As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome these arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

To ENCROACH. v. a. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, French.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants. Spenser on Ireland.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and a fright;
And every moment rises to the light,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light. Dryden.

To ENCROACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil. Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse; and by indulgence grows. Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide

Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Next, fence'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground. Dryden.

ENCROACHER. n. f. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

The bold encroachers on the deep,
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land;
'Till Neptune, with one general sweep, Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher. Clairissa.

ENCROACHMENT. n. f. [from encroach.]1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Corwell.

But this usurper his encroachment proud Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton's Paradise Lost.

If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. Advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

To ENCUMBER. v. a. [encombrer, Fr.]

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison.

2. Excessiveness; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horrick woods. Thomson.

3. Burden upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family; and to maintain hospitality. Asple.

ENCYCLICAL. adj. [εγκυκλιος.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCYCLOPEDIA. } n. f. [εγκυκλοπαιδεια.]

ENCYCLOPEDIA. } The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopedia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopedia. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopedia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbutnot.

ENCYSTED. adj. [κυστις.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained. Sharp's Surgery.

END. n. f. [end, Saxon.]1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.

Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb. 1 Samuel.

2. Extremity or last part in general.

The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion; of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.

Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges.
At the end of two months she returned. Judges.

If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now towards earth doth bend,
Then we might fear, that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Denne.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.

Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons.
Genes.

Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end.
Derham.

The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end.
Broome of Epic Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.
Better is the end than the beginning thereof.
Eccles.

16. Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n from holy writ,
And seem a saint.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

17. Purpose; intention.
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republick, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation.
Clarendon.

I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?
Dryden.
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends.
Dryden.

Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention.
Addison's Spect.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.

Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased.
Hooker.

All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them.
Hooker.

Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends and first of causes is;
And to do this, the most eternal be.
Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity.

Harvey.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.
If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetick.
Grew.

ENERGY. n. f. [ἐνεργεια.]

1. Power not exerted in action.
They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrors, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies.
Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.
Whether with particles of heav'nly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Or earth, but new divided from the sky,
And plant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy.
Dryden.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy.
Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession.
Smartidge.

What but God!

Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,
And unremitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole.
Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.
Matter, though divided into the subtlest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy.
Ray.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds?
Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authors, see
The comprehensive English energy?
Roscommon.
Swift and ready, and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers.
Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound.
Swiss.

To ENERVATE. v. a. [enervo, Latin.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, relying upon their own protecting forces.
Bacon.

Sheepish softness often enervates those who are bred like fondlings at home.
Locke.

On each enervate string they taught the note,
To pant, or tremble through an eunuch's throat.
Pope.

Footmen exercise themselves, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots.
Arbutnot and Pope.

Diä.

To ENFEEBLE. v. a. [from feeble.] To weaken; to enervate; to deprive of strength.

I've belied a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't
Revengingly enfeebles me.
Shakspeare's Cymbeline.
My people are with sickness much enfeebled.
Shakspeare.

Much hath hell debas'd, and pain
Enfeebled me, to what I was in heav'n!
Milton.

Some employ their time in affairs below the dignity of their persons; and being called by God, or the republick, to bear great burdens, do enfeebled their understandings by sordid and brutish business.
Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mold,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my own weak sex.
Addison's Cato.

To ENFEOFF. v. a. [seoffamentum, low Latin.] To invest with any dignities or possessions. A law term.

If the eldest son enfeoff the second, reserving homage, and that homage paid, and then the second son dies without issue, it will descend to the eldest as heir, and the feignory is extinct. Hale.

To ENFORCE. v. a. [enforcir, French.]

1. To give strength to; to strengthen; to invigorate.

2. To make or gain by force.

The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed fight,
Did fall to ground. Fairy Queen.

Sometimes with lunatic bans, sometimes with pray'rs Enforce their charity. Shakespeare's King Lear.

3. To put in act by violence.

Skar away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings. Shaksp.

4. To instigate; to provoke; to urge on; to animate.

Fear gave her wings, and rage enforc'd my flight
Through woods and plains. Fairy Queen.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shakespeare.

5. To urge with energy.

All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakespeare.

He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court. Clarendon.

To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Stu. ft.

6. To compel; to constrain.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil. Shaksp.
A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he affects Tyrannick pow'r: If he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

To ENFORCE. v. n. To prove; to evince; to show beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessitate.

family enforce that the law of reason; or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hobbes.

ENFORCE. n. f. [from forcer.] Power; strength. Not used.

He now declines thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce. Milton.

ENFORCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou did'st put this fow'r cold haire on,
To enflame thy pride, 'twere well, but thou
Dost it enforcedly: thou'd'st countier be,
Went thou not beggar. Shakespeare's Timon.

ENFORCEMENT. n. f. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakespeare.

He that contendeth against these enforcements, may easily master or resist them. Kaleigh.

2. Sanction; that which gives force to a law.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements
of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.

3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world. Hammond.

4. Pressing exigence.

Mure than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakespeare's Richard III.

ENFORCER. n. f. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it. Hammond.

ENFOULDRED. adj. [from foudre, Fr.] Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what courage and what cries,
With soul enfouldred (smoak and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies. Fairy Queen.

To ENFRANCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some parts of the Irish, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws. Davies.
Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were afterwards incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government. Hale.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether; but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon's Essays.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised
by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
—Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shakespeare.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us. Water.

ENFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politic. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burghs of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowell.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg Enfranchisement immediate on his knees. Shakespeare's Richard II.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement. Shak.

ENFROZEN. particp. [from frozen.]
Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest. Spenser on Love.

To ENGA'GE. v. a. [engager, French.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy
To feed my means. Shakespeare.

2. To impawn; to stake.

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for a party. Hudib.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion:
some lust or interest engaget them against
it. Tillotson.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engaged ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we list'd not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest ac-culation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconsumptible lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby.

5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.

Good-nature engages every body to him. Addison.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To every duty he could minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage. Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage. Dryden's Æneid.

So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;

So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.

We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expence to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement. Addison.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.

For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryd.

earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.

2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.

'Tis not indeed my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden's Persius.

ENGAGEMENT. n. f. [from engage; engagement, French.]

1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.

2. Obligation by contract.
We have, in expence, exceeded our engagements. Atterbury.

3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.

This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.

4. Employment of the attention.
Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession. Rogers.

5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical.

Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.

Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Philips.

6. Obligation; motive.

This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Hammond.

Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryden.

ENGINE. n. f. [engin, French; ingegno, Italian.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.

2. A military machine.
This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairfax.

3. Any instrument.
The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed. Raleigh's Essays.

He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his fingers ends. Pope.

4. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire. Dryden.

5. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.
Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil, with all his engines so violently opposeth. Duppa's Rules for Devotion.

6. An agent for another. In contempt.
They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up 'nto the state they were. Daniel.

ENGINEER. n. f. [ingenieur, French.] One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.

For 'tis the sport to have the engineer
Him thus enrag'd,
Descriing from afar, some engineer,
Dextrous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd,
By one nice shot, to terminate the war. Philips.
An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice. Addison.

ENGINEERY. n. f. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.
They may defend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, engineery, or navigation. Milton on Education.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRASP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.
Now 'gan Pyrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasp'd he,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spenser.

To ENGRAVE. v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, French.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.
Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispead,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead. Fairy Queen.

O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs. Addison.
Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renowned;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found. Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.
Engrave the two stones with the names. Æschylus.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.

It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke

Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.

Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die

In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye

Lives long upon the mind: the faithful fight engraves the knowledge with a beam of light. Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.

The sea had charge of them, now being dead, In seemly sort their corpses to engrave, And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed. Spenser.

ENGRAVER. n. f. [from engrave.] A cutter in stone or other matter.

Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

To ENGRIEVE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.

The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy, Which his sad speech infix'd in my breast, Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly, That my engriev'd mind could find no rest. Fairy Queen.

Aches, and hurts, and cords, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon.

To ENGRASS. v. a. [grossir, French.]

1. To thicken; to make thick.

But more happy he than wife, Of that sea's nature did him not avise; The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were, Engrass'd with mud, which did them foul agrieve, That every weighty thing they did appear. Fairy Queen.

2. To increase in bulk.

Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrass'd to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.

3. To fatten; to plump up.

Not sleeping, to engrass his idle body; But praying, to enrich his watchful soul. Shakspeare.

4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.

If thou engrass'st all the griefs as thine, Thou robb'st me of a moiety. Shakspeare.
Those two great things that so engrass the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.

A dog, a parrot, or an ape Or some worse brute in human shape, Engrass the fancies of the fair. Swift.

5. To purchase the whole of any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.

6. To copy in a large hand.

Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,

Which in a set hand fairly is engrass'd. Shakspeare.
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross, Who pens a stanza when he should engrass. Pope.

ENGRASSER. n. f. [from engrass.] He that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.

A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor handholder. Locke.

ENGRASSMENT. n. f. [from engrass.]

Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.

Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey:

We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees, Are murdered for our pains! This bitter taste Yield his engrossments to the dying father. Shakspeare.

Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.

To ENGUARD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.

A hundred knights I yes, that on ev'ry dream, He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs, And hold our lives at mercy. Shakspeare.

To ENHAUNCE. v. a. [hauffer, enhauffer, French.]

1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete.

Both of them high at once their hands enhance'd, And both at once their huge blows down did sway. Spenser.

2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.

The desire of money is every where the same; its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the servitude. Locke.

3. To raise in esteem.

What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty? L'Esfrange.

The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure. Atterbury.

4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.

To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens were guilty of. Hammond.

The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHANCEMENT. n. f. [from enhance.]

1. Increase; augmentation of value.

Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.

2. Aggravation; increase of ill.

Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enhancement of guilt. Government of the Tongue.

ENIGMA. n. f. [enigma, Lat. ἀνίγμα.]

A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow A meaning; which, if well I understand, From sacrilege will free the god's command. Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMATICAL. adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical. Shakspeare.
Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged prophecies. Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution. Brown's Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

2. To make vigorous or active.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

In a glass-house the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLI'VENER. n. f. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled powers. Dryden.

To ENLU'MINE. v. n. [enluminer, Fr.]

To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not in use.

For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,
On a diffention of a doit break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Between thee and the woman I will put Enmity; and between thine and her feed:
Her feed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton.

How far those controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? James.

You must firmly be convinced, that every su you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it.
Wake's Preparation for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakspeare.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many,
and the high displeasure of more. Atterbury.

To ENMA'RBLE. v. a. [from marble.] To

2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government. Spenser.

That this law will be always sufficient to hinder or restrain enormity, no man can warrant
Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison's Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure.
In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by

framed by chance. Woodward.

ENORMOUSNESS. n. f. [from enormous.]
Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, but what should hinder them from measuring the maker by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENOUGH. adj. [zenoh, Saxon; ganab, Gothick; genoe, Dutch. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb;
except that after the verb To have, or
To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.]
In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why would'st thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hast gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.
When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENOUGH. n. f.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in public employments. Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough.
Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the sylvan strains.
Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or facilities.

Some great defects and main errors in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little indus-

ENOUGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.

2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree; as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies.
Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution: as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.

4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me.—Enough.
Shakspeare.

Henceforth, I'll bear
Affliction 'till it do cry out itself,
Enough, enough, and die. Shakspeare.

ENTRANCE. n. f. [entrans, French.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Shakspeare.

Whete diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too. South.

2. The act of entering.

The reason that I gather, he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.
Shakespeare.

Better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways.
Shakespeare.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances. Shakf.

3. The passage by which a place is entered;
avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the master.
Watson's Architecture.

Many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave, all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at th' entrance than within.
Milton.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,
At th' entrance of my threshold be forgot.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, baulks and cools them: they want their liberty. Locke.

soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Faisfax.

2. To put into an ecstacy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd and had no room for thought;
But all o'erpow'r'd with ecstacy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

To ENTRAP. v. a. [from trap.]

1. To insnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapp'd are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.
Spenser.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrap'd the noble-minded Talbot.
Shakespeare.

I have a wife, whom I protest I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some pow'r to change this curriſh Jew.
Shakespeare.

The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived.
It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers.

3. To treat or use well or ill.

Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil.
Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd;
I call'd her often; for the always serv'd;
Use made her person easy to my fight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.

4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.

My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
—God shield I should disturb devotion. Shaksp.

5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.

The garden of Proserpino this bright,

These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Faisfax.

ENTRE'ATY. n. f. [from entreat.] Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.

If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if the be Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary. Shakespeare's Richard III.

ENTREMETS. n. f. [French.] Small plates set between the main dishes.

Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets.
Mortimer.

EN'TRY. n. f. [from enter; entrée, Fr.]

1. The passage by which any one enters a house.

Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it;
like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon.

A strait long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head.
Dryden.

Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid

A dirty hall or entry should offend
The curious eyes of thy invited friend?
Dryden's Juvenal.

We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Tatler.

2. The act of entrance; ingreſs.

Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emolition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison.

By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood,
by the lacteals, the animal may again revive.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

To ENVE'NOM. v. a. [from venom.]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakespeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt th' envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Theſſalian pines.
Milton.

Nor with envenom'd tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Phillips.

That thus envion'd the might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age. Dryden.

ENVIALE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.
They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune,
do happily possess themselves. Carew.

ENVIER. n. f. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues.
Bacon's Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

ENVIOUS. adj. [from envy.]
1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. St. Ives.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shakespeare.

2. Sometimes with against.
Be not thou envious against evil men. Prov.

3. Sometimes with at.
Neither be thou envious at the wicked. Prov.

4. Commonly with of.
Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be.
Dryden.

ENVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Dupper.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surpris'd me at my book!
And sure as they 're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will they show their spite. Swift.

To ENVIRON. v. a. [environner, French.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.
I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Shakespeare.
The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.
Knolles' History.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers,
as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.
Within the envirioning rocks stood the city.
Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the hordeing desert wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelop.
May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, 'till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shakespeare.

Since the must go, and I must mourn, come night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege; to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environ'd me, and howled in mine ears. Shakspeare.
In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer.
Shakspeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise envions me.
Milton.

4. To enclose; to invest.
The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horror all environ. Cleveland.

ENVIRONS. n. f. [environs, Fr.] The neighbourhood, or neighbouring places round about the country.

To ENUMERATE. v. a. [numero, Lat.]
To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty. Wake's Preparation for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERATION. n. f. [enumeratio, Lat.]
The act of numbering or counting over;
number told out.

Whoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Spratt.

hated against the Romans. Arbutnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

3. A messenger.
The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

To ENVY. v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

of his ways. Provebi.
A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty.
Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.
I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakspeare.
You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withold maliciously.

Johnson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To ENVY. v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity with at.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shakspeare.

He that loves God is not displeas'd at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts
he bestows. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors? Taylor.

ENVY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwomb'd mine. Shakspeare.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.
Or as the Africk niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass,
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May 't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before? Dante.

EO'LIPILE. n. f. [from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe: which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an colipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet.

ΕΡΑΪΤ. n. f. [ἑραστῆς.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 minutes 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an intire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact; and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten; Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then.

Harris.
As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, 'till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holser on Time.

ΕΡΑΪΛΜΕΝΤ. n. f. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a sidewalk made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires; Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd, and bold, That this our court, infected with their manners, Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shakspere.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Government of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism. Calamy's Sermons.

Το ΕΡΡΗΚΥΡΙΖΕ. v. a. [from Epicurus.] To devour like an epicure. A word not used.

Wang I could see thee full of eager pain My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΚΛΕ. n. f. [ἑπικυκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre. Harris.

In regard of the epicyclic, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere With centric and eccentric, scribbled o'er; Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΚΛΟΙΔ. n. f. [ἑπικυκλοειδης.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΜΙΚΑΛ. } adj. [ἑπικυμικος.]

1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemic disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of seasons. Bacon's Henry VII.

As the proportion of epidemic diseases shews the aptness of the air to fadden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place. Grant.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemic and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busted in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemic among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all; Scotland's a nation epidemic. Cleveland.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΡΜΙΣ. n. f. [ἑπικυρμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΡΑΜ. n. f. [epigramma, Latin.] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witerackers cannot flout me out of my humour: dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakspere.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands? Peacham of Poetry.

I writ An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΡΑΜΜΑΤΙΚΑΛ. } adj. [epigrammaticus.]

ΕΡΡΗΚΥΡΑΜΜΑΤΙΚ. } adj. [epigrammaticus.] Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous fore-speaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatic wit, and gross hyperboles; he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glazes not; and is stately, without ambition.

Addison.

He has none of those little points and peculiarities that are so often to be met with in Ovid, none of the epigrammatic turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso.

Addison.

EPIGRAMMATIST. n. f. [from epigram.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector.

Pope.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest street twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish.

Peachment.

EPIGRAPH. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription on a statue.

Diſt.

EPILEPSY. n. f. [ἐπιληψία.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence that the mind cannot restrain them.

Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:

This is the second fit.

Shakspeare's Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cachochymia; the phrenitis from choleric spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes.

Floyer on the Humours.

EPILEPTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!

Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?

Shakspeare.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant.

Arbutnot on Diet.

EPILOGUE. n. f. [epilogus, Latin.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good buthes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.

Shakspeare.

Are you mad, you dog?

I am to rise and speak the epilogue.

Dryden.

EPIVYCTIS. n. f. [ἐπιυκτις.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epivyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain.

Wiseman's Surgery.

EPIPHANY. n. f. [ἐπιφάνεια.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was.

Diſt.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. f. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance, and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the isles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound.

Swift.

EPIPHORA. n. f. [ἐπιφορά.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes.

Harris.

EPHYLLOSPERMOUS. adj. [from ἐπι, φύλλοι, and σπέρμοι.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves.

Harris.

EPIPHYSIS. n. f. [ἐπιφύσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation.

Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite.

Wiseman.

EPIPROCK. n. f. [ἐπιπροκλή.] A figure of rhetoric, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another: as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPISCOPACY. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.]

The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episcopacy preserved.

Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever.

Ayliffe.

EPISCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Latin.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline fought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction.

Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men.

Rogers.

EPISCOPATE. n. f. [episcopatus, Latin.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

EPISODE. n. f. [ἐπίσῳδον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject.

Addison.

EPISODICAL. } adj. [from episode.] CON- EPISODICK. } tained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle.

Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes.

Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPASTICK. n. f. [ἐπισπάστικον.]

1. Drawing.

2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

This matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering.

Arbutnot.

EPISTLE. n. f. [ἐπιστολή.] A letter.

This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes, She half consents, who silently denies.

Dryden.

EPISTOLARY. adj. [from epistle.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads.

Addison.

EPISTLER. n. f. [from epistle.] A scribbler of letters.

EPIGRAPH. n. f. [ἐπιγραφή.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live fill, and write mine epitaph.

Some thy lov'd dust in Roman stones enshrine,

Others immortal epitaphs design:

With wit and strength, that only yields to time.

Smith.

EPITHALAMIUM. n. f. [ἐπιθάλμιον.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned maid.

Sandys.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and his church, or to the lamb and his spouse.

Burton.

EPITHEM. n. f. [ἐπιθεμα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Epithems, or cordial applications, are justly applied unto the left breast.

Brown.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals.

Wiseman's Surgery.

EPITHEM. n. f. [ἐπιθετον.]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the wordart grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

I assium with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous, to the author.

Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment.

Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me? —

Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will.

Shakspeare.

EPITOME. n. f. [ἐπιτομή.] Abridgment; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours, Which by th' interpretation of full time, May shew like all yourself.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for publick monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency.

Watson.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads.

Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places.

Watts.

TO EPITOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove

Into the glasses of your eyes; So made such mirrors and such spies,

That they did all to you epitomise.

Dennis.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomized, and the whole species in miniature.

Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomized many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue.

Addison's Spectator.

EPITOMISER. } n. f. [from epitomise.] An

EPITOMIST. } abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

EPOCH. } n. f. [ἐποχή.] The time at EPOCH. } which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochs, or terms of time.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falshood, as well as debauchery.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease, No action leave to busy chronicles: Such whose supine felicity but makes In story chafms, in epochs mistakes.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world from the flood, from the first olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it.

Time, by necessity compell'd, shall go Through scenes of war, and epochs of woe.

ΕΡΟΨΕ. n. f. [ἑρῶδης.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

ΕΡΟΠΕ. n. f. [ἑροποις.] An epic or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopees, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own.

ΕΡΥΛΑΨΙΟΝ. n. f. [epulatio, Latin.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese.

ΕΡΥΛΟΨΙΚΟΝ. n. f. [ἑρυλωψικόν.] A cicatrizing medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common farcoticks, and the ulcerations about it, were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks.

EQUABILITY. n. f. [from equable.] Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiatics lazy.

EQUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as the clyfian fields.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony.

EQUABLY. adj. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common eentry, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances.

EQUAL. adj. [æqualis, Latin.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them.

May join us; equal joy, as equal love.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English.

3. Even; uniform. He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears, At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears; An equal temper in his mind he found, When fortune datter'd him, and when the frown'd.

Think not of me; perhaps may equal mind May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me.

4. In just proportion. It is not permitted me to make my commendation equal to your merit.

5. Impartial; neutral. Each to his proper fortune stand or fall; Equal and unconcern'd I look on all: Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me, And both shall draw the lots their fates decree.

6. Indifferent. They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties. He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions.

8. Being upon the same terms. They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves.

EQUAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferior or superior to another. He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her; she is no equal for his birth.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superior; and those who were once his superiors, because they look upon him as their equal.

To my dear equal in my native land, My plighted vow I gave: I his received: Each swore with truth with pleasure each believ'd: The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd.

2. One of the same age. I profited in the Jews religion above many of my equals in mine own nation.

To EQUAL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

2. To rise to the same state with another person. I know no body so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself.

3. To be equal to. One whole all not equals Edward's moiety.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion. She fought Sicheus through the shady grove, Who answer'd all her cares, and equal'd all her love.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent, Which he will equal, and perhaps augment.

To EQUALISE. v. a. [from equal.]

