to wash your face. Pope.

BUFFET. n. f. [buffeto, Ital.] A blow with the fist; a box on the ear.

O, I could divide myself, and go to buffets,
For moving such a dish of skimmed milk with so honourable an action. Shaksp.

A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
Has taken with equal thanks. Shaksp.

Go, baffled coward, lest I run upon thee,
And with one buffet lay thy structure low. Milt.

Round his hollow temples, and his ears,
His buckler beats; the sun of Neptune, stunn'd
With thine repeated buffets, quits the ground. Dryden.

To BUFFET. v. a. [from the noun.] To strike with the hand; to box; to beat.

Why, woman, your husband is in his old limes again; he so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, Peer out, peer out! that any madness, I ever yet beheld, seem'd but tameness. Shaksp.

Our ears are cudgell'd; not a word of his
But buffets better than a fist of France. Shaksp.

The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews; throwing it aside. Shaksp.

Instantly I plung'd into the sea,
And buffeting the billows to her rescue,
Redeem'd her life with half the loss of mine. Orway.

To BUFFET. v. n. To play a boxing-match.

No prince would think himself greatly honoured, to have his proclamation canvassed on a publick stage, and become the sport of buffoons. Watts.

2. A man that practises indecent raillery.
It is the nature of drolls and buffoons, to be insolent to those that will bear it, and slavish to others. L'Estrange.

The bold buff, whence they lead the green,
Then motion mimic, but with jest oblige. Garth.

BUFFOONERY. n. f. [from buffoon.]

1. The practice or art of a buffoon.
Coming, in an ill bred man, has the air, and escapes not the opinion, of brutality; learning becomes prod'ry, and wit buffonery. Locke.

2. Low jests; ridiculous pranks; scurrile mirth. Dryden places the accent improperly, on the first syllable.

Where publick ministers encourage buffonery, it is no wonder if buffoons set up for publick ministers. L'Estrange.

And whilst it lasts, let buffonery succeed,
To make us laugh; for never was more need. Dryden.

BUG. n. f. A stinking insect bred in old household stuff. In the following passage, wings are erroneously ascribed to it.

Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
This painted child of dirt, which stinks and stings. Pope.

BUG. } n. f. [It is derived by some BUGBEAR. } from big, by others from bug; bug, in Welsh, has the same meaning.] A frightful object; a walking spectre, imagined to be seen: generally now used for a false terror to frighten babes.

Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear,
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign. Fairy Queen.

Sir, spare your threats;
The bug which you would fright me with, I seek. Shaksp.

Hast not slept to-night? would he not, naughty man, let it sleep? a bugbear take him. Shaksp.

We have a horreur for uncouth monsters; but, upon experience, all these bugs grow familiar and easy to us. L'Estrange.

Such bugbear thoughts, once got into the tender minds of children, sink deep, so as not easily, if ever, to be got out again. Locke.

To the world, no bugbear is so great,
As want of figure, and a small estate. Pope.

BUGGINESS. n. f. [from buggy.] The state of being infected with bugs.

BUGGY. adj. [from bug.] Abounding with bugs.

BUGLE. } n. f. [from bugen, Sax.

Thou shalt not build an house unto my name. Corinthians.

When usurers tell their gold in the field,
And whores and lawds do churches build. Shaksp.

2. To raise in any laboured form.

When the head-dress was built up in a couple of cones and spires, which stood to excessively high on the side of the head, that a woman, who was but a pigmy without her head-dress, appeared like a Colossus upon putting it on. Speator.

3. To raise any thing on a support or foundation.

Love built on beauty, soon as beauty, dies;
Choose this face, chang'd by no deformities. Donne.

I would endeavour to destroy those curious, but groundless structures, that men have built up of opinions alone. Boyle.

To BUILD. v. n.

1. To play the architect.
To build, to plant, whatever you intend,
To rear the column, or the arch to bend. Pope.

2. To depend on; to rest on.

By a man's authority, we here understand the force which his word hath for the assurance of another's mind, that buildeth upon it. Hooker.

Some build rather upon the abusing of others, and putting tricks upon them, than upon foundnes of their own proceedings. Bacon.

Even those who had not tasted of your favours, yet built so much on the fame of your beneficence, that they bemoaned the loss of their expectations. Dryden.

This is certainly a much surer way, than to build on the interpretations of an author, who does not consider how the ancients used to think. Addison.

BUILDER. n. f. [from build.] He that builds; an architect.

But fore-accounting oft makes builders miss;
They found, they felt, they had no lease of bliss. Sidney.

When they, which had seen the beauty of the first temple built by Solomon, beheld how far it excelled the second, which had not builders of like abilities, the tears of their grieved eyes the prophets endeavoured, with comforts, to wipe away. Hooker.

Mark'd out for such an use, as if 'twere meant
To invite the builder, and his choice prevent. Deekam.

Her wings with lengthen'd honour let her spread,
And, by her greatness, shew her builder's fame. Prior.

BUILDING. n. f. [from build.] A fabrick; an edifice.

Thy sumptuous buildings, and thy wife's attire,
Have cost a mass of publick treasury. Shaksp.

View not this spire by measure giv'n
To buildings; rais'd by common hands;
That fabrick rises high as heav'n,
Whose basis on devotion stands. Prior.

Among the great variety of ancient coins which I saw at Rome, I could not but take particular notice of such as relate to any of the buildings or statues that are still extant. Addison.

BUILT. n. f. [from build.]

1. The form; the structure.

As is the built, so different is the fight;
Their mountain shot is on our fails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find. Dryden.

2. Species of building.

There is hardly any country, which has so little shipping as Ireland; the reason must be, the scarcity of timber proper for this built.

Temple.

BULB. n. f. [from bulbus, Lat.] A round body, or root.

Take up your early autumnal tulips, and bulbs, if you will remove them. Evelyn's Kalender.

If we consider the bulb, or ball of the eye, the exterior membrane, or coat thereof, is made thick, tough, or strong, that it is a very hard matter to make a rupture in it. Ray.

BULBA'CEOUS. adj. [bulbaceus, Lat.] The same as bulbous. Dist.

BULBOUS. adj. [from bulb.] Containing bulbs; consisting of bulbs; having round or roundish knobs.

There are of roots, bulbous roots, fibrous roots, and hirsute roots. And I take it, in the bulbous, the sap hasteneth most to the air and sun. Bacon.

Set up your traps for vermin, especially amongst your bulbous roots. Evelyn's Kalender.

Their leaves, after they are swelled out, like a bulbous root, to make the bottle, bend inward, or come again close to the stalk. Ray.

TO BULGE. v. n. [It was originally written bilge: bilge was the lower part of the ship, where it swelled out; from bulg, Sax. a bladder.]

1. To take in water; to founder.
Thrice round the ship was toft,
Then bulg'd at once, and in the deep was lost. Dryden.

2. To jut out.
The side, or part of the side of a wall, or any timber that bulges from its bottom or foundation, is said to batter, or hang over the foundation. Mason's Mechanical Exercises.

BULK. n. f. [bulcke, Dutch, the breast, or largest part of a man.]

1. Magnitude of material substance; mass.
Against these forces there were prepared near one hundred ships; not so great of bulk indeed, but of a more nimble motion, and more serviceable. Bacon's War with Spain.

The Spaniards and Portuguese have ships of great bulk; but fitter for the merchant than the man of war, for burden than for battle. Raleigh.

Though an animal arrives at its full growth at a certain age, perhaps it never comes to its full bulk till the last period of life. Arbutnot.

2. Size; quantity.
Things, or objects, cannot enter into the mind as they subsist in themselves, and by their own natural bulk pass into the apprehension; but they are taken in by their ideas. South.

3. The gross; the majority; the main mass.
Those very points, in which these wise men disagreed from the bulk of the people, are points in which they agreed with the received doctrines of our nature. Addison's Freholder.

Change in property, through the bulk of a nation, makes slow marches, and its due power always attends it. Swift.

The bulk of the debt must be lessened gradually. Swift.

4. Main fabrick.
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
That it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. Shakspeare.

5. The main part of a ship's cargo; as, to break bulk, is to open the cargo.

BULK. n. f. [from bielcke, Dan. a beam.] A part of a building jutting out.

Here stand behind this bulk. Straight will he come.

Wear thy good rapier bated, and put it home. Shakspeare.

The keeper coming up, found Jack with no life in him; he took down the body, and laid it on a bulk, and brought out the rope to the company. Arbutnot's History of J. Bull.

BULKHEAD. n. f. A partition made across a ship, with boards, whereby one part is divided from another. Harris.

BULKINESS. n. f. [from bulky.] Greatness of stature, or size.

BULKY. adj. [from bulk.] Of great size or stature.

Lateas, the bulkiest of the double race, Whom the spoil'd arms of slain Hæleus grace. Dryden.

Huge Telephus, a formidable page,
Cries vengeance; and Orestes' bulky page,
Unsatisfy'd with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers. Dryden.

The manner of sea engagements, which was to bore and sink the enemy's ships with the rostra, gave bulky and high ships a great advantage. Arbutnot.

BULL. n. f. [bulle, Dutch.]

1. The male of black-cattle; the male to a cow.

A gentlewoman, sir, and a kinswoman of my master's.—Even such kin as the parish heifers are to the town bull. Shakspeare.

Bulls are more crisp upon the forehead than cows. Bacon.

Best age to go to bull, or calve we hold,
Begins at four, and ends at ten years old. May.

2. In the scriptural sense, an enemy powerful, fierce, and violent.

Many bulls have compassed me: strong bulls of Basethan have beset me round. Psalms.

3. One of the twelve signs of the zodiack.

At last from Aries rolls the bouateous sun,
And the bright Bull receives him. Thomson.

4. A letter published by the pope.

A bull is letters called apostolick by the canonists, strengthened with a leaden seal, and containing in them the decrees and commandments of the pope or bishop of Rome. Ayliffe.

There was another sort of ornament wore by the young nobility, called bulle; round, or of the figure of a heart, hung about their necks like diamond crosses. Those bulle came afterwards to be hung to the diplomas of the emperors and popes, from whence they had the name of bulle. Arbutnot.

It was not till after a fresh bull of Leo's had declared how inflexible the court of Rome was in the point of abuses. Asterbury.

5. A blunder; a contradiction.

I confess it is what the English call a bull, in the expression, though the sense be manifest enough. Pope's Letters.

BULL, in composition, generally notes the large size of any thing, as bull-head, bultrif, bull-trout; and is therefore only an augmentative syllable, without much reference to its original signification.

BULL-BAITING. n. f. [from bull and bait.] The sport of baiting bulls with dogs.

What am I the wiser for knowing that Trajan was in the fifth year of his tribuneship, when he entertained the people with a horse-race or bull-baiting? Addison.

BULL-BEEF. n. f. [from bull and beef.] Coarse beef; the flesh of bulls.

They want their porridge and their fat bull-beef. Shakspeare.

BULL-BEGGAR. n. f. [This word probably came from the infolence of those who begged, or raised money by the pope's bull.] Something terrible; something to fright children with.

These fulminations from the Vatican were turned into ridicule; and, as they were called bull-beggars, they were used as words of scorn and contempt. Ayliffe.

BULL-CALF. n. f. [from bull and calf.] A he-calf; used for a stupid fellow: a term of reproach.

And, Falstaff, you carried your gats away as nibbly, and roared for mercy, and still ran and roared, as ever I heard a bull-calf. Shakspeare.

BULL-DOG. n. f. [from bull and dog.] A dog of a particular form, remarkable for his courage. He is used in baiting the bull; and this species is so peculiar to Britain, that they are said to degenerate when they are carried to other countries.

All the harmless part of him is that of a bull-dog; they are tame no longer than they are not offended. Addison.

BULL-FINCH. n. f. [rubicilla.] A small bird, that has neither song nor whistle of its own, yet is very apt to learn, if taught by the mouth. Phillips.

The blackbird whistles from the thorny brake,
The mellow bull-finch answers from the groves. Thomson.

BULL-FLY. } n. f. An insect. Phillips.
BULL-BEE. }

BULL-HEAD. n. f. [from bull and head.]

1. A stupid fellow; a blockhead.

2. A fish.
The miller's thumb, or bull-head, is a fish of no pleasing shape; it has a head big and flat, much greater than suitable to its body; a mouth very wide, and usually gaping; he is without teeth, but his lips are very rough, much like a file; he hath two fins near to his gills, which are roundish or crested; two fins under his belly, two on the back, one below the vent, and the fin of the tail is round. Nature hath painted the body of this fish with whitish, blackish, brownish spots. They are usually full of spawn all the summer, which swells their vents in the form of a dug. The bull-head begins to spawn in April; in winter we know no more what becomes of them than of eels or swallows. Walton.

3. A little black water vermin. Phillips.

BULL-TROUT. n. f. A large kind of trout.
There is, in Northumberland, a trout called a bull-trout, of a much greater length and bigness than any in these southern parts. Walton.

BULLET. n. f. [boulet, Fr.] A round ball of metal, usually shot out of guns.

As when the devilish iron engine, wrought
In deepest hell, and fram'd by furies skill,
With windy nitre and quick sulphur fraught,
And ram'd with bullet round, ordain'd to kill.

Glaſſer, their leader, desperately fighting amongst the foremost of the janizaries, was at once shot with two bullets, and slain. Knutler.

And as the bullet, so different is the fight;
Their mounting shot is on our sails design'd;
Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.

Dryden.

BULLION. n. f. [billon, Fr.] Gold or silver in the lump, unwrought, uncoined. The balance of trade must of necessity be returned in coin or bullion. Bacon.

A second multitude, With wondrous art, found out the massy ore, Severing each kind, and scum'd the bullion drofs. Milton.

Bullion is silver whose workmanship has no value. And thus foreign coin hath no value here for its stamp, and our coin is bullion in foreign dominions. Locke.

In every vessel there is stowage for immense treasures, when the cargo is pure bullion. Addison.

BULLITION. n. f. [from bullio, Lat.] The act or state of boiling.

There is to be observed in these dissolutions, which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are, as the bullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

BULLOCK. n. f. [from bull.] A young bull. Why, that's spoken like an honest drover: so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare.

Some drive the herds; here the fierce bullock feons

Th' appointed way, and runs with threat'ning horns. Corahy.

Until the transportation of cattle into England was prohibited, the quickest trade of ready money here was driven by the sale of young bullocks. Temple.

BULLY. n. f. [Skinner derives this word from burly, as a corruption in the pronunciation; which is very probably right: or from bulky, or bull-eyed; which are less probable. May it not come from bull, the pope's letter, implying the insolence of those who came invested with authority from the papal court?] A noisy, blustering, quarrelling fellow: it is generally taken for a man that has only the appearance of courage.

Mine host of the garter!—What says my bully rook? Speak scholarly and wisely. Shakspeare.

All on a sudden the doors flew open, and in comes a crew of roaring bullies, with their wenchs, their dogs, and their bottles. L'Esrange.

'Tis so ridic'ous, but so true withal, A bully cannot sleep without a brawl. Dryden.

A scolding hero is, at the worst, a more tolerable character than a bully in petticoats. Addison.

The little man is a bully in his nature, but, when he grows choleric, I confine him till his wrath is over. Addison.

To BULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To overbear with noise or menaces.

Prenties, parish clerks, and hectors meet, He that is drunk, or bully'd, pays the treat. King.

To BULLY. v. n. To be noisy and quarrelsome.

BULRUSH. n. f. [from bull and rush.] A large rush, such as grows in rivers, without knots; though Dryden has given it the epithet knotty; confounding it, probably, with the reed.

To make fine cages for the nightingale, And baskets of bulrushes, was my wont. Spenser.

All my praises are but as a bulrush cast upon a stream; they are born by the strength of the current. Dryden.

The edges were with bending osiers crown'd; The knotty bulrush next in order stood, And all within of reeds, a trembling wood. Dryd.

BULWARK. n. f. [bolwercke, Dutch; probably only from its strength and largeness.]

1. What is now called a bastion.

But him the ignine made quickly to retreat, Encountering fierce with single sword in hand,

And 'twixt him and his lord did like a bulwark stand. Spenser.

They oft repair

Their earthen bulwarks 'gainst the ocean flood. Fairfax.

We have bulwarks round us;

Within our walls are troops enur'd to toil. Addison.

2. A fortification.

Taking away needless bulwarks, divers were demolished upon the sea coasts. Hayward.

Our naval strength is a bulwark to the nation. Addison.

3. A security; a screen; a shelter.

Some making the wars their bulwark, that have before gored the gentle bosom of peace with pillage and robbery. Shakspeare.

To BULWARK. v. a. [from the noun.]

To fortify; to strengthen with bulwarks.

And yet no bulwark'd town, or distant coast, Preserves the beauteous youth from being seen. Addison.

The wisest agent telling the saddest tale, Sometime for threefoot stool mistaketh me, Then slip I from her bum, down topples she. Shakspeare.

This said, he gently rais'd the knight, And set him on his bum upright. Holubas.

From dusty shops neglected authors come, Martyrs of pies, and relics of the bum. Dryden.

The learned Sydenham does not doubt, But profound thought will bring the gout;

And that with bum on couch we lie, Because our reason's foar'd too high. W—n.

BUMBA'LIFF. n. f. [This is a corruption of bound bailiff, pronounced by gradual corruption boun, bun, bun bailiff.] A bailiff of the meanest kind; one that is employed in arrests.

Go, sir Andrew, fetch me for him at the corner of the orchard, like a bumbailiff. Shakspeare.

BUMBARD. n. f. [wrong written for bombard; which see.] A great gun; a black jack; a leathern pitcher.

Yond fame black cloud, yond huge one looks Like a foal bumbard, that would shed his liquor. Shakspeare.

BUMBAST. n. f. [falsely written for bombast; bombast and bombastine being mentioned, with great probability, by Junius, as coming from boom, a tree, and sein, silk; the silk or cotton of a tree. Mr. Stevens, with much more probability, deduces them all from bombycinus.]

1. A cloth made by sewing one stuff upon another; patchwork.

The usual bombast of black bits sewed into crinins, our English women are made to think very fine. Grow.

2. Linen stuffed with cotton; stuffing; wadding.

We have receiv'd your letters full of love, And, in our maiden council, rated them As courtship, pleasant jest, and courtesy, As bombast, and as lining to the time. Shakspeare.

BUMP. n. f. [perhaps from bun, as being prominent.] A swelling; a protuberance.

It had upon its brow a lump as big as a young cockrel's stone; a perilous knock, and it cried bitterly. Shakspeare.

Not though his teeth are beaten out, his eyes Hang by a string, in bumps his forehead rise. Dryden.

To BUMP. v. a. [from bombus, Lat.] To make a loud noise, or bomb. [See BOMB.] It is applied, I think, only to the bitter.

Then to the water's brink she laid her head, And as a bitour bump within a reed, To thee alone, O lake, she sud— Dryden.

BUMPER. n. f. [from bump.] A cup filled till the liquor swells over the brim.

Places his delight All ready in playing lumpers, and at night Reels to the bawds Dryden's Juvenal.

BUMPKIN. n. f. [This word is of uncertain etymology; Henshaw derives it from pumkin, a kind of worthless gourd, or melon. This seems harsh; yet we use the word cabbage-head in the same sense. Bump is used among us for a knob, or lump: may not bumpkin be much the same with clodpate, loggerhead, block, and blockhead?] An awkward heavy rustick; a country lout.

The poor bumpkin, that had never heard of such delights before, blessed herself at the change of her condition. L'Esrange.

A heavy bumpkin, taught with daily care, Can never dance three steps with a becoming air. Dryden.

In his white cloak the magistrate appears; The country bumpkin the same lively wears. Dryden.

It was a favour to admit them to breeding; they might be ignorant bumpkins and clown; if they pleased. Locke.

BUMPKINLY. adj. [from bumpkin.] Having the manners or appearance of a clown; clownish.

He is a simple, blundering, and yet conceited fellow, who, aiming at description, and the rustick wonderful, gives an air of bumpkinly romance to all he tells. Clarissa.

BUNCH. n. f. [buncker, Danish, the crags of the mountains.]

1. A hard lump; a knob.

They will carry their treasures upon the bunches of camels to a people that shall not profit them. Job.

He felt the ground, which he had wont to find even and soft, to be grown hard, with little round balls or bunches, like hard hoiled eggs. Boyle.

2. A cluster; many of the same kind growing together.

Vines, with clustering bunches growing. Shak.

Titian said, that he knew no better rule for the distribution of the lights and shadows, than his observation drawn from a bunch of grapes. Dryd.

For thee, large bunches load the bending vine, And the last blessings of the year are thine. Dryden.

3. A number of things tied together.

And on his arms a bunch of keys he bore. Fairy Queen.

legs. Crew.

BUNDLE. n. f. [byñdle, Saxon, from byñd.]

1. A number of things bound together.
As to the bundles of petitions in parliament, they were, for the most part, petitions of private persons. Hale.

Try, lads, can you this bundle break;—
Then bids the youngest of the six
Take up a well-bound heap of sticks. Swift.

2. A roll; any thing rolled up.

She carried a great bundle of Flanders lace under her arm; but finding herself overloaded, she dropped the good man, and brought away the bundle. Spectator.

To BUNDLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To tie in a bundle; to tie together: with up.

We ought to put things together as well as we can, doctrine causa; but, after all, several things will not be bundled up together, under our terms and ways of speaking. Locke.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of fizee;
As if a man, in making pofies,
Should bundle thistles up with roses. Swift.

BUNG. n. f. [bing, Welsh.] A stopple for a barrel.

After three nights are expired, the next morning pull out the bung stick, or plug. Mortimer.

To BUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To stop; to close up.

BUNGHOLE. n. f. [from bung and hole.]
The hole at which the barrel is filled, and which is afterward stopped up.

Why may not imagination trace the noblest dust of Alexander, till he find it stopping a bung-hole? Shakespeare.

To BUNGLE. v. n. [See BUNGLER.]
To perform clumsily.

When men want light,
They make but bungling work. Dryden.
Letters to me are not feldom opened, and then sealed in a bungling manner before they come to my hands. Swift.

To BUNGLE. v. a. To botch; to manage clumsily; to conduct awkwardly:
with up.

Other devils, that suggest by treasons,
Do botch and bungle up damnation,
With patches, colours, and with tords, being fetcht
From glitt'ring semblances of piety. Shakespeare.
They make lame mischief, though they mean
it well:

Their interest is not finely drawn, and hid,
But seams are coarsely bungled up, and seen. Dryden.

BUNGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A botch; an awkwardness; an inaccuracy; a clumsy performance.

Errors and bungles are committed, when the matter is inapt or contumacious. Ray.

y glér*, i. e. the last or lowest of the profession. Davies.] A bad workman; a clumsy performer; a man without skill.

Painters, at the first, were such bunglers, and so rude, that, when they drew a cow or a hog, they were fain to write over the head what it was; otherwise the beholder knew not what to make of it. Peachment on Drawing.

Hard features every bungler can command;
To draw true beauty shews a master's hand.

A bungler thus, who scarce the nail can hit,
With driving wrong will make the pannel split. Dryden.

BUNGLINGLY. adv. [from bungling.]
Clumsily; awkwardly.

To denominate them monsters, they must have had some system of parts, compounded of solids and fluids, that executed, though but bunglingly, their peculiar functions. Bentley.

BUNN. n. f. [bunelo, Span.] A kind of sweet bread.

Thy songs are sweeter to mine ear,
Than to the thirsty cattle rivers clear,
Or winter porridge to the lab'ring youth,
Or bunns and sugar to the damsel's tooth. Gay.

BUNT. n. f. [corrupted, as Skinner thinks, from bent.] A swelling part; an increasing cavity.

The wear is a frith, reaching stopewise through the ooze, from the land to low water mark, and having in it a bunt, or eud, with an eye-hook, where the fish entering, upon the coming back with the ebb, are stopped from issuing out again, forfaken by the water, and left dry on the ooze.
Carew.

To BUNT. v. n. [from the noun.] To swell out: as, the sail bunts out.

BUNTER. n. f. A cant word for a woman ship's colours are made.

BUOY. n. f. [bouë, or boye, Fr. boya, Span.] A piece of cork or wood floating on the water, tied to a weight at the bottom.

The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yond tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock a buoy, Almost too small for sight. Shakespeare.

Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On harning's surface we but lie and nod. Pope.

To BUOY. v. a. [from the noun.] The u is mute in both.] To keep afloat;
to bear up.

All art is used to sink episcopacy, and lurch presbytery, in England; which was lately buoyed up in Scotland, by the like artifice of a covenant.
King Charles.

The water which rises out of the abyfs, for the supply of springs and rivers, would not have stopped at the surface of the earth, but marched directly up into the atmosphere, wherever there was heat enough in the air to continue its ascent, and buoy it up. Woodward's Natural History.

To BUOY. v. n. To float; to rise by specifick lightness.

Rising merit will buoy up at last. Pope.

BUOYANCY. n. f. [from buoyant.] The quality of floating.

All the winged tribes owe their flight and buoyancy to it. Derham's Physics-Theology.

BUOYANT. adj. [from buoy.] Floating;
light; that will not sink. Dryden uses the word, perhaps improperly, for something that has density enough to hinder a floating body from sinking.

I swom with the tide, and the water under me was buoyant. Dryden.

His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more Inspire the course. Thomson's Autumn.

BUR, BOUR, BOR, come from the Sax.

bur, an inner chamber, or piece of shade and retirement. Gibson's Garden.

BUR. n. f. [burra, Fr. is down;
the bur being filled with a soft menture,
or down.] A rough head of a plant, called a burdock, which sticks to the hair or clothes.

Nothing seems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, bars,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakespeare.

Hang off, thou cat, thou bur; vile thing, get loose;
Or I will shake thee from me like a serpent. Shakespeare.

Dependents and suitors are always the bars,
and sometimes the bribes, of favourites. Hutton.

Whither betake thee
From the chill dew, among rude bars and thistles. Milton.

And where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty bars and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.

A fellow stuck like a bur, that there was no snaking him off. Abraham.

BURBOT. n. f. A fish full of prickles. Diç.

BURDELAIS. n. f. A sort of grape.

BURDEN. n. f. [byrden, Sax. and therefore properly written burthen. It is supposed to come from burdo, Lat. a mule.]

1. A load; something to be carried.

Camels have their provender
Only for bearing burdens, and fore blows
For sinking under them. Shakespeare.

It is of use in lading of ships, and may help to shew what burden, in the several kinds, they will bear. Bacon's Physical Remains.

2. Something grievous or wearisome.

Couldst thou support
That burden, heavier than the earth to bear?
Paradise Lost.

None of the things that are to learn, should ever be made a burden to them, or imposed on them as a task. Locke.

Deaf, giddy, helpless, left alone,
To all my friends a burden grown. Swift.

2. Bulling; active; meddling.
The next thing which the waking looks upon,
On meddling monkey, or on busy ape,
She shall pursue it with the foul of love. Shaksp.
Thus busy pow'r is working day and night;
For when the outward senses rest do take,
A thousand dreams, fantastical and light,
With fluttering wings, do keep her still awake. Davies.

The coming spring would first appear,
And all this place with roses strow,
If busy feet would let them grow. Waller.

All written since that time, seem to have little more than events we are glad to know, or the controversy of opinions, wherein the busy world has been so much employed. Temple.

Religious motives and instincts are so busy in the heart of every reasonable creature, that no man would hope to govern a society, without regard to those principles. Addison.

3. Troublesome; vexatiously importunate or intensive.

The christians, sometimes valiantly receiving the enemy, and sometimes charging them again, repulsed the proud enemy, still busy with them. Knoles's History of the Turks.

To BUSY. v. a. [from the noun.] To employ; to engage; to make or keep busy.

He in great passion all this while did dwell,
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Fairy Queen.

BUSYBODY. n. f. [from busy and body.] A vain, meddling, and fantastical person.

Going from house to house, tattlers and busybodies are the canker and rot of idleness, as idleness is the rust of time. Taylor.

Busybodies and intermeddlers are a dangerous sort of people to have to do withal. L'Estrange.

She is well acquainted with all the favourite servants, busybodies, dependants, and poor relations, of all persons of condition in the whole town. Spektator.

BUT. conjunct. [butte, butan, Saxon.]

1. Except.
An emission of immaterial virtues we are a little doubtful to propound, it is so prodigious; but that it is so constantly avouched by many. Bacon.

Who can it be, ye gods! but perjured Lycon?
Who can inspire such storms of rage, but Lycon?
Where as my sword left one so black, but Lycon? Smith.

Your poem hath been printed, and we have no objection but the obscurity of several passages, by our ignorance in facts and persons. Swift.

2. Except that; unless; had it not been that: in this sense we now write but that. See sense 11.

And but infirmity,
Which waits upon worn times, hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lauds and waters measur'd. Shakspere.

3. Yet; nevertheless. It sometimes only enforces yet.

Then let him speak, and any that shall stand without shall hear his voice plainly; but yet made extreme sharp and exile, like the voice of puppets: and yet the articulate sounds of the words will not be confounded. Bacon.

Your wants are many and grievous to be born, but quite of another kind. Swift.

4. The particle which introduces the minor of a syllogism; now.

If there be a liberty and possibility for a man to kill himself to-day, then it is not absolutely necessary that he shall live till to-morrow; but there is such a liberty, therefore no such necessity. Bramhall against Hobbes.

God will one time or another make a difference between the good and the evil. But there is little or no difference made in this world; therefore there must be another world, wherein this difference shall be made. Watts's Logick.

5. Only; nothing more than.
If my offence be of mortal kind,
That not my service, past or present forrows,
Can ransom me into his love again;
But to know so, must be my benefit. Shaksp.

What nymph so'er his voice but hears,
Will be my rival, though she have but ears. Ben Jonson.

No, Aurengzebe, you merit all my heart,
And I'm too noble but to give a part. Dryden.

Did but men consider the true notion of God, he would appear to be full of goodness. Tillotson.

If we do but put virtue and vice in equal circumstances, the advantages of ease and pleasure will be found to be on the side of religion. Tillotson.

The mischiefs or harms that come by play, inadvertency or ignorance, are not at all, or but very gently, to be taken notice of. Locke.

If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but very few precepts in it, which he may not meet with in Aristotle. Addison.

Prepar'd I stand: he was but born to try
The lot of man, to suffer and to die. Pope.

6. Than.
The full moon was no sooner up, and shining in all its brightness, but he opened the gate of Paradise. Guardian.

7. But that; without this consequence that.

Frosts that constrain the ground
Do feldom their usurping power withdraw,
But raging floods pursue their hasty hand. Dryd.

8. Otherwise than that.
It cannot be but nature hath some director, of infinite power, to guide her in all her ways. Hooker.

Who shall believe,
But you misuse the reverence of your place? Shakspere.

9. Not more than; even.
A genius so elevated and unconfined as Mr. Cowley's, was but necessary to make Pindar speak English. Dryden.

10. By any other means than.
Beroe but now I left; whom, pin'd with pain,
Her age and anguish from these rites detain. Dryden.

It is evident, in the instance I gave but now, the consciousness went along. Locke.

Out of that will I cause those of Cyprus to mutiny; whose qualification shall come into no true taste again, but by transplanting of Cassio. Shakspere.

11. If it were not for this; that; if it were not that. Obsolete.
Believe me, I had rather have lost my purse Full of cruzades. And, but my noble Moor Is true of mind, and made of no such baseness As jealous creatures are, it were enough To put him to ill-thinking. Shakspere.

I here do give thee that with all my heart, Which, but thou hast already, with all my heart I would keep from thee. Shakspere.

12. However; howbeit: a word of indeterminate connection.
I do not doubt but I have been to blame; But, to pursue the end for which I came, Unite your subjects first, then let us go And pour their common rage upon the foe. Dryd.

13. It is used after no doubt, no question, and such words, and signifies the same with that. It sometimes is joined with that.

They made no account, but that the navy should be absolutely master of the seas. Bacon.

I fancied to myself a kind of ease in the change of the paroxysm; never suspecting but that the humour would have wasted itself. Dryden.

There is no question but the king of Spain will reform most of the abuses. Addison.

14. That. This seems no proper sense in this place.

It is not therefore impossible but I may alter the complexion of my play, to restore myself into the good graces of my fair critics. Dryden.

15. Otherwise than. Obsolete.
I should sin
To think but oobly of my grandmother. Shaksp.

16. A particle by which the meaning of the foregoing sentence is bounded or restrained; only.
Thus fights Ulysses, thus his fame extends;
A formidable man, but to his friends. Dryden.

17. A particle of objection; yet it may be objected: it has sometimes yet with it.
But yet, madam—
I do not like but yet; it does allay
The good precedence; fie upon but yet!
But yet is as a jailour, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakspere.

Must the heart then have been formed and constituted, before the blood was in being? But here again, the substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries. Bentley.

18. But for; without; had not this been.
Rash man, forbear! but for some unbelief,
My joy had been as fatal as my grief. Waller.

Her head was bare,
But for her native ornament of hair,
Which in a simple knur was tied above. Dryden.

When the fair boy receiv'd the gift of right,
And, but for mischief, you had died for spite. Dryd.

BUT. n. f. [bout, French.] A boundary.
But, if I ask you what I mean by that word, you will answer, I mean this or that thing, you cannot tell which; but if I join it with the words in construction and sense, as, but I will not, a but of wine, but and boundary, the ram will but, shoot at but, the meaning of it will be as ready to you as any other word. Hollis.

BUT. n. f. [In sea language.] The end of any plank which joins to another on the outside of a ship, under water. Harris.

BUT-END. n. f. [from but and end.] The blunt end of any thing; the end upon which it rests.

From lofty speed, and bid the lady stay,
To see what end of fight should him befall that day.

Spenser.

In the temple, by and by, with us,
These couples shall eternally be knit.

Shaksp.

O how the spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day;
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away.

Shaksp.

Now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast.

Shakespeare's Othello.

By. n. f. [from the preposition.] Something not the direct and immediate object of regard.

In this instance, there is, upon the by, to be noted, the percolation of the verjuice through the wood.

Bacon.

This wolf was forced to make bold, ever and anon, with a sheep in private, by the by.

L'Estr.

Hence we may understand, to add that upon the by, that it is not necessary.

Boyle.

So, while my lov'd revenge is full and high,
I'll give you back your kingdom by the by.

Dryden.

By, in composition, implies something out of the direct way, and consequently some obscurity, as a by-road; something irregular, as a by-end; or something collateral, as a by-concernment; or private, as a by-law. This composition is used at pleasure, and will be understood by the examples following.

BY-COFFEEHOUSE. n. f. A coffeehouse in an obscure place.

I afterwards entered a by-coffeehouse, that stood at the upper end of a narrow lane, where I met with a nonjuror.

Addison.

BY-CONCERNMENT. n. f. An affair which is not the main business.

Our plays, besides the main design, have under-plots, or by-concernments, or less considerable persons and intrigues, which are carried on with the motion of the main plot.

Dryden.

BY-DEPENDANCE. n. f. An appendage; something accidentally depending on another.

These,

And your three motives to the battle, with I know not how much more, should be demanded; And all the other by-dependencies, From chance to chance.

CACOCHEMICK } my. [from cacochymia.] Having the humours corrupted.

It will prove very advantageous, if only cacochymick, to clarify his blood with a laxative.

Harvey on Consumptions.

If the body be cacochymical, the tumours are apt to degenerate into very venomous and malignant abscesses. Wifeman.

The ancient writers distinguished putrid fevers, by putrefaction of blood, cholera, melancholy, and phlegm; and this is to be explained by an effluence happening in a particular cacochymical blood. Elyzer on the Humours.

CACOCHEMIA. n. f. [κακοχημία.] A depravation of the humours from a sound state, to what the physicians call by a general name of a cacochymia. Spots, and discolorations of the skin, are signs of weak fibres; for the lateral vessels, which lie out of the road of circulation, let gross humours pass, which could not, if the vessels had their due degree of stricture. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Strong beer, a liquor that attributes the half of its ill qualities to the hops, consisting of an acrimonious fiery nature, sets the blood, upon the least cacochymia, into an ergasmus. Harvey.

CACOPHONY. n. f. [κακοφωνία.] A bad sound of words.

These things shall lie by, till you come to carp at them, and alter rhimes, grammar, triplets, and cacophonies of all kinds. Pope to Swift.

CADRE. n. f. [cadus, Lat.] A barrel.

We John Cadre, so termed of our supposed father.—O! rather of stealing a case of her-rings. Shakspeare.

Soon as thy liquor from the narrow cells
Of close press'd husks is freed, thou must refrain Thy thirsty soul; let none persuade to breach Thy thick, unwholesome, undigested cadres. Philips.

CADRE-WORM. n. f. The same with caddis.

CADENCE. } n. f. [cadence, Fr.]

CADENCY. } n. f. [cadence, Fr.]

- Fall; state of sinking; decline.
Now was the sun in western cadence low
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hours,
To fan the earth, now wak'd. Milton.
- The fall of the voice; sometimes the general modulation of the voice.
The sliding, in the close or cadence, hath an agreement with the figure in rhetoric, which they call præter expectatum; for there is a pleasure even in being deceived. Bacon.
There be words not made with lungs,
Sententious show'rs! O let them fall!
Their cadence is rhetorical. Craſhaw.
- The flow of verses, or periods.
The words, the versification, and all the other elegancies of sound, as cadences, and turns of words upon the thought, perform exactly the same office both in dramatic and epic poetry. Dryden.
The cadency of one line must be a rule to that of the next; as the sound of the former must slide gently into that which follows. Dryden.
- The tone or sound.
Hollow rocks retain
The sound of blustering winds, which all night long
Had rous'd the sea, now with hoarse cadence lull Sea-faring men, o'erwatch'd. Milton.
He hath a confused remembrance of words since he left the university; he hath lost half their meaning, and puts them together with no regard, except to their cadence. Swift.

- An enclosure of twigs or wire, in which birds are kept.
See whether a cage can please a bird? or whether a dog grow not fiercer with tying? Sidney.
He taught me how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes, I am sure, you are not a prisoner. Shakspeare.
Though slaves, like birds that sing not in a cage,
They lost their genius, and poetick rage;
Homers again and Pindars may be found,
And his great actions with their numbers crown'd. Waller.
- And parrots, imitating human tongue,
And singing birds in silver cages hung;
And ev'ry fragrant flow'r, and od'rous green,
Were sort'd well, with lumps of amber laid between. Dryden.
A man recurs to our fancy, by remembering his garment; a bear, bird, or fish, by the cage, or court-yard, or cistern, wherein it was kept. Watson on the Mind.
The reason why so few marriages are happy, is, because young ladies spend their time in making nets, not in making cages. Swift.
- A place for wild beasts, enclosed with pallisadoes.
- A prison for petty malefactors.

TO CAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To enclose in a cage.
He, swoln and pamper'd with high fare,
Sits down, and snorts, cag'd in his basket-chair. Donne.

CAIMAN. n. f. The American name of a crocodile.

TO CAJOLE. v. a. [cageoller, Fr.] To flatter; to soothe; to coax: a low word.

Thought he, 'tis no mean part of civil
 S^{er}prudence, to cajole the devil. Hudibras.
 The one affronts him, while the other cajoles and piques him: takes up his quarrel, shakes his head at it, clasps his hand upon his breast, and then pretells and pretells. L'Étrange.

CAJOLE. n. f. [from cajole.] A flatterer; a wheedler.
 My tongue that wanted to cajole
 I try'd, but not a word would troll. Rymer.

1. A chest of bombs or powder, laid in the enemy's way, to be fired at their approach.
2. A wooden case in which the piers of bridges are built within the water.

CATTIVE. n. f. [cattivo, Ital. a slave;
 whence it came to signify a bad man, with some implication of meanness; as knave in English, and fur in Latin; so certainly does slavery destroy virtue.

Ἡμισυ της αρετης αποκρινεται ὀδυναις ἡμις.
Homer.

A slave and a foundrel are signified by the same words in many languages.] A mean villain; a despicable knave: it often implies a mixture of wickedness and misery.

Vile cattif's vassal of dread and despair,
 Unworthy of the common breathed air!
 Why wast thou, dead dog, a longer day,
 And dost not unto death thyself prepare? Spenser.
 'Tis not impossible

But one, the wicked 'st cattif on the ground,
 May seem as thy, as grave, as just, as absolute,
 As Angelo. Shakspeare.

The wretched cattif, all alone,
 As he believ'd, began to moan,
 And tell his story to himself. Hudibras.

CAKE. n. f. [cach, Teutonic.]

1. A kind of delicate bread.
 You must be seeing christenings! do you look for ale and cakes here, you rude rascals? Shakspeare.
 My cake is dough, but I'll in among the reit,
 Out of hope of all but my share of the feast.
Shakspeare.

The dismal day was come; the priests prepare
 Their leaven'd cakes, and fillets for my hair.
Dryden.

2. Any thing of a form rather flat than high; by which it is sometimes distinguished from a loaf.

There is a cake that groweth upon the side of a dead tree, that hath gotten no name, but it is large, and of a cheitnut colour, and hard and pit'y. Bacon's Natural History.

3. Concreted matter; coagulated matter.
 Then when the fleecy skies new cloath the wood,
 And cakes of ruffling ice come rolling down the flood. Dryden.

To CAKE. v. n. [from the noun.] To harden, as dough in the oven.

This burning matter, as it sunk very leisurely,
 had time to cake together, and form the bottom, which covers the mouth of that dreadful vault that lies underneath it. Addison on Italy.

This is that very Mab,
 That plies the manes of horses in the night,
 And cakes the elflocks in foul sluttish hairs. Shak.
 He rim'd the wound,

And wash'd away the strings and clotted blood,
 That cak'd within. Addison.

CALABASH Tree.

It hath a flower consisting of one leaf, divided at the brim into several parts; from whose cup rises the pointal, in the hinder part of the flower; which afterwards becomes a fleshy fruit, having an hard shell. They rise to the height of twenty-five or thirty feet in the West Indies, where they grow naturally. The shells are used by the negrees for cups, as also for making instruments of music, by making a hole in the shell, and putting in small stones, with which they make a sort of rattle. Miller.

CALAMANCOS. n. f. [a word derived,
 probably by some accident, from calamancus,
 Lat. which, in the middle ages, signified a hat.]
 A kind of woollen stuff.

He was of a bulk and stature larger than ordinary, had a red coat, hung open, to shew a calamancos waistcoat. Tatler.

CALAMINE, or Lapis Calaminaris. n. f.
 A kind of fossil bituminous earth, which,
 being mixed with copper, changes it into brass.

We must not omit those, which, though not of so much beauty, yet are of greater use, viz.
 leadstones, whetstones of all kinds, limestones, calamine, or lapis calaminaris. Lect.

CALAMINT. n. f. [calamintha, Lat.] A plant.

CALAMITOUS. adj. [calamitosus, Lat.]
 1. Miserable; involved in distress; oppressed with infelicity; unhappy;
 wretched: applied to men.

This is a gracious provision God Almighty hath made in favour of the necessitous and calamitous;
 the state of some, in this life, being so extremely wretched and deplorable, if compared with others. Conary.

2. Full of misery; distressful: applied to external circumstances.

What calamitous effects the air of this city wrought upon us the last year, you may read in my discourse of the plague. Harvey.

Strict necessity
 Subdues me, and calamitous constraint!
 Left on my head both sin and punishment,
 However insupportable, be all Devolv'd. Milton.

Much rather I shall chuse
 To live the poorest in my tribe, than richest,
 And be in that calamitous prison left. Milton.

In this sad and calamitous condition, deliverance from an oppressor would have even revived them. South.

CALAMITOUSNESS. n. f. [from calamitous.]
 Misery; distress.

CALAMITY. n. f. [calamitas, Lat.]

1. Misfortune; cause of misery; distress.

Another ill accident is drought, and the spind-ling of the corn, which with us is rare, but in hotter countries common; inasmuch as the word calamity was first derived from calamus, when the corn could not get out of the sheaf. Bacon

2. Misery; distress.

This infinite calamity shall cause
 To human life, and household peace confound.
Milton.

From adverse shores in safety let her hear
 Foreign calamity, and distant war;
 Of which, great heav'n, let her no portion bear.
Prior.

CALAMUS. n. f. [Lat.] A sort of reed or sweet-scented wood, mentioned in scripture with the other ingredients of the sacred perfumes. It is a knotty root, reddish without, and white within, which puts forth long and narrow leaves, and brought from the Indies.

 The prophets speak of it as a foreign commodity of great value. These sweet reeds have no smell when they are green, but when they are dry only. Their form differs not from other reeds, and their smell is perceived upon entering the marshes. Calmet.

Take thou also unto thee principal spices of pure myrrh, of sweet cinnamon, and of sweet calamus. Exodus.

CALA'SH. n. f. [caleche, Fr.] A small carriage of pleasure.

Daniel, a sprightly swain, that us'd to flash
 The vigorous steeds, that drew his lord's calash.
King.

The ancients used calashes, the figures of several of them being to be seen on ancient monuments. They are very simple, light, and drawn by the traveller himself. As-Suhest.

CALCEATED. adj. [calceatus, Lat.] Shod;
 fitted with shoes.

CALCEDONIUS. n. f. [Lat.] A kind of precious stone.

Calcedonius is of the agate kind, and of a milky grey, clouded with blue, or with purple.
Woodward on Fossil.

To CALCINATE. See To CALCINE.

In hardening, by baking without melting, the heat hath these degrees; first, it induratesh, then maketh fragile, and lastly it doth calcinate. Bacon.

CALCINATION. n. f. [from calcine; calci- nation, Fr.] Such a management of bodies by fire, as renders them reducible to powder; wherefore it is called chymical pulverization. This is the next degree of the power of fire beyond that of fusion; for when fusion is longer continued, not only the more subtle particles of the body itself fly off, but the particles of fire likewise insinuate themselves in such multitudes, and are so blended through its whole substance, that the fluidity, first caused by the fire, can no longer subsist. From this union arises a third kind of body, which being very porous and brittle, is easily reduced to powder; for, the fire having penetrated every where into the pores of the body, the particles are both hindered from mutual contact, and divided into minute atoms. Quincy.

