The don't white lark set little grace,
A short wild go d, and an ancient grace. Dryden.

12. Single beauty.

- I pass their form and every charming grace.
Dryden.
13. Ornament; flower; highest perfection.
By their hands this grace of kings must die,
If hell and treason hold their promises. Shaksp.
14. Single or particular virtue.
The king-becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stibleness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shaksp. Macbeth.
The graces of his religion prepare him for the most useful discharge of every relation of life.
Rogers.
15. Virtue physical.
O, mickle is the powerful grace that lies
In plants, herbs, stones, and their true qualities.
Shaksp.
16. The title of a duke or archbishop; formerly of the king, meaning the same as your goodness, or your clemency.
Here come I from our princely general,
To know your griefs; to tell you from his grace,
That he would give you audience. Shaksp.
High and mighty king, your grace, and those your nobles here present, may be pleased to bow your ears.
Bacon's Henry VII.
According to the usual proceeding of your grace, and of the court, with delinquents which are overtaken with error in simplicity, there was yielded unto him a deliberate, patient, and full hearing, together with a satisfactory answer to all his main objections. White.
17. A short prayer said before and after meat.
Your soldiers use him as the grace 'fore meat,
Their talk at table, and their thanks at end.
Shaksp. Coriolanus.
While grace is saying after meat, do you and your brethren take the chairs from behind the company. Swift.
Then cheerful healths, your mistress shall have place;
And what's more rare, a poet shall say grace. Pope.
- GRACE-CUP. n. f. [grace and cup.] The

He saw this gentleman, one of the properest and best graceful men that ever I saw, being of a middle age and a mean stature. Sidney
2. Virtuous; regular; chaste. Not in use.
Epicurism and luit
Make it more like a tavern or a brothel
Than a grac'd palace. Shaksp. King Lear.
- GRACEFUL. adj. [from grace.] Beautiful with dignity.
Amid' the troops, and like the leading god,
High o'er the rest in arms the graceful Turnus rode. Dryden.
Matchless his pen, victorious was his lance;
Bold in the lists, and graceful in the dance. Pope.
Yet graceful ease, and sweetness void of pride, Might hide her faults, if belles had faults to hide. Pope.
Graceful to fight, and elegant to thought,
The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught.
Young.
- GRACEFULLY. adv. [from graceful.]
Elegantly; with pleasing dignity.
Through nature and through art the rang'd,
And gracefully her subject chang'd Walking is the mode or manner of man, or of a beast; but walking gracefully implies a manner or mode superadded to that action. Watts.
- GRACEFULNESS. n. f. [from graceful.]
Elegance of manner; dignity with beauty.
His neck, his hands, his shoulders, and his breast,
Did next in gracefulness and beauty stand
To breathing figures. Dryden's Ovid.
He executed with so much gracefulness and beauty, that he alone got money and reputation.
Dryden's Dufiney.
There is a secret gracefulness of youth which accompanies his writings, though the staidness and sobriety of age be wanting. Dryden.
If hearers are amaz'd from whence Proceeds that fund of wit and sense,
Which, though her modesty would shroud,
Breaks like the sun behind a cloud;
While gracefulness its art conceals,
And yet through every motion steals. Swift.
- GRACELESS. adj. [from grace.] Void of grace; wicked; hopelessly corrupt; abandoned.
This graceless man, for furtherance of his guile,
Did court the handmaid of my lady dear.
Spenser.
Whose hap shall he to have her,
Will not for graceless be, to be ingrate. Shaksp.
In all manner of graceless and hopeless characters, some are lost for want of advice, and others for want of heed. L'Estrange.
Furnish'd for offence, he cross'd the way,
Betwixt the graceless villain and his prey. Dryd.
- GRACES. n. f. Good graces for favour is is especially remarkable, which, being but of an ordinary bigness, did creep up and down as if it had been alive. Wilkins.

- GRADUAL. adj. [graduel, French.]
Proceeding by degrees; advancing step by step; from one stage to another.
Nobler birth
Of creatures animate with gradual life,
Of growth, sense, reason, all summ'd up in man.
Milton.

Men still suppose a gradual natural progress of things; as that, from great, things and persons should grow greater, 'till at length, by many steps and ascents they come to be greated. South.

GRA'DUAL. n. f. [gradus, Latin.] An order of steps.

Before the gradual prostrate they ador'd,
The pavement kiss'd, and thus the faint implor'd.
Dryden.

GRADUA'LITY. n. f. [from gradual.] Regular progression.

This some ascribe unto the mixture of the elements, others to the graduality of opacity and light.
Brown.

GRA'DUALLY. adv. [from gradual.]

1. By degrees; in regular progression.

When the moon passes over the fixed stars, and eclipses them, your light vanishes; not gradually, like that of the planets, but all at once. Newton.

The author of our being weans us gradually from our fondness of life the nearer we approach towards the end of it.
Swift.

Human creatures are able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually.
Arbutnot.

Of greater repugnancy unto reason is that which he delivers concerning its graduation, that heated in fire, and often extinguished in oil of mars or iron, the loadstone acquires an ability to extract a nail fastened in a wall.
Brown.

3. The act of conferring academical degrees.

GRAFF. n. f. A ditch; a moat. See GRAVE.

Though the fortifications were not regular, yet the walls were good, and the graff broad and deep.
Clarndon.

GRAFF. } n. f. [grasse, French.] A small

GRAFT. } branch inserted into the stock of another tree, and nourished by its sap, but bearing its own fruit; a young cion.

God gave unto man all kinds of seeds and graffs of life; as the vegetative life of plants, the sensual of beasts, the rational of man, and the intellectual of angels.
Raleigh.

It is likely, that as in fruit-trees the graff maketh a greater fruit, so in trees that bear no fruit it will make the greater leaves.
Bacon.

'Tis usual now an inmate graff to see
With insolence invade a foreign tree.
Dryden.

If you cover the top with clay and horse-dung, in the same manner as you do a graff, it will help to heel the sooner.
Mortimer.

Now the cleft rind inserted graffs receives,
And yields an offspring more than nature gives.
Pope.

TO GRAFF. } v. a. [graffer, French.]

TO GRAFT. } 1. To insert a cion or branch of one tree into the stock of another.

His growth is but a wild and fruitless plant;
I'll cut his barren branches to the stock,
And graff you on to bear. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

With his pruning hook disjoin
Unbearing branches from their head,

Her royal stock graff with ignoble plants. Shakspeare.

5. To join one thing so as to receive support from another.

This resolution against any peace with Spain is a new incident graffed upon the original quarrel, by the intrigues of a faction among us. Swift.

May one kind grave unite each hapless name,
And graff my love immortal on thy fame. Pope.

TO GRAFF. } v. n. To practise infition.

In March is good graffing the skilful do know,
So long as the wind in the east do not blow;
From moon being changed, 'till past be the prime,
For graffing and cropping is very good time.
Tuffin.

To have fruit in greater plenty the way is to graff not only upon young stocks, but upon divers boughs of an old tree; for they will bear great numbers of fruit; whereas, if you graff but upon one stock, the tree can bear but few.
Bacon.

GRA'FTER. n. f. [from graff or graff.]

One who propagates fruit by graffing.

I am informed, by the trials of the most skilful graffers of these parts, that a man shall seldom fail of having cherries borne by his graff the same year in which the infition is made. Evelyn.

GRAIL. n. f. [from grêle, French.] Small particles of any kind.

Hereof this gentle knight unwetted was,
And, lying down upon the sandy grails,
Drank of the stream as clear as crystal glass.
Spenser.

GRAIN. n. f. [graine, French; granum, Latin; grano, Italian, has all the following significations.]

1. A single seed of corn.

Look into the seeds of time,
And say which grain will grow, and which will not.
Shakspeare.

His reasons are as two grains of wheat hid in two bussils of chaff. Shakspeare. Merch. of Venice.

Let them pronounce the sleep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to languish,
But with a grain a day I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

Many of the ears, being six inches long, had sixty grains in them, and none less than forty.
Mortimer.

2. Corn.

As it elbs, the loedsman
Upon the sime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakspeare.

Pales no longer swell'd the teeming grain,
Nor Phœbus fed his oxen on the plain. Dryden.

'Tis a rich soil, I grant you; but oftener covered with weeds than grain.
Collier on Fame.

3. The feed of any fruit.

4. Any minute particle; any single body.
Thou exist'st on many thousand grains
That issue out of dust. Shakspeare.

By intelligence
And proofs as clear as founts in July, when We see each grain of gravel. Shakspeare.

5. The smallest weight, of which in physics twenty make a scruple, and in Troy weight twenty-four make a penny-weight; and so named because it is supposed of equal weight with a grain of corn.

Unity is a precious diamond, whose grains as they double, twice double in their value.
Holyday.

They began at a known body, a barley-corn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which arithet, being multiplied, to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds.
Holder.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, weighing severally seven drachms, in the air; the balance in the water weighing only four drachms and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drachms and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon.

His brain
Outweigh'd his rage but half a grain. Hudb.

6. Any thing proverbially small.

For the whole world before thee is as a little grain of the balance.
Wifson.

It is a sincerely pliable, ductile temper, that neglects not to make use of any grain of grace.
Hammond.

The ungrateful person lives to himself, and subsists by the good nature of others, of which he himself has not the least grain.
Scott.

7. GRAIN of Allowance. Something indulged or remitted; something above or under the exact weight.

He, whose very best actions must be seen with grains of allowance, cannot be too mild, moderate, and forgiving.
Aldison.

I would always give some grains of allowance: to the sacred science of theology.
Watson.

8. The direction of the fibres of wood, or other fibrous matter.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the found pine, and divert his grain
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Shakspere.

9. The body of the wood as modified by the fibres.

The beech, the swimming alder, and the plane,
Hard box, and linden of a softer grain. Dryden.

10. The body considered with respect to the form or direction of the constituent particles.

GRANGE. n. f. [grange, French.] A farm: generally a farm with a house at a distance from neighbours.

One, when he had got the inheritance of an unlucky old grange, would needs fell it; and, to draw buyers, proclaimed the virtues of it: nothing ever thrived on it, faith he; the trees were all blasted, the swine died of the measles, the cattle of the murrain, and the sheep of the rot; nothing was ever reared there, not a duckling or a goose. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

At the moated grange resides this dejected Mariana. Shaksp.

The loose unletter'd hinds,
 When for their teeming flocks and granges full
 In wanton dance they praise the bounteous Pan. Milton.

If the church was of their own foundation, they might chuse, the incumbent being once dead, wether they would put any other therein; unless, perhaps, the said church had people belonging to it; for then they must still maintain a curate; and of this sort were their granges and priories. Chyliffe.

GRAN'ITE. n. f. [granit, French, from granum, Latin; because consisting as it were of grains, or small distinct particles.] A stone composed of separate and very large concretions, ruddy compacted together; of great hardness, giving fire with steel; not fermenting with acids, and imperfectly calcinable in a great fire. The hard white granite with black spots, commonly called moorstone, forms a very firm, and though rude, yet beautifully variegated mass. It is found in immense strata in Ireland, but not used there. In Cornwall it is found in prodigious masses, and brought to London, for the steps of publick buildings. Hard red granite, variegated with black and white, now called oriental granite, is valuable for its extreme hardness and beauty, and capable of a most elegant polish. Hill on Fossils.

The queen of learning gravelly smiles. Swift.

A formal story was very gravelly carried to his excellency, by some zealous members. Swift.
Is 't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look, and gravelly plead? Young.

2. Without gaudiness or show.

GRAVENESS. n. f. [from grave.] Seriousness; solemnity and sobriety of behaviour.

Youth no less becomes
The light and careless livery that it wears,
Than settled age his fables, and his weeds
Importing health and graveness. Shakspeare.
But yet beware of counsels when too full;
Number makes long disputes and graveness dull. Denham.

GRAVEOLENT. adj. [graveolens, Latin.] Strong scented.

GRAVER. n. f. [graveur, French; from grave.]

1. One whose business is to inscribe or carve upon hard substances; one who copies pictures upon wood or metal to be impressed on paper.

If he makes a design to be grav'd, he is to remember that the gravers dispose not their colours as the painters do; and that, by consequence, he must take occasion to find the reason of his design in the natural shadows of the figures, which he has dispos'd to cause the effect. Dryd.

2. The style or tool used in gravings.

With all the care wherewith I tried upon it the known ways of softening gravers, I could not soften this. Boyle.

The toilsome hours in different labour slide,
Some work the file, and some the graver guide.
Cay's Fan.

GRAVIDITY. n. f. [gravidus, Latin.]

Women, obstructed, have not always the fore-mentioned symptoms: in those the signs of gravity and obstructions are hard to be distinguished in the beginning. Arbuthnot on Diet.

GRAVING. n. f. [from grave.]

Carved work.

Skillful to work in gold; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him. 2 Chronicles.

To GRAVITATE. v. n. [from gravis, Latin.]

To tend to the centre of attraction.

Those who have nature's steps with care pursued,
That matter is with active force endu'd,
That all its parts magnetic pow'r exert,
And to each other gravitate, assist. Blackmore.

That subtle matter must be of the same substance with all other matter, and as much as is comprehended within a particular body must gravitate jointly with that body. Bentley.

GRAVITATION. n. f. [from gravitate.]

Act of tending to the centre.

The most considerable phenomenon belonging to the terrestrial bodies is the general action of gravitation, whereby all known bodies, in the vicinity of the earth, do tend and press towards its centre. Bentley.

When the loose mountain trembles from on high,
Shall gravitation cease, if you go by? Pope.

GRAVITY. n. f. [gravitas, Latin; gravité, French.]

1. Weight; heaviness; tendency to the centre.

That quality by which all heavy bodies tend towards the centre, accelerating their motion the nearer they approach towards it, true philosophy has shewn to be unshakable by any hypothesis, and resolved it into the immediate will of the Creator. Of all bodies, considered within the confines of any fluid, there is a twofold gravity, true and absolute, and vulgar or comparative: absolute gravity is the whole force by which any body tends downwards; but the relative or vulgar is the excess of gravity in one body above the specific gravity of the fluid, whereby it tends downwards more than the ambient fluid doth. Quincy.

Bodies do swim or sink in different liquors, according to the tenacity or gravity of those liquors which are to support them. Brown.

Though this increase of density may at great distances be exceeding slow, yet if the elastic tone of this medium be exceeding great, it may suffice to impel bodies from the denser parts of the medium towards the rarer, with all that power which we call gravity. Newton's Opticks.

2. Atrocioufness; weight of guilt.

No man could ever have thought this reasonable, that had intended thereby only to punish the injury committed, according to the gravity of the fact. Hooker.

patience and gravity of hearing is an essential part of justice. Bacon.

Great Cato there, for gravity renown'd.

Dryden's En.

The emperors often jested on their rivals or predecessors, but their mints still maintained their gravity. Addison.

He will tell you with great gravity, that it is a dangerous thing for a man that has been used to get money, ever to leave it off. Larv.

GRAVY. n. f. The ferous juice that runs from flesh not much dried by the fire.

Meat we love half raw, with the blood trickling down from it, delicately terming it the gravy, which in truth looks more like an ichorous or raw bloody matter. Harvey on Consumptions.

There may be stronger broth made of vegetables than of any gravy soup. Arbuthnot.

GRAY. adj. [græz, Saxon; grau, Danish; graau, Dutch.]

1. White with a mixture of black.

They left me then, when the gray headed even,
Like a sad votarist in palmer's wood,
Rose from the hindmost wheels of Pæcebus' wain. Milton.

These gray and dun colours may be also produced by mixing whites and blacks, and by consequence differ from perfect whites, not in species of colours, but only in degree of luminousness. Newton.

2. White or hoary with old age.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turning to be gray; as is seen in men, though some earlier and some later; in hories, that are dappled and turn white; in old squirrels that turn grilly, and many others. Bacon's Natural History.

Thou hast neither forsaken me now I am become gray headed, nor suffer'd me to forsake thee in the late days of temptation. Walton.

Anon

Gray headed men and grave, with warriors mix'd,

Assenble. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The restoration of gray hairs to juvenility, and renewing the exhausted marrow, may be effected. Glavaille's Sceptis.

Gray headed infant! and in vain grown old!
Art thou to learn that in another's gold Lie charms resistless? Dryden's Javenal.

We most of us are grown gray headed in our dear master's service. Addison's Spectator.

Her gray hair'd synods damning books unread,

3. Dark like the opening or close of day; of the colour of ashes.

Our women's names are more gracious than their Cælia, that is, gray eyed. Comaen.

The green do often heat the ripe, and the ripe, fo heated, give fire to the green. Mortimer.

6. Not roasted; half raw.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetched analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another; as when we say the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

7. Unripe; immature; young: because fruits are green before they are ripe.

My fallad days,

When I was green in judgment, cold in blood! Shakespeare.

O charming youth, in the first op'ning page;

So many graces in so green an age. Dryden.

You'll find a difference

Between the promise of his greener days,

And these he masters now. Shakespeare.

If you would fat green geese, shut them up when they are about a month old. Mortimer.

Stubble geese at Michaelmas are seen

Upon the spit, next May produces green. King's Cookery.

GREEN. n. f.

1. The green colour; green colour of different shades.

Her mother hath intended,

That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd. Shakespeare.

But with your presence cheer'd, they cease to mourn,

And walks wear fresher green at your return. Dryden.

Cinnabar illuminated by this beam, appears of the same red colour as in day light; and if at the lens you intercept the green making and blue making rays, its redness will become more full and lively. Newton's Opticks.

Let us but consider the two colours of yellow and blue; if they are mingled together in any considerable proportion, they make a green.
Watts's Logic.

2. A grassy plain.

For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these greens before your town.
Shakspeare.

O'er the smooth enamell'd green,
Where no print of step hath been,
Follow me as I sing. Milton.

The young Emilia, fairer to be seen
Than the fair lily on the flow'ry green. Dryden.

3. Leaves; branches; wreaths.

With greens and flow'rs recruit their empty lives,
And seek fresh forage to sustain their lives.
Dryden's Virgil.

Ev'ry brow with cheerful green is crown'd;
The seats are doubled, and the bowls go round.
Dryden.

The fragrant greens I seek, my brows to bind.
Dryden.

To GREEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make green. A low word.

If the season prove exceeding piercing, which you may know by the freezing of a moistened cloth set in your greenhouse, kindle some charcoal.
Evelyn's Calendar.

Sometimes our road led us into several hollow apartments among the rocks and mountains, that look like to many natural greenhouses, as being always shaded with a great variety of trees and shrubs that never lose their verdure.
Addison.

A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangery or artificial greenhouse. Specl.

GRE'ENISH. adj. [from green.] Somewhat green; tending to green.

With goodly greenish locks, all loose, unty'd,
As each had been a bride. Spenser.

Of this order the green of all vegetables seems to be, partly by reason of the intenseness of their colours, and partly because, when they wither, some of them turn to a greenish yellow. Newton.

Shakspeare's Henry v.

GRE'ENNESS. n. f. [from green.]

1. The quality of being green; vividity; viridness.

About it grew such sort of trees, as either excellency of fruit, stateliness of growth, continual greenness or poetical fancies have made at any time famous. Silvey.

In a meadow, though the meer grass and greenness delights, yet the variety of flowers doth heighten and beautify. Ben Jonson.

My reason, which discourses on what it finds in my phantasy, can consider greenness by itself, or mellowness, or sweetness, or coldness, singly and alone by itself. Digby on Botics.

2. Immaturity; unipeness.

This prince, while yet the errors in his nature were excus'd by the greenness of his youth, which took all the fault upon itself, loved a private man's wife. Sidney.

3. Freshness; vigour.

Take the picture of a man in the greenness and vivacity of his youth, and in the latter date and declension of his drooping years, and you will scarce know it to belong to the same person.
South.

4. Newness.

GRE'ENSICKNESS. n. f. [green and sickness.] The disease of maids, so called from the paleness which it produces.

Sour eruptions, and a craving appetite, espe-

That to the greenwood shade he took his way;
For Cymon hunt'd the church. Dryden.

To GREET. v. a. [grator, Latin; gretan, Saxon.]

1. To address at meeting.

I think if men, which in these places live,
Durst look in themselves, and themselves retrieve,
They would like strangers greet themselves. Donne.

I would gladly go,
To greet my Pallas with such news below.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To address in whatever manner.

My noble partner
You greet with present grace, and great predication;
To me you speak not. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Now, Thomas Mowbray, do I turn to thee,
And mark my greeting well; for what I speak,
My body shall make good. Shaksp. Richard II.

3. To salute in kindness or respect.

My lord, the mayor of London comes to greet you
—God bless your grace with health and happy days. Shakspeare.

Now the herald lark
Left his ground nest, high tow'ring to defery
The mum's approach, and greet her with his song.
Milton.

Once had the early matrons run
To greet her of a lovely son. Milton.

The sea's our own: and now all nations greet,
With bending sails, each vessel of our fleet.
Waller.

Thus pale they meet, their eyes with fury burn:
None greets; for none the greeting will retain;
But in dumb furliness, each arm'd with care,
His foe profess, as brother of the war. Dryden.

4. To congratulate.

His lady, seeing all that chancel from far,
Approach in haste to greet his victorie. Spenser.

The king's a-bed,
And sent great largess to your officers:
This diamond he greets your wife withal,
By the name of most kind hostess. Shakspeare.

6. To meet, as those do who go to pay congratulations. Not much in use.

Your haste
Is now urg'd on you.
—We will greet the time. Shakspeare.

To GREET. v. n. To meet and salute.

These greet in silence, as the dead are wont,
And sleep in peace. Shakspeare.

Such was that face on which I dwell with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stem'd the tides to Troy;
But parting then for that detested shore,
Our eyes, unhappy! never greeted more. Pope.

GRE'ETER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who greets.

GRE'ETING. n. f. [from greet.] Salutation at meeting, or compliments at a distance.

I from him
Give you all greetings, that a king, as friend,
Can send his brother. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

GRIEF. n. f. [from grieve; griff, Welch, probably from the English.]

1. Sorrow; trouble for something past.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud;
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.

Shakspeare.

Wringing of the hands, knocking the breast, are but the ceremonies of sorrow, the pomp and ostentation of an effeminate grief, which speak not so much the greatness of the misery as the smallness of the mind.

South.

The mother was to afflict at the loss of a fine boy, who was her only son, that she did for grief of it.

Aldrich.

2. Grievance; harm. [grief, French.] Not in use.

Be factious for redress of all these griefs,
And I will set this foot of mine as far
As who goes farthest.

Shakspeare.

The king hath sent to know
The nature of your griefs, and whereupon
You conjure from the breast of civil peace
Such bold hostility?

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

3. Pain; disease. Obsolete.

GRIEVANCE. n. f. [from grief.]

1. A state of uneasiness. Out of use.

2. The cause of uneasiness. Used of such causes as are the effects of human conduct.

What remedy can be found against grievances, but to bring religion into countenance, and encourage those who, from the hope of future reward, and dread of future punishment, will be moved to justice and integrity?

Swift.

To GRIEVE. v. a. [grever, French; griever, Flemish; gravis, Latin.]

1. To afflict; to hurt.

For he doth not afflict willingly, nor grieve the children of men.

Luke.

Forty years long was I grieved with this generation.

Psalms.

It repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart.

Gen.

Grieved at the thought, he wou'd his whole endeavour

Should be to close those breaches.

Rowe.

2. To make sorrowful.

When one man kills another, thinking that he killeth a wild beast; if the same man remembrieth afterwards what he hath done, and is not grieved for the fact, in this case he hath sinned; because his not grieving is offensive unto God, though the fact were merely besides his will.

Perkins.

To GRIEVE. v. n. To be in pain for something past; to mourn; to sorrow, as for the death of friends. It has sometimes at and sometimes for before the cause of grief: perhaps at is proper before our misfortunes, and for before our faults.

Do not you grieve at this.

Shakspeare.

How didst thou grieve then, Adam, to behold

The end of all thy offspring end to sad.

With equal mind what happens let us bear;

Nor joy nor grieve too much for things beyond our care.

Dryden.

GRIEVINGLY. adv. [from grieve.] In sorrow; sorrowfully.

Grievingly, I think,

The peace between the French and us not values

The cost that did conclude it.

Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

GRIEVOUS. adj. [gravis, Latin; or from To grieve.]

1. Afflictive; painful; hard to be born.

To the flesh, as the apostle himself granteth, all affliction is naturally grievous.

Hosker.

Correction is grievous unto him that forsaketh the way, and he that hateth reproof shall die.

Proverbs.

2. Such as causes sorrow.

To own a great but grievous truth, though they quicken and sharpen the invention, they corrupt the temper.

Watts.

3. Expressing a great degree of uneasiness.

He durst not disobey, but sent grievous complaints to the parliament of the usage he was forced to submit to.

Clarendon.

4. Atrocious; heavy.

It was a grievous fault,

And grievously both Caesar answer'd it.

Crying sins I call those, which are so heinous, and in their kind to grievous, that they hasten God's judgments and call down for speedy vengeance upon the sinner.

Perkins.

5. Sometimes used adverbially in low language.

He cannot come, my lord; he's grievous sick.

Shakspeare.

GRIEVOUSLY. adv. [from grievous.]

1. It seems originally to have signified any thing below the natural size.

2. A small eel.

3. A merry creature. [Supposed from Greek; graculus festivus, Latin.]

Hard is her heart as flint or stone,

She laughs to see me pale;

And merry as a grig is grown,

And brisk as bottle-ale.

Swift.

To GRILL. v. n. [grille, a grate, French.] To broil on a grate or gridiron.

GRILLADE. n. f. [from grill.] Any thing broiled on the gridiron.

To GRILLY. v. a. [from grill.] This word signifies, as it seems, to harass; to hurt: as we now say, to roast a man, for to tease him.

For while we wrangle here and jar,
We're grilled all at Temple-bar.

Hudibras.

GRIM. adj. [grimma, Saxon.]

1. Having a countenance of terror; horrible; hideous; frightful.

The innocent prey in haste he does forsake,
Which quit from death, yet quakes in every limb,
With change of fear to see the lion look in grim.

Spenser.

Grim Saturn yet remains,
Bound in those gloomy caves with adamantire chains.

Drayton.

Thou hast a grim appearance, and thy face
Bears a command in't. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Their dear causes

Would to the bleeding and the grim alarm

Excite the mortified man. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

What if the breath that kindled those grim fires,
Awak'd, should blow them into sevenfold rage?

Milton.

Expert to turn the sway
Of battle, open when and where to close
The ridges of grim war.

Milton's Par. Lost.

He that dares to die,
May laugh at the grim face of law, and scorn

The cruel wrinkle of a tyrant brow.

Their swarthy hoists would darken all our plains,

Doubling the native horror of the war,

And making death more grim.

2. Ugly; ill-looking.

Strait stood up to him

Divine Ulysses; who with looks exceeding grave and grim,

This better check gave.

Grim visag'd war had smooch'd his wrinkl'd front.

Venus was like her mother; for her father is but grim.

Shakspeare.

GRIMACE. n. f. [French, from grim.] 1. A distortion of the countenance from habit, affectation, or insulence.

He had not spar'd to shew his piques,
Against th' haranguer's politics,
With smart remarks of leering faces,
And annotations of grimaces! Hudibras.
The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate; and by a few demure looks and affected whims, set off with some odd devotional postures and grimaces, and such other little arts of dissimulation, cunning men will do wonders. South's Sermons.
The buffoon ape, with grimaces and gambols, carried it from the whole field. L'Esrange.
The French nation is addicted to grimace. Spectator.

2. Air of affectation.

Vice in a vizzard, to avoid grimace,
Allows all freedom, but to see the face. Granville.

GRIMALKIN. n. f. [gris, French, gray, and malin, or little Moll. Gray little woman.] The name of an old cat.

Grimalkin, to domestick vermin sworn
An everlasting foe; with watchful eye
Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice Sure ruin. Philips.

GRIME. n. f. [from grim.] Dirt deeply infused; fulying blackness not easily cleansed.

Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing so clean kept; for why? She sweats: a man may go over shoes in the grime of it. Shakspeare.

Collow is the word by which they denote black grime of burnt coals or wood. Woodward.

To GRIME. v. a. [from the noun.] To dirt; to fuly deeply.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakspeare.

GRIMLY. adv. [from grim.]

1. Horribly; hideously; terribly.

We've landed in ill time: the skies look grimly,

And threaten present blusters. Shakspeare.

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid;
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous prize,

Nor envy'd Jove his sunshine and his skies. Addison's Cato.

2. Sourly; fullenly.

The augurs
Say they know not; they cannot tell; look grimly,

And dare not speak their knowledge. Shakspeare.

GRIMNESS. n. f. [from grim.] Horror;
frightfulness of visage.

To GRIN. v. n. [grinnen, Saxon; grinnen, grinden, Dutch, undoubtedly of the same origin with To grind, as we now say to grind the teeth; grincer, French.]

1. To set the teeth together and withdraw the lips either in anger or in mirth.

Death, death! oh, amiable, lovely death!
Come grin on me, and I will think thou smil'st. Shakspeare.

What valour were it, when a cur doth grin,
For one to trust his hand between his teeth,
When he might spurn him with his foot away. Shakspeare.

It was no unpleasant entertainment to me to see the various methods with which they have attacked me; some with piteous moans and outeries, others grinning, and only shewing their teeth. Stillingfleet.

A lion's hide he wears:
About his shoulders hangs the shaggy skin;
The teeth and gaping jaws fiercely grin. Dryden.

They neither could defend, nor can pursue;
But grinn'd their teeth, and cast a helpless view. Dryden.

Madness, we fancy, gave an ill-tim'd birth
To grinning laughter, and to frantic mirth. Prior.

Fools grin on fools, and Stoicklike support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court. Young.

2. To fix the teeth as in anguish.

I like not such grinning honour as fir Walter hath: give me life, which if I can save, so; if not, honour comes unlook'd for, and there's an end. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

GRIN. n. f. [from the verb.] The act of closing the teeth and showing them.

He laughs at him: in's face too.

—O you mistake him; 'twas an humble grin,
The fawning joy of courtiers and of dogs. Dryd.

The muscles were so drawn together on each side of his face, that he shew'd twenty teeth at a grin. Addison.

Deists are effectually beaten in all their combats at the weapons of men, that is, reason and arguments; and they would now attack our religion with the talents of a vile animal, that is, grin and grimace. Watts on the Mind.

What lords are those saluting with a grin?
One is just out, and one is lately in. Young.

GRIN. n. f. [grȳn, grȳne, Saxon.] A snare; a trap.

Like a bride that hasteth to his grȳn?
Not knowing the perile. Chaucer.

The grin shall take him by the heel, and the robber shall prevail against him. Job.

To GRIND. v. a. preter. I ground; part.
pass. ground. [grindan, grunden, ground, Saxon.]

1. To reduce any thing to powder by friction; to comminute by attrition.

And whosoever shall fall on this stone, shall be broken; but on whomsoever it shall fall, it will grind him to powder. Matthew.

He that will have a cake out of the wheat, must needs tarry the grinding. Shakspeare.

What relation or affinity is there between a minute body and cogitation, any more than the greatest? Is a small drop of rain any wiser than the ocean? Or do we grind inanimate corn into living and rational meal? Bentley's Sermons.

2. To sharpen or smooth by rubbing on something hard.

Meeting with time, slack thing, said I,
Thy sith is dull; whet it, for shame!

No marvel, sir, he did reply,
If it at length deserve some blame;

But where one man would have me grind it
Twenty to one too sharp do find it. Herbert.

Against a stump his tusk the monster grinds,
And in the sharpen'd edge new vigour finds. Dryden's Fables.

3. To rub one against another.

So up he let him rise; who with grim look,
And count'nance stern, upstanding, gan to grind
His grated teeth for great disdain. Spenser.

Harsh sounds, as of a saw when it is sharpened, and grinding of one stone against another, make a shivering or horror in the body, and set the teeth on edge. Bacon's Natural History.

That the stomach in animals grinds the substances which it receives, is evident from the dissection of animals, which have swallowed metals, which have been found polished on the side next the stomach. Abuthnot on Aliments.

4. To harass; to oppress.

Some merchants and tradesmen, under colour of furnishing the colony with necessaries, may not grind them so as shall always keep them in poverty. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

Another way the Spaniards have taken to grind the Neapolitans, and yet to take off the odium from themselves. Addison.

5. In the following lines, I know not whether it be not corruptly used for grinding, cutting.

Not knowing 'twas my labour, I complain
Of sudden shootings and of grinding pains,
My throws come thicker, and my cries increas'd. Dryden.

To GRIND. v. n.

1. To perform the act of grinding; to move a mill.

Fetter'd they fend thee
Into the common prison, there to grind
Among the slaves and asses. Milton's Agonistes.

2. To be moved as in the act of grinding.

Shrinking sinews start,
And smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws. Roxe.

GRINDER. n. f. [from grind.]

1. One that grinds; one that works in a mill.

2. The instrument of grinding.
His heat a solid rock, to tear unknown,
And harder than the grinder's nether stone. Sandys.

Now exhort
Thy hinds to exercise the pointed steel
On the hard rock, and give a wheely form
To the expected grinder. Philips.

3. [grind today.] The back teeth;
the double teeth.

The teeth are in men of three kinds; sharp, as the foreteeth; broad, as the back-teeth, which we call the molar-teeth, or grinders; and pointed teeth, or canine, which are between both. Bacon's Natural History.

He the raging lions confounds,
The roaring lion with his javelin wounds;
Scatters their whelps, their grinders breaks; fo they

With the old hunter starve for want of prey. Sandys.

The jaw-teeth or grinders, in Latin molars, are made flat and broad a-top, and withal somewhat uneven and rugged, that, by their knobs and little cavities, they may the better retain, grind, and commix the aliments. Ray.

Nature is at a great deal of labour to transmute vegetable into animal substances; therefore herb-eating animals, which do not ruminate, have strong grinders, and chew much. Abuthnot.

4. The teeth, in irony or contempt.

One, who at the sight of supper, open'd wide
His jaws before, and whetted grinders try'd. Dryden.

Both he brought;
He mouth'd them, and betwixt his grinders caught. Dryden.

GRINDESTONE. } n. f. [from grind and GRINDSTONE. } stone.] The stone on which edged instruments are sharpened

Such a light and metall'd dance
Saw you never yet in France;

And by the lead-men, for the nonce,
That turn round like grind stones. Ben Jonson.

Literature is the grindstone to sharpen the coul-ters, and to whet their natural faculties. Harmond on Fundamentals.

Smiths that make hinges brighten them, yet seldom file them; but grind them on a grindstone
'till bright. Newton.

GRINNER. n. f. [from grin.] He that grins.

The slightest grin
Be the winner. Addison's Spectator.

GRINNINGLY. adv. [from grin.] With a grinning laugh.

The more thou ticklest, gripes his hand the faster.
Pope.

5. To pitch; to press; to squeeze.

A wondrous way it for this lady wrought,
From lion's claws to pluck the griped prey.
Spenser.

And first the dame came rushing through the wood;
And next the famish'd hounds that fought their food,
And grip'd her flanks, and oft essay'd their jaws in blood.
Dryden's Fables.

6. To give a pain in the bowels.

Thus full of counsel to the den she went,
Grip'd all the way, and longing for a vent.
Dryden.

To GRIPE. v. n.

1. To feel the colick, to have the belly-ache.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly to those dishes which are a feast to others.
Locke.

Manna, by the bulk, figure, texture, and motion of its parts, has a power to produce the sensations of sickness, and sometimes of acute pains or gripings in us.
Locke.

2. To pinch; to catch at money meanly.

It is mean revenue, by being scattered, in the worst of times growing upon him, when others that had great ones, by gripping, made them less, and grew stark beggars.
Fell.

GRIPE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Grasp; hold; seizure of the hand or paw.

Therefore still on high
He over him did hold his cruel claws,
Threatning with greedy gripe to do him dy.
Spenser.

They put a barren sceptre in my gripe
Thence to be wench'd with an unlineal hand.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Should I
Slaver with lips, as common as the stairs
That mount the Capitol; join gripes with hands
Made hardy with hourly falsehood as with labour.
Shakspeare.

He gave me his hand,
And, with a feeble gripe, says, dear, my lord,
Command my service.
Shakspeare's Henry v.

I fell; and with my weight the helm constrain'd,
Was drawn along, which yet my gripe retain'd.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. Squeeze; pressure.

Fir'd with this thought, at once he strain'd the breast;
'Tis true, the harden'd breast resists the gripe,
And the cold lips return a kiss unripe.
Dryden.

3. Oppression; crushing power.

I take my cause
Out of the gripes of cruel men, and give it
To a most noble judge, the king my master.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

4. Affliction; pinching distress.

Adam, at the news
Heart-struck with chilling gripe of sorrow stood,
That all his senses bound!
Milton's Par. Lost.

Can'st thou bear cold and hunger? Can these limbs,
Fram'd for the tender offices of love,
Endure the bitter gripes of smarting poverty?
Orway.

5. [In the plural.] Bellyache; colick.

In the jaundice the cholera is wanting; and the icterical have a great sourness and gripes with windiness.
Fischer.

GRI'PER. n. f. [from gripe.] Oppressor; usurer; extortioner.

Others pretend zeal, and yet are profess'd usurers, grippers, monsters of men, and harpies.
Bacon on Melancholy.

GRI'PINGLY. adv. [from gripping.] With pain in the guts.

Clysters help, lest the medicine stop in the guts,
and work grippingly.
Bacon's Nat. History.

GRI'PLE. n. f. A greedy snatcher; a gripping miser.
Spenser.

GRISA'MBER. n. f. Used by Millon for ambergris.

Beasts of chase, or fowl of game,
In pastry built, or from the spit, or built,
Grissumber steam'd.
Milton's Paradise Reg.

GRISE. n. f. [See GREECE, as it should be written.] A step, or scale of steps.

Let me speak like ourself; and lay a sentence,
Which, as a grise or step, may help these lovers
Into your favour.
Shakspeare's Othello.

GRI'SKIN. n. f. [grifgin, roast meat, Irish.] The vertebrae of a hog broiled.

GRI'SLY. adj. [gruylu, Saxon.] Dreadful; horrible; hideous; frightful; terrible.

His grifly locks, long grown and unbound,
Disordered hung about his shoulders round.
Spenser.

Where I was wont to seek the honey bee,
The grifly toadstool grown there might I see.
Spenser.

My grifly countenance made others fly;
None durst come near, for fear of sudden death.
Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Back step'd those two fair angels, half amaz'd
So sudden to behold the grifly king;
Yet thus, unmov'd with fear, accost him soon.
Milton.

For that damn'd magician, let him be girt
With all the grifly legions that troop
Under the footy flag of Acheron.
Milton.

The beauteous form of fight,
Is chang'd, and war appears a grifly fight.
Dryden's Fables.

In vision thou shalt see his grifly face,
The king of terrors raging in thy race.
Dryden.

Thus the grifly spectre spoke again.
Close by each other laid, they press'd the ground,
Their manly bosoms pierc'd with many a grifly wound.
Dryden.

So rushes on his foe the grifly bear.
Addison.

GRIST. n. f. [gruiz, Saxon.]

1. Corn to be ground.

Get grist to the mill to have plenty in store,
Lest miller lack water.
Tusser's Husbandry.

A mighty trade this lusty miller drove;
Much grist from Cambridge to his lot did fall,
And all the corn they us'd at scholar's hall.
Miller of Tromp.

2. Supply; provision.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I, as well as they,
Must fail, if matter brings no grist.
Savil.

3. GRIST to Mill, is profit; gain.

The computation of degrees, in all matrimonial causes, is wont to be made according to the rules of that law, because it brings grist to the mill.
Ayliffe's Paragon.

GRISTLE. n. f. [griztle, Saxon.]

A cartilage; a part of the body next in hardness to a bone.

No living creatures, that have shells very hard, as oysters, crabs, lobsters, and especially the tortoise, have bones within them, but only little gristles.
Bacon's Natural History.

Lest the asperity or hardness of cartilages should hurt the oesophagus or gullet, which is tender and of a skinny substance, or hinder the swallowing of our meat, therefore the annular gristles of the windpipe are not made round, or intire circles; but where the gullet touches the windpipe, there, to fill up the circle, is only a soft membrane, which may easily give way to the dilatation of the gullet.

Ray on the Creation.

GRI'STLY. adj. [from gristle.] Cartilaginous; made of gristle.

At last they spit out pieces of their lungs; it may be small grifly bits, that are eaten off from the lung-pipes.
Harvey.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebræ, as being more fit to bend, more tough, and less in danger of breaking, than if they were all one intire bone without these grifly junctures.
Mors.

Fins are made of grifly spokes, or rays connected by membranes; so that they may be contracted or extended like womens fans.
Ray.

They have a louder and stronger note than other birds of the same bigness, which have only a grifly windpipe.
Grew.

Each pipe distinguish'd by its grifly rings,
To cherish life aerial pasture brings.
Blackmore.

GRIT. n. f. [gruizta, gruizot, Saxon.]

1. The coarse part of meal.

2. Oats husked, or coarse ground.

3. Sand; rough hard particles.

Silician hole, crackling a little betwixt the teeth, yet without the least particle of grit, feels as smooth as soap.
Grew.

The sturdy pear-tree here
Will rise luxuriant, and with toughest root
Pierce the obstructing grit and resistive marle.
Philips.

4. Grits are fossils found in minute masses, forming together a kind of powder; the several particles of which are of no determinate shape, but seem the rudely broken fragments of larger masses; not to be dissolved or disunited by water, but retaining their figure, and not cohering into a mass.

One sort is a fine, dull looking, grey grit, which, if wetted with salt water, into mortar or paste, dries almost immediately, and coalesces into a hard stony mass, such as is not easily afterwards disunited by water. This is the putris peteculanus of the ancients, mixed among their cements used in buildings sunk into the sea; and in France and Italy an ingredient in their harder plasters, under the name of pozzolane. It is common on the sides of hills in Italy. Another species, which is a coarse, beautifully green, dull grit, is the chrysocholla of the ancients, which they used in folding gold, long supposed a lost fossil. It serves the purpose of soldering metals better than borax. The ferruginous black glittering grit, is the black shining sand employed to throw over writing, found on the shores of Italy.
Hill on Fossils.

GRIT'TINESS. n. f. [from gritty.] Sandiness; the quality of abounding in grit.

In fuller's-earth he could find no sand by the microscope, nor any grit'tiness.
Mortimer.

GRIT'TY. adj. [from grit.] Full of hard particles; consisting of grit.

I could not discern the unevenness of the surface of the powder, nor the little shadows let fall from the gritty particles thereof.
Newton.

GRIZELIN. n. f. [more properly gridelin. See GRIDELIN.]

The Burgundy, which is a grizelin or pale red, of all others, is furest to ripen in our climate.
Temple.

GRIZZLE. n. f. [from gris, gray; grizaille, French.] A mixture of white and black; gray.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy face?
Shakspeare.

GRIZZLED. adjr [from grizzle.] Interspersed with gray.

To the boy Cæsar, send this grizzled head.
Shakspeare.

His beard was grizzled: no.
—It was as I have seen it in his life. Shakspeare.
His hair just grizzled,
As in a green old age. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
Those grizzled locks, which nature did provide
In plenteous growth their asles eas to hide. Dryd.

GRIZZLY. adj. [from gris, gray, Fr.]
Somewhat gray.

Living creatures generally do change their hair with age, turned to be gray and white; as is seen in men, though some earlier, some later; in horses that are dappled and turn white; and in old squirrels, that turn grizzly. Bacon.

To GROAN. v. n. [gnanan, Saxon; groun, Dutch.] To breathe with a hoarse noise, as in pain or agony.

Many an heir
Of these fair edifices, for my wars,
Have I heard groan and drop. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
Men groan from out of the city, and the soul of the wounded crieth out. Job.
Repenting and groaning for anguish of spirit.
Wisdom.

So shall the world go on,
To good malignant, to bad men benign,
Under her own weight groaning. Milton.

Nothing can so peculiarly gratify the noble dispositions of humanity, as for one man to see another so much himself as to sigh his griefs and groan his pains. South.

On the blazing pile his parent lay,
Or a lov'd brother groan'd his life away. Pope.

GROAN. n. f. [from the verb.]
I. Breath expired with noise and difficulty, from pain, faintness, or weariness.

Alas, poor country,
Where sighs and groans, and shrieks that rend the air,
Are made, not mark'd! Shakspeare's Macbeth.
I led to slaughter, and to slaughter leave;
And ev'n from hence their dying groans receive.
Dryden.

He see aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.
Young.

2. Any hoarse dead sound.
Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard. King Lear.

GROANFUL. adj. [groan and full.] Sad;
agonizing. Not used.
Adown he keft it with so puissant wrest,
That back again it did aloft rebound,
And gave against his mother earth a groanful found. Spenser.

GROAT. n. f. [groot, Dut. grosso, Ital.]
1. A piece valued at four pence.
2. A proverbial name for a small sum.

My mother was wont
To call them woollen vaifals, things created
To buy and sell with groats. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
I dare lay a groat,
A teitan ague is at least you lot. Dryden's Fables.
Imagine a person of quality to marry a woman much his inferior, and without a groat to her fortune. Swift.

3. GROATS. Oats that have the hulls taken off. Ainsworth.

GROCER. n. f. [This should be written grosser, from gross, a large quantity; a grocer originally being one who dealt by wholesale; or from grossus, a fig, which their present rate seems to favour.]

A grocer is a man who buys and sells tea, sugar, and spices for gain. Watts's Logick.

But still the offspring of your brain shall prove
The grocer's care, and brave the rage of Jove.
Garth.

GROCERY. n. f. [from grocer.]
Grocers
ware, such as tea, sugar, raisins, spice.

His troops being now in a country where they were not expected, met with many cart loads of wine, grocery, and tobacco. Clarendon.

GROGERAM. } n. f. [gros, grain, Fr.
GROGRAM. } grossogranus, low Latin.
GROGRAN. } Ainsworth.] Stuff woven with a large woof and a rough pile.

Certes they're neatly cloth'd: I of this mind am,
Your only wearing is your grogram. Donne.
Natolia affords great store of chamelots and grogram. Sanlys.

Some men will say this habit of John's was neither of camel's skin nor any coarse texture of its hair, but rather some finer weave of camelot, grogram, or the like. Brown.

The natural sweetness and innocence of her behaviour shot me through and through, and did more execution upon me in grogram than the greatest beauty in town had ever done in broad-
e. Addison.

Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her grogram gown. Swift.

GROIN. n. f. [of uncertain derivation.]
The part next the thigh.

Antiplexus, a sonne of Priam, threw His lance at Ajax through the picaife, which went by him, and flew,
On Leucus, wife Ulyffes' friend: His groin it fnoote. Chapman.

The fatal dart arrives,
And through the border of his buckler drives;
Pals'd through and pierc'd his groin; the deadly wound
Cast from his chariot, roll'd him on the ground.
Dryden.

GROMWELL. n. f. [litbespernum, Lat.]
Gromill or graymill. A plant. Miller.

GROOM. n. f. [grom, Dutch.]
1. A boy; a waiter; a servant.

Then called she a groom, that forth him led Into a goodly lodge. Spenser.
From Egypt's kings ambassadours they come;
Them many a squire attends, and many a groom.
Faulfax.
Think then, my soul! that death is but a groom
Which brings a taper to the outward room.
Dunn.

In the time of Edward vi. lived Sternhold, whom king Henry his father had made groom of his chamber, for turning of certain of David's psalms into verse. Peachment.

Would it thou he touch'd
By the presuming hands of faucy grooms? Dryd.
Amid' the fold he rages, nor the sheep
Their keepers, nor the grooms their bulls can keep. Dryden.

2. A young man.
I presume forto intreat this groom,
And silly maid, strom danger to redeem. Fairfax.
3. A man newly married.
By this the brides are wak'd, their grooms are dies'd;
All Rhodes is summon'd to the nuptial feast.
Dryden.

GROOVE. n. f. [from grave.]

1. A deep cavern, or hollow in mines.
He might, to avoid idleness, work in a groove or mine-pit thereabouts, which at that time was little esteemed. Boyle.

2. A channel or hollow cut with a tool.
The screw-plate is a kind of steel well tempered, with several holes in it, each less than other;
and in those holes are threads grooved inwards, which grooves fit the respective taps that belong to them. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

To GROOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cut hollow.

Of the box every joint was well grooved. Swift.

To GROPE. v. n. [gnapan, Saxon.]

Grop'd, I to find out them. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
We grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes. Izaak.

They meet with darknes in the clearest light;
And grope at noon, as if invol'd with night.

A boy was groping for eels, and laid his hand upon a snake. L'Frange.

This, no doubt, is better for men than that they should in the dark grope after knowledge; as St. Paul tells us all nations did after God. Locke.

He heard us in our course,
And with his outstretch'd arms around him grop'd.
Addison.

O truth divine! enlighten'd by thy ray,
I grope and guefs no more, but see my way.
Arbutnot.

To GROPE. v. a. To search by feeling in the dark; to feel without being able to see.

How vigilant to grope mens thoughts, and to pick out somewhat whereof they might complain. Hayward.

They have left our endeavours to grope them out by twilight, and by darknes almost to dif-cover that, whose existence is evidenced by light.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

But Strephon, cautious, never meant
The bottom of the pan to grope. Swift.

GROOPER. n. f. [from grope.] One that searches in the dark.

They can say that in doctrine, in discipline, in prayers, and in sacraments, the church of Rome bath very foul and gross corruptions. Hooker.

So far hath the natural understanding, even of sundry whole nations, been darkened, that they have not discerned, no, not gross iniquity to be sin. Hooker.

There is a vain and imprudent use of their estates, when, though it does not destroy like gross sins, yet disorders the heart, and supports it in sensuality and dulness. Lau.

3. Intellectually coarse; palpable; impure; unrefined.

To all sense 'tis gross
You love my son: invention is aham'd,
Against the proclamation of thy passion,
To say thou do it not. Shakspeare.
Examples gross as earth exhort me. Shakspeare.
Blial come last, than whom a spirit more lewd
Fell not from heaven, or more gross to love
Vice for itself. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Is not religion so perfectly good in itself, above all, in its Author, that, without the gross-ness of sensuality, we cannot but admire it? Spau.

It is a gross mistake of some men, to think that our want only and imperfections do naturally induce us to be beneficent. Smalbridge.

But she dares never boast the present hour,
So gross the cheat, it is beyond her pow'r. Young.

A cave; a cavern for coolness and pleasure.

In the remotest wood and lonely grot,

Certain to meet that worst of evils, thee, &c.

Pope.

Awful see the Egeian grot.

Pope.

GROTESQUE, adj. [grotesque, French; grottesco, Italian.]

Distorted of figure; unnatural; wildly formed.

The champagne head

Of a sheep wilder than, whose hairy sides

With thicket overgrown, grotesque and wild,

Access deny'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

There is yet a lower sort of poetry and painting which is out of nature; for a face is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and actions of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false, that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind: grotesque painting is the just resemblance of this.

Dryden.

An hideous figure of their faces they drew,

Nor lines, nor looks, nor shades, nor colours true,

And this grotesque design expos'd to publick view.

Dryden.

Palladian walls, Venetian doors,

Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors.

Pope.

GROTTA, n. f. [grotte, French; grotta,

Italian.] A cavern or cave made for coolness. It is not used properly of a dark horrid cavern.

Their careless chiefs to the cool grotto's run,

The bows of kings, to shade them from the sun.

Dryden.

This was found at the entry of the grotto in the Peak.

Woodward.

GROVE, n. f. [from grave.] A walk covered by trees meeting above.

I look'd toward Binnam, and anon methought

The wood began to move;

Within this three mile may you see it coming;

I lay, a moving grove.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

Fertunate fields, and groves, and flow'ry vales;

Thrice happy isles!

Milton.

She left the flow'ry field, and waving grove.

Blackmore.

Banish'd from courts and love,

Abandon'd truth seeks shelter in the grove.

Granville.

Can fierce passions vex his breast,

While every gale is peace, and every grove

Is melody?

Thomson's Spring.

To GROVEL, v. n. [grusile, Islandick, flat on the face. It may perhaps come by gradual corruption from ground fell.]

1. To lie prone; to creep low on the ground.

The steel-head passage wrought,

And through his shoulder pierc'd; wherewith to ground

He groveling fell, all gored in his gushing

wound.

Spenser.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's widow,

Inch as'd with all the honours of the world!

If so, gaze on, and grovel on thy face,

Until thy head be circled with the same.

Shaksp.

Oke mast and beech, and come a fruit they eat;

Groveling like swine on earth, in tow'ry fort.

Clayton.

Now they lie

Groveling and prostrate on you lake of fire.

Milton.

Upon thy belly groveling thou shalt go.

Milton.

Let us then conclude that all painters ought to require in this part of excellence: not to do it, 'tis to want courage; and not dire to shew themselves;

'tis to creep and grovel on the ground.

- From the other hill
To their fix'd station, all in bright array,
The cherubim defended, on the ground
Gliding meteorous. Milton.
A black bituminous gurge
Boils up from under ground. Milton.
And yet so nimbly he would bound,
As if he scorn'd to touch the ground. Hudibras.
2. The earth as distinguished from air or water.
I have made man and beast upon the ground. Jeremiah.
There was a dew upon all the ground. Judges.
They summ'd their wings, and soaring th' air sublime,
With clang despis'd the ground. Milton.
Too late young Turnus the delusion found;
Far on the sea, still making from the ground. Dryden's Æneid
3. Land; country.
The water breaks its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds. Hudibras.
4. Region; territory.
On heav'nly ground they stood, and from the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss. Milton
With these came they, who from the bord'ring flood
Of old Euphrates to the brook that parts
Egypt from Syrian ground, had general names Of Baalim and Ashtaroth. Milton's Parad. Lost.
5. Estate; possession.
Uneasy still within these narrow bounds,
Thy next design is on thy neighbour's grounds:
His crop invites, to full perfection grown;
Thy own seems thin, because it is thy own. Dry.
6. Land occupied.
The sea o'erflow'd my ground,
And my best Flanders mare was drown'd. Mil.
7. The floor or level of the place.
Wherefore should I smite thee to the ground?
2 Samuel.
Dagon was fallen on his face to the ground.
1 Samuel.
A multitude sit on the ground. Matthew.
Some part of the month of June, the water of this lake descends under ground, through many great holes at the bottom. Brown.
8. Dregs; lees; feces; that which settles at the bottom of liquors.
Set by them cyder, verjuice, sour drink, or grounds. Mortimer.
Some insist upon having had particular success in stopping gangrenes, from the use of the grounds of strong beer, mixed up with bread or oatmeal Sharp's Surgery.
9. The first stratum of paint upon which the figures are afterward painted.
We see the limner to begin with a rude draught, and the painter to lay his grounds with darksome colours.
When solid bodies, sensible to the feeling and dark, are placed on light and transparent grounds, as, for example, the heavens, the clouds and waters, and every other thing which is in motion, and void of different objects; they ought to be more rough, and more distinguishable, than that with which they are encompassed. Dryden.
10. The fundamental substance; that by which the additional or accidental parts are supported.
O'er his head
A well-wrought heaven of silk and gold was spread,
Azure the ground, the sun in gold thone bright.
Cowley.
Indeed it was but just that the finest lines in nature should be drawn upon the most durable ground. Pope.
Then, wrought into the soul, let virtues shine,
The ground eternal, as the work divine. Young.
11. The plain song; the tune on which descants are raised.

- Get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;
For on that ground I'll build a holy descant.
Shakespeare's Richard III.
12. First hint; first traces of an invention;
that which gives occasion to the rest.
Though jealousy of state th' invention found,
Yet love refin'd upon the former ground;
That way the tyrant had reserv'd to fly,
Pursuing hate, now serv'd to bring two lovers nigh. Dryden.
13. The first principles of knowledge.
The concords will easily be known, if the fore-grounds be thoroughly beaten in. Prof. to Acad.
Here statesmen, or of them they which can read,
May of their occupation find the grounds. Donne.
The grounds are already laid whereby that is unquestionably resolv'd; for having granted that God gives sufficient grace, yet when he co-operates most effectually, he doth it not irresistibly.
Hammond.
After evening repasts, 'till bed-time, their thoughts will be best taken up in the easy grounds of religion, and the story of scripture.
Milton on Education.
14. The fundamental cause; the true reason; original principle.
He desired the steward to tell him particularly the ground and event of this accident. Sidney.
Making happier the ground of his unhappiness,
and good news the argument of his sorrow. Sid.
The use and benefit of good laws all that live under them may enjoy with delight and comfort, albeit the grounds and first original causes from whence they have sprung be unknown. Hooker.
In the solution of the Sabbatizer's objection, my method shall be, to examine, in the first place, the main grounds and principles upon which he buildeth. White.
Thou could'st not have discern'd
Fraud in the serpent, speaking as he spake,
No ground of enmity between us known. Milton.
Nor did either of them ever think fit to make any particular relation of the grounds of their proceedings, or the causes of their misadventures.
Clarendon.
Sound judgment is the ground of writing well.
Roscommon.
Love once given from her, and plac'd in you,
Would leave no ground I ever would be true.
Dryden.
It is not easy to imagine how any such tradition could arise so early, and spread so universally, if there were not a real ground for it. Wilkins.
If it be natural, ought we not to conclude that there is some ground and reason for these fears, and that nature hath not planted them in us to no purpose. Tillotson.
Thus it appears, that suits at law are not sinful in themselves, but may lawfully be used, if there is no unlawfulness in the ground and way of management. Kestrelwell.
Upon that prince's death, although the grounds of our quarrel with France had received no manner of addition, yet this lord thought fit to alter his sentiments. Swift.
The miraculous increase of the professors of christianity was without any visible grounds and causes, and contrary to all human probability and appearance. Atterbury.
15. The field or place of action.
Here was thy end decreed, when these men rose;
And ev'n with theirs this act thy death did bring,
Or hasten'd at the least upon this ground. Dan.
16. The space occupied by an army as they fight, advance, or retire.
At length the left wing of the Arcadians began to looke ground. Sidney.
Heartless they fought, and quitted soon their
ground,
While ours with easy victory were crown'd.
Dryden
He has lost ground at the latter end of the day, by pursuing his point too far, like the prince of Conde at the battle of Benesse. Dryden.

17. The intervening space between the flyer and pursuer.
Evening mist,
Ris'n from a river, o'er the marsh glides,
And gathers ground fast at the labourer's heels, Homeward returning. Milton's Par. Lost.
Superiors think it a detraction from their merit to see another get ground upon them, and overtake them in the pursuits of glory. Addison's Spect.
Even whilst we speak our conquer comes on,
And gathers ground upon us every moment.
Addison.
18. The state in which one is with respect to opponents or competitors.
Had'st thou sway'd as kings should do,
Giving no ground unto the house of York,
They never then had sprung. Shakespeare.
If they get ground and 'vantage of the king,
Then join you with them like a rib of steel,
To make them stronger. Shaksp. Henry IV.
He will stand his ground against all the attacks that can be made upon his probity. Atterbury.
Whatever ground we may have gotten upon our enemies, we have gotten none upon our vices, the worst enemies of the two; but are even subdued and led captive by the one, while we triumph so gloriously over the other. Atterbury.
19. State of progress or recession.
I have known too many great examples of this cure, and heard of its being so familiar in Austria, that I wonder it has gained no more ground in other places. Temple.
The squirrel is perpetually turning the wheel in her cage; she runs apace, and wearies herself with her continual motion, and gets no ground.
Dryden's Disrejoyn.
20. The foil to fet a thing off.
Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to fet it off. Shaksp.
- To GROUND. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To fix on the ground.
2. To found, as upon cause, reason, or principle.
Wisdom groundeth her laws upon an infallible rule of comparison. Hooker.
The church of England, walking in the good and old way of the orthodoxal primitive fathers, groundeth the religious observation of the Lord's-day, and of other christian holidays, upon the natural equity, and not upon the letter of the fourth commandment. White.
It may serve us to ground conjectures more approaching to the truth than we have hitherto met with. Boyle.
If your own actions on your will you ground,
Mine shall hereafter know no other bound. Dry.
Some eminent spirit, having signalized his valour, becomes to have influence on the people, to grow their leader in warlike expeditions; and this is grounded upon the principles of nature and common reason, which, where prudence and courage are required, rather incite us to fly to a single person than a multitude. Swift.
3. To settle in first principles or rudiments of knowledge.
Being rooted and grounded in love. Eph.
- GROUND. The pret. and part. pass. of grind.
How dull and rugged, ere 'tis ground
And polish'd, looks a diamond. Hudibras.
- GROUND is much used in composition for that which is next the ground, or near the ground.
- GR'OUND-ASH. n. f. A saplin of ash taken from the ground; not a branch cut from a tree.
A lance of tough ground-ash the Trojan threw,
Rough in the rind, and knotted as it grew. Dry.
Some cut the young ashes off about an inch above the ground, which causes them to make very large bait shoots, which they call ground-ah. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GRO'UND-BAIT. n. f. [from ground and bait.] A bait made of barley or malt boiled; which, being thrown into the place where you design to angle, sinks to the bottom, and draws the fish to it.

Take the depth of the place where you mean after to cast your ground-bait, and to fish. Wal.

GRO'UND-FLOOR. n. f. [ground and floor.] The lower part of a house.

GRO'UND-IVY. n. f. [hedera terrestris, Latin.] Alehoof, or tunhoof.

Alehoof or ground-ivy is, in my opinion, of the most excellent use and virtue of any plants among us. Temple.

GRO'UND-OAK. n. f. [ground and oak.] If the planting of oaks were more in use for underwoods, it would spoil the cooper's trade for the making of hoops, either of hael or ah; because one hoop made of the young shoots of a ground-oak, would outlast six of the best ah. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PINE. n. f. [cbamapitys, Latin.] A plant.

The whole plant has a very singular smell, resembling that of resin; whence its name ground-pine. It grows on dry and barren hills, and in some places on the ditch banks by road sides. Hill.

GRO'UND-PLATE. n. f. [In architecture.] The outermost pieces of timber lying on or near the ground, and framed into one another with mortises and tenons. In these also are mortises made to receive the tenons of the joists, the summer and girders; and sometimes the trimmers for the stair-case and chimney-way, and the binding joist. Harris.

In the orthographical schemes there should be a true delineation, if it be a timber-building, of the several fizes of the ground plates, break timbers, and beams. Mortimer.

GRO'UND-PLOT. n. f.

1. The ground on which any building is placed.

Wretched Gynecia, where can't thou find any small ground-plot for hope to dwell upon? Sidney.

A ground plot square five hives of bees contains; Emblems of industry and virtuous gains. Harte.

2. The ichnography of a building

GRO'UND-RENT. n. f. Rent paid for the privilege of building on another man's ground.

A foot in front, and thirty-three five sevenths deep, would bring in a ground-rent of five pounds. Arbuthnot on Coins.

The site was neither granted him, nor giv'n; 'Twas nature's, and the ground-rent due to Heav'n. Harte.

GRO'UND-ROOM. n. f. A room on the level with the ground.

I beseech'd him hereafter to meditate in a ground-room; for that otherwise it would be impossible for an artist of any other kind to live near him. Tatler.

GRO'UNDEDLY. adv. [from grounded.] Upon firm principles.

He hath given the first hint of speaking groundedly, and to the purpose, upon this subject. Glanv.

GRO'UNDLESS. adj. [from ground.] Void of reason; wanting ground.

But when vain doubt and groundless fear Do that dear foolish bosom tear. Prior.

We have great reason to look upon the high pretensions which the Roman church makes to miracles as groundless, and to reject her vain and fabulous accounts of them. Atterbury.

The party who distinguish themselves by their zeal for the present establishment, should be careful to discover such a reverence for religion, as may shew how groundless that reproach is which is cast upon them, of being averse to our national worship. Fiecholler.

GRO'UNDLESSLY. adv. [from groundless.] Without reason; without cause; without just reason.

Divers persons have produced the like by spirit of vitriol, or juice of lemons; but have groundlessly ascribed the effect to some peculiar quality of those two liquors. Boyle on Colours.

GRO'UNDLESSNESS. n. f. [from groundless.] Want of just reason.

He durst not cite the words either of my book or sermons, lest the reader should have discovered the notorious falshood and groundlessness of his calumny. Fillotson.

GRO'UNDLING. n. f. [from ground.] A fish which keeps at the bottom of the water; hence one of the low vulgar.

It offends me to the soul, to hear a robutious pettrwig-pated fellow tear a passion to tatters, to very rags, to split the ears of the groundlings. Hannner.

GRO'UNDLY. adv. [from ground.] Upon principles; solidly; not superficially. Not in use.

A man, groundly learned already, may take much profit himself, in using by epitome to draw other mens works, for his own memory sake, into shorter room. Afcham.

GRO'UNSEL. n. f. [grund and pile, the basis, Saxon, perhaps from fella, Latin.] The timber or raised pavement next the ground.

The window-frame hath every one of its lights rabbetted on its outside about half an inch into the frame; and all these rabbets, but that on the groundsel, are grooved square; but the rabbet on the groundsel is levelled downwards, that rain or snow may the freelier fall off. Maxon.

GRO'UNSEL. n. f. [senecio, Latin.] A plant.

GRO'UNDWORK. n. f. [ground and work.] 1. The ground; the first stratum; the first part of the whole; that to which the rest is additional.

A way there is in heav'n's expanded plain, Which, when the skies are clear, is seen below, And mortals by the name of milky know; The groundwork is of stars. Dryden's Fables.

2. The first part of an undertaking; the fundamentals.

The main skill and groundwork will be to temper them such lectures and explanations, upon every opportunity, as may lead and draw them in willing obedience. Milton.

3. First principle; original reason.

The groundwork thereof is nevertheless true and certain, however they through ignorance disguise the same, or through vanity. Soester.

The moral is the first business of the poet, as being the groundwork of his instruction. Dryden.

GROUP. n. f. [groupe, French; gruppo, Italian.] A crowd; a cluster; a huddle; a number thronged together.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are less groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

I cannot doubt but the poet had here in view the picture of Zetus, in the famous group of figures which represents the two brothers binding Dirce to the horns of a mad bull. Addison.

You should try your graving tools On this odious group of fools. Swift.

TO GROUP. v. a. [grouper, French.] To put into a crowd; to huddle together.

The difficulty lies in drawing and disposing, or as the painters term it, in grouping such a multitude of different objects, preserving still the justice and conformity of style and colouring. Prior.

GROUSE. n. f. A kind of fowl; a heath-cock.

The 'squires in scorn will fly the house For better game, and look for grouse. Swift.

GROUT. n. f. [grout, Saxon. In Scotland they call it gronts.]

1. Coarse meal; pollard.

King Hardicnut, 'midst Danes and Saxons stout,

Carous'd in nut-brown ale, and din'd on grout: Which dith its pristine honour still retains,

And when each prince is crown'd in splendour reigns. King.

2. That which purges off.

Sweet honey some condense, some purge the grout;

The rest, in cells apart, the liquid nectar shout. Dryden.

3. A kind of wild apple. [agriomelum, Latin.]

TO GROW. v. n. pret. grew; part. pass. grown. [grōpan, Sax. groyen, Dut.]

1. To vegetate; to have vegetable motion; to increase by vegetation.

It is not the growing of fruit that nourisheth man; but it is thy word which preserveth them. Wisdom.

He causeth the grass to grow for the cattle, and herb for the service of man. Psalms.

2. To be produced by vegetation.

In this country groweth abundance of that wood, which since is brought into Europe to die red colours.

A bag, that groweth in the fields, at the first is hard like a tennis-ball, and white; and after groweth of a mushroom-colour, and full of light dust. Bacon's Natural History.

But say, where grows the tree? from hence how far? Milton.

In colder regions men compose Poison with art; but here it grows. Waller.

Those tow'rs of oak o'er fertile plains might go,

And visit mountains where they once did grow. Waller.

3. To shoot in any particular form.

Children, like tender officers, take the bow; And as they first are fashion'd, always grow. Dryden's Juvenal.

4. To increase in stature.

I long with all my heart to see the prince; I hope he is much grown since last I saw him. Shakespeare's Richard III.

The poor man had nothing, save one little ewe-lamb, which he had bought and rear'd up; and it grew up together with him and with his children. 2 Samuel.

5. To come to manhood from infancy; commonly followed by up.

Now the prince groweth up fast to be a man, and is of a sweet and excellent disposition. Bacon's Advice to Villiers.

The main thing to be considered, in every action of a child, is how it will become him when he is bigger, and whither it will lead him when he is grown up. Locke.

We are brought into the world children, ignorant and impotent; and we grow up in vanity and folly. Waller.

6. To issue, as plants from a soil, or as branches from the main trunk.

They will seem not stuck into him, but growing out of him. Dryden's Æn. Dedication.

7. To increase in bulk; to become greater, or more numerous.

Bones, after full growth, continue at a stay: as for nails they grow continually. Bacon.

Then their numbers swell, And grow upon us. Demian.

VOL. I.

Divisions grow upon us, by neglect of practical duties: as every age degenerated from primitive piety, they advanced in nice enquiries.

Decay of Piety.

8. To improve; to make progress.

Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Peter.

TO GRUB. v. a. [graban, preter. gröb, to dig, Gothick.] To dig up; to destroy by digging; to root out of the ground; to eradicate by throwing up out of the soil.

A foolish heir caused all the bushes and hedges about his vineyard to be grubbed up. L'Esfrange.

Forc'd land,
From whence the fully ploughman grubs the wood. Dryden.

The grubbing up of woods and trees may be very needful, upon the account of their unthriftness. Mortimer.

As for the thick woods, which not only Virgil but Homer mentions, they are most of them grubbed up, since the promontory has been cultivated and inhabited. Addison on Italy.

GRUB. n. f. [from grubbling, or mining.]

1. A small worm that eats holes in bodies.

There is a difference between a grub and a butterfly, and yet your butterfly was a grub. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

New creatures rise,
A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
'Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

The grub
Oft unobserv'd, invades the vital core;
Pernicious tenant! and her secret cave
Enlarges hourly, preying on the pulp Ceaseless. Philips.

2. A short thick man; a dwarf. In contempt.

John Romane, a short clownish grub, would bear the whole carcase of an ox, yet never tugged with him. Carew.

TO GRUBBLE. v. n. [grublen, German, from grub.] To feel in the dark.

Thou hast a colour;
Now let me rowl and grubble thee:
Blind men say white feels smooth, and black feels rough:
Though hast a rugged skin; I do not like thee. Dryden.

GRUBSTREET. n. f. Originally the name of a street near Moorfields in London, much inhabited by writers of small histories, dictionaries, and temporary poems;

whence any mean production is called grubstreet.

Χαζή Ιθακή μίλ' ἄδρα, μίλ' ἄλγεια πιρα Ἀσπασίω; τίον ἔδρε ἐκένουμι.

The first part, though calculated only for the meridian of grubstreet, was yet taken notice of by the better sort.

I'd sooner ballads write, and grubstreet lays.

To GRUDGE. v. a. [from gruger, according to Skinner, which in French is to grind or eat. In this sense we say of one who reflects any thing secretly he chezes it. Grugnac, in Welsh, is to murmur; to grumble. Grunigh, in Scotland, denotes a grumbling morose countenance.]

1. To envy; to see any advantage of another with discontent.

What means this banishing me from your counsels? Do you love your turrow so well, as to grudge me part of it?

'Tis not in thee

To grudge my pleasures, to cut off my train.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

He struggles into birth, and cries for aid;

Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid;

He creeps, he walks; and, issuing into man,

Grudges their life from whence his own began.

Dryden.

These clamours with disdain he heard,
Much grudging the praise, but more the rob'd reward.

Dryden.

Do not, as some men, run upon the tilt, and taste of the sediments of a grudging uncommunicative disposition.

Spektor.

Let us consider the inexhausted treasures of the ocean; and though some have grudged the great share that it takes of the surface of the earth, yet we shall propose this too, as a conspicuous mark and character of the wisdom of God.

Bentley.

I have often heard the presbyterians say they did not grudge us our employments.

Swift.

2. To give or take unwillingly.

Let me at least a funeral marriage crave,
Nor grudge my cold embraces in the grave.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

They have grudged those contributions, which have set our country at the head of all the governments of Europe.

Addison.

To GRUDGE. v. n.

1. To murmur; to repine.

They knew the force of that dreadful curse, whereunto idolatry maketh subject; nor is there cause why the guilty sustaining the same should grudge or complain of injustice.

Hooker.

We do not grudge or repine at our portion, but are contented with those circumstances which the providence of God hath made to be our lot.

Nelson.

2. To be unwilling; to be reluctant.

Many times they go with as great grudging to serve in his majesty's ships, as if it were to be slaves in the galleys.

Raleigh.

You steer betwixt the country and the court, Nor gratify whate'er the great desire,
Nor grudging give what publick needs require.

Dryden's Fables.

3. To be envious.

Grudge not one against another, brethren, lest ye be condemned.

James.

4. To wish in secret. A low word.

Let in the most sincere advice he gave,
He had a grudging will to be a knave.

Dryden.

5. To give or have any uneasy remains. I know not whether the word in this sense be not rather grugeons, or remains; grugeons being the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve.

My Dolabella,

Hast thou not still some grudgings of thy fever?

Dryden

GRUDGE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Old quarrel; inveterate malevolence; fullen malice.

Many countries about her were full of wars, which, for old grudges to Corinth, were thought still would conclude there.

Dryden

Two household, both alike in dignity,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.

Shakespeare.

Let me go in to see the generals:

There is some grudge between 'em; 'tis not meet
They be alone.

Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

Deep festen'd late:

A grudge in both, time out of mind, begun,
And mutually bequeath'd from foe to son.

Tate's Juvenal.

2. Anger; ill-will.

The god of wit, to shew his grudge,
Chipt at's ears upon the judge.

Swift.

3. Unwillingness to benefit.

Those to whom you have

With grudge present'd me.

Ben Jonson.

4. Envy; odium; invidious censure.

Zinzworth.

6. Some little commotion, or forerunner of a disease.

Ainsworth.

GRUDGINGLY. adv. [from grudge.] Unwillingly; malignantly; reluctantly.

Like harpies they could scent a plenteous board;

Then to be sure they never fail'd their lord;
The rest was form, and bare attendance paid;
Then drank and eat, and grudgingly obey'd.

Dryden.

GRUEL. n. f. [gruau, gruelle, French.]

Food made by boiling oatmeal and water; any kind of mixture made by boiling ingredients in water.

Finger of birth-strang'd babe,

Ditch-deliver'd by a drab;

Make the gruel thick and slab.

Shakespeare.

Was ever Tartar here or cruel

Upon the strength of water gruel?

Prior.

Gruel made of grain, broths, malt drink not much hopped, posset-drinks, and in general whatever relaxeth.

Arbutnot.

GRUFF. adj. [gruff, Dutch.] Sour of aspect; harsh of manners.

Around the fiend in hideous order, fat
Foul bawling infamy and bold debate,
Gruff discontent, through ignorance misted.

Garth.

The appellation of honour was such an one the gruff, such an one the stocky.

Addison.

GRUFFLY. adv. [from gruff.] Harshly; ruggedly; roughly.

The form of Mars high on a chariot stood,
All sheath'd in arms, and gruffly look'd the god.

Dryden.

GRUFFNESS. n. f. [from gruff.] Ruggedness of mien; harshness of look or voice.

GRUM. adj. [contracted from grumble.] Sour; furry; severe. A low word.

Nic looked sour and grum, and would not open his mouth.

Arbutnot.

To GRUMBLE. v. n. [grommelen, grommen, Dutch.]

1. To murmur with discontent.

A bridegroom,
A grumbling groom, and that the girl shall find.

Shakespeare.

Thou grumblest and rail'st every hour on Achilles, and thou art as full of envy at his greatness as Cerberus is at Proserpina's beauty.

Shakespeare's Troilus and Cressida.

Th' accurs'd Philistian stands on th' other side,
Grumbling aloud, and smiles 'twixt rage and pride.

Corley.

Suitors, all but one, will depart grumbling, because they miss of what they think their due.

South.

Providence has allotted man a competency; all beyond it is superfluous; and there will be grumbling without end, if we reckon that we want this, because we have it not.

L'Esrange.

L'Avare, not using half his store,
Still grumbles that he has no more.

Prior.

2. To growl; to gnarl.

The lion, though he sees the toils are set,
Yet, pin'd with raging hunger, tears away;
Hunts in the face of danger all the day;

At night, with fullen pleasure, grumbles o'er his prey.

Dryden.

3. To make a hoarse rattle.

Thou grumbling thunder join thy voice.

Mortoux.

Like a storm
That gathers black upon the frowning sky,
And grumbles in the wind.

Rowe.

Dash on the mountains brow, and shake the woods

That grumbling wave below.

Thomson's Winter.

GRUMBLER. n. f. [from grumble.] One that grumbles; a murmurer; a discontented man.

The half-pence are good half-pence, and I will stand by it: if I made them of silver, it will be the same thing to the grumbler.

Swift.

GRUMBLING. n. f. [from grumble.] A murmuring through discontent; a grudge.

I have serv'd
Without or grudge or grumbings.

Shakespeare.

GRUME. n. f. [grumeau, Fr. grumus, Latin.] A thick viscid consistence of a fluid: as the white of an egg, or clotted like cold blood.

Quincy.

GRUMLY. adv. [from grum.] Sullenly; morosely.

GRUMOUS. adj. [from grume.] Thick; clotted.

The blood, when let, was black, grumous, the red part without a due consistence, the serum falline, and of a yellowish green.

Arbutnot.

GRUMOUSNESS. n. f. [from grumous.] Thickness of a coagulated liquor.

The cause may be referred either to the coagulation of the serum, or grumousness of the blood.

Wife's Surgery.

GRUNSEL. n. f. [More usually groundsel, unless Milton intended to preserve the Saxon grunb.] The groundsel; the lower part of the building.

Next came one
Who mour'd in earnest, when the captive ark Maim'd his brute image, heads and hands lopp'd off

In his own temple, on the grunsel edge,
Where he fell flat, and thann'd his worshippers.

Milton.

To GRUNT. } v. n. [grunio, Lat.]

To GRUNTLE. } To murmur like a hog.

And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar and Lurn,

Like hoise, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.

Shakespeare.

Lament, ye swine! in gruntings spend your grief;

For you, like me, have lost your sole relief.
Thy brinded boars may slumber undismay'd,
Or grunt secure beneath the chestnut shade.

T. tel.

The scolding quean to louder notes doth rise,
To her full pipes the grunting hog replies;

The grunting hogs alarm the neighbours round.

Swift.

GRUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] The noise of a hog.

Swine's snouts, swine's bodies, took they,
bristles, grunts. Chapman.
Ran cow and calf, and family of hogs,
In pantick humour of pursuing dogs;
With many a deadly grunt and doleful squeak,
Poor swine, as if their pretty hearts would break.
Dryden.

From hence were heard
The grunts of bristled boars, and groans of bears,
And herds of howling wolves. Dryden's A. n.

GRUNTER. n. f. [from grunt.]

1. He that grunts.

2. A kind of fish. [χρυσός.]

GRUKTLING. n. f. [from grunt.] A young hog.

To GRUTCH. v. n. [corrupted for the sake of rhyme from grudge.] To envy; to repine; to be discontented. Not used.

The poor at the enclosure doth grutch,
Because of abuses that fall,
Lest some men should have but too much,
And some again nothing at all. Tusser.

Our frail condition it is such,
That what to all may happen here,
If 't chance to me, I must not grutch.
Ben Jonson.

GRUTCH. n. f. [from the verb.] Malice; jill-will.

In it he melted leaden bullets,
To shoot at foes, and sometimes pullets;
To whom he bore to sell a grutch,
He ne'er gave quarter t' any such. Hudibras.

GRY. n. f. [γρύ.] Any thing of little value; as, the paring of the nails. Did.

GUAIA'CUM. n. f. A physical wood.

Guaiacum is attenuant and aperient. It is excellent in many chronick cases, and was once famous for curing the venereal disease, which it still does singly in warmer climates, but with us we find it insufficient. We have a resin of it, improperly called gum guaiacum. Hill.

GUARANTEE. n. f. [garant, French.] A power who undertakes to see stipulations performed.

God, the great guarantee for the peace of mankind, where laws cannot secure it, may think it the concern of his providence. South.

A prince distinguished by being a patron of protestants, and guarantee of the Westphalian treaty. Addison on the War.

An oath is a promise made to God, and God is our superior, superior to kings. And he is also the guarantee and avenger of all breach of faith and injustice. Lesley.

To GUARANTY. v. a. [garanfir, French.] To undertake to secure the performance of any articles.

To GUARD. v. a. [garder, French; from our word ward, the v being changed by the French into g; as Galles for Wales.]

1. To watch by way of defence and security.

2. To protect; to defend.

Naked the graces guarded you from all Dangers abroad, and now your thunder shall.
Waller.

Your pow'r you never use, but for defence,
To guard your own or others innocence. Dryden.
Fix'd on defence, the Trojans are not slow
To guard the shore from an expected foe. Dryd.

The port of Genoa is very ill guard'd against the foams. Addison on Italy.

3. To preserve by caution.

One would take care to guard one's self against this particular imperfection, because it is that which our nature very strongly inclines us to.
Addison's Spectator.

4. To provide against objections.

Homer has guarded every circumstance with as much caution as if he had been aware of the objection. Broome on Olysssey.

5. To adorn with lists, laces, or ornamental borders. Obsolete.

Give him a livery
More guarded than his fellows. Shakespeare.
See a fellow

In a long motley, guard'd with yellow. Shaksp.

There are cases, in which a man must guard, if he intends to keep fair with the world, and turn the penny. Collier.

To guard against such mistakes, it is necessary to acquaint ourselves a little with words. Watts.

GUARD. n. f. [garde, French; ward, Teutonic.]

1. A man, or body of men, whose business is to watch by way of defence or prevention.

The guard bore them, and brought them back into the guard chamber. 1 Kings.

Up into heav'n, from paradise, in haste
Th' angelick guards ascended, mute, and sad,
For man. Milton's Paradise Lost.

They mis'd courts, guards, a gay and numerous train,
Our judges like our laws were rude and plain. Cowley.

With lifted hands, and gazing eyes,
His guards behold him soaring through the skies.
Dryden.

He must be trusted to his own conduct, since there cannot always be a guard upon him, except what you put into his own mind by good principles.
Locke.

They, usurping arbitrary power, had their guards and spies, after the practice of tyrants.
Swift.

2. A state of caution; a state of vigilance.

The great alteration which he made in the state ecclesiastical, caused him to stand upon his guard at home. Davies.

Temerity puts a man off his guard. L'Estrange.
It is wisdom to keep ourselves upon a guard.
L'Estrange.

Now he stood collected and prepar'd;
For malice and revenge had put him on his guard.
Dryden.

Others are cooped in close by the strict guards
of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant.
Locke.

Run from her guardage to the sooty bosom
Of such a thing as thou. Shakespeare's Otello.

GUARDER. n. f. One who guards. Zinf.

GUARDIAN. n. f. [gardien, French, from guard.]

1. One that has the care of an orphan; one who is to supply the want of parents.
I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian. Shakespeare.
When perjur'd guardians, proud with impious gains,
Choak up the streets, too narrow for their trains!
Dryden.

Hocus, with two other of the guardians, thought it their duty to take care of the interest of the three girls. Arbutnot.

2. One to whom the care and preservation of any thing is committed.

I gave you all,

Made you my guardians, my depositaries;
But kept a reservation to be follow'd
With such a number. Shakespeare's King Lear.

It then becomes the common concern of all that have truth at heart, and more especially of those who are the appointed guardians of the christian faith, to be upon the watch against seducers. Waterland.

3. A repository or storehouse. Not used.

Where is Duncan's body?
—Carried to Colmekill,
The sacred storehouse of his predecessors,
And guardian of their bones. Shakespeare.

GUARDIAN of the Spiritualities. He to whom the spiritual jurisdiction of any diocese is committed, during the vacancy of the see. He may be either guardian in law, or jure magistratus, as the archbishop is of any diocese within his province; or guardian by delegation, as he whom the archbishop or vicar-general doth for the time depute. Cowell.

GUARDIAN. adj. Performing the office of a kind protector or superintendent.

My charming patroness protects me unseen, like my guardian angel; and thuns my gratitude like a fairy, who is bountiful by stealth, and conceals
the giver when she bestows the gift. Dryden.

Thus shall mankind his guardian care engage,
The promis'd father of a future age. Pope.
Mean while Minerva, in her guardian care,
Shoots from the stary vaults through fields of air.
Pope.

GUARDIANSHIP. n. f. [from guardian.]
The office of a guardian.

The curate stretched his patent for the cure of souls, to a kind of tutelary guardianship over goods and chattels. L'Estrange.

This holds true, not only in losses and indignities offered to ourselves, but also in the case of trust, when they are offered to others who are committed to our care and guardianship. Kettlewell.

Theseus is the first who established the popular state in Athens, assigning to himself the guardianship of the laws, and chief commands in war.
Swift.

GUARDLESS. adj. [from guard.] Without defence.

So on the guardless herd, their keeper slain, Rushes a tyger in the Lybian plain. Waller.
A rich land, guardless and undefended, must needs have been a double incitement. South.

GUARDSHIP. n. f. [from guard.]

1. Care; protection.

How blest'd am I, by such a man led I Under whose wise and careful guardship
I now despise fatigue and hardship. Swift.

2. [guard and ship.] A king's ship to guard the coast.

GUAVA. } n. f. An American fruit.

GUAVA. } The fruit, says sir Hans Sloane, is extremely delicious and wholesome. They have only this inconvenience, that being very atrigent, they stop up the belly, if taken in great quantities. Miller.

GUBERNA'TION. n. f. [gubernatio, Lat.] Government; superintendency; superiour direction.

Perhaps there is little or nothing in the government of the kingdoms of nature and grace, but what is transfacted by the man Jesus, inhabited by the divine power and wisdom, and employed as a medium or conscious instrument of this extensive gubernation. Watts.

GU'DGEON. n. f. [goujon, French.]

1. A small fish found in brooks and rivers, easily caught, and therefore made a proverbial game for a man easily cheated.

'Tis true, no turbets dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords.
Pope.

2. A man easily cheated.

This he did to draw you in, like to many gudgeons, to follow his false arguments. Swift.

3. Something to be caught to a man's own disadvantage; a bait; an allure-ment: gudgeons being commonly used as baits for pike.

But fish not with this melancholy bait,
For this fool's gudgeon, this opinion. Shakespeare.

GUE'RDON. n. f. [guerdon, gardon, Fr.] A reward; a recompense, in a good and bad sense. Not in use.

But to the virgin comes, who all this while Amazed stands herself so mock'd to see,
By him who has the guerdon of his guile,

For so misseigning her true knight to be. Spenser.

He shall, by thy revenging hand, at once receive the joll guerdon of all his former villainies.
Knoll's.

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise
To scorn delights, and live laborious days;

But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to build out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind fury with th' abhorred sheers,
And hits the thin-spun life. Milton.

To GUESS. v. a. [ghiffen, Dutch.]

1. To conjecture; to judge without any certain principles of judgment.

Incapable and shallow innocents!
You cannot guess who caus'd your father's death.
Shakespeare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviness found
That ever yet they heard.

—Hum! I guess at it. Shakespeare.

He that, by reason of his swift motions, can inform himself of all places and preparations, should he not very often guess rightly of things to come,
where God pleases not to give impediment?
Raleigh.

Those issue swarming bands
Of ambush'd men, whom, by their arms and drest,
To be Taxallan enemies I guess. Dryden.

The same author ventures to guess at the particular fate which would attend the Roman government. Swift.

Nor can imagination guess,
How that ungrateful charming maid
My purest passion has betray'd. Swift.

2. To conjecture rightly, or upon some just reason.

One may guess by Plato's writings, that his meaning, as to the inferior deities, was, that they who would have them might, and they who would not, might let them alone; but that himself had a right opinion concerning the true God.
Stillingfleet.

To GUESS. v. a. To hit upon by accident; to determine rightly of any thing without certain direction of the judgment.

If Xerxes was able to call every common soldier by his name in his army, it may be guessed he got not this wonderful ability by learning his lessons by heart. Locke.

GUESS. n. f. [from the verb.] Conjecture; judgment without any positive or certain grounds.

The enemy's in view; draw up your powers:
Hard is the guess of their true strength and forces.
Shakespeare.

His guisse was usually as near to prophecy as any man's. Fell.

A poet must confess
His art's like physick, hur a happy guess. Dryd.

It is a wrong way of proceeding to venture a greater good for a less, upon uncertain guesses, before a due examination. Locke.

We may make some guess at the distinction of things, into those that are according to, above, and contrary to reason. Locke.

This problem yet, this offspring of a guess,
Let us for once a child of truth confess. Prior.

No man is blest by accident, or guess,
True wisdom is the price of happiness. Young.

GUE'SSER. n. f. [from guess.] Conjecturer; one who judges without certain knowledge.

It is the opinion of divers good guessers, that the best fit will not be more violent than advantageous. Pope.

If fortune should please but to take such a crotchet,
To thee I apply, great Smedley's successor,
To give thee lawn sleeves, a mitre and rochet, Whom would'st thou resemble? I leave thee a guesser. Swift.

GUE'SSINGLY. adv. [from guessing.] Conjecturally; uncertainly. Not in use.

I have a letter guessingly set down. Shakespeare.

GUEST. n. f. [ȝeȝt, ȝite, Saxon;
gwest, Welsh.]

1. One entertained in the house or at the table of another.

They all murmured, saying, that he was gone to be guest with a man that is a sinner. Luke.

Metthinks a father
Is, at the nuptial of his son, a guest
That best becomes the table. Shakespeare.

Tell my royal guest
I add to his commands my own request. Dryden.

2. A stranger; one who comes newly to reside.

O desarts, desarts! how fit a guest am I for you, since my heart can people you with wild venenous beasts, which in you are wanting?
Sidney.

Those happiest smiles
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know What guess were in her eyes; which parted thence
As pearls from diamonds dropt. Shakespeare.

GUE'STRITE. n. f. [from guest and rite.] Offices due to a guest.

Ulysses so dear
A gift esteem'd it, that he would not bear
In his black fleet that guest-rite to the war.
Chapman.

GUE'STCHAMBER. n. f. [guest and chamber.] Chamber of entertainment.

Where is the guest-chamber, where I shall eat
the passover with my disciples? Mark.

To GU'GGLE. v. n. [gorgolaire, Italian.] To found as water running with inter-missions out of a narrow-mouthed vessel.

GUI'DAGE. n. f. [from guide.] The reward given to a guide. Ainsworth.

GUI'DANCE. n. f. [from guide.] Direction; government.

They charge me with neglecting the guidance of wiser men. Spenser.

As to those who lived under the guidance of reason alone, without the assistance of supernatural light, it is highly probable that miracles, or a message from the dead, would persuade them.
Atterbury.

Particular application must be left to christian prudence, under the guidance of God's holy spirit, who knows our necessity before we ask, and our ignorance in asking. Rogers.

This to the young — but thy experienc'd age
Wants not the guidance of a former sage. Sewell.