1. To make even. To equalise accounts we will allow three hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used. That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame, That if together ye fed all one flame, It could not equalise the hundredth part Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart.

EQUALITY. n. f. [from equal] 1. Likeness with regard to any quantitie compared.

2. The same degree of dignity. One shall rise, Of proud ambition; who, not content With fair equality, fraternal state, Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd, Over his brethren.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability. Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover.

EQUALLY. adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike. To reconcile mens vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly. If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does.

3. Impartially. We shall use them, As we shall find their merits and our safety May equally determine.

EQUALNESS. n. f. [from equal.] Equality. Let me lament That our stars unreconcilable should have divided Our equalness to this.

EQUANGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANIMITY. n. f. [æquanimitas, Lat.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed.

EQUANIMOUS. adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

EQUATION. n. f. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or subtraction, as the case shall require.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time.

EQUATION. [In algebra.] An expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as, $3x = 36.d.$

EQUATION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Diſt.

EQUATOR. n. f. [aequator, Latin.] The equator on the earth or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles: neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered. Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a burling stream auriferous plays. Thomson.

EQUATORIAL. adj. [from aequator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidal figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their celestial planes. Cheyne.

EQUERRY. n. f. [ecurie, Dutch.] Master of the horse.

EQUESTRIAN. adj. [aequstris, Latin.]

1. Being on horseback.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains. Speſtator.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.

3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

EQUICRURAL. } adj. [aequus and crus,
EQUICRURE. } Latin.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.

2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrural triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.

We successively draw lines from angle to angle until seven equicrural triangles be described.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EQUIDISTANT. adj. [aequus and distans, Latin.] Being at the same distance.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

EQUIDISTANTLY. adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

EQUIFORMITY. n. f. [aequus and forma, Latin.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion. Brown.

EQUILATERAL. adj. [aequus and latus, Latin.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling utility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

To EQUILIBRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle's Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRATION. n. f. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILIBRIUM. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.

2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrio

If deities descend or no;

Then let th' affirmative prevail,

As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUINECESSARY. adj. [aequus and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINOCTIAL. n. f. [aequus and nox, Latin.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe: the same with equator.

EQUINOCTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice th' equinoctial line

He circled; four times cross'd the ear of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colar. Milton.

Some say the sun

Was bid turn reins from th' equinoctial road,
Like distant breadth. Milton's Paradise Lost

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they cover shades and Thracia's gales, Pining with equinoctial heat. Phillips.

EQUINOCTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inelatanely, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

EQUINOX. n. f. [aequus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23d of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb, was about the vernal equinox. Ray.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;

And since the vernal equinox, the sun

In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;

'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other. Shakespeare.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINUMERANT. adj. [aequus and numerus, Latin.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass. Arbuthnot on Coins.

To EQUIP. v. a. [equipper, French.]

1. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

2. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode. Addison's Spectator.

EQUIPAGE. n. f. [equipage, French.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd,
From th' armory of God; where itand of old,
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day, harness'd at hand, Celestial equipage! Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Attendance; retinue.

Soon as thy dreadful trump begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he so found. Fairy Queen.

I will not lend thee a penny.—
I will retort the sum in equipage. Shakespeare.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

EQUIPAGED. adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train
Of squires and ladies, equipaged well,
And entertained them: right fairly, as befell. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

EQUIPENDENCY. n. f. [aequus and pendeo, Latin.] The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

The will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand. South.

EQUIPMENT. n. f. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accoutring.

and instruction.

Fam'd by thy tutor, and thy parts of nature;
Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition. Shaksp.
The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young. Wotton.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal; for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived. Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, fill their sermons with philosphical terms. Swift.

ERUGINOUS. adj. [eruginosus, Latin.]
Partaking of the substance or nature of copper.

Coppers is a rough and acrimoneous kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Browne.

Agus depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, or upon an adu't sibil or eruginous sulphur. Harvey.

ERUPTION. n. f. [eruptio, Latin.]
1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

Fiuding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that aun, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet's Theory.

2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon's Natural History.

Upon a signal given the eruption began; fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison.

3. Sudden excursion of a hostile kind.
Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold Celestial spirits in bondage. Milton.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption hold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd. Milton.

4. Violent exclamation.
To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet
near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions. Walton's Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise. South.

5. Efflorescence; pustules.
Dilated nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions. Shakspere's Henry iv.
An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines. Government of the Tongue.
Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions
on the skin. Arbuthnot.

ERUPTIVE. adj. [eruptus, Lat.] Burstlar motion of a horse.

He with a graceful pride,
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound Piecing, and seeming still to quit his ground. Dryden.

To ESCAPE. v. a. [echaper, French.]
1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son? Wake.

2. To pass unobserved by one.
Men are blinded with ignorance and error:
many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived. Hooker.
'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escape him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryd.
To ESCAPE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger; to avoid punishment or harm.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on horse.
Chronicles

They escaped all safe to land.
Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Genesis.

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from he,
but the sinner shall be taken by her. Eccles.
He might put on a hat, a muller, and a kerchief, and to escape. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seem'd inevitable. Addison.

2. Excursion; sally.
We made an escape, not so much to seek our own,

As to be instruments of your safety. Denham.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowell.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.
St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Raleigh.

Thousand escapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies. Shakspere.
Loose escapes of love. Milton.

6. Oversight; mistake.
In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation. Brewster.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. f. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails, that are esteem'd excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

ESCHALOT. n. f. [French.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the winter kills them. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ESCHAR. n. f. [εσχαρα.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp.

ESCHAROTICK. adj. [from eschar.] Caus-tick; having the power to scar or burn the flesh.

ESCHA'ROTICK. n. f. A caustick application.

An eschar was made by the cathartick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks. Wifeman's Surgery.
Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster. Floyer.

ESCHE'AT. n. f. [from the French escheoir.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superiour lord, dies seized without heir general or especial. Cowell.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered. Darvies on Ireland.

To ESCHÉ'AT. v. a. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise eschated to her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited eschated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion. Clarendon.

ESCHÉ'ATOR. n. f. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in the county whereof he is escheator, and certifies them into the exchequer. Cowell.

ESCO'UT. n. f. [escouter, French.] Lifteners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good escout abroad, and sure watch within. Hayward.

ESCRITTOIR. n. f. [French.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scrítore.

ESCU'AGE. n. f. [from escu, French, a shield.]

Esvage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Esvage uncertain is likewise twofold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l.* per annum. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that conventus equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this esvage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Esvage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowell.

ES'CULENT. adj. [esculentus, Latin.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great whisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

ES'CULENT. n. f. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon's Nat. History.

ESCU'THEON. n. f. [A French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather and buck or buck of buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.] The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the escutcheon. Bacon.

We will pass over the escutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESPA'LIER. n. f. Trees planted and cut so as to join.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espalliers. Evelyn's Calendar.

ESPA'RCET. n. f. [medica, or trifolium, Latin.] A kind of sainfoin. Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL. adj. [specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear His fortunes up. Daniel's Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especialy should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especialy against Caius Marcus? Shakspeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especialy the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especialy as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet.

ESPER'ANCE. n. f. [French.] Hope. Not used.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear. Shaksfp.
Yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' aspect of eyes and ears. Shakspeare.

ESPI'AL. n. f. [French, from espier.] A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not used.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times as they shall have intelligence, or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops. Shakspeare.

Spials have inform'd me,
The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Went through a secret grate. Shakspeare.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bacon.

ESPLANADE. n. f. [French.] Infortification, the same with the glacis of the counterescarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

ESPO'USAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon.

ESPO'USALS. n. f. without a singular. [sponsalia, Latin; espous, French.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, French.] 1. To contract or betroth to another: with to.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me. 2 Samucl.

2. Or with.
He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman. Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed.
Lavinia will I make my emperess,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse. Shaksfp.
With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,
Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryd.

If her fire approves,
Let him espouse her to the peer the loves. Pope.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.
In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne, for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke. Bacon.

5. To maintain; to defend.
Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espous'd the several parties in a visible corporal decent. Dryden.

Stand by the way and spy; ask him that fleeth what is done? Jeremiah

ESQUIRE. n. f. [esquier, French.] See SQUIRE.

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

2. A title of dignity, next in degree below a knight.

Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelor, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgon, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of SS, of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superior office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for post-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount

What, are our English dead?
—Sir Richard Kettle, Davy Gam esquire. Shakespeare's Henry v.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise. Smith

2. A loose fally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon

Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay. Poem to Roscommon

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakespeare

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeas'd us. Locke

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work. Dryden

ESSENCE. n. f. [essentia, Latin.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also. Watts
One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
Another faith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence. Morley's Divine Dialogues
He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.
The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular christian man. Hooker

3. Existence; the quality of being.
In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence. Sidney

4. Being; existent person.
As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton's Paradise Lost

5. Species of existent being.
Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends; as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon

6. Constituent substance.
For spirits when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not ty'd or manac'd with joint or limb. Milton

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shakespeare

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.
Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To fave the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale. Pope

To ESSENCE. v. a. [from essence.] To perfume; to scent.
The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenc'd fops and tawdry courtiers. Aldison

ESSENTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Ecc. n.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Spratt

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never superene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immortal and divine power. Bentley

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns. Swift

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgment's more essential to a general
Than courage. Denham's Sophy

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtly elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Abuthnot

ESSENTIAL. n. f.

1. Existence; being.
His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce To nothing this essential. Milton's Paradise Lost

Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pou'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise. Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes up this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Corwley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach! Milton.
Eternity, thou pleasing, dreadful thought!

Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison.

To ETERNIZE. v. a. [eterno, Latin.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.
I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality: that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well befits all knights of noble name,
That cover in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that fame to haunt. Fairy Q.

I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,
Seek not the praise of men. Milton.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own.

Temple.

Dryden's Dives into Pleasure.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove hath eterniz'd the glory of his love. Creech.

ETHER. n. f. [ether, Latin; αιθηρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtle than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force by which those particles may recede from one another.

Newton.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union.

Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow, Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below.

Dryden.

ETHEREAL. adj. [from ether.]

Even to Cato's wish; not fierce and terrible
Only in strokes. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Dang'rous rock,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shakspeare.

It is not much that the good man ventures;
after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery.

Tillotson.

He might even as well have employed his time,
as some princes have done, in catching moles.
Atterbury.

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.

All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to leave even when I wrote them. Dryden.

3. Likewise; not only so, but also.

The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others. Helder.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,

And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace.
Pope.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel. Genesis.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required, courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon's Holy War.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing; those to be fought and frequented that excel in some quality or other. Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel;

Of love sung better, and of arms as well. Dryd.

Let those teach others, who themselves excel;
And censure freely, who have written well. Pope.

EXCELLENCE. } n. f. [excellence, French;
EXCELLENCY. } excellētia, Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.
Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so distinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like the souls of beast, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedication.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.
I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in music. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.
The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addison.

5. Purity; goodness.
She loves him with that excellence,
That angels love good men with. Shakspeare.

6. A title of honour. It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadors, and governours.
They humbly shew unto your excellency,
To have a goodly peace concluded of. Shakspeare.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine. Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.
Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lathes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly, so as to render it ridiculous. Dryden.

To EXCEPT. v. a. [excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.
But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him. Corinthians.

Adam, behold
Th' effects, which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd
Th' excepted tree. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To EXCEPT. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against. Locke.

EXCEPT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonick idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.
Richard except, those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow. Shakspeare.

God and his son except,
Nought valued he nor fear'd. Milton.

2. Unless; if it be not so that.
It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it, except we know it. Villoison.

EXCEPTING. preposit. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without control and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [from except; exceptio, Latin.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.
When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax-free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleas, in exception to all general rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools. Pope.

3. Thing excepted, or specified in exception.
Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted; unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford and sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enlav'd, and realms un-done,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause. Pope.

4. Objection; cavil; with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducive to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Let he should take exceptions to my love. Shak.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,
Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart. Shakspeare.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Shakespeare.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave Sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too bare for them that were king's children. Bacon.

EXCEPTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleasantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Adelphon.

EXCEPTIOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so suspicious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very foes of society. South.

EXCEPTIVE. adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms; as none but physicians came to the consultation: the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts.

EXCEPTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. Not in use.

Forgive my general and exceptless rashness, Perpetual to be gods! I do proclaim One honest man. Shakespeare's Timon.

EXCEPTOR. n. f. [from except.] Objector; one that makes exceptions.

The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions. Burmet.

TO EXCERN. v. a. [excerno, Latin.] To strain out; to separate or emit by strainers; to send out by excretion.

That which is dead, or corrupted or excerned, hath antipathy with the same thing when it is alive and sound, and with those parts which do excern. Bacon's Natural History.

Exercise first sendeth nourishment into the parts; and secondly, helpeth to excern by sweat, and to maketh the parts assimilate. Bacon.

An unguent or pap prepared, with an open vessel to excern it into. Ray on the Creation.

EXCEPTION. n. f. [exceptio, Latin.]

But they would pluck away its natural cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs. Shakespeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed, by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A sabrick huge
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet. Milton.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burnet.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHALE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

You light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shaksp.

I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat. Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity?
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells!
Shakespeare.

EXHA'LEMENT. n. f. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales. Brown.

To EXHAUST. v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon.

Spermatick matter of a virtuous fort-abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and deprives the flower of it to the seminal vessels. Wise-man's Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw until nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures; they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nursing grove
Seems fair awhile, cheerish'd with softer earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

EXHAUSTION. n. f. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

EXHAUSTLESS. adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everdaring stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackm.

To EXHIBIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street. Shakspeare.

He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHIBITER. n. f. [from exhibit.] He that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing th' exhibitors against us. Shakf.

EXHIBITION. n. f. [from exhibit.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanic works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations? Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me. Shakf.
All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and he received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition. Shakf.

EXHIBITIVE. adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitivè or representativè, according to various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

TO EXHILARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Latin.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon's Natural Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits, had play'd, and inmost pow'rs Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton's Par. Lost.

Let them thank
Good nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts Exhilarates their languid minds with
The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

EXHILARATION. n. f. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gayety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon.

TO EXHORT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.]

To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us, how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. Theff.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Dehquing or exhorting glorious war. Milton.

EXHORTATION. n. f. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, 'till we are secure that no form shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Asterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll lend my exhortation after dinner. Shakf.

EXHORTATORY. adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

EXHORTER. n. f. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

TO EXICCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Dict.

EXICCATION. n. f. [from exsiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXICCATIVE. adj. [from exsiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

EXIGENCE. } n. f. [This word is probably only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and funn, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterb.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves. Pope.

EXIGENT. n. f. [exigens, Latin.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Preface.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for any extremity. Hanner.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose waiting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakf.

EXIGUITY. n. f. [exiguitas, Lat.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXIGUOUS. adj. [exiguus, Latin.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used.

Their subtle parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours time. Hartley.

EXILE. n. f. [exilium, Latin.] It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would newray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakspeare.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death. Shakspeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, slaying, pent to hunger,
But with a grain of day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shakspeare.

2. The person banished.

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rowling years return? Dryd.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost. Pope.

EXILE. adj. [exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Baern.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon's Natural History.

TO EXILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shakf.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land. Shakf.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.

They, fettered with the bonds of a long night,
lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisdom.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fill'd. Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who fort'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expel'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXILEMENT. n. f. [from exile.] Banishment.

Fitzoborn was discarded into foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton.

EXILITION. n. f. [exilitio, Latin.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exilition; and powder which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXILITY. n. f. [exilis, Latin.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies called ephemera, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as leteeth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtility are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXIMIOUS. adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Dict.

EXINATION. n. f. [exinatio, Latin.] Privation; loss.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his examination. Decay of Power.

TO EXIST. v. n. [existo, Latin.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature.

One year is past, a different scene! No farther mention of the dean: Who now, alas, no more is mit Than it he never did exist.

EXISTENCE. } n. f. [existentia, low Lat.]
EXISTENCY. } State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existence of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states or manner of existence, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it.

The soul, flourish'd in her existence, foules At the dawn dagger, and denies its point.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also.

EXISTENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatever sign the sun possid, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent.

Bright as th' ethereal glaws the green *expans*e. Savage.

On the smooth *expans*e of crystal lakes, The sinking stone at first a circle makes; The trembling surface, by the motion stir'd, Spreads in a second circle, then a third; Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance, Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBILITY. n. f. [from expandible.]

Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expandibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPANSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.]

Capable to be extended; capable to spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expandible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPANSION. n. f. [from expand.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grev.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world; it extends its thoughts even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes incursions into that incomprehensible infinite. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight, Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore.

EXPANSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastic or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Robinson on the Creation.

EXPEDENCY. } n. f. [from expedient.]

1. Fitness; propriety; suitability to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.

 2. It is used in Shakspeare for expedition; adventure; or attempt.
 Let me hear
 What yesternight our council did decree,
 In forwarding this dear expedience. Shakspeare.
 3. It is also used by Shakspeare for expedition; haste; dispatch.

I shall break
 The cause of our expedience to the queen,
 And get her leave to part. Shakspeare.
 Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
 Are making hither with all due expedience. Shakspeare's Rich. 11.

EXPEDIENT. adj. [expediti, Latin.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.
 All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.
 When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson.

2. In Shakspeare, quick; expeditious.
 The adverse winds
 Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
 To land his legions all as soon as I:
 His marches are expedient to this town. Shakspeare.

EXPEDIENT. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end.
 God does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.
 Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;
 Mars had the day, and Venus had the night. Dryden.

 The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your fight. Jes.
 I may know the let why gentle peace
 Should not expel these inconveniences. Shakspeare.
 Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other parts of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

The virgin huntress was not slow
 T' expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryden.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
 And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not pour fellowship expel,
 Myself would offer you t' accompany,
 In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy. Hub. Ta.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.
 Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
 And threw her sun expelling mask away,
 The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
 And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shakspeare.
 Oh that that earth which kept the world in awe
 Would patch a wall, expel the winter's flaw! Shakspeare

EXPELLER. n. f. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

TO EXPEND. v. a. [expendo, Latin.] To lay out; to spend.

If my death might make this island happy,
 I would expend it with all willingness. Shakspeare.
 The king of England wasted the French king's country, and thereby caused him to expend such sums of money as exceeded the debt. Huyward.
 The publick burthens, though they may be a good reason for our not expending so much in charity, yet will not justify us in giving nothing. Atterbury.

EXPENSE. n. f. [expensum, Lat.] Cost; charges; money expended.

Hence comes that wild and vast expense,
 That hath enforc'd Rome's virtue thence,
 Which simple poverty first made. Ben Jonson.

A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
 Much cost, more care, and most magnificence. Dryden.

Such provision made, that a country should not want so many springs as were convenient, and afford a supply every where suitable to the the necessities and expenses of each climate. Woodward.

I can see no reason by which we are obliged to make those prodigious expenses. Swift.

EXPENSEFUL. adj. [expense and full.] Costly; chargeable; expensive.

No part of structure is either more expensive than windows, or more ruinous. Watson.

 Their highways, for their extent, solidity, or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire. Arb.

EXPERIENCE. n. f. [experientia, Lat.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.
 Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Raleigh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
 Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
 'Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
 That not to know at large of things remote
 From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
 That which before us lies in daily life,
 Is the prime wisdom; what is more, is fume
 Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
 And renders us in things that most concern
 Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek. Milton.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.
 Boys immature in knowledge,
 Pawn their experience to their present pleasure. Shakspeare.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
 Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

TO EXPERIENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to practise.
 2. To know by practice.
 He through the armed files
 Darts his experient' leve. Milton.

EXPERIENCED. participial adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species; or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wife by long practice.

To him experient'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend! what sorrows do'st thou bring to mind! Pope.

EXPERIENCER. n. f. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experienter did affirm, that the likenesses of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another, in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, 'till he be dazzled by it; even after he shall have turned his eyes from it. Digby on Bodies.

EXPERIMENT. n. f. [experimentum, Lat.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wife, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hosker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know,
How little weight with thee my words can find. Milton.

'Till his fall man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or, at least, it reitid in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South's Sermons.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment. Watts on the Mind.

To EXPERIMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

Francisco Redi experimented that no putrified flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

2. To know by experience.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

EXPERIMENTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

1. Pertaining to experiment.

2. Built upon experiment; formed by observation.

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal do warrant,
The tenor of my book. Shakespeare.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton.

These are so far from being subservient to athletes in their audacious attempts, that they rather afford an experimental confirmation of the universal deluge. Bentley's Sermons.

EXPERIMENTALLY. adv. [from experimental.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations. Evelyn.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers' Sermons.

EXPERIMENTER. n. f. [from experiment.]

One who makes experiment.

Galileus and Morfennus, two exact experimenters, do think they find this verity by their experiences; but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby on Bodies.

EXPERT. adj. [expertus, Latin.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers. Shakespeare.
Again fair Alma fits herself,
Oh Florimel's expert breast;
When she the rising sigh constrains,
And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in th' Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brats the nail, and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' expels the parts, but not dispose the whole. Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare.

Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in.

Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of Heaven to guard thy hoary state. Pope's Odyssey.

EXPERTLY. adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner.

EXPERTNESS. n. f. [from expert.] Skill; Readiness; dexterity.

What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war. Shakespeare.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knelles' History.

EXPIABLE. adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated, or atoned.

To EXPIATE. v. a. [expio, Latin.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon's Phys. Remains.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement. Ray.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose, under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unprofitableness by a more careful managery for the future. Government of the Tongue.

EXPIATION. n. f. [from expiate.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove, Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement, as christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved. Addison's Spectator.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

EXPIATORY. adj. [from expiate.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice. Hosker.

EXPIATION. n. f. [expilatio, Latin.]

Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir.

EXPIRATION. n. f. [from expire.]

1. That act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon's Natural History.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuosity, in transiency and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon's Natural History.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If 'till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me. Shakespeare's King Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPIRE. v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire. Fairy Queen.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air. Harvey.

This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire. Dryden.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and *expire*d forth along with the air, goes off in insensible parcels. Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete.