Divers refinences of bodies are thrown away, as soon as the distillation or calcination of the body that yieldeth them is ended. Boyle.

This may be effected, but not without a calci- nation, or reducing it by art into a subtle powder. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCINATORY. n. f. [from calcinate.]
 A vessel used in calcination.

To CALCINE. v. a. [calcinere, Fr. from calx, Lat.]

1. To burn in the fire to a calx, or friable substance. See CALCINATION.

The solids seem to be earth, bound together with some oil; for if a bone be calcined, so as the least force will crumble it, being immersed in oil, it will grow firm again. A-Buthost.

2. To burn up.

Fiery disputes that union have calcined,
 Almost as many minds as men we find. Dehann.

To CALCINE. v. n. To become a calx by heat.

This crystal is a pellucid fissile stone, clear as water, and without colour, enduring a red heat without losing its transparency, and in a very strong heat, calcining without fusion. Newson.

To CALCULATE. v. a. [calculus, Fr.
 from calculus, Lat. a little stone or bead, used in operations of numbers.]

1. To compute; to reckon: as, he calcu- lates his expences.
2. To compute the situation of the planets at any certain time.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

A cunning man did calculate my birth,
 And told me, that by water I should die. Shakspeare.

Why all these fires, why all these gliding ghosts,
Why old men, fools, and children calculate,
Why all those things change from their ordinance?
Shakespeare.

Who were there then in the world, to observe The births of those first men, and calculate their nativities, as they sprawled out of ditches?
Bentley.

3. To adjust; to project for any certain end.
The reasonableness of religion clearly appears,
as it tends so directly to the happiness of men, and is, upon all accounts, calculated for our benefit. Tillotson.

To CALCULATE. v. n. To make a computation.

CALCULATION. n. f. [from calculate.] A practice, or manner of reckoning; the art of numbering.

Cypher, that great friend to calculation; or rather, which changeth calculation into easy computation. Hobbes on Time.

2. A reckoning; the result of arithmetical operation.

If then their calculation be true, for so they reckon. Hecker.

Being different from calculations of the ancients, their observations confirm not ours. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CALCULATOR. n. f. [from calculate.] A computer; a reckoner.

CALCULATORY. adj. [from calculate.] Belonging to calculation.

CALCULE. n. f. [calculus, Lat.] Reckoning; compute. Obsolete.

The general calculus, which was made in the last perambulation, exceeded eight millions. Hoswell's Vocal Forest.

CALCULOSE. } adj. [from calculus, Lat.]

CALCULOUS. } Stony; gritty.

The volatile salt of urine will coagulate spirits of wine; and thus, perhaps, the stones, or calculose concretions in the kidney or bladder, may be produced. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I have found, by opening the kidneys of a calculus person, that the stone is formed earlier than I have suggested. Shanp.

CALCULUS. n. f. [Lat.] The stone in the bladder.

CALDRON. n. f. [chaldron, Fr. from calidus, Lat.] A pot; a boiler; a kettle.

In the middle of all

There placed was a caldon wide and tall,
Upon a mighty furnace, burning hot. Fairy Q.

Some strip the skin; some portion out the spoil;
The limbs, yet trembling, in the caldrons boil;
Some on the fire the reeking entrails broil. Dryd.

In the late eruptions, this great hollow was like a vast caldon, filled with glowing and melted matter, which, as it boiled over in any part, ran down the sides of the mountain. Addison.

CALECHE. The same with calash.

CALEFACTION. n. f. [from calefacio, Lat.]

1. The act of heating any thing.

2. The state of being heated.

CALEFACTIVE. } adj. [from calefacio,

CALEFACTORY. } Lat.] That makes any thing hot; heating.

To CALEFY. v. n. [calefo, Lat.] To grow hot; to be heated.

Crystal will calefy unto electricity; that is, a power to attract straws, or light bodies, and convert the needle, freely plac'd. Brown.

To CALEFY. v. a. To make hot.

CALENDAR. n. f. [calendarium, Lat.] A register of the year, in which the months, and stated times, are marked, as festivals and holidays.

What hath this day deserv'd? what hath it done,

That it in golden letter should be set

Among the high tides, in the calendar? Shaksp.

We compute from calendars differing from one another, the compute of the one anticipating that of the other. Brown.

Curs'd be the day when first I did appear;

Let it be blotted from the calendar,

Left it pollute the month! Dryden.

To CALENDER. v. a. [calender, Fr. Skinner.] To dress cloth; to lay the nap of cloth smooth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from the verb.] A hot press; a press in which clothiers smooth their cloth.

CALENDER. n. f. [from calender.] The person who calenders.

CALENDS. n. f. [calende, Lat. It has no singular.] The first day of every month among the Romans.

CALENTURE. n. f. [from calco, Lat.] A distemper peculiar to sailors in hot climates; wherein they imagine the sea to be green fields, and will throw themselves into it. Quincy.

And for that lethargy was there no cure,
But to be cast into a calenture. Denham.

So, by a calenture misled,

The mariner with rapture sees,
On the smooth ocean's azure bed,

Enamell'd fields, and verdant trees:

With eager haste he longs to rove

In that fantastic scene, and thinks

It must be some enchanted grove;

And in he leaps, and down he sinks. Swift.

CALF. n. f. calves in the plural. [cealf, Saxon; kalf, Dutch.]

1. The young of a cow.

The colt hath about four years of growth; and so the fawn, and so the calf. Bacon.

Acosta tells us of a fowl in Peru, called condore, which will kill and eat up a whole calf at a time. Wilkins.

Ah, Blouzelind! I love thee more by half

Than does their fawns, or cows the new-fall'n calf. Gay.

2. Calves of the lips, mentioned by Hosea, signify sacrifices of praise and prayers, which the captives of Babylon addressed to God, being no longer in a condition to offer sacrifices in his temple. Calmet.

Turn to the Lord, and say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips. Hosea.

3. By way of contempt and reproach, applied to a human being, a dolt; a stupid wretch.

When a child haps to be got,

That after proves an ideot;

When folk perceive it thriveth not,

Some silly doating brainless calf,

That understands things by the half,

Says, that the fairy left the oaf,

And took away the other. Dryden's Nym.

4. The thick, plump, bulbous part of the leg. [kalf, Dutch.]

Into her legs Pd have love's issues fall,

And all her calf into a gouty small. Suckling.

The calf of that leg blistered. Wise-man.

To CALK. v. a. [from calage, Fr. hemp, with which leaks are stopp'd; or from cale, Sax. the keel. Skinner.]

To stop the leaks of a ship.

There is a great error committed in the manner of calking his majesty's ships; which being done with rotten oakum, is the cause they are leaky. Raleigh's Essays.

So here some pick out bullets from the side; Some drive old oakum through each seam and rift;

Their left hand does the calking iron guide,
The rattling mallet with the right they lift. Dryd.

CALKER. n. f. [from calk.] The workman that stops the leaks of a ship.

The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof, were in thee thy calkers; all the ships of the sea, with their mariners, were in thee to occupy thy merchandize. Ezekiel.

CALKING. n. f. A term in painting, used where the backside is covered with black lead, or red chalk, and the lines traced through on a waxed plate, wall, or other matter, by passing lightly over each stroke of the design with a point, which leaves an impression of the colour on the plate or wall. Chambers.

18. To call out. To challenge; to summon to fight. When their sov'reign's quarrel calls 'em out, His foes to mortal combat they defy. Dryden.

TO CALL. v. n.

1. To stop without intention of staying. This meaning probably rose from the custom of denoting one's presence at the door by a call; but it is now used with great latitude. This sense is well enough preserved by the particles on or at; but is forgotten, and the expression made barbarous, by in.

2. To make a short visit. And, as you go, call on my brother Quintus, And pray him, with the tribunes, to come to me. Ben Jonson.

He ordered her to call at his house once a week, which she did for some time after, when he heard no more of her. Temple.

That I might begin as near the fountain-head as possible, I first of all called in at St. James's. Addison's Spectator.

We called in at Morge, where there is an artificial port. Addison on Italy.

3. To call on. To solicit for a favour or a debt. I would be loth to pay him before his day; what need I be forward with him, that call's not on me? Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. To call on. To repeat solemnly. Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast, And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

The Athenians, when they lost any men at sea, went to the shores, and, calling thrice on their names, rais'd a cenotaph, or empty monument, to their memories. Boswell on the Odyssey.

5. To call upon. To implore; to pray to. Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me. Psalms.

CALL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A vocal address of summons or invitation. But death comes not at call, justice divine Mends not her slowest pace for pray'rs or cries. Milton.

But would you sing, and rival Orpheus' strain, The wond'ring forests soon should dance again: The moving mountains here the powerful call, And headlong streams hang list'ning in their fall. Pope.

2. Requisition authoritative and public. It may be feared, whether our nobility would contentedly suffer themselves to be always at the call, and to stand to the sentence, of a number of mean persons. Hooker's Preface.

3. Divine vocation; summons to true religion. Yet he at length, time to himself best known, Rememb'ring Abraham, by some wond'rous call, May bring them back repentant and sincere. Milton.

4. A summons from heaven; an impulse. How justly then will impious mortals fall, Whose pride would soar to heav'n without a call. Johnson.

Those who to empire by dark paths aspire, Still plead a call to what they most desire. Dryden.

St. Paul himself believed he did well, and that he had a call to it, when he persecuted the christians, whom he confidently thought in the wrong; but yet it was he, and not they, who were mistaken. Locke.

5. Authority; command. Oh, fir! I wish he were within my call, or yours. Denham.

6. A demand; a claim. Dependence is a perpetual call upon humanity, and a greater incitement to tenderness and pity, than any other motive whatsoever. Johnson.

7. An instrument to call birds. For those birds or beasts were made from such pipes or calls, as may express the several tones of those creatures, which are represented. Watkins's Mathematical Magic.

8. Calling; vocation; employment. Now through the land his cure of souls he stretch'd, And like a primitive apostle preach'd: Still cheerful, ever constant to his call; By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd by all. Dryden.

9. A nomination. Upon the sixteenth was held the serjeants feast at My place, there being nine serjeants of that call. Bacon.

CALLAT. } n. f. A trull.

CALLLET. } He call'd her whose: a beggar, in his drink, Could not have laid such terms upon his call. Shakespeare.

CALLING. n. f. [from call.]

1. Vocation; profession; trade. If God has interwoven such a pleasure with our ordinary calling, how much superior must that be, which arises from the survey of a pious life? Surely, as much as christianity is nobler than a trade. Souch.

We find ourselves obliged to go on in honest industry in our callings. Rogers.

I cannot forbear warning you against endeavouring at wit in your sermons; because many of your calling have made themselves ridiculous by attempting it. Swift.

I left no calling for this idle trade, No duty broke, no father disobey'd. Pope.

2. Proper station, or employment.

The Gauls found the Roman senators ready to die with honour in their callings. Swift.

3. Clafs of persons united by the same employment or profession.

It may be a caution to all christian churches and magistrates, not to impose celibacy on whole callings, and great multitudes of men or women, who cannot be supposed to have the gift of continence. Hammond.

4. Divine vocation; invitation or impulse to the true religion.

Give all diligence to make your calling and election sure. 2 Peter.

St. Peter was ignorant of the calling of the Gentiles. Habea will on Providence.

CAL'LIPERS. n. f. [Of this word I know not the etymology; nor does any thing more probable occur, than that, perhaps, the word is corrupted from clippers, instruments with which any thing is clipped, enclosed, or embraced.] Compasses with bowed shanks.

Callipers measure the distance of any round, cylindrical, conical body; so that when workmen use them, they open the two points to their described width, and turn so much stuff off the intended place, till the two points of the callipers fit just over their work. Moxon.

CALLO'SITY. n. f. [callosité, Fr.] A kind of swelling without pain, like that of the skin by hard labour; and therefore when wounds, or the edges of ulcers, grow so, they are said to be callous.

The surgeon ought to vary the diet of his patient, as he finds the fibres loosen too much, are too flaccid, and produce funguses; or as they harden, and produce callosities; in the first case, wine and spirituous liquors are useful, in the last salutary. Arbuthnot on Diet.

CALLOUS. adj. [callus, Lat.]

1. Indurated; hardened; having the pores shut up.

In progress of time, the ulcers became sinuous and callous, with induration of the glands. Wifon.

2. Hardened in mind; insensible.

Licentiousness has so long passed for sharpness of wit, and greatness of mind, that the conscience is grown callous. L'Estrange

The wretch is drench'd too deep; His soul is stupid, and his heart asleep; Fatten'd in vice, so callous and so gross, He sins, and fees not, senseless of his loss. Dryd.

CALLOUSNESS. n. f. [from callous.]

1. Hardness; induration of the fibres.

The oftener we use the organs of touching, the more of these scales are formed, and the skin becomes the thicker, and so a callousness grows upon it. Cheyne.

2. Insensibility.

If they let go their hope of everlasting life with willingness, and entertain final perdition with exultation, ought they not to be esteem'd destitute of common sense, and abandoned to a callousness and numbness of soul? Bentley.

CALLOW. adj. Unfledged; naked; without feathers.

Bursting with kindly rupture, forth diselos'd Their callow young. Milton.

Then as an eagle, who with pious care Was beating widely on the wing for prey, To her now silent airy does repair, And finds her callow infants forc'd away. Dryd.

How in small flights they know to try their young,

And teach the callow child her parent's song. Prior.

CALLUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. An induration of the fibres.

2. The hard substance by which broken bones are united.

CALM. adj. [calme, Fr. kalm, Dutch.]

1. Quiet; serene; not stormy; not tempestuous; applied to the elements.

Calm was the day, and through the trembling air

Sweet breathing Zephyrus did softly play

A gentle spirit, that lightly did allay

Hot Titan's beams, which then did glister fair. Spenser.

So shall the sea be calm unto us. Jonah.

2. Undisturbed; unruffled: applied to the passions.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be frightening men into truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence, and gentle methods of persuasion. Atterbury.

The queen her speech with calm attention hears, Her eyes restrain the silver-streaking tears. Pope.

CALM. n. f.

1. Serenity; stillness; freedom from violent motion: used of the elements.

It seemeth most agreeable to reason, that the waters rather stood in a quiet calm, than that they moved with any raging or overbearing violence. Raleigh.

Every pilot

Can steer the ship in calms; but he performs The skilful part, can manage it in storms. Denh.

Nor God alone in the still calm we find,

He mounts the storm, and walks upon the wind. Pope.

2. Freedom from disturbance; quiet; repose: applied to the passions.

Great and strange calms usually portend the most violent storms; and therefore, since storms and calms do always follow one another, certainly, of the two, it is much more eligible to have the storm first, and the calm afterwards: since a calm before a storm is commonly a peace of a man's own making; but a calm after a storm, a peace of God's. South.

To CALM. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To still; to quiet.

Neptune we find busy, in the beginning of the Aeneis, to calm the tempest raised by Aeolus. Dryden.

2. To pacify; to appease.

Jesus, whose bare word checked the sea, as much exerts himself in silencing the tempests, and calming the intestine storms, within our breasts. Decay of Piety.

Those passions, which seem somewhat calmed, may be entirely laid asleep, and never more awakened. Atterbury.

He will'd to stay,

The sacred rites and hecatombs to pay, And calm Minerva's wrath. Pope.

CALMER. n. f. [from calm.] The person or thing which has the power of giving quiet.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a divorter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton.

CALMELY. adv. [from calm.]

1. Without storms, or violence; serenely.

In nature, things move violently to their place, and calmly in their place; so virtue in ambition is violent, in authority settled and calm. Bacon.

His curled brows

From on the gentle stream, which calmly flows. Denham.

2. Without passions; quietly.

The nymph did like the scene appear, Serenely pleasant, calmly fair; Soft fell her words, as flew the air. Prior.

CALMNESS. n. f. [from calm.]

1. Tranquillity; serenity; not storminess.

While the steep horrid roughness of the wood - Strives with the gentle calmness of the flood. Denham.

2. Mildness; freedom from passion.

Sir, 'tis fit

You have strong party, or defend yourself

By calmness, or by absence: all's in anger. Shak.

I beg the grace,

You would lay by those terrors of your face;

Till calmness to your eyes you first restore,

I am afraid, and I can beg no more. Dryden.

CALMY. adj. [from calm.] Calm; peaceful. Not used.

And now they nigh approached to the sted, Where as those mermaids dwell: it was a calmy And calmy bay, on one side sheltered

With the broad shadow of an hoary hill. Fairy Queen.

And was yelad, for heat of scorching air,
All in silken canus, lilly white,
Parted upon with many a folded plight. Fairy Q.

CAN. n. f. [canne, Sax.] A cup; generally a cup made of metal, or some other matter than earth.

I hate it as an unfill'd can. Shakspeare.
One can, the coco, affordeth stuff for houlung, clothing, shipping, meat, drink, and can.

His empty can, with ears half worn away,
Was hung on high, to boast the triumph of the day. Dryden.

To CAN. v. n. [konnen, Dutch.] It is sometimes, though rarely, used alone; but is in constant use as an expression of the potential mood: as, I can do, thou canst do, I could do, thou couldst do. It has no other terminations.]

1. To be able; to have power.

In place there is licence to do good and evil, whereof the latter is a curse: for, in evil, the best condition is not to will; the second, not to can. Bacon.

O, there's the wonder!
Mecenas and Agrippa, who can meet
With Cæsar, are his foes. Dryden.

He can away with no company, whose discourse goes beyond what claret and dissoluteness inspire. Locke.

2. It expresses the potential mood; as, I can do it.

I, the can make me blest! the only can:
Empire and wealth, and all the brings beside,
Are but the train and trappings of her love. Dryd.

3. It is distinguished from may, as power from permission; I can do it, it is in my power; I may do it, it is allowed me: but in poetry they are confounded.

4. Can is used of the person with the verb active, where may is used of the thing, with the verb passive; as, I can do it, it may or can be done.

2. An old dance.

To CANARY. v. a. A cant word, which seems to signify to dance; to frolick.

Master, will you win your love with a French brawl?—How mean'st thou, bawling in French?—No, my compleat master; but to jigg off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids. Shakspeare.

CANARY BIRD. An excellent singing bird, formerly bred in the Canaries, and nowhere else; but now bred in several parts of Europe, particularly Germany.

Of singing birds, they have linnets, goldfinches, ruddocks, canary birds, blackbirds, thrushes, and divers other. Carew.

To CANCEL. v. a. [canceller, Fr. from cancellis notare, to mark with cross lines.]

1. To cross a writing.

2. To efface; to obliterate in general.
Now welcome night, though night so long expected,

That long day's labour doth at last defray,
And all my cares which cruel love collected
Has summ'd in one, and cancelled for aye. Spens.

Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge; repeal thee home again. Shakf.

Thou, whom avenging powers obey,
Cancel my debt, too great to pay,
Before the sad accounting day. Rescommon.

I pass the bill, my lords,
For cancelling your debts. Southerne.

CANCELLED. particip. adj. [from cancel.] Cross-barred; marked with lines crossing each other.

And Cancer reddens with the solar blaze,
Short is the doubtful empire of the night. Thomf.

3. A virulent swelling, or sore, not to be cured.

Any of these three may degenerate into a scirrus, and that scirrus into a cancer. Wifeman.

As when a cancer on the body breeds,
And gradual death from limb to limb proceeds;
So does the chiliness to each vital part Spread by degrees, and creeps into the heart. Addison.

To CANCERATE. v. n. [from cancer.]

To grow cancerous; to become a cancer.

But striking his fist upon the point of a nail in the wall, his hand cancerated, he fell into a fever, and soon after died on't. L'Esrange.

CANCERATION. n. f. [from cancerate.] A growing cancerous.

CANCEROUS. adj. [from cancer.] Having the virulence and qualities of a cancer.

How they are to be treated when they are scirrous, scirrhous, or cancerous, you may see in their proper places. Wifeman.

CANCRINE. adj. [from cancer.] Having the qualities of a crab.

CANDENT. adj. [candens, Lat.] Hot; in the highest degree of heat, next to fusion.

If a wire be heated only at one end, according as that end is cooled upward or downward, it respectively acquires a verticity, as we have declared in wires totally candent. Brown.

CANDICANT. adj. [candicans, Latin.] Growing white; whitish. Diæ.

CANDID. adj. [candidus, Lat.]

1. White. This sense is very rare.
The box receives all black; but pou'd from thence,
The stones came candid forth, the hue of innocence. Dryden.

2. Free from malice; not desirous to find faults; fair, open; ingenuous.
The imp it of the dice arte will, for the most part, if there be no designed fallacy, sufficiently lead candid and intelligent readers into the true meaning of it. Locke.

A candia judge will read each piece of wit
With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.

CANDIDATE. n. f. [candidatus, Lat.]

1. A competitor; one that solicits, or proposes himself for, something of advancement.
So many candidates there stand for wit,
A place at court is scarce so hard to get. Anonymus.

One would be surpris'd to see so many candidates for glory. Addison.

2. It has generally for before the thing sought.
What could thus high thy rash ambition raise?
Art thou, fond youth, a candidate for praise? Pope.

3. Sometimes of.

The first-fruits of poetry were giv'n
To make thyself a welcome inmate there,
While yet a young probationer,
And candidate of heav'n. Dryden.

CANDIDLY. adv. [from candid.] Fairly; without trick; without malice; ingenuously.

We have often desired they would deal candidly with us; for if the matter stuck only there, we would propose that every man should swear, that he is a member of the church of Ireland. Saunders.

CANDIDNESS. n. f. [from candid.] Ingenuity; openness of temper; purity of mind.

It presently sees the guilt of a sinful action; and, on the other side, observes the candidness of a man's very principles, and the sincerity of his intentions. South.

CANDLE. n. f. [candela, Lat.]

1. A light made of wax or tallow, surrounding a wick of flax or cotton.

Here burn my candle out, ay, here it dies,
Which, while it lasted, gave King Henry light.

Shakespeare.

We see that wax candles last longer than tallow candles, because wax is more firm and hard.

Bacon's Natural History.

Take a child, and setting a candle before him,
you shall find his pupil to contract very much,
to exclude the light, with the brightness whereof it would otherwise be dazzled.

Ruy.

2. Light, or luminary.

By these bleis'd candles of the night,
Had you been there, I think you would have begg'd

The ring of me, to give the worthy docto.

Shak.

CANDLEBERRY TREE. A species of sweet-willow.

CANDLEHOLDER. n. f. [from candle and hold.]

1. He that holds the candle.

2. He that remotely assists.

Let wantons, light of heart,
Tickle the fencibles rushes with her heels;
For I am proverb'd with a grandfire phrase,
To be a candleholder, and look on.

Shakespeare.

CANDLELIGHT. n. f. [from candle and
light.]

1. The light of a candle.

In darkness candlelight may serve to guide men's steps, which to use in the day, were madness.

Waller.

Before the day was done, her work she sped,
And never went by candlelight to bed.

Dryden.

The hoding owl

Steals from her private cell by night,
And flies about the candlelight.

Swift.

Such as are adapted to meals, will indifferently serve for dinners or suppers, only distinguishing between daylight and candlelight.

Swift.

2. The necessary candles for use.

I shall find him coals and candlelight.

Molineux to Locke.

CANDLEMAS. n. f. [from candle and mas.] The feast of the Purification of the Blessed Virgin, which was formerly celebrated with many lights in churches.

The harvest dinners are held by every wealthy man, or, as we term it, by every good liver, between Michaelmas and Candlemas.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

There is a general tradition in most parts of Europe, that in former times the coldness of the succeeding winter, upon shining of the sun upon Candlemas day.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Come Candlemas nine years ago she died,
And now lies bury'd by the yew-tree side.

Gay.

CANDLESTICK. n. f. [from candle and stick.] The instrument that holds candles.

The horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
With torch-staves in their hands; and their poor jades

Lob down their heads.

Shakespeare.

These countries were once christian, and members of the church, and where the golden candlesticks did stand.

Bacon.

I know a friend, who has converted the essays of a man of quality into a kind of fringe for his candlesticks.

Atterbury.

CANDLESTUFF. n. f. [from candle and stuff.] Any thing of which candles may be made; kitchenstuff; grease; tallow.

By the help of oil, and wax, and other candle-stuff, the flame may continue, and the wick nor burn.

Bacon.

CANDLEWASTER. n. f. [from candle and waste.] One that consumes candles; a spendthrift.

Patch grief with proverbs, make misfortune drunk

With candlewasters.

Shakespeare.

CANDOCK. n. f. A weed that grows in rivers.

Let the pond lie dry six or twelve months, both to kill the water weeds, as water-lilies, canlocks, reate, and bulrushes; and also, that as these die for want of water, so grass may grow on the pond's bottom.

Waller.

CANDOUR. n. f. [candor, Lat.] Sweetness of temper; purity of mind; openness; ingenuity; kindness.

He should have to much of a natural candour and sweetness, mixed with all the improvement of learning, as might convey knowledge with a soft of gentle insinuation.

Waller.

To CANDY. v. a. [probably from candare,
a word used in later times for to whiten.]

1. To converse with sugar, in such a manner as that the sugar lies in flakes, or breaks into spangles

Should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candy'd tongue lick at turd pomp,
And crook the pignat hinges of the knee,
Where thrust may toll by fawning.

Shakespeare.

They have in Turkey confections like to candied conerves, made of sugar and lemons, or sugar and citrons, or sugar and violets, and some other flowers, and mixture of amber.

Bacon.

With candy'd plantanes, and the juicy pine,
On choicest melons and sweet grapes they dine.

Waller.

2. To form into congelations.

Will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning toast,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit?

Shakespeare.

3. To incrust with congelations.

Since when those frosts that winter brings,
Which candy every green.

Renew us like the twining springs,
And we thus fresh are seen.

Drayton.

To CANDY. v. n. To grow congealed.

CANDY Lion's foot. [catanance, Lat.] A plant.

Miller.

CANE. n. f. [canna, Lat.]

1. A kind of strong reed, of which walk- ing-staffs are made; a walking-staff.

Shall I to please another wine sprung mind Lose all mine own? God hath given me a measure

Short of his cane; and body: must I find
A pain in that wherein he finds a pleasure?

Robert.

The king thrust the captain from him with his cane; whereupon he took his leave, and went home.

Hobart.

If the poker be out of the way, or broken, fir the fire with your master's cane.

Swift.

2. The plant which yields the sugar.

This cane or reed grows plentifully both in the East and West Indies. Other reeds have their skin hard and dry, and their pulp void of juice; but the skin of the sugar cane is soft. It usually grows four or five feet high, and about half an inch in diameter. The stem or stalk is divided by knots a foot and a half apart. At the top it puts forth long green tufted leaves, from the middle of which arise the flower and the seed.
They usually plant them in pieces cut a foot and a half below the top of the flower; and they are ordinarily ripe in ten months, at which time they are found quite full of a white focculent marrow, whence is expell'd the liquor of which sugar is made.

Chambers.

And the sweet liquor on the cane below,
From which prepar'd the luscious sugars flow.

Blackmore.

3. A lance; a dart made of cane: whence the Spanish inca de cannas.

Abenamar, thy youth these sports has known,
Of which thy age is now spectator grown:
Judge-like thou sit'st, to praise or to arraign
The flying skinfish of the darded cane.

Dryden.

4. A reed.

Food may be afforded to bees, by small canes or troughs conveyed into their lives.

Mertimer.

To CANE. v. a. [from the noun.] To beat with a walking-staff.

CANICULAR. adj. [canicularis, Lat.]
Belonging to the dogstar.

In regard to different latitudes, unto some the canicular days are in the winter, as unto such as are under the equinoctial line; for unto them the dog star riseth, when the sun is about the tropick of Cancer, which least of all is in winter.

Robert's Vagor Errata.

CANINE. adj. [caninus, Lat.]

1. Having the properties of a dog.

A kind of women are made up of canine particles: these are bolds, who imitate the manner out of which they were taken, always busy and barking, and snarl at every one that comes in their way.

Swajson.

2. Canine hunger, in medicine, is an ap- petite which cannot be satisfied.

It may occasion an exorbitant appetite of usual things, which they will take in such quantities, till they vomit them up like dogs, from whence it is called canine.

Abbatnot.

CANISTER. n. f. [canistrum, Lat.]

1. A small basket.

Where lilies in full canisters they bring,
With all the glories of the purple spring.

Dryden.

2. A small vessel in which any thing, such as tea or coffee, is laid up.

CANKER. n. f. [cancer, Lat.] It seems to have the same meaning and original with cancer, but to be accidentally written with a k, when it denotes bad qualities in a less degree; or canker might come from chancre, Fr. and cancer from the Latin.]

1. A worm that preys upon and destroys fruits.

And leafyfel idlers he doth detest,
The canker worm of every gentle breast.

That when the locust hath left, hath the canker worm eaten.

Job.

Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells; so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Shakespeare.

A humming, shining, flaring, cringing cowa'd.
A canker worm of peace, was rais'd above him.

Ottway.

2. A fly that preys upon fruits.

There be of flies, caterpillars, canker flies, and bear flies.

Waller's Anac.

3. Any thing that corrupts or consumes.

It is the canker and ruin of many men's estates, which, in process of time, breeds a publick poverty.

Bacon.

Sacrilege may prove an eating canker, and a consuming moth, in the estate that we leave them.

Atterbury.

No longer live the cankers of my court;
All to your several states with speed resort;
Waste in wild riot what your land allows,
There ply the early feast, and late caourse.

Pepp.

4. A kind of wild worthless rose; the dog- rose.

To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose,
And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke.

Shakespeare.

Draw a cherry with the leaf, the heart of a sleeper, a single or canker rose.

Pemerton.

5. An eating or corroding humour.

I am not glad, that such a sore of time
Should seek a plaister by a comic and revolt,
And heal th' imerate canker of one wound
By making many.

Shakespeare.

6. Corrosion; virulence.

As with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind with canker.

Shakespeare.

7. A disease in trees.

Dit.

To CANKER. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To grow corrupt; implying something venomous and malignant.

That cunning architect of canker'd guile,
Whom princes late displeasure left in hands,
For falld letters, and suborned wile. Fairy Q
I will lift the down-trod Mortimer
As high 't' th' air as this unthankful king,
A. this ingrate and canker'd Boingbroke. Shak.
Or what the cross dire looking planet finite,
Or hurtful worm with canker'd venom bite.

To soare new climate, or to thy native sky,
Oh friendless and forsaken virtue! fly:
The Indian air is deadly to thee grown;
Deceit and canker'd malice rule thy throne.

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day or secret night. Prior.

2. To decay by some corrosive or destructive principle

Silvering will sully and canker more than gilding; which, if it might be corrected with a little mixture of gold, will be profitable. Bacon.

To CAN'KER. v. a.

1. To corrupt; to corrode.

Restore to God his due in tithes and time;
A tithes purloin'd cankers the whole estate.

2. To infect; to pollute.

An honest man will enjoy himself better in a moderate fortune, that is gained with honour and reputation, than in an overgrown estate, that is cankered with the acquisitions of rapine and ex-action.

CAN'KERBIT. particip. adj. [from canker and bit.] Bitten with an venomous tooth.

Know, thy name is lost,
By treason's tooth baregawn and cankerbit.

CANNABINE. adj. [cannabinus, Lat.]
Hemp.

CANNIBAL. n. f. An anthropophagite; a maneater.

The cannibals themselves eat no man's flesh of those that die of themselves, but of such as are slain.

They were little better than cannibals, who do hunt one another: and he that hath most strength and swiftness, doth eat and devour all his fellows.

It was my hint to speak
Of the cannibals that each other eat;
The anthropophagi.

The captive cannibal, oppress'd with chains,
Yet braves his foes, reviles, provokes, disdains;
Of nature fierce, untameable, and proud,
He bids defiance to the gaping crowd;
And spent at last, and speechless, as he lies,
With fiery glances mocks their rage, and dies.

If an eleventh commandment had been given,
Thou shalt not eat human flesh; would not these cannibals have esteem'd it more difficult than all the rest?

CANNIBALLY. adv. [from cannibal.] In the manner of a cannibal.

Before Corioli, he feucht him and notcht him like a carbondado.
—Had he been cannibally given, he might have broil'd and eaten him too.

CANNIPERS. n. f. [corrupted from callipers; which see.]

The square is taken by a pair of cannipers, or two rulers, clapped to the side of a tree, measuring the distance between them.

CANNON. n. f. [cannon, Fr. from canna,
Lat. a pipe, meaning a large tube.]

1. A great gun for battery.
2. A gun larg'r than can be managed by the hand. They are of so many sizes, that they decrease in the bore from a ball of forty-eight pounds to a ball of five ounces.

As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks,
So they redoubled strokes upon the foe. Shaksp.
He had left all the cannon he had taken; and now he sent all his great cannon to a garrison.

The making, or price, of these gunpowder instruments, is extremely expensive, as may be easily judg'd by the weight of their materials; a whole cannon weighing commonly eight thousand pounds; a half cannon, five thousand; a culverin, four thousand five hundred; a demi-culverin, three thousand; which, whether it be in iron or brass, must needs be very costly.

CANNON-BALL. } n. f. [from cannon, CANNON-BULLET. } ball, bullet, and CANNON-SHOT. } shot.] The balls which are shot from great guns.

He reckons those for wounds that are made by bullets, although it be a cannon-shot.
Let a cannon-bullet pass through a room, it must strike successively the two sides of the room.

To CANNONA'DE. v. n. [from cannon.]

To play the great guns; to batter or attack with great guns.

Both armies cannonaded all the ensuing day.

To CANNONA'DE. v. a. To fire upon with cannon.

CANNONIER. n. f. [from cannon.] The engineer that manages the cannon.

Give me the cups;
And let the kettle to the trumpets speak,
The trumpets to the cannonier without,
The cannons to the heav'ns, the heav'ns to earth.

A third was a most excellent cannonier, whose good skill did much endamage the forces of the king.

CANNOT. A word compounded of can and not: noting inability.

I cannot but believe many a child can tell twenty, long before he has any idea of infinity at all.

CANO'A. } n. f. A boat made by cutting CANOE'. } the trunk of a tree into a hollow vessel.

Others made rafts of wood; others devised the boat of one tree, called the canoa, which the Gauls upon the Rhone used in assisting the transportation of Hannibal's army.

In a war against Seniramis, they had four thousand monoxyla, or canoes of one piece of timber.

CANON. n. f. [κἀνων.]

1. A rule; a law.

The truth is, they are rules and canons of that law, which is written in all men's hearts; the church had for ever, no laws than now, stood bound to observe them, whether the apostle had mentioned them, or no.

His books are almost the very canon to judge both doctrine and discipline by.

Religious canons, civil laws, are cruel;
Then what should war be?

Canons in logick are such as these: every part of a division, singly taken, must contain less than the whole; and a definition must be peculiar and proper to the thing defined.

2. The laws made by ecclesiastical councils.

Canon law is that law which is made and ordained in a general council, or provincial synod, of the church.

These were looked on as lapsed persons, and great severities of penance were prescribed them by the canons of Ancyra.

3. The books of Holy Scripture; or the great rule.

Canon also denotes those books, of Scripture, which are received as inspired and canonical, to distinguish them from either profane, apocryphal, or disputed books. Thus we say, that Genesis is part of the sacred canon of the Scripture.

4. A dignitary in cathedral churches.

For deans and canons, or prebends, of catted-edral churches, they were of great use in the church; they were to be of counsel with the bishop for his revenue, and for his government, in causes ecclesiastical.

Swift much admires the place and air,
And longs to be a canon there.
A canon' that's a place too mean:
No, doctor, you shall be a dean;
Two dozen canons round your stall,
And you the tyrant o'er them all.

5. Canons Regular. Such as are placed in monasteries.

6. Canons Secular. Lay canons, who have been, as a mark of honour, admitted into some chapters.

7. [Among chirurgions.] An instrument used in sewing up wounds.

8. A large sort of printing letter, probably so called from being first used in printing a book of canons; or perhaps from its size, and therefore properly written canon.

CANON BIT. n. f. That part of the bit
let into the horse's mouth.

A goodly person, and could manage fair
His stubborn steed with canon bit,
Who under him did trample as the air.

CANONNESS. n. f. [canonissa, low Lat.]

There are, in popish countries, women they call canonesses, living after the example of secular canons.

CANONICAL. adj. [canonicus, low Lat.]

1. According to the canon.

2. Constituting the canon.

Public readings there are of books and writings, not canonical, whereby the church doth also preach, or openly make known, the doctrine of virtuous conversation.

No such book was found amongst those canonical scriptures.

3. Regular; stated; fixed by ecclesiastical laws.

Seven times in a day do I praise thee, said David: from this definite number some ages of the church took their pattern for their canonical hours.

4. Spiritual; ecclesiastical; relating to the church.

York anciently had a metropolitan jurisdiction over all the bishops of Scotland, from whom they had their consecration, and to whom they swore canonical obedience.

CANONICALLY. adv. [from canonical.]

In a manner agreeable to the canon.

It is a known story of the friar, who, on a fasting day, bid his capon be carp, and then very canonically eat it.

CANONICALNESS. n. f. [from canonical.]

The quality of being canonical.

CANONIST. n. f. [from canon.] A man versed in the ecclesiastical laws; a professor of the canon law.

John Fisher, bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him from that poor bishoprick, he refused, saying, he would not forake his poor little old wife; thinking of the fifteenth canon of the Nicene council, and that of the canonists, Matrimonium inter episcopum & ecclesiam esse contractum, &c. Comden's Remains.

Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell.

CANONIZATION. n. f. [from canoniz.]

The act of declaring any man a saint.

It is very suspicious, that the interests of particular families, or churches, have too great a sway in canonizations.

To CANONIZE. v. a. [from canon, to print into the canon, or rule for observing festivals.] To declare any man a saint.

But fate forbids; the Strygian floods oppose,
And with nine circling streams the captive souls inclose. Dryden.

2b CAPTIVE. v. a. [from the noun. It was used formerly with the accent on the last syllable, but now it is on the first.] To take prisoner; to bring into a condition of servitude.

But being all defeated save a few,
Rather than fly, or be captiv'd, herself she flew. Spenser.

Thou leavest them to hostile sword
Of heathen and profane, their carcasses
To dogs and fowls a prey, or else captiv'd. Milt.
What further fear of danger can there be?
Beauty, which captives all things, lets me free. Dryden.

Still lay the god: the nymph surpris'd,
Yet mistress of herself, devis'd
How she the vagrant might intral,
And captive him who captives all. Prior.

Miller.

CASH'ER. n. f. [from cash.] He that has charge of the money.

If a steward or cashier be suffered to run on, without bringing him to a reckoning, such a foolish forbearance will teach him to shuffle.

South.

A Venetian, finding his son's expences grow very high, order'd his cashier to let him have no more money than what he should count when he received it.

Locke

Flight of cashiers, or mobs, he'll never mind;
And knows no losses, while the muse is kind.

Pope.

To CASH'ER. v. a. [caffer, French; cafsare, Latin.]

1. To discard; to dismiss from a post, or a society, with reproach.

Does't not go well? Cassio hath beaten thee,
And thou by that small hurt had'st cafsar'd Cassio.

Shakspeare.

Seconds in fictions many times prove principals; but many times also they prove cafsars, and are cafsar'd.

Bacon.

If I had omitted what he said, his thoughts and words being thus cafsar'd in my hands, he had no longer been Lucetius.

Dryden.

They have already cafsar'd several of their followers as mutineers.

Addison's Freeholder.

The ruling rogue, who dreads to be cafsar'd, contrives, as he is hated, to be fear'd.

Swift.

2. It seems, in the following passages, to signify the same as to annul; to vacate: which is sufficiently agreeable to the derivation.

If we should find a father corrupting his son, or a mother her daughter, we must charge this upon a peculiar anomaly and baseness of nature; if the name of nature may be allowed to that which seems to be a cafsaring of it, and deviation from, and a contradiction to, the common principles of humanity.

South.

Some cafsar, or at least endeavour to invalidate, all other arguments, and forbid us to hearken to those proofs, as weak or fallacious.

Locke.

CASK. n. f. [casque, French; cadus, Latin.]

1. A barrel; a wooden vessel to stop up liquor or provisions.

The patient turning himself abed, it makes a fluctuating kind of noise, like the rumbling of water in a cask.

Harvey.

Perhaps to-morrow he may change his wine,
And drink old sparkling Alban, or Setine,
Whose tittle, and whose age, with mould o'er-grown,

The good old cask for ever keeps unknown.

Dryden.

2. It has cask in a kind of plural sense, to signify the commodity or provision of casks.

Great inconveniencies grow by the bad cask being commonly so ill seasoned and conditioned, as that a great part of the beer is ever lost and cast away.

Raleigh.

CASK. } n. f. [casque, Fr. caffis, Lat.]

CASQUE. } A helmet; armour for the head: a poetical word.

Let thy blows, doubly redoubled,

Fall like amazing thunder on the casque

Of thy pernicious enemy.

Shakspeare.

And these

Sling weighty stones, when from afar they fight;

Their casques are cork, a covering thick and light.

Dryden.

Why does he load with darts

His trembling hands, and crush beneath a cask

His wrinkled brows?

Addison.

CAS'KET. n. f. [a diminutive of caisse, a chest, Fr. caisse, caffette.] A small box or chest for jewels, or things of particular value.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casque, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and taken away.

Shakspeare.

O ignorant poor man! what dost thou bear

Lock'd up within the casque of thy breast?

What jewels and what riches hast thou there?

What heav'nly treasure in so weak a chest?

DuVies.

Mine eye hath found that hid sepulchral rock,
That was the casque of heav'n's richest store.

Milton.

That had by chance pack'd up his choicest treasure

In one dear casque, and sav'd only that.

This casque India's glowing gems unlocks,

And all Arabia breathes from yonder box.

Pope.

To CASKET. v. a. [from the noun.]

To put in a casket.

I have writ my letters, casquetted my treasure, and given order for our hories.

CASSAVI. } n. f. A plant.

CASSADA. } n. f. A plant.

It is cultivated in all the warm parts of America, where the root, after being divested of its milky juice, is ground to flour, and then made into cakes of bread. Of this there are two sorts. The most common has purplish stalks, with the veins and leaves of a purplish colour; but the stalks of the other are green, and the leaves of a lighter green. The last sort is not venomous, even when the roots are fresh and full of juice; which the negroes frequently dig up, root, and eat, like potatoes, without any ill effects.

Milner.

CASSAWARE. See CASSIOWARY.

CASSIA. n. f. A sweet spice mentioned by Moses, Ex. xxx. 24. as an ingredient in the composition of the holy oil, which was to be made use of in the consecration of the sacred vessels of the tabernacle.  So far, but that the rest are measuring casts,
 Their emulation and their pastime lasts. Waller.
2. The thing thrown.
 Yet all these dreadful deeds, this deadly fray,
 A cast of dreadful dust will soon ally. Dryden.
3. State of any thing cast or thrown.
 In his own instance of calling ambuscade though it partake more of contingency than of freedom; supposing the posture of the party's hand, who did throw the dice; supposing the figure of the table, and of the dice themselves; supposing the measure of force applied, and supposing all other things which did concur to the production of that cast, to be the very same things were, there is no doubt but, in this case, the cast is necessary.
Erasmus's Conf. to Holbes.
 Plato compares life to a game at tables; there what cast we shall have is not in our power; but to manage it well, that is. Norris.

CATEGORICAL. adj. [from category.] Absolute; adequate; positive; equal to the thing to be expressed.

The king's commissioners desired to know, whether the parliament's commissioners did believe that bishops were unlawful? They could never obtain a categorical answer. Clarendon.

A single proposition, which is also categorical, may be divided again into simple and complex. Watts.

CATEGORICALLY. adv. [from categorical.] 1. Directly; expressly.

2. Positively; plainly. I dare affirm, and that categorically, in all parts wherever trade is great, and continues so, that trade must be nationally profitable. Child.

CA'TEGORY. n. f. [from κατηγορία.] A class; a rank; an order of ideas; a predicament.

The absolute infinitude, in a manner, quite changes the nature of beings, and exalts them into a different category. Cheyne.

CATENARIAN. adj. [from catena, Lat.] Relating to a chain; resembling a chain.

In geometry, the catenarian curve is formed by a rope or chain hanging freely between two points of suspension. Harris.

The back is bent after the manner of the catenarian curve, by which it obtains that curvature that is safest for the included marrow. Cheyne.

TO CA'TENATE. v. a. [from catena, Latin.] To chain. Dict.

CATENA'TION. n. f. [from catena, Lat.] Link; regular connexion.

This catenation, or conserving union, whenever his pleasure shall divide, let go, or separate, they shall fall from their existence. Brown.

TO CA'TER. v. n. [from cates.] To provide food; to buy in victuals.

He that doth the ravens feed, Yea providently caters for the sparrow, Be comfort to my age. Shakspeare.

CA'TER. n. f. [from the verb.] Provider; collector of provisions, or victuals: misprinted perhaps for caterer.

The oysters dredged in this Lyner, find a welcome acceptance, where the taste is cater for the stomach, than those of the Tamar. Carew.

CA'TER. n. f. [from quatre, French.] The four of cards and dice.

CA'TER-COUSIN. n. f. A corruption of quatre-cousin, from the ridiculousness of calling cousin or relation to so remote a degree.

His matter and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-cousins. Shakspeare.

Poetry and reason, how come these to be cater-cousins? Rymer.

CA'TERER. n. f. [from cater.] One employed to select and buy in provisions for the family; the provider or purveyor.

Let no scent offensive the chamber infest; Let fancy, not cost, prepare all our dishes; Let the caterer mind the taste of each guest, And the cook in his dressing comply with their wishes. Ben Jonson.

He made the greedy ravens to be Elias's caterers, and bring him food. King Charles.

Seldom shall one see in cities or courts that athletic vigour, which is seen in poor houses, where nature is their cook, and necessity their caterer. South.

CA'TERESS. n. f. [from cater.] A woman employed to cater, or provide victuals.