A prince ought not to be under the guidance or influence of either faction, because he declines from his office of presiding over the whole to be the head of a party. Swift.

To GUIDE. v. a. [guider, French.]

1. To direct in a way.

When the spirit of truth is come, he will guide
you into all truth. John.

The new light served to guide them to their neighbours coffers. Decay of Piety.

Whosoever has a faithful friend to guide him in the dark passages of life, may carry his eyes in another man's head, and yet see never the worse.

South.

2. To influence.

Upon these, or such like secular maxims,
when nothing but the interest of this world guides men, they many times conclude that the slightest wrongs are not to be put up. Kettwell.

3. To govern by counsel; to instruct.

For thy name's sake lead me and guide me.
Psalms.

4. To regulate; to superintend.

Women neglect that which St Paul assigns them as their proper business, the guiding of the house. Decay of Piety.

GUIDE. n. f. [guide, Fr. from the verb.]

1. One who directs another in his way.

Thou *guide*st them a burning pillar of fire to be a guide of the unknown journey. Wycliffe.

Can knowledge have no bound, but must advance
So far to make us wish for ignorance?
And rather in the dark to grope our way,
Than, led by a false guide, to err by day?
Denham.

2. One who directs another in his conduct.

While yet but young, his father dy'd,
And left him to an happy guide. Wallis.

They have all the same pastoral guides appointed, authorized, sanctified, and set apart by the appointment of God by the direction of the spirit, to direct and lead the people of God in the same way of eternal salvation. Pearson.

3. Director; regulator.

Who the guide of nature, but only the God of nature? In him we live, move, and are. Those things which nature is said to do, are by divine art performed, using nature as an instrument:
nor is there any such knowledge divine in nature herself working, but in the guide of nature's work. Hooker.

Some truths are not by reason to be tried,
But we have sure experience for our guide.
Dryden's Fables.

GUI'DELESS. adj. [from guide.] Having no guide; wanting a governour or superintendent.

Th' ambitious Swede, like restless billows tost,
Though in his life he blood and ruin breath'd,
To his now guideless kingdom peace bequeath'd.
Dryden.

These fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away,
Which guideless in those dark dominions stray.
Dryden.

GUI'DER. n. f. [from guide.] Director;
regulator; guide. Obsolete.

Our guider come! to the Roman camp conduct us. Shakespeare.

That perion, that being provoked by excessive pain, thrust his dagger into his body, and thereby, instead of reaching his vitals, opened an impostu-lime, the unknown cause of all his pain, and so stabbed himself into perfect health and ease, surely had great reason to acknowledge chance for his chiuigeon, and providence for the guider of his hand. South.

GUIDON. n. f. [French.] A standard-bearer; a standard. Obsolete.

GUILD. n. f. [gildere, Saxon, a fellowship, a corporation.] A society;
a corporation; a fraternity or company, combined together by orders and laws made among themselves by their prince's licence. Hence the common word gild or guildhall proceeds, being a fraternity or commonalty of men gathered into one combination, supporting their common charge by mutual contribution.
Cowell.

Towards three or four o'clock
Look for the news that the guil hall affords.
Shakspere's Richard III.
In woulen cloth it appears, by those ancient guills that were fe ted in England for this manufacture, that this kingdom greatly flourished in that art. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

As when the long-ear'd milky mothers wait
At some sick miser's triple bolted gate,
For their defrauded adient foals they make
A moan so loud, that all the guild awake. Pope.
GUILE, n. f. [guille, gulle, old French,
the same with wile.] Deceitful cunning; insidious artifice; mischievous fubility.

With fawning words he courted her awhile,
And looking lovely, and oft sighing sore,
Her constant heart did court with divers guile;
But words and looks, and signs she did abhor. Spenser.

When I have most need to employ a friend,
Deep, hollow, treacherous, and full of guile,
Be he to me! This do I beg of heav'n,
When I am cold in zeal to you or yours. Shakf.
We may, with more successful hope, resolve
To wage by force or guile eternal war. Milton.
Nor toun his malice and false guile contain:
Subtle he needs must be who could seduce Angels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

GUILEFUL, adj. [guile and full.]
1. Wily; insidious; mischievously artful.
The way not to be inveigled by them that are so guilful through skill, is thoroughly to be instructed in that which maketh skilful against guile. Hooker.

Without expence at all,
By guileful fair words, peace may be obtain'd.
Shakspere's Henry vi.
He saw his guileful act
By eve, though all unweeting, seconded Upon her husband. Milton's Paradise Lost.
The guileful phantom now forsook the throwd,
And flew sublime, and vanish'd in a cloud. Dryden's En.

2. Treacherous; secretly mischievous.
I train'd thy brethren to that guileful hole,
Where the dead corps of Bassianus lay. Shaksp.
GUILEFULLY, adv. [from guileful.] Insidiously; treacherously.

To whom the tempter guilefully reply'd. Milt.
GUILEFULNESS, n. f. [from guileful.] Secret treachery; tricking cunning.
GUILELESS, adj. [from guile.] Free from deceit; void of insidiousness;
simply honest.

GUI'LER, n. f. [from guile. See BE-GUILE.] One that betrays into danger
by insidious practices.
But he was wary wise in all his way,
And well perceived his deceitful sleight;
Ne suffered lust his safety to betray;
So good y d'd beguile the guiler of the prey. Spenser.

GUILT, n. f. [gilt, Saxon, originally signified the fine or mulct paid for an offence, and afterward the offence itself.]
1. The state of a man justly charged with a crime; the contrary to innocence.
It was neither guilt or crime, nor reason of state, that could quench the envy that was upon the king for this execution. Bacon's Henry vii.
When these two are taken away, the possibility of guilt, and the possibility of innocence, what restraint can the belief of the creed lay upon any man? Hammond on Fundamentals.

2. A crime; an offence.
Cicero pent up guilts
Rive your concealing continents, and ask
Th se dreadful summoners grace. Shakspere.
GUILTILY, adv. [from guilty.] Without innocence; without clearness of conscience.

Bloody and guilty; guiltily awake,
And in a bloody battle end thy days:
Think on lord Hastings, and despair, and die.
Shakspere's Richard III.
GUI'LTINESS, n. f. [from guilty.] The state of being guilty; wickedness; consciousness of crime.

He thought his sight rather to proceed of a fearful guiltiness than of an humble faithfulness.
Sidney.

The last was I that felt thy tyranny:
O, in the battle think on Buckingham,
And die in terror of thy guiltiness. Shakspere.
I should be guiltier than my guiltiness. Shakf.
GUI'LTLESS, adj. [from guilt.] Innocent; free from crime.

I am in this commanded to deliver
The noble duke of Clarence to your hands:
I will not reason what is meant hereby,
Because I will be guiltless of the meaning. Shakf.
Many worthy and chaste dames thus,
All guiltless, meet reproach. Shakspere's Othello.
Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity,
and this woman shall bear her iniquity. Numbers.
Thou, who do'st all thou wishest at thy will,
And never wilt'st aught but what is right,
Preserve this guiltless blood they seek to spill;
Thine be my kingdom. Fairfax.
Guiltless of greatness, thus he always pray'd,
Norknew nor wish'd he that those vows he made
On his own head should be at last repaid. Dryden.
The teeming earth yet guiltless of the plough,
And unprovok'd did fruitful stores allow. Dryd Thou know'st how guiltless first I met thy flame,
When love approach'd me under friendship's name. Pope.

GUI'LTLESSLY, adv. [from guiltless.]
Without guilt; innocently.

GUI'LTLESSNESS, n. f. [from guiltless.]
Innocence; freedom from crime.
A good number, trusting to their number more than to their value, and valuing money higher than equity, felt that guiltlessness is not always with ease oppressed. Sidney.

I would not have had any hand in his death, of whose guiltlessness I was better assured than any man living could be. King Charles.

GUI'LTLY, adj. [giltig, Saxon, one condemned to pay a fine for an offence.]

1. Justly chargeable with a crime; not innocent.
Is there not a ballad of the king and the beggar?
—The world was guilty of such a ballad some three ages since. Shakspere.

Mark'd you not
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence death? Shakspere.
We are verily guilty concerning our brother, in that we saw the anguish of his soul when he befought us, and we would not hear. Genesis.
With mortal hatred I pursu'd his life,
Nor he, nor you, were guilty of the strife;
Nor I, but as I lov'd; yet all combin'd,
Your beauty and my impotence of mind. Dryd.
Farewell the stones
And threshold, guilty of my midnight moans. Dryden.

There is no man, that is knowingly wicked, but is guilty to himself; and there is no man, that carries guilt about him, but he receives a sting into his soul. Tillotson

2. Wicked; corrupt.
All the tumult of a guilty world,
Tost by ungenerous passion, sinks away. Thomson.
GUI'NEA, n. f. [from Guinea, a country in Africa abounding with gold.] A gold coin valued at one and twenty shillings.
By the word gold I must be understood to design a particular piece of matter; that is, the last guinea that was coined. Locke.

Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind:
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind. Young.
GUI'NEADROPPER, n. f. [guinea and die drop.] One who cheats by dropping guineas.
Who now the guineadrapper's bait regards,
Trick'd by the sharper's dice, or juggler's cards. Gay.

GUI'NEAHEN, n. f. A fowl, supposed to be of Guinea.
GUI'NEAPEPPER, n. f. [capsicum, Latin.]
A plant. Miller.

GUI'NEAPIG, n. f. A small animal with a pig's snout, brought, I believe, from Africa.

GUISE, n. f. [The same with wize, guise, French; pipa, Saxon, the p or w being changed, as is common, into g.]
1. Manner; mien; habit; cast of behaviour.

His own fire, and master of his guise,
Did often tremble at his horrid view. Spenser.
Thus women know, and thus they use the guise,
T' enchain the valiant and beguile the wife. Fairfax.

Lo you! here she comes: this is her very guise; and, upon my life, fast aslep: observe her, stand close. Shakspere's Macbeth.
They stand a horrid front
Of dreadful length, and dazzling arms in guise
Of warriors old, with order'd spear and shield, Awaiting what command their mighty chief
Had to impose. Milton's Paradise Lost.

By their guise
Just men they seem, and all their study bent
To worship God a-right. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Back, shepherds, back:
Here be without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes and such court guise
As mercury did first deceive. Milton.
Their external shapes are notoriously accommodated to that law or guise of life that nature has designed them. Morc.

2. Practice; custom; property.
I have dronke wine past my usual guise;
Strong wine commands the fool, and moves the wife. Chapman.
This would not be slept;
Old guise must be kept. Ben Jonson.
The swain reply'd, it never was our guise
To fight the poor, or aught humane despise. Pope.

3. External appearance; dress.
When I was very young, nothing was so much talked of as rickets among children, and consumptions among young people: after these the spleen came in play, and then the scurvy, which was the general complaint, and both were thought to appear in many various guises. Temple.
The Hugonots were engaged in a civil war, by the specious pretences of some, who, under the guise of religion, sacrificed so many thousands to their own ambition. Swift.

GUI'NAR, n. f. [ghitara, Italian; gitterre,
Fr.] A stringed instrument of musick.
Sallads and eggs, and lighter fare,
Tune the Italian spak's guitar. Prior.

GULCH, n. f. [from gulo, Latin.] A GU'LCHEIN, } little glutton. Skinner.
GULES, adj. [perhaps from goule, the throat.] Red: a barbarous term of heraldry.

Follow thy drum;
With man's blood paint the ground: gules, gules;
Religious canons, civil laws are cruel;
Then what should war be? Shakspere.
He whose fable arms,
Black as his purpose, did the knight resemble,
When he laid couch'd in the ominous horse,
Hath now his dread and black complexion
smear'd

With heraldry more dismal; head to foot,
Now he is total gulf. Shakespeare.

GULF. n. f. [golfo, Italian.]

1. A bay; an opening into land.

The Venetian admiral withdrew himself farther off from the island Cusu, into the gulf of the Adiatick. Knolles.

2. An abyss; an unmeasurable depth.

Thence turning back, in silence soot they stole,
And brought the heavy corse with easy pace
To yawning gulph of deep Avernus' hole. Speiser.

I know thou'd'st rather Follow thine enemy in a fiery gulph,
Than datter him in a bower. Shakspeare. Coriolanus.
This is the gulph through which Virgil's Alecto shoots herself into hell: the fall of waters, the woods that encompass it, are all in the description. Addison on Italy.

The sea could not be much narrower than it is, without a great loss to the world; and must we now have an ocean of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation, for fear our heads should turn giddy at the imagination of gaping abysses and unfathomable gulfs? Bentley.

3. A whirlpool; a sucking eddy.

England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulf. Shakspeare.

4. Any thing insatiable, as the mouth or stomach.

Scull'd dog, tooth of wolf,
Witch's sabbath; maw and gulf
Of the ravenous salt sea shark;
Root of hemlock, digg'd i' the dark. Shakspeare.

GULFY. adj. [from gulf.] Full of gulfs or whirlpools; vorticosus.

Rivers arise; whether thou be the son
Of utmost Tweed, or Ouse, or gulfy Don. Milton.
At their native realms the Greeks arriv'd,
All who the war of ten long years surviv'd,
And leap'd the pearls of the gulfy main. Pope.
High o'er a gulfy sea the Pharian isle Fronts the deep roar of disemboguing Nile. Pope.

TO GULL. v. a. [guller, to cheat, old French.] To trick; to cheat; to defraud; to deceive.

If I do not gull him into a nay word, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie freight in my bed. Shakspeare.
Yet love these fore'ries did remove, and move
Thee to gull thine own mother for my love. Donne.

He would have gull'd him with a trick,
But Mart was too politic. Hudibras.
They are not to be gull'd twice with the same trick. L'Estrange.

The Roman people were grossly gull'd twice or thrice over, and as often enlaved in one century, and under the same pretence of reformation. Dryden.

By their designing leaders taught,
The vulgar, gull'd into rebellion, arm'd. Dryden.
For this advantage age from youth has won,
As not to be out-ridden, though out-run;
By fortune he was now to Venus trin'd,
And with stern Mars in Capricorn was join'd:
Of him disposing in his own abode,
He foot'd the goddess, while he gull'd the god. Dryden.

GULL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. [mergus.] A sea bird.

2. A cheat; a fraud; a trick.

I should think this a gull, but that the white-bearded fellow speaks it. Shakspeare's Much Ado.
Either they have these excellencies they are praised for, or they have not; if they have not,
'tis an apparent cheat and gull. Gov. of Tongue.

3. A stupid animal; one easily cheated.

Being fed by us you us'd us to,
As that ungentle gull, the cuckow bird,
Useth the sparrow. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd,
Kept in a dark house, visited by the priest,

And made the most notorious geck and gull
That e'er invention plaid on. Shakspeare.

That pultry story is untrue,
And forg'd to cheat each gull as you. Hudibras.

GULLCATCHER. n. f. [gull and catch.]

A cheat; a man of trick; one who catches silly people.

Here comes my noble gullcatcher. Shakspeare.

GULLER. n. f. [from gull.] A cheat;
an impostor.

GULLERY. n. f. [from gull.] Cheat;
imposture. Ainsworth.

GULLET. n. f. [goulet, Fr. gula, Lat.]

1. The throat; the passage through which the food passes; the meat-pipe;
the œsophagus.

I might be his doom,
One day to sing
With gullet in throng. Denham.

Many have the gullet or feeding channel which have no lungs or windpipes; as fishes which have gills, whereby the heart is reinvigorated; for such thereof as have lungs and respiration are not without whizzon, as whales and cetaceous animals. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. A small stream or lake. Not in use.

Nature has various tender muscles plac'd,
By which the artful gullet is embrac'd. Blackmore.

The liquor in the stomach is a compound of that which is separated from its inward coat, the spittle which is swallowed, and the liquor which distils from the gullet. Abulhot.

The Euxine sea and the Mediterranean, small gullets, if compared with the ocean. Heylin.

TO GULLY. v. n. [corrupted from gur-gle.] To run with noise.

GULLYHOLE. n. f. [from gully and hole.]

The hole where the gutters empty themselves in the subterraneous sewer.

GULO'SITY. n. f. [gulosus, Lat.] Greedi-ness; gluttony; voracity.

They are very temperate, seldom offending in ebriety, not erring in gulosity, or superfluity of meats. Brown.

TO GULP. v. a. [golpen, Dutch.] To swallow eagerly; to suck down without intermission.

He loosens the fish, gulps it down, and so soon as ever the morfel was gone wipes his mouth. L'Estrange.

I see the double flaggon charge their hand;
See them pull off the froth, and gulp again,
While with dry tongue I lick my lips in vain. Gay.

GULP. n. f. [from the verb.] As much as can be swallowed at once.

In deep respirations we take more large gulps of air to cool our heart, overcharged with love and sorrow. More.

As oft as he can catch a gulp of air,
And peep above the seas, he names the fair. Dryden's Fables.

GUM. n. f. [gummi, Latin.]

1. A vegetable substance differing from a resin, in being more viscid and less friable, and generally dissolving in aqueous menstruums; whereas resins, being more sulphurous, require a spirituous dissolvent. Quincy.

One whose eyes,
Albeit unuse'd to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Shakspeare's Othello.
He tipsens spices, fruit, and precious gum,
Which from remotest regions hither come. Waller.

Her maiden train,
Who bore the vests that holy rites require,
Incense, and od'rous gums, and cover'd fire. Dryden's Fables.

2. [zoma, Saxon; gunne, Dutch.] The fleshy covering that invests and contains the teeth.

The babe that milks me,
I'd pluck my nipple from his boneless gums.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Sh' untwists a wire, and from her gums
A set of teeth completely comes. Swift.

TO GUM. v. a. [from the noun.] To close with gum; to smear with gum.

The eyelids are apt to be gummed together with a viscous humour. Wifeman's Surgery.

GUMMINESS. n. f. [from gummy.] The state of being gummy; accumulation of gum.

The tendons are involved with a great gumminess and collection of matter. Wifeman.

GUMMO'SITY. n. f. [from gummosus.]
The nature of gum; gumminess.

Sugar and honey make windy liquors, and the clastic fermenting particles are detained by their innate gummosity. Floyer.

GUMMOUS. adj. [from gum.] Of the nature of gum.

Observations concerning English amber, and relations about the amber of Prussia, prove that amber is not a gummos or resinous substance drawn out of trees by the sun's heat, but a natural fossil. Woodward's Natural History.

GUMMY. adj. [from gum.]

1. Consisting of gum; of the nature of gum.

From the utmost end of the head branches
there issueth out a gummy juice, which hangeth downward like a cord. Raleigh.

Nor all the gummy stores Arabia yields.
Dryden's Virgil.

How each arising alder now appears,
And o'er the Po distils her gummy tears. Dryden.

2. Productive of gum.

The clouds
Tine the slant light'ning; whose thwart flame
driv'n down,

Kindles the gummy bark of fir and pine. Milton.

3. Overgrown with gum.

The yawning youth, scarce half awake, essays
His lizy limbs and dozy head to raise;
Then rubs his gummy eyes, and scrubs his pate. Dryden.

GUN. n. f. [Of this word there is no satisfactory etymology. Lye observes that gun in Iceland signifies battle; but when guns came into use we had no commerce with Iceland. May not gun come by gradual corruption from canne, ganne, gunne? Canne is the original of cannon.] The general name for firearms; the instrument from which shot is discharged by fire.

The dread curies, like the sun 'gain'd glass,
Or like an overcharged gun, recoil
And turn upon thyselves. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The emperor, smiling, said that never emperor was yet slain with a gun. Knolles's History.
The bullet flying, makes the gun recoil.

In vain the dart or glit'ring sword we brand,
Condemn'd to perish by the slaughter'ing gun. Granville.

GUNNEL. n. f. [corrupted from GUN-WALE.]

GUNNER. n. f. [from gun.] Cannonier; he whose employment is to manage the artillery in a ship.

The nimble gunner
With lynstock now the devilish cannon touches,
And down goes all before him. Shakspeare's Henry v.
They slew the principal gunners, and carried away their artillery. Hayward.

GU'NNERY. n. f. [from gunner.] The science of artillery; the art of managing cannon.

GU'NPOWDER. n. f. [gun and powder.] The powder put into guns to be fired. It consists of about fifteen parts of nitre, three parts of sulphur, and two of charcoal. The proportions are not exactly kept.

Gunpowder consisteth of three ingredients, saltpetre, smallcoal, and brimstone. Brown.
Burning by gunpowder frequently happens at sea. Wifeman.

GU'NSHOT. n. f. [gun and shot.] The reach or range of a gun; the space to which a shot can be thrown.

Those who are come over to the royal party are supposed to be out of gunshot. Dryden.

GU'NSHOT. adj. Made by the shot of a gun.

The symptoms I have translated to gunshot wounds. Wifeman.

GU'NSMITH. n. f. [gun and smith.] A man whose trade is to make guns.

It is of particular esteem with the gunsmiths for stocks. Mortimer.

Ev'n a gunstick flying into fame. Stewart.

GU'NSTOCK. n. f. [gun and stock.] The wood to which the barrel of the gun is fixed.

The timber is used for bows, pulleys, screws, mills, and gunstocks. Mortimer's Husbandry.

GU'NSTONE. n. f. [gun and stone.] The shot of cannon. They used formerly to shoot stones from artillery.

Tell the pleasant prince, this mock of his Hath turn'd his ball to gunstones, and his soul Shall stand fore charged for the wasteful vengeance

That shall fly with them. Shakespeare's Henry v.

GU'NWALE, or GUNNEL, of a Ship. n. f.

That piece of timber which reaches on either side of the ship from the half deck to the fore-castle, being the uppermost bend which finisheth the upper works of the hull in that part, and wherein they put the stanchions which support the waste tree; and this is called the gunwale, whether there be guns in the ship or no; and the lower part of any port, where any ordnance are, is also termed the gunwale. Harris.

GURGE. n. f. [gurgus, Latin.] Whirlpool; gulf.

Marching from Eden he shall find
The plain, wherein a black bituminous gurge
Boils out from under ground. Milton's Par. Lost.

GUR'GION. n. f. The coarser part of the meal, sifted from the bran.

To GU'RGLE. v. n. [gorgogliare, Ital.] To fall or gush with noise, as water from a bottle.

Then when a fountain's gurgling waters play,
They rush to land, and end in feasts the day. Pope.

Fare gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
And waste their musick on the savage race. Young.

GU'RNARD. } n. f. [gournal, French.]
GU'RNET. } A kind of sea fish.

If I be not Miam'd of my soldiers I am a fow'd gurnet: I have misus'd the king's prefs damnably. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

To GUSH. v. n. [gofteleu, Dutch.]

1. To flow or rush out with violence; not to spring in a small stream but in a larger body.

A sea of blood gush'd from the gaping wound,
That her gay garments stain'd with filthy gore. Spenser.

The covering of this abyss was broken atunder,
and the water gush'd out that made the deluge. Barnet.

Incessant streams of thin magnetick rays
Gush from their fountains with impetuous force,
In either pole, then take an adverse course. Blackm.

On either hand the gush'ng waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall. Thomson.

2. To emit in a copious effluxion.

The gaping wound gush'd out a crimson flood. Dryden.
Line after line my gushing eyes o'erflow,
Led through a sad variety of woe. Pope.

GUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] An emission of liquor in a large quantity at once; the liquor so emitted.

If a lung-vein be hurted, generally at the first cough a great gush of blood is coughed up. Harvey.

GU'SSET. n. f. [gouffet, Fr.] Any piece sewed on cloth, in order to strengthen it.

GUST. n. f. [gouff, French; gustus, Lat.]

1. Sense of tasting.

Destroy all creatures for thy sport or gust,
Yet cry, if man's unhappy, God's unjust. Pope.

2. Height of perception; height of sensual enjoyment.

They fondly thinking to allay
Their appetite with gust, instead of fruit
Chew'd bitter ashes, which th' offended taste
With spattering noise rejected. Milton's Par. Lost.
Where love is duty on the female side,
On theirs meer sensual gust, and fought with furlly pride. Dryden's Fables.

My sight, and smell, and hearing were employ'd,
And all three senses in full gust enjoy'd. Dryden.

3. Love; liking.

To kill, I grant, is sin's extremest gust;
But, in defence, by mercy 'tis made just. Shaksp.
Old age shall do the work of taking away both the gust and comfort of them. L'Esfrange.
We have lost, in a great measure, the gust and relish of true happiness. Tillotson.

4. Turn of fancy; intellectual taste.

The principal part of painting is to find what nature has made most proper to this art, and a choice of it may be made according to the gust and manner of the ancients. Dryden.

5. [from gustler, Islandick.] A sudden violent blast of wind.

She led calm Henry, though he were a king,
As doth a sail, fill'd with a fretting gust,
Command an argosie to stem the waves. Shaksp.
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise,
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n. Shaksp.

Presently come forth swarms and volleys of libels, which are the gusts of liberty of speech re-trained. Bacon's Henry VII.

As when fierce northern blaits from th' Alps descend,
From his firm roots with struggling gusts to rend
An aged sturdy oak. Denham.

Part stay for passage, 'till a gust of wind
Ships o'er their forces in a flaming sheet. Dryden.
Pardon a weak distemper'd soul that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. Addison's Cato.

6. It is written in Spenser vitiously for jufts, sports.

For jolly knight he seem'd, and fair did sit,
As one for knightly gusts and fierce encounters fit. Spenser.

GU'STABLE. adj. [gusto, Latin.]

1. To be tasted.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter; whereas there is nothing gustible sweeter. Harvey.

2. Pleasant to the taste.
A gustible thing, seen or smelt, excites the appetite, and affects the glands and parts of the mouth. Dehann.

GUSTATION. n. f. [gusto, Latin.] The act of tasting.

The gullet and conveying parts partake of the nerves of gustation, or appertaining unto sapor. Brown.

GU'STFUL. adj. [gust and full.] Tasteless; well-tasted.

What he defaults from some dry insipid sin, is but to make up for some other more gustful. Decay of Pity.

GU'STO. n. f. [Italian.]

1. The relish of any thing; the power by which any thing excites sensations in the palate.

Pleasant gusts gratify the appetite of the luxurious. Derham.

In reading what I have written, let them bring no particular gusto along with them. Dryden.

GU'STY. adj. [from gust.] Stormy; tempestuous.

Once upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tyber chaffing with his shores. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.

Or whirl'd tempestuous by the gusty wind. Thomson.

GUT. n. f. [kutteln, German.]

1. The long pipe reaching, with many convolutions, from the stomach to the vent.

This lord wears his wit in his belly, and his guts in his head. Shaksp. Troil. and Cress.

A vial should have a lay of wire-strings below, close to the belly, and then the strings of guts mounted upon a bridge, that by this means the upper strings stricken should make the lower rebound. Bacon's Natural History.

The intestines or guts may be inflamed by any acrid or poisonous substance taken inwardly. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. The stomach; the receptacle of food; proverbially.

And cramm'd them 'till their guts did ache,
With cawdle, custard, and plum-cake. Hudib.
With false weights their servants guts they cheat,
And pinch their own to cover the deceit. Dryd.

3. Gluttony; love of gormandizing.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy guts bestow
Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent,
Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou,
Fearing to suffer thirst and famishment,
In poison'd potion drank't it. Hakewill.

To GUT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To eviscerate; to draw; to exenterate.
The fishermen save the most part of their fish:
some are guttet, splitted, powdered, and dried. Carew's Cornwall.

2. To plunder of contents.

In Nero's arbitrary time,
When virtue was a guilt, and wealth a crime,
A troop of cut-throat guards were sent to seize
The rich men's goods, and gut their palaces. Dryden.

Tom Brown of facetious memory, having guttet a proper name of its vowels, used it as freely as he pleased. Addison.

GU'TTATED. adj. [from gutta, Latin, a drop.] Besprinkled with drops; be-dropped. Diab.

GU'TTER. n. f. [from guttur, a throat, Latin.]

1. A passage for water; a passage made by water.

These gutter tiles are in length ten inches and a half.
Rocks rise one above another, and have deep gutters worn in the sides of them by torrents of rain.

2. A small longitudinal hollow.

To GUTTER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cut in small hollows.
Tempests themselves, high seas, and howling winds,

The gutter'd rocks, and congregated sands,
Traitors ensheep'd to clog the guiltless keels,
As having sense of beauty, do omit
Their mortal natures, letting safe go by The divine Deidemonia.

My cheeks are gutter'd with my fretting tears.
First in a place, by nature close, they build
A narrow flooring, gutter'd, wall'd, and til'd.

To GUTTLE. v. n. [from gut.] To feed luxuriously; to gormandize. A low word.

His jolly brother, opposite in sense,
Laughs at his thirst; and, lavish of expence,
Quaffs, crams, and guttles in his own defence.

To GUTTLE. v. a. [from gut.] To swallow.

A low word.
The fool spit in his pondige, to try if they'd hiss: they did not hiss, and so he gutted them up, and scalded his chops.

GUTTLER. n. f. [from guttle.] A greedy eater.

GUTTULOUS. adj. [from guttula, Latin.]

In the form of a small drop.
Ice is plain upon the surface of the water, but round in hail, which is also a glaciation, and figured in its guttulous descent from the air.

GUTTURAL. adj. [gutturalis, Latin.]

Pronounced in the throat; belonging to the throat.
The Hebrews have assigned which letters are labial, which dental, and which guttural.

In attempting to pronounce the nasals, and some of the vowels spirally, the throat is brought to labour, and makes that which we call a guttural pronunciation.

GUTTURALNESS. n. f. [from guttural.]

The quality of being guttural.

GUTWORT. n. f. [gut and wort.] An herb.

GUY. n. f. [from guide.] A rope used to lift any thing into the ship.

To GUZZLE. v. n. [from gut, or gulf, to guttle, or guffle.] To gormandize; to feed immoderately; to swallow any liquor greedily.

Well feasted bows the gossip's spirits raise,
Who while the guzzles chats the doctor's praise.
They fell to lapping and guzzling, till they burst themselves.

No more her care shall fill the hollow ear,
To fat the guzzling hogs with floods of whey.

To GUZZLE. v. a. To swallow with immoderate gutt.

The Pylian king
Was longest liv'd of any two-legg'd thing,
Still guzzling mud of wine.

GUZZLER. n. f. [from guzzle.] A gorman-dizer; an immoderate eater or drinker.

GYBE. n. f. [See GIBE.] A sneer; a taunt;

a sarcasm.
Ready in gybes, quick answer'd, saucy, and as quarrelous as the weazel.

To GYBE. v. n. To sneer; to taunt.

The vulgar yield an open ear,
And common courtiers love to gybe and sneer.

GYMNASTICALLY. adv. [from gymnastick.]

Athletically; fitly for strong exercise.

Such as with agility and vigour are not gymnastically composed, nor actively use those parts.

GYMNASTICK. adj. [γυμναστικός; gymnastique,

French.] Pertaining to athletic exercise; consisting of leaping, wrestling, running, throwing the dart, or quoit.

The Cretans wilfully forbid their servants gymnasticks as well as arms; and yet your modern footmen exercise themselves daily, whilst their enervated lords are softly loling in their chariots.

GYMNICK. adj. [γυμνικός; gymnique, Fr.]

Such as practise the athletic or gymnastick exercises.
Have they not sword-players, and ev'ry fort
Of gymnick attills, wrestlers, riders, runners?

GYMNOSE'RMIOUS. adj. [γυμνός and σπικτός.]

Having the seeds naked.

GYNECOCRACY. n. f. [γυναικρατία; gynecratic,

French.] Petticoat government; female power.

GYRATION. n. f. [gyro, Latin.] The act of turning any thing about.

This effluvium attenuateth and impelleth the neighbour air, which, returning home, in a gyration carrieth with it the obvious bodies into the electric.

If a burning coal be nimbly moved round in a circle with gyration, continually repeated, the whole circle will appear like fire; the reason of which is, that the tentation of the coal in the several places of that circle remains incessant on the sensorium, until the coal return again to the same place.

GYRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing moving in an orbit.

Ne thereforeth his approved skill to ward,
Or stroke, or burden round in warlike gyre,
Remember'd he; ne car'd for his fate guard,
But rudely rag'd.

Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly?
Or eagle in her gyres the clouds embrace?

He fashion'd those harmonious orbs, that roll
In restless gyres about the arctic pole.
Quick and more quick he spins in giddy gyres,
Then falls, and in much foam his soul expires.

GYRED. adj. Falling in rings.

Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd,
No hat upon his head, his stockings loose
Ungarter'd, and down gyred to his ankle.

GYVES. n. f. [gevyu, Welsh.] Fetters;

chains for the legs.

The villains march wide betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on.
And knowing this, should I yet stay,
Like such as blow away their lives,
And never will redeem a day,

Enamour'd of their golden gyves?
The poor prisoners, boldly flaring up, break off their chains and gyves.

Gyves and the mill had tam'd thee.
But Telamon rush'd in, and hap'd to meet
A rising root, that held his fasten'd feet;
So down he fell, whom sprawling on the ground,
His brother from the wooden gyves unbound.

To GYVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To fetter; to shackle; to enchain; to ensnare.

With as little a web as this, will I ensnare as great a fly as Cassio. Ay, smile upon her, do. I will gyve thee in thine own courtship.

H

H

Is in English, as in other languages, a note of aspiration, sounded only by a strong emission of the breath, without any conformation of the organs of speech, and is therefore by many grammarians accounted no letter. The h in English is scarcely ever mute at the beginning of a word, or where it immediately precedes a vowel; as house, behaviour: where it is followed by a consonant it has no sound, according to the present pronunciation: but anciently, as now in Scotland, it made the syllable guttural; as right, bought.

HA. interject. [ha, Latin.]

1. An expression of wonder, surprise, sudden question, or sudden exertion.

You shall look farther ere I give or hazard:
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see.

HA

Ha! what art thou! thou shouldst teach's trunk!
It is my H. Rings!

2. An expression of laughter. Useful with reduplication.

He saith among the trumpets ha, ha, and he smileth the battle afar off.

Ha, ha, 'tis what so long I wish'd and vow'd;

HA'GARD. adj. [bagard, French.]

1. Wild; untamed; irreclaimable.
As bagard hawk, presuming to contend
With hardy fowl above his able might,
His weak pounces all in vain doth spend,
To trust the prey too heavy for his flight. Fairy Queen.

She's too disdainful;
I know her spirits are as coy and wild,
As bagard as the rock. Shakspere.

2. [bagar, German.] Lean; rugged; perhaps, ugly. To this sense I have put the following passage; for the author ought to have written bagard.
A hagged carion of a wolf, and a jolly sort of dog, with good flesh upon 's back, fell into company together. L'Esfrange.

3. Deformed with passion; wildly disordered.
Fearful besides of what in sight had pass'd,
His hands and hagard eyes to heav'n he cast. Dryden.

Where are the conscious looks, the face now pale,
Now flushing red, the down-cast hagard eyes,
Or fixt on earth, or slowly rais'd! Smith.

HA'GGARD. n. f.

1. Any thing wild or irreclaimable.
I will be married to a wealthy widow,
Ere three days pass, which has as long lov'd me
As I have lov'd this proud disdainful haggard. Shakspere.

2. A species of hawk.
Does the wild haggard tow'r into the sky,
And to the south by thy direction fly? Sandys.

I enlarge my discourse to the observation of the aires, the brancher, the ramish hawk, and the haggard. Wilton.

3. A hag. So Garth has used it for want of understanding it.

Beneath the gloomy cover of an yew,
In a dark grove, the baleful haggard lay,
Breathing black vengeance, and infecting day. Garth.

HA'GGARDLY. adv. [from haggard.] Deformedly; uglyly.

For her the rich Arabia sweats her gum;
And precious oils from distant Indies come,
How haggardly fo'er she looks at home. Dryd.

HA'GCESS. n. f. [from bag or hack.] A mass of meat, generally pork chopped, and enclosed in a membrane. In Scotland it is commonly made in a sheep's maw of the entrails of the same animal, cut small, with suet and spices.

HA'GGISH. adj. [from bag.] Of the nature of a hag; deformed; horrid.
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. Shakspere.

To HA'GGLE. v. a. [corrupted from hackle or hack.] To cut; to chop; to mangle; always in a bad sense.
Suffolk first died, and York all haggled o'er,
Comes to him where in gore he lay interc'd. Shakspere.

To HA'GGLE. v. n. To be tedious in a bargain; to be long in coming to the price.

HA'GGLER. n. f. [from haggle.]

1. One that cuts.
2. One that is tardy in bargaining.

HA'GIOGRAPHER. n. f. [ἅγιος, and γράφω.] A holy writer.

The Jews divide the holy scriptures of the old testament into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographers.

HAH. interject. An expression of sudden effort.

Her coats tuck'd up, and all her motions
Just,
She stamps, and then cries hah! at ev'ry thrust. Dryden.

HAIL. n. f. [hazel, Saxon.] Drops of rain frozen in their falling. Locke.

Thunder mix'd with hail,
Hail mix'd with fire, must rend th' Egyptian sky. Wilton.

To HAIL. v. n. To pour down hail.
My people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation when it shall hail, coming down on the feet Isaiah.

HAIL. interj. [hœl, health, Saxon: hail, therefore, is the same as salve of the Latins, or ὑγιαίνω of the Greeks, health be to you.] A term of salutation now used only in poetry; health be to you. It is used likewise to things inanimate.

Hail, hail, brave friend!
Say to the king the knowledge of the broil.
Shakspeare.
Her sick head is bound about with clouds:
It does not look as it would have a hail,
Or health with'd in it, as on other moorns.
Ben Jonson.

The ange^l hail
Bestow'd, the holy salutation us'd
Long after to blest Mary, second Eve. Milton.
Farewell, happy fields,
Where joy for ever dwells! hail horrors! hail Infernal world! and thou profoundest hell
Receive thy new possessor!
All hail, he cry'd, thy country's grace and love;
Once first of men below, now first of birds above.
Dryden.
Hail to the sun! from whose returning light
The cheerful soldier's arms new lustre take.
Rowe.

To HAIL. v. a. [from the noun.] To salute; to call to.
A galley drawing near unto the shore, was hailed by a Turk, accompanied with a troop of horsemen. Knolles.
Thrice call upon my name, thrice beat your breast,
And hail me thrice to everlasting rest. Dryden.

HAILSHOT. n. f. [hail and shot.] Small shot scattered like hail.
The master of the artillery did visit them sharply with murdering hailshot, from the pieces mounted towards the top of the hill. Hayward.

HAILSTONE. n. f. [hail and stone.] A particle or single ball of hail.
You are no surer, no,
Than is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Shakspeare.
Had hailstones lie not thicker on the plain,
Nor shaken oaks such showers of acorns rain. Dryden.

HAILY. adj. [from hail.] Consisting of hail.
From whose dark womb a rattling tempest pours,
Which the cold north congeals to haily showers.
Pope.

HAIR. n. f. [hær, Saxon.]
1. One of the common teguments of the body. It is to be found upon all the parts of the body, except the soles of the feet and palms of the hands. When we examine the hairs with a microscope, we find that they have each a round bulbous root, which lies pretty deep in the skin, and which draws their nourishment from the surrounding humours: that each hair consists of five or six others, wrapt up in a common tegument or tube. They grow as the nails do, each part near the root thrusting forward that which is immediately above it, and not by any liquor running along the hair in tubes, as plants grow.

Quincy.
My fleece of woolly hair uncurls. Shakspeare.
So all the difference of hair only, on the skin, be a mark of a different internal constitution between a changeling and a dril?
Lucretius.
2. A single hair.

Naughty lady,
These hairs which thou do'st ravish from my chin,
Will quicken and accuse thee. Shakspeare.
Much is bleeding;

Which, like the courtier's hair, hath yet but life,
And not a serpent's poison. Shakspeare.

3. Any thing proverbially small.
If thou tak'st it more
Or less than just a pound; if the scale turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thou diest. Shakspeare. Merchant of Venice.
He judges to a hair of little indecencies, and knows better than any man what is not to be written. Dryden.

4. Course; or order; grain; the hair falling in a certain direction.
He is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies: if you should fight, you go against the hair of your profession. Shakspeare.

HAIRBEL. n. f. A flower; the hyacinth.
HAIRBRAINED. adj. [This should rather be written barebrained, unconstant, unfettered, wild as a hare.] Wild; irregular; unsteady.
Let's leave this town; for they are hairbrain'd slaves,
And hunger will enforce them be more eager.
Shakspeare.

HAIRBREADTH. n. f. [hair and breadth.] A very small distance; the diameter of a hair.
Seven hundred chosen men left-handed could sling stones at an hairbreadth, and not miss.
Judges.
I spoke of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and held;
Of hairbreadth 'scapes in th' imminent deadly breach. Shakspeare.

HAIRCLOTH. n. f. [hair and cloth.] Stuff made of hair, very rough and prickly, worn sometimes in mortification.
It is composed of reeds and parts of plants woven together, like a piece of haircloth. Grew.
HAIRLACE. n. f. [hair and lace.] The fillet with which women tie up their hair.
Some worms are commonly resembled to a woman's hairlace or fillet, thence called tenia. Harvey.

If Molly happens to be careless,
And but neglects to warm her hairlace,
She gets a cold as sure as death. Swift.
HAIRLESS. adj. [from hair.] Wanting hair.

Whitebeards have arm'd their chin and hairless scalps Against thy majesty. Shakspeare.
HAIRINESS. n. f. [from hairy.] The state of being covered with hair, or abounding with hair.

HAIRY. adj. [from hair.]
1. Overgrown with hair; covered with hair.
See his hairy temples then had rounded
With coronet of flowers. Shakspeare.
Children are not hairy, for that their skins are more perspirable. Bacon.
2. Consisting of hair.
Storms have shed
From vines the hairy honours of their head. Dryden.

HAKE. n. f. A kind of fish.
The coast is stord with mackel and hake. Carew.

HA'ROT. n. f. [from hake.] A kind of fish. Ainsworth.

HAL, in local names, is derived like al from the Saxon healle, i. e. a hall, a palace. In Gothic aih signifies a temple, or any other famous building. Gilpin's Camden.

HA'LBIRD. n. f. [halebird, French; halbeerde, Dutch, from hale, an axe, and hale, a court, halberds being the common weapons of guards.] A battle-axe fixed to a long pole.

Advance thy halberd higher than my breast. Shakspeare.

Our halberd did shut up his passage. Shakspeare.
Four knives in garbs tucinet, a trusty band,
Caps on their heads, and halberds in their hand,
Draw forth to combat on the velvet plain. Pope.

HA'LBERDIER. n. f. [halberdier, French, from halberd.] One who is armed with a halberd.
The duchess appointed him a guard of thirty halberdiers, in a livery of murrey and blue, to attend his person. Bacon.

The king had only his halberdeers, and a few of them than used to go with him. Clarendon.
HA'LYCON. n. f. [halcyo, Latin.] A bird, of which it is said that she breeds in the sea, and that there is always a calm during her incubation.
Such smiling rogues, as these, south ev'ry passion,
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods;
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters. Shak.
Amidst our arms as quiet you shall be,
As halcyons brooding on a winter sea. Dryden.

HA'LYCON. adj. [from the noun.] Placid; quiet; still; peaceful.
When great Augustus made war's tempest cease,
His halcyon days brought forth the fruits of peace. Denham.

No man can expect eternal serenity and halcyon days from to in competent and partial a cause, as the constant course of the sun in the equinoctial circle. Bentley.

HALE. adj. [This should rather be written hail, from hæl, health.] Healthy; sound; hearty; well complexioned.
My feety sleep like well below,
For they been hale enough I trow,
And liken their abode. Spenser.

Some of these wise partizans concluded the government had hired two or three hundred hale men, to be pionered, if not executed, as the pretended captives. Adairson.

His stomach too begins to fail;
Last year we thought him strong and hale,
But now he's quite another thing:
I wish he may hold out 'till spring. Swift.

To HALE. v. a. [halen, Dutch; haler, French.] To drag by force; to pull violently and rudely.
Fly to your house;
The plebeians have got your fellow tribune,
And hale him up and down. Shakspeare.

My third comfort,
Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast
Hald out to murder. Shakspeare.
Give diligence that thou mayest be delivered from him, lest he hale thee to the judge. Lucretius.
He by the neck hath hald, in pieces cut,
And set me as a mark on every butt. Sanctus.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hald'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought. Milton.
This sinistrous gravity is drawn that way by the great artery, which then subdivideth, and haleth the heat unto it. Brown.

Who would not be disgust'd with any recreation, in itself indifferent, if he should with blows be haled to it when he had no mind? Locke.
In all the tumults at Rome, though the people proceeded sometimes to pull and hale one another about it, yet no blood was drawn, 'till the time of the Gracchi. Swift.

HA'LER. n. f. [from hale.] He who pulls and hales.

HALF. n. f. plural halves. [heal; Sax. and all the Teutonic dialects. The l is often not sounded.]

1. A moiety; one part of two; an equal part.

An half acre of land. 1 Samuel.
Many might go to heaven with half the labour they go to hell, if they would venture their industry the right way. Ben Jonson.

Well chosen friendship, the most noble
Of virtues all our joys makes double,
And into halves divides our trouble. Denham

O, what but riches is there known
Which man can solely call his own;
In which no creature goes his half,
Unless it be to tiquit and laugh? Hudibras.

No mortal tongue can half the beauty tell;
For none but hands divine could work so well. Dryden.

Of our manufacture foreign markets took off one half, and the other half were consumed amongst ourselves. Locke

The council is made up half out of the noble families, and half out of the plebeian. Addison.
Half the misery of life might be extinguish'd, would men alleviate the general cause by mutual compassion. Addison.

Her beauty in thy softer half
Bury'd and lost, she ought to grieve. Prior.

Natural was it for a prince, who had propos'd to himself the empire of the world, not to neglect the sea, the half of his dominions. Virgil.

2. It sometimes has a plural signification when a number is divided.

Had the land divided of the left,
Half had come hence, and let the world provide the rest. Dryden.

HALF. adv.

At shewing but thy head forth, start away
From this half-sphere. Ben Jonson.

HALF-STRAINED. adj. [half and strain.]

Half bred; imperfect.
I find I'm but a half-strain'd villain yet,
But mungrel-mischievous; for my blood boil'd
To view this brutal act. Dryden.

HALF-SWORD. n. f. Close fight; within half the length of a sword.

I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. Shakspeare.

HALF-WAY. adv. [half and way.] In the middle.

Fearless he sees, who is with virtue crown'd,
The tempest rage, and hears the thunder
found;
Ever the same, let fortune smile or frown:
Serenely as he liv'd feigns his breath;

Meets destiny half-way, nor shrinks at death. Granville.

HALF-WIT. n. f. [half and wit.] A blockhead; a foolish fellow.

Half-wits are fleas, to lute and fe light,
We scarce could know they live, but that they bite. Dryden.

HALF-WITTED. adj. [from half-wit.] Imperfectly furnished with understanding.

I would rather have trusted the refinement of our language, as to sound, to the judgment of the women than of half-witted poets. Swift.

Jack had pass'd for a poor, well-meaning, half-witted, cracked, brain-brained fellow: people were strangely surpris'd to find him in such a roguery. Arbuthnot's History of John Bull.

When half is added to any word noting personal qualities, it commonly notes contempt

With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls
And courts of princes. Milton.

HALLELU'JAH. n. f. [הללויה.] Praise
ye the Lord. A song of thanksgiving.

Then shall thy faints
Unfain'd hallelujahs to Thee sing,
Hymns of high praise. Milton.

Singing those devout hymns and heavenly anthems, in which the church militant seems ambitious to emulate the triumphant, and echo back the solemn praises and hallelujahs of the eccl'astical chours. Boyle.

HAL'LOO. interj. [The original of this word is controverted: some imagine it corrupted from a lui, to him! others from allons, let us go! and Skinner from haller, to draw.] A word of encouragement when dogs are let loose on their game.

Some popular chief,
More noisy than the rest, but cries halloo,
And, in a trice, the bellowing herd come out. Dryden.

To HA'LLOW. v. a. [halgan, halig, Saxon, holy.]

1. To consecrate; to make holy.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, it is only to testify that we make them places of publick resort; that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

It cannot be endured to hear a man profess that he putteth fire to his neighbour's house, but yet to *hallow*eth the same with prayer that he hopeth it shall not burn. Hooker.

Is 't Cade that I have slain, that monstrous traitor?
Sword, I will hallow thee for this thy deed,
And hang thee o'er my tomb, when I am dead. Shakespeare.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

God from work
Now resting, blest'd and hallow'd the seventh day,

As resting on that day from all his works,
But not in silence holy kept. Milton.

Then banish'd faith shall once again return,
And vestal fires in hallow'd temples burn. Dryden.
No satyr lurks within this hallow'd ground;
But nymphs and heroines, kings and gods abound. Granville.

2. To reverence as holy: hallowed be thy name.

HALLUCINATION. n. f. [hallucination, Latin.] Error; blunder; mistake; folly.

A wasting of flesh, without cause, is frequently termed a bewitched disease; but questionless a mere hallucination of the vulgar. Harvey.

This must have been the hallucination of the transcriber, who probably mistook the dash of the I for a T. Addison.

HALM. n. f. [healm, Saxon.] Straw: pronounced harum: which see.

HA'LO. n. f. A red circle round the sun or moon.

If the hail be a little flatted, the light transmitted may grow so strong, at a little less distance than that of twenty-six degrees, as to form a halo about the sun or moon; which halo, as often as the hailstones are duly figured, may be coloured. Newton.

I saw by reflexion, in a vessel stagnating water, three halo's, crowns or rings of colours about the sun, like three little rainbows concentric to his body. Newton.

HA'LSENING. adj. [hals, German; hals, Scottish, the neck.] Sounding harshly; inharmonious in the throat or tongue. Not in use.

This halsening horny name hath, as Cornuto in Italy, opened a gap to the scuffs of many. Carew.

them, who happily may peruse these two treatises.
Digby.

HAPPINESS. n. f. [from happy.]

1. Felicity; state in which the desires are satisfied.
Happiness is that estate whereby we attain, so far as possibly may be attained, the full possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth in it after an eminent sort the contentation of our desires, the highest degree of all our perfection. Hooker.
Oh! happiness of sweet retir'd content,
To be at once secure and innocent. Denham.
Philosophers differ about the chief good or happiness of man. Temple.
The various and contrary choices that men make in the world, argue that the same thing is not good to every man alike: this variety of pursuits shews, that every one does not place his happiness in the same thing. Locke.
2. Good luck; good fortune.
3. Fortuitous elegance; unstudied grace.
Certain graces and happinesses, peculiar to every language, give life and energy to the words.
Denham.

For there's a happiness as well as care. Pope.
Form'd by sonic rule that guides but not constrains,
And finish'd more through happiness than pains.
Pope.

HAPPY. adj. [from hap; as lucky for luck.]

1. In a state of felicity; in a state where the desire is satisfied.
At other end Uran did Strephon lend Her happy making hand. Sidney.
Am I happy in thy news?
—If to have done the thing you gave in charge,
Reget your happiness, be happy then;
For it is done. Shakspeare.
Truth and peace, and love, shall ever shine
About the supreme throne
Of him, t' whose happy making sight alone,
Our heav'nly guided soul shall climb. Milton.
Though the presence of imaginary good cannot make us happy, the absence of it may make us miserable. Addison.
2. Lucky; successful; fortunate.

exels in a rejoinder. Swift.

HAQUETON. n. f. A coat of mail.

HARANGUE. n. f. [harangue, French.
The original of the French word is much questioned: Menage thinks it a corruption of hearing, English; Junius imagines it to be discours au rang, to a circle, which the Italian arringo seems to favour. Perhaps it may be from orare, or orationare, orationer, oraner, aranger, baranguer.] A speech; a popular oration.

Gray-headed men, and grave, with warriors
mix'd,
Assemble, and harangues are heard, but soon
In factious opposition. Milton.

Nothing can better improve political schoolboys than the art of making plausible or implausible harangues, against the very opinion for which they resolve to determine. Swift.

Many preachers neglect method in their harangues. Watts.

To HARANGUE. v. n. [baranguer, Fr.]

[This name is said to have been given by Francis of France to a buffoon, in ridicule of his enemy Charles le quint. Menage derives it more probably from a famous comedian that frequented Mr. Harley's house, whom his friends called Harlequins, little Harley. Trev.] A buffoon who plays tricks to divert the populace; a Jack-pudding; a zani.

The joy of a king for a victory must be like that of a harlequin upon a letter from his mistresses.

Dryden.

The man in graver tragick known,

Though his best part long since was done,

Still on the stage desires to tarry;

And he who play'd the harlequin,

After the jest still loads the scene,

Unwilling to retire, though weary.

Prior.

HARLOT. n. f. [berlodes, Welsh, a girl. Others for borelet, a little whore. Others from the name of the mother of William the Conqueror. Hurlet is used in Chaucer for a low male drudge.] A whore; a strumpet.

Away, my disposition, and possess me with

Some harlot's spirit.

Shakespeare.

They help thee by such aids as geese and harlots.

Ben Jonson.

The harlotous harlots crowd the publick place;

Go, fools, and purchase an unclean embrace.

Dryden.

HARLOTRY. n. f. [from harlot.]

1. The trade of a harlot; fornication.

Not shall,

From Rome's tribunal, thy harangues prevail

'Gainst harlotry, while thou art clad so thin.

Dryden.

2. A name of contempt for a woman.

A peevish self-will'd harlotry,

That no persuasion can do good upon.

Shaksp.

HARM. n. f. [hearm, Saxon.]

1. Injury; crime; wickedness.

2. Mischief; detriment; hurt.

We, ignorant of ourselves,

Beg often our own harms, which the wife Powers

Deny us for our good.

Shakespeare.

How are we happy still in fear of harm?

But harm precedes not sin.

Milton.

They should be suffered to write on: it would keep them out of harm's way, and prevent them from evil courses.

Swift.

To HARM. v. a. To hurt; to injure.

What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?

I saw 't not, thought it not, it harm'd not me.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Passions ne'er could grow

To harm another, or impeach your rest.

After their young are hatched, they brood them under their wings, lest the cold, and sometimes the heat, should harm them.

Ray.

HARMSFUL. adj. [harm and full.] Hurtful; mischievous; noxious; injurious; detrimental.

His dearly loved squire

His spear of lichen-wood behind him bare,

While he harmful head, thrice heated in the fire,

Had given many a breach with pike-head square.

Spenser.

Let no man fear that harmful creature less, be cause he sees the apostle safe from that poison.

Hall.

The earth brought forth fruit and food for man, without any mixture of harmful quality.

Raleigh.

For flax and oats will turn the tender field,

And sleepy poppies harmful harvests yield.

Dryd.

HARMPFULLY. adv. [from harmful.] Hurtfully; noxiously; detrimentally.

A scholar is better occupied in playing or sleeping, than spending his time not only vainly,

but harmfully in such kind of exercise.

Ashton.

HARMEFULNESS. n. f. [from harmful.] Hurtfulness; mischievousness; noxiousness.

HARMLESS. adj. [from harm.]

1. Innocent; innoxious; not hurtful.

Touching ceremonies harmless in themselves, and hurtful only in respect of number, was it aim'd to decree that those things that were least needful, and newliest come, should be the first that were taken away?

She, like harmless lightning, throws her eye

On him, her brother, inc, her master; hitting

Each object with a joy.

Shakespeare.

2. Unhurt; undamaged.

The shipwright will be careful to gain by his labour, or at least to save himself harmless, and therefore suit his work slightly, according to a slight price.

Raleigh.

HARMLESSLY. adv. [from harmless.] Innocently; without hurt; without crime.

He spent that day free from worldly trouble, harmlessly, and in a recreation that became a churchman.

Walton.

Bullets batter the walls which stand inflexible, but fall harmlessly into wood or feathers.

Decay of Piety.

HARMLESSNESS. n. f. [from harmless.] Innocence; freedom from tendency to injury or hurt.

When, through tasteless flat humility,

In doubt bak'd men some harmlessness we see,

'Tis but his phlegm that 's virtuous, and not he.

Dunne.

Compare the harmlessness, the credulity, the tenderness, the modesty, and the ingenuous pliableness to virtuous counsels, which is in youth

untainted, with the mischievousness, the slyness,

the craft, the impudence, the falsehood, and the confirmed obstinacy in an aged long-practised knave.

South.

HARMONICAL. } adj. [ἁρμονικός; harmo-

HAARMONICK. } nique, French.]

1. Relating to music; susceptible of musical proportion to each other.

After every three whole notes, nature requir-eth, for all harmonical use, one half note to be interposed.

Bacon.

2. Concordant; musical; proportioned to each other: less properly.

Harmonical sounds, and discordant sounds, are both active and passive; but blackness and darkness are, indeed, but privatives.

Bacon.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intones to a's,

Harmonick twang of leather, horn and brass.

Pope.

HARMONIOUS. adj. [harmonieux, French, from harmony.]

1. Adapted to each other; having the parts proportioned to each other; symmetrical.

All the wide-extended sky,

And all the harmonious worlds on high,

And Virgil's sacred work shall dye.

Cowley.

God has made the intellectual world harmonious and beautiful without us; but it will never come into our heads all at once; we must bring it home piece-meal.

Locke.

2. Having sounds concordant to each other; musical; symphonious.

Thoughts that can but move harmonious numbers.

Milton.

The verse of Chaucer is not harmonious to us;

they who lived with him, thought it musical.

Dryden.

HARMONIOUSLY. adv. [from harmonious.]

1. With just adaptation and proportion of parts to each other.

Not chaos-like, together crush'd and bruise'd;
But 's the world, harmoniously confus'd:
Where order in variety we see,
And where, though all things differ, they agree.

Pope.

That all these distances, motions, and quantities of matter should be so accurately and harmoniously adjusted in this great variety of our system, is above the fortuitous hits of blind material causes, and must certainly flow from that eternal fountain of wisdom.

Bentley.

2. Musically; with concord of sounds.

If we look upon the world as a musical instrument, well-tuned, and harmoniously struck, we ought not to worship the instrument, but him that makes the musick.

Stillingfleet.

HARMONIOUSNESS. n. f. [from harmonious.] Proportion; musicalness.

TO HARMONIZE. v. a. [from harmony.] To adjust in fit proportions; to make musical.

Love first invented verse, and form'd the rhyme,
The motion measur'd, harmoniz'd the chime.

Dry.

HARMONY. n. f. [ἁρμονία; harmonie, French.]

1. The just adaptation of one part to another.

The pleasures of the eye and ear are but the effects of equality, good proportion, or correspondence; so that equality and correspondence are the causes of harmony.

Bacon.

The harmony of things,
As well as that of sounds, from discord springs.

Denham.

Sure infinite wisdom must accomplish all its works with consummate harmony, proportion, and regularity.

Cheyne.

2. Just proportion of sound; musical concord.

The sound
Symphonious, of ten thousand harps that tun'd Angelic harmonies.

Milton.

Harmony is a compound idea, made up of different sounds united.

Watts.

3. Concord; correspondent sentiment.

In us both one soul,
Harmony to behold in wedded pair!
More grateful than harmonious sounds to th' ear.

Milton.

I no soeuer in my heart divid'd,
My heart, which by a secret harmony
Still moves with thine, join'd in connexion sweet!

Milton.

HARNESS. n. f. [harnois, French; supposed from iern or hiern, Runick; biain, Welsh and Erse, iron.]

1. Armour; defensive furniture of war. Somewhat antiquated.

A goodly knight, all dress'd in harness meet,
That from his head no place appeared to his feet.

Spenser.

Of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness.

Shakspeare.

Were I a great man, I should fear to drink:
Great men should drink with harness on their throats.

Shakspeare.

2. The traces of draught horses, particularly of carriages of pleasure or state; of other carriages we say geer.

Or wilt thou ride? Thy horses shall be trapp'd,
Their harness studded all with gold and pearl.

Shakspeare.

Their steeds around,
Free from their harness, graze the flow'ry ground.

Dryden.

TO HARNESSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in armour.

He was harnest light, and to the field goes he.

Shakspeare.

Full fifty years, harness'd in rugged steel,
I have endur'd the biting winter's blast.

Rowe.

2. To fix horses in their traces.

Before the doer her iron chariot stood,
All ready harnest for journey new.

Spenser.

Harness the horses, and get up the horsemen,
and stand forth with your hamlets.

Jeremiah.

When I plough my ground, my horse is harnest
and chained to my plough.

Hale.

To the harnest yoke

They lend their shoulder, and begin their toil.

Thomson.

HARP. n. f. [heapp, Saxon; harpe, Fr.]

It is used through both the Teutonic and Roman dialects, and has been long in use.

Romanusq; lyrâ plaudat tibi, Barbarus harpâ.
Ven. For.]

1. A lyre; an instrument strung with wire and commonly struck with the finger.

Arion, when through tempest cruel wreck
He forth was thrown into the greedy seas,
Through the sweet musick which his harp did make,

Allur'd a dolphin him from death to ease.
They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
prais'd
God and his works.

Milton.

Nor wanted tuneful harp, nor vocal quire;
The muses sung, Apollo touch'd the lyre.

Dryd.

2. A confellation.

Next shines the harp, and through the liquid skies
The shell, as lightest, first begins to rise;
Thus when sweet Orpheus struck, to list'ning rocks
He senses gave, and ears to wither'd rocks.

Creech.

TO HARP. v. n. [harper, French, from the noun.]

1. To play on the harp.

I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps.

Revelations.

Things without life giving sound, whether pipe or harp, except they give a distinction in the sounds, how shall it be known what is piped or harped?

1 Cor.

The helmet cherubim,
And iwarded seraphim,
Are seen in glit'ring ranks with wings display'd,
Harping in loud and solemn quire,
With unexpressive notes to heav'n's new-horn heir.

Milton.

You harp a little too much upon one string.

Collier.

2. To touch any passion, as the harper touches a string; to dwell on a subject.

Gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear.

Shakspeare.

For thy good caution, thanks:
Thou'lt harp'd my fear aright.

Shakspeare.

He seems
Proud and disdainful, harping on what I am, Nor what he knew I was.

Shakspeare.

HARPER. n. f. [from harp.] A player on the harp.

Never will I trust to speeches penn'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue;
Nor wooe in rhyme, like a blind harper's song.

Shakspeare.

I'm the god of the harp: stop my fairit:—in vain;
Nor the harp, nor the harper, could fetch her again.

Ticket.

HARPING IRON. n. f. [from harpago, Latin.] A bearded dart with a line fastened to the handle, with which whales are struck and caught.

The boat which on the first assault did go,
Struck with a harping iron the younger foe:
Who, when he felt his side so rudely goar'd,
Loud as the sea that nourish'd him he roar'd.

Waller.

HARPONEER. n. f. [harpencur, French, from harpoon.] He that throws the harpoon in whalefishing.

HARPOON. n. f. [harpon, French.] A harping iron.

HARPSICORD. n. f. A musical instrument, strung with wire, and played by striking keys.

HARRY. n. f. [harpyia, Latin; harpie, harpye, French.]

1. The harpies were a kind of birds which had the faces of women, and foul long claws, very filthy creatures, which, when the table was furnished for Phineus, came flying in, and devouring or carrying away the greater part of the victuals, did so defile the rest that they could not be endured.

Raleigh.

That an harpy is not a centaur is by this way as much a truth, as that a square is not a circle.

Locke.

2. A ravenous wretch; an extortioner.

I will do you any ambassage to the pignies, rather than hold thee words conference with this harpy.

Shakspeare.

HARQUEBUSS. n. f. [See ARQUEBUSE.] A hand-gun.

HARQUEBUSSIER. n. f. [from harquebuss.] One armed with a harquebuss.

Twenty thousand nimble harquebussiers were ranged in length, and but five in a rank.

Knolles.

HARRIDAN. n. f. [corrupted from harridelle, Fr. a worn-out worthless horse.] A decayed trumpet.

She just endur'd the winter she began,
And in four months a batter'd harridan;
Now nothing's left, but wither'd, pale, and shrank:

To bawd for others, and go shares with punk.

Swift.

HARROW. n. f. [charrou, French; harcke, German, a rake.] A frame of timbers crossing each other, and set with teeth, drawn over sowed ground to break the clods, and throw the earth over the feed.

The land with daily care
Is exercis'd, and with an iron war
Of rakes and harrows.

Dryden.

Two small harrows, that clap on each side of the ridge, harrow it right up and down.

Mortim.

TO HARROW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with earth by the harrow.

Friend, harrow in time, by some manner of means,

2. To break with the harrow.

Can't thou bind the unicorn with his band in the furrow? or will he harrow the valleys after thee?

Job.

Let the Volscians
Plow Rome, and harrow Italy.

Shakspeare.

3. To tear up; to rip up.

I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul, freeze thy young blood,
Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres.

Shakspeare.

Imagine you behold me bound and scourg'd,
My aged muscles harrow'd up with whips;
Or hear me groaning on the rending rack.

Rowe.

4. To pillage; to strip; to lay waste. See HARRY, which in Scottish is the same thing.

As the king did excel in good commonwealth laws, so he had in secret a design to make use of them, as well for collecting of treasure as for correcting of manners: and so meaning thereby to harrow his people, did accumulate them the rather.

Bacon.

5. To invade; to harass with incursions. [from hephtan, Saxon.] Obsolete.

And he that harrow'd hell with heavy flowre,
The faulty souls from thence brought to his heavenly bowre. Fairy Queen.

Most glorious Lord of life, that on this day
Didst make thy triumph over death and sin;
And having harrow'd hell, didst bring away
Captivity thence captive, us to win. Spenser.

6. To disturb; to put into commotion.
[This should rather be written harry,
harer, French.]

Most like; it harrows me with fear and wonder.

Amaz'd I stood, harrow'd with grief and care.

HARROW. interj. An exclamation of sudden distress. Now out of use.

Harrow now open and weal away, he cried;
What dismal day hath sent this cursed light,
To see my lord to deadly damnity'd? Spenser.

HARROWER. n. f. [from harrow.]

1. He who harrows.

2. A kind of hawk.

To HARRY. v. a. [harer, French.]

1. To tease; to hare; to ruffle.

Thou must not take my former sharpness ill.

—I repent me much

That I to harry'd him.

2. In Scotland it signifies to rob, plunder, or oppress; as, one harried a nest; that is, he took the young away; as also, he harried me out of house and home; that is, he robbed me of my goods, and turned me out of doors. See TO HAR- ROW.

HARSH. adj. [herwische, Germ. Skinner.]

1. Austere; roughly sour.

Our nature here is not unlike our wine;
Some forts, when old, continue brisk and fine:
So age's gravity may seem severe,
But nothing harsh or bitter ought to appear. Deak.
Sweet, bitter, sour, harsh and salt, are all the epithets we have to denominate that numberless variety of relishes. Locke.

The same defect of heat which gives a fier-ceness to our natures, may contribute to that roughness of our language, which bears some analogy to the harsh fruit of colder countries. Swift.

2. Rough to the ear.

A name unmusical to Volscian ears,
And harsh in sound to thine. Shakspeare.

Age might, what nature never gives the young,
Have taught the smoothness of thy native tongue;
But satire needs not that, and wit will shine
Through the harsh cadence of a rugged line. Dryden.

The unnecessary consonants made their spelling redious, and their pronunciation harsh. Dryden.

Thy lord commands thee now
With a harsh voice, and supercilious brow,
To serve duties. Dryden.

3. Crabbed; morose; peevish.

He was a wise man and an eloquent; but in his nature harsh and haughty. Bacon.

Bear patiently the harsh words of thy enemies, as knowing that the anger of an enemy admonishes us of our duty. Taylor.

No harsh reflection let remembrance raise;
Forbear to mention what thou canst not praise.

A certain quickness of apprehension inclined him to kindle into the first motions of anger; but, for a long time before he died, no one heard an intemperate or harsh word proceed from him.

4. Rugged to the touch; rough.

Black feels as if you were feeling needles points,
or some harsh sand; and red feels very smooth.

5. Unpleasing; rigorous.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the preacher
charin'd. Dryden.

HARSHLY. adv. [from harsh.]

VOL. I.

1. Sourly; austere to the palate, as unripe fruit.

2. With violence; in opposition to gentleness, unless in the following passage it rather signifies unripe.

'Till, like ripe fruit, thou drop Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

3. Severely; morosely; crabbedly.

I would rather he was a man of a rough temper, that would treat me harshly, than of an effeminate nature. Addison.

4. Unpleasantly to the ear.

My wife is in a wayward mood to-day;
I tell you, 'twould sound harshly in her ears.

Get from him why he puts on this confusion,
Grating to harshly all his days of quiet
With turbulent and dang'rous lunacy. Shakspeare.
The rings of iron that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryden.

HARSHNESS. n. f. [from harsh.]

1. Sourness; austere taste.

Take an apple and roll it upon a table hard:
the rolling doth soften and sweeten the fruit, which is nothing but the smooth distribution of the spirits into the parts; for the unequal distribution of the spirits maketh the harshness. Bacon.

2. Roughness to the ear.

Neither can the natural harshness of the French, or the perpetual ill accent, be exercised into perfect harmony like the Italian. Dryden.

Cannot I admire the height of Milton's invention, and the strength of his expression, without defending his antiquated words, and the perpetual harshness of their sound. Dryden.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

3. Ruggedness to the touch.

Harshness and ruggedness of bodies is unpleasant to the touch. Bacon.

4. Crabbedness; moroseness; peevishness.

Thy tender hefted nature shall not give Thee o'er to harshness: her eyes are fierce, but thine

Do comfort and not burn. Shakspeare.

HART. n. f. [heort, Saxon.] A he deer;
the male of the roe.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare.

The deer

And fearful harts do wander every where Amidst the dogs. May's Virgil.

HART-ROYAL. n. f. A plant. A species of buckthorn plantain.

HARTSHORN. n. f. A drug.

Hartshorn is a drug that comes into use many ways, and under many forms. What is used here are the whole horns of the common male deer, which fall off every year. This species is the fallow deer; but some tell us, that the medicinal hartshorn should be that of the true hart or stag. The salt of hartshorn is a great sudorific, and the spirit has all the virtues of volatile alkalies:
It is used to bring people out of faintings by its pungency, holding it under the nose, and pouring down some drops of it in water. Will.

Ramose concretions of the volatile salts are ob-servable upon the glass of the receiver, whilst the spirits of vipers and hartshorn are drawn. Woolstow.

HARTSHORN. n. f. An herb.

HARTSTONGUE. n. f. [lingua cervina,
Latin.] A plant.

It commonly grows out from the joints of old walls and buildings, where they are moist and shady. There are very few of them in Europe.

Hartstongue is propagated by parting the roots, and also by seed. Mortimer.

HARTWORT. n. f. [torquillum, Latin.]
An umbelliferous plant. Miller.

HARVEST. n. f. [hærpeft, Saxon.]

1. The season of reaping and gathering the corn.

As it ebbs, the seedman
Upon the slime and ooze scatters his grain,
And shortly comes to harvest. Shakspeare.
With harvest work he is worse than in spring. L'Esrange.

2. The corn ripened, gathered, and inned.
From Ireland come I with my strength,
And reap the harvest which that rascal sow'd.

When the father is too fondly kiad,
Such seed he sows, such harvest shall he find.

3. The product of labour.

Let us the harvest of our labour eat;
'Tis labour makes the coarsest diet sweet. Dryden.

HARVEST-HOME. n. f.

1. The song which the reapers sing at the feast made for having innd the harvest.

Your hay it is mow'd, and your corn is reap'd;
Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd;
Come, my boys, come,
Come, my boys, come,

And merrily roar out harvest-home. Dryden.

2. The time of gathering harvest.

At harvest-home, and on the sheaving day,
When he should thanks to Pan and Pales pay.

3. The opportunity of gathering treasure.

His wife I will use as the key of the cuckoldy rogue's coffer; and there's my harvest-home. Shakspeare.

HARVEST-LORD. n. f. The head reaper
at the harvest.

Giant harvest-lord more by a penny or two,
To call on his fellows the better to do. Tusser.

HARVESTER. n. f. [from harvest.] One who works at the harvest.

HARVESTMAN. n. f. [harvest and man.]
A labourer in harvest.

Like to a harvest-man that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. Shakspeare.

To HASH. v. u. [hacher, French.] To mince; to chop into small pieces and mingle.

He rais'd his arm
Above his head, and rain'd a storm
Of blows so terrible and thick,
As if he meant to hash her quick. Hudibras.

What have they to complain of but too great variety, though some of the dishes be not served in the exactest order and politeness; but hashed up in haste? Gurth.

HASK. n. f. This seems to signify a case or habitation made of rushes or flags. Obsolete.

Phœbus, weary of his yearly task,
Established hath his steeds in lowly lay,
And taken up his inn in fishes hask. Spenser.

HASLET. } n. f. [hasla, Islandick, a HARSLET. } bundle; hasterel, hasterau, hasliar, French.] The heart, liver, and lights, of a hog, with the windpipe, and part of the throat to it.

HASP. n. f. [hæpp, Saxon, whence in some provinces it is yet called haspe.] A clasp folded over a staple, and fastened on with a padlock.

Have doors to open and shut at pleasure, with hasps to them. Mortimer.

To HASP. v. n. [from the noun.] To shut with a hasp.

HAS'SOCK. n. f. [hasock, Germ.] Skinner.

1. A thick mat on which men kneel at church.

He found his parishioners very irregular; and in order to make them kneel, and join in the responses, he gave every one of them a hassock and common prayer book. Addison.

2. In Scotland it is applied to any thing made of rushes or privet, on which a person may sit: it is therefore probable that haddock and hask are the same.

HAST. The second person singular of have.

HASTE. n. f. [haste, Fr. haste, Dut.]

1. Hurry; speed; nimbleness; precipitation.

Spare him, death!

But O, thou wilt not, can'tst not spare!

Haste hath never time to hear. Craftsman.

Our lines reform'd, and not compos'd in haste,

Polish'd like marble, would like marble last;

But as the present, so the last age writ;

In both we find like negligence and wit. Waller.

In as much haste, as I am, I cannot forbear giving an example. Dryden.

The wretched father running to their aid

With pious haste, but vain, they next invade. Dryden.

2. Passion; vehemence.

I said in my haste all men are liars. Psalms.

TO HASTE. } v. n. [haster, French; hasten, Dutch.]

1. To make haste; to be in a hurry; to be busy; to be speedy.

I have not hastened from being a pastor to follow thee. Jeremiah.

2. To move with swiftness, eagerness, or hurry.

'Tis Cinna, I do know him by his gait;

He is a friend. Cinna, where haste you so? Shakspeare.

They were troubled and hasted away. Psalms.

All those things are pass'd away like a shadow, and as a post that hasteth by. Wisdom.

Hasting to pay his tribute to the sea,

Like mortal life to meet eternity. Denham.

These rites perform'd, the pounce, without delay,

Hastes to the nether world, his destin'd way. Dryden.

To distant Sparta, and the spacious waste

Of sandy Pyle, the royal youth shall haste. Pope.

Soon as the sun awakes, the sprightly court

Leave their repose, and hasten to the sport. Prior.

TO HASTE. } v. a. To push forward; TO HASTEN. } to urge on; to precipitate; to drive a swifter pace.

Let it be so hastid, that supper be ready at the faintest by five of the clock. Shakspeare.

All hopes of succour from your arms are past;

To save us now, you must our ruin haste. Dryden.

Each sees his lamp with different lustre crown'd;

Each knows his course with different periods bound;

And in his passage through the liquid space,

Nor hastens nor retards his neighbour's race. Prior.

HASTENER. n. f. [from hasten.] One that hastens or hurries.

HASTILY. adv. [from hasty.]

1. In a hurry; speedily; nimbly; quickly.

A voice that called loud and clear,

Come hither, hither, O come hastily! Spenser.

If your grace incline that we should live,

You must not, sir, too hastily forgive. Waller.

The next to danger hot pursu'd by fate,

Half cloth'd, half naked, hastily retire. Dryden.

HASTINESS. n. f. [from hasty.]

1. Haste; speed.

2. Hurry; precipitation.

A fellow being out of breath, or seeming to be for haste, with humble hastiness told Basilus.

Sidney.

3. Rash eagerness.

The turns of his verse, his breakings, his propriety, his numbers, and his gravity, I have as far imitated as the poverty of our language, and the hastiness of my performance, would allow. Dryden.

There is most just cause to fear, lest our hastiness to embrace a thing of so perilous consequence, should cause posterity to feel those evils. Hooper.

4. Angry testiness; passionate vehemence.

HASTINGS. n. f. [from hasty.] Peas that come early.

The large white and green hastings are not to be set till the cold is over. Northmer.

HASTY. adj. [hastif, French, from haste; hastig, Dutch.]

1. Quick; speedy.

In this the counsel that we two have shar'd,

The sisters vows, the hours that we have spent,

When we have chid the hasty footed time

For parting us! Shakspeare.

2. Passionate; vehement.

He that is slow to wrath is of great understanding; but he that is hasty of spirit exalteth folly. Proverbs.

3. Rash; precipitate.

Seest thou a man that is hasty in his words?

There is more hope of a fool than of him. Prov.

Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God. Eccles.

4. Early ripe.

Beauty shall be a fading flower, and as the hasty fruit before the summer. Isaiah.

HASTY-PUDDING. n. f. A pudding made of milk and flower, boiled quick together; as also of oatmeal and water boiled together.

She's as big as he is; and there's her thrum hat, and her muffer too. Shakspeare.

Out of mere ambition you have made

Your holy hat be stamp't on the king's coin. Shak.

His hat was like a helmet, or Spanish montero. Bacon.

Hermes o'er his head in air appear'd,

And with soft words his drooping spirits cheer'd,

His hat adorn'd with wings disclos'd the god,

And in his hand he bore the sleep-compelling end. Dryden.

HATBAND. n. f. [hat and band.] A string tied round the hat.

They had hats of blue velvet, with fine plumes of divers colours, set round like hatbands. Bacon.

Room for the noble gladiator! see

His coat and hatband shew his quality. Dryden.

HATCASE. n. f. [hat and case.] A slight box for a hat.

I might mention a hatcase, which I would not exchange for all the beavers in Great Britain. Addison.

TO HATCH. v. a. [hecken, German, as Skinner thinks, from heghen, eghen, æg, egg, Saxon.]

1. To produce young from eggs by the warmth of incubation.

He kindly spreads his spacious wing,

And hatches plenty for th' ensuing spring. Denham.

The tepid caves, and fens and shores,

Their brood as numerous hatch from th' eggs,

that soon

Bursting with kindly rapture, forth disclos'd

Their callow young. Milton.

2. To quicken the egg by incubation.

When they have laid such a number of eggs as they can conveniently cover and hatch, they give over, and begin to fit. Ray.

Others hatch their eggs, and tend the birth,

'till it is able to shift for itself. Addison.

3. To produce by precedent action.

Which thing they very well know, and, I doubt not, will easily confess, who live to their great both toil and grief, where the blasphemies of Arians are renewed by them; who, to hatch their heresy, have chosen those churches as fittest nests, where Athanasius's creed is not heard. Hooker.

4. To form by meditation; to contrive.

He was a man harmless and faithful, and one who never hatched any hopes prejudicial to the king, but always intended his safety and honour. Hayward.

5. [from hacher, French, to cut.] To shade by lines in drawing or graving.

Who first shall wound, through others arms, his blood appearing fresh,

Shall win this sword, silver'd and hatch'd. Chapman.

Such as Agamemnon and the band of Greece

Should hold up high in brass; and such again

As venerable Nestor, hatch'd in silver,

Should with a bond of air, strong as the axle-tree

On which heav'n rides, knit all the Grecian ears

To his experienc'd tongue. Shakspeare.

Those tender hairs, and those hatching strokes of the pencil, which make a kind of minced

meat in painting, are never able to deceive the sight. Dryden.

TO HATCH. v. n.

1. To be in a state of growing quick.

He observed circumstances in eggs, whilst they were hatching, which varied. Boyle.

1. A brood excluded from the egg.

2. The act of exclusion from the egg.

3. Disclosure; discovery.

Something's in his soul,

O'er which his melancholy sits on brood:

And I do doubt, the hatch and the disclosure

Will be some danger. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

4. [hæca, Saxon; hecke, Dutch, a bolt.] A half door; a door with opening over it; perhaps from hacher, to cut, as a hatch is part of a door cut in two.

Something about, a little o'er the right,

In at the window, or else o'er the hatch. Shaksp.

5. [In the plural.] The doors or openings by which they descend from one deck or floor of a ship to another.

To the king's ship, invisible as thou art,

There shalt thou find the mariners asleep

Under the hatches. Shakspeare's Tempest.

There she's hid;

The mariners all under hatches stow'd

So seas, impell'd by winds with added pow'r,

Affault the sides, and o'er the hatches tow'r. Dryden.

A ship was fasten'd to the shore;

The plank was ready laid for safe ascent,

For thither there the trembling shadow bent,

And skipp'd and skulk'd, and under hatches went. Dryden.

6. To be under HATCHES. To be in a state of ignominy, poverty, or depression.

He assures us how this fatherhood continued its course, 'till the captivity in Egypt; and then the poor fatherhood was under hatches. Lodge.

7. Hatches. Floodgates. Ainsworth.

TO HATCHEL. v. a. [hachelen, Germ.] To beat flax so as to separate the fibrous from the brittle part.

The asbestos mentioned by Kircher, in his description of China, put into water, moulders like clay, and is a fibrous small excrescence, like hairs growing upon the stones; and for the hatchelling, spinning, and weaving it, he refers to his mundus

subterraneus. Woodward.

HATCHEL. n. f. [from the verb; hachel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten.

HATCHELLER. n. f. [from hachel.] A beater of flax.

HATCHET. n. f. [hache, hachete, Fr. ascia, Latin.] A small axe.

An ugly beau adores a hatchet-face.

HATCHMENT. n. f. [corrupted from achievement. See ACHIEVEMENT.] Armorial escutcheon placed over a door at a funeral.

His means of death, his obscure funeral,
No trophy, sword, nor hatchment o'er his bones,
No noble rites nor formal ostentation,
Cry to be heard.

HATCHWAY. n. f. [hatches and way.] The way over or through the hatches.

To HATE. v. a. [hætan, Saxon.] To detest; to abhor; to abominate; to regard with the passion contrary to love.

You are, I think, assur'd I love you not.
—Your majesty hath no just cause to hate me.

Do all men kill the thing they do not love?
—Hates any man the thing he would not kill?

—Every offence is not a hate at first.

Those old inhabitants of thy holy land thou hatest for doing most odious works.

But whatsoever our jarring fortunes prove,
Though our lords hate, methinks we two may love.

HATE. n. f. [hate, Saxon.] Malignity; detestation; the contrary to love.

Speak then to me, who neither beg nor fear
Your favours nor your hate.

Hate to Mezentius, arm'd five hundred more.

HATEFUL. adj. [hate and full.] 1. That causes abhorrence; odious; abominable; detestable.

My name 's Macbeth.
—The devil himself could not pronounce a title
More hateful to mine ear.

There is no vice more hateful to God and man than ingratitude.

What owe I to his commands
Who hates me, and hath hither thrust me down,
To sit in hateful office here confin'd,
Inhabitant of heav'n, and heav'nly born?

I hear the tread
Of hateful steps; I must be viewless now.

But Umbriel, hateful gnome! forbears not so;
He breaks the phial whence the sorrows flow.

2. That feels abhorrence; abhorrent; detesting; malignant; malevolent.

Palamon, compell'd
No more to try the fortune of the field;
And, worse than death, to view with hateful eyes
His rival's conquest.

HATEFULLY. adv. [from hateful.] 1. Odiously; abominably.

2. Malignantly; maliciously.

All their hearts stood hatefully appall'd Long since.

They shall deal with thee hatefully, take away
all thy labour, and leave thee naked and bare.

HATEFULNESS. n. f. [from hateful.] Odiousness.

HATER. n. f. [from hate.] One that hates; an abhorrer; a detester.

I of her understood that most noble constancy, which whosoever loves not, shews himself to be a hater of virtue, and unworthy to live in the society of mankind.

Whilst he stood up and spoke,
He was my master, and I woe my life
To spend upon his haters.

An enemy to God, and a hater of all good.

They never wanted so much knowledge as to inform and convince them of the unlawfulness of a man's being a murderer, an hater of God, and a covenant-breaker.

HATED. n. f. [from hate.] Hate; ill-will; malignity; malevolence; dislike; abhorrence; detestation; abomination; the passion contrary to love.

Hatred is the thought of the pain which any thing present or absent is apt to produce in us.

I with I had a cause to seek him there,
To oppose his hatred fully.

Hatred is the passion of defiance, and there is a kind of averfation and hostility included in its very essence; but then, if there could have been hatred in the world when there was scarce any thing odious, it would have acted within the compass of its proper object.

Hatreds are often begotten from slight and almost innocent occasions, and quarrels propagated in the world.

Retain no malice nor hatred against any: be ready to do them all the kindness you are able.

She is a presbyterian of the most rank and virulent kind, and consequently has an inveterate hatred to the church.

Hatred has in it the guilt of murder, and loit the guilt of adultery.

To HATTER. v. a. [perhaps corrupted from batter.] To harass; to weary; to wear out with fatigue.

He 's hatter'd out with penance.

10. Not to neglect; not to omit.

I cannot speak; if my heart be not ready to burst! Well, sweet Jack, have a care of thyself.

Your plea is good; but still I say beware:
Laws are explain'd by men; so have a care.

11. To hold; to regard.

Of the maid servants shall I be had in honour.

The proud have had me greatly in derision.

12. To maintain; to hold opinion.

Sometimes they will have them to be natural heat, whereas some of them are crude and cold; and sometimes they will have them to be the qualities of the tangible parts, whereas they are things by themselves.

13. To contain.

You have of these pedlars that have more in 'em than you'd think, sister.

I will never trust a man again for keeping his sword clean; nor believe he can have every thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

14. To require; to claim.

What would these madmen have?
First they would bribe us without pence,
Deceive us without common sense,
And without pow'r enslave.

15. To be a husband or wife to another.

If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

16. To be engaged, as in a task or employment.

If we maintain things that are established, we have to strive with a number of heavy prejudices, deeply rooted in the hearts of men.

17. To wish; to desire; in a lax sense.

I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of my God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness.

I would have no man discouraged with that kind of life or series of actions, in which the choice of others, or his own necessities, may have engaged him.

18. To buy.

If these trifles were rated only by art and artfulness, we should have them much cheaper.

19. It is most used in English, as in other European languages, as an auxiliary verb to make the tenses; have, hast, and hath, or has, the preterperfect; and had, and hadst, the preterpluperfect.

If there had been words now between them to have expressed provocation, they had gone together by the ears. Congreve.

I have heard one of the greatest geniuses this age has produced, who had been trained up in all the polite studies of antiquity, assure me, upon his being obliged to search into records, that he at last took an incredible pleasure in it. Addison.

I have not here considered custom as it makes things easy, but as it renders them delightful; and though others have made the same reflections, it is possible they may not have drawn those uses from it. Addison.

That admirable precept which Pythagoras is said to have given to his disciples, and which that philosopher must have drawn from the observation I have enlarged upon. Addison.

The gods have placed labour before virtue. Addison.

Evil spirits have contracted in the body habits of lust and sensuality, malice and revenge. Addison.
These torments have already taken root in them. Addison.

That excellent author has shewn how every particular custom and habit of virtue will, in its own nature, produce the heaven, or a state of happiness, in him who shall hereafter practice it. Addison.

20. HAVE at, or with, is an expression denoting resolution to make some attempt. They seem to be imperative expressions; have this at you; let this reach you, or take this; have with you; take this with you; but this will not explain have at it, or have at him, which must be considered as mere elliptical; as, we will have a trial at it, or at him.

He that will caper with me for a thousand marks, let him lend me the money, and have at him. Shakespeare.

I can bear my part; 'tis my occupation: have at it with you. Shakespeare.

I never was out at a mad frolic, though this is the maddest I ever undertook: have with you, lady mine; I take you at your word. Dryden.

HA'VEN. n. f. [haven, Dutch; havre, French.]

1. A port; a harbour; a station for ships. Love was threatened and promised to him, and his cousin, as both the tempest and haven of their best years. Sidney.

Among your works! Addison's Cato.

The rabbins, to express the great havock which has been made of the Jews, tell us, that there were such torrents of holy blood shed, as carried rocks of a hundred yards in circumfer-ence above three miles into the sea. Addison.
If it had either air or fuel, it must make a greater havock than any history mentions. Cheyne.

HA'VOCK. interj. [from the noun.] A word of encouragement to slaughter.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry havock, kings! Shakspeare.

Até by his side,
Cries havock! and lets loose the dogs of war.
Shakspeare.

To HA'VOCK. v. a. [from the noun.] To waste; to destroy; to lay waste.

Whatever they leave, the soldier spoileth and havocketh; so that, between both, nothing is left.
Spenser.

See, with what heat these dogs of hell advance,
To waste and havock yonder world, which I
So fair and good created! Milton.

HA'UTBOY. n. f. [haut and bois, French.]
A wind instrument.

I told John of Gaunt he beat his own name;
for you might have trust'd him and all his apparel into an eel-skin: the case of a treble hautboy was a mansion for him. Shakspeare.

Now give the hautboys breath; he comes, he comes. Dryden.

HA'UTBOY Strawberry. See STRAW-BERRY.

HAW. n. f. [haz, Saxon.]

and his brambles did not bring forth raisins, rather than haws and blackberries. L'Esrange.

2. An exercise in the eye.

3. [haza, Saxon; haw, a garden, Dan.]
A small piece of ground adjoining to a house. In Scotland they call it haugh.
Upon the haw at Plymouth is cut out in the ground the portraiture of two men, with clubs in their hands, whom they term Gog and Magog.
Carew.

To HAW. v. n. [perhaps corrupted from hawk or hack.] To speak slowly with frequent intermission and hesitation.

'Tis a great way; but yet, after a little humming and hawing upon 't, he agreed to undertake the job. L'Esrange.

HAWK. n. f. [habeg, Welsh; hafoc,
Saxon; accipiter, Latin.]

1. A bird of prey, used much anciently in sport to catch other birds.

Do'st thou love hawking? Thou hast hawks will fear
Above the morning lark. Shakspeare.

It can be no more disgrace to a great lord to draw a fair picture, than to cut his hawk's meat.
Peacham.

Whence borne on liquid wing
The founding culver shoots; or where the hawk,
High in the beetling cliffs, his airy builds.
Thomson.

2. [hoch, Welsh.] An effort to force
phlegm up the throat.

To HAWK. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To fly hawks at fowls; to catch birds by means of a hawk.

Ride unto St. Alban's,
Whereas the king and queen do mean to hawk.
Shakspeare.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

He that hawks at larks and sparrows has no less sport, though a much less considerable quarry, than he that flies at nobler game. Locke.
A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks;
With her of tarsels and of lures he talks. Prior.

2. To fly at; to attack on the wing.
A falcon tow'ring in her pride of place,
Was by a mousing owl hawk'd at and kill'd.
Shakspeare.

Whether upward to the moon they go,
Or dream the winter out in caves below,
Or hawk at flies elsewhere, concerns us not to know. Dryden.