When as time flying with wings swift,
*Expire*d had the term that these two javels
Should tender up a reck'ning of their travels. Hubberd's Tale.

To EXPIRE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stop'd, it suddenly dies. Walton.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fail; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
As there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good mens lives

Expire before the flowers in their eaps, Dying ere they sicken. Shakspeare.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the ponderous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryd.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakspeare.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Lat.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Lyly's Purgon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explained the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLA'NABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown.

EXPLA'INER. n. f. [from explain.] Expounder; interpreter; commentator.

EXPLANA'TION. n. f. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.

2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLA'NATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLETIVE. n. f. [expletivum, Latin.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Of the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future tenses may explode and and does. Pope.

EXPLICABLE. adj. [from explicare.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabric of human nature. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To EXPLICATE. v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood. Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

They do not understand that part of christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satyr is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICATIO. n. f. [from explicare.]

1. The act of opening, unfolding, or expanding.

2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions. Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon; many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

E'XPPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicare.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts' Logick.

EXPLICATOR. n. f. [from explicare.] Expounder; interpreter; explainer.

EXPLICIT. adj. [explicitus, Lat.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of confuting by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence. Burnet.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite. South's Sermons.

EXPLICITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querculous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposal; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Government of the Tongue.

To EXPLODE. v. a. [explodo, Latin.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence,
Unseen amid' the throng. Milton.

This was th' applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding his, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths. Milt.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscom.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload. Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER. n. f. [from explode.] A hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

EXPLO'IT. n. f. [expletum, Latin, res expleta.] A design accomplished; an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'it thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death?

Shakspeare's Richard III.
Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.
How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton's Paradise Lost.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insalting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats. Denham.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and fully all your wars!
Addison's Cato.

To EXPLO'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden.

To EXPLO'RATE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explore their way. Brown.

EXPLORA'TION. n. f. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration seals should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verities. Brown's Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles to many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORATOR. n. f. [from explorate.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

EXPLORATORY. adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

To EXPLO'RE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that fight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores. Milt.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire. Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore. Dryden's Aeneid.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mexican star. Pope.

EXPLO'REMENT. n. f. [from exploro.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one. Brown.

EXPLO'SION. n. f. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever. Woodward's Natural History.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an aëolipile: the sulphur also being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion. Newton.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice. Thomson.

EXPLO'SIVE. adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power, renders the shock greater. Woolston.

EXPONENT. n. f. [from expono, Lat.]

Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent: thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents: and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and subtraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers. Harris.

EXPONENTIAL. adj. [from exponent.]

Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendental, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

TO EXPORT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.]

To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy. Bacon.

Edward III. by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandise, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand. Addison.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes. Arbutnot.

EXPORT. n. f. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

EXPORTATION. n. f. [from export.] The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

EXPORTER. n. f. [from export.] He that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

TO EXPOSE. v. a. [expono, expositum, Latin; exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, Pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And show Heaven just. Shakespeare's King Lear.
Who here

Will envy whom the highest place exposes
For most to stand against the Thunderer's aim? Milton.

To pass the ripper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryd.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;
Then fields the blades of buy'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom exposes.
Dryden's Virgil.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden.

Tully has justly expos'd a precept, that a man should live with his friend, in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison's Spectator.

A fool might once himself alone expose,
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once expos'd and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleas'd to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops began to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as for my pleasure,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault. Addison.

EXPOSITION. n. f. [from exposo.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbutnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining. Arbutnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation. [from expono, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shakespeare.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most sound. Shakespeare.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPOSITOR. n. f. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mouth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his ties. Shaksp.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consistent unto the authority of expositors.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgment or affliction. South's Sermons.

Scholastic, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

TO EXPOSTULATE. v. n. [exposulo, Latin.] To canvass with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue. Shakespeare.

The emperor's ambassador did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperor. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power. L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with providence, I then might ask. Corson.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand. Swift.

EXPOSTULATION. n. f. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulation: end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face? Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerably in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXPOSTULATOR. n. f. [from expostulate.]

One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPOSTULATORY. adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between bounty and ingratitude. L'Estrange.

EXPOSURE. n. f. [from exposo.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet. Shakespeare.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts it th' way before thee. Shakespeare.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Therites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever sounded in with danger. Shak.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots, two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

TO EXPOUND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to show the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech, concerning our Lord's ascension, may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
—And this way you have well expounded it. Shakespeare.

He expounded unto them in all the scriptures the things concerning himself. Luke.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces, but ordered the countries which they then had. Rohault.

2. To examine; to lay open; a latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch with rings and lockets. Ulibrae.

EXPOUNDER. n. f. [from expono.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was

And faithfullest expounder of the laws. Tristram.

TO EXPRESS. v. a. [expresso, Latin.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.
So kids and whelps their fires and dams express,
And for the great I measur'd by the less. Dryden.
Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm. Dryden.
 2. To represent by any of the imitative arts; as poetry, sculpture, painting.
Each skillful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith's Phœdra and Hippolitus.
 3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.
Let's than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton.
Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them. Locke.
In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down:
we have nothing but words to express them by.
Locke.
True wit is nature to advantage dress'd,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd.
Pope.
Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.
To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteem'd a prophanation. Broome.
 4. To show or make known in any manner.
No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately leis. Prior.

out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.
 8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art: a latinism.
Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgment waits thee. Ben Jonson.
Art did express
A quintessence even from nothingness
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.
- EXPRESS. ad. [from the verb.]
1. Copied; resembling; exactly alike.
Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.
 2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.
There hath been some doubt whether containing in scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.
There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation;
but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.
All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heav'n's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes.
Ben Jonson.
 3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.
I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgment and affection, in things of the greatest moment. Mare's Divine Dialogues.

- As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never to express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.
- Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.
4. On purpose; for a particular end.
They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.
- EXPRESS. n. f. [from the adjective.]
1. A messenger sent on purpose.
The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations.

Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expressure to. Shaksf.
 2. The form; the likeness represented.
I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead,
and complexion, he shall find himself personated.
Shakspeare.
 3. The mark; the impression.
And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
Th' expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see.
Shakspeare.
- TO EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro,
Lat.] To charge upon with reproach;
to impute only with blame; to upbraid.
To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.
- EXPROBATION. n. f. [from exprobrare.]
Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.
The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.
The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth
after he was dead. Abbot.
It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without com-miseration, is the height of misery. South.
No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mould
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.
- TO EXPROPRIATE. v. a. [ex and pro-prius, Latin.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not in use.

EXTEMPORANEOUS. adj. [extemporaneus, Latin.] Unpremeditated; sudden.

EXTEMPORARY. adj. [extemporarius, Lat.] Uttered or performed without premeditation; sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of showing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives.

EXTEMPORÉ. adv. [extempore, Lat.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how foolish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity?

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?

O, like a boy, pursue the carrion-crow
With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,
A fruitless toil, and live't extempore?

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat.

EXTEMPORINESS. n. f. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unpremeditated.

To EXTEMPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer.

To EXTEND. v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out in any direction.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old sire, his helpless hand extend.

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, and extends his hands.

2. To amplify: opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain?

You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo the whole dispute is ended.

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign Hermione's extend the regal line.

7. To increase in force or duration.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:
Feed and regard him not.

The eyes of Tobit carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extendeth farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous?

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him

10. To seize by course of law.

The law, that settles all you do,
And marries where you did but woo;
And if it judge upon your side,
Will soon extend her for your bride;
And put her person, goods or lands,
Or which you like best, int' your hands.

To EXTEND. v. n. To reach to any distance.

My goodness extendeth not to thee.

The bigness of such a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend.

EXTENDER. n. f. [from extend.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extended.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently.

EXTENDIBLE. adj. [from extend.]

1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible.

2. That may be seized by law.

EXTENDLESSNESS. n. f. [from extend.]

Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found; but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain molendinae feminales must keep the world from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals.

EXTENSIBILITY. n. f. [from extensibilis.]

The quality of being extensible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility, who can say?

EXTENSIBLE. adj. [extensio, Latin.]

1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The malleous being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward.

2. Capable of being extended to a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry.

EXTENSIBLENESS. n. f. [from extensibilis.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTENSION. n. f. [from extensio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending.

2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach.

All is satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the ante-Pluvian earth.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, moveable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of un-solid, inseparable, and immoveable parts.

EXTENSIONAL. adj. [from extension.]

Long drawn out; having great extent.

You see into these extensional phantasms which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wriggings up and down of pismires.

EXTENSIVE. adj. [extensivus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer.

EXTENSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.]

Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgement concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aight.

EXTENSIVENESS. n. f. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatibility or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger.

EXTENSOR. n. f. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck.

EXTENT. participle from extend. Extended. Not used.

Both his hands most filthy seculent,
Above the water were an high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves inefficiently.

EXTENT. n. f. [extentus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons.

2. Bulk; size; compass.

The serpent, subtlest beast of all the field,
Of huge extent sometimes.

- Ariana, of Darius' race,
That rul'd th' extent of Asia. Clover.
3. Communication; distribution.
An emperor of Rome,
Troubled, confronted thus, and for th' extent,
Of equal justice us'd with such contempt. Shaksf.
4. Execution; seizure.
Let my officers
Make an extent upon his house and land,
And turn him going. Shaksf. As you Like it.

TO EXTENUATE. v. a. [extenuo, Latin.]

1. To lessen; to make small or slender in bulk.
His body behind his head becomes broad,
from whence it is again extenuated all the way to the tail. Grew's Museum.
2. To lessen; to diminish in any quality.
To persist
In doing wrong, extenuates not wrong,
But makes it much more heavy. Shakspeare.
But fortune there extenuates the crime;
What's vice in me, is only mirth in him. Dryd.

3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.
Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton's Parad. Lost.
4. To lessen in representation; to palliate: opposite to aggravate.
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am; nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shakspeare.
Upon his examination he denied little of that where-with he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation. Bacon.

5. To make lean.
Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton.
6. To make rare: opposed to dense.

The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.
2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.
When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can alledge in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.

3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body.
A third sort of morasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.

EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.
2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.
When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can alledge in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.
3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body.
A third sort of morasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.

EXTENUATION. n. f. [from extenuate.]

1. The act of representing things less ill than they are; contrary to aggravation; palliation.
2. Mitigation; alleviation of punishment.
When sin is to be judged, the kindest enquiry is what deeds of charity we can alledge in extenuation of our punishment. Atterbury.
3. A loss of plumpness, or a general decay of the muscular flesh of the whole body.
A third sort of morasmus is an extenuation of the body, caused through an immoderate heat and dryness of the parts. Harvey.

TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To root out; to tear up; to drive away; to abolish; to destroy.

Unlucky vices, on which the exterminating lot happened to fall. Decay of Piety.
Alexander left Grecian colonies in the Indies; but they were exterminated by Sandrocottus. Airbuthnot on Coins.
This discovery alone is sufficient, if the vices of men did not captivate their reason, to explode and exterminate rank atheism out of the world. Bentley's Sermons.

EXTERMINATION. n. f. [from exterminate.] Destruction; excision.
The question is, how far an holy war is to be pursued, whether to displanting and extermination of people? Bacon.

EXTERMINATOR. n. f. [exterminator, Lat.] The person or instrument by which any thing is destroyed.

TO EXTERMINE. v. a. [extermino, Lat.] To exterminate; to destroy. Not used.
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love, your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermind. As you Like it.

EXTERN. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. External; outward; visible.
When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shakspeare's Othello.
2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsic; not depending on itself.
When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.

EXTERNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without: opposite to internal.
We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.
Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces. Woodward.
2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.
Adam was then no less glorious in his externals: he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul. South.
He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stillington.

EXTERNALLY. adv. [from external.]

- Outwardly.
The exterior ministry, externally and alone, hath in it nothing excellent, as being destitute of the sanctity that God requires, and it is common to wicked men and good. Taylor.

TO EXTERMINATE. v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To drop or distil from.

EXTILLATION. n. f. [from ex and stillo, Latin.] The act of falling in drops.
They seemed made by an exudation or extillation of putrifying juices out of the rocky earth. Derham's Phys. Theology.

TO EXTIMULATE. v. a. [extimulo, Lat.] To prick; to incite by stimulation.

Choler is one excretion whereby nature excludeth another, which, descending into the bowels, extimulates and excites them unto expulsion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EXTIMULATION. n. f. [from extimulatio, Lat.] Pungency; power of exciting motion or sensation.

The native spirits admit great diversity; as, hot, cold, active, dull, &c. whence proceed most of the virtues of bodies; but the air intermixed is without virtues, and maketh things insipid, and without any extimulation. Bacon.

EXTINCT. adj. [extinctus, Latin.]

1. Extinguished; quenched; put out.
They are extinct, quenched as tow. Israh.
Their purple vengeance bath'd in gore retues,
Her weapons blunted, and extinct her fires. Pope.
2. At a stop; without progressive succession.
My days are extinct. Job.
The royal family is all extinct,
And the who reigns bestows her crown on me. Dryden.

The nobility are never likely to be extinct, because the greatest part of their titles descend to heirs general. Swift.

3. Abolished; out of force.
A censure inflicted a jure continues, though such law be extinct, or the lawgiver removed from his office. Ayliffe.

EXTINCTION. n. f. [extinctio, Latin.]

1. The act of quenching or extinguishing.
Red-hot needles or wires, extinguished in quicksilver, do yet acquire a verticity according to the laws of position and extinction. Brown.
2. The state of being quenched.
The parts are consumed through extinction of their native heat, and dissipation of their radical moisture. Harvey.

3. Destruction; excision.
The extinction of nations, and the desolation of kingdoms, were but the effects of this elective evil. Rogers' Sermons.

4. Suppression.
They lie in dead oblivion, losing half
The fleeting moments of too short a life,
Total extinction of th' enlighten'd soul. Thomson.

TO EXTINGUISH. v. a. [extinguo, Latin.]

1. To put out; to quench.
The soft god of pleasure that warm'd our desires,
Has broken his bow, and extinguish'd his fires. Dryden.
Then rose the seed of chaos and of night,
To blot out order, and extinguish light. Pope.
2. To suppress; to destroy.
They extinguish the love of the people to the young king, by remembering some imperfections of his father. Hayward.
My fame of chastity, by which the skies
I reacht before, by thee extinguish'd dies. Denham.

3. To cloud; to obscure.
Bethink thee on her virtues that surmount,
Her natural grace that extinguish art. Shakspeare.

EXTINGUISHABLE. adj. [from extinguish.] That may be quenched, suppressed, or destroyed.

EXTINGUISHER. n. f. [from extinguish.] A hollow cone put upon a candle to quench it.
If it should ever offer to flame out again, I would use the conicum as an extinguisher to smother it. More's Divine Dialogues.
Of it a broad extinguisher he makes,
And hoods the flames. Dryden.
'Tis better to cover the vital flame with an extinguisher of honour, than let it consume till it burns blue, and lies agonizing within the socket. Collier on the Value of Life.

EXTINGUISHMENT. n. f. [from extinguish.]

4 R

1. Extinction; suppression; act of quenching; destruction.

When death's form appears, she seareth not
An utter quenching, or extinguishment;
She would be glad to meet with such a lot,
That so she might all future ill prevent.

Davies

He moved him to a war upon Flanders, for
The better extinguishment of the civil wars of France.

Bacon

The immediate cause of death is the resolution or extinguishment of the spirits.

Bacon

2. Abolition; nullification.

Divine laws of christian church polity may not be altered by extinguishment.

Hooker

3. Termination of a family or succession.

His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour.

Davies on Ireland

To EXTIRP. v. a. [extirpo, Latin.] To eradicate; to root out. Not used.

Which to extirp he laid him privily
Down in a dankome lowly place far in. Fairy Q.
Nor shall that nation boast it to us,
But be extirped from our provinces.

Shaksp.

To EXTIRPATE. v. a. [extirpo, Lat.]
To root out; to eradicate; to excise;
to destroy.

The rebels were grown so strong, that they made account speedily to extirpate the British nation in that kingdom.

Dryden

We in vain endeavour to drive the wolf from our own to another's door; the breed ought to be extirpated out of the island.

Locke

It is not the business of virtue to extirpate the afflictions, but to regulate them.

Addison

EXTIRPATION. n. f. [from extirpate.]
The act of rooting out; eradication;
excision; destruction.

It is said that popery, for want of utter extirpation, hath in some places taken root and fourished again.

Hooker

Religion requires the extirpation of all those passions and vices which render men unsociable and troublesome to one another.

Tillotson

EXTIRPATOR. n. f. [from extirpate.]
One who roots out; a destroyer.

EXTIRPACIOUS. adj. [extirpaticum, Lat.]
Augural; relating to the inspection of entrails in order to prognostication.

Thus hath he deluded many nations unto his augural and extirpacious inventions, from casual and uncontrived contingencies, divining events succeeding

Brown's Vulgar Errors

To EXTOL. v. a. [extollo, Latin.] To praise; to magnify; to laud; to celebrate.

Extol him that rideth upon the heavens.

Psalms

When a rich man speaketh, every man holdeth his tongue; and look, what he saith they extol it to the clouds.

Ecclesiasticus

Heaven and earth shall high extol
Thy praises with th' innumerable sound Of hymns, and sacred songs, wherewith thy thoue

Encompass'd shall resound thee ever blest'd.

Milton

Let Araby extol her happy coast,
Her cinnamon and sweet amomum loaf.

Dryd.

EXTOLLER. n. f. [from extol.] A praiser;
a magnifier; one that praises to the skies.

To EXTORT. v. a. [extorqueo, extor-tus, Latin.]

1. To draw by force; to force away; to wrest; to wring from one.

'Till the injurious Romans did extort
This tribute from us, we were free. Shakspere
That glory never shall his wrath or might Extort from me, to how and sue for grace
With suppliant knee, and deify his pow'r.

Milton's Paradise Lost

I remember well the impious oath,
Hardly extorted from my trembling youth.

Rowe

My earnest desires, not any doubts of your goodness, but my real concern for your welfare, extort this from me.

Wake

2. To gain by violence or oppression.
His tail was stretch'd out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught,
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The ever-burning lamps from thence it brought.

Spenser

Are my chests fill'd up with extorted gold?

Shakspere's Henry vi.

To EXTORT. v. n. To practise oppression and violence. Difused.

To whom they never gave any penny of entertainment, but let them feed upon the countries, and extort upon all men where they come.

S. enser on Ireland

Before they did extort and oppress the people only by colour of a lewd custom, they did afterwards use the same extortions by warrant.

Davies on Ireland

EXTORTER. n. f. [from extort.] One who practises oppression or extortion.

Etric the extorter was deprived by king Canute of the government of Mercia.

Camden

EXTORTION. n. f. [from extort.]

1. The act or practice of gaining by violence and rapacity.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion.

Shakspere's Henry viii.

Oppression and extortion did maintain the greatness, and oppression and extortion did extinguish the greatness of that house.

Davies

2. Force by which any thing is unjustly taken away.

Because the lords had power to impose this charge, the freeholders were glad to give a great part of their lands to hold the rest free from that extortion.

Davies on Ireland

A succeeding king's just recovery of rights from unjust usurpations and extortions, shall never be prejudiced by any act of mine.

King Charles

EXTORTIONER. n. f. [from extortion.]
One who practises extortion; one who grows rich by violence and rapacity.

There will be always murderers, adulterers, extortioners, church-robbers, traitors, and other rabblement.

Camden

The covetous extortioner is involved in the same sentence.

Decay of Piety

To EXTRACT. v. a. [extraho, extractum, Latin.]

1. To draw out of something.

The drawing one metal or mineral out of another, we call extracting.

Bacon

Out of the ashes of all plants they extract
a salt which they use in medicines.

Bacon

The metallick or mineral matter is so diffused amongst the crasser matter, that it would never be possible to separate and extract it.

Woodward

To see how this case is represented, I have extracted out of that pamphlet a few notorious fallhoods.

Swift

EXTRACT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chemists call the extract of the vegetables.

Boyle

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality.

Government of the Tongue

2. The chief heads drawn from a book;
an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors.

Camden's Remains

Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, stinky things.

Bacon's Essays

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak.

Swift

3. Extraction; descent. Not used.

The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness.

South

EXTRACTION. n. f. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chymical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility.

Bacon

The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments, are unknown to the ancients.

Hakewill

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irretrievably lost.

Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whose extraction's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood.

cial*.] In a manner different from the ordinary course of legal procedure.

The confirmation of an election, though done by a previous citation of all persons concerned, may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon.

Ayliffe

EXTRAMISSION. n. f. [extra and mitto, Latin.] The act of emitting outward: opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that light is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object unto the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMUNDANE. adj. [extra and mundus, Latin.] Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philology that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanville

EXTRANEOUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsic.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specific gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Effluvia.

EXTRAORDINARILY. adv. [from extraordinary.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they fought it at his hands. Hooker.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally; for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Howel.

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as serviceable. Wilkins' Mach. Magick.

EXTRAORDINARINESS. n. f. [from extraordinary.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I chuse some few either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXTRAORDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Latin.] This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaine and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Different from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sitney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillington

EXTRAORDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary, etc. Aldison.

EXTRAPAROCIAL. adj. [extra and parochia, Latin.] Not comprehended within any parish.

EXTRAPROVINCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

An extraprovincial citation is not valid, ultra duas diotas, above two days journey; nor is a citation valid that contains many conditions manifestly inconvenient. Ayliffe's Parergon.

EXTRAREGULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

EXTRAVAGANCE. } n. f. [extravagans, EXTRAVAGANCY. } Latin.]

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully; profusely.

EXTRAVAGANTNESS. n. f. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

To EXTRAVAGATE. v. n. [extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits. Did.

EXTRAVASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleurectical people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat. Abban.

EXTRAVASATION. n. f. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced, out of the proper containing vessels.

Ailment, too viscous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbutnot.

EXTRAVENATE. adj. [extra and vena, Lat.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravenate blood by the sympathetic medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted. Glanville's Sceptis.