Impostor! do not charge innocent nature, As if the world her children should be riotous With her abundance: she, good cateress, Means her provision only to the good. Milton.

CA'TERPILLAR. n. f. [This word Skinner and Minsheu are inclined to derive from chate peluse, a weasel. It seems easily deducible from cates, food, and pillar, Fr. to rob; the animal that eats up the fruits of the earth.]

1. A worm which, when it gets wings, is sustained by leaves and fruits.

The caterpillar breedeth of dew and leaves; for we see infinite caterpillars breed upon trees and hedges, by which the leaves of the trees or hedges are consumed. Bacon.

Auter is drawn with a pot pouring forth water, with which descend grasshoppers, caterpillars, and creatures bred by noisiture. Peasham.

2. Any thing voracious and useles.

CA'TERPILLAR. n. f. [from scorpioides, Latin.] The name of a plant. Miller.

TO CA'TERWA'UL. v. n. [from cat.]

1. To make a noise as cats in rutting time.

2. To make any offensive or odious noise.

What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady has not called up her steward Malvolio, and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Was no dispute between The caterwauling brethren? Hudibras.

CATES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology: Skinner imagines it may be corrupted from delicate; which is not likely, because Junius observes, that the Dutch have kater in the same sense with our cater. It has no singular.] Viands; food; dish of meat: generally employed to signify nice and luxurious food.

The fair acceptance, sir, creates The entertainment perfect, not the cates. Ben Jonson.

O wasteful riot, never well content With low priz'd fare; hunger ambitious Of cates by land and sea far fetclit and sent. Raleigh.

Alas, how simple to these cates,

Was that crude apple that diverted Eve! Milton.

They, by th' alluring odour drawn, in haste

Fly to the dulcet cates, and crowding sip

Their palatable bane. Phillips.

With costly cates she stain'd her frugal board,

Then with ill-gotten wealth she bought a lord. Arbutnot.

CA'TFISH. n. f. The name of a sea fish in the West Indies; so called from its round head and large glaring eyes, by which they are discovered in hollow rocks. Phillips.

CA'THARPINGS. n. f. Small ropes in a ship, running in little blocks from one side of the shrouds to the other, near the deck: they belong only to the main shrouds; and their use is to force the shrouds tight, for the ease and safety of the masts, when the ship rolls. Harris.

CATHARTICAL. adj. [from καθάρσις.] Purg-

CATHARTICK. ing medicines. The vermicular or peristaltick motion of the guts continually helps on their contents, from the pylorus to the rectum; and every irritation either quickens that motion in its natural order, or occasions some little inversions in it. In both, what but slightly adheres to the coats will be loosened, and they will be more agitated, and thus rendered more fluid.

By this only it is manifest, how a cathartic hastens and increases the discharges by stool; but where the force of the stimulus is great, all the appen-dages of the bowels, and all the viscera in the abdomen, will be twitched; by which a great deal will be drained back into the intestines, and made a part of what they discharge. Quincy.

Quicksilver precipitated either with gold, or without addition, into a powder, is wont to be strongly enough cathartical, though the chymists have not proved, that either gold or mercury hath any salt, much less any that is purgative.

Boyle's Sceptical Chymist.

Lustrations and catharticks of the mind were sought for, and all endeavour used to calm and regulate the fury of the passions. Dray of Piety.

The piercing causticks ply their spiteful pow'r, Emeticks ranch, and keen catharticks scour. Garth.

Plato has called mathematical demonstrations the catharticks or purgatives of the soul. Addison.

CATHARTICALNESS. n. f. [from cathartical.] Purging quality.

CA'THEAD. n. f. A kind of fossil.

The nodules with leaves in them, called cat-heads, seem to consist of a sort of iron stone, not unlike that which is found in the rocks near Whitehaven in Cumberland, where they call them catcaups. Woodward on Fossils.

CA'THEAD. n. f. [In a ship.] A piece of timber with two shivers at one end, having a rope and a block, to which is fastened a great iron hook, to trice up the anchor from the hawse to the top of the forecable. Sea Dict.

CATHE'DRAL. adj. [from cathedra, Lat.] A chair of authority; an episcopal see.

1. Episcopal; containing the see of a bishop.

A cathedral church is that where in there are two or more persons, with a bishop at the head of them, that do make as it were one body politic. Arbuckle's Paragon.

- Mcthought I fat in feat of majesty,
In the cathedral church of Westminster. Shaksf.
2. Prolonging to an episcopal church.
His constant and regular assisting at the cathedral service was never interrupted by the sharpness of weather. Locke.
3. In low phrase, antique; venerable; old. This seems to be the meaning in the following lines.
Here aged trees cathedral walks compose,
And mount the hill in venerable rows;
There the green infants in their beds are laid. Pepe.

CATHE'DRAL. n. f. The head church of a diocese.

There is nothing in Leghorn so extraordinary as the cathedral, which a man may view with pleasure, after he has seen St. Peter's. Addison.

It is necessary in such a chain of causes to ascend to and terminate in some first, which should be the original of motion, and the cause of all other things; but itself be caused by none. South.

She weeping ask'd, in these her blooming years,
What unforeseen misfortune caus'd her care,
To loath her life, and languish in despair. Dryden.

Things that move so swift as not to affect the senses distinctly, and so cause not any train of ideas in the mind, are not perceived to move. Locke.

CAUSELESSLY. adv. [from causeless.]

Without cause; without reason.

Human laws are not to be broken with scandal, nor at all without reason; for he that does it causelessly, is a despoiler of the law, and undervalues its authority. Taylor's Holy Living.

CAUSELESS. adj. [from cause.]

1. Having no cause; original in itself.

Reach th' Almighty's sacred throne,
And make his causeless pow'r, the cause of all things, known. Blackmore's Creation.

2. Wanting just ground or motive.

Yet is my truth upright,
And love avow'd to other lady late,
That, to remove the same, I have no might:
To change love causeless, is reproch to warlike knight. Spenser's Fairy Queen.
And me and mine threats not with war but death;

Thus causeless hatred endless is unchast. Fahfax.
The causeless dislike, which others have conceived, is no sufficient reason for us to forbear in any place. Hooker.

As women yet who apprehend
Soon sudden cause of causeless fear,
Although that seeming cause take end,
A shaking through their limbs they find. Waller.

Alas! my fears are causeless and ungrounded, Fantastick dreams, and melancholy fumes. Denham.

CAUSER. n. s. [from cause.] He that causes; the agent by which an effect is produced.

His whole oration stood upon a short narration, what was the causer of this metamorphosis. Sidney.

Is not the causer of these timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner? Shakespeare.

CAUSEY. } n. s. [chauffée, Fr.] This CAUSEWAY. } word, by a false notion of its etymology, has been lately written causeway.] A way raised and paved; a way raised above the rest of the ground.

To Shippim the lot came forth westward by the causey. Chron.

The other way Satan went down,
The causeway to hell-gate. Milton.

But that broad causeway will direct your way,
And you may reach the town by noon of day. Dryden.

Whose causeway parts the vale with shady rows;
Whose seats the weary traveller repose. Pope.

CAUSTICAL. } adj. [καυστικός.] Epithets

CAUSTICK. } of medicaments which destroy the texture of the part to which they are applied, and eat it away, or burn it into an eschar, which they do by extreme minuteness, asperity, and quantity of motion, that, like those of fire itself, destroy the texture of the solids, and change what they are applied to into a substance like burnt flesh; which, in a little time, with detergent dressing, falls quite off, and leaves a vacuity in the part. Quincy.

If extirpation be safe, the best way will be by caustical medicines, or escharotics. Wiseman.

I proposed eradicating by escharotics, and began with a caustick stone. Wiseman.

Air too hot, cold, and moist, abounding perhaps with caustick, astringent, and coagulating particles. Arbutnot.

CAUSTICK. n. s. A burning application.

It was a tenderness to mankind, that introduced corrosives and causticks, which are indeed but artificial fires. Temple.

The piercing caustics ply their spiteful pow'r, Emetics ranch, and keen cathartics scour. Garrh.

CAUTEL. n. s. [cautela, Lat.] Caution; scruple. Not used.

Perhaps he loves you now;
And now no foil of cautel doth besmirch
The virtue of his will. Shakespeare.

1. Cautious; wary; provident. Not in use.

Palladio doth wish, like a cauteleux artisan, that the inward walls might bear some good share in the burden. Weston.

2. Wily; cunning; treacherous.

Of themselves, for the most part, they are so cauteleux and wily headed, especially being men of so small experience and practice in law matters, that you would wonder whence they borrow such subtilties and sly shifts. Spenser in Ireland.

Your son
Will or exceed the common, or be caught
With cauteleux baits and practice. Shakespeare.

CAUTELOUSLY. adv. [from cauteleux.]

1. Cunningly; sily; treacherously. Not in use.

All pretorian courts, if any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of a retirement, and the other party doth cauteleously get the start and advantage; yet they will set back all things in statu quo prius. Bacon's War with Spain.

2. Cautiously; warily.

The Jews, not resolved of the scietica side of Jacob, do cauteleously, in their diet, abstain from both. Brown.

CAUTERIZA'TION. n. s. [from cauterize.]

The act of burning flesh with hot irons, or caustic medicaments.

They require, after cauterization, no such bandage, as that thereby you need to fear interception of the spirits. Wifeman.

To CAUTERIZE. v. a. [cauteriser, Fr.]

To burn with the cautery.

For each true word a blister, and each false
Be cauterizing to the root o' th' tongue,
Consuming it with speaking. Shakespeare.

No marvel though cantharides have such a corrosive and cauterizing quality; for there is not one other of the insects, but is bred of a duller matter. Bacon's Natural History.

The design of the cautery is to prevent the canal from closing; but the operators confess, that, in persons cauterized, the tears trickle down ever after. Sharp's Surgery.

CAUTERY. n. s. [cauterio, uro.]

Cautery is either actual or potential; the first is burning by a hot iron, and the latter with caustick medicines. The actual cautery is generally used to stop mortification, by burning the dead parts to the quick; or to stop the effusion of blood, by searing up the vessels. Quincy.

In heat of fight it will be necessary to have your actual cautery always ready; for that will secure the bleeding arteries in a moment. Wifeman.

CAUTION. n. s. [caution, Fr. cautio, Lat.]

1. Prudence, as it respects danger; foresight; provident care; wariness against evil.

Such conditions, and cautions of the condition, as might assure with as much assurance as worthy matters bear. Sidney.

The Cedar, upon this new acquess, gave him part of Baccharia for caution for his disfigurement. Houel.

The parliament would yet give his majesty sufficient caution that the war should be prosecuted. Clarendon.

He that objects any crime, ought to give caution, by the means of sureties, that he will persevere in the prosecution of such crimes. Ayliffe.

3. Provision or security against.

In despite of all the rules and cautions of government, the most dangerous and mortal of vices will come off. L'Esrange.

4. Provisionary precept.

5. Warning.

To CAUTION. v. a. [from the noun.]

To warn; to give notice of a danger.

How shall our thought avoid the various fate?
Or wisdom to our caution'd soul declare
The different shapes thou pleasest to employ,
When bent to hurt, and certain to destroy? Prior.

You caution'd me against their charms,
But never gave me equal arms. Swift.

CAUTIONARY. adj. [from caution.] Given as a pledge, or in security.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it. Southem.

Is there no security for the island of Britain?
Has the enemy no cautionary towns and sea-ports to give us for securing trade? Swift.

CAUTIOUS. adj. [from cautus, Lat.]

Wary; watchful.

Be cautious of him; for he is sometimes an inconstant lover, because he hath a great advantage.

CAUTIOUSLY. adv. [from cautious.] In an attentive wary manner; warily.

They know how fickle common lovers are: Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd; For few there are but have been once deceiv'd.

CAUTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from cautious.] Watchfulness; vigilance; circumspection; provident care; prudence with respect to danger.

I could not but approve their generous constancy and cautiousness.

We should always act with great cautiousness and circumspection, in points where it is not impossible that we may be deceived.

TO CAW. v. n. [taken from the found.] To cry as the rook, raven, or crow.

Ruffet-pated choughs, many in fort, Rising and cawing at the gun's report.

TO CEASE. v. a. To put a stop to; to put an end to.

Importune him for monies; be not ceas'd With slight denial.

You may sooner, by imagination, quicken or slack a motion, than raise or cease it; as it is easier to make a dog go slower, than to make him stand still.

Cease then this impious rage.

But he, her fears to cease, Sent down the meek-eyed peace.

CEASE. n. f. [from the verb.] Extinction; failure: perhaps for decease.

The cease of majesty Dies not alone, but, like a gulph, withdraws What 's near it with it.

CEASELESS. adj. [from cease.] Incessant; perpetual; continual; without pause; without stop; without end.

My guiltless blood must quench the ceaseless fire, On which my endless tears were bootless spent.

All these with ceaseless praise his works behold, Both day and night.

That stands secure, though all the winds employ Their ceaseless roar; and only sheds its leaves, Or mass, which the revolving spring restores.

CECITY. n. f. [cæcitas, Lat.] Blindness; privation of sight.

They are not blind, nor yet distinctly see; there is in them no cecity, yet more than a cecitiency; they have sight enough to discern the light, though not perhaps to distinguish objects or colours.

CECITIENCY. n. f. [cæcitus, Lat.] Tendency to blindness; cloudiness of sight.

There is in them no cecitiency, yet more than a cecitiency.

CEDAR. n. f. [cedrus, Lat.] A tree.

It is evergreen; the leaves are much narrower than those of the pine tree, and many of them produced out of one tubercle, resembling a painter's pencil; it hath male flowers, or katkins, produced at remote distances from the fruit on the same tree. The seeds are produced in large cones, squamose and turbinated. The extension of the branches is very regular in cedar trees; the ends of the shoots declining, and thereby showing their upper surface, which is constantly clothed with green leaves, so regularly, as to appear at a distance like a green carpet, and, in waving about, make an agreeable prospect. It is surprising that this tree has not been more cultivated in England; for it would be a great ornament to barren bleak mountains, even in Scotland, where few other trees would grow; it being a native of Mount Libanus, where the snow continues most part of the year. Maundrel, in his travels, says, he measured one of the largest cedars on Mount Libanus, and found it to be twelve yards six inches in circumference, and found. At about five or six yards from the ground, it was divided into five limbs, each of which was equal to a great tree. The wood of this famous tree is accounted proof against the putrefaction of animal bodies. The saw-dust is thought to be one of the secrets used by the mountebanks, who pretend to have the embalming myrtle. This wood is also said to yield an oil, which is famous for preserving books and writings; and the wood is thought by Bacon to continue above a thousand years found.

I must yield my body to the earth: Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge, Whose arms gave shelter to the pinnace eagle; Under whose shade the ramping lion slept; Whose top branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree, And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful wind.

CEDRINE. adj. [cedrinus, Lat.] Of or belonging to the cedar tree.

TO CEIL. v. a. [calo, Lat.] To overlay, or cover, the inner roof of a building.

And the greater house he ceiled with fir-tree, which he overlaid with fine gold.

How will he, from his house ceiled with cedar, be content with his Saviour's lot, not to have where to lay his head?

CEILING. n. f. [from ceil.] The inner roof.

Varnish makes ceilings not only shine, but last.

And now the thicken'd sky Like a dark ceiling stood; down rush'd the rain Impetuous.

So when the sun by day, or moon by night, Strike on the polish'd brats their trembling light, The glittering species here and there divide, And cast their dubious beams from side to side: Now on the walls, now on the pavement play, And to the ceiling flash the glaring day.

CELANDINE. n. f. [chelidonium, Lat.] A plant.

CELEBRICK. n. f. A species of parsley: it is also called turnep rooted celery.

CELEBRITY. n. f. [celeritas, Lat.] Swift-ness; speed; velocity.

We very well see in them, who thus plead, a wonderful celerity of discourse: for, perceiving at the first but only some cause of suspicion, and fear lest it should be evil, they are presently, in one and the self-same breath, resolved, that what beginning soever it had, there is no possibility it should be good.

His former custom and practice was ever full of forwardness and celerity to make head against them.

Thus, with imagin'd wings, our swift celerity flies,

In motion with no less celerity Than that of thought.

Three things concur to make a percussion great; the bigness, the density, and the celerity of the body moved.

Whatever increaseth the density of the blood, even without encreasing its celerity, heats, because a denser body is hotter than a rarer.

CELESTIAL. adj. [caelestis, Lat.] Heavenly; relating to the superior regions.

To CHAFFER. v. n. [kauffen, Germ. to buy.] To treat about a bargain; to haggle; to bargain.

Not rode himself to Paul's, the publick fair,
To chaffer for preferments with his gold,
Where bishopricks and sinecures are sold. Dryd.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar. Swift.

In disputes with chaimen, when your matter sends you to chaffer with them, take pity, and tell your matter that they will not take a furthering of's. Swift.

To CHAFFER. v. a. [The active sense is obsolete.]

1. To buy.

He chaffer'd chairs in which churchmen were set,
And breach of laws to privy farm did let. Spenser.

2. To exchange.

Approaching nigh, he never said to greet,
No chaffer words, proud courage to provoke.
Fairy Queen.

upon Joseph's hand, and put a gold chain about his neck. Genesis.

2. A bond; a manacle; a fetter; something with which prisoners are bound.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal, or in real chains. Pope.

3. A line of links with which land is measured.

A surveyor may as soon, with his chain, measure out infinite space, as a philosopher, by the quickest flight of mind, reach it; or, by thinking, comprehend it. Locke.

4. A series linked together, as of causes or thoughts; a succession; a subordination.

Those so mistake the christian religion, as to think it is only a chain of fatal decrees, to deny all liberty of man's choice toward good or evil.
Hammond.

As there is pleasure in the right exercise of any faculty, so especially in that of right reasoning; which is still the greater, by how much the consequences are more clear, and the chains of them more long. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

To CHAIN. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To fasten or bind with a chain.

They repeal daily any wholesome act established against the rich, and provide more piercing statutes daily to chain up and restrain the poor.
Shakspere's Coriolanus.

The mariners be chained in his own galleys for slaves. Kallias.

O, march'd I chain'd behind the hostile car,
The victor's pasture, and the spoil of war!
Prior.

They, with joint force oppression chain'd, fit
Imperial justice at the helm. Townson.

2. To enslave; to keep in slavery.

The monarch was ador'd, the people chain'd.
Prior.

This would, 'tis true,
Was made for Cæsar, but for Trius too;
And when more blest? who chain'd his country,
say.

O, he whole virtue fight'd to lose a day? Pope.

3. To keep by a chain.

The admiral facing the mouth of the haven chained, and the castles full of ordnance, and strongly manned, durst not attempt to enter.
Knolles's History of the Turks.

4. To unite.

O Warwick, I do bend my knee with thine,
And in this vow do chain my soul with thine.
Shakspere.

CHAINPUMP. n. f. [from chain and pump.] A pump used in large English vessels, which is double, so that one rises as the other falls. It yields a great quantity of water, works easily, and is easily mended; but takes up a great deal of room, and makes a disagreeable noise. Chambers.

It is not long since the striking of the topmast, a wonderful great case to great ships, both at sea and in harbour, hath been devised; together with the chainpump, which takes up twice as much water as the ordinary did; and we have lately added the bonnet and the drabble.
Raleigh's Essays.

CHAINSHOT. n. f. [from chain and shot.]

Two bullets or half bullets, fastened together by a chain, which, when they fly open, cut away whatever is before them.

In sea fights, oftentimes, a buttock, the brawn
of the thigh, and the calf of the leg, are torn off by the chainshot, and splinters. Wafeman.

CHAINWORK. n. f. [from chain and work.] Work with open spaces like the links of a chain.

Nets of chequerwork, and wreaths of chain-work, for the chapters which were upon the tops of the pillars. 1 Kings.

CHAIR. n. f. [chair, French.]

1. A moveable seat.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains upbind.
Pope.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat
for a single person, without a back. Watts.

2. A seat of justice, or of authority.

He makes for England, here to claim the crown.—
—Is the chair empty? Is the sword unsword'd?
Is the king dead? Shakspere's Richard III.

If thou be that princely eagle's bird,
Show thy descent by gazing 'gainst the sun;
For chair and dukedoin, throne and kingdom,
say;

Either that 's thine, or else thou wert not his.
Shakspere.

The honour'd gods

Keep Rome in safety, and the chairs of justice

Supply with worthy men. Shakspere.

Her grace sat down to rest awhile,

In a rich chair of state. Shakspere.

The committee of the commons appointed

Mr. Pym to take the chair. Chambers.

In this high temple, on a chair of state,

The seat of audience, old Latinius fate. Dryden.

3. A vehicle born by men; a sedan.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair.
Pope.

CHAIRMAN. n. f. [from chair and man.]

1. The president of an assembly.

In assemblies generally one person is chosen chairman or moderator, to keep the several speakers to the rules of order. Watts.

2. One whose trade it is to carry a chair.

One elbows him, one jostles in the thole;

A taster breaks his head, or chairman's pole.
Dryden.

Troy chariots bore the wooden steed,
Pregnant with Greeks, impatient to be freed;
Those bully Greeks, who, as the moderns do,
Instead of paying chairmen, run them through.

Swift.

CHAISE. n. f. [chaise, Fr.] A carriage of pleasure drawn by one horse.

Instead of the chariot he might have said the chaise of government; for a chaise is driven by the person that sits in it.

Addison.

CHALCOGRAPHY. n. f. [χαλκογραφία, of χαλκός, brass, and γράφω, to write or engrave.] An engraver in brads.

And, that he calls for drink, I'll have prepar'd him

A chalice for the nonce.

Shakespeare.

2. It is generally used for a cup used in acts of worship.

All the church at that time did not think emblematical figures unlawful ornaments of cups or chalices.

Stillingfleet.

CHALICED. adj. [from calix, Lat. the cup of a flower.] Having a cell or cup: applied by Shakespeare to a flower, but now obsolete.

Hark, hark! the lark at heav'n's gate sings,
And Phœbus' gins arise,

His steeds to water at these springs,
On chalic'd flowers that lies.

Shakespeare.

CHALK. n. f. [ceale, cealcetan, Sax. calek, Welsh.]

Chalk is a white fossil, usually reckoned a stone, but by some ranked among the toles. It is used in medicine as an absorbent, and is celebrated for curing the heartburn.

Chambers.

He maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk stones that are beaten in sunder.

Isaiah.

Chalk is of two sorts; the hard, dry, strong chalk, which is best for lime; and a soft, unctuous chalk, which is best for lands, because it easily dissolves with rain and frost.

Mortimer.

With chalk I first describe a circle here,
Where these ethereal spirits most appear.

Dryden.

To CHALK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To rub with chalk.

The basilly rabble then came down
From all the quiers in the town,
And stulls and thopboards in vast swarms,
With new chalk'd bills and rusty arms.

Hudibras.

2. To manure with chalk.

Land that is chalk'd, if it is not well dunged, will receive but little benefit from a second chalking.

Mortimer.

3. To mark or trace out as with chalk.

Being not propt by necessity, whose grace
Chalk succeeds their way.

Shakespeare.

His own mind chalked out to him the just proportions and measures of behaviour to his fellow-creatures.

South.

With these helps I might at least have chalked out a way for others, to amend my errors in a like design.

Dryden.

The time falls within the compass here chalked out by nature, very punctually.

Woodward.

CHALK-CUTTER. n. f. [from chalk and cut.] A man that digs chalk.

Shells, by the seamen called chalk eggs, are dug up commonly in the chalk-pits, where the chalk-cutters drive a great trade with them.

Woodward.

CHALK-PIT. n. f. [from chalk and pit.] A pit in which chalk is dug. See CHALK-CUTTER.

CHALKY. adj. [from chalk.]

1. Consisting of chalk; white with chalk.

As far as I could ken the chalky cliffs,
When from thy shore the tempest beat us back,
I stood upon the hatches in the storm.

Shakspeare.

That bellying beats on Dover's chalky cliff.

Rowe.

2. Impregnated with chalk.

Chalky water towards the top of earth is too fretting.

Bacon.

To CHALLENGE. v. a. [chalenger, Fr.]

1. To call another to answer for an offence by combat.

The prince of Wales stept forth before the king,
And, nephew, challeng'd you to single fight.

Shakspeare.

2. To call to a contest.

Thus form'd for speed, he challenges the wind,
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind.

Dryden.

I challenge any man to make any pretence to power by right of fatherhood, either intelligible or possible.

Locke.

3. To accuse.

Many of them be such losels and scatterlings, as that they cannot easily by any sheriff be gotten,
when they are challenged for any such fact.

Spenser.

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present,
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness.

Shakspeare.

4. [In law.] To object to the impartiality of any one. [See the noun.]

Though only twelve are sworn, yet twenty-four are to be returned, to supply the defects or want of appearance of those that are challenged off, or make default.

Hale.

5. To claim as due.

That divine order, whereby the pre-eminence of chiefest acceptation is by the best things worthily challenged.

Hooker.

Which of you, shall we say, doth love us most?
That we our largest bounty may extend
Where nature doth with merit challenge.

Shakspeare.

And so much duty as my mother shew'd
To you, preferring you before her father;
So much I challenge, that I may profess
Due to the Moor, my lord.

Shakspeare.

Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Did challenge pity of them.

Shakspeare.

So when a tyger fucks the bullock's blood,
As famili'd lion, issuing from the wood,
Rears loudly fierce, and challenges the food.

Dryden.

Hast thou yet drawn o'er young Juba?
That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,
And challenge better terms.

Addison.

6. To call any one to the performance of conditions.

I will now challenge you of your promise, to give me certain rules as to the principles of blazonry.

Peacham on Drawing.

1. A summons to combat.

I never in my life

Did hear a challenge urg'd more modestly.

Shakspeare.

2. A demand of something as due.

Taking for his younglings cark,
Lest greedy eyes to them might challenge lay,
Busy with eker did their shoulders mark.

Sidney.

There must be no challenge of superiority, or discountenancing of freedom.

Collier.

3. In law.

An exception taken either against persons or things; persons, as in assize to the jurors, or any one or more of them, by the prisoner at the bar. Challenge made to the jurors, is either made to the array, or to the polls: challenge made to the array, is when the whole number is accepted against, as partly enjoineth: challenge to or by the pool, is when some one or more are excepted against, as not indifferent. challenge to the jurors is divided into challenge principal, and challenge for cause: challenge principal is that which the law allows without cause alleged, or farther examination: as a prisoner at the bar, arraigned upon felony, may peremptorily challenge to the number of twenty, one after another, of the jury empannelled upon him, alleging no cause.

Cowell.

You are mine enemy, I make my challenge,
You shall not be my judge.

Shakspeare.

CHALLENGER. n. f. [from challenge.]

1. One that defies or summons another to combat.

Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?—

No, fair princeess; he is the general challenger.

Shakspeare.

Death was denounc'd;
He took the summons, void of fear,
And unconcernedly call his eyes around,
As if to find and dare the grielly challenger.

Dryden.

2. One that claims superiority.

Whose worth

Stood challenger on mount of all the age,
For her perfections.

Shakspeare.

3. A claimant; one that requires something as of right.

Eminent challengers there are of trial, by some publick disputation.

Hooker.

That chamberers have. Shakspeare.

CHAMBERFELLOW. n. f. [from chamber and fellow.] One that lies in the same chamber.

It is my fortune to have a chamberfellow, with whom I agree very well in many sentiments.
Spectator.

CHAMBERLAIN. n. f. [from chamber.]

1. Lord great chamberlain of England is the sixth officer of the crown; a considerable part of his function is at a coronation; to him belongs the provision of every thing in the house of lords; he disposes of the sword of state; under him are the gentleman usher of the black rod, yeoman ushers, and door-keepers. To this office the duke of Ancester makes an hereditary claim.
Chambers.

2. Lord chamberlain of the household has the oversight of all officers belonging to the king's chambers, except the precinct of the bedchamber. Chambers.

Humbly complaining to her deity,
Gut my lord chamberlain his liberty. Shakspeare.
He was made lord steward, that the staff of chamberlain might be put into the hands of his brother. Clarendon.

A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage. Pope.

3. A servant who has the care of the chambers.

Think'st thou
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? Shakspeare.
When Duncan is asleep, his two chamberlains
We will with wine and wassel convince. Shakspeare.
He serv'd at first Emilia's chamberlain. Dryden.

4. A receiver of rents and revenues; as chamberlain of the exchequer, of Chester, of the city of London. Chambers.

CHAMBERLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chamberlain.] The office of a chamberlain.

CHAMBERMAID. n. f. [from chamber and maid.] A maid whose business is to dress a lady, and wait in her chamber.

Men will not hiss,
The chambermaid was named Ciss. Ben Jonson.
Some coarse country wench, almost decay'd,
Trudges to town, and first turns chambermaid.
Pope.

When he doubted whether a word were intelligible or no, he us'd to consult one of his lady's chambermaids. Swift.

If these nurses ever presume to entertain the girls with the common follies practis'd by cham-bermaids among us, they are pulkily whipped.
Swift.

TO CHAMBLET. v. a. [from camelot. See
CAMELOT.] To vary; to variegate.

Some have the veins more varied and cham-bled; as oak, whereof wainscot is made. Bacon.

CHAMBREL of a horse. The joint or bending of the upper part of the hinder leg. Farrier's Dict.

CHAMELEON. n. f. [χρυσόλαβος.]

The chameleon has four feet, and on each foot three claws. Its tail is long; with this, as well as with its feet, it fastens itself to the branches of trees. Its tail is flat, its nose long, in a obtusé point; its back is sharp, its skin plained, and jagged like a saw from the neck to the last joint of the tail, and upon its head it has something like a comb; like a fish, it has no neck.

Some have asserted, that it lives only upon air;
but it has been observed to feed on flies, catched with its tongue, which is about ten inches long,
and three thick; made of white flesh, round,
but flat at the end; or hollow and open, resembling an elephant's trunk. It also shrinks, and grows longer. This animal is said to assume the colour of those things to which it is applied;
but our modern observers assure us, that its natural colour, when at rest and in the shade, is a bluish grey; though some are yellow, and others green, but both of a smaller kind. When it is exposed to the sun, the grey changes into a darker grey, inclining to a dun colour; and its parts, which have least of the light upon them, are changed into spots of different colours. The grain of its skin, when the light doth not shine upon it, is like cloth mixed with many colours. Sometimes, when it is handled, it seems speckled with dark spots, inclining to green. If it be put upon a black hat, it appears to be of a violet colour; and sometimes, if it be wrapped up in linen, it is white; but it changes colour only in some parts of the body. Cabnet.

A chameleon is a creature about the bigness of an ordinary lizard; his head unproportionably big, and his eyes great; he moveth his head without writhing of his neck, which is inflexible, as a hog doth; his back crooked, his skin spotted with little tumours, less eminent nearer the belly; his tail slender and long; on each foot he hath five fingers, three on the outside, and two on the inside; his tongue of a marvellous length in respect of his body, and hollow at the end, which he will launch out to prey upon flies; of colour green, and of a dusky yellow, brighter and whiter towards the belly;
yet spotted with blue, white, and red. Bacon.

I can add colours ev'n to the chameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantage.
Shakspeare.

One part devours the other, and leaves not so much as a mouthful of that popular air, which the chameleons gasp after. Decay of Piety.

The thin chameleon, fed with air, receives
The colour of the thing to which he cleaves.
Dryden.

As the chameleon, which is known
To have no colours of his own,
But borrows from his neighbour's hue
His white or black, his green or blue. Prior.

TO CHAMPER. v. a. [chambrier, Fr.] To channel; to make furrows or gutters upon a column.

CHAMFER. } n. f. [from To chamfer.]
CHAMFRET. } A small furrow or gutter overthwart, if your diapering consist of a double line. Prælection on Drawing.

CHAMOIS. n. f. [chamois, Fr.] An animal of the goat kind, whose skin is made into soft leather, called among us shammy.

These are the beasts which you shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and wild ox, and the chamois.
Deuteronomy.

CHAMOMILE. n. f. [χρημαίριον.] An odoriferous plant.

Cool violets, and orpine growing still,
Embathed balm, and cheerful galingale,
Flesh costmary, and breathful chamomile,

Dull poppy, and drink quick'ning fetuale. Spens.

For though the chamomile, the more it is trodden on the faster it grows; yet youth, the more it is watered, the sooner it wears. Shakspeare.

Puffet drink with chamomile flowers. Fletcher.

TO CHAMPER. v. a. [champer, Fr.]

1. To bite with a frequent action of the teeth.

Coffee and opium are taken down, tobacco but in smoke, and betel is but champed in the mouth with a little lime. Bacon.

The fiend reply'd, not overcome with rage;
But, like a proud steed tem'd, went haughty on,
Champing his iron curb. Milton's Paradise Lost.

At his command
The steeds caparison'd with purple stand,
And champ betwixt their teeth the foaming gold.
Dryden.

2. To devour, with violent action of the teeth.

A tobacco pipe happened to break in my mouth, and the pieces sent such a delicious roughness on my tongue, that I champed up the remaining part. Spectator.

TO CHAMP. v. n. To perform frequently the action of biting.

Muttering and champing, as though his cud had troubled him, he gave occasion to Musidorus to come near him. Silvius.

They began to repent of that they had done,
and irresoly to champ upon the bit they had taken into their mouths. Hooker.

His jaws did not answer equally to one another; but, by his frequent motion and champing with them, it was evident they were neither luxated nor fractured. Wicsonar.

CHAMPAIGN. n. f. [campagne, Fr.] A flat open country.

In the abuses of the customs, meseems, you have a fair champaign laid open to you, in which you may at large stretch out your discourse.
Seneser's State of Ireland.

Of all these bounds,
With shadowy forests and with champaigns rich'd,
We make tude ludy. Shakspeare.

If two bordering princes have their territory meeting on an open champaign, the more mighty will continually seek occasion to extend his limits unto the farther border thereof. Raleigh.

Sir John Norris maintained a retreat without distanay, by the space of some miles, part of the way champaign, unto the city of Gaunt, with less loss of men than the enemy. Bacon.

From his side two rivers flow'd,
Th' one winding, th' other straight, and left between
Fair champaign, with less rivers interven'd.
Milton.

CHAMPERTORS. n. f. [from champerty.
In law.] Such as move suits, or cause them to be moved, either by their own or others procurement, and pursue, at their proper costs, to have part of the land in contest, or part of the gains.
Cowell.

CHAMPERTY. n. f. [champart, Fr. In law.] A maintenance of any man in his suit, while depending, upon condition to have part of the thing when it is recovered. Cowell.

CHAMPIGNON. n. f. [champignon, Fr.]
A kind of mushroom.

Heviler friends with doubtful mushrooms treats,
Secure for you, himself champignons eats. Dryden.

It has the resemblance of a large champignon before it is opened, branching out into a large round knob. Woodward.

CHAMPION. n. f. [champion, Fr. cam-pio, low Lat.]

1. A man who undertakes a cause in single combat.

In many armies, the matter should be tried by duel between two champions. Bacon.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions
here

Strive here for small'ry, and to battle bring Their embryon atoms. Milton's Par. Lost.

O light of Trojans, and support of Troy,
Thy father's champion, and thy country's joy!

At length the adverse admirals appear,
The two bold champions of each country's right.

2. A hero; a stout warrior; one bold in contest.

A stouter champion never handled sword.

This makes you incapable of conviction; and they applaud themselves as zealous champions for truth, when indeed they are contending for error.

3. In law.

In our common law, champion is taken no less for him that trieth the combat in his own case, than for him that fighteth in the case of another.

To CHAMPION. v. a. [from the noun.]
To challenge to the combat.

Rather than so, come, face me to the trial,
And ch' up on me to th' int'rance.

CHANCE. n. f. [chance, Fr.]

1. Fortune; the cause of fortuitous events.

As th' unthought accident is guilty
Of what we wildly do, so we profess
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance, and flies
Of every wind that blows.

The only man, of all that chance could bring
To meet my arms, was worth the conquering.

Chance is but a mere name, and really nothing in itself; a conception of our minds, and on y a condempnd way of speaking, whereby we would express, that such effects as are commonly attributed to chance, were verily produced by their true and proper causes, but without their design to produce them.

2. Fortune; the act of fortune; what fortune may bring: applied to persons.

These things are commonly not observed, but left to take their chance.

3. Accident; casual occurrence; fortuitous event.

To say a thing is a chance or casualty, as it relates to second causes, is not profaneness, but a great truth; as signifying no more, than that there are some events besides the knowledge and power of second agents.

The beauty I should have struck me dead;
Unknowingly she strikes, and kills by chance;
Poison is in her eyes, and death in every glance.

All nature is but art, unknown to thee;
All chance direction, which thou canst not see.

4. Event; success; luck: applied to things.

Now we'll together, and the chance of go'nings
Be like our wanted current!

5. Misfortune; unlucky accident.

You were us'd
To say extremity was the trier of spirits,
That common chances common men could bear.

6. Possibility of any occurrence.

A chance, but chance may lead, where I may meet

Some wand'ring spirit of heav'n, by fountain side,
Or in thick shade retir'd.
Then your ladyship might have a chance to escape this address.

CHANCE. adv. [It is seldom used but in composition.] Happening by chance.

Now should they part, malicious tongues would fly,

They met like chance companions on the way.

I would not take the gift,
Which, like a toy dropt from the hands of fortune,
Lay for the next chance comer.

To CHANCE. v. n. [from the noun.] To happen; to fall out; to fortune.

Think what a chance thou chancest on; but think—

Thou hast thy mistress still.

How chance thou art not with the prince thy brother?

As, Cæsar, tell us what hath chanc'd to-day,
That Cæsar looks so sad.

He hanc upon divers of the Turks' victuallers, whom he early took.

I chose the safer sea, and chanc'd to find
A river's mouth impervious to the wind.

CHANCE-MEDLEY. n. f. [from chance and medley. In law.] The casual slaughter of a man, not altogether without the fault of the slayer, when ignorance or negligence is joined with the chance;
as if a man lop trees by an highway-side, by which many usually travel, and cut down a bough, not giving warning to take heed thereof, by which bough one passing by is slain; in this case he offends, because he gave no warning, that the party might have taken heed to himself.

If such an one should have the ill hap, at any time, to strike a man dead with a snail saying, it ought, in all reason and conscience, to be judged but a chance-medley.

CHANCEABLE. adj. [from chance.] Accidental.

The trial thereof was cut off by the chanceable coming thither of the king of Iberia.

CHANCEFUL. adj. [chance and full.] Hazzardous. Out of use.

Myself would offer you t' accompany
In this advent'rous chanceful jeopardy.

CHANCELL. n. f. [from cancelli, Lat.
lattices, with which the chancel was enclosed.] The eastern part of the church, in which the altar is placed.

Whether it be allowable or no, that the minister should say service in the chancel.

The chancel of this church is vaulted with a single stone of four feet in thickness, and an hundred and fourteen in circumference.

CHANCELLOR. n. f. [cancellarius, Lat.
chancellor, Fr. from cancellare, litteras
vel scriptum lineâ per medium ductâ damnanare; and seemeth of itself likewise to be deriv'd à cancellis, which signify all one with αγκυλίδες, a lattice; that is, a thing made of wood or iron bars, laid crossways one over another, so that a man may see through them in and out.
It may be thought that judgment seats were compass'd in with bars, to defend the judges and other officers from the press of the multitude, and yet not to hinder any man's view.

Questus regni tibi cancellarius Angli,
Primus solliciti mente petendus erit.

Hic est, qui regni leges cancellat iniquas,
Et mandata sui principis equa facit.

Verses of Nigel de W'etkre to the bishop of Ely, chancellor to Richard I.]

1. The highest judge of the law.

Cancellarius, at the first, signified the registers or actuaries in court; grapharius, fil- ius correspondentis & expensibus inducum actis dant operam. But this name is greatly advanced, and, not only in other kingdoms but in this, is given to him that is the chief judge in causes of property; for the chancellor hath power to moderate and temper the written law, and (subjecting himself only to the law of nature and conscience.

Turn out, you rogues! how like a beast you lie!
Go, huckle to the law. Is this an hour
To stretch your limbs? you'll ne'er be chancellors.

Aristides was a person of the strictest justice, and best acquainted with the laws, as well as forms, of their government; so that he was in a manner, chancellor of Athens.

2. CHANCELLOR in the Ecclesiastical Court. A bishop's lawyer; a man trained up in the civil and canon law, to direct the bishops in matters of judgment, relating as well to criminal as to civil affairs in the church.

3. CHANCELLOR of a Cathedral. A dignitary whose office it is to superintend the regular exercise of devotion.

4. CHANCELLOR of the Exchequer. An officer who sits in that court, and in the exchequer chamber. He has power, with others, to compound for forfeitures on penal statutes, bonds and recognizances entered into by the king. He has great authority in managing the royal revenue, and in matters of first-fruits. The court of equity is in the exchequer chamber, and is held before the lord treasurer, chancellor, and barons, as that of common law before the barons only.

5. CHANCELLOR of an University. The principal magistrate, who at Oxford holds his office during life, but at Cambridge he may be elected every three years.

6. CHANCELLOR of the Order of the Ger-ter, and other military orders, is an officer who seals the commissions and mandates of the chapter and assembly of the knights, keeps the register of their deliberations, and delivers their acts under the seal of the order.

CHANCELLORSHIP. n. f. The office of chancellor.

The Sunday after More gave up his chancellor- ship of England, he came himself to his wife's pew, and used the usual words of his gentleman-uthor, Madam, my lord is gone.

CHANCERY. n. f. [from chancellor; probably chancellery, then shortened.] The court of equity and conscience, moderating the rigour of other courts, that are tied to the letter of the law; whereof the lord chancellor of England is the chief judge, or the lord keeper of the great seal.

The contumacy and contempt of the party must be signified in the court of chancery, by the bishop's letters under the seal episcopal.

CHANCERE. n. f. [chanere, Fr.] An ulcer usually arising from venereal maldies.

It is possible he was not well cured, and would have relaps'd with a chanere.

CHANCROUS. adj. [from chanere.] Having the qualities of a chanere; ulcerous.

You may think I am too strict in giving so many internals in the cure of so small an ulcer as a chanere, or rather a chanerous callus.

CHANDELI'ER. n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] A branch for candles.

CHANDLER. n. f. [chandelier, Fr.] An artifan whose trade it is to make candles, or a person who sells them.

The sack that thou hast drunken me, would have bought me eight as good cheap at the nearest chandler's in Europe. Shakespeare.

But whether black or lighter dyes are worn,
The chandler's basket, on his shoulder born,
With tallow spots thy coat. Gay.

CHANFRIN. n. f. [old French.] The forepart of the head of a horse, which extends from under the ears, along the interval between the eyebrows, down to his nose. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. a. [changer, Fr. can-bia, Lat.]

1. To put one thing in the place of another. He that cannot look into his own estate, had need choose well whom he employeth, and change them often; for new are more timorous, and less subtle. Bacon's Essays.

2. To quit any thing for the sake of another: with for before the thing taken or received. Persons grown up in the belief of any religion, cannot change that for another, without applying their understanding duly to consider and compare both. South.

The French and we still change; but here's the cause,
They change for letter, and we change for worse. Dryden.

3. To give and take reciprocally: with the particle with before the person to whom we give, and from whom we take. To secure thy content, look upon those thousands, with whom thou wouldst not, for any interest, change thy fortune and condition. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

4. To alter; to make other than it was. Thou shalt not see me blush,
Nor change my countenance for this accident;
I lent unpuffed is not easily daunted. Shakspeare.

5. To mend the disposition or mind. I would the were in heaven, so he could Intreat some pow'r to change this curst Jew. Shakspeare.

6. To discount a larger piece of money into several smaller. A shopkeeper might be able to change a guinea, or a moidore, when a customer comes for a chewan's worth of goods. Swift.

7. To change a horse, or to change hand, is to turn or hear the horse's head from one hand to the other, from the left to the right, or from the right to the left. Farrier's Dict.

To CHANGE. v. n.

1. To undergo change; to suffer alteration: as, his fortune may soon change, though he is now so secure. One Julia, that his changing thought forgot,
Would better fit his chamber. Shakspeare.

2. To change, as the moon; to begin a new monthly revolution. I am weary of this moon; would he would change. Shakspeare.

CHANGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An alteration of the state of any thing. Since I saw you last,
There is a change upon you. Shakspeare.

2. A succession of one thing in the place of another. O wonderful changes of a fatal scene, Still varying to the last! Dryden.

Nothing can cure this part of ill-breeding, but change and variety of company, and that of persons above us. Locke.

Empires by various turns shall rise and set;
While thy abandon'd tribes shall only know
A different master, and a change of tone. Prior.

Hear how Timotheus' various lays surprize,
And bid alternate passions fall and rise!
While, at each change, the son of Libyan Jove
Now burns with glory, and then melts with love. Pope.

3. The time of the moon in which it begins a new monthly revolution. Take seeds or roots, and set some of them immediately after the change, and others of the same kind immediately after the full. Bacon.

4. Novelty; a state different from the former. The hearts
Of all his people shall revolt from him,
And kiss the lips of unacquainted change. Shak.

Our fathers did, for change, to France repair;
And they, for change, will try our English air. Dryden.

5. [In ringing.] An alteration of the order in which a set of bells is founded. Four bells admit twenty-four changes in ringing, and five bells one hundred and twenty. Holder's Elements of Speech.

Easy it may be to contrive new postures, and ring of changes upon the same bells. Norris.

6. That which makes a variety; that which may be used for another of the same kind. I will now put forth a riddle unto you; if you can find it out, then I will give you thirty sheets, and thirty change of garments. Judges.

7. Small money, which may be given for larger pieces. Wood buys up our old halfpence, and from thence the present want of change arises; but supposing not one farthing of change in the nation, five-and-twenty thousand pounds would be sufficient. Swift.

8. Change for exchange; a place where persons meet to traffick and transact mercantile affairs. The bar, the bench, the change, the schools and pulpits, are full of quacks, jugglers, and plagiarists. L'Estrange.

CHANGEABLE. adj. [from change.]