3. To force up phlegm with a noise.

Come, fit, fit, and a song.—Shall we clap into 't roundly, without hawking or spitting, or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice? Shakspeare.

She complained of a stinking tough phlegm which the hawked up in the mornings. Wifeinan.
Blood, cast out of the throat or windpipe, is spit out with a hawking or small cough; that out of the gums is spit out without hawking, coughing, or vomiting. Harvey.

4. To sell by proclaiming it in the streets.
[from hock, German, a falceman.]

His wares were hawk'd in every street;
But seldom rose above a sheet. Swift.

HA'WKED. adj. [from hawk.] Formed like a hawk's bill.

Flar noses seem comely unto the Moor, an aquiline or hawked one unto the Persian, a large and prominent nose unto the Roman. Brown.

HA'WKER. n. f. [from hock, German.]
One who sells his wares by proclaiming them in the street.

I saw my labours, which had cost me so much thought, bawled about by common hawkers, which I once intended for the consideration of the greatest person. Swift.

To grace this honour'd day, the queen proclaims,
By herald hawkers, high heroick games:
She summons all her sons; an endless hand
Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land.
Pope.

HA'WTHORN. n. f. [hæwðorn, Saxon.]
A species of medlar; the thorn that bears haws; the white thorn.

The use to which it is applied in England is to make hedges: there are two or three varieties of it about London; but that sort which produces the smallest leaves is preferable, because its branches always grow close together. Miller.

There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles. Shakspeare's As you like it.

Some in their hands, beside the lance and shield,
The boughs of woodbine or of hawthorn held.
Dryden.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies spring. Pope.
The hawthorn whitens. Thomson.

Set fire on barns and hay stacks in the night,
And bid the owners quench them with their tears. Shakspeare.

We have heats of dung, and of hays and herbs laid up moist. Bacon.

Or if the earlier season lead
To the tann'd hay cock in the mead. Milton.
Bring them for food sweet boughs and offers cut,

Not all the winter long thy hay rick shut.

Some turners turn long and slender spigs of ivory, as small as an hay stalk. Moxon.
By some hay cock, or some shady thorn,
He bids his beads both even long and morn.
Dryden.

The best manure for meadows is the bottom of hay mows and hay stacks. Mortimer.
Hay and oats, in the management of a groom,
will make ale. Swift.

To dance the HAY. To dance in a ring:
probably from dancing round a hay
cock.

I will play on the tabor to the worthies,
And let them dance the hay. Shakspeare.
This maids think on the hearth they see,
When fires well nigh consumed be,
There dancing hays by two and three,
Just as your fancy casts them. Dryden.

The gum and glist'ning, which with ait
And study'd method, in each part Hangs down,
Looks just as if that day
Snails there had crawl'd the hay. Suckling.

HAY. n. f. [from haie, French, a hedge.]
A net which encloses the haunt of an animal.

Coneys are destroyed by hays, curs, spaniels, or tumblers, bred up for that purpose. Discretus.

HAYMAKER. n. f. [hay and make.]

One employed in drying grafs for hay.

HAZARD. n. f. [hazard, Fr. azar, Spanish; hazli, Rumick, danger.]

1. Chance; accident; fortuitous hap.

I have set my life upon a cast, And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shaksp.

I will upon all hazards well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well. Shaksp.

Where the mind does not perceive connection, there men's opinions are not the product of judgment, but the effects of chance and hazard, of a mind floating at all adventures, without choice and without direction. Locke.

2. Danger; chance of danger.

We are bound to yield unto our Creator, the Father of all mercy, eternal thanks, for that he hath delivered his law unto the world; a law wherein for many things are laid open, as a light which otherwise would have been buried in darkness, not without the hazard, or rather not with the hazard, but with the certain loss of thousands of souls, most undoubtedly now saved. Hooker.

The hazard I have run to see you here, should inform you that I love not at a common rate. Dryden.

Men are led on from one stage of life to another in a condition of the utmost hazard, and yet without the least apprehension of their danger. Rogers.

3. A game at dice.

The duke playing at hazard, held in a great many hands together, and drew a huge heap of gold. Swift.

TO HAZARD. v. a. [hazarder, French.] To expose to chance; to put into danger.

They might, by persisting in the extremity of that opinion, hazard greatly their own estates, and so weaken that part which their places now give. Hooker.

It was not in his power to adventure upon his own fortune, or bearing a publick charge to hazard himself against a man of private condition. Hayward.

By dealing indifferently mercies to all, you may hazard your own share. Sherlock.

TO HAZARD. v. n.

1. To try the chance.

I pray you tarry; pause a day or two, Before you hazard; for in chusing wrong, I loose your company. Shaksp.

2. To adventure; to run the danger.

She from her fellow-provinces would go, Rather than hazard to have you her foe. Waller.

HAZARDABLE. adj. [from hazard.]

HAZEL. n. f. [hæzel, Saxon; corylus, Latin.] Nut tree.

The nuts grow in clusters, and are closely joined together at the bottom, each being covered with an outward hulk or cup, which opens at the top, and when the fruit is ripe it falls out. The species are hazelnut, cobnut, and filbert. The red and white filberts are mostly esteemed for their fruit. Miller.

Kate, like the hazel twig, Is straight and slender, and as brown in hue As hazel nuts, and sweeter than the kernels. Shaksp.

Her chariot is an empty hazel nut. Shaksp.

Why sit we not beneath the grateful shade, Which hazels, intermix'd with elms, have made? Dryden.

There are some from the size of a hazel nut to that of a man's fist. Woodward.

HAZEL. adj. [from the noun.] Light brown; of the colour of hazel.

Chuse a warm dry soil, that has a good depth of light hazel mould. Mortimer.

HAZELLY. adj. Of the colour of hazel; of a light brown.

Uplands consist either of sand, gravel, chalk, rock or stone, hazelly loam, clay, or black mould. Mortimer.

HAZY. adj. [from haze.] Dark; foggy; misty.

Our clearest day here is misty and hazy; we see not far, and what we do see is in a bad light. Burnet's Theory.

Of engender'd by the hazy north,

Myriads on myriads, insect armies waft. Thomson.

HE. pronoun. gen. him; plur. they; gen. them. [hy, Dutch; he, Saxon. It seems to have borrowed the plural from DIR, plural dar, dative dirum.]

1. The man that was named before.

All the conspirators, save only he,

Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

If much you note him,

have teased their husbands to buy them a laced
head, or a fine petticoat. Swift.

22. Principal topic of discourse.

These heads are of a mixed order, and we propose only such as belong to the natural world.
Burnet's Theory.

'Tis our great interest, and duty, to satisfy ourselves on this head, upon which our whole conduct depends. Atterbury.

23. Source of a stream.

It is the glory of God to give; his very nature delighteth in it: his mercies in the current, through which they would pass, may be dried up, but at the head they never fail. Hooker.

The current by Gaza is but a small stream, rising between it and the Red Sea, whose head from Gaza is little more than twenty English miles. Raleigh's History.

Some did the song, and some the choir maintain,

Beneath the laurel shade, where mighty Po Mounts up to woods above, and hides his head below. Dryden.

24. Crisis; pitch.

The indisposition which has long hung upon me, is at last grown to such a head, that it must quickly make an end of me, or of itself. Addis-

How turneps hide their swelling heads below,
And how the closing coleworts upwards grow.
Gay.

31. HEAD and Shoulders. By force; violently.

People that hit upon a thought that tickles them, will be still bringing it in by head and shoulders, over and over, in several companies.
L'Estrange.

They bring in every figure of speech, head and shoulders, by main force, in spite of nature and their subject. Felton.

HEAD. adj. Chief; principal: as, the head workman; the head inn.

The horse made their escape to Winchester,
the head quarters. Clarendon.

To HEAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To lead; to influence; to direct; to govern.

Abas, who seem'd our friend, is either fled,
Or, what we fear, our enemies does head. Dryd.
Nor is what has been said of princes less true of all other governours, from him that heads an army to him that is master of a family, or of one single servant. South.

This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to his king's commands.
Prior.

2. To behead; to kill by taking away the head.

If you head and hang all that offend that way but for ten years together, you'll be glad to give out a commission for more heads. Shakspeare.

3. To fit any thing with a head, or principal part.

Headed with flints and feathers bloody dy'd,
Arrows the Indians in their quivers hide.
Fairy Queen.

Of cornel-wood a spear upright,
Headed with piercing steel, and polish'd bright.
Dryden.

4. To lop trees.

You must disbranch them, leaving only the summit entire: it may be necessary to head them too. Mortimer.

HE'ADACH. n. f. [head and ach.] Pain in the head.

From the cruel head-ach
Riches do not preserve. Silvey.

Nothing more exposes to headachs, colds, catarrhs, and coughs, than keeping the head
warm. Leeke.

In the head-ach he orders the opening of the vein of the forehead. Arbuthnot.

At some dear idle time,
Not plagu'd with headachs, or the want of rhyme.
Pope.

HE'ADBAND. n. f. [head and band.]

The Lord will take away the bonnets, and the headbands. Isaiah.

2. The band at each end of a book.

HE'ADBOROUGH. n. f. [head and bor- rough.] A constable; a subordinate constable.

Here lies John Dod, a servant of God, to whom he is gone,

Father or mother, sister or brother, he never knew none;

A headborough and a constable, a man of fame,
The first of his house, and last of his name.
Camden.

This none are able to break thorough,
Until they're freed by head of borough. Hudibras.

HE'ADDRESS. n. f. [head and dress.]

1. The covering of a woman's head.

There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress: I have known it rise and fall.
Addison.

If ere with airy horns I planted heads,
Or discompos'd the headdresses of a prude. Pope.

2. Any thing resembling a headdress, and prominent on the head.

Among birds the males very often appear in a most beautiful headdress, whether it be a crest, a comb, a tuft of feathers, or a natural little plume, erected like a kind of pinnacle on the very top of the head. Addison.

HE'ADER. n. f. [from head.]

1. One that heads nails or pins, or the like.

2. The first brick in the angle:

If the header of one side of the wall is toothed as much as the header on the outside, it would be a stronger toothing, and the joints of the headers of one side would be in the middle of the headers of the course they lie upon of the other side. Mason.

HE'ADGARGLE. n. f. [head and gargle.]

A disease, I suppose, in cattle.
From the headgargle give powder of fennegreek.
Mortimer.

HE'ADINESS. n. f. [from head.] Hurry; rashness; stubbornness; precipitation; obstinacy.

If any will rashly blame such his choice of old and unwonted words, him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning. Spenser.

HE'ADLAND. n. f. [head and land.]

1. Promontory; cape.

An heroic play ought to be an imitation of an heroic poem, and consequently love and valour ought to be the subject of it: both these sir William Davenant began to shadow; but it was so as discoverers draw their maps with headlands and promontories. Dryden.

2. Ground under hedges.
Now down with thegrats upon headlands about,
That groweth in shadow so rank and so stout.
Tupper.

HE'ADLESS. adj. [from head.]

1. Without a head; beheaded.
His shining helmet he 'gan soon unlace,
And left his headless body bleeding at the place.
Spenser.
Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
I would remove these tedious stumbling blocks,
And smoothe my way upon their headless necks.
Shakspeare.

On the cold earth lies th' unregarded king,
A headless carcase, and a nameless thing. Denham.
Prickly stubs, instead of trees, are found;
Headless the most, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

2. Without a chief.
They rested not until they had made the empire stand headless about seventeen years.
Raleigh.

3. Obstinate; inconsiderate; ignorant; wanting intellects: perhaps for headless.
Him may I more justly blame and condemn, either of witless headiness in judging, or of headless hardiness in condemning.
Spenser.

1. Rash; precipitate; hasty; violent; ungovernable; hurried on with passion.
Take pity of your town and of your people,
While yet the cool and temperate wind of grace

O'erblows the filthy and contagious clouds
Of heady murder, spoil, and villany. Shakspeare.

I am advised what I say:
Neither disturb'd with the effect of wine,
Nor, heady rash, provok'd with raging ire;
Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad.
Shakspeare.

I'll forbear,
And am fall'n out with my more heady will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man. Shakspeare.

Wives, the readiest helps
To betray heady husbands, rob the easy.
Ben Jonson.

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring fullen in the white abyfs.
Thomson.

To HEAR. v. n. [hýnan, Saxon ; hooren, Dutch.]

1. To enjoy the sense by which sounds are distinguished.

Sound is nothing but a certain modulation of the external air, which, being gathered by the external ear, beats, as is supposed, upon the membrana tympani, which moves the four little bones in the tympanum : in like manner as it is beat by the external air, these little bones move the internal air which is in the tympanum and vestibulum ; which internal air makes an impression upon the auditory nerve in the labyrinth and cochlea, according as it is moved by the little bones in the tympanum : so that, according to the various reflexions of the external air, the internal air makes various impressions upon the auditory nerve, the immediate organ of hearing ; and these different impressions represent different sounds. Quincy.

The object of hearing is sound, whose variety is so great, that it brings in admirable store of intelligence. Holter.

Princes cannot see far with their own eyes,
nor hear with their own ears. Temple.

2. To listen ; to hearken : as, he heard with great attention.

So spake our mother Eve, and Adam h ear'd,
Well-pleas'd, but answer'd not. Milton.

As tragick poets, since the birth of time,
Ne'er feign'd. Tate's Juvenal.

This, of eldest parents, leaves us more in the dark, who, by divine institution, has a right to civil power, than those who never heard any thing at all of heir or descent. Locke.

To HEAR. v. a.

1. To perceive by the ear.
The trumpeters and singers were as one sound to be heard in praising the Lord. 2 Chronicles.
And sure he heard me, but he would not hear.
Dryden.

2. To give an audience, or allowance to speak.

He sent for Paul, and heard him concerning the faith in Christ. Acts.

I must beg the forbearance of censure, 'till I have been heard out in the sequel of this discourse. Locke.

Whose fountain who shall tell ? Milton.

Hear'st thou submissive, but a lowly birth ?
Prior.

HEARD signifies a keeper, and is sometimes initial ; as heard-beart, a glorious keeper : sometimes final, as cyneheard, a royal keeper. Gilson's Camd. n. It is now written herd : as, cowherd, a cow-keeper ; hýnd, Saxon.

HEARER. n. f. [from hear.]

1. One who hears.
And so was the dulled withal, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet the not perceive the heart of her lamentation. Sidney.
St. John and St. Matthew, which have recorded these sermons, heard them ; and being hearers, did think themselves as well respected as the pharisees. Hooker.

Words, be they never so few, are too many, when they benefit not the hearers. Hooker.

HEAT. n. f. [heat, hæz, Saxon; heete, Danish.]

1. The sensation caused by the approach or touch of fire.

Heat is a very brisk agitation of the insensible parts of the object which produces in us that sensation from whence we denominate the object hot; so what in our sensation is heat, in the object is nothing but motion. Locke.

The word heat is used to signify the sensation we have when we are near the fire, as well as the cause of that sensation, which is in the fire itself; and thence we conclude, that there is a sort of heat in the fire resembling our own sensation: whereas in the fire there is nothing but little particles of matter, of such particular shapes as are fitted to impress such motions on our flesh as excite the sense of heat. Watts.

2. The cause of the sensation of burning.
The fword which is made fiery doth not only cut by reason of the sharpness which simply it hath, but also burns by means of that heat which it hath from fire. Hooker.

3. Hot weather.

After they came down into the valley, and found the intolerable heats there, and knew no means of lighter apparel, they were forced to go naked. Bacon.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood;
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign;
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

The pope would not comply with the proposal, as fearing the heats might advance too far before they had finished their work, and produce a pestilence among the people. Addison.

4. State of any body under the action of the fire.

The heats smiths take of their iron ore a blood-red heat, a white flame heat, and a sparkling or welding heat. Mexon.

5. Fermentation; effervescence.

6. One violent action unintermitted.
The continual agitations of the spirits must needs be a weakening of any constitution, especially in age: and many caotics are required for refreshment betwixt the heats. Dryden.

7. The state of being once hot; a single effort.

I'll strike my fortune with him at a heat,
And give him not the leisure to forget. Dryden.

They the turn'd lines on golden anvils beat,
Which look as if they struck them at a heat. Late.

8. A course at a race, between each of which courses there is an intermission.

Feign'd zeal, you saw, set out the speedier pace;
But the last heat, plain dealing won the race. Dryden.

his rage, but must have displeas'd in cool sedate reflection. South.

We have spilt no blood but in the heat of the battle or the chase. Atterbury.

One playing at hazard, drew a huge heap of gold;
but in the heat of play, never observed a sharper,
who swept it into his hat. Swift.

11. Faction; contest; party rage.

They are in a most walkie preparation, and hope to come upon them in the heat of their division. Shakespeare.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality and popular heat elections were carried. King Charles.
What can more gratify the Prygian Joe
Than those disemper'd heats? Dryden.

12. Ardour of thought or elocution.

Plead it to her
With all the strength and heat of eloquence,
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire. Addison.

A shepdame too I have, a curst she,

Who rules my hen-peck'd sire, and orders me. Dry.

The neighbour's reported that he was hen-pecked, which was impossible, by such a mild-spirited woman as his wife. Arbutnot.

HEN-ROOST. n. f. [hen and roost.] The place where the poultry rest.

Many a poor devil stands to a whipping post for the pilfering of a silver spoon, or the robbing of a hen-roost.

L'Estrange.

Her house is frequented by a company of rogues, whom she encouragech to rob his hen-roosts.

Swift.

If a man prosecutes gippies with severity, his hen-roost is sure to pay for it.

Addison.

They oft have lilly'd out to pillage

The hen-roosts of some peaceful village. Ticket.

HEN'BANE. n. f. [hyoscyamus, Latin.] A plant.

It is very often found growing upon the sides of banks and old donghills. This is a very poisonous plant.

Miller.

That to which old Socrates was curs'd,
Or henbane juice, to swell 'em 'till they burst.

Dryden.

HE'NBIT. n. f. [alfine foliis hederae.] A plant.

In a scarcity in Silecia a rumour was spread of its raining millet-feed; but it was found to be only the seeds of the ivy-leaved speedwell, or small henbit.

HENCE. adv. or interj. [heonan, Sax. hunner, old English.]

1. From this place to another.
Discharge my followers; let them hence away,
From Ricard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.
Shakespeare.

Th' Almighty hath not built
Here for his envy; will not drive us hence. Milton.
A fallen prudence drew thee hence
From noise, fraud, and impertinence. Rowson.

2. Away; to a distance. A word of command.

Be not found here: hence with your little ones.
Shakespeare.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse. Milton.

3. At a distance; in another place. Not in life.

Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here, and live hence by truth?
Shakespeare.
All members of our cause, both here and hence,
That are infixed to this action. Shakespeare.

4. From this time; in the future.

He who can reason well to-day about one sort of matters, cannot at all reason to-day about others, though perhaps a year hence he may. Locke.
Let not posterity a thousand years hence look for truth in the voluminous annals of pedants.
Arbutnot.

5. For this reason; in consequence of this.

Hence perhaps it is, that Solomon calls the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom.
Tilghson.

6. From this cause; from this ground.

By too strong a projective motion the ailment tends to putrefaction: hence may be deduced the force of exercise in helping digestion. Arbutnot.

7. From this source; from this original;

from this store.
My Flora was my sun; for as
One sun, so but one Flora was;
All other faces borrowed hence
Their light and grace as stars do thence. Suckling.

8. From hence is a vitious expression, which crept into use even among good authors, as the original force of the word hence was gradually forgotten.
Hence signifies from this.

An ancient author prophesied from hence,
Behold on Latian shores a foreign prince! Dryden.

To HENCE. v. a. [from the adverb.]
To send off; to dispatch to a distance.
Obsolete.

Go, bawling cur! thy hungry maw go fill
On yon foul flock, belonging not to me;
With that his dog he henc'd, his Beck he curs'd.
Sidney.

HENCEFORTH. adv. [henonforþ, Sax.]
From this time forward.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
Never henceforth shall I joy again;
Never, oh never, shall I see more joy. Shakespeare.
Happier thou may'st be, worthier can'st not be;
Taste this, and be henceforth among the gods,
Thyself a goddess. Milton.
I never from thy side henceforth will stray,
'Till day droop. Milton.

If we treat gallant soldiers in this sort,
Who then henceforth to our defence will come?
Dryden.

HENCEFORWARD. adv. [hence and for- ward.] From this time to futurity.

Henceforward I will I bear Upon my target three fair shining furs. Shaksp.
Pardon, I beseech you;
Henceforward I am ever ill'd by you. Shaksp.
The royal academy will admit henceforward
only such who are endued with good qualities.
Dryden.

man, Skinner; hengyrc, a horse, and man, Spehman.] A page; an attendant.
Obsolete.

Why should Titania cross her Oberon:
I do but beg a little changeling boy,
To be my henchman. Shakespeare.
Three henchmen were for ev'ry knight allig'd,
All in rich livery clad, and of a kind. Dryden.

To HEND. v. a. [hendan, Saxon, from hendō, low Latin, which seems borrowed from hand or hond, Teutonick.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on.
With that the sergeants hent the young man stout,
And bound him likewise in a wrotten chain.
Fairfax.

2. To crowd; to surround. Perhaps the following passage is corrupt, and should be read hemmed; or it may mean to take possession.

The generous and gravest citizens
Have hent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering. Shakespeare.

HENDECAGON. n. s. [ἐνδεκά and γωνία.]

Having seven angles or sides.

HEPTARCHY. n. s. [heptarchie, French;
ἑπτα and ἀρχή.] A sevenfold government.

In the Saxon heptarchy I find little noted of arms, albeit the Germans, of whom they descended, used shields. Camden.

England began not to be a people, when Alfred reduced it into a monarchy; for the materials thereof were extant before, namely, under the heptarchy. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The next returning planetary hour
Of Mars, who shair'd the heptarchy of pow'r,
His steps bold Arcite to the temple bent. Dryden.

HER. pron. [hepa, hep, in Saxon, stood for their, or of them, which at length became the female possessive.]

1. Belonging to a female; of a she; of a woman.

About his neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd
The opening of his mouth. Shaksp. As you like it.

Still new favourites the choice,
'Till up in arms my passion rose,
And cast away her yoke. Cowley.

One month, three days, and half an hour,
Judith held the sov'reign pow'r;
Wondrous beautiful her face;
But so weak and small her wit,
That she to govern were unfit,
And so Susanna took her place. Cowley.

2. The oblique case of she.
England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not. Shaksp. Henry v.
She cannot seem deform'd to me,
And I would have her seem'd to others so. Cowley.
The moon arose clad o'er in light,
With thousand stars attending on her train;
With her they rise, with her they set again.
Cowley.

Should I be left, and thou be lost, the sea,
That bury'd her I lov'd, should bury me. Dryden.

HERS. pronoun. This is used when it refers to a substantive going before: as,
such are her charms, such charms as hers.
This pride of hers,
Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her.
Shakespeare.

Thine own unworthiness,
Will still that thou art mine not hers confess.
Cowley.

Some secret charm did all her acts attend,
And what his fortune wanted, hers could mend.
Dryden.

I bred you up to arms, rais'd you to power,
Indeed to save a crown, not hers but yours. Dryden.

HE'RALD. n. s. [herault, Fr. herald,
German.]

1. An officer whose business it is to register genealogies, adjust ensigns armoi-ral, regulate funerals, and anciently to carry messages between princes, and proclaim war and peace.

May none, whose scatter'd names honour my book,
For strict degrees of rank or title look;
'Tis 'gainst the manners of an epigram,
And I a poet nec, no herald am. Ben Jonson.
When time shall force let but the herald cry,
And I'll appear again. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Embassador of peace, if peace you claim;
Or herald of a war, if you rotate. Dryden.

Please thy pride and search the herald's roll,
Where thou shalt find thy famous pedigree.
Dryden.

2. A precursor; a forerunner; a harbinger.

It is the part of men to fear and tremble,
When the most mighty gods, by tokens, send Such dreadful heralds to astonish us. Shakespeare.
It was the lark, the herald of the morn.
Shakespeare.

3. A proclaimer; a publisher.

After my death I wish no other herald,
No other speaker of my living actions,
But such an honest chronicler as Griffith. Shaksp.

To HE'RALD. v. a. [from the noun.]
To introduce as by a herald. Not used.

We are sent from our royal master,
Only to herald thee into his sight,
Not pay thee. Shakespeare's

HE'RALDRY. n. s. [heraulderie, Fr. from herald.]

1. The art or office of a herald.

I am writing of heraldry. Peacham.
Grant her, besides, of noble blood that ran
In ancient veins, ere heraldry began. Dryden.

2. Registry of genealogies.

'Twas no false heraldry when madnets drew
Her pedigree from those who too much knew.
Denham.

3. Blazonry.

Met. Is may blazon common beauties: the Makes pearls and planets humble heraldry.
Cleveland.

HERB. n. s. [herbe, Fr. herba, Latin.]
Herbs are those plants whose stalks are soft, and have nothing woody in them; as grass and hemlock. Locke.
In such a night
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Edon. Shakespeare.

With sweet-smelling herbs

Spoused Eve deck'd suit her nuptial bed. Milt.
Unhappy, from whom still conceal'd does lie
Of herbs and roots the harmless luxury. Cowley.
If the leaves are of chief use to us, then we call them herbs; as sage and mint. Watts.

Herb-eating animals, which don't ruminatè, have strong grinders, and chew much. Arbutnot.

HERB Christopher, or banc-berries. n. f.
A plant.

HERBA'CEOUS. adj. [from herba, Lat.]

1. Belonging to herbs.
Ginger is the root of neither tree nor trunk;
but an herbaceous plant, resembling the water flower-de-luce. Brown.

2. Feeding on vegetables: perhaps not properly.

Their teeth are fitted to their food, the rapacious to catching, holding, and tearing their prey; the herbaceous to gathering and comminution of vegetables. Derham.

HERBAGE. n. f. [herbage, French.]

1. Herbs collectively; grafs; pasture.
Rocks lie cover'd with eternal snow;
Thin herbage in the plains, and fruitless fields.
Dryden.

At the time the deluge came, the earth was loaded with herbage, and thronged with animals. Hoodward.

2. The tithe and the right of pasture.
Ainsworth.

HERBAL. n. f. [from herb.] A book containing the names and descriptions of plants.

We leave the description of plants to herbals, and other like books of natural history. Bacon.

Such a plant will not be found in the herbal of nature. Brown.

As for the medicinal uses of plants, the large herbals are ample testimonies thereof. Moore.
Our herbals are sufficiently storèd with plants.
Baker.

HERBALIST. n. f. [from herbal.] A man skilled in herbs.

Herbalists have distinguished them, naming that the male whose leaves are lighter, and fruit rounder. Brown.

HERBAR. n. f. [A word, I believe,
only to be found in Spenser.] Herb;
plant.

The roof hereof was archèd over head,
And deck'd with flowers and herbars daintly.
Fairy Queen.

HERBARIST. n. f. [herbarius, from herba, Latin.] One skilled in herbs.

Herbarists have exercisèd a commendable curiosity in subdividing plants of the same denomination. Boyle.

He was too much swayèd by the opinions then current amongst herbarists, that different colour, or multiplicity of leaves in the flower, were sufficient to constitute a specifick difference. Roy.

As to the fuci, their seed hath been discoverèd and shew'd in fruit by an ingenious herbarist.
Derham.

HERBELET. n. f. [diminutive of herb,
or of herbula, Latin.] A small herb.

These herbelets, which we upon you srow.
Shakspeare.

Growing into herbs.

HERBID. adj. [herbidus, Latin.] Covered with herbs.

HERBORIST. n. f. [from herb.] One curious in herbs. This seems a mistake for herbarist.

A curious herborist has a plant, whose flower perishes in about an hour. Roy.

HERBOROUGH. n. f. [herberg, German.] Place of temporary residence. Now written herbarow.

The German lord, when he went out of Newgate into the cart, took order to have his arm-set up in his last herborow. Ben Jonson.

HERBOUS. adj. [herbosus, Lat.] Abounding with herbs.

HERBUENT. adj. [from herbula, Lat.]
Containing herbs. Diet.

HERBWOMAN. n. f. [herb and woman.]
A woman that sells herbs.

I was like to be pulled to pieces by brewer, butcher, and baker; even my herbswoman dunned me as I went along. Arbutnot.

HERBY. adj. [from herb.] Having the nature of herbs.

No substance but earth, and the procedures of earth, as tile and stone, yieldeth any mors of herby substance. Bacon.

HERD. n. f. [heord, Saxon.]

1. A number of beasts together. It is peculiarly applied to black-cattle.
Flocks and herds are sheep and oxen or kine.

Note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds. Shakspeare.

There find a kind of heifers, wand'ring o'er
The neighbouring hill, and drive them to the shore.
Addison.

2. A company of men, in contempt or detestation.

Survey the world, and where one Cato shines,
Count a degenerate herd of Catilines. Dryden.

I do not remember where ever God deliverèd his oracles by the multitude, or nature truth by the herd. Locke.

3. It antiently signified a keeper of cattle, and in Scotland it is still usèd. [hýrd, Saxon.] A sense still retained in composition: as, goatherd.

To HERD. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To run in herds or companies.
Weak women should, in danger, herd like deer.
Dryden

It is the nature of indigency, like common danger, to endear men to one another, and make them herd together, like fellow-sailors in a storm.
Norris.

2. To associate; to become one of any number or party.

I'll herd among his friends, and seem
One of the number. Addison's Cato

Run to towns, to herd with knives and fools,
And undistinguish'd pass among the crowd.
Watts.

To HERD. v. a. To throw or put into a herd.

The rest,
However great we are, honest and valiant,
Are *herd*d with the vulgar. Ben Jonson.

HERDROOM. n. f. [herd and groom.]
A keeper of herds. Not in use.

But who shall judge the wager won or lost?
That shall yonder herdroom, and none other.
Spenser.

HERDMAN. } n. f. [herd and man.]
HERDSMAN. } One employèd in tending herds: formerly, an owner of herds.

A herdsman rich, of much account was he,
In whom no evil did reign, or good appear.
Stancy

And you, enchantment,
Worthy enough a herdsman, if e'er thou
These rural latches to his entrance open,
I will devise a cruel death for thee. Shakspeare.

Scarcè themselves know how to hold
A sheehook, or have learn'd ought else the least
That to the faithful herdsman's art belongs.
Milton.

There oft the Indian herdsman, shunning heat,
Shelters in cool, and tends his pasturing herds
At loop-holes cut through thickest shade. Milt.

So stands a Thracian herdsman with his spear
Full in the gap, and hopes the hunted bear.
Dryden.

The herdsman, round
The cheerful fire, provoke his health in goblets cross'd. Dryden.

When their herdsman could not agree, they parted by consent. Locke.

HERF. adv. [hep, Saxon; hier, Dutch.]
1. In this place.

Before they here approach,
Old Siward, with ten thousand warlike men,
All ready at a point, was setting forth. Shaksp.

I, upon my frontiers here,
Keep residence. Milton.

Here nature first begins
Her farthest verge. Milton.

How wretched does Prometheus' state appear,
While he his second misery suffers here! Cowley.

To day is ours, we have it here. Cowley.

2. In the present state.
Thus shall you be happy here, and more happy hereafter. Bacon.

3. It is usèd in making an offer or attempt.

Then here's for earnest:
'Tis finish'd. Dryden.

4. In drinking a health.
Here's to thee, Dick. Cowley.
However, friend, here's to the king, one cries;
To him who was the king, the friend replies.
Prior.

5. It is often opposèd to there; in one place, distinguished from another.

Good-night, mine eyes do itch;
Doth that bode weeping?

'Tis neither here nor there. Shakspeare.

We are comè to see thee fight, to see thee soigne, to see thee traverse, to see thee here, to see thee there. Shakspeare.

Then this, then that man's aid, they crave,
implore;
Poè here for help, seek there their followers.
Daniel.

I would have in the heath some thickets made only of sweet-briar, and honey-suckle, and some wild vine amongst; and the ground set with violets; for these are sweet, and prosper in the shade; and these to be in the heath here and there, not in order. Bacon.

The devil might perhaps, by inward suggestions, have drawn in here and there a single pro-felyte. Government of the Tongue.

Your city, after the dreadful fire, was rebuilt, not presently, by raising continued streets; but at first here a house, and there a house, to which others by degrees were join'd. Sprat's Sermons.

He that rides post through a county may be able to give some loose description of here a mountain and there a plain, here a morass and there a river, woodland in one part, and savans in another. Locke.

6. Here seems, in the following passage, to mean this place.

Bid them farewell, Cordelia, though unkind;
Thou lovest here, a better were to find. Shaksp.

HERLABO'UTS. adv. [here and about.]
About this place.

I saw herlabouts nothing remarkable, except Agulias's bridge. Addison on Italy.

HEREAFTER. adv. [here and after.]

1. In time to come; in futurity.
How worthy he is, I will leave to appear hereafter, rather than glory him in his own hearing. Shakspeare.

The grand-child, with twelve fous increas'd, departs
From Canaan, to a land hereafter call'd Egypt. Milton.

Hereafter he from war shall come,
And bring his Trojans peace. Dryden.

2. In a future state.

You shall be happy here, and more happy
hereafter. Bacon.

HEREAFTER. n. f. A future state. This is a figurative noun, not to be used but in poetry.

'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison's Cato.

I still shall wait

Some new hereafter, and a future state. Prior.

HEREAT. adv. [here and at.] At this.

One man coming to the tribune, to receive his donative, with a garland in his hand, the tribune, offended hereat, demanded what this singularity could mean? Hooker.

HEREBY. adv. [here and by.] By this.

In w at estate the fathers rested, which were dead before, it is not hereby either one way or other determined. Hooker.

Hereby the Moors are not excluded by beauty, there being in this description no consideration of colours. Brown.

The acquisition of truth is of infinite concernment: hereby we become acquainted with the nature of things. Watts.

HERE'DITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Whatever may be occupied as inheritance.

Adam being neither a monarch, nor his imaginary monarchy hereditabile, the power which is now in the world is not that which was Adam's. Locke.

HEREDITAMENT. n. f. [heredium, Lat.]

A law term denoting inheritance, or hereditary estate.

HERE'DITARILY. adv. [from hereditary.]

By inheritance. Here is another, who thinks one of the greatest glories of his father was to have distinguished and loved you, and who loves you hereditarily. Pope to Swift.

HEREDITARY. adj. [hereditaire, Fr. hereditarius, Lat.] Possessed or claimed by right of inheritance; descending by inheritance.

To thee and thine, hereditary ever,
Remain this ample third of our fair kingdom. Shakspeare.

These old fellows

Have their ingratitude in them hereditary. Shakspeare.

He shall ascend

The throne hereditary, and bound his reign

With earth's wide bounds, his glory with the heavens. Milton.

Thus while the mute creation downward bend

Their sight, and to their earthly mother tend,

Man looks aloft, and with crested eyes

Beholds his own hereditary skies. Dryden's Ovid.

When heroick verse his youth shall raise,

And form it to hereditary praise. Dryden's Virgil.

HEREIN. adv. [here and in.] In this.

How highly soever it may please them with words of truth to extol sermons, they shall not herein offend us. Hooker.

My best endeavours shall be done herein. Shakspeare.

Since truths, absolutely necessary to salvation, are so clearly revealed that we cannot err in them, unless we be notoriously wanting to ourselves, herein the fault of the judgment is resolved into a precedent default in the will. South.

HEREINTO. adv. [here and into.] Into this.

Because the point about which we strive is the quality of our laws, our first entrance hereinto cannot better be made than with consideration of the nature of law in general. Hooker.

HEREOF. adv. [here and of.] From this; of this.

Hereof comes it that prince Harry is valiant. Shakspeare.

HEREON. adv. [here and on.] Upon this.

A bird all white, well feather'd on each wing,
Here-out up to the throne of God did fly. Spens.

2. All the words compounded of here and a preposition, except hereafter, are obsolete, or obsolescent; never used in poetry, and seldom in prose, by elegant writers, though perhaps not unworthy to be retained.

HEREMITICAL. adj. [It should be written eremitical, from eremite, of ἐρημις, a desert; heremique, French.] Solitary; suitable to a hermit.

You describe so well your heremitical state of life, that none of the ancient anchorites could go beyond you for a cave in a rock. Pope.

HERESIARCH. n. f. [heresiarche, French; ἡρεσιάρχης] A leader in heresy; the head of a herd of hereticks.

The pope declared him not only an heretick, but an heresiarch. Stillingfleet.

HERESY. n. f. [heresie, French; heresis, Latin; ἡρесь] An opinion of private men different from that of the catholick and orthodox church.

Heresy prevaileth only by a counterfeit shew of reason, whereby notwithstanding it becometh invincible, unless it be convicted of fraud by manifest remonstrance clearly true, and unable to be withstood. Hooker.

As for speculative heresies, they work mightily upon men's wits; yet do not produce great alterations in states. Bacon.

Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to her judgment, not in the odious disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, cruelty, and dissolaltv. King Charles.

HERETICK. n. f. [heretique, French; ἡρετικός]

1. One who propagates his private opinions in opposition to the catholick church.

These things would be prevented, if no known heretick or schismarick be suffered to go into those countries. Bacon.

No hereticks desire to spread Their wild opinions like these Epicures. Davies.

Bellarmin owns, that he has quoted a heretick instead of a father. Baker on Learning.

When a papist uses the word hereticks, he generally means protestants; when a protestant uses the word, he means any persons wilfully and contentiously obstinate in fundamental errors. Watts.

2. It is or has been used ludicrously for any one whose opinion is erroneous.

I rather will suspect the sun with cold Than thee with wantonness; thy honour stands, In him that was of late an heretick, As firm as faith. Shakspeare.

HERETICAL. adj. [from heretick.] Containing heresy.

How exclude they us from being any part of the church of Christ under the colour of heresy, when they cannot but grant it possible even for him to be, as touching his own personal persuasion, heretical, who, in their opinion, not only is of the church, but holdeth the chief place of authority over the same? Hooker.

Constantinople was in an uproar, upon an ignorant jealousy that those words had some heretical meaning. Dee of Pity.

HERETICALLY. adv. [from heretical.]

With heresy.

HERETO. adv. [here and to.] To this; add to this.

HERETOFORE. adv. [hereto and fore.]

So near is the connection between the civil state and religious, that heretofore you will find the government and the priesthood united in the same person. South.

We now can form no more Long schemes of life, as heretofore. Swift.

HEREUNTO. adv. [here and unto.] To this.

They which rightly consider after what sort the heart of man hereunto is framed, must of necessity acknowledge, that whose assenteth to the words of eternal life, doth it in regard of his authority whose words they are. Hooker.

Agreeable hereunto might not be amiss to make children often to tell a story of any thing they know. Locke.

HEREWITH. adv. [here and with.] With this.

You, fair sir, be not herewith dismay'd,
But constant keep the way in which ye stand. Spenser.

Herewith the castle of Hame was suddenly surprised by the Scots. Hayward.

HERIOT. n. f. [heriegild, Saxon.] A fine paid to the lord at the death of a landholder, commonly the best thing in the landholder's possession.

This he detains from the ivy; for he should be the true possessory lord thereof, but the olive dispenseth with his conscience to pass it over with a compliment and an heriot every year. Howel.

Though thou consume but to renew,
Yet love, as lord, doth claim a heriot due. Cleaveland.

I took him up, as your heriot, with intention to have made the best of him, and then have brought the whole produce of him in a purse to you. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

HERITABLE. adj. [heres, Lat.] Capable to inherit whatever may be inherited.

By the canon law this son shall be legitimate and heritable, according to the laws of England. Hale's Common Law.

HERITAGE. n. f. [heritage, French.]

1. Inheritance; estate devolved by succession; estate in general.

Let us our father's heritage divide. Hub. Tale.

He considers that his proper home and heritage is in another world, and therefore regards the events of this with the indifference of a guest that tarries but a day. Rogers.

2. [In divinity.] The people of God.

O Lord, save thy people, and bless thine heritage. Common Prayer.

HERMAPHRODITE. n. f. [hermaphrodite, Fr. from ἑρμης and ἀρροδιτις]

An animal uniting two sexes.

Man and wife make but one sight Canonical hermaphrodite. Cleaveland.

Monstrous could not incapacitate from marriage, witness hermaphrodites. Arbut. & Pope.

HERMAPHRODITICAL. adj. [from hermaphrodite.] Partaking of both sexes.

There may be equivocal seeds and hermaphroditical principles, that contain the radicality of different forms. Brown.

HERMETICAL. } adj. [from Hermes,

HERMETICK. } or Mercury, the imagined inventor of chymistry; hermetique, French.] Chymical.

An hermetical seal, or to seal any thing hermetically, is to heat the neck of a glass till it is just ready to melt, and then with a pair of hot pincers to twist it close together. Quincy.

The tube was closed at one end with diachylon, instead of an hermetical seal. Boyle.

HERMETICALLY. adv. [from hermetical.]

According to the hermetical or chymick art.

He suffered those things to putrefy in hermetically sealed glasses, and vessels close covered with paper; and not only so, but in vessels covered fine lawn, so as to admit the air, and keep out the insects; no living thing was ever produced there Beauley.

HERMIT. n. f. [hermite, French; contracted from eremite, ἐρημιτης.]

1. A solitary; an anchorite; one who retires from society to contemplation and devotion.

A wither'd hermit, fivefold winters worn,
Might shake off fifty looking in her eye. Shaksp.
You lay this command upon me, to give you my poor advice for your carriage in to eminent a place: I humbly return you mine opinion, such as an hermit rather than a courtier can render. Bacon

He had been duke of Savoy, and, after a very glorious reign, took on him the habit of a hermit, and retired into this solitary spot. Addison.

2. A headman; one bound to pray for another. Improper.

For those of old,
And the late dignities heap'd up to them,
We rest your hermit. Shaksp.

HERMITAGE. n. f. [hermitage, French.] The cell or habitation of a hermit.

By that painful way they pass Forth to an hill, that was both steep and high;
On top whereof a sacred chapel was,
And oke a little hermitage thereby. Fairy Queen.
Go with speed
To some forlorn and naked hermitage,
Remote from all the pleasures of the world. Shaksp.

And may at last my weary age
Find out the peaceful hermitage,
The hairy gown and mossy cell,
Where I may sit and rightly spell
Of every star that heav'n doth shew,
And ev'ry herb that sips the dew. Milton

About two leagues from Fribourg we went to see a hermitage: it lies in the prettiest solitude imaginable, among woods and rocks. Addison.

HERMITESS. n. f. [from hermit.] A woman retired to devotion.

HERMITICAL. adj. [from hermit.] Suitable to a hermit.

HERMODACTYL. n. f. [ἑρμώδης and δάκτυλος.] Hermodactyl is a root of a determinate and regular figure, and represents the common figure of a heart cut in two, from half an inch to an inch in length. This drug was first brought into medicinal use by the Arabians, and comes from Egypt and Syria, where the people use them, while fresh, as a vomit or purge; and have a way of roasting them for food, which they eat in order to make themselves fat. The dried roots are a gentle purge, now little used. Hill.

HERN. n. f. [contracted from HERON, which see.]

Birds that are most easy to be drawn are the mallard, swan, hern, and bittern. Peuchan.

HERNHILL. n. f. [hern and hill.] An herb. Ainsworth.

HERNIA. n. f. [Latin.] Any kind of rupture, diversified by the name of the part affected.

A hernia would certainly succeed. Wiseman.

HERO. n. f. [heros, Latin; ἦρως.]

1. A man eminent for bravery. I sing of heroes and of kings,
In mighty numbers mighty things. Cowley.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.
In this view he ceases to be an hero, and his return is no longer a virtue. Pope's Odyssey.
These are thy honours, not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust. Pope.

2. A man of the highest class in any respect: as, a hero in learning.

HEROESS. n. f. [from hero; heroies, Lat.] A heroine; a female hero. Not in use.

In which were held, by sad disease,
Heroes and heroesses. Chapman.

HEROICAL. adj. [from hero.] Befitting a hero; noble; illustrious; heroic.

Musidorus was famous over all Asia for his heroical enterprises. Sidney.

Though you have courage in an heroical degree,
I ascribe it to you as your second attribute. Dryden.

HEROICALLY. adv. [from heroical.] After the way of a hero; suitably to a hero.

Not heroically in killing his tyrannical cousin. Sidney.

Free from all meaning, whether good or bad;
And, in one word, heroically mad. Dryden.

HEROICK. adj. [from hero; heroique, Fr.]

1. Productive of heroes. Being broke
From John of Gaunt doth bring his pedigree,
Being but the fourth of that heroick line. Shaksp.

2. Noble; suitable to a hero; brave; magnanimous; intrepid; enterprising; illustrious.

Not that which justly gives heroick name
To person, or to poem. Milton.
Verse makes heroick virtue live,
But you can life to verses give. Waller.

3. Reciting the acts of heroes. Used of poetry.

Metthink heroick poetry, 'till now,
Like some fantastick fairy laud did show. Cowley.

I have chosen the most heroick subject which any poet could desire: I have taken upon me to describe the motives, the beginning, progress and success of a most just and necessary war. Dryd.

An heroick poem is the greatest work which the soul of man is capable to perform: the design of it is to form the mind to heroick virtue by example. Dryden.

HEROICKLY. adv. [from heroick.] Suitably to a hero. Heroically is more frequent, and more analogical.

Samson hath quit himself
Like Samson, and heroickly hath finish'd
A life heroick. Milton.

HEROINE. n. f. [from hero; heroine, French.] A female hero. Anciently, according to English analogy, heroess.

But in vain worth, that fortune can controul,
New-tring, and stiffer bent her foster soul;
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

Then shall the British stage
More noble characters expose to view,
And draw her finish'd heroines from you. Addis.

HEROISM. n. f. [heroisme, French.] The qualities or character of a hero.

If the Odyssey be less noble than the Iliad, it is more instructive: the Iliad abounds with more heroism, this with more morality. Broome.

HERON. n. f. [heron, French.]

1. A bird that feeds upon fish.
So lords, with sport of stag and heron full,
Sometimes we see small birds from nests do pull. Sidney.

The heron, when she soareth high, sheweth winds. Bacon.

2. It is now commonly pronounced hern.
The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
Who terror bears upon his soaring wing;
Let them on high the frighted hern survey,
And lofty numbers paint their airy fray. Gay

HERONRY. } n. f. [from heron, com-HERONSHAW. } monly pronounced hern- ry.] A place where herons breed.

They carry their load to a large heronry above three miles. Derham's Physico-Theology.

HERPES. n. f. [ἕρπης.] A cutaneous inflammation of two kinds: miliaris, or pustularis, which is like millet-seed upon the skin; and excedens, which is more corrosive and penetrating, so as to form little ulcers. Quincy.

A farther progress towards acrimony maketh a herpes; and, if the access of acrimony be very great, it maketh an herpes excedens. Wiseman.

HERRING. n. f. [hareng, Fr. herring, Saxon.] A small sea fish.

The coast is plentifully stored with round fish, pilchard, herring, mackel, and cod. Carew.
Buy my herring fresh. Swift.

HERS. pron. The female possessive used when it refers to a substantive going before: as, this is her house, this house is hers. See HER.

How came her eyes so bright? not with salt tears;
If so, my eyes are oftner wash'd than hers. Shaksp.

Whom ill fate would ruin, it prefers;
For all the miserable are made hers. Waller.
I see her rowling eyes;
And panting, lo! the god, the god, she cries;
With words not hers, and more than human found,
She makes th' obedient ghosts peep trembling through the ground. Roscommon.

HERSE. n. f. [hersea, low Latin; supposed to come from herjan, to praise.] This is likewise written herse; see HEARSE.

1. A temporary monument raised over a grave.

2. The carriage in which corpses are drawn to the grave.
When mourning nymphs attend their Daphnis' herse,
Who does not weep that reads the moving verse? Roscommon.

On all the line a sudden vengeance waits,
And frequent *herse*s shall besiege your gates. Pope.

TO HERSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a herse.

I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear. O, would she were hers'd at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin. Shaksp.

The Grecians spitefully grew from the darts the corse,
And hers'd it, bearing it to fleet. Chapman.
The house is hers'd about with a black wood,
Which nods with many a heavy-headed tree. Craharu.

HERSELF. pronoun.

1. A female individual, as distinguished from others.

The jealous o'er-worn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty goddesses in this monarchy. Shaksp.

2. Being in her own power; mistress of her own thoughts.

The more she looks, the more her fears increase,
At nearer sight; and she's herself the less. Dryd.

3. The oblique case of the reciprocal pronoun: as, she hurt herself.

The daughter of Pharaoh came down wash herself. Arctus
She returned answer to herself. Judges.

HERSELIKE. adj. [herse and like.] Funereal; suitable to funerals.

Even in the Old Testament, if you listen to David's harp, you shall hear as many herselike airs as carols. Bacon.

TO HERRY. v. a. [heptan, Saxon; to praise, to celebrate.] To hallow; to regard as holy. Now no longer in use.

Thenot, now nis the time of merry make,
Nor Pan to herry, nor with love to play;
Like mirth in May is meetest for to make,
Or summer shade, under the cocked hay. Spenser.

By the c. the years green as now be rung,
Then wouldst thou gain to cool of love,
And fly with Lymas thy lab'ring glove. Spenser.
HEBESITACY. n. f. [from hesitas.] Dubitousness; uncertainty; suspense.

The reason of my hesitancy about the air is, that I forgot to try whether that liquor, which shot into crystals, exposed to the sun, would not have done the like in a vessel accurately stopp'd. Boyle.

Some of them reason'd without doubt or hesitancy, and lived and died in such a manner as to show that they believed their own reasonings. Averbury.

TO HESITATE. v. a. [hesito, Latin; hesiter, French.] To be doubtful; to delay; to pause; to make difficulty.

A spirit of revenge makes him curse the Gre-cians in the seventh book, when they hesitate to accept Hector's challenge. Pope.

Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A tim'rous foe, and a suspicious friend. Pope.

HESITATION. n. f. [from hesitate.]

1. Doubt; uncertainty; difficulty made.
I cannot foresee the difficulties and hesitations of every one: they will be more or fewer, according to the capacity of each person. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Intermision of speech; want of volu-bility.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations. Swift.

HEST. n. f. [hæpɜ, Saxon.] Command; precept; injunction. Obsolete, or written behest.

Thou dost afflict the not deserver,
As him that doth thy lovely hests despise. Spenser.
Thou wait a spirit too delicate
To act her earthy and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests. Shakespeare.

HETEROCLITE. n. f. [heteroclitie, Fr.
heteroclitum, Latin; ἑτεροκλίτης and κλίμα.]

1. Such nouns as vary from the common forms of declension, by any redundancy, defect, or otherwise. Clarke.

The heteroclitic nouns of the Latin should not be touched in the first learning of the rudiments of the tongue. Watts.

2. Any thing or person deviating from the common rule.

HETEROCLITICAL. adj. [from heteroclitie.]
Deviating from the common rule.

In the mention of sins heteroclitical, and such as want either name or precedent, there is oft times a sin, even in their histories. Brown.

HETERODOX. adj. [heterodoxe, French; ἑτεροδοξία and δόξα.] Deviating from the established opinion; not orthodox.

Partiality may be observed in some to vulgar,
in others to heterodox tenets. Locke.

HETERODOX. n. f. An opinion peculiar.

Not only a simple heterodox, but a very hard paradox it will seem, and of great absurdity, if we say attraction is unjustly appropriated into the laudation. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HETEROGENEAL. adj. [heterogene, Fr.
ἑτερογενής and γένος.] Not of the same nature; not kindred.

Let the body adjacent and ambient be not commaterial, but merely heterogeneal towards the body that is to be preserved: such are quicksilver and white amber to herbs and flies. Bacon.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

HETEROGENEITY. n. f. [heterogenité,
French, from heterogeneous.]

1. Opposition of nature; contrariety or dissimilitude of qualities.

2. Opposite or dissimilar part.

Guaiacum, burnt with an open fire in a chimney, is sequistered into ashes and soot; whereas the same wood, distilled into a retort, does yield far other heterogenities, and is resolved into oil, spirit, vinegar, water, and charcoal. Boyle.

HETEROGENEOUS. adj. [ἑτερογενής and γενος.] Not kindred; opposite or dissimilar in nature.

I have observed such heterogeneous bodies, which I found included in the mats of this sandstone. Woodward.

HETEROSCIANS. n. f. [ἑτεροσκία and σκοία.]
Those whose shadows fall only one way, as the shadows of us who live north of the tropick fall at noon always to the north.

TO HEW. v. a. part. hewn or hewed.
[heapan, Saxon; hauwen, Dutch.]

1. To cut by blows with an edged instrument; to hack.

Upon the joint the lucky steel did light,
And made such way that hew'd it quite in twain. Spenser.

I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't. Shakespeare.
He was hewn in pieces by Hamilton's friends. Hayward.

One Vane was so grievously hewn, that many thousands have died of less than half his hurts, whereof he was cured. Hayward.

2. To chop; to cut.
He from deep wells with engines water drew,
And us'd his noble hands the wood to hew. Dryden.

3. To cut, as with an axe: with the particles down, when it signifies to fell;
up, to excavate from below; off, to separate.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And heaws down oaks with rushes. Shakespeare.
Brave followers, yonder stands the thorny
wood,
Which, by the heav'n's assistance and your strength,
Must by the roots be hewn up yet ere night. Shakespeare.

Scarcely can I speak, my choler is so great:
Oh! I could hew up rocks, and fight with flint. Shakespeare.

Yet shall the axe of justice hew him down,
And level with the root his lofty crown. Sandys.
He from the mountain hewing timber tall,
Began to build a vessel of a huge bulk. Milton.
We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard,
And hew down all that would oppose our passage. Addison.

4. To form or shape with an axe: with out.

Thou hast hewed thee out a sepulchre here, as he that hewed him out a sepulchre on high. Isa. ah.
Nor is it so proper to hew out religious reformations by the sword, as to polish them by fair and equal disputations. King Charles.

This river rises in the very heart of the Alps, and has a long valley that seems hewn out on purpose to give its waters a passage amidst so many rucks. Addison on Italy.

5. To form laboriously.

The gate was adamant; eternal frame;
Which, hew'd by Mars himself, from Indian quarries came. Dryden's Fables.
The labour of a god,
Next unto bricks are prefer'd the square hewn
stone. Mortimer.

I now pass my days, not studious nor idle, rather polishing old works than hewing out new. Pope to Swift.

HEWER. n. f. [from hew.] One whose employment is to cut wood or stone.

At the building of Solomon's temple there were fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains. Brown.

HEXAGON. n. f. [hexagone, French;
ἑξ and γωνία.] A figure of six sides or angles; the most capacious of all the figures that can be added to each other without any interstice; and therefore the cells in honeycombs are of that form.

HEXAGONAL. adj. [from hexagon.] Having six sides or corners.

As for the figures of crystal, it is for the most part hexagonal, or six-cornered. Brown.
Many of them shoot into regular figures; as crystal and bastard diamonds into hexagonal. Ray.

HEXAGONY. n. f. [from hexagon.] A

When I read in St. Ambrose of hexagonies, or sexangular cellars of bees, did I therefore conclude that they were mathematicians? Bramhall against Hobbes.

HEXAMETER. n. f. [ἑξ and μέτρον.] A verse of six feet.

The Latin hexameter has more feet than the English heroick. Dryden.

HEXANGULAR. adj. [ἑξ and angulus,
Latin.] Having six corners.

Hexangular sprigs or thouts of crystal. Woodward.

HEXAPOD. n. f. [ἑξ and ποδός.] An animal with six feet.

I take those to have been the hexapods, from which the greater sort of beetles come, for that sort of hexapods are eaten in America. Ray.

HEXASTICK. n. f. [ἑξ and στίχος.] A poem of six lines.

HEY. interj. [from high.] An expression of joy, or mutual exhortation: the contrary to the Latin hei.

Shadwell from the town retires,
To bless the town with peaceful lyric;
Then hey for praise and panegyrick. Prior.

HEY'D. v. interj. [for high day.] An expression of frolick and exultation, and sometimes of wonder.

Thou'lt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spend'st it such heyday wit in praising him. Shakespeare.

'Twas a strange riddle of a lady,
Not love, if any lov'd her, heyday? Hudibras.

HEY'DAY. n. f. A frolick; wildness.

At your age
The heyday in the blood is tame, it's humble,
And waits upon the judgment. Shakespeare.

HEYDEGIVES. n. f. A wild frolick dance. Obsolete.

But friendly fairies met with many graces,
And light-foot nymphs can chase the ling'ring night
With heydegives, and trimly trodden traces. Spenser.

HIA'TION. n. f. [from hio, Latin.] The act of gaping.

Men observing the continual hiation, or holding open the camellion's mouth, conceive the intention thereof to receive the aliment of air; but this is also occasioned by the greatness of the lungs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIA'TUS. n. f. [hiatus, Latin.]

1. An aperture; a gaping breach.
Those hiatus's are at the bottom of the sea, whereby the abyss below opens into and communicates with it. Woodward.

2. The opening of the mouth by the succession of an initial to a final vowel.

The hiatus should be avoided with more care in poetry than in oratory; and I would try to prevent it, unless where the cutting it off is more prejudicial to the sound than the hiatus itself. Pope.

HIBERNAL. adj. [hibernus, Lat.] Belonging to the winter.

This star should rather manifest its warning power in the winter, when it remains conjoined with the sun in its hibernal conjunction. Brown.

HICCIUS DOCCIUS. n. f. [Corrupted, I fancy, from hic est doctus, this, or here is the learned man. Used by jugglers of themselves.] A cant word for a juggler; one that plays fast and loose.

An old dull sot, who told the clock
For many years at Bidewell dock,
At Weilminder and Hick's hall,
And hiccus doccius play'd in all;
Where, in all governments and times,
It had been both friend and foe to crimes. Hudibras.

HICCOUGH. n. f. [hicken, Danish.] A convulsion of the stomach producing fobs.

So by an abbey's skelton of late
I heard an echo supercogate
Through imperfection, and the voice restore,
As if he had the hiccough o'er and o'er. Cleaveland.
Sneezing eueith the hiccough, and is profitable unto women in hard labour. Brown.
If the stomach be hurt, fungus or hiccough follows. Wifem.

TO HICCOUGH. v. n. [from the noun.] To fob with convulsion of the stomach.

TO HICKUP. v. n. [corrupted from hiccough.] To fob with a convulsed stomach.

Quoth he, to bid me not to love,
Is to forbid my pulle to move,
My beard to grow, my ears to prick up,
Or, when I'm in a fit, o' hickup. Hudibras.

HICKWALL. } n. f. A bird. Ainsworth.
HICKWAY. }

HID. } The part. pass. of hide.
HIDDEN. }

Thus fame shall be achiev'd, renown on earth;
And what most merits fame, in silence hid. Milton.

Other hidden cause
Left them superior. Milton.
Nature and nature's laws lay hid in night;
God said, Let Newton be, and all was light. Pope.

TO HIDE. v. a. pret. hid; part. pass. hid or hidden. [hidan, Sax.] To conceal; to withhold or withdraw from sight or knowledge.

Avauar, and quit my sight; let the earth hide tree! Shaksp.
His reins are as two grains of wheat hid in two bushels of chaff. Shaksp.
Nile hears him knocking at his secret gates,
And seeks his hidden spring, and fears his nephews fates. Dryden.

Thus the fire of gods and men below;
What I have hidden, hope not thou to know. Dryden.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece;
Th' occasion but excited that, or this. Dryden.
Then for my coips a homely grave provide,
Which love and me from publick scorn may *hi*le. Dryden.

Seas hid with navies, chariots passing o'er
The channel, on a bridge from shore to shore. Dryden.

With what astonishment and veneration may we look into our own souls, where there are such hidden stores of virtue and knowledge, such inexhausted sources of perfection? Adams.

The earthy being makes a much longer voyage than Ulysses, puts in practice many more wiles, and hides himself under a greater variety of names. Adams.

Hell trembles at the sight, and hides its head
In utmost darkness, while on earth each heart Is fill'd with peace. Rosw's Royal Convert.

TO HIDE. v. n. To lie hid; to be concealed.

A fox, hard run, begged of a countryman to help him to some hiding place. L'Esfrange.

Our bolder talents in full view display'd;
Your virtues open fairest in the shade:
Bied to disguise, in publick 'tis you hide,
Where none distinguish 'twixt your shame and pride,
Weakness or delicacy. Pope.

HIDE and SEEK. n. f. A play in which some hide themselves, and another seeks them.

The boys and girls would venture to come and play at hide and seek in my hair. Galliver.

HIDE. n. f. [hyde, Sax. haude, Dut.]

1. The skin of any animal, either raw or dressed.

The trembling weapon past
Through nine bull hides each under other plac'd
On his broad shield. Dryden.

Pifist'rus was first to grasp their hands,
And spread soft hides upon the yellow sands. Pope.

2. The human skin: in contempt.

Oh, tiger's heart, wrapt in a woman's hide!
How could'st thou drain the life-blood of the child? Shaksp.

His mantle, now his hide, with rugged hairs
Cleaves to his back; a famish'd face he bears. Dryden.

3. A certain quantity of land. [Hide, hyde, French; bidu, barbarous Latin,
as much as one plough can till.] Ainsw.

One of the first things was a more particular inquisition than had been before of every hide of land within the precincts of his conquest, and how they were holden. Watson.

HIDEBOUND. adj. [hide and bound.]

1. A horse is said to be hidebound when his skin sticks so hard to his ribs and back, that you cannot with your hand pull up or loosen the one from the other. It sometimes comes by poverty and bad keeping; at other times from overriding, or a surfeit. Farrier's Dict.

2. [In trees.] Being in the state in which the bark will not give way to the growth.

A root of a tree may be hidebound, but it will not keep open without somewhat put into it like stink'd hidebound trees, that just have got sufficient sap at once to bear and rot. Swift.

3. Harsh; untractable.

And still the ianther and hidebound
The dumfels prove, become the sorder. Hudib.

4. Niggardly; penurious; parsimonious. Ainsworth.

HIDEOUS. adj. [hileux, French.]

1. Horrible; dreadful; shocking.

If he could have turned himself to as many forms as Proteus, every form should have been made hideous. Sidney.

Too hideous to be shew'd. Shakspere's Othello.
I del, and cry'd out death!

Hell trembled at the hideous name, and sigh'd
From all her caves, and back re-founded death. Milton.

Her eyes grew thicken'd, and with sulphur burn;
Her hideous looks and hellish form return;
Her curling snakes with hissing fill the place,
And open all the funes of her face. Dryden.

2. It is commonly used of ribble objects:
the following use is less authorized.

'Tis forced through the hutuses at the bottom of the sea with such vehemence, that it puts the sea into the most horrible disorder, making it rage and roar with a most hideous and amazing noise. Woodward's Natural Hist.

3. It is used by Spenser in a sense not now retained; detestable.

O hideous hanger of dominion! Spenser.

HIDEOUSLY. adv. [from hideous.] Hor-ribly; dreadfully; in a manner that shocks.

I arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy. Shakspere.

This, in the present application, is hideously
profane; but the sense is intelligible. Collier.

HIDEOUSNESS. n. f. [from hideous.]
Horribleness; dreadfulness; terrour.

HIDER. n. f. [from the verb.] He that hides.

TO HIE. v. n. [higan, Saxon.]

1. To hasten; to go in haste.

When they had mak'd the changed fies,
They with their hour was spent; then each to rest him hie. Fairy Queen.

My will is even this,
That presently you hie you home to bed. Shak.
Well, I will hie,
And so bestow these papers as you bade me. Shakspere.

Some to the thores do hie,
Some to the woods, or whither tear advis'd;
But running from, all to destruction hie. Dante.

The make no sooner hie,
But virtue heard it, and away the hie. Craftsm.

Thither, full fraught with mischievous revenge,
Accurs'd, and in a cursed hour, he hies. Milton.

Thus he advis'd me, on yon aged tree
Hang up thy lute, and hie thee to the sea. Waller.

The youth, returning to his mistress, hies. Dryden.

2. It was anciently used with or without the reciprocal pronoun. It is now almost obsolete in all its uses.

Auster spy'd him;
Cruci Auster thither hy'd him. Craftsm.

HiERARCH. n. f. [hieros and arx; hie- rarque, French.] The chief of a sacred order.

Angels, by imperial summens call'd,
Forthwith from all the ends of heav'n appear'd,
Under their hierarch, in orders bright. Milton.

HiERARCHICAL. adj. [hierarchique, Fr.]
Belonging to sacred or ecclesiastical government.

HiERARCHY. n. f. [hierarchie, French.]

1. A sacred government; rank or subordination of holy beings.

Out of the hierarchies of angels seen,
The gentle Gabriel call'd be from the rest. Fairfax.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick
notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchie. Dante.

Jehovah, from the summit of the sky,
Environ'd with his winged hierarchie,
The world survey'd. Sanby.

These the supreme king
Exalted to such pow'r, and gave to rule,
Each in his hierarchie, the orders bright. Milton.

The blindest of mortal wights, now questionless the highest saint in the celestial hierarchie, began to be so impudently, that a great part of the divine liturgy was addressed solely to her. Huet.

2. Ecclesiastical establishment.

The presbytery had more sympathy with the discipline of Scotland than the hierarchie of England. Lange.

While the old Levitical hierarchy continued, it was part of the ministerial office to slay the sacrifices. South.

Consider what I have written, from regard for the church established under the hierarchy of bishops. Swift.

HIEROGLYPH. } n. f. [hieroglyphic, French; ἱερόγλυφος, sacred, and γλυφω, to carve.]

1. An emblem; a figure by which a word was implied. Hieroglyphicks were used before the alphabet was invented. Hieroglyph seems to be the proper substantive, and hieroglyphick the adjective.

This hieroglyphick of the Egyptians was erected for parental affection, manifested in the protection of her young ones, when her nest was set on fire. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

A lamp amongst the Egyptians is the hieroglyphick of life. Wilkins's Dædalus.

The first writing men used was only the single pictures and gravings of the things they would represent, which way of expression was afterwards called hieroglyphick. Woodward.

Between the statues obelisks were plac'd, And the learn'd walls with hieroglyphicks grac'd. Pope.

2. The art of writing in picture. No brute can endure the taste of strong liquor, and consequently it is against all the rules of hieroglyph to assign any animals as patrons of punch. Swift.

HIEROGLYPHICAL. } adj. [hieroglyphique, French; from the noun.] Emblematical; expressive of some meaning beyond what immediately appears.

In this place stands a stately hieroglyphical obelisk of Theban marble. Samuel's Travels.

Th' Egyptian serpent figures time, And tripp'd, returns into his prime; If my affection, thou would'st win, First cast thy hieroglyphick skin. Cleveland.

The original of the conceit was probably hieroglyphical, which after became mythological, and, by a process of tradition, stole into a total verity, which was but partly true in its morality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

HIEROGLYPHICALLY. adv. [from hieroglyphical.] Emblematically.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically as the Egyptians, and the phoenix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown's Vulg. Err.

HIEROGRAPHY. n. f. [ἱερός and γραφω.] Holy writing.

HIEROPHANT. n. f. [ἱεροδότης.] One who teaches rules of religion; a priest.

Herein the wantonness of poets, and the crafts of their heathenish priests and hierophants, abundantly gratified the fancies of the people. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

TO HIGGLE. v. n. [of uncertain etymology, probably corrupted from haggle.]

1. To chaffer; to be penurious in a bargain. In good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly: it argues an ignoble mind, where we have wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale.

Bafe thou art! To higgle thus for a few blows, To gain thy knight an op'tent spouse. Hudib.

Why all this higgling with thy friend about such a paltry sum? Does this become the generosity of the noble and rich John Bull? Arbutnot.

2. To go selling provisions from door to door. This seems the original meaning, such provisions being cut into small quantities.

HIGGLEDY-PIGGLEDY. adv. A cant word, corrupted from higgle, which denotes any confused mafs, as higglers carry a huddle of provisions together.

HIGGLER. n. f. [from higgle.] One who sells provisions by retail.

HIGH. adj. [heah, Saxon; hoog, Dut.]

1. Long upward; rising above from the surface, or from the centre: opposed to deep, or long downward. Their Andes, or mountains, were far higher than those with us; whereby the remnants of the generation of men were, in such a particular deluge, saved. Bacon.

The higher parts of the earth being continually spending, and the lower continually gaining they must of necessity at length come to an equality. Burnet's Theory.

2. Elevated in place; raised aloft: opposed to low. They that stand high have many blasts to shake them, And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shakespeare's Richard III.

High o'er their heads a mould'ring rock is plac'd, That promises a fall, and shakes at every blast. Dryden.

Reason elevates our thoughts as high as the stars, and leads us through the vast spaces of this mighty fabrick; yet it comes far short of the real extent of even corporeal being. Locke.

3. Exalted in nature. The highest faculty of the soul. Baxter.

4. Elevated in rank or condition: as, high priest. He woos both high and low, both rich and poor. Shakespeare.

Swift.

HIGLAPER. n. f. An herb. Ainsworth.

HILARITY. n. f. [hilaritas, Latin.] Merriment; gayety.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth, and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence for wine.
Brown.

HILD, in Elrick's grammar, is interpreted a lord or lady: so Hildebert is a noble lord; Mahild, an heroic lady. Gilson.

HILDING. n. f. [hild, Saxon, signifies a lord: perhaps hilding means originally a little lord in contempt, for a man that has only the delicacy or had qualities of high rank; or a term of reproach abbreviated from hindling, degenerate. Hughes' Spenfer.]

1. A sorry, paltzy, cowardly fellow.
He was some hilding fellow, that had stol'n
The horse he rode on.
Shakespeare.
If your lordship find him not a hilding, hold me no more in your respect.
Shakespeare.
A base slave,
A hilding for a livery, a squire's cloth.
Shaksp.
2. It is used likewise for a mean woman.
Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench:
Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots.
Shaksp.
This idle toy, this hilding scorns my power,
And sets us all at nought.
Rowe's June Share.

HILL. n. f. [hil, Saxon.] An elevation of ground less than a mountain.

My sheep are thoughts, which I both guide and serve;
Their pasture is fair hills of fruitless love.
Sidney.
Jerusalem is seat'd on two hills,
Of height unlike, and turned side to side.
Fauf.

Three sides are sure imbar'd with crags and hills,

The rest is easy, scant to rise esp'y'd;
But mighty bulwark fence the plainer part:
So art helps nature, nature strength'ens art.

When our eye some prospect would pursue,
Descending from a hill, looks round to view.

A hill is nothing but the nest of some metal or mineral which, by a plastick virtue, and the efficacy of subterranean fires, converting the adjacent earths into their substance, do increase and grow.

HILLOCK. n. f. [from hill.] A little hill.

Yet weigh this, alas! great is not great to the greater:

What, judge ye, doth a hillock show by the lofty Olympus.

Sometime walking not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green.

This mountain, and a few neighbouring hillocks that lie scattered about the bottom of it, is the whole circuit of these dominions.

As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back.

HINDERANCE. n. f. [from hinder.] Impediment; let; stop; obstruction: with of, sometimes with to, before the thing hindered; with to before the person.

False opinions, touching the will of God to have things done, are wont to bring forth mighty and violent practices against the hinderances of them, and those practices new opinions, more pernicious than the first: yea, most extremely sometimes opposite to the first.

They must be in every christian church the same, except more impossibility of so having it be the hinderance.

What hinderance have they been to the knowledge of what is well done?

Have we not plighted each our holy oath, One soul should both inspire, and neither prove. His fellow's hinderance in pursuit of love & duty.

He must conquer all these difficulties, and remove all these hinderances out of the way that leads to justice.

HINDERER. n. f. [from hinder.] He or that which hinders or obstructs.

Brakes, great hinderers of all plowing, grower

HINDERLING. n. f. [from hind or hinder.] A paltry, worthless, degenerate animal.

HINDERMOST. adj. [This word seems to be less proper than hindmost.] Hindmost; last; in the rear.

He put the handmaids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children after, and Rachel and Joseph hindermost.

Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindermost.

HINDMOST. adj. [hind and most.] The last; the lag; that comes in the rear.

'Tis not his wont to be the hindmost man,
Whate'er occasion keeps him from us now.

He met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind.

Let him retire, betwixt two ages cast,
The best of this, and hindmost of the best,
A losing gamster.

The race by vigour, not by vanities is won;
So take the hindmost, tell—he said, and run.

HINGE. n. f. [or hingle, from hangle or hang.]

1. Joints upon which a gate or door turns.

Of heav'n arriv'd, the gate self-open'd wide,
On golden hinges turning.

Then from the hinge their strokes the gates divorce,
And where the way they cannot find, they force.

Heav'n's imperious queen shet down from high;
At her approach the brazen hinges fly,
The gates are forc'd.

2. The cardinal points of the world, east, west, north, and south.

If when the moon is in the hinge at east,
The birth breaks forward from its native rest;
Full eighty years, if you two years abate,
This station gives.

Let him first spy observe the first hints and intimations, the first hints and whispers of good and evil, that pass in his heart. South.

2. Suggestion; intimation.
On this hint I spake,
She lov'd me for the dangers I had past. Shakspeare.
Actions are so full of circumstances, that, as men observe some parts more than others, they take different hints, and put different interpretations on them. Addison.

HIP. n. f. [from hepa, Saxon.] The fruit of the brier or the dogrose.
Eating hips, and draking wat'ry foam. Hubbard's Tale.
Why should you want? Behold, the earth hath roots;
The oaks bear masts, the briars scarlet hips. Shakspeare.
Years of store of haws and hips do commonly portend cold winters. Bacon's Natural History.

HIP. n. f. [hype, Saxon.]

1. The joint of the thigh.
How now, which of your hips has the most profound sciatica? Shakspeare.
Hippocrates affirmeth of the Scythians, that, using continual riding, they were generally mofected with the sciatica or hip gout. Brown.

2. The haunch; the flesh of the thigh.
So shepherds use
To set the same mark on the hip
Both of their sound and rotten sheep. Hudibras.
Against a stump his tuiks the monster grinds,
And ranch'd his hips with one continu'd wound. Dryden.

3. To have on the HIP. [A low phrase.] To have an advantage over another. It seems to be taken from hunting, the hip or hannels of a deer being the part commonly seized by the dogs.
If this poor brach of Venice, whom I cherish
For his quick hunting, stand the putting on,
I'll have our Michael Cassio on the hip. Shakspeare.

To HIP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sprain or shoot the hip.
His horse was hipp'd. Shakspeare.

2. HIP-HOP. A cant word formed by the reduplication of hop.

Your different tastes divide our poet's cares;
One foot the sock, t'other the buskin wears:
Thus, while he strives to please, he's forc'd to do it,
Like Volturnus hip-hop in a single boot. Congrave.

HIP. interjeit. An exclamation, or calling to inter; the same as the Latin eho, heus! Ainsworth.

In excrements, and lives the jakes. Dryden's Juv.

2. To engage a man in temporary service for wages.
They weigh silver in the balance, and hire a goldsmith, and he maketh it a god. Isaiah.
I cannot strike at wretched kerns, whose arms
Are hir'd to beat their slaves. Shakspeare.

3. To bribe.
Themetes fir'd, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. To engage for pay: with the reciprocal word.
They that were full, hired out themselves for bread; and they that were hungry, ceased. 1 Sam.

5. To let; to set for a time at a certain price. This, to prevent ambiguity, has sometimes the particle out: as, he hired out his house to strangers.

HIRE. n. f. [hyne, Saxon.]

1. Reward or recompence paid for the use of any thing.
Great thanks and goodly meed to that good fire;
He thence departing gave for his pains hire. Spenser.
I have five hundred crowns,
The thirty hire I fav'd under your tather. Shakspeare.

Though little was their hire, and light their Yet somewhat at to their share he drew. Dryden.

HIS. pronoun possessive. [hyr, Saxon.]

1. The masculine possessive. Belonging to him that was before mentioned.
England his approaches makes as fierce
As waters to the sucking of a gulph. Shakspeare.
If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Heav'n and yourself
Had part in this fair maid; now heav'n hath all,
And all the better is it for the maid:
Your part in her you could not keep from death;
But heav'n keeps his part in eternal life. Shakspeare.
If our father carry authority with such disposition as he bears this last surrender of his, it will but offend us. Shakspeare.
He that is nourished by the acorns he picked up under an oak in the wood, has appropriated them to himself: nobody can deny but the nourishment is his. Locke.
When'er I stoop, he offers at a kiss;
And when my arms I stretch, he stretches his. Addison.

2. It was anciently used in a neutral sense, where we now say its.
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root? Shakspeare.
Not the dreadful spout,
Shall dizzy with more clam'ur Neptune's ear
In his descent. Shakspeare's Troilus and Cressida.
There's not the smallest orb, which thou behold'st,
But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-ey'd cherubims. Shakspeare.

Opium losten some of his poisonous quality if it be vapoured out, mingled with spirit of wine. Paccon.

3. It is sometimes used as a sign of the genitive case: as, the man his ground, for the man's ground. It is now rarely thus used, as its use proceeded probably from a false opinion that the s formative of the genitive was his contracted.

Where is this mankind now? who lives to age
Fit to be made Meribah's page? Donne.
By thy fond comfort, by thy father's cares,
By young Tadmachus his blooming years. Pope.

4. It is sometimes used in opposition to this man's.
Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands,
Desire his jewels, and this other's house. Shaksp.

5. Anciently before self.
Every of us, each for his self, laboured how to recover him. Sidney.

To HISS. v. n. [hissen, Dutch.]

1. To utter a noise like that of a serpent and some other animals. It is remarkable, that this word cannot be pronounced without making the noise which it signifies.
In the height of this bath to be thrown into the Thames and cooled glowing hot, in that furge, like a hoarseho, think of that; hissing
hot. Shaksp.
The merchants shall hiss at thee. Ezekiel.
See the snakes that they rear,
How they hiss in their hair. Dryden.
Against the steed he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew, Pierced through the yielding planks. Dryden.

which is sometimes done by hissing.
Men shall pursue with merited disgrace!
Hiss, clap their hands, and from his country
chace. Sandys.

To HISS. v. a. [hiscan, Saxon.]

1. To condemn by hissing; to explode.
Every one will hiss him out to his disgrace. Ecclesi.
She would so shamefully fall in the last act, that, instead of a plaudite, she would deserve to be hissed off the stage. Morc.
I have seen many successions of men, who have shot themselves into the world, some bolting out upon the stage with vast applause, and others hissed off, and quitting it with disgrace. Dryden.
Will you venture your all upon a cause, which would be hissed out of all the courts as ridiculous?
Collier on Duelling.

2. To procure hisses or disgrace.
Thy mother plays, and I Play too; but so disgrac'd a part, whose issue
Will hiss me to my grave. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.
What's the newest grief?

On all sides, from innumerable tongues,
A dismal universal hiss, the sound
Of publick scorn! Milton.
Fierce champion fortitude, that knows no fears
Of hisses, blows, or want, or loss of ears. Pope.

HIST. interj. [Of this word I know not the original: some thought it a corruption of hush, hush it, hush, hiss; but I have heard that it is an Irish verb commanding silence.] An exclamation commanding silence.
Mute silence hiss along!
'Lest philomel will deign a song,
In her sweetest saddest plight,
Smoothing the rugged brow of night. Milton.
Hiss, hiss, says another that stood by, away,

doctor; for here's a whole pack of drimals coming. Swift.

HISTORIAN. n. s. [historicus, Lat. histo- rien, Fr.] A writer of facts and events;
a writer of history.
What thanks sufficient, or what recompence
Equal, have I to render thee, divine Historian! Milton.
Our country, which has produced writers of the first figure in every other kind of work, has been very barren in good historians. Adison.
Not added years on years my task could close,
The long historian of my country's woes. Pope.

HISTORICAL. } adj. [historique, Fr.
HISTORICK. } historicus, Latin.]

1. Containing or giving an account of facts and events.
Because the beginning seemeth abrupt, it needs that you know the occasion of these several adventures; for the method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.
In an historical relation we use terms that are most proper and best known. Burnet's Theory.
Here rising bold the patriot's honest face;
These warriors frowning in historick brass. Pope.

2. Suitable or pertaining to history or narrative.
With equal justice and historick care,
Their laws, their toils, their arms with his compare. Prior.

HISTORICALLY. adv. [from historical.]
In the manner of history; by way of narration.
The gospels, which are weekly read, do all historically declare something which our Lord Jesus Christ himself either spoke, did, or suffered in his own person. Hucker.
When that which the word of God doth but deliver historically, we contrive as if it were legally meant, and so urge it further than we can prove it was intended, do we not add to the laws of God? Hucker.
After his life has been rather invented than written, I shall consider him historically as an author, with regard to those works he has left behind him. Pope's Essay on Homer.

To HISTORIFY. v. a. [from history.]
To relate; to record in history.
O, muse, historify
Her praise, whose praise to learn your skill hath framed me. Sidney.
The third age they term historicon; that is,
such wherein matters have been more truly historified, and therefore may be believed. Brown.

HISTORIOGRAPHER. n. s. [ιστοριος and γραφω; historiographicus, French.] A historian; a writer of history.
The method of a poet historical is not such as of an historiographer. Spenser.
What poor ideas must strangers conceive of persons famous among us, should they form their notions of them from the writings of those our historiographers. Adison.
I put the journals into a strong box, after the manner of the historiographers of some eastern monarchs. Abuthnot's History of John Bull.

HISTORIOGRAPHY. n. s. [ιστορια and γραφω.] The art or employment of a historian.
HISTORY. n. s. [ιστορια; historia, Lat.
histoire, French.]

ical.] Theatrically; in the manner of a buffoon.

To HIT. v. a. [from ictus, Latin, Min- shew; from hitte Danish, to throw at random, Junius.]

1. To strike; to touch with a blow.
When I first saw her I was presently stricken;
and I, like a foolish child, that when any thing hits him will strike himself again upon it, would needs look again, as though I would persuade mine eyes that they were deceived. Sidney.
His conscience shall hit him in the teeth,
and tell him his sin and folly. South.

2. To touch the mark; not to miss.
Is he a god that ever flies the light?
Or naked he, disguis'd in all untruth?
If he be blind, how hitteth he to right? Sidney.
So hard it is to tremble, and not to err,
and to hit the mark with a shaking hand. South.

3. To attain; to reach; not to fail;
used of tentative experiments.
Were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother.
As I did him. Shaksp.
Search every comment that your care can find,
Some here, some there, may hit the poet's mind. Roscommon.
Birds learning tunes, and their endeavours to hit the notes right, put it past doubt that they have perception, and retain ideas, and use them for patterns. Locke.
Here's an opportunity to shew how great a bungler my author is in hitting features. Atterbury.

4. To suit; to be conformable to.
Hail, divinest melancholy!
Whose faintly visage is too bright
To hit the sense of human sight. Milton.

5. To strike; to catch by the right bait;
to touch properly.
There you hit him: St. Dominick loves charity exceedingly; that argument never fails with him. Dryden.

6. To HIT off. To strike out; to fix or determine luckily.
What prince soever can hit off this great secret, need know no more either for his own safety, or that of the people he governs. Temple.

7. To HIT out. To perform by good luck.
Having the sound of ancient poets ringing in his ears, he mought needs in hitting hit out some of their tunes. Spenser.

To HIT. v. n.

1. To clash; to collide.
If bodies be extension alone, how can they move and hit one against another? or what can make distinct surfaces in an uniform extension?
Locke.
Bones, teeth, and shells, being sustained in the water with metallick corpuscles, and the said corpuscles meeting with and hitting upon those bodies, become conjoined with them. Westward.

2. To chance luckily; to succeed by accident; not to miss.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most ets.
Shaksp.

3. To succeed; not to miscarry.
The experiment of binding of thoughts would be diversified, and you are to note whether it hits for the most part. Bacon's Natural History.
But thou bring't valour too and wit,
Two things that seldom fail to hit. Hudibras.
This may hit, 'tis more than barely possible. Dryden

All human race would fain be wits,
And millions miss for one that hits. Swift.

4. To light on.
There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages among compliments, which is of singular use, if a man can hit upon it. Bacon.
You've hit upon the very string, which touch'd,
Echoes the sound, and jars within my soul:
There lies my grief. Dryden's Spanish Fryar.
It is much, if men were from eternity, that they should not find out the way of writing sooner: sure he was a fortunate man, who, after men had been eternally so dull as not to find it out, had the luck at last to hit upon it. Tillotson.

There's a just medium betwixt eating too much and too little; and this dame had hit upon 't, when the matter was so ordered that the hen brought her every day an egg. L'Esrange.
None of them hit upon the art. Addison.
There's but a true and a false prediction in any telling of fortune; and a man that never hits on the right side, cannot be called a bad guesser, but must miss out of design. Bentley.

HIT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A stroke.
The king hath laid, that in a dozen passes between you and him, he shall not exceed you three hits. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
So he the fam'd Cilician fence prais'd
And at each hit with wonder seem amaz'd
Dryden.

2. A chance; a fortuitous event.
To suppose a watch, by the blind hits of chance, to perform diversity of orderly motions, without the regulation of art, this were the more pardonable absurdity. Granville.
If the rule we judge by be uncertain, it is odds but we shall judge wrong; and if we should judge right, yet it is not properly skill, but chance; not a true judgment, but a lucky hit. South.

But with more lucky hit than those
That use to make the stars depose. Hudibras.
The fisherman's waiting, and the lucky hit it had in the conclusion, tells us, that honest endeavours will not fail. L'Esrange.
If casual concurrence did the world compose,
And things and hits fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring? Blackmore.

3. A lucky chance.
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit? Shakspeare.
These hits of words a true poet often finds,
Without seeking. Dryden.
If at first he minds his hits,
And drinks champagne among the wits,
Five deep he toasts the tow'ring lass. Prior.

To HITCH. v. n. [hrezan, Saxon, or bocher, French. Skinner.] To catch; to move by jerks. I know not where it is used but in the following passage; nor here know well what it means.
Whoe'er offends at some unlucky time
Slides in a verse, or hitches in a rhyme;
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burthen of some merry song. Pope.

To HITCHEL. v. a. [See HATCHEL.]
To beat or comb flax or hemp.

HITCHEL. n. f. [heckel, German.] The instrument with which flax is beaten or combed.

haven to land wares out of vessels or boats: as Queenhithe, and Lambhithe, now Lambeth.

HITHER. adv. [hiðer, Saxon.]
1. To this place from some other.
Cæsar, tempted with the fame
Of this sweet island, never conquered,
And envying the Britons blazed name,
O hideous hunger of dominion! hither came. Spenser.

Men must endure
Their going hence, even as their coming hither. Shakspeare.
Who brought me hither
Will bring me hence, no other guide I seek. Milton.

2. It is used in opposition: hither and thither, to this place and that.

3. To this end; to this design; to this topick of argument: [huc, Latin. Huc refer exitum.] Not much used.
Hereupon dependeth whatsoever difference there is between the states of saints in glory; hither we refer whatsoever belongeth unto the highest perfection of man, by way of service towards God. Hooker.

Hither belong all those texts, which require of us that we should not walk after the flesh, but after the spirit. Tillotson.

HITHER. adj. superl. hithermost. Nearer; toward this part.

Alter these,
But on the hither side, a different fount,
From the high neighb'ring hills descended. Milt.
An eternal duration may be shorter or longer upon the hither end, namely that extreme whete-in it is finite. Hale.

HITHERMOST. adj. [of hither, adv.]
Nearest on this side.
That which is external can be extended to a greater extent at the hithermost extreme. Hale.

HITHERTO. adv. [from hither.]
1. To this time; yet.
Hitherto I have only told the reader what ought not to be the subject of a picture or of a poem. Dryden.

2. In any time till now.
More ample spirit than hitherto was wont,
Here needs me, whiles the famous ancestors
Of my most dreadful sovereign I recount. Fairy Queen.

3. At every time till now.
In this we are not their adversaries, tho' they in the other hitherto have been ours. Hooker.
Hitherto, lords, what your commands imposed
I have perform'd, as reason was, obeying. Milt.
Hitherto she kept her love conceal'd,
And with those graces ev'ry day beheld
The graceful youth. Dryden.
He could not have failed to add the opposition of ill spirits to the good: this alone has hitherto been the practice of the moderns. Dryd.
To correct them, is a work that has hitherto been assumed by the least qualified hands. Swift.

HITHERWARD. } adv. [hyðenpeard,
HITHERWARDS. } Sax.] This way; toward this place.

Some parcels of their power are forth already,
And only hitherward. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
The king himself in person hath set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily. Shakspeare.
A puissant and mighty pow'r
Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HIVE. n. f. [hyfe, Saxon.]
1. The habitation or artificial receptacle of bees.

So bees with smoke, and doves with noise force itself,
Are from their hives and houses driv'n away. Shakspeare.

So wand'ring bees would perish in the air,
Did not a found, proportion'd to their ear,

They who pass through a foreign country, towards their native home, do not usually give up themselves to the pleasures of the place. Atterbury.

3. The place of constant residence. Flandria, by plenty made the home of war, Shall weep her crime, and bow to Charles restor'd. Prior.

4. Home united to a substantive, signifies domestick, or of the same country. Let the exportation of home commodities be more in value than the importation of foreign. Bacon.

HOME. adv. [from the noun.]

1. To one's own habitation. One of Adam's children in the mountains lights on a glittering substance; home he carries it to Adam, who finds it to be hard, to have a bright yellow colour, and exceeding great weight. Locke.

2. To one's own country. 3. Close to one's own breast or affairs. He that encourages treason lays the foundation of a doctrine, that will come home to himself. L'Estrange.

This is a consideration that comes home to our interest. Addison.

These considerations, proposed in general terms, you will, by particular application, bring home to your own concern. Waller.

4. To the point designed; to the utmost; closely; fully. Crafty enough either to hide his faults, or never to shew them, but when they might pay home. Sidney.

With his prepared sword he charges home My unprovided body. Shakspeare's King Lear.

A loyal fir To him thou follow'st: I will pay thy graces Home both in word and deed. Shakspeare.

Accuse him home and home. Shakspeare.

Men of age object too much, adventure too little, and seldom drive business home to the full period; but content themselves with a mediocrity of success. Bacon.

That cometh up home to the business, and taketh off the objection clearly. Sunderford.

Break through the thick array Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon him. Addison.

He makes choice of some piece of morality; and, in order to press this home, he makes less use of reasoning. Broom.

I can only refer the reader to the authors themselves, who speak very home to the point. Atterbury.

5. United to a substantive, it implies force and efficacy. Poison may be false; The home thrust of a friendly sword is sure. Dryden.

I am sorry to give him such home thrusts; for he lays himself so open, and uses so little art to avoid them, that I must either do nothing, or expose his weakness. Stillingfleet.

HOMEBO'RN. adj. [home and born.]

1. Native; natural. Though to be thus elemented, arm These creatures from homeborn intrinseck harm. Bacon.

2. Domestick; not foreign.

Numerous bands
With homeborn lyes, or tales from foreign lands.
Pope.

HO'MEBRED. adj. [home and bred.]

1. Native; natural.

God hath taken care to anticipate every man, to draw him early into his church, before other competitors, homebred lusts, or vicious customs of the world, should be able to pretend to him.
Hammond.