EXTRAVERSION. n. f. [extra and verso, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRAVAGHT. part. [This is an obsolete participle from extraht; as disbraught from disbraht.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art
extravaght,

To let thy tongue detect thy basehorn heart?
Shakespeare's Henry VI.

EXTREME. adj. [extremus, Lat.] This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning. D. ut.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and covetous people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool
 Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook, Augmenting it with tears. Shakspeare.
 Mitens's cape and Bauli last he view'd,
 That on the sea's extremest borders flood. Allif.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.
 Farewel, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
 Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
 I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
 To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryd.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.
 Cases of necessity being sometime but urgent, sometime extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urg'd equivalent to the easiest kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Rigorous; strict.
 If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O
 Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms.

EXTREME. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.
 Thither by harpy footed furies hal'd,
 At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
 Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
 Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
 From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
 Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine Immoveable, infix'd, and frozen round
 Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire. Milton.
 Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such
 Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.
 They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be raised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.
 The true protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.
 The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agrees with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

EXTREMELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.
 She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppress'd with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.
 Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely compofuted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTREMITY. n. f. [extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.
 He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, will undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseas'd too. Hooker.
 Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propiety gave any authority. Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.
 In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing feathers, which are black. Brown.
 The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden's Dufresnoy.
 The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper. Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.
 He's a man of that strange composition
 Made up of all the worst extremities
 Of youth and age. Denham's Sophy.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.
 They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Ethiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods. Arbuthnot.

5. Violence of passion.
 With equal measure she did moderate
 The strong extremities of their outrage. Spenser.
 If I shew no colour for my extremity, let me be your table-sport. Shakspeare.

6. The utmost violence, rigour, or diltrefs.
 Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity? Spenser.
 Their hearts she gueffeth,
 And yields her to extremity of time. Fairy Qu.
 He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity. Clarendon.
 It should be never so exposed to the extremity
 of war as to fall into those barbarous hands. Clarendon.
 I wish peace, and any terms prefer,
 Before the last extremities of war. Dryden.

7. The most aggravated state.
 The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgment that is fallen upon dramatic writing. Dryden.

TO EXTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Lat.]
 To difembarras; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.
 We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.
 These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Allison.

EXTRICATION. n. f. [from extricate.]
 The act of disentangling; disentanglement.
 Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRINSICAL. adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.]
 External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsic. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrin-secal.
 A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsic agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.
Digby on Bodies.
 Neither is the atom by any extrinsic impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray.
 Outward objects, that are extrinsic to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsic, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

EXTRINSICALLY. adv. [from extrinsiccal.]
 From without.
 If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an error, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glauz.

EXTRINSICK. adj. [extrinsecus, Latin.]
 Outward; external.
 When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsic
 adherents. Gov. of the Tongue.
Extrinsic modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself;
 but it is a manner of being which some substances attain by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated. Watts' Logic.

TO EXTRUCT. v. a. [extruo, extruendum, Latin.] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

With lessons how t' observe and eye her. Hudib.

Eye nature's walks, shoot folly as it flies,
And catch the manners living as they rise. Pope.

Have a box when cunuchs sing,
And foremost in the circle eye a king. Pope.

To EYE. v. n. To appear; to show; to bear an appearance. Not used.

Forgive me,
Since my becoming kill me when they do not Eye well to you. Shakespeare.

EYEBALL. n. f. [eye and ball.] The apple of the eye; the pupil.

Be subject to no fight but mine: invisible
To every eyeball else. Shakespeare.

I feel my hair grow stiff, my eyeballs roll;
This is the only form could shake my soul. Dry.

Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from found philosophy aside,
Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl. Pope.

EYEBRIGHT. n. f. [euphrasia, Latin.] A plant, called by Milton euphrasy.

EYEBROW. n. f. [eye and brow.] The hairy arch over the eye.

The lover,
Sighing like a furnace, with a smol ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Shakespeare.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows. Lev.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon the eyes; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or duit. Ray.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glad'd betwixt a yellow and a red;
He look'd a lion with a gloomy flare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair. Dryden.

EYED. adj. [from eye.] Having eyes: used in composition.

Some reliques of the true antiquity,
Though disfigured, a well-eyed man
May happily discover. Spenser.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shakespeare.

EYEDROP. n. f. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quits but blood,
Would, by beholding him, have wash'd his wife
With gentle eyedrops. Shakespeare.

EYEGLANCE. n. f. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyeglance at him shot. Fairy Queen.

EYEGLASS. n. f. [eye and glass.] Spectacles; glafs to assist the sight.

Ha' you not seen Camillo?
But that's past doubt you have; or your eye's
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn. Shakespeare.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glafs. Newton.

EYELASH. n. f. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EYELESS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eyes; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakespeare.

Promise was, that I Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him

Peatheus durst deride
The cheated people, and the eyeless guide. Aldrif.

Meonides,
Poor eyeless pilgrim. Philips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,
Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyeless face. Pope.

EYELET. n. f. [aillet, French, a little eye.] A hole through which light may enter; any small perforation for a lace to go through.

Sitting the back and fingers of a glove, I made eyelet holes to draw it close. Wife-man.

EYELID. n. f. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when she smiles with amiable cheer,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!
When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to fit. Spenser.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death. Job.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I show'd thee
once;

The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly dote
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shakf.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the fight;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night. Dryden.

EYESERVANT. n. f. [eye and servant.] A servant that works only while watched.

EYESERVICE. n. f. [eye and service.] Service performed only under inspection.

Servants obey in all things your masters; not with eyeservice as men-pleasers, but in singleness of heart. Col.

EYESHOT. n. f. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator.

EYESIGHT. n. f. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompens'd me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam.

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shakespeare.

Though fight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Joppata, where these events happened. Wilkins' Math. Magick.

He blinds the wife, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind. Dryden.

EYESORE. n. f. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Harb the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concern'd matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Eye, dost this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival. Shakespeare.

As soon as the two lords came thither they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman. 1 Esdr.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body. Dryden.

EYESPOTTED. adj. [eye and spot.] Marked with spots like eyes.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EYESTRING. n. f. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but
To look upon him. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red and the eyestrings ruddy. Mortimer.

EYETOOTH. n. f. [eye and tooth.] The tooth in the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments. Ray on the Creation.

EYEWINK. n. f. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart;
and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her. Shakespeare.

EYEWITNESS. n. f. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter.

To meet him all his faints, who silent stood
Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
 With jubilee advanc'd. Milton's Par. Lost.
 The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison on the Christian Religion.

EYRE. n. f. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.]
 The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only, which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose.

Cowell.

EY'RY. n. f. [from ey an egg.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

But I was born so high,
 Our eyrie buildeth in the cedars top,
 And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.
Shakspeare's Richard III.

The eagle, and the stoik,
 On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build. Milton.
 Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
 Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

F.

F A B

F, A consonant generally reckoned by authors, and admitted by Scaliger, among the semi-vowels, and according to that opinion distinguished in the enumeration of the alphabet by a name beginning with a vowel, which yet has so far the nature of a mute, that it is easily pronounced before a liquid in the same syllable. It has in English an invariable sound, formed by compression of the whole lips and a forcible breath. Its kindred letter is V, which, in the Islandick alphabet, is only distinguished from it by a point in the body of the letter.

FABA'CEUS. adj. [fabaceus, Lat.] Having the nature of a bean. Diç.

FABLE. n. f. [fable, French; fabula,
 Latin.]

1. A feigned story intended to enforce some moral precept.

Jotham's fable of the trees is the oldest extant, and as beautiful as any made since. Addison.

2. A fiction in general.

Triptolemus, so sung the nine,
 Strew'd plenty from his cart divine;
 But, spite of all those fable-makers,
 He never sow'd on Almainu acres. Dryden.

Palladius coming to die somewhere in the north part of Britain, may seem to give some kind of countenance to those fables that make him to have lived many years among the Scots. Lloyd.

3. A vitious or foolish fiction.

But refuse profane and old wives fables.

Timothy.

4. The series or contexture of events which constitute a poem epick or dramatiquek.

The moral is the first business of the poet:
 this being formed, he contrives such a design or fable as may be most suitable to the moral.

Dryden's Dovesney.

The first thing to be considered in an epick poem is the fable, which is perfect or imperfect, according as the action, which it relates, is more or less so. Addison's Spectator.

5. A lie; a vitious falsehood. This sense is merely familiar.

It would look like a fable to report that this gentleman gives away a great fortune by secret methods. Addison.

To FABLE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To feign; to write not truth but fiction.

That Saturn's sons receiv'd the three-fold reign
 Of heav'n, of ocean, and deep hell beneath,
 Old poets mention fabling. Prior.

Vain now the tales which fabling poets tell,
 That wav'ring conquest still desires to rove!

In Marlbro's camp the goddess knows to dwell.

Prior.

2. To tell falsehoods; to lie: a familiar use.

He fables not: I hear the enemy. Shaksp.

To FABLE. v. a. To feign; to tell falsely.

We mean to win,

Or turn this heaven itself into the hell

Thou fabliest. Milton's Par. Lost.

Ladies of th' Hesperides, they seem'd

Fairer than feign'd of old, or fabl'd since

Of fairy damsels met in forest wide,

By knights. Milton's Paradise Lost.

FA'BLED. adj. [from fable.] Celebrated in fables.

Hail, fabled grotto! hail, Elysian soil!

Thou fairest spot of fair Britannia's isle! Tickel.

FA'BLER. n. f. [from fable.] A dealer in fiction; a writer of feigned stories.

To FABRICATE. v. a. [fabricor, Lat.]

1. To build; to construct.

2. To forge; to devise falsely. This sense is retained among the Scottish lawyers; for when they suspect a paper to be forged, they say it is fabricated.

FABRIC'ATION. n. f. [from fabricate.]
 The act of building; construction.

This fabrication of the human body is the immediate work of a vital principle, that formeth
 the first rudiments of the human nature.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

FA'BRICK. n. f. [fabrica, Latin.]

1. A building; an edifice.

There must be an exquisite care to place the columns, set in several stories, most precisely one over another, that so the solid may answer to the solid, and the vacuities to the vacuities, as well for beauty as strength of the fabrick. Wotton.

2. Any system or compages of matter; any body formed by the conjunction of dissimilar parts.

F A B

F A C

Still will ye think it strange,
 That all the parts of this great fabrick change;
 Quit their old station and primeval frame. Prior.

To FA'BRICK. v. a. [from the noun.]
 To build; to form; to construct.

Shew what laws of life

The cheefe inhabitants observe, and how Fabrick their mansions. Philips.

FA'BULIST. n. f. [fabuliste, French.] A writer of fables.

Quitting Aëtop and the fabulists, he copies Boccace. Croval.

Our bard's a fabulist, and deals in fiction.

Garrick.

FABULO'SITY. n. f. [fabulositas, Latin.]
 Fulness of feigned stories; fabulous invention.

In their fabulosity they report, that they had observations for twenty thousand yeas. Abber.

FA'BULOUS. adj. [fabulosus, Latin.]
 Feigned; full of fables, or invented tales.

A person terrified with the imagination of spectres, is more reasonable than one who thinks the appearance of spirits fabulous and groundless.
Addison's Spectator.

FA'BULOUSLY. adv. [from fabulous.] In fiction; in a fabulous manner.

There are many things fabulously delivered, and are not to be accepted as truths. Brewen.

FACE. n. f. [face, French, from facies,
 Latin.]

1. The visage.

The children of Israel saw the face of Moses,
 that the skin of Moses's face shone. Exod.
 A man shall see faces, which, if you examine them part by part, you shall never find good; but take them together, are not uncomely. Bacon.

From beauty still to beauty tanging,
 In every face I found a dart. Addison's Spect.

2. Countenance; cast of the features;
 look; air of the face.

Kick'd out, we set the best face on't we could.

Dryden's Virg.

Seiz'd and ty'd down to judge, how wretched I!
 Who can't be silent, and who will not lye:

To laugh, were want of goodness and of grace;
 And to be grave, exceeds all power of face. Epè.

3. The surface of any thing.

A mist watered the whole face of the ground.

Seneca.

4. The front or forepart of any thing.
The breadth of the face of the house, towards the East, was an hundred cubits. Ezekiel.
5. Visible state of affairs.
He look'd, and saw the face of things quite chang'd,
The brazen throat of war had ceas'd to roar;
All now was turn'd to jollity and game,
To luxury and riot, feast and dance. Milton.
This would produce a new face of things in Europe. Addison.
6. Appearance; resemblance; look.
Keep still your former face, and mix again
With these lost spirits; run all their mazes with 'em;
For such are treasons. Ben Jonson.
At the first shock, with blood and powder flam'd,
Nor heav'n, nor sea, their former face retain'd;
Fury and art produce effects so strange,
They trouble nature, and her visage change. Waller.
His dialogue has so much the face of probability, that some have mistaken it for a real conference. Baker.
7. Presence; sight; state of confrontation.
Ye shall give her unto Eleazar, and one shall stay her before his face. Numbers.
Love cannot fear; then tell me to my face,
That I of all the gods am least in grace. Dryden.
8. Confidence; boldness; freedom from bashfulness or confusion.
They're thinking, by his face,
To fallen in our thoughts that they have courage;
But 'tis not so. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
How many things are there which a man cannot with any face or comeliness, say or do himself? A man can scarce allege his own merits with modesty, much less extol them: a man cannot sometimes brook to supplicate or beg. Bacon.
You'll find the thing will not be done
With ignorance and face alone. Hudibras.
You, says the judge to the wolf, have the face to challenge that which you never lost; and you, says he to the fox, have the confidence to deny that which you have stolen. L'Esrange.
This is the man that has the face to charge others with false citations. Tillotson.
9. Distortion of the face.
Shame itself!
Why do you make such faces? Shakespeare.
- FACE to FACE. [An adverbial expression.]
1. When both parties are present.
It is not the manner of the Romans to deliver any man to die, before that he which is accused have his accusers face to face. AEs.
2. Nakedly; without the interposition of other bodies.
Now we see through a glass darkly; but then face to face. 1 Cor.
- To FACE. v. n. [from the noun.]
1. To carry a false appearance; to play the hypocrite.
Thou needs must learn to laugh, to lye,
To face to forge, to scoff, to company. Hub. Tale.
2. To turn the face; to come in front.
Face about, man; a soldier, and afraid of the enemy? Dryden.
Then thrice the mounted squadrons ride around
The fire, and Arcite's name they thrice resound
Hail and farewell they shouted thrice amain, Thrice *fac*ing to the left, and thence they turn'd again. Dryden.
- To FACE. v. a.
1. To meet in front; to oppose with confidence and firmness.
I'll face
This tempest, and deserve the name of king. Dryden.
We get intelligence of the force of the enemy, and call about for a sufficient number of troops to face the enemy in the field of battle. Addison on the War.

- They are as loth to see the fires kindled in Smithfield as his lordship; and, at least, as ready to face them under a popish persecution. Swift.
2. To oppose with impudence: commonly with down.
We trepan'd the state, and fac'd it down
With plots and projects of our own. Hudibras.
Because he walk'd aguin't his will,
He fac'd men down that he stood still. Prior.
3. To stand opposite to.
On one side is the head of the emperor Trajan; the reverse has on it the Circus Maximus, and a view of the side of the Palatine mountain that faces it. Addison on Italy.
The temple is described square, and the four fronts with open gates, *fac*ing the different quarters of the world. Pope.
4. To cover with an additional superficies; to invest with a covering.
The fortification of Soleurre is *fac*ed with marble. Addison.
Where your old bank is hollow, face it with the first spit of earth that you dig out of the ditch. Mortimer's Husbandry.

Honour that is gained and broken upon another, hath the quickest reflection, like diamonds cut with facets. Bacon.
- FACE'TIOUS. adj. [facetieux, French; facetia, Latin.] Gay; cheerful; lively; merry; witty. It is used both of persons and sentiments.
Socrates, informed of some derogating speeches used of him behind his back, made this facetious reply, Let him beat me too when I am absent. Government of the Tongue.
- FACE'TIOUSLY. adv. [from facetious.] Gayly; cheerfully; wittily; merrily.
- FACE'TIOUSNESS. n. f. [from facetious.] Cheerful wit; mirth; gayety.
- FA'CI'LE. adj. [facile, Fr. facilis, Lat.]
1. Easy; not difficult; performable or attainable with little labour.
Then also those poets, which are now counted most hard, will be both facile and plentiful. Milton on Education.
To confine the imagination is as facile a performance as the Goteham's design of hedging in the cuckoo. Garrville.
By dividing it into parts so distinct, the order in which they shall find each disposed, will render the work facile and delightful. Evelyn's Kal.
This may at first seem perplexed with many difficulties, yet many things may be suggested to make it more facile and commodious. Wilkins.
2. Easily surmountable; easily conquerable.
The facile gates of hell too slightly barr'd. Milton.
3. Easy of access or converse; not haughty; not supercilious; not austere.
I meant the should be courteous, facile, sweet, Hating that solemn vice of greatness, pride,
I meant each softest virtue there should meet,
Fit in that foster bosom to reside. Ben Jonson.
Raphael now, to Adam's doubt propos'd,
Benevolent and facile, thus reply'd. Milton.
4. Pliant; flexible; easily persuaded to good or bad; ductile to a fault.

- Too facile then, thou didst not much gain say;
Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.
- Since Adam, and his facile consort Eve Lost Paradise, deceiv'd by me. Milton.
Some men are of that facile temper, that they are wrought upon by every object they converse with, whom any affectionate discourse, or serious sermon, or any notable accident, shall put into a fit of religion, which yet usually lasts no longer than till somewhat else comes in their way. Calvary.
- To FACILITATE. v. a. [faciliter, Fr.] To make easy; to free from difficulty; to clear from impediments.
Choice of the likeliest and best prepared metal for the version will facilitate the work. Bacon.
They renewed their assault two or three days together, and planted canon to facilitate their passage, which did little hurt; but they still lost many men in the attempt. Clarendon.
Though perspective cannot be called a certain rule of picture, yet it is a great succour and relief to art, and facilitates the means of execution. Dryden's Dunciad.
What produceth a due quantity of animal spirits, necessarily facilitates the animal and natural motions. Arbutnot on Diet.
A war on the side of Italy would cause a great diversion of the French forces, and facilitate the progress of our arms in Spain. Swift.
- FACILITY. n. f. [facilitè, French; facilitas, Latin.]
1. Easiness to be performed; freedom from difficulty.
Yet reason faith, reason should have ability
To hold these worldly things in such proportion,
As let them come or go with even facility. Sidney.
Piety could not be diverted from this to a more commodious business by any motives of profit or facility. Raleigh.
A war upon the Turks is more worthy than upon any other gentiles, both in point of religion and in point of honour; though facility and hope of success might invite some other choice. Bacon.
2. Readiness in performing; dexterity.
They who have studied have not only learned many excellent things, but also have acquired a great facility of profiting themselves by reading good authors. Dryden's Dunciad.
The facility which we get of doing things, by a custom of doing, makes them often pass in us without our notice. Locke.
3. Vitious ductility; easiness to be persuaded to good or bad; ready compliance.
Facility is worse than bribery; for bribes come now and then: but if opportunity or idle respects lead a man, he shall never be without them. Bacon.
'Tis a great error to take facility for good-nature; tenderness without discretion, is no better than a more pardonable folly. L'Esrange.
4. Easiness of access; complaisance; condescension; affability.
He opens and yields himself to the man of business with difficulty and reluctance; but offers himself to the visits of a friend with facility, and all the meeting readiness of appetite and desire. South.
- FACINERIOUS. adj. [corrupted by Shakespeare from facinorous; facinus, facinoris, Latin.] Wicked; facinorous.
'Tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and tedious of it; and he's of a most facinerosus spirit that will not acknowledge it. Shalsp.
- FA'CI'NG. n. f. [from To face.] An ornamental covering; that which is put on the outside of any thing by way of decoration.

Wicked; atrocious; detestably bad.

FACINOROUSNESS. n. s. [from facinorous.]
Wickedness in a high degree.

FACT. n. s. [factum, Latin.]

1. A thing done; an effect produced; something not barely supposed or suspected, but really done.

In matter of fact they say there is some credit to be given to the testimony of man; but not in matter of opinion and judgment: we see the contrary both acknowledged and universally practised all throughout the world. Hooker.

As men are not to mistake the causes of these operations, so much less are they to mistake the fact or effect, and rashly to take that for done which is not done. Bacon.

Those effects which are wrought by the perception of the sense, and by things in fact, are produced likewise in some degree by the imagination: therefore if a man see another eat four or acid things, which set the teeth on edge, that object tainteth the imagination. Bacon.

Matter of fact breaks out and blazes with too great an evidence to be denied. South's Sermons.

2. Reality; not supposition; not speculation.

If this were true in fact, I do not see any colour for such a conclusion. Addison.

Manifold sins, though in speculation they may be separable from war, in reality and fact never fail to attend it. Smalridge.

3. Action; deed.

Unhappy man! to break the pious laws
Of nature, pleading in his children's cause;
How'er the doubtful fact is underloud,
'Tis love of honour and his country's good;
The consul, not the father, sheds the blood. Dryden.

FACITION. n. s. [faction, French; factio, Latin.]

1. A party in a state.

The queen is valued thirty thousand strong;
If the hath time to breathe, he well assur'd

1. Producing mistake; sophistical. It is never used of men, but of writings, propositions, or things.

The Jews believed and assented to things neither evident nor certain, nor yet so much as probable, but actually false and fallacious; such as the absurd doctrines and stories of their rabbies.

2. Deceitful; mocking expectation.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapour bland
About their spirits had play'd, and in inmost powers
Made err, was now exhal'd.

False philosophy inspires
Fallacious hope.

FALLACIOUSLY. adv. [from fallacious.]

Sophistically; with purpose to deceive; with unbound reasoning.

We shall so far encourage contradiction, as to promise not to oppose any pen that shall fallaciously refuse us.

We have seen how fallaciously the author has stated the cause, by supposing that nothing but unlimited mercy, or unlimited punishment, are the methods that can be made use of.