1. Subject to change; fickle; inconstant. A steady mind will admit steady methods and counsels; there is no measure to be taken of a changeable humour. L'Estrange.

As I am a man, I must be changeable; and sometimes the gravest of us all are so, even upon ridiculous accidents. Dryden.

2. Possible to be changed. The fibrous or vascular parts of vegetables seem scarce changeable in the alimentary duct. Abraham on Aliments.

3. Having the quality of exhibiting different appearances. Now the taylor make thy doublet of changeable taffeta; for thy mind is a very opal. Shakspeare.

CHANGEABLENESS. n. f. [from changeable.]

1. Inconstancy; fickleness. At length he betrothed himself to one worthy to be liked, if any worthiness might excuse so unworthy a changeableness. Sidney.

There is no temper of mind more unmanly than that changeableness, with which we are too justly branded by all our neighbours. Addison.

2. Susceptibility of change. If how long they are to continue in force, be no where expressed, then have we no light to direct our judgment concerning the changeableness or immutability of them, but considering the nature and quality of such laws. Hooker.

CHANGEABLY. adv. [from changeable.] Inconstantly.

CHANGEFUL. adj. [from change and full.] Full of change; inconstant, uncertain; mutable; subject to variation; fickle. Unfound plots, and changeful orders, are daily devised for her good, yet never effectually prosecuted. Spenser.

Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls us princes, and now turns away. Pope.

CHANGELING. n. f. [from change; the word arises from an odd superstitious opinion, that the fairies steal away children, and put others that are ugly and stupid in their places.]

1. A child left or taken in the place of another. And her base elfin breed there for thee left:
Such men do changelings call, so chang'd by faeries thert. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

She, as her attendant, bath
A lovely boy stol'n from an Indian king;
She never had so sweet a changeling. Shakspeare.

2. An idiot; a fool; a natural. Changelings and fools of heav'n, and thence shut out, Wildly we roam in discontent about. Dryden.

Would any one be a changeling, because he is less determined by wife considerations than a wife man? Lake.

3. One apt to change; a waverer. Of fickle changelings and poor discontents,
That gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurbly-burbly innovation. Shakspeare.

'Twas not long Before from world to world they swung;
As they had turn'd from side to side,
And as they chang'd Kings liv'd, they died. Hudibras.

4. Any thing changed and put in the place of another: in ludicrous speech. I folded the writ up in form of the other,
Subscrib'd it, gave the impression, plac'd it safely,
The changeling is never known. Shakspeare.

CHANGING. n. f. [from change.] One that is employed in changing or discounting money; moneychanger.

CHANNEL. n. f. [canal, Fr. canalis, Lat.]

1. The hollow bed of running waters. It is not so easy, now that things are grown into an habit, and have their certain course, to change the channel, and turn their streams another way. Spenser's State of Ireland.

Draw them to Tyber's bank, and weep your tears
Into the channel, till the lowest stream
Do kiss the most exalted shores of all. Shakspeare.

So th' injur'd sea, which, from her wouled course,
To gain some acres, avarice did force;
If the new banks, neglected once, decay,
No longer will from her old channel stay. Waller.

Had not the said strata been dislocated, some of them elevated, and others depressed, there would have been no cavity or channel to give reception to the water of the sea. Woodward.

The tops of mountains and hills will be continually washed down by the rains, and the channels of rivers abraded by the streams. Bentley.

2. Any cavity drawn longwise. Complaint and hot desires, the lover's hell,
And sealding tears, that wore a channel where they fell. Dryden's Fables.

3. A strait or narrow sea, between two countries: as the British Channel, between Britain and France; St. George's Channel, between Britain and Ireland.

4. A gutter or furrow of a pillar. To CHANNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut any thing in channels.

Nomore shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor builie her flow'rets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces. Shakspeare.

The body of this column is perpetually channelled, like a thick plaited gown. Watson.

Torrents, and loud impetuous cataracts,
Roll down the lofty mountain's channell'd slides,
And to the vale convey their foaming tides. Blackmore.

To CHANT. v. a. [chanter, Fr.]

1. To sing.

Wherein the chearful birds of fundy kind
Do chant sweet musick. Fairy Queen.

2. To celebrate by song.

The poets chant it in the theatres, the shepherds in the mountains. Bramhall.

3. To sing in the cathedral service.

To CHANT. v. n. To sing; to make melody with the voice.

They chant to the found of the viol, and invent to themselves instruments of musick. Amos.

Heav'n heard his song, and hasten'd his relief;
And chang'd to snowy plumes his hoary hair,
And wing'd his flight to chant aloft in air. Dryd.

CHANT. n. f. [from the verb.] Song;
melody.

A pleasant grove,
With chant of tuneful birds resounding loud. Milton.

CHA'NTER. n. f. [from chant.] A singer;
a songster.

You curious chanters of the wood,
That warble furth dame Nature's lays. Watson.

Jove's ethereal lays, resuscitate fire,
The chanter's soul and raptur'd song inspire,
Instruct divine! nor blame severe his choice,
Warbling the Grecian woes with harp and voice. Pope.

CHA'NTICLEER. n. f. [from chanter and clair, Fr.] The name given to the cock, from the clearness and loudness of his crow.

And chearful chanticleer, with his note shrill,
Had warn'd once, that Phœbus' fiery car
In haste was climbing up the eastern hill. Spenser.

Hark, hark, I hear
The strain of strutting chanticleer. Shakspeare.

Stay, the chearful chanticleer
Tells you that the time is near. Ben Jonson.

These verses were mentioned by Chaucer in the description of the touden stir, and panical fear, when Chanticleer the cock was carried away by Reynard the fox. Camden's Remains.

Within this homestead liv'd without a peer,
For crowing loud, the noble chanticleer. Dryden.

CHA'NTRISS. n. f. [from chant.] A woman singer.

Sweet bird, that shunn'st the noise of folly,
Most musical, most melancholy!
Thee, chantress of the woods among,
I woo to hear thy even-song. Milton.

CHA'NTRY. n. f. [from chant.] A church or chapel endowed with lands, or other yearly revenue for the maintenance of one or more priests, daily to sing mass for the souls of the donors, and such others as they appoint. Corwell.

Now go with me, and with this holy man,
Into the chantry by;
And, underneath that consecrated roof,
Plight me the full assurance of your faith. Shaksp.

CHAOS. n. f. [chaos, Lat. χάος.]

1. The mass of matter supposed to be in confusion before it was divided by the creation into its proper classes and elements.

The whole universe would have been a confused chaos, without beauty or order. Bentley.

2. Confusion; irregular mixture.

Had I followed the worst, I could not have brought church and state to such a chaos of confusions, as some have done. K. Charles.

Their reason sleeps, but mimic fancy wakes,
Supplies her parts, and wild ideas takes
From words and things, ill fortet, and misjoin'd;
The anarchy of thought, and chaos of the mind. Dryden.

3. Any thing where the parts are undiftinguished.

We shall have nothing but darkness and a chaos within, whatever order and light there be in things without us. Locke.

Pleas'd with a work, where nothing 's just or fit,
One glaring chaos and wild heap of wit. Pope.

CHAOTICK. adj. [from chaos.] Refembling chaos; confused.

When the terraqueous globe was in a chaotick state, and the earthy particles subided, then those several beds were, in all probability, repositid in the earth. Derham.

To CHIAPE. v. a. [kappen, Dutch, to cut.]

This word seems originally the same with chop; nor were they probably diftinguished at first, otherwise than by accident; but they have now a meaning something different, though referable to the same original sense.] To break into hiatus, or gapings.

It weakened more and more the arch of the earth, dying it immoderately, and chapping it in sundry places. Burnet.

Then would unbalanc'd heat licentious reign,
Crack the dry hill, and chap the roset plain. Blackmore.

CHAP. n. f. [from the verb.] A cleft;
an aperture; an opening; a gaping; a chink.

What moisture the heat of the summer sucks out of the earth, it is repaid in the rains of the next winter; and what chaps are made in it, are filled up again. Burnet's Theory.

CHAP. n. f. [This is not often used, except by anatomists, in the singular.] The upper or under part of a beast's mouth.

Froth fills his chaps, he sends a grunting sound,
And part he churns, and part befoams the ground. Dryden.

The nether chap in the male skeleton is half an inch broader than in the female. Grew's Museum.

CHAPE. n. f. [chappe, Fr.]

1. The catch of any thing by which it is held in its place; as the hook of a scabbard by which it sticks in the belt; the point by which a buckle is held to the back strap.

This is monsieur Parolles, that had the whole theory of the war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the chape of his dagger. Shaksp.

2. A brass or silver tip or case, that strengthens the end of the scabbard of a sword. Phillips' World of Words.

CHAPEL. n. f. [capella, Lat.] A chapel is of two sorts, either adjoining to a church, as a parcel of the same, which men of worth build; or else separate from the mother church, where the parish is wide, and is commonly called a chapel of ease, because it is built for the ease of one or more parishioners, that dwell too far from the church, and is served by some inferior curate, provided for at the charge of the rector, or of such as have benefit by it, as the composition or custom is. Corwell.

She went in among those few trees, so closed in the tops together, as they might seem a little chapel. Sidney.

Will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel? Shaksp.

Where truth erecteth her church, he helps error to rear up a chapel hard by. Howel.

A chapel will I build with large endowment. Dryden.

A free chapel is such as is founded by the king of England. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHA'PELESS. adj. [from chape.] Wanting a chape.

An o'd rusty sword, with a broken hilt, and chapeless, with two broken points. Shakspeare.

CHAPELLANY. n. f. [from chapel.]

A chapelony is usually said to be that which does not submit of itself, but is built and founded within some other church, and is dependent thereon. Ayliffe's Parergon.

CHAPELRY. n. f. [from chapel.] The jurisdiction or bounds of a chapel.

CHAPERON. n. f. [French.] A kind of hood or cap worn by the knights of the garter in their habits.

I will omit the honourable habiliments, as robes of state, parliament robes, chaperons, and caps of state. Camden.

CHA'PFALN. adj. [from chap and fall.]
Having the mouth shrunk.

A chapsaln beaver loosely hanging by
The cloven helm. Dryden.

CHA'PITER. n. f. [chapiteau, Fr.] The upper part or capital of a pillar.

He overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold. Exodus.

CHA'PLAIN. n. f. [capellanus, Latin.]

1. He that performs divine service in a chapel, and attends the king, or other person, for the instruction of him and his family, to read prayers, and preach.

Wishing me to permit
John de la Court, my chaplain, a choice hour,
To hear from him a matter of some moment. Shakspeare.

Chaplain, away! thy priesthood saves thy life. Shakspeare.

2. One that officiates in domestick worship.

A chief governour can never fail of some worthless illiterate chaplain, fond of a title and precedence. Swift.

CHA'PLAINSHIP. n. f. [from chaplain.]

1. The office or business of a chaplain.

2. The possession or revenue of a chapel.

CHA'PLESS. adj. [from chap.] Without any flesh about the mouth.

Now chapeless, and knocked about the muzzard with a sexton's spade. Shakspeare.

Shut me nightly in a charnel-house,
With recky thanks and yellow chapeless bones. Shakspeare.

CHA'PLET. n. f. [chapelet, Fr.]

1. A garland or wreath to be worn about the head.

Upon old Hyem's chin, and icy crown,
An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer's buds,
Is, as in mockery, set. Shakspeare.

I strangely long to know,
Whether they nobler chaplets wear,
Those that their mistresses' scorn did bear,
Or those that were us'd kindly. Suckling.

All the quire was grac'd
With chaplets green, upon their foreheads plac'd. Dryden.

The winding ivy chaplet to invade,
And folded fern, that your fair forehead shade. Dryden.

They made an humble chaplet for the king. Spenser.

2. A string of beads used in the Romish church for keeping an account of the number rehear'd of pater-nosters and ave-marias. A different sort of chaplets is also used by the Mahometans.

3. [In architecture.] A little moulding carved into round beads, pearls, or olives.
4. [In horsemanship.] A couple of stirrup leathers, mounted each of them with a stirrup, and joining at top in a sort of leather buckle, which is called the head of the chaplet, by which they are fastened to the pommel of a saddle, after they have been adjusted to the length and bearing of the rider. Farrier's Dict.

5. A tuft of feathers on the peacock's head.

ЧА'РМАН. n. f. [ceapman, Sax.] A cheapener; one that offers as a purchaser. Fair Diomedes, you do as chapmen do, Disparite the thing that you intend to buy.

Yet have they seen the maps, and bought 'em too,
And understand 'em as most chapmen do.

There was a collection of certain rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick; these were upon sale to the Jesuits at Antwerp, liquorish chapmen of such wares.

He dressed two, and carried them to Samos, as the likeliest place for a chapman. L'Esrange.
Their chapmen they betray,
Their shops are dens, the buyer is their prey.

CHAPS. n. f. [from chap.]

1. The mouth of a beast of prey.
So on the downs we see
A hassel'd hare from greedy greyhound go,
And past all hope, his chaps to frustrate fo.

Open your mouth; you cannot tell who's your friend; open your chaps again.
Their whelps at home expect the promis'd food,
And long to temper their dry chaps in blood.

2. It is used in contempt for the mouth of a man.

CHAPT. } The part. pass. of To chap.

CHAP'PED. } Like a table upon which you may run your finger without rubs, and your nail cannot find a joint; not hoard, rough, wrinkled, gaping, or chapt.

Cooling ointment made,
Which on their sun-burnt cheeks and their chapt skins they laid.

CHA'PTER. n. f. [chapitre, Fr. from capitulum, Lat.]

1. A division of a book.
The first book we divide into three sections; whereof the first is these three chapters.

If these mighty men at chapter and verse, can produce then no scripture to overthrow our church ce. monies, I will undertake to produce scripture enough to warrant them.

2. From this comes the proverbial phrase, to the end of the chapter; throughout; to the end.

Money does all things: for it gives and it takes away; it makes honest men and knaves, for it and philosophers; and so forward, mutatis mutandis, to the end of the chapter.

3. Chapter, from capitulum, signifieth, in our common law, as in the canon law, whence it is borrowed, an assembly of the clergy of a cathedral or collegiate church.

The abbot takes the advice and consent of his chapter, before he enters on any matters of importance.

4. The place where delinquents receive discipline and correction.

5. A decretal epistle.

6. Chapter-house; the place in which assemblies of the clergy are held.

Though the canonical constitution does strictly require it to be made in the cathedral, yet it matters not where it be made, either in the choir or chapter-house.

CHA'PTREL. n. f. [probably from chapter.] The capitals of pillars, or pilasters, which support arches, commonly called impost.

Let the keystone break without the arch, so much as you project over the jaunts with the chapters.

CHA' n. f. [of uncertain derivation.] A fish found in Winander mere, in Lancashire, and a few other places.

To CHAR. v. a. [See CHARCOAL.] To burn wood to a black cinder.
S'waywood, in charring, parts into various cracks.

CHAR. n. f. [cyprie, work, Sax. Lye. It is derived by Skinner, either from charge, Fr. business; or care, Saxon, care; or keeren, Dutch, to sweep.] Work done by the day; a single job or task.

A meer woman, and commanded
By such poor passion, as the maid that milks,
And does the meanest chairs.
She, I arrest done, to char work did aspire;
Meat, drink, and two-pence, were her daily hire.

To CHAR. v. n. [from the noun.] To work at others houses by the day, without being a hired servant.

CHA'R-WOMAN. n. f. [from char and woman.] A woman hired accidentally for odd work, or single days.

Get three or four char-women to attend you constantly in the kitchen, whom you pay only with the broken meat, a few coals, and all the cinders.

CHARACTER. n. f. [character, Lat. χαρακτης.]

1. A mark; a stamp; a representation.
In outward also her resembling less
His image, who made both; and less expressing
The character of that dominion giv'n
O'er other creatures.

2. A letter used in writing or printing.
But his neat cookery!
He cut our roots in characters.
The purpose is peripetuous, even as substance
Whose grossness little characters sum up.

It were much to be wished, that there were throughout the world but one sort of character for each letter, to express it to the eye; and that exactly proportioned to the natural alphabet formed in the mouth.

3. The hand or manner of writing.
I found the letter thrown in at the calement of my closet.—You know the character to be your brother's.

4. A representation of any man as to his personal qualities.
Each drew fair characters, yet none
Of these they feign'd excels their own.

Homer has excell'd all the heroic poets that ever wrote, in the multitude and variety of his characters; every god that is admitted into his poem, acts a part which would have been suitable to no other deity.

5. An account of any thing as good or bad.
This subterraneous passage is much mended,
since Seneca gave so bad a character of it.

6. The person with his assemblage of qualities; a personage.
In a tragedy, or epick poem, the hero of the piece must be advanced foremost to the view of the reader or spectator; he must outline the rest of all the characters; he must appear the prince of them, like the sun in the Copernican system, encompassed with the less noble planets.

7. Personal qualities; particular constitution of the mind.
Nothing so true as what you once let fall,
Most women have no characters at all.

8. Adventitious qualities impressed by a post or office.
The chief honour of the magistrate consists in maintaining the dignity of his character by suitable actions.

To CHAR'ACTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To inscribe; to engrave. It seems to have had the accent formerly on the second syllable.
These few precepts in thy memory
See thou character.
Shew me one scar character'd on thy skin.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books,
And in their barks my thoughts I'll character.

The pleasing poison
The visage quite transforms of him that drinks,
And the inglorious likeness of a beast
Fixes instead, un moulding reason's mintage, Character'd in the face.

CHARACTERI'STICAL. } adj. [from characterize.] That constitutes the character, or marks the peculiar properties, of any person or thing.

There are several others that I take to have been likewise such, to which yet I have not ventured to prefix that characteristic distinction.

The shining quality of an epick hero, his magnanimity, his constancy, his patience, his piety, or whatever characteristical virtue his poet gives him, raises our admiration.

CHARACTERI'STICALNESS. n. f. [from characteristical.] The quality of being peculiar to a character; marking a character.

CHARACTERI'STICK. n. f. That which constitutes the character; that which distinguishes any thing or person from others.

This vast invention exerts itself in Homer, in a manner superior to that of any poet; it is the great and peculiar characteristical which distinguishes him from all others.

CHARACTERI'STICK of a Logarithm. The same with the index or exponent.

To CHAR'ACTERIZE. v. a. [from character.] To give a character or an account of the personal qualities of any man.
It is some commendation, that we have avoid'd publicly to characterize any person, without long experience.

2. To engrave, or imprint.
They may be called anticipations, prenotions, or sentiments characterized and engraven in the soul, born with it, and growing up with it.

3. To mark with a particular stamp or token.
There are faces not only individual, but gentilitious and national; European, Asiatick, Chinese, African, and Grecian faces are characterized.

CHAR'ACTERLESS. adj. [from character.] Without a character.
When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing.

CHA'RACTERY. n. f. [from *chara*cter.] Impression; mark; distinction; accented anciently on the second syllable. Fairies use flowers for their *chara*ctery. Shakf.
All my engagements I will continue to thee,
All the *chara*ctery of my sad brows. Shakf.

CHA'R'COAL. n. f. [imagined by Skinner to be derived from char, business; but, by Lye, from *To char*k, to burn.] Coal made by burning wood under turf. It is used in preparing metals.

Seacoal lasts longer than charcoal; and charcoal of roots, being coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Love is a fire that burns and sparkles
In men as nat'ally as in charcoal,
Which footy chymists stop in holes,
When out of wood they extract coals. Hudibras.
Is there who, look'd from ink and paper, scrawls
With desperate charcoal round his daiken'd walls?
Pope.

CHARD. n. f. [charde, French.]

1. Chards of artichokes, are the leaves of fair artichoke plants, tied and wrapped up all over but the top, in straw, during the autumn and winter; this makes them grow white, and lose some of their bitterness. Chambers.

2. Chards of beet, are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the middle, have a large, white, thick, downy, and cotton-like main shoot which is the true chard. Mortimer.

To CHARGE. v. a. [charger, Fr. caricare, Ital. from carus, Lat.]

1. To entrust; to commission for a certain purpose: it has with before the thing entrusted.

And the captain of the guard charged Joseph with them, and he served them. Genesis.

What you have charged me with, that I have done. Shakspere.

2. To impute as a debt: with on before the debtor.

My father's, mother's, brother's death I pardon:
That's somewhat sure; a mighty sum of murder,
Of innocent and kindred blood struck off:
My prayers and penance shall discount for these,
And beg of Heav'n to charge the bill on me. Dryden.

3. To impute: with on before the person to whom any thing is imputed.

No more accuse thy pen, but charge the crime
On native sloth, and negligence of time. Dryden.

It is easy to account for the difficulties he charges on the peripatetic doctrine. Locke.

It is not barely the ploughman's pains; the reaper's and thresher's toil, and the baker's sweat, is to be counted into the bread we eat; the plough, mill, oven, or any other utensils, must all be charged on the account of labour. Locke.

Perverse mankind! whose wills, created free,
Charge all their woes on absolute decree;
All to the dooming gods their guilt translate,
And follies are miscall'd the crimes of fate. Pope.

We charge that upon necessity, which was really desired and chosen. Harris's Logic.

4. To impute to, as cost or hazard.

He was to great an encourager of commerce,
That he charged himself with all the fears of such vessels as carried corn to Rome in winter. Abbott on Com.

5. To impose as a task: it has with before the thing imposed,

The gospel charged us with piety towards God, and justice and charity to men, and temperance and chastity in reference to ourselves. Thomson.

6. To accuse; to censure.

Speaking thus to you, I am so far from charging you as guilty in this matter, that I can sincerely say, I believe the exhortation wholly needless. Hooke's Preparation for Death.

7. To accuse: it has with before the crime.
And his angels he charged with folly. Job.

8. To challenge.
The priest shall charge her by an oath. Numb.
Thou canst not, cardinal, devise a name
So slight, unworthy, and tickling,
To charge me to an answer as the pope. Shakf.

9. To command; to enjoin.
I may not suffer you to visit them;
The king hath strictly charged the contrary. Shakf.
Why dost thou turn thy face? I charge thee, answer
To what I shall enquire. Dryd. n.
I charge thee, stand,
And tell thy name, and business in the land. Dryden.

10. To fall upon; to attack.
With his prepared sword he charges home
My unprovided body, lanc'd my aim. Shakf.
The Grecians rally, and their pow'rs unite;
With fury charge us, and renew the fight. Dryd.

11. To burden; to load.
Here's the smell of blood still; all the perfumes of Arabia will not sweeten this little hand Oh! oh! oh!—What a sign is there! The heart is sorely charged. Shakspere
When often urg'd, unwilling to be great,
You country calls you from your lov'd retreat,
And sends to senators, charg'd with common care,
Which none more shuns, and none can better bear. Dryd. n.
Meat swallowed down for pleasure and gormetnets, only charges the stomach, or fumes into the brain. Temple.

A fault in the ordinary method of education, is the charging of children's memories with rules and precepts. Locke.
The beef with weighty crimes was charg'd,
On which the pleader much enlarg'd. Swift.

12. To cover with something adventitious.
It is pity the obelisks in Rome had not been charg'd with several parts of the Egyptian histories, instead of hieroglyphicks. Addison on Italy.

iron, and seems to despise all ornament but intrinsic merit. Grawville.

CHARGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Care; custody; trust to defend.
A had division, when the harmless sheep
Must leave their lambs to hungry wolves in charge. Fairfax.

He enquired many things, as well concerning the princes which had the charge of the city, whether they were in hope to defend the same. Knolles's History of the Turks.

2. Precept; mandate; command.
Saul might even lawfully have offered to God those reserved spoils, had not the Lord, in that particular case, given special charge to the contrary. Hobbes.

It is not for nothing, that St. Paul giveth charge to beware of philosophy; that is to say, such knowledge as men by natural reason attain unto. Hobbes.

One of the Turks led down letters upon a stone, saying, that in them was contained that they had in charge. An. Hist.

The leader bearing charge from you to stand,
Will not go on until they hear you speak. Shakf.
He, who requires
From us no other service than to keep
Tis one, this easy charge; of all the trees
Is Paradise, that bear delicious fruit
So various, not to tire that only tree
Of knowledge, planted by the tree of life. Milt.

3. Commission; trust conferred; office.

If large possessions, pompous titles, honourable charges, and profitable commissions, could have made this proud man happy, these would have been nothing wanting. L'Estrange.

Go fill the manger of thy herds to feed,
True to his charge, a loyal swain and kind. Pope.

4. It had anciently sometimes over before the thing committed to trust.

I gave my brother charge over Jerusalem; for he was a faithful man, and feared God above many. Schmah.

5. It has of before the subject of command or trust.

Hast thou eaten of the tree,
Whereof I gave thee charge thou shouldst not eat?
Milton.

6. It has upon before the person charged.

He loves God with all his heart, that is, with that degree of love, which is the highest point of our duty, and of God's charge upon us.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

7. Accusation; imputation.

We need not lay new matter to his charge:
Beating your officers, cursing yourselves. Shakf.

These very men are continually reproaching
the clergy, and laying to their charge the pride, the avarice, the luxury, the ignorance, and suspicion of popish times. Swift.

8. The person or thing entrusted to the care or management of another.

Why hast thou, Sagar, broke the bounds prescribed?

To thy transgressions, and disturb'd the charge
Of others? Milton's Paradise Lost.

More had he said, but, fearful of her stay,
The stary guardian drove his charge away.
Dryden.

Our guardian angel saw them where they fate
Above the palace of our stumbling king;
He sigh'd, abandoning his charge to fate.
Dryden.

This part should be the governour's principal care; as a habitual gracefulness and politeness, in all his carriage, may be settled in his charge, as much as may be, before he goes out of his hands. Locke.

9. An exhortation of a judge to a jury, or bishop to his clergy.

The bishop has recommended this author in his charge to the clergy. Dryden.

10. Expence; cost.

Being long since made weary with the huge charge which you have laid upon us, and with the strong endurance of so many complaints. Spenser.

Their charge was always born by the queen,
and duly paid out of the exchequer. Bacon.

Witness this army of such mats and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender piece. Shakspere.

He liv'd as kings retire, though more at large,
From publick business, yet of equal charge. Dryd.

11. It is, in later times, commonly used in the plural, charges.

A man ought warily to begin charges, which once begun, will continue. Bacon's Essays.

In bright Bootes and his wane appear. Addison.

Show us the youthful handsome charioteer,
Firm in his seat, and running his career. Prior.

CHARIOT RACE. n. f. [from chariot and race.] A sport anciently used, where chariots were driven for the prize, as now horses run.

There is a wonderful vigour and spirit in the description of the horse and chariot race. Addison.

CHARITABLE. adj. [charitable, Fr. from charité.]

1. Kind in giving alms; liberal to the poor.

He that hinders a charitable person from giving alms to a poor man, is tied to restitution, if he hindered him by fraud or violence. Taylor.

Shortly thou wilt behold me poor, and kneeling Before thy charitable door for bread. Rowe.

How shall we then wish, that it might be allowed us to live over our lives again, in order to fill every minute of them with charitable offices! Atterbury.

Health to himself, and to his infants bread,
The labourer bears: what his hard heart denies,
His charitable vanity supplies. Pope.

2. Kind in judging of others; disposed to tenderness; benevolent.

How had you been my friends else? Why have you that charitable title from thousands,
did you not chiefly belong to my heart?
Shakspere's Timon.

Of a politick sermon that had no divinity, the king said to bishop Andrews, Call you this a sermon? The bishop answered, by a charitable construction it may be a sermon. Bacon

CHARITABLY. adv. [from charity.]

By thee,
Founded in reason, loyal, just, and pure,
Relations dear, and all the charities
Of father, son, and brother, first were known.
Milton.

2. Good-will; benevolence; disposition to think well of others.

My errors, I hope, are only those of charity to mankind; and such as my own charity has caused me to commit, that of others may more easily excuse. Dryden.

3. The theological virtue of universal love.

Concerning charity, the final object whereof is that incomprehensible beauty which shineth in the countenance of Christ, the Sun of the living God. Hooker.

Peace, peace, for shame, if not for charity.—
—Uge neither charity nor shame to me;
Uncharitably with me have you dealt. Shakf.

Only add
Deeds to thy knowledge answerable; add faith,
Add virtue, patience, temperance; add love,
By name to come call'd charity, the soul
Of all the rest. Milton.

Faith believes the revelations of God; hope expects his promises; charity loves his excellencies and mercies. Taylor.

But lasting charity's more ample sway
Nor bound by time, nor subject to decay,
In happy triumph shall for ever live. Prior.

Charity, or a love of God, which works by a love of our neighbour, is greater than faith or hope. Atterbury.

4. Liberality to the poor.

The heathen poet, in commending the charity of Dido to the Trojans, spoke like a christian.
Dryden.

5. Alms; relief given to the poor.

We must incline to the king; I will look for him, and privily relieve him; go you and maintain talk with the duke, that my charity be not of him perceived. Shakspere.

The ant did well to reprove the grasshopper for her stulticness; but she did ill then to refuse her a charity in her distress. L'Esrange.

I never had the confidence to beg a charity.
Dryden.

To CHARK. v. a. To turn to a black cin-der, as wood is burned to make char-coal.

Excess either with an apoplexy knocks a man on the head, or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water shop, burns him down to the ground; or, if it flames not out, charks him to a coal. Grew.

CHARLATAN. n. f. [charlatan, Fr. ciarlatano, Ital. from ciarlare, to chatter.] A quack; a mountebank; an empirick.

7. Words, or philtres, or characters, imagined to have some occult or unintelligible power.

I never knew a woman so dote upon a man; surely I think you have charms.—Not I, I assure thee; setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shakespeare.

There have been used, either barbarous words, of no sense, lest they should disturb the imagination; or words of similitude, that may second and feed the imagination: and this was ever as well in heathen charms, as in charms of later times. Bacon.

Alyone he names amidst his pray'rs,
Names as a charm against the waves and wind,
Melt in his mouth, and ever in his mind. Dryd.
Antæus could, by magic charms,
Recover strength whene'er he fell. Swift.

2. Something of power to subdue opposition, and gain the affections; something that can please irresistibly.

Well sounding verses are the charm we use,
Heroick thoughts and virtue to insule. Roscom.
Nor ever hope the queen of love
Will e'er thy fav'rite's charms improve. Prior.

To fam'd Apelles when young Amnon brought
The darling idol of his captive heart;
And the pleas'd nymph with kind attention sat,
To have her charms recorded by his art. Waller.

But what avail her unexhausted stores,
Her blooming mountains, and her sunny shores,
With all the gifts that heaven and earth impart,
The smiles of nature, and the charms of art,
While proud oppression in her valleys reigns,
And tyranny usurps her happy plains? Addison.

To CHARM. v. a. [from the noun.]

5. To subdue the mind by pleasure.

'Tis your graces
That from my mute self conscience to my tongue
Charms this report out. Shakespeare.
Amoret! my lovely foe,
Tell me where thy strength does lie:
Where the pow'r that charms us so,
In thy soul, or in thy eye? Waller.
Charm by accepting, by submitting sway. Pope.
Chloe thus the soul alarm'd,
Aw'd without sense, and without beauty charm'd. Pope.

CHARMED. adj. Enchanted.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.
We implore thy powerful hand,
To undo the charmed band
Of true virgin here distressed. Milton.

CHARMER. n. f. [from charm.]

1. One that has the power of charms or enchantments.

That handkerchief
Did an Egyptian to my mother give;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people. Shakespeare.
The passion you pretended,
Was only to obtain;
But when the charm is ended,
The charmer you disdain. Dryden.

2. Word of endearment among lovers.

CHARMING. particip. adj. [from charm.]
Pleasing in the highest degree.

For ever all goodness will be charming, for ever all wickedness will be most odious. Spratt.
O charming youth! in the first opening page,
So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

CHARMINGLY. adv. [from charming.] In such a manner as to please exceedingly.

She smiled very charmingly, and discovered as fine a set of teeth as ever eye beheld. Addison.

CHARMINGNESS. n. f. [from charming.]
The power of pleasing.

CHARNEL. adj. [charnel, Fr.] Containing flesh, or carcases.
Such a thofe thick and gloomy shadows damp,
Oft found in charnel vaults and sepulchres
Ling'ring, and sitting by a new made grave. Milton.

CHARNEL-HOUSE. n. f. [charnier, Fr.
from caro, carnis, Latin.] The place under churches where the bones of the dead are deposited.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send
Those, that we bury, back; our monuments
Shall be the maws of kites. Shakespeare.

When they were in those charnel-houses, every one was placed in order, and a black pillow or coffin set by him. Taylor.

CHART. n. f. [charta, Lat.] A delineation or map of coasts, for the use of sailors. It is distinguished from a map, by representing only the coasts.

The Portuguese, when they had doubled the Cape of Good Hope, found skilful pilots, using astronomical instruments, geographical charts, and compasses. Arbutnot.

CHARTER. n. f. [charta, Latin.]

1. A charter is a written evidence of things done between man and man. Charters are divided into charters of the king, and charters of private persons. Charters of the king are those, whereby the king passeth any grant to any person or more, or to any body politic: as a charter of exemption, that no man shall be empan-nelled on a jury; charter of pardon, whereby a man is forgiven a felony,
or other offence. Corwell.

2. Any writing bestowing privileges or rights.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter, and your city's freedom. Shakf.
It is not to be wondered, that the great charter whereby God bestowed the whole earth upon Adam, and confirmed it unto the sons of Noah, being as brief in word as large in effect, hath bred much quarrel of interpretation. Raleigh's Essays.

Here was that charter seal'd, wherein the crown
All marks of arbitrary power lays down. Denh.
She shakes the rubbish from her mounting-brow,
And seems to have renew'd her charter's date,
Which heav'n will to the death of time allow. Ryden.

God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures. South.

3. Privilege; immunity; exemption.

I must have liberty,
Withal as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please; for so fools have;
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They must must laugh. Shakespeare.

My mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me. Shakf.

CHARTER-PARTY. n. f. [chartre partie,
Fr.] A paper relating to a contract,
of which each party has a copy.

Charter-parties, or contracts, made even upon the high sea, touching things that are not in their own nature maritime, belong not to the admiral's jurisdiction. Hale.

CHARTERED. adj. [from charter.] Invested with privileges by charter; privileged.

When he speaks,
The air, a charter'd libertine, is still. Shakf.

CHARY. adj. [from care.] Careful; cautious; wary; frugal.

Over his kindred he held a wary and chary care, which bountifully was expressed, when occasion so required. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon. Shakf.

To CHASE. v. a. [chasser, French.]

1. To hunt.
It shall be as the chafed roe. Isaiah.
Mine enemies chafed me sore like a bird. Lamentations.

2. To pursue as an enemy.
And Abimelech chafed him, and he fled before him. Judges.
One of you shall chase a thousand. Deut.

3. To drive away.
He that chafeth away his mother, is a son that causeth shame. Proverbs.

4. To follow as a thing desirable.

5. To drive.

Thus chafed by their brother's endless malice from prince to prince, and from place to place, they, for their safety, fled at last to the city of Biennis. Knolles's History of the Turks.

When the following morn had chaf'd away
The flying stars, and light restor'd the day. Dryden.

To CHASE Metals. See To ENCHASE.

CHASE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Hunting; as, the pleasures of the chase.

2. Pursuit of any thing as game.

Whilst he was hast'ning in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple, meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady. Shakespeare.

There is no chase more pleasant, methinks, than to drive a thought, by good conduct, from one end of the world to another, and never to lose sight of it till it fall into eternity. Burnet.

3. Fitness to be hunted; appropriation to chase or sport.

Concerning the beasts of chase, whereof the buck is the first, he is called the first year a fawn. Shakespeare.

A maid I am, and of thy virgin train;
Oh! let me still that spotless name retain;
Frequent the forests, thy chase will obey,
And only make the beasts of chase my prey. Dryden.

4. Pursuit of an enemy, or of something noxious.

The admiral, with such ships only as could suddenly be put in readiness, made forth with them, and such as came daily in, we set upon them, and gave them chase. Bacon.

He sallied out upon them with certain troops of horsemen, with such violence, that he overthrew them, and, having them in chase, did speedy execution. Knolles's History of the Turks.

They seek that joy, which us'd to glow
Expanded on the hero's face,
When the thick squadrons press the foe,
And William led the glorious chase. Prior.

5. Pursuit of something as desirable.

Yet this mad chase of fame, by few pursued,
Has drawn destruction on the multitude. Dryd.

6. The game hunted.

She, seeing the towering of her pursued chase, went circling about, rising so with the less sense of rising. Sidney.

Hold, Warwick! seek thee out some other chase,
For I myself must put this deer to death. Shakf.

Honour's the noblest chase; pursue that game,
And recompense the loss of love with fame. Granville.

7. Open ground stored with such beasts as are hunted.

A receptacle for deer and game, of a middle nature between a forest and a park; being commonly less than a forest, and not endured with so many liberties; and yet of a larger compass, and stored with greater diversity of game, than a park. A haye differs from a forest in this, because it may be in the hands of a subject, which a forest, in its proper nature, cannot; and from a park, in that it is not inclosed, and hath not only a larger compass, and more store of game, but likewise more keepers and overseers. Cowell.

He and his lady both are at the lodge,
Upon the north side of this pleasant chase. Shaksp.
S. The CHASE of a gun, is the whole bore or length of a piece, taken withinside. Chambers.

CHASE-GUN. n. f. [from chase and gun.]
Guns in the forepart of the ship, fired upon those that are pursued.

Mean time the Belgians tack upon our rear,
And taking chase-guns through our stern they lend. Dryden.

CHA'SER. n. f. [from chase.]

1. Hunter; pursuer; driver.

Then began
A stop i' th' chaser, a review; anon
A rout, confusion thick. Shaksp.

So fast he flies, that his reviewing eye
Has lost the chasers, and his ear the cry. Denh.
Stretch'd on the lawn, his second hope survey,
At once the chaser, and at once the prey!
Lo, Rufus, tugging at the deadly dart,
Bleeds in the forest like a wounded hart! Pope.

2. An enchafer.

CHASM. n. f. [χασμα.]

1. A breach unclosed; a cleft; a gap; an opening.

In all that visible corporeal world, we see no
chasms or gaps. Locke.
The water of this orb communicates with that of the ocean, by means of certain hiatuses or chasms passing betwixt it and the bottom of the ocean. Woodward.

The ground about her riv'n mouth disparts,
Horrible chasm profound. Phillips.

2. A Place unfilled; a vacuity.

Some lazy ages, lost in ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles;
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms in epichas mistakes. Dryden.

CHASSELLAS. n. f. [French.] A fort of grape.

CHASTE. adj. [chaste, Fr. castus, Lat.]

1. Pure from all commerce of sexes; as, a chaste virgin.

Diana chaste, and Hebe fair. Prior.

2. With respect to language, pure; uncorrupt; not mixed with barbarous phrases.

3. Free from obscenity.

Among words which signify the same principal idea, some are clean and decent, others unclean; some chaste, others obscene. Watts' Logic.

4. True to the marriage bed.

Love your children; be discreet, chaste, keepers at home. Titus.

CHASTE-TREE. n. f. [vitex, Lat.]

This tree will grow to be eight or ten feet high, and produce spikes of flowers at the extremity of every branch in autumn. Miller.

CHA'STELY. adv. [from chaste.] Without incontinence; purely; without contamination.

You should not pass here; no, though it were as virtuous, to lie as to live chastely. Shaksp.

Make first a song of joy and love,
Which chastely flame in royal eyes. Wotton.

Succession of a long descent,
Which chastely in the channels ran,
Lend from our deni-gods began. Dryden.

To CHA'STEN. v. a. [chastier, Fr. castigo, Lat.] To correct; to punish; to mortify.

Chasten thy son while there is hope, and let not thy soul spare for his crying. Proverbs.

I follow thee, safe guide! the path
Thou lead'st me, and to the hand of heav'n submit,
However chast'ning. Milton's Paradi's: Lost.

Some feel the rod,
And own, like us, the father's chast'ning hand. Rowe.

From our lost pursuit first wills to bid
Her close decrees, and chasten human pride. Prior.

To CHASTISE. v. a. [castigo, Lat. anciently accented on the first syllable, now on the last.]

1. To punish; to correct by punishment; to afflict for faults.

My breast I'll burst with straining of my courage,
But I will chastise this high minded strumpet. Shaksp.

I am glad to see the vanity or envy of the canting chymists thus discovered and chastised. Boyle.

Seldom is the world affrighted or chastised with signs or prodigies, earthquakes or inundations, famines or plagues. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

Like you, commission'd to chastise and bless,
He must avenge the world, and give it peace. Prior.

2. To reduce to order, or obedience; to repress; to restrain; to awe.

Hie thee hither,
That I may pour my spirits in thine ear,
And chastise, with the valour of my tongue,
All that impedes thee. Shaksp.

Know sir, that I
Will not wait upon'd at your master's court,
Nor once be chastis'd with the sober eye
Of dull Oselvia. Shaksp.

The gay social sense
By decency chastis'd. Thomson.

CHASTISEMENT. n. f. [chastiment, Fr.] Correction; punishment; commonly, though not always, used of domestick or parental punishment.

Shall I so much dishonour my fair stars,
On equal terms to give him chastisement? Shaksp.

He held the chastisement of one, which molested
the see of Rome, pleasing to God. Raieigh.

For seven years what can a child be guilty of,
but lying, or ill-natured tricks; the repeated commission of which shall bring him to the chastisement of the rod. Locke.

He receives a fit of sickness as the kind chastisement and discipline of his heavenly Father, to wean his affections from the world. Bentley.

CHASTISER. n. f. [from chastise.] The person that chastises; a punisher; a corrector.

CHA'STITY. n. f. [castitas, Lat.]

1. Purity of the body.

Who can be bound by any solemn vow
To force a spotless virgin's chastity? Shaksp.

Chastity is either abstinence or continence; abstinence is that of virgins or widows; continence, of married persons: chaste marriages are honourable and pleasing to God. Taylor.

Ev'n here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires. Pope.

2. Freedom from obscenity.

There is not chastity eas'd in language,
Without offence to alter them. Shaksp.

3. Freedom from bad mixture of any kind; purity of language, opposed to barbarisms.

CHA'STNESS. n. f. [from chaste.] Chastity; purity.

To CHAT. v. n. [from caqueter, Fr. Skin-ner; perhaps from achat, purchase or cheapening, on account of the prate naturally produced in a bargain; or only, as it is most likely, contracted from chatter.] To prate; to talk idly; to prattle; to cackle; to chatter; to converse at ease.

Thus chatten the people in their steads,
Ylike as a monster of many heads. Spenser.

Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my foot, and chat with you,
Your fauencies will jett upon my love. Shaksp.

The shepherds on the lawn
Sat simply chattering in a rustic row. Milton.

With much good-will the motion was embrac'd
To chat a while on their adventures pass'd. Dryden.

To CHAT. v. a. To talk of. Not in use, unless ludicrously.

All tongues speak of him, and the bleas'd
Arc spectacled to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him, Shaksp.

CHAT. n. f. [from the verb.] Idle talk; prate; slight or negligent tattle.

Lords that can prate
As amply and unnecessarily
As this Gonzalo, I myself would make A chough of as deep chat. Shaksp.

The time between before the fire they lat
And shorten'd the delay by pleasing chat. Dryd.

The least is good, far greater than the tickling of his palate with a glass of wine, or the idle chat of a foaking club. Locke.

Snuff, or the fan, supplies each pause of chat,
With singing, laughing, ogling, and all that. Pope.

CHAT. n. f. The keys of trees are called chats; as, ash chats.

CHA'TELLANY. n. f. [châtelanie, Fr.] The district under the dominion of a castle.

Here are about twenty towns and forts of great importance, with their chattelannies and dependencies. Dryden.

CHA'TTEL. n. f. [See CATTLE.] Any moveable possession: a term now scarce used but in forms of law.

Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master of what is mine own;
She is my goods, my chattels. Shaksp.

Honour's a leafe for lives to come,
And cannot be extended from
The legal tenant; 'tis a chattel
Not to be forfeited in battle. Hudibras.

To CHA'TTER. v. n. [caqueter, Fr.]

1. To make a noise as a pie, or other unharmonious bird.

Nightingales seldom sing, the pie still chattereth. Sidney.

So doth the cuckow, when the mavis sings,
Begin his witless note agree to chatter. Spenser.

There was a crow sat chattering upon the back of a sheep: Well, sirrah, says the sheep, you durst not have done this to a dog. L'Esrange.

Your birds of knowledge, that in dusky air Chatter futurity. Dryden.

2. To make a noise by collision of the teeth.

Sto'd Theodore surpris'd in deadly fright,
With chattering teeth, and bristling hair upr'ght. Dryden.

Dip but your toes into cold water,
That correspondent teeth will chatter. Prior.

3. To talk idly or carelessly.

Suffer no hour to pass away in a lazy idleness, an impertinent chattering, or useless trifles. Watts' Logic.

CHA'TTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

So mighty recompence your beauty bought. Dryden.

CHEAPNESS. n. f. [from cheap.] Lowness of price.

Ancient statutes incite merchant-strangers to bring in commodities, having for end cheapness. Bacon.

The discredit which is grown upon Ireland, has been the great discouragement to other nations to transplant themselves hither, and prevailed farther than all the invitations which the cheapness and plenty of the country has made them. Temple.

CHEAR. See CHEER.

To CHEAT. v. a. [of uncertain derivation; probably from acheater, Fr. to purchase, alluding to the tricks used in making bargains. See the noun.]

1. To defraud; to impose upon; to trick. It is used commonly of low cunning.

It is a dangerous commerce, where an honest man is sure at first of being cheated; and he recovers not his losses, but by learning to cheat others. Dryden.

There are people who find that the most effectual way to cheat the people, is always to pretend to infallible cures. Tillotson.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

I that am curtail'd by this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd. Shakespeare.

CHEAT. n. f. [from the verb. Some think abbreviated from escheat, because many fraudulent measures being taken by the lords of manors in procuring escheats, cheat, the abridgment, was brought to convey a bad meaning.]