2. Not polished by travel; plain; rude;
artless; uncultivated.

Only to me two homebred youths belong.
Dryden.

3. Domestick; not foreign.

But if of danger, which hereby doth dwell
And homebred evil, ye desire to hear,
I can you tydings tell.
Fairy Queen.

This once happy hand,
By homebred fury rent, long groan'd.
Phillips.

HO'MEFELT. adj. [home and felt.] Inward; private.

Yet they in pleasing slumber lull'd the sense,
And in sweet madness robb'd it of itself;
But such a sacred and homefelt delight,
Such sober-certainty of waking bliss,
I never heard till now.
Milton.

Happily next him who to these shades retires, Whom nature charms, and whom the muse inspires,
Whom humbler joys of homefelt quiet please,
Successive study, exercise, and ease.
Pope.

HO'MELILY. adv. [from homely.] Rudely; inelegantly.HO'MELINESS. n. f. [from homely.] Plain-ness; rudeness; coarseness.

Homer has opened a great field of railery to men of more delicacy than greatness of genius, by the homeliness of some of his sentiments.
Addison.

HO'MELY. adj. [from home.] Plain;
homespun; not elegant; not beautiful;
not fine; coarse; rude. It is used both of persons and things.

Each place handsome without curiosity, and homely without loathsomeness.
Sidney.

Within this wood, out of a rock did rise
A spring of water, mildly tumbling down;
Whereto approached not in any wise
The homely shepherd, nor the ruder clown.
Spenser.

Like rich hangings in an homely house,
So was his will in his old feeble body.
Be plain, good son, and homely in thy drift;
Riddling confession finds but riddling thrift.
Shakespeare.

Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits.
Shakespeare.

Our stomachs will make what's homely fa-vomous.
They had their name thence.
Milton.

It is observed by some, that there is none so homely but loves a looking-glass.
South.

Their homely fare dispatch'd, the hungry band
Invade their trenchers next.
Dryden.

Now Strephon daily entertains
His Calbe in the homeliest strains.
Swift.
Homely persons, the more they endeavour to adorn themselves, the more they expose the defects they want to hide.
Clarendon.

HO'MELY. adv. Plainly; coarsely; rudely.

Thus like the god his father, homely dress,
He rides into the hall a lordly guest.
Dryden.

HO'MELYN. n. f. A kind of fish. *Ainsw.HOMEMA'DE. adj. [home and made.] Made at home; not manufactured in foreign parts.

A tax laid on your native product, and home- made commodities, makes them yield less to the brist seller.
Locke.

HO'MER. n. f. A Hebrew measure of about three pints.

An homer of barley seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver.
Leviticus.

HO'MESPUN. adj. [home and spun.]1. Spun or wrought at home; not made by regular manufacturers.

Instead of homespun coifs were seen
Good pinners, edg'd with colberteen.
Swift.

2. Not made in foreign countries.

He appeared in a suit of English broad-cloth, very plain, but rich: every thing he wore was substantial, honest, homespun ware.
Addison.

3. Plain; coarse; rude; homely; ineleg-gant.

They sometimes put on when they go ashore,
long sleeveless coats of homespun cotton.
Sandys' Travels.

We say, in our homespun English proverb, He killed two birds with one stone.
Dryden.

Our homespun authors must forsake the field,
And Shakespeare to the soft Scarlatti yield.
Addison.

HOMESPU'N. n. f. A coarse, inelegant, rude, untaught, rustick man. Not in use.

What hempen homespuns have we swaggering
here,
So near the cradle of the fairy queen?
Shaksp.

HO'MESTALL. } n. f. [ham and stede.] HO'MESTEAD. } Saxon.] The place of the house.

Both house and homestead into seas are borne,
And rocks are from their own foundations torn.
Dryden.

HO'MEWARD. } adv. [ham and peard.] HO'MEWARDS. } Saxon.] Toward home; toward the native place; toward the place of residence.

Then Urania homeward did arise,
Leaving in pain their well-fed hungry eyes.
Sidney.

Do even drag me homeward. } Shakespeare.
Since such love's natural station is, may still
My love descend, and journey down the hill,
Not panting after growing beauties; so
I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Dennis.

Look homeward, angel now, and melt with ruth;
And, O ye dolphins, waft the hapless youth!
Milton.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high,
Which clap their wings, and cleave the liquid sky,
Which homeward from their wat'ry pastures borne,
They sing, and Afa's lakes their notes return.
Dryden.

What now remains,
But that once more we tempt the wat'ry plains,
And wand'ring homewards, seek our safety hence.
Dryden.

HO'MICIDE. n. f. [homicide, Fr. homici- dium, Latin.]

1. Murder; manquelling.

The apostles command to abstain from blood:
contrue this according to the law of nature, and it will seem, that homicide only is forbidden;
but contrue it in reference to the law of the Jews, about which the question was, and it shall easily appear to have a clear other sense, and a truer, when we expound it of eating, and not of shedding blood.
Hooker.

2. Destruction. In the following lines it is not proper.

What wonder is't that black detraction thrives?
The homicide of names is less than lives.
Dryden.

3. [homicide, Fr. homicida, Lat.] A mur-derer; a man-slayer.

I'd undertake the death of all the world,
So might I live one hour in your sweet bosom.
—If I thought that, I tell thee, homicide,

These nails should rend that beauty from my cheeks.
Shakspere.

Hector comes, the homicide, to wield
His conqu'ring arms, with corps to strew the field.
Dryden.

HOMICID'AL. adj. [from homicide.] Murderous; bloody.

The troop forth issuing from the dark recess,
With homicidal rage, the king oppres.
Pope.

HOMILE'TICAL. adj. [ὁμιλιτικὸς.] Social;
conversable.

His life was holy, and when he had leisure for retirements, severe: his virtues active chiefly, and homiletical; not those lazy sullen ones of the cloyster.
Atterbury.

HO'MILY. n. f. [homilie, French; ὁμιλία.]
A discourse read to a congregation.

Homilies were a third kind of readings usual in former times; a most commendable institution, as well then to supply the casual, as now the necessary defect of sermons.
Hooker.

What tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried have patience, good people!
Shaksp. As you like it.

If we survey the homilies of the ancient church we shall discern that, upon festival days, the subject of the homily was constantly the business of the day.
Hammond's Fundamentals.

HOMOGENEAL. } adj. [homogene,
HOMOGENEOUS. } Fr. ὁμογενεῖς.]
Having the same nature or principles;
suitable to each other.

The means of reduction, by the fire, is but by congregation of homogeneous parts.
Bacon.
Ice is a similiary body, and homogeneous con-cretion, whose material is properly water.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

An homogeneous mass of one kind is easily distinguishable from any other; gold from iron, sulphur from allum, and so of the rest.
Woodward's Natural History.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneous, and similar: and that, whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneous, and dissimilar.
Newton.

HOMOGENEALNESS. } n. f. [from homo-HOMOGENE'ITY. } geneous, or homo-HOMOGENEOUSNESS. } geneal.] Participation of the same principles or nature;
similitude of kind.

The mixtures acquire a greater degree of fluidity and similarity, or homogeneity of parts.
Arbutnot on Aliments.

Upon this supposition of only different diameters, it is impossible to account for the homogeneity or similarity of the fermented liquors.
Cheyne.

HO'MOGENY. n. f. [ὁμογενία.] Joint nature. Not used.

By the driving back of the principal spirits, which preserve the consistence of the body, their government is dissolved, and every part returneth to his nature or homogeny.
Bacon.

HOMO'LOGOUS. adj. [homologue, French; ὁμολογῶς.] Having the same manner or proportions.HOMONYMOUS. adj. [homonyme, French; ὁμώνυμος.] Denominating different things; equivocal; ambiguous.

As words signifying the same thing are called synonymous, so equivocal words, or those which signify several things, are called homonymous, or ambiguous; and when persons use such ambiguous words, with a design to deceive, it is called equivocation.
Watts.

HOMO'NYMY. n. f. [homonymie, French;
ὁμωνυμία.] Equivocation; ambiguity.HOMO'TONOUS. adj. [ἁμοτόνος.] Equale:
said of such dilempters as keep a constant tenour of rise, state, and declension.

Quincy.

HONE. n. f. [This word M. Casaubon derives from honi; Janius from hogsaen, Welsh; Skinner, who is always rational, from hæn, a stone; hænan, to stone.]
A whetstone for a razor.

A hone and a paver to pare away grafts. Tusser.
To HONE. v. n. [hongian, Saxon.] To pine; to long for any thing.

HONEST. adj. [honeste, Fr. honestus, Lat.]

1. Upright; true; sincere.

What art thou?

—A very honest hearted fellow, and as poor as a king. Shakspeare

An honest physician leaves his patient, when he can contribute no further to his health. Temple.

The way to relieve ourselves from those sophisms, is an honest and diligent enquiry into the real nature and causes of things. Watts.

2. Chaste.

Wives may be merry and yet honest too.

Shakspeare.

3. Just; righteous; giving to every man his due.

Tate will subscribe, but fix no certain day,
He's honest, and as wit comes in, will pay.

Tate.

HONESTLY. adv. [from honest.]

1. Uprightly; justly.

It doth make me tremble,

There should those spirits yet breathe, that when they cannot Live honestly, would rather perish basely.

Ben Jonson.

For some time past all proposals from private persons to advance the publick service, however honestly and innocently designed, have been called flying in the king's face. Swift.

2. With chastity; modestly.

HONESTY. n. f. [honesté, Fr. honestas, Lat.] Justice; truth; virtue; purity.

Thou shalt not have thy husband's lands.

—Why, then mine honesty shall be my dowry.

Shakspeare.

Goodness, as that which makes men prefer their duty and their promise before their passions or their interest, and is properly the object of trust, in our language goes rather by the name of honesty; though what we call an honest man, the Romans called a good man; and honesty, in their language, as well as in French, rather signifies a composition of those qualities which generally acquire honour and esteem. Temple.

HONEY. n. f. [hunnig, Saxon; honig, Dutch; honec, honag, German.]

1. A thick, viscous, fluid substance, of a whitish or yellowish colour, sweet to the taste, soluble in water; and becoming vinous on fermentation, inflammable, liquable by a gentle heat, and of a fragrant smell. Hill.

Of honey, the first and finest kind is virgin honey, not very firm, and of a fragrant smell: it is the first produce of the swarm, obtained by draining the combs without pressing. The second is often almost solid, procured by pressure: and the worst is the common yellow honey, extracted by heating the combs, and then pressing them. In the flowers of plants, by certain glands near the basis in the petals, is secreted a sweet juice, which the bee by means of its proboscis or trunk, sucks up, and discharges again from the stomach through the mouth into the comb. The honey deposited in the comb, is destined for the young offspring: but in bad seasons the bees are reduced to the necessity of feeding on it themselves. Hill.

So work the honey bees,

Creatures that by a ruling nature teach

The art of order to a peopled kingdom. Shakspeare.
Touching his education and first fostering, some affirm, that he was fed by honey bees.

Raleigh's History.

In ancient time there was a kind of honey, which, either of its own nature, or by art, would grow as hard as sugar, and was not so luscious as ours. Bacon.

When the patient is rich, there's no fear of physicians about him, as thick as wasps to a honey put. L'Estrange.

Honey is the most elaborate production of the vegetable kind, being a most exquisite vegetable sops, resolvent of the bile, balsamick and pectoral: honey contains no inflammable spirit before it has felt the force of fermentation; for by distillation it affords nothing that will burn in the fire. Abraham.

New wine, with honey temper'd milk we bring;
Then living waters from the crystal spring. Pope.

2. Sweetness; lusciousness.

The king hath found

Mitter against him, that for ever mars

The honey of his language. Shakspeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakspeare.

3. Sweet; sweetness: a name of tender-ness. [Mel; corculum.]

Honey, you shall be well defin'd in Cyprus;
I've found great love amongst them. Oh, my sweet,

I prattle out of fashion, and I dote. Shakspeare.

Why, honey bird, I bought him on purpose for thee. Dryden.

To HONEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To talk so dully.

Nay, but to live

In the rank sweat of an incestuous bed,
Stew'd in corruption, honeying and making love
Over the nasty sty. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

HONEY-BAG. n. f. [honey and bag.]

The honey-bag is the stomach, which bees always fill to satiety, and to spare, vomiting up the greater part of the honey to be kept against winter. Grew's Musaeum.

HONEY-COMB. n. f. [honey and comb.]

The cells of wax in which the bee stores her honey.

All these a milk-white honey-comb surround,
Which in the midst the country banquet crown'd. Dryden.

HONEY-COMBED. adj. [honey and comb.]

Spoken of a piece of ordnance flawed with little cavities by being ill cast.

A mariner having discharged his gun which was honey-combed, and loading it suddenly again, the powder took fire. Wifeman.

HONEY-DEW. n. f. [honey and dew.] Sweet dew.

There is a honey-dew which hangs upon their leaves, and breeds insects. Montimer.

How honey-dews enshalm the fragrant morn,
And the fair oak with luscious sweets adorn. Garth.

HONEY-FLOWER. n. f. [melanthus, Latin.]

A plant.

It hath a perennial root, and the appearance of a shrub. This plant produces large spikes of chocolate-coloured flowers in May, in each of which is contained a large quantity of black sweet liquor, from whence it is supposed to derive its name. Miller.

HONEY-GNAT. n. f. [mellio, Latin; honey and gnat.] An insect. Ainsworth.

HONEY-MOON. n. f. [honey and moon.]

The first month after marriage when there is nothing but tenderness and pleasure.

A man should keep his finery for the latter season of marriage, and not begin to dress till the honey-moon is over. Addison.

HONEY-SUCKLE. n. f. [caprifolium, Lat.] Woodbine.

It hath a climbing stalk, which twists itself about whatsoever tree stands near it: the flowers are tubulous and oblong, consisting of one leaf, which opens towards the top, and is divided into two lips; the uppermost of which is subdivided into two, and the lowermost is cut into many segments: the tube of the flowers is bent, somewhat resembling a huntsman's horn. They are produced in clusters, and are very sweet. Miller enumerates ten species, of which three grow wild in our hedges.

Bid her steal into the plached bower,
Where honey-suckles, ripen'd by the sun,
Forbid the sun to enter; like to favourites,
Made proud by pinces, that advance their pile Against the power that bred it. Shakspeare.

Watch upon a bank

With ivy canopied, and interwove

With flaunting honey-suckle. Milton.

Then mellow'd beat and honey-suckles pound;
With these alluring favours strew the ground. Dryden.

HONEY-WORT. n. f. [cerinthe, Lat.] A plant.

HONEYLESS. adj. [from honey.] Being without honey.

But for your words, they rob the Hybla bee,
And leave them honeyless. Shakspeare.

HONIED. adj. [from honey.]

1. Covered with honey.

The bee with honied thigh,

That at her flow'ry work doth sing. Milton.

2. Sweet; luscious.

When he speaks,

The air, a charter'd libertine, is still;
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honied sentences. Shakspeare.
Look now for no enchanting voice, nor fear
The bait of honey'd words; a rougher tongue
Draws hitherward. Milton.

HONORARY. adj. [honorarius, Latin.]

1. Done in honour; made in honour.

There was probably some distinction made among the Romans between such honorary arches erected to emperors, and those that were raised to them on the account of a victory, which are properly triumphal arches. Addison.

This monument is only honorary, for the ashes of the emperor lie elsewhere. Addison on Italy.

2. Conferring honour without gain.

The Romans abound with little honorary rewards, that, without conferring wealth and riches, gave only place and distinction to the person who received them. Addison.

HONOUR. n. f. [honneur, French; honor, Latin.]

1. Dignity; high rank.

2. Reputation; fame.

A man is an ill husband of his honour, that entereth into any action, the failing wherein may disgrace him more than the carrying of it through can honour him. Bacon.

3. The title of a man of rank. Not used.

Return unto thy lord,

Bid him not fear the separated counsils:

His honour and myself are at the one;
And at the other is my good friend Cateby. Shakspeare.

4. Subject of praise.

Thou happy father,

Think that the clearest gods, who make them honours

Of man's impossibilities, have preserv'd thee. Shakspeare.

5. Nobleness of mind; scorn of meanness; magnanimity.

Now shall I see thy love; what motive may Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
—That which upholdeth him, that thee upholds,
His honour. Oh, mine honour, Lewis; thine honour. Shakspeare.

If by honour is meant any thing distinct from confidence, 'tis no more than a regard to the confidence and esteem of the world. Rogers.

6. Reverence; due veneration. To do honour is to treat with reverence.

They take thee for their mother,
And every day do honour to thy grave. Shakspeare.

His grace of Canterbury,
Who holds his state at door, 'mongst purfuivants.
—Ha! 'tis he, indeed!

Is this the honour they do one another? Shakspeare.

This is a duty in the fifth commandment, required towards our prince and our parent, under the name of honour; a respect, which, in the notion of it implies a mixture of love and fear, and, in the object, equally supposes goodness and power. Rogers.

7. Chastity.

Be she honour flav'd,
I have three daughters, the eldest is eleven;
If this prove true, they'll pay for't. Shakspeare.
She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself: she is too bright to be looked against. Shakspeare.

8. Dignity of mien.

Two of far nobler shape, erect and tall,
Godlike erect! with native honour clad,
In naked majesty, seem'd lords of all. Milton.

9. Glory; boast.

A late eminent person, the honour of his profession for integrity and learning. Burnet's Theory.

10. Publick mark of respect.

He saw his friends, who whelm'd beneath the waves,
Their funeral honours claim'd, and ask'd their quiet graves. Dryden.

Such discourses, on such mournful occasions as these, were instituted not so much in honour of the dead, as for the use of the living. Atterbury.

Numbers engage their lives and labours, some to heap together a little dirt that shall bury them in the end; others to gain an honour, that, at best, can be celebrated but by an incon siderable part of the world, and is envied and calumniated by more than 'tis truly given. Wake's Prep. for Death.

11. Privileges of rank or birth.

Henny the seventh, truly pitying
My father's loss, like a most royal prince,
Restor'd to me my honours; and, from ruins,
Made my name once more noble. Shakspeare.
Honours were conferred upon Antonine by Hadrian in his infancy. Wotton's Rom. Hijs.

12. Civilities paid.

Then here a slave, or if you will, a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word. Pope.

13. Ornament; decoration.

The fire then shook the honours of his head,
And from his brows damps of oblivion shed. Dryden.

14. Honour, or on my honour, is a form of protestation used by the lords in judicial decisions.

My hand to thee, my honour on my promise.
Shakspeare.

To HO'NOUR. v. a. [honorer, French;
honoro, Latin.]

1. To reverence; to regard with veneration.

He was called our father, and was continually honoured of all men, as the next person unto the king. Ephier.

The poor man is honoured for his skill, and the rich man is honoured for his riches. Eclus.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches. Eclus.

How lov'd, how honour'd once, avails thee not.
Pope.

2. To dignify; to raise to greatness.

We nourish 'gainst our senate
The cockle of rebellion, insolence, sedition, Which we ourselves have plow'd for, sow'd, and scatter'd,
By mingling them with us, the honour'd number. Shakspeare.

3. To glorify

I will harden Pharaoh's heart, that he shall follow after them, and I will be honoured upon

Pharaoh, and upon all his host, that the Egyptian ans may know that I am the Lord. Exodus.

HO'NOURABLE. adj. [honorable, French.]

1. Illustrious; noble.

Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, whose merchants are princes, whose traffickers are the honourable of the earth?
Isaiah.

2. Great; magnanimous; generous.

Sir, I'll tell you,
Since I am charg'd in honour, and by him
That I think honourable. Shakspeare.

3. Conferring honour.

Think'st thou it honourable for a nobleman
Still to remember wrongs? Shakspeare.
Then warlike kings, who for their country fought,
And honourable wounds from battle brought.
Dryden.

Many of those persons, who put this honourable talk on me, were more able to perform it themselves. Dryden.

4. Accompanied with tokens of honour.

Sith this wretched woman overcome,
Of anguish, rather than of crime hath been,
Preserve her cause to her eternal doom;
And in the mean, vouchsafe her honourable tomb.
Spenser.

5. Not to be disgraced.

Here 's a Bohemian Tartar carries the coming down of thy fat woman:—let her descend, my chambers are honourable. Shakspeare.

6. Free from taint; free from reproach.

As he was honourable in all his acts, so in this, that he took Joppe for an haven. Mac.
Methinks I could not die any where so contented as in the king's company, his cause being just and his quarrel honourable. Shakspeare.

7. Honest; without intention of deceit.

The earl sent again to know if they would entertain their pardon, in case he should come in person, and assure it: they answered, they did conceive him to be so honourable, that from himself they would most thankfully embrace it. Hayes.

If that thy bent of love be honourable,
Thy purpose marriage, send we word to-morrow.
Shakspeare.

8. Equitable

HO'NOURABLENESS. n. f. [from honourable.] Eminence; magnificence; generosity.

HO'NOURABLY. adv. [from honourable.]

The rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honourably receiv'd him.
Shakspeare.

2. Magnanimously; generously.

After some six weeks, which the king did hon-ourably interpose, to give space to his brother's intercession, he was arraigned of high treason and condemned. Bacon.

3. Reputably; with exemption from reproach.

'Tis just, ye gods! and what I well deserve:
Why did I not more honourably starve! Dryden.

HO'NOURER. n. f. [from honour.] One that honours; one that regards with veneration.

I must not omit Mr. Gay, whose zeal in your concern is worthy a friend and honourer. Pope.

HOOD, in composition, is derived from the Saxon had, in German heit, in Dutch heid. It denotes quality; character; condition: as, knighthood; childhood;
fatherhood. Sometimes it is written after the Dutch, as maidenhead. Sometimes it is taken collectively: as, brotherhood, a confraternity; sisterhood, a company of sisters.

HOOD. n. f. [hod, Saxon, probably from hepod, head.]

1. The upper covering of a woman's head.
In velvet, white as snow, the troop was gown'd;

Their hoods and sleeves the fame. Dryden.

2. Any thing drawn upon the head, and wrapping round it.

He undertook so to muffle up himself in his hood, that none should discern him. Wotton.

The lacerna came, from being a military habit, to be a common dress: it had a hood, which could be separated from and joined to it. Arbutnot.

3. A covering put over the hawk's eyes, when he is not to fly.

4. An ornamental fold that hangs down the back of a graduate, to mark his degree.

To HOOD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To dress in a hood.

The cobbler apron'd, and the parson gown'd,
The friar hooded, and the monarch crown'd. Pope.

2. To blind, as with a hood.

While grace is saying, I'll hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and high, and lay, Amen.
Shakspeare.

3. To cover.

An hollow crystal pyramid he takes,
In firmamental waters dipt above;
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes
And hoods the flames that to their quarry strove.
Dryden.

HO'ODMAN Blind. n. f. A play in which the person hooded is to catch another, and tell the name; blindman's buff.

What devil was 't,
That thus hath cozen'd you at hoodman blind?
Shakspeare.

To HO'OD-WINK. v. a. [hood and wink.]

1. To blind with something bound over the eyes.

They willingly hood-winking themselves from seeing his faults, he often abused the virtue of courage to defend his foul vice of injustice.
Sidney.

We will bind and hood-wink him so, that he shall suppose he is carried into the leaguer of the adversaries. Shakspeare.

Then the who hath been hood-wink'd from her birth,
Doth first herself within death's mirror see.
Davies.

So have I seen, at Christmas sports, one loit,
And, hood-wink'd, for a man embrace a post.
Ben Jonson.

Satan is fain to hood-wink those that slay.
Decay of Piety.

Prejudice so dexterously hood-winks men's minds as to keep them in the dark, with a belief that they are more in the light. Locke.

Must I wed Rodogune?
Fantastick cruelty of hood-wink'd chance! Rouee.

On high, where no hoarse winds or clouds resort,
The hood-wink'd goddess keeps her partial court.
Garth.

2. To cover; to hide.

Be patient; for the prize, I'll bring thee to,
Shall hood-wink this mischance. Shakspeare.

3. To deceive; to impose upon.

She delighted in infamy, which often she had used to her husband's shame, filling all men's ears, but his, with reproach; while he, hoodwink'd with kindness, least of all men knew who struck him. Sidney.

HOOF. n. f. [hop, Saxon; hoef, Dutch.]

The hard horny substance on the feet of graminivorous animals.

With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all tny streets. Ezekiel.

The bull and ram know the use of their horns
as well as the horse of his hoofs. Morse.

HOOF-BOUND. adj. [hoof and bound.]

A horse is said to be hoof-bound when he has a pain in the fore feet, occasioned by the dryness and contraction or narrowness of the horn of the quarters, which straitens the quarters of the heels, and oftentimes makes the horse lame. A hoof-bound horse has a narrow heel, the sides of which come too near one another, inasmuch that the flesh is kept too tight, and has not its natural extent. Farrier's Dict.

HOOFED. adj. [from hoof.] Furnished with hoofs.

Among quadrupeds, the roe-deer is the swiftest; of all the hoofed, the horse is the most beautiful; of all the clawed, the lion is the strongest. Greav.

2. The curvated wire on which the bait is hung for fishes, and with which the fish is pierced.

Like unto golden hooks,
That from the foolish fish their baits do hide. Spenser.

My bended hook shall pierce
Their slimy jaws. Shakespeare.

Though divine Plato thus of pleasures thought,
They us with hooks and baits, like fishes, caught. Denham.

3. A snare; a trap.

A shop of all the qualities that man
Loves woman for, besides that hook of wiving, Fainness, which strikes the eye. Shakespeare.

4. An iron to seize the meat in the caldron.

About the caldron many cooks accoil'd,
With hooks and lades, as need did require;
The while the viands in the vessel boil'd. Fairy Queen.

5. A sickle to reap corn.

Pease are commonly reaped with a hook at the end of a long sickle. Mortimer.

And for his own inventions father'd. Hudib.

He would bring him by hook or crook into his quarrel. Dryden.

TO HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To catch with a hook.

The huge jack he had caught was served up for the first dish; upon our sitting down to it, he gave us a long account how he had hooked it, played with it, foiled it, and at length drew it out upon the bank. Addison.

2. To entrap; to ensnare.

3. To draw as with a hook.

I can hook to me. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

4. To fasten as with a hook.

5. To draw by force or artifice.

There are many branches of the natural law no way reducible to the two tables, unless hooked in by tedious consequences. Norris.

HOOKE. adj. [from hook.] Bent; curvated.

Gryps signifies eagle or vulture; from whence the epithet gryps, for an hooked or aquiline nose. Brown.

Now thou threaten'it, with unjust decree,
To seize the prize which I so dearly bought;
Mean match to thine; for still above the rest,
Thy hook'd rapacious hands usurp the best. Dryd.

Caterpillars have claws and feet: the claws are hooked, to take the better hold in climbing from twig to twig, and hanging on the back-sides of leaves. Greav.

HOOKE. n. f. [from hooked.] State of being bent like a hook.

HOOKNOSED. adj. [hook and nose.] Having the aquiline nose rising in the middle.

Rome there, Cæsar, I came, saw, and overcame. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

HOOP. n. f. [hoep, Dutch.]

1. Any thing circular by which something else is bound, particularly casks or barrels.

Thou shalt prove a shelter to thy friends,
A hoop of gold to bind thy brothers in,
That the united vessel of their blood
Shall never leak. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

If I knew What hoop would hold us staunch, from edge to edge

O' th' world, I would pursue it. Shakespeare.

A quarrel, ho, already! what's the matter?

—About a hoop of gold, a paltry ring. Shaksp.

To view to lewd a town, and to refrain,
What hoops of iron could my spleen contain!

And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop. Pope

2. The whalebone with which women extend their petticoats; a farthingale.

At coming in you saw her stoop:

The entry bruth'd again'tt her hoop. Swift.

All that hoops are good for is to clean dirty shoes, and to keep fellows at a distance. Clarissa.

3. Any thing circular.

I have seen at Rome an antique statue of Time, with a wheel or hoop of marble in his hand. Addis.

TO HOOP. v. a. [from the noun.]

hoops.] A cooper; one that hoops tubs.

HOOPING-COUGH. n. f. [or woopingcough, from hoop, to shout.] A convul-sive cough, so called from its noise; the chincough.

TO HOOT. v. n. [brut, Welsh; huer, Fr.]

1. To shout in contempt.

A number of country folks happened to pass thereby, who hollow'd and hooted after me: as at the arrantest coward. Shirley.

Matrons and girls shall hoot at thee no more. Dryden.

2. To cry as an owl.

Some keep back
The clamorous owl, that nightly hoots, and wonders

At our quaint sports. Shakespeare.

TO HOOT. v. a. To drive with noise and shouts.

We lov'd him; but, like beasts,
Our coward nobles gave way to your cluffers,
Who did hoot him out o' th' city. Shakespeare.

The owl of Rome, whom boys and girls will hoot!

That were I set up for that wooden god
That keeps our gardens, could not fright the crows,

Or the least bird from muting on my head. Ben Jonson.

Partridge and his clan may hoot me for a cheat and impostor, if I fail in any particular of moment. Swift.

Locke.

There is hope of a tree, if cut down, that it will sprout again.

Job.

When in heav'n she shall his essence see,
This is her lov'ly good, and perfect bliss;
Her longing, wishings, hopes, all finish'd be;
Her joys are full, her motions rest in this.

Davies.

Sweet hope! kind cheat! fair fallacy! by thee
We are not where or what we be;
But what and where we would be: thus art thou
Our absent presence, and our future now.

Crossart.

Faith is oppos'd to infidelity, and hope to despair.

Taylor.

He fought them both, but wish'd his hap might find,
Eve separate: he wish'd, but not with hope

Of what he seldom chanc'd; when to his wish,
Beyond his hope, Eve separate he spies.

Milton.

The Trojan dames
To Pallas' fame in long procession go,
In hopes to reconcil' their heav'nly foe.

Dryden.

Why not comfort myself with the hope of what may be,
as torment myself with the fear on't.

L'Esrange.

And gave the vanquish'd world another form.

Thomson.

HORIZON. n. f. [ὁρίζων.] The line that terminates the view. The horizon is distinguished into sensible and real: the sensible horizon is the circular line which limits the view; the real is that which would bound it, if it could take in the hemisphere. It is falsely pronounced by Shakspeare horizon.

When the morning sun shall raise his ear
Above the border of this horizon,
We'll forward towards Warwick and his mates.

Shakspeare.

She began to cast with herself from what coast this blazing star should first appear, and at what time it must be upon the horizon of Ireland.

Bacon.

In his east the glorious lamp was seen,
Regent of day; and all th' horizon round
Invested with bright rays.

Milton.

The morning lark, the messenger of day,
Saluted in her song the morning gray;
And soon the sun arose with beams to bright,
That all th' horizon laugh'd to see the joyous sight.

Dryden.

When the sea is worked up in a tempest, so that the horizon on every side is nothing but foaming billows and floating mountains, it is impossible to describe the agreeable horreur that rises from such a prospect.

Aldison.

HORIZO'NTAL. adj. [horizontal, French, from horizon.]

 that measured the hours not only by drops of water in glasses, called clepsydra, but also by sand in glasses, called clepsammia. Brown.

HOROMETRY. n. f. [horometrie, French;
ωρα and μετρία.] The art of measuring hours.

It is no easy wonder how the horometry of antiquity discovered not this artifice. Brown.

HOROSCOPE. n. f. [horoscope, French; ὁρίζων.] The configuration of the planets at the hour of birth.

How unlikely is it, that the many almost numberless conjunctions of stars, which occur in the progress of a man's life, should not match and countervail that one horoscope or conjunction which is fixed at his birth? Drummond.

A proportion of the horoscope unto the seventh house, or opposite signs every seventh year, opposeth living creatures. Brown.

Him born beneath a boding horoscope,
 His fire, the bleak-eyed Vulcan of a shop,
 From Mars his force lent to Minerva's school. Dryden.

The Greek names this the horoscope,
 This governs life, and this marks out our parts,
 Our humours, manners, qualities and arts. Creech.

They understood the planets and the zodiack by instinct, and fell to drawing schemes of their own horoscopes in the same dust the sprung out of. Bentley.

HORRENT. adj. [horrens, Latin. Hor- rentia pills agmina.] Pointed outward;

 passion compounded of fear and hate,
 both strong.

Over them sad horror, with grim hue,
 Did always soar, beating his iron wings;
 And after him owls and night ravens flew,
 The hateful messengers of heavy things. F. Queen.
 Doubtless all souls have a surviving thought,
 Therefore of death we think with quiet mind;
 But if we think of being turn'd to nought,
 A trembling horror in our souls we find. Davies.
 Me damp horror chill'd
 At such bold words, vouch'd with a deed to hold. Milton.

Deep horror seizes ev'ry human breast;
 Their pride is humbled, and their fear confess. Dryden.

2. Dreadful thoughts.
 I have sapt full with horrors;
 Direcess, familiar to my stuaht'rous thoughts,
 Cannot once stat me. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

3. Gloom; dreariness.
 Her gloomy presence saddens all the scene,
 Shades ev'ry flow'r, and darkens ev'ry green;
 Deepens the murmur of the falling floods,
 And breathes a browner horror on the woods. Pope.

4. [In medicine.] Such a shuddering or quivering as precedes an ague-fit; a sense of shuddering or shrinking. Quincy.

All objects of the senses, which are very offensive, do cause the spirits to retire; and, upon their flight, the parts are in some degree desitute, and so there is induced in them a trepidation and horror. Bacon's Natural History.

HORSE. n. f. [hors, Saxon.]

1. A neighing quadruped, used in war, and draught and carriage.

Duncan's horses, the minions of the race,
 Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls. Shakspe.

Of dreaded justice, but on the ministers
That do distribute it.

Fierce Juno's hate,
Added to hostile force, shall urge thy fate.

HOSTILITY. n. f. [hostilité, French, from hostile.] The practices of an open enemy; open war; opposition in war.

Neither by treason nor hostility
To seek to put me down, and reign thyself.

Hostility being thus suspended with France, preparation was made for war against Scotland.

What peace can we return,
But, to our pow'r, hostility and hate,
Untam'd reluctance and revenge?

We have shew'd ourselves fair, nay, generous adversaries; and have carried on even our hostilities with humanity.

HO'STLER. n. f. [hosteller, from hostel.] One who has the care of horses at an inn.

The cause why they are now to be permitted is want of convenient inns for lodging travellers on horseback, and hostlers to tend their horses by the way.

HO'STRY. n. f. [corrupted from hosteller.] A place where the horses of guests are kept.

Swift rivers are with sudden ice constrain'd,
And studded wheels are on its back sustain'd;
An hostry now for waggons, which before
Tall ships of burden on its bosom bore.

HOT. adj. [hat, Saxon; hat, Scottish.]

1. Having the power to excite the sense of heat; contrary to cold; fiery.

What is thy name?
—Thou'lt be afraid to hear it.

—No, though thou call'it thyself a hotter name
Than any is in heat.

The great breezes which the motion of the air in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, produceth, do refrigerate; and therefore, in those parts, noon is nothing to hot as about nine in the tobenoon.

Hot and cold were in one body fixt;
And soft with hard, and light with heavy mixt.

Black substances do soonest of all others become hot in the sun's light, and burn; which effect may proceed partly from the multitude of refractions in a little room, and partly from easy commotion of so very small corpuscles.

2. Lustful; lewd.

What hotter hours,
Unregister'd in vulgar fame, you have Luxuriously pick'd out.

Now the hot blooded gods assist me! remember,
Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa.

3. Violent; furious; dangerous.

That of Carthage, where the Spaniards had warning of our coming, was one of the hottest services, and most dangerous assaults that hath been known.

He resolv'd to storm; but his soldiers declined that hot service, and plied it with artillery.

To court the cry directs us, when we found
Th' assault so hot, as if 'twere only there.

Our army
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors.

4. Ardent; vehement; precipitate.

Come, come, lord Mortimer, you are as slow,
As hot lord Percy is on fire to go.

Nature to youth hot rashness doth dispense,
But with cold prudence age doth recompense.

Achilles is impatient, hot, revengeful; Aeneas, patient, considerate, and careful of his people.

5. Eager; keen in desire.

It is no wonder that men, either perplexed in the necessary affairs of life, or hot in the pursuit of pleasures, should not seriously examine their tenets.

She has, quoth Ralph, a jointure,
Which makes him have so hot a mind t' her.

6. It is applied likewise to the desire, or sense railing the desire, or action excited: as, a hot pursuit.

Nor law, nor checks of conscience will we hear,
When in hot scent of gain and full career.

7. Piquant; acrid: as, hot as mustard.

HO'TBED. n. f. A bed of earth made hot by the fermentation of dung.

The bed we call a hotbed is this: there was taken horse-dung, old and well rotted; this was laid upon a bank half a foot high, and supported round about with planks, and upon the top was cast sifted earth two fingers deep.

Preserve the hotbed as much as possible from rain.

HOTBRAINED. adj. [hot and brain.] Violent; vehement; furious.

You shall find 'em either hotbrain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts.

HO'TCHPOT. } n. f. [haché en coche,
HO'TCHPOTCH. } French: or hachée en pot, French, as Camden has it, as being boiled up in a pot; yet the former corruption is now generally used.] A mingled hash; a mixture; a confused mass.

Such patching maketh Littleton's hotchpot of our tongue, and, in effect, brings the same rather to a Babelish confusion than any one entire language.

Camden's Remains
A mixture of many disagreeing colours is ever unpleasant to the eye, and a mixture of hotch-potch of many tastes is unpleasant to the taste.

Bacon's Natural History.

Nor limbs, nor bones, nor carcass would remain;

But a mald' heap, a hotchpotch of the slain.

Dryden's Juvenal.

HOTCOCKLES. n. f. [bautes coquilles, Fr.] A play in which one covers his eyes, and guesses who strikes him.

The chytindra is certainly not our hotcockles; for that was by pinching, not by striking.

Arbutnot and Pope.

As at hotcockles once I laid me down,
And felt the weighty hand of many a clown,
Buxoma gave a gentle tap, and I
Quick rote, and read soft mischief in her eye.

Gay.

HOTHEADED. adj. [hot and head.] Vehement; violent; passionate.

One would not make the same person zealous for a standing army and publick liberty; nor a hotted crackbrained coxcomb forward for a scheme of moderation.

Arbutnot.

HOTHOUSE. n. f. [hot and house.]

1. A bagnio; a place to sweat and cup in.

Now the professes a hotthouse, which is a very ill house too. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

2. A brothel.

Where lately harbour'd many a famous whore,
A purging bill, now fix'd upon the door,
Tells you it is a hotthouse; so it may,
And still be a whorehouse: th' are synonyma.

Ben Jonson.

HOTLY. adv. [from hot.]

1. With heat; not coldly.

2. Violently; vehemently.

The flag was in the end to hotly pursued, that he was driven to make courage of despair. Sidney.

I do contest

As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did Contend against thy valour.

Shakspeare.

The enemy, now at hand, began hotly to skirmish in divers places with the christians.

Knolles' History.

Though this controversy he reviv'd, and hotly agitated, I doubt whether it be not a nominal dispute.

Boyle.

3. Lufffully.

Voracious birds, that hotly bill and breed,
And largely drink, because on salt they feed.

Dryden.

HOTMOUTHED. adj. [hot and mouth.]

Headstrong; ungovernable.

I fear my people's faith,
That hotmouth'd beast that bears against the curb,
Hard to be broken.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

HOTNESS. n. f. [from hot.] Heat; violence; fury.

HOTSPUR. n. f. [hot and spur.]

1. A man violent, passionate, precipitate, and heady.

My nephew's trespasss may be well forgot;
It hath the excuse of youth and heat of blood,
A harebrain'd hotspur govern'd by a spleen.

Shakspeare.

Wars are begun by hairbrained dissolute captains, parasitical fawners, unquiet hotspurs, and restless innovators.

Burton.

2. A kind of pea of speedy growth.

Of such peas as are planted or sown in gardens, the hotspur is the speediest of any in growth.

Mortimer.

HOTSPURRED. adj. [from hotspur.]

Vehement; rash; heady.

To draw Mars like a young Hippolytus, with an effeminate countenance, or Venus like that hotspurred Harpalice in Virgil, this proceedeth from a senseless judgment.

Peucham.

HOVE. The preterit of heave.

HOVEL. n. f. [diminutive of hope, houle, Saxon.]

1. A shed open on the sides, and covered overhead.

So likewise a hovel will serve for a roome, To sticke on the pease, when harvest shall come.

Tuffin.

If you make a hovel, thatched, over some quantity of ground, plank the ground over, and it will breed saltpetre.

Bacon.

Your hay it is mow'd, your corn it is reap'd, Your barns will be full, and your hovels heap'd.

Dryden.

2. A mean habitation; a cottage.

The men clamber up the acclivities, dragging their kine with them, where they feed them and milk them, and do all the dairy-work in such sorry hovels and sheds as they build to inhabit in during the summer.

Ray on the Creation.

To HOVEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To shelter in a hovel.

And was't thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw?

Shakspeare.

HOVEN. part. pass. [from heave.] Raised; swelled; tumefied.

Tom Piper hath hoven and puffed up cheeks;
If cheefe be so hoven, make Cisse to seek creeks.

Tuffer.

To HOVER. v. n. [bovio, to hang over, Welsh.]

1. To hang in the air overhead, without flying off one way or other.

Some fiery devil hovens in the sky,
And pours down mischief.

Shakspeare.

Ah, my poor princes! ah, my tender babes!

If yet your gentle souls fly in the air,
And be not fix'd in doom perpetual,

Hover about me with your airy wings,
And hear your mother's lamentation

Shakspeare.

A hovering mist came swimming o'er his light,
And seal'd his eyes in everlasting night.

Dryden.

Great flights of birds are hovering about the bridge, and settling upon it.

Addison.

'Till as the earthly part decays and falls,
The captive breaks her prison's mould'ring walls;

Hovers a-while upon the sad remains,
Which now the pile, or sepulchre, contains,

And thence with liberty unbounded flies,
Impatient to regain her native skies.

Prior.

Some less retain'd, beneath the moon's pale light,
Hover, and catch the shooting stars by night.

Pope.

2. To stand in suspense or expectation.

The lord and no longer covenant with him; for that he daily looketh after change and alteration, and hoveth in expectation of new worlds.

Spenser on Ireland.

3. To wander about one place.

We see so warlike a prince at the head of so great an army, hovering on the borders of our confederates.

Addison.

The truth and certainty is seen, and the mind fully possess'd itself of it; in the other, it only hoveth about it.

Locke.

HOUGH. n. f. [hogz, Saxon.]

1. The lower part of the thigh.

Blood shall be from the sword unto the belly,
and dung of men into the camel's hough.

2 Esd.

2. [bué, French.] An adz; a hoe. See HOE.

Did they really believe that a man, by houghs and an axe, could cut a god out of a tree?

Stillingfleet.

To HOUGH. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hamstring; to disable by cutting the sinews of the ham.

Thou shalt hough their horses.

Joshua.

2. To cut up with a hough or hoe.

3. To hawk. This orthography is uncommon. See To HAWK.

Neither could we hough or spit from us; much less could we sneeze or cough.

Greus.

HOULET. n. f. The vulgar name for an owl. The Scots and northern countries still retain it.

HOULT. n. f. [holtz, Saxon.] A small wood. Obsolete.

Or as the wind, in hoults and shady groves,
A murmur makes among the boughs and leaves.

Fairfax.

HOUND. n. f. [hund, Saxon; bund, Scottish.] A dog used in the chase.

Hounds and greyhounds, mungrels, spaniels, curs,

Are eloped all by the name of dogs. Shakspeare.

Jason threw, but fail'd to wound

The bear, and flew an undeserving hound,

And through the dog the dart was nail'd to ground.

Dryden.

The kind spaniel and the faithful hound,

Liketh that fox in shape and species found,

Possesses the noted pain and covets home.

Prior.

To HOUND. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To fet on the chase.

God is said to harden the heart permissively, but not operatively nor effectively; as he who only lets loose a greyhound out of the slip, is said to hound him at the hare.

Bramhall.

2. To hunt; to pursue.

If the wolves had been hounded by tigers, they should have worried them.

L'Estrange.

HO'UNDFISH. n. f. [muscula leavis.] A kind of fish

Ainsworth.

Ainsworth.

HOURLY. n. f. [heure, Fr. hora, Lat.]

1. The twenty-fourth part of a natural day; the space of sixty minutes.

See the minutes how they run:

How many makes the hour full complear,

How many hours bring about the day,

How many days will finish up the year,

How many years a mortal man may live.

Shakspeare.

2. A particular time.

Vexation almost stops my breath,

That sunder'd friends greet in the hour of death.

Shakspeare.

When we can intreat an hour to serve,

We'll spend it in some words upon that business,

If you would grant the time.

Shakspeare.

The conscious wretch must all his arts reveal,

From the first moment of his vital breath,

To his last hour of unrepenting death.

Dryden.

3. The time as marked by the clock.

The hour runs through the roughest day.

Our neighbour let her floor to a genteel man, who kept good hours.

Tuttler.

They are as loud any hour of the morning,

as our own countrymen at midnight.

Addison.

HO'URGLASS. n. f. [hour and glass.]

1. A glass filled with sand, which, running through a narrow hole, marks the time.

Next morning, known to be a morning better by the hourglass than the day's clearness.

Stiney.

In sickness, the time will seem longer without a clock or hourglass than with it; for the mind doth value every moment.

Bacon.

Shake not his hourglass, when his hasty sand

Is ebbing to the last.

Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

2. Space of time. A manner of speaking rather affected than elegant.

We, within the hourglass of two months, have won one town, and overthrown great forces in the field.

Bacon.

HOURLY. adj. [from hour.] Happening or done every hour; frequent; often repeated.

Alcyone
Computes how many nights he had been gone,
Observes the waining moon with hourly view,
Numbers her age, and wishes for a new. Dryd.
We must live in hourly expectation of having those troops recalled, which they now leave with us. Swift.

HOURLY. adv. [from hour.] Every hour; frequently.

She deceives a lord,
That twenty such rude boys might tend upon,
And hourly call her mistress. Shakspeare.

Our estate may not endure
Hazard so near us, as doth hourly grow
Out of his lunacies. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

They with ceaseless cry
Surround me, as thou saw'st; hourly conceiv'd,
And hourly born, with sorrow infinite
To me! Milton's Paradise Lost.

Great was their strife, which hourly was renew'd,
Till each with mortal hate his rival view'd. Dryden.

HOURLYPLATE. n. f. [hour and plate.]

The dial; the plate on which the hours, pointed by the hand of a clock, are inscribed.

If eyes could not view the hand, and the characters of the hourlyplate, and thereby at a distance see what o'clock it was, their owner could not be much benefited by that acuteness. Locke.

HOUSE. n. f. [huys, Saxon; huys, Dut. huys, Scottish.]

1. A place wherein a man lives; a place of human abode.

Sparrows must not build in his house eaves. Shakspeare.

Houses are built to live in, not to look on; therefore let use be preferred before uniformity, except where both may be had. Bacon.

In a house the doors are moveable, and the rooms square; yet the house is neither moveable nor square. Watts.

2. Any place of abode.

The bees with smoke, the doves with noisome fench,
Are from their hives and houses driven away. Shakspeare.

3. Place in which religious or studious persons live in common; monastery; college.

Theodosius arrived at a religious house in the city, where now Constantia resided. Aldison.

4. The manner of living; the table.

He kept a miserable house, but the blame was laid wholly upon madam. Swift.

5. Station of a planet in the heavens, astronomically considered.

Pure spiritual substances we cannot converse with, therefore have need of means of communication, which some make to be the celestial houses: those who are for the celestial houses worship the planets, as the habitations of intellectual substances that animate them. Stillingfleet.

6. Family of ancestors; descendants, and kindred; race.

The red ruse and the white are on his face,
The fatal colours of our striving houses. Shakspeare.

An ignominious ransom and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy sure
Is nothing kin to foul redemption. Shakspeare.

By delaying my last fine, upon your grace's accession to the patrimonies of your house, I may seem to have made a forfeiture. Dryden.

A poet is not born in ev'ry race;
Two of a house few ages can afford,
One to perform, another to record. Dryden.

7. A body of the parliament; the lords or commons collectively considered.

Nor were the crimes objected against him fo clear, as to give convincing satisfaction to the major part of both houses, especially that of the lords. King Charles.

To HOUSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To harbour; to admit to residence.
Palladius wished him to house all the Helots. Sidney.

Upon the North-sea a valley houseth a gentleman, who hath worn out his former name. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Slander lives upon succession,
For ever housed where it gets possession. Shakspeare.
Mere cottagers are but housed beggars. Bacon.

Oh, can your council his despair defer,
Who now is housed in his sepulchre? Saniys.
We find them housing themselves in dens. South.

In expectation of such times as these,
A chapel hous'd 'em, truly called of ease. Dryd.

2. To shelter; to keep under a roof.

As we house not country plants to save them,
So we may house our own to forward them. Bacon's Natural History.

House your choicest carnations, or rather set them under a penthouse, to preserve them in extremity of weather. Evelyn.

Wit in northern climates will not blow,
Except, like orange trees, 'tis hous'd from snow. Dryden.

To HOUSE. v. n.

1. To take shelter; to keep abode; to reside.

Ne suffer it to house there half a day. Hub. Ta.
Graze where you will, you shall not house with me. Shakspeare.

Summers three times eight, save one,
She had told; alas! too soon,
After so short time of breath,
To house with darkness and with death. Milton.

2. To have an astrological station in the heavens.

In fear of this, observe the starry signs,
Where Saturn houses, and where Hermes joins. Dryden.

I housing in the lion's hateful sign,
Bought senates and deserting troops are mine. Dryden.

HOUSEBREAKER. n. f. [house and break.]

Burglar; one who makes his way into houses to steal.

All housebreakers and sharpers had thief written in their foreheads. L'Estrange.

Burglary.

When he hears of a rogue to be tried for robbing or housebreaking, he will send the whole paper to the government. Swift.

HOUSEDOG. n. f. [house and dog.]

A mastiff kept to guard the house.
A very good housedog, but a dangerous cur to strangers, had a bell about his neck. L'Estrange.
You see the goodness of the master even in the old housedog. Aldison.

HOUSEHOLD. n. f. [house and hold.]

1. A family living together.

Two households, both alike in dignity,
In fair Verona, where we lay our scene,
From ancient grudge break to new mutiny. Shak.
A little kingdom is a great household, and a great household a little kingdom. Bacon.

Of God our serv'd
The one just man alive, by his command,
Shall build a wondrous ark, as thou believ'd'st,
To save himself and household from amidst
A world devote to universal wreck. Milton.

He has always taken to himself, amongst the sons of men, a peculiar household of his love, which at all times he has cherished as a father, and governed as a master: this is the proper household of faith: in the first ages of the world, 'twas sometimes literally no more than a single household, or some few families. Spur.

Great crimes must be with greater crimes repaid,

And second funerals on the former laid;
Let the whole household in one ruin fall,
And may Diana's curse o'er'take us all. Dryden.

Learning's little household did embark,
With her world's fruitful system in her sacred ark. Swift.

In his own church he keeps a seat,
Says grace before and after meat;
And calls, without affecting airs,
His household twice a-day to prayers. Swift.

2. Family life; domestick management.

An inventory, thus importing
The several parcels of his plate, his treasure, Rich stuffs, and ornaments of household. Shakspeare.

3. It is used in the manner of an adjective, to signify domestick; belonging to the family.

Cornelius called two of his household servants. Acte.

For nothing lovelier can be found
In woman, than to study household good;
And good works in her husband to promote. Milroy.

It would be endless to enumerate the oaths among the men, among the women the neglect of household affairs. Swift.

HOUSEHOLDER. n. f. [from household.]

Master of a family.

A certain householder planted a vineyard. Mat.

HOUSEHOLDSTUFF. n. f. [household and stuff.]

Furniture of a house; utensils convenient for a family.

In this war that he maketh, he still fieth from his foe, and lurketh in the thick woods, waiting for advantages: his cloke is his bed, yea and his householdstuff. Spenser on Ireland.

A great part of the building was consumed, with much costly householdstuff. Bacon.
The woman had her jest for her householdstuff. L'Estrange.

HOUSEKEEPER. n. f. [house and keep.]

1. Householder; master of a family.

To be said an honest man and a good house-keeper, goes as fairly as to say a graceful man and a great scholar. Shakspeare.

If I may credit housekeepers and substantial tradesmen, all sorts of provisions and commodities are risen excessively. Locke.

2. One who lives in plenty; one that exercises hospitality.

The people are apter to applaud housekeepers than house-raisers. Wotton.

3. One who lives much at home.

How do you both? You are manifest house-keepers. What are you sewing there? Shakspeare.

4. A woman servant that has care of a family, and superintends the other maid servants.

Merry folks, who want by chance
A pair to make a country-dance,
Call the old housekeeper, and get her,
To fill a place for want of better. Swift.

5. A housedog. Not in use.

Distinguish the housekeeper, the hunter. Shakspeare.

HOUSEKEEPING. adj. [house and keep.]

Domestick; useful to a family.
His house for pleasant prospect, large scope, and other housekeeping commodities, challenge the pre-eminence. Carew.

HOUSEKEEPING. n. f. Hospitality; liberal and plentiful table.

I hear your grace hath sworn out housekeeping. Shakspeare.
His table was one of the last that gave us an example of the old housekeeping of an English nobleman: an abundance reigned, which shew'd the master's hospitality. Prior.

HOUSEL. n. f. [huys], Saxon, from husel, Gethick, a sacrifice, or hostia, dimin. hostiola, Latin.] The holy eucharist.

House-room, that costs him nothing, he bestows;
Yet still we scribble on, though still we lose. Dryden.

Ho'USESNAIL. n. f. A kind of snail.

Ho'USEWARMING. n. f. [house and warm.]

A feast or merrymaking upon going into a new house.

Ho'USEWIFE. n. f. [house and wife. This is now frequently written, huswife, or buffy.]

1. The mistress of a family.

You will think it unfit for a good housewife to sit in or to busy herself about her housewifery. Spenser on Ireland.

I have room enough, but the kind and heavy housewife is dead. Pope to Swift.

2. A female economist.

Fitting is a mantle for a bad man, and surely for a bad housewife it is no less convenient; for some of them, that be wandering women, it is half a wardrobe. Spenser on Ireland.

Let us sit and mock the good housewife, fortune, from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be disposed equally. Shakespeare.

Farmers in degree,

He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryd.
Early housewives leave the bed,
When living embers on the hearth are spread.

Dryden.

The fairest among the daughters of Britain show themselves good statewomen as well as good housewives. Addison.

3. One skilled in female business.

He was bred up under the tuition of a tender mother, till she made him as good an housewife as herself; he could preferve apicocks, and make jellies. Addison.

now added to faddies as ornamental.

Ho'USING. adj. [from house.] Provided for entertainment at first entrance into a house; housewarming.

His own two hands the holy knot did knit,
That none but death for ever can divide;

His own two hands, for such a turn most fit,
The houffing fire did kindle and provide. Fairy Queen.

HO'USS. n. f. [from houffaux, or houffes, French.] Covering of cloth originally used to keep off dirt, now added to fad-dies as ornamental; housings. This word, though used by Dryden, I do not remember in any other place.

Six lions' hides with thongs together fast,
His upper parts defended to his waist;
And where man ended, the continu'd vest,
Spread on his back, the houffs and trappings of a beast. Dryden.

and to get understanding, rather to be chosen than silver? Proverbs.

How oft is the candle of the wicked put out?
And how oft cometh their destruction upon them?
Job.

O how love I thy law, it is my meditation. Psalms.

How many children's complaints and mother's cries!

How many woeful widows left to howl
To sad disgrace! Daniel's Civil War.

Consider into how many differing substances it may be analysed by the fire. Boyle.

2. In what manner.

Mark'd you not,
How that the guilty kindred of the queen
Look'd pale, when they did hear of Clarence'
death? Shakespeare.

Prosecute the means of thy deliverance
By ransom, or how else. Milton's Agonists.

We examine the why and the how of things. L'Estrange.

'Tis much in our power how to live, but not at all when or how to die. L'Estrange.

It is pleasant to see how the small territories of this little republic are cultivated to the best advantage. Addison on Italy.

3. For what reason; from what cause.

How now, my love? Why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the roses there do fade so fast?
Shakespeare.

How is it thou hast found it so quickly? Gen.

4. By what means.

Men would have the colours of birds feathers,
if they could tell how; or they will have gay skins instead of gay clothes. Bacon.

5. In what state.

For how shall I go up to my father?
Whence am I forc'd, and whither am I bound?
How, and with what reproach shall I return?
Dryden's Absell.

6. It is used in a sense marking proportion or correspondence.

Behold, he put no trust in his servants, how much less in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose foundation is in the dust? Job.

A great division fell among the rebility, so much the more dangerous by how much the spirits were more active and high. Hayward.

By how much they would diminish the present extent of the sea, so much they would impair the fertility, and fountains and rivers of the earth. Bentley.

7. It is much used in exclamation.

How are the mighty fallen! Samuel.
How doth the city sit solitary as a widow! Lam.

8. In an affirmative sense, not easily explained; that so it is; that.

Thick clouds put us in some hope of land, knowing how that part of the South-sea was utterly unknown, and might have islands or continents. Bacon.

HOWBE'IT. } adv. [howbeit.] Neverthe-

Ho'WEE. } less; notwithstanding; yet;

however. Not in use.

Siker thou speak'it like a lewd lorrel,

Of heaven to deemen to,

Howe I am but rude and borrel,

Yet nearer ways I know. Spenser.

Things so ordained are to be kept, howbeit not necessarily, any longer than 'till they grow some urgent cause to ordain the contrary. Hobbes.

There is a knowledge which God hath always revealed upon them in the works of nature: this they honour and esteem highly as profound wisdom, howbeit this wisdom saveth them not. Hooker.

There was no army transmitted out of England,
howbeit the English colonies in Ireland did win ground upon the Irish. Davies.

HOW'D'YE. } [contracted from how do ye.]

In what state is your health? A message of civility.

I now write no letters but of plain business, or plain how'd'ye's, to those few I am forced to correspond with. Pope.

HOWE'ER. adv. [how and ever.]

1. In whatsoever manner; in whatsoever degree.

This ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle fire,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Howe'er repented of. Shakespeare.

To trace the ways

Of highest agents, deem'd howe'er wise. Milton.

2. At all events; happen what will; at least.

Our chief end is to be freed from all, if it may be, howe'er from the greatest evils; and to enjoy, if it may be, all good, howe'er the chiefest. Tillotson.

3. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; yet.

In your excuse your love does little say;
You might howe'er have took a fairer way. Dryden.

Its views are bounded on all sides by several ranges of mountains, which are howe'er at so great a distance, that they leave a wonderful variety of beautiful prospects. Addison.

I do not build my reasoning wholly on the case of persecution, howe'er I do not exclude it. Latterberry.

Few turn their thoughts to examine how those diseases in a state are bred, that hasten its end;
which would, howe'er, be a very useful enquiry. Swift.

4. To some of these meanings this word may be commonly reduced, but its power is sometimes almost evanescent.

To HOWL. v. n. [huglen, Dutch; ululo,
Latin.]

1. To cry as a wolf or dog.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that with the very noise
I trembling wak'd. Shakespeare's Richard III.

If wolves had at thy gate howl'd that stern time,

Thou should'st have said, Go, porter, turn the key. Shakespeare.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wildernets. Deuteronomy.

As when a sort of wolves infest the night,
With their wild howlings at fair Cynthia's light
Hard as his native rocks, cold as his sword,
Fierce as the wolves that howl'd around his birth;
He hates the tyrant, and the suppliant scorns.

2. To utter cries in distress.
Therefore will I howl, and cry out for all Moab.

The damned use that word in hell,
Howlings attend it.
Each new moan
New widows howl, new orphans cry, new sorrows
Strike Heaven on the face.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them.

The noise grows louder still:
Rattling of armour, trumpets, drums and ataballes;
And sometimes peals of shouts that rend the heav'ns,

Like victory: then groans again, and howlings
Like those of vanquish'd men.

3. To speak with a belluine cry or tone.
Peace, monster, peace! Go tell thy horrid tale
To savages, and howl it out in desarts!

4. It is used poetically of many noises loud and horrid.

HOWL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The cry of a wolf or dog.
Alarm'd by his sentinel the wolf,
Whose howl's his watch.

2. The cry of a human being in horror.
She raves, she runs with a distracted pace,
And fills with horrid howls the public place.

HOWSOEVER. adv. [how and soever.]

1. In what manner soever. See HOWEVER.
Berofus, who, after Moses, was one of the most ancient, howsoever he hath been since corrupted, doth in the substance of all agree.

2. Although.
The man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him.

TO HOX. v. a. [from hog, Saxon.] To hough; to hamstring.

Thou art a coward,
Which hoxes honesty behind, restraining
From course required.

Lodronius, perceiving the old soldier's meaning, alighted, and with his sword hoxed his horse, saying aloud, This day, valiant soldiers, shall you have me both your general and fellow soldier, fighting on foot as one of yourselves.

HOY. n. f. [how, old French.] A large boat sometimes with one deck.

He sent to Germany, strange aid to rear:
From whence estfoons arrived here three hoyes
Of Saxons, whom he for his safety employs.

To define a barge and hoy, which lie between a boat and a ship, is hard.

HUBBUB. n. f. [I know not the etymology, unless it be from up, up, or hobnob.]
A tumult; a riot.

People pursued the business with all contempt of the government; and in the hubbub of the first day there appeared nobody of name or reckoning, but the actors were really of the dregs of the people.

An universal hubbub wild
Of stunning sounds, and voices all confus'd, Borne through the hollow dark, assaults his ear
With loudest vehemence.

Why wolves raise a hubbub at her,
And dogs howl when the shines in water.

HUCKABACK. n. f. A kind of linen on which the figures are raised.

HUCKLEBACKED. adj. [hocker, German, a bunch, and back.] Crooked in the shoulders.

HUCKLEBONE. n. f. [from hucken, Dut.
to fit down.] The hipbone.

HUCKSTER. } n. f. [hock, German, a HUCKSTERER. } pedlar; hockster, a thepedlar.]

1. One who sells goods by retail, or in small quantities; a pedlar.

There cannot be a more ignominious trade than the being hucksters to such vile merchandize.

God deliver the world from such guides, or rather such hucksters of souls, the very shame of religion.

Should thy shoe wrench aside, down, down
you fall,
And overturn the scolding huckster's stall,
The scolding huckster shall not o'er thee moan,
But pence expect for nuts and pears o'erthrown.

There should be a confederacy of all servants,
to drive those China hucksters from the doors.

Those hucksters or money-jobbers will be found necessary, if this brass-money is made current.

2. A trickish mean fellow.
Now the ape wanted his huckster man.

TO HUCKSTER. v. n. [from the noun.]
To deal in petty bargains.

They must pay a shilling, for changing their piece into silver, to some huckstering fellow who follows that trade.

TO Huddle. v. a. [probably from hood.]

1. To dress up close so as not to be discovered; to mobble.

2. To put on carelessly in a hurry.
At twelve she rose with much ado;
Her cloaths were huddl'd on by two.

Now all in haste they huddle on
Their hoods, their cloaks, and get them gone.

3. To cover up in haste.

4. To perform in a hurry.
I have given much application to this poem:
this is not a play huddled up in haste.

When continu'd rain
The lab'ring husband in his house restrain,
Let him forecast his work with timely care,
Which else is huddled when the skies are fair.

5. To throw together in confusion.
Our adversary, huddling several suppositions together, and that in doubtful and general terms, makes a medley and confusion.

TO Huddle. v. n. To come in a crowd or hurry.

Glance an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back
Enough to press a royal merchant down.

Brown answered after his blunt and huddling manner.
Thyris, whose artful strains have oft delay'd
The huddling brook to hear his madrigal,
And sweeten'd every muskrose of the dale.

Their eyes are more imperfect than others;
for they will run against things, and, huddling forwards, fall from high places.

Huddle. n. f. [from the verb.] Crowd; tumult; confusion; with obscurity.

That the Aristotelian philosophy is a huddle of words and terms insignificant, has been the censure of the wisest.

Your carrying business in a huddle,
Has forc'd our rulers to new model.

Nature doth nothing in a huddle.
The understanding sees nothing distinctly in things remote, and in a huddle.

Several metry answers were made to my question, which entertained us 'till bed-time, and filled my mind with a huddle of ideas.

HUE. n. f. [htepe, Saxon.]
1. Colour; die.

For never in that land
Face of fair lady the before old view,
Or that dread Lyon's look her cast in deadly hue.

To add another hue unto the rainbow,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Flowers of all hue, and without thorn the rose.

To whom the angel, with a smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue, Answer'd.

Your's is much of the camelion hue,
To change the die with distant view.

2. [huze, French.] A clamour; a legal pursuit; an alarm given to the country.
It is commonly joined with cry.

Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight I am undone: fly, run, hue and cry! villain, I am undone.

Immediately comes a hue and cry after a gang of thieves, that had taken a purse upon the road.

If you should hiss, he swears he'll hiss as high;
And, like a culprit, join the hue and cry.

HUE'R. n. f. [huer, French, to cry.]
One whose business is to call out to others.

They lie hovering upon the coast, and are directed by a balker or huer, who standeth on the cliff-side, and from thence discerneth the course of the pilchard.

HUFF. n. f. [from hove, or hoven, swelled: he is buffed up by displeasures.] So in some provinces we still say the bread huffs up, when it begins to heave or ferment:

huff, therefore, may be ferment. To be in a huff is then to be in a ferment, as we now speak.]

1. Swell of sudden anger or arrogance.
Quoth Ralpho, honour's but a word
To swear by, only in a loud;

In others it is but a huff,
To vapour with instead of proof,

His frowns kept multitudes in awe,
Before the bluster of whose huff
All hats, as in a storm, flew off.

We have the apprehensions of a change to keep a check upon us in the very huff of our greatness.

A Spaniard was wonderfully upon the huff about his extraction.

No man goes about to ensnare or circumvent another in a passion, to lay trains, and give secret blows in a present huff.

2. A wretch swelled with a false opinion of his own value.
As for you, colonel huff-cap, we shall try before a civil magistrate who's the greater plottor.

Lewd shallow-brained huffs make atheism and contempt of religion the sole badge and character of wit.

TO HUFF. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To swell; to puff.

In many wild birds the diaphragm may easily be buffed up with air, and blown in at the windpipe.

2. To heftor; to treat with insolence and arrogance, or brutality.
The commissioner at Magdalen college said to
Dr. Hough, you must not presume to huff us.

TO HUFF. v. n. To bluster; to storm;
to bounce; to swell with indignation or pride.

A huffing, shining, flatt'ring, cringing coward,
A cankerworm of peace, was rais'd above him.
Orway

A thief and justice, foul and knave,
A huffing officer and slave.
Hudibras
Huffing to cowards, fawning to the brave,
To knaves a fool, to cred'ulous fools a knave.
Roscommon

This senseless arrogant conceit of theirs made them huff at the doctrine of repentance, as a thing below them.
South

Now what 's his end? O charming glory say!
What, a fifth act to crown his huffing play?
Dryden

What a small pittance of reason and truth is mixed with those huffing opinions they are swelled with.
Locke

When Peg received John's message, she huff- ed and stormed like the devil.
Arbutnot

HUFFER, n. f. [from huff.] A bluster-er; a bully.

Nor have I hazarded my art
To be expos'd i' th' end to suffer,
By such a braggadocio huffer.
Hudibras

HUFFISH, adj. [from huff.] Arrogant;
insolent; hectoring.

HUFFISHLY, adv. [from huffish.] With arrogant petulance; with bullying blufter.

HUFFISHNESS, n. f. Petulance; arrogance; noisy bluster.

TO HUG, v. a. [hegrian, Saxon, to hedge,
to enclose.]

1. To press close in an embrace.

He bewept my fortune,
And hugg'd me in his arms.
Shakespeare
What would not he do now to hug the creature that had given him so admirable a serenade!
L'Estrange

Ev'n in that urn their brother they confess,
And hug it in their arms, and to their bosom press.
Dryden
King Xerxes was enamour'd upon an oak,
which he would hug and kiss.
Harvey

2. To fondle; to treat with tendernefs.

I, under fair pretence of friendly ends,
And well-plac'd words of glozing courtesy,
Baited with reasons not unpleasible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares.
Milton
We hug deformities, if they bear our names.
Glanville

Admire yourself,
And, without rival, hug your darling book.
Roscommon

Though they know that the flatterer knows the falsehood of his own flatteries, yet they love
the impostor, and with both arms hug the abuse.
South

Mark with what joy he hugs the dear discovery!
Roscoe

3. To hold fast.

Age makes us most fondly hug and retain the good things of life, when we have the least prospect of enjoying them.
Atterbury

4. To gripe in wrestling.

HUG, n. f. [from the noun.]

1. Close embrace.

Why these close hugs? I owe my shame to him.
Gay

2. A particular gripe in wrestling, called a Cornish hug.

HUGE, adj. [hoogh, high, Dutch.]

1. Vast; immense.

Let the estate of the people of God, when they were in the house of bondage, and their manner of serving God in a strange land, be compared with that which Canaan and Jerusalem did afford: and who seeth not what huge difference there was between them?
Hooker

This space of earth is so huge, as that it equalleth in greatness not only Asia, Europe, and Africa, but America.
Abbot

2. Very great.

The mountain huge.
Milton

Part, huge of bulk!
Wallowing unweildy, enormous in their gait,
Tempest the ocean; there leviathan
Huge of living creatures, in the deep Stretch'd like a promontory, sleeps or swims,
And seems a moving land.
Milton

3. Great even to deformity or terribleness.

The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder.
Shakespeare

Through forests huge, and long unravell'd
heatus,
With desolation brown he wanders waste.
Thomson

HUGELY, adv. [from huge.]

1. Immenfely; enormously.

Who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea?
Shaksp.

2. Greatly; very much.

I am hugely bent to believe, that whenever you concern yourselves in our affairs, it is for our good.
Swift

HUGENESS, n. f. [from huge.]

1. Enormous bulk; greatness.

My mistress exceeds in goodness the hugeness
of your unworthy thinking.
Shakespeare

2. Utmost extent. Not in use.

HUGGERMUGGER, n. f. [corrupted perhaps from bugger morcker, or hug in the dark. Morcker in Danish is darkness, whence our murky. It is written by sir Thomas Moore, hoker moker. Hoker, in Chaucer, is peevish, crossgrained, of which moker may be only a ludicrous reduplication. Hooke is likewise in German a corner, and moky is in English dark. I know not how to determinc.]

Secrecy; by-place.

Now hold in huggermugger in their hand,
And all the rest do rob of floods and land.
Habberd's Tale

But if I can but find them out,
Where'er th' in huggermugger lurk,
I'll make them rue their handy work.
Hudibras
There's a distinction betwixt what's done openly and bare-faced, and a thing that's done in huggermugger, under a seal of secrecy and concealment.
L'Estrange

HUGY, adj. [See HUGE.] Vast; great;
huge. Not in use.

This hugy rock one finger's force apparently will move.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall

HUKE, n. f. [huque, French.] A cloak.

As we were thus in conference, there came one that seemed to be a messenger, in a rich huke.
Bacon's New Atlantis

HULK, n. f. [bulcke, Dutch; hule, Sax.]

1. The body of a ship.

There's a whole merchant's venture of Bourdeaux stuff in him: you have not seen a hulk better stuf'd in the hold.
Shakespeare

The custom of giving the colour of the sea to the hulks, sails, and mariners of their fly-boats, to keep them from being discovered, came from the Veneti.
Arbutnot

The Argo's hulk will tax,
And scrape her pitey sides for wax.
Swift

Steer'd sluggith on.
Thomson

2. Any thing bulky and unweildy. This sense is still retained in Scotland: as, a hulk of a fellow.

And Harry Monmouth's brawn, the hulk fir
John,
Is prisoner to your son.
Shakespeare

TO HULK, v. a. To exentrate: as, to hulk a hare.
Ainsworth

HULL, n. f. [bulgan, Gothick, to cover.]

1. The hulk or integument of any thing;
the outer covering: as, the hull of a nut covers the shell. [hule, Scottish.]

2. The body of a ship; the hulk. Hull and hulk are now confounded; but hulk seems originally to have signified not merely the body or hull, but a whole ship of burden, heavy and bulky.

Deep in their hulls our deadly bullets light,
And through the yielding planks a passage find.
Dryden

So many arts harli the Divine Wisdom put together, only for the hull and tackle of a thinking creature.
Grew

TO HULL, v. n. [from the noun.] To float; to drive to and fro upon the water without sails or rudder.

They saw a sight full of piteous strangeness;
a ship, or rather the carcase of a ship, or rather some few bones of the carcase, hulling there, part broken, part burned, and part drowied.
Sidney
Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.
— No, good swabbet, I am to hull here a little longer.
Shakespeare
He look'd, and saw the ark hull on the flood.
Milton

People walking down upon the shore, saw somewhat come hulling toward them.
L'Estrange

HULLY, adj. [from hull.] Siliqueose;
husky.
Ainsworth

HULLVER, n. f. Holly.

Save hulver and thorn, thereof fail for to make.
Tusser

TO HUM, v. a. [homelan, Dutch.]

1. To make the noise of bees.

The humming of bees is an unequal buzzing.
Bacon

An airy nation flew Thick as the humming bees that hunt the golden dew
Dryden

In summer's heat.
So weary bees in little cells repose;
But if night-robbers list the well-stor'd hive,
An humming through their waxen city grows.
Dryden

2. To make an inarticulate and buzzing found.

I think he'll hear me: yet to bite his lip,
And hum at good Cominius, much unhearts me.
Shakespeare

Upon my honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me.
Shakespeare
The cloudy messenger turns me his back,
And hums; as who should say, you'll rue.
Shaksp.

3. To pause in speaking, and supply the interval with an audible emission of breath.

Having pump'd up all his wit,
And hum'd upon it, thus he writ.
Hudibras
I still acquiesc,
And never hum'd and haw'd sedition,
Nor snuffed treason.
Hudibras

The man Jay humming and hawing a good while; but in the end, he gave up himself to the physicians.
L'Estrange

4. To make a dull heavy noise.

The musical accents of the Indians, to us, are but inarticulate *humming*s; as are ours to their otherwise tuned organs.
Glanville
Still humming on, their drowsy countie they keep,
And last'd so long, like tops, are last'd asleep.
Pope

5. To sing low.

Hum half a tune.
Pope

6. To applaud. Approbation was commonly expressed in public assemblies by a hum, about a century ago.

HUM, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The noise of bees or insects.
To black Hecat's fummon
The shard-born beetle, with his drowfy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal. Shakspere.
Nor undelightful is the ceaseless hum,
To him who mufes through the woods at noon. Thomfon.
2. A low confused noise, as of bufling crowds at a diftance.
From camp to camp, thro' the foul womb of night,
The hum of either army ftill refounds. Shakfp.
Tower'd cities please us then,
And the bufy hum of men. Milton.
One theatre there is of vaft refort,
Which whilom of requests was call'd the court;
But now the great exchange of news 'tis hight,
And full of hum and buz from noon 'till night. Dryden.
3. Any low dull noife.
Who fat the neareft, by the words o'ercome,
Slept faft: the diftant nodded to the hum. Pope.
4. A pause with an inarticulate found.
Thefe thrugs, thefe hums and haws,
When you have laid the 's goodly, come between,
Ere you can fay the 's honeft. Shakspere.
Your excuses want fome grains to make 'em current: hum and ha will not do the bufinefs. Dryden's Spanifh Fryar.
5. In Hudibras it feems ufed for ham.
And though his countrymen the Huns,
Did ftew their meat between their hums
And the horfes backs, on which they ftuddle,
And ev'ly man eat up his faddle. Hudibras.
6. An expreffion of applaufe.
You hear a hum in the right place. Speftator.
- HUM. interjeft. A found implying doubt and deliberation.
Let not your eyes defpife the heaviest found
That ever yet they heard.
—Hum! I guefs at it. Shakspere's Macbeth.
See fit Robert—hum!
And never laugh for all my life to come. Pope.
- HUMAN. adj. [humanus, Lat. humain, French.]
1. Having the qualities of a man.
It will never be asked whether he be a gentleman born, but whether he be a human creature? Swift.
2. Belonging to man.
The king is but a man as I am: the violet fmells to him as it doth to me; all his fenfes have but human conditions. Shakspere.
For man to tell how human life began
Is har!; for who himfelf beginning knew?
Thee, ferpent, fubtil'ft beaft of all the field,
I knew; but not with human voice ind'ed. Milt.
Intuitive knowledge needs no probation, nor can have any, this being the higheft of all human certainty. Locke.
- HUMA'NE. adj. [humaine, Fr.] Kind; civil; benevolent; good-natured.
Love of others, if it be not fpent upon a few, doth naturally fpread itfelf towards many, and maketh men become humane and charitable. Bacon.
Envy, malice, covetufnefs and revenge are abolifhed: a new race of virtues and graces, more divine, more moral, more humane, are planted in their ftead. Sprat.
- HUMA'NELY. adv. [from humane.] Kindly; with good-nature.
If they would yield as the fuperftity, while it were wholefome, we might guefs they received us humanely. Shakspere.
- HUMANIST. n. f. [humanifte, Fr.] A philologer; a grammarian: a term ufed in the fchools of Scotland.
- HUMANITY. n. f. [humanité, Fr. humanitas, Latin.]
1. The nature of man.

- Look to thyfelf: reach not beyond humanity. Sidney.
A rarer fpirit never did fteer humanity. Shak.
The middle of humanity thou never kneweft, but the extremity of both ends. Shakspere.
To preferve the Hebrew intire and uncorrupt, there hath been ufed the higheft caution humanity could invent. Brown.
2. Humankind; the collective body of mankind.
If he can untie thofe knots, he is able to reach all humanity, and will do well to oblige mankind by his information. Glanville.
3. Benevolence; tendernefs.
All men ought to maintain peace and the common offices of humanity and friendfhip in diversity of opinions. Locke.
How few, like thee, enquire the wretched out,
And court the offices of foft humanity?
Like thee referve their foment for the naked,
Reach out their bread to feed the crying orphan,
Or mix their pitying tears with thofe that weep? Rowe.
4. Philology; grammatical ftudies. In Scotland, humaniores literæ.
To HUMANIZE. v. a. [humanifer, Fr.] To foften; to make fufceptive of tendernefs or benevolence.
Here will I paint the characters of woe,
And here my faithful tears in fhow'rs fhall flow,
To humanize the flints whereon I tread. Wotton.
Was it the bufinefs of magic to humanize our natures with compaffion, forgiveness, and all the intances of the moft extenfive charity? Addifon.
- HU'MANKIND. n. f. [human and kind.] The race of man; mankind.
Bleff with a tafte exact, yet unconfin'd;

1. To chase wild animals.

The man that once did fell the lion's skin,
While the best liv'd, was kill'd in hunting him.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt the prey for the lion, or fill the appetite of the young lions? Job.

We should single every criminal out of the herd, and hunt him down, however formidable and overgrown; and, on the contrary, shelter and defend virtue. Addison.

2. To pursue; to follow close.

Evil shall hunt the violent man to overthrow him. Psalms.

The heart strikes five hundred sorts of pulses in an hour, and is hunted into such continual palpitations, through anxiety, that pain would it break. Harvey on Consumptions.

3. To search for.

Not certainly affirming any thing, but by conferring of times and monuments, I do hunt out a probability. Spenser.

All that is found in books is not rightly deduced from principles: such an examen every reader's mind is not forward to make, especially in those who have given themselves up to a party, and only hunt for what may favour and support the tenets of it. Locke.

4. To direct or manage hounds in the chase.

He hunts a pack of dogs better than any, and is famous for finding hares. Addison.

To HUNT. v. n.

1. To follow the chase.

When he returns from hunting,

I will not speak with him. Shaksp. King Lear.

Efau went to the field to hunt for venison. Gen.

One followed study and knowledge, and another hawking and hunting. Locke.

On the old pagan tombs, masks, hunting matches, and bacchanals are very common.

Addison on Italy.

2. To pursue or search.

Very much of kin to this is the hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to neglect and refuse those which favour the other side. Locke.

HUNT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A pack of hounds.

The common hunt, though from their rage restrain'd
By sov'reign pow'r, her company disdain'd.
Grinn'd as they pass'd. Dryd. Hind and Panther.

2. A chase.

The hunt is up, the morn is bright and gray;

The fields are fragrant, and the woods are green.

Shakespeare.

3. Pursuit.

I've heard myself proclaim'd;

And by the happy hollow of a tree
Escap'd the hunt. Shakespeare's King Lear.

HUNTER. n. f. [from hunt.]

1. One who chases animals for pastime or food.

If those English lords had been good hunters; and redozed the mountain, huggs, and woods within the limits of forests, chaces and parks, the forest law would have driven them into the plains. Darves on Ireland.

Down from a hill the beast that reigns in woods,
First hunter then, pursu'd a gentle brace,
Goodliest of all the forest, hart and hind. Milton.

Another's crimes th' unhappy hunter bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guttlefs gore.

Dryden's Æneid.

This was the arms or device of our old Roman hunters; a passage of Manilus lets us know the pagan hunters had Meleager for their patron.

Addison on Italy.

Bold Nimrod first the savage chace began,

A mighty hunter, and his game was man. Pope.

2. A dog that scents game or beaks of prey.

Of dogs, the valu'd file
Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle,
The housekeeper, the hunter. Shakespeare.

HUNTINGHORN. n. f. [hunting and horn.] A bugle; a horn used to cheer the hounds.

Whilst a boy, Jack ran from school,
Fond of his huntinghorn and pole. Prior.

HUNTIRESS. n. f. [from hunter.] A woman that follows the chase.

And thou thrice crowned queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above,
Thy huntress' name, that my full life doth sway.

Shakespeare.

Shall I call

Antiquity from the old schools of Greece,
To testify the arms of chastity?

Hence had the huntress Dian her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste. Milton.

Let old Arcadia boast her ample plain,
Th' immortal huntress, and her virgin train;

Nor envy Windsor. Pope.

Homer represents Diana with her quiver at her shoulder; but at the same time he describes her as an huntress. Brooms.

HUNTSMAN. n. f. [hunt and man.]

1. One who delights in the chase.

Like as a huntsman, after weary chace,
Seeing the game escape from him away,
Sits down to rest him. Spenser's Sonnets.

Such game, whilst yet the world was new,
The mighty Nimrod did pursue:
What huntsman of our feeble race,
Or dogs, dare such a monster chace? Waller.

2. The servant whose office it is to manage the chase.

Apply this moral rather to the huntsman, that managed the chace, than to the master.

L'Esrange.

HUNTSMANSHIP. n. f. [from huntsman.] The qualifications of a hunter.

At court your fellows every day
Give the art of thiming, huntsmanship, or play.

Donne.

HURDLE. n. f. [hýrdel, Saxon.]

The sled, the tumbrel, hurdles and the flail,
These all must be prepar'd. Dryden's Georg.

2. Crate on which criminals were dragged to execution.

Settle your fine joints 'gainst Thursday next,
Or I will drag thee on a hurdle thither. Shaksp.

The blacksmith was hanged, drawn, and quartered at Tyburn; taking pie sure upon the hurdle, to think that he should be famous in after-times. Bacon.

HURDS. n. f. The refuse of hemp or flax.

Ainsworth.

To HURL. v. a. [from hurrit, to throw down, I standick; or, according to Skin-ner, from whirl.]

1. To throw with violence; to drive impetuously.

If heav'n's have any grievous plagues in store,
O, let them keep it 'till thy fins be ripe,
And then hurl down their indignation
On thee! Shakspeare's Richard III.

He holds vengeance in his hand,
To hurl upon their heads that break his law.

I with my nails digg'd stones out of the ground,
To hurl at the beholders of my shame. Shaksfp.
If he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait. Numbers.

They use both the right hand and the left in hurling stones. Chronicles.
Hurl ink and wit,
As madmen stones. Ben Jonson.

His darling sons,
Hurl'd headlong to partake with us, shall curse
Their fatal original and faded bliss.
She strikes the late; but if it found,
Threatens to hurl it on the ground. Waller.

Corrupted light of knowledge hurl'd
Sun, death, and ignorance, o'er all the world.
Denham.

Young Phaeton,
From east to north irregularly hurl'd,
Firin' set himself on fire, and then the world.

Conjure him far to drive the Grecian train,
And hurl'd them headlong to their fleet and main. Pope.

2. To utter with vehemence. [hurler, Fr.
to make a howling or hideous noise.]
This sense is not in use.

The glad merchant that does view
His ship far come from wat'ry wilderness,
He hurls out vows. Spenser.

Highly they rag'd against the Highcholl,
Hurling defiance towards the vaults of heav'n.
Milton.

3. To play at a kind of game.

Hurling taketh its denomination from throwing of the ball, and is of two sorts; to goals, and to the country: for hurling to goals there are fifteen or thirty players, more or less, chosen out on each side, who strip themselves, and then join hands in ranks, one against another: out of these ranks they match themselves by pairs, one embracing another, and so pass away; every of which couple are to watch one another during this play. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

HURL. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
riot; commotion.

He in the same hurl murdering such as he thought would withstand his desire, was chosen king. Knolles.

two set upon one man at once. Carew.

HURLWIND. n. f. [hurl and wind.] A whirlwind; a violent gust. A word not in use.

Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid hurlwinds from his mansion thrown.
Sandys.

HURLY. } n. f. [from the Fr.
HURLYBURLY. } hurlubrelu, inconfiderately.] Tumult; commotion; bustle.

Winds take the ruffian billows by the top,
That with the hurly death itself awakes. Shaksfp.
Poor discontents,

Which gape and rub the elbow at the news
Of hurlibus by innovation. Shakspeare.

Metlinks, I see this hurlly all on foot. Shaksfp.
All places were filled with tumult and hurllyburlly, every man measured the danger by his own fear; and such a pitiful cry was in every place, and in cities presently to be besieged. Knolles.

HURRICANE. } n. f. [huracan, Span.
HURRICANO. } ouragan, Fr.] A violent storm, such as is often experienced in the western hemisphere.

Blow winds, and crack your cheeks;
Your cataracts and hurricanes spout! Shaksfp.
A storm or hurricane, though but the force of air, makes a strange havock where it comes.
Burnet's Theory.

A poet who had a great genius for tragedy, made every man and woman too in his plays stark raging mad: all was tempestuous and bluf-tering; heaven and earth were coming together at every word; a mere hurricane from the beginning to the end. Dryden.

The ministers of state, who gave us law,
In corners with selected friends withdraw;
There, in deaf murmurs, solemnly are wise,
Whisp'ring like winds, ere hurricanes arise.
Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
Addison.

HURRIER. n. f. [from hurry.] One that hurries; a disturber.

Mars, that horrid hurrier of men. Chapman.

To HURRY. v. n. [hepziari, to plunder, Saxon: hurs was likewise a word used by the old Germans in urging their horses to speed; but seems the imperative of the verb.] To hasten; to put into precipitation or confusion; to drive confusedly.

Your nobles will not hear you; but are gone
To offer service to your enemy;
And wild amazement hurries up and down
The little number of your doubtful friends.
Shakspeare.

For whom all this haste
Of midnight march, and hurry'd meeting here?
Milton.

Impetuous lust hurries him on to satisfy it.
South

That hurry'd o'er
Such swarms of English to the neighb'ring shore.
Dryden.

A man has not time to subdue his passions, establish his soul in virtue, and come up to the perfection of his nature, before he is hurried off the stage. Addison.

Stay these sudden gusts of passion,
That hurry you away. Roscoe's Royal Convert.

If a council be called, or a battle fought, you are not coldly informed, the reader is hurried out of himself by the poet's imagination. Pope.

To HURRY. v. n. To move on with precipitation.

Did you but know what joys your way attend,
You would not hurry to your journey's end.
Dryden.

HURRY. n. f. [from the verb.] Tumult;
precipitation; commotion.

Among all the horrible hurries in England,
Ireland was then almost quiet. Haysward.

It might have pleased him in the present heat and hurry of his rage; but must have displeas'd him infinitely in the sedate reflection. South

After the violence of the hurry and commotion was over, the water came to a state somewhat more calm. Woodward.

Ambition raises a tumult in the soul, it inflames the mind, and puts it into a violent hurry of thought. Addison.

A long train of coaches and six ran through the heart, one after another, in a very great hurry.
Addison.

I do not include the life of those who are in a perpetual hurry of affairs, but of those who are not always engaged. Addison.

The pavement founds with trampling feet,
And the mixt hurry barricades the street. Gay.

HURST. n. f. [hýryst, Saxon.] A grove or thicket of trees. Ainsworth.

 'tis so. Shakspeare.

There's something else to do; hush and be mure, Shakspeare.

Or else our spell is marr'd.

HUSH. adj. [from the interjection.]

Still; silent; quiet.

As we often see, against some storm,
 A silence in the heavens, the rack stands still,
 The bold winds speechless, and the orb below
 As hush as death. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

To HUSH. v. n. [from the interjection.]

To be still; to be silent.

This frown'd, that fawn'd, the third for shame
 did blush;
 Another seem'd envious or coy;
 Another in her teeth did know a rash;
 But at these strangers' presence every one did hush.
Spenser.

To HUSH. v. a. To still; to silence;

to quiet; to appease.

Yet can I not of such tame patience bear,
 As to be hush'd, and nought at all to say. Shakspeare.

It was my breath that blew this tempest up,
 Upon your stubborn usage of the pope;
 But since you are a gentle convertite,
 My tongue shall hush again this storm of war,
 And make fair weather in your blustering land.
Shakspeare.

Speak softly;

All's hush'd as midnight yet. Shakspeare.

My love would speak; my duty hushes me.
Shakspeare.

When in a bed of straw we think together,
 And the bleak winds shall whistle round our heads,
 Wilt thou then talk thus to me? Wilt thou then hush my cares thus, and fluster me with love?
Orway.

Hush'd as midnight silence go;
 He will not have your acclamations now. Dryden.

Her fire at length is kind,
 Calms ev'ry storm, and hushes ev'ry wind;
 Prepares his empire for his daughter's ease,
 And for his hatching nephews smooths the seas.
Dryden.

The court was hush'd, and a whisper ran.
Addison.

To Huzz. v. n. [from the sound.] To buzz; to murmur.

Huzza. interj. A shout; a cry of acclamation.

The huzzas of the rabble are the same to a tear that they are to a prince. L'Estrange.

You keep a parcel of roaring bullies about me day and night; huzzas and hunting-horns never let me cool.

All fame is foreign, but of true desert;
Plays round the head, but comes not to the heart:
One self-approving hour whole years outweighs
Of stupid stagers and of loud huzzas. Pope.

To Huzza. v. n. [from the interjection.] To utter acclamation.

A caddron of fat beef, and sloop of ale,
On the huzzing mob shall still prevail. King.

To Huzza. v. a. To receive or attend with acclamation.

He was huzzed into the court by several thousands of weavers and clothiers. Attilson.

Hyacinth. n. f. [v'adend'θ; hyacinthos, French; hyacinthus, Latin.]