FALLACIOUSNESS. n. f. [from fallacious.]

Tendency to deceive; inconclusiveness.

FALLACY. n. f. [fallacia, Latin; fallace, French.]

Sophism; logical artifice; deceit; deceitful argument; delusory mode of ratiocination.

Most princes make themselves another thing from the people by a fallacy of argument, thinking themselves most kings when the subject is most basely subjected.

Until I know this sure uncertainty,
I'll entertain the favour'd fallacy.

It were a mere fallacy, and mistaking to ascribe that to the force of imagination upon another body, which is but the force of imagination upon the proper body.

All men, who can see an inch before them, may easily detect gross fallacies.

FALLIBILITY. n. f. [from fallible.]

Liableness to be deceived; uncertainty; possibility of error.

There is a great deal of fallibility in the testimony of men; yet some things we may be almost as certain of, as that the sun shines, or that five twenties make an hundred.

FALLIBLE. adj. [fallis, Latin.] Liableness to error; such as may be deceived.

Do not falsify your resolution with hopes that are fallible: to-morrow you must die.

He that creates to himself thousands of little hopes, uncertain in the promise, fallible in the event, and depending upon a thousand circumstances, often fails his expectations.

Our intellectual or rational powers need some assistance, because they are so frail and fallible in the present state.

FALLING. } n. f. [from fall.] Indenting opposed to prominence.

It shows the nose and eyebrows, with the several prominences and fallings in of the features, much more distinctly than any other kind of figure.

The best ploughs to plow up summer fallow with.

2. Ground lying at rest.

Within an ancient forest's ample verge,
There stands a lonely but a healthful dwelling,
Boilt for convenience, and the use of life;
Around it fallows, meads, and pastures fair,
A little garden, and a limpid brook,
By nature's own contrivance seems dispos'd.

To FALLOW. v. n. To plow in order to a second plowing.

Begin to plow up fallows: this first fallowing ought to be very shallow.

FALLOWNESS. n. f. [from fallow.] Barrenness; an exemption from bearing fruit.

Like one, who, in her third widowhood, doth profess
Herself a nun, ty'd to retiredness,
S' affects my muse now a chaste fallowness.

FALSE. adj. [falsus, Latin; faux, fausse, French.]

1. Not morally true; expressing that which is not thought.

Innocence shall make False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience.

2. Not physically true; conceiving that which does not exist.

For how can that be false, which ev'ry tongue
O' ev'ry mortal man affirms for true?
Which truth hath in all ages been so strong,
As loadstone like, all hearts it ever drew.

A farce is that in poetry which grotesque is in a picture: the persons and action of a farce are all unnatural, and the manners false; that is, inconsistent with the characters of mankind.

3. Succedaneous; supposititious.

Take a vessel, and make a false bottom of couric canvals: fill it with earth above the canvass.

4. Deceiving expectation; not solid; not found.

He fell, as a huge rocky cliff,
Whose false foundation waves have wash'd away,
With dreadful poise is from the main land left.

When that flood in its own depths was drown'd,
It left behind it false and slippery ground.

The heart of man looks fair, but when we come to lay any weight upon't, the ground is false under us.

5. Not agreeable to rule, or propriety.

Now, sy upon my false French; by mine honour, in true English, I love thee, Kate.

6. Not honest; not just.

The true prince may, for recreation, prove a false thief; for the poor abuses of the times want countenance.

7. Treacherous; perfidious; traiterous; deceitful; hollow.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful,
Sudden, malicious, smacking of ev'ry sin
That has a name.

False of heart, light of ear, bloody of hand.

A man to whom he had committed the trust of his person, in making him his chamberlain; this man, no ways disgrac'd, no ways discontent, no ways put in fear, turns false unto him.

So hast thou cheated Theseus with a wife,
Against thy vow, returning to beguile
Under a borrow'd name; as false to me,
So false thou art to him who set thee free.

The ladies will make a numerous party against him, for being false to love in forsaking Dido.

8. Counterfeit; hypocritical; not real; as, a false diamond.

False tears true pity moves: the king commands
To loose his fetters.

9. In all these senses true is the word opposed.

FALSE. adv. Not truly; not honestly; not exactly; falsely.

What thou would'st highly,
That thou would'st holly; would'st not play
And yet would'st wrongly win.

To FALSE. v. a. [from the noun.] This word is now out of use.

1. To violate by failure of veracity.

It's not enough that to this lady mild,
Thou fals'dst bath thy faith with perjury?

2. To deceive.

Fair seemly pleasance each to other makes,
With goodly poposes there as they fit;
And in his falsel fancy he her takes
To be the fairest wight that lived yet. F. Queen.

3. To defeat; to balk; to evade.
But, Guyon, in the heat of all his strife,
Was wavy wife, and closely did await Advantage, whil't his foe did rage most rife;
Sometimes athwart, sometimes he strook him strait,
And falsel oft his blows t' illude him with such bait. Fairy Queen.

FALSEHEARTED. adj. [falsel and heart.]
Treacherous; perfidious; deceitful;
hollow
The traiterous or treacherous, who have misled others, are severely punished; and the neutrals and falsel friends and followers, who have flatted aside like a broken bow, he noted. Bacon.

FALSEHOOD. n. f. [from falsel.]
1. Want of truth; want of veracity.
Artificer of fraud; he was the first
That practis'd falsel under faintly shew. Milton.

All deception in the course of life is, indeed, nothing else but a lie reduced to practice, and falsel passing from words to things. South.

2. Want of honesty; treachery; deceit-fulness; perfidy.
Nothing wants, but that thy shape,
Like his, and colour serpentine, may show
Thy inward fraud, to win all creatures from thee
Henceforth; lest that too heav'nly form, pretended
To hellish falsel, snare them. Milton.

3. A lie; a false assertion.
In your answers there remains falsel. Job.

4. Counterfeit; imposture.
For no falsel can endure
Touch of celestial temper, but returns
Of force to its own likenes. Milton.

FALSELY. adv. [from falsel.]
1. Contrarily to truth; not truly.
Simeon and Levi spake not only falsely but infidiouly, nay hypocritically, abusing proselytes and religion. Government of the Tongue.
Already were the Belgians on our coast,
Whose fleet more mighty every day became
By late success, which they did falsely boast,
And now by first appearing seem'd to claim.
Dryden's Ann. Mir.

Tell him, I did in vain his brother move,
And yet he falsely said he was in love;
Falsely; for had he truly lov'd, at least
He would have giv'n one day to my request.
Dryden's Aureng.

Such as are treated ill, and upbraided falsely, find out an intimate friend that will hear their complaints, and endeavour to sooth their secret resentments. Addison's Spectator.

2. Erroneously; by mistake.
He knows that to be inconvenient which we falsely think convenient for us. Smalbridge.

3. Perfidiously; treacherously; deceitfully.

FALSENESS. n. f. [from falsel.]

1. Contrariety to truth.
2. Want of veracity; violation of promise.

Suppose the reverse of virtue were solemnly enacted, and the practice of fraud and rapine, and perjury and falseness to a man's word, and all vice were established by a law, would that which we now call vice gain the reputation of virtue, and that which we now call virtue grow odious to human nature? Tilghson.

3. Duplicity; deceit; double dealing.
Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity,
and all falseness or foulness of intentions, especially to perlonated devotion. Hammond.

4. Treachery; perfidy; traitorousness.
King Richard might create a perfect guefs,
That great Northumberland, then false to him,
Would of that seed grow to a greater falseness.
Shakspeare's Henry 7. v.

The prince is in no danger of being betrayed by the falseness, or cheated by the avarice of such a servant. Rogers.

FA'LSER. n. f. [from falsel.] A deceiver;
a hypocrite. Obsolete.

Such end had the kid; for he would weaned be
Of craft coloured with simplicity;
And such end, pardie, does all them remain,
That of such falsel's friendship been fain.
Spenser's Past.

FALSIFI'ABLE. adj. [from falsify.] Liable to be counterfeited or corrupted.

FALSIFICA'TION. n. f. [falsification,
French; from falsify.]

1. The act of counterfeiting any thing fo as to make it appear what it is not.

Concerning the word of God, whether it be by miscontrudion of the sense, or by falsification of the words, wittingly to endeavour that any thing may seem divine which is not, is very plainly to abuse, and even to falsify divine evidence, which injury, offered but unto men, is most worthily counted heinous. Hooker.

To counterfeit the dead image of a king in his coins is an high offence; but to counterfeit the living image of a king in his person, exceedeth all falsifications; except it should be that of a Mahomet, that counterfeits divine honour. Bacon.

2. Confutation.

The poet invents this fiction to prevent pottle-rity from searching after this stile, and to preserve his story from detection of falsification. Broome.

FA'LSIFIER. n. f. [from falsify.]

1. One that counterfeits; one that makes any thing to seem what it is not.

It happens in theories built on too obvious or too few experiments, what happens to falsifiers of coin; for counterfeit money will endure some one proof, others another, but none of them all proofs.
Boyle.

2. A liar; one that contrives falsehoods.

Boasters are naturally falsifiers, and the people, of all others that put their shams the worst together. L'Esrange.

To FA'LSIFY. v. a. [falsifier, French.]

1. To counterfeit; to forge; to produce something for that which in reality it is not.

We cannot excuse that church, which through corrupt translations of scripture, delivereth, instead of divine speeches, any thing repugnant unto that which God speaks; or, through falsified additions, propoeth that to the people of God as scripture, which is in truth no scripture. Hooker.

The Irish bards use to forge and falsify every thing as they list, to please or displease any man.
Spenser on Ireland.

Falsifying the balance by deceit. Amos.

2. To confute; to prove false.

Our Saviour's prophecy stands good in the destruction of the temple, and the dissolution of the Jewish economy, when Jews and pagans united all their endeavours, under Julian the apostate, to baffle and falsify the prediction. Addison.

3. To violate; to break by falsehood.

It shall be thy work, thy shameful work, which is in thy power to shun, to make him live to see thy faith falsified, and his bed defiled. Sidney.

He suddenly falsified his faith, and villainously slew Selymes the king, as he was bathing himself, mistrusting nothing less than the falsehood of the pirate. Knolles' History.

This superadds treachery to all the other pestilent ingredients of the crime; 'tis the falsifying
the most important trust. Decay of Piety.

4. To pierce; to run through.

His crest is rafh'd away, his ample shield
Is falsify'd, and round with jav'lines fill'd. Dryd.
Of this word Mr. Dryden writes thus: My friends quarrelled at the word falsified, as an innovation in our language. The fact is confessed; for I remember not to have read it in any English author; though perhaps it may be found in Spenser's Fairy Queen. But suppose it be not there:

why am I forbidden to borrow from the Italian, a polished language, the word which is wanting in my native tongue? Horace has given us a rule for coining words, si græco fonte cadant, especially when other words are joined with them which explain the sense. I used the word falsify, in this place, to mean that the shield of Turnus was not of proof against the spears and javelins of the Trojans, which had pierced it through and through in many places. The words which accompany this new one, makes my meaning plain:

*Ma si l'Ulbergo d'Ambi era perfetto,
Che mai poter falsarlo in nessun canto.*

Ariosto, cant. xxvi.
Falsar cannot otherwise be turned than by falsified:
for his shield was falsel, is not English. I might indeed have contented myself with saying his shield was pierced, and bored, and stuck with javelins. Dryden.

Dryden, with all this effort, was not able to naturalize the new signification, which I have never seen copied, except once by some obscure nameless writer, and which indeed deserves not to be received.

To FA'LSIFY. v. n. To tell lies; to violate truth.

This point have we gained, that it is absolutely and universally unlawful to lie and falsify. South.

FA'LSITY. n. f. [falsitas, Latin.]

1. Falsehood; contrariety to truth.

Neither are they able to break through those errors, wherein they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth. Hooker.
Can you on him such falsities obtrude?

And as a mortal the most wise delude? Sandys.

Probability does not make any alteration, either in the truth or falsity of things; but only imports a different degree of their clearness or appearance to the understanding. South.

2. A lie; an errour; a false assertion or position.

That Danubius ariseth from the Pyrenean hills, that the earth is higher towards the north, are opinions truly charged on Aristotle by the restorer of Epicurus, and all easily confutable falsities.
Glanville's Scepsis.

To FA'LTR. v. n. [falsar, to be wanting, Spanish; vultur, a stammerer, Islandick, which is probably a word from the same radical.]

1. To hesitate in the utterance of words.

With faltering tongue, and trembling ev'ry vein,
Tell on, quoth she. Fairy Queen.

The pale assistants on each other star'd,
With gaping mouths for issuing words prepar'd;
The still-horn sounds upon the palate hung,
And dy'd imperfect on the falt'ring tongue.
Dryden.

He changes, gods! and falters at the question:
His fears, his words, his look, declare him guilty.
Smith.

2. To fail in any act of the body.

This earth shall have a feeling; and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms. Shaksp.
He found his legs falter. Wise man's Surgery.

3. To fail in any act of the understanding.

How far idiots are concerned in the want or weakness of any or all faculties, an exact observation of their several ways of faltering would discover. Locke.

To FA'LTR. v. a. To sift; to cleanse.

This word seems to be merely rustick or provincial.

Barley for malt must be bold, dry, sweet, and clean faltered from foulness, seeds, and oats.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

FA'LTRINGLY. adv. [from falter.] With hesitation; with difficulty; with feebleness.

To FA'MBLE. v. n. [famler, Danish.] To hesitate in the speech. This word I find only in Skinner.

FAME. n. f. [fama, Latin; φάμα.]

1. Celebrity; renown.

The house to be builded for the Lord must be exceeding magnificent, of fame and of glory throughout all countries. Chronicles.

The desire of fame will not suffer endowments to lie useless. Addison's Spectator.

What is this fame, for which we thoughts employ,

The owner's wife which other men enjoy? Pope.

2. Report; rumour.

We have heard the fame of him, and all that he did in Egypt. Joshua.

I shall shew what are true fames. Baron.

FA'MED. adj. [from fame.] Renowned; celebrated; much talked of.

He is fam'd for mildness, peace and prayer. Shakspeare.

He purposes to seek the Clarian god, Avoiding Delphos, his more fam'd abode, Since Phlegian robbers, made unsafe the road. Dryden

Aristides was an Athenian philosopher, famed for his learning and wisdom; but converted to christianity. Addison.

FA'MELESS. adj. [from fame.] Having no fame; without renown. Not in use.

Then let me, fameless, love the fields and woods, The fruitful water'd vales and running floods. Mary's Virgil.

1. Domestick: relating to a family.

They range familiar to the dome. Pope.

2. Affable; not formal; easy in conversation.

Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar. Shakspeare.

Be not too familiar with Poins; for he misuses thy favours so much, that he swears thou art to marry his sister Nell. Shakspeare.

3. Unceremonious; free, as among persons long acquainted.

Kalendar streight thought he saw his niece Parthenia, and was about in such familiar sort to have spoken unto her; but she, in grave and honourable manner, gave him to understand that he was mistaken. Sidney.

4. Well known; brought into knowledge by frequent practice or custom.

I see not how the scripture could be possibly made familiar unto all, unless far more should be read in the people's hearing than by a sermon can be opened. Hecker.

Let us chuse such noble counsel, That war, or peace, or both at once, may be As things acquainted and familiar to us. Shakspeare.
Our sweet

Recess and only consolation left Familiar to our eyes! Milton's Paradise Lost

One idea which is familiar to the mind, connected with others which are new and strange, will bring those new ideas into easy remembrance. Watts on the Mind.

5. Well acquainted with; accustom'd; habituated by custom.

Or chang'd at length, and to the place conform'd

In temper and in nature, will receive Familiar the fierce heat, and void of pain. Milton

The senses at first let in particular ideas; and the mind, by degrees, growing familiar with some of them, they are lodg'd in the memory, and names got to them. Locke.

He was amazed how so impotent and groveling an insect as I, could entertain such inhuman ideas, and in so familiar a manner, as to appear wholly unmoved at all the scenes of blood and desolation. Culliver's Travels.

Patient permit the lady-pleasing strain, Familiar now with grief, your tears refrain. Pope.

6. Common; frequent.

To a wrong hypothesis may be reduced the errors that may be occasioned by a true hypothesis, but not rightly understood: there is nothing more familiar than this. Locke.

7. Easy; unconstrained.

He utters His muse, and sports in loose familiar strains. Addison.

8. Too nearly acquainted.

A poor man found a priest familiar with his wife, and because he spake it abroad, and could not prove it, the priest sued him for defamation. Camden

FAMILIAR. n. f.

1. An intimate; one long acquainted.

The king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar. Shakspeare.

When he finds himself avoided and neglected by his familiars, this affects him. Rogers.

2. A demon supposed to attend at call.

Love is a familiar; there is no evil angel but love. Shakspeare.

FAMILIARITY. n. f. [familiarité, Fr. from familiar.]

1. easiness of conversation; omission of ceremony; affability.

We contract at last such an intimacy and familiarity with them, as makes it difficult and irksome for us to call off our minds. Atterbury.

3. Easy intercourse.

They say any mortals may enjoy the most intimate familiarities with these gentle spirits. Pope.

To FAMILIARIZE. v. a. [familiariser, French.]

1. To make familiar; to make easy by habitude; to make common.

2. To bring down from a state of distant superiority.

The genius smiled upon me with a look of compassion and affability that familiarized him to my imagination, and at once dispelled all fear and apprehensions. Addison's Spectator.

FAMILIARLY. adv. [from familiar.]

1. Unceremoniously; with freedom like that of long acquaintance.

Because that I familiarly sometimes Do use you for my fool, and chat with you, Your sauciness will jest upon my love. Shakspeare

He talks as familiarly of John of Gaunt as if he had been sworn brother to him; and I'll be sworn he never saw him but once in the tilt-yard, and then he broke his head. Shakspeare.

The governor came to us, and, after salutations, said familiarly, that he was come to visit us, and called for a chair and sat him down. Bacon.

2. Commonly; frequently; with the unconcernedness or easiness of long custom.

Lesser mists and fogs than those which covered Greece with so long darkness, do familiarly present our senses with as great alterations in the sun and moon. Raleigh's History.

3. Easily; without solemnity; without formality.

Horace still charms with graceful negligence, And without method talks us into sense; Will, like a friend, familiarly convey The truest notions in the easiest way. Pope.

FAMILLE. [en famille, French.] In a family way; domestically.

Deluded mortals, whom the great Chuse for companions tete-a-tete; Who at their dinners, en famille, Get leave to sit where'er you will. Swift.

FAMILY. n. f. [familia, Latin; famille, French.]

1. Those who live in the same house; household.

The night made little impression on myself; but I cannot answer for my whole family; for my wife prevailed on me to take somewhat. Swift.

2. Those that descend from one common progenitor; a race; a tribe; a generation.

Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites. Numbers.

3. A course of descent; a genealogy.

If thy ancient but ignoble blood Has crept through scoundrels ever since the flood, Go and complain thy family is young, Nor own thy fathers have been fools so long. Pope.

4. A class; a tribe; a species.

There be two great families of things, sulphureous and mercurial, inflammable and not inflammable, mature and crude, oily and watry. Bacon.

FA'MINE. n. f. [famine, French; fames, Latin] Scarcity of food; dearth; distress for want of victuals.

Our castle's strength Will laugh a siege to scorn: here let them lie, 'Till famine and the ague eat them up. Shakspeare.

Famines have not been of late observed, partly because of the industry of mankind, partly by those supplies that come by sea, but principally by the goodness of God. Hale.

This city never felt a siege before, But from the lake receiv'd its daily store; Which now shut up, and millions crowded here, Famine will soon in multitudes appear. Dryden.

To FA'MISH. v. a. [from fames, Lat. famis, old French.]

1. To kill with hunger; to starve; to destroy by want of food.

What, did he marry me to famish me? Shakspeare.
The pains of famish'd Tantalus he'll feel, And Sisyphus, that labours up the hill

The rowling rock in vain; and curst Ixion's wheel Dryden.

2. To kill by deprivation or denial of anything necessary to life. Milton uses it with of.

Thin air Above the clouds will pine his entrails gross, And famish him of breath if not of bread. Milton.

To FA'MISH. v. n. To die of hunger; to suffer extreme hunger.

You are all resolv'd rather to die than to famish. Shakspeare.

FA'MISHMENT. n. f. [from famish.] The pain of hunger; want of food.

Apicius, thou did'st on thy gut bestow Full ninety millions; yet, when this was spent, Ten millions still remain'd to thee; which thou, Feeding to suffer thirst and famishment, In poison'd potion drank't. Hunterwell.

FAMO'SITY. n. f. [from famous.] Renown; celebrity.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ez. k.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tambling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupoglyphus. Peacham on Drawing.

FA'MOUS. adj. [fameux, French; famosus, Latin.]

1. Renowned; celebrated; much talked of and praised.

Henry the fifth, too famous to live long; England ne'er lost a king of so much worth. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

There rose up before Moses two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown. Numbers.

She became famous among women; for they had executed judgment upon her. Ez. k.

Pyreus was only famous for counterfeiting all base things; as earthen pitchers, a scullery, rogues together by the ears, and swine tambling in the mire; whereupon he was surnamed Rupoglyphus. Peacham on Drawing.

I shall be nam'd among the famousest Of women, sung at solemn festivals. Milton.

Many, besides myself, have heard our famous Waller own, that he derived the harmony of his numbers from the Godfrey of Bulloign, turned into English by Fairfax. Dryden.

2. It has sometimes a middle signification, and imports fame whether for good or ill.

Menebrates and Menas, famous pyrates, Make the sea serve them. Shakspeare

FAMOUSLY. adv. [from famous.] With great renown; with great celebration.

Then this land was famously enriched With politick grave counsel; then the king Had virtuous uncles to protect his grace. Shakspeare

They looked on the particulars as things famously spoken of and believed, and worthy to be recorded and read. Grewo's Cosmologia.

FAMOUSNESS. n. f. [from famous.] Celebrity; great fame.

FAN. n. f. [vannus, Latin.]

1. An instrument used by ladies to move the air and cool themselves.

With scarfs, and fans, and double change of brav'ry,

With amber bracelets, beads, with all this knav'ry. Shakspeare.