1. A fraud; a trick; an imposture.

The pretence of publick good is a cheat that will ever pass, though so abused by ill men, that I wonder the good do not grow ashamed to use it. Temple.

Empirick politicians use deceit,
Hide what they give, and cure but by a cheat. Dryden.

When I consider life, 'tis all a cheat;
Yet, fool'd with hope, men favour the deceit:
Trit on, and think to-morrow will repay;
To-morrow's falser than the former day;
Lyes worse; and while it says we shall be blest
With some new joy, cuts off what we possess. Dryden.

2. A person guilty of fraud.

Disimulation can be no further useful than it is concealed; for as much as no man will trust a known cheat. South.

Like that notorious cheat, vast fums I give,
Only that you may keep me while I live. Dryd.

CHE'ATER. n. f. [from cheat.] One that practises fraud.

I will be cheater to them I can, and they shall be exchequers to me. [It is here for cheater] Swift, Arc.

They say this town is full of cheater,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye;
Disguis'd cheater in printing moulds,
And many such like artifices of sin. Shakespeare.

He is no swaggerer, I believe; a tame cheater if faith.—Cheater, can you hear? I will bar no honest man my house, nor no cheater. Shakespeare.

All sorts of injurious persons, the sacrilegious, the detainers of titles, cheaters of men's inheritances, false witnesses and accusers.

Taylor's rule of Living Holy.

To CHECK. v. a. [from the French checcs, chiefs; whence we use at that game, the term checkmate, when we stop our adversary from carrying on his play any further.]

1. To repress; to curb.
Refrain thy state; with better judgment check this hideous rashness. Shakespeare.

Fames may be sown and raised, they may be spread and multiplied, they may be checked and laid dead. Bacon.

I hate when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride. Milton.

He who sat at a table, richly and deliciously furnished, but with a sword hanging over his head by one single thread or hair, surely had enough to check his appetite. South.

2. To improve; to chide.
Richard, with his eye brimful of tears,
Then check'd and rated by Northumberland,
Did speak these words, now prov'd a prophecy. Shakespeare.

His fault is much, and the good king his maker
Will check him for't. Shakespeare.

3 To compare a bank note, or other bill, with the correspondent paper.

4. To control by a counter-reckoning.

To CHECK. v. n.

1. To stop; to make a stop: with at.
With what wing the stanyl checks at it. Shakespeare.

He must observe their mood on whom he jets,
The quality of the persons, and the time;
And, like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. Shakespeare.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after. Locke.

2. To clash; to interfere.
If love check with business, it troubleth men's fortunes. Bacon.

3. To strike with repression.
I'll avoid his presence;
It checks too strong upon me. Dryden.

CHECK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Repressure; stop; rebuff; sudden restraint.

Rebellion in this land shall lose his sway,
Mixing the check of such another day. Shaksp.

We see also, that kings that have been fortunate conquerors in their first years, must have some check or arrest in their fortunes. Bacon.

God hath of late years manifested himself in a very dreadful manner, as if it were on purpose to give a check to this insolent impiety. Tillotson.

It was this vicarious zeal, which gave a remarkable check to the first progress of christianity. Adison's Framer.

God put it into the heart of one of our princes, to give a check to that sacrilege which had been but too much winked at. Atterbury.
The great struggle with passions is in the first check. Regis.

2. Restraint; curb; government; continued restraint.

They who come to maintain their own breach of faith, the check of their consciences much breaketh their spirit.

The impetuosity of the new officer's nature needed some restraint and check, for some time, to his immoderate pretences and appetite of power.

Some, free from rhyme or reason, rule or check, Break Priscian's head, and Pegasus's neck. Pope.

While such men are in trust, who have no check from within, nor any views but towards their interest.

3. A reproof; a slight.

Oh! this life
Is nobler than attending for a check. Shakespeare.

I do know, the state,
However this may gall him with some check,
Cannot with safety cast him. Shakespeare.

4. A dislike; a sudden disgust; something that stops the progress.

Say I should wed her, would not my wife
Subjests
Take checks, and think it strange? perhaps revolt?

Dryden.

5. In falconry, when a hawk forsakes her proper game to follow rooks, pies, or other birds that cross her flight.

A young woman is a hawk upon her wings;
and if she be handsome, she is the more subject to go out on check.

When whistled from the fist
Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness, the quarry mis'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind.

6. The person checking; the cause of restraint; a stop.

He was unhappily too much used as a check upon the lord Coventry.

A satirical poet is the check of the laymen on bad priests.

7. Any stop or interruption.

The letters have the natural production by several checks or stops, or, as they are usually called, articulations of the breath or voice.

8. The correspondent cipher of a bank-bill.

9. A term used in the game of chess, when one party obliges the other either to move or guard his king.

10. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's household, has the check and controlment of the yeomen of the guard, and all the ushers belonging to the royal family.

11. Clerk of the CHECK, in the king's navy at Plymouth, is also the name of an officer invested with like powers.

To CHE'CKER. } v. a. [from echecs, chess,
To CHE'QUER. } French.] To variegate or diversify, in the manner of a chess-board, with alternate colours, or with darker and brighter parts.

The grey-eyed morn smiles on the frowning
night,
Check'ring the eastern clouds with streaks of light.

The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a checker'd shadow on the ground.

As the snake, rolled in the flow'ry bank,
With shining checker'd slough, doth sting a child,
That for the beauty thinks it excellent.

The wealthy spring yet never burc
That sweet nor dainty flower,
That damask'd not the checker'd floor
Of Cynthia's summer bower.

Drayton.

Many a youth and many a maid
Dancing in the checker'd shade.

In the chess-board, the use of each chess-man is determined only within that chequered piece of wood.

In our present condition, which is a middle state, our minds are, as it were, chequered with truth and falsehood.

The ocean intermixing with the land, fo as to checker it into earth and water.

Here waving groves a checker'd scene display,
And part admit, and part exclude the day.

CHE'CKER. } n. f. Work varied CHE'CKER-WORK. } alternately as to its colours or materials.

Nets of checker-work and wreaths of chain-work for the chapters which were upon the top of the pillars.

CHE'CKMATE. n. f. [echec et mat, Fr.]
The movement on the chess-board that kills the opposite men, or hinders them from moving.

Love they him call'd, that gave me the checkmate,

But better might they have behote him hate.

CHE'CKROLL. n. f. [from check and roll.]
A roll or book, containing the names of such as are attendants on, and in pay to, great personages, as their household servants. It is otherwise called the chequer-roll.

Not daring to extend this law further than to the king's servants in check-oll, lest it should have been too harsh to the gentlemen of the kingdom.

CHEEK. n. f. [ceac, Saxon.]

1. The side of the face below the eye.

And now and then an ample tear tuill'd down
Her delicate cheek.

Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night
Like a rich jewel in an Aethiops' ear.

I shall survey, and spy
Death in thy cheeks, and darkneis in thy eye.

Daughter of the rose, whose cheeks unite
The differing titles of the red and white;
Who heav'n's alternate beauty well display,
The blush of morning and the milky way.

2. A general name among mechanics for almost all those pieces of their machines and instruments that are double, and perfectly alike.

CHE'KKBONE. n. f. [from check and bone.]
The jaw.

I cut the tumour, and felt the slug: it lay partly under the os jugale, or cheekbone.

CHE'EKTOOTH. n. f. [from cheek and tooth.] The hinder-tooth or tusk.

He hath the cheektooth of a great lion.

CHEER. n. f. [chere, Fr. entertainment;
cara, Sp. the countenance. It seems to have, in English, some relation to both these senses.]

1. Entertainment; provisions served at a feast.

But though my cates be mean, take them in good part;
Better cheer you may have, but not with better heart.

His will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, poignant sauces and delicious wines.

2. Invitation to gaiety.

You do not give the cheer; the feast is sold
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis making,
'Tis given with welcome.

3. Gaiety; jollity.

I have nut that alacrity of spirit,
Nor cheer of mind, that I was wont to have.

Air of the countenance.

Right faithful true he was in deed and word,
But of his cheer did seem too solemn sad:
Nothing did he dread, but ever was ydrad.

Which publick death, receiv'd with such a cheer,
As not a sigh, a look, a shrink bewrays
The least felt touch of a degenerate fear,
Gave life to envy, to his courage praise.

He ended; and his words their drooping cheer
Enlighten'd, and his languish'd hope reviv'd.

At length appear
Her grisly brethren stretch'd upon the bier:
Pale at the sudden sight, the chang'd her cheer.

Perhaps temper of mind in general; for we read of heavy cheer.

Then were they all of good cheer, and they also took some meat

To CHEER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To incite; to encourage; to inspirit.

He complained that he was betrayed; yet, for all that, was nothing discouraged, but cheer'd up the footmen.

He cheer'd the dogs to follow her who fled,
And vow'd revenge on her devoted head.

2. To comfort; to console.

I died, ere I could lend thee aid;
But cheer thy heart, and be thou not dismay'd.

Displeas'd at what, not suffering, they had seen,
They went to cheer the faction of the green.

3. To gladden.

Hark! a glad voice the lonely desert cheers:
Prepare the way; a god, a god appears!

The sacred sun, above the waters rais'd,
Tho' heaven's eternal brazen portals blaz'd,
And wide o'er earth diffus'd his cheering ray.

To CHEER. v. n. To grow gay or glad-some.

At fight of thee my gloomy soul cheers up;
My hopes revive, and gladness dawns within me.

CHE'ERER. n. f. [from To cheer.] Glad-ner; giver of gaiety.

To thee alone be praise,
From whom our joy descends,
Thou cheerer of our days.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, a diverter of sadness, a calmer of unquiet thoughts.

Saffron is the safest and most simple cordial,
the greatest reviver of the heart, and cheerer of the spirits.

Prime cheerer, light,
Of all material beings first and best.

CHE'ERFUL. adj. [from cheer and full.]

1. Gay; full of life; full of mirth.

The cheerful birds of sundry kind
Do chaunt sweet music to delight his mind.

2. Having an appearance of gaiety.

A merry heart maketh a cheerful countenance;
but by sorrow of the heart the spirit is broken.

CHE'ERFULLY. adv. [from cheerful.]
Without dejection; with willingness;
with gaiety.

Pluck up thy spirits, look cheerfully upon me.

To their known stations cheerfully they go.

Doctrine is that which must prepare men for discipline; and men never go on so cheerfully, as when they see where they go.

That cheerfully recounts the female's praise,
Find equal love, and love's untainted sweets
Enjoy with honour.

CHE'ERFULNESS. n. f. [from cheerful.]

1. Freedom from dejection; alacrity.

Barbarossa, using this exceeding valour, and forwardness of his soldiers, we got up the fourteen gallees he had sunk. Knolly.

With what resolution and cheerfulness, with what courage and patience, did vast numbers of all sorts of people, in the first ages of christianity, encounter all the rage and malice of the world, and embrace torments and death! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from gloominess.

I marvelled to see her receive my commandments with sighs, and yet do them with cheerfulness. Soliver.

CHEERLESS. adj. [from cheer.] Without gayety, comfort, or gladness.

For how canst thou eye your joyous fight didst miss, My cheerful day is turn'd to cheerless night. Fairy Queen.

O a look, behold a willow,
Heav'n her covering, earth her pillow,
Sad Amynta sigh'd alone,
From the cheerless dawn of morning
Till the dews of night returning. Dryden.

CHEERLY. adj. [from cheer.]

1. Gay; cheerful.

They are useful to mankind, in affording them convenient situations of houses and villages, reflecting the benign and cherishing ten-beams, and so rendering their habitations both more comfortable and more cheery in winter. Roy.

2. Not gloomy; not dejected.

CHEERLY. adv. [from cheer.] Cheerfully.

Under heavy arms the youth of Rome
Their long laborious marches overcome;
Cheerly their tedious travels undergo. Dryden.

In God's name, cheerly on, courageous friends,
To reap the harvest of perpetual peace,
By this one bloody trial of sharp war. Shakespeare.

Oft listening how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn. Milton.

CHEERY. adj. [from cheer.] Gay; sprightly; having the power to make gay: a ludicrous word.

Come, let us hic, and quaff a cheery bowl;
Let cyder new wash sorrow from thy soul. Gay.

CHEESE. n. f. [caesus, Lat. cyré, Sax.] A kind of food made by pressing the curd of coagulated milk, and suffering the mafs to dry.

I will rather truit a Fleming with my butter, the Wellhman with my cheese, than my wife with herself. Shakespeare.

CHEESECAKE. n. f. [from cheese and cake.] A cake made of soft curds, sugar, and butter.

Effeminate he fat, and quiet;
Strange product of a cheese-cake diet. Prior.

Where many a man, at variance with his wife,
With loitering mead and cheese-cake ends the strife. King.

CHEESEMONGER. n. f. [from cheese and monger.] One who deals in cheese.

A true owl of London,
That gives out he's undone,
Being a cheesemonger,
By trusing. Ben Jonson.

To CHERISH. v. a. [cheris, Fr.] To support and forward with encouragement, help, and protection; to shelter; to nurse up.

Whenever Buckingham doth turn his hate
Upon your grace, and not with dutious love
Doth cherish you and yours, God punish me
With hate in taste where I expect most love. Shakespeare.

I would, I were thy bird,
Sweet, so would I;

But I should kill thee with too much cherishing. Shakespeare.

What doth cherish weeds but gentle air? Shakespeare.

Magistrates have always thought themselves concerned to cherish religion, and to maintain in the minds of men the belief of a God and another life. Tillotson.

But old god Saturn, which doth all devour,
Doth cherish her, and still augments her might. Davies.

He that knowingly commits an ill, has the upbraodings of his own conscience; those who act by error, have its cherishings and encouragements to animate them. Decay of Piety.

CHE'RISHER. n. f. [from cherish.] An encourager; a supporter.

One of their greatest praises it is to be the maintainers and cherishers of a regular devotion, a reverend worship, a true and decent piety. Spratt.

CHE'RESHMENT. n. f. [from cherish.] Encouragement; support; comfort. Obsolete.

The one lives her age's ornament,
That with rich bounty, and dear cherishment,
Supports the praise of noble poeie. Spenser.

A cherry lip, a passing eye, a smiling cheek.

CHE'RRY BAY. See LAUREL.

CHE'RRY-CHEEKER. adj. [from cherry and cheek.] Having a cherry cheek.

I warrant them to be as good as the cherry.

CHE'RRYPIT. [from cherry and pit] A child's play, in which the stones of a nut are flung into a small hole.

What, man! 'tis not for you to play at cherripit.

CHE'RSONE'SE. n. f. [cherisonse, Fr.] A peninsula; a tract of land almost surrounded by the sea, but joined to the continent by a narrow neck or isthmus.

CHE'RT. n. f. [from quartz, Germ.] A kind of flint.

Flint is most commonly found in form of nodules; but 'tis sometimes found in thin strata, when 'tis called chert. Woodward.

CHE'RUB. n. f. [כרוב, Heb.]

It is sometimes written in the plural, improperly, cherubims.] A celestial spirit, which, in the hierarchy, is placed next in order to the seraphim. All the several descriptions which the Scripture gives us of cherubim differ from one another; as they are described in the shapes of men, eagles, oxen, lions, and in a composition of all these figures put together. The hieroglyphical representations in the embroidery upon the curtains of the tabernacle, were called by Moses, Exodus xxvi. 1. cherubim of cunning work. Calmét.

The roof o' th' chamber
With gold cherubims is trected. Shakespeare.

Heav'n's cherubims, 'tis d
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in every eye,
That tears shall drown the wind. Shakespeare.

Some cherub finishes what you begun,
And to a miracle improves a tune. Prior.

CHE'RU'BIK. adj. [from cherub.] Angelick; relating to the cherubim.

Thy words
Attentive, and with more delighted ear, Divine instructor! I have heard, than when Cherubick songs by night from neighb'ring hills
Aerial music fend. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And on the east side of the garden place
Cherubick watch. Milton's Paradise Lost.

CHE'RU'BIN. adj. [from cherub.] Angelical.

Frame to thy song their cheerful cheruping;
Or hold their peace for shame of thy sweet lays. Spenser.

CHE'SLIP. n. f. A small vermin, that lies under stones or tiles. Skinner.

CHESS. n. f. [echecs, Fr.] A nice and abstruse game, in which two sets of men are moved in opposition to each other.

This game the Persian magi did invent,
The force of Eastern wisdom to express;
From thence to busy Europeans sent,
And styl'd by modern Lombards penive chess. Dehous.

So have I seen a king on chefs
(His rooks and knights withdrawn,
His queen and bishops in distress)
Shifting about, grow less and less,
With here and there a pawn. Dryden.

CHESS-APPLE. n. f. A species of wild-service.

CHESS-BOARD. n. f. [from chefs and board.] The board or table on which the game of chefs is played.
And cards are dealt, and chefs-boards brought,
To ease the pain of coward thought. Prior.

CHESS-MAN. n. f. [from chefs and man.] A puppet for chefs.
A company of chefs-men standing on the four squares of the chefs-board where we left them, we say they are all in the same place, or unmoved. Locke.

CHESS-PLAYER. n. f. [from chefs and player.] A gamester at chefs.
Thus, like a scillic chefs-player, he draws out his men, and makes his pawns of use to his greater persons. Dryden.

CHESSOM. n. f. Mellow earth.
The tender chessom and mellow earth is the best, being mere mould, between the two extremes of clay and sand; especially if it be not loomy and binding. Baron's Nat. Hist.

CHEST. n. f. [cύπε, Sax. cista, Lat.]

1. A box of wood, or other materials, in which things are laid up.
He will seek there, on my word; neither pref, chest, trunk, well, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places. Shakespeare.

But more have been by avarice oppress'd,
And heaps of money crowded in the chest. Dryd.

2. A CHEST of Drawers. A case with moveable boxes or drawers.

3. The trunk of the body, or cavity from the shoulders to the belly.
Such as have round faces, or broad chests, or shoulders, have seldom or never long necks. Brown

CHESTER. See CASTOR.

CHESTNUT. n. f. [castanea, Fr.]

CHESTNUT-TREE. [castanea, Latin.]

1. The tree hath katkins, which are placed at remote distances from the fruit, on the same tree. The outer coat of the fruit is very rough, and has two or three nuts included in each husk or covering. This tree was formerly in greater plenty, as may be proved by the old buildings in London, which were, for the most part, of this timber; which is equal in value to the best oak, and, for many purposes, far exceeds it, particularly for making vessels for liquors; it having a property, when once the roughly seasoned, to maintain its bulk constantly, and is not subject to shrink or swell, like other timber. Miller.

2. The fruit of the chestnut tree.
A woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear,
As with a chestnut in a farmer's fire. Shakespeare.

October has a basket of services, medians, and chestnuts, and fruits that ripen at the latter time. Peacham on Drawing.

3. The name of a brown colour.
His hair is of a good colour.—
—An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. Shakespeare.
Merab's long hair was glossy chestnut brown. Rowley.

CHESTON. n. f. A species of plum.

CHEVALIER. n. f. [chevalier, Fr.] A knight; a gallant strong man.
Renowned Talbot noth expect my aid
And I am low'd by a traitor villain,
And cannot help the noble chevalier. Shakespeare.

CHEVAUX de Frise. n. f. [Fr. The singular Cheval de Frise is seldom used.] The Friesland horse, which is a piece of timber, larger or smaller, and traversed with wooden spikes, pointed with iron, five or six feet long; used in defending a passage, stopping a breach, or making a retrenchment to stop the cavalry. It is also called a turnpike, or tournaquet. Chambers.

CHEVEN. n. f. [chevesne, Fr.] A river fish, the same with chub.

CHEVERIL. n. f. [cheverau, Fr.] A kid; kidleather. Obsolete.
A sentence is but a cheveril glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward. Shakespeare.

Which gifts the capacity
Of your soft cheveril conscience would receive,
If you might please to stretch it. Shakespeare.

O, here 's a wit of cheveril, that stretches from an inch narrow to an ell broad. Shakespeare.

CHEVISANCE. n. f. [chevisance, Fr.] Enterprise; achievement. Not in use.
Fortune, the foe of famous chevisance,
Seldom, sad Guyon, yields to virtue aid. Spens

CHEVRON. n. f. [French.] One of the honourable ordinaries in heraldry. It represents two rafters of a house, set up as they ought to stand. Harris

To CHEW. v. a. [ceoyjan, Sax. kauwen, Dutch. It is very frequently pronounced chaw, and perhaps properly.]

1. To grind with the teeth; to masticate.
If little faults, proceeding on distemper,
Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes, chew'd, swallow'd, and digested, Appear before us? Shakespeare.

Pacing through the forest,
Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy. Shak.
This pious cheat, that never suck'd the blood,
Nor chew'd the flesh of lambs. Dryden's Fables.

The vales
Descending gently, where the lowing herd Chews verd'rous pasture. Phillips.

By chewing, solid aliment is divided into small parts: in a human body, there is no other instrument to perform this action but the teeth. By the action of chewing, the spittle and mucus are squeezed from the glands, and mixed with the aliment; which action, if it be long continued, will turn the aliment into a sort of chyle. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To meditate; to ruminate in the thoughts.
While the fierce monk does at his trial stand,
He chews revenge, abjuring his offence:
Guile in his tongue, and murder in his hand,
He stabs his judge, to prove his innocence. Prior.

3. To taste without swallowing.
Heaven 's in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew its name. Shakespeare.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chew'd and digested; that is, some books are to be read only in parts; others to be read, but not curiously; and some few to be read wholly, with attention. Bacon.

To CHEW. v. n. To champ upon; to ruminate.
I will with patience hear, and find a time;
Till then, my noble friend, chew upon this. Shakespeare.

Inculcate the doctrine of disobedience, and then leave the multitude to chew upon 't. L'Esfrange.

Old politicians chew on wisdom past,
And blunder on in business to the last. Pope.

CHICANE. n. f. [chicane, Fr. derived by Manege from the Spanish word chico, little.]

1. The art of protracting a contest by petty objection and artifice.
The general part of the civil law concerns not the chicane of private causes, but the affairs and intercourse of civilized nations, grounded upon the principles of reason. Locke.

His attorney have hardly one trick left; they are at an end of all their chicane. Arbutnot.

2. Artifice in general. This sense is only in familiar language.
Unwilling then in arms to meet,
He strove to lengthen the campaign,
And save his forces by chicane. Prior.

To CHICANE. v. n. [chicaner, Fr.] To prolong a contest by tricks.

CHICANER. n. f. [chicaneur, Fr.] A petty philosopher; a trifling disputant; a wrangler.
This is the way to distinguish the two most different things I know, a logical chicaner from a man of reason. Locke.

CHICANERY. n. f. [chicanerie, Fr.] Sophistry: mean arts of wrangle.
His anger caus'd him to destroy the greatest part of these reports; and only to preserve such as discovered most of the chicanery and utility of the practice. Arbutnot.

CHICHES. n. f. See CHICKPEA.

CHICHLING VETCH. n. f. [chichyrus, Lat.] In Germany they are cultivated, and eaten as peas, though neither so tender nor well tasted. Miller.

CHICK. n. f. [cicen, Sax. kicken, CHICKEN. } Dutch. Chicken is, I believe, the old plural of chick, though now used as a singular noun.]

1. The young of a bird, particularly of a hen, or small bird.
All my pretty ones!
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop! Shakespeare.

For when the shell is broke, out comes a chick. Davies.

While it is a chick, and hath no spurs, nor cannot hurt, nor hath seen the motion, yet he readily oraciteth it. Hale.

Even since she was a seven-night old, they say, Was chaste and humble to her dying day;
Nor chick, nor hen, was known to disobei. Dryd.

Having the notion that one laid the egg out of which the other was hatched, I have a clear idea of the relation of dam and chick. Locke.

On rainy days alone I dine,
Upon a chick and pint of wine:
On rainy days I dine alone,
And pick my chicken to the bone. Swift.

2. A word of tenderness.
My Ariel, chick,
This is thy charge. Shakespeare.

3. A term for a young girl.
Then, Chloe, still go on to prate
Of thirty-six and thirty-eight;
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints, that Stella is no chicken. Swift.

CHICKENHEARTED. adj. [from chicken and heart.] Cowardly; timorous; fearful. Now we get up for tilting in the pit, Where 'tis agreed by bulbes, chickenhearted, To fright the ladies first, and then be parted.

Prologue to Spanish Friar.

CHICKENPOX. n. f. An exanthematous distemper, so called from its being of no very great danger.

CHICKLING. n. f. [from chick.] A small chick.

CHICKPEA. n. f. [from chick and pea.] A kind of degenerate pea. Miller.

CHICKWEED. n. f. [from chick and weed.] The name of a plant.

Green mint, or chickweed, are of good use in all the hard swellings of the breast, occasioned by milk. Wifeman.

TO CHIDE. v. a. pret. chid or chode, part. chid or chidden. [ciban, Sax.]

1. To reprove; to check; to correct with words: applied to persons.

Chide him for faults, and do it reverently, When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth.

Shakspeare.

And fly like chidden Mercury from Jove.

Shakspeare.

Those, that do teach your babes,

Do it with gentle means, and easy tasks; He might have chid me so: for, in good faith, I am a child to chiding.

Shakspeare.

Seylla wept,

And chid her barking waves into attention.

Milton.

Above the waves as Neptune threw'd his race, To chide the winds, and save the Trojan race.

Waller.

You look, as if you stern philosopher Had just now chid you.

Addison.

If any woman of better fashion in the parish happened to be absent from church, they were sure of a visit from him, to chide and to dine with her.

Swift.

2. To drive with reproof.

Margaret my queen, and Clifford too, Have chid me from the battle.

Shakspeare.

3. To blame; to reproach: applied to things.

Winds murmur'd through the leaves your long delay, And fountains, o'er the pebbles, chid your stay.

Dryden.

I chid the folly of my thoughtless haste; For, the work perfected, the joy was past.

Prior.

TO CHIDE. v. n.

1. To clamour; to scold.

Nothing in the world could give a truer idea of the superstitious, credulity, and childishness of the Roman catholick religion.

2. Harmlessness.

Speak thou, boy;
Perhaps thy childishness will move him more Than can our reasons.

CHILDLESS. adj. [from child.] Without children; without offspring.

As thy sword hath made women childless, so shall thy mother be childless among women.

A man shall see the noblest works and foundations have proceeded from childless men; which have sought to express the images of their minds, where those of their bodies have failed: so the care of posterity is most in them that have no posterity.

Childless thou art, childless remain: to death
Shall be deceiv'd his glut.

She can give the reason why one died childless.

CHILD LIKE. adj. [from child and like.] Becoming or befitting a child.

3. To agree; to fall in with.

He not only sat quietly and heard his father railed at, but often chimed in with the discourse.
Abuthnot's Hist. of John Bull.

4. To suit with; to agree.

Any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, I have been used to, will, of course, make all chime that way; and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strange, and uncouth to me.
Locke.

5. To jingle; to clatter.

But with the meaner tribe I'm forc'd to chime,
And, wanting strength to rise, descend to rhyme.
Smith.

To CHIME. v. a.

1. To move, or strike, or cause to found harmonically, or with just consonancy.

With lifted arms they order ev'ry blow,
And chime their founding hammers in a row:
With labour'd anvils Ætna groans below. Dryd.

2. To strike a bell with a hammer.

CHIMERA. n. f. [Chimera, Lat.] A vain and wild fancy, as remote from reality as the existence of the poetical Chimera, a monster feigned to have the head of a lion, the belly of a goat, and the tail of a dragon.

In short, the force of dreams is of a piece,
Chimeras all, and more absurd, or less. Dryden.

No body joins the voice of a sheep with the shape of a horse, to be the complex ideas of any real substances, unless he has a mind to fill his head with chimeras, and his discourse with unintelligible words. Locke.

CHIMERICAL. adj. [from chimera.] Imaginary; fanciful; wildly, vainly, or fantastically conceived; fantastick.

Notwithstanding the fancies of this allegory may alone for it in some measure, I cannot think that persons of such a chimerical existence are proper actors in an epic poem. Spectator.

CHIROGRAPHERIST. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] This word is used in the following passage, I think improperly, for one that tells fortunes by examining the hand: the true word is chirosofiphist, or chirromancer.

Let the physiognomists examine his features; let the chirographists behold his palm; but, above all, let us consult for the calculation of his nativity. Arbutnot and Pope.

CHIROGRAPHY. n. f. [See CHIROGRAPHER.] The art of writing.

CHIROMANCER. n. f. [See CHIROMANCY.] One that foretells future events by inspecting the hand.

The middle fort, who have not much to spare, To chirromancers' cheap art repair,
Who clap the pretty palm, to make the lines more fair. Dryden's Javelin.

CHIROMANCY. n. f. [χρῆς, the hand, and μαντι, a prophet.] The art of foretelling the events of life, by inspecting the hand.

There is not much considerable in that doctrine of chirromancy, that spots in the top of the nails do signify things past; in the middle, things present; and at the bottom, events to come. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHIRP. v. n. [perhaps contracted from cheer up.] The Dutch have circ-en.] To make a cheerful noise; as birds, when they call without singing.

She chirping ran, he peeping flew away,
Till hard by them both he and she did stay. Sidney.

Came he right now to sing a raven's note;
And thinks he that the chirping of a wren
Can chase away the first conceived foond? Shakspeare.

No chirping lark the welkin thence invokes. Gay's Pastorals.

The careful hen
Calls all her chirping family around. Thomson.

To CHIRP. v. a. [This seems apparently corrupted from cheer up.] To make cheerful.

Let no sober bigot here think it a sin
To push on the chirping and moderate bottle. Johnson.

Sir Balaam now, he lives like other folks;
He takes his chirping pint, he cracks his jokes. Pope.

CHIRP. n. f. [from the verb.] The voice of birds or insects.

Winds over us whisper'd, flocks by us did bleat,
And chirp went the grasshopper under our feet. Speotator.

CHIRPER. n. f. [from chirp.] One that chirps; one that is cheerful.

To CHIRRE. v. n. [ceopran, Sax.] See CHURME. To coo as a pigeon. Junius.

CHIRURGEON. n. f. [χειρουργος, from χειρ, the hand, and εργον, work.] One that cures ailments, not by internal medicines, but outward applications. It is now generally pronounced, and by many written, surgeon.

When a man's wounds cease to smart, only because he has lost his feeling, they are nevertheless mortal, for his not feeling his need of a chirurgion. South's Sermons.

CHIRURGERY. n. f. [from chirurgion.] The art of curing by external applications. This is called urgery.

Gynecia having skill in chirurgery, an art in those days much esteemed. Sidney.

Nature could do nothing in her case without the help of chirurgery, in drying up the luxurious flesh, and making way to pull out the rotten bones. Wifeman.

CHIRURGICAL. } adj. See CHIRUR- CHIRURGICK. } GEON.

1. Having qualities useful in outward applications to hurts.

As to the chirurgical or physical virtues of wax, it is reckoned a mean between hot and cold. Mortimer.

2. Relating to the manual part of healing.

3. Manual in general, consisting in operations of the hand. This sense, though the first according to etymology, is now scarce found.

The chirurgical or manual part doth refer to the making instruments, and exercising particular experiments. Wilkins.

CHISEL. n. f. [ciseau, Fr. of scissum, Lat.] An instrument with which wood or stone is pared away.

What fine chisel

Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her. Shakspeare.

There is such a seeming softness in the limbs, as if not a chisel had hewed them out of stone, but a pencil had drawn and stroaked them in oil. Wotton.

Imperfect shapes: in marble such are seen,
When the rude chisel does the man begin. Dryden.

To CHISEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut with a chisel.

CHIT. n. f. [according to Dr. Hickes, from kind, Germ. child; perhaps from chico, little, Span.]

1. A child; a baby: generally used of young persons in contempt.

These will appear such chits in story,
'Twill turn all politicks to jest. Anonymous.

2. The shoot of corn from the end of the grain. A cant term with maltsters.

Barley, couched four days, will begin to shew the chit or sprit at the root-end. Mortimer.

3. A freckle. [from chickpea.] In this sense it is seldom used.

To CHIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To sprout; to shoot at the end of the grain: cant.

I have known barley chit in seven hours after it had been thrown forth. Mortimer.

CHITCHAT. n. f. [corrupted by reduplication from chat.] Prattle; idle prate; idle talk. A word only used in ludicrous conversation.

I am a member of the female society, who call ourselves the chit-chat club. Speotator.

CHITTLINGS. n. f. without singular. [from schytterlingh, Dut. Minshew; from kutteln, Germ. Skinner.] The guts; the bowels. Skinner.

CHITTY. adj. [from chit.] Childish; like a baby.

CHIVALROUS. adj. [from chivalry.] Relating to chivalry, or errant knight-hood; knightly; warlike; adventurous; daring. Out of use.

And noble minds of yore allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise. Fairy Queen.

CHIVALRY. n. f. [chevalerie, French, knight-hood, from cheval, a horse; as eques in Latin. It ought properly to be written chevalry. It is a word not much used, but in old poems or romances.]

1. Knight-hood; a military dignity.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry; which, nevertheless, are conferred promiscuously upon soldiers and no soldiers. Bacon.

2. The qualifications of a knight; as, valour, dexterity in arms.

Thou hast slain
The flow'r of Europe for his chivalry. Shakspeare.

I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry. Shakspeare.

3. The general system of knight-hood.

Solemnly he swore,
That, by the faith which knights to knight-hood bore,

And whate'er else to chivalry belongs,
He would not cease till he reveng'd their wrongs.
Dryden.

4. An adventure; an exploit. Not in use.
They four doing acts more dangerous, though less famous, because they were but private chivalry.
Sidney.

5. The body or order of knights.
And by his light
Did all the chivalry of England move
To do brave acts. Shakespeare.

6. In law.
Servitium militare, of the French chevalier; a tenure of land by knight's service. There is no land but is holden mediately or immediately of the crown, by some service or other; and therefore are all our freeholds, that are to us and our heirs, called feudal tenes, as proceeding from the benefit of the king. As the king gave to the nobles large possessions for this or that rent and service, so they parcelled out their lands, so received for rents and services, as they thought good; and those services are by Littleton divided into chivalry and socage. The one is martial and military; the other, clownish and rustic.
Chivalry, therefore, is a tenure of service, whereby the tenant is bound to perform some noble or military office unto his lord; and is of two sorts; either regal, that is, such as may hold only of the king; or such as may also hold of a common person as well as of the king. That which may hold only of the king, is properly called feoffment; and is again divided into great and petty, i. e. great or small. Chivalry that may hold of a common person, as well as of the king, is called tenementum. Cowell.

CHIVES. n. f. [cive, Fr. Skinner.]

1. The threads or filaments rising in flowers with seeds at the end.

The masculine or pistole seed contained in the chives or spikes of the flamina. Ray.

2. A species of small onion. Skinner.

CHLOROSIS. n. f. [from $\chi\lambda\alpha\zeta\omicron\varsigma$, green.]
The greenfickness.

TO CHOAK. See CHOKE.

CHOCOLATE. n. f. [chocolate, Span.]

1. The nut of the cacao or cocoa tree.

The tree hath a rose flower, of a great number of petals, from whose empalements arises the pointed, being a tube cut into many parts, which becomes a fruit shaped somewhat like a cucumber, and deeply furrowed, in which are contained several seeds, collected into an oblong heap, and slit down, somewhat like almonds. It is a native of America, and is found in great plenty in several places between the tropicks, and grows wild. See COCOA. Miller.

2. The cake or mass, made by grinding the kernel of the cacao nut with other substances, to be dissolved in hot water.

The Spaniards were the first who brought chocolate into use in Europe, to promote the consumption of their cacao-nuts, achiot, and other drugs, which their West Indies furnish, and which enter the composition of chocolate.
Chambers.

3. The liquor made by a solution of chocolate in hot water.

Chocolate is certainly much the best of these three exotic liquours: its oil seems to be both rich, alimentary, and anodyne. Ambroset.

In fumes of burning chocolate shall glow,
And tremble at the sea that froths below! Pope.

CHOCOLATE-HOUSE. n. f. [chocolate and house.] A house where company is entertained with chocolate.

Ever since that time, Lisander has been twice a day at the chocolate-house. Tatler.

CHODE. The old preterit of chide.

And Jacob was wroth, and chode with Laban.
Genesis.

CHOICE. n. f. [choix, French.]

1. The act of choosing; determination between different things proposed; election.

If you oblige me suddenly to chuse,
The choice is made; for I must both refuse. Dryden.
Soit election dath thy styl: reinwun,
Gentle or sharp, according to thy choice;
To laugh at toibe, or to lath at vice. Dryden.

2. The power of choosing; election.

Choice there is not, unless the thing which we take be so in our power, that we might have refused it. If we consume the stable, it chooseth not so to do, because the nature thereof is such that it can do no other. Heser.

There 's no liberty like the freedom of having it at my own choice, whether I will live to the world, or to myself. L'Estrange.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction: for where there is force, there can be no choice. Whereas, all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the undistancing will. Greav's Catechism.

Whether he will remove his contemplation from one idea to another, is many times in his choice. Locke.

3. Care in choosing; curiosity of distinction.

Julius Cæsar did write a collection of apophtigrams: it is pity his book is lost; for I imagine they were collected with judgment and choice. Bacon's Aphorisms.

4. The thing chosen; the thing taken, or approved, in preference to others.

Your choice is not so rich as birth as beauty;
That you might well enjoy her. Shakespeare.

Talk to thee, from among the cherubim,
Thy choice of flaming scarions. Milton.

Now, Mars, the lady, let fame exalt her voice;
Not let thy unquiet only be her choice. Prior.

5. The best part of any thing, that is more properly the object of choice.

The choice and flower of all things profitable in other books, the Psalms do both more briefly contain, and more movingly also express. Hooker.

Thou art a mighty prince: in the choice of our sepulchres bury thy dead. Genesis.

Then orders, the flow'r and choice
Of many provinces, from bound to bound.
Milton.

6. Several things proposed at once, as objects of judgment and election.

A braver choice of dauntless spirits
D'd never float upon the swelling tide. Shaksp.

7. To make CHOICE of. To choose; to take from several things proposed.

Wisdom of what herself approves makes choice,
Nor is led captive by the common voice. Denh.

CHOICE. adj. [choisir, French.]

1. Select; of extraordinary value.

After having set before the king the choicest of wines and fruits, he told him the best part of his entertainment was to come. Guardian.

Thus, in a sea of folly tofs'd,
My choicest hours of life are lost. Swift.

2. Chary; frugal; careful: used of persons.

He that is choice of his time, will also be choice of his company, and choice of his actions.
Taylor's Holy Living.

CHOICELESS. adj. [from choice.] Without the power of choosing; without right of choice; not free.

Neither the weight of the matter of which the cylinder is made, nor the round voluble form of it, are any more imputable to that dead choiceless creature, than the first motion of it; and, therefore, it cannot be a fit resemblance to shew the reconcilableness of fate with choice. Hammond.

CHOICELY. adv. [from choice.]

1. Curiously; with exact choice.

A band of men,
Collected choicely from each county some. Shaksp.

2. Valuably; excellently.

It is certain it is choicely good. Watson's Ang.

CHOICELESS. n. f. [from choice.] Nicety; particular value.

Carry into the third. See auricular, seedlings, or plants, as ate for their choiceless reserved in pois. Erasmus's Kalend.

CHOIR. n. f. [chorus, Latin.]

1. An assembly or band of singers.

They now assist the choir
Of angels, who their songs admire. Waller.

2. The singers in divine worship.

The choir,
With all the choicest music of the kingdom,
Together sung Te Deum. Shakespeare.

3. The part of the church where the choristers or singers are placed.

The lords and ladies having brought the queen
To a prepar'd place in the choir, fell off
At distance from her. Shakespeare.

TO CHOKE. v. a. [accocan, Sax. from ccoca, the chock or mouth. According to Minsheu, from چوک ; whence, probably, the Spanish ahogar.]

1. To suffocate; to kill by stopping the passage of respiration.

But when to my good lord I prove untrue,
I'll choke myself. Shakespeare.

While you thunder'd, clouds of dust did choke
Contending troops. Waller.

2. To stop up; to obstruct; to block up a passage.

Men troop'd up to the king's capacious court,
Whose porticos were choke'd with the resort.
Chapman.

They are at a continual expence to cleanse the poits, and keep them from being choke'd up, by the help of several engines. Addison on Italy.

While pray'rs and tears his destin'd progress stay,
And crowds of mourners choke their sov'reign's way. Tissot.

3. To hinder by obstruction or confinement.

As two spent swimmers, that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakespeare.

She cannot lose her perfect pow'r to see,
Tho' mists and clouds do choke her window-light.
Dorset.

It seemeth the fire is so choke'd, as not to be able to remove the stone. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

You must make the mould lig enough to contain the whole fruit, when it is grown to the greatness; for else you will choke the spreading of the fruit. Bacon's Natural History.

The fire, which choke'd in ashes lay,
A load too heavy for his soul to move,
Was upward blown below, and brush'd away by love. Dryden.

4. To suppress.

And yet we ventur'd; for the gain propos'd choke'd the respect of likely peril fear'd. Shaksp.

Confess thee freely of thy sin;
For to deny each article with oath,
Cannot remove nor choke the strong conception
That I do groan withal. Shakespeare.

5. To overpower.

And that which fell among thorns are they,
which, when they have heard, go forth, and are choke'd with cares, and riches, and pleasures of this life, and bring no fruit to perfection. Luke.

No fruitful crop the fickle fields return;
But oats and darnel choke the rising corn. Dryden.

I have added a chorographical description of this terrestrial paradise. Raleigh.

CHOROGRAPHICALLY. adv. [from chorographical.] In a chorographical manner; according to the rule of chorography; in a manner descriptive of particular regions.

CHOROGRAPHY. n. f. [See CHOROGRAPHER.] The art or practice of describing particular regions, or laying down the limits and boundaries of particular provinces. It is less in its object than geography, and greater than topography.

CHORUS. n. f. [chorus, Latin.]

1. A number of fingers; a concert.

The Grecian tragedy was at first nothing but a chorus of fingers; afterwards one actor was introduced. Dryden.

Never did a more full and unspotted chorus of human creatures join together in a hymn of devotion. Johnson.

In praise to just let every voice be join'd,
And fill the general chorus of mankind! Pope.

2. The persons who are supposed to behold what passes in the acts of a tragedy, and sing their sentiments between the acts.

For supply,
Admit me chorus to this list. Shakespeare.

3. The song between the acts of a tragedy.

4. Verses of a song in which the company join the singer.

CHOSE. The preter tense, and sometimes the participle passive, of choose.

Our sovereign here above the rest might stand,
And here be chose again to rule the land. Dryden.

CHO'SEN. The participle passive of choose.

If king Lewis vouchsafe to furnish us
With some few bands of chosen soldiers,
I'll undertake to land them on our coast. Shakspeare.

CHOUGH. n. f. [see, Sax. choucas, Fr.] A bird which frequents the rocks by the sea side, like a jackdaw, but bigger.

In birds, kites and kestrels have a resemblance with hawks, crows with ravens, daws and choughs. Bacon's Natural History.
To crows the like impartial grace affords,
And choughs and daws, and such republic birds. Dryden.

CHOULE. n. f. [commonly pronounced and written jowl.] The crop of a bird.

The choule or crop, adhering unto the lower side of the bill, and so descending by the throat, is a bag or sachel. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To CHOUSE. v. a. [The original of this word is much doubted by Skinner, who tries to deduce it from the French gasser, to laugh at; or joucher, to wheedle; and from the Teutonic koesen, to prattle. It is perhaps a fortuitous and cant word, without etymology.]

1. To cheat; to trick; to impose upon.
Freedom and zeal have chous'd you o'er and o'er;
Pray give us leave to bubble you once more. Dryden.

From London they came, silly people to chouse.
Their lands and their faces unknown. Swift.

2. It has of before the thing taken away by fraud.

When geese and pullen are seduc'd,
And sows of sucking pigs are chous'd. Hudibras.

CHOUSE. n. f. [from the verb. This word is derived by Henshaw from chiaus, or chiaus, a messenger of the Turkish court; who, says he, is little better than a fool.]

1. A bubble; a tool; a man fit to be cheated.

A sottish chouse,
Who, when a thief has robb'd his house,
Applies himself to cunning men. Hudibras.

2. A trick or sham.

To CHO'WTER. v. n. To grumble or mutter like a froward child. Phillips.

CHRISM. n. f. [χρισμ, an ointment.] Unguent, or unction: it is only applied to sacred ceremonies.

One act, never to be repeated, is not the thing that Christ's eternal priesthood, denoted especially by his unction or chrisim, relates to. Hamm.

CHRISOM. n. f. [See CHRISM.] A child that dies within a month after its birth. So called from the chrisom-cloth, a cloth anointed with holy unguent, which the children anciently wore till they were christened.

When the conversions were but few, the number of chrisoms and infants was greater.

Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

To CHRISTEN. v. a. [christen, Sax.]

1. To baptize; to initiate into christianity by water.

2. To name; to denominate.

Where such evils as their reign, christen the thing what you will, it can be no better than a mock millennium. Barnet.

CHRISTENDOM. n. f. [from Christ and dom.] The collective body of christianity; the regions of which the inhabitants profess the christian religion.

What hath been done, the parts of christendom most afflicted can best testify. Hooker.

An older and a better soldier, none
That christendom gives out. Shakspeare.

His computation is universally received ovy all christendom. Holder on Time.

CHRISTENING. n. f. [from christen.] The ceremony of the first initiation into christianity.

The queen was with great solemnity crowned at Westminster, about two years after the marriage; like an old christening that had staid long for godfathers. Bacon.

We shall insert the causes why the account of christenings hath been neglected more than that of burials. Graunt.

The day of the christening being come, the house was filled with gossip. Arbutnot and Pope.

CHRISTIAN. n. f. [christianus, Lat.] A professor of the religion of Christ.

We christians have certainly the best and the holiest, the wisest and most reasonable, religion in the world. Tillotson.

CHRISTIAN. adj. Professing the religion of Christ.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

CHRISTIAN-NAME. n. f. The name given at the font, distinct from the gentilitious name, or surname.