1. A flower.
It hath a bulbous root: the leaves are long and narrow: the stalk is upright and naked, the flowers growing on the upper part in a spike: the flowers consist each of one leaf, are naked, tubulose, and cut into six divisions at the brim, which are reflexed: the ovary becomes a roundish fruit with three angles, which is divided into three cells, which are filled with roundish seeds. Müller.

The silken fleece, impurpl'd for the loom,
Rival'd the hyacinth in vernal bloom. Pope.

2. A gem.
The hyacinth is the same with the lapis lyncurios of the ancients. It is a less shewy gem than any of the other red ones. It is seldom smaller than a seed of hemp, or larger than a nutmeg. It is found of various degrees of deepness and paleness; but its colour is always a deadish red, with a considerable admixture of yellow; its most usual is that mixed red and yellow, which we know by the name of flame-colour. Hill.

1. Dropical; diseas'd with extravasated water.

Cantharides heat the watery parts of the body; as urine, and hydrophical water. Bacon.

The world's whole sap is sunk:
The general balm th' hydrophical earth hath drunk. Donne.

Hydrophical swellings, if they be pure, are pellucid. Wifeman.

Hydrophical wretches by degrees decay,
Growing the more, the more they waste away;
By their own ruins they augmented lye,
With thirst and heat amidst a deluge fry. Blackmore.

One sort of remedy, he uses in dropicks, the water of the hydrophicals. Arbutnot.

2. Resembling dropisy.

Some men's hydrophical insatiableness learned to thirst the more, by how much more they drank. King Charles.

Every lust is a kind of hydrophical distemper, and the more we drink the more we shall thirst. Tillotson.

Hydrostatical. adj. [v'adec' and v'adec'.] Relating to hydrostatics; taught by hydrostatics.

A human body forming in such a fluid, will never be reconcilable to this hydrostatical law: there will be always something lighter beneath.

And something heavier above; because bone, the heaviest in specie, will be ever in the midst.

Bentley.

HYDROSTATICALLY. adv. [from hydrostatical.] According to hydrostatics. The weight of all bodies around the earth is ever proportional to the quantity of their matter: for instance, a pound weight, examined hydrostatically, hath always contain an equal quantity of solid mass.

Bentley.

HYDROSTATICKS. n. f. [ὕδωρ and στατική; hydrostatique, French.] The science of weighing fluids, or weighing bodies in fluids.

A signal of her hymenal choice. Pope's Odyssey.

HYMN. n. f. [hymne, Fr. ὕμνος.] An encomiastick song, or song of adoration to some superiour being.

As I exalt, in praise of mine own dame,
So now in honour of thy mother dear,
An honourable hymn I eke should frame. Spens.
Our solemn hymns to fallen diages change;
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried coarfe. Shak.

When steel grows

Soft as the parasite's silk, let hymns be made An overture for the wars. Shakespeare's Cor.

There is an hymn sung; but the subject of it is always the praises of Adam, and Noah, and Abraham, concluding ever with a thanksgiving for the nativity of our Saviour.

Brown.

Encwell, you happy shades,
Whereangels first should practise hymns, and string
Their tuneful harps, when they to Heav'n would sing.

Dryden.

To HYMN. v. a. [ὕμνω.] To praise in song; to worship with hymns.

Whose business were to serve the Lord
High up in heav'n, with songs to hymn his throne.

Milton.

To HYMN. v. n. To sing songs of adoration.

They touch'd their golden harps, and hymning
prais'd
God and his works.

Milton.

He had not left alive this patient saint,
This anvil of affronts, but sent him hence,
To hold a peaceful branch of palm above,
And hymn it in the quire. Dryd. Spanish Friar.

HYMNI'CK. adj. [ὕμνος.] Relating to hymns.

He rounds the air, and breaks the hymnick
notes

In birds, heav'n's choristers, organick throats;
Which, if they did not die, might seem to be
A tenth rank in the heavenly hierarchy. Donne.

To HYP. v. a. [barbarously contracted from hypochondriack.] To make melancholy; to dispirit.

I have been, to the last degree, hypped since I faw you.

Speclator.

HY'PER. n. f. [A word barbarously curtailed by Prior from hypercritick.] A hypercritick; one more critical than necessity requires. Prior did not know the meaning of the word.

Criticks I read on other men,
And hypers upon them again.

Prior.

HYPERBOLA. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερ and βάλλω.] In geometry, a section of a cone made by a plane, so that the axis of the section inclines to the opposite leg of the cone, which in the parabola is parallel to it, and in the elliptis intersects it. The axis of the hyperbolical section will meet also with the opposite side of the cone, when produced above the vertex.

Harris.

Had the velocities of the several planets been greater or less than they are, or had their distances from the sun, or the quantity of the sun's matter, and consequently his attractive power been greater or less than they are now, with the same velocities, they would not have revolved in concentrick circles, but have moved in hyperbolis very eccentrick.

Bentley.

HYPERBOLY. n. f. [hyperbole, Fr. ὑπερβολή.] A figure in rhetoric by which any thing is increased or diminished beyond the exact truth: He runs faster than lightning. His possessions are fallen to dust. He was so gaunt, the case of a flagellet was a mansion for him. Shaksp.

Terms unlikeword
Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon dropt,
Would seem hyperboles.

Shakespeare.

Tuffata phrases, sicken terms precise,
Three pl'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedantical, these summer flies,
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.

Shakespeare.

They were above the hyperboles, that fond poetry bestows upon its admitted objects. Clare.

Hyperboles, so daring and so bold,
Disdaining bounds, are yet by rules control'd;
Above the clouds, but yet within our sight,
They mount with truth, and make a towering flight.

Gianville.

The common people understand rascally, or at least rhetorick, and will not take hyperboles in too literal a sense.

Swift.

HYPERBOLICAL. } adj. [hyperbolicus, Fr.
HYPERBOLICK. } from hyperbola, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the hyperbola; having the nature of an hyperbola.

Cancelled in the middle with squares, with triangles before and behind with hyperbolic lines. Grego's Museum.

The horny or pellucid coat of the eye riseth up, as a hillock, above the convexity of the white of the eye, and is of an hyperbolic or parabolical figure.

Ray on the Creation.

2. [from hyperbole.] Exaggerating or extenuating beyond fact.

It is parabolical, and probably hyperbolic, and therefore not to be taken in a strict sense.

Boyle.

HYPERBOLICALLY. adv. [from hyperbolic.]

1. In form of an hyperbola.

2. With exaggeration or extenuation.

Yet may all be solved, if we take it hyperbolically.

Quincy.

The blood moving too slowly through the celiac and mesenterick arteries, produces various complaints in the lower bowels and inhypochondres: from whence such persons are called by hypochondriack. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

HYPPOCHONDRIACAL. } adj. [hypochondriacal].
HYPPOCHONDRIACK. } que, Fr. from hypochondres.]

1. Melancholy; disordered in the imagination.

Socrates laid down his life in attestation of that most fundamental truth, the belief of one God; and yet he's not recorded either as fool or hypochondriack. Decay of Piety

2. Producing melancholy; having the nature of melancholy.

Cold sweats are many times mortal, and always suspected; as in great fears, and hypochondriacal passions, being a relaxation or forsaking of the spirits. Bacon's Natural History.

HYPPOCRIST. n. f. [υπηκριστη; hypocriste, Fr.]

An insipidated juice considerably hard and heavy, of a fine shining black colour, when broken. The stem of the plant is thick and fleshy; and much thicker at the top than towards the bottom. The fruits contain a tough glutinous liquor, gathered before they are ripe: the juice is expressed, then formed into cakes. Hill.

HYPPOCRIST. n. f. [hypocriste, Fr. υπηκριστη.] Dissimulation with regard to the moral or religious character.

Next hood hypocrisy with holy leer, Soft smiling and demurely looking down; But hid the dagger underneath the gown. Dryd.

Hypocrisy is much more eligible than open infidelity and vice: it wears the livery of religion, and is cautious of giving scandal: nay, contriv'd disguises are too great a constraint: men would leave off their vices, rather than undergo the toil of practising them in private. Swift.

HYPPOCRITE. n. f. [hypocrite, French; υπηκριστη.]

1. A dissembler in morality or religion.

He heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer: I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart. Shakespeare.

A wise man hateth not the law; but he that is an hypocrite therein, is as a ship in a storm. Eccles.

Fair hypocrite, you seek to cheat in vain: Your silence argues, you ask time to reign. Dryd.

The making religion necessary to interest might increase hypocrisy; but if one in twenty should be brought to true piety, and nineteen be only hypocrites, the advantage would still be great. Swift.

2. A dissembler.

Beware, ye honest: the third circling glass Suffices virtue: but may hypocrites, Who slyly speak one thing, another think, Hateful as hell, still pleas'd unwarnd drink on,

And through intemp'rance grow a while sincere. Phillips.

HYPPOCRITICAL. } adj. [from hypocrite.]

HYPPOCRITICK. } Dissembling; insincere; appearing differently from the reality.

Now you are confessing your enormities; I know it by that hypocritical, down-cast look. Druiden's Spanish Friar.

Whatever virtues may appear in him, they will be effecem an hypocritical imposture on the world; and in his retired pleasures, he will be presumed a libertine. Rogers.

Let others skew their hypocritical face. Swift.
HYPPOCRITICALLY. adv. [from hypocritical.] With dissimulation; without sincerity; falsely.

Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely, but insidiously, nay hypocritically, abusing at once their proteyles and their religion. Government of the Tongue.

HYPPOGASTRICK. adj. [hypogastrique, Fr. υπο and γαστρις.] Seated in the lower part of the belly.

The swelling we supposed to rise from an effusion of serum through all the hypogastrick arteries. Wiseman.

HYPPOGEUM. n. f. [υπο and γρ.] A name which the ancient architects gave to all the parts of a building that were underground, as cellars and vaults. Harris.

HYPPOSTASIS. n. f. [hypostasie, Fr. υποστασις.]

1. Distinct substance.

2. Personality. A term used in the doctrine of the Holy Trinity.

The oneness of our Lord Jesus Christ, referring to the several hypostases in the one eternal, indivisible, divine nature, and the eternity of the Sun's generation, and his co-eternity and consubstantiality with the Father, are assertions equivalent to those comprised in the ancient simple article. Hannond.

HYPPOSTATICAL. adj. [hypostatique, Fr. from hypostasis.]

1. Constitutive; constituent as distinct ingredients.

The square of the hypotenuse in a right-angled triangle, is equal to the squares of the two other sides. Locke.

HYPOTHESIS. n. f. [hypothese, Fr. υποθεσις.]

A supposition; a system formed upon some principle not proved.

The mind casts and turns itself restlessly from one thing to another, till at length it brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with another, and so clears off all the appearing contrarieties that seemed to lie cross, and make the whole unintelligible. South.

With imagin'd sovereignty Lord of his new hypothesis he reigns; He reigns: how long? till some usurper rise: And he too, mighty thoughtful, mighty wife, Studies new lines, and other circles feigns. Prior.

HYPOTHE'TICAL. } adj. [hypothetique, Fr.]

HYPOTHE'TICK. } from hypothesis.] Including a supposition; conditional.

Conditional or hypothetical propositions are those whose parts are united by the conditional particle if; as, if the sun be fixed, the earth must move. Watts.

HYPOTHE'TICALLY. adv. [from hypothetical.] Upon supposition; conditionally.

The only part liable to imputation is calling her a goddess; yet this is proposed with modesty and doubt, and hypothetically. Broom.

HURST, HURST, HERST, are all from the Saxon hyrre, a wood or grove. Gibson.

HY'SSOP. n. f. [hyssope, Fr. hyssopus, Lat.]

A verticillate plant.

It hath been a great dispute, whether the hyssop commonly known is the same which is mentioned in scripture. Miller.

The hyssop of Solomon cannot be well conceived to be our common hyssop: for that is not the least of vegetables observed to grow upon walls: but rather some kind of capillaries, which only grow upon walls and stony places. Brown.

HYS'TERICAL. } adj. [hysterique, French;]

HYS'TERICK. } υστερικος.] 1. Troubled with fits; disordered in the regions of the womb.

In hysteri & women the rarity of symptoms doth oft strike an astonishment into spectators. Huxley on Consumptions.

Many hysterical women are sensible of wind passing from the womb. Flyer on the Humours.

2. Proceeding from disorders in the womb.

Parent of vapours, and of female wit, Who gave th' hysterick or poetic fit. Pope.

This terrible scene made too violent an impression upon a woman in her condition, and threw her into a strong hysterick fit. Arbutnot.

HYS'TERICKS. n. f. [υστερικος.] Fits of women, supposed to proceed from disorders in the womb.

I.

I

I

I

I Is in English considered both as a vowel and consonant; though, since the vowel and consonant differ in their form as well as sound, they may be more properly accounted two letters.

I vowel has a long sound, as sue, thine, which is usually marked with an e final; and a short sound, as sin, thin. Prefixed to e it makes a diphthong of the same sound with the soft i, or double e, ee: thus field, yield, are spoken as feeld, yeeld; except friend, which is spoken freend. Subjoined to a o or e it makes them long, as soil, neigh; and to o makes a mingled sound, which approaches more nearly

2. A forry woman. A word of contempt noting sometimes age, but generally vice.

Shall these, these old jades, pass the flower
Of youth, that you have, pass you. Chapman.

But she, the cunning 'st jade alive,
Says, 'tis the ready way to thrive. Stepney.

Get in, hussy: now will I personate this young jade, and discover the intrigue. Southern

In di'monds, pearl, and rich brocades,
She shines the first of batter'd jades,
And flutters in her pride. Swift.

3. A young woman: in irony and slight contempt.

You see now and then some handsome young jades among them: the sluts have very often white teeth and black eyes. Addison.

JADE. n. f. A species of stone.

The jade is a species of the jasper, and of extreme hardness. Its colour is composed of a pale blueish grey, or ash-colour, and a pale green, not uniform. It appears dull and coarse on the surface, but it takes a very elegant polish. It is used by the Turks for handles of sabres. Hill.

To JADE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To tire; to harass; to dispirit; to weary: applied originally to horses.

With his banners, and his well-paid ranks,
The ne'er-yet-beaten horse of Parthia
We've jaded out o' th' field. Shakespeare.

It is good in discourse to vary and intermingle speech of the present occasion with arguments; for it is a dull thing to tire and jade any thing too far. Bacon.

If fleet dragon's progeny at last Proves jaded, and in frequent matches cast
No favour for the stallion we retain,
And no respect for the degen'rate strain. Dryden.

The mind once jaded, by an attempt above its power, is very hardly brought to exert its force again. Locke.

There are seasons when the brain is overtired or jaded with study or thinking; and upon some other accounts animal nature may be languid or cloudy, and unfit to assist the spirit in meditation.
Watts.

2. To overbear; to crush; to degrade; to harass, as a horse that is ridden too hard.

If we live thus tamely,
To be thus jaded by a piece of scarlet,
Farewell nobility. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

3. To employ in vile offices.

The honourable blood
Must not be shed by such a jaded groom. Shaksp.

4. To ride; to rule with tyranny.

I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jade me: for every reason excites to this. Shaksp.

To JADE. v. n. To lose spirit; to sink.

Many offer at the effects of friendship, but they do not last: they are promising in the beginning, but they fail and jade and tire in the pursuasion. South.

JADISH. adj. [from jade.]

1. Vitious; bad, as a horse.

That hors'd us on their backs, to show us
A jadish trick at last, and to row us. Hudibras.

When once the people get the jadish trick
Of throwing off their king, no ruler's safe.
Southern.

2. Unchaste; incontinent.

'Tis no boot to be jealous of a woman; for if the humour takes her to be jadish, not all the locks and spies in nature can keep her honest.
L'Estrange.

To JAGG. v. a. [gagaw, flits or holes, Welsh.] To cut into indentures; to cut into teeth like those of a saw.

Some leaves are round, some long, some square, and many jagg'd on the sides. Bacon.

The jagg of pinks and gilliflowers is like the inequality of oak leaves; but they never have so small plain parts. Bacon.

The banks of that sea must be jagg'd and torn by the impetuous assaults, or the silent under-minings of waves; violent rains must wash down earth from the tops of mountains. Bentley.

An alder-tree is one among the lesser trees, whose younger branches are soft, and whose leaves are jagg'd. Watts.

JAGG. n. f. [from the verb.] A protuberance or denticulation.

The figure of the leaves is divided into so many *jagg*s or scallops, and curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

Take off all the staring straws, twigs, and *jagg*s in the hive, and make them as smooth as possible. Mortimer's Husbandry.

J'AGGY. adj. [from jagg.] Uneven; denticated.

His tow'ring crest was glorious to behold;
His shoulders and his sides were scal'd with gold;
Three tongues he brandish'd when he charg'd his foes;

His teeth stood jaggy in three dreadful rows
Addison.

Amid' those angles, infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind.
Thomson.

J'AGGEDNESS. n. f. [from jagg'd.] The state of being denticulated; unevenness.

First draw rudely your leaves, making them plain, before you give them their veins or jag-gedness. Peachment on Drawing.

JAIL. n. f. [geol, Fr.] A gaol; a prison; a place where criminals are confined. See GAOL. It is written either way; but commonly by latter writers jail.

Away with the dotard, to the jail with him.
Shakespeare.

A dependant upon him paid fix thousand pounds ready money, which, poor man, he lived to repent in a jail. Clarendon.

He sigh'd and turn'd his eyes, because he knew

'Twas but a larger jail he had in view. Dryden.

One jail did all their criminals restrain,
Which now the walls of Rome can scarce contain.
Dryden

JAILBIRD. n. f. [jail and bird.] One who has been in a jail.

JAILER. n. f. [from jail.] A gaoler; the keeper of a prison.

Seeking many means to speak with her, and ever kept from it, as well because she shunned it, seeing and disdaining his mind, as because of her jealous jailers. Sidney

This is as a jailer, to bring forth
Some monstrous malefactor. Shakespeare.

His pow'r to hollow caverns is confin'd;
There let him reign, the jailer of the wind;
With hoarse commands his breathing subjects
call,

And boast and bluster in his empty hall. Dryd.

Palamon, the pris'ner knight,
Restless for woe, arose before the light;

And, with his jailer's leave, desired to breathe
An air more welcome than the damp beneath.
Dryden

J'AKES. n. f. [of uncertain etymology.]
A house of office.

I will tread this inholted villain into mortar, and dash the walls of jakes with him. Shaksp.

Their sordid avarice rak's
In excrements, and lyes the very jakes. Dryden

Some have fish'd the very jakes for papers left there by men of wit. Swift.

JALAP. n. f. [jalap, French; jalapium, low Latin.] A medicinal drug.

Jalap is a firm and solid root, of a wrinkled surface, and generally cut into slices, heavy and hard to break; of a faintish smell, and of an acid and nauseous taste. It had its name jala-pium, or jalapa, from Xalapa, a town in New Spain, in the neighbourhood of which it was discovered; though it is now principally brought from the Madeiras. It is an excellent purgative where ferous humours are to be evacuated. Hell.

JAM. n. f. [I know not whence derived.]
A conserve of fruits boiled with sugar and water.

JAMB. n. f. [jambe, French, a leg.] Any supporter on either side, as the posts of a door.

No timber is to be laid within twelve inches of the forehead of the chimney *jamb*s. Newton.

JAMBICK. n. f. [iambique, French; iambi-cus, Latin.] Verses composed of iambick feet, or a short and long syllable alternately: used originally in satire, therefore taken for satire.

In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies:
Thy genius calls thee not to purchase fame
In keen iambicks, but mild anagram. Dryden.

To J'ANGLE. v. n. [jangler, French. Skinner.] To altercate; to quarrel; to bicker in words. A low word.

Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles agree,
This civil war of wits were much better us'd
On Navarre and his look-men. Shakspere.

So far am I glad it did so fort,
And this their jangling I esteem a sport. Shaksp.

There is no error which hath not some appearance of probability resembling truth, which when men, who study to be singular, find out, framing reason, they then publish to the world
matter of contention and jangling. Raleigh.

To J'ANGLE. v. a. To make to found untuneably.

Now see that noble and that sovereign reason;
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh.

'Ere Guthick forms were known in Greece,
And in our vesse 'ere monkish rhimes
Had jangled their fantastick chimes. Priest.

J'ANGLER. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrangling, chattering, noisy fellow.

J'ANIZARY. n. f. [a Turkish word.] One of the guards of the Turkish king.

His grand vizir, presuming to invite
The chief imperial city of the west,
With the first charge compell'd in haste to rise;
The standards lost, and horizaries slain,
Render the hopes he gave his master vain.
Waller.

J'ANNOCK. n. f. [probably a corruption of bannock.] Oat-bread. A northern word.

J'ANTY. adj. [corrupted from gentil, Fr.]
Showy; fluttering.

This sort of woman is a janty flattern: she hangs on her cloaths, plays her head, and varies her posture. Spechtator.

J'ANUARY. n. f. [Januarius, Latin.]
The first month of the year, from Janus, to whom it was among the Romans consecrated.

January is clad in white, the colour of the earth at this time, blowing his nails. This month had the name from Janus, painted with two faces, signifying Providence. Peachment.

JAPAN. n. f. [from Japan in Asia, where figured work was originally done.] Work varnished and raised in gold and colours. It is commonly used with another substantive, and therefore may be considered as an adjective.

The poor girl had broken a large japan glass, of great value, with a stroke of her brush. Swift.

To JAPAN. v. a. [from the noun]

1. To varnish, and embellish with gold and raised figures.

For not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd avails
The writing of good sense. Swift.

2. To black and gloss shoes. A low phrase.
The god of fire
Among these generous presents joins his part,
And aids with foot the new japanning art. Gay.

JAPANNER. n. f. [from japan.]
1. One skilled in japan work.
2. A shoeblacker. So called because he makes the shoes shine.

The poor have the same itch;
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
And aids with foot the new japanning art. Pope.

To JAR. v. n. [from coppe, anger, Saxon; or guerre, war, French; or garren, old Teutonick, to clamour.]
1. To strike together with a kind of short rattle.

The rings of iron, that on the doors were hung,
Sent out a jarring sound, and harshly rung. Dryd.
My knees tremble with the jarring blow. Gay.

2. To strike or sound untuneably and irregularly.

O, you kind gods!
Cur'd this great breach in his abused nature:
Th' untow'd and jarring senses, O, wind up,
Of this child-changed father! Shakspere.

I perceive you delight not in musick.
—Not a whit, when it jars so. Shakspere.
A string may jar in the best master's hand,
And the most skilful archer miss his aim. Rescom.

He keeps his temper'd mind, serene and pure,
And every passion aptly harmoniz'd
Amid a jarring world. Thomson's Summer.

3. To clash; to interfere; to act in opposition; to be inconsistent.

At last, though long, our jarring notes agree. Shakspere.
For orders and degrees
Jar not with liberty, but well consist. Milton.
Venus concluded his report:
A jarring murmur fill'd the factious court:
As when a torrent rolls with rapid race,
The flood, constrain'd within a scanty space,
Rours horrible. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To quarrel; to dispute.
When those renowned noble peers of Greece,
Through stubborn pride, among themselves did jar,
Forgetful of the famous golden fleece,
Then Orpheus with his harp their strife did bar. Spenser.

They must be sometimes ignorant of the means conducting to those ends, in which alone they can jar and oppose each other. Dryden.

JAR. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A kind of rattling vibration of sound.

In r, the tongue is held stiffly at its whole length, by the force of the muscles; so as when the impulse of breath strikes upon the end of the tongue, where it finds passage, it shakes and agitates the whole tongue, whereby the sound is affected with a trembling jar. Holder.

2. Clash of interests or opinions; discord; debate.
He maketh war, he maketh peace again,
And yet his peace is but continual jar:
O miserable men, that to him subj'ct are!
Nath'less, my brother, since we passed are Unto this point, we will appease our jar. Fairy Queen.

Force would be right; or rather, right and wrong,
Between whole endless jar justice presides,
Would lose their names, and so would justice too. Shakspere.

3. A state in which a door unfastened may strike the post; half opened.
The chattering with dissenters, and dodging about this or that ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. [giarro, Italian.] An earthen vessel.
About the upper part of the jar there appeared a good number of bubbles. Boyle.
He mead for cooling drink prepares,
Of virgin honey in the jars. Dryden.

Warriors welter on the ground,
Whilst empty jars the dire defeat resound. Garth.

JARDES. n. f. [French.] Hard callous tumours in horses, a little below the bending of the ham on the outside.

This distemper in time will make the horse halt, and grow so painful as to cause him to pine away, and become light-bellied. It is most common to managed horses, that have been kept too much upon their haunches.

Farrier's Dict.

JARGON. n. f. [jargon, Fr. gericonça, Spanish.] Unintelligible talk; gabble; gibberish.

Nothing is clearer than mathematical demonstration; yet let one, who is altogether ignorant in mathematicks, hear it, and he will hold it to be plain fustian or jargon. Bramhall.

From this last toll again what knowledge flows?
Just as much, perhaps, as shows
That all his predecessor's rules
Were empty cant, all jargon of the schools. Prior.

During the usurpation an infusion of enthusiastick jargon prevailed in every writing. Swift.

JARGONELLE. n. f. A species of pear. See PEAR.

JASHAWK. n. f. [probably ias or eyas hawk.] A young hawk. Ainsworth.

JASMINE. n. f. [gelseminum; jafmin, Fr. It is often pronounced jessamine.] A creeping shrub with a fragrant flower.

Thou, like the harmless bee, may'st freely range;
From jasmine grove to grove may'st wander. Thomson.

JASMINE Persian. n. f. A plant. A species of lilach.

JASPER. n. f. [jasse, French; iaspis, Lat.] A hard stone of a bright beautiful green colour, sometimes clouded with white, found in masses of various sizes and shapes. It is capable of a very elegant polish, and is found in many parts of the East Indies, and in Egypt, Africa, Tartary, and China. Hill.

The basis of jasper is usually of a greenish hue, and spotted with red, yellow, and white. Woodward's Met. Foss.

The most valuable pillars about Rome are four columns of oriental jasper in St. Paulina's chapel, and one of transparent oriental jasper in the vatican library. Addison on Italy.

IATROLEPTICK. adj. [iatroleptique, Fr. ιατρος and ελαττω.] That cures by anointing.

To JA'VEL, or jable. v. a. To benire; to soil over with dirt through unnecessary traversing and travelling. This word is still retained in Scotland and the northern counties.

JA'VEL. n. f. [perhaps from the verb.] A wandering or dirty fellow.
When as time, flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that those two javels
Should tender up a reckoning of their travels. Hubbard's Tale.

Sir Thomas More, preparing himself for execution, put on his best apparel, which the lieutenant compelled him to put off again, saying,

That he who should have them was but a jar'd. What, says Sir Thomas, shall I account him a javel, who shall this day do me so great a benefit? More's Life of Sir Thomas More.

JA'VELIN. n. f. [javeline, French.] A spear or half pike, which anciently was used either by foot or horse. It had an iron head pointed.

Others, from the wall, defend
With dart and jav'lin, stones and sulph'rous fire;
On each hand slaughter and gigantic deeds. Milton's Paradise Lost.

She shakes her myrtle jav'lin, and, behind,
Her Lycian quiver dances in the wind. Dryden.
Flies the javelin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigour of a Roman arm? Addison.

JA'UNDICE. n. f. [jaunisse, jaune, yellow, French.] A distemper from obstructions of the glands of the liver, which prevents the gall being duly separated by them from the blood; and sometimes, especially in hard drinkers, they are so indurated as never after to be opened, and straiten the motion of the blood so much through that viscus, as to make it divert with a force great enough into the gastrick arteries, which go off from the hepatick; to break through them, and drain into the stomach; so that vomiting of blood, in this distemper, is a fatal symptom. Quincy.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes, and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish? Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

Those were thy thoughts, and thou could'st judge aright,
Till interest made a jaundice in thy sight. Dryden.

The eyes of a man in the jaundice make yellow observations on every thing; and the soul, tinged with any passion, diffuses a false colour over the appearances of things. Watts.

JA'UNDICED. adj. [from jaundice.] Infected with the jaundice.

All seems infected, that th' infested spy,
As all looks yellow to the jaundic'd eye. Pope.

To JAUNT. v. n. [jaunter, French.] To wander here and there; to buittle about. It is now always used in contempt or levity.

I was not made a horse,
And yet I bear a burthen like an ass;
Spur-gall'd and tir'd by jaunting Bolingbroke. Shakspere's Richard II.

JAUNT. n. f. [from the verb.] Ramble; slight; excursion. It is commonly used ludicrously, but solemnly by Milton.

Our Saviour meek, and with untroubled mind,
After his airy jaunt, though hurry'd sore,
Hungry and cold, betook him to his rest. Milton.

He sends me out on many a jaunt,
Old houses in the right to haunt. Hudibras.

They parted, and away potts the cavalier in quest of his new mistress: his first jaunt is to court. L'Esprave.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it fastest. Dryden's Span. Flyar.

Thus much of the scheme of my design in this part have I run over, and led my reader a long and tedious jaunt, in tracing out those metallick and mineral bodies. Woodward.

JAUNTINESS. n. f. [from jaunty, or jaunty, corrupted from gentil, French. See JANTY.] Airiness; flutter; genteelness.

A certain stiffness in my limbs entirely destroyed that jauntness of air I was once master of. Addison's Spectator.

JAW. n. f. [joue, a cheek, French; whence joorabone, or cheekbone, then jaw.]

1. The bone of the mouth in which the teeth are fixed.

A generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw teeth as knives, to devour the poor.

Proverbs.

The jaw bones, hearts, and galls of pikes are very medicinable.

Watson's Angler.

Piso, who probably speaks Aristotle's meaning, said that the crocodile doth not only move his upper jaw, but that his nether jaw is immovable.

Grew's Musæum.

More formidable hydra stands within, whose jaws with iron teeth severly grin.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. The mouth.

My tongue cleaveth to my jaws, and thou hast brought me into the dust of death.

Psalms.

My bended hook shall pierce their slimy jaws.

Shakespeare.

A smeary foam works o'er my grinding jaws, and utmost anguish shakes my lab'ring frame.

Rowe.

JAY. n. f. [named from his cry. Skinner.]

A bird; piaglandaria.

Two sharp winged sheers, deck'd with diverse plumes, like painted jays, were fixed at his back, to cut his airy ways.

Fairy Queen.

We'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross wat'ry pumption— we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Shakespeare.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark, because his feathers are more beautiful?

Shaksp.

I am highly delighted to see the jay or the thrush hopping about my walks.

Spectator.

Admires the jay, the insects gilded wings, or hears the hawk, when philomela sings.

Pope.

JAZEL. n. f. A precious stone of an azure or blue colour.

Diæ.

ICE. n. f. [is, Saxon; eye, Dutch.]

1. Water or other liquor made solid by cold.

You are no surer, no, than is the coal of fire upon the ice, or hailstone in the sun.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes.

Shaksp.

If I should ask whether ice and water were two distinct species of things, I doubt not but I should be answered in the affirmative.

Locke.

2. Concreted sugar.

3. To break the ice. To make the first opening to any attempt.

If you break the ice, and do this feat, achieve the elder, set the younger free for our access, whose hap shall be to have her, will not to graceless be to be ingrate.

Shaksp.

Thus have I broken the ice to invention, for the lively representation of floods and rivers necessary for our painters and poets.

Peascham.

After he'd a while look'd wife, at last broke silence and the ice.

Hudibras.

To ice. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover with ice; to turn to ice.

2. To cover with concreted sugar.

ICEHOUSE. n. f. [ice and house] A house in which ice is reposit against the warm months.

ICHNEUMON. n. f. [ichneumon.] A small animal that breaks the eggs of the crocodile.

The generation of the ichneumonfly is in the bodies of caterpillars, and other nymphæ of insects.

Derham's Physico-Theol.

ICHOGRAPHY. n. f. [ichthos and grapho.]

The groundplot.

It will be more intelligible to have a draught of each front in a paper by itself, and also to have a draught of the groundplot or ichnography of every story in a paper by itself.

Mason.

ICHOR. n. f. [ichor.] A thin watery humour like serum.

Quincy.

Milk, drawn from some animals that feed only upon flesh, will be more apt to turn rancid and putrify, acquiring first a saline taste, which is a sign of putrefaction, and then it will turn into an ichor.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ICHOROUS. adj. [from ichor.] Serous; fanious; thin; undigested.

The lung-growth is imputed to a superficial fanious or ichorous exulceration.

Harvey.

The pus from an ulcer of the liver, growing thin and ichorous, corrodes the vessels.

Arbuth.

ICHTHYOLOGY. n. f. [ichthyologie, French;

ἰχθυολογία, from ἰχθυος and λόγος.] The doctrine of the nature of fishes.

Some there are, as camels and sheep, which carry no name in ichthyology.

Brown.

ICHTHYOPHAGY. n. f. [ἰχθῦς and φάγω.]

Diet of fish; the practice of eating fish.

ICEICLE. n. f. [from ice.] A shoot of ice commonly hanging down from the upper part.

If distilled vinegar or aqua-fortis be poured into the powder of loadstone, the subsiding powder, dried, retains some magnetical virtue;

but if the menstruum be evaporated to a consistence, and afterwards doth shoot into iceicles, or crystals, the loadstone hath no power upon them.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

From locks uncomb'd, and from the frozen beard,

Long iceicles depend, and cracking sounds are heard.

Dryden.

The common dropstone consists principally of spar, and is frequently found in form of an iceicle, hanging down from the tops and sides of grottos.

Woodward's Natural History.

ICESNESS. n. f. [from icy.] The state of generating ice.

ICON. n. f. [εἰκὼν.] A picture or representation.

Boylardus, in his tract of divination, hath set forth the icons of these ten, yet added two others.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Some of our own nation, and many Netherlanders, whose names and icons are published, have deserved good commendation.

Hakewill.

ICONOCLAST. n. f. [iconoclaste, French;

εἰκονοκλάστης.] A breaker of images.

Floyer.

2. Good against the jaundice.

ICY. adj. [from ice.]

1. Full of ice; covered with ice; made of ice; cold; frosty.

But my poor heart first set free,

Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Shakespeare.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,

The season's difference; as, the icy phang,

And churlish chiding of the winter's wind.

Shakespeare.

He relates the excessive coldness of the water

they met with in summer in that icy region, where they were forced to winter.

Boyle.

Bear Britain's thunder, and her crows display

To the bright regions of the rising day;

Tempt icy seas, where scarce the waters roll,

Where clearer flames glow round the frozen pole.

Pope.

2. Cold; free from passion.

Thou would'st it have never learn'd

The icy precepts of respect.

Shakespeare.

3. Frigid; backward.

If thou do'st find him tractable to us, encourage him, and tell him all our reasons, if he be leaden, icy, cold, unwilling, Be thou to too.

Shakespeare's Richard III.

ID. Contracted for I would.

IDEA. n. f. [idée, French; idea.] Mental image.

Whatever the mind perceives in itself, or is the immediate object of perception, thought, or understanding, that I call idea.

Locke.

The form under which these things appear to the mind, or the result of our apprehension, is called an idea.

Watt.

Happy you that say to the faint, your only idea,

Although simply attir'd, your manly affection utter.

Sedgely.

Our Saviour himself, being to set down the perfect idea of that which we are to pray and wish for on earth, did not teach to pray or wish for more than only that here it might be with us, as with them it is in heaven.

Hooker.

Her sweet idea wander'd through his thoughts.

Fairfax.

I did infer your lineaments, Being the right idea of your father, Both in your form and nobleness of mind.

Shaksp.

How good, how fair, Answering his great idea!

Milton's Par. Lost.

If Chaucer by the best idea wrought, The fairest nymph before his eyes he set.

Dryden.

IDEAL. adj. [from idea.] Mental; intellectual; not perceived by the senses.

There is a two-fold knowledge of material thing; one real, when the thing, and real impression of things on our senses, is perceived; the other ideal, when the image or idea of a thing absent in itself, is represented to and considered on the imagination.

Cheyne.

IDEALLY. adv. [from ideal.] Intellectually; mentally.

A transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one.

Brown.

IDENTIAL. } adj. [identique, French.]

IDENTICK. } The same; implying the same thing; comprising the same idea.

The beard's th' identick beard you knew, The same numerically true.

Hudibras.

There majus is identical with magis.

Hale.

Those ridiculous identical propositions, that faith is faith, and rule is a rule, are first principles in this controversy of the rule of faith, without which nothing can be solidly concluded either about rule or faith.

Tillotson's Sermons.

If this pre-existent eternity is not compatible with a successive duration, as we clearly and distinctly perceive that it is not, then it remains, that some being, though infinitely above our finite comprehensions, must have had an identical, invariable continuance from all eternity, which being is no other than God.

Bentley's Sermons.

IDENTITY. n. f. [identité, French; identitas, school Latin.] Sameness; not diversity.

There is a fallacy of equivocation from a society in name, inerring an identity in nature: by this fallacy was he deceived that drank aqua-fortis for strong water.

Brown.

Certainly those actions must needs be regular, where there is an identity between the rule and the faculty.

South's Sermons.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with self-existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

By cutting off the sense at the end of every first line, which must always rhyme to the next following, is produced too frequent an identity in sound, and brings every couplet to the point of an epigram.

Prior.

IDES. n. f. [ides, French; idus, Latin.]

A term anciently used among the Romans, and still retained in the Romish calendar. It is the 13th day of each month, except in the months of March, May, July, and October, in which it is the 15th day, because in these four months it was six days before the nones, and in the others four days.

A foolthayer bids you beware the ides of March. Shakespeare.

IDIOM. n. f. [idiome, French; ἰδιωμα.] A mode of speaking peculiar to a language or dialect; the particular cast of a tongue; a phrase; phraseology.

He did romanize our tongue, leaving the words translated as much Latin as he found them; wherein he followed their language, but did not comply with the idion of ours. Dryden.

Some that with care true eloquence shall teach, And to just idions fix our doubtful speech. Prior.

IDIOMATICAL. } adj. [from idiom.] Peculiar to a tongue; phraseological.

Since phrases used in conversation contract meanness by passing through the mouths of the vulgar, a poet should guard himself against idiomatick ways of speaking. Spenser.

IDIOPATHY. n. f. [idiopathie, French; ἰδιοπάθεια.] A primary disease that neither depends on nor proceeds from another. Quincy.

IDIOSYNCRASY. n. f. [idiosynacrasie, Fr. ἰδιοσυγκρᾶσις, and ἰδιοσυγκρᾶσις.] A peculiar temper or disposition of body not common to another. Quincy.

Whether quails, from any idiosyncrasy or peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon heilebore, or rather sometimes but medicinally use the same. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The understanding also hath its idiosyncrasies, as well as other faculties. Glanv. Scepsis.

IDIOT. n. f. [idiote, Fr. idiota, Latin; ἰδιώτης.] A fool; a natural; a changeling; one without the powers of reason.

Life is a tale, Told by an idiot full of sound and fury, Signifying nothing. Shakespeare's Macbeth

What else doth he herein, than by a kind of circumlocution tell his humble suppliants that he holds them ideots, or base wretches, not able to get relief? Raleigh's Essays.

By idle boys and ideots vilify'd, Who me and my calamities deride. Sandys.
Many ideots will believe that they see what they only hear. Dennis.

IDIOTISM. n. f. [idiotisme, French; ἰδιωτισμός.]

IDLE. adj. [yðel, Saxon.]

1. Lazy; averse from labour.

For shame! to much to do, and yet idle. Bull.

2. Not engaged; affording leisure.

For often have you writ to her; and she in modesty,

Or else for want of idle time, could not again reply. Shakespeare.

3. Unactive; not employed.

No war or battle's found Was heard the world around, The idle spear and shield were high up hung. Milton.

Children generally hate to be idle; all the care then is, that their busy humour should be constantly employed in something of use to them. Locke.

Supposing, among a multitude embarked in the same vessel, there are several that in a tempest will rather perish than work; would it not be madness in the rest to stand idle, and rather chuse to sink than do more than comes to their share? Addison.

4. Useless; vain; ineffectual.

They astonish'd, all resistance lost, All courage; down their idle weapons dropp'd. Milton.

And threat'ning France, plac'd like a painted Jove,

Held idle thunder in his lifted hand. Dryden.

Where was then The power that guards thy sacred lives of kings? Why slept the lightning and the thunderbolts, Or bent their idle rage on fields and trees, When vengeance call'd 'em hie? Dryden.

5. Unfruitful; barren; not productive of good.

Of antres vast, and deserts idle, It was my heat to speak. Shaksp. Otello.

The murmuring furge, That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes, Cannot be heard to high. Shaksp. King Lear.

He was met even now, Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds, Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow In our sustaining corn. Shaksp. King Lear.

6. Trifling; of no importance: as, an idle story.

Suffice it then, thou money god, quoth he, That all thine idle offers I refuse; All that I need I have: what needeth me To covet more than I have cause to use? Fairy Queen.

This answer is both idle in regard of us, and repugnant to themselves. Hooker.

They are not, in our estimation, idle reprochs from the authors of needless innovations are opposed with such negatives, as that of Leo: how are these new devices brought in, which our fathers never knew? Hooker.

His friend smil'd scornful, and with proud contempt,

Rejects as idle what his fellow dreamt. Dryden.

An idle reason lessens the weight of the good ones you gave before. Swift.

A nation from one faithful man to spring, Him on this side Euphrates yet residing, Bred up in idol worship. Milton's Par. Lost.

The apostle is there arguing against the gnosticks who joined in the idol feasts, and whom he therefore accuses of participating of the idol god. Atterbury.

2. A counterfeit.

Woe to the idle shepherd that leaveth the flock. Zachar. ut.

3. An image.

Never did art so well with nature strive, Nor ever idol seem'd so much alive; So like the man, so golden to the sight; So base within, so counterfeit and light. Dryden.

4. A representation. Not in use.

Men beholding to great excellence, And rare perfection in mortality, Do her adore with sacred reverence, As th' idol of her maker's great magnificence. Fairy Queen.

5. One loved or honoured to adoration.

He's honoured and lov'd by all; The soldier's god, and people's idol. Decharny.

IDOLATER. n. f. [idolatre, French; idolatra, Lat.] One who pays divine honours to images; one who worships for God that which is not God.

The state of idolaters is two ways misse able: first, in that which they worship they had no succour; and secondly, at his hands, whom they ought to serve, there is no other thing to be looked for but the effects of most just displeasure, the withdrawing of grace, dereliction in this world, and in the world to come confusion.

Hooker.

An astrologer may be no christian; he may be an idolater or a pagan; but I would hardly think astrology to be compatible with rank atheism.

Bentley's Sermons.

To IDOLATRIZE. v. a. [from idolater.]
To worship idols. Ainsworth.

IDOLATROUS. adj. [from idolater.] Tending to idolatry; comprising idolatry, or the worship of false gods.

Neither may the pictures of our Saviour, the apostles, and martyrs of the church, be drawn to an idolatrous use, or be set up in churches to be worshipped. Peacham on Drawing.

IDOLATROUSLY. adv. [from idolatrous.] In an idolatrous manner.

Not therefore whatsoever idolaters have either thought or done; but let whatsoever they have either thought or done idolatrously, be so far forth abhorred. Hooker.

IDOLATRY. n. f. [idolatrie, French; idololatria, Latin.] The worship of images; the worship of any thing as God which is not God.

Thou shalt be worshipp'd, kiss'd, lov'd, and ador'd;

And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be situated in thy head.

Shakespeare.

Idolatry is not only an accounting or worshipping that for God which is not God, but it is also a worshipping the true God in a way unsuitable to his nature; and particularly by the mediation of images and corporeal resemblances. South.

The kings were distinguished by judgments or blessings, according as they promoted idolatry, or the worship of the true God. Addison.

IDOLIST. n. f. [from idol.] A worshipper of images. A poetical word.

I to God have brought Dis honour, obloquy, and cild the mouths
Of idolists and atheist. Milton.

To IDOLIZE. v. a. [from idol.] To love or reverence to adoration.

Those who are generous, humble, just, and wise,
Who not their gold, nor themselves idolize.

Denham.

Parties, with the greatest violation of christian unity, denominate themselves, not from the grand author and finisher of our faith, but from the first broacher of their idolized opinions.

Decay of Piety.

IDONEOUS. adj. [idoneus, Latin.] Fit; proper; convenient; adequate.

You entangle, and so fix their saline part, by making them corrode some idoneous body. Boyle.

I. E. for id est, or, that is.

That which raises the natural interest of money, is the same that raises the rent of land, i. e. its aptness to bring in yearly, to him that manages it, a greater overplus of income above his rent, as a reward to his labour. Locke.

JEALOUS. adj. [jaloux, French.]

1. Suspicious in love.

To both these sisters have I sworn my love:
Each jealous of the other, as the stung
Ate of the adder. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Wear your eye thus; not jealous, nor secure;
I would not have your free and noble nature,
Out of self bounty, be abus'd: look to't.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband.

Shakespeare.

A jealous empress lies within your arms,
Too naughty to endure neglected charms. Dryden.

2. Emulous; full of competition.

I could not, without extreme reluctance, resign the theme of your beauty to another hand: give me leave to acquaint the world that I am jealous of this subject. Dryden.

3. Zealously cautious against dishonour.

I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts. 1 Kings.

4. Suspiciously vigilant.

I am jealous over you with godly jealousy. 2 Cor.

His apprehensions, as his jealous nature had much of fagacity in it, or his restless and motinous humour, transported him. Clarendon.

5. Suspiciously careful.

Although he were a prince in military virtue approved, and jealous of the honour of the English nation; yet his cruelties and parricides weighed down his virtues. Bacon's Henry VII.

They jealous of their secrets, hercely oppos'd
My journey strange, with clamorous uproar Protecting fate supreme. Milton.

How nicely jealous is every one of us of his own repute, and yet how maliciously prodigal of other men's? Decay of Piety.

6. Suspiciously fearful.

'Tis doing wrong creates such doubts as these;
Renders us jealous, and destroys your peace.

Walker.

While the people are to jealous of the clergy's ambition, I do not see any other method left for them to reform the world, than by using all honest arts to make themselves acceptable to the laity. Swift.

JEALOUSLY. adv. [from jealous.] Suspiciously; emulously; with suspicious fear, vigilance, or caution.

JEALOUSNESS. n. f. [from jealous.] The state of being jealous; rivalry; suspicion; suspicious vigilance.

Nor is it hard for thee to preserve me amidst the unjust hatred and jealousness of too many, which thou hast suffered to prevail upon me.

King Charles.

JEALOUSY. n. f. [jaloufie, French; from jealous.]

1. Suspicion in love.

But gnawing jealousy, out of their fight
Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite. Fairy Q.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embroc'd despair;
And thudd'ring fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love, be moderate; allay thine ecstasy. Shakf.

Why did you suffer Jachimo,
Slight thing of Italy,
To taint his noble heart and brain
With needless jealousy? Shaksp. Cymbeline.

Small jealousies, 'tis true, insinuate desire;
Too great, not fan, but quite blow out the fire.

Dryden.

2. Suspicious fear.

The obstinacy in Essex in refusing to treat with the king, proceeded only from his jealousy, that when the king had got him into his hands he would take revenge upon him. Clarendon.

3. Suspicious caution, vigilance, or rivalry.

To JEER. v. n. [Of uncertain etymology.] To scoff; to flout; to make mock.

The merry world did on a day
With his train bands and mates, agree
To meet together where I lay,
And all in sport to jeer at me. Herbert.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, petulant uncomely jests, loud talking and jeering, which are called indecencies, and incivilities. Taylor.

To JEER, v. a. To treat with scoffs.

My children abroad are driven to disavow me, for fear of being jeered. Howel.

JEER. n. f. [from the verb.] Scoff; taunt; biting jest; flout; jibe; mock.

Midas, expos'd to all their jeers,
Had lost his art, and kept his ears. Swift.

They tip the forehead in a jeer,
As who should say—he wants it here;
She may be handsome, young, and rich;
But none will burn her for a witch. Swift.

JEERER. n. f. [from jeer.] A scoffer; a scorner; a mocker.

JEERINGLY. adv. [from jeering.] Scornfully; contemptuously; in mock; in scoff.

He jeeringly demandeth, whether the sonorous rays are refracted? Derham.

JEGGET. n. f. A kind of sausage. Ainsw.

JEJUNE. adj. [jejunus, Latin.]

1. Wanting; empty; vacant.

Gold is the only substance which hath nothing in it volatile, and yet metheth without much difficulty; the melting sheweth that it is not jeune, or scarce in spirit. Bacon.

2. Hungry; not saturated.

In grots and turbid streams there might be contained nutriment, and not in jeune or limpid water. Brown.

3. Dry; unaffecting; deficient in matter.

You may look upon an inquiry made up of mere narratives, as somewhat jeune. Boyle.

JEJUNENESS. n. f. [from jeune.]

JEOPARDOUS. adj. [from jeopardy.] Hazardous; dangerous.

JEOPARDY. n. f. [This word is supposed to be derived from j' ai perdu, or jeu perdu. Skinner and Junius.]

Hazard; danger; peril. Not in use.

And would ye not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you i' accompany,
In this adventure's chancefull jeopardy. Hub. Ta.

Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shalt turn

To ashes ere our blood shall quench that fire;
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy. Shakespeare.

We may impute to all excellencies in compositions a kind of poverty, or at least a casualty or jeopardy. Bacon.

To JERK. v. a. [zereccan, Saxon.] To strike with a quick smart blow; to lash. It is sometimes written yerk.

I lack iniquity
Sometimes to do me service: nine or ten times
I thought to 've yerk'd him here under the ribs. Shakspeare.

Bastings heavy, dry, obtuse,
Only dulness can produce;
While a little gentle jerking
Sets the spirits all to-working. Swift.

To JERK. v. n. To strike up; to accost eagerly. This seems to be the meaning in this place, but is mere cant.

Nor blush, should he some grave acquaintance meet,
But, proud of being known, will yerk and greet. Dryden.

JERK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A smart quick lash.
Contentn the silly taunts of steering buffoonry;
and the jerks of that wit, that is but a kind of confident folly. Glamville.

Wit is not the yerk or sting of an epigram, nor the seeming contradiction of a poor antithesis; neither is it so much the morality of a grave sentence, affected by Lucan, but more sparingly used by Virgil. Dryden.

2. A sudden spring; a quick jolt that shocks or starts.

Well run Tawney, the abbot's churl;
His jade gave him a yerk,
As he would have his rider hurl
His hood after the kirk. Ben Jonson.

Lobsters use their tails as fins, wherewith they commonly swim backwards by jerks, or springs, reaching ten yards at once. Grew.

JERKIN. n. f. [cyrntelkin, Saxon.] A jacket; a short coat; a close waistcoat. A man may wear it on both sides like a leather jerkin. Shakspeare.

Unless we should expect that nature should make jerkins and stockings grow out of the ground, what could she do better than afford us wool? Moré's Antidote against Atheism.

Imagine an ambassador presenting himself in a poor frize jerkin, and tattered cloaths, certainly he would have but small audience. South.

Then strip thee of thy carnal jerkin,
And give thy outward fellow a striking. Hudibras.
I walked into the sea, in my leathern jerkin, about an hour before high water. Gulliv. Trav.

JERKIN. n. f. A kind of hawk. Ainslv. This should be written gyrkin.

JESS. n. f. [geße, French; getto, Italian.] Short straps of leather tied about the legs of a hawk, with which she is held on the fist. Hammer.

If I prove her haggard,
Though that my jesses were her dear heart strings,
I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Shakspeare's Othello.

JESSAMINE. n. f. [See JASMINE.] A fragrant flower.

Her goodly bosom, like a strawberry bed;
Her neck, like to a bunch of cullarabines;
Her breast like lillies, ere their leaves be shed;
Her nipples, like young blossom'd jessamines. Spenser.

To JEST. v. n. [gesflicolor, Latin.] To divert or make merry by words or action.

Jest not with a rude man, lest thy ancestors be disgraced. Ecclesi.

Fear you the boar, and go so unprovided?
—You may jest on; but I do not like these feveral councils. Shakspeare's Richard III.

JEST. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing ludicrous, or meant only to raise laughter.

But is this true, or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake? Shakspeare.
As for jest, there he certain things which ought to be privileged from it; namely, religion, matters of state, and great persons. Bacon.

No man ought to have the less reverence for the principles of religion, or for the holy scriptures, because idle and profane wits can break *jest*s upon them. Tillotson.

He had turn'd all tragedy to jest. Prior.
When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made. Young.

2. The object of jests; a laughingstock.

If I suspect without cause, way then make spout at me; then let me be your jest, I deserve it. Shakspeare.

3. Manner of doing or speaking feigned, not real; ludicrous, not serious; game, not earnest.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And giv'n in earnest, what I begg'd in jest.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

When his playfellows chose him their king,
he spoke and did those things in jest, which would have become a king in earnest. Grew.

JESTER. n. f. [from jest.]

1. One given to merriment and pranks.

The skipping king, he rambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits;
Soon kindled and soon burnt. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

2. One given to sarcasm.

Now as a jestler I accost you,
Which never yet one friend hath lost you. Swift.

3. Buffoon; jackpudding. A jestler, or licensed scoffer, was kept at court to the time of Charles the first.

Another sort of like loose fellows do pass up and down, amongst gentlemen, by the name of jesters; but are, indeed, notable rogues, and partakers not only of many stealths, but also privy to many traitorous practices. Spenser on Ireland.

JET. n. f. [gagax, Saxon; get, Dutch; gagates, Latin.]

1. A beautiful fossil, of a firm and even structure, and a smooth surface; found in masses, seldom of a great size, lodged in clay; of a fine deep black, having a grain resembling that of wood. It is confounded with cannal-coal, which has no grain, and is extremely hard; and the jet is but moderately so. Hill.
Black, ferthooth; coal-black, as jet. Shakspeare.
There is more difference between thy flesh and hairs, than between jet and ivory. Shakspeare.
The bottom clear
Now laid with many a fet,
Of seed pearl, ere she bath'd her tiere,
Was known as black as jet. Drayton.
One of us in glass is jet,
One of us you'll find in jet. Swift.
Under flowing jet,
The neck slight shaded. Thomson's Summer.

2. [jet, Fr.] A spout or shoot of water.

Prodigious 'tis, that one attractive ray
Should this way bend, the next an adverse way!
For should th' unseen magnetick jets descend
All the same way, they could not gain their end. Blackmore.

Thus the small jet, which hasty hands unlock,
Spouts in the gard'ner's eyes who turns the cock. Pope.

3. A yard. Obsolete.

What orchard unrobbed escapes,
Or pullet dare walk in their jet? Tusser's Husb.

To JET. v. n. [jetter, Fr.]

Contemplation makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced plumes. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

3. To jolt; to be shaken.

Upon the jetting of a hackney-coach she was thrown out of the hinder seat against a bar of iron in the forepart. Wiseman.

JETSAM. } n. f. [jetter, French.] Goods
JETSON. } or other things which, having been cast overboard in a storm, or after shipwreck, are thrown upon the shore, and belong to the lord admiral.

JETTY. adj. [from jet.]

1. Made of jet.

2. Black as jet.

The people about Capo Negro, Cefala, and Madagascar, are of a jetty black. Brown.

Her hair
Adown her shoulders loosely lay display'd,
And in her jetty curls ten thousand Cupids play'd. Prior.

Nigrina black, and Merdamante brown,
Vied for his love in jetty bow'rs below. Pope.

JEWEL. n. f. [joyaux, Fr. jewelen, Dut.]

1. Any ornament of great value, used commonly of such as are adorned with precious stones.

Here, wear this jewel for me; 'tis my picture. Shakspeare.

They found him dead, and cast into the streets,
An empty casket, where the jewel, life,
By some damn'd hand was robb'd and ta'en away. Shakspeare.

The pleasure of the religious man is an easy and portable pleasure, such an one as he carries about in his bosom, without alarming either the eye or envy of the world; a man putting all his pleasures into this one, is like a traveller's putting all his goods into one jewel. South.

2. A precious stone; a gem.

Jewels too, stones, rich and precious stone,
Stol'n by my daughter! Shakspeare.

Proud fame's imperial seat
With jewels blaz'd, magnificently great. Pope.

3. A name of fondness; an appellation of tender regard.

Bid farewell to your sisters
—Ye jewels of our father, with wash'd eyes
Cordelia leaves you. Shakspeare's King Lear.

The king has made him master of the jewel-house. Shakspeare.

JEWELLER. n. f. [from jewel.] One who trafficks in precious stones.

These games were as like little dice as if they had been made by a jeweller. Boyle.

The price of the market to a jeweller in his trade is one thing; but the manifold worth of a thing to a man of sense is another. L'Esperance.

I will turn jeweller: I shall then deal in diamonds, and all sorts of rich stones. Adisson.

JEWEL-EAR. n. f. [from its resemblance of the human ear. Skinner.] A fungus, tough and thin; and naturally, while growing, of a rumpled figure, like a flat and variously hollowed cup; from an inch to two inches in length, and about two thirds of its length in breadth. Its sides in many places run into the hollow, so as to represent in it ridges like those of the human ear. It generally grows on the lower parts of the trunks of elder-trees decaying. The common people cure themselves of sore throats with a decoction of it in milk. Hill.

An herb called jeus-ear groweth upon the lower parts of eldes, and sometimes affes: in warm water it swelleth, and openeth extremely. Bacon's Natural History.

JEW'S-HARP. n. f. A kind of muscal instrument held between the teeth, which gives a sound by the motion of a broad spring of iron, which being struck by the hand, plays against the breath.

JEW'S-MALLOW. n. f. [corchorus, Latin.] Ranwolf says it is sown in great plenty about Aleppo as a pot-herb, the Jews boiling the leaves of this plant to eat it with their meat. Miller.

JEW'S-STONE. n. f. The elevated spine of a very large egg-shaped sea-urchin, petrified by long lying in the earth. It is of a regular figure, oblong and rounded, swelling in the middle, and gradually tapering; about three quarters of an inch in length, and half an inch in diameter; ridged and furrowed alternately, in a longitudinal direction; and its colour is a pale dusky grey, with a faint cast of dusky reddishness. It is found in Syria. Hill's Mat. Med.

JF. conjunction. [Ꝛꝛ, Saxon.]

1. Suppose it be so, or it were so, that. A hypothetical particle.

Absolute approbation, without any cautions, qualifications, ifs or ands. Hooker.

If that rebellion

Came like itself in base and abject routs;
I say, if damn'd commotion so appear'd,
In his true, native, and most proper shape,
You, reverend father, and these noble lords,
Had not been there. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

If they have done this deed, my noble lord.
—If! talk't thou to me of ifs? Thou art a traitor. Shakespeare.

This seeing of all things, because we can desire to see all things, Malbranche makes a proof that they are present to our minds; and if they be present, they can no ways be present but by the presence of God, who contains them all. Locke.

This infallibility upon supposition, amounts to this, that if a thing be true, it is impossible to be false. Tillotson.

All of them supposed the apostle to have allowed the Epicurean maxims to be good; if so be there were no resurrection. Atterbury.

Tisphone, that oft hast heard my pray'r,
Assist, if Oedipus deserve thy care. Pope.

2. Whether or no.

Uncertain if by augury, or chance;
*But by this easy rite they all advance. Dryden.

She doubts if two and two make four:
It can't—it may be—and it must;
To wh'ch of these must Alma trust?

Nay, further yet they make her go,
In doubting if the doubts'er no. Prior.

 self not to be ill qualified, because I have had opportunities to observe the follies of women. Swift.

Actions are pleasing or displeasing, either in themselves, or considered as a means to a greater and more desirable end: the eating of a well-seasoned dish, suited to a man's palate, may move the mind, by the delight itself that accompanies the eating, without reference to any other end; to which the consideration of the pleasure there is in health and strength may add a new gust, able to make us swallow an ill relish'd potion. Locke.

Blushes, ill restrain'd, betray
 Her thoughts intensive on the bridal day. Pope.

One that had been bountiful only upon surprize and incogitancy, illiberally retreats. Decay of Piety

ILLY'CIT. adj. [illicitus, Lat. illicite, Fr.] Unlawful: as, an illicite trade.

To ILLIGH'TEN. v. n. [in and lighten.] To enlighten; to illuminate. A word, I believe, only in Raleigh.

Corporal light cannot be, because then it would not pierce the air, nor diaphanous bodies; and yet every day we see the air illigh'ten'd. Raleigh

ILLIMITABLE. adj. [in and limes, Lat.] That cannot be bounded or limited.

Although in adoration of idols, unto the subtler heads, the worship perhaps might be symbolical; yet was the idolatry direct in the people, whose credulity is illimitable, and who may be made believe that any thing is God. Brown.

With what an awful world-revolving power, Where first th' unwicly planets launch'd along The illimitable void! Thomson's Summer.

ILLIMITABLY. adv. [from illimitable.] Without susceptibility of bounds.

ILLIMITED. adj. [in and limes, Latin, illimité, French.] Unbounded; interminable.

ILLIMITEDNESS. n. f. [from illimited.] Exemption from all bounds.

The absoluteness and illimitedness of his commission was generally much spoken of. Clarendon.

ILLITERATE. adj. [illiteratus, Lat.] Unlettered; untaught; unlearned; unenlightened by science.

The duke was illiterate, yet had learned at court to supply his own defects, by the drawing unto him of the best instruments of experience. Wotton.

Th' illiterate writer, empirick like, applies To minds diseases unsafe chance remedies: The learn'd in schools, where knowledge first began,

Studies with care th' anatomy of man; Sees virtue, vice, and passions in their cause, And fame from science, not from fortune draws. Dryden.

In the first ages of christianity not only the learned and the wise, but the ignorant and illiterate embraced torments and death. Tillotson.

ILLITERATENESS. n. f. [from illiterate.] Want of learning; ignorance of science.

Many acquainted with chymistry but by report, have, from the illiterateness and impostures of those that pretend skill in it, entertained an ill opinion of the art. Boyle.

ILLITERATURE. n. f. [in and literature.] Want of learning. Not much used.

The more usual causes of this deprivation are want of holy orders, illiterature, or inability for the discharge of that sacred function, and irreligion. Wyllyffe's Peregrin.

ILLNESS. n. f. [from ill.]

1. Badness or inconvenience of any kind, natural or moral.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison-doors set open, is perfectly at liberty, though his preference be determined to stay, by the illness of the weather. Locke.

2. Sickness; malady; disorder of health.

On the Lord's day which immediately preceded his illness, he had received the sacrament. Atterbury.

Since the account her majesty received of the insolent faction, during her late illness at Windsor, she hath been willing to see them deprived of power to do mischief. Swift.

3. Wickedness.

Thou would be great; Art not without ambition; but without The illness should attend it. Shakspeare

ILLNATURE. n. f. [ill and nature.] Habitual malevolence; want of humanity.

Illnature inclines a man to those actions that thwart and sour and disturb conversation, and consists of a proneness to do ill turns, attended with a secret joy upon the sight of any mischief that bet its another, and of an utter insensibility of any kindness done him. South.

ILLNATURED. adj. [from illnature.]

1. Habitually malevolent; wanting kindness or good-will; mischievous; desirous of another's evil.

These ill qualities denominate a person illnature'd, they being such as make him grievous and uneasy to all whom he deals and associates himself with. South.

Stay, silly bird, th' illnatur'd task refuse; Nor be the bearer of unwelcome news. Addison.

It might be one of those illnature'd beings who are at enmity with mankind, and do therefore take pleasure in filling them with groundless terrors. Atterbury.

2. Philips applies it to land. Untractable; not yielding to culture.

The fondly studious of increase, Rich foreign mould on their illnature'd land Induce. Philips.

ILLNATUREDLY. adv. [from illnature'd.] In a peevish, froward manner.

ILLNATUREDNESS. n. f. [from illnature'd.] Want of a kindly disposition.

ILLOGICAL. adj. [in and logical.]

1. Ignorant or negligent of the rules of reasoning.

One of the dissenters appeared to Dr. Sander-son so bold and illogical in the dispute, as forced him to say, he had never met with a man of more pertinacious confidence, and less abilities. Walton.

2. Contrary to the rules of reason.

Reason cannot dispute and make an inference so utterly illogical. Decay of Piety.

ILLOGICALLY. adv. [from illogical.] In a manner contrary to the laws of argument.

To ILLU'DE. v. a. [illudo, Latin.] To deceive; to mock; to impose on; to play upon; to torment by some contemptuous artifice of mockery.

Sometimes athwart, sometimes he brook him strait, And falsed off his blow, t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

In vain we measure this amazing sphere, While its circumference, scornful to be brought Ev'n into fancy'd space, illudes our vanquish'd thought. Prior.

To ILLU'ME. v. a. [illuminer, French.]

1. To enlighten; to illuminate.

When you came star, that 's westward from the pole, Had made his course, t' illumine that part of heav'n,

Where now it burns. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

2. To brighten; to adorn.

The mountain's brow Illum'd with fluid gold, his near approach Betokens. Thomson's Summer.

To ILLU'MINE. v. a. [illuminer, Fr.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

To confirm his words, out flew Millions of flaming words, drawn from the thighs Of mighty cherubims: the sudden blaze Far round illum'd hell. Milton.

What in me is dark, illumine! what is low, raise and support! Milton.

2. To decorate; to adorn.

To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line; O let my country's friends illumine mine. Pope.

To ILLU'MINATE. v. a. [illuminer, French; lumen, Latin.]

1. To enlighten; to supply with light.

Do thou vouchsafe, with thy love-kindling light, T' illumine my dim and dulled eye. Spenser.

No painting can be seen in full perfection, but as all nature is illuminated by a single light. Wotton.

He made the stars, And set them in the firmament of heav'n, T' illumine the earth and rule the night. Milton.

Reason our guide, what can the more reply Than that the sun illumines the sky; Than that night rises from his absent ray, And his returning lustre kindles day? Prior.

2. To adorn with festal lamps or bonfires.

3. To enlighten intellectually with knowledge or grace.

Satan had no power to abuse the illuminated world with his impostures. Sandys' Travels.

When he illuminates the mind with supernatural light, he does not extinguish that which is natural. Locke.

4. To adorn with pictures or initial letters of various colours.

5. To illustrate.

My health is insufficient to amplify these remarks, and to illuminate the several pages with variety of examples. Watts.

ILLUMINATION. n. f. [illuminatio, Lat. illumination, Fr. from illuminate.]

1. The act of supplying with light.

2. That which gives light.

The sun is but a body illightened, and an illuminatation created. Raleigh's History.

3. Festal lights hung out as a token of joy.

Flow'rs are strew'd, and lamps in order plac'd,
And windows with illuminations grac'd. Dryd.

4. Brightness; splendour.

The illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius
giveth to his work. Felton.

5. Infusion of intellectual light; knowledge of grace.

Hymns and psalms are such kinds of prayer as are not conceived upon a sudden; but framed by meditation beforehand, or by prophetic illumination are inspired. Hooker.

We have forms of prayer imploring God's aid and blessing for the illumination of our labours, and the turning them into good and holy uses.

No holy passion, no illumination, no inspiration, can be now a sufficient commission to warrant those attempts which contradict the common rules of peace. Sprat's Sermons.

ILLUMINATIVE. adj. [illuminatif, Fr.
from illuminate.] Having the power to give light.

What makes itself and other things be seen, being accompanied by light, is called fire: what admits the illuminative action of fire, and is not seen, is called air. Digby on Bodies.

ILLUMINATOR. n. f. [from illuminate.]

1. One who gives light.

2. One whose business it is to decorate books with pictures at the beginning of chapters.

Illuminators of manuscripts borrowed their title from the illumination which a bright genius
giveth to his work. Felton.

ILLUSION. n. f. [illusio, Latin; illusion, Fr.] Mockery; false show; counterfeit appearance; error.

That, distill'd by magic flights,
Shall raise such artificial thoughts,
As, by the strength of their illusion,
Shall draw him on to his confusion. Shaksp.

There wanted not some about him that would have persuaded him that all was but an illusion.
Bacon's Henry VII.

So oft they fell
Into the same illusion; not as man Whom they triumph'd, once laps'd. Milton.

An excuse for uncharitableness, drawn from pretended inability, is of all others the most general and prevailing illusion. Atterbury.

Many are the illusions by which the enemy endeavours to cheat men into security, and defeat their salvation. Rogers.

To dream once more I close my willing eyes;
Ye soft illusions, dear deceits, arise! Pope.

We must use some illusion to render a pastoral delightful; and this consists in exposing the best side only of a shepherd's life, and in concealing its miseries. Pope.

ILLUSIVE. adj. [from illusus, Lat.] Deceiving by false show.

The heathen hard, who idle fables dress,
Illusive dreams in mystick forms exprest. Blackmore.

While the fond soul
Wrapt in gay visions of unequal bliss,
Still paints th' illusive form. Thomson.

ILLUSORY. adj. [from in and lusorius, Latin; illusoire, French.] Deceiving; fraudulent.

Subtily, in those who make profession to teach or defend truth, hath passed for a virtue: a virtue indeed, which, consisting for the most part in nothing but the fallacious and illusory use of obscure or deceitful terms, is only fit to make men more conceited in their ignorance. Locke.

To ILLUSTRATE. v. n. [illustrare,
Latin; illustrer, French.]

1. To brighten with light.

2. To brighten with honour.

Matter to me of glory! whom their hate Illustrates, when they see all regal pow'r Giv'n to me to quell their pride. Milton.

Thou she enrol'd her garter'd knights among,
Illustrating the noble list. Phillips.

3. To explain; to clear; to elucidate.

Authors take up popular conceits, and from tradition unjustifiable, or false, illustrate matters of undeniable truth. Brown.

ILLUSTRATION. n. f. [illustration, Fr.
from illustrate.] Explanation; elucidation; exposition. It is seldom used in its original signification for material brightness.

Whoever looks about him will find many living illustrations of this emblem. L'Esrange.

Space and duration, being ideas that have something very abstract and peculiar in their nature, the comparing them one with another may perhaps be of use for their illustration. Locke.

ILLUSTRATIVE. adj. [from illustrate.] Having the quality of elucidating or clearing.

They play much upon the simile, or illustrative argumentation, to induce their enemies unto the people. Brown.

ILLUSTRATIVELY. adv. [from illustrative.] By way of explanation.

Things are many times delivered hieroglyphically, metaphorically, illustratively, and not with reference to action. Brown.

ILLUSTRIOUS. adj. [illustris, Lat.
illustre, French.] Conspicuous; noble;
eminent for excellence.

In other languages the most illustrious titles are derived from things sacred. South.

Of ev'ry nation, each illustrious name,
Such toys as those have cheated into fame. Dryd.

ILLUSTRIOUSLY. adv. [from illustrious.]
Conspicuously; nobly; eminently.

He disdain'd not to appear at festival entertainments, that he might more illustriously manifest his charity. Atterbury.

You carrying with you all the world can boast,
To all the world illustriously are lost. Pope.

ILLUSTRIOUSNESS. n. f. [from illustrious.] Eminence; nobility; grandeur.
P.M. Contracted from I am.

IM is used commonly, in composition, for in before mute letters. What is in in Latin, when it is not negative, is often em in French; and our writers, as the Latin or French occurs to their minds, use im or em: formerly im was more common, and now em seems to prevail.

IMAGE. n. f. [imago, Fr. imago, Lat.]

1. Any corporeal representation, generally used of statues; a statue; a picture.

Whose is this image and superscription? Matt.

The one is too like an image, and says nothing;
and the other too like my lady's oldest son, evermore talking. Shakspere.

Thy brother I,
Even like a stony image, cold and numb. Shaksp.

The image of a deity may be a proper object for that which is but the image of a religion.
South.

Still must I be upbraided with your line;
But your late brother did not prize me less,
Because I could not boast of images. Dryden.

2. An idol; a false god.
Manasseh set the carved image in God's house.
Chronicles.

3. A copy; representation; likeness.
Long may'st thou live,
To bear his image and renew his glories! Shaksp.

I have bewept a worthy husband's death,
And liv'd by looking on his images:
But now two mirrours of his princely semblance
Are crack'd in pieces by malignant death.
Shakspere's Richard III.

He made us to his image all agree:
That image is the fool, and that must be,
Or not the maker's image, or be free. Dryden.

4. Semblance; show; appearance.
Deny to speak with me? They're sick, they 're weary.

They have travell'd all night! Mere fetches,
The images of revolt. Shakspere's King Lear.

This is the man should do the bloody deed:
The image of a wicked heinous fault Lives in his eye. Shakspere's King John

The face of things a frightful image bears,
And present death in various forms appears.
Dryden's Æneid.

5. An idea; a representation of any thing to the mind; a picture drawn in the fancy.

The image of the jest
I'll shew you here at large. Shakspere.

Outcasts of mortal race! can we conceive
Image of aught delightful, soft, or great? Prior.

When we speak of a figure of a thousand angles, we may have a clear idea of the number one thousand angles; but the image, or sensible idea, we cannot distinguish by fancy from the image of a figure that has nine hundred angles.
Watts.

To IMAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To copy by the fancy; to imagine.

How are immaterial subtilities to be imag'd, which are such things whereof we can have no notion? Dryden.

Image to thy mind
How our forefathers to the Stygian shades Went quick. Phillips.

His ear oft frighted with the imag'd voice
Of heav'n, when first it thunder'd. Prior.

Fate some future hard shall join,
In sad similitude of griefs to mine,
Condemn'd whole years in absence to deplore,
And image charms he must behold no more.

Pope.

IMAGERY. n. f. [from image.]

1. Sensible representations; pictures; statues.

Of marble stone was cut
An altar carv'd with cunning imagery. F. Queen.

When in those oratories might you see
Rich carvings, portraitures, and imagery;
Where ev'ry figure to the life express'd
The godhead's pow'r. Dryden.

Your gift shall two large goblets be
Of silver, wrought with curious imagery,
And high emboss'd. Dryden's Æneid.

2. Show; appearance.
Things of the world fill the imaginative part with beauties and fantastick imagery. Taylor.

What can thy imagery of sorrow mean?
Secured from the world, and all its care,
Hast thou to grieve or joy, to hope or fear?
Prior.

All the visionary beauties of the prospect, the giant and imagery that attracted our senses, fade and disappear. Rogers.

3. Forms of the fancy; false ideas; imaginary phantasms.

It might be a mere dream which he saw; the imagery of a melancholick fancy, such as musing men mistake for a reality. Atterbury.

4. Representations in writing; such descriptions as force the image of the thing described upon the mind.

I wish there may be in this poem any instance of good imagery. Dryden.

IMAGINABLE. adj. [imaginable, French, from imagine.] Possible to be conceived.

It is not imaginable that men will be brought to obey what they cannot effect. South.

Men, sunk into the greatest darkness imaginable, retain some sense and awe of a Deity. Tillotson.

IMAGINANT. adj. [imaginant, French.] Imagining; forming ideas.

We will enquire what the force of imagination is, either upon the body imaginant, or upon another body. Bacon.

IMAGINARY. adj. [imaginaire, Fr. from imagine.] Fancied; visionary; existing only in the imagination.

False sorrow's eye,

Which, for things true, weeps things imaginary. Shakespeare.

Expectation whirls me round:

Th' imaginary relish is so sweet,

That it enchants my sense.

Shakespeare

Fortune is nothing else but a power imaginary, to which the successes of human actions and endeavours were for their variety ascribed. Raleigh's History.

Why wilt thou add, to all the griefs I suffer, Imaginary ills and fancied tortures? Adelphi.

IMAGINATION. n. f. [imaginatio, Latin; imagination, French; from imagine.]

1. Fancy; the power of forming ideal pictures; the power of representing things absent to one's self or others.

Imagination I understand to be the representation of an individual thought. Imagination is of three kinds: joined with belief of that which is to come; joined with memory of that which is past; and of things present, or as if they were present: for I comprehend in this imagination feigned and at pleasure, as if one should imagine such a man to be in the vestments of a pope, or to have wings. Bacon.

Our simple apprehension of corporal objects, if present, is sense; if absent, imagination: when we would perceive a material object, our fancies present us with its idea. Glaucille.

O whether shall I run, or which way fly
The sight of this so horrid spectacle,
Which erst my eyes beheld, and yet behold!
For dire imagination still pursues me. Milton.

Where beams of warm imagination play,
The memory's lost figures melt away. Pope.

2. Conception; image in the mind; idea.

Sometimes despair darkens all her imaginations; sometimes the active passion of love cheers and clears her invention. Sidney.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And, for unselt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shaksp.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs;
And woes, by wrong imaginations, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakespeare.

His imaginations were often as just as they were bold and strong. Dennis.

3. Contrivance; scheme.

Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me. Lamentations.

4. An unfolld or fanciful opinion.

VOL. J.

We are apt to think that space, in itself, is actually boundless; to which imagination, the idea of space, of itself, leads us. Locke.

IMAGINATIVE. adj. [imaginatif, French; from imagine.] Fantastick; full of imagination.

Witches are imaginative, and believe oft times they do that which they do not. Bacon.

Lay fetters and restraints upon the imaginative and fantastick part, because our fancy is usually pleased with the entertainment of shadows and gauds. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

To IMAGINE. v. a. [imaginer, French; imaginar, Latin.]

1. To fancy; to point in the mind.

Look what notes and garments he doth give thee,
Bring them, I pray thee, with imagin'd speed. Shakespeare.

Present fears

Are less than horrible imaginings. Shakespeare.

What are our ideas of eternity and immensity but the repeated additions of certain ideas of imagined parts of duration and expansion, with the infinity of number, in which we can come to no end of addition? Locke.

2. To scheme; to contrive.

They intended evil against thee, they imagined a mischievous device. Psalms.

IMAGINER. n. f. [from imagine.] One who forms ideas.

The juggler took upon him to know that such an one should point in such a place of a garter that was held up; and still he did it, by first telling the *imagine*r, and after bidding the actor think. Bacon.

IMBECILE. adj. [imbecilis, Latin; imbecille, French.] Weak; feeble; wanting strength of either mind or body.

To IMBECILE. v. a. [from the adjective. This word is corruptly written embezzle.] To weaken a flock or fortune by clandestine expences or unjust appropriations.

Princes must in a special manner be guardians of pupils and widows, not suffering their persons to be oppressed, or their states imbeciled. Taylor.

IMBECILITY. n. f. [imbecillité, French.] Weakness; feebleness of mind or body.

A weak and imperfect rule argueth imbecility and imperfection. Hooker.

No imbecility of means can prejudice the truth of the promise of God herein. Hooker.

We that are strong must bear the imbecility of the impotent, and not please ourselves. Hooker.

That way we are contented to prove, which, being the worse in itself, is notwithstanding now, by reason of common imbecility, the fitter and likelier to be brooked. Hooker.

Strength would be lord of imbecility,
And the rude son would strike his father dead. Shakespeare.

Imbecility, for sex and age, was such as they could not lift up a hand against them. King Charles.

When man was fallen, and had abandoned His primitive innocence, a strange imbecility immediately seized and laid hold of him. Woodward.

To IMBIBE. v. a. [imbibo, Latin; imbiber, French.]

1. To drink in; to draw in.

A pot of ashes will receive more hot water than cold, soasmuch as the warm water imbibeth more of the salt. Brown.

The torrent merciless imbibes
Commissions, perquisites, and bribes. Stuiff.

Illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun. Thomson's Autumn.

2. To admit into the mind.

Those, that have imbibed this error, have extended the influence of this belief to the whole gospel, which they will not allow to contain any thing but promises. Hamm rd.

It is not easy for the mind to put off those confused notions and prejudices it has imbibed from custom. Locke.

Conversation with foreigners enlarges our minds, and sets them free from many prejudices we are ready to imbibe concerning them. Watts.

3. To drench; to saturate; to soak.

This sense, though unusual, perhaps unexampled, is necessary in English, unless the word imbue be adopted, which our writers seem not willing to receive.

Metals, corroded with a little acid, turn into rust, which is an earth-tasteless and indissoluble in water; and this earth, imbibed with more acid, becomes a metallick salt. Newton.

IMBIBER. n. f. [from imbibe.] That which drinks or sucks.

Salts are strong imbibers of sulphurous steams. Arbuthnot.

IMBIBITION. n. f. [imbibition, Fr. from imbibe.] The act of sucking or drinking in.

* Most powders grow more coherent by mixture of water than of oil: the reason is the congruity of bodies, which maketh a perfecter imbibition and incorporation. Bacon.

Heat and cold have a virtual transition, without communication of substance, but in moisture not; and to all madefaction there is required an imbibition. Bacon.

A drop of oil, let fall upon a sheet of white paper, that part of it, which, by the imbibition of the liquor, acquires a greater continuity and some transparency, will appear much darker than the rest; many of the incident beams of light being now transmitted, that otherwise would be reflected. Boyle.

To IMBITTER. v. a. [from bitter.]

1. To make bitter.

2. To deprive of pleasure; to make unhappy.

Let them extinguish their passions which im-bitter their lives, and deprive them of their share in the happiness of the community. Adelphi.

Is there any thing that more imbitters their enjoyments of this life than shame? South.

3. To exasperate.

To IMBODDY. v. a. [from body.]

1. To condense to a body.

2. To invest with matter; to make corporeal.

An opening cloud reveals

An heav'nly form imboddy'd, and array'd

With robes of light. Dryden.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immaterialized spirits, yet is it more than our imbodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glaucille's Scops.

3. To bring together into one mass or company; to incorporate.

I by vow am so imbodied yours,
That she which marries you must marry me. Shakespeare.

Never since created, man

Met such imbodied forces, as nam'd with these,
Could merit more than that small infantry.

Warr'd on by cranes. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Under their head imboddy'd all in one. Milton.

Then Clausus came, who led a numerous band
Of troops imbodied, from the Sabine land. Dryden.

4. To enclose. Improper.

In those strata we shall meet with the same metal or mineral imbodied in stone, or lodged in coal, that elsewhere we found in marble. Woodward's Natural History.

To IMBODDY. v. n. To unite into one mass; to coalesce.

The soul grows clotted by contagion, Imbodies and imbrotes, 'till the quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

The idea of white, which snow yielded yesterday, and another idea of white from another snow to-day, put together in your mind, imbody and run into one. Locke.

To IMBOIL. v. n. [from boil.] To exultate; to effervesce; to move with violent agitation like hot liquor in a caldron. Not in use.

With whose reproach and odious menace,
The knight imbailing in his haughty heart,
Knit all his forces, and 'gan soon unbrace
His grasping hold. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'LDEN. v. a. [from bold.] To raise to confidence; to encourage.

'Tis necessary he should die;

Nothing imboldens sin so much as mercy. Shaksp.

I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are, the which hath something imbolden'd me to this unfeathered intrusion. Shaksp.

I was the more imbolden'd, because I found I had a soul congenial to his. Dryden.

Nor flight was left, nor hopes to force his way;

Imbolden'd by despair, he stood at bay. Dryden.

Their virtues and superior genius imbolden'd them, in great exigencies of state, to attempt the service of their prince and country out of the common forms. Swift.

To IMBO'SOM. v. a. [from bosom.]

1. To hold on the bosom; to cover fondly with the folds of one's garment; to hide under any cover.

The Father infinite,

By whom in bliss imbosom'd sat the Son. Milton.

Villages imbosom'd soft in trees,
And spiry towns by furling columns mark'd. Thomson.

2. To admit to the heart, or to affection.

But glad desire, his late imbosom'd guest,
Yet but a babe, with milk of fight he nourish. Sidney.

Who glad t' imbosom his affection vile,
Did all she might, more plainly to appear. Fairy Queen.

To IMBO'UND. v. a. [from bound.] To enclose; to shut in.

That sweet breath,
Which was imbound'd in this beauteous clay. Shakspere.

To IMBO'W. v. a. [from bow.] To arch; to vault.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond fure, Imbow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament. Fairy Queen.

Imbow'd windows be pretty retiring places for conference: they keep both the wind and sun off. Bacon.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the studious cloister's pale,
And love the high imbow'd roof,
With antic pillar massy proof. Milton.

To IMBO'WER. v. a. [from bower.] To cover with a bower; to shelter with trees.

And stooping thence to Ham's imbow'ring walks,
In spotless peace retired. Thomson.

IMBOWMENT. n. f. [from imbow.] Arch; vault.

The roof all open, not so much as any imbowment near any of the walls left. Bacon.

To IMBRA'NGLE. v. a. To entangle. A low word.

With subtle cobweb cheats
They're catch'd in knotted law, like nets;
In which, when once they are imbrangled,
The more they sit, the more they're tangled. Hadibrac.

IMBRICATED. adj. [from imbrex, Lat.] Indented with concavities; bent and hollowed like a roof or gutter-tile.

IMBRICATION. n. f. [from imbrex, Latin.] Concave indenture.

All is guarded with a well-made tegument, adorned with neat imbrications, and many other fineries. Derham.

To IMBROW'N. v. a. [from brown.] To make brown; to darken; to obscure; to cloud.

Where the morning sun first warmly smote
The open field, and where the unperc'd shade
Imbrown'd the noontide bow'rs. Milton.

The foot grows black that was with dirt imbrown'd,
And in thy pocket ginging halfpence found. Gay.

Another age shall see the golden ear
Imbrown the slope, and nod on the parterre. Pope.

Imbrown'd with native bronze, lo! Henly stands. Pope.

To IMBRU'E. v. a. [from in and brue.]

1. To steep; to soak; to wet much or long. This seems indifferently written with in or em. I have sustained both modes of writing.

Thou mad'st many hearts to bleed
Of mighty victors, with wide wounds embru'd,
And by thy cruel darts to thee subdu'd Spenfer.

There streams a spring of blood to fall
From those deep wounds, as all embru'd the face
Of that accur'd caiff. Daniel's Civ' War

The merciless Turks, embru'd with the christian blood, were weary of slaughter, and began greedily to seek after the spoil. Kneller's History.

At me, as at a mark, his bow he drew,
Whose arrows in my blood their wings embru'd. Sandys.

Lucius pities the offenders,
That would embru'e their hands in Cato's blood. Adriano.

Lo! these hands in murder are embru'd,
Those trembling feet by justice are pursu'd. Prior.

There, where two ways in equal parts divide,
The direful monster from afar deserv'd
Two bleeding babes depending at her side;
Whose panting vitals, warm with life, the draws,
And in their hearts embrues her cruel claws. Pope.

His virgin sword Aegythus' veins embru'd;
The murd'rer fell, and blood aton'd for blood. Pope.

A good man chuses rather to pass by a verbal injury than imbru'e his hands in blood. Clarissa.

2. To pour; to emit moisture. Obsolete.

Some bathed kisses, and did oft embru'e.
The sugar'd liquor through his melting lips. Fairy Queen.

To IMBRU'UTE. v. a. [from brute.] To degrade to brutality.

I, who erst contended
With gods to fit the highest, am now constrain'd
Into a beast; and mix with bestial slime,
This essence to incarnate and imbrute. Milton.

To IMBRU'UTE. v. n. To sink down to brutality.

The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being. Milton.

To IMBU'E. v. a. [from imbuo, Latin.] This word, which seems wanting in our language, has been proposed by several writers, but not yet adopted by the rest.

Imbu, French, the participial adj. is only used.] To tincture deep; to imbibe or soak with any liquor or die.

I would render this treatise intelligible to every rational man, however little versed in scholastick learning; among whom I expect it will have a siter passage, than among those that are deeply imbu'd with other principles. Digby.

Clothes which have once been thoroughly imbu'd with black, cannot well afterwards be dyed into lighter colour. Boyle.

Where the mineral matter is great, so as to take the eye, the body appears imbu'd and tinctured with the colour. Woodward.

To IMBU'RSE. v. a. [bourse, Fr.] To stock with money. This should be emburse, from embourser, French.

IMITABILITY. n. f. [imitabilitas, Latin.] The quality of being imitable.

According to the multitariousness of this imitability, so are the possibilities of being. Norris.

IMITABLE. adj. [imitabilis, Lat. imitable, French.]

1. Worthy to be imitated; deserving to be copied.

How could the most base men, and separate from all imitable qualities, attain to honour but by an observant slavish course? Raleigh.

As acts of parliament are not regarded by most imitable writers, I account the relation of them improper for history. Hayward.

2. Possible to be imitated; within reach of imitation.

The characters of men placed in lower stations of life, are more useful, as being imitable by greater numbers. Atterbury.

To IMITATE. v. a. [imitor, Latin; imiter, French.]

1. To copy; to endeavour to resemble.

We imitate and practise to make swifter motions than any out of your muskets. Bacon.

Do not wealth, and imitate a god. Cowley.

I would careis some stableman of note,
And imitate his language and his coat. Man of Taste.

2. To counterfeit.

This hand appear'd a shining sword to wield,
And that sustain'd an imitated shield. Dryden.

3. To pursue the course of a composition, so as to use parallel images and examples.

For shame! what, imitate an ode! Gay.

IMITATION. n. f. [imitatio, Latin; imitation, French.]

1. The act of copying; attempt to resemble.

2. That which is offered as a copy.

Since a true knowledge of nature gives us pleasure, a lively imitation of it, either in poetry or painting, must produce a much greater; for both these arts are not only true imitations of nature, but of the best nature. Dryden.

3. A method of translating looser than paraphrase, in which modern examples and illustrations are used for ancient, or domestick for foreign.

In the way of imitation, the translator not only varies from the words and sense, but forsakes them as he sees occasion; and, taking only some general hints from the original, runs division on the ground-work. Dryden.

IMITATIVE. adj. [imitativus, Latin.]

1. Inclined to copy: as, man is an imitative being.

2. Aiming at resemblance: as, painting is an imitative art.

3. Formed after some original.

This temple, less in form, with equal grace,
Was imitative of the temple in Thrace. Dryden.

IMITATOR. n. f. [Latin; imitateur, Fr.] One that copies another; one that endeavours to resemble another.

Imitators are but a sterile kind of cattle, says the poet. Dryden.

IMMACULATE. adj. [immaculatus, Lat. immaculé, French.]

1. Spotless; pure; undefiled.

To keep this commandment immaculate and blameless, was to teach the gospel of Christ. Hooker.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate. Shaksp.
The king, whom catholicks count a faint-like and immaculate prince, was taken away in the flower of his age. Bacon.

Were but my soul as pure
From other guilts as that, Heav'n did not hold
One more immaculate. Denham's Sophy.

2. Pure; limpid.

Thou clear, immaculate, and silver fountain,
From whence this stream, through muddy passages,
Hath had his current and defil'd himself. Shaksp.

To IMMA'NACLE. v. a. [from manacle.]
To fetter; to confine.

Thou can't it not touch the freedom of my mind
With all thy charms, although this corporal rind
Thou hast immanac'l'd. Milton.

IMMA'NE. adj. [immanis, Latin.] Vast;
prodigiously great.

IMMANENT. adj. [immanent, French; in and maneo, Latin.] Intrinsic; inherent; internal.

Judging the infinite essence by our narrow selves, we ascribe intellections, volitions, and such like immanent actions, to that nature which hath nothing in common with us. Glanville.

What he wills and intends ouce, he willed and intended from all eternity; it being grossly contrary to the very first notions we have of the infinite perfections of the Divine Nature to state or suppose any new immanent act in God. South.

IMMA'NIFEST. adj. [in and manifest.]
Not manifest; not plain. Not in use.