Flavia, the least and slightest toy Can with restless art employ:

In other hands the fan would prove An engine of small force in love;

But she, with such an air and mien, Not to be told or safely seen,

Directs its wanton motions so, That it wounds more than Cupid's bow;

Gives coolness to the matchless dame, To every other breast a flame. Atterbury.

The modest fan was lifted up no more, And virgins smil'd at what they blush'd before. Pope.

2. Any thing spread out like a woman's fan into a triangle with a broad base.

As a peacock and crane were in company, the peacock spread his tail, and challenged the other to shew him such a fan of feathers. L'Estrange.

3. The instrument by which the chaff is blown away when corn is winnowed. [vann, French.]

Faile, strawfork, and rake, with a fan that is strong. Tusser.

Affe shall eat clean provender, winnowed with the shovel and with the fan. Isaiah

In the wind and tempest of fortune's frown, Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan, Puffing at all, winnows the light away. Shakspeare.

For the cleansing of corn is commonly used either a wicker-fan, or a fan with fails. Mort.

4. Any thing by which the air is moved; wings.

The pris'n'er, with a spring from prison broke; Then stretch'd his feather'd fans with all his might,

And to the neighb'ring maple wing'd his flight. Dryden.

5. An instrument to raise the fire.

Nature worketh in us all a love to our own counsels: the contradiction of others is a fan to inflame that love. Hooker.

TO FAN. v. a.

1. To cool or recreate with a fan.

She was fanned into slumbers by her slaves. Spektator.

2. To ventilate; to affect by air put in motion.

Let every feeble humour shake your hearts; Your enemies, with nodding of their plumes, Fan you into despair. Shakspeare's Coriol.

The Norweyan banners flout the sky, And fan our people cold. Shakspeare's Macbeth

The air Floats as they pass, fann'd with unnumber'd plumes:

From branch to branch the smaller birds with song Solac'd the woods, and spread their painted wings,

'Till ev'n. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fanning wind upon her bosom blows;

To meet the fanning wind the bosom rose:

The fanning wind and purling streams continue her repose. Dryden's Cym. and Iphig.

Calm as the breath which fans our eastern groves,

And bright, as when thy eyes first lighted up our loves. Dryden.

And now his shorter breath, with sultry air, Pants on her neck, and fans her parting hair. Pope.

3. To separate, as by winnowing.

I have collected some few, therein fanning the old, not omitting any. Bacon's Apophthegms.

Nor so the wicked; but as chaff, which fann'd, The wind drives, so the wicked shall not stand In judgment. Milton.

FANATICISM. n. f. [from fanatick.] Enthusiasm; religious frenzy.

A church whose doctrines are derived from the clear fountains of the scriptures, whose polity and discipline are formed upon the most uncorrupted models of antiquity, which has stood unshaken by the most furious assaults of popery on the one hand, and fanaticism on the other; has triumphed over all the arguments of its enemies, and has nothing now to contend with but their slanders and calumnies. Rogers.

FANATIC. adj. [fanaticus, Latin; fanatique, French.] Enthusiastick; struck with a superstitious frenzy.

Osiris, Isis, Orus, and their train, With monstrous shapes and forceries abus'd Fanatick Egypt, and her priests, to seek Their wand'ring gods disguis'd in brutish forms. Milton.

FANATIC. n. f. [from the adjective.] An enthusiast; a man mad with wild notions of religion.

The double armature of St. Peter is a more destructive engine, than the tumultuary weapon snatch'd up by a fanatick. Decay of Priety.

FANCIFUL. adj. [fancy and full.]

1. Imaginative; rather guided by imagination than reason: of persons.

Some fanciful men have expected nothing but confusion and ruin from those very means, whereby both that and this is most effectually prevented. Woodward's Nat. Hist.

2. Dictated by the imagination, not the reason; full of wild images: of things.

What treasures did he bury in his sumptuous buildings? and how foolish and fanciful were they? Hayward.

It would shew as much singularity to deny this, as it does a fanciful facility to affirm it. Garth.

FANCIFULLY. adv. [from fanciful.] According to the wildness of imagination.

FANCIFULNESS. n. f. [from fanciful.] Addition to the pleasures of imagination; habit of following fancy rather than reason.

Albertus Magnus, with somewhat too much curiosity, was somewhat transported with too much fancifulness towards the influences of the heavenly motions, and astrological calculations. Hale.

FANCY. n. f. [contracted from phantasy, phantasia, Latin; φαντασια.] It should be phantasy.

1. Imagination; the power by which the mind forms to itself images and representations of things, persons, or scenes of being.

In the soul

Are many lesser faculties, that serve Reason as chief: among these fancy next

Her office holds; of all external things, Which the five watchful senses represent,

She forms imaginations, airy shapes,

Which reason joining, or disjoining, frames All what we affirm, or what deny, and call Our knowledge, or opinion. Milton.

Though no evidence affects the fancy so strongly as that of sense, yet there is other evidence which gives as full satisfaction, and as clear a conviction to our reason. Atterbury.

Love is by fancy led about,

From hope to fear, from joy to doubt: Whom we now a goddess call,

Divinely grac'd in every feature, Strait's a deform'd, a perjur'd creature:

Love and hate are fancy all. Granville.

2. An opinion bred rather by the imagination than the reason.

Men's private fancies must give place to the higher judgment of that church which is in authority over them. Hooker.

A person of a full and ample fortune, who was not disturbed by any fancies in religion. Clarendon.

I have always had a fancy, that learning might be made a play and recreation to children. Locke.

3. Taste; idea; conception of things.

The little chapel called the Salutation is very near, and built with a pretty fancy. Addison.

4. Image; conception; thought.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone; Of forest fancies your companions making,

Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Shakspeare.

5. Inclination; liking; fondness.

His fancy lay extremely to travelling. L'Estrange.

For you, fair Hermia, look you arm yourself, To fit your fancies to your father's will;

Or else the law of Athens yields you up To death, or to a vow of single life. Shakspeare.

A resemblance in humour or opinion, a fancy for the same business or diversion, is a ground of affection. Collier.

6. In Shakspeare it signifies love.

Tell me where is fancy bred, Or in the heart, or in the head?

How begot, how nourished? It is engender'd in the eyes,

With gazing fed, and fancy dies In the cradle where it lies. Shakspeare.

7. Caprice; humour; whim.

True worth shall gain me, that it may be said Desert, not fancy, once a woman led. Dryden.

The sultan of Egypt kept a good correspondence with the Jacobites towards the head of the Nile, for fear they should take a fancy to turn the course of that river. Arbuthnot.

One that was just entering upon a long journey, took up a fancy of putting a trick upon Mercury. L'Estrange.

8. False notion.

The altering of the scent, colour, or taste of fruit, by infusing, mixing, or cutting into the bark or root of the tree, herb, or flower, any coloured, aromatical, or medicinal substance, are but fancies: the cause is, for that those things have passed their period, and nourish not. Bacon's Natural History.

9. Something that pleases or entertains without real use or value.

London-pride is a pretty fancy for borders. Mistomer.

TO FANCY. v. n. [from the noun.] To imagine; to believe without being able to prove.

All are not always bound to hate and punish the true enemies of religion, much less any whom they may fancy to be so: all are always obliged to love its true friends, and to pray for its very enemies. Strutt's Sermons.

If our search has reached no farther than simile and metaphor, we rather fancy than know, and are not yet penetrated into the inside and reality of the thing; but content ourselves with what our imaginations furnish us with. Locke.

TO FANCY. v. a.

1. To portray in the mind; to image to himself; to imagine.

But he whose noble genius is allow'd,
Who with stretch'd pinions soars above the crowd;

Who mighty thought can clothe with manly drefs,
He whom I fancy, but can ne'er exprefs.

Dryden's Juvenal.

2. To like; to be pleased with.

Ninus both admiring her judgment and valour, together with her person and external beauty, fancied her so strongly, as, neglecting all princely respects, he took her from her husband.

Raleigh's History.

It is a little hard that the queen cannot demolish this town in whatever manner she pleaseth to fancy.

Swift.

FA'NCY-MONGER. n. f. [from fancy.] One who deals in tricks of imagination.

There is a man haunts the forests, that abuses our young plants with carving Rosalind on their barks; hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies on brambles; all, forsooth, deifying the name of Rosalind. If I could meet that fancy-monger, I would give him some good counsel; for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Shakspeare.

FA'NCYSICK. adj. [fancy and sick.] One whose imagination is unfound; or whose distemper is in his own mind.

'Tis not necessity, but opinion, that makes men miserable; and when we come to be fancy-sick, there 's no cure.

L'Estrange.

FAND for found. It is retained in Scotland.

This when as true by tryal he out fand,
He bade to open wide his brazen gate.

Spenser.

FANE. n. f. [fane, French; fanum, Lat.]
A temple; a place consecrated to religion. A poetical word.

Nor fane nor capitol,

The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarments all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege!

Shakspeare's Coriol.

Old Calibe, who kept the sacred fane
Of Juno, now the seem'd.

Dryden's Æneid.

Yet some to fanes repair'd, and humble rites
Perform'd to Thor and Woden, fabled gods,
Who with their vor'ries in one ruin shar'd.

Philips.

A sacred fane in Egypt's fruitful lands,
Hewn from the Tueban mountain's rocky womb.

Tickel.

The fields are ravish'd from the industrious
swains,

From men their cities, and from gods their fanes.

Pope.

FANFARON. n. f. [French, from the Spanish. Originally in Arabick it signifies one who promises what he cannot perform. Ménage.]

1. A bully; a hector.

Vuigil makes Æneas a bold avower of his own virtues, which, in the civility of our poets, is the character of a fanfaron or hector.

Dryden.

2. A blusterer; a boaster of more than he can perform.

There are fanfarons in the trials of wit too, as well as in feats of arms; and none so forward to engage in argument or discourse as those that are least able to go through with it.

L'Estrange.

FANFARONADE. n. f. [from fanfaron,
French.] A bluster; a tumour of fictitious dignity.

The bishop copied this proceeding from the fanfaronade of monsieur Bouffieurs.

Swift.

To FANG. v. a. [fanzan, Saxon; wangen, Dutch.] To seize; to gripe; to clutch. To wang is yet used in Devonshire

Destruction wang mankind!

Shaksf. Timon.

FANG. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The long tusks of a boar or other animal by which the prey is seized and held;
any thing like them.

Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
This is no flattery.

Shakspeare's As you like it.

Some creatures have overlong or outgrowing teeth, which we call fangs or tusks; as boars, pikes, falmons, and dogs, though lefs.

Bacon.

Prepar'd to fly,

The fatal fang drove deep within his thigh,
And out the nerves: the nerves no more sustain
The bulk; the bulk unprop'd, falls headlong on the plain.

Dryden.

Then charge, provoke the lion to the rage
Of fangs and claws, and, flooping from your horse,
Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Addison.

2. The nails; the talons.

3. Any shoot or other thing by which hold is taken.

The protuberant fangs of the yuca are to be treated like the tuberoses.

Evelyn's Kalendar.

FA'NGED. adj. [from fang.] Furnished with fangs or long teeth; furnished with any instruments of destruction, which can be exercised in imitation of fangs.

My two schoolfellows,

Whom I will trust as I will address fang'd,
They bear the mandate.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Not Scythians, nor fierce Dacians, onward rush
With half the speed, nor half so swift retreat:
In chariots, fang'd with scythes, they scour the field,

Drive through our wedg'd battalions with a whirl,
And strew a dreadful harvest on the plain.

Philips's Briton.

FANGLE. n. f. [from fengan, Sax.
to attempt. Skinner.] Silly attempt; trifling scheme. It is never used, or rarely, but in contempt with the epithet new: as, new fangles, new fanglenefs.

FA'NGLED. adj. [from fangle.] This word seems to signify gawdy; ridiculously showy; vainly decorated: new fangled, is therefore new-fashioned;
dressed out in new decorations.

Quick wits be in desire new fangled, and in purpose unconstant.

Ascham.

A book! oh, rare one!

Be not, as in this fangled world, a garment
Nobler than that it covers.

Shakspeare's Cymbeline.

FA'NGLESS. adj. [from fang.] Toothless;
without teeth.

The king hath wasted all his rods
On late offenders, that he now doth lack
The very instruments of chastisement;
So that his pow'r, like to a fangless lion,
May offer, but not hold.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

FA'NGOT. n. f. A quantity of wares: as raw silk, &c. containing from one to two hundred weight three quarters.

fun, can be nothing else but a fantastical, preter-natural complacency, arising from that which he really has no feeling of.

South.

2. Subsisting only in the fancy; imaginary.

Present feats

Are less than horrible imaginings:
My thought, whose murder yet is but fantastical,
Shakes to my single state of man, that function
Is smother'd in remorse; and nothing is,
But what is not.

Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Men are so possessed with their own fancies, that they take them for oracles; and are arrived to some extraordinary revelations of truth, when indeed they do but dream dreams, and amuse themselves with the fantastick ideas of a busy imagination.

Decay of Piety.

3. Unreal; apparent only; having the nature of phantoms which only assume visible forms occasionally.

Are ye fantastical, or that indeed
Which outwardly ye shew?

phantasia, Latin; φανταζω.]

1. Fancy; imagination; the power of imagining. See FANCY.

How now, Heratio! you tremble and look pale!

Is not this something more than fantasy?

Shak.

I talk of dreams,
Which are the children of an idle brain,
Begot of nothing but vain fantasy;
Which is as thin of substance as the air,
And more inconsistent than the wind. Shaksp.
He is superstitious grown of late,
Quite from the main opinion he held once
Of fantasy, of dreams, and ceremonies. Shaksp.
Go you, and where you find a maid,
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy,
Sleep the as found of careless infancy. Shaksp.
These spirits of sense, in fantasy's high court,
Judge of the forms of objects, ill or well;
And so they send a good or ill report
Down to the heart, where all affections dwell. Davies.

So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him.
—You speak him far.
—I don't extend him, sir. Cymbeline.

9. To a certain point ; to a certain degree.
The substance of the service of God, so far forth as it hath in it any thing more than the law of reason doth teach, may not be invented of men, as it is amongst the heathen ; but must be received from God himself. Hooker.

Answer them

How far forth you do like their articles.
Shaksp. Henry IV.

Not to resolve, is to resolve ; and many times it breeds as many necessities, and engageth as far in some other fort, as to resolve. Bacon.

Of this I need not many words to declare how far it is from being so much as any part of repentance. Hammond.

My discourse is so far from being equivalent to the position he mentions, that it is a perfect contradiction to it. Tillotson.

Found out this mystick way to jeer us. Hudib.

FAR-FETCHED. adj. [far and fetch.]

1. Brought from places remote.
Of these things others quickly will dispose,
Whose pains have earn'd the far-fetch'd spoil. Milton.

By his command we boldly cross'd the line,
And bravely fought where foreign stars arise ;
We trac'd the far-fetch'd gold into the mine,
And that which brib'd our fathers made our prize. Dryden.

2. Studiously fought ; elaborately strained ; not easily or naturally introduced.

York, with all his far-fetch'd policy. Shaksp.
For far-fetch'd rhymes make puzzled angels
stam,

And in low prose dull Lucifer complain. Smith.

Under this head we may rank those words which signify different ideas, by a sort of an unaccountable far-fetch'd analogy, or distant resemblance, that fancy has introduced between one thing and another ; as when we say, the meat is green when it is half roasted. Watts.

FAR-PIERCING. adj. [far and pierce.]

Striking, or penetrating a great way.
Atlas, her fire, to whose far-piercing eye

Some of the ancients mention some seeds that retain their fecundity forty years; and I have found that melon-seeds, after thirty years, are best for raising of melons. Ray.
God could never create so ample a world, but he could have made a bigger; the fecundity of his creative power never growing barren, nor being exhausted. Bentley.

FED. The pret. and part. pass. of To feed.
For on the grassy verdure as he lay,
And breath'd the freshness of the early day,
Devouring dogs the helpless infant tore,
Fed on his trembling limbs, and lapp'd the gore. Pope.

FEDARY. n. f. [fedus, Latin, or from feudum.] This word, peculiar to Shakspere, may signify either a confederate; a partner; or a dependent.
Damn'd paper!
Black as the ink that's on thee, senseless bauble!
Art thou a fedary for this act, and lookest
So virgin-like without? Shakspere's Cymb.

FEDERAL. adj. [from fedus, Latin.]
Relating to a league or contract.
It is a federal rite betwixt God and us, as eating and drinking, both among Jews and heathens, was wont to be. Hammond.
The Romans compelled them, contrary to all federal right and justice, both to part with Sardinia, their lawful territory, and also to pay them for the future a double tribute. Greav.

FEDERARY. n. f. [from fedus, Latin.]
A confederate; an accomplice.
She's a traitor, and Camillo is
A federary with her. Shakspere.

FEDERATE. adj. [federatus, Latin.]
Leagued; joined in confederacy.

FEE. n. f. [from feh, Saxon; fee, Danish, cattle; feudum, low Latin; feu, Scottish.]
1. [In law.] All lands and tenements that are held by any acknowledgment of superiority to a higher lord.
All lands and tenements, wherein a man hath a perpetual estate to him and his heirs, &c. are divided into allodium and feudum: allodium is every man's own land, which he possesses merely in his own right, without acknowledgement of any service, or payment of any rent to any other. Feudum, or fee, is that which we hold by the benefit of another, and in name whereof we owe services, or pay rent, or both, to a superior lord. And all our land in England, the crown-land, which is in the king's own hands, in right of his crown, excepted, is in the nature of feudum; for though a man have land by descent from his ancestors, or bought it for his money; yet is the land of such a nature, that it cannot come to any, either by descent or purchase, but with the burden that was laid upon him who had novel fee, or first of all received it as a benefit from his lord, to him and to all such to whom it might descend, or be any way conveyed from him. So that no man in England has directum dominium, that is, the very property or demene in any land, but the prince in right of his crown: for though he that has fee has jus perpetuum & utile dominium, yet he owes a duty for it, and therefore it is not simply his own. Fee is divided into two sorts; fee-absolute, otherwise called fee-simple, and fee-conditional, otherwise termed fee-tail: fee-simple is that whereof we are seised in those general words, To us and our heirs for ever: fee-tail is that whereof we are seised to us and our heirs, with limitation; that is, the heirs of our body. And fee-tail is either general or special: general is where land is given to a man, and the heirs of his body: fee-tail special, is that where a man and his wife are seised of land to them and the heirs of their two bodies. Covell.
Now like a lawyer, when he land would let,
Or sell fee-simples in his master's name. Hubb. Ta.
Here 's the lord of the soil come to seize me for a fray,
For entering his fee-simple without leave. Shakspere.

2. Property; peculiar.
What concern they?
The general cause? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast? Shakspere.

3. Reward; gratification; recompense.
These be the ways by which, without reward,
Livings in courts be gotten, though full hard;
For nothing there is done without a fee. Hubb. Ta.
Not helping, death's my fee;
But if I help, what do you promise me? Shaksp.

4. Payments occasionally claimed by persons in office.
Now that God and friends
Have turn'd my captive state to liberty,
At our engagement what are thy due fees? Shaksp.

5. Reward paid to physicians or lawyers.
He does not refuse doing a good office for a man because he cannot pay the fee of it. Addison.

6. Portion; pittance; share. Obsolete.
In pruning and trimming all manner of trees,
Reserve to each cattle their property fees. Tupper.

FEEFARM. n. f. [fee and farm.] Tenure by which lands are held of a superiour lord.
John surrendered his kingdoms to the pope, and took them back again, to hold in fee-farm; which brought him into such hatred, as all his lifetime after he was possess with heat. Dowry.

To FEE. v. a. from the noun.

- To reward; to pay.
No man fees the sun, no man purchases the light, nor eats if he walks by it. South.
Watch the disease in time; for when within The dropfy rages and extends the skin, To vain for hellebore the patient cries, And fees the doctor; but too late is wise. Dryd.
- To bribe; to hire; to purchase.
I have long loved her, and ingrossed opportunities to meet her; feed every slight occasion, that could but niggardly give me sight of her. Shaksp. Merry Wives of Windsor.

3. To keep in hire.
There's not a thane of them but in his house I have a servant feed. Shakspere's Macbeth.

FE'EBLE. adj. [foible, French.] Weak; debilitated; sickly; infirm; without strength of body or mind.

The men carried all the feeble upon asses to Jericho. 2 Chron.
Command th' assistance of a faithful friend, But feeble are the succours I can send. Dryden.
How I have lov'd, excuse my faltering tongue; My spirits feeble, and my pains are strong. Dryden.

We carry the image of God in us, a rational and immortal soul; and though we be now miserable and feeble, yet we aspire after eternal happiness, and finally expect a great exaltation of all our natural powers. Bentley.
Rhyme is a crutch that helps the weak along, Supports the feeble, but retards the strong. Smith.

To FR'EBLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To weaken; to enfeeble; to deprive of strength or power. Not in use.

Or as a castle reared high and round, By subtle engines and malicious flight Is undermined from the lowest ground, And her foundation forc'd and feebled quite. Fairy Queen.

Shall that victorious hand be feebled here, That in your chambers gave you chastisement? Shaksp. King John.

FE'EBLE-M'ND'ED. adj. [feeble and mind.] Weak of mind; defective in resolution and constancy.

This hand, whose touch, Whose ev'ry touch would force the feeler's soul To th' oath of loyalty. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

2. The horns or antennæ of insects.

Insects clean their eyes with their forelegs as well as antennæ; and as they are perpetually feeling and searching before them with their feelers or antennæ, I am apt to think that besides wiping and cleaning the eyes, the uses here named may be admitted. Denham's Physico-Theology.

FE'ELING. participial adj. [from feel.]

1. Expressive of great sensibility.

O wretched state of man in self-division! O well thou say'st a feeling declaration Thy tongue hath made of Cupid's deep incision! Silvery.

Thy waiting words do much my spirits move,
They uttered are in such a feeling fashion. Sidney.
Write 'till your ink be dry, and with your tears

Moist it again; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity. Shakspeare.