CHRISTIANISM. n. f. [christianismus, Lat.]

1. The christian religion.

2. The nations professing christianity.

CHRISTIANITY. n. f. [chrétienté, Fr.]

The religion of christians.
God doth will that couples, which are married, both infidels, if either party be converted into christianity, this should not make separation. Hooker.

Every one, who lives in the habitual practice of any voluntary sin, cuts himself off from christianity. Adams.

To CHRISTIANIZE. v. a. [from christian.] To make christian; to convert to christianity.

The principles of Platonick philosophy, as it is now christianized. Dryden.

CHRISTIANLY. adv. [from christian.] Like a christian; as becomes one who professes the holy religion of Christ.

CHRISTMAS. n. f. [from Christ and mas.] The day on which the nativity of our blessed Saviour is celebrated, by the particular service of the church.

CHRISTMAS-BOX. n. f. [from christmas and box.] A box in which little presents are collected at Christmas.

When time comes round, a christmas-box they bear,
And one day makes them rich for all the year.

Guy's Trivia.

CHRISTMAS-FLOWER. n. f. Hellebore.

CHRIST'S-THORN. n. f. [So called, as Skinner fancies, because the thorns have some likeness to a cross.] A plant.

It hath long sharp spines: the flower has five leaves, in form of a rose: out of the flower-cup, which is divided into several segments, rises the pointal, which becomes a fruit, shaped like a bonnet, having a shell almost globular, which is divided into three cells, in each of which is contained a roundish seed. This is by many persons supposed to be the plant from which our Saviour's crown of thorns was composed. Miller.

CHROMATICK. adj. [χρῶμα, colour.]

1. Relating to colour.

I am now come to the third part of painting, which is called the chromatick, or colouring.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. Relating to a certain species of ancient music, now unknown.

It was observed, he never touched his lyre in such a truly chromatick and enharmonic manner.

Abbutnet and Pope.

CHRONICAL. } adj. [from χρόνος, time.]

CHRONICK. } adj. [from χρόνος, time.]
A chronical distemper is of length: as dropsies, asthma, and the like. Quincy.

Of diseases some are chronical, and of long duration; as quartan agues, scurvy, wherein we defer the cure unto more advantageous seasons.

Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

The lady's use of these excellencies is to divert the old man when he is out of the pangs of a chronical distemper.

Spectator.

CHRONICLE. n. f. [chronique, French; from χρόνος, time.]

1. A register or account of events in order of time.

No more yet of this;
For 'tis a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast. Shakspeare.

3. A history.

You lean too confidently on those Irish chronicles, which are most fabulous and forged. Spenser.

If from the field I should return once more,
I and my sword will earn my chronicle. Shaksp.

I am traduc'd by tongues, which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing. Shakspeare.

I give up to historians the generals and heroes which crowd their annals, together with those which you are to produce for the British chronicle.

Dryden.

TO CHRONICLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To record in chronicle, or history.

This to rehearse, should rather be to chronicle times than to search into retormation of abuses in that realm. Spenser.

2. To register; to record.

For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Says that this deed is chronicled in hell. Shaksp.

Love is your master, for he masters you:
And he that is so yok'd by a fool,
Methinks, should not be chronicled for wife.

Shakspeare.

I shall be the jest of the town; nay, in two days, I expect to be chronicled in ditty, and sung in woeful ballad. Congreve.

CHRONICLER. n. f. [from chronicle.]

1. A writer of chronicles; a recorder of events in order of time.

Here gathering chroniclers, and by them stand
Giddy fantastick poets of each land. Donne.

2. A historian; one that keeps up the memory of things past.

I do herein rely upon these bards, or Irish chroniclers.

Spenser.

This custom was held by the Druids and bards of our ancient Britons, and of latter times by the Irish chroniclers, called timers. Raleigh.

CHRONOGRAM. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and γράμμα, to write.] An inscription including the date of any action.

Of this kind the following is an example:

Gloria lausque Deo sicut Gloria in secula sancto.
A chronogrammatical verse, which includes not only this year, 1660, but numerical letters enough to reach above a thousand years further, until the year 2867. Howel.

CHRONOGRAMMATICAL. adj. [from chronogram.] Belonging to a chronogram. See the last example.

CHRONOGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from chronogram.] A writer of chronograms.

There are foreign universities, where, as you praise a man in England for being an excellent philosopher or poet, it is an ordinary character to be a great chronogrammatist. Adelphon.

CHRONOLOGER. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λόγος, doctrine.] He that studies or explains the science of computing past time, or of ranging past events according to their proper years.

Chronologers differ among themselves about most great epochs. Holler on Time.

CHRONOLOGICAL. adj. [from chronology.] Relating to the doctrine of time.

Thus much touching the chronological account of some times and things past, without confining myself to the exactness of years. Hale.

CHRONOLOGICALLY. adv. [from chronological.] In a chronological manner; according to the laws or rules of chronology; according to the exact series of time.

CHRONOLOGIST. n. f. [See CHRONOLOGER.] One that studies or explains time; one that ranges past events according to the order of time; a chronologer.

According to these chronologists, the prophecy of the Rabin, that the world should last but six thousand years, has been long disproved. Brown.

All that learned noise and dust of the chronologist is wholly to be avoided. Locke on Educat.

CHRONOLOGY. n. f. [χρόνος, time, and λογία, doctrine.] The science of computing and adjusting the periods of time; as the revolution of the sun and moon; and of computing time past, and referring each event to the proper year.

And the measure of the year not being so perfectly known to the ancients, rendered it very difficult for them to transmit a true chronology to succeeding ages. Holler on Time.

Where I allude to the customs of the Greeks, I believe I may be justified by the strictest chronology; though a poet is not obliged to the rules that confine an historian. Prior.

CHRONOMETER. n. f. [χρόνος and μέτρον.] An instrument for the exact mensuration of time.

According to observation made with a pendulum chronometer, a bullet at its first discharge flies five hundred and ten yards in five half seconds. Derham.

Cibules, or scallions, are a kind of degenerate onions. Mortimer.

CICATRICE. } n. f. [cicatrix, Latin.]

CICATRIX. }
1. The scar remaining after a wound.
One captain Spurio, with his cicatrice, an emblem of war, here on his sinister cheek. Shak.
2. A mark; an impression: so used by Shakspere less properly.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable imprefure
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspere.

CICATRISANT. n. f. [from cicatrice.] An application that induces a cicatrice.

CICATRISIVE. adj. [from cicatrice.] Having the qualities proper to induce a cicatrice.

CICATRIZA'TION. n. f. [from cicatrice.]

1. The act of healing the wound.
A vein bursted, or corroded, in the lungs, is looked upon to be for the most part incurable, because of the motion and coughing of the lungs tearing the gap wider, and hindering the conglutination and cicatrization of the vein. Harvey.
2. The state of being healed, or skinned over.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation; and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp's Surgery.

To CICATRIZE. v. a. [from cicatrix.]

1. To apply such medicines to wounds, or ulcers, as heal and skin them over. Quincy.
2. To heal and induce the skin over a fore.

We incarned, and in a few days cicatrized it with a smooth cicatrix. Wifeman on Tumors.

CICELY. n. f. [myrrhis.] A sort of herb.

CICHORA'CEOUS. adj. [from cichorium, Lat.] Having the qualities of succory.
Diureticks evacuate the salt serum; as all acid diureticks, and the testaceous and bitter cichora-ceous plants. Feyer.

CICHOPEA. n. f. [cicer.] A plant.

To CICURATE. v. a. [cicuro, Latin.] To tame; to reclaim from wildness; to make tame and tractable.

Poisons may yet retain some portion of their natures; yet are so refracted, cicuated, and subdued, as not to make good their destructive malignities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CICURATION. n. f. [from cicurate.] The act of taming or reclaiming from wildness.

This holds not only in domestick and manufactured birds, for then it might be the effect of cicuration or institution; but in the wild. Ray.

CIDER. n. f. [cidre, Fr. silra, Ital. ficera, Lat. צידר, צידר.]

1. All kind of strong liquors, except wine. This sense is now wholly obsolete.
2. Liquor made of the juice of fruits pressed.

We had also drink, wholesome and good wine of the grape, a kind of cider made of a fruit of that country; a wonderful pleasing and refreshing drink. Bacon.

3. The juice of apples expressed and fermented. This is now the sense.

To the utmost bounds of this Wide universe Silurian cider born,
Shall please all tastes, and triumph o'er the vine. Philips.

CIDERIST. n. f. [from cider.] A maker of cider.

When the ciderists have taken care for the best fruit, and ordered them after the best manner

they could, yet hath their cider generally proved pale, sharp, and ill tasted. Mortimer.

CIDERKIN. n. f. [from cider.] The liquor made of the murk or gross matter of apples, after the cider is pressed out, and a convenient quantity of boiled water added to it; the whole infusing for about forty-eight hours. Phillips.

Ciderkin is made for common drinking, and supplies the place of small beer. Mortimer.

CEILING. n. f. See CEILING.

CIERGE. n. f. [French.] A candle carried in processions.

CILIARY. adj. [cilium, Lat.] Belonging to the eyelids.

The ciliary processes, or rather the ligaments, observed in the inside of the sclerotic tunicles of the eye, do serve instead of a muscle, by the contraction, to alter the figure of the eye. Ray.

CILICIOUS. adj. [from cilicium, hair-cloth, Lat.] Made of hair.

A garment of camel's hair, that is, made of some texture of that hair; a coarse garment, a cilicious or sackcloth habit, suitable to the austerity of his life. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CIMAR. See SIMAR.

CIME'LIARCH. n. f. [from κσιμηλιαρχος.] The chief keeper of plate, vestments, and things of value, belonging to a church; a church-warden. Ditt.

CIMETER. n. f. [cimitarra, Span. and Portug. from chimeter, Turkish. Bluteau's Portuguese Dictionary.] A sort of sword used by the Turks, short, heavy, and recurvated, or bent backward. This word is sometimes erroneously spelt scimitar, and scymiter; as in the following examples.

By this scimitar,
That slew the sophy and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of sultan Solymán. Shaksp.
Our amours now may rust, our idle scymiters
Hang by our sides for ornament, not use. Dryden.

CINCTURE. n. f. [cinctura, Lat.]

1. Something worn round the body.
Now happy he, whose cloak and cincture
Hold out this tempest Shakspere.
Columbus found th' American so gait
With feather'd cincture, naked else, and wild. Milton.
He binds the sacred cincture round his breast. Pope.

2. An enclosure.
The court and prison being within the cinctura of one wall. Bacon's Henry VII.

3. [In architecture.] A ring or list at the top and bottom of the shaft of a column; separating the shaft at one end from the base, at the other from the capital. It is supposed to be in imitation of the girths or ferrils anciently used to strengthen and preserve the primitive wood columns. Chambers.

CINDER. n. f. [cinde, French, from cineres, Lat.]

1. A mafs ignited and quenched, without being reduced to ashes.

I should make very forges of my cheeks,
That would to cinders burn up modesty,
Did but I speak thy deeds! Shakspere.
There is in smiths' cinders, by some adhesion of iron, sometimes to be found a magnetical operation. Brown.

So snow on Ætna does unmelted lie,
Whose rolling flames and scatter'd cinders fly. Waller.

2. A hot coal that has ceased to flame.

If from adown the hopeful chops
The fat upon a cinder drops,
To smoking smoke it turns the flame. Swift.
CINDER-WENCH. } n. f. [cinder and wench.]
CINDER-WOMAN. } mas.] A woman whose trade is to rake in heaps of ashes for cinders.

'Tis under so much nasty rubbish laid,
To find it out 's the cinder-woman's trade.

Essay on Satire.

She had above five hundred foits of fine cloaths, and yet went abroad like a cinder-wench. Arbuth.

In the black form of cinder-wench she came,
When love, the hour, the place, had banish'd thame. Gay.

CINERATION. n. f. [from cineres, Lat.] The reduction of any thing by fire to ashes. A term of chymistry.

CINERITIOUS. adj. [cinericus, Latin.]

The nerves arise from the glands of the cineritious part of the brain, and are terminated in all parts of the body. Chayne.

CINERULENT. adj. [from cineres, Lat.]
Full of ashes. Dict.

CINGLE. n. f. [from cingulum, Lat.] A girth for a horse. Dict.

CINNABAR. n. f. [cinnabaris, Lat.] Cinnabar is native or factitious: the facti-tious cinnabar is called vermilion.

Cinnabar is the ore out of which quicksilver is drawn, and consists partly of a mercurial, and partly of a sulphureo-ochreous matter.

Woodward's Met. Expts.

The particles of mercury uniting with the particles of sulphur compose cinnabar. Newton.

CINNABAR of Antimony, is made of mercury, sulphur, and crude antimony.

CINNAMON. n. f. [cinnamomum, Latin.]
The fragrant bark of a low tree in the island of Ceylon. Its leaves resemble those of the olive, both as to substance and colour. The fruit resembles an acorn or olive, and has neither the smell nor taste of the bark. When boiled in water, it yields an oil, which as it cools and hardens, becomes as firm and white as tallow; the smell of which is agreeable in candles. The cinnamon of the ancients was different from ours.

Chambers.

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum boast. Dryden.

CINNAMON Water is made by distilling
the bark, first infused in barley water, in spirit of wine or white wine.

Chambers.

CINQUE. n. f. [French.] A five. It is used in games alone; but is often compounded with other words.

CINQUE-FOIL. n. f. [cinque feuille, Fr.]
A kind of five-leaved clover.

CINQUE-PACE. n. f. [cinque pas, Fr.] A kind of grave dance.

Woolding, wedding, and repenting, is a Scotch jig, a measure, and a cinque-pace. The first suit is hot and hasty, like a Scotch jig, and full as fantastical; the wedding mannerly and modest, as a measure full of state and gravity; and then comes repentance, and, with his bad legs, falls into the cinque-pace faster and faster, till he sinks into his grave. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-PORTS. n. f. [cinque ports, Fr.]

Those havens that lie towards France, and therefore have been thought by our kings to be such as ought most vigilantly to be observed against invasion. In which respect, the places where they are have a special government or keeper, called by his office Lord Warden of the cinque-ports;

and divers privileges granted to them, as a particular jurisdiction; their warden having the authority of an admiral among them, and sending out writs in his own name. The cinque-ports are Dover, Sandwich, Rye, Hastings, Winchelsea, Rumney, and Hithe; some of which, as the number exceeds five, must either be added to the first institution by some later grant, or accounted as appendants to some of the rest. Cowell.

They, that bear

The cloth of state above her, are four barons of the cinque-ports. Shakspeare.

CINQUE-SPOTTED. adj. Having five spots.

On her left breast

A mole, cinque-spotted, like the crimson drops
P' th' bottom of a cowslip. Shakspeare.

C'ION. n. f. [sion, or seion, French.]

1. A sprout; a shoot from a plant.

We have reason to cool our raging motions, our carnal stings, our unbitted lusts; whereof I take this, that you call love, to be a sect or cion.
Shakspeare.

The stately Caledonian oak newly settled in his triumphant throne, begirt with cions of his own royal stem. Horvel.

2. The shoot engrafted or inserted on a stock.

The cion over-ruleth the stock; and the stock is but passive, and giveth aliment, but no motion, to the graft. Bacon.

CIPHER. n. f. [chifre, French; zifra, Italian; cifra, low Lat. from an oriental root.]

1. An arithmetical character, by which some number is noted; a figure.

2. An arithmetical mark, which, standing for nothing itself, increases the value of the other figures.

None were the very cipher of a function,
To find the faults, whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor. Shakspeare.

If the people be somewhat in the election, you cannot make them nulls or ciphers in the privation or translation. Bacon.

As, in accounts, ciphers and figures pass for real sums, so names pass for things. South.

3. An intertexture of letters engraved usually on boxes or plate.

Troy flam'd in burnish'd gold; and o'er the throne,
ARMS AND THE MAN in golden ciphers shone.
Pope.

Some mingling stir the melted tar, and some Deep on the new-born vagrant's heaving side
To stamp the master's cipher ready stand. Thomf.

4. A character in general.

In succeeding times this wisdom began to be written in ciphers and characters, and letters bearing the form of creatures. Raleigh.

5. A secret or occult manner of writing, or the key to it.

This book, as long liv'd as the elements,
In cipher writ, or new-made idioms. Donne.

He was pleas'd to command me to stay at London, to send and receive all his letters; and I was furnish'd with mine several ciphers, in order to it. Denham.

To CIPHER. v. n. [from the noun.] To practise arithmetick.

You have been bred to business; you can cipher; I wonder you never used your pen and ink. Arbuthnot.

To CIPHER. v. a. To write in occult characters.

He frequented sermons, and penned notes:
his notes he ciphered with Greek characters.
Hayward.

To CIRCINATE. v. a. [circino, Lat.] To make a circle; to compass round, or turn round. Bailey.

CIRCINATION. n. f. [circinatio, Lat.]

An orbicular motion; a turning round;
a measuring with the compasses. Bailey.

CIRCLE. n. f. [circulus, Latin.]

1. A line continued till it ends where it began, having all its parts equidistant from a common centre.

Any thing that moves round about in a circle,
in less time than our ideas are wont to succeed one another in our minds, is not perceived to move; but seems to be a perfect intire circle of that matter, or colour, and not a part of a circle
in motion. Locke.

By a circle I understand not here perfect geometrical circle, but an orbicular figure, whose length is equal to its breadth; and which, as to sense, may seem circular. Newton's Opticks.

Then a deeper still,

In circle following circle, gathers round
To close the face of things. Thomson's Summer.

2. The space included in a circular line.

3. A round body; an orb.

It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth.
Isiah.

4. Compass; enclosure.

A great magician,
Obscured in the circle of the forest. Shakspeare.

5. An assembly surrounding the principal person.

To have a box where eunuchs sing,
And, foremost in the circle, eye a king. Pope.

6. A company; an assembly.

I will call over to him the whole circle of beauties that are disposed among the boxes.

Ever since that time, Lisander visits in every circle. Taylor.

7. Any series ending as it begins, and perpetually repeated.

There be fruit trees in hot countries, which have blossoms and young fruit, and young fruit and ripe fruit, almost all the year, succeeding one another; but this circle of ripening cannot be but in succulent plants, and hot countries. Bacon.

Thus in a circle runs the peasant's pain,
And the year rolls within itself again. Dryden.

8. An inconclusive form of argument, in which the foregoing proposition is proved by the following, and the following proposition inferred from the foregoing.

That heavy bodies descend by gravity; and again, that gravity is a quality whereby an heavy body descends, is an impertinent circle, and teacheth nothing. Glansville's Sceptis.

That fallacy called a circle, is when one of the premises in a syllogism is questioned and opposed,
and we intend to prove it by the conclusion.
Watts' Logic.

9. Circumlocution; indirect form of words.

Has he given the lyc
In circle or oblique, or semicircle,
Or direct parallel? You must challenge him.

Fletcher's Q. of Cor.

10. CIRCLES of the German empire. Such provinces and principalities as have a right to be present at diets. They are in number ten. Trevoux.

To CIRCLE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To move round any thing.

The lords, that were appointed to circle the hill, had some days before planted themselves in places convenient. Bacon.

Another Cynthia her new journey runs,
And other planets circle other suns. Pope.

2. To enclose; to surround.

What stern ungentle hands
Have lopp'd and hew'd, and made thy body bare
Of her two branches, those sweet ornaments, Whose circling shadows kings have fought to sleep in? Shakspeare.

While these fond arms, thus circling you, may prove
More heavy chains than those of hopeless love.

Prior.

Unseen, he glided thro' the joyous crowd,
With darknefs circled and an ambient cloud. Pope.
3. To CIRCLE in. To confine; to keep together.

We term those things dry which have a consistence within themselves, and which, to enjoy a determinate figure, do not require the stop or hindrance of another body to limit and circle them in. Digby on Bodies.

To CIRCLE. v. n. To move circularly;
to end where it begins.

The well thought bowl
Circles incessant; whilst the humble cell
With quavering laugh and rural jeits resounds,
Philips.

Now the circling years disclose
The day predictin'd to reward his woes. Pope.

CIRCLED. adj. [from circle.] Having the form of a circle; round.

Th' incantant moon,

CIRCLET. n. f. [from circle.] A circle;
an orb; properly a little circle.

Then take repast, till Hesperus display'd
His golden circle in the western shade. Pope.

CIRCLING. particip. adj. [from To circle.]
Having the form of a circle; circular;
round.

Round he surveys, and well might, where he stood

So high above the circling canopy
Of night's extended shade. Milton's Par. Lost.

CIRCUIT. n. f. [circuit, Fr. circuitus, Latin.]

1. The act of moving round any thing.
There are four moons also perpetually toiling round the planet Jupiter, and carried along with him in his periodical circuit round the sun.
Watts on the Mind.

2. The space enclosed in a circle.

He led me up
A woody mountain, whose high top was plain,
A circuit wide inclos'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

3. Space, or extent, measured by travelling round.

He attributeth unto it smallness, in respect of circuit. Hooker.

The lake of Bolsena is reckoned one-and-twenty miles in circuit. Addison on Italy.

4. A ring; a diadem; that by which any thing is incircled.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage,
Until the golden circuit on my head

5. The visitations of the judges for holding assizes.

The circuits, in former times, went but round about the pole; as the circuit of the cynosura about the pole. Davies.

6. The tract of country visited by the judges.

7. Long deduction of reason.

Up into the watch tower get,
And see all things despoil'd of fillacies;
Thou shalt not peep thro' lattices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' labyrinth of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collections to discern. Donne.

CIRCUIT of action. [In law.] Is a longer course of proceeding to recover the thing sued for than is needful. Corwell.

To CIRCUIT. v. n. [from the noun.] To move circularly.

Pining with equinoctial heat, unless
The cordial cup perpetual motion keep,
Quick circuiting Philips.

CIRCUITER. n. f. [from circuit.] One that travels a circuit.

Like your fellow circuiteer, the sun, you travel the round of the earth, and behold all the in-iquities under the heavens. Pope.

CIRCUITION. n. f. [circutio, Lat.]

1. The act of going round any thing.

2. Compass; maze of argument.
To apprehend by what degrees they lean to things in show, though not in deed, repugnant one to another, requireth more sharpness of wit, more intricate circutions of discourse, and depth of judgment, than common ability doth yield.
Hooker.

CIRCULAR. adj. [circularis, Latin]

1. Round, like a circle; circumscribed by a circle.

The frame thereof seem'd partly circular,
And part triangular. Fairy Queen.
He first inclos'd for lifts a level ground;
The form was circular. Dryden's Fables.

2. Successive in order; always returning.
From whence th' innumerable race of things
By circular successive order springs. Reformation.

3. Vulgar; mean; circumforaneous.

Had Virgil been a circular poet, and closely adhered to history, how could the Romans have had D do? Dennis.

4. Ending in itself: used of a paralogism, where the second proposition at once proves the first, and is proved by it.

One of Cartes's first principles of reasoning, after he had doubted of every thing, seems to be to circular to safely build upon; for he is for proving the being of God from the truth of our faculties, and the truth of our faculties from the being of a God. Baker's Reflect. on Learning.

5. CIRCULAR Letter. A letter directed to several persons, who have the same interest in some common affair; as in the convocation of assemblies.

6. CIRCULAR Lines. Such straight lines as are divided from the divisions made in the arch of a circle; as the lines of sines, tangents, and secants, on the plain scale and sector.

7. CIRCULAR Sailing, is that performed on the arch of a great circle.

CIRCULARITY. n. f. [from circular.] A circular form.

The heavens have no diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts, and equiformity in motion, continually succeeding each other;
so that, from what point soever we compute,
the account will be common unto the whole circularity. Brown.

CIRCULARLY. adv. [from circular.]

1. In form of a circle.

The internal form of it consists of several regions, involving one another like orbs about the same centre; or of the several elements call circu-larly about each other. Burnet.

2. With a circular motion.

Trade, which, like blood, should circularly flow,
Stopp'd in their channels, found its freedom lost.
Dryden.

Every body, mov'd circularly about any centre, recedes, or endeavours to recede, from that centre of its motion. Ray.

To CIRCULATE. v. n. [from circulus.]

1. To move in a circle; to run round; to return to the place whence it departed in a constant course.

If our lives motions theirs must imitate,
Our knowledge like our blood must circulate.
Denham.

Nature is a perpetual motion; and the work of the universe circulates without any interval or repose. L'Esrange.

2. To be dispersed.

As the mints of calumny are perpetually at work, a great number of curious inventions, iffused out from time to time, glow current among the party, and circulate through the whole kingdom. Addison.

To CIRCULATE. v. a. To put about.

In the civil wars, the money spent on both sides was circulated at home; no publick debts contracted. Swift.

CIRCULATION. n. f. [from circulate.]

1. Motion in a circle; a course in which the motion tends to the point from which it began.

What more obvious, one would think, than the circulation of the blood, unknown till the last age? Burnet's Theory.

As much blood passeth through the lungs as through all the rest of the body: the circulation is quicker, and heat greater, and their texture extremely delicate. Zibuchot on Aliaments.

2. A series in which the same order is always observed, and things always return to the same state.

As for the sins of peace, thou hast brought upon us the miseries of war; so for the sins of war, thou seemst fit to deny us the blessing of peace, and to keep us in a circulation of miseries.
King Charles.

God, by the ordinary rule of nature, permits
this continual circulation of human things. Swift.

3. A reciprocal interchange of meaning.

When the apostle faith of the Jews, that they crucified the Lord of glory; and when the Son of man, being on earth, affirmeth that the Son of man was in heaven at the same instant, there is in these two speeches that mutual circulation
before mentioned. Hooker.

CIRCULATORY. n. f. [from circulate.] A chymical vessel, in which that which rises from the vessel on the fire is collected and cooled in another fixed upon it, and falls down again.

CIRCULATORY. adj. [from circulate.] Circulatory Letters are the same with CIRCULAR Letters.

CIRCUMAMBIENCY. n. f. [from circumambient.] The act of encompassing.

Ice receiveth its figure according unto the surface it cometh, or the circumambency which conformeth it. Brown.

CIRCUMAMBIENT. adj. [circum and ambio, Latin.] Surrounding; encompassing; enclosing.

The circumambient coldness towards the sides of the vessel, like the second region, cooling and condensing of it. Wilkins.

To CIRCUMAMBULATE. v. n. [from cir-cum and ambulo, Latin.] To walk round about. Diä.

To CIRCUMCISE. v. a. [circumcido, Latin.] To cut the prepuce or fore-skin, according to the law given to the Jews.

They came to circumcise the child.
One is alarmed at the industry of the whigs, in aiming to strengthen their routed party by a reinforcement from the circumcised. Swift.

CIRCUMCISION. n. f. [from circumcise.] The rite or act of cutting off the foreskin.

They left a race behind
Like to themselves, distinguishable scarce
From gentiles, but by circumcised vain. Milton.

To CIRCUMDUCT. v. a. [circumduco, Lat.] To contravene; to nullify: a term of civil law.

Acts of judicature may be cancelled and cir-cumducted by the will and direction of the judge; as also by the consent of the parties litigant, before the judge has pronounced and given sentence. Bayly's Parergon.

CIRCUMDUCTION. n. f. [from circumduct.]

1. Nullification; cancellation.

The citation may be circumducted, though the defendant should not appear; and the defendant must be cited, as a circumduction requires.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

2. A leading about.

By long circumduction perhaps any truth may be derived from any other truth.

Hooker.

CIRCUMFERENCE. n. f. [circumferentia, Latin.]

1. The periphery; the line including and surrounding any thing.

Extend thus far thy bounds,

This be thy jut circumference, O world! Milton.

Because the hero is the centre of the main action, all the lines from the circumference tend to him alone. Dryden.

Fire, moved nimbly in the circumference of a circle, makes the whole circumference appear like a circle of fire. Newton.

2. The space enclosed in a circle.

So was his will

Pronounc'd among the gods, and by an oath,
That shook heav'n's whole circumference, combin'd. Milton.

He first inclos'd for Ithaca a level ground,
The whole circumference a mile around. Dryden.

3. The external part of an orbicular body.

The bubble, being looked on by the light of the clouds reflected from it, seem'd red at its apparent circumference. If the clouds were view'd through it, the colour at its circumference would chbue. Newton's Opticks.

4. An orb; a circle; any thing circular or orbicular.

His pond'rous shield, large and round,
Behind him call; the broad circumference
Hung on his shoulders like the moon. Milton.

To CIRCUMFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To include in a circular space. Not proper.

strings. Chambers.

CLARIFICATION. n. f. [from clarify.]

The act of making any thing clear from impurities.

Liquors are, many of them, at the first, thick and troubled; as muste; and wot: to know the means of accelerating clarification, we must know the causes of clarification. Bacon.

To CLARIFY. v. a. [clarifier, French.]

1. To purify or clear any liquor; to separate from feculencies or impurities.

The apothecaries clarify their syrups by whites of eggs, beaten with the juices which they would clarify; which whites of eggs gather all the dregs and grosser parts of the juice to them; and after, the syrup being fet on the fire, the whites of eggs themselves harden, and are taken forth. Bacon.

2. To brighten; to illuminate. This sense is rare.

The will was then ductile and pliant to all the motions of right reason: it met the dictates of a clarified understanding half way. South.

The christian religion is the only means that God has sanctified, to set fallen man upon his legs again, to clarify his reason, and to rectify his will. South.

To CLARIFY. v. n. To clear up; to grow bright.

Whoever hath his mind fraught with many thoughts, his wits and understanding do clarify and break up in the discoursing with another;
he marshalleth his thoughts more orderly, he seeth how they look when they are turned into words. Bacon's Essays.

CLARION. n. f. [clarin, Spanish; from clarus, loud, Lat.] A trumpet; a wind

but the angels of light in all their clarity. Brown.

CLARY. n. f. [herminium, Lat.] An herb.

Plants that have circled leaves do all abound with moisture. The weakest kind of cutting is roughness; as in clary and burr. Bacon.

To CLASH. v. n. [klatsen, Dutch, to make a noise.]

1. To make a noise by mutual collision; to strike one against another.

Three times, as of the clashing sound
Of arms, we heard. Denham.

Those few that should happen to clash, might rebound after the collision. Bentley.

How many candles may send out their light, without clashing upon one another! which argues the smallness of the parts of light, and the largeness of the interstices between particles of air and other bodies. Chyene.

2. To act with opposite power, or contrary direction.

Neither was their any queen-mother who might clash with his counsellors for authority. Bacon.

Those that are not convinced what help this is to magistracy, would find it, if they should chance to clash. South.

3. To contradict; to oppose.

Wherever there are men, there will be clashing
some time or other; and a knock, or a contell, spoils all. L'Estrange.

The absurdity in this instance is obvious; and yet every time that clashing metaphors are put together, this fault is committed. Spectator.

To CLASH. v. a. To strike one thing against another, so as to produce a noise.

The nodding statue clash'd his arms,
And with a fullen sound, and feeble cry,
Half sunk, and half pronounc'd the word of victory. Dryden.

CLASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

CLEMENCY. n. s. [clemence, Fr. clementia, Latin.]
 1. Mercy; remission of severity; willingness to spare; tenderness in punishing.
 I have stated the true notion of clemency, mercy, compassion, good-nature, humanity, or whatever else it may be called, so far as is consistent with wisdom. Addison.

2. Mildness; softness.
 Then in the clemency of upward air
 We'll scour our spots, and the dire thunder fear. Dryden.

CLEMENT. adj. [clemens, Lat.] Mild; gentle; merciful; kind; tender; compassionate.
 You are more clement than vile men.
 Who of their broken debtors take a third,
 Letting them thrive again on the abatement. Shakf.

CLENCH. See CLINCH.
TO CLEPE. v. a. [clēpian, Sax.] To call. Obsolete.
 Three crabbed months had sow'd themselves to death,
 Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
 And clepe thyself my love. Shakespeare.

CLERGY. n. s. [clergē, Fr. clerus, Lat. κληρική.] The body of men set apart by due ordination for the service of God.
 We hold that God's clergy are a state which hath been, and will be as long as there is a church upon earth, necessary, by the plain word of God himself; a state whereunto the rest of God's people must be subjected, as touching things that appertain to their soul's health. Hooker.

The convocation give a greater sum
 Than ever, at one time, the clergy yet
 Did to his predecessors part withal. Shakf.

CLERGYMAN. n. s. [clergy and man.] A man in holy orders; a man set apart for ministration of holy things; not a laick.

How I have sped among the clergy men.
 The fums I have collected shall express. Shakf.
 It seems to be in the power of a reasonable clergyman to make the most ignorant man comprehend his duty. Swift.

CLERICAL. adj. [clericus, Lat.] Relating to the clergy: as, a clerical man, a man in orders.
 In clericals the keys are lined, and in colleges they use to line the table-men. Bacon.
 Unless we may more properly read clarichords.

CLERK. n. s. [cleric, Sax. clericus, Latin.]
 1. A clergyman.
 All persons were stiled clerks, that served in the church of Christ, whether they were bishops, priests, or deacons. Abpffe.
 2. A scholar; a man of letters.
 They might talk of book-learning what they would; but, for his part, he never saw more uneasy fellows than great clerks were. Sidney.
 The greatest clerks being not always the honestest, any more than the wisest, men. Swain.

3. A man employed under another as a writer.
 My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
 Unto the judge; and then the boy, his clerk,
 That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine. Shakespeare.

My friend was in doubt whether he could not exert the justice upon such a vagrant; but not having his clerk with him, who is a necessary counsellor, he let the thought drop. Addison.

4. A petty writer in publick offices; an officer of various kinds.
 Take a just view, how many may remain
 Who's now a lord, his grandfire was a clerk. Grainville.

It may seem difficult to make out the bills of fare for the suppers of Vitellius. I question not but an expert clerk of a kitchen can do it. Arbut.

5. The layman who reads the responses to the congregation in the church, to direct the rest.
CLERKSHIP. n. s. [from clerk.]
 1. Scholarship.

CLIF. } of a place, denotes it to be situated on the side of a rock or hill: as, Cleveland, Clifton, Stancliff.
CLIVE. }

CLEVER. adj. [of no certain etymology.]
 1. Dexterous; skilful.
 It was the clever's mockery of the two. L'Fhange.
 I read Dyer's letter more for the stile than the news. The man has a clever pen, it must be owned. Addison's Frecholar.

2. Just; fit; proper; commodious.
 I an't but think 'twould sound more clever,
 To me, and to my heirs for ever. Pope.

3. Well-shaped; handsome.
 She called him gundy-guts, and he called her lousy Peg, though the girl was a tight clever wench as any was. Arbutnot.

4. This is a low word, scarcely ever used but in burlesque or conversation; and applied to any thing a man likes, without a settled meaning.
CLEVERLY. adv. [from clever.] Dexterously; fitly; handsomely.
 These would inveigle rats with th' scent,
 And sometimes catch them with a snare,
 As cleverly as th' ablest trap. Hudibras.

A rogue upon the highway may have as strong an arm, and take off a man's head as cleverly, as the executioner. South.

CLEVERNESS. n. f. [from clever.] Dexterity; skill; accomplishment.

CLEW. n. f. [clýpe, Sax. klouwen, Dut.]

1. Thread wound upon a bottom; a ball of thread.
Eitfoons untwisting his deceitful clew,
He 'gan to weave a web of wicked guile. Spenser.
While, guided by some clew of heav'nly thread,
The perplex'd labyrinth we backward tread. Roscommon.
They see small clews draw vastest weights along,
Not in their bulk, but in their order, strong. Dryd.
2. A guide; a direction: because men direct themselves by a clew of thread in a labyrinth.
This alphabet must be your own clew to guide you. Haller.
Is there no way, no thought, no beam of light?
No clew to guide me through this gloomy maze,
To clear my honour yet preserve my faith? Smith.
The reader knows not how to transport his thoughts over to the next particular, for want of some clew, or connecting idea, to lay hold of. Watts's Logic.
3. Clew of the sail of a ship, is the lower corner of it, which reaches down to that caring where the tackles and sheets are fastened. Harris.

To CLEW. v. a. [from clew, a sea term.]
To clew the sails, is to raise them, in order to be furled; which is done by a rope fastened to the clew of a sail, called the clew-garnet. Harris.

To CLICK. v. n. [cliken, Dutch; cliqueler, French; or perhaps the diminutive of clack.] To make a sharp, small, successive noise.
The solemn death-watch click'd, the hour the died;
And shrilling crickets in the chimney cried. Gay.

CLICKER. n. f. [from click.] A low word for the servant of a salesman, who stands at the door to invite customers.

CLICKET. n. f. [from click.] The knocker of a door. Skinner.

CLIENT. n. f. [cliens, Latin.]

1. One who applies to an advocate for counsel and defence.
There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation, where causes are well handled; for that upholds in the client the reputation of his counsel. Bacon's Essays.
Advocates must deal plainly with their clients, and tell the true state of their case. Taylor.
2. It may be perhaps sometimes used for a dependant in a more general sense, as it was used among the Romans.
I do think they are your friends and clients,
And fearful to disturb you. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTED. particip. adj. [from client.]
Supplied with clients.
This due occasion of discouragement, the worst conditioned and least cliented petivoguers do yet, under the sweet bait of revenge, convert to a more plentiful prosecution of actions. Carew.

CLIENTELE. n. f. [clientela, Lat.] The condition or office of a client. A word scarcely used.
There's Varus holds good quarters with him;
And, under the pretext of clientele,
Will be admitted. Ben Jonson.

CLIENTSHIP. n. f. [from client.] The condition of a client.
Patronage and clientship among the Romans always descended: the plebeian houses had recourse to the patrician line which had formerly protected them. Dryden.

CLIFF. n. f. [clivus, Lat. clif, chop, Sax.]

1. A steep rock; a rock, according to Skinner, broken and craggy. [rupes.]
The Leucadians did use to precipitate a man from a high cliff into the sea. Bacon.
Mountaineers, that from Severus came,
And from the craggy cliffs of Tetrica. Dryden.
Wherever 'tis to found scattered upon the shores, there is it as constantly found lodged in the cliffs thereabouts. Woodward.
2. A character in music. Properly CLEF.

High growing on the top of rocky cliff. Spenser.

CLIMACTER. n. f. [κλιμακτηριον.] A certain space of time, or progression of years, which is supposed to end in a critical and dangerous time.
Elder times, settling their conceits upon climacters, differ from one another. Brown.

CLIMACTERICK. } adj. [from climacter.]
CLIMACTERICAL. } Containing a certain number of years, at the end of which some great change is supposed to befall the body.
Certain observable years are supposed to be attended with some considerable change in the body; as the seventh year; the twenty-first, made up of three times seven; the forty-ninth, made up of seven times seven; and the sixty-third, being nine times seven; and the eighty-first, which is nine times nine: which two last are called the grand climactericks.
The numbers seven and nine, multiplied into themselves, do make up sixty-three, commonly esteemed the great climacterical of our lives. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
Your lordship being now arrived at your great climacterique, yet give no proof of the least decay of your excellent judgment and comprehension. Dryden.

My mother is something better, though, at her advanced age, every day is a climacterick. Pope.

CLIMATE. n. f. [κλιμα.]

1. A space upon the surface of the earth, measured from the equator to the polar circles; in each of which spaces the longest day is half an hour longer than in that nearer to the equator. From the polar circles to the poles, climates are measured by the increase of a month.
2. In the common and popular sense, a region, or tract of land, differing from another by the temperature of the air.
Betwixt th' extremes, two happier climates hold
The temper that partakes of hot and cold. Dryd.
On what new happy climate are we thrown? Dryd.
This talent of moving the passions cannot be of any great use in the northern climates. Swift.

To CLIMATE. v. n. To inhabit. A word only in Shakspeare.
The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakspeare.

CLIMATURE. n. f. The same with CLIMATE. Not in use.
Such harbingers preceding still the fates,
Have heav'n and earth together demonstrated Unto our climatures and countymen. Shakf.

CLIMAX. n. f. [κλιμαξ.] Gradation; ascent: a figure in rhetoric, by which the sentence rises gradually: as Cicero says to Catiline, Thou dost nothing, movest nothing, thinkest nothing; but I hear it, I see it, and perfectly understand it.

Choice between one climb and another is difficult; and yet the conclusion, by a climb, is evermore the best. Dryden's Jur. Dedicat.
Some radiant Richmond every age has grac'd,
Still rising in a climb, till the last,
Surpassing all, is not to be forst. Granville.

To CLIMB. v. n. pret. clomb or climbed; part. clomb or climbed. It is pronounced like clime. [climan, Sax. klimnen, Dutch.] To ascend up any place; to mount by means of some hold or footing. It implies labour and difficulty, and successive efforts.
You tempt the fury of my three attendants,
Lean laming, quattering feet, and climbi me. Shakspeare.
When shall I come to th' top of that climb hill?—
—You do climb up it now. Look, how we labour. Shakspeare.
Jonathan climbed up upon his hands and upon his feet. I Sam.
As a thief
Into the window climbs, or o'er the tiles.
So clomb the first grand thief into God's fold. Milton.
Thou son! of this great world both eye and soul,
Acknowledge him thy greater; found his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton's Par. Lost.
No rebel Titan's sacrilegious crime,
By heaping hills on hills, can thicken climb. Roscommon.
Black vapours climb aloft, and cloud the day. Dryden.
What controuling cause
Makes waters, in contempt of nature's laws,
Climb up, and gain th' aspiring mountain's height? Blackmore.

To CLIMB. v. a. To ascend; to mount.
Is't not enough to break into my garden,
Climbing my walls in spite of me the owner? Shakspeare.
Thy arms pursue
Paths of renown, and climb ascents of fame. Prior.
Forlorn he must and persecuted fly;
Climb the steep mountain, in the cavern lie. Prior.

CLIMBER. n. f. [from climb.]

1. One that mounts or scales any place or thing; a mounter; a riser.
I wait not at the lawyer's gates,
Ne shoulder climbers down the stairs. Carew.
Lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Where to the climber upward turns his face. Shakspeare.
2. A plant that creeps upon and other supports.
Ivy, briony, honey-suckles, and other climbers must be dur up. Montaigne.
3. The name of a particular herb.
The feeds are gathered into a little head, ending in a kind of rough plume; whence it is called by the country people old man's beard. Milton.

To CLIMBER. v. n. [from clamber.] To mount with effort; to climb.
In leading the youngest to prick off his neck,
Beware how ye climber for breaking your neck. Taylor.

CLIME. n. f. [contracted from climate, and therefore properly poetical.] Climate; region; tract of earth.
He can spread thy name o'er land and seas,
Whatever clime the sun's bright circle warms. Milton.
They apply the celestial description of other climes unto their own. Brown's Vulg. Errors.
Of beauty sing, her shining progress view,
From clime to clime the dazzling light pursue. Granville.
We shall meet
In happier climes, and on a fairer shore. Adelgen.

Health to vigorous bodies, or fruitful seasons in temperate climes, are common and familiar blessings. Atterbury.

To CLINCH. v. a. [clýnça, Saxon, to knock, Junius; clingo, in Festus, to encompass, Minsbêw.]

1. To hold in the hand with the fingers bent over it.

Sinois rowls the bodies and the shields
Of heroes, whose dismember'd hands yet bear
The dart aloft, and clinch the pointed spear. Dryden.

2. To contract or double the fingers.

Their tallest trees are about seven feet high, the tops whereof I could but just reach with my fist clinched. Swift.

3. To bend the point of a nail on the other side.

4. To confirm; to fix: as, to clinch an argument.

CLINCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A word used in a double meaning; a pun; an ambiguity; a duplicity of meaning, with an identity of expression. How it obtains this meaning is difficult to find. A nail caught on the other side, and doubled, is a nail clinched: a word taken in a different meaning, and doubled in sense, is likewise a clinch.

Such as they are, I hope they will prove, without a clinch, luciferous; searching after the nature of light. Boyle.

Pure clinches the suburban muse affords,
And Panton waging harmless war with words. Dryden.

Here one poor word a hundred clinches makes. Pope.

2. That part of the cable which is fastened to the ring of the anchor.

CLINCHER. n. f. [from clinch.] A cramp; a holdfast; a piece of iron bent down to fasten planks.

The wimbles for the work Calypso found;
With those he pierc'd 'em, and with clinchers bound. Pope.

To CLING. v. n. pret. I clung; part. I have clung. [klynger, Danish.]

1. To hang upon by twining round; to stick to; to hold fast upon.

The broil long doubtful stood;
As two spent swimmers that do cling together,
And choke their art. Shakspeare.

The fontanel in his neck was deserv'd by the clinging of his hair to the plaster. Wifeman.

When they united and together clung,
When undistinguish'd in one heap they hung. Blackmore.

See in the circle next Eliza plac'd,
Two babes of love close clinging to her waist. Pope.

That they may the closer cling,
Take your blue ribbon for a string. Swift.

2. To adhere, as followers or friends.

Most popular consul he is grown, methinks!
How the rout cling to him! Ben Jonson.

3. To dry up; to consume; to waste; to pine away. [αεclunçen τρεορ, a withered tree.]

If thou speak'st false,
Upon the next tree shalt thou hang alive,
Till famine cling thee. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

CLINGY. adj. [from cling.] Apt to cling; adhesive.

CLINICAL. } adj. [κλίνω, to lie down.]

CLINICK. } Those that keep their beds; those that are sick, past hopes of recovery. A clinical lecture is a discourse upon a disease, made by the bed of the patient.

A clinical convert, one that is converted on his deathbed. This word occurs often in the works of Taylor.

To CLINK. v. a. [perhaps softened from clank, or corrupted from click.] To strike so as to make a small sharp noise.

Five years! a long lease for the clinking of pewter. Shakspeare.

To CLINK. v. n. To utter a small, sharp, interrupted noise.

The fever'd bars
Submissive clink against your brazen portals. Prior.

Underneath th' umbrella's oily shed,
Safe thro' the wet on clinking pattens tread. Gay.

CLINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A sharp successive noise; a knocking. I heard the clink and fall of swords. Shakspeare.