A time not much unlike that which was before time, immanifest and unknown. Brown.

IMMA'NITY. n. f. [immanitas, Latin.]
Barbarity; savageness.

It was both impious and unnatural,
That such immanity and bloody strife
Should reign among professors of one faith. Shaksp.

IMMARCESSIBLE. adj. [in and marcesco, Latin.] Unfading. DiCt.

IMMARTIAL. adj. [in and martial.] Not warlike.

My pow'rs are unfit, Myself immartial. Chapman's Odyssey.

To IMMASK. v. a. [in and mask.] To cover; to disguise.

I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immask our noted outward garments. Shaksp.

IMMATERIAL. adj. [immaterial, French;
in and materia, Latin.]

1. Incorporeal; distinct from matter; void of matter.

Angels are spirits immaterial and intellectual,
the glorious inhabitants of those sacred palaces,
where there is nothing but light and immortality;
no shadow of matter for tears, discontentments, griefs, and uncomfortable passions to work upon;
but all joy, tranquillity, and peace, even for ever and ever, do dwell. Hooker.

As then the soul a substance hath alone,
Besides the body, in which she is confin'd;

So hath she not a body of her own,
But is a spirit, and immaterial mind. Davies.

Those immaterial felicities we expect, suggest the necessity of preparing our appetites, without which heaven can be no heaven to us.
Deany of Pitty.

No man that owns the existence of an infinite spirit can doubt of the possibility of a finite spirit; that is, such a thing as is immaterial, and does not contain any principle of corruption. Tillot.

2. Unimportant; without weight; impertinent; without relation. This sense has crept into the conversation and writings of barbarians; but ought to be utterly rejected.

IMMATERIA'LITY. n. f. [from immaterial.]
Incorporeity; distinctness from body or matter.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

IMMATERIALLY. adv. [from immaterial.]
In a manner not depending upon matter.

The visible species of things strike not our senses immaterially; but streaming in corporal rays do carry with them the qualities of the object from whence they flow, and the medium through which they pass. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMMATERIALIZED. adj. [from in and materia, Latin.] Distinct from matter;
incorporeal.

Though assiduity in the most fixed cogitation be no trouble to immateralized spirits, yet is it more than our embodied souls can bear without lassitude. Glanville's Sceptis.

IMMATERIALIZEDNESS. n. f. [from immaterial.] Distinctness from matter.

IMMATERIATE. adj. [in and materia, Latin.] Not consisting of matter; incorporeal; wanting body.

It is a virtue which may be called incorporeal and immaterial, whereof there be in nature but few. Bacon.

After a long enquiry of things immerse in matter, I interpose some object which is immate-riate, or less materiate; such as this of souls. Bacon.

IMMATURE. adj. [immaturus, Lat.]

1. Not ripe.
2. Not perfect; not arrived at fulness or completion.

The land enterprize of Panama was an ill measured and immature counsel, grounded upon a false account, that the passages were no better fortified than Drake had left them. Bacon.

This is your time for faction and debate,
For partial favour, and permitted hate;
Let now your immature dissension cease, Sit quiet. Dryden.

3. Hasty; early; come to pass before the natural time.

We are pleased, and call not that death immature, if a man lives 'till seventy. Taylor.

IMMATURELY. adv. [from immature.]
Too soon; too early; before ripeness or completion.

IMMATURENESS. } n. f. [from immature.]
IMMATUREITY. } Unripeness; incom-pletteness; a state short of completion.

I might reasonably expect a pardon from the ingenious for faults committed in an immaturity of age and judgment. Glanville.

IMMEABILITY. n. f. [immediabilis, Latin.] Want of power to pass. So it is used in the example; but it is rather, incapability of affording passage.

From this phlegm proceed white cold tumours, viscidities, and consequently immeability of the juices. Arbutnot.

IMMEASURABLE. adj. [in and measure.]
Immense; not to be measured; indefinitely extensive.

Churches reared up to an height immeasurable, and adorned with far more beauty in their restoration than their founders before had given them.
Hooker.

From the shore
They view'd the vast immeasurable abyss,
Outrageous as a sea, dark, wasteful, wild.
Milton.

Immeasurable strength they might behold
In me, of wisdom nothing more than mean.
Milton.

What a glorious show are those beings entertained with, that can see such tremendous objects wandering through those immeasurable depths of ether! Addison's Guardian.

Nor friends are there, nor vessels to convey,
Nor oars to cut th' immeasurable way. Pepe.

IMMEASURABLY. adv. [from immeasurable.] Immensely; beyond all measure.

The Spaniards immeasurably bewail their dead.
Spens.

There ye shall be fed, and fill'd
Immeasurably; all things shall be your prey.
Milton.

IMMECHANICAL. adj. [in and mechanical.]
Not according to the laws of mechanicks.

We have nothing to do to show any thing that is immechanical, or not according to the established laws of nature. Cuzyne.

Nothing will clear a head possessed with *imma-

IMMEDIACY. n. f. [from immediate.] Personal greatness; power of acting without dependance. This is a harin word, and sense peculiar, I believe, to

Shakspere.
He led our pow'rs,
Bore the commission of my place and person,
The which immediacy may well stand up,
And call itself your brother. King Lear.

IMMEDIATE. adj. [immediat, French;
in and medius, Latin]

1. Being in such a state with respect to something else as that there is nothing between them; proximate; with nothing intervening.

Moses mentions the immediate causes of the deluge, the rains and the waters; and St. Peter mentions the more remote and fundamental causes, that constitution of the heavens. Barnet.

2. Not acting by second causes.
It is much to be ascribed to the immediate will of God, who giveth and taketh away beauty at his pleasure. Abbot.

3. Instant; present with regard to time.
Prior therefore should not have written more immediate.

Immediate are my needs, and my relief
Must not be toft and turn'd to me in words,
But find supply immediate. Shakspere.

Death denounc'd that day,
Which he profumes already vain, and void,
Because not yet inflict'd, as he fear'd
By some immediate stroke. Milton.

But she, how'er of vict'ry sure,
Contents the wreath too long delay'd;
And arm'd with more immediate pow'r,
Calls cruel silence to her aid. Prior.

IMMEDIATELY. adv. [from immediate.]
1. Without the intervention of any other cause or event.

God's acceptance of it, either immediately by himself, or mediately by the hands of the bishop, is that which vests the whole property of a thing in God. South.

2. Instantly; at the time present; without delay.
Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender, and with him at Eaton Immediately to marry. Shakspere.

IMMEDIATENESS. n. f. [from immediate.]
1. Presence with regard to time.

2. Exemption from second or intervening causes.

IMMEDICABLE. adj. [immedicabilis, Lat.]
Not to be healed; incurable.

My griefs ferment and rage,
Nor less than wounds immedicable,
Rankle and fester, and gangrene
To black mortification. Milton's Agonist.

IMMEMORABLE. adj. [immemorabilis,
Latin.] Not worth remembering.

IMMEMORIAL. adj. [immemorial, French; in and memoria, Latin.] Past time of memory; so ancient that the beginning cannot be traced.

All the laws of this kingdom have some memorials in writing, yet all have not their original in writing; for some obtained their force by immemorial usage or custom. Hale.

By a long immemorial practice, and prescription of an aged thorough-paced hypocrisy, they come to believe that for a reality, which, at first practice of it, they themselves knew to be a cheat. South.

IMME'NSE. adj. [immenſe, French; immenſus, Latin.] Unlimited; unbounded; infinite.

O goodness infinite! goodness immenſe!
That all this good of evil shall produce! Milton.

As infinite duration hath no relation unto motion and time, so infinite or immenſe effence hath no relation unto body; but is a thing distinct from all corporeal magnitude, which we mean when we speak of immensity, and of God as of an immenſe being. Greux.

IMME'NSELY. adv. [from immenſe.] Infinitely; without measure.

We shall find that the void space of our system is immenſely bigger than all its corporeal parts. Bentley.

IMME'NSITY. n. f. [immenſité, French.] Unbounded greatness; infinity.

By the power we find in ourselves of repeating, as often as we will, any idea of space, we get the idea of immenſity. Locke.

He that will consider the immenſity of this fabric, and the great variety that is to be found in this inconsiderable part of it which he has to do with, may think that in other mansions of it there may be other and different intelligent beings. Locke.

All these illustrious worlds,
And millions which the glass can ne'er descry,
Lost in the wilds of vast immenſity,
Are suns, are centers. Blackmore's Creation.

IMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from immenſurable.] Impossibility to be measured.

IMMENSURABLE. adj. [in and menſurabilis, Latin.] Not to be measured.

TO IMMERGE. v. a. [immergo, Latin.] To put under water.

IMMERIT. n. f. [immerito, Latin.] Want of worth; want of desert. This is a better word than demerit, which is now used in its stead.

When I receive your lines, and find there expressions of a passion, reason and my own immerit tell me it must not be for me. Suckling.

TO IMMERSE. v. a. [immerſus, Latin.]

1. To put under water.
2. To sink or cover deep.

He stood
More than a mile immers'd within the wood;
At once the wind was laid. Dryden.

They observed that they were immers'd in their rocks, quarries, and mines, in the same manner as they are at this day found in all known parts of the world. Woodward.

3. To keep in a state of intellectual depression.

It is a melancholy reflection, that our country, which, in times of popery, was called the nation of saints, should now have less appearance of religion in it than any other neighbouring state or kingdom: whether they be such as continue still immers'd in the errors of the church of Rome, or such as are recovered out of them. Addison's Freeholder.

We are prone to engage ourselves with the business, the pleasures, and the amusements of this world: we give ourselves up too greedily to the pursuit, and immerſe ourselves too deeply in the enjoyments of them. Atterbury.

It is impossible to have a lively hope in another life, and yet be deeply immers'd in the enjoyments of this. Atterbury.

IMMERSE. adj. [immerſus, Lat.] Buried; covered; sunk deep.

After long inquiry of things immerſe in matter, I interpose some object which is immaterial, or less material; such as this of sounds, that the intellect may become not partial. Bacon.

IMMERſION. n. f. [immerſio, Latin; immerſion, French.]

1. The act of putting any body into a fluid below the surface.

Achilles's mother is said to have dipped him, when he was a child, in the river Styx, which made him invulnerable all over, excepting that part which the mother held in her hand during this immerſion. Addison's Guardian.

2. The state of sinking below the surface of a fluid.

3. The state of being overwhelmed or lost in any respect.

Many persons, who, through the heat of their lusts and passions, through the contagion of ill example, or too deep an immerſion in the affairs of life, swerve from the rules of their holy faith; yet would, upon extraordinary warning, be brought to comply with them. Atterbury.

IMMETHODICAL. adj. [in and methodical.] Confused; being without regularity; being without method.

M. Baile compares the answering of an immetho- dical author to the hunting of a duck: when you have him full in your sight, he gives you the slip, and becomes invisible. Addison.

IMMETHODICALLY. adv. [from immetho- dical.] Without method; without order.

IMMINENCE. n. f. [from imminent.] Any ill impending; immediate or near danger. Not in use.

I do not speak of flight, of fear, of death;
But dare all imminence, that gods and men
Address their dangers in. Shakspeare.

IMMINENT. adj. [imminent, French; imminens, Latin.] Impending; at hand; threatening. Always in an ill sense.

What dangers at any time are imminent, what evils hang over our heads, God doth know, and not we. Hooker.

Three times to-day
You have defended me from imminent death. Shakspeare.

These she applies for warnings and portents
Of evils imminent; and on her knee
Hath begg'd, that I will stay at home to-day. Shakspeare.

To them preach'd
Conversion and repentance, as to souls
In prison, under judgments imminent. Milton.

Men could not fail without imminent danger and inconveniences. Pope.

TO IMMINGLE. v. a. [in and mingle.]

To mingle; to mix; to unite.
Some of us, like thee, through stormy life
Toil'd, tempest-beaten, ere we could attain
This holy calm, this harmony of mind,
Where purity and peace immingle charms. Thomson.

IMMINUTION. n. f. [from immixtio, Latin.] Diminution; decrease.

These revolutions are as exactly uniform as the earth's are, which could not be, were there any place for chance, and did not a Providence continually oversee and secure them from all alteration or imminution. Ray on the Creation.

IMMISCIBILITY. n. f. [from immiscibile.] Incapacity of being mingled.

IMMISCIBLE. adj. [in and miscibile.] Not capable of being mingled. Clarissa.

Samson, with these immixt, inevitably Pull'd down the same destruction on himself. Milton.

IMMIXABLE. adj. [in and mix.] Impossible to be mingled.

Fill a glass sphere with such liquors as may be clear, of the same colour, and immixable. Wilkins.

IMMOBILITY. n. f. [immobilité, French; from immobilis, Latin.] Unmoveableness; want of motion; resistance to motion.

The course of fluids through the vascular solids must in time harden the fibres, and abolish many of the canals; from whence driness, weakness, immobility, and debility of the vital force. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

IMMODERATE. adj. [immodéré, Fr. immoderatus, Lat.] Excessive; exceeding the due mean.

One means, very effectual for the preservation of health, is a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray on the Creation.

IMMODERATELY. adv. [from immoderate.] In an excessive degree.

Immoderately he weeps for Tybalt's death. Shakspeare.

The heat weakened more and more the arch of the earth, sucking out the moisture that was the cement of its parts, drying it immoderately, and chapping it. Burnet's Theory.

IMMODERATION. n. f. [immoderation, French; from immoderate.] Want of moderation; excess.

IMMODEST. adj. [immodeſte, French; in and modeſt.]

1. Wanting shame; wanting delicacy or chastity.

She rail'd at herself, that she should be so immodeſt to write to one that she knew would flout her. Shakspeare.

2. Unchaste; impure.

Immodeſt deeds you hinder to be wrought;
But we proscribe the least immodeſt thought. Dryden.

3. Obscene.

'Tis needful that the most immodeſt word
Be look'd upon and learn'd; which once attain'd,
Comes to no farther use
But to be known and hated. Shakspeare.

Immodeſt words admit of no defence,
For want of decency is want of sense. Rescom.

4. Unreasonable; exorbitant; arrogant.

IMMODESTY. n. f. [immodeſtie, French; from immodeſt.] Want of modesty; indecency.

It was a piece of immodeſty. Pope.

TO IMMOLATE. v. a. [immolo, Lat. immoler, Fr.]

1. To sacrifice; to kill in sacrifice.

These courtiers of applause being oftentimes reduced to live in want, these costly trifles so engrossing all that they can spare, that they frequently enough are forced to immolate their own desires to their vanity. Boyle.

2. To offer in sacrifice.

Now immolate the tongues, and mix the wine,
Secred to Neptune, and the pow'r's divine. Pope.

IMMOLATION. n. f. [immolation, French; from immolate.]

1. The act of sacrificing.

In the picture of the immolation of Isaac, or Abraham sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy. Brown.

2. A sacrifice offered.

We make more barbarous immolations than the most savage heathens. Decay of Piety.

IMMOMENT. adj. [in and moment.] Trifling; of no importance or value. A barbarous word.

I some lady-trifles have reserv'd,
Immortal toys, things of such dignity
 As we greet modern friends withal. Shakspeare.

IMMORAL. adj. [in and moral.]
 1. Wanting regard to the laws of natural religion: as, a flatterer of vice is an immoral man.

2. Contrary to honesty; dishonest: as, desertion of a calumniated friend is an immoral action.

IMMORALITY. n. f. [from immoral.]
 Dishonesty; want of virtue; contrariety to virtue.

Such men are put into the commission of the peace who encourage the grossest immoralities, to whom all the bawds of the ward pay contribution. Swift.

IMMORTAL. adj. [immortalis, Latin.]

1. Exempt from death; being never to die.

To the king eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wife God, be glory for ever. 1 Tim.
 Her body sleeps in Capulet's monument,
 And her immortal part with angels lives. Shakspeare.
 There was an opinion in gross, that the soul was immortal. Abbot.

The Paphian queen,
 With gored hand, and veil so rudely torn,
 Like terror did among th' immortals breed,
 Taught by her wound that goddesses may bleed. Wallar.

2. Never-ending; perpetual.
 Give me my robe, put on my crown: I have immortal longings in me. Shakspeare.

IMMORTALITY. n. f. [immortalité, Fr. from immortal.]

1. Exemption from death; life never to end.
 This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal, immortality. 1 Corinthians.
 Quaff immortality, and joy. Milton.
 He th' immortality of souls proclaim'd,
 Whom th' oracle of men the wisest nam'd. Denham.

His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God, and the nature of his immortality. Cheyne.

When we know cogitation is the prime attribute of a spirit, we infer its immateriality, and thence its immortality. Watts.

2. Exemption from oblivion.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. a. [immortaliser, French; from immortal.]

1. To make immortal; to perpetuate; to exempt from death.

For mortal things desire their like to breed,
 That so they may their kind immortalize. Davies.

2. To exempt from oblivion.
 Drive them from Orleans, and be immortaliz'd. Shakspeare.

TO IMMORTALIZE. v. n. To become immortal. This word is, I think, peculiar to Pope.

Fix the year precise,
 When British bards begin t' immortalize. Pope.

IMMORTALLY. adv. [from immortal.]
 With exemption from death; without end.

There is your crown;
 And he that wears the crown immortally,
 Long guard it yours! Shakspeare's Henry IV.
 What pity 'tis that he cannot wallow immortally
 In his sensual pleasures! Bentley.

IMMOVABLE. adj. [in and moveable.]

1. Not to be forced from its place.
 We shall not question his removing the earth, when he finds an immovable base to place his engine upon. Brown.

2. Not liable to be carried away; real in law.

When an executor meddles with the immovable estate, before he has seized on the moveable goods, it may be then appealed from the execution of sentence. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. Unshaken; unaffected.
 How much happier is he, who, centering on himself, remains immovable, and smiles at the madness of the dance about him! Dryden.

IMMOVABLY. adv. [from immovable.] In a state not to be shaken.

Immovably firm to their duty, when they could have no prospect of reward. Asterbury.

IMMUNITY. n. f. [immunité, French; immunitas, Latin.]

1. Discharge from any obligation.

Of things harmless whatsoever there is, which the whole church doth observe, to argue for any man's immunity from observing the same, it were a point of most insolent madness. Hooker.

2. Privilege; exemption from onerous duties.

Granting great immunities to the commons, they prevailed so far as to cause Palladius to be proclaimed successor. Stimpy.

Simon sent to Demetrius, to the end he should give the land an immunity, because all that Tryphon did was to spoil. 1 Maccabees.

The laity invidiously aggravate the rights and immunities of the clergy. Sprat's Sermons.

3. Freedom.

Common apprehensions entertain the antidotal condition of Ireland, conceiving only in that land an immunity from venomous creatures.

But this annex'd condition of the crown, immunity from errors, you disown. Dryden.

TO IMMURE. v. a. [in and murus, Lat. emurer, old French, so that it might be written emmure.] To enclose within walls; to confine; to shut up; to imprison.

Pity, you ancient stones, these tender babes,
 Whom envy hath immur'd within your walls! Shakspeare.

One of these three contains her heav'nly picture;
 And shall I think in silver she's immur'd! Shakspeare.

At the first descent on shore he was not immur'd with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Wotton.

Lyfimachus immur'd it with a wall. Sandys.

Though a foul foolish prison her immure
 On earth, she, when escap'd, is wife and pure. Denham.

IMMURE. n. f. [from the verb.] A wall; an enclosure, as in Shakspeare, but perhaps no where else.

Their vow is made
 To ransack Troy; within whose strong immures
 The ravish'd Helen, Menelaus' queen,
 With wanton Paris sleeps. Shakspeare.

IMMUSICAL. adj. [in and musical.] Inharmonious; wanting proportion of sound.

All sounds are either musical, which are ever equal, or immusical, which are ever unequal, as the voice in speaking, and whisperings. Bacon.

We consider the immusical note of all swans we ever beheld or heard of. Brown.

IMMUTABILITY. n. f. [immutabilitas, Lat. immutabilité, Fr. from immutable.] Exemption from change; invariableness; unchangeableness.

The immutability of God they strive unto, by working after one and the same manner. Hooker.
 His existence will of itself continue for ever, unless it be destroyed; which is impossible, from the immutability of God. Cheyne.

IMMUTABLE. adj. [immutabilis, Lat.] Unchangeable; invariable; unalterable.

By two immutable things, in which it was impossible for God to lye, we have a strong consolation. Hebrews.

Thy threat'nings, Lord, as thine, thou may'st revoke;
 But if immutable and fix'd they stand,
 Continue still thyself to give the stroke,
 And let not foreign foes oppress thy land. Dryden.

IMMUTABLY. adv. [from immutable.] Unalterably; invariably; unchangeably.
 His love is like his essence, immutablely eternal. Boyle.

IMP. n. f. [imp, Welsh, a shoot, a sprout, a sprig.]

1. A son; the offspring; progeny.
 That noble imp your son. Lord Cromwell to King Henry.

And thou, most dreadful imp of highest Jove, Fair Venus' son. Fairy Queen.
 The tender imp was weaned from the teat. Fairfax.

A lad of life, an imp of fame. Shakspeare.

2. A subaltern devil; a puny devil. In this sense it is still retained.
 Such we deny not to be the imps and limbs of Satan. Hooker.

The serpent after long debate, irresolute
 Of thoughts revol'd, his final sentence chose,
 Fit vessel, fittest imp of fraud, in whom
 To enter, and his dark suggestions hide
 From sharpest sight. Milton's Parad. Lost.

As soon as you can hear his noell,
 This god on earth turns d——in hell;
 And, lo! his ministers of state,
 Transform'd to imps, his levee wait. Swift.

TO IMP. v. a. [impio, to engraff, Welsh.] To lengthen or enlarge with any thing adscititious. It is originally a term used by falconers, who repair a hawk's wing with adscititious feathers.

If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Imp out our drooping country's broken wings. Shakspeare.

New rebellions raise
 Their hydra heads, and the false north displays
 Her broken league to imp her serpent wings. Milton.

Help, ye tart satyrists, to imp my rage
 With all the scorpions that should whip this age. Leaveland.

With cord and canvass from rich Hamburg sent,
 His navy's molted wings he imps once more. Dryden.

New creatures rise,
 A moving mass at first, and short of thighs;
 'Till shooting out with legs, and imp'd with wings,
 The grubs proceed to bees with pointed stings. Dryden.

The Mercury of heav'n, with silver wings
Imp't for the flight, to overtake his ghost. Southey.

TO IMPACT. v. a. [impactus, Latin.] To drive close or hard.

They are angular; but of what particular figure is not easy to determine, because of their being impacted so thick and confusedly together. Woodward on Efflu.

TO IMPAINT. v. a. [in and paini.] To paint; to decorate with colours. Not in use.

Never yet did insurrection want
 Such water-colours to impaint his cause. Shakspeare.

TO IMPAIR. v. a. [empirer, to make worse, French. Skinner.] To diminish; to injure; to make worse; to lessen in quantity, value, or excellence.

To change any such law, must needs, with the common sort, impair and weaken the force of those grounds whereby all laws are made effectual. Hooker.

Objects divine
 Must needs impair, and weary human sense. Milton.

That soon refresh'd him weary'd, and repair'd
What hunger, if aught hunger had impair'd,
Or thirst. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

Nor was the work impair'd by storms alone,
But felt th' approaches of too warm a sun. Pope.
In years he seem'd, but not impair'd by years. Pope.

To IMPAIR. v. n. To be lessened or worn out.

Flesh may impair, quoth he; but reason can repair. Fairy Queen.

IMPAIR. n. f. [from the verb.] Diminution; decrease. Not used.

A loadstone, kept in undue position, that is, not lying on the meridian, or with its poles inverted, receives in longer time impair in activity and exchange of faces, and is more powerfully preserved by sile than dust of steel. Brown.

IMPAIRMENT. n. f. [from impair.] Diminution; injury.

His posterity, at this distance, and after so perpetual impairment, cannot but condemn the poverty of Adam's conception, that thought to obscure himself from his Creator in the shade of the garden. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

IMPAIPABLE. adj. [impalpable, French; in and palpable.] Not to be perceived by touch.

If beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out, it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the smallness of the parts do make them easy to be put into motion. Boyle.

To IMPARADISE. v. a. [imparadisare, Italian.] To put in a place or state resembling paradise in felicity.

This imparadis'd neighbourhood made Zelmane's soul cleave unto her, both through the ivory case of her body, and the apparel which did over-cloud it. Sidney.

All my souls be Imparadis'd in you, in whom alone
I understand, and grow, and see. Donne.

Thus these two,
Imparadis'd in one another's arms,
The happier Eden, shall enjoy their fill
Of bliss on bliss. Milton's Paradise Lost.

IMPARITY. n. f. [imparitas, impar, Lat.]

1. Inequality; disproportion.
Some bodies are hard, some soft: the hardness is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts. Bacon.

2. Oddness; indivisibility into equal parts.
What verity is there in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man, by even and odd; and so by parity or imparity of letters in men's names, to determine misfortunes on either side of their bodies? Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To IMPARK. v. a. [in and park.] To enclose with a park; to sever from a common.

To IMPART. v. a. [impartior, Latin.]

1. To grant; to give.
High state and honours to others impart,
But give me your heart. Dryden.

2. To make known; to show by words or tokens.
Gentle lady,
When first I did impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had Ran in my veins Shaksp Merchant of Venice.
As in confession the revealing is for the ease of a man's heart, so secret men come to the knowledge of many things, while men rather discharge than impart their minds. Bacon.

Thou to me thy thoughts
Wast wont, I mine to thee wast wont 't impart.
Milton.

3. To communicate; to grant as to a pataker.

I find thee knowing of thyself;
Expressing well the spirit within thee free,
My image, not imparted to the brute. Milton.

IMPARTIAL. adj. [impartial, Fr. in and partial.] Equitable; free from regard to party; indifferent; disinterested; equal in distribution of justice; just. It is used as well of actions as persons: an impartial judge; an impartial sentence.

Success I hope, and fate I cannot fear:
Alive or dead, I shall deserve a name;
Jove is impartial, and to both the same. Dryden.

IMPARTIALITY. n. f. [impartialité, Fr. from impartial.] Equitableness; justice; indifference.

A pious and well-disposed will gives not only diligence, but also impartiality to the understanding in its search into religion, which is absolutely necessary to give success unto our inquiries into truth; it being scarce possible for that man to hit the mark, whose eye is still glancing upon something beside it. South.

IMPARTIALLY. adv. [from impartial.] Equitably; with indifferent and unbiassed judgment; without regard to party or interest; justly; honestly.

Since the scripture promises eternal happiness and pardon of sin, upon the sole condition of faith and sincere obedience, it is evident, that he only can plead a title to such a pardon, whose conscience impartially tells him that he has performed the required condition. South.

IMPARTIBLE. adj. [impartible, French; from impart.] Communicable; that may be conferred or bestowed. This word is elegant, though used by few writers.

The same body may be conceived to be more or less impartible than it is active or heavy. Digby.

IMPASSABLE. adj. [in and passable.] Not to be passed; not admitting passage; impervious.

There are in America many high and impassable mountains, which are very rich. Raleigh.
Over this gulf
Impassable, impervious; let us try
To found a path from hell to that new world. Milton.

When Alexander would have passed the Gauges, he was told by the Indians that all beyond it was either impassable marshes, or sandy deserts. Temple.

IMPASSIBILITY. n. f. [impassibilité, Fr. from impassible.] Exemption from suffering; insusceptibility of injury from external things.

Two divinities might have pleaded their prerogative of impassibility, or at least not have been wounded by any mortal hand. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLE. adj. [impassible, French; in and passio, Latin.] Incapable of suffering; exempt from the agency of external causes; exempt from pain.

If the upper soul check what is consented to by the will, in compliance with the flesh, and can then hope that, after a few years of sensuality, that rebellious servant shall be eternally cast off, drop into a perpetual impassible nothing, take a long progress into a land where all things are forgotten, this would be some colour. Hammond.
Secure of death, I should contemn thy dait,
Though naked, and impassible depart. Dryden.

IMPASSIBLENESS. n. f. [from impassible.] Impassibility; exemption from pain.

How shameless a partiality is it, thus to reserve all the sensualities of this world, and yet cry out for the *impassible*ness of the next? Decay of Piety.

IMPASSIONED. adj. [in and passion.] Disordered by passion.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all impassion'd, thus began. Milton.

IMPASSIVE. adj. [in and passive.] Exempt from the agency of external causes.

She told him what those empty phantoms were:
Forms without bodies, and impassive air. Dryden.
Pale suns, unfelt at distance, roll away;
And on th' impassive ice the lightnings play. Pope.

IMPASTED. adj. [in and passe.] Concreted as into paste. Not in use.

Horribly trickt
With blood of fathers, mothers, daughters, sons, Bak'd and *impast*ed with the parching fires. Shakspere.

IMPATIENCE. n. f. [impatience, French; impatientia, Latin.]

1. Inability to suffer pain; rage under suffering.

All the power of his wits has given way to his impatience. Shakspere's King Lear.

The experiment I resolv'd to make was upon thought, and not rashness or impatience. Temple.

2. Vehemence of temper; heat of passion.

3. Inability to suffer delay; eagerness.

IMPATIENT. adj. [impatient, French; impatiens, Latin.]

1. Not able to endure; incapable to bear: with of.

Fame, impatient of extremes, decays
Not more by envy than excess of praise. Pope.

2. Furious with pain; unable to bear pain.
The tortur'd savage turns around,
And flings about his foam, impatient of the wound. Dryden.

3. Vehemently agitated by some painful passion: with at before the occasion: with of impatience is referred more to the thing, with at to the person.

To be impatient at the death of a person, concerning whom it was certain he must die, is to mourn because thy friend was not born an angel. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

4. Hot; hasty.
The impatient man will not give himself time to be informed of the matter that lies before him. Addison's Spectator.

5. Eager; ardently desirous; not able to endure delay: with for before the thing desired.

The mighty Cæsar waits his vital hour,
Impatient for the world, and grasps his promis'd pow'r. Dryden.

On the seas prepar'd the vessel stands;
Th' impatient mariner thy speed demands. Pope.

IMPATIENTLY. adv. [from impatient.]

1. With rage, under uneasiness.

2. Passionately: ardently.
He considered one thing so impatiently, that he would not admit any thing else to be worth consideration. Clarendon.

3. Eagerly; with great desire.
To IMPATRONIZE. v. a. [impatroniser, Fr. in and patronize.] To gain to one's self the power of any seigniority. This word is not usual.

The ambition of the French king was to impatronize himself of the dutchy. Bacon.

To IMPAWN. v. a. [in and pawn.] To impignorate; to pawn; to give as a pledge; to pledge.

Go to the king, and let there be impawn'd
Some surety for a safe return again. Shaksp.

Many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall invite us to;
Therefore take heed how you impawn our person,
How you awake our sleeping sword of war. Shakspere.

To IMPEACH. v. a. [empescher, Fr.]

1. To hinder; to impede. This sense is little in use.

Each door be opened without any breach;
There was no bar to stop, no foe him to impeach.
Spenser.

His sons did impeach his journey to the Holy Land, and vexed him all the days of his life.
Davies.

If they will impeach the purposes of an army, which they have no reason to think themselves able to resist, they put themselves out of all expectation of mercy.
Hayward.

A deflexion on my throat impeached my utterance.
Howell.

2. To accuse by publick authority.

They were both impeached by a house of commons.
Addison.

Great dissensions were kindled between the nobles and commons on account of Coriolanus, whom the latter had impeached.
Swift.

IMPEACH. n. f. [from the verb.] Hinderance; let; impediment.

Why, what an intricate impeach is this!
If here you hous'd him, here he would have been;

If he were mad, he would not plead so coldly.
Shakespeare.

IMPEACHABLE. adj. [from impeach.] Accusable; chargeable.

Had God omitted by positive laws to give religion to the world, the wisdom of his providence had been impeachable.
Greuv.

IMPEACHER. n. f. [from impeach.] An accuser; one who brings an accusation against another.

Many of our fiercest impeachers would leave the delinquent to the merciful indulgence of a Saviour.
Government of the Tongue

IMPEACHMENT. n. f. [from impeach.]

1. Hinderance; let; impediment; obstruction. Not in use.

Tell us what things, during your late continuance there, are most offensive, and the greatest impeachment to the good government thereof.
Spenser on Ireland.

Tell thy king I do not seek him now;
But could be willing to march on to Calais,
Without impeachment.
Shakespeare.

Neither is this accession of necessity any impeachment to christian liberty, or ensharing of men's consciences.
Sanderson.

2. Publick accusation; charge preferred.

The king, provok'd to it by the queen,
Devis'd impeachments to imprison him. Shakf.

The lord Somers, though his accusers would gladly have dropped their impeachment, was instant with them for the prosecution. Addison.

The consequences of Coriolanus's impeachment had like to have been fatal to their state.
Swift.

To IMPEARL. v. a. [in and pearl.]

1. To form in resemblance of pearls.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Impearls on every leaf, and ev'ry flow'r. Milton.

2. To decorate as with pearls.

The dews of the morning impearl every thorn,
and scatter diamonds on the verdant mantle of the earth.
Digby to Pope.

IMPECCABILITY. n. f. [impeccabilit , Fr. from impeccable.] Exemption from sin; exemption from failure.

Infallibility and impeccability are two of his attributes.
Pope.

IMPECCABLE. adj. [impeccable, Fr. in and pecco, Lat.] Exempt from possibility of sin.

That man pretends he never commits any act prohibited by the word of God, and then that were a rare charm to render him impeccable, or that is the means of consecrating every sin of his.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

To IMPEDE. v. a. [impedio, Lat.] To hinder; to let; to obstruct.

All the forces are mustered to impede his passage.
Decay of Pietty.

The way is open, and no stop to force
The stars return, or to impede their course.
Creech.

IMPE'DIMENT. n. f. [impedimentum, Lat.] Hinderance; let; obstruction; opposition.

The minds of beasts grudge not at their bodies comfort, nor are their senses letted from enjoying their objects: we have the impediments of honour, and the torments of conscience.
Sidney.

What impediments there are to hinder it, and which were the speediest way to remove them.
Hooker.

The life is led most happily wherein all virtue is exercised without impediment or let. Hooker.

But for my tears,
The moist impediments unto my speech,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke.
Shakespeare.

May I never

To this good purpose, that so fairly shews, Dream of impediment. Shak. Ant. and Cleo.

They bring one that was deaf, and had an impediment in his speech. Mark.

Fear is the greatest impediment to martyrdom; and he that is overcome by little arguments of pain, will hardly consent to loose his life with torments.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy

Free from th' impediments of light and noise, Man, thus retir'd, his nobler thoughts employs.
Waller.

To IMPE'L. v. a. [impello, Lat.] To drive on toward a point; to urge forward; to press on.

So Mirrah's mind, impell'd on either side,
Takes ev'ry bear, but cannot long abide. Dryd.

The surge impell'd me on a craggy coast. Pope.

Propitious gales
Attend thy voyage, and impel thy sails. Pope.

A mightier pow'r the strong direction sends,
And sev'ral men impels to sev'ral ends;
This drives them constant to a certain coast. Pope.

IMPE'LLENT. n. f. [impellens, Lat.] An impulsive power; a power that drives forward.

How such a variety of motions should be regularly managed, in such a wilderness of passages, by mere blind impellents and material conveyances, I have not the least conjecture.
Glazewille.

To IMPEND. v. n. [impendo, Latin.]

1. To hang over.

Destruction sure o'er all your heads impends;
Ulysses comes, and death his steps attends. Pope.

2. To be at hand; to press nearly. It is used in an ill sense.

It expresses our deep sorrow for our past sins, and our lively sense of God's impending wrath.
Smalridge's Sermons.

No story I unfold of publick woes,
Nor bear advices of impending foes. Pope.

IMPE'NDENT. adj. [impendens, Lat.] Imminent; hanging over; pressing closely. In an ill sense.

If the evil feared or impendent be a greater sensible evil than the good, it over-rules the appetite to aversion. Hale.

Deadful in arms, on Landen's glorious plain Place Ormond's duke: impendent in the air
Let his keen fabre, comet-like, appear. Prior.

IMPE'NDENCE. n. f. [from impendent.]

The state of hanging over; near approach.

Good sometimes is not safe to be attempted, by reason of the impudence of a greater sensible evil. Hale.

IMPENETRABILITY. n. f. [impenetrabilit , Fr. from impenetrable.]

1. Quality of not being pierceable, or permeable.

All bodies, so far as experience reaches, are either hard, or may be hardened; and we have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception.
Newton's Opticks.

2. Insusceptibility of intellectual impression.

IMPENETRABLE. adj. [impenetrable, Fr. impenetrabilis, Lat.]

1. Not to be pierced; not to be entered by any external force.

With hard'ning cold, and forming heat,
The cyclops did their strokes repeat,
Before th' impenetrable shield was wrought. Dryd.

2. Impervious; not admitting entrance.

Deep into some thick covert would I run,
Impenetrable to the stars or sun. Dryden.

The mind frights itself with any thing reflected on in gross: things, thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty in them, and are thought to be wrapped up in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

3. Not to be taught; not to be informed.

4. Not to be affected; not to be moved.

It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept with men.
— Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
Shakespeare.

Some will never believe a proposition in divinity, if any thing can be said against it: they will be credulous in all affairs of life, but impenetrable by a sermon of the gospel. Taylor.

IMPENETRABLY. adv. [from impenetrable.] With hardness to a degree incapable of impression.

Blunt the sense, and fit it for a skull
Of solid proof, impenetrably dull. Pope.

IMPENITENCE. } n. f. [impenitence, Fr.]

IMPENITENCY. } in and penitence.] Obduracy; want of remorse for crimes; final disregard of God's threatenings or mercy.

Where one man ever comes to repent, a thousand end their days in final impenitence. South.

Before the revelation of the gospel the wickedness and impenitency of the heathens was a much more excusable thing, because they were in a great measure ignorant of the rewards of another life. Tillopson.

He will advance from one degree of wickedness and impenitence to another, till at last he becomes hardened without remorse. Rogers.

IMPENITENT. adj. [impenitent, Fr. in and penitent.] Finally negligent of the duty of repentance; obdurate.

Our Lord in anger hath granted some impenitent men's request; as, on the other side, the apostle's suit he hath of favour and mercy not granted. Hooker.

They dy'd
Impenitent, and left a race behind
Like to themselves. Milton.

When the reward of penitents, and punishment of impenitents, is once assented to as true, 'tis impossible but the mind of man should wish for the one, and have dislikes to the other. Hammond.

IMPENITENTLY. adv. [from impenitent.]

Obdurately; without repentance.

The condition required of us is a constellation of all the gospel graces, every one of them rooted in the heart, though mixed with much weakness, and perhaps with many sins, so they be not wilfully, and impenitently lived and died in. Hammond.

What crowds of these impenitently bold,
In sounds and jangling syllables grown old,
Still lull on poets! Pope.

IMPENOUS. adj. [in and penna, Lat.]

Wanting wings. This word is convenient, but, I think, not used.

It is generally received an earwig hath no wings, and is reckoned amongst impegnus insects; but he that shall, with a needle, put aside the throat and sheathly cases on their back, may draw forth two wings, larger than in many flies. Brown.

IMPERATE. adj. [imperatus, Lat.] Done with conscioufness; done by direction of the mind.

The elicit internal acts of any habit may be quick and vigorous, when the external imperate acts of the same habit utterly cease. South.

Those natural and involuntary actings are not done by deliberation, yet they are done by the energy of the soul and instrumentality of the spirits, as well as those imperate acts, wherein we see the empire of the soul. Hale.

IMPERATIVE. adj. [imperatif, Fr. imperativus, Lat.] Commanding; expressive of command.

The verb is formed in a different manner, to signify the intention of commanding, forbidding, allowing, disallowing, intreating; which likewise, from the principal use of it, is called the imperative mood. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

IMPERATIVELY. adv. In a commanding style; authoritatively.

IMPERCEPTIBLE. adj. [imperceptible, Fr. in and perceptible.] Not to be discovered; not to be perceived; small; subtil; quick or slow, so as to elude observation.

Some things are in their nature imperceptible by our sense; yea, and the more refined parts of material existence, which, by reason of their subtilty, escape our perception. Hale.

In the sudden changes of his subject with almost imperceptible connections, the Theban poet is his master. Dryden.

The parts must have their outlines in waves, resembling flames, of the gliding of a snake upon the ground: they must be almost imperceptible to the touch, and even. Dryden.

The alterations in the globe are very slight, and almost imperceptible, and such as tend to the benefit of the earth. Wood.

IMPERCEPTIBLENESS. n. f. [from imperceptible.] The quality of eluding observation.

Many excellent things there are in nature, which, by reason of their subtilty and imperceptibility to us, are not so much as within any of our faculties to apprehend. Hale.

IMPERCEPTIBLY. adv. [from imperceptible.] In a manner not to be perceived.

Upon reading of a fable we are made to believe we advise ourselves: the moral insinuates itself imperceptibly, we are taught by surprize, and become wiser and better unawares. Addison.

IMPERFECT. adj. [imparfait, Fr. imperfectus, Lat.]

1. Not complete; not absolutely finished; defective. Used either of persons or things.

Something he left imperfect in the state, which, since his coming forth, is thought of, which brought the kingdom so much fear and danger,

That his return was most required. Shakspeare

course of printing.

To be distracted with many opinions, makes men to be of the last *impressio*ns, and full of change. Bacon.

For ten *impressio*ns, which his works have had in so many years, at present a hundred books are scarcely purchased once a twelvemonth. Dryden.

IMPRESSURE. n. f. [from impress.] The mark made by pressure; the dint; the *impressio*ns.

Lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure
Thy palm some moments keeps. Shakspeare.

TO IMPRINT. v. a. [imprimer, French.]

1. To mark upon any substance by pressure.

One of the same seal, imprinted upon pieces of wax of different colours. Holder.

soul of man, we are not to omit those characters of majesty that God imprinted upon the body.
South.

She amidst his spacious meadows flows;
Inclines her urn upon his fatten'd lands,
And fees his num'rous herds imprint her sands.
Prior.

2. To stamp words upon paper by the use of types.

3. To fix on the mind or memory.
There is a kind of conveying of effectual and imprinting passages, amongst compliments, which is of singular use. Bacon.

We have all those ideas in our understandings which we can make the objects of our thoughts, without the help of those sensible qualities which first imprinted them. Locke.

Retention is the power to revive again in our minds those ideas, which, after imprinting, have disappeared. Locke.

By familiar acquaintance he has got the ideas of those two different things distinctly imprinted
on his mind. Locke.

4. TO IMPRINT in is less proper.

When we set before our eyes a round globe,
the idea imprinted in our mind is of a flat circle, variously shadowed. Locke.

TO IMPRISON. v. a. [emprisonner, Fr.
in and prison.] To shut up; to confine;
to keep from liberty; to restrain in
place.

He imprison'd was in chains remediless;
For that Hippolytus' rent corse he did redress.
Spenser.

Now we are in the street, he first of all,
Imprudently proud, creeps to the wall;
And so imprison'd and hemm'd in by me,
Sells for a little state his liberty. Donne.

Try to imprison the resistless wind;
So swift is guilt, so hard to be confin'd. Dryden.
If a man imprisons himself in his closet, and employs reason to find out the nature of the corporeal world, without experiments, he will frame a scheme of chimeras. Watts.

It is not improbable, that all the virtual heat in the juices of vegetables, metals, and minerals, may be owing to the action of the imprisoned rays, Cheyne.

IMPRISONMENT. n. f. [emprisonnement,
Fr. from imprison.] Confinement; clau-

INARABLE. adj. [in and aro, Latin.] Not capable of tillage. Diā.

To INARCH. v. a. [in and arch.]

Inarching is a method of grafting, which is commonly called grafting by approach. This method of grafting is used when the stock and the tree may be joined: take the branch you would inarch, and, having fitted it to that part of the stock where you intend to join it, pare away the rind and wood on one side about three inches in length: after the same manner cut the stock or branch in the place where the graft is to be united, so that they may join equally together that the sap may meet: then cut a little tongue upwards in the graft, and make a notch in the stock to admit it; so that when they are joined the tongue will prevent their slipping, and the graft will more closely unite with the stock. Having thus placed them exactly together, tie them; then cover the place with grafting clay, to prevent the air from entering to dry the wound, or the wet from getting in to rot the stock: you should fix a stake into the ground, to which that part of the stock, as also the graft, should be fastened, to prevent the wind from breaking them asunder. In this manner they are to remain about four months, in which time they will be sufficiently united; and the graft may then be cut from the mother tree, observing to slope it off close to the stock, and cover the joined parts with fresh grafting clay. The operation is always performed in April or May, and is commonly practised upon oranges, myrtles, jasmynes, walnuts, firs, and pines, which will not succeed by common grafting or budding. Miller.

INARTICULATE. adj. [inarticulé, Fr. in and articulate.] Not uttered with distinctness, like that of the syllables of human speech.

Observe what inarticulate sounds resemble any of the particular letters. Wilkins.

INCHOATION. n. f. [inchoatus, Latin.]
Inception; beginning.

It discerneth of four kinds of causes; forces, frauds, crimes various of stellation, and the in- choations or middle acts towards crimes capital, not actually perpetrated. Bacon

The setting on foot some of those arts in those parts would be looked upon as the first inchoation of them, which yet would be but their reviving.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

INCHOATIVE. adj. [inchoative, French; inchoativus, Latin.] Inceptive; noting inchoation or beginning.

To INCIDE. v. a. [from incido, to cut,
Latin.]

Medicines are said to incide which consist of pointed and sharp particles; as acids, and most salts, by which the particles of other bodies are divided from one another: thus expectorating medicines are said to incide or cut the phlegm.

Quincy.

The menses are promoted by all saponaceous substances, which incide the mucus in the first passages. Abushnot.

INCIDENCE. } n. f. [incido, to fall, Lat.]
INCIDENCY. } incidence, French.]

1. The direction with which one body strikes upon another, and the angle made by that line, and the plane struck upon, is called the angle of incidence.

In the occurrences of two moving bodies, their incidence is said to be perpendicular or oblique, as their directions or lines of motion make a straight line or an oblique angle at the point of contact.

Quincy.

In mirrors there is the like angle of incidence,
from the object of the glass, and from the glass to the eye. Bacon.

He enjoys his happy state most when he communicates it, and receives a more vigorous joy from the reflexion than from the direct incidence of his nappinets. Norris.

In equal incidences there is a considerable inequality of refractions, whether it be that some of the incident rays are refracted more and others less constantly, or one and the same ray is by refraction disturbed. Newton's Opticks.

The permanent whiteness argues, that in like incidences of the rays there is no such separation of the emerging rays. Newton.

2. [incidens, Latin.] Accident; hap;
casualty.

What incidency thou do'st guess of harm declare,
Is creeping towards me. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

INCIDENT. adj. [incident, Fr. incidents,
Latin.]

1. Casual; fortuitous; occasional; happening accidentally; issuing in beside the main design; happening beside expectation.

As the ordinary course of common affairs is disposed of by general laws, so likewise men's rarer incident necessities and utilities should be with special equity considered. Hooker.

I would note in children not only their articulate answers, but likewise smiles and frowns upon incident occasions. Wotton.

In a complex proposition the predicate or subject is sometimes made complex by the pronouns who, which, whose, whom, &c. which make another proposition: as, every man, who is pious, shall be saved: Julius, whose surname was Cæsar, overcame Pompey: bodies, which are transparent, have many pores. Here the whole proposition is called the primary or chief, and the additional proposition is called an incident proposition. Watts.

2. Happening; apt to happen.

Confancy is such a firmness of friendship as overlooks all those failures of kindness, that through passion, incident to human nature, a man may be guilty of. South.

INCIDENT. n. f. [incident, French; from the adjective.] Something happening beside the main design; casualty.

His wisdom will fall into it as an incident to the point of lawfulness. Bacon's Holy War.

No person, no incident in the play, but must be of use to carry on the main design. Dryden.

INCIDENTAL. adj. Incident; casual;
happening by chance; not intended;
not deliberate; not necessary to the chief purpose.

The satisfaction you received from those inci- dental discourses which we have wandered into.
Milton.

By some religious duties scarce appear to be regarded at all, and by others only as an incident business, to be done when they have nothing else to do. Keggers.

INCIDENTALLY. adv. [from incidental.]
Beside the main design; occasionally.

These general rules are but occasionally and in- *cidental*ly mentioned in scripture, rather to manifest unto us a former, than to lay upon us a new obligation. Sanderson.

I treat either purposely or *incidental*ly of colours. Boyle.

INCIDENTLY. adv. [from incident.] Occasionally; by the by; by the way.

It was *incidental*ly moved amongst the judges what should be done for the king himself, who was attained; but resolved that the crown takes away defects. Bacon's Henry VII.

To INCINERATE. v. a. [in and cineres,
Latin.] To burn to ashes.

By baking, without melting, the heat indurateth, then maketh fragile; lastly, it doth inci- nerate and calcinate. Bacon.

Fire burneth wood, making it first luminous, then black and brittle, and lastly broken and in- cinerate. Bacon.

These drugs are soon incinerated and calcined into such salts which produce coughs. Harvey.

INCINERATION. n. f. [incineration, Fr.
from incinerate.] The act of burning any thing to ashes.

I observed in the first salt of urine, brought by deuration to be very white, a taste not unlike common salt, and very differing from the caustick lixiviate taste of other salts made by in- cineration. Boyle.

INCIRCUMSPECTION. n. f. [in and circ- umspection.] Want of caution; want of heed.

An unexpected way of delusion, whereby he more easily led away the incircumspection of their belief. Brown.

INCISED. adj. [inciser, French; incisus, Latin.] Cut; made by cutting; as,
an incised wound.

I brought the incised lips together. Wisteman.

INCISION. n. f. [incision, Fr. incisio, Lat.]

1. A cut; a wound made with a sharp instrument. Generally used for wounds made by a surgeon.

Let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.

God help thee, shallow man: God make incision in thee, thou art raw.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the earth falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes to drink in the dew of heaven, or the refreshments of a shower.

A small incision knife is more handy than a larger for opening the bag.

2. Division of viscosities by medicines.

Absterion is a scouring oil, or incision of viscid humours, and making them fluid, and cutting between them and the part; as in nitrous water, which scoureth linen.

INCI'SIVE. adj. [incisif, Fr. from incisus, Lat.] Having the quality of cutting or dividing.

The colour of many corpuscles will cohere by being precipitated together, and be destroyed by the effusion of very piercing and incisive liquors.

INCI'SORY. adj. [incisoire, Fr.] Having the quality of cutting.

INCI'SURE. n. f. [incisura, Latin.] A cut; an aperture.

In some creatures it is wide, in some narrow, in some with a deep incisure up into the head, for the better catching and holding of prey, and comminuting of hard food.

INCITATION. n. f. [incitatio, Latin.] Incitement; incentive; motive; impulse; the act of inciting; the power of inciting.

Dr. Ridley defines magnetical attraction to be a natural incitation and disposition conforming unto contiguity, an union of one magnetical body unto another.

The multitude of objects do proportionably multiply both the possibilities and incitations.

The mind gives not only licence, but incitation to the other passions to act with the utmost impetuosity.

To INCITE. v. a. [incito, Lat. inciter, Fr.] To stir up; to push forward in a purpose; to animate; to spur; to urge on.

How many now in health
Shall drop their blood, in approbation
Of what your reverence shall incite us to?

No blown ambition doth our arms incite;
But love, dear love, and our ag'd father's right.

Antiochus, when he incited Prusias to join in war, set before him the greatness of the Romans, comparing it to a fire, that took and spread from kingdom to kingdom.

Nature and common reason, in all difficulties, where prudence or courage are required, do rather incite us to fly for assistance to a single person than a multitude.

INCITEMENT. n. f. [from incite.] Motive; incentive; impulse; inciting cause.

A marvel it were, if a man of great capacity, having such incitements to make him desirous of all furtherances unto his cause, could espy in the whole scripture of God nothing which might breed at the least a probable opinion of likelihood, that divine authority was the same way ineluctable.

Hartlib seems sent hither by some good providence, to be the occasion and incitement of great good to this island.

If thou must reform the stubborn times,
From the long records of distant age
Derive incitements to renew thy rage.

INCIVIL. adj. [incivil, French.] Unpolished. See UNCIVIL.

INCIVILITY. n. f. [incivilité, French; in and civility.]

1. Want of courtesy; rudeness.

He does offend against that reverence which is due to the common apprehensions of mankind, whether true or not, which is the greatest incivility.

2. Act of rudeness. In this sense it has a plural.

Abstain from dissolute laughter, uncomely jests, loud talking, and jeering which, in civil account, are called indecencies and incivilities.

INCLEMENCY. n. f. [inclemence, French; inclementia, Latin.] Unmercifulness; cruelty; severity; harshness; roughness.

And though by tempests of the prize bereft,
In heav'n's inclemency some ease we find:
Our foes we vanquish'd by our valour left.

INCLEMENT. adj. [in and clemens, Lat.] Unmerciful; un pitying; void of tenderness; harsh. It is used oftener of things than of men.

Teach us further by what means to shun
Th' inclement seasons, rain, ice, hail and snow.

I stand
Naked, defenceless, on a foreign land:
Propitious to my wants, a vest supply,
To guard the wretched from th' inclement sky.

INCLINABLE. adj. [inclinabilis, Latin.]

1. Having a propension of will; favourably disposed; willing; tending by disposition: with to.

People are not always inclinable to the best.

A marvel it were, if a man of capacity could espy in the whole scripture nothing which might breed a probable opinion, that divine authority was the same way inclinable.

The gall and bitterness of certain men's writings, who spared him little, made him, for their sakes, the less inclinable to that truth which he himself should have honoured.

Inclinable now grown to touch or taste,
Solicited her longing eye.

2. Having a tendency.

If such a craft naturally fell, then it was more likely and inclinable to fall this thousand years than the last: but if the crust was always gradually nearer and nearer to falling, that plainly evinces that it had not endured eternally.

INCLINATION. n. f. [inclinatio, French; inclinatio, Latin.]

1. Tendency toward any point: with to.

The two rays, being equally refracted, have the same inclination to one another after refraction which they had before; that is, the inclinatio of half a degree answering to the sun's diameter.

Though most of the thick woods are grubbed up since the promontory has been cultivated, there are still many spots of it which shew the natural inclination of the soil leans that way.

3. Propension of mind; favourable disposition; incipient desire.

The king was wonderfully disquieted, when he found that the prince was totally alienated from all thoughts of or inclination to the marriage.

A mere inclination to a thing is not properly a willing of that thing; and yet in matters of duty, men frequently reckon it for such: for otherwise how should they so often plead and rest in the honest and well inclined disposition of their minds, when they are justly charged with an actual non-performance of the law?

4. Love; affection; regard. In this sense it admits for.

We have had few knowing painters, because of the little inclination which princes have for painting.

5. Disposition of mind.

Report the features of Octavia, her years,
Her inclination.

6. The tendency of the magnetical needle to the east or west.

[In pharmacy.] The act by which a clear liquor is poued off from some feces or sediment by only slooping the vessel, which is also called decantation.

INCLINATORY. adj. [from incline.] Having a quality of inclining to one or other.

If that inclinatorily virtue be destroyed by a touch from the contrary pole, that end which before was elevated will then decline.

INCLINATORILY. adv. [from inclinatorily.] Obliquely; with inclination to one side or the other; with some deviation from north and south.

Whether they be refrigerated inclinatorily, or somewhat equinoxially, that is, toward the eastern or western points, they discover some verticity.

To INCLINE. v. n. [inclinio, Latin; incliner, French.]

1. To bend; to lean; to tend toward any part: with to or toward.

Her house inclined unto death, and her paths unto the dead.

Still to this place
My heart inclines, still hither turn my eyes;
Hither my feet unbidden find their way.

2. To be favourably disposed to; to feel desire beginning.

Doth his majesty
Incline to it, or no?

— He seems indifferent;
Or rather twaying more upon our part.

Their hearts inclined to follow Abimelech.

To INCLINE.

1. To give a tendency or direction to any place or state.

The timely dew of sleep,
Now falling with soft slumb'rous weight,
Our eye-lids.

Thus far both armies to Belinda yield;
Now to the bason fate inclines the field.

A tow'ring structure to the palace join'd;
To this his steps the thoughtful prince inclined.

2. To turn toward any thing, as desirous or attentive.

Incline our hearts to keep this law.
You have not inclined your ear unto me.

But that from us aught should ascend to heav'n
So prevalent, as to concern the mind
Of God high-blest, or to incline his will,
Hard to belief may seem, yet this will prayer.

3. To bend; to incurvate.

With due respect my boy inclined,
As to some being of superior kind.

To INCLIP.

1. To enclose; to shut in: as, the shell includes a pearl.
2. To comprise; to comprehend.
- This desire being recommended to her majesty, it liked her to include the same within one intricate leaf. Bacon.
- The marvellous fable includes whatever is supernatural, and especially the machines of the gods. Pope.

Instead of enquiring whether he be a man of virtue, the question is only whether he be a whig or a tory; under which terms all good and ill qualities are included. Swift.

INCLUSIVE. adj. [inclusif, French.]

1. Enclosing; encircling.

O, would that the inclusive verge
Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were red-hot steel, to fear me to the brain!
Shakespeare's Richard III.

2. Comprehended in the sum or number: as, from Wednesday to Saturday inclusive; that is, both Wednesday and Saturday taken into the number.

I'll search where every virtue dwells,
From courts inclusive down to cells. Swift.

INCLUSIVELY. adv. [from inclusive.]

The thing mentioned reckoned into the account. See INCLUSIVE.

Thus much shall serve for the several periods of growth of the common law, until the time of Edward I. inclusively. Hale.

All articulation is made within the mouth, from the throat to the lips inclusively; and is differed partly by the organs used in it, and partly by the manner and degree of articulating. Holder.

INCOAGULABLE. adj. [in and coagulable.]

Incapable of coagulation.

INCOEXISTENCE. n. f. [in and coexistence.]

The quality of not existing together; non-affociation of existence. An unusual word.

Another more incurable part of ignorance, which sets us more remote from a certain knowledge of the coexistence or inexistence of different ideas in the same subject, is, that there is no discoverable connection between any secondary quality and those primary qualities it depends on. Locke.

INCOG. adv. [corrupted by mutilation from incognito, Latin.] Unknown; in private.

But if you're rough, and use him like a dog,
Depend upon it, he'll remain incog. Addison.

INCOGITANCY. n. f. [incogitantia, Lat.]

Want of thought.

One man's fancies are laws to successors, who afterwards misname all unobsequiousness to their incogitancy presumption. Foyle.

Next to the stupid and merely vegetable state of incogitancy, we may rank partial and piece-meal consideration. Deacy of Pity.

INCOGITATIVE. adj. [in and cogitative.]

Wanting the power of thought.

Purely material beings, as clippings of our heads, and sensible, thinking, perceiving beings, such as we find ourselves, we will call cogitative and incogitative beings. Locke.

INCOGNITO. adv. [incognitus, Latin.]

In a state of concealment.

'Twas long ago
Since god's came down incognito. Prior.

INCOHERENCE. { n. f. [in and coherence.]

INCOHERENCY. }

1. Want of cohesion; looseness of material parts.

If plaster be beaten into an impalpable powder, when poured out it will emulate a liquor, by reason that the small pieces and incoherence of the parts do both make them easy to be put into motion, and makes the pores they intercept so small, that they interrupt not the unity or continuity of the mass. Boyle.

2. Want of connexion; incongruity; inconsequence of argument; want of dependence of one part upon another.

I find that laying the intermediate ideas naked in their due order, shews the incoherency of the argumentations better than syllogisms. Locke.

Incoherencies in matter, and suppositions without proofs, put handfomely together, are apt to pass for strong reason. Locke.

INCOHERENT. adj. [in and coherent.]

1. Wanting cohesion; loose; not fixed to each other.

Had the strata of stone become solid, but the matter whereof they consist continued lax and incoherent, they had consequently been as pensive as those of marl or gravel. Woodward.

2. Inconsequential; inconsistent; having no dependence of one part upon another.

We have instances of perception whilst we are asleep, and retain the memory of them; but how extravagant and incoherent are they, and how little conformable to the perfection of a rational being! Locke.

INCOHERENTLY. adv. [from incoherent.]

Inconsistently; inconsequentially.

The character of Euryclæus is the imitation of a person confounded with tears, speaking irrationally and incoherently. Broom.

The parliament is necessary to assert and preserve the national rights of a people, with the incommodity and welfare of a country. Howell.

INCOMBUSTIBILITY. n. f. [from incombustibile.]

The quality of resisting fire so that it cannot consume.

The stone in the Appennines is remarkable for its shining quality, and the amantius for its incombustibility. Ray.

INCOMBUSTIBLE. adj. [incombustibile, Fr.]

Not to be consumed by fire.

It agrees in this common quality ascribed unto both, of being incombustible, and not consumable by fire. Wilkins.

INCOMBUSTIBLENESS. n. f. [from incombustibile.]

The quality of not being wasted by fire.

INCOME. n. f. [in and come.]

Revenue; produce of any thing.

Thou who repentest at the plenty of thy neighbour, and the greatness of his income, consider what are frequently the dismal consequences of all this. South.

No fields afford

So large an income to the village lord. Dryden.

St. Gaul has scarce any lands belonging to it, and little or no income but what arises from its trade: the great support of this little state is its linen manufacture. Addison on Italy.

Notwithstanding the large income annexed to some few of her preferences, this church hath in the whole little to subsist on. Atterbury.

INCOMMENSURABILITY. n. f. [from incommensurable.]

The state of one thing with respect to another, when they cannot be compared by any common measure.

INCOMMENSURABLE. adj. [French; from in, con, and mensurabilis, Latin.]

Not to be reduced to any measure common to both; not to be measured together, such as that the proportion of one to the other can be told.

Our disputations about vacuum or space, incommensurable quantities, the infinite divisibility of matter, and eternal duration, will lead us to see the weakness of our nature. Watts.

INCOMMENSURATE. adj. [in, con, and mensura, Latin.] Not admitting one common measure.

The diagonal line and side of a quadrate, which, to our apprehension, are incommensurate, are yet commensurable to the infinite comprehension of the divine intellect. More.

As all other measures of time are reducible to these three; so we labour to reduce these three, though strictly of themselves incommensurate to one another, for civil use, measuring the greater by the less. Ashler on Time.

If the year comprehend days, it is but as any greater space of time may be laid to comprehend a less, though the less space be incommensurate to the greater. Holder on Time.

To INCOMMUNICATE. } v. a. [incom-
To INCOMMUNICATE. } modo, Latin;

incommunicare, French.] To be incommunicable; to hinder or embarrass without very great injury.

A goat, planted upon the horn of a bull, begged the bull's pardon; but rather than incommunicate ye, says he, I'll remove. L'Estrange.

Although they sometimes molest and incommunicate the inhabitants, yet the agent, wisely both the one and the other is effected, is of that indispensable necessity to the earth and to mankind, that they could not subsist without it. Woodward.

INCOMMODOUS. adj. [incommodus, Lat.]

Inconvenient; vexatious without great mischief.

Things of general benefit, for in this world what is so perfect that no inconvenience doth ever follow it? may by some accident be incommodious to a few. Hooper.

Mens intentions in speaking are to be understood, without frequent explanations and incommodious interruptions. Locke.

INCOMMODOUSLY. adv. [from incommodious.]

Inconveniently; not at ease.

INCOMMODOUSNESS. n. f. [from incommodious.]

Inconvenience.

Diseases, disorders, and the incommodiousness of external nature, are inconsistent with happiness. Burnet.

INCOMMODITY. n. f. [incommodité, Fr.]

incommoditas, Latin.] Inconvenience; trouble.

Declare your opinion, what incommodity you have conceived to be in the common law which I would have thought most free from all such dislike. Spenser's State of Ireland.

If iron can be incorporated with flint or flint, without over great charge, or other incommodity, the cheapness doth make the compound stuff profitable. Bacon.

By considering the region and the winds, one might to cast the rooms, which shall most need fire, that he should little fear the incommodity of smok. Wetton's Architecture.

INCOMMUNICABILITY. n. f. [from incommunicable.]

The quality of not being impartible.

INCOMMUNICABLE. adj. [incommunicable,

French; in and communicable.]

He overcame that natural incompatibility, which hath been noted between the vulgar and the sovereign favour. Wotton.

The reason of the strifes rests not upon the incompatibility of excess of one infinitude above another, either in intention or extension; but the incompatibility of any multitude to be infinite. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLE. adj. [incompatible, Fr. rather incompatible, as it is sometimes written; in and compato, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent with something else; such as cannot subsist or cannot be possessed together with something else: it is followed with with.

Fortune and love have ever been incompatible, that it is no wonder, madam, if, having had to much of the one for you, I have ever found so little of the other for myself. Sackling.

May not the outward expressions of love in many good Christians be greater to some other object than to God? Or is this incompatible with the sincerity of the love of God? Hammond.

We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, by mixing together those colours of which we would make trial. Dryden.

Sense I have proved to be incompatible with mere bodies, even those of the most compound and elaborate textures. Bentley.

2. It is used sometimes with to.

The repugnancy of infinitude is equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, and depends upon the incompatibility of things successive with infinitude. Hale.

INCOMPATIBLY. adv. [for incompatibly; from incompatible.] Inconsistently.

INCOMPETENCY. n. f. [incompetence, Fr. from incompetent.] Inability; want of adequate ability or qualification.

Our not being able to discern the motion of a shroud of a dial-plate, or that of the index upon a clock, ought to make us sensible of the incompetency of our eyes to discern some motions of natural bodies incomparably slower than these. Boyle.

INCOMPETENT. adj. [in and competent.]

Not suitable; not adequate; not proportionate. In the civil law it denotes some defect of right to do any thing.

Richard III. had a resolution, out of hatred to his brethren, to disable their issues, upon false and incompetent pretext, the one of attainder, the other of illegitimation. Bacon.

Every speck does not blind a man, nor does every infirmity make one unable to discern, or incompetent to reprove, the grosser faults of others. Government of the Tongue.

I thank you for the commission you have given me: how I have acquitted myself of it must be left to the opinion of the world, in spite of any protestation which I can enter against the present age, as incompetent or corrupt judges. Dryden.

Laymen, with equal advantages of parts, are not the most incompetent judges of sacred things. Dryden.

An equal attraction on all sides of all matter, is just equal to no attraction at all; and by this means all the motion in the universe must proceed from external impulse alone, which is an incompetent cause for the formation of a world. Bentley.

INCOMPETENTLY. adv. [from incompetent.] Unsuitably; unduly.

INCOMPLETE. adj. [in and complete.] Not perfect; not finished.

It pleaseth him in mercy to account himself incomplete, and named without us. Hooker.

 How firmly these indentures bind. Swift.

INDEPENDENCE. } n. f. [independence, Fr.]
INDEPENDENCY. } in and dependence.]
 Freedom; exemption from reliance or control; state over which none has power.

Dreams may give us some idea of the great excellency of a human soul, and some intimations of its independency on matter. Addison.

Let fortune do her worst, whatever she makes us lose, as long as she never makes us lose our honesty and our independence. Pope.

Give me, I cry'd, enough for me,

My bread and independency,

So bought an annual rent or two,

And liv'd just as you see I do. Pope.

INDEPENDENT. adj. [independant, French; in and dependent.]

1. Not depending; not supported by any other; not relying on another; not controlled. It is used with on, of, or from, before the object; of which on seems most proper, since we say to depend on, and consequently dependent on.

Creation must needs infer providence, and God's making the world irrefragably proves that he governs it too; or that a being of dependent nature remains nevertheless independent upon him in that respect. South.

Since all princes of independent governments are in a state of nature, the world never was without men in that state. Locke.

The town of St. Gaul is a protestant republick, independent of the abbot, and under the protection of the cantons. Addison.

2. Not relating to any thing else, as to a superior cause or power.

The consideration of our understanding, which is an incorporeal substance independent from matter; and the contemplation of our own bodies, which have all the stamps and characters of excellent contrivance: these alone do very easily guide us to the wise Author of all things. Bentley.

INDEPENDENT. n. f. One who in religious affairs holds that every congregation is a complete church, subject to no superior authority.

We shall, in our sermons take occasion to justify such passages in our liturgy as have been unjustly quarrell'd at by presbyterians, independent, or other puritan sectaries. Sanderfon.

A very famous independent minister was head of a college in those times. Addison's Sp. Examiner.

INDEPENDENTLY. adv. [from independent.] Without reference to other things. Dispose things and shew, without finishing every thing independently the one of the other. Dryden.

INDESERV'T. n. f. [in and desert.] Want of merit. This is an useful word, but not much received.

Those who were once looked on as his equals are not to think the same of his merit a reflection on their own indeserts. Addison.

2. [In chronology.] The indiction, instituted by Constantine the great, is properly a cycle of tributes, orderly disposed, for fifteen years, and by it accounts of that kind were kept. Afterward, in memory of the great victory obtained by Constantine over Mezentius, 8 Cal. Oct. 312, by which an entire freedom was given to christianity, the council of Nice, for the honour of Constantine, ordained that the accounts of years should be no longer kept by the Olympiads, which till that time had been done; but that, instead thereof, the indiction should be made use of, by which to reckon and date their years, which hath its epocha A. D. 313, Jan. 1.

INDIFFERENCE. } n. f. [indifference, Fr.
INDIFFERENCY. } [indifferentia, Lat.]

1. Neutrality; suspension; equipoise or freedom from motives on either side.

In choice of committees it is better to chuse indifferent persons, than to make an indifference by putting in those that are strung on both sides.

Bacon's Essays.

By an equal indifference for all truth, I mean, not loving it as such, before we know it to be true.

Locke.

A perfect indifference in the mind, not determinable by its last judgment, would be as great an imperfection as the want of indifference to act, or not to act, till determined by the will.

Locke.

Those who would borrow light from expositors, either consult only those who have the good luck to be thought sound and orthodox, avoiding those of different sentiments; or else with indifference look into the notes of all commentators.

Locke.

2. Impartiality.

Read the book with indifference and judgment, and thou can'st not but greatly commend it.

Whitgift.

3. Negligence; want of affection; unconcernedness.

Indifference cannot but be criminal, when it is conversant about objects which are so far from being of an indifferent nature, that they are of the highest importance.

Addison.

A place which we must pass through not only with the indifference of strangers, but with the vigilance of those who travel through the country of an enemy.

Rogers.

Indifference, clad in wisdom's guise,
All fortitude of mind supplies;
For how can stony bowels melt,
In those who never pity felt?

Swift.

He will let you know he has got a clap with as much indifference as he would a piece of public news.

Swift.

The people of England should be frightened with the French king and the pretender once a year: the want of observing this necessary precept, has produced great indifference in the vulgar.

Arbutnot.

4. State in which no moral or physical reason preponderates; state in which there is no difference.

The choice is left to our discretion, except a principal bond of some higher duty remove the indifference that such things have in themselves: their indifference is removed, if we take away our own liberty.

Hooker.

 And damn'd all those that trust them! Shaksp.

INFECTIO. n. f. [infectio, Fr. infectio, Latin.] Contagion; mischief by communication; taint; poison.

Infection is that manner of communicating a disease by some effluvia, or particles which fly off from disordered bodies, and mixing with the juices of others, occasion in the same disorders as in the bodies they came from. Quincy.

What a strange infection
Is fall'n into thy ear! Shakspeare's Cymb.
The blessed gods
Purge all infections from our air, whilst you Do climate here. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Vouchsafe, dittus'd infection of a man,
For these known evils, but to give me leave,
By circumstance, to curse thy curled self. Shakf.
Hence,

Left that th' infection of his fortune take Like hold on thee. Shaksp. King Lear.

The transmission or emission of the thinner and more airy parts of bodies, as in odours and infections, is, of all the rest, the most corporeal;
but whilst there be a number of those emissions, both wholesome and unwholesome, that give no smell at all. Bacon.

INFECTIOUS. adj. [from infect.] Contagious; influencing by communicated qualities.

The most infectious pestilence upon thee. Shakf.
In a house,
Where the infectious pestilence did reign.

Some known diseases are infectious, and others are not: those that are infectious are such as are chiefly in the spirits, and not so much in the humours, and therefore pass easily from body to body; such as pestilences and lippitudes. Bacon.

Smells may have as much power to do good as to do harm, and contribute to health as well as to diseases; which is too much felt by experience in all that are infectious, and by the operations of some poisons, that are received only by the smell.

INFECTIOUSLY. adv. [from infectious.] Contagiously.

The will dotes, that is inclinable
To what infectiously itself affects. Shakspeare.

INFECTIOUSNESS. n. f. [from infectious.] The quality of being infectious; contagiousness.

True love, well considered, hath an infective power. Sidney.

INFECUND. n. f. [infecundus, Latin.] Unfruitful; infertile.

How safe and agreeable a conservatory the earth is to vegetables, is manifest from their rotting, drying, or being rendered infecund in the waters, or the air; but in the earth their vigour is long preserved. Derham.

INFECUNDITY. n. f. [infecunditas, Lat.] Want of fertility; barrenness.

INFELICITY. n. f. [infelicité, French; infelicitas, Lat.] Unhappiness; misery; calamity.

Whatever is the ignorance and infelicity of the present state, we were made wise and happy.

Here is our great infelicity, that, when single words signify complex ideas, one word can never distinctly manifest all the parts of a complex idea. Watts.

TO INFERR. v. a. [inferer, Fr. infero, Latin.]

1. To bring on; to induce.
Vomits infer some small detriment to the lungs. Harvey.

2. To infer is nothing but, by virtue of one proposition laid down as true, to draw in another as true, i. e. to see or suppose such a connection of the two ideas of the inferred proposition. Locke.

Yet what thou canst attain, which best may serve
To glorify the Maker and infer
Thee also happier, shall not be withheld Thy hearing. Milton.

Great,
Or bright, infers not excellence: the earth
Though in comparison of heav'n so small,
Nor glistening, may of solid good contain
More plenty than the sun, that barren shines.

One would wonder how, from so differing premisses, they should all infer the same conclusion. Milton.

They have more opportunities than other men have of purchasing public esteem, by deserving well of mankind; and such opportunities always infer obligations. Atterbury.

3. To offer; to produce. Not in use.

Full well hath Clifford play'd the orator, Infering arguments of mighty force. Shaksp.

INFERENCE. n. f. [inference, Fr. from infer.] Conclusion drawn from previous arguments.

Though it may chance to be right in the conclusion, it is yet unjust and mistaken in the method of inference. Glanville.

These inferences or conclusions are the effects of reasoning, and the three propositions, taken all together, are called syllogism or argument. Watts.

INFERRIBLE. adj. [from infer.] Deducible from premised grounds.

As simple mistakes commonly beget fallacies, so men from fallacious foundations, and misapprehended mediums, erect conclusions no way inferible from their premisses. Brown.

INFERRIORITY. n. f. [inferiorité, French, from inferiour.] Lower state of dignity or value.

The language, though not of equal dignity, yet as near approaching to it as our modern barbarism will allow; and therefore we are to rest contented with that only inferiority which is not possibly to be remedied. Dryden.

INFERRIOUR. adj. [inferior, Latin; inferiour, French.]

1. Lower in place.
2. Lower in station or rank of life: correlative to superiour.

Render me more equal, or perhaps Superior, for inferior who is free? Milton.

3. Lower in value or excellency.

The love of liberty with life is inferior,
And life itself th' inferiour gift of heav'n. Dryd.
I have added some original papers of my own, which, whether they are equal or inferiour to my other poems, an author is the most improper judge of. Dryden.

4. Subordinate.
General and fundamental truths in philosophy, religion, and human life, conduct our thoughts into a thousand inferiour and particular propositions. Watts.

INFERRIOUR. n. f. [from the adjective.] One in a lower rank or station than another.

A great person gets more by obliging his inferiour than by disdainning him. South.

Exhorting her, if she did marry, yet not to join herself to an infidel, as in those times some widows christian had done, for the advancement of their estate in this world. Hooker.

INFIDELITY. n. f. [infidélité, Fr. infidelitas, Latin.]

1. Want of faith.
The consideration of the divine omnipotence and infinite wisdom, and our own ignorance, are great instruments of silencing the murmurs of infidelity. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. Disbelief of christianity.
One would fancy that infidels would be exempt from that single fault, which seems to grow out of the imprudent fervours of religion: but so it is, that infidelity is propagated with as much fierceness and contention, as if the safety of mankind depended upon it. Addison's Spectator.

3. Treachery; deceit; breach of contract or trust.
The infidelities on the one part between the two sexes, and the caprices on the other, the vanities and vexations attending even the most refined delights that make up its bulkiness of life, render it silly and uncomfortable. Spektator.

INFINITE. adj. [infini, Fr. infinitus, Latin.]

1. Unbounded; boundless; unlimited; immense; having no boundaries or limits to its nature.

Impossible it is, that God should withdraw his presence from any thing, because the very substance of God is infinite. Hooker.

What's time, when on eternity we think?
A thousand ages in that sea must sink:
Time's nothing but a word; a million
Is full as far from infinite as one. Denham.

Thou sov'reign pow'r, whose secret will controls
The inward bent and motion of our souls!
Why hast thou plac'd such infinite degrees
Between the cause and cure of my disease. Prior.

When we would think of infinite space or duration, we at first make some very large idea; as perhaps of millions of ages or miles, which possibly we multiply several times. Locke.

Even an angel's comprehensive thought
Cannot extend as far as thou hast wrought:
Our vast conceptions are by swelling brought,
Swallow'd and lost in infinite, to nought. Dennis.

2. It is hyperbolically used for large; great.

INFINITELY. adv. [from infinite.]

1. Without limits; without bounds; immensely.

Nothing may be infinitely desired, but that good which indeed is infinite. Hooker.

2. In a great degree.

Infinitely the greater part of mankind have professed to act under a full persuasion of this great article. Rogers.

INFINITENESS. n. f. [from infinite.] Immensity; boundlessness; infinity.

The cunning or his flattery, the readiness of his tears, the infiniteness of his vows, were but among the weakest threads of his net. Sidney.

Let us always bear about us such impressions of reverence, and fear of God, that we may humble ourselves before his Almightyness, and express that infinite distance between his infiniteness and our weaknesses. Taylor.

INFINITE'SIMAL. adj. [from infinite.] Infinitely divided.

INFINITIVE. adj. [from infinite., Fr. infinitivus, Latin.] In grammar, the infinitive affirms or intimates the intention of affirming, which is one use of the indicative; but then it does not do it absolutely. Clarke.

INFINITUDE. n. f. [from infinite.]

1. Infinity; immensity.

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar
Stood rapt, stood vast infinitude confin'd. Milton.

Though the repugnancy of infinitude be equally incompatible to continued or successive motion, or continued quantity, and pends upon the incompossibility of the very nature of things successive or extensive with infinitude; yet that incompossibility is more conspicuous in discrete quantity, that arises from parts actually distinguished. Hale.

2. Boundless number.

We see all the good sense of the age cut out, and mixed into almost an infinitude of distinctions. Adison's Spectator.

INFINITY. n. f. [from infinite, French; infinitas, Latin.]

1. Immensity; boundlessness; unlimited qualities.

There cannot be more infinities than one; for one of them would limit the other. Raleigh.

The better, the more desirable; that therefore must be desirable, wherein there is infinity of goodness; so that if any thing desirable may be infinite, that must needs be the highest of all things that are desired: no good is infinite but only God, therefore he is our felicity and bliss. Hooker.

2. Endless number. A hyperbolical use of the word.

Homer has concealed faults under an infinity of admirable beauties. Broom.

The liver, being swelled, compresseth the stomach, stops the circulation of the juices, and produceth an infinity of bad symptoms. Arbutn.

The greater appearance of ingeniousness there is in the practice I am disapproving, the more dangerous it is. Boyle.

INGENITE. adj. [ingentus, Lat.] Innate; inborn; native; ingenerate.

Aristotle affirms the mind to be at first a mere rasa tabula; and that notions are not ingente, and imprinted by the finger of nature, but by the latter and more languid impressions of sense, being only the reports of observation, and the result of so many repeated experiments. Scott.

We give them this ingente, moving force,
That makes them always downward take their course. Blackmore.

INGENUITY. n. f. [ingenuité, Fr. from ingenuous.]

1. Openness; fairness; candour; freedom from dissimulation.

Such of high quality, or rather of particular note, as shall fall under my pen, I shall not let pass without their due character, being part of my professed ingenuity. Watson.

My constancy I to the planets give;
My truth, to them who at the court do live;
Mine ingenuity and openness

To jests; to buffoons my pensiveness. Deans.

I know not whether it be more strange or wonder, that men can so put off ingenuity, and the native greatness of their kind, as to descend to so base, so ignoble a vice. Gen. of Tongue.

If a child, when questioned for any thing, directly confess, you must commend his ingenuity, and pardon the fault, be it what it will. Locke.

2. [from ingenious.] Wit; invention; genius; subtilty; acuteness.

These are but the frigidities of wit, and become not the genius of mainly ingenities. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ancient atomical hypothesis might have slept for ever, had not the ingenuity of the present age recalled it from its urn and silence. Gloucester.

Such sots have neither parts nor wit, ingenuity of discourse, nor fitness of conversation, to entertain or delight any one. South.

A pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity, and how much an honest simplicity is preferable to fine parts and subtle speculations. Westwood.

INGENUOUS. a. f. [ingenuus, Latin.]

1. Open; fair; candid; generous; noble;

Many speeches there are of Joub's, when by his wisdom and other virtues may appear; but the glory of an ingenuous mind he hath purchased by these words only, Behold I will lay mine hand upon my mouth; I have spoken once, yet will I not therefore maintain argument; yea twice, howbeit for that cause further I will not proceed. Hobbes.

Infuse into their young breasts such ingenuous and noble ardour, as would not fail to make many of them renowned. Milton.

If an ingenious detestation of falsehood be but carefully and early instilled, that is the true and genuine method to obviate dishonesty. Lo ke.

Ingrate forgetfulness shall poison, rather Than pity note how much. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

And you degenerate, you ingrate revolts. Shak.

So will fall

He and his faithless progeny: whose fault?

Whose but his own? Ingrate; he had of me

All he could have: I made him just and right,

Sufficient to have stood, though free to fall. Mil.

Perfidious and ingrate!

His stores ye ravage, and usurp his state. Pope.

2. Unpleasing to the sense.

The causes of that which is unpleasing or ingrate to the hearing, may receive light by that which is pleasing and grateful to the sight. Bacon's Natural History.

Like pilgrims to th' appointed place we tend;
The world's an inn, and death the journey's end. Dryden.

One may learn more here in one day, than in 2 year's tumbling from one inn to another. Locke.

2. A house where students were boarded and taught: whence we still call the colleges of common law inns of court.

Go home and pull down the Savoy; others to the inns of courts: down with them all. Shaksf.

3. It was anciently used for the town houses in which great men resided when they attended the court.

To INN, v. n. [from the noun.] To take up temporary lodging.

In thyself dwell;

Inn any where: continuance maketh hell. Donne.

To INN, v. a. To house; to put under cover.

He that ears my land, spares my tears, and gives me leave to inn the crop. Shakspeare.
Howsoever the laws made in that parliament did bear good fruit, yet the subsidy bare a fruit that proved harsh and bitter: all was inned at last into the king's barn. Bacon's Henry VII.
Mow clover or rye-grafs, and make it fit to inn. Mortimer.

INNATE. } adj. [inné, French; innu- INNATED. } tus, Latin.]

1. Inborn; ingenerate; natural; not superadded; not adscititious. Innated is not proper.

The Druiian hath been cried up for an innated integrity, and accounted the uprightest dealer on earth. Horvel.

With eloquence innate his tongue was arm'd;
Though harsh the precept, yet the people charm'd. Dryden.

2. Innate is used in the following passage for inherent. Innate in persons, inherent in things.

Mutual gravitation, or spontaneous attraction, cannot possibly be innate and essential to matter. Bentley.

INNA'TENESS, n. f. [from innate.] The quality of being innate.

INNAVIGABLE, adj. [innavigabilis, Lat.] Not to be pass'd by failing.

If you fo hard a toil will undertake,
As twice to pass th' innavigable lake. Dryden.

INNER, adj. [from in.] Interior; not outward.

But th' elfin knight with wonder all the way
Did feed his eyes, and fill'd his inner thought. Spenser.

This attracts the soul,
Governs the inner man, the nobler part;
That other o'er the body only reigns. Milton.

Many families are established in the West Indies, and some discovered in the inner parts of America. Addison's Spectator.

The kidney is a conglomerated gland, which is to be understood only of the outer part; for the inner part, whereof the papillæ are composed, is muscular. Grew.

Thus, seiz'd with sacred fear, the monarch pray'd;
Then to his inner court the guests convey'd. Pope.

INNERMOST, adj. [from inner. It seems less proper than inmost.] Remotest from the outward part.

The reflected beam of light would be so broad at the distance of six feet from the speculum, where the rings appeared, as to obscure one or two of the innermost rings. Newton.

INNERHOLDER, n. f. [inn and hold.] A man who keeps an inn; an innkeeper.

INNINGS, n. f. Lands recovered from the sea. Ainsworth.

INNERKEEPER, n. f. [inn and keeper.] One who keeps lodgings and provisions for the entertainment of travellers.

Clergymen must not keep a tavern, nor a judge be an innerkeeper. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

A factious innerkeeper was banged, drawn, and quartered. Addison's Freeholder.

We were not so inquisitive about the inn as the innerkeeper; and provided our landlord's principles were sound, did not take any notice of the staidness of his provisions. Addison.

INNOCENCE. } n. f. [innocence, French;
INNOCENCY. } innocentia, Latin.]

1. Purity from injurious action; untainted integrity.

Simplicity and spotless innocence. Milton.

What comfort does overflow the devout soul, from a consciousness of its own innocence and integrity! Tillotson.

2. Freedom from guilt imputed.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that dye is on me
Which makes my whit'it part black. Shaksf.

If truth and upright innocency fail me,
I'll to the king my master. Shakspeare.

3. Harmlessness; innocuousness.

The air was calm and serene; none of those tumultuary motions and conflicts of vapours, which the mountains and the winds cause in ours: 'twas suited to a golden age, and to the first innocency of nature. Burton's Theory.

4. Simplicity of heart, perhaps with some degree of weakness.

I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence. Shaksf.
We laugh at the malice of apes, as well as at the innocence of children. Temple.

INNOCENT, adj. [innocent, French; innocens, Latin.]

1. Pure from mischief.

Something
You may deserve of him through me and wisdom,
To offer up a weak, poor, innocent lamb,
T' appear an angry god. Shakspeare.
Wreck on innocent frail man his loss. Milton.

2. Free from any particular guilt.

Good madam, keep yourself within yourself;
The man is innocent. Shakspeare.

The peasant, innocent of all these ills,
With crooked ploughs the fertile fallows tills,
And the round year with daily labour fills. Dryden.

3. Unhurtful; harmless in effects.

The spear
Sung innocent, and spent its force in air. Pope.

INNOCENT, n. f.

1. One free from guilt or harm.

So pure an innocent as that fame lamb. Fairy Queen.

Thou hast kill'd the sweetest innocent,
That e'er did lift up eye. Shakspeare's Othello.
If murth'ring innocents be executing,
Why, then thou art an executioner. Shakspeare.

2. A natural; an ideot.

Innocents are excluded by natural defects. Hosker.

INNOCENTLY, adv. [from innocent.]

1. Without guilt.

The humble and contented man pleases himself innocently and easily, while the ambitious man attempts to please others sinfully and dishonestly. South.

2. With simplicity; with silliness or imprudence.

3. Without hurt.

Balls at his feet lay innocently dead. Cowley.

INNOCUOUS, adj. [innocuus, Latin.]

Harmless in effects.

The most dangerous poisons, skilfully managed, may be made not only innocuous, but of all other medicines the most effectual. Grew.

INNOCUOUSLY, adv. [from innocuous.]

Without mischievous effects.

Whether quails, from any peculiarity of constitution, do innocuously feed upon hellebore, or rather sometimes but medically use the same. Burton's Vulgar Errors.

INNOCUOUSNESS, n. f. [from innocuous.]

Harmlessness.

The blow which shakes a wall, or beats it down, and kills men, hath a greater effect on the mind than that which penetrates into a mud wall, and doth little harm; for that innocuousness of the effect makes, that, although in itself it be as great as the other, yet 'tis little observed. Diaby.

To INNOVATE, v. a. [innovare, Fr. innovo, Latin.]

1. To bring in something not known before.

Men pursue some few principles which have chance upon, and care not to innovate, which draws unknown inconveniences. Bacon.

Former things
Are set aside like abdicated kings;
And every moment alters what is done,
And innovates some act 'till then unknown.

Every man cannot distinguish betwixt pedantry and poetry; every man therefore is not fit to innovate.

2. To change by introducing novelties.
From his attempts upon the civil power, he proceeds to innovate God's worship.

INNOVATION. n. f. [innovation, French, from innovate.] Change by the introduction of novelty.

The love of things ancient doth argue staydness; but levity and want of experience maketh apt unto innovations.

It were good that men in innovations would follow the example of time itself, which indeed innovateth greatly, but quietly and by degrees.

Great changes may be made in a government, yet the form continue, but large intervals of time must pass between every such innovation, enough to make it of a piece with the constitution.

INNOVATOR. n. f. [innovateur, French; from innovate.]

1. An introducer of novelties.
I attach thee as a traitorous innovator,
A foe to th' publick weal.

He that will not apply new remedies, must expect new evils; for time is the greatest innovator: and if time of course alter things to the worse, and wisdom and council shall not alter them to the better, what shall be the end?

2. One that makes changes by introducing novelties.

He counsels them to detest and persecute all innovators of divine worship.

INNOXIOUS. adj. [innoxius, Latin.]

1. Free from mischievous effects.
Innoxious flames are often seen on the hair of men's heads and horses' manes.

We may safely use purgatives, they being benign, and of innoxious qualities.

Sent by the better genius of the night,
Innoxious gleaming on the horse's mane
The meteor fits.

2. Pure from crimes.
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age.

INNOXIOUSLY. adv. [from innoxious.]

1. Harmlessly; without harm done.
Animals, that can innoxiously digest these poisons, become antidotal to the poison digested.

2. Without harm suffered.

INNOXIOUSNESS. n. f. [from innoxious.] Harmlessness.

INNUENDO. n. f. [innuendo, from innuo, Latin.] An oblique hint.

As if the commandments, that require obedience and forbid murder, were to be indicted for a libellous innuendo upon all the great men that come to be concerned.

Mercury, though employed on a quite contrary errand, owns it a marriage by an innuendo.
Pursue your trade of scandal-picking,
Your hints that Stella is no chicken;
Your innuendoes, when you tell us,
That Stella loves to talk with fellows.

INNUMERABLE. adj. [innumerable, Fr. innumerabilis, Lat.] Not to be counted for multitude.

You have sent innumerable substance
To furnish Rome, and to prepare the ways
You have for dignities.

Cover me, ye pines,
Ye cedars! with innumerable boughs
Hide me where I may never see them more.

In lines, which appear of an equal length, one may be longer than the other by innumerable parts.