2. Sensibly felt. This sense is not sufficiently analogical.

A most poor man made tame to fortune's blows,
Who, by the art of known and feeling sorrows,
Am pregnant to good pity. Shakspeare.

I had a feeling sense
Of all your royal favours; but this last
Strikes through my heart. Southerne.

FEELING, n. f. [from feel.]

1. The sense of touch.
Why was the fight
To such a tender ball as th' eye confin'd;
So obvious and so easy to be quench'd,
And not, as feeling, through all parts diffus'd,
That the might look at will through every pore? Milton.

2. Power of action upon sensibility.
The apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse. Shak.

3. Perception; sensibility.
Their king, out of a princely feeling, was sparing and compassionate towards his subjects.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Great persons had need to borrow other men's opinions to think themselves happy; for if they judge by their own feeling, they cannot find it.
Bacon's Essays.

As we learn what belongs to the body by the evidence of sense, so we learn what belongs to the soul by an inward consciousness, which may be called a sort of internal feeling. Watts.

FEELINGLY, adv. [from feeling.]

1. With expression of great sensibility.
The princes might judge that he meant himself, who spake so feelingly. Sidney.
He would not have talked so feelingly of Co-drus's bed, if there had been room for a bedfellow in it. Pope.

2. So as to be sensibly felt.
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy phang,
And churchly chiding of the winter's wind,
Which when it bites and blows upon my body,
Ev'n 'till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
This is no flattery: these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am. Shakspeare.
He feelingly knew, and had trial of the late good, and of the new purchased evil. Raleigh.

FEET, n. f. The plural of foot.

His brother's image to his mind appears,
Inflames his heart with rage, and wings his feet
with fears. Pope.

FEETLESS, adj. [from feet.] Being without feet.

Geoffrey of Boullain broched three feetless
birds, called allerions, upon his arrow. Cumden.

To FEIGN, v. a. [feindre, French;
finjo, Latin.]

1. To invent; to image by an act of the mind.

Abominable, inutterable, and worse
Than fables yet have feign'd, or fear conceiv'd,
Gorgons, and hydras, and chimeras dire!
Milton.

2. To make a show of.

Both his hands, most filthy seculent,
Above the water were on high exteat,
And feign'd to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

3. To make a show of; to do upon some false pretence.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

4. To dissemble; to conceal. Obsolete.
Each trembling leaf and whistling wind they hear,
As ghastly bug their hair on end does rear;
Yet both do strive their fearfulness to feign.
Fairy Queen.

To FEIGN, v. n. To relate falsely; to image from the invention; to tell fabulously.

Therefore the poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods;
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
Shakspeare.

FEIGNEDLY, adv. [from feign.] In fiction; not truly.

Such is found to have been falsely and feignedly
in some of the heathens. Bacon.

FEIGNER, n. f. [from feign.] Inventer;
contriver of a fiction.

And these three voices differ; all the things done, the doing and the doer; the thing feigned, the feigning and the feigner; so the poem, the poesy, and the poet. Ben Jonson.

FEINT, participial adj. [from feign, for feigned; or feint, French.] Counterfeit;
feeming.

The mind by degrees loses its natural relish of real, solid truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be but dressed up into any feint appearance of it. Locke.

FEINT, n. f. [from feint, French.]

1. A false appearance; an offer of something not intended to be.

Courtly's letter is but a feint to get off.
SpeSator.

Ainsworth.

To FELICITATE, v. a. [feliciter,
French; felicito, Latin.]

1. To make happy.

I profess
Myself an enemy to all other joys;
And find I am alone felicitate
In your dear highness' love. Shakspeare.
What a glorious entertainment and pleasure would fill and felicitate his spirit, if he could grasp all in a single survey! Watts.

2. To congratulate.

They might proceed unto forms of speeches, felicitating the good, or depreciating the evil to follow. Brown.

FELICITATION, n. f. [French; from fel-icitate.] Congratulation. DiE.

FELICITOUS, adj. [felix, Latin.]
Happy. DiE.

Happily. DiE.

FELICITY, n. f. [felicitas, Latin; felicité, French.] Happiness; prosperity;
blissfulness; blessedness.

The joyous day, dear Lord, with joy begin,
And grant that we, for whom thou didst die,
Being with thy dear blood clean wash'd from sin,
May live for ever in felicity. Spenser.
Others in virtue plac'd felicity;
But virtue join'd with riches and long life,
In corporal pleasure he, and careless ease. Milt.
The felicities of her wonderful reign may be complete. Aiturbury.

How great, how glorious a felicity, how adequate to the desires of a reasonable nature, is revealed to our hopes in the gospel? Rogers.

FELINE, adj. [felinus, Latin.] Like a cat; pertaining to a cat.

Even as in the beaver; from which he differs principally in his teeth, which are canine, and in his tail, which is felina, or a long taper. Crew.

FELL, adj. [felle, Saxon.]

1. Cruel; barbarous; inhuman.
It seem'd fel, fierce, mad as fell,
Flew from his lap when he unfolds the same. Fairfax.

So felless foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep,
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear friends. Shakspeare.

2. Savage; ravenous; bloody.

That instant was I turn'd into a hart,
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me. Shakspeare.
I know thee, love! wild as the raging man,
More fell than tygers on the Lybian plain. Pope.
Scorning all the taming arts of man,
The keen hyena, felless of the fell. Thomson.

FELL, n. f. [felle, Saxon.] The skin;
the hide. Not used.

Wipe thine eye;
The gorgers shall devour them, fish and fell,
Ere they shall make us weep. Shakspeare.
The time has been my scutes would have cool'd
To hear a night-thrunk; and my fell of air
Would at a dismal treatise rouse and stir. Shakf.

To FELL, v. a. [fellen, German.]

1. To knock down; to bring to the ground.

Villain, stand, or I'll fell thee down. Shakf.
Up and down he traverses his ground;
Now wards a felling blow, now strikes again.
Daniel.

Taking the small end of his musket in his hand, he struck him on the head with the stock, and felled him. Raleigh.
His fall, for the present, struck an earthquake into all minds; nor could the vulgar be induced to believe he was felled. Howell.

On their whole host I flew Unarm'd, and with a trivial weapon fell'd
Their choicest youth: they only liv'd who fled.
Milton.

2. It seems improperly joined with down or along.

Whom with such force he struck he fell'd him down,
And cleft the circle of his golden crown. Dryd.
I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case. Dryd.

3. To hew down; to cut down.

Then would he seem a farmer that would fell
Bargains of woods, which he did lately fell.
Hubberd's Tale.

Proud Arcite and fierce Palamon,
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their Faulchions to and fro,
And shot a dreadful gleam; so strong they struck,
There seem'd less force requir'd to fell an oak.
Dryden.

FELL, The preterit of To fall.

None on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands, angel on archangel roll'd. Milton.

FELLER, n. f. [from fell.] One that hews down.

Since thou art laid down, no feller is come up against us. Isaiah.

FELLIFLUOUS, adj. [fel and fluos, Lat.]
Flowing with gall. DiE.

FELLMONGER, n. f. [from fell.] A dealer in hides.

FELLINESS, n. f. [from fell.] Cruelty;
savageness; fury; rage.

When his brother saw the red blood trail
Adown to fast, and all his armour steep,
For very felness loud he 'gan to weep. Fairy Q.

FE'LLOE. n. f. [felge, Danish.] The circumference of a wheel; the outward part. It is often written sally or jelly.

Out, out, thou rumpet Fortune! all you gods,
In general synod, take away her power;
Break all the spokes and fellies from her wheel,
And bow the round nave down the hill of heav'n.

Axe-trees, naves, felloes and spokes were all molten.

FELLOW. n. f. [quasi, to follow, Minsbew; from pe, faith, and lag, bound, Saxon, Junius; fallow, Scottish.]

1. A companion; one with whom we consort.

In youth I had twelve fellows like unto myself,
But not one of them came to a good end.

To be your fellow,
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Have we not plighted each our holy oath,
That one should be the common good of both;
One foul should both inspire, and neither prove
His fellow's hindrance in pursuit of love?

2. An associate; one united in the same affair.

Each on his fellow for assistance calls;
At length the fatal fabrick mounts the walls.

3. One of the same kind.

Let partial spirits still aloud complain,
Think themselves injur'd that they cannot reign;
And own no liberty, but where they may
Without controul upon their fellows prey.

So you are to be hereafter fellows, and no longer servants.

4. Equal; peer.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.

5. One thing suited to another; one of a pair.

When virtue is lodged in a body, that seems to have been prepared for the reception of vice; the soul and the body do not seem to be fellows.

6. One like or equal to another: as, this knave hath not his fellow.

7. A familiar appellation used sometimes with fondness; sometimes with esteem; but generally with some degree of contempt.

This is Othello's ancient, as I take it.
—The same indeed; a very valiant fellow.

An officer was in danger to have lost his place, but his wife made his peace; whereupon a peasant fellow said, that he had been crushed, but that he saved himself upon his horns.

Full fifteen thousand lusty fellows
With fire and sword the foot maintain;
Each was a Hercules, you tell us,
Yet out they march'd like common men.

8. A word of contempt: the foolish mortal; the mean wretch; the sorry rascal.

Those great fellows scornfully receiving them,
As foolish birds fallen into their net, it pleased the eternal justice to make them suffer death by their knees.

Cassio hath here been set on in the dark
By Rodrigo, and fellows that are 'cup'd'.
I have great comfort from this fellow: methinks
he hath no drowning mark about him; his complexion is perfect gallows.

Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputationless banishment,
A fellow of no mark or likelihood.

How oft the sight of means, to do ill deeds,
Makes deeds ill done? for had'st thou not been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind.

The Moors' abus'd by some most villainous knave,
Some base notorious knave, some scurvy fellow!

The fellow had taken more fish than he could spend while they were sweet.

As next of kin, Achilles' arms I claim;
This fellow would ingraft a foreign name
Upon our stock, and the Sisyphian feed
By fraud and theft affects his father's breed.

You will wonder how such an ordinary fellow,
as this Mr. Wood, could have got his majesty's broad seal.

You'll find, if once the monarch acts the monk,
Or, cobbler-like, the parson was to drunk,
Worth makes the man, and want of it the fellow;
The rest is all but leather and prunella.

9. Sometimes it implies a mixture of pity with contempt.

The provost commanded his men to hang him up on the nearest tree: then the fellow cried out that he was not the miller, but the miller's man.

10. A member of a college that shares its revenues, or of any incorporated society.

There should be a mission of three of the fellows or brethren of Solomon's house, to give us knowledge of the affairs and state of those countries to which they were designed.

TO FE'LLOW. v. a. To suit with; to pair with; to match. Fellow is often used in composition to mark community of nature, station, or employment.

With what's unreal, thou co-relative art,
And fellow'st nothing.

FELLOW-COMMONER. n. f.

1. One who has the same right of common.

He cannot appropriate, he cannot inclose, without the consent of all his fellow-commoners, all mankind.

2. A commoner at Cambridge of the higher order, who dines with the fellows.

FELLOW-CREATURE. n. f. One that has the same creator.

Reason is the glory of human nature, and one of the chief eminencies whereby we are raised above our fellow-creatures, the brutes, in this lower world.

FELLOW-HEIR. n. f. Coheir; partner of the same inheritance.

The gentiles should be fellow-heirs.

FELLOW-HELPER. n. f. Coadjutor; one who concurs in the same business.

We ought to receive such, that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth.

FELLOW-LABOURER. n. f. One who labours in the same design.

My fellow-labourers have commissioned me to perform in their behalf this office of dedication.

FELLOW-SERVANT. n. f. One that has the same master.

Not less think we in heav'n of thee on earth,
Than of our fellow-servant; and inquire
Gladly into the ways of God with man.

Fair fellow-servant! may your gentle ear
Prove more propitious to my slighted care
Than the bright dames we serve.

Their fathers and yours were fellow-servants to the same heavenly master while they lived; nor is that relation dissolved by their death, but ought still to operate among their surviving children.

FELLOW-SOLDIER. n. f. One who fights under the same commander. An endearing appellation used by officers to their men.

Come, fellow-soldier, make thou proclamation.

Epaphroditus, my brother and companion in labour, and fellow-soldier.

FELLOW-STUDENT. n. f. One who studies in company with another, in the same class, under the same master.

I pry'thee, do not mock me, fellow-student.

If you have no fellow-student at hand, tell it over with your acquaintance.

FELLOW-SUBJECT. n. f. One who lives under the same government.

The bleeding condition of their fellow-subjects was a featner in the balance with their private ends.

FELLOW-SUFFERER. n. f. One who shares in the same evils; one who partakes the same sufferings with another.

How happy was it for those poor creatures, that your grace was made their fellow-sufferer? And how glorious for you, that you chose to want rather than not relieve?

We in some measure share the necessities of the poor at the same time that we relieve them, and make ourselves not only their patrons but fellow-sufferers.

FELLOW-WRITER. n. f. One who writes at the same time, or on the same subject.

Since they cannot raise themselves to the reputation of their fellow-writers, they must sink it to their own pitch, if they would keep themselves upon a level with them.

FELLOW-FEELING. n. f. [fellow and feeling.]

1. Sympathy.
It is a high degree of inhumanity not to have a fellow-feeling of the misfortune of my brother.

2. Combination; joint interest; commonly in an ill sense.

Even your milkwoman and your nurserymaid have a fellow-feeling.

FE'LLOWLIKE. } adj. [fellow and like.]

FE'LLOWLY. } Like a companion; on equal terms; companionable.

All which good parts he graceth with a good fellowlike, kind, and respectful carriage.

One feed for another to make an exchange,
With fellowly neighbourhood seemeth not strange.

FE'LLOWSHIP. n. f. [from fellow.]

1. Companionship; consort; society.
This boy cannot tell what he would have,
But kneels and holds up hands for fellowship.

From blissful bow'rs
Of amarantine shade, fountain, or spring,
By th' waters of life, where'er they sat
In fellowships of joy, the sons of light Hailed.

There is no man but God puts excellent things into his possession, to be used for the common good; for men are made for society and mutual fellowship.

God having designed man for a sociable creature, made him not only with an inclination, and under the necessity to have fellowship with those of his own kind, but furnished him also with language, which was to be the great instrument and cement of society.

2. Association; confederacy; combination.

We would not die in that man's company,
That fears his fellowship to die with us. Shaksp.
Those laws do bind men absolutely, even as they are men, although they have never any fettled fellowship, never any solemn agreement amongst themselves. Hooker.
Most of the other christian princes were drawn into the fellowship of that war. Knollys.

3. Equality.
4. Partnership; joint interest.

Nearer acquainted, now I feel by proof
That fellowship in pain divides not smart,
Nor lightens aught each man's peculiar load.
Milton's Paradise Regained.
O love! thou sternly dost thy power maintain,
And will not bear a rival in thy reign;
Tyrants and thou all fellowship disdain. Dryden.

5. Company; state of being together.

The great contention of the sea and skies
Parted our fellowship. But hark, a fail! Shak.

6. Frequency of intercourse; social pleasure.

In a great town friends are scattered, so that there is not that fellowship which is in less neighbourhoods. Bacon's Essays.

7. Fitness and fondness for festal entertainments, with good prefixed.

He had by his excessive good fellowship, which was grateful to all the company, made himself popular with all the officers of the army. Clarendon.

8. An establishment in the college, with share in the revenue.

Corufodes having, by extreme parsimony, saved thirty pounds out of a beggarly fellowship, went to London. Swift.

9. [In arithmetick.] That rule of plural proportion whereby we balance accounts, depending between divers persons, having put together a general flock, so that every man may have his proportional gain, or sustain his proportional part of loss. Cocker.

FELLY. adv. [from fell.] Cruelly; inhumanly; savagely; barbarously.

Fair ye be sure, but cruel and unkind;
As is a tyger, that with greediness
Hunts after blood, when he by chance doth find
A feeble beast doth felly him oppress. Spenser.

FEL-DE-SE. n. f. [In law.] He that commits felony by murdering himself.

FELON. n. f. [felon, French; felu, low Latin; fel, Saxon.]

1. One who has committed a capital crime.

I apprehend thee for a felon here. Shakspere.
The wily fox
Chas'd even amid' the folds; and made to bleed,
Like felons, where they did the mord'rous deed. Dryden.

2. A whitlow, a tumour formed between the bone and its investing membrane, very painful.

The malign paronychia is that which is commonly called a felon. Wijeman's Surgery.

FELON. adj. Cruel; traitorous; inhuman.
Ay me! what thing on earth, that all things breeds,

Might be the cause of so impatient plight!
What fury, or what fiend with felon deeds,
Hath stir'd up so malicious despight! Spenser.
Then bids prepare th' hospitable treat,
Vain shews of love to veil his felon hate. Pope.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked;
traitorous; villanous; malignant; per-fidious; destructive.

This man conceived the duke's death; but what was the motive of that felonious conception is in the clouds. Watton.

O thievish night!

Why should'st thou, but for some felonious end,
In thy dark lantern thus close up the stars
That nature hung in heav'n, and fill'd the lamps
With overlighting oil, to give due light
To the mild and lonely traveller? Milton.
In thy felonious heart though venom lies,
It does but touch thy Irish pen, and dies. Dryd.

FELONIOUSLY. adv. [from felonious.] In a felonious way.

FELONIOUS. adj. [from felon.] Wicked.
Not used.

I am like for desperate dole to die,
Through felonious force of mine enemy. Spenser.

FELONY. n. f. [felonie, French; felonia, low Latin; from felon.] A crime denounced capital by the law; an enormous crime.

I will make it felony to drink small beer.
Shakspere's Henry vi.

FELT. The preterit of feel.

FELT. n. f. [felt, Saxon.]

1. Cloth made of wool united without weaving.

It were a delicate stratagem to shoe
A troop of horse with felt. Shakspere.

2. A hide or skin.

To know whether sheep are found or not, see that the felt be loose. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To FELT. v. a. [from the noun.] To unite without weaving.

The same wool one man felts into a hat, another weaves it into cloth, another into kersey. Hale.

To FELTRE. v. a. [from felt.] To clot together like felt.

His feltr'd locks, that on his bosom fell,
On rugged mountains briars and thorns resemble. Fairfax.

FEL'VECCA. n. f. [feleu, French; felkon, Arabick.] A small open boat with six oars. DiA.

FEMALE. n. f. [semelle, French; femella, Latin.] A she; one of the sex which brings young; not male.

God created man in his own image, male and female created he them. Genesis.

If he offer it of the herd, whether it be male or female, he shall offer it without blemish. Levit.

Men, more divine,
Tadu'd wit intellectual sense and soul,
Are masters to their females, and their lords. Shakspere.

FEMALE. adj.

1. Not male.

Female of sex it seems. Milton.
Swarming next appear'd
The female bee, that feeds her husband drone. Milton.

2. Not masculine; belonging to a she.

Other suns, perhaps,
With their attendant moons thou wilt descry,
Communicating male and female light;
Which two great sexes animate the world. Milton.
Add what wants
In female sex, the more to draw his love. Milton.
He scrupled not to eat
Against his better knowledge, not deceiv'd,
But fondly overcome with female charm. Milton.

If by a female hand he had foreseen
He was to die, his wish had rather been
The lance and double ax of the fair warrior queen. Dryden.

3. Female Rhymes. Double rhymes so called because, in French, from which the term is taken, they end in e weak or feminine. These rhymes are female:

Th' excess of heat is but a fable;
We know the torrid zone is now found habitable. Cowley.

The female rhymes are in use with the Italian in every line, with the Spaniard promiscuously, and with the French alternately, as appears from the Alarique, the Pucelle, or any of their later poems. Dryden's Pref. to Ann. Mirab.

FEME COVERT. n. f. [French.] A married woman; who is also said to be under covert baron. Blount.

FEME SOLE. n. f. [French.] A single woman; an unmarried woman.

FEMINALITY. n. f. [from famina, Lat.]
Female nature.

If in the minority of natural vigour the parts of feminality take place, upon the increase or growth thereof the masculine appears. Brown.

FEMININE. adj. [femininus, Latin.]

1. Of the sex that brings young; female.

Thus we chastise the god of wine
With water that is feminine,
Until the cooler nymph abate
His wrath, and so incorporate. Cleaveland.

2. Soft; tender; delicate.

Her heavenly form
Angelick, but more soft and feminine. Milton.

3. Effeminate; emasculated; wanting manliness.

Nimias was no man of war at all, but altogether feminine, and subjected to ease and delicacy. Raleigh's History.

FEMININE. n. f. A she; one of the sex.
that brings young; a female.

O! why did God create at last
This novelty on earth, this fair defect
Of nature? And not fill the world at once
With men, as angels, without feminine? Milton.

FEMORAL. adj. [femoralis, Latin.] Belonging to the thigh.

The largest crooked needle should be used in taking up the femoral arteries in amputation. Sharp's Surgery.

FEN. n. f. [penn, Saxon; venne, Dutch.]
A marsh; low flat and moist ground; a moor; a bog.

Mexico is a city that stands in the midst of a great marsh or fen. Abbot.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than heaven. Shakspere's Coriolanus.

The surface is of black fen earth. Woodward.
He to Portina's wat'ry marshes went;
A long canal the muddy fen divides,
And with a clear unswoll'n current glides. Addis.

FENBERRY. n. f. [fen and berry.] A kind of blackberry. Skinner.

FENCE. n. f. [from defence.]

1. Guard; security; outwork; defence.

That proved not fence enough to the reputation of their oppressors. Decay of Prety.

There's no fence against inundations, earthquakes, or hurricanes. L'Estrange.

To put them out of their parents view, at a great distance, is to expose them to the greatest dangers of their whole life, when they have the least fence and guard against them. Locke.

Let us hear this awful corps to Cæsar,
And lay it in his fight, that it may stand
A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath. Addison's Cato.

2. Enclosure; mound; hedge; fortified boundary.

In vain did nature's wife command
Divide the waters from the land,
If daring ships and men prophane,
Invade th' inviolable main;
Th' eternal fences overlap;
And pass at will the boundless deep. Dryden.