2. It seems in Spenser to have some unusual sense. I believe the knocker of a door. Tho' creeping close, behind the wicket's clink, Privily he peeped out thro' a chink. Spenser.

CLINQUANT. adj. [French.] Dressed in embroidery, in spangles, false glitter, tinsel finery.

To-day the French,
All clinquants, all in gold, like heathen gods, Shone down the English. Shakspeare.

To CLIP. v. a. [chppan, Saxon.]

1. To embrace, by throwing the arms round; to hug; to enfold in the arms. He that before stunn'd her, to shun such harms, Now runs and takes her in his clipping arms. Sid.

Here I clip
The anvil of my sword, and do contest
Hotly and nollly with thy love. Shakspeare.

O nation, that thou couldst remove
That Neptune's arms, who clippest thee about. Shakspeare.

Enter the city; clip your wives, your friends;
Tell them your fears. Shakspeare.

The jades
That drag the tragick melancholy night,
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging wings,
Clip dead men's graves. Shakspeare.

The male resteth on the back of the female, clipping and embracing her with his legs about the neck and body. Ray.

2. To cut with sheers. [klipper, Danish; klippen, Dutch; apparently from the same radical sense, since sheers cut by enclosing and embracing.]

Your sheers come too late to clip the bird's wings, that already is flown away. Sidney.

Then let him, that my love shall blame,
Or clip love's wings, or quench love's flame. Suckling.

He clips hope's wings, whose airy blifs
Much higher than fruition is. Denham.

But love had clipp'd his wings, and cut him short,
Confin'd within the purlieus of his court. Dryd.

If mankind had had wings, as perhaps some extravagant atheists may think us deficient in that, all the world must have consented to clip them. Bentley.

By this lock, this sacred lock, I swear,
Which never more shall join its parted hair,
Clipp'd from the lovely head where late it grew. Pope.

He spent every day ten hours dozing, clipping papers, or darning his stockings. Swift.

3. Sometimes with off.

We should then have as much feeling upon the clipping off a hair, as the cutting of a nerve. Bentley's Sermons.

4. It is particularly used of those who diminish coin, by paring the edges.

This design of new coinage, is just of the nature of clipping. Locke.

5. To curtail; to cut short.

All my reports go with the modest truth;
Nor more, nor clip, but so. Shakspeare.

Mrs. Mayorels clipped the king's English. Addison.

Even in London they clip their words after one manner about the court, another in the city, and a third in the suburbs. Swift.

6. To confine; to hold; to contain. Where is he living, clipped in with the sea,
Who calls me pupil? Shakspeare.

To CLIP. v. n. A phrase in falconry.

Some falcon stoops at what her eye design'd,
And with her eagerness the quarry miss'd,
Straight flies at check, and clips it down the wind. Dryden.

CLIPPER. n. f. [from clip.] One that debases coin by cutting.

It is no English treason to cut French crowns, and to-morrow the king himself will be a clipper. Shakspeare.

No coins pleased some medallists more than those which had passed through the hands of an old Roman clipper. Addison.

CLIPPING. n. f. [from clip.] The part cut or clipped off.

Beings purely material, without sense or thought, as the clippings of our beards, and parings of our nails. Locke.

CLIVER. n. f. An herb. More properly written cleaver.

It grows wild, the seeds sticking to the clothes of such as pass by them. It is sometimes used in medicine. Miller.

CLOAK. n. f. [lach, Saxon.]

1. The outer garment, with which the rest are covered.

You may hear it
Under a cloke that is of any length. Shakspeare.

Their cokes were cloth of silver, mix'd with gold. Dryden.

All arguments will be as little able to prevail, as the wind did with the traveller to part with his cloak, which he held only the faster. Locke.

Nimble he rose, and cast his garment down;
That instant in his cloak I wrapt me round. Pope.

2. A concealment; a cover. Not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness. Peter.

To CLOAK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with a cloak.

2. To hide; to conceal. Most heavenly fair, in deed and view,
She by creation was, till she did fall;
Thenceforth the sought for helps to cloak her comes withal. Spenser.

CLOAKBAG. n. f. [from cloak and bag.] A portmanteau; a bag in which clothes are carried.

Why dost thou converse with that trunk of humours, that stuffed cloakbag of guts? Shakspeare.

I have already hit
(Tis in my cloakbag) doublet, hat, hose, all
That answer to them. Shakspeare.

CLOCK. n. f. [clocck, Welsh, from clóck, a bell, Welsh and Armorick; cloche, French.]

1. The instrument which, by a series of mechanical movements, tells the hour by a stroke upon a bell.

If a man be in sickness or pain, the time will seem longer without a clock or hour-glass than with it. Bacon.

The picture of Jerome usually described at his study, is with a clock hanging by. Brown.

I told the clocks, and watch'd the washing light. Dryden.

2. It is an usual expression to say, What is it of the clock, for What hour is it? Or ten o'clock, for the tenth hour.

What is 't' o'clock?—

Upon the stroke of four. Shakspeare.
Maucicus set forward about ten o'clock in the night. Kneller.

About nine of the clock at night the king marched out of the North-port. Clarendon.

His stockings with silver clocks were ravished from him. Swift.

4. An insect; a sort of beetle. Diél.

CLOCKMAKER. n. f. [clock and maker.] An artificer whose profession is to make clocks.

This inequality has been diligently observed by several of our ingenious clockmakers, and equations been made and used by them. Derham.

CLOCKWORK. n. f. [from clock and work.]

Movements by weights or springs, like those of a clock.

So if unprejudic'd you fear

The goings of this clockwork, man;

You find a hundred movements made

By fine devices in his head:

But 'tis the stomach's solid stroke,

That tells this being what's o'clock. Prior.

Within this hollow was Vulcan's shop, full of fire and clockwork. Addison.

You look like a puppet moved by clockwork. Arbutnot.

CLOD. n. f. [club, Sax. a little hillock; klotte, Dutch.]

1. A lump of earth or clay; such a body of earth as cleaves or hangs together.

The earth that casteth up from the plough a great clod, is not so good as that which casteth up a smaller clod. Bacon.

I'll cut up, as plows

Do barren lands, and strike together flints

And clods, th' ungrateful fenate and the people. Ben Jonson.

Who smooths with harrows, or who pounds with rakes; Dryden.

The crumbling clods.

2. A turf; the ground.

Byzantians boast, that on the clod,

Where once their Sultan's horse has trod,

Grows neither grass, nor shrub, nor tree. Swift.

3. Any thing conercted together in a cluster.

Fishermen who make holes in the ice to dip up fish with their nets, light on swallows congealed in clods of a slimy substance: and carrying them home to their stoves, the warmth restoreth them to life and flight. Carew.

4. A lump, a mass of metal.

One at the forge

Labouring, two mally clods of iron and brass

Had melted. Milton.

5. Any thing vile, base, and earthy; as the body of man compared to his soul.

And ye high heavens, the temple of the gods,

In which a thousand torches, flaming bright,

Do burn, that to us, wretched earthily clods,

In dreadful darkness lend desired light. Spenser.

The spirit of man,

Which God inspir'd, cannot together perish

With this corporeal clod. Milton's Par. Lost.

How the purer spirit is united to this clod, is a knot too hard for our degraded intellects to untie. Glanville.

In moral reflections there must be heat, as well as dry reason, to inspire this cold clod of clay which we carry about with us. Burart.

6. A dull, gross, stupid fellow; a dolt.

The vulgar! a fierce animated clod,

Ne'er pleas'd with aught above'em. Dryden.

To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To gather into conerctions; to coagulate: for this we sometimes use clod.

Let us go find the body, and from the stream,

With lavers pure, and cleansing herbs, wash off

The clotted gore. Milton.

To CLOD. v. n. [from the noun.] To pelt with clods.

CLODDY. adj. [from clod.]

1. Consisting of earth or clods; earthy; muddy; miry; mean; gross; base.

The glorious sun,

Turning with splendour of his precious eye

The meagre cloddy earth to glittering gold. Shak.

2. Full of clods unbroken.

These lands they sow always under furrow about Michaelmas, and leave it as cloddy as they can. Mortimer's Husbandry.

1. The dark collection of vapours in the air.

Now are the clouds, that lower'd upon our hoofs,

In the deep bosom of the ocean buried. Shaksf.
 As a mist is a multitude of small but solid globules, which therefore descend; so a vapour, and therefore a watery cloud, is nothing else but a congeries of very small and concave globules, which therefore ascend, to that height in which they are of equal weight with the air, where they remain suspended, till, by some motion in the air, being broken, they descend in solid drops; either small, as in a mist; or bigger, when many of them run together, as in rain.

Grew's Cosmologia.
Clouds are the greatest and most considerable of all the meteors, as furnishing water and plenty to the earth. They consist of very small drops of water, and are elevated a good distance above the surface of the earth; for a cloud is nothing but a mist flying high in the air, as a mist is nothing but a cloud here below. Locke.
 How vapours, turn'd to clouds, obscure the sky; And clouds, dissolv'd, the thirsty ground supply. Roscommon.

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs, And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addif.

2. The veins, marks, or stains, in stones or other bodies.

3. Any state of obscurity or darkness. Tho' poets may of inspiration boast, Their rage, ill govern'd, in the clouds is lost. Waller.

How can I see the brave and young Fall in the cloud of war, and fall undone. Addif.

4. Any thing that spreads wide: as a crowd, a multitude.

The objection comes to no more than this, that, amongst a cloud of witnesses, there was one of no very good reputation. Atterbury.

2. [In the canon law.] One who is impowered or appointed to perform the duties of another.

A bishop that is unprofitable to his diocese ought to be deposed, and no coadjutor assigned him. Styliff.

COADJUVANCY. n. f. [from con and adjuvo, Lat.] Help; concurrent help; contribution of help; co-operation.

Crysal is a mineral body, in the difference of floes, made of a lentous percolation of earth, drawn from the most pure and limpid juice thereof; owing to the coldness of the earth some concurrence and coadjuvancy, but not immediate determination and efficiency. Brown's Vul. Err.

COADUNITIO. n. f. [from con, ad, unitio, Lat.] The conjunction of different substances into one mass.

Bodies seem to have an intrinsic principle of, or corruption from, the coadunitio of particles endued with contrary qualities. Hale.

TO COAGMENT. v. a. [from con and agmen, Lat.] To congregate or heap together. I have only found the participle in use.

Had the world been coagmented from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glarville.

COAGMENTATION. n. f. [from coagment.] Collection, or coacervation, into one mass; union; conjunction.

The third part rests in the well joining, cementing, and coagmentation of words, when it is smooth, gentle, and sweet. Ben Jonson.

COAGULABLE. adj. [from coagulate.] That is capable of concretion.

Stones that are rich in vitriol, being often drenched with rain-water, the liquor will then extract a fine and transparent substance, coagulable into vitriol. Boyle.

TO COAGULATE. v. a. [coagulo, Lat.] To force into concretions; as, by the affusion of some other substance, to turn milk.

Roasted in wrath and fire,

And thus o'ezed with coagulate gore. Shaksp.

Vivification ever consisteth in spirits attenuate, which the cold doth congeal and coagulate.

Bacon's Natural History.

Bitumen is found in lumps, or coagulated masses, in some springs. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

The milk in the stomach of calves, which is coagulated by the rennet, is again dissolved and rendered fluid by the gall in the duodenum. Arbutnot.

TO COAGULATE. v. n. To run into concretions, or congelations.

Spirit of wine commixed with milk, a third part spirit of wine, and two parts milk, coagulate little, but mingleth; and the spirit swims out above. Bacon.

About the third part of the oil olive, which was driven over into the receiver, did there coa-

Vol. I.

gulate into a whitish body, almost like butter. Boyle.

COAGULATION. n. f. [from coagulate.]

1. Concretion; congelation; the act of coagulating; the state of being coagulated.

2. The body formed by coagulation.

As the substance of coagulation is not merely fusing, nothing dissolves them but what penetrates and relaxes at the same time. Arbutnot.

COAGULATIVE. adj. [from coagulate.] That has the power of causing concretion, or coagulation.

To manifest the coagulative power, we have sometimes in a minute excited the fluidity of new milk, and turned it into a curdled substance, only by dexterously mingling with it a few drops of good oil of vitriol. Boyle.

COAGULATOR. n. f. [from coagulate.] That which causes coagulation.

Coagulators of the humours, are those things which expel the most fluid parts, as in the case of incrustating, or thickening; and by those things which suck up some of the fluid parts, as absorbents. Arbutnot.

COAL. n. f. [col, Sax. kol, Germ. kole, Dut. kul, Danish.]

1. The common fossil fuel.

Coal is a black, sulphureous, inflammatory matter, dug out of the earth, serving for tewel, common in Europe, though the English coal is of most repute. One species of pit-coal is called cannel, or candle coal, which is found in the northern counties; hard, glossy, and light, apt to cleave into thin flakes, and, when kindled, yields a continual blaze till it be burnt out. Graham.

Coals are solid, dry, opaque, inflammable substances, found in large strata, splitting horizontally more easily than in any other direction; of a glossy lue, soft and friable, not fusible, but easily inflammable, and leaving a large residuum of ashes. Hill on Fossils.

But age, enforce'd, falls by her own consent;
As coals to ashes, when the spirit's spent. Denham.

We shall meet with the same mineral lodged in coals, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

2. The cinder of scorched wood; charcoal.

Whatever doth so alter a body, as it returneth not again to that it was, may be called alteration major; as when cheese is made of curds, or coals of wood, or bricks of earth. Baron.

3. Fire; any thing inflamed or ignited.

You are no furer, no,

Than is the coal of fire upon the ice, Shaksp.

Or hailstones in the sun. Shaksp.

You have blown this coal betwixt my lord and me. Shaksp.

The rage of jealousy then fir'd his soul,
And his face kindled like a burning coal. Dryd.

TO COAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To burn wood to charcoal.

Add the tinner's care and cost in buying the wood for this service; selling, framing, and piling it to be burnt; in fetching the same, when it is coaled, through such far, foul, and cumbersome ways. Garett's Survey of Cornwall.

Charcoal of roots, coaled into great pieces, lasts longer than ordinary charcoal. Bacon.

2. To delineate with coal.

Marvailing, he coaled out rhymes upon the wall, near to the picture. London.

COAL-BLACK. adj. [coal and black.] Black in the highest degree; of the colour of coal.

As burning Alina, from his boiling stew,
Doth belch out flames, and rocks in pieces broke,
And ragged ribs of mountains molten new,
Enwrap't in coal-black clouds and filthy smoke. Fairy Queen.

Ethiopians and negroes become coal-black from fuliginous effluences, and complexional structures. Brown.

Coal-black is colour, but like jet it shone;
His legs and flowing tail were white alone. Dryd.

COAL-BOX. n. f. [coal and box.] A box to carry coal to the fire.

Leave a pail of dirty water, a coal-box, a bottle, a broom, and such other unrightly things. Swift.

A leaf of the polypody kind, found in the sinking of a coal-pit. Woodward.

COAL-STONE. n. f. [coal and stone.] A sort of cannel coal. See COAL.

Coal-stone flames easily, and burns freely; but holds and endures the fire much longer than coal. Woodward.

COAL-WORK. n. f. [coal and work.] A coalery; a place where coal is found.

There is a vast treasure in the old English, from whence miners may draw constant supplies; as our officers make their surest remits from the coal-works and the mines. Felton.

COALERY. n. f. [from coal.] A place where coal is dug.

Two fine stalactites were found hanging from a black stone, at a deserted vault in Benwell coalery. Woodward.

TO COALESCE. v. n. [coalesco, Latin.]

1. To unite in masses by a spontaneous approximation to each other.

When vapours are raised, they hinder not the transparency of the air, being divided into parts too small to cause any reflection in their superficies; but when they begin to coalesce, and constitute globules, those globules become of a convenient size to reflect some colours. Newton.

2. To grow together; to join.

COALESCENCE. n. f. [from coalesce.] The act of coalescing; concretion; union.

COALITION. n. f. [from coalesco, coalitum, Latin.] Union in one mass or body; conjunction of separate parts in one whole.

The world's a mass of heterogeneous consistencies, and every part thereof a coalition of distinguishable varieties. Glarville.

In the first coalition of a people, their prospect is not great; they provide laws for their present exigence. Hale.

'Tis necessary that these squandered atoms should convene and unite into great masses; without such a coalition the chaos must have reigned to all eternity. Bentley.

COALY. adj. [from coal.] Containing coal.

Or coal Tine, or ancient hollow'd Dec. Mir.

COAPTATION. n. f. [from con and apto, Lat.] The adjustment of parts to each other.

In a clock, the hand is moved upon the dial, the bell is struck, and the other actions belonging to the engine are performed, by virtue of the size, shape, bignets, and coaptation of the several parts. Boyle.

The same method makes both prose and verse beautiful, which consists in the judicious coaptation and ranging of the words. Brown.

TO COARCT. } v. a. [coarcto,
TO COARCTATE. } Latin.]

1. To straiten; to confine into a narrow compass.

The wind finding the room in the form of a trunk, and coarctated therein, forced the stones of the window, like pellets, clean through it. Bacon.

2. To contract power; to restrain.

If a man coarctes himself to the extremity of an act, he must blame and impute it to himself, that he has thus coarcted or straitened himself to far. Locke.

COARCTATION. n. f. [from coarctate.]

1. Confinement; restraint to a narrow space.

The greatest winds, if they have no coarctation, or blow not hollow, give an interior sound. Bacon.

2. Contraction of any space.

Straiten the artery never to much, provided the sides of it do not meet, the vessel will continue to beat, below or beyond the coarctation. Key.

3. Restraint of liberty.

Election is opposed not only to coercion, but also to coarctation, or determination to one. Bramhall.

Cocklight for a prize.

At the same time that the heads of parties prelove towards one another an outward show of good breeding, their tools will not so much as mingle at a cockmatch. Adairson.

Though quail-fighting is what is most taken notice of, they had doubtless cockmatches also. Arbutnot and Pope.

CO'CKNEY. n. f. [A word of which the original is much controverted. The French use an expression, païs de coccagne, for a country of dainties.

Paris est pour un riche un païs de coccagne.
Boileau.

Of this word they are not able to settle the original. It appears, whatever was its first ground, to be very ancient, being mentioned in an old Normanno-Saxon poem:

Far in fee by west Spaying,

Is a lond yhoze cocaying.

On which Dr. Hickes has this remark:

Nunc coquin, coquine: quæ olim apud Gallos, otio, gulæ, et ventri deditos, ignavum, ignavum, desidiosum, desidiosam, segnem, significabant. Hinc urbanos, utpote à rusticis laboribus ad vitam fedentariam et desidiosam avocatos, pagani nostri olim cocaignes, quod nunc scribitur cockneys, vocabant. Et pœta hic nosler in monachos & moniales, ut segne genus hominum qui, desidie dediti, ventri indulgebant, & coquinae amatores erant, malevolentissime invehitur; monasteria & monasticam vitam inde seripione terræ cockaine parabolicè perstringens.]

1. A native of London, by way of contempt.

So the cockney did to the eels, when she put them i' th' patty alive. Shakespeare's K. Lear.

For who is such a cockney in his heart,
Proud of the plenty of the southern part,
To scorn that union, by which we may Boast 'twas his countrymen that writ this play? Dorset.

The cockney, travelling into the country, is surprized at many common practices of rural affairs. Watts.

2. Any effeminate, ignorant, low, mean, despicable citizen.

I am afraid this great lubber the world will prove a cockney. Shakespeare.

CO'COA. n. f. [cacaotal, Span. and therefore more properly written cacao.] A species of palm-tree, cultivated in the East and West Indies. The bark of the nut is made into cordage, and the shell into drinking bowls. The kernel affords them a wholesome food, and the milk contained in the shell a cooling liquor. The leaves are used for thatching their houses, and are wrought into baskets. Miller.

The cacao or chocolate nut is a fruit of an oblong figure; is composed of a thin but hard and woody coat or skin, of a dark blackish colour; and of a dry kernel, filling up its whole cavity, fleshy, dry, firm, and fatshy to the touch, of a dusky colour, an agreeable smell, and a pleasant and peculiar taste. It was unknown to us till the discovery of America. The tree is of the thickness of a man's leg, and but a few feet in height; its bark rough, and full of tubercles and its leaves six or eight inches long, half as much in breadth, and pointed at the ends. The flowers are succeeded by the fruit, which is large and oblong, resembling a cucumber, five, six, or eight inches in length, and three or four in thickness; when fully ripe, of a purple colour. Within the cavity of this nut are lodged the cocca nuts, usually about thirty in number. Hill's Mat. Medicæ.

Amid those orchards of the sun,

Give me to drain the cocca's milky bowl,

And from the palm to draw its freshening wine. Thomson.

1. To exist at the same time.

The three stars that coexist in heavenly constellations, are a multitude of stars. Hale.

Of substances no one has any clear idea, farther than of certain simple ideas coexisting together. Locke.

2. Followed by with.

It is sufficient that we have the idea of the length of any regular periodical appearances, which we can in our minds apply to duration, with which the motion or appearance never coexisted. Locke.

COE'XISTENCE. n. f. [from coexist.]

1. Existence at the same time with another. Locke, who in the preceding lines has coexisted with, has here coexistence to.

The measuring of any duration, by some motion, depends not on the real coexistence of that thing to that motion, or any other periods of revolution. Locke.

2. More commonly followed by with.

We can demonstrate the being of God's eternal ideas, and their coexistence with him. Greav.

COE'XISTENT. adj. [from coexist.]

1. Having existence at the same time with another: with to.

To the measuring the duration of any thing by time, it is not requisite that that thing should be coexistent to the motion we measure by, or any other periodical revolution. Locke.

2. Sometimes with.

This proves no antecedent necessity, but co-existent with the act. Bramhall.

Time is taken for so much of duration as is coexistent with the motions of the great bodies of the universe. Locke.

All that one point is either future or past, and no parts are coexistent or contemporary with it. Bentley.

TO COE'XTEND. v. a. [con and extendo, Latin.] To extend to the same space or duration with another.

Every motion is, in some sort, coextended with the body moved. Greav's Cosmologia.

COE'XTENSION. n. f. [from coextend.]

The act or state of extending to the same space or duration with another.

Though it be a spirit, I find it is no inconvenience to have some analogy, at least of coextension, with my body. Hale.

CO'FFEE. n. f. [It is originally Arabick, pronounced cafeh by the Turks, and cahuah by the Arabs.] The tree is a species of Arabick jasmine.

It is found to succeed as well in the Caribbee islands as in its native place of growth: but whether the coffee produced in the West Indies will prove as good as that from Mocha in Arabia Felix, time will discover. Miller.

Coffee denotes a drink prepared from the berries, very familiar in Europe for these eighty years, and among the Turks for one hundred and fifty. Thevenot, the traveller, was the first who brought it into France; and a Greek servant, called Pasqua, brought into England by Mr. Daniel Edwards, a Turkey merchant, in 1652, to make his coffee, first set up the profession of coffee-man, and introduced the drink among us. Chambers.

They have in Turkey a drink called coffee, made of a berry of the same name, as black as soot, and of a strong scent, but not aromatical; which they take, beaten into powder, in water, as hot as they can drink it. This drink cometh to the brain and heart, and helpeth digestion. Bacon.

To part her time 'twixt reading and bohea,
Or o'er cold coffee tulle with the spoon. Pope.

COGNIZANCE. n. f. [connoissance, French.]

1. Judicial notice; trial; judicial authority. It is worth the while, however, to consider how we may discountenance and prevent those evils which the law can take no cognizance of. L'Esrange.

Happiness or misery, in converse with others, depends upon things which human laws can take no cognizance of. South.

The moral crime is completed, there are only circumstances wanting to work it up for the cognizance of the law. Addison.

2. A badge, by which any one is known.

And at the king's going away the earl's servants stood, in a seemly manner, in their livery coats, with cognizances, ranged on both sides, and made the king a bow. Bacon.

These were the proper cognizances and coat-arms of the tribes. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINAL. adj. [cognomen, Lat.] Having the same name.

Nor do those animals more resemble the creatures on earth, than they on earth the constellations which pass under animal names in heaven; nor the dog-fish at sea much more make out the dog of the land, than his cognominal or name-fake in the heavens. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COGNOMINATION. n. f. [cognomen, Lat.]

1. A surname; the name of a family.
2. A name added from any accident or quality.

Pompey deserved the name Great: Alexander, of the same cognomination, was generalissimo of Greece. Brown.

TE COHABIT. v. n. [cohabitio, Latin.]

1. To dwell with another in the same place.

The Philistines were worsted by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army: they were not able to cohabit with that holy thing. South.

2. To live together as husband and wife.

He knew her not to be his own wife, and yet had a design to cohabit with her as such. Fichte.

COHABITANT. n. f. [from cohabit.] An inhabitant of the same place.

The oppressed Indians protest against that heaven where the Spaniards are to be their cohabitants. Decay of Piety.

COHABITATION. n. f. [from cohabit.]

1. The act or state of inhabiting the same place with another.
2. The state of living together as married persons.

Which defect, though it could not evacuate a marriage after cohabitation, and actual consummation, yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon's Henry VII.

Monsieur Brumars, at one hundred and two years, died for love of his wife, who was ninety-two at her death, after seventy years cohabitation. Tutler.

COHEIR. n. f. [coheres, Lat.] One of several among whom an inheritance is divided.

Married persons, and widows, and virgins, are all coheirs in the inheritance of Jesus, if they live within the laws of their estate. Taylor.

COHEIRESS. n. f. [from coheir.] A woman who has an equal share of an inheritance with other women.

To COHERE. v. n. [cohereo, Latin.]

1. To stick together; to hold fast one to another, as parts of the same mass.

Two pieces of marble, having their surface exactly plain, pulite, and applied to each other in such a manner as to intercept the air, do cohere firmly together as one. Woodward.

We find that the force, whereby bodies cohere, is very much greater when they come to immediate contact, than when they are at ever so small a finite distance. Cheyne's Philos. Prin.

None want a place; for all, their centre found, Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around; Not closer, oth in orb conglomb'd, are seen The buzzing bees about their dusky queen. Pope.

2. To be well connected; to follow regularly in the order of discourse.

3. To suit; to fit; to be fitted to.

Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing. Shakspeare.

4. To agree.

COHERENCE. } n. f. [coherentia, Latin.]

COHERENCY. } n. f. [coherentia, Latin.]

1. That state of bodies in which their parts are joined together, from what cause soever it proceeds, so that they resist division and separation; nor can be separated by the same force by which they might be simply moved, or, being only laid upon one another, might be parted again. Quincy.

The pressure of the air will not explain, nor can be a cause of the coherence of the particles of air themselves. Locke.

Matter is either fluid or solid; words that may comprehend the middle degrees between extreme fixedness and coherency, and the most rapid intestine motion. Bentley.

2. Connection; dependency; the relation of parts or things one to another.

It shall be no trouble to find each controversy's resting-place, and the coherence it hath with things, either on which it dependeth, or which depend on it. Hooter, Preface.

Why between sermons and faith should there be ordinarily that coherence, which causes have with their usual effects? Hooker.

3. The texture of a discourse, by which one part follows another regularly and naturally.

4. Consistency in reasoning, or relating, so that one part of the discourse does not destroy or contradict the rest.

Coherence of discourse, and a direct tendency of all the parts of it to the argument in hand, are most eminently to be found in him. Locke.

COHERENT. adj. [coherens, Latin.]

1. Sticking together, so as to resist separation.

By coagulating and diluting, that is, making their parts more or less coherent. Arbutnot.

Where all must fall, or not coherent, be; And all that rises, rise in due degree. Pope

2. Connected; united.

The mind proceeds from the knowledge it stands possessed of already, to that which lies next, and is coherent to it, and so on to what it aims at. Locke.

3. Suitable to something else; regularly adapted.

Instruct my daughter, That time and place, with this deceit so lawful, May prove coherent. Shakspeare.

4. Consistent; not contradictory to itself.

A coherent thinker, and a strict reasoner, is not to be made at once by a set of rules. Watts.

COHESION. n. f. [from cohere.]

1. The act of sticking together.

Hard particles heaped together touch in a few points, and must be separable by less force than breaks a solid particle, whose parts touch in all the space between them, without any pores or interstices to weaken their cohesion. Newton.

Solids and fluids differ in the degree of cohesion, which, being increased, turns a fluid into a solid. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of union or inseparability.

What cause of their cohesion can you find? What props support, what chains the fabrick bind? Blackmore.

3. Connection; dependence.

In their tender years, ideas that have no natural cohesion come to be united in their heads. Locke.

COHESIVE. adj. [from cohere.] That has the power of sticking to another, and of resisting separation.

COHESIVENESS. n. f. [from cohesive.] The quality of being cohesive; the quality of resisting separation.

To COHOBATE. v. a. To pour the distilled liquor upon the remaining matter, and distil it again.

The juices of an animal body are, as it were, cohabated, being excreted, and admitted again into the blood with the fresh aliment. Arbutnot.

COHOBATION. n. f. [from cohabate.] A returning any distilled liquor again upon what it was drawn from, or upon fresh ingredients of the same kind, to have it the more impregnated with their virtues. Quincy.

Cohobation is the pouring the liquor distilled from any thing back upon the remaining matter, and distilling it again. Locke.

This oil, dulcified by cohabation with an aromatized spirit, is of use to restore the digestive faculty. Grow's Museum.

COHORT. n. f. [cohors, Latin.]

1. A troop of soldiers in the Roman armies, containing about five hundred foot.

The Romans levied as many coheres, companies, and ensigns, from hence, as from any of their provinces. Camer.

2. [In poetical language.] A body of warriors.

Th' arch-angelic pow'r prepar'd For swift descent with him the cohort bright Of watchful cherubim. Milton.

Here Churchill, not so prompt To vaunt as fight, his hardy cohorts join'd With Eugene. Phillips' Blenheim.

COHORTATION. n. f. [cohortatio, Latin.]

Encouragement by words; incitement. DiD.

COIF. n. f. [coiffe, French; from cofia, for caufa, low Latin.] The head-dress; a lady's cap; the sergeant's cap.

The judges of the four circuits in Wales, although they are not of the first magnitude, nor need be of the degree of the coif, yet are they considerable.

Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

No less a man than a brother of the coif began his suit, before he had been a twelvemonth at the Temple.

Spekator.

Instead of home-spun coifs were seen Good pinners edg'd with coif ermine.

Swift.

COIFFED. adj. [from coif.] Wearing a coif.

COIFFURE. n. f. [coiffure, French.] Headdress.

I am pleas'd with the coiffure now in fashion, and think it shows the good taste of the valuable part of the sex.

Addison.

COIGNE. n. f. [An Irish term, as it seems.]

Fitz Thomas of Desmond began that extortion of coigne and livery, and pay; that is, he and his army took horse meat and man's meat, and money, at pleasure.

Darvies on Ireland.

COIGNE. n. f. [French.]

To sooth his fillet, and delude her mind.

Dryden.

A term is coined to make the conveyance easy.

Atterbury.

COINAGE. n. f. [from coin.]

1. The art or practice of coining money.

The care of the coinage was committed to the inferior magistrates; and I don't find that they had a publick trial, as we solemnly practise in this country.

Asbathnot.

2. Coin; money; stamped and legitimated metal.

This is conceived to be a coinage of some Jews, in derision of christians, who first began that portrait.

Brown.

Moor was forced to leave off coining, by the great crowds of people continually offering to return his coinage upon him.

Swift.

3. The charges of coining money.

4. New production; invention.

Unnecessary coinage, as well as unnecessary revival of words, runs into affectation; a fault to be avoided on either hand.

Dryden.

5. Forgery; invention.

This is the very coinage of your brain; This bodiless creation ecstacy Is very cunning in.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

To COINCIDE. v. n. [coincido, Lat.]

1. To fall upon the same point; to meet in the same point.

If the equator and ecliptick had coincided, it would have rendered the annual revolution of the earth useless.

Chyene.

2. To concur; to be consistent with.

The rules of right judgment, and of good ratiocination, often coincide with each other.

Watts's Logic.

COINCIDENCE. n. f. [from coincide.]

1. The state of several bodies, or lines, falling upon the same point.

An universal equilibrium, arising from the coincidence of infinite centres, can never be naturally acquired.

Bentley.

2. Concurrence; consistency; tendency of many things to the same end; occurrence of many things at the same time.

The very concurrence and coincidence of so many evidences that contribute to the proof, carries a great weight.

Hale.

3. It is followed by with.

The coincidence of the planes of this rotation with one another, and with the plane of the ecliptick, is very near the truth.

Chyene.

COINCIDENT. adj. [from coincide.]

1. Falling upon the same point.

These circles I viewed through a prism; and, as I went from them, they came nearer and nearer together, and at length became coincident.

Newton's Opticks.

COLD. adj. [cold, Saxon; kalt, Germ.]

1. Not hot; not warm; gelid; wanting warmth; being without heat.

The diet in the state of manhood ought to be fold; and their chief drink water cold, because in such a state it has its own natural spirit.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

The aggregated soil

Death, with his mace petrifick, cold, and dry,
As with a trident, smote. Milton.

2. Causing sense of cold.

Rids us feck

Some better shroud, some better warmth, to cherish

Our limbs benumb'd, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams Reflected, may with matter fere foment. Milton.

3. Chill; shivering; having sense of cold.

O noble English, that could entertain,
With half their forces, the full power of France;
And led another half stand laughing by,
All out of work, and cold for action. Shakspere.

4. Having cold qualities; not volatile; not acid.

Cold plants have a quicker perception of the heat of the sun than the hot herbs; as a cold hand will sooner find a little warmth than an hot. Bacon's Natural History.

5. Indifferent; frigid; wanting passion; wanting zeal; without concern; unac-tative; unconcerned; wanting ardour.

There sprung up one kind of men, with whose zeal and forwardness the rest being compared, were thought to be marvellous cold and dull.

Hooker's Preface.

Infinite shall be made cold in religion, by your example, that never were hurt by reading books. Afcham.

Temp'rately proceed to what you would Thus violently redress.—Sir, these cold ways,
That seem like prudent helps, are very poisonous.

Shakspere.

New dated letters these,

Their cold intent, tenour, and substance thus;
Here doth he wish his person, and his power,
The which he could not levy. Shakspere.

We should not, when the blood was cold, have threatened our prisoners with the sword. Shakspere.

To see a world in flames, and an host of angels in the clouds, one must be much of a stoick to be a cold and unconcerned spectator.

Burnet's Preface to the Theory of the Earth.

No drum or trumpet needs

T' inspire the coward, or to warm the cold;
His voice, his sole appearance, makes them bold. Dryden.

O, thou hast touch'd me with thy sacred theme,
And my cold heart is kindled at thy flame. Roscoe.

A man must be of a very cold or degenerate temper, whose heart doth not burn within him in the midst of praise and adoration. Addison.

6. Unaffecting; unable to move the passions.

What a deal of cold business doth a man mispend the better part of life in? In scattering compliments, tendering visits, following feasts and plays. Ben Jonson.

The rabble are pleased at the first entry of a digress; but the jest grows cold even with them too, when it comes on in a second scene

Addison on Italy.

7. Reserved; coy; not affectionate; not cordial; not friendly.

Let his knights have colder looks Among you. Shakspere's King Lear.

The commissioners grew more reserved, and colder towards each other. Clarendon.

8. Chaste; not heated by vitious appetite.

VOL. I.

You may

Convey your pleasures in a spacious plenty,
And yet seem cold, the time you may so hoodwink;
We've willing dames enough. Shakspere.

9. Not welcome; not received with kindness or warmth of affection.

My master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love. Shakspere.

10. Not hally; not violent.

11. Not affecting the scent strongly.

She made it good

At the hedge corner, in the coldest fault. Shakspere.

12. Not having the scent strongly affected.

Smell this business with a sense as cold

As is a dead man's nose. Shakspere.

COLD. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. The cause of the sensation of cold; the privation of heat; the frigorifick power.

Fair lined slippers for the cold. Shakspere.

Heat and cold are nature's two hands, whereby the chiefly worketh: and heat we have in readiness, in respect of the fire; but for cold, we must stay till it cometh, or seek it in deep caves, or high mountains: and, when all is done, we cannot attain it in any great degree. Bacon.

The sun

Had first his precept to move, to shine,
As might affect the earth with cold and heat
Scarce tolerable, and from the north to call Decrepid winter, from the south to bring Solstitial summer's heat. Milton.

2. The sensation of cold; coldness; childness.

When she saw her lord prepar'd to part,
A deadly cold ran thiv'ring to her heart. Dryden.

3. A disease caused by cold; the obstruction of perspiration.

What disease hast thou?—

A whoreson cold, sir; a cough. Shakspere.

Let no ungentle cold delroy

All taste we have of heavenly joy. Roscoe.

Those rains, to covering the earth, might pro-videntially contribute to the disruption of it, by stopping all the pores and all evaporation, which would make the vapours within struggle violently, as we get a fever by a cold. Burnet.

COLDLY. adv. [from cold.]

1. Without heat.

2. Without concern; indifferently; neg-ligently; without warmth of temper or expression.

What England says, say briefly, gentle lord;

We coldly pause for thee. Shakspere.

Swift seem'd to wonder what he meant,

Nor would believe my lord had sent;

So never offer'd once to it,

But coldly said, Your servant, sir. Swift.

COLDNESS. n. f. [from cold.]

1. Want of heat; power of causing the sensation of cold.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water
they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter. Boyle's Exp.

Such was the discord, which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resist;
All that we have, and that we are, subsists. Denh.

2. Unconcern; frigidity of temper; want of zeal; negligence; disregard.

Divisions of religion are not only the farthest spread, because in religion all men presume themselves interested; but they are also, for the most part, hottest persecuted: so much as coldness, which, in other contentions, may be thought to proceed from moderation, is not in these so favourably confirmed. Huet.

If, upon reading admired passages in authors,
he finds a coldness and indifference in his thoughts, he ought to conclude, that he himself wants the faculty of discovering them. Addison.

It betrayed itself in a sort of indifference and carelessness in all her actions, and coldness to her best friends. Arbutnot

3. Coyness; want of kindness; want of passion.

Unhappy youth! how will thy coldness raise Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!

Addison's Cato.

Let ev'ry tongue its various censures chide,
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse. Pope.

4. Chastity; exemption from vehement desire.

The silver stream her virgin coldness keeps,
For ever murmurs, and for ever weeps. Pope.

COLE. n. f. [capl, Saxon.] A general name for all sorts of cabbage.

CO'LESEED. n. f. [from cole and seed.]
Cabbage seed.

Where land is rank, it is not good to sow wheat after a fallow; but coleseed or barley, and then wheat. Mortimer.

CO'LEWORT. n. f. [caplwort, Sax.] A species of cabbage.

The decoction of coleworts is also commended to bathe them. Wise man of an Erysipela.

She took the coleworts, which her husband got
From his own ground (a small well-water'd spot),
She strupp'd the stalks of all their leaves; the best
She cut'd, and then with handy care she dress'd. Dryden.

How turnips hide their swelling heads below;
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow. Cy.

CO'LUCK. n. f. [colicus, Latin.]

It strictly is a disorder of the colon; but loosely, any disorder of the stomach or bowels that is attended with pain. There are four sorts: 1. A bilious colick, which proceeds from an abundance of acrimony or choleric irritating the bowels, so as to occasion continual gripes, and generally with a looseness; and this is best managed with lenitives and emollients. 2. A flatulent colick, which is pain in the bowels from flatules and wind, which distend them into unequal and unnatural capacities; and this is managed with carminatives and moderate openers. 3. An hysterical colick, which arises from disorders of the womb, and is communicated by consent of parts to the bowels; and is to be treated with the ordinary hystericks. 4. A nervous colick, which is from convulsive spasms and contortions of the guts themselves, from some disorders of the spirits, or nervous fluid, in their component fibres; whereby their capacities are in many places strengthened, and sometimes so as to occasion obstinate obstructions: this is best remedied by brisk catharticks, joined with opiates and emollient diluters. There is also a species of this distemper which is commonly called the stone colick, by consent of parts, from the irritation of the stone or gravel in the bladder or kidneys; and this is most commonly to be treated by nephriticks and oily diureticks, and is greatly assisted with the carminative turpentine clysters.

Quincy.

Colicks of infants proceed from acidity, and the air in the aliment expanding itself, while the aliment ferments. Arbutnot.

CO'LUCK. ali. Affecting the bowels.

Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs. Milt.

TO COLLA'PSE. v. n. [collabor, collapsus, Latin.] To fall together; to close so as that one side touches the other.

In consumptions and atrophy the liquids are exhausted, and the sides of the canals collapse; their tone the attrition is increased, and consequently the heat. Arbutnot on Diet.

COLLA'PSION. n. f. [from collapse.]

1. The act of closing or collapsing.

2. The state of vessels closed.

COLLAR. n. f. [collare, Latin.]

1. A ring of metal put round the neck.

That's nothing, say the dogs, but the fretting of my collar: nay, says the wolf, if there be a collar

In the case, I know better things than to sell my liberty.
L'Esfrange.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds;
With golden muzzles all their mouths were bound,
And collars of the same their necks surround. Dryd.

2. The part of the harness that is fastened about the horse's neck.

Her waggon spokes made of long spinners legs,
The traces of the smallest spider's web,
The collars of the moonshine's waty beams.
Shakespeare.

3. The part of the dress that surrounds the neck.

4. To slip the COLLAR. To get free; to escape; to disentangle himself from any engagement or difficulty.

When, as the ape him heard so much to talk
Of labour, that did from his liking baulk,
He would have slipt the collar handfomely.
Hubberd's Tale.

5. A COLLAR of Bracon, is the quantity bound up in one parcel.

COLLAR-BONE. n. f. [from collar and bone.]

If once we descend unto probable collections, we are then in the territory where free and arbi-any denominations, the territory whereof they take place.

Thou shalt not creep thro' lattices of eyes,
Nor hear thro' the labyrinth of ears, nor learn
By circuit or collection to discern.

4. A corollary; a confectionary deduced from premises; deduction; consequence.

It should be a weak collection, if whereas we saw, that when Christ had overcome the sharpness of death, he then opened the kingdom of heaven to all believers; a thing in such sort affirmed with circumstances, were taken as insulting an opposite denial before that circumstance be accomplished.

This label

Is so from sense in hardness, that I can Make no collection of it.

When she, from sundry arts, one skill doth draw;

Gathering, from divers flights, one act of war;
From many eates like, one rule of law;

These her collections, not the senses are.

CO'LOGN Earib. n. f. Is a deep brown, very light bastard ochre, which is no pure native fossil; but contains more vegetable than mineral matter, and owes its origin to the remains of wood long buried in the earth.
Hill on Fossils.

COLON. n. f. [κόλον, a member.]

1. A point [:] used to mark a pause greater than that of a comma, and less than that of a period. Its use is not very exactly fixed; nor is it very necessary, being confounded by most with the femicolon. It was used before punctuation was refined, to mark almost any sense less than a period. To apply it properly, we should place it, perhaps, only where the sense is continued without dependence of grammar or construction: as, I love him, I despise him: I have long ceased to trust, but shall never forbear to succour him.

2. The greatest and widest of all the intestines, about eight or nine hands breadth long.

The colon begins where the ilium ends, in the cavity of the os ilium on the right side; from thence ascending by the kidney on the same side, it passes under the concave side of the liver, to which it is sometimes tied, as likewise to the gall-bladder, which tinges it yellow in that place; then it runs under the bottom of the stomach to the spleen in the left side, to which it is also knit: from thence it turns down to the left kidney; and thence passing, in form of an S, it terminates at the upper part of the os sacrum in the rectum.
Quincy.

Now, by your cruelty hard bound,
I strain my guts, my colon wound.
Swift.

The contents of the colon are of a sour, fetid, acid smell in rabbits.
Floyer on the Humours.

COLONEL. n. f. [of uncertain etymology. Skinner imagines it originally colonialis, the leader of a colony. Minshew deduces it from colonna, a pillar: as, patriæ columen; exercitus columen. Each is plausible.] The chief commander of a regiment; a field officer of the highest rank, next to the general officers. It is now generally founded with only two distinct syllables, col'nel.

The chiefest help must be the care of the colonel, that hath the government of all his garrison.
Spenser on Ireland.

Captain or colonel, or knight in arms,
Whose chance on these defenceless doors may seize,

If deed of honour did thee ever please,
Guard them, and him within protect from harms.
Milton.

COLONELSHIP. n. f. [from colonel.] The office or character of colonel.

While he continued a subaltern, he complained against the pride of colonels towards their officers; yet, in a few minutes after he had received his commission for a regiment, he confessed that colonelship was coming fast upon him.
Swift.

To COLONIZE. v. a. [from colony.] To plant with inhabitants; to settle with new planters; to plant with colonies.

There was never an hand drawn, that did double the rest of the habitable world, before this; for so a man may truly term it, if he shall put to account as well that that is, as that which may be hereafter, by the farther occupation and colonizing of those countries: and yet it cannot be affirmed, if one speak ingenuously, that it was the propagation of the christian faith that was the adamant of that discovery, entry, and plantation; but gold and silver, and temporal profit and glory; so that what was first in God's providence, was but second in man's appetite and intention.
Bacon's Holy War.

Droina hath advantage by acquet of islands, which she colonizeth and fortifieth daily.
Howel.

COLONNA'DE. n. f. [from colonna, Ital. a column.]

1. A peristyle of a circular figure; or a series of columns disposed in a circle, and insulated within side. Builder's Dict.
Here circling colonnades the ground inclose,
And here the marble statues breathe in rows.
Addison.

2. Any series or range of pillars.
For you my colonnades extend their wings.
Pope.

COLONY. n. f. [colonia, Latin.]

1. A body of people drawn from the mother-country to inhabit some distant place.

To these new inhabitants and colonies he gave the same law under which they were born and bred.
Spenser on Ireland.

Rooting out these two rebellious sects, he placed English colonies in their rooms. Davies.
Oiris, or the Bacchus of the ancients, is reported to have civilized the Indians, planting colonies, and building cities. Arbuthnot on Oiris.