INNUMERABLY. adv. [from innumerable.] Without number.

INNUMEROUS. adj. [innumerus, Latin.] Too many to be counted.

'T would be some solace yet, some little cheering,
In this close dungeon of innumeros boughs.

I take the wood,
And in thick shelter of innumeros boughs,
Enjoy the comfort gentle sleep allows.

TO INOCULATE. v. n. [inoculo, in and oculus, Lat.] To propagate any plant by inserting its bud into another stock; to practise inoculation. See INOCULATION.

Nor are the ways alike in all
How to ingraft, how to inoculate.
Now is the season for the budding of the orange-tree: inoculate therefore at the commencement of this month.

But various are the ways to change the state,
To plant, to bud, to graft, to inoculate.

TO INOCULATE. v. a. To yield a bud to another stock.

Virtue cannot so inoculate our old stock, but we shall relish of it.

Thy stock is too much out of date,
For tender plants t' inoculate.

Where lilies, in a lovely brown,
Inoculate carnation.

INOCULATION. n. f. [inoculatio, Latin; from inoculate.]

1. The act of inserting the eye of a bud into another stock.

Inoculation is practis'd upon all sorts of stone fruit, and upon oranges and jasmines. Chuse a smooth part of the stock; then with your knife make an horizontal cut cross the rind of the stock, and from the middle of that cut make a slit downwards about two inches in length in the form of a T; but be careful not to cut too deep, lest you wound the stock: then having cut off the leaf from the bud, leaving the footstalk remaining, make a cross cut about half an inch below the eye, and with your knife slit off the bud, with part of the wood to it. This done, with your knife pull off that part of the wood which was taken with the bud, observing whether the eye of the bud be left to it or not; for all these buds which lose their eyes in stripping are good for nothing: then raising the bark of the stock, thrust the bud therein, placing it smooth between the rind and the wood of the stock; and so having exactly fitted the bud to the stock, tie them closely round, taking care not to bind round the eye of the bud.

In the stem of Maiana they all met, and come to be ingrafted all upon one stock, most of them by inoculation.

2. The practice of transplanting the smallpox, by infusion of the matter from ripened pustules into the veins of the uninfected, in hopes of procuring a milder sort than what frequently comes by infection.

It is evident, by inoculation, that the smallest quantity of the matter, mixed with the blood, produceth the disease.

INOCULATOR. n. f. [from inoculate.]

1. One that practises the inoculation of trees.

2. One who propagates the smallpox by inoculation.

Had Joh. a Gaddesden been now living, he would have been at the head of the inoculators.

INODORATE. adj. [in and odoratus, Lat.] Having no scent.

Whites are more inodorate than flowers of the same kind coloured.

INODOROUS. adj. [inodorus, Latin.] Wanting scent; not affecting the nose.

The white of an egg is a viscous, inactive, insipid, inodorous liquor.

INOFFENSIVE. adj. [in and offensive.]

1. Giving no scandal; giving no provocation.

A stranger, inoffensive, unprovoking.
However inoffensive we may be in other parts of our conduct, if we are found wanting in this trial of our love, we shall be disowned by God as traitors.

2. Giving no uneasiness; causing no terror.

Should infants have taken offence at any thing, mixing pleasant and agreeable appearances with it, must be used, 'till it be grown inoffensive to them.

3. Harmless; hurtless; innocent.

For drink the grape
She crushes, inoffensive most.
With what'er gall thou set'st thyself to write,
Thy inoffensive satires never bite.

Hark, how the cannon, inoffensive now,
Gives signs of gratulation.

4. Unembarrassed; without stop or obstruction. A Latin mode of speech.

From hence a passage broad,
Smooth, easy, inoffensive, down to hell.

INOFFENSIVELY. adv. [from inoffensive.] Without appearance of harm; without harm.

INOFFENSIVENESS. n. f. [from inoffensive.] Harmlessness; freedom from appearance of harm.

INOFFICIOUS. adj. [in and officious.] Not civil; not attentive to the accommodation of others.

INOPINATE. adj. [inopinatus, Lat. inopiné, Fr.] Not expected.

INOPPORTUNE. adj. [inopportunus, Lat.] Unseasonable; inconvenient.

INORDINACY. n. f. [from inordinatus.] Irregularity; disorder. It is safer to use inordination.

They become very sinful by the excess, which were not so in their nature: that inordinacy sets them in opposition to God's designation.

INORDINATE. adj. [in and ordinatus, Latin.] Irregular; disorderly; deviating from right.

These people were wisely brought to allegiance; but being straight left unto their own inordinate life, they forgot what before they were taught.

These raise
At last dissembler'd, discontented thoughts;
Vain hopes, vain aims, inordinate desires,
Blown up with high conceits engend'ring pride.

From inordinate love and vain fear comes all unquietness of spirit.

INORDINATELY. adv. [from inordinate.] Irregularly; not rightly.

As soon as a man desires any thing inordinately, he is presently disquieted in himself.

INORDINATENESS. n. f. [from inordinate.] Want of regularity; intemperance of any kind.

INORDINATION. n. f. [from inordinate.] Irregularity; deviation from right.

Schoolmen and casuists, having too much philosophy to clear a lye from that intrinsic inquisition and deviation from right reason, inherent in the nature of it, held that a lye was absolutely and universally sinful. South.

INORGANICAL. adj. [in and organical.]

Void of organs or instrumental parts.

We come to the lowest and the most inorganical parts of matter. Locke

To INOSCULATE. v. n. [in and osculum, Latin.] To unite by apposition or contact.

INQUEST. n. f. [enqueste, French; inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry or examination.

What confusion of face shall we be under, when that grand inquest begins; when an account of our opportunities of doing good, and a particular of our use or misuse of them, is given in? Atterb.

2. In law.

The inquest of jurors, or by jury, is the most usual trial of all causes, both civil and criminal; for in civil causes, after proof is made on either side, so much as each part thinks good for himself, if the doubt be in the fact, it is referred to the discretion of twelve indifferent men, impanelled by the sheriff; and as they bring in their verdict his judgment passes: for the judge saith, The jury finds the fact thus; then is the law thus, and so we judge. Corwell.

3. Inquiry; search; study.

This is the laborious and vexatious inquest that the soul must make after science. South.

INQUIETUDE. n. f. [inquietude, Fr. inquietudo, inquietus, Lat.] Disturbed state; want of quiet; attack on the quiet.

Having had such experience of his fidelity and observance abroad, he found himself engaged in honour to support him at home from any farther inquietude. Wotton

Iron, that has stood long in a window, being thence taken, and by a cork balanced in water, where it may have a free mobility, will bewray a kind of inquietude and discontentment 'till it attain the former position. Wotton.

The youthful hero, with returning light, Rose anxious from th' inquietudes of night. Pope.

To INQUINATE. v. a. [inquino, Lat.]

To pollute; to corrupt.

An old opinion it was, that the ibis feeding upon serpents, that venomous food inquinated their oval conceptions, that they sometimes came forth in serpentine shapes. Brown.

INQUINATION. n. f. [inquinatio, Latin; from inquitate.]

Corruption; pollution. Their causes and axioms are so full of imagination, and so infected with the old received theories, as they are mere inquinations of experience, and concoct it not. Bacon.

The middle action, which produceth such imperfect bodies, is fitly called by some of the ancients inquinatio, or inconcoction, which is a kind of petrification. Bacon.

INQUIRABLE. adj. [from inquire.] That of which inquisition or inquest may be made.

To INQUIRE. v. n. [enquirer, French; inquirō, Latin.]

1. To ask questions; to make search; to exert curiosity on any occasion: with of before the person asked.

You have oft inquir'd

This is a question only of inquirers, not disputers, who neither affirm nor deny, but examine. Locke.

Late inquirers by their glasses find, That ev'ry insect of each different kind, In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays, Organs involv'd and latent life displays. Blackstr.

2. One who interrogates; one who questions.

INQUIRY. n. f. [from inquire.]

1. Interrogation; search by question.

The men which were sent from Cornelius had made inquiry for Simon's house, and stood before the gate. Acts.

2. Examination; search.

This exactness is absolutely necessary in inquiries after philosophical knowledge, and in controversies about truth. Locke.

As to the inquiry about liberty, I think the question is not proper, whether the will be free, but whether a man be free? Locke.

I have been engaged in physical inquiries. Locke.

It is a real inquiry, concerning the nature of a bird, or a bat, to make their yet imperfect ideas of it more complete. Locke.

Judgment or opinion, in a remoter sense, may be called invention: as when a judge or a physician makes an exact inquiry into any cause. Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

INQUISITION. n. f. [inquisition, Fr. inquisitio, Latin.]

1. Judicial inquiry.

When he maketh inquisition for blood, he remembereth them; he forgetteth not the cry of the humble. Psalms.

When inquisition was made of the matter, it was found out. Ezher.

With much severity, and strict inquisition, were punished the adherents and aids of the late rebels. Byron's Henry VII.

Though it may be impossible to recollect every falling, yet you are to strive to exercise an inquisition upon yourself, as, by observing lesser particulars, you may the better discover what the corruption of your nature sways you to. Taylor.

By your good leave, These men will be your judges: we must stand The inquisition of their cailery On our condition. Southern.

2. Examination; discussion.

We were willing to make a pattern or precedent of an exact inquisition. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Admit this, and what shall the scripture be but a snare and a torment to weak consciences, filling them with infinite scrupulosities, doubts insoluble, and extreme despair. Hooker.

2. Not to be dissolved or separated.

Stony matter may grow in any part of a human body; for when any thing insoluble sticks in any part of the body, it gathers a crust about it. Airbuthnot on Diet.

INSOLVENT. adj. [in and solvo, Latin.]

Unable to pay.

By public declaration he proclaimed himself insolvent of those vast sums he had taken upon credit. Howel.

A farmer accused his guards for robbing him of oxen, and the emperor shot the offenders;
 but demanding reparation of the accuser for so many brave fellows, and finding him insolvent, compounded the matter by taking his life.
Addison.

An insolvent is a man that cannot pay his debts. Watts.

Insolvent tenant of incumber'd space. Smart.

 despise the language of the conquered, and to force him to learn his: so did the Romans always use, insomuch that there is no nation but is sprinkled with their language. Spenser.

To make ground fertile, ashes excel; insom- much as the countries about Aena have amend's made them, for the richness the eruptions do.
Bacon's Natural History.

Simonides was an excellent poet, insomuch that he made his fortune by it. L'Esrange.

They made the ground uneven 'bout their nest, insomuch that the slate did not lie flat upon it, but left a free passage underneath. Addison.

TO INSPECT. v. a. [inspicio, inspectum,
 Latin.]

To look into by way of examination.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspection, Fr. inspec- tio, Latin.]

1. Prying examination; narrow and close survey.

With narrow search, and with inspection deep,
 Consider every creature. Milton.

Our religion is a religion that dares to be understood; that offers itself to the search of the inquisitive, to the inspection of the severest and the most awakened reason; for, being secure of her substantial truth and purity, she knows that for her to be seen and looked into, is to be embraced and admired, as there needs no greater argument for men to love the light than to see it. South.

2. Superintendence; presiding care.

In the first sense it should have into before the object, and in the second sense may admit over; but authors confound them.

We may safely conceal our good deeds, when they run no hazard of being diverted to improper ends, for want of our own inspection. Atterbury.

We should apply ourselves to study the per-fections of God, and to procure lively and vigorous impressions of his perpetual presence with us, and inspection over us. Atterbury.

The divine inspection into the affairs of the world, doth necessarily follow from the nature and being of God; and he that denies this, doth implicitly deny his existence. Bentley.

INSPECTOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A prying examiner.

With their new light our bold inspectors press,
 Like Cham, to shew their father's nakedness.
Denham.

2. A superintendent.

Young men may travel under a wise inspector or tutor to different parts, that they may bring home useful knowledge. Watts.

INSPECTION. n. f. [inspersio, Latin.] A sprinkling upon.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. [in and sphere.] To place in an orb or sphere.

Where those immortal shapes
 Of bright aerial spirits live inspired,
 In regions mild of calm and serene air. Milton.

INSPIRABLE. adj. [from inspire.] Which may be drawn in with the breath;

 which may be infused.

To these inspirable parts, we may enumerate those they sustain from their expiration of fulginous steams. Harvey.

INSPIRATION. n. f. [from inspire.]

1. The act of drawing in the breath.

In any inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increased upon inspiration, by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Airbuthnot.

2. The act of breathing into any thing.

3. Infusion of ideas into the mind by a superior power.

I never spoke with her in all my life.

—How can she then call us by our names,
 Unless it be by inspiration? Shakspeare.

Your father was ever virtuous, and holy men at their death have good inspirations. Shakspeare.

We to his high inspiration owe,
 That what was done before the flood we know.

What the tragedian wrote, the late success
 Declares was inspiration, and not guets.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression of any proposition is made upon the mind by God's men, that gives a convincing and indisputable evidence of the truth and divinity of it:
 so were the prophets and the apostles inspired.
Denham.

Inspiration is when an overpowering impression
 of any proposition is made upon the mind by God's men, that gives a convincing and indisputable evidence of the truth and divinity of it:
 so were the prophets and the apostles inspired.
Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. n. [inspiro, Lat. inspiero, French.] To draw in the breath: opposed to expire.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly yields to nature and dies. Watts.

TO INSPIRE. v. a.

1. To breathe into.

Ye nine, descend and sing,
 The breathing instruments inspire. Pope.

2. To infuse by breathing.

He knew not his Maker, and he that inspired into him an active soul, and breathed in a living spirit. Wisdom.

3. To infuse into the mind; to impress upon the fancy.

I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
 But dawning day new comfort hath inspired.
Shakspeare.

Then to the heart inspired

Vernal delight. Milton.

4. To animate by supernatural infusion.

Nor th' inspired

Cassian spring. Milton.

Erato, thy poet's mind inspire,

And fill his soul with thy celestial fire. Dryden.

The letters are often read to the young religious,
 to inspire them with sentiments of virtue. Addison.

5. To draw in with the breath.

By means of sulphurous coal smoaks the lungs are stifled and oppressed, whereby they are forced to inspire and expire the air with difficulty, in comparison of the facility of inspiring and expiring the air in the country. Harvey.

His baleful breath inspiring as he glides;

Now like a chain around her neck he rides. Dryden.

INSPIRER. n. f. [from inspire.] He that inspires.

To the infinite God, the omnipotent creator and preserver of the world, the most gracious redeemer, sanctifier, and inspiero of mankind, be all honour. Denham.

TO INSPIRE. v. a. [in and spirit.] To animate; to actuate; to fill with life and vigour; to enliven; to invigorate; to encourage.

It has pleased God to inspire and actuate all his evangelical methods by a concurrence of supernatural strength, which makes it not only eligible but possible; easy and pleasant to do whatever he commands us. Decay of Piety.

A discreet use of becoming ceremonies renders the service of the church solemn and affecting, inspires the sluggish, and inflames even the devout worshipper. Atterbury.

The courage of Agamemnon is inspired by love of empire and ambition. Pope.

Let joy or ease, let affluence or content,

And the gay conscience of a life well spent,

Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face. Pope.
TO INSPISSATE. v. a. [in and spissus,
Lat.] To thicken; to make thick.

Sugar doth inspissate the spirits of the wine, and maketh them not so easy to resolve into vapour. Bacon.

This oil farther inspissated by evaporation turns into balm. Arbutnot on Aliments.

INSPISSATION. n. f. [from inspissate.]
The act of making any liquid thick.

The effect is wrought by the inspiration of the air. Bacon.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspiration, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot.

INSTABILITY. n. f. [instabilis, Fr. infla- bilitas, from instabilis, Lat.] Inconstan-cy; fickleness; mutability of opinion or conduct.

Instability of temper ought to be checked,
when it disposes men to wander from our scheme of government to another; such a fickleness cannot but be fatal to our country. A. J. For.

INSTABLE. adj. [instabilis, Lat.] Inconstant; changing. See UNSTABLE.

TO INSTALL. v. a. [installar, Fr. in and stall.] To advance to any rank or office, by placing in the seat or stall proper to that condition.

She reigns a goddess now among the saints,
That whilom was the faint of sleep, clouds light,
And is installed now in heaven's light. Spenser.

Crammer is return'd with welcome,
Installed archbishop of Canterbury. Shakespeare.

The king chose him master of the horse, after this he was installed of the most noble order.

INSTALLATION. n. f. [installation, French;
from install.] The act of giving visible possession of a rank or office, by placing in the proper seat.

Upon the election the bishop gives a mandate for his installation. Ayliffe's Paragon.

INSTALLMENT. n. f. [from install.]
1. The act of installing.

Is it not easy
To make lord William Hastings of our mind,
For the installment of this noble duke
In the seat royal? Shakespeare.

2. The seat in which one is installed.

Search Windsor-castle, elves,
The several chairs of order look you four;
Each fair installment, coat and several crest
With loyal blazon evermore be blest! Shaksp.

INSTANCE. } n. f. [instance, Fr.]
INSTANCY. }

1. Importunity; urgency; solicitation.

Christian men should much better frame themselves to those heavenly precepts which our Lord and Saviour with so great instancy gave us concerning peace and unity, if we did concur to have the ancient councils renewed. Hacker.

2. Motive; influence; pressing argument.
Not in use.

She dwells so securely upon her honour, that solly dares not present itself. Now, could I come to her with any direction in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to commend themselves. Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

The instances that second marriage move,
Are base respects of thrift, but none of love.

3. Prosecution or process of a suit.

The instance of a cause is said to be that judicial process which is made from the contestation of a suit, even to the time of pronouncing sentence in the cause, or till the end of three years.

4. Example; document.

Yet doth this accident
So far exceed all instance, all discourse,
That I am ready to distrust mine eyes. Shaksp.

In furnaces of copper and brass, where vitriol is often cast in, there riseth suddenly a fly, which sometimes moveth on the walls of the furnace;
sometimes in the fire below; and dieth presently as soon as it is out of the furnace: which is a noble instance, and worthy to be weighed. Bacon.

We find in history instances of persons, who, after their prisons have been slung open, have chosen rather to languish in their dungeons, than stake their miserable lives and fortunes upon the success of a revolution. Adelison.

The greatest faints are sometimes made the most remarkable instances of suffering. Atterbury.
Supply the earth should be removed nearer to the sun, and revolve for instance in the orbit of Mercury, the whole ocean would boil with heat.

The use of instances is to illustrate and explain a difficulty; and this end is best answered by such instances as are familiar and common. Baker.

5. State of any thing.

These seem as if, in the time of Edward the first, they were drawn up into the form of a law in the first instance. Hale.

6. Occasion; act.

The performances required on our part, are no other than what natural reason has endeavoured to recommend, even in the most severe and difficult instances of duty. Rogers.

A soul supreme in each hard instance try'd
Above all pain, all anger, and all pride. Pope.

If Eusebia has lived as free from sin as it is possible for human nature, it is because she is always watching and guarding against all instances of pride. Laro's Serious Call.

TO INSTANCE. v. n. [from the noun.]
To give or offer an example.

As to false citations, that the world may see how little he is to be trusted, I shall instance in two or three about which he makes the loudest clamour. Tillotson.

In tragedy and satire, this age and the last have excelled the ancients; and I would instance in Shakespeare of the former, in Dorset of the latter.

INSTANT. adj. [instant, Fr. instans, Lat.]

vening; present.

Our good old friend, bestow
Your needful counsel to our business,
Which crave the instant use. Shakespeare

Th' instant stroke of death denounc'd to-day,
Remov'd far off. Milton

Nor native country thou, nor friend shalt see;
Nor war halt thou to wage, nor year to come;
Impending death is thine, and instant doom.

3. Quick; making no delay.

Instant without disturb they took alarm.

Griev'd that a visitant so long should wait
Unmark'd, unheer'd, at a monarch's gate;
Instant he flew with hospitable haste,
And the new friend with courteous air embrac'd

INSTANT. n. f. [instant, French.]

1. Instant is such a part of duration wherein we perceive no succession. Locke.

There is scarce an instant between their flourishing and their not being. Hacker.

Her nimble foot yet in time must move,
And in instants through all places glide;
But she is high and far, I cease, above,
In point of time, which thought cannot divide.

At any instant of time the moving atom is, but in one single point of time; therefore an inst- ant that one point is either future or past, and no other parts are co-existent or contemporary with

it. Bentley's Sermons.

2. A particular time.

I can at any unseasonable instant of the night appoint her to look out at her lady's chamber

Compound bodies may be resolved into other substances than such as they are divided into by the fire. Boyle.

A man must sin himself into a love of other men's sins; for a bare notion of this black art will not carry him so far. South.

Sure thou art born to some peculiar fate,
When the mad people rise against the state,
To look them into duty; and command
An awful silence with thy lifted hand. Dryden.

It concerns every man that would not truse away his soul, and fool himself into irrecoverable misery, with the greatest seriousness to enquire into these matters. Tillotson.

He is not a frail being, that he should be tired into compliance by the force of assiduous application. Smalidge.

In hollow bottoms, if any fountains chance to rise, they naturally spread themselves into lakes, before they can find any issue. Addison.

It would have been all irretrievably lost, was it not by this means collected and brought into one mass. Woodward.

Why are these positions charged upon me as their sole author; and the reader led into a belief, that they were never before maintained by any person of virtue? Atterbury.

It is no ways congruous, that God should be always frightening men into an acknowledgment of the truth, who were made to be wrought upon by calm evidence. Atterbury.

A man may whore and drink himself into atheism; but it is impossible he should think himself into it. Bentley.

INTOLERABLE. adj. [intolerabilis, Latin; intolerable, French.]

1. Insufferable; not to be endured; not to be born; having any quality in a degree too powerful to be endured.

If we bring into one day's thoughts the evil of many, certain and uncertain, what will be and what will never be, our load will be as intolerable as it is unreasonable. Taylor.

His awful presence did the crowd surprize,
Nor durst the rash spectator meet his eyes;
Eyes that confess'd him born for kingly sway,
So fierce, they flash'd intolerable day. Dryden.

Some men are quickly weary of one thing: the same study long continued in is as intolerable to them, as the appealing loag in the same clothes is to a court lady. Locke.

From Param's top th' Almighty rode,
Intolerable day proclaim'd the God. Broomer.

2. Bad beyond endurance.

INTOLERABLENESS. n. f. [from intolerable.] Quality of a thing not to be endured.

To INTONNE. v. n. [from intono, or rather from tonne, French.] To make a slow protracted noise.

So swells each wind-pipe; as intonne to as Harmonick twang. Pope's Dunciad.

To INTORT. v. a. [intortuo, Lat.] To twist; to wreath; to wring.

The brain is a congeries of glands, that separate the finer parts of the bloody, called animal spirits; and a gland is nothing but a canal variously intorted and wound up together. Arbutnot.

With reverent hand the king presents the gold,
Which round th' intorted horns the gilder roll'd. Pope.

To INTOXICATE. v. a. [in and toxicum, Lat.] To inebriate; to make drunk.

The more a man dinketh of the world, the more it intoxicates; and age doth profit rather in the powers of understanding, than in the virtues of the will and affections. Bacon.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.

My early mistress, now my ancient muse,
That strong Cerean liquor cease t' infuse,
Wherewith thou didst intoxicate my youth. Denham.

What part of wild fury was there in the bac-chanals which we have not seen equal'd, if not exceeded by some intoxicated zealots?

Decay of Piety.
Others, after having done fine things, yet spoil them by endeavouring to make them better; and are so intoxicated with an earnest desire of being above all others, that they suffer themselves to be deceived. Dryden's Dufresny.

Vegetables by fermentation are wrought up to spirituous liquors, having different qualities from the plant; for no fruit taken crude has the intoxicating quality of wine. Arbutnot.

INTOXICATION. n. f. [from intoxicate.] Inebriation; ebriety; the act of making drunk; the state of being drunk.

That king, being in amity with him, did so burn in hatred towards him, as to drink of the lees and dregs of Perkin's intoxication, who was every where else detected. Blair.

Whence can this proceed, but from that besetting intoxication which verbal magick brings upon the mind. South.

INTRACTABLE. adj. [intractabilis, Lat. intractable, French.]

1. Ungovernable; violent; stubborn; obstinate.

To love them who love us is so natural a passion, that even the most intractable tempers obey its force. Rogers.

INTRANQUILLITY. n. f. [in and tranquillity.] Unquietness; want of rest.

Jactations were used for amusement, and allay in constant pain, and to relieve that intranquillity which makes men impatient of lying in their beds. Temple.

INTRANSITIVE. adj. [intransitivus, Lat.]

[In grammar.] A verb intransitive is that which signifies an action, not conceived as having an effect upon any object: as, curro, I run. Clarke's Latin Grammar.

INTRANSMUTABLE. adj. [in and transmutabile.] Unchangeable to any other substance.

Some of the most experienced chemists do affirm quicksilver to be intransmutable, and therefore call it liquor æternus. Ray on the Creation.

To INTREASURE. v. a. [in and treasure.] To lay up as in a treasury.

There is a history in all men's lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceas'd;
The which observ'd, a man may prophecy,
With a near aim, of the main chance of things
As yet not come to life, which in their seeds
And weak beginnings he intreasur'd. Shaksp.

To INTRENCH. v. n. [in and trencher, Fr.]

To invade; to encroach; to cut off part of what belongs to another: with on.

Little I desire my scepter should intrench on God's sovereignty, which is the only king of men's consciences. King Charles.

That crawling insect, who from mud began,
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!
Durst he, who does but for my pleasure live,
Intrench on love, my great prerogative. Dryden.

We are not to intrench upon truth in any conversation, but least of all with children. Locke.

To INTRENCH. v. a.

1. To break with hollows.

His face
Deep scars of thunder had intrench'd, and care
Sat on his faded cheek. Milton's Par. Lost.

2. To fortify, with a trench a castle, the allies were intrenched in their camp. [10]

INTRENCHANT. adj. [This word, which is, I believe, found only in Shakespeare, is thus explained: 'The intrenchant air means the air which suddenly encroaches and closes upon the space left by any body which had passed through it. Hanner. I believe Shakespeare intended rather to express the idea of indivisibility or invulnerableness, and derived intrenchant, from in privative, and trencher to cut; intrenchant is indeed properly not cutting, rather than not to be cut; but this is not the only instance in which Shakespeare confounds words of active and passive signification.] Not to be divided; not to be divided; indivisible.

As easy may't thou the intrenchant air
With thy keen sword impress, as make me bleed. Shakespeare.

INTRENCHMENT. n. f. [from intrench.] Fortification with a trench.

INTREPID. adj. [intrepide, Fr. intrepidus, Lat.] Fearless; daring; bold; brave.

Argyle
Calm and intrepid in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenser's dreadful field. Thomson.

INTREPIDITY. n. f. [intrepidité, French.] Fearlessness; courage; boldness.

I could not sufficiently wonder at the intrepidity of these diminutive mortals, who durst venture to walk upon my body, without trembling. Gulliver's Travels.

INTREPIDLY. adv. [from intrepid.] Fearlessly; boldly; daringly.

He takes the globe for the scene; he launches forward intrepidly, like one to whom no place is new. Pope.

INTRICACY. n. f. [from intricate.] State of being entangled; perplexity; involu- tion; complication of facts or notions.

The part of Ulysses in Homer's Odyssey is much admired by Aristotle, as perplexing that fable with very agreeable plots and intricacies; by the many adventures in his voyage, and the subtilty of his behaviour. Adair.

INTRICATE. adj. [intricatus, Latin.] Entangled; perplexed; involved; complicated; obscure.

Much of that we are to speak may seem to a number perhaps tedious, perhaps obscure, dark, and intricate. Hooker.

His style was fit to convey the most intricate business to the understanding with the utmost clearness. Adair.

To INTRICATE. [from the adjective.] To perplex; to darken. Not proper, nor in use.

Alterations of surnames have so intricate, or rather obscured, the truth of our pedigree, that it will be no little hard labour to deduce them. Comber.

INTRICATELY. adv. [from intricate.] With involution of one in another; with perplexity.

That variety of factions into which we are so intricately engaged, gave occasion to this discourse. Swift.

INTRICATENESS. n. f. [from intricate.] Perplexity; involution; obscurity.

He found such intricateness, that he could see no way to lead him out of the maze. Swift.

INTRIGUE. n. f. [intrigue, French.]

1. A plot; a private transaction in which many parties are engaged: usually an affair of love.

These are the grand intrigues of man, These his huge thoughts, and these his vast desires. Flannan.

A young fellow long made love, with much artifice and intrigue, to a rich widow. Addison.
The hero of a comedy is represented victorious in all his intrigues. Swift.

Now love is dwindled to intrigue, And marriage grown a money league. Swift.

2. Intricacy; complication. Little in use.

Though this vicinity of ourselves to ourselves can't give us the full prospect of all the intrigues of our nature, yet we have much more advantage to know ourselves, than to know other things without us. Hale.

3. The complication or perplexity of a fable or poem; artful involution of feigned transaction.

As causes are the beginning of the action, the opposite designs against that of the hero are the middle of it, and form that difficulty or intrigue which makes up the greater part of the poem. Pope.

To INTRIGUE. v. n. [intriguer, Fr. from the noun.] To form plots; to carry on private designs, commonly of love.

INTRIGUER. n. f. [intriguer, Fr. from intrigue.] One who busies himself in private transactions; one who forms plots; one who pursues women.

I desire that intriguers will not make a pimp of my lion, and convey their thoughts to one another. Addison.

INTRIGUENGLY. adv. [from intriguer.] With intrigue; with secret plotting.

INTRINSECAL. adj. [intrinsecus, Lat. intrinseque, French.] This word is now generally written intrinsecal, contrary to etymology.]

1. Internal; solid; natural; not accidental; not merely apparent.

These measure the laws of God not by the intrinsecal goodness and equity of them, but by reluctancy and opposition which they find in their own hearts against them. Tillotson.

The near and intrinsecal, and convincing argument of the being of God, is from human nature itself. Bentley.

2. Intimate; closely familiar. Out of use.

He falls into intrinsecal society with sir John Graham, who dissuaded him from marriage. Watson.

Sir Fulk Greville was a man in appearance intrinsecal with him, or at least admitted to his most intimate hours. Watson.

TO INTRUST. v. a. [in and trust.] To treat with confidence; to charge with any secret commission, or thing of value: as, we intrust another with something; or we intrust something to another.

His majesty had a solicitous care for the payment of his debts; though in such a manner, that none of the duke's officers were intrusted with the knowledge of it. Clarendon.

Receive my counsel, and securely move;
Intrust thy fortune to the powers above. Dryden.

Are not the lives of those, who draw the sword in Rome's defence, intrusted to our care? Addis.

He composed his blood-clout, and at the time appointed went to intrust it to the hands of his confident. Arbutnot.

INTUITION. n. f. [intuitus, intuor, Lat.]

1. Sight of any thing: used commonly of mental view. Immediate knowledge.

At our late of judging, St. Paul had passed for a most malicious persecutor; whereas God law he did it ignorantly in unbelief, and upon that intuition had mercy on him. Government of the Tongue.

The truth of these propositions we know by a bare simple intuition of the ideas, and such propositions are called self-evident. Locke.

2. Knowledge not obtained by deduction of reason, but instantaneously accompanying the ideas which are its object.

All knowledge of causes is deductive; for we know none by simple intuition, but through the mediation of their effects; for the casualty itself is insensible. Charnville.

Discourse was then almost as quick as intuition. South.

He their single virtues did survey,
By intuition in his own large breast. Dryden.

INTUITIVE. adj. [intuitivus, low Latin; intuitif, French.]

1. Seen by the mind immediately without the intervention of argument or testimony.

Immediate perception of the agreement and disagreement of two ideas, is when, by comparing them together in our minds, we see their agreement or disagreement; this therefore is called intuitive knowledge. Locke.

Lofly rights of thought, and almost intuitive perception of abstract notions, or exalted discoveries of mathematical theorems, we sometimes see existent in one person. Bentley.

2. Seeing, not barely believing.

Faith beginning here with a weak apprehension of things not seen, endeth with the intuitive vision of God in the world to come. Hooker.

3. Having the power of discovering truth immediately without ratiocination.

The rule of glibly or immaterial natures, as spirits and angels, is their intuitive intellectual judgment, concerning the amiable beauty and high goodness of that object, which, with unspeakable joy and delight, doth let them on work. Hooker.

The soul receives Discursive of intuitive. Milton.

INTUITIVELY. adv. [intuitivement, Fr.]

Without deduction of reason; by immediate perception.

That our love is found and sincere, that it cometh from a pure heart, and a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned, who can pronounce, saying only the teacher of all men's hearts, who alone intuitively doth know in this kind who are his? Hooker.

God Almighty, who sees all things intuitively, does not want logical helps. Baker on Learning.

INTUMESCENCE. } n. f. [intumescence, INTUMESCENCY. } Fr. intumefco, Lat.]

Swell; tumour; the act or state of swelling.

According to the temper of the terrene parts at the bottom, as they are more hardy or easily moved, they variously begin, continue, or end their intumescences. Brown.

This subterranean heat causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and occasions an earthquake. Woodward.

INTURGESCENCE. n. f. [in and turgesco, Lat.] Swelling; the act or state of swelling.

Not by attenuation of the upper part of the sea, but inturgescence caused first at the bottom, and carrying the upper part of it before them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

INTUSE. n. f. [intusus, Latin.] Bruise.

She did search the swelling bruise,
And having search'd the bruise deep,
She bound it with her fears. Spenser.

With dangerous expedition they invade Heav'n, whose high walls fear no assault. Milton.

They race in times to come Shall spread the conquest of imperial Rome;
Rome, whose ascending towers shall heav'n invade,
Involving earth and ocean in her shade. Dryden.

Encouraged with success, he invades the province of philosophy. Dryden.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ship, and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main. Dryden.

2. To attack; to assail; to assault.

There shall be sedition among men, and invading one another; they shall not regard their kings. 2 Esai.

Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious foam
Invades us to the skin; so 'tis to thee:
But where the greater malady is hid,
The lesser is scarce felt. Shaksp. King Lear.

3. To violate by the first act of hostility; to attack, not defend.

Your foes are such, as they, not you, have made;
And virtue may repel, though not invade. Dryden.

INVADER. n. f. [from invado, Latin.]

1. One who enters with hostility into the possessions of another.

The breath of Scotland the Spaniards could not endure; neither durst they, as invaders, land in Ireland. Bacon.

Their piety
In sharp contest of battle found no aid Against invaders. Milton's Paradise Lost.

That knowledge, like the coat from the air, serves only to embroil and consume the furious invaders. Deay of Peiry.

Were he lost, the naked empire
Would be a prey expos'd to all invaders. Deholm.

The count y about Attica was the most barrier of any in Greece, through which means it happened that the natives were never expelled by the fury of invaders. Sax.

Secure, by William's care, let Britain stand;
Nor dread the bold invader's hand. Pitt.

Esteem and judgment with strong fancy join,
To call the fair invader in;
My darling favorite inclination, too,
All, all conspiring with the foe. Granville.

2. An assailant.

3. Encroacher; intruder.

The substance was formerly comprised in that un-compounded style, but afterwards prudently enlarged for the repelling and preventing heretical invaders. Hannibal.

1. Hostile entrance upon the rights or possessions of another; hostile encroachment.

We made an invasion upon the Cherethites. I Sam.

Reason finds a secret grief and remorse from every invasion that sin makes upon innocence, and that must render the first entrance and admission of sin uneasy. South

The nations of th' Ausonian shore
Shall hear the dreadful rumour, from afar,
Of arm'd invasion, and embrace the war. Dryden

William the Conqueror invaded England about the year 1066, which means this; that taking the duration from our Saviour's time 'till now, for one entire length of time, it shews at what distance this invasion was from the two extremes. Locke

2. Attack of a disease.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbutnot

INVASIVE. adj. [from invade.] Entering hostilely upon other men's possessions; not defensive.

I must come closer to my purpose, and not make more invasive wars abroad, when, like Hannibal, I am called back to the defence of my country. Dryden

Let other monarchs, with invasive bands,
Leston their people, and extend their lands;
By gassing nations hared and obey'd,
Lords of the deserts that their iwords had made. Arbutnot

INVECTIVE. n. f. [inveſtiva, French; inveſtiva, low Latin.]

1. A censure in speech or writing; a reproachful accusation.

Plain men desiring to serve God as they ought, but being not so skilful as to unwind themselves, where the snares of glossing speech do he to entangle them, are in mind not a little troubled, when they hear so bitter inveſtives against that which this church hath taught them to reverence as holy, to approve as lawful, and to observe as behoful for the exercise of christian duty. Hosker

If we take satyr, in the general signification of the word, for an inveſtive, 'tis almost as old as verse. Dryd. Juv.

2. It is used with against.

So desprate thieves, all hopeless of their lives,
Breathe out inveſtives 'gainſt the officers. Shaksp.
Casting off respect, he fell to bitter inveſtives against the French king. Bacon's Hen. vii.

3. Less properly with at.

Thou invest with a mantle didst invest The rising world of waters. Milton.

Let thy eyes shine forth in their full lustre; Invest them with thy loveliest smiles, put on Thy choicest looks. Denham's Sophy.

2. To place in possession of a rank or office.

When we sanctify or hallow churches, that which we do is only to testify that we make pieces of publick religion, that we invest God himself with them, and that we sever them from common uses. Hooker.

After the death of the other archbishop, he was invested in that high dignity, and settled in his palace at Lambeth. Clarke.

The practice of all ages, and all countries, hath been to do honour to those who are invested with publick authority. Atterbury.

3. To adorn; to grace: as clothes or ornaments.

Honour invest,

Not accompanied, invest him only; But signs of nobleness, like stars, shall shine On all that serves. Shakspeare's Measure for Measure.

The foolish, over-careful fathers for this engross'd

The canker'd heaps of strong achiev'd gold; For this they have been thought fit to invest Their sons with arts and martial exercises. Shakspeare.

Some great potentate, Or of the times above, such majesty Invest him coming. Milton.

4. To confer; to give.

If there can be found such an inequality between man and man, as there is between man and beast, or between soul and body, it invests a right of government. Bacon.

5. To enclose; to surround so as to intercept succours or provisions: as, the enemy invested the town.

INVESTIENT. adj. [investiens, Latin.]

Covering; clothing.

The shells served as plams or moulds to this sand, which, when consolidated and freed from its investient shell, is of the same shape as the cavity of the shell. Woodward.

INVESTIGABLE. adj. [from investigate.]

To be searched out; discoverable by rational disquisition.

Finally, in such sort they are investigable, that the knowledge of them is general; the world hath always been acquainted with them. Hooker.

In doing evil, we prefer a less good before a greater, the greatness whereof is by reason investigable, and may be known. Hooker.

To INVESTIGATE. v. a. [investigare, Latin.]

To search out; to find out by rational disquisition.

Investigate the variety of motions and figures made by the organs for articulation. Holler.

From the present appearances investigate the powers and forces of nature, and from these account for future observations. Cheyne.

INVESTIGATION. n. s. [investigation, Fr. investigatio, Latin.]

1. The act of the mind by which unknown truths are discovered.

Not only the investigation of truth, but the communication of it also, is often practised in such a method as neither agrees precisely to synthetick or analytick. Watts.

Progressive truth, the patient force of thought Investigation calm, whose silent powers Command the world. Thomson's Summer.

2. Examination.

You travel I hear, much of: my own shall never more be in a strange land, but a diligent investigation of my own territories. Pope.

INVESTITURE. n. s. [French.]

1. The right of giving possession of any manor, office, or benefice.

He had refused to yield up to the pope the investiture of bishoprics, and collation of ecclesiastical dignities within his dominions. Ralegh.

2. The act of giving possession.

INVESTMENT. n. s. [in and vestment.]

Dress; clothes; garment; habit.

Ophelia, do not believe his vows; for they are brokers,
Not of that die which their investments shew.

Shakespeare.

You, my lord archbishop,
Whose fec is by a civil peace maintained,
Whose beard the silver hand of peace hath touch'd,
Whose leazning and good letters peace hath tutor'd,

Whose white investments figure innocence,
The dove, and every blessed spirit of peace;
Wherefore do you so ill translate yourself
Out of the speech of peace, that bears such grace,
Into the harsh and boist'rous tongue of war?

Shakespeare.

INVE'TERACY. n. f. [inveteratio, Latin.]

1. Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

The inveteracy of the people's prejudices compelled their rulers to make use of all means for reducing them.

Addison.

2. [In physick.] Long continuance of a disease.

INVE'TERATE. adj. [inveteratus, Lat.]

1. Old; long established.

The custom of christians was then, and had been a long time, not to wear garlands, and therefore that undoubtedly they did offend who presumed to violate such a custom by not observing that thing; the very inveterate observation whereof was a law, sufficient to bid all men to observe it, unless they could shew some higher law, some law of scripture, to the contrary.

Hooker.

It is an inveterate and received opinion, that cantarides, applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder, and exulcerate it.

Bacon.

2. Obstinate by long continuance.

It is not every sinful violation of conscience that can quench the spirit; but it must be a long inveterate course and custom of sinning, that a length produces and ends in such a curd effect.

South.

He who writes satire honestly is no more an enemy to the offender, than the physician to the patient, when he prescribes harsh remedies to an inveterate disease.

Dryden.

In a well-instituted state the executive power will never let abuses grow inveterate, or multiply so far that it will be hard to find remedies.

Swift.

To INVE'TERATE. v. a. [inveterer, Fr. invetero, Latin.] To fix and settle by long continuance.

The vulgar conceived, that now there was an end given, and a consummation to superstitious prophecies, and to an ancient tacit expectation, which had by tradition been infused and inveterated into men's minds.

Bacon.

Let not atheists lay the fault of their sins upon human nature, which have their prevalence from long custom and inveterated habit.

Bentley.

INVE'TERATENESS. n. f. [from inveterate.] Long continuance of any thing bad; obstinacy confirmed by time.

As time hath rendered him more perfect in the art, so hath the inveterateness of his malice made him more ready in the execution.

Brown.

Neither the inveterateness of the mischief, nor the prevalence of the fashion, shall be any excuse for those who will not take care about the meaning of their words.

Locke.

INVETERATION. n. f. [inveteratio, Lat.] The act of hardening or confirming by long continuance.

INVIDIOUS. adj. [invidiosus, Latin.]

1. Envious; malignant.

I shall open to them the interior secrets of this mysterious art, without imposture or invidious rancour.

Every.

2. Likely to incur or to bring hatred. This is the more usual sense.

Agamemnon found it an invidious affair to give the preference to any one of the Grecian heroes.

Broom.

Not to be further tedious, or rather invidious, these are a few causes which have contributed to the ruin of our morals.

Swift.

INVIDIOUSLY. adv. [from invidious.]

1. Malignantly; enviously.

2. In a manner likely to provoke hatred.

The clergy murmur against the privileges of the laity; the laity invidiously aggravate the immunities of the clergy.

Sprat.

INVIDIOUSNESS. n. f. [from invidious.] Quality of provoking envy or hatred.

To INVIGORATE. v. a. [in and vigour.]

To endue with vigour; to strengthen; to animate; to enforce.

The spleen is introduced to invigorate the sinister side, which, dilated, would rather infirm and debilitate.

Brown.

Gentle warmth
Discloses well the earth's all-teeming womb,
Invigorating tender seeds.

Phillips.

I have lived when the prince, instead of invigorating the laws, assumed a power of dispensing with them.

Addison.

No one can enjoy health, without he feel a lightsome and invigorating principle, which spurs him to action.

Spectator.

Christian graces and virtues they cannot be, unless fed, invigorated, and animated by universal charity.

Atterbury.

INVIGORATION. n. f. [from invigorate.]

1. The act of invigorating.

2. The state of being invigorated.

I find in myself an appetitive faculty, which is always in the very height of activity and invigoration.

Norris.

INVINCIBLE. adj. [invincible, French; invinsibilis, Latin.] Insuperable; unconquerable; not to be subdued.

I would have thought her spirits had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Shaksp.

Should he invade their country, he would soon see that invincible nation with their united forces up in arms.

Knolles.

The spirit remains invincible.

Milton.

That mistake, which is the consequence of invincible error, scarce deserves the name of wrong judgment.

Locke.

If an atheist had had the making of himself, he would have framed a constitution that could have kept pace with his insatiable lust, been invincible by intemperance, and have held out a thousand years in a perpetual debauch.

Bentley.

INVINCIBLENESS. n. f. [from invincible.] Unconquerableness; insuperableness.

INVINCIBLY. adv. [from invincible.] Insuperably; unconquerably.

Ye have been fearless in his righteous cause;

And as ye have receiv'd, so have ye done

Invincibly.

Milton.

Neither invitations nor threats avail with those who are invincibly impeded, to apply them to their benefit.

Decay of Piety.

INVIO'LABLE. adj. [invio'labile, Fr. invio'labilis, Latin.]

1. Not to be profaned; not to be injured.

Thou, be sure, shalt give account

To him who sent us, whose charge is to keep

This place invio'labile, and these from harm.

In vain did nature's wife command

Divide the waters from the land,

If daring ships, and men prophane,

Invalidate th' invio'labile main;

Th' eternal fences overlap,

And pass at will the boundless deep.

Dryden.

Ye lamps of heav'n, he said, and lifted high
His hands, now see; thou venerable sky!

Invio'labile pow'rs! ador'd with dread,
Be all of you ador'd.

Dryden.

This birthright, when our author pleases, must and must not be sacred and invio'labile.

Locke.

2. Not to be broken.

The prophet David thinks, that the very meeting of men together, and their accompanying one another to the house of God, should make the bond of their love insoluble, and tie them in a league of invio'labile amity.

Hooker.

See, see, they join, embrace, and seem to kiss,
As if they vow'd some league invio'labile.

Shaksp.

3. Insusceptible of hurt or wound.

Th' invio'labile faints

In cubick phalanx firm advanc'd intire.

INVIO'LABLY. adv. [from invio'labile.]

Without breach; without failure.

More acquaintance you have none; you have drawn them all into a nearer line; and they who have conversed with you, are for ever after invio'lably yours.

Dryden.

The true profession of christianity invio'lably engages all its followers to do good to all men.

Sprat.

INVIO'LABE. adj. [invio'labile, French; invio'labatus, Latin.] Unhurt; uninjured; unprofaned; unpolluted; unbroken.

His fortune of arms was still invio'labate.

But let invio'labate truth be always dear

To thee, even before friendship, truth prefer.

Denham.

If the paf

Can hope a pardon, by those mutual bonds
Nature has seal'd between us, which, though I Have cancell'd, thou hast still preserv'd invio'labate;

I beg thy pardon.

My love your claim invio'labate secures;

'Tis writ in fate, I can be only yours.

In all the changes of his doubtful state,
His truth, like heav'n's, was kept invio'labate.

Invio'labate.

INVIOUS. adj. [invius, Latin.] Impassable; untrodden.

If nothing can oppugn his love,

And virtue invious ways can prove,

What may not he confide to do,

That brings both love and virtue too?

Invio'labate.

To INVISCATE. v. a. [in and viscus, Lat.]

To lime; to entangle in glutinous matter.

The carnelion's food being flies, it hath in the tongue a mucous and slimy extremity, whereby, upon a sudden emission, it inviscates and intangleth these insects.

Brown.

INVISIBILITY. n. f. [invisibilité, French; from invisible.] The state of being invisible; imperceptibleness to sight.

They may be demonstrated to be innumerable, substituting their smallness for the reason of their invisibility.

Ray.

INVISIBLE. adj. [invisible, Fr. invisibilis, Lat.] Not perceptible by the sight; not to be seen.

He was invisible that hurt me so;

And no invisible, but spirits, can go.

The threaten fails,

Borne with th' invisible and creeping wind,

Drew the huge bottomons to the fathom'd sea.

Invio'labate.

'Tis wonderful,

That an invisible insidit should frame them

To loyalty unlearn'd, honour untought.

To us invisible, or dimly seen,

In these thy lowest works.

He that believes a God, believes such a being as hath all perfections; among which this is one, that he is a spirit, and consequently that he is invisible, and cannot be seen.

It seems easier to make one's self invisible to others, than to make another's thoughts visible to me, which are not visible to himself.

Invio'labate.

INVISIBLY. adv. [from invisible.] Imperceptibly to the sight.

Age by degrees invisibly doth creep,
Nor do we seem to die, but fall asleep. Devi.

INVITATION. n. f. [invitation, Fr. invitatio, Lat.] The act of inviting, bidding, or calling to any thing with ceremony and civility.

That other answer'd with a lowly look,
And from the gracious invitation took. Dryd.

INVITATORY. adj. [from invito, Lat.] Using invitation; containing invitation.

To INVITE. v. a. [invito, Latin; inviter, French.]

1. To bid; to ask to any place, particularly to one's own house, with intreaty and complaisance.

If thou be invited of a mighty man, withdraw thyself. Eccles.

He comes invited by a younger son. Milton.

When much company is invited, then be as sparing as possible of your coals. Swift.

2. To allure; to persuade; to induce by hope or pleasure.

A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.

Created, of such place hast here to dwell,
As may not oft invite, though it hits of heav'n,
To visit thee. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The liberal contributions such teachers met with, served still to invite more labourers into that work. Deay of Piety.

Shady groves, that easy sleep invite,
And after toilsome days a soft repose at night. Dryden's Virgil.

To INVITE. v. n. [invito, Latin.] To ask or call to any thing pleasing.

All things invite
To peaceful counsels. Milton.

INVITER. n. f. [from invite.] He who invites.

They forcibly cut out abortive votes, such as their inviters and encouragers most fancied. King Charles.

Honour was the aim of the guests, and interest was the scope of the inviter. Swaldrige.

Wines and eates the tables grace,
But most the kind inviter's cheerful face. Pope.

INVITINGLY. adv. [from inviting.] In such a manner as invites or allures.

If he can but dress up a temptation to look invitingly, the business is done. Deay of Piety.

To INUMBRATE. v. a. [inumbro, Lat.] To shade; to cover with shades. Dich.

INUCTION. n. f. [inungo, inunctus, Lat.] The act of smearing or anointing.

The wise author of nature hath placed on the ramp two glandules, which the bird catches hold upon with her bill, and squeezes out an oily liniment, fit for the inunction of the feathers, and causing their filaments to cohere. Ray.

INUNDATION. n. f. [inundation, French; inundatio, Latin.]

1. The overflow of waters; flood; deluge. Inundation, says Cowley, implies less than deluge.

Her father counts it dangerous,
That he would give her sorrow to much sway;
And in his wisdom hastes on her marriage,
To stop the inundation of her tears. Shakspere.

The same inundation was not past forty foot in moist places; so that some few wild inhabitants of the woods escaped. Bacon.

All fountains of the deep,
Broke up, shall heave the ocean to usurp
Beyond all bounds, till inundation rise Above the highest hills. Milton's Par. Lost.

This inundation unto the Egyptians hap' eneth when it is winter unto the Ethiopians. Brown.

Your care about your banks infer a fear
Of threatening floods, and inundations near. Dryden.

No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds. Gay.

2. A confluence of any kind.
Many good towns, through that inundation of the Irish, were utterly walled. Spenser.

To INVOCATE. v. a. [invoco, Latin.] To invoke; to implore; to call upon; to pray to.

Fear key-cold figure of a holy king!
Be't lawful, that I invoke thy ghost,
To hear the lamentations of poor Anne. Shaksp.

If Dagon be thy god,
Go to his temple, invoke his aid
With solemnest devotion. Milton's Agonistes.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
'Till vermin or the drall of servile food
Consume me, and oft invoked death
Hasten the welcome end of all my pains. Milton's Agonistes.

INVOCATION. n. f. [invocation, French; invocatio, Latin.]

1. The act of calling upon in prayer.
Is not the name of prayer usual to signify even all the service that ever we do unto God? And that for no other cause, as I suppose, but to shew that there is in religion no acceptable duty, which devout invocation of the name of God doth not either presuppose or infer. Hooker.

2. The form of calling for the assistance or presence of any being.
My invocation is Honest and fair, and in his mistress' name. Shakspere.

The proposition of Gratius is contained in a line, and that of invocation in half a line. Wase.

I will strain myself to breathe out this one invocation. Howel.

The whole poem is a prayer to fortune, and the invocation is divided between the two deities. Addison on Italy.

INVOICE. n. f. [This word is perhaps corrupted from the French word envoyez, send.] A catalogue of the freight of a ship, or of the articles and price of goods sent by a factor.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [invoco, Latin; involvere, French.] To call upon; to implore; to pray to; to invoke.

The power I will invoke dwells in her eyes. Sidney.

One peculiar nation to select
From all the rest of whom to be involv'd. Milton.

The skillful bard,
Striking the Thracian harp, invokes Apollo,
To make his hero and himself immortal. Prior.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [involvere, Latin.]

1. To inwrap; to cover with any thing circumfluent.

Leave a singed bottom all involv'd
With fench and smoke. Milton.

No man cou'd mis his way to heaven for want of light; and yet to vain are they as to think they oblige the world by involving it in darkness. Deay of Piety.

In a cloud involv'd, he takes his flight,
Where Greeks and Trojans mix'd in mortal fight. Dryden.

2. To imply; to comprise.
We cannot demonstrate these things so as to shew that the contrary necessarily involves a contradiction. Tilbotson.

3. To intwist; to join.
He knows his end with mine involv'd. Milton.

4. To take in; to catch; to conjoin.
The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng. Pope.

So we should hate a together; but our hatred of it may involve the person which we should not hate at all. Spaet.

One death involves Tyrants and slaves. Thomson's Summer.

5. To entangle.
This reference of the name to a thing whereof we have no idea, is so far from helping at all, that it only serves the more to involve us in difficulties. Locke.

As obscure and imperfect ideas often involve our reason, so do dubious words puzzle men's reason. Locke.

6. To complicate; to make intricate.
Some involv'd their snaky folds. Milton.

Syllogism is of necessary use, even to the lovers of truth, to shew them the fallacies that are often concealed in florid, witty, or involved discourses. Locke.

7. To blend; to mingle together confusedly.
Earth with hell mingle and involve. Milton.

INVOLUNTARILY. adv. [from involuntary.] Not by choice; not spontaneously.

INVOLUNTARY. adj. [in and voluntarius, Latin; involuntaire, French.]

1. Not having the power of choice.
The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently draw, and dragging leis and leis,
Roll in her vortex, and her pow'r confess. Pope.

2. Not chosen; not done willingly.
The forbearance of that action, consequent to such command of the mind, is called voluntary; and whatsoever action is performed without such a thought of the mind, is called involuntary. Locke.

But why, ah tell me, ah too dear!
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear? Pope.

INVOLUTION. n. f. [involutio, Latin.]

1. The act of involving or inwrapping.

2. The state of being entangled; complication.
All things are mixed, and causes blended by mutual involutions. Glansville.

3. That which is wrapped round any thing.
Great conceits are raised of the involution or membranous covering called the silly-how, sometimes found about the heads of children. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [in and volv.] To habituate; to make ready or willing by practice and custom; to accustom. It had anciently volva before the thing practised, now to.

Because they so proudly insult, we must a little involve their ears with hearing how others, whom they more regard, are accustomed to use the self-same language with us. Hagler.

If there might be added true art and learning, there would be as much diffidence, in maturity of judgment, between men tho' involv'd, and that which now men are, as between men that are now and innocents. Hooker.

That it may no painful work endure,
It to strong labour can itself involve. Hak. Tale.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately involved to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor. Spenser.

The forward hand, involv'd to wounds, makes way
Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce. Daniel.

Then cruel, by their sports to blood involv'd
Of fighting beasts, and men to beasts expos'd. Milton.

To INVOLVE. v. a. [involvere.] Our prompt obedience. Milton's Par. Lost.

They, who had been most involv'd to business, had not in their lives ever undergone so great a fatigue for twenty days together. Clayton.

We may involve ourselves by custom to bear the extremities of weather without injury. Addison's Guardian.

INUREMENT. n. f. [from inure.] Practice; habit; use; custom; frequency.
If iron will acquire by mere continuance a secret appetite, and habitual inclination to the site it held, then how much more may education, being nothing else but a constant plight and inurement, induce by custom good habits into a reasonable creature. Wotton.

To INURN. v. a. [in and urn.] To interment; to bury.

The sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd its ponderous and marble jaws
To ebb thee up again. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Amidst the tears of Trojan dames inurn'd,
And by his loyal daughters truly mourn'd. Dryd.

INUSTION. n. f. [inustio, Latin.] The act of burning.

INUTILE. adj. [inutile, Fr. inutilus, Lat.] Useless; unprofitable.

INVULNERABLE. adj. [invulnerabilis, Fr. invulnerabilis, Lat.] Not to be wounded; secure from wound.

Our cannon's mallee vainly shall be spent Against th' invulnerable clouds of heav'n. Shakspeare
Nor vainly hope
To be invulnerable in those bright arms,
That mortal dint none can resist. Milton.
Vanessa, though by Pallas taught,
By love invulnerable thought,
Searching in books for wisdom's aid,
Was in the very search betray'd. Swift.

To INWALL. v. a. [in and wall.] To enclose or fortify with a wall.

Three such towns in those places with the garri- sons, would be to augmented as they would be able with little to inwall themselves strongly. Spenser on Ireland.

INWARD. } adv. [inpeard, Saxon.]

1. Toward the internal parts; within.
The parts of living creatures that be more inward, nourish more than the outward flesh. Bacon's Natural History.

The medicines which go to these magical ointments are so strong, that if they were used inward they would kill; and therefore they work potently, though outwardly. Bacon.

2. With infection or incurvity; concavely.
He stretches out his arm in sign of peace, with his breast bending inward. Dryden.

3. Into the mind or thoughts.

Celestial light
Shine inward, and the soul through all her powers Irradiate. Milton.

INWARD. adj.

1. Internal; placed not on the outside but within.
He could not rest, but did his stout heart eat,
And waite his inward gail with deep delight. Fairy Queen.

To each inward part
Sickness, contributing no less than old age to the breaking down this scaffolding of the body, may discover the inward structure more plainly. Pope.

2. Reflecting; deeply thinking.
With outward smiks their hearts receive'd!
But bent and inward to myself again
Forsake'd, these matters I revolv'd, in vain. Prior.

3. Intimate; domestic; familiar.
Though the lord of the liberty do pain himself all he may to yield equal justice unto all, yet can there not but great abuses lurk in so inward and obdurate a privilege. Spenser.
All my inward friends abhorred me. Job.

4. Seated in the mind.
Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honour for an inward toil;
And for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares. Shakspeare.

INWARD. n. f.

1. Any thing within, generally the bowels. Scidom has this sense a singular.
Then sacrificing, laid
The inward, and their fat, with incense strew'd
On the cleft wood, and all due rites perform'd. Milton.

They esteem them most profitable, because of the great quantity of fat upon their inwards. Mortimer.

2. Intimate; near acquaintance. Little used.
Sir, I was an inward of his; a sly fellow was the duke; and I know the cause of his withdrawing. Shakspeare.

INWARDLY. adv. [from inward.]

1. In the heart; privately.
That which inwardly each man should be, the church outwardly ought to testify. Hosker.

Hath finished half his journey. Milton.

2. Travel by land: distinguished from a voyage or travel by sea.

So are the horses of the enemy, In general journey bated and brought low. Shaksp.

Before the light of the gospel, mankind travelled like people in the dark, without any certain prospect of the end of their journey, or of the way that led to it. Rogers.

He for the promis'd journey bids prepare The smooth-hair'd horses and the rapid car. Pope.

3. Passage from place to place.

Some, having a long journey from the upper regions, would float up and down a good while. Burnet's Theory.

Light of the world, the ruler of the year, Still as thou do'st thy radiant journey run Through every distant climate own, That in fair Albion thou hast seen The greatest prince, the brightest queen. Prior.

To JOURNEY. v. n. [from the noun.] To travel; to pass from place to place.

Gentlemen of good esteem Are journeying to salute the emperor. Shakspeare.

We are journeying unto the place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you. Numbers.

Since such love's natural station is, may still My love descend, and journey down the hill; Not parting after growing beauties, so I shall ebb on with them who homeward go. Donne.

I have journeyed this morning, and it is now the heat of the day; therefore your lordship's discourses had need content my ears very well, to make them intreat my eyes to keep open. Bacon.

Over the tent a cloud Shall rest by day, a fiery gleam by night, Save when they journey. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Having heated his body by journeying, he took cold upon the ground. Wise man's Surgery.

JOURNEYMAN. n. f. [journée, a day's work, Fr. and man.] A hired workman; a workman hired by the day.

They were called journeymen that wrought with others by the day, though now by statute to be extended to those likewise that covenant to work in their occupation with another by the year. Corwell.

Players have so strutted and bellowed, that I have thought some of nature's journeymen had made men, and not made them well. Shakspeare.

I intend to work for the court myself, and will have journeymen under me to furnish the rest of the nation. Add son.

Says Frog to Bull, this old rogue will take the business into his hands: we must starve or turn journeymen to old Lewis baboon. Arbutnot.

JOURNEYWORK. n. f. [journée, French,

JO'WLER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from bowler, as making a hideous noise after the game, whom the rest of the pack follow as their leader.] The name of a hunting dog or beagle.

See him drag his feeble legs about, Like hounds ill-coupled; jowler lugs him still Through hedges, ditches, and through all this ill. Dryden.

JO'WTER. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from joller.]

Plenty of fish is vented to the fish-drivers, whom we call jowters. Curew.

JOY. n. f. [joye, Fr. gioia, Italian.]

1. The passion produced by any happy accident; gladness; exultation.

Joy is a delight of the mind, from the consideration of the present, or assured approaching possession of a good. Locke.

There appears much joy in him; even so much, that joy could not shew itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness. Shakspeare.

There should not be such heaviness in their destruction, as shall be joy over them that are persuaded to salvation. Eftas.

The lightsome passion of joy was not that trivial, vanishing, superficial thing, that only gilds the apprehension, and plays upon the surface of the soul. South.

2. Gayety; merriment; festivity.

The roofs with joy resound; And hymen, iö hymen, rung around. Dryden.

3. Happiness; felicity.

My lord Bassanio, and my gentle lady, I wish you all the joy that you can wish. Shaksp.

Come love and health to all; Then I'll sit down: give me some wine: I drink to the general joy of the whole table. Shakspeare.

Almeyda smiling came, Attended with a train of all her race, Whom in the rage of empire I had murder'd; But now, no longer foes, they gave me joy Of my new conquest. Dryden's Don Sebastian.

The bride, Lovely herself, and lovely by her side, A hevy of bright nymphs, with sober grace, Came glittering like a star, and took her place: Her heavenly form beheld, all with'd her joy; And little wanted, but in vain, their wishes all employ. Dryden.

4. A term of fondness.

Now our joy, Although our last, yet not our least young love, What say you? Shakspeare's King Lear.

To JOY. v. n. [from the noun.] To rejoice; to be glad; to exult.

Sometimes I joy, when glad occasion fits, And mask in mirth like to a comedy; Soon after, when my joy to sorrow flits, I will make my woe a tragedy. Spenser.

I cannot joy, until I be resolv'd Where our right valiant father is become. Shaksp.

He will joy over thee with singing. Zeph.

I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation. Hab.

Exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Tous, because his spirit was refreshed by you.

They laugh, we weep; they joy while we Lament it.

No man imparteth his joys to his friend, but He joys the more, and no man imparteth his Griefs, but he grieves the less. Bacon's Essays.
Well then, my soul, say in the midst of pain;
Thy Christ that conquer'd hell, shall from above
With greater triumph yet return again,
And conquer his own justice with his love.

Joy thou,
In what he gives to thee this paradise,
And try far Eve Milton's Paradise Lost.
From cheerfulness with honour youth attends,
Joy'd that from pleasure's slavery they are free.

To JOY, v. a.

- To congratulate; to entertain kindly.
Like us they love or hate, like us they know
To joy the friend; or grapple with the foe. Prior.
- To gladden; to exhilarate.
She went to Pamela, meaning to delight her eyes, and joy her thoughts with the conversation of her beloved sister. Sidney.
My soul was joy'd in vain;
For angry Neptune rous'd the raging main. Pope.
- [joir de, French.] To enjoy; to have happy possession of.
Let us hence,
And let her joy her waven-colour'd love. Shaksp.
I might have lov'd, and joy'd immortal bliss,
Yet willingly chose rather death with thee. Milton.

Th' usurper joy'd not long
His ill-got crown. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

JOYANCE, n. f. [joyant, old French.]
Gayety; festivity. Obsolete.

Bring home with you the glory of her gain;
With joyance bring her, and with jollity. Spenser.
There him rests in riotous sustenance,
Of all his gladfulness and kingly joyance. Spenser

JOYFUL, adj. [joy and full.]
1. Full of joy; glad; exulting.

They blessed the king, and went into their terts joyful and glad of heart. 1 Kings.
My soul shall be joyful in my God. Isaiah.

2. Sometimes it has of before the cause of joy.

So brave companions from each ship we lost:
With sails outspread we fly th' unequal strife,
Sad for their loss, but joyful of our life. Pope.

JOYFULLY, adv. [from joyful.] With joy; gladly.

If we no more meet till we meet in heav'n,
Then joyfully, my noble lord of Bedford,
And my kind kinsmen, warriors all, adieu.

Never did men more joyfully obey,
Or sooner understood the sign to fight:

With such alacrity they bore away,
As if to praise them all the fates flood by. Dryd.
The good emilian considers pains only as necessary passages to a glorious immortality; that, though this dark scene of fancied horror, sees a crown and a throne, and everlasting blessings prepared for him, joyfully receives his summons, as he has long impatiently expected it. Hume

JOYFULNESS, n. f. [from joyful.] Gladness; joy.

Thou serv'st not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things. Deut.

JOYLESS, adj. [from joy.]
1. Void of joy; feeling no pleasure.

A little joy enjoys the queen thereof;
For I am she, and altogether joy I. Shakspere
With downcast eyes the joyless widow sat,
Revolving in his alter'd soul
The various turns of chance below:
And now and then a sigh he stole,
And tears began to flow. Dryden's Alex. Feast.

2. It has sometimes of before the object.

With two fair eyes his mistress burns his breast;
He look- and languishes, and leaves his rest;
Forleaves his food, and, pining for the lais,
Is joyless of the grove, and spurs the growing grafs. Dryden.

3. Giving no pleasure.
A joyless, dismal, black, and sorrowful issue:
Here is a babe, as loathsome as a toad. Shaksp.
Here love his golden shafts employs; here lights

His constant lamp, and waves his purple wings;
Reigns here, and revels: not in the bought smiles
Of harlots, loveless, joyless, unendear'd, Casual fruition. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The pure in heart shall see God; and if any others could so invade this their inclosure, as to take heaven by violence, it surely would be a very joyless possession. Decay of Piety.
He forgets his sleep, and loaths his food,
That youth, and health, and war are joyless, to him.

JOYOUS, adj. [joyeux, French.]
1. Glad; gay; merry.

Most joyous man, on whom the shining sun
Did shew his face, myself I did esteem,
And that my father friend did not less joyous deem.

Joyous the birds: fresh gales and gentle airs Whisper'd it. Milton.

When joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And haunts, by nature stung, renew their love.

Fast by her flow'ry bank the sons of Arcas, Fav'rites of heav'n, with happy care protect
Their fleecy charge, and joyous drink her wave.

2. Giving joy.
They all as glad as birds of joyous prime,
T'ence led her forth, about her dancing round.

3. It has of sometimes before the cause of joy.
Round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joyous of our conquest early won;
While the malicious world with envious tears
Should grudge our happy end, and wish it theirs.

IRECACUANHA, n. f. An Indian plant.
Ipecacuanha is a small irregularly contorted root, rough, dense, and firm. One sort is of a dusky greyish colour on the surface, and of a paler grey when broken, brought from Peru:
the other sort is a smaller root, resembling the former; but it is of a deep dusky brown on the outside, and white when broken, brought from the Brasils. The grey ought to be preferred, because the brown is apt to operate more roughly.

IRA'SCIBLE, adj. [irascibilis, low Latin;
irascible, Fr.] Partaking of the nature of anger.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, and the conspicuous distractions on the crisis of the liver. Brown.
I know more than one instance of irascible passions subdued by a vegetable diet. Arbuthnot.
We are here in the country surrounded with blessings and pleasures, without any occasion of exercising our irascible faculties. Ligby to Pope.

IRE, n. f. [Fr. ira, Lat.] Anger; rage; passionate hatred.

She lik'd not his desire;
Pain would be free, but dic'ded parents ire.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten cofins up in chains,
It could not shake mine ire, nor ease my heart.

Or Neptune's ire, or Juno's, that so long Perplex'd the Greek and Cytherea's son. Milton.
The sentence, from thy head remov'd, may light
On me, sole cause to thee of all this woe;
Me! me! only just object of his ire. Milton.

For this th' avenging pow'r employs his darts,
And empties all his quiver in our hearts;
Thus wilt persist, relentless in th' ire,
Till the fair slave be render'd to his fire. Dryden.

IREFUL, adj. [ire and full.] Angry;
raging; furious.

The ireful ballard Orleans, that drew blood
From thee, my boy, I soon recount'd. Shaksp.
By many hands your father was subdu'd;
But only slaughter'd by the ireful arm
Of unrelenting Clifford. Shaksp. Hen. vi.

There learn'd this mad of arms the ireful g'nte.
Fanfax.

In midst of all the dome misfortune sat,
And gloomy discontent, and fell debate,
And madnels laughing in his ireful mouth. Dryd.

IREFULLY, adv. [from ire.] With ire;
in an angry manner.

IRIS, n. f. [Latin.]
1. The rainbow.

Beside the solitary iris, which God sheweth unto Noah, there is another lary, which officiate is the moon. Bacon.

2. Any appearance of light resembling the rainbow.

When both bows appeared more distinct, I measured the breadth of the interior iris 2 gr 10';
and the breadth of the red, yellow, and green, in the exterior iris, was 1/3 the breadth of the same colours in the interior 3 to 2. Newton's Opt.

3. The circle round the pupil of the eye.

4. The flower-de-luce.

For all hues, roses and jessamine. Milton.

To IRK, v. a. [yrk, Irlandick.] This word is used only impersonally, it irks me; mihi pene est, it gives me pain; or,
I am weary of it. Thus the authors of the accident say, tadet, it irkseth.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me, the poor dappled foals
Should, in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches gor'd. Shaksp.

It irks his heart he cannot be reveng'd. Shak.

IRKSOME, adj. [from irk.] Wearisome; tedious; troublesome; toilsome; tiresome; unpleasing.

I know the is an irksome brawling scold.
Shakspere.

Since that thou can'st talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure. Shakspere.

Where he may likeliest find Truce to his restless thoughts, and entertain
The irksome hours till his great chief return.

For not to irksome toil, but to delight
He made us, and delight to reason join'd.

There is nothing so irksome as general discourses, especially when they turn chiefly upon words. Addison's Spectator.

Frequent appeals from hence have been very irksome to that illustrious body. Swift.

IRKSOMELY, adv. [from irksome.] Weari-somerly; tediously.

IRKSOMENESS, n. f. [from irksome.] Tediousness; wearisomeness.

IRON, n. f. [haiarn, Welsh; irenn, iren, Saxon; iron, Erse.]

1. A metal common to all parts of the world. Though the lightest of all metals, except tin, it is considerably the hardest; and, when pure, naturally malleable: when wrought into steel, or when in the impure state from its first fusion, it is scarce malleable. Most of the other metals are brittle while they are hot; but this is most malleable as it approaches nearest to fusion. The specifick gravity of iron is to water as 7632 is to 1000. It is the only known substance that is attracted by the loadstone. Iron has greater medicinal virtues than any of the other metals. Hill.

Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron, Can be retentive to the strength of spirit. Shaksp.
If he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer. Numbers.

The power of drawing iron is one of the ideas of a loadstone, and to be so drawn is a part of that of iron. Locke.

In a piece of iron ore, of a ferruginous colour, are several thin plates placed parallel to each other. Woodward.

There are incredible quantities of iron slag in various parts of the forest of Dean. Woodward.
Iron stone lies in strata. Woodward.

I treated of making iron work, and steel work. Maxon.

2. Any instrument or utensil made of iron: as, a flat iron, box iron, or smoothing iron. In this sense it has a plural.

Irons of a doit, doublets that hangmen would bury with those that wore them, these base slaves,

Ere yet the fight be done, pack up. Shaksp.
O Thou! whose captain I account myself, Look on my forces with a gracious eye:

Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath, That they may crush down with a heavy fall Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries. Shak.

Can't thou fill his skin with barbed irons, or his head with fishspears? Joh.
For this your locks in paper-durance bound? For this with tort'ring irons wreath'd around? Pope.

3. Chain; shackle; manacle: as, he was put in irons.
The iron entered into his soul. Psalms.
His feet they hurt with fetters: he was laid in irons. Psalms.

IRON. adj.
1. Made of iron.
In iron walls they deem'd me not secure. Shak.
Get me an iron crow, and bring it straight Unto my cell. Shakspere.

Some are of an iron red, shining and polite; others not polite, but as if powdered with iron dust. Woodward.

Poll-cats and weefels do a great deal of injury to warrens; the way of taking them is in hutches, and iron traps. Mortimer.

2. Resembling iron in colour.
A piece of fene of a dark iron grey colour, but in some parts of a ferruginous colour. Woodw.
Some of them are of an iron red, and very bright. Woodward.

3. Harsh; severe; rigid; miserable; calamitous: as, the iron age for an age of hardship and wickedness. These ideas may be found more or less in all the following examples.
Three vigorous virgins, waiting still behind Assist the throne of th' iron scepter'd king. Crafsaan.

O sad virgin, that thy power Might bid the foul of Orpheus sing Such notes as warbled to the strings, Drew iron tears from Pluto's cheek, And made hell grant what love did seek. Milt.

In all my iron years of wars and dangers, From blooming youth down to decaying age, My fame ne'er knew a stain of dishonour. Rowe.
Jove crush the nations with an iron rod, And ev'ry monarch be the scourge of God. Pope.

4. Indissoluble; unbroken.
Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour, Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought T' exhale his forfeit by irriguous sleep; Imprudent! him death's iron sleep oppress. Philips.

5. Hard; impenetrable.
I will converse with iron-witted fools, And unrespective boys: none are for me, That look into me with confederate eyes. Shakspere.

To IRON. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To smoothe with an iron.
2. To shackle with irons.

IRONICAL. adj. [ironique, French; from irony.] Expressing one thing and meaning another; speaking by contraries.
In this fallacy may be compris'd all ironical mistakes, or expressions receiving inverted significations. Brown.

I take all your ironical civilities in a literal sense, and shall expect them to be literally performed. Swift.

IRONICALLY. adv. [from ironical.] By the use of irony.
Socrates was pronounced by the oracle of Delphos to be the wisest man of Greece, which he would turn from himself ironically, saying, There could be nothing in him to verify the oracle, except this, that he was not wife, and knew it not. Bacon.

The dean, ironically grave, Still shunn'd the fool, and lash'd the knave. Swift.

IRONMONGER. n. s. [iron and monger.] A dealer in iron.

IRONWOOD. n. s. A kind of wood extremely hard, and so ponderous as to sink in water. It grows in America. Robinson Crusoe.

IRONWORT. n. s. [Sideritis, Lat.] A plant. Miller.

IRONY. adj. [from iron.] Made of iron; partaking of iron.
The force they are under is real, and that of their fate but imaginary: it is not strange if the iron chains have more solidity than the contemplative. Hammond.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of one metal, suppose iron, put into the spring; and deposit, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles. Woodward.

IRONY. n. s. [ironie, Fr. ironie.] A mode of speech in which the meaning is contrary to the words: as, Bolingbroke was a holy man.

So grave a body, upon so solemn an occasion, should not deal in irony, or explain their meaning by contraries. Swift.

IRRA'DIANCE. } n. s. [irradiance, Fr. IRRA'DIANCY. } irradio, Latin.]

1. Emission of rays or beams of light upon any object.
The principal affection is its translucency: the irradiancy and sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this. Brown.

2. Beams of light emitted.
Love not the heav'nly spirits? Or do they mix Irradiance virtual, or immediate touch? Milton.

To IRRA'DIATE. v. a. [irradio, Latin.]
1. To adorn with light emitted upon it; to brighten.

When he thus perceives that these opacous bodies do not hinder the eye from judging light to have an equal plenary diffusion through the whole place it irradiates, he can have no difficulty to allow air, that is diaphanous, to be every where mingled with light. Digby.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends. South.

2. To enlighten intellectually; to illumine; to illuminate.

Celestial light Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate; these plant eyes; all mist from thence Purge and dispel. Milton.

3. To animate by heat or light.
Ethereal or solar heat must digest, influence, irradiate, and put those more simple parts of matter into motion. Hale.

4. To decorate with shining ornaments.
No weeping orphan saw his father's face, Our shines irradiate, or imitate the floor. Pope.

IRRA'DIATION. n. s. [irradiation, Fr. from irradiate.]

1. The act of emitting beams of light.
If light were a body, it should drive away the air, which is likewise a body wherever it is admitted; for within the whole sphere of the irradiation of it, there is no point but light is found. Digby on Boats.

The generation of bodies is not effected by irradiation, or diffusibility, as to the propagation of light; but herein a transmission is made materially from some parts, and ideally from every one. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Illumination; intellectual light.
The means of immediate union of these intelligible objects to the understanding, are sometimes divine and supernatural, as by immediate irradiation or revelation. Hale.

IRRA'TIONAL. adj. [irrationalis, Lat.]
1. Void of reason; void of understanding; wanting the discursive faculty.
Thus began
Outrage from lifeless things; but discord first Daughter of sin, among th' irrational Death introduc'd. Milton.

He hath eat'n and lives, And knows, and speaks, and reasons and discerns: Irrational till then. Milton.

2. Absurd; contrary to reason.
Since the brain is only a part transmittent, and that humours oft are precipitated to the lungs before they arrive to the brain, no kind of benefit can be effected from so irrational an application. Harvey on Consumptions.

I shall quietly submit, not wishing to irrational a thing as that every body should be deceived. Pope.

IRRA'TIONALITY. n. s. [from irrational.]
Want of reason.

IRRA'TIONALLY. adv. [from irrational.]
Without reason; absurdly.

ISINGLASS Stone. n. f. A fossil which is one of the purest and simplest of the natural bodies. The masses are of a brownish or reddish colour; but when the plates are separated, they are perfectly colourless, and more bright and pellucid than the finest glass. It is found in Muscovy, Persia, the island of Cyprus, in the Alps and Apennines, and the mountains of Germany. Hill.

ISLAND. n. f. [insula, Latin; isola, Italian; eland, Erse. It is pronounced iland.] A tract of land surrounded by water.

He will carry this island home in his pocket, and give it his son for an apple.—And sowing the kernels of it in the sea, bring forth more islands. Shakespeare.
 Within a lung recess there lies a bay,
 An island shades it from the rolling sea,
 And forms a port. Dryden.
 Island of bliss! amid' the subject seas. Thomson.

ISLANDER. n. f. [from island. Pronounced ilander.] An inhabitant of a country surrounded by water.

We, as all islanders, are lunares, or the moon's men. Camden.
 Your dinner, and the generous islanders
 By you invited, do attend your presence. Shaks.
 There are many bitter sayings against islanders in general, representing them as fierce, treacherous, and inhospitable: those who live on the continent have such frequent intercourse with men of different religions and languages, that they become more kind than those who are the inhabitants of an island. Addison.

A race of rugged mariners are these,
 Unpolish'd men, and boisterous as their seas;
 The native islanders alone their care,
 And hateful he that breathes a foreign air. Pope.

ISLE. n. f. [isle, French; insula, Latin. Pronounced ile.]

1. An island; a country surrounded by water.

The instalment of this noble duke
 In the feat royal of this famous isle. Shakespeare.
 The dreadful fight
 Betwixt a nation and two whales I write:
 Seas stain'd with gore I sing, advent'rous toil,
 And how these monsters did difarm an isle. Waller.

2. [Written, I think, corruptly for aile, from aile, Fr. from ale, Latin, the aile being probably at first only a wing or side walk. It may come likewise from ailee, French, a walk.] A long walk in a church, or publick building.
 O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves,
 Long sounding isses and intermingled graves,
 Black melancholy fits. Pope.

ISOPERIMETRICAL. n. f. [isoperimetria, and metron.] In geometry, are such figures as have equal perimeters or circumferences, of which the circle is the greatest. Harris.

ISO'SCELES. n. f. [isosecele, Fr. or equiangular triangle.] That which hath only two sides equal. Harris.

ISSUE. n. f. [issue, French.]

1. The act of passing out.
 2. Exit; egress; passage out.
 Unto the Lord belong the issues from death. Psalms.
 Let us examine what bodies touch a moveable whilst in motion, as the only means to find an issue out of this difficulty. Digby on Bodies.
 We might have easily prevented those great returns of money to France; and if it be true the French are so impoverished, in what condition must they have been, if that issue of wealth had been stopped? Swift.

3. Event; consequence.
 Spirits are not finely touch'd,
 But to fine issues. Shakespeare.

If I were ever fearful
 To do a thing, were I the issue doubted,
 Whereof the execution did cry out Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
 Which oit infects the wife. Shakespeare.
 But let the issue correspondent prove
 To good beginnings of each enterprize. Fairfax.
 If things were cast upon this issue, that God should never prevent sin 'till man deserved it, the best would sin, and sin for ever. South.

The wittiest sayings and sentences will be found the issues of chance, and nothing else but so many lucky hits of a roving fancy. South.

Our present condition is better for us in the issue, than that uninterrupted health and security that the atheist desires. Bentley.

4. Termination; conclusion.
 He hath preserved Argalus alive, under pretence of having him publicly executed after these wars, of which they hope for a soon and prosperous issue. Sidney.

What issue of my love remains for me!
 How wild a passion works within my breast!
 With what prodigious flames am I possess'd!
Dryden.

Homer, at a loss to bring difficult matters to an issue, lays his hero asleep, and this solves the difficulty. Broomer.

5. Sequel deduced from premises.
 I am to pray you not to strain my speech
 To grosser issues, nor to larger reach,
 Than to suspicion. Shakespeare's Othello.

6. A fontanel; a vent made in a muscle for the discharge of humours.
 This tumour in his left arm was caused by strict binding of his issue. Wiseman.

7. Evacuation.

8. Progeny; offspring.

O nation miserable!

Since that the truest issue of thy throne,
By his own interdiction stands accurst. Shaksp.
Nor where Abassin kings their issue guard,
Mount Amara, though this by some suppos'd
True Paradise, under the Æthiop line
By Nilus' head. Milton's Paradise Lost.

This old peaceful prince, as Heav'n decreed,
Was blest'd with no male issue to succeed. Dryd.
The frequent productions of monsters, in all the species of animals, and strange issues of human birth, carry with them difficulties, not possible to consist with this hypothesis. Locke.

9. In law.

Issue hath divers applications in the common law: sometimes used for the children begotten between a man and his wife; sometimes for profits growing from an amercement, fine, or expences of suit; sometimes for profits of lands or tenements; sometimes for that point of matter depending in suit, whereupon the parties join and put their cause to the trial of the jury.
Issue is either general or special: general issue seemeth to be that whereby it is referred to the jury to bring in their verdict, whether the defendant have done any such thing as the plaintiff layeth to his charge. The special issue then must be that, where special matter being alleged by the defendant for his defence, both the parties join thereupon, and so grow rather to a demurrer, if it be questio juris, or to trial by the jury, if it be questio facti. Coxwell.

To ISSUE. v. n. [from the noun; issere,
French; uscire, Italian.]

1. To come out; to pass out of any place.
Waters issued out from under the threshold of the house. Ezek.

From the utmost end of the head branches there issueth out a gummy juice. Raleigh's History.
Waters issu'd from a cave. Milton.

Ere Pallas issu'd from the thunderer's head,

2. To make an eruption; to break out.

Three of master Furd's brothers watch the door with pistols, that none should issue out, otherwise you might slip away. Shakspere.

See that none hence issue forth a spy. Milton.
Haite, arm your Ardeans, issue to the plain;
With faith to friend, assault the Trojan train. Dryden.

At length there issu'd, from the grove behind,
A fair assembly of the female kind. Dryden.

A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms;
Strait issue through the sides assembling swarms. Dryden.

Full for the port the Ithacensians stand,
And furl their sails, and issue on the land. Pope.

3. To proceed as an offspring.

Of thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away. 2 Kings.

4. To be produced by any fund.

These altarges issued out of the offerings made to the altar, and were payable to the priesthood. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. To run out in lines.

Pipes made with a belly towards the lower end,
and then issuing into a strait concave again. Bacon.

To ISSUE. v. a.

1. To send out; to send forth.

A weak degree of heat is not able either to digest the parts or to issue the spirits. Bacon.

The commissioners should issue money out to no other use. Temple.

2. To send out judicially or authoritatively. This is the more frequent sense.

It is commonly followed by a particle,
out or forth.

If the council issued out any order against them, or if the king sent a proclamation for their repair to their houses, some noblemen published a protestation. Clarendon.

Deep in a rocky cave he makes abode,
A mansion proper for a mourning god:
Here he gives audience, issuing out decrees
To rivers, his dependent deities. Dryden.

In vain the master issues out commands,
In vain the trembling sailors ply their hands;
The tempest unforeseen prevents their care. Dryd.

They constantly wait in court to make a due return of what they have done, and to receive such other commands as the judge shall issue forth. Ayliffe's Parergon.

ISSUELESS. adj. [from issue.] Having no offspring; wanting descendants.
Carew, by virtue of this entail, succeeded to Hugh's portion, as dying issueless. Carew.

I have done sin;
For which the Heav'n's, taking angry note,
Have left me issueless. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

ISTHMUS. n. f. [Isthmus, Latin.] A neck of land joining the peninsula to the continent.
There is a castle strongly seated on a high rock, which joineth by an isthmus to the land, and is impregnablely fortified. Saunders' Travels.

The Assyrian empire stretcheth northward to that isthmus between the Euxine and the Cyprian seas. Brewerwood on Languages.

O live, thou nothing's younger brother!
Thou weak built isthmus, that dost proudly rise
Up betwixt two eternities,
Yet can'st not wave nor wind sustain;
But broken and overwhelm'd the ocean meets again. Cowley.

Our church of England stands as Corinth between two seas, and there are some busy in cutting the isthmus, to let in both at once upon it. Stillingfleet.

Cleomenes thinking it more advisable to fortify, not the isthmus, but the mountains, put his design in execution. Creech.

Plac'd on this isthmus of a middle state,
A being darkly wise, and rudely great. Pope.

IT. pronoun. [hit, Saxon.]

1. The neutral demonstrative. Used in speaking of things. For it, our ancestors used he, as the neutral pronoun; and for its they used his. Thus in the Accidence, a noun adjective is that which cannot stand by himself, but requireth another word to be joined with him to shew his signification.
Nothing can give that to another which it hath not itself. Bramhall against Hobbes.
Will our great anger learn to stoop to low?
I know it cannot. Cowley.
Tell me, O tell, what kind of thing is wit,
Thou who matter art of it. Cowley.
His son, it may be, dreads no harm;
But kindly waits his father's coming home. Flatman.

The time will come, it will, when you shall know
The rage of love. Dryden.
How can I speak? or how, sir, can you hear?
Imagine that which you would most deplore,
And that which I would speak, is it or more. Dryden.

A mind so furnished, what reason has it to acquiesce in its conclusions? Locke.

The glory which encompassed them covered the place, and darted its rays with su much strength, that the whole fabrick began to melt. Aldison's Freckholder.

If we find a greater good in the present constitution, than would have accrued either from the total privation of it, or from other frames and structures, we may then reasonably conclude, that the present constitution proceeded from an intelligent and good being, that formed it that particular way out of choice. Bentley.

The design, it seems, is to avoid the dreadful imputation of pedantry. Swift.

2. It is used absolutely for the state of a person or affair.
How is it with our general?
—Even so
As with a man by his own alms imposon'd,
And with his charity slain. Shakspere.

3. It is used for the thing; the matter;
the affair.
It's come to pass,
That tractable obedience is a slave
To each incented will. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

4. It is sometimes expressed by 't.
He rallied, and again fell to 't;
For catching sne by nearer foot,
He lifted with such might and strength,
As would have hurl'd him thrice his length. Hudibras.

5. It is used ludicrously after neutral verbs,
to give an emphasis.
If Abraham brought all with him, it is not probable that he meant to walk it back again for his pleasure. Raleigh.

The Lacedemonians, at the straights of Thermopyle, when their arms failed them, sought it out with their nails and teeth. Dryden.

I have often seen people lavish it profusely in tricking up their children, and yet starve their minds. Locke.

The mole courses it not on the ground, like the rat or mouse, but lives under the earth. Speck.

Whether the charmer siner it, or saint it,
If it's grows romantick, I must paint it. Pope.

6. Sometimes applied familiarly, ludi-crously, or rudely to persons.
Let us after him,
Whose care is gone before to bid us welcome:
It is a peevish kinsman. Shakspere's Macbeth.
Do, child, go to it grandam, child:
Give grandam kingdom, and its grandam will Give it up him. Shakspere's King John.

7. It is sometimes used of the first or second person, sometimes of more. This mode of speech, though used by good authors, and supported by the il y a of the French, has yet an appearance of barbarism.
Who was 't came by?
—'Tis two or three, my lord, that bring you
word
Macduff is fled to England. Shaksp. Macbeth.
City;
'Tis It, that made thy widows. Shaksp. Coriol.
'Tis these that early taint the female soul. Pope.

ITCH. n. f. [itcha, Saxon.]

1. A cutaneous disease extremely contagious, which overspreads the body with small pustules filled with a thin serum, and raised, as microscopes have discovered, by a small animal. It is cured by sulphur.
Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youths,
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive
And drown themselves in riot, itches, blains. Shakspere's Timon.

The Lord will smite thee with the scab and with the itch, whercof thou can'st not be healed. Deut.
As if divinity had catch'd
The itch on purpose to be scratch'd. Hudibras.

2. The sensation of uneasiness in the skin, which is eased by rubbing.

3. A constant teasing desire.
A certain itch of meddling with other people's matters, puts us upon shifting. L'Estrange.
He had still pedigree in his head, and an itch
of being thought a divine king. Dryden.
From servants company a child is to be kept,
not by prohibitions, for that will but give him an itch after it, but by other ways. Locke.

At half mankind when gen'rous Manly raves,
All know 'tis virtue, for he think: them knaves;
When universal homage Umbra pays,
All see 'tis vice, and itch of vulgar praise. Pope.

To ITCH. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feel that uneasiness in the skin whic^h is removed by rubbing.

A troublesome itching of the part was occasioned by want of transpiration. Wife-man.
 My right eye itches; some good luck is near; Perhaps my Amaryllis may appear. Dryden.

2. To long; to have continual desire. This sense appears in the following examples, though some of them are equivocal.
 Maier Shallow, you have yourself been a game fighter, though now a man of peace.—Mr. Page, though now I be old, and of the peace, I'll see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Shakespeare.

Cañus, you yourself Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm, To sell and mart your offices for gold. Seafsp.
 The itching cars, being an epidemick disease, gave fair opportunity to every mountebank. Decay of Piety.

All such have still an itching to deride, And fan would be upon the laughing side. Pope
ITCHY. adj. [from itch.] Infected with the itch.

ITEM. adv. [Latin.] Also. A word used when any article is added to the former.

ITEM. n. s.

1. A new article.
 I could have looked on him without the help of admiration, though the catalogue of his endowments had been tumbled by his side, and I to peruse him by items. Shakespeare.
2. A hint; an innuendo.
 If this discourse have not concluded our weakness, I have one item more of mine: if knowledge can be found, I must lose that which I thought I had, that there is none. Glauville

TO ITERATE. v. a. [itero, Latin.]

1. To repeat; to utter again; to inculcate by frequent mention.
 We covet to make the psalms especially familiar unto all: this is the very cause why we iterate the psalms oftener than any other part of scripture besides; the cause wherefore we inure the people together with their minister, and not the minister alone, to read them, as other parts of scripture he doth. Hooker.

In the first ages God gave laws unto our fathers, and their memories served instead of books; whereof the imperfections being known to God, he relieved the same by often putting them in mind: in which respect we see how many times one thing hath been iterated into the best and wisest. Hooker.

The king, to keep a decency towards the French king, sent new solemn ambassadors to intimate unto him the decree of his estates, and to iterate his motion that the French would desist from hostility. Bacon's Henry VII.

There be two kinds of reflections of sounds; the one at distance, which is the echo, wherein the original is heard distinctly, and the reflection also distinct; the other in concinnence, when the sound returneth immediately upon the original, and is iterated it not, but amplifieth it. Bacon.

2. To do over again.
 Athos Lant; and well reverberated by fire, after the salt thereof hath been drawn out by iterated decoctions. Brown.
 Adam took no thought, Eating his fill; nor Eve to iterate Her former trespass fear'd, the more to footh Him with her low'd society. Milton's Par. Lost.

ITERANT. adj. [iterans, Lat.] Repeating.

Waters being near, make a current echo; but being farther off, they make an iterant echo. Bacon's Natural History.

ITERATION. n. s. [iteration, Fr. iteratio, Lat.] Repetition; recital over again.
 Taken up with iteration
 As true as steel, as pliant as the moon. Shaksp.

My husband!

—Ay, 'twas he that told me first.
 —My husband!
 —What needs this iteration, woman?
 I say, thy husband. Shakespeare's Othello
Iterations are commonly loss of time; but there is no such gain of time, as to iterate often the state of the question; for it chafeth away many a frivolous speech. Bacon's Essays.

In all these respects, it hath a peculiar property to engage the receiver to persevere in all piety, and is farther improved by the frequent iteration and repetition. Hammond.

ITINERANT. adj. [itinerant, Fr.] Wandering; not settled.

It should be my care to sweeten and mellow the voices of itinerant tradesmen, as also to accommodate their cries to their respective wares. Juldison's Spectator.

ITINERARY. n. s. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarium, Lat.] A book of travels.

The clergy are sufficiently reproached, in most itineraries, for the universal poverty one meets with in this plentiful kingdom. Addison on Italy

ITINERARY. adj. [itinaire, Fr. itinerarius, Lat.] Travelling; done on a journey; done during frequent change of place.

He did make a progress from Lincoln to the northern parts, though it was rather an itinerary circuit of justice than a progress. Bacon.

ITSELF. pronoun. [it and self.] The neutral reciprocal pronoun applied to things.
 Who then shall blame
 His pester'd senses, to recoil and start,
 When all that is within him does condemn Itself for being there? Shakespeare's Macbeth.
 Borrowing of foreigners, in itself, makes not the kingdom rich or poor. Locke.

JUBILANT. adj. [jubilans, Lat.] Uttering songs of triumph.

The planets list'ning stood,
 While the bright pomp ascended jubilant. Milt.

JUBILATION. n. s. [jubilatio, Fr. jubilatio, Lat.] The act of declaring triumph.

JUBILEE. n. s. [jubilé, Fr. jubilum, from jubilo, low Lat.] A publick festivity; a time of rejoicing; a season of joy.

Angels utt'ring joy, heav'n rung
 With jubilés, and loud hosannas filled
 Th' eternal regions. Milton's Paradise Lost.
 Joy was then a masculine and a severe thing, the recreation of the judgment, or rejoicing the jubilee of reason. South.

The town was all a jubilee of feasts. Dryden

JUCUNDITY. n. s. [jucunditas, jucundus, Lat.] Pleasantness; agreeableness.

The new or unexpected jucundities, which present themselves, will have activity enough to excite the earthiest soul, and raise a smile from the most composed tempers. Brown.

JUDAS TREE. n. s. [siliquastrum, Lat.] A plant.

Judas tree; yields a fine purplish, bright, red blossom in the spring, and is increased by layers. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO JUDAIZE. v. n. [judaizer, Fr. judaizo, low Lat.] To conform to the manner of the Jews.

Paul judaiz'd with the Jews, was all to all. Sandys.

JUDGE. n. s. [judge, Fr. judex, Lat.]

1. One who is invested with authority to determine any cause or question, real or personal.
 Shall not the judge of all the earth do right? Genesis.

A father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows, is God in his holy habitation. Psalms.
 Thou art judge
 Of all things made, and judgest only right. Milton.

2. One who presides in a court of judicature.

My lord Bassanio gave his ring away
 Unto the judge that begg'd it. Shakespeare.
 A single voice; and that not past me, but
 By learn'd approbation of the judge. Shakespeare.
 How darest your pride,
 As in a luted field, to fight your cause,
 Unask'd the royal grant; nor martially,
 As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully: it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful, as being the sovereign judge of his own art. Dryden.

3. One who has skill sufficient to decide upon the merit of any thing.

One court there is in which he who knows the secrets of every heart will fit judge himself. Sherlock.

A perfect judge will read each piece of wit
 With the same spirit that its author writ. Pope.
TO JUDGE. v. n. [juger, Fr. judico, Lat.]

1. To pass sentence.
 My wrong lie upon thee; the Lord judge between thee and me. Genesis.
 Ye judge not for man, but for the Lord, who is with you in the judgment. 2 Chron.
2. To form or give an opinion.
 Bethrew me, but I love her heartily;
 For she is wife, if I can judge aright. Shaksp.
 Authors to themselves,
 Both what they judge and what they chuse. Milton.

If I did not know the originals, I should never be able to judge, by the copies, which was Virgil, and which Ovid. Dryden.

Whether it be a divine revelation or no, reason must judge, which can never permit the mind to reject a greater evidence, to embrace what is less evident. Locke.

He proceeds in his inquiry into sciences, resolved to judge of them freely. Locke.

3. To discern; to distinguish; to consider accurately.

How doth God know? Can he judge through the dark cloud? Job.

Judge in yourselves: is it comely a woman pray unto God uncovered? 1 Cor.

How properly the Tories may be called the whole body of the British nation, I leave to any one's judging. Addison.

TO JUDGE. v. a.

1. To pass sentence upon; to examine authoritatively; to determine finally.
 Chorus the judge the strife. Milton.
 Then these, whom form of laws
 Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
2. To pass severe censure; to doom severely. This is a sense seldom found but in the scriptures.
 He shall judge among the heathen; he shall fill the places with the dead bodies. Psalms.
Judge not, that ye be not judg'd. Matthew.
 Let no man judge you in meat or drink. Col.

JUDGER. n. s. [from judge.] One who forms judgment, or passes sentence.

The vulgar threatened to be their oppressors, and judgers of their judges. King Charles.
 They who guide themselves merely by what appears, are ill judgers of what they have not well examined. Digby.

JUDGMENT. n. s. [judgment, French.]

1. The power of discerning the relations between one term or one proposition and another.
 O judgment! thou art fled to brutish beasts, And men have lost their reason. Shakespeare.
 The faculty, which God has given man to supply the want of certain knowledge, is judgment, whereby the mind takes any proposition to be erue or false, without perceiving a demonstrative evidence in the proofs. Locke.

Judgment is that whereby we join ideas together by affirmation or negation; so this tree is high. Watts.

2. Doom; the right or power of passing judgment.

If my suspect be false, forgive me, God; For judgment only doth belong to thee. Shaksp.

3. The act of exercising judicature; judicatory.

They gave judgment upon him. 2 Kings.
When thou, O Lord, shalt stand disclosed
In majesty severe,
And sit in judgment on my soul,
O how shall I appear? Addison's Spectator.

4. Determination; decision.

Where distinctions or identities are purely material, the judgment is made by the imagination, otherwise by the understanding. Locke.
We shall make a certain judgment what kind of distinction that earth was capable of. Burton.

Reason ought to accompany the exercise of our senses, whenever we would form a just judgment of things proposed to our inquiry. Watts.

5. The quality of distinguishing property and impropriety; criticism.

Judgment, a cool and slow faculty, attends not a man in the rapture of poetical composition. Denham.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

6. Opinion; notion.

Like men's judgments are
A parcel of their fortunes, and things outward Draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer a like. Shaksp.

When she did think my matter lov'd her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you. Shaksp.

7. Sentence against a criminal.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was fir'd
With agony. Shaksp.

The chief priests inform'd me, desiring to have judgment against him. Matt.
On Adam last this judgment he pronounc'd.
Milton.

8. Condemnation. This is a theological use.

The judgment was by one of condemnation; but the free gift is of many offences unto justification. Romans.

The precepts, promises, and threatenings of the gospel will rise up in judgment against us, and the articles of our faith will be so many articles of accusation. Tillotson.

9. Punishment inflicted by providence, with reference to some particular crime.

This judgment of the heavens that makes us tremble, Touches us not with pity. Shaksp. King Lear.

We cannot be guilty of greater uncharitableness, than to interpret afflictions as punishments and judgments: it aggravates the evil to him who suffers, when he looks upon himself as the mark of divine vengeance. Addison's Spectator.

10. Distribution of justice.

The Jews made insurrection against Paul, and brought him to the judgment seat. Acts.

Your dishonour
Mangles true judgment, and bereaves the state
Of that integrity which should become it. Shaksp.

In judgments between rich and poor, consider not what the poor man needs, but what is his own. Taylor.

A bold and wise petitioner goes straight to the throne and judgment seat of the monarch. Arbutnot and Pope.

11. Judiciary law; statute.

If ye hearken to their judgments, and keep and do them, the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant. Deuteronomy.

12. The last doom.

The dreadful judgment day
So dreadful will not be as was his fight. Shaksp.

JUDICATORY. n. f. [judico, Latin.]

1. Distribution of justice.

No such crime appeared as the lords, the supreme court of judicatory, would judge worthy of death. Clarendon.

2. Court of justice.

Human judicatories give sentence on matters of right and wrong, but inquire not into bounty and beneficence. Aterbury.

JUDICATURE. n. f. [judicature, French; judico, Latin.]

1. Power of distributing justice.

The honour of the judges in their judicature is the king's honour.
If he should bargain for a place of judicature, let him be rejected with shame. Bacon.

2. Court of justice.

In judicatories to take away the trumpet, the scabbet, the attendance, makes justice naked as well as blind. South.

JUDICIAL. adj. [judicium, Latin.]

1. Practised in the distribution of publick justice.

What government can be without judicial proceedings? And what judicature without a religious oath? Bentley.

2. Inflicted on as a penalty.

The resistance of those will cause a judicial hardness. South.

JUDICIALLY. adv. [from judicial.] In the forms of legal justice.

I wud believe us to think that we see God still looking on, and weighing all our thoughts, words, and actions in the balance of infallible justice, and passing the same judgment which he intends hereafter judicially to declare. Greiv.

JUDICIARY. adj. [judicare, Fr. judicarius, Latin.] Passing judgment upon any thing.

Before weight be laid upon judiciary astrologers, the influence of consultations ought to be made out. Boyle.

JUDICIOUS. adj. [judicieux, French.] Prudent; wise; skilful in any matter or affair.

For your husband,
He's noble, wise, judicious, and best knows
The fits o' th' season. Shaksp.

Love is th' his feat
In reason, and is judicious. Milton.

To each favour meaning we apply,
And putate call judicious. Milton.

We are beholden to judicious writers of all ages for those discoveries they have left behind them. Locke.

JUDICIOUSLY. adv. [from judicious.] Skilfully; wisely; with just determination.

So bold, yet so judiciously you dare,
That your least praise is to be regular. Droden.

Longinus has judiciously preferred the sublime genius that sometimes errs to the middling or indifferent one, which makes few faults, but seldom rises to excellence. Dryder.

JUG. n. f. [jugg, Danish.] A large drinking vessel with a gibbous or swelling belly.

You'd rail upon the hostess of the house,
Because she bought stone jugs and no feat'd quarts. Shaksp.

He fetch'd 'em drink,
Fill'd a large jug up to the brink. Swift.

TO JUGGLE. v. n. [jouglor or jongler, Fr. joculari, Latin.]

1. To play tricks by slight of hand; to show false appearances of extraordinary performances.

The ancient miracle of Memnon's statue seems to be a juggling of the Ethiopian priests. Dugby on Bodies.

2. To practise artifice or imposture.

Be these juggling hands no more believ'd,
That palter with us in a double sense. Shaksp.

Is't possible that spell of France should juggle Men into such strange mockeries? Shaksp.

They ne'er forsake their selves, nor lied,
Disdain'd to stay for friends consents;
Nor juggled about settlements. Hudibras.

JUGGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A trick by legerdemain.

The notion was not the invention of politicians, and a juggle of state to cozen the people into obedience. Tillotson.

JUGGLER. n. f. [from juggle.]

1. One who practises slight of hand; one who deceives the eye by nimble conveyance.

They say this town is full of cozenage,
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Drag-working forerers that change the mind,
Duguided cesters, prating mountebanks,
And many such like libertines of sin. Shaksp.

I saw a juggler that had a pair of cards, and would tell a man what card he thought. Bacon.

Aritæus was a famous poet, that flourish'd in the days of Craesus, and a notable juggler. Sandy's Travels.

Fortune-tellers, jugglers, and impostors, do daily delude them. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The juggler which another's slight can show,
But teaches how the world his own may know. Garth.

One who is managed by a juggler fancies he has money in hand; but let him grasp it never so carefully, upon a word or two it increases or dwindles. Addison's Freeholder.

What magick makes our money rise,
When dropt into the southern main:
Or do these jugglers cheat our eyes? Swift.

2. A cheat; a trickish fellow.

O me, you juggler: oh, you cawker blossom,
You thief of love; what have you come by night,
And stol'n my love's heart from him? Shaksp.

I sing no harm
To officer, justice, or justice of peace. Down.

JUGGLINGLY. adv. [from juggle.] In a deceptive manner.

JUGULAR. adj. [jugulum, Latin.] Belonging to the throat.

A gentleman was wounded into the internal jugular, through his neck. Wijeman's Surgeon.

JUICE. n. f. [jus, French; juys, Dutch.]

1. The liquor, sap, or water of plants and fruits.

If I define wine, I must say, wine is a juice not liquid, or wine is a substance; for juice includes both substance and liquid. Watts.

Of summer's fruits,
A friendly juice to cool th' it's rage contain. Thomson.

2. The fluid in animal bodies.

Juice in language is less than blood; for if the words be but becoming and signifying, and the sense gentle, there is juice; but where that wanteth, the language is thin, scarce covering the bone. Bacon's Works.

An animal whose juices are unfaul'd can never be nourish'd: untouch'd juices can never repair the fluids. Arbutnot.

JURCELESS. adj. [from juice.] Dry; without moisture; without juice

Divine Providence has spread desirable every where; not with a jurceless green carpet, but with succulent luscious and nourishing grass. Merc.

When Boreas' spirit blusters fore, Beware th' inclement heav'n's; now let thy heart
Crackle with juicylest boughs. Philips.

JU'ICINESS. n. f. [from juice.] Plenty of juice; succulence.

JU'ICY. adj. [from juice.] Moist; full of juice; succulent.

Earth being taken out of watery woods, will put forth herbs of a fat and juicy substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

Each plant and juiciest gourd will pluck.

Milton.

The musk's surpassing worth! that, in its youth,
Its tender nonage, loads the spreading boughs
With large and juicy offspring. Philips.

To JUKE. v. n. [jucher, French.]

1. To perch upon any thing as birds.

2. Juking, in Scotland, denotes still any complaisance by bending of the head.

Two asses travelled; the one laden with oats, the other with money; the money-merchant was so proud of his trust, that he went juiking and tossing of his head. L'Estrange.

JU'JUB. } n. f. [zizyphus, Lat.] A JU'JUBES. } plant whose flower consists of several leaves, which are placed circularly, and expand in form of a rose. The fruit is like a small plum, but it has little flesh upon the stone.
Miller.

JU'LAP. n. f. [A word of Arabick original;
julapium, low Lat. julep, Fr.] An extemporaneous form of medicine, made of simple and compound water sweetened, and serving for a vehicle to other forms not so convenient to take alone.
Quincy.

Behold this cordial julap here,
That flames and dances in his crystal bounds
With spirits of balm and fragrant syrups mixt.

Milton.

If any part of the after-birth be left, endeavour the bringing that away; and by good sudorifics and cordials expel the venom, and temperate the heat and acrimony by julaps and emulsions.
Wiseman's Surgery.

JU'LUS. n. f.

1. July flower.

2. Julus, isus, among botanists, denotes those long worm-like tufts or palms, as they are called, in willows, which at the beginning of the year grow out, and hang pendular down from hazels, walnut-trees, &c.
Miller.

JU'LY. n. f. [Julius, Latin; juillet, Fr.]
The month anciently called quintilis, or the fifth from March, named July in honour of Julius Cæsar; the seventh month from January.

July I would have drawn in a jacket of light yellow, eating cherries, with his face and bosom sun-burnt. Peachum

JUMART. n. f. [French.]

Males and jumarts, the one from the mixture of an ass and a mare, the other from the mixture of a bull and a mare, are frequent. Locke

To JU'MBLE. v. a. [in Gbaucer, jombres, from combler, French, Skinner.] To mix violently and confusedly together.

Persons and humours may be jumbled and disguised: but nature, like quicksilver, will never be killed. L'Estrange.

A verbal concordance leads not always to texts of the same meaning; and one may observe, how apt that is to jumble together passages of scripture, and thereby disturb the true meaning of holy scripture. Locke.

Writing is but just like dice,
And lucky means make people wise?
And jumbled words, if fortune throw them,
Shall, well as Dryden, turn a poem. Prior.

Is it not a firmer foundation for tranquillity, to believe that all things were created, and are ordered for the best, than that the universe is mere bungling and blundering; all ill-favourably colled and jumbled together by the unguided agitation and rude shuffles of matter? Bentley.

How tragedy and comedy embrace,
How farce and epick get a jumbled race. Pope.

That the universe was formed by a fortuitous concourse of atoms, I will no more believe, than that the accidental jumbling of the alphabet would fall into a most ingenious treatise of philosophy. Swift.

To JU'MBLE. v. n. To be agitated together.

They will all meet and jumble together into a perfect harmony. Swift.

JU'MBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]
Confused mixture; violent and confused agitation.

Had the world been coagulated from that supposed fortuitous jumble, this hypothesis had been tolerable. Glanville.

What jumble here is made of ecclesiastical revenues, as if they were all alienated with equal justice. Swift.

joined together.

Besides those grosser elements of bodies, salt, sulphur, and mercury, there may be ingredients of a more subtle nature, which, being extremely little, may escape unbedded in the junctures of the distillatory vessels, though never so carefully luted. Boyle.

2. Joint; articulation.

She has made the back-bone of several vertebrae, as being less in danger of breaking than if they were all one entire bone without those gristly junctures. Mora.

All other animals have transverse bodies; and though some do raise themselves upon their hinder legs to an upright posture, yet they cannot endure it long, neither are the figures or junctures, or order of their bones, fitted to such a posture. Hale.

3. Union ; amity.

Nor are the foberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and junction of hearts, which I desire to bear in those holy offices to be performed with me.

King Charles.

4. A critical point or article of time.

By this junction in that junction of time, they bid farewell to all the pleasures of this life.

When any law does not conduce to the publick safety, but in some extraordinary junctions, the very observation of it would endanger the community, that law ought to be laid asleep.

Addison.

Sponfer.

I shall find your lordship judge and juror,
You are so merciful, I see your end,
'Tis my undoing.

Shakspere.

I sing no harm, good sooth ! to any wight,
Juror, or judge.

Dorne.

About noon the jurors went together, and because they could not agree, they were shut in.

Hayward.

JU'R.Y. n. f. [jurata, Lat. juré, Fr.] A company of men, as twenty-four or twelve, sworn to deliver truth upon such evidence as shall be delivered them touching the matter in question.

There be three manners of trials in England : one: by parliament, another by battle, and the third by assize or jury. The trial by assize, be the action civil or criminal, publick or private, personal or real, is referred for the fact to a jury, and as they find it, so passeth the judgment. This jury is used not only in circuits of justices errant, but also in other courts, and matters of office, as, if the escheatour make inquisition in any thing touching his office, he doth it by a jury of inquest : if the coroner inquire how a subject found dead came to his end, he useth an inquest : the justices of peace in their quarter-sessions, the sheriff in his county and turn, the bailiff of a hundred, the steward of a court-leet or court-baron, if they inquire of any offence, or decide any cause between party and party, they do it by the same manner : so that where it is said, that all things be triable by parliament, battle, or assize ; assize, in this place, is taken for a jury or inquest, empannelled upon any cause in a court where this kind of trial is used. This jury, though it appertain to most courts of the common law, yet it is most notorious in the half-year courts of the justices errants, commonly called the great assizes, and in the quarter-sessions, and in them it is most ordinarily called a jury, and that in civil causes ; whereas in other courts it is often termed an inquest. In the general assize, there are usually many juries, because there be store of causes, both civil and criminal, commonly to be tried, whereof one is called the grand jury, and the rest petit juries. The grand jury consists ordinarily of twenty-four grave and substantial gentlemen, or some of them yeomen, chosen indifferently out of the whole shire by the sheriff, to consider of all bills of indictment preferred to the court ; which they do either approve by writing upon them these words, billis vera, or disallow by writing ignoramus. Such as they do approve, if they touch life and death, are farther referred to another jury to be considered of, because the case is of such importance ; but others of lighter moment are, upon their allowance, without more work, fined by the bench, except the party traverse the indictment, or challenge it for insufficiency, or remove the cause to a higher court by certiorari ; in which two former cases it is referred to another jury, and in the latter transmitted to the higher. Those that pass upon civil causes real, are all, or so many as can conveniently be had, of the same hundred where the land or tenement in question doth lie, and four at the least ; and they, upon due examination, bring in their verdict either for the demandant or tenant : according unto which, judgment passeth afterward in the court where the cause first began ; and the reason hereof is, because these justices of assize are, in this case, for the ease of the counties only to take the verdict of the jury by the virtue of the writ called nisi prius, and to return it to the court where the cause is depending.

Couch.

The jury, passing on the prisoner's life,
May in the twont twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try.

Shakspere.

How innocent I was,
His noble jury and foul cause can witness.
Clodius was acquitted by a corrupt jury, that had palpably taken shares of money before they gave up their verdict.

Bacon.

JU'R.YMAN. n. f. [jury and man.] One who is impannelled on a jury.

The hungry judges soon the sentence sign
And wretches hang that jurymen may dine.
No judge was known, upon or off the bench,
To use the least misnation, that might affect the interests of any one single jurymen, much less of a whole jury.

Swift.

JU'RYMAST. n. f. It seems to be properly durée mast, mâc de durée, a mast made to last for the present occasion. So the seamen call whatever they set up in the room of a mast lost in a fight or by a storm; being some great yard which they put down into the step of that lost mast, fastening it into the partners, and fitting to it the misen or some lesser yard with sails and ropes, and with it make a shift to sail. Harris.

JUST. adj. [juste, Fr. justus, Lat.]

of the bear. Sidney.

They go about to make us believe that they are just of the same opinion, and that they only think such ceremonies are not to be used when they are unprofitable, or when as good or better may be established. Hooker.

There, ev'n just there he stood; and as the spoke,
Where laid the spectre was, she cast her look.
Dryden.

A few understand him right; just as when our Saviour said, in an allegorical sense, Except ye eat the flesh of the son of man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Bentley.

'Tis with our judgments as our watches, none
Go just alike; yet each believes his own. Pope.

2. Merely; barely.

It is the humour of weak and trifling men to value themselves upon just nothing at all.
L'Estrange.

The Nereids swam before
To smooth the seas; a soft etesian gale
But just inspir'd and gently swell'd the sail.
Dryden.

Give me, ye gods, the product of one field,
That so I neither may be rich nor poor;
And having just enough, not covet more. Dryd.

3. Nearly; almost; tantum non.

Being spent with age, and just at the point of death, Democritus called for loaves of new bread to be brought, and with the steam of them under his nose prolonged his life. Temple.

JUST. n. f. [justice, French.] Mock encounter on horseback; tilt; tournament.
Justice is more proper.

None was either more grateful to the beholders, or more noble in itself, than justs, both with sword and lance. Sidney.

What news? hold those justs and triumphs?
Shakespeare.

Among themselves the journey they divide,
In equal squadrons rang'd on either side,
Then turn'd their horses heads, and man to man,
And steed to steed oppos'd, the justs began.
Dryden.

TO JUST. v. n. [jouster, French.]

1. To engage in a mock fight; to tilt.

2. To push; to drive: to juggle.

JUSTICE. n. f. [justice, French; justitia,
Latin.]

1. The virtue by which we give to every man what is his due: opposed to injury or wrong. It is either distributive, belonging to magistrates; or commutative, belonging to common transactions between men.

O that I were judge, I would do justice. 2 Sam.
The King-becoming good,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare.

The nature and office of justice being to dispose the mind to a constant and perpetual readiness to render to every man his due, it is evident, that if gratitude be a part of justice, it must be consistent about something that is due to another.
Locke.

2. Equity; agreeableness to right; as,
he proved the justice of his claim.

3. Vindicative retribution; punishment:
opposed to mercy.

He executed the justice of the Lord. Deut.
Let justice overtake us. Isaiah.

Examples of justice must be made, for terror to some; examples of mercy, for comfort to others. Bacon.

4. Right; assertion of right.

Draw thy sword,
That if my speech offend a noble heart,
Thy arm may do thee justice. Shakespeare.

5. [justiciarius, Lat.] One deputed by the king to do right by way of judgment. Cowell.

And thou, Eldras, ordain judges and justices, that they may judge in all Syria. 1 Esdras.

6. JUSTICE of the King's Bench. [justiciarius de Banco Regis.] Is a lord by his office, and the chief of the rest;
wherefore he is also called capitalis justiciarius Anglie. His office especially is to hear and determine all pleas of the crown; that is, such as concern offences committed against the crown, dignity, and peace of the king; as treasons, felonies, mayhems, and such like; but it is come to pass, that he with his assistants heareth all personal actions, and real also, if they be incident to any personal action depending before them.
Cowell.

Give that whipler his errand,
He'll take my lord chief justice' warrant. Prior.

7. JUSTICE of the Common Pleas. [justiciarius Communium Placitorum.] Is a lord by his office, and is called dominus justiciarius communium placitorum. He with his assistants originally did hear and determine all causes at the common law; that is, all civil causes between common persons, as well personal as real; for which cause it was called the court of common pleas, in opposition to the pleas of the crown, or the king's pleas, which are special, and appertaining to him only. Cowell.

8. JUSTICE of the Forest. [justiciarius Foreste.] Is a lord by his office, and hath the hearing and determining of all offences within the king's forest, committed against venison or vert: of these there be two, whereof the one hath jurisdiction over all the forests on this side Trent, and the other of all beyond.
Cowell.

9. JUSTICES of Assise. [justicarii ad capiendas Assisas.] Are such as were wont, by special commission, to be sent into this or that country to take assises;
the ground of which polity was the ease of the subjects: for whereas these actions pass always by jury, so many men might not, without great hinderance, be brought to London; and therefore justices, for this purpose, were by commission particularly authorized and sent down to them. Cowell.

10. JUSTICES in Eyre. [justicarii itinerantes.] Are so termed of the French erre, iter. The use of these, in ancient times, was to send them with commission into divers counties to hear such causes especially as were termed the pleas of the crown, and therefore I must imagine they were sent abroad for the ease of the subjects, who must else have been hurried to the King's Bench, if the cause were too high for the country court. They differed from the justices of Oyer and Terminer, because they were sent upon some one or few especial cases, and to one place; whereas the justices in Eyre were sent through the provinces and countries of the land, with more indefinite and general commission. Cowell.

11. JUSTICES of Guil Delivery. [Justiciarii ad Guasus deliberandas.] Are such as are sent with commission to hear and determine all causes appertaining to such as for any offence are cast into gaol, part of whose authority is to punish such as let to mainprise those prisoners that by law be not bailable. These by likelihood, in ancient time, were sent to countries upon several occasions; but afterward justices of assize were likewise authorized to this. Cowell.

12. JUSTICES of Nisi Prius are all one now-a-days with justices of assize; for it is a common adjournment of a cause, in the common pleas, to put it off to such a day: nisi prius justiciarii venerint ad eas partes ad capiendas assisas; and upon this clause of adjournment they are called justices of nisi prius as well as justices of assize, by reason of the writ or action that they have to deal in. Cowell.

13. JUSTICES of Peace. [Justiciarii ad Pacem.] Are they that are appointed by the king's commission, with others, to attend the peace of the country where they dwell; of whom some, upon especial respect, are made of the quorum, because some business of importance may not be dealt in without the presence of them, or one of them. Cowell.

The justice,

In fair round belly with good capon lined,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakespeare.

Thou hast appointed justices of the peace to call poor men before them, about matters they were not able to answer. Shakespeare.

The justices of peace are of great use: anciently they were conservators of the peace; these are the same, saving that several acts of parliament have enlarged their jurisdiction. Bacon.

To JUSTICE. v. a. [from the noun.] To administer justice to any. Not in use.

As for the title of proscriptum, wherein the emperor hath been judge and party, and hath justified himself, God forbid but that it should endure an appeal to a war. Bacon.

Whereas one Styward, a Scot, was apprehended for intending to poison the young queen of Scots; the king delivered him to the French king, to be justified by him at his pleasure. Hayward.

JUSTICEMENT. n. s. [from justice.] Proceed in courts.

JUSTICER. n. s. [from To justice.] Administrator of justice. An old word.

He was a singular good justicer; and if he had not died in the second year of his government, was the likeliest person to have reformed the English colonies. Davies on Ireland.

JUSTICESHIP. n. s. [from justice.] Rank or office of justice. Swift.

JUSTICIABLE. adj. [from justice.] Proper to be examined in courts of justice.

JUSTIFIABLE. adj. [from justify.] Defensible by law or reason.

Just as the ways of God,
And justifiable to men. Milton's Agonistes.

Although some animals in the water do carry a justifiable resemblance to some at land, yet are the major part which bear their names unlike. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

JUSTIFIABLENESS. n. s. [from justifiable.] Rectitude; possibility of being fairly defended.

Men, jealous of the justifiableness of their doings before God, never think they have human strength enough. King Charles.

JUSTIFIABLY. adv. [from justifiable.] Rightly; so as to be supported by right; defensibly.

A man may more justifiably throw cross and pile for his opinions, than take them up by such measures. Locke.

JUSTIFICATION. n. s. [justification, Fr. justificatio, low Latin.]

1. Absolution.

I hope for my brother's justification; he wrote this but as an essay of my virtue. Shakespeare.

2. Defence; maintenance; vindication; support.

Among theological arguments in justification of absolute obedience, was one of a singular nature. Swift.

3. Deliverance by pardon from sins past.

In such righteousness

To them by faith imputed, they may find justification towards God, and peace of conscience. Milton's Par. Lost.

'Tis the consummation of that former act of faith by this latter, or, in the words of St. Paul and St. James, the consummation of faith by charity and good works, that God accepteth in Christ to justification, and not the bare aptness of faith to bring forth works, if those works, by the fault of a rebellious infidel, will not be brought forth. Hammond.

JUSTIFICATOR. n. s. [from justify.] One who supports, defends, vindicates, or justifies.

JUSTIFIER. n. s. [from justify.] One who justifies; one who defends or absolves; one who frees from sin by pardon.

That he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Romans.

To JUSTIFY. v. a. [justifier, French; justifico, low Latin.]

1. To clear from imputed guilt; to absolve from an accusation.

The law hath judg'd thee, Eleanor; I cannot justify whom law condemns. Shakespeare.
They say, behold a man gluttonous, a friend of publicans and sinners; but wisdom is justified of her children. Matthew.

How can man be justified with God? Or how can he be clean that is born of a woman? There is an exquisite subtilty, and the same is unjust; and there is a wise man that justifies in judgment. Tobias.

Sins may be forgiven through repentance, but no act of wit of man will ever justify them. Sherlock.

You're neither justified nor yet accus'd. Druid.

2. To maintain; to defend; to vindicate. When we began in courteous manner to lay his unkindness unto him, he seeing himself confronted by so many, like a resolute orator, went not to denial, but to justify his cruel falsehood. Sudney.

What she did, whatever in itself, Her doing seem'd to justify the deed. Milton.

My unwilling flight the gods inforce, And that must justify our sad divorce. Denham.

Yet still thy roils shall stand in thy defence, And justify their author's want of sense. Dryd.

Let others justify their millions as they can, we are sure we can justify that of our fathers by an uninterrupted succession. Atterbury.

3. To free from past sin by pardon. By him all that believe are justified by all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses. Act.

To JUSTLE. v. n. [from just, jouster, French.] To encounter; to clash; to rush against each other.

While injury of chance Puts back leave taking, justles roughly by All time of pause, rudely hegules our lips Of all rejoindure. Shaks. Troilus and Crassida.

The chariot shall rage in the streets, they shall justle one against another in the broad ways. Nahum.

Argo pass'd, Through Bosphorus, betwix the justling rocks. Milton.

Late the clouds Justling, or push'd with winds, rude in their shock, Tine the flant lightning. Milton's Par. Lost.

Not one starry spark, But gods meet gods, and justle in the dark. Lee.

Courtiers therefore justle for a grant; And, when they break their friendship, plead their want. Dryden.

The more remote run stumbling with their fear, And, in the dark, men justle as they meet. Dryden.

When elephant gainst elephant did rear His trunk, and castles justled in the air, My sword thy way to victory had shown. Dryden.

Was there not one who had set bars and doors to it, and said, Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther, and here shall thy proud waves be staid; then might we well expect such vicissitudes, such justlings and clashing in nature. Woodward.

I thought the dean had been too proud To justle nere among a crowd. Swift.

To JUSTLE. v. a. To push; to drive; to force by rushing against it. It is commonly used with a particle following, as out or off.

Private and single abilities should not justle out and deprive the church of the joint abilities of many learned and godly men. King Charles.

Many excellent strains have been justled off by their intrusions. Brown's Vulgar Err.

The surly commons shall respect deny, And justle peetage out with property. Dryden.

It is not to be imagined that the incongruous alphabets and abuses of writing can ever be justled out of their possession of all libraries. Helder.

Running in the dark, a man may justle a post. Collier.

Absent good, though thought on, not making any part of unapplicability in its absence, is justled out, to make way for the removal of those uneasinesses we feel. Locke.

We justled one another out, and disputed the post for a great while. Madison.

JUSTLY. adv. [from just.]

1. Uprightly; honestly; in a just manner. Nothing can justly be despised, that cannot justly be blamed: where there is no choice, there can be no blame. South.

With ignominy scourg'd, in open sight: Next view the Tarquin kings; th' avenging sword Of Brutus justly drawn, and Rome restor'd. Dryden.

J U T

The goddess, studious of her Grecians fate,
Taught them in laws and letters to excel,
In acting justly, and in writing well. Prior.
2. Properly; exactly; accurately.
Their artful hands instruct the lute to sound,
Their feet assist their hands, and justly beat the ground. Dryden.

JU'STNESS. n. f. [from just.]
1. Justice; reasonableness; equity. Justness is properly applied to things, and justice to persons; though we now say the justice of a cause, as well as of a judge.
It maketh unto the right of the war against him, whose success useth commonly to be according to the justness of the cause for which it is made.
Spenser on Ireland.
We may not think the justness of each act
Such and no other than event doth form it.
Shakespeare.

2. Accuracy; exactness; propriety. In this sense it is now most used.
I value the satisfaction I had in seeing it represented, with all the justness and gracefulness of action. Dryden.
I appeal to the people, was the usual saying of a very excellent dramatick poet, when he had any dispute with particular persons about the justness and regularity of his productions. Addison.

To JUT. v. n. [Supposed to be corrupted from jet, perhaps from shoot.] To push or shoot into prominences; to come out beyond the main bulk.

J U V

Insulting tyranny begins to jut
Upon the innocent and awless thrown. Shaksp.
All the projected or jutting parts should be very moderate, especially the comices of the lower orders. Watton.
The land, if not restrain'd, had met your way,
Projected out a neck, and juttet to the sea. Dryd.
Broke by the jutting land on either side;
In double streams the briny waters glide. Dryden.
It seems to jut out of the structure of the poem, and be independent of it. Broome.

To JU'TTY. v. a. [from jut.] To shoot out beyond.
Then lend the eye a terrible aspect;
Let it pry through the portage of the head
Like a brass cannon: let the brow o'erwhelm it
As fearfully as dath a galled rock
O'erhang and jutty his confounded base,
Swill'd with the wild and wasteful ocean. Shaksp.

JUVENILE. adj. [juvenilis, Latin.]
Young; youthful.
Learning hath its infancy when it is almost childish; then its youth, when it is luxuriant and juvenile; then its strength of years, when it is solid; and lastly, its old age, when it waxeth dry and exhaust. Bacon's Essays.

JUVENILITY. n. f. [from juvenile.]
1. Youthfulness.
The restoration of grey hairs to juvenility, and renewing exhausted marrow, may be effected without a miracle. Glanville.
2. Light and careless manner.

J Y M

Customary strains and abstracted juvenilities have made it difficult to commend and speak credibly in dedications. Glanville.

JUXTAPOSITION. n. f. [juxtaposition,
Fr. juxta and positio, Latin.] Apposi-tion; the state of being placed by each other.

Nor can it be a difference, that the parts of solid bodies are held together by hooks, since the coherence of these will be of difficult conception; and we must either suppose an infinite number of them holding together, or at last come to parts that are united by a mere juxtaposition. Glanville.

J'VVY. n. f. [IPIZ, Saxon; hedera, Lat.]
A plant.

It is a parasitick plant, sending forth roots or fibres from its branches, by which it is fastened to either trees, walls, or plants which are near it, and from thence receives a great share of its nourishment. Miller.

A gown made of the finest wool;
A belt of straw, and ivy buds,
With coral clasps and amber studs;
And if these pleasures may thee move,
Come live with me and be my love. Raleigh.
Direct the clasping ivy where to climb. Milton.

JY'MOLD. adj. See GIMAL.
Their poor jades
Lob down their heads, dropping the hide and hips;
And in their pale dull mouths the jymold bit
Lies, foul with chew'd grafs, still and motionless.
Shakespeare.

K.

K A L

K. A letter borrowed by the English from the Greek alphabet. It has before all the vowels one invariable sound: as, keen, ken, kill. It is used after c at the end of words: as, knock, clock, crack, back, brick, slick, pluck, check,
which were written anciently with e final; as clocke, checke, tricke. It is also in use between a vowel and the silent e
final: as, sloke, broke, brake, pike, duke, eke. It likewise ends a word after a diphthong: as, look, break, spook, leek.
The English never use c at the end of a word. K is silent in the present pronunciation before n: as, knife, knee, knell.

KA'LENDAR. n. f. [now written calendar.] An account of time.

Let this pernicious hour
Stand as accus'd in the kalendar. Shakespeare

KA'LI. n. f. [an Arabick word.] Sea weed, of the ashes of which glass is made; whence the word alkali.

K A Y

The ashes of the weed kali are sold to the Venetians for their glass works. Bacon.

KAM. adj. Crooked.
Kaw, in Eise, is squint eyed, and applied to any thing awry; clean kam signifies crooked, athwart, awry, cross from the purport: A-schenbo,
Italian; hence our English a-kimbo.

Clean kaw is, by vulgar pronunciation, brought to kin kam.
This is clean kam; merely awry. Shakespeare.

To KAW. v. n. [from the sound.] To cry as a raven, crow, or rook.

Jack-daws kawing and fluttering about the nest, set all their young ones a-gaping; but having nothing in their mouths but air, leave them as hungry as before. Locke.

KAW. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry of a raven or crow.

The daffard crow that to the wood made wing,
With her loud kaw her craven-kind doth bring,
Who, safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryd.

KAYLE. n. f. [quille, French.]

1. Ninepin; kettlepins, of which skittles seems a corruption.

K E C

And now at kech they try a harmless chance,
And now their cur they teach to fetch and dance.
Sibney.

The residue of the time they wear out at coits, kayies, or the like idle exercises. Carew.

2. A kind of play still retained in Scotland, in which nine holes ranged in three's are made in the ground, and an iron bullet rolled in among them.

To KECK. v. n. [kecken, Dutch.] To heave the stomach; to reach at vomiting.

All those diets do dry up humours and rebums, which they first attenuate, and while the humour is attenuated it troubleth the body a great deal more; and therefore patients must not keck at them at the first. Bacon's Natural History.

The faction, is it not notorious?
Keck at the memory of glorious. Swift.

To KE'CKLE. v. a. To defend a cable round with rope. Ainsworth.

KE'CKSY. n. f. [commonly hex; cigue, French; ciuta, Latin. Skinner.] Skinner seems to think kecksy or hex the same as hemlock. It is used in Staffordshire

K E E

Both for hemlock, and any other hollow-jointed plant.

Nothing seems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shakspeare.

KE'CKY. adj. [from kex.] Resembling a kex.

An Indian sceptre, made of a sort of cane, without any joint, and perfectly round, consisteth of hard and blackish cylinders, mixed with a soft kecky body; so as at the end cut transversely, it looks as a bundle of wires. Grew.

To KEDGE. v. a. [kagke, a small vessel, Dutch.]

In bringing a ship up or down a narrow river, when the wind is contrary to the tide, they let the forefall, or foretopfall and mizen, and so let her drive with the tide. The falls are to flat her about, if she comes too near the shore. They also carry out an anchor in the head of the boat, with a hawser that comes from the ship; which anchor, if the ship comes too near the shore, they let fall in the stream, and so wind her head about it; then weigh the anchor again when she is about, which is called kedging, and from this use the anchor a kedger. Harris.

KE'DGER. n. f. [from kedge.] A small anchor used in a river. See KEDGE.

KE'DLACK. n. f. A weed that grows among corn; charnock. Tusser.

Cic'ly the western las that tends the kiz. Gay.

KEEL. n. f. [æle, Saxon; kiel, Dutch; quille, French.] The bottom of a ship.

Heav'd up his lighten'd keel, and sunk the sand,
And steer'd the sacred vessel. Dryden.

Her sharp bill serves for a keel to cut the air before her; her tail she useth as her rudder. Grew's Cosmol.

Your cables burst, and you must quickly feel
The waves impetuous cut'ring at your keel. Swift.

KEELS, the same with kayles; which see.

To KEEL. v. a. [ælan, Saxon.] This word, which is preserved in Shakspeare,

Hammer explains thus:

To keel seems to mean to drink so deep, as to turn up the bottom of the pot, like turning up the keel of a ship. Hammer.

In Ireland, to keel the pot is to scum it.

While greatly Joan doth keel the pot. Shakspeare.

KE'ELFAT. n. f. [æelan, Saxon, to cool, and fat or wat, a vessel.] Cooler; tub in which liquor is let to cool.

KE'ELSON. n. f. The next piece of timber in a ship to her keel, lying right over it next above the floor timber. Harris.

To KE'ELHALE. v. a. [keel and hale.] To punish in the seamen's way, by dragging the criminal under water on one side of the ship and up again on the other.

KEEN. adj. [cæne, Saxon; kuhn, German; koen, Dutch.]

1. Sharp; well edged; not blunt. We say keen of an edge; and sharp, either of edge or point.

Come thick night,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare.

Here is my keen-edged sword,
Deck'd with fine flower-de-luces on each side. Shakspeare.

To me the cries of fighting fields are charms,
Keen be my fabre, and of proof my arms. Dryden.

K E E

A sword keen-edg'd within his right he held,
The warlike emblem of the conquer'd field. Dryden.

2. Severe; piercing.

punctual correspondence with Eudoxus. Addis.
39. To KEEP under. To oppress; to subdue.
O happy mixture! whereby things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us.
Hooker.
- Truth may be smothered a long time, and kept under by violence; but it will break out at last.
Stillingfleet.

The kimbo handles seem with bears-foot curv'd,
And never yet to table have been serv'd. Dryden

He observed them edging 'wards one another to whisper; so that John was forced to fit with his arms a kimbo, to keep them asunder.

Richardson's History of John Bull

- KIN. n. f. [cygne, Saxon.]

1. Relation either of consanguinity or affinity.

You must use them with fit respects, according to the bonds of nature; but you are of kin, and so a friend to their persons, not to their enour. Bacon's Advice to Villiers

Th' unhappy Palamon,
Whom Theseus holds in bonds, and will not free,
Without a crime, except his kin to me. Dryden

2. Relatives; those who are of the same race.

Tumultuous wars,
Shall kin with kin, and kind with kind confound. Shakespeare

The father, mother, and the kin beside,
Were overcome by fury of the tide. Dryden

3. A relation; one related.

Then is the soul from God; so pagans say,
Which saw by nature's light her heavenly kind,
Naming her kin to God, and God's bright ray,
A citizen of heav'n, to earth confin'd. Davens

4. The same generical class, though perhaps not the same species; thing related.

The lurst
And the ear-deaf'ning voice of the oracle,
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpris'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shaksp. Winter's Tale

The odour of the fixed nitre is very languid; but that which it discovers, being dissolved in a little hot water, is altogether differing from the stink of the other, being of kin to that of other alkalizate salts. Boyle

5. A diminutive termination from kind, a child, Dutch: as, manikin, minikin, thomkin, wilkin.

- KIND. adj. [from cygne, relation, Sax.]

1. Benevolent; filled with general goodwill.

By the kind gods, 'tis most ignobly done
To pluck me by the beard. Shakespeare

Some of the ancients, like kind heated men, have talked much of annual refrigeriums, or intervals of punishment to the damned, as particularly on the great festivals of the resurrection and ascension. South

2. Favourable; beneficent.

He is kind to the unthankful and evil. Luke

- KIND. n. f. [cygne, Saxon.]

1. Race; generical class. Kind in Teutonick English answers to genus, and sort to species; though this distinction, in popular language, is not always observed.

Thus far we have endeavoured in part to open of what nature and force laws are, according to their kinds. Hosker

As when the total kind
Of birds, in orderly array on wing,
Came tumblin'd over Eden, to receive Their names of thee. Milton's Par. Lost

That both are animalia,
I grant; but not rationalia;

For though they do agree in kind,
Specifick difference we find. Hudibras

God and Nature do not principally concern themselves in the preservation of particulars, but kinds and companies. South's Sermons

He with his wife were only left behind
Of perith'd man; they two were human kind. Dryden

Some acts of virtue are common to heathens and christians; but I suppose them to be performed by christians after a more sublime manner than among the heathens; and even when they do not differ in kind from moral virtues, yet differ in the degrees of perfection.

Atterbury.

He, with a hundred arts refin'd
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind.

Pope.

2. Particular nature.

No human laws are exempt from faults, since those that have been looked upon as most perfect in their kind, have been found to have so many.

Baker.

3. Natural state.

He did give the goods of all the prisoners unto those that had taken them, either to take them in kind, or compound for them.

Bacon.

The tax upon tillage was often levied in kind upon corn, and called decimes, or tithes.

Arbuth.

4. Nature; natural determination.

The skillful shepherd pecl'd me certain wands,
And in the doing of the deed of kind
He stuck them up before the fullsome ewes.

Shakspeare.

Some of you, on pure instinct of nature,
Are led by kind to admire your fellow-creature.

Dryden.

5. Manner; way.

Send me your prisoners with the speediest means,
Or you shall hear in such a kind from me
As will dispense you.

Shakspeare's Henry iv.

This will encourage industrious improvements, because many will rather venture in that kind, than take five in the hundred.

Bacon.

6. Sort. It has a slight and unimportant sense.

Diogenes was asked, in a kind of scorn, What was the matter that philosophers haunted rich men, and not rich men philosophers? He answered, because the one knew what they wanted, the other did not.

Bacon.

To KIN'DLE. v. a. [cinnu, Welsh; cynbelan, Saxon.]

1. To set on fire; to light; to make to burn.

He will take thereof, and warm himself; yea he kindleth it and baketh bread.

Isaiah.

I was not forgetful of those sparks, which some men's dissenters formerly studied to kindle in parliaments.

King Charles.

If the fire burns vigorously, it is no matter by what means it was at first kindled: there is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in it, kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled from the sun.

South.

2. To inflame the passions; to exasperate; to animate; to heat; to fire the mind.

I've been to you a true and humble wife;
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike.

Shakspeare.

He hath kindled his wrath against me, and incited me as one of his enemies.

Job.

Thus one by one kindling each other's fire,
'Till all is flam'd, they all in one agree.

Daniel.

Each was a cause alone, and all combin'd
To kindle vengeance in her haughty mind.

Dryden.

To KIN'DLE. v. n.

1. To catch fire.

When thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burnt, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

Isaiah.

2. [from cennan, Saxon.] To bring forth. It is used of some particular animals.

Are you native of this place?
—As the coney that you see dwells where she is kindled.

Shakspeare.

KIN'DLER. n. f. [from kindle.] One that lights; one who inflames.

Now is the time that rakes their revels keep,
Kindlers of riot, enemies of sleep.

Gay.

KIN'DLY. adv. [from kind.] Benevolently; favourably; with good-will.

Sir Thurio borrows his wit from your ladyship's looks, and spends what he borrows kindly in your company.

Shakspeare.

I sometime lay here in Corioli,
At a poor man's house: he us'd me kindly.

Shakspeare. Coriolanus.

Be kindly affectioned one to another, with brotherly love, in honour preferring one another.

Romans.

His grief some pity, others blame;
The fatal cause all kindly seek.

Prior.

Who with less designing ends,
Kindlier entertain their friends;
With good words, and count'nance sprightly,
Strive to treat them all politely.

Swift.

KIN'DLY. adj. [from kind; probably from kind the substantive.]

1. Homogeneous; congenial; kindred; of the same nature.

This competency I beseech God I may be able to digest into kindly juice, that I may grow thereby.

Hammond.

These soft fires

Not only enlighten, but with kindly heat,
Of various influence, foment and warm,
Temper or nourish.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. The foregoing sense seems to have been originally implied by this word; but following writers, inattentive to its etymology, confounded it with kind.

3. Bland; mild; softening.

Through all the living regions do'st thou move,
And feather'd, where thou goest, the kindly feds of love.

Dryden.

Ye heav'ns, from high the dewy nectar pour,
And in soft silence shed the kindly show'!

Pope.

KIN'DNESS. n. f. [from kind.] Benevolence; beneficence; good-will; favour; love.

If there be kindness, meekness, or comfort in her tongue, then is not her husband like other men.

Ecclesiasticus.

Old Lelius professes he had an extraordinary kindness for several young people.

Collier.

Ever blest be Cytherea's shrine,
Since thy dear breast has felt an equal wound,
Since in thy kindness my desires are crown'd.

Prior.

Love and inclination can be produced only by an experience or opinion of kindness to us.

Rogers.

KIN'DRED. n. f. [from kind; cynpene, Saxon.]

1. Relation by birth or marriage; cognation; consanguinity; affinity.

Like her, of equal kindred to the throne,
You keep her conquests, and extend your own.

Dryden.

2. Relation; suit.

An old motly saddle, and the stirrups of no kindred.

Shakspeare.

3. Relatives.

I think the sea is no man secure
But the queen's kindred.

Shakspeare. Richard III.

Nor needs thy jutting title the foul guilt
Of eastern kings, who, to secure their reign,
Must have their brothers, sons, and kindred slain.

Denham.

KIN'DRED. adj. Congenial; related; cognate.

From Tuscan Corintum he claim'd his birth;
But after, when exempt from mortal earth,
From thence ascended to his kindred skies
A god.

Dryden.

KINE. n. f. plur. from cow.

To milk the kine,
E'er the milk-maid fine
Hath open'd her eyne.

Ben Jonson.

A field I went, amid' the morning dew,
To milk my kine.

Gay.

KING. n. f. [A contraction of the Teutonic word cuning, or cuning, the name of sovereign dignity. In the primitive tongue it signifies stout or valiant, the kings of most nations being, in the beginning, chosen by the people on account of their valour and strength.]

1. Monarch; supreme governour.

The great king of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded,
That thou shalt go no murderer.

Shakspeare.

A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by; and then his state
Empnes itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters.

Shakspeare.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallows' wings;
Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures kings.

Shakspeare.

The king becoming graces,
As justice, verity, temperance, stability,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them.

Shakspeare.

Thus states were form'd the name of king unknown,
'Till common int'rest plac'd the sway in one:
'Was virtue only, or in arts or arms,
Disposing blessings, or averting harms,
The name which in a fire the sons obey'd
A prince the father of a people made.

Pope.

2. It is taken by Bacon in the feminine; as prince also is.

Ferdinand and Isabella, kings of Spain, recovered the great and rich kingdom of Granada from the Moors.

Bacon.

3. A card with the picture of a king.

The king unseen
Lur'd in her hand, and mourn'd his captive queen.

Pope.

4. KING at arms, a principal officer at arms, that has the pre-eminence of the society; of whom there are three in number, viz. Garter, Norroy, and Clarenceux.

A letter under his own hand was lately shew'd me by sir William Dugdale, king at arms.

Walton.

To KING. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To supply with a king. A word rather ludicrous.

England is so idly king'd,
Her sceptre so fantastically borne,
That fear attends her not.

Shakspeare.

2. To make royal; to raise to royalty.

Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me with myself a beggar,
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me, I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again.

Shakspeare.

KINGAPPLE. n. f. A kind of apple.

The kingapple is preferred before the jenneting.

Mortimer.

KINGCRAFT. n. f. [king and craft.] The art of governing. A word commonly used by king James.

KINGCUP. n. f. [king and cup.] The name is properly, according to Gerard, kingcob.] A flower; crowfoot.

June is drawn in a mantle of dark grass green, and upon his head a garland of bents, kingcups, and maidenhair.

Peacham.

Fair is the kingcup that in meadow blows,
Fair is the daisy that beside her grows.

Gay.

KINGDOM. n. f. [from king.]

1. The dominion of a king; the territories subject to a monarch.

K I N

You're welcome,
Must learned, reverend sir, into our kingdom.
Shakspeare.
Moses gave unto them the kingdom of Sihon
-king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan. Numbers.

2. A different class or order of beings. A word chiefly used among naturalists.
The animal and vegetable kingdoms are so nearly joined, that if you take the lowest of one, and the highest of the other, there will scarce be perceived any difference. Locke.

3. A region; a tract.
The wat'ry kingdom & no har
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Pontia. Shakspeare.

KINGFISHER. n. f. [halcyon.] A species of bird.
When dew refreshing on the pasture fields
The moon bellows, kingfishers play on shore.
Mary's Virgil.
Bitterns, herons, sea-gulls, kingfishers, and water-rats, are great enemies to fish. Mortimer.

KINGLIKE. } adj. [from king.]
KINGLY. }
1. Royal; sovereign; monarchical.
There we'll sit Ruling in large and ample empery,
O'er France, and all her almost kingly dukedoms.
Shakspeare.

Yet this place
Had been thy kingly seat, and here thy race,
From all the ends of peopled earth, had come To reverence thee. Dryden's State of Innocence.
In Sparta, a kingly government, though the people were perfectly free, the administration was in the two kings and the ephori. Swift.
The cities of Greece, when they drove out their tyrannical kings, either chose others from a new family, or abolished the kingly government, and became free states. Swift.

2. Belonging to a king; suitable to a king.
Why liest thou with the vile
In loathsome beds, and leav'st it the kingly couch
A watch-cake to a common larum bell? Shakspeare.
Then shalt thou give me with thy kingly hand,
What husband in thy power I will command.
Shakspeare.

3. Noble; august; magnificent.
He was not born to live a subject life, each action of his bearing in it majesty, such a kingly entertainment, such a kingly magnificence, such a kingly heart for enterprises. Sidney.
I am far better born than is the king;
More like a king, more kingly in my thoughts.
Shakspeare.

KINGLY. adv. With an air of royalty;
with superiour dignity.
Adam bow'd low; he, kingly, from his state Inclin'd not. Milton's Par. Lost.
His hat, which never vail'd to human pride,
Walker with reverence took, and laid aside;
Low bow'd the rest, he, kingly, did but nod.
Dunciad.

KINGSE'VIL. n. f. [king and evil] A ferocious distemper, in which the glands are ulcerated, commonly believed to be cured by the touch of a king.
Sore eyes are frequently a species of the kingseevil, and take their beginning from vicious humours inflaming the tunica adnata. Wifeman.

KINGSHIP. n. f. [from king.] Royalty;
monarchy.
They defigned and proposed to me the new-modelling of sovereignty and kingship, without any reality of power, or without any necessity of subjection and obedience. King Charles.
We know how successful the late usurper was,
while his army believed him real in his zeal against kingship; but when they found out the impotence, upon his aspiring to the same himself,

K I S

he was presently deserted and opposed by them, and never able to crown his usurped greatness with the addition of that title which he passionately thirsted after. South.

KINGSPEAR. n. f. [asphodelus.] A plant.
KINGSTONE. n. f. [spatula.] A fish.
Ainsworth.

KIN'SFOLK. n. f. [kin and folk.] Relations; those who are of the same family.

lands, have bestowed them amongst their kinsfolks. Spenser.
My kinsfolks have failed, and my familiar friends forgotten me. J. b.

KINSMAN. n. f. [kin and man.] A man of the same race or family.
The jury he made to be chosen out of their nearest kinsmen, and their judges he made of their own fathers. Spenser.
Both fair, and both of royal blood they seem'd,
Whom kinsmen to the crown the heralds dem'd.
Dryden.

Let me stand excluded from my right, Robb'd of my kinsman's arms, who first appear'd
in fight. Dryden's Fables.
There is a branch of the Medicis in Naples;
the head of it has been owned as a kinsman by the great duke, and 'tis thought will succeed to his dominions. St. Julien on Italy.

KINSWOMAN. n. f. [kin and woman.] A female relation.
A young noble lady, near kinswoman to the fair Helen, queen of Corinth, was come thither.
Sidney.
The duke was as much in love with wit as he was with his kinswoman. Dennis' Letters.

KIRK. n. f. [cyrce, Saxon; kyrk, Sw.] A church. An old word yet retained in Scotland.
Home they hasten the posts to night,
And all the kirk pillars ere day-light,
With hawthorn buds and sweet eglantine. Spens.
Nor is it all the nation hath these spots,
There is a church as well as kirk of Scots.
Cleveland.

What one party thought to rivet by the Scots, that the other contemns, despising the kirk government and discipline of the Scots. K. Charles.
KIRTLE. n. f. [cyrstel, Saxon.] An upper garment; a gown.
All in a kirtle of discoloured say
He clothed was. Fairy Queen.
What stuff wilt thou have a kirtle of? Thou shalt have a cap to-morrow. Shakspeare.

Thy gowns, thy shoes, thy beds of roses,
Thy cap, thy kirtle, and thy posies,
Soon break, soon wither, soon forgotten,
In folly ripe, in reason rotten. Raleigh.

To KISS. v. a. [cusan, Welsh; xv'e.]
1. To touch with the lips.
But who those ruddy lips can miss,
Which blessed still themselves do kiss. Sidney.
He took
The bride about the neck, and kiss her lips
With such a clamorous smack, that at the parting
All the church echo'd. Shakspeare.
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
And in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.
Shakspeare.

2. To treat with fondness.
The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it, but to stubborn spirits,
They swell and grow as terrible as storms. Shakf.

3. To touch gently.
The moon shines bright; in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,
And they did make no noise. Shakspeare.

KISS. n. f. [from the verb.] Salute given by joining lips.
What sense had I of her stol'n hours or lust?
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips. Shakspeare.
Upon my livid lips bestow a kiss:
O envy not the dead, they feel not bliss! Dryd.

K I T

KISSER. n. f. [from kiss.] One that kisses.

KISSINGERUST. n. f. [kissing and rust?] Crust formed where one loaf, in the oven touches another.
These bak'd him kissing us 'er, and those Brought him small beer. King's Col. Voy.

KIT. n. f. [kite, Dutch.]
1. A large bottle. Skinner.
2. A small diminutive fiddle.
'Tis kept in a case fixed to it, almost like a dancing master's. Greene's Miscell.

castle salmon is sent up to town.

KITCHEN. n. f. [kogin, Welsh; kog,
Flemish; cjeene, Saxon; cucina, It.
cucina, Italian; kyfren, Erse.] The room in a house where the provisions are cooked.
These being culpable of this crime, or favour-ers of their friends, which are such by whom their kitchens are sometimes amended, will not suffer any such statute to pass. Spenser.

Can we judge it a thing seemly for any man to go about the building of an house to the God of heav'n, with no other appearance than if his end were to rear up a kitchen or a parlour for his own use? Hooker.
He was taken into service in his court to a pale office in his kitchen; so that he turned a broach that had worn a crown. Bacon.
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

KITCHENGARDEN. n. f. [kitchen and garden.] Garden in which esculent plants are produced.
Gardens, if planted with such things as are fit for food, are called kitchen gardens. Bacon.
A kitchen garden is a more pleasant sight than the finest orangey. Speclator.

KITCHENMAID. n. f. [kitchen and maid.]
A maid under the cookmaid, whose business is to clean the utensils of the kitchen.

KITCHENSTUFF. n. f. [kitchen and stuff.]
The fat of meat scummed off the pot, or gathered out of the dripping-pan.
As a thirsty wench scrapes kitchenstuff,
And barrelling the droppings and the snuff
Of waiting candles, which in thirty year,
Reliquely kept, perchance buys wedding cheer.
Dorset.

Instead of kitchenstuff some cry
A gospel-preaching ministry Hudibras.

KITCHENWENCH. n. f. [kitchen and wench.] Scullion; maid employed to clean the instruments of cookery.
Laura to his lady was but a kitchenwench. Shakspeare.

Cookery; work done in the kitchen.

KITE. n. f. [cyrta, Saxon; milvus.]
1. A bird of prey that infests the farms, and steals the chickens.
More pity that the eagle should be mew'd,
While kites and buzzards prey at liberty. Shakf.
The heron, when the soareth high, so as sometimes he is seen to pass over a cloud, sheweth winds; but kites, flying aloft, shew fair and dry weather. Bacon.
A leopard and a cat seem to differ just as a kite doth from an eagle. Greene.

2. A name of reproach denoting rapacity.
Detested kite! thou liest. Shakspeare.
3. A fictitious bird made of paper.
A man may have a great estate conveyed to him; but if he will madly burn, or chivalrily make paper Ates of his deeds, he forfeits his title with his evidence. Gen. of the Tongue.

KITTSFOOT. n. f. A plant. Ainsw.
KITTEN. n. f. [kaitiken, Dutch.] It is probable that the true singular is kit, the diminutive of cat, of which the old plural was kitten or young cats, which was in time taken for the singular, like chicken.
 A young cat.

That a man will sooner drown than an horse, is not experienced; nor is the same observed in the drowning of whelps and Utters. Brown.
 It was scratched in playing with a kitten. Wifeman.

Helen was just flpt into bed;
 Her eyes flew on the toilet say,
 Away the kitten with them fled,
 As fees belonging to her prey. Dryd.

To KITTEN. v. n. [from the noun.] To bring forth young cats.

So it would have done
 At the same season, if your mother's cat
 Had kitten'd, though yourself had ne'er been born. Shakspeare.

The eagle timbered upon the top of a high oak,
 and the cat kittened in the hollow trunk of it. L'Estrange.

To KLICK. v. n. [from clack.]

1. To make a small sharp noise.
2. In Scotland it denotes to pilfer, or steal away suddenly with a snatch.

To KNAB. v. a. [knappen, Dutch; knaap, Erse.] To bite. Perhaps properly to bite something brittle, that makes a noise when it is broken; so that knab and knag may be the same.

I had much rather lie knabbing crusts, without fear, in my own hole, than be mistress of the world with cares. L'Estrange.

An ass was wishing, in a hard winter, for a little warm weather, and a mouthful of fresh grass to knab upon. L'Estrange.

To KNABBLE. v. n. [from knab.] To bite idly, or wantonly; to nibble. This word is perhaps found no where else.
 Horses will knabble at walls, and rats gnaw iron. Brown.

KNACK. n. f. [cnapinge, still, Saxon.]
 1. A little machine; a petty contrivance; a toy.

When I was young, I was wont
 To load my tale with knacks: I would have ransack'd
 The pedlar's filken treasury, and have pour'd it
 To her acceptance. Shakspeare.

For thee, fond boy,
 If I may ever know thou dost but sigh
 That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
 I mean thou shalt, we'll bat thee from success. Shakspeare.

This cap was moulded on a porringer,
 A velvet dish; he, he, 'tis lewd and filthy:
 Why 'tis a cockle, or a walnut shell,
 A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap. Shaksp.
 But is 't not presumption to write verse to you,
 Who make the letter poems of the two?
 For all these pretty knacks that you compose,
 Atlas! what are they but poems in prose! Denham.

He expanded both his pockets,
 And found a watch, with rings and lockets;
 A copper-plate, with almanacks
 Englar'd upon't, with other knacks. Hudibras.

2. A readiness; an habitual facility; a lucky dexterity.

'Till teach you the knacks
 Of eating of flax,
 And out of their noses
 Draw ribbands and posies. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.
 The knack of fast and loose passes with foolish people for a turn of wit; but they are not aware all this while of the desperate consequences of an ill habit. L'Estrange.

There is a certain knack in conversation that gives a good grace by the manner and address. L'Estrange.

Knaves, who in full assemblies have the knack Of turning truth to lies, and white to black. Dryden.

My author has a great knack at remarks: in the end he makes another about our refusing in controvery, and coming nearer and nearer to the church of Rome. Atterbury.

The dean was famous in his time,
 And had a kind of knack at rhyme. Swift.

3. A nice trick.
 For how should equal colours do the knack?
 Cameleons who can paint in white and black? Pope.

To KNACK. v. n. [from the noun.] To make a sharp quick noise, as when a stick breaks.

KNACKER. n. f. [from knack.]

1. A maker of small work.
 One part for plow-right, knacker and smith. Mortimer.

2. A ropemaker. [reflio, Latin.] Ainsw.

KNAG. n. f. [knag, a wart, Danish. It is retained in Scotland.] A hard knot in wood.

KNAGGY. adj. [from knag.] Knotty; set with hard rough knots.

KNAP. n. f. [cnap, Welsh, a protuberance, or a broken piece; cnap, Saxon, a protuberance.] A protuberance; a swelling prominence.

You shall see many fine seats set upon a knap of ground, environed with higher hills round about it, whereby the heat of the sun is pent in, and the wind gathered as in troughs. Bacon.

To KNAP. v. a. [knappen, Dutch.]

1. To bite; to break short.
 He knapped the spear in sunder. Gen. Prayer.
 He will knap the spears a-pieces with his teeth. Mare.

2. [knap, Erse.] To strike so as to make a sharp noise like that of breaking.
Knop a pan of tongs some depth in a vessel of water, and you shall hear the sound of the tongs. Bacon's Natural History.

To KNAP. v. n. To make a short sharp noise.

I reduced the shoulders so soon, that the standers-by heard them knop in before they knew they were out. Wifeman.

KNAPBOTTLE. n. f. [papaver spumeum.] A plant.

To KNAPPLE. v. n. [from knap.] To break off with a sharp quick noise.

KNAPSACK. n. f. [from knappen, to eat.] The bag which a soldier carries on his back; a bag of provisions.

The constitutions of this church shall not be repealed, till I see more religious motives than soldiers carry in their knapsacks. King Charles.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try for once who can foot it furthest: there are hedges in summer, and barns in winter: I with my knapsack, and you with your bottle at your back: we'll leave honour to madmen, and riches to knaves, and travel till we come to the ridge of the world. Dryden.

KNAPWEED. n. f. [jacea, Latin.] A plant. Miller.

KNARE. n. f. [knor, German.] A hard knot.

A cake of scurf lies baking on the ground,
 And picky stubs instead of trees are found;
 Or woods with knots and knares deform'd and old,
 Headless the meek, and hideous to behold. Dryden.

KNAVE. n. f. [cnapa, Saxon.]

1. A boy; a male child.
2. A servant. Both these are obsolete.

For as the moon the eye doth please
 With gentle beams not hurting sight,
 Yet hath fir fan the greater praise,
 Because from him doth come her light;
 So if my man must praises have,
 What then must I that keep the knave? Sidney.
 He eats and drinks with his domestick slaves,
 A verier bind than any of his knaves. Dryden.

3. A petty rascal; a scoundrel; a dishonest fellow.

Most men rather brook their being reputed knaves, than for their honesty be accounted fools; knave, in the mean time, passing for a name of credit. South.

When both plaintiff and defendant happen to be crafty knaves, there's equity against both. L'Estrange.

An honest man may take a knave's advice;
 But idiots only may be cozen'd twice. Dryden.
 See all our fools aspiring to be knaves. Pope.

4. A card with a soldier painted on it.

For 'twill return, and turn t' account,
 If we are brought in play upon't,
 Or but by casting knaves get in,
 What pow'r can hinder us to win! Hudibras.

KNAVERY. n. f. [from knave.]

1. Dishonesty; tricks; petty villany.

Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Shakspeare.

If I thought it were not a piece of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would do it; I hold it the more knavery to conceal it. Shakspeare.

The cunning courtier should be sighted too,
 Who with dull knavery makes so much ado;
 'Till the shrewd fool, by thriving too too fast,
 Like Aesop's fox, becomes a prey at last. Dryden.

2. Mischievous tricks or practices. In the following passage it seems a general term for any thing put to an ill use, or perhaps of trifling things of more cost than use.

We'll revel it as bravely as the best,
 With amber bracelets, beads and all this knavery. Shakspeare.

KNAVISH. adj. [from knave.]

1. Dishonest; wicked; fraudulent.

'Tis foolish to conceal it at all, and knavisht to do it from friends. Pope's Letters.

2. Waggish; mischievous.

Here he comes cunst and sad;
 Cupid is a knavisht lad,
 Thus to make poor females mad. Shakspeare.

KNAVISHLY. adv. [from knavisht.]

1. Dishonestly; fraudulently.
2. Waggishly; mischievously.

To KNEAD. v. a. [cnædan, Saxon; kneden, Dutch.] To beat or mingle any stuff or substance. It is seldom applied in popular language but to the act of making bread.

Here's yet in the word hereafter, the kneading, the making of the cakes, and the beating of the oven. Shakspeare.

It is a lump, where all beasts kneaded be,
 Wisdom makes him an ark, where all agree. Dowse.

Thus kneaded up with milk the new-made man
 His kingdom o'er his kindred world began;
 'Till knowledge misapp'ly'd, mis'nderstood,
 And pride of empire, pour'd his bairy blood. Dryden.

One paste of flesh on all degrees bestow'd,
 And kneaded up alike with mis'ning blood. Dryden.

Prometheus, in the kneading up of the heart, seasoned it with some furious particles of the lion. Richardson's Spectator.

K N E

No man ever reapt his corn,
Or from the oven drew his bread,
Ere hinds and bakers yet were born,
That taught them both to sow and knead. Prior.
The cake the kneaded was the savvy meat. Prior.

KNE'ADINGTROUGH. n. f. [knead and trough.] A trough in which the palle of bread is worked together.

Frogs shall come into thy kneadingtrough. Roadus

KNEE. n. f. [eneop, Sax. knee, Dut.]

1. The joint of the leg where the leg is joined to the thigh.

Thy royal father

Was a most faint'd king; the queen that bore thee
Ofstener upon her knees than on her feet,
Died every day the liv'd. Shakspeare
Scotch skink is a kind of strong nourishment made of the knees and sinews of beef long boiled Bacon.

I beg and clasp thy knees. Milton Wearied with length of ways, worn out with toil,

He lay down, and leaning on her knees,
Invok'd the cause of all her miseries;
And cast her languishing regards above,
For help from heav'n, and her ungrateful Jove. Dryden

2. A piece of timber growing crooked, and so cut that the trunk and branch make an angle. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make great politicks of: like to knee timber, that is good for ships that are to be tolled; but not for building houses, that shall stand firm. Bacon.

To KNEE. v. a. [from the noun.] To supplicate by kneeling.

Go you that banish'd him, a mile before his tent, fall down, and knee the way into his mercy Shakspeare's Coriolanus.
Return with her!

Why, the hot blooded France that dow'rlers took Our youngest born: I could as well be brought To knee his throne, and quite-like pension beg Shakspeare.

KNEED. adj. [from knee.]

1. Having knees: as, in-kneed, or out-kneed.
2. Having joints: as, kneed grafts.

KNE'EDEEP. adj. [knee and deep.]

1. Rising to the knees.

2. Sunken to the knees.

The country peatant meditates no harm,
When clad with skins of beasts to keep him
warm;

In winter weather unconcern'd he goes,
Almost kneedeep, through mire in clumsy shoes. Dryden.

KNE'EDGRASS. n. f. [gramen geniculatum.] An herb.

KNE'EHOLM. n. f. [aquifolium] An herb. Ainsworth.

KNE'EPAN. n. f. [knee and pan.] A little round bone about two inches broad, pretty thick, a little convex on both sides, and covered with a smooth cartilage on its fore-side. It is soft in children, but very hard in those of riper years: it is called patella or mola. Over it passes the tendon of the muscles which extend the leg, to which it serves as a pulley. Quincy.

The kneepan must be shewn, with the knitting thereof, by a fine shadow underneath the joint. Peacham on Drawing.

To KNEEL. v. n. [from knee.] To perform the act of genuflexion; to bend the knee.

When thou do'st ask me blessing, I'll kneel down
And ask of thee forgiveness, Shakspeare.

K N I

Ere I was risen from the place that shew'd
My duty kneeling, came a recking post,
Stew'd in his haste, half breathing, panting forth
From Genevil, his mistress, salutation. Shaksp.
A certain man kneeling down to him, said, Lord, have mercy upon my son; for he is lunatick. Matthew.

As soon as you are dress'd, kneel and say the Lord's prayer. Taylor's Guide to Devotion.

KNE'ETRIBUTE. n. f. [knee and tribute.] Genuflexion; worship or obeisance shown by kneeling.

Receive from us

Kneetribute yet unpaid, prostration vile. Milton.

KNEEL. n. f. [enil, Welsh, a funeral pile; enyllan, to ring, Sax.] The found of a bell rung at a funeral.

I would not with them to a fairer death,
And to his knell is knoll'd. Shakspeare.

Sea nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Hark, now I hear them, Shakspeare's Tempest.

When he was brought again to th' bar, to hear
His knell rung out, his judgment, he was flurr'd
With such an agony, his sweat extremely. Shakspeare.

All these motions, which we saw,
Are but as ice, which crackles at a thaw:
Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings. Donne.

Unhappy slave, and pupil to a bell,
Which his hours work, as well as hours do tell;
Unhappy 'till the last, the kind releasing knell. Cowley.

At dawn poor Stella dane'd and sung;
The am'rous youth around her bow'd:
At night her fatal knell was rung;
I saw, and kiss'd her in her shroud. Prior.

KNEW. The preterit of know.

KNIFE. n. f. plur. knives. [enif, Sax. kniff, Danish.] An instrument edged and pointed, wherewith meat is cut, and animals killed.

Come, thick night,

And pass thee in the dunnet smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes. Shakspeare.

Bless powers, forbid thy tender life
Should bleed upon a barbarous knife. Crashaw.
The sacred priests with ready knives bereave
The best of life, and in full bowls receive
The streaming blood. Dryden's Æneid.

Ev'n in his sleep he starts, and fears the knife,
And trembling, in his arms takes his accomplice wife. Dryden.

Pain is not in the knife that cuts us; but we call it cutting in the knife, and pain only in ourselves. H acts.

KNIGHT. n. f. [enihc, Sax. knecht, Germ. a servant, or pupil.]

1. A man advanced to a certain degree of military rank. It was anciently the custom to knight every man of rank or fortune, that he might be qualified to give challenges, to fight in the lists, and to perform feats of arms. In England knighthood confers the title of sir: as, sir Thomas, sir Richard. When the name was not known, it was usual to say sir knight.

That same knight's own sword this is of yore,
Which Merlin made. Spenser.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place. Spenser.

When every case in law is right,
No squire in debt, and no poor knight. Shaksp.

This knight; but yet why should I call him
knight,
To give impiety to this reverent file? Daniel's Civil War.

No squire with knight did better fit
In parts, in manners, and in wit. Milibras.

2. Shakspeare uses it of a female; and it must therefore be understood in its original meaning, pupil or follower.

K N I

Pardon, goddess of the night,
Those that flew thy virgin knight;
For the which, with songs of woe,
Round about her tomb they go. Shakspeare.

3. A champion.

He suddenly unties the poke,
Which out of it sent such a smoke,
As ready was them all to choke,
So grievous was the pother;
So that the knights each other lost,
And stood as still as any post. Drayton.

Did I for this my country bring
To help their knight against their king,
And raise the first sedition? Denham.

KNIGHT errant. [chevalier errant.] A wandering knight; one who went about in quest of adventures.

Like a bold knight errant did proclaim Combat to all, and bore away the dame. Derh. v.
The ancient errant knights
Won all their mistresses in fights;
They cut whole giants into fitters,
To put them into am'rous twitters. Mudrian.

KNIGHT errantry. [from knight errant.] The character or manners of wandering knights.

That which with the vulgar passes for couraging is a brutish sort of knight errantry, seeking out needless encounters. Norris.

KNIGHT of the post. A hireling evidence; a knight dubbed at the whipping post, or pillory.

These are knights of the post, and holy cheats enough, to wear the truth of the broadest contradictions, where pious frauds shall give them an extraordinary call. South.

KNIGHT of the shire. One of the representatives of a county in parliament: he formerly was a military knight, but now any man having an estate in land of six hundred pounds a-year is qualified.

To KNIGHT. v. a. [from the noun.] To create one a knight, which is done by the king, who gives the person kneeling a blow with a sword, and bids him rise up sir.

Favours came thick upon him: the next St.
George's day he was knighted. Wotton.

The lord protector knighted the king; and immediately the king stood up, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight. Hayward.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd Quarles. Pope.

KNIGHTLY. adv. [from knight.] Besitting a knight; beseeeming a knight.

Let us take care of your wound, upon condition that a more knightly combat shall be performed between us. Sidney.

How dares your pride presume against my laws?
As in a lifted field to fight your cause:
Unask'd the royal grant, no marshal by,
As knightly rites require, nor judge to try. Dryden.

KNIGHTHOOD. n. f. [from knight.] The character or dignity of a knight.

The sword which Merlin made,
For that his noursling, when he knighthood swore,
Therewith to doen his foes eternal smart. Fairy Queen.

Speak truly on thy knighthood, and thine oath,
And so defend thee Heaven and thy valour. Shakspeare.

Is this the sir, who some waste wife to win,
A knighthood bought, to go a-wooing in? Ben Jonson.

If you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise,
You'll gain at least a knighthood, or the bays. Pope.

KNIGHTLESS. adj. [from knight.] Unbecoming a knight. Obsolete.

Arise, thou cursed miscreant,
That hast with knightsless guile, and treacherous train,
Fair knight-hood foully flamed. Fairy Queen.

To KNIT. v. a. pret. knit or knitted. [cniſtan, Saxon.]

1. To make or unite by texture without a loom.

Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The birth of each day's life, fore labour's bath,
Balm of hurt minds. Shakspeare's Macbeth.
A thousand Cupids in those curls do sit;
Those curious neis thy slender fingers knit.
Waller.

2. To tie.
Send for the count; go tell him of this;
I'll have this knot knit up to-morrow morning.
Shakspeare.

3. To join; to unite. This was formerly a word of extensive use; it is now less frequent.

His gall did grate for grief and high disdain,
And knitting all his force, got one hand free.
Spenser.

These, mine enemies, are all knit up
In their distractions: they are in my power.
Shakspeare.

O let the vile world end,
And the promised flames of the last day
Knit earth and heav'n together!
Shakspeare.

Lay your highness' Command upon me; to the which my duties
Are with a most indissoluble tie
For ever knit. Shakspeare.

This royal hand and mine are newly knit,
And the conjunction of our inward souls
Married in league. Shakspeare.

By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which kniteth souls, and prospers loves.
Shakspeare.

If ye be come peaceably, mine heart shall be knit unto you.
Chron.

That their hearts might be comforted, being knit together in love.
Colossians.

He doth fundamentally and mathematically demonstrate the firmest knittings of the upper timbers, which make the roof. Watton's Architecture.

Pride and impudence, in faction knit,
Uproar the chair of wit. Ben Jonson's New Inn.
Ye knit my heart to you by asking this question.
Bacon.

These two princes were agreeable to be joined in marriage, and thereby knit both realms into one.
Heyward.

Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
In a light fantastick round. Milton.

God gave several abilities to several persons, that each might help to supply the publick needs, and by joining to fill up all wants, they be knit together by justice, as the parts of the world are by nature. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

Nature cannot knit the bones while the parts are under a ditch-barge. Wise-man's Surgery.

4. To contract.
What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in frowns,
And tuns thy eyes so coldly on thy prince.
Addison's Cato

5. To tie up.
He saw heaven opened, and a certain vessel descending unto him as it had been a great sheet, knit at the four corners, and let down to the earth. Acts

To KNIT. v. n.

1. To weave without a loom.

A young shepherd's knitting and singing:
her voice comforted her hands to work, and her hands kept time to her voice's music. Sidney.

Make the world distinguish Julia's son
From the vile offspring of a troll, that sits
By the town-wall, and for her living knits.
Dryden.

2. To join; to close; to unite. Not used.

Our fever'd navy too
Have knit again; and float, threath'ning most fearfulike. Shakspeare.

KNIT. n. s. [from the verb.] Texture.
Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakspeare.

KNIT'TER. n. s. [from knit.] One who weaves or knits.

The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the three maids that weave their thread with bones,
Do use to chant it. Shakspeare.

KNIT'TINGNEEDLE. n. s. [knit and needle.] A wire which women use in knitting.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, she would prick him with her knittingneedle. Leahy's

KNOB. n. s. [cnap, Saxon; knoop, Dutch.] A protuberance; any part bluntly rising above the rest.

Just before the entrance of the right auricle of the heart is a remarkable knob or bunch, raised up from the subjacent fat. Ray.

KNOBBED. adj. [from knob.] Set with knobs; having protuberances.

The horns of a roe deer of Greenland are pointed at the top, and knobbed or tubercous at the bottom. Grew.

KNOBBINESS. n. s. [from knobby.] The quality of having knobs.

KNOBBY. adj. [from knob.] 1. Full of knobs. 2. Hard; stubborn.

The informers continued in a knobby kind of obstinacy, resolving still to conceal the names of the authors. Howel.

To KNOCK. v. n. [cnuccian, Saxon; cnocce, a blow, Welsh.]

1. To clash; to be driven suddenly together.

Any hard body thrust forwards by another body contiguous, without knocking, giveth no noise. Bacon's Natural History.

They may say, the atoms of the chaos being variously moved according to this catholic law, must needs knock and interfere. Bentley.

2. To beat as at a door for admittance: commonly with at.

Villain, I say knock me at this gate,
And rap me well; or I'll knock your knave's pate! Shakspeare.

Whether to knock against the gates of Rome,
Or rudely visit them in parts remote,
To fight them, ere destroy. Shakspeare.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate,
And could not get him for my heart to do it. Shakspeare.

For harbour at a thousand doors they knock'd,
Not one of all the thousand but was luck'd. Dryden.

Knock at your own breast, and ask your soul,
If those fair fatal eyes edg'd not your sword. Dryden.

3. To KNOCK under. A common expression, which denotes that a man yields or submits. Submission is expressed among good fellows by knocking under the table. Followed commonly by a particle: as, to knock up, to rouse by knocking; to knock down, to fell by a blow.

To KNOCK. v. a.

1. To affect or change in any respect by blows.

How do you mean removing him?
—Why, by making him incapable of Othello's place; knocking out his brains. Shakspeare.

He that has his chains knocked off, and the prison doors set open to him, is perfectly at liberty. Locke.

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock his servants up, and rise by five o'clock; instruct his family in every rule, and send his wife to church, his son to school. Pope.

2. To dash together; to strike; to collide with a sharp roise.

So when the cook saw my jaws thus knock it,
She would have made a pancake of my pocket. Oswelwand.

At him he lanch'd his spear, and pierc'd his breast;

On the hard earth the Lycian knock'd his head,
And lay supine; and forth the spirit fled. Dryden.

'Tis the spot of fierceness,
When heroes knock their knotty heads together,
And fall by one another. Rotoc.

3. To KNOCK down. To fell by a blow.

He began to knock down his fellow-citizens with a great deal of zeal, and to fill all Arabia with bloodshed. Addison.

A man who is gross in a woman's company, ought to be knocked down with a club. Clarissa.

4. To KNOCK on the head. To kill by a blow; to destroy.

He betook himself to his orchard, and walking there was knocked on the head by a tree. South's Sermons.

Success either with an apoplexy, knocks a man on the head; or with a fever, like fire in a strong-water-shop, burns him down to the ground. Grew's Cosmol.

KNOCK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A sudden stroke; a blow.

Some men never conceive how the motion of the earth should wave them from a knock perpendicularly directed from a body in the air above. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Ajar belabours there an harmless ox,
And thinks that Agamemnon feels the knocks. Dryden.

2. A loud stroke at a door for admission.

Guiscard, in his leathern frock,
Stood ready, with his thrice-repeated knock:
Thrice with a doleful sound the jarring grate Rung deaf and hollow. Dryden's Boeauce.

KNOCKER. n. s. [from knock.]

1. He that knocks.

2. The hammer which hangs at the door for strangers to strike.

Shut, shut the door, good John! fatigu'd, I said,
Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead. Pope.

To KNOLL. v. a. [from knell.] To ring the bell, generally for a funeral.

Had I as many fons as I have hairs
I would not wish them to a fairer death,
—And so his knell is knoll'd. Shakspeare.

To KNOLL. v. n. To found as a bell.

If ever you have look'd on better days,
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church. Shakspeare.

1. A complication of a cord or string not easily to be disentangled.

He found that reason's self now reasons found
To fasten knots, which fancy first had bound. Sidney.

As the fair vestal to the fountain came,
Let none be startled at a veil's name,
Tir'd with the walk, she laid her down to rest;
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,

To take the freshness of the morning air,
And gather'd in a knot her flowing hair. Addison.

2. Any figure of which the lines frequently intersect each other.

Garden knots, the frets of houses, and all equal figures, please: whereas unequal figures are but deformities. Bacon.

Our sea-wall'd garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her knots disorder'd. Shakespeare's Rich. II.

It fed flow'rs worthy of paradise, which not nice art

In beds and curious knots, but nature boon,
Pour'd forth profuse on hill and dale and plain. Milton.

Their quarters are contriv'd into elegant knots, adorn'd with the most beautiful flowers. Mora.

Henry in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half-express'd, and half-conceal'd his flame
Upon this tree; and as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,
Venus had heard the virgin's lost address,
That, as the wound, the passion might increase. Prior.

3. Any bond of affection or union.

Conium that amity
With nuptial knot, if thou vouchsafe to grant That virtuous lady Bona. Shaksp. Henry VI.

Richmond aims
At young Elizabeth, my brother's daughter,
And by that knot looks proudly on the crown. Shakespeare.

I would he had continued to his country
As he began, and not unknit himself
The noble knot he made. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Why left you wife and children,
Those precious motives, those strong knots of love? Shakespeare.

Not all that Saul could threaten or persuade,
In this close knot, the smallest looseness made. Corwley.

4. A hard part in a piece of wood caused by the protuberance of a bough, and consequently by a transverse direction of the fibres. A joint in an herb.

Taking the very refuse among those which served to no use, being a crooked piece of wood, and full of knots, he hath carved it diligently,
when he had nothing else to do. Wisdon.

Such knots and crossness of grain is objected here, as w'll hardly suffer that form, which they civ up here as the only just reformation, to go on so smoothly here as it might do in Scotland. King Charles.

5. Difficulty; intricacy.

A man shall be perplexed with knots and problems of business, and contrary affairs, where the determination is dubious, and both parts of the contrariety seem equally weighty; so that, which way he ever the choice determines, a man is sure to venture a great concern. South.

6. Any intrigue, or difficult perplexity of affairs.

When the discovery was made that the king was living, which was the knot of the play untied, the rest is shut up in the compass of some few lines. Dryden's Dufresney.

7. A confederacy; an association; a small band.

Oh you ponderly rascals! there's a knot, a gang, a conspiracy against me. Shakespeare

What is there here in Rome that can delight thee?

Where not a soul, without thine own foul knot,
But fears and hates thee. Ben Jonson.

A knot of good fellows borrowed a sum of money of a gentleman upon the king's highway. L'Estrange.

I am now with a knot of his admirers, who make request that you would give notice of the window where the knight intends to appear. Addison.

8. A cluster; a collection.

The way of fortune is like the milky way in the sky, which is a meeting or knot of a number of small stars, not seen asunder, but giving light together. Bacon's Essays.

In a picture, besides the principal figures which compose it, and are placed in the midst of it, there are lets groups or knots of figures disposed at proper distances, which are parts of the piece, and seem to carry on the same design in a more inferior manner. Dryden

To KNOT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To complicate in knots.

Happy we who from such queens are freed,
That were always telling beads;

But here's a queen when she rides abroad
Is always *knott*ing threads. Selley

2. To entangle; to perplex.

knots.

The knotted oaks shall show 'is of honey weep.
Dryden.

KNOTTINESS. n. f. [from knotty.] Ful-ness of knots; unevenness; intricacy;
difficulty.

Virtue was represented by Hercules naked, with his lion's skin and knotted club: by his oaken club is signified reason ruling the appetite;
the knottiness thereof, the difficulty they have that seek after virtue. Peacham on Drawing.

KNOTTY. adj. [from knot.]

1. Full of knots.

I have seen tempests, when the scolding winds
Have riv'd the knotty oaks. Shakespeare.

The timber in some trees more clear, in some more knotty: try it by speaking at one end, and laying the ear at the other; for if it be knotty, the voice will not pass well. Bacon.

The knotty oaks their luff'ning branches how.
Roscommon

One with a brand yet burning from the flame,
Arm'd with a knotty club another came. Dryd.

Where the vales with violets once were crown'd,
Now knotty burrs and thorns disgrace the ground. Dryden.

2. Hard; rugged.

Valiant souls
Were made by nature for the wife to work with:
They are their tools; and 'tis the sport of statef-men,