2. The country planted; a plantation.

The rising city, which from far you see,
Is Carthage, and a Tyrian colony.
Dryden.

COLOPHONY. n. f. [from Colophon, a city whence it came.] Rosin.

Of Venetian turpentine, slowly evaporating about a fourth or fifth part, the remaining substance suffered to cool, would afford me a coherent body, or a fine colophony.
Boyle.

Turpentine and oils leave a colophony, upon a separation of their thinner oil.
Floyer.

COLOQUINTEDA. n. f. [colocynthis, Lat. κολοκυνθίς.] The fruit of a plant of the same name, brought from the Levant, about the bigness of a large orange, and often called bitter apple. Both the seed and pulp are intolerably bitter. It is a violent purgative, of considerable use in medicines.
Chambers.

CO'LORATE. adj. [coloratus, Lat.] Coloured; died; marked or stained with some colour.

Had the tunicles and humours of the eye been colorate, many rays from visible objects would have been stop'd. Ray.

COLORATION. n. f. [coloro, Latin.]

1. The art or practice of colouring.

Some bodies have a more deperatable nature than others, as is evident in coloration; for a small quantity of saffron will tinct more than a great quantity of brazil. Bacon.

2. The state of being coloured.

Amongst curiosities I shall place coloration, though somewhat better; for beauty in flowers is their preeminence. Bacon's Natural History.

COLORIFICK. adj. [colorificus, Latin.]

That has the power of producing dyes, tints, colours, or hues.

In this composition of white, the several rays do not suffer any change in their colorifick qualities by acting upon one another; but are only mixed, and by a mixture of their colours produce white. Newton's Opticks.

COLO'SSE. } n. f. [colossus, Lat.] A

COLO'SSUS. } statue of enormous magnitude.

Not to mention the walls and palace of Babylon, the pyramids of Egypt, or colosse of Rhodes. Temple.

There huge colossus rose, with trophies crown'd, And runick characters were grav'd around. Pope.

COLOSSEAN. adj. [colossus, Latin.]

In form of a colossus; of the height and bigness of such a statue; giantlike.

COLOUR. n. f. [color, Lat.]

1. The appearance of bodies to the eye only; hue; die.

It is a vulgar idea of the colours of solid bodies, when we perceive them to be a red, or blue, or green tincture of the surface; but a philosophical idea, when we consider the various colours to be different sensations, excited in us by the refracted rays of light, reflected on our eyes in a different manner, according to the different size, or shape, or situation of the particles of which surfaces are composed. Watts.

Her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Shakespeare.

For though our eyes can nought but colours see, Yet colours give them not their pow'r of sight. Davies.

The lights of colours are more refrangible one than another in this order; red, orange, yellow, green, blue, indigo, deep violet. Newton.

2. The freshness, or appearance of blood, in the face.

My cheeks no longer did their colour boast. Dryden.

A sudden horror seiz'd his giddy head, And his ears trickled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

3. The tint of the painter.

When each bold figure just begins to live, The treach'rous colours the fair art betray, And all the light creation slides away. Pope.

4. The representation of any thing superficially examined.

Their wisdom is only of this world, to put false colours upon things, to call good evil, and evil good, against the conviction of their own consciences. Swift.

5. Concealment; palliation; excuse; superficial cover.

It is no matter if I do halt; I have the wars for my colour, and my pension shall seem the more reasonable. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Their sin admitted no colour or excuse. King Charles.

6. Appearance; pretence; false show.

Under the colour of commending him, I have access my own love to prefer. Shakespeare.

Merchants came to Rhodes with a great ship laden with coin; under the colour of the sale whereof, they noted all that was done in the city. Knolles' History of the Turks.

7. Kind; species; character.

Boys and women are, for the most part, cattle of this colour. Shakespeare's As you like it.

8. In the plural, a standard; an ensign of war: they say the colours of the foot, and standard of the horse.

Head and heart are open for a friend: the passage is easy, and not only admits, but even invites, the comer. South.

COMET. n. f. [cometa, Lat. a hairy star.] A heavenly body in the planetary region, appearing suddenly, and again disappearing; and, during the time of its appearance, moving through its proper orbit like a planet. The orbits of comets are ellipses, having one of their foci in the centre of the sun; and being very long and eccentric, they become invisible when in that part most remote from the sun. Comes, popularly called blazing stars, are distinguished from other stars by a long train or tail of light, always opposite to the sun: hence arises a popular division of comets into three kinds, bearded, tailed, and haired comets; though the division rather relates to the different circumstances of the same comet, than to the phenomenon of the several. Thus, when the comet is outward of the sun, and moves from it, the comet is said to be bearded, be-beared, because the light marches before it. When the light is westward of the sun, the comet is said to be tailed, because the train follows it. When the comet and the sun are diametrically opposite, the earth being between them, the train is hid behind the body of the comet, excepting a little that appears around it, in form of a border of hair, hence called comets.

According to Sir Isaac Newton, the tail of a comet is a very thin vapour, emitted by the head or nucleus of the comet, ignited by the neighbourhood to the sun; and this vapour is furnished by the atmosphere of the comet. The vapours of comets being thus dilated, rarefied, and diffused, may probably, by means of their own gravity, be attracted down to the planets, and become intermingled with their atmospheres. For the conservation of the water and moisture of the planets, comets seem absolutely requisite; from whose condensed vapours and exhalations all that moisture which is spent in vegetations and putrefactions, and turned into dry earth, may be resupplied and recruited; for all vegetables increase wholly from fluids, and turn, by putrefaction, into earth. Hence the quantity of dry earth must continually increase, and the moisture of the globe decrease, and at last be quite evaporated, if it have not a continual supply. And I suspect, adds Sir Isaac, that the spirit which makes the finest, subtlest, and best part of our air, and which is absolutely requisite for the life and being of all things, comes principally from the comets.

The same great author has computed that the sun's heat, in the comet of 1680, was, to his heat with us at midsummer, as twenty-eight thousand to one; and that the heat of the body of the comet was near two thousand times as great as that of red-hot iron. He also calculates, that a globe of red-hot iron, of the dimensions of our earth, would scarce be cool in fifty thousand years. If then the comet be supposed to cool a hundred times as fast as red-hot iron, yet, since its heat was two thousand times greater, supposing it of the bigness of the earth, it would not be cool in a million of years.

Devoux, Chambers.

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,
As if they saw some wondrous monument,
Some comet, or unusual prodigy? Shakespeare.

Such his fell glances as the fatal light
Of flaring comets. Cassano.

I considered a comet, or, in the language of the vulgar, a blazing star, as a sky-rocket discharged by an hand that is almighty. Addison.

Fierce meteors shoot their arbitrary light,
And comets march with lawless horrors bright. Phior.

COMETARY. } adj. [from comet.] Relating to a comet.

Refractions of light are in the planetary and cometary regions, as on our globe. Cheyne.

COMFIT. n. f. [bellaria arida, Latin; konst, Dutch. It should seem that both are formed by hasty pronunciation from confect.] A dry sweetmeat; any kind of fruit or root preserved with sugar, and dried.

By feeding me on beans and pease,

COMMENSURATELY. adv. [from commensurate.] With the capacity of measuring, or being measured by some other thing.

We are constrained to make the day serve to measure the year as well as we can, though not commensurately to each year; but by collecting the fraction of days in several years, till they amount to an even day. Holder on Time.

COMMENSURATION. n. f. [from commensurate.] Proportion; reduction of some things to some common measure.

A body over great, or over small, will not be thrown so far as a body of a middle size; so that, it seemeth, there must be a commensuration or proportion between the body moved and the force, to make it move well. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

All fitness lies in a particular commensuration, or proportion, of one thing to another. South.

To COMMENT. v. n. [commentor, Lat.]

1. To annotate; to write notes upon an author; to expound; to explain: with upon before the thing explained.
Such are thy secrets, which my life makes good,
And comments on thee; for in ev'ry thing
Thy words do find me out, and parallels bring,
And in another make me understand. Herbert.

Criticks having first taken a liking to one of these poets, proceed to comment on him, and illustrate him. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

They have contented themselves only to comto whom the consideration or ordering of any matter is referred, either by some court to whom it belongs, or by consent of parties.

In parliament, after a bill is read, it is either agreed to and passed, or not agreed to; or neither of these, but referred to the consideration of some appointed by the house to examine it further, who thereupon are called a committee. Cowell.

Manchester had orders to march thither, having a committee of the parliament with him, as there was another committee of the Scottish parliament always in that army; there being also now a committee of both kingdoms residing at London, for the carrying on the war. Clarendon.

All corners were filled with covenanters, confusion, committee men, and folders, serving each other to their ends of revenges, or power, or profit; and these committee men and soldiers were posst with this covenant. Walton.

COMMITTER. n. f. [from commit.] Perpetrator; he that commits.

Such an one makes a man not only a partaker of other men's sins, but a deliver of the whole guilt to himself; yet so as to leave the committer
as full of guilt as before. South.

COMMITTABLE. adj. [from commit.] Liable to be committed.

Besides the mistakes committable in the solay compute, the difference of chronology disturbs his computes. Brown.

a great colour. Bacon.

I have written against the spontaneous generation of frogs in the clouds; or on the earth, out of dust and rain water commixed. Ray.

It is manifest, by this experiment, that the commixed impressions of all the colours do stir up and beget a sensation of white; that is, that whiteness is compounded of all the colours. Newton's Opticks.

COMMI'XION. } n. f. [from commix.]
COMMI'XION. } Mixture; incorporation of different ingredients.

Were thy commixion Greek and Trojan, so
That thou could'st say, this hand is Grecian all,
And this is Trojan. Shaksp. Troil. and Cressida.

Some species there be of middle and participating natures, that is, of birds and beasts, as batts, and some few others, to be confirmed and set together, that we cannot define the beginning or end of either; there being a commixion of both in the whole, rather than adaptation or cement of the one unto the other. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

COMMI'XTURE. n. f. [from commix.]

1. The act of mingling; the state of being mingled; incorporation; union in one mass.

the air working little upon them. Bacon.

2. The mass formed by mingling different things; composition; compound.

Fair ladies, mask'd, are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown,
Dis-mask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn. Shakespeare.

My love and fear glew'd many friends to thee;
And now I fall, thy tough commixtures melt, Impairing Henry, strength'ning misprond York. Shakespeare.

There is scarcely any rising but by a commix-ture of good and evil arts. Bacon.

All the circumstances and respect of religion and state intermixed together in their commixtures, will better become a royal history, or a concillable than a single life. Wotton.

COMMODE. n. f. [French.] The headdrefs of women.

Let them reflect how they would be affected, should they meet with a man on horseback, in his breeches and jack-boots, dressed up in a com-mode and a night-trail. Spectator.

She has continued to shew her principles by the setting of her commode; so that it will be impossible for any woman that is disaffected to be in the fashion. Addison's Freeholder.

She, like fume pensive statesman, walks demure,
And smiles, and hugs, to make destruction sure;

Or under high comnodes, with looks erect,
Barefac'd devours, in gaudy colours deck'd.

Clanville.

sider the price of the two simple bodies; consider again the dignity of the one above the other in use; then see if you can make a compound, that will save more in price than it will lose in dignity of the use. Bacon's Physical Mon.

As man is a compound and mixture of flesh
as well as spirit. South's Sermons.

Love why do we one passion call,
When 'tis a compound of them all;

Where hot and cold, where sharp and sweet,
In all their equipages meet? Swift.

COMPOUNDABLE. adj. [from compound.]
Capable of being compounded.COMPOUNDER. n. f. [from To compound.]1. One who endeavours to bring parties

TO COMPREHE'ND. v. a. [comprehendo, Latin.]1. To comprise; to include; to contain;
to imply.

If there be any other commandment, it is briefly comprehended in this saying, namely,
Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. Rom.

It would be ridiculous to grow old in the study of every necessary thing, in an art which comprehends to many several parts. Dryden.

2. To contain in the mind; to understand; to conceive.

Rome was not letter by her Horace taught,
Than we are here to comprehend his thought.
Waller.

'Tis unjust, that they who have not the least notion of heroic writing, should therefore condemn the pleasure which others receive from it, because they cannot comprehend it. Dryden.

COMPREHENSIBLE. adj. [comprehensibilis, French; comprehensibilis, Latin.]1. Intelligible; attainable by the mind; conceivable by the understanding.

The horizon sets the bounds between the ential modes and properties of it; so body, in its comprehension, takes in solidity, figure, quantity, mobility. Watts's Logick.

2. Summary; epitome; compendium; abstract; abridgment in which much is comprised.

If we would draw a short abstract of human happiness, bring together all the various ingredients of it, and digest them into one prescription, we must at last fix on this wise and religious aphorism in my text, as the sum and compre- hension of all. Rogers.

3. Knowledge; capacity; power of the mind to admit and contain many ideas
at once.

You give no proof of decay of your judgment, and comprehension of all things, within the compass of a human understanding. Dryden.

4. [In rhetoric.] A trope or figure, by which the name of a whole is put for a part, or that of a part for the whole, or a definite number for an indefinite. Harris.

COMPRESHENSIVE. adj. [from comprehend.]

1. Having the power to comprehend or understand many things at once.

He must have been a man of a most wonderful comprehensive nature, because he has taken into the compass of his Canterbury Tales the various manners and humours of the whole English nation in his age; not a single character has escaped him. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

His hand unstain'd, his uncorrupted heart,
His comprehensive head; all interests weigh'd,
All Europe sav'd, yet Britain not betray'd.

Pope's Epistles.

Henceforth, nor too much disapprove my own.

Milton.

This shows how useful you have been,
To bring the king's concernments in. Hudibras.
Yet when we're sick, the doctor's fetch in haste,

Leaving our great concernment to the last.

Denham.

When my concernment takes up no more room or compass than myself, then, so long as I know where to breathe and to exist, I know also where to be happy. South.

He that is wise in the affairs and concernments of other men, but careless and negligent of his own, that man may be said to be busy, but he is not wise. Tillotson.

Our spiritual interests, and the great concern-ments of a future state, would doubtless recur often. Aterbury.

Propositions which extend only to the present life, are small, compared with those that have influence upon our everlasting concernments.

Watts on the Mind.

2. Relation; influence.

Sir, 'tis of near concernment, and imports
No less than the king's life and honour. Denham.

He justly fears a peace with me would prove
Of ill concernment to his haughty love. Dryden.

CONCOCTION. n. f. [from concoct.] Digestion in the stomach; maturation by heat; the acceleration of any thing toward purity and perfection.

This hard roasting is between concoction and a simple maturation. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The constant notion of concoction is, that it should signify the degrees of alteration of one body into another, from crudity to perfect concoction, which is the ultimity of that action or process. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

He, though he knew not which foul spake, Because both meant, both spake the same, Might therefore a new concoction take, And part far purer than he came. Dryden.

CONCOLOUR. adj. [concolor, Latin.] Of one colour; without variety.

In concolour animals, and such as are confined unto the same colour, we measure not their beauty thereby; for if a crow or blackbird grow white, we account it more pretty. Brown.

CONCOMITANCE. } n. f. [from concomi-
CONCOMITANCY. } tor, Lat.] Substistence together with another thing.

The secondary action subsisteth not alone, but in concomitancy with the other; so the nostrils are useful for respiration and smelling, but the principal use is smelling. Brown.

To argue from a concomitancy to a causality, is not infallibly conclusive. Glanville.

CONCOMITANT. adj. [concomitans, Lat.] Conjoined with; concurrent with; coming and going with, as collateral, not causative or consequential.

The spirit that furthereth the extension or dilatation of bodies, and is ever concomitant with potosity and dryness. Bacon.

It has pleased our wise Creator to annex to several objects, as also to several of our thoughts, a concomitant pleasure; and that in several objects, to several degrees. Locke.

CONCOMITANT. n. f. Companion; person or thing collaterally connected.

These effects are, from the local motion of the air, a concomitant of the sound, and not from the sound. Bacon.

He made him the chief concomitant of his heir apparent and only son, in a journey of much adventure. Wotton.

In consumptions, the preternatural concomitants an universal heat of the body, a torminous diarrhoea, and hot distillations, have all a corrosive quality. Harvey on Consumptions.

The other concomitant of ingratitude is hardheartedness, or want of compassion. South.

Honour flasks around, Wild faring, and his sad concomitant Despair, of abject look. Philips.

Reproach is a concomitant to greatness, as flattery and invectives were an essential part of a Roman triumph. Addison.

And for tobacco, who could bear it?
Filly concomitant of claret! Prior.
Where antecedents, concomitants and consequents, causes and effects, signs and things signified, subjects and adjuncts, are necessarily connected with each other, we may infer. Watts.

Had I power, I should Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace. Shakespeare.

What concord hath Christ with Belial? 2 Cor.

One shall rise
Of proud ambitious heart, who not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd
Over his brethren, and quite dispossess
Concord and law of nature from the earth. Milt.

Unsafe within the wind
Of such commotion; such as, to set forth
Great things by small, if nature's concord broke,
Among the constellations war were sprung. Milt.

Kind concord, heavenly born! whose blissful reign

Holds this vast globe in one surrounding chain;
Soul of the world! Tickel.

2. A compact.

It appeareth by the concord made between Henry and Roderick the Irish king. Davies

3. Harmony; consent of sounds.

The man who hath not music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons. Shakespeare.

4. Principal grammatical relation of one word to another, distinct from regimen.

Have those who have wit about declensions, concordis, and syntaxes, lost their labour? Locke.

CONCORDANCE. n. f. [concordantia, Lat.]

1. Agreement.

2. A book which shows in how many texts of scripture any word occurs.

I shall take it for an opportunity to tell you, how you are to rule the city out of a concordance.
South's Sermons, Dedication.

Some of you turn over a concordance, and there, having the principal word, introduce as much of the verse as will serve your turn. Swoff.
An old concordance found long since. Swoff.

3. A concord in grammar; one of the three chief relations in speech. It is not now in use in this sense.

After the three concordances learned, let the master read unto him the epistles of Cicero. Ascham.

CONCRESCENCE. n. f. [from concreresco, Lat.] The act or quality of growing by the union of separate particles.

Seeing it is neither a substance perfect, nor inchoate, how any other substance should thence take concrecence, hath not been taught. Raleigh.

To CONCRETE. v. n. [concreresco, Lat.]

To coalesce into one mass; to grow by the union and cohesion of parts.

The mineral or metallick matter, thus concreting with the crystalline, is equally diffused throughout the body of it. Woodward.

When any saline liquor is evaporated to a cuticle, and let cool, the salt concretes in regular figures; which argues that the particles of the salt, before they concreted, floated in the liquor at equal distances, in rank and file. Newton.

The plague of some who died of the plague could not be made to concrete, by reason of the putrefaction begun. A bathurst.

To CONCRETATE. v. a. To form by concretion; to form by the coalition of scattered particles.

That there are in our inferior world divers bodies, that are concreted out of others, is beyond all dispute; we see it in the meteors. Hale.

CONCRETE. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Formed by concretion; formed by coalition of separate particles into one mass.

The first concrete state, or consistent surface, of the chaos, must be of the same figure as the last liquid state. Burton.

2. [In logic.] Not abstract: applied to a subject.

A kind of mutual commutation there is, whereby those concrete names, God and man, when we speak of Christ, do take interchangeably one another's room; so that, for truth of speech, it killeth not whether we say that the son of God hath created the world, and the son of man by his death hath saved it; or else that the son of man did create, and the son of God died to save, the world. Hooker.

Concrete terms, while they express the quality, do also either express, or imply, or refer to some subject to which it belongs; as white, round, long, broad, wise, mortal, living, dead: but these are not always noun adjectives in a grammatical sense; for a knave, a fool, a philosopher, and many other concretes, are substantives, as well as knavery, folly, and philosophy, which are the abstract terms that belong to them. Watts's Logick.

CONCRETE. n. f. A mass formed by concretion; or, union of various parts adhering to each other.

It gold itself be admitted, as it must be, for a porous concrete, the proportion of void to body, in the texture of common air, will be so much the greater. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCRETELY. adv. [from concrete.] In a manner including the subject with the predicate; not abstractly.

Sin, considered not abstractedly for the mere act of obliquity, but concretely, with such a special dependence of it upon the will as serves to render the agent guilty. Norris.

CONCRETENESS. n. f. [from concrete.] Coagulation; collection of fluids into a solid mass. Dict.

CONCUPISCENCE. n. f. [concupiscentia, Latin.] Irregular desire; libidinous wish; lust; lechery.

We know even secret concupiscentie to be sin;
 and are made fearful to offend, though it be but in a wandering cogitation. Hooker.

In our faces the evident signs
 Of foul concupiscentie; whence evil store,
 Ev'n shame, the last of evils. Milton.

Nor can they say, that the difference of climate inclines one nation to concupiscentie and sensual pleasures, another to blood-thirstiness: it would discover great ignorance not to know, that a people has been overrun with recently invented vice. Bentley's Sermons.

CONCUPISCENT. adj. [concupiscentis,
 Lat.] Libidinous; lecherous.

He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
 To his concupiscent intemperate lust, Release my brother! Shakespeare.

 Though reason favour them, yet sense can hardly allow them; and, to satisfy, both these must concur. Temple.

2. To agree; to join in one action, or opinion.
 Acts which shall be done by the greater part of my executors, shall be as valid and effectual as if all my executors had concurr'd in the same.
Swift's Last Will.

3. It has with before the person with whom one agrees.

It is not evil simply to concur with the heathens, either in opinion or action; and that conformity with them is only then a disgrace, when we follow them in that they do amiss, or generally in that they do without reason. Hooker.

4. It has to before the effect to which one contributes.

Their affections were known to concur to the most desperate counsels. Charendon.

Extremes in nature equal good produce,
 Extremes in man concur to general use. Pope.

5. To be united with; to be conjoined.

To have an orthodox belief, and a true profession, concurring with a bad life, is only to deny Christ with a greater solemnity. South.

Testimony is the argument; and, if fair probabilities of reason concur with it, this argument hath all the strength it can have. Tillotson.

6. To contribute to one common event with joint power.

When outward causes concur, the idle sennet seized by this infection. Cather.

CONCURRENCE. } n. f. [from concur.]

Their concurrance in persuasion, about some material points belonging to the same polity, is not strange. Hooker, Preface.

The concurrance of the peers in that fury, can be imputed to the irreverence the judges were in.
Charendon.

Taquin the proud was expelled by an universal concurrance of nobles and people. Swift.

3. Combination of many agents or circumstances.

Struck with these great concurrances of things.
Grayson.

He views our behaviour in every concurrance of affairs, and sees us engage in all the possibilities of action. Addison.

4. Assistance; help.
 From these sublime images we collect the greatness of the work, and the necessity of the divine concurrance to it. Rogers.

5. Joint right; equal claim.
 A bishop might have officers, if there was a concurrance of jurisdiction between him and the archdeacon. Ayliffe.

CONCURRENT. adj. [from concur.]

1. Acting in conjunction; agreeing in the same act; contributing to the same event; concomitant in agency.

I join with these laws the personal presence of the king's son, as a concurrent cause of this reformation. Davies on Ireland.

For, without the concurrent consent of all these three parts of the legislature, no such law is or can be made. Hale.

This sole vital faculty is not sufficient to exterminate noxious humours to the periphery, unless the animal faculty be concurrent with it,
 to supply the fibres with animal spirits. Hartley.

All combin'd,
 Your beauty, and my impotence of mind;
 And his concurrent flame, that blew my fire;
 For still our kindred souls had one desire. Dryden.

consequent were good, if only the custom of the people of God is to be observed. Hooker.

2. Effect; that which follows an acting cause.

They were ill paid; and they were ill governed, which is always a consequent of ill payment.
Davies on Ireland.

He could see consequents yet dormant in their principles, and effects yet unborn. South.

CONSEQUENTIAL. adj. [from consequent.]

1. Produced by the necessary concatenation of effects to causes.

We sometimes wrangle, when we should debate:

A consequential ill which freedom draws;
A bad effect, but from a noble cause. Prior.

2. Having the consequences justly connected with the premises; conclusive.

Though these kind of arguments may seem obscure; yet, upon a due consideration of them, they are highly consequential and conclusive to my purpose. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

CONSEQUENTIALLY. adv. [from conse- quential.]

1. With just deduction of consequences;

CONSPURCATION. n. f. [from conspurco, Latin.] The act of defiling; defilement; pollution.

CONSTABLE. n. f. [comes stabuli, as it is supposed.]

1. Lord high constable is an ancient officer of the crown. The function of the constable of England consisted in the care of the common peace of the land in deeds of arms, and in matters of war. To the court of the constable and marshal belonged the cognizance of contracts, deeds of arms without the realm, and combats and blazonry of arms within it. The first constable of England was created by the Conqueror, and the office continued hereditary till the thirteenth of Henry VIII. when it was laid aside, as being so powerful as to become troublesome to the king. From these mighty magistrates are derived the inferior constables of hundreds and franchises; two of whom were ordained, in the thirteenth of Edward I. to be chosen in every hundred, for the conservation of the peace, and view of armour. These are now called high constables; because continuance of time, and increase both of people and offences, have occasioned others in every town of inferior authority, called petty constables. Besides these, we have constables denominated from particular places; as, constable of the Tower, of Dover Castle, of the Castle of Carnarvon: but these are properly castellani, or governours of castles. Cowell. Chambers.

When I came hither, I was lord high constable,
And duke of Buckingham; now poor Edward Bohun. Shakespeare.

The knave constable, had set me i' th' stocks,
i' th' common stocks, for a witch. Shakespeare.

The constable being a sober man, and an enemy to sedition, went to observe what they did. Clarendon.

2. To overrun the CONSTABLE. [perhaps from conte stable, Fr. the settled, firm, and stated account.] To spend more than what a man knows himself to be worth: a low phrase.

CONSTABLESHIP. n. f. [from constable.]

This keepership is annexed to the constableship of the castle, and that granted out in lease. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

CONSTANCY. n. f. [constantia, Latin.]

1. Immutability; perpetuity; unalterable continuance.

The laws of God himself no man will ever deny to be of a different constitution from the former, in respect of the one's constancy, and the mutability of the other. Hooker.

2. Constancy; unvaried state.

Incredible, that constancy in such a variety, such a multiplicity, should be the result of chance. Ray on the Creation.

3. Resolution; firmness; steadiness; unshaken determination.

In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant constancy has fix'd her seat;
In vain the syrens sing, the tempests beat. Prior.

4. Lasting affection; continuance of love, or friendship.

Constancy is such a stability and firmness of friendship, as overlooks and passes by lesser failures of kindness, and yet still retains the same habitual good-will to a friend. South.

5. Certainty; veracity; reality.

But all the story of the night told over,
More witnesseth than fancy's images,
And grows to something of great constancy,
But, however, strange and admirable. Shaksp.

CONSTANT. adj. [constans, Latin.]

1. Firm; fixed; not fluid.

If you take highly rectified spirit of wine, and deplegmed spirit of urine, and mix them, you may turn these two fluid liquors into a constant body. Boyle's History of Firmness.

2. Unvaried; unchanged; immutable; durable.

The world's a scene of changes, and to be constant, in nature were inconstancy. Cowley.

3. Firm; resolute; determined; immovable; unshaken.

Some shrewd contents

Now steal the colour from Bassanio's cheek:
Some dear friend dead; else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. Shakespeare's Mer. of Ven.

4. Free from change of affection.

Both loving one fair maid, they yet remained constant friends. Sidney.

5. Certain; not various; steady; firmly adherent: with to.

Now through the land his care of souls he stretch'd,
And like a primitive apostle preach'd;
Still cheerful, ever constant to his call;
By many follow'd, lov'd by most, admir'd
by all. Dryden.

He shewed his firm adherence to religion, as modelled by our national constitution; and was constant to its offices in devotion both in publick, and in his family. Addison's Freeholder.

CONSTANTLY. adv. [from constant.]

Unvariably; perpetually; certainly; steadily.

It is strange that the fathers should never appeal; nay, that they should not constantly do it. Tillotson.

TO CONSTELLATE. v. n. [constellatus, Latin.] To join lustre; to shine with one general light.

The several things which engage our affections, do, in a transcendent manner, shine forth and constellate in God. Payle.

TO CONSTELLATE. v. a. To unite several shining bodies in one splendour.

Great constitutions, and such as are constellated into knowledge, do nothing till they outdo all. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

These feathered perfections, which were divided among the several ranks of inferior natures, were fummed up and conflated in ours. Glanville.

CONSTELLATION. n. f. [from constellare.]

1. A cluster of fixed stars.

For the stars of heaven, and the confections thereof, shall not give their light. Isaiah.

The earth, the air, re-founded;

The heav'ns and all the confections rung.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

A confection is but one;

Though 'tis a train of stars. Dryden.

2. An assemblage of splendours, or excellencies.

The condition is a confection or conjuncture of all those gospel graces, faith, hope, charity, self-denial, repentance, and the rest. Hammond.

CONSTERNATION. n. f. [from consterno, Lat.] Astonishment; amazement; alienation of mind by a surprize; surprize; wonder.

They find the same holy conferment upon themselves that Jacob did at Bethel, which he called the gate of heaven. South.

The natives, dubious whom

They must obey, in conferment wait

Till rigid conquest will pronounce their liege.

Phillips.

To CONSTIPATE. v. a. [from constipare, Latin.]

1. To crowd together into a narrow room; to thicken; to condense.

We sicken soon from her contagious care, Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair. Priar.

CONTAGIOUSNESS. n. f. [from contagious.]

The quality of being contagious.

To CONTAIN. v. a. [contineo, Lat.]

1. To hold in a vessel.

There are many other things which Jesus did, the which if they should be written every one,

I suppose that even the world itself could not contain the books that should be written. John.

Gently instructed I shall hence depart,
Greatly in peace of thought, and have my fill
Of knowledge what this vessel can contain. Milton.

What thy stores contain bring forth, and pour Abundance. Milton.

2. To comprehend; to comprise.
What seem'd fair in all the world, seem'd now
Mean, or in her fann'd up, in her contain'd. Milton.

The earth,
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines. Milton.

3. To cont'prise, as a writing.
Wherefore also it is contained in the scripture. 1 Peter.

4. To restrain; to withhold; to keep within bounds.
All men should be contained in duty even ziter, without the tenour of warlike forces.

Their king's person contains the unruly people from evil occasions. Spenser.

I tell you, sirs,
If you should smile, he grows impatient.—
—Fear not, my lord, we can contain ourselves. Shakespeare.

To CONTAIN. v. n. To live in continence.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase, till I could no longer contain. Arbuthnot and Pope

CONTAINABLE. adj. [from contain.] Possible to be contained.

The air, containable within the cavity of the colipile, amounted to eleven grains. Boyle.

To CONTAMINATE. v. a. [contaminatio, Latin.] To defile; to pollute; to corrupt by base mixture.

Shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes? Shakspeare.

A base pander holds the chamber-door,
Whil'd by a slave, no gentler than a dog,
His fairest daughter is contaminated. Shakspeare.

Do it not with poison; strangle her in her bed,
Even in the bed she hath contaminated. Shakspeare.

I quickly shed
Some of his bastard blood, and in disgrace
Bespoke him thus: contaminated, base,
And misbegotten blood I spild of thine. Shakspeare.

Though it be necessitated, by its relation to flesh, to a terrestrial converse; yet 'tis, like the sun, without contaminating its beams. Glanville.

He that lies with another man's wife, propagates children in another's family for him to keep, and contaminates the honour thereof as much as in him lies. Hygiene's Purgation.

CONTAMINATION. n. f. [from contaminatio.] Pollution; defilement.

CONTEMERATED. adj. [contemeratus, Latin.] Violated; polluted. DiD.

To CONTEMN. v. a. [contemno, Lat.] To despise; to scorn; to slight; to disregard; to neglect; to defy.

Yet better thus, and known to be contemned,
Than still renowned and flattered. Shakspeare
Eve, thy contempt of life and pleasure seems
To argue in thee something more sublime
And excellent than what thy mind contemns. Milton.

Tygmation then the Tyrian sceptre sway'd,
One who contemn'd divine and human laws;
Then strife ensued. Dryden's Virg. Æneid.

CONTEMNER. n. f. [from contemno.] One that contemns; a despiser; a scorner.

He counsels him to prosecute innovators of worship, not only as contemners of the gods, but disturbers of the state. South.

To CONTEMPER. v. a. [contempero,

Latin.] To moderate; to reduce to a lower degree by mixing something of opposite qualities.

The leaves quality and temper the heat,
and hinder the evaporation of moisture. Ray.

CONTEMPERAMENT. n. f. [from contempero, Lat.] The degree of any quality as tempered to others.

There is nearly an equal temperament of the warmth of our bodies to that of the hottest part of the atmosphere. Derham.

To CONTEMPERATE. v. a. [from contemper.] To diminish any quality by something contrary; to moderate; to temper.

The mighty Nile and Niger do not only moisten and temperate the air, but refresh and humec-tate the earth. Brown.

If blood abound, let it out, regulating the patient's diet, and temperating the humours. Wisseman's Surgery.

CONTEMPERATION. n. f. [from contemperate.]

1. The act of diminishing any quality by admixture of the contrary; the act of moderating or tempering.

The use of air, without which there is no continuation in life, is not nutrition, but the temperament of fervour in the heart. Brown.

2. Proportionate mixture; proportion.

There is not greater variety in men's faces, and in the temperaments of their natural humours, than there is in their phantasies. Hale.

plor, Lat. This seems to have been once accented on the first syllable.] To consider with continued attention; to study;
to meditate.

There is not much difficulty in confining the mind to contemplate what we have a great desire to know. Watts.

CONTEMPLETE. v. n. To muse; to think studiously with long attention.

So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate. Shakspeare.

Sapor had an heaven of glass, which he tied upon, contemplating over the same as if he had been Jupiter. Peacham.

How can I consider what belongs to myself,
when I have been so long contemplating on you?
Dryden's Fervent, Preface.

CONTEMPLATION. n. f. [from contemplate.]

1. Meditation; studious thought on any subject; continued attention.

How now? what serious contemplation are you in? Shakspeare.

Contemplation is keeping the idea, which is brought into the mind, for some time actually in view. Locke.

2. Holy meditation; a holy exercise of the soul, employed in attention to sacred things.

I have breath'd a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Neustria here. Shakspeare.

3. The faculty of study: opposed to the power of action.

There are two functions, contemplation and practice, according to that general division of objects; some of which entertain our speculation, others employ our actions. South.

CONTEMPLATIVE. adj. [from contemplate.]

1. Given to thought or study; studious; thoughtful.

Fixt and contemplative their looks,
Still turning over nature's books. Denham.

2. Employed in study; dedicated to study.

I am no courtier, nor versed in state affairs:
my life hath rather been contemplative than active. Bacon.

Contemplative men may be without the pleasure of discovering the secrets of state, and men of action are commonly without the pleasure of tracing the secrets of divine art. Greiv.

3. Having the power of thought or meditation.

So many kinds of creatures might be to exercise the contemplative faculty of man. Ray.

CONTEMPLATIVELY. adv. [from contemplative.] Thoughtfully; attentively;
with deep attention.

CONTEMPLATOR. n. f. [Lat.] One employed in study; an inquirer after knowledge; a student.

In the Persian tongue the word magus imports as much as a contemplator of divine and heavenly science. Kateigh's History.

The Platonick contemplators reject both these descriptions, founded upon parts and colours.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPORARY. adj. [contemporain, Fr.]

1. Living in the same age; coetaneous.
Albert Durer was contemporary to Lucas.
Dryden's Dovesney.

2. Born at the same time.
A grove born with himself he sees,
And loves his old contemporary trees. Cowley.

3. Existing at the same point of time.
It is impossible to make the ideas of yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow, to be the same; or bring ages past and future together, and make them contemporary. Locke.

CONTEMPORARY. n. f. One who lives at the same time with another.

All this in blooming youth you have achiev'd;
Nor are your soil'd contemporaries griev'd. Dryd.
As he has been favourable to me, he will hear of his kindness from our contemporaries; for we are fallen into an age illiterate, censorious, and detracting. Dryden's Fervent, Preface.

The active part of mankind, as they do most for the good of their contemporaries, very deservingly gain the greatest share in their applauses.
Addison's Freeholder.

To CONTEMPORISE. v. a. [con and tem-por, Latin.] To make contemporary;
to place in the same age.

The indifference of their existences, contemporised into our actions, admits a further consideration. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CONTEMPT. n. f. [contemptus, Lat.]

1. The act of despising others; slight regard; scorn.
It was neither in contempt nor pride that I did not bow. Ephes.

The shame of being miserable,
Exposes men to scorn and base contempt,
Even from their nearest friends. Denham.

There is no action, in the behaviour of one man towards another, of which human nature is more impatient than of contempt; it being an undervaluing of a man, upon a belief of his utter uselessness and inability, and a spiteful endeavour to engage the rest of the world in the same slight esteem of him. South.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.
Nothing, says Longinus, can be great, the contempt of which is great. Addison.

2. The state of being despised; vileness.
The place was like to come unto contempt. 2 Mac.

CONTEMPTIBLE. adj. [from contempt.]

1. Worthy of contempt; deserving scorn.
No man truly knows himself, but he groweth daily more contemptible in his own eyes. Taylor.

From no one vice exempt,
And most contemptible to sion contempt. Pope.
2. Despised; scorned; neglected.

There is not so contemptible a plant or animal, that does not confound the most enlarged understanding. Locke.

3. Scornful; apt to despise; contemptuous. This is no proper use.

If she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the man hath a contemptible spirit. Shakespeare.

CONTEMPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from contemptible.] The state of being contemptible; the state of being despised; meanness; vileness; baseness; cheapness.

Who, by a steady practice of virtue, comes to discern the contemptibleness of baits wherewith he allures us. Decay of Piety.

Know'st thou not
Their language, and their ways? They also know,
And reason not contemptibly. Milton.

CONTEMPTUOUS. adj. [from contemptible.]
Scornful; apt to despise; using words or actions of contempt; insolent.

To neglect God all our lives, and know that we neglect him; to offend God voluntarily, and know that we offend him, casting our hopes on the peace which we trust to make at parting, is no other than a rebellious presumption, and even a contemptuous laughing to scorn and deriding of God, his laws, and precepts. Raleigh.

Some much averfe I found, and wond'rous harsh,
Contemptuous, proud, set on revenge and spite. Milt. Agon.

Rome, the proudest part of the heathen world, entertained the most contemptuous opinion of the Jews. Asterbury.

CONTEMPTUOUSLY. adv. [from contemptuous.]
With scorn; with despite;
scornfully; despitefully.

I throw my name against the bruising stone,
Trampling contemptuously on thy diadem. Shaksf.
The apostles and most eminent christians were poor, and used contemptuously. Taylor.

If he governs tyrannically in youth, he will be treated contemptuously in age; and the baser his enemies, the more intolerable the affront. L'Esrange.

A wise man would not speak contemptuously of a prince, though out of his dominions. Tillotson.

CONTEMPTUOUSNESS. n. f. [from contemptuous.]

Whether they live or die. Shakespeare's Marbeth.

Distrels not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land. Deut.

2. To vie; to act in emulation.

You sit above, and see vain men below
Content for what you only can bestow. Dryden.

3. It has for before the ground or cause of contention.

The question which our author would contend for, if he did not forget it, is, what persons have a right to be obeyed. Locke.

4. Sometimes about.
He will find that many things he fiercely contended about were trivial. Decay of Piety.

5. It has with before the opponent,
Vol. I.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light.
Shakespeare's Henry VI

If we consider him as our Maker, we cannot contend with him. Temple.

6. Sometimes against.

In ambitious strength I did Content against thy valour. Shakespeare

To CONTE'ND. v. a. To dispute any thing; to contend.

Their airy limbs in sports they exercise,
And on the green contend the wrestler's prize. Dryden's Aeneid

A time of war at length will come,
When Carthage shall contend the world with Rome. Dryden.

Thus low we lie,
Slut from this dly and that contended sky. Dryd.

CONTE'NDENT. n. f. [from contend.] Antagonist; opponent; champion; combatant. Not used.

In all notable changes and revolutions, the contentors have been still made a prey to the third party. L'Esrange.

CONTE'NDEA. n. f. [from contend.] Combatant; champion.

The contentors for it look upon it as undeniable. Locke.

Those disputes often arise in good earnest, where the two contentors do really believe the different propositions which they support. Watts.

CONTE'NT. adj. [contentus, Lat.]

1. Satisfied, so as not to repine; easy, though not highly pleased.

Born to the spacious empire of the Nine,
One could have thought she should have been content Dryd.

To manage well that mighty government. Locke.
Who is content, is happy.

A man is perfectly content with the state he is in, when he is perfectly without any uneasiness. Locke.

Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,
Content with science in the vale of peace. Pope.

2. Satisfied, so as not to oppose.

Submit you to the people's voices,
Allow their officers, and be content
To suffer lawful censure. Shakespeare.

To CONTE'NT. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To satisfy, so as to stop complaint; not to offend; to appease, without plenary happiness or complete gratification.

Content thyself with this much, and let this satisfy thee, that I love thee. Sidney.

Great minds do sometimes content themselves to threaten, when they could destroy. Tillotson.
Do not content yourselves with obscure and confused ideas where clearer are to be attained. Watts's Logic.

2. To please; to gratify.

Is the adder better than the eel
Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shaksf.

It doth much content me,
To hear him so inclin'd. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

If a man to temper his actions, as in some one of them he doth content every faction, the music of praise will be fuller. Bacon.

Wheat is contented with a meaner earth, and contenting with a suitable gain. Carew.

CONTE'NT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Moderate happiness; such satisfaction as, though it does not fill up desire, appeases complaint.

Nought 's had, all 's spent,
Where our desire is got without content. Shaksf.

One thought content the good to be enjoy'd;
This every little accident destroy'd. Dryden.

A wife content his even soul secur'd;
By want not shaken, nor by wealth allur'd. Smith on Philips.

2. Acquiescence; satisfaction in a thing unexamined.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for drest:
Their praise is hid—the stile is excellent;
The fente they humbly take upon content. Pope.

3. [from contentus, contained.] That which is contained, or included, in any thing.

Though my heart's content firm love doth bear,
Nothing of that shall from mine eyes appear. Shakespeare.

Scarcely any thing can be determined of the particular contents of any single mass of ore by mere inspection. Woodward.

Experiments are made on the blood of healthy animals: in a weak habit serum might afford other contents. Arbuthnot.

4. The power of containing; extent; capacity.

This island had then fifteen hundred strong ships of great content. Bacon.

It were good to know the geometrical content, figure, and situation of all the lands of a kingdom, according to natural bounds. Grant.

5. That which is comprised in a writing.
In this sense the plural only is in use.

I have a letter from her,
Of such contents as you will wonder at. Shakespeare.

I shall prove these writings not counterfeit,
but authentick; and the contents true, and worthy of a divine original. Greav's Cosmologia.

The contents of both books come before those of the first book, in the thread of the story. Addison's Spectator.

CONTENTA'TION. n. f. [from content.]
Satisfaction; content. Out of use.

I seek no better warrant than my own conscience, nor no greater pleasure than mine own contentation. Sidney.

Fourteen years space, during the minority of Gordianus, the government was with great applause and contentation in the hands of Mithreus, a pedant. Bacon.

The shield was not long after incrusted with a new rust, and is the same, a cut of which hath been engraved and exhibited, to the great contentation of the learned. Arbuthnot and Pope.

CONTE'NTED. participial adj. [from content.] Satisfied; at quiet; not repin-ing; not demanding more; easy, though not plenary happy.

Barbarossa, in hope by sufferance to obtain another kingdom, seem'd contented with the answer. Knox's History.

Dream not of other worlds,
Contented that thus far has been reveal'd,
Not of earth only, but of heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

If he can defy
Some nobler foe approach, to him he calls,
And begs his fate, and then contented falls. Denham.

To distant lands Vertumnus never roves,
Like you contented with his native groves. Pope.

CONTE'NTEDNESS. n. f. [from contented.]
State of satisfaction in any lot.

Angling was, after tedious study, a calmer of unquiet thoughts, a moderator of passions, a procurer of contentedness. Walton's Angler.

CONTE'NTION. n. f. [contentio, Lat.]

1. Strife; debate; contest; quarrel; mutual opposition.

Can we with manners ask what was the difference? Shakespeare.

—Safely, I think; 'twas a contention bepublick. Shakespeare.

Avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions and strivings. Tie.

Can they keep themselves in a perpetual contention with their ease, their reason, and the:

God, and not endure a short combat with a sinful custom? Decay of Piety.

The ancients made contention the principle that reigned in the chaos at first, and then love; the one to express the divisions, and the other the union of all parties in the middle and common bond. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. Emulation; endeavour to excel.

Sons and brother at a strife?

What is your quarrel? how began it first?

—No quarrel, but a sweet contention. Shaksp.

He was not of any delicate texture; his limbs rather sturdy than dainty. Watton.

Every species, afterwards expressed, was produced from that idea, forming that wonderful texture of created beings. Dryden.

Hence 'gan relax

The ground's texture; hence Tartarian dregs,

Sulphur and nitrous spume, enkindling fierce,
Bellow'd within their darksome caves. Philips.

This apt, this wise texture of the sea,
Makes it the ships, driv'n by the winds, obey;
Whence hardy merchants sail from shore to shore. Blackmore.

CONTIGNA'TION. n. f. [from contignatio, Lat.]

1. A frame of beams joined together; a story.

We mean a porch, or cloister, or the like, of one contignation, and not in florid buildings. Watton's Architecture.

2. [In law.] A continual claim is made from time to time, within every year and day, to land or other thing, which,
in some respect, we cannot attain without danger. For example, if I be dis-seised of land, into which, though I have right into it, I dare not enter for fear of beating; it behooveth me to hold on my right of entry to the best opportunity of me and mine heir, by approaching as near it as I can, once every year as long as I live; and so I save the right of entry to my heir. Corwell.

3. It is sometimes used for perpetual.