Shall I mention make
Of the vast mound that binds the Lucrine lake?
Or the disdainful sea, that, shut from thence,
Roars round the structure, and invades the fence? Dryden.

Employ their wiles and unavailing care,
To pals the fences and surprize the fair. Pope.

3. The art of fencing; defence.
I braided my skin th' other day, with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
4. Skill in defence.
I'll prove it on his body, if he dare,
Despight his nice fence and his active practice.
Shakspeare.

To FENCE. v. a.

1. To enclose; to secure by an enclosure or hedge.
Th' inhabitants each pasture and each plain Destroyed have, each field to waste is laid;
In fenced towers below is their grain,
Before thou cam'st this kingdom to invade.
Fairfax.

He hath fenced up my way that I cannot pass,
and set darkness in my paths.
Job.

Thou hast clothed me with skin and flesh, and hast fenced me with bones and sinews.
Job.

He went about to make a bridge to a strong city, which was fenced about with walls. 2 Mac.
See that the churchyard be fenced in with a decent rail or other inclosure. Ayliffe's Paragon.

2. To guard; to fortify.

So much of adders wisdom I have learnt,
To fence my ear against thy sorceries. Milton.

With love to friend, th' impatient lover went,
Fenc'd from the thorns, and trod the deep descent.
Dryden.

To FENCE. v. n.

1. To practise the arts of manual defence; to practise the use of weapons.

He having got some iron, should have it beaten into swords, and put into his servants hands to fence with, and bang one another. Locke.

2. To guard against; to act on the defensive.

Vice is the more stubborn as well as the more dangerous evil, and therefore in the first place to be fenced against. Locke.

3. To fight according to art, by obviating blows as well as giving.

If a thistle sing, he falls straight a capering;
He will fence with his own shadow. Shakspeare.

A beautiful heifer in the wood is bred;
The stooping warriors aiming head to head,
Engage their clashing horns; with dreadful sound
The forest rattles, and the rocks rebound;
They fence and push, and, pushing, loudly roar,
Their dewlaps and their sides are bath'd in gore.
Dryden.

A man that cannot fence will keep out of bullies and gamblers company. Locke.

These, being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgelplying.
Arbutnot and Pope.

- FE'NCELESS. adj. [from fence.] Without enclosure; open.

Each motion of the heart rises to fury,
And love in their weak bosoms is a rage
As terrible as hate, and as destructive:
So the wind roars o'er the wide fenceless ocean,
And heaves the billows of the boiling deep,
Alike from north, from south. Rowe.

- FE'NCER. n. f. [from fence.] One who teaches or practises the use of weapons, or science of defence.

Calmness is great advantage; he that lets
Another chafe, may warm him at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cunning fencers suffer heat to tire. Herbst.

A nimble fencer will put in a thrust so quick, that the foil will be in your bosom when you thought it a yard off. Digby.

- FENCIBLE. adj. [from fence.] Capable of defence. Addison.

- FE'NCINGMASTER. n. f. [fence and master.] One who teaches the science of defence, or the use of weapons.

FE'NCINGSCHOOL. n. f. [fence and school.]

A place in which the use of weapons is taught.

If a man be to prepare his son for duels, I had rather mine should be a good wrestler than an ordinary fencer, which is the most a gentleman can attain to, unless he will be constantly in the fencing-school, and every day exercising. Locke.

FEN-CRICKET. n. f. [grillotalpa.] An insect that digs itself holes in the ground.

To FEND. v. a. [from defend.] To keep off; to shut out.

Spread with straw the bedding of thy fold,
With fern beneath to fend the bitter cold. Dryd.

To FEND. v. n. To dispute; to shift off a charge.

The dexterous management of terms, and being able to fend and prove with them, passes for a great part of learning; but it is learning distinct from knowledge. Locke.

FE'NDER. n. f. [from fend.]

1. An iron plate laid before the fire to hinder coals that fall from rolling forward to the floor.

2. Any thing laid or hung at the side of a ship to keep off violence.

FENERATION. n. f. [feneratio, Latin.] Usury; the gain of interest; the practice of increasing money by lending.

The hare figured not only pusillanimity and timidity from its temper, but feneration and usury from its fecundity and superfetation. Brown.

FE'NNEL. n. f. [feniculum, Latin.] A plant of strong scent.

A sav'ry odour blown, more pleas'd my sense
Than smell of sweetest fennel, or the teats
Of ewe, or goat, dropping with milk at ev'n.
Milton.

FE'NNELFLOWER. n. f. [nigella.] A plant.

FE'NNELGIANT. n. f. [ferula.] A plant.

FE'NNY. adj. [from fen.]

1. Marshy; boggy; moorish.

Driving in of piles is used for stone or brick houses, and that only where the ground proves fenny or moorish. Moxon.

The hungry crocodile, and hissing snake,
Lurk in the troubl'd stream and fenny brake. Prior.

2. Inhabiting the marsh.

Fillet of a fenny snake,
In the cauldron boil and bake. Shakspeare.

FE'NNYSTONES. n. f. A plant.

FE'NSUCKED. adj. [fen and suck.] Sucked out of marshes.

Infect her beauty,
You fensuck'd fogs, drawn by the powerful sun.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

FE'NUGREEK. n. f. [fanum Græcum, Lat.] A plant.

FE'OD. n. f. [feodum, low Latin.] Fee; tenure. Diã.

FE'ODAL. adj. [feodal, French; from feod.] Held from another.

FE'ODARY. n. f. [from feodum, Latin.]

One who holds his estate under the tenure of suit and service to a superiour lord. Hanmer.

To FEOFF. v. a. [fief, fiefier, French; feoffare, low Lat.] To put in possession; to invest with right.

FEOFF'E. n. f. [feoffatus, Latin; fief, French.] One put in possession.

The late earl of Desmond, before his breaking forth into rebellion, conveyed secretly all his lands to fieftees in trust, in hope to have eat off her majesty from the estate of his lands. Spenser.

FE'OFFER. n. f. [feoffator, low Latin.]

One who gives possession of any thing] See FEOFFMENT.

FE'OFFMENT. n. f. [feoffamentum, Lat.]

The act of granting possession.

Any gift or grant of any honours, castles, lands, or other immoveable things, to another in fee-simple, that is, to him and his heirs for ever, by the delivery of seisin of the thing given: when it is in writing, it is called a deed of feoffment; and in every feoffment the giver is called the feoffor, feoffator, and he that receiveth by virtue thereof the feoffee, feoffatus. The proper difference between a feoffor and a donor is, that the feoffor gives in fee-simple, the donor in fee-tail. Cowell.

FERA'CITY. n. f. [feracitas, Latin.] Fruitfulness; fertility. Diã.

FERIATION. n. f. [feriatio, Latin.] The act of keeping holiday; cessation from work.

As though there were any feriatio in nature, this season is commonly termed the physicians vacation. Brown.

FE'RINE. adj. [ferinus, Latin.] Wild; savage.

The only difficulty is touching those ferine, noxious, and untameable beasts; as, lions, tygers, wolves, bears. Hale.

FERINENESS. n. f. [from ferine.] Barbarity; savageness; wildness.

A ferine and necessitous kind of life, a conversation with those that were fallen into a barbarous habit of life, would assimilate the next generation to barbarism and ferineness. Hale.

FE'RITY. n. f. [feritas, Latin.] Barbarity; cruelty; wildness; savageness.

He reduced him from the most abject and stupid ferity to his senses, and to sober reason. Woodward's Natural History.

To FERMENT. v. a. [fermento, Latin; fermenter, French.] To exalt or rarify by intestine motion of parts.

Ye vigorous swains! while youth ferment your blood,
And purer spirits swell the sprightly flood,
Now range the hills, the thickest woods beset,
Wind the shrill horn, or spread the waving net. Pope.

To FERMENT. v. n. To have the parts put into intestine motion.

FE'RMEN. n. f. [ferment, French; fermentum, Latin.]

1. That which causes intestine motion.

The semen puts females into a fever upon impregnation; and all animal humours which poison, are putrefying ferments. Floyer.

2. Intestine motion; tumult.

Subdue and cool the ferment of desire. Rogers.

FERMENTABLE. adj. [from ferment.] Capable of fermentation.

FERMENTAL. adj. [from ferment.] Having the power to cause fermentation. Not used.

Cucumbers, being waterish, fill the veins with crude and windy ferocities, that contain little salt or spirit, and debilitate the vital acidity and fermental faculty of the stomach. Brown.

FERMENTATION. n. f. [fermentatio, Latin.] A slow motion of the intestine particles of a mixt body, arising usually from the operation of some active acid matter, which rarifies, exalts, and subtilizes the soft and sulphureous particles:

as when leaven or yeast rarifies, lightens, and ferments bread or wort. And this motion differs much from that usually called ebullition or effervescence, which is a violent boiling and struggling between an acid and an alkali, when mixed together.

The juice of grapes, after fermentation, will yield a spiritus aydens.
A man by tumbling his thoughts, and forming them into expressions, gives them a new kind of fermentation; which works them into a finer body, and makes them much clearer than they were before.

The sap in fluent dance,
And lively fermentation, mounting, spreads
All this innumerable colour'd scene of things.

FERMENTATIVE. adj. [from ferment.] Causing fermentation; having the power to cause fermentation.

Aromatic spirits destroy by their fermentative heat.

FERN. n. f. [pearn, Saxon.] A plant. The leaves are formed of a number of small pinnules, dentated on the edges, and set close one by another on slender ribs. On the back of these pinnules are produced the seeds, small and extremely numerous. The country people esteem it a sovereign remedy decocted for the rickets in children.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood,
Horrid with fern and intricate with thorn;
Few paths of human feet or tracks of beasts were worn.

There are great varieties of fern in different parts of the world; but they are seldom cultivated in gardens.

FERNY. adj. [from fern.] Overgrown with fern.

The herd suffe'd, did late repair
To ferny heaths, and to their forest-lare.

FEROCIOUS. adj. [ferox, Latin; feroce, French.]

1. Savage; fierce.
Smedley rose in majesty of mud;
Shaking the horrors of his ample brows,
And each ferocious feature grim with ooze.

2. Ravenous; rapacious.
The hare, that becometh a prey unto man, unto beasts and fowls of the air, is fruitful even unto superfatation; but the lion and ferocious animal hath young ones but seldom, and but one at a time.

FEROCITY. n. f. [ferocitas, Latin; ferocité, French; from ferocious.] Savageneff; wildness; fierceness.

An uncommon ferocity in my countenance, with the remarkable flatness of my nose, and extent of my mouth, have procured me the name of lion.

Untaught, uncultivated, as they were Inhospitable, full of ferocity.

FERREROUS. adj. [ferreus, Latin.] Irony; partaking of iron.

In the body of glass there is no ferreous or magnetical nature.

FERRRET. n. f. [fured, Welsh; furet, French; ferret, Dutch; viverra, Lat.]

1. A kind of rat with red eyes and a long snout, used to catch rabbits. They are said to have been brought hither from Africa.

With what an eager earnestness she looked, having threatening not only in her ferrat eyes, but while she spoke, her nose seemed to threaten her chin.

Looks with such ferret and such fiery eyes
As we have seen him.

2. A kind of narrow woollen tape.

To FERRET. v. a. [from the noun.] To drive out of lurking places, as the ferret drives the coney.

The archbishop had ferretted him out of all his holds.

FERRRETER. n. f. [from ferret.] One that hunts another in his privacies.

FERRIAGE. n. f. [from ferry.] The fare paid at a ferry.

FERRUGINOUS. adj. [ferrugineus, Fr. ferrugineus, Latin.] Partaking of the particles and qualities of iron.

They are cold, hot, purgative, diuretick, feruginous, saline, petrefying, and bituminous.

FERRULE. n. f. [from ferrum, iron, Lat.] An iron ring put round any thing to keep it from cracking.

The fingers ends are strengthened with nails, as we fortify the ends of our staves or forks with iron hoops or ferrules.

To FERRY. v. a. [apan, to pass, Sax. fabr, German, a passage. Skinner imagines that this whole family of words may be deduced from the Latin veho. I do not love Latin originals; but if such must be fought, may not these words be more naturally derived from ferri, to be carried?] To carry over in a boat.

Cymocles heard and saw,
He loudly call'd to such as were aboard,
The little bark unto the shore to draw,
And him to ferry over that deep ford.

To FERRY. v. n. To pass over water in a vessel of carriage.

Thence hurried back to fire,
They ferry over this Lethæan sound
Both to and fro, their sorrow to augment.

FERRY. n. f. [from the verb, and boat.]

1. A vessel of carriage; a vessel in which goods or passengers are carried over water.

By this time was the worthy Guyon brought Unto the other side of that wide strand,
Where he was rowing, and for passage sought:
Him needed not long call, the soon to hand
Her ferry brought.

Bring them with imagin'd speed
Unto the Traject, to the common ferry
Which trades to Venice.

A ferryboat to carry over the king's household.

I went down to the river Brent in the ordinary ferry.

2. The passage over which the ferry boat passes.

FERRYMAN. n. f. [ferry and man.] One who keeps a ferry; one who for hire transports goods and passengers over the water.

I pass, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The common ferryman of Egypt, that waded over the dead bodies from Memphis, was made by the Greeks the ferryman of hell, and solemn stories raised after him.

The grisly ferryman of hell deny'd
Æneas entrance, till he knew his guide.

FERTH or Forth. Common terminations are the same as in English an army; coming from the Saxon word fýrd.

FERTILE. adj. [fertile, French; fertilis, Latin.]

1. Fruitful; abundant; plenteous.
I had hope of France,
As firmly as I hope for fertile England.

I have had a large, a fair, and a pleasant field; fo fertile, that it has given me two harvests in a summer.

I ask whether in the uncultivated waste of America, a thousand acres yield as many conveniences of life as ten acres of equally fertile land do in Devonshire?

View the wide earth adorn'd with hills and woods,
Rich in her herds, and fertile by her floods.

2. With of before the thing produced.
The earth is fertile of all kind of grain.

This happy country is extremely fertile, as of those above, so likewise of its productions under ground.

To FERTILITATE. v. a. [from fertile.] To fecundate; to fertilize; to make fruitful or productive. Not in use.

A cock will in one day fertilitate the whole racemation or cluster of eggs not excluded in many weeks after.

FERTILITY. n. f. [fertilitas, Latin.] Fecundity; abundance; fruitfulness; plenteousness.

I will go root away
The noisome weeds, that without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.

Paradise itself exceeded in beauty and fertility; and these places had but a resemblance thereof.

The quickness of the imagination is seen in the invention, the fertility in the fancy, and the accuracy in the expression.

To inundations Egypt, through which the Nile flows, and the Indies owe their extraordinary fertility, and those mighty crops they produce after these waters are withdrawn.

To FERTILIZE. v. a. [fertiliser, French.] To make fruitful; to make plenteous; to make productive; to fecundate.

Rain-water carries along with it a sort of terrestrial matter that fertilizes the land, as being proper for the formation of vegetables.

FERTILY. adv. [from fertile.] Fruitfully; plenteously; plentifully; abundantly.

FERVENCY. n. f. [fervens, Latin.]

1. Heat of mind; ardour; eagerness.
Your diver
Did hang a fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

2. Pious ardour; flame of devotion; zeal.
We have on all sides lost most of our first fervency towards God.

There must be zeal and fervency in him which propofeth for the rest those suits and supplications, which they by their joyful acclamations must ratify.

When you pray, let it be with attention, with fervency and with perseverance.

FERVENT. adj. [fervens, Latin; fervent, French.]

1. Hot; boiling.
The fountains
Bubbling wave did ever freshly wade
Ne ever would through fervent summer fade.

From the phlegmatick humour, the proper alloy of fervent blood, will flow a future quietude and serenity.

FERULA. n. f. [ferule, French; from ferula, giant fennel, Latin.] An instrument of correction with which young scholars are beaten on the hand: so named because anciently the stalks of fennel were used for this purpose.

These differ as much as the rod and ferula. Shaw's Grammar.

TO FERULE. v. a. To chastise with the ferula.

FERVOUR. n. f. [fervor, Latin; ferveur, French.]

1. Heat; warmth.
 Were it an undeniable truth that an effectual ferveur proceeded from this star, yet would not the same determine the opinion. Brown.
 Like bright Aurora, whose resplendent ray Egretells the ferveur of ensuing day,
 And warns the shepherd with his flocks retreat
 To leafy shades, from the threaten'd heat. Waller.

These silver drops, like morning dew,
 For tell the ferveur of the day;
 So from one cloud soft showers we rieve,
 And blasting lightnings burst away. Pope.

2. Heat of mind; zeal.
 O'vious it must needs have been to abolish that which all had held for the space of many ages, without reason so great as might in the eyes of impartial men appear sufficient to clear them from all blame of rash proceedings, if in ferveur of zeal they had removed such things. Hooker.
 Haply deep in bath seiz'd her;
 Or, wing'd with ferveur of her love, she's flown
 To her dear'd Pothumus. Shakespeare's Cymb.
3. Ardour of piety.
 There will be at Loretto, in a few ages more, jewels of the greatest value in Europe, if the devotion of its princes continues in its present ferveur. Milton on Italy.

FESCUE. n. f. [veese, Dutch; feslu, Fr.] A small wire by which those who teach to read point out the letters.

Teach him an alphabet upon his fingers, making the points of his fingers of his left hand both on the inside to signify some letter, when any of them is pointed at by the fore-finger of the right hand, or by any kind of fesque. Holder.

Teach them how manly passions ought to move; For such as cannot think, can never love; And since they needs will judge the poet's art, Point 'em with fesques to each thinning part. Dryden.

FESSELS. n. f. A kind of base grain.

Didstain not fessels or poor vetch to sow,
 Or care to make Egyptian tents thrive. Milton's Virgil.

FESSE. n. f. [In heraldry.]

The fesse is so called of the Latin word fascia, a band or girdle, possessing the third part of the cutcheon over the middle: if there be above one, you must call them bars; if with the field there be odd pieces, as seven or nine, then you must name the field, and say so many bars; if even, as six, eight, or ten, you must say bar-wife, or barry of six, eight, or ten; as the king of Hungary bears argent and gules, barry of eight. Peacock.

TO FESTEER. v. n. [fesse, in Bavarian, a swelling corrupted, Junius.] To rankle; to corrupt; to grow virulent.

I might, even in my lady's presence, discover the fore which had deeply festered within me. Sidney.

Inward corruption and infected sin,
 Not purg'd, not heal'd, behind remained still,
 And festering fore did rankle yet within. F. Queen.
 How should our festered fores be cured? Hooker.

I have some wounds upon me, and they smart,
 To hear themselves remember'd.
 —Well might they fester 'gainst ingratitude,
 And tent themselves with death. Shakespeare.

Mind that their souls
 May make a peaceful and a sweet retire
 From off these fields, where, wretches, their poor bodies
 Must lie and fester. Shakespeare's Henry v.

There was imagination, that between a knight whom the duke had taken into some good degree of favour, and Felton, there had been ancient quarrels not yet well healed, which might perhaps be festering in his breast, and by a certain inflammation produce this effect. Watson.

Passion and unkindness may give a wound that shall bleed and smart; but it is treachery that makes it fester. South.

FESTINATE. adj. [festinatus, Latin.] Hasty; hurried. Not in use.

Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions
Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome. Addison's Cato.

FEUDAL. adj. [feudalis, low Latin.] Pertaining to fees, feus, or tenures by which lands are held of a superiour lord.

FEUDAL. n. f. A dependance; something held by tenure; a fee; a feu.

Wales, that was not always the feudal territory of England, having been governed by a prince of their own, had laws utterly strange to the laws of England. Hair.

FEUDATORY. n. f. [from feudal.] One who holds not in chief, but by some conditional tenure from a superiour.

The duke of Parma was tempted to be true to that enterprize, by no less promise than to be made a feudatory, or beneficiary king of England, under the feignry in chief of the pope, and the protection of Spain. Bacon.

FEVER. n. f. [fièvre, French; febris, Latin.] A disease in which the body is violently heated, and the pulse quickened, or in which heat and cold prevail by turns. It is sometimes continual, sometimes intermitten.

Think 't thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low bending?
Shakespeare's Henry v.

Duncan is in his grave;
After life's fitful fever he sleeps well. Shaksp.

Should not a lingering fever be remov'd,
Because it long has rag'd within my blood?
Dryden.

He had never dreamed in his life, 'till he had the fever he was then newly recovered of. Locke.

To FEVER. v. a. [from the noun.] To put into a fever.

The whitehand of a lady fever thee!
Shake to look on't. Shakespeare's Ant. and Cleop.

FEVERISH. adj. [from fever.]

1. Diseased with a fever.

To other climates beasts and birds retire,
And feverish nature burns in her own fire. Creech.

When an animal that gives suck turns feverish, that is, its juices more alkaline, the milk turns from its native genuine whiteness to yellow. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. Tending to a fever.
A feverish disorder disabled me. Swift.
 3. Uncertain; inconstant; now hot, now cold.

We tofs and turn about our feverish will,
 When all our ease must come by lying still;
 For all the happiness mankind can gain,
 Is not in pleasure, but in rest from pain. Dryden.

4. Hot; burning.
 And now four days the sun had seen our woes,
 Four nights the moon beheld th' incessant fire;
 It seem'd as if the stars more sickly rose,
 And farther from the feverish north retire. Dryd.
FE'VE'RISSNESS. n. f. [from feverish.] A slight disorder of the feverish kind.
FE'VE'ROUS. adj. [fevreux-fe, French; from fever.]

1. Troubled with a fever or ague.
 Thou mad'st thine enemies shake, as if the world
 Were feverous, and did tremble. Shakspeare.
 2. Having the nature of a fever.

All fe'v'rous kinds,
 Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs. Milton.

3. Having a tendency to produce fevers.
 It hath been noted by the ancients, that southern winds, blowing much, without rain, do cause a feverous disposition of the year; but with rain not. Bacon's Natural History.

- FE'VE'RY. adj. [from fever.] Diseased with a fever.

O Rome, thy head
 Is drown'd in sleep, and all thy body fe'v'ry.
Ben Jonson's Catiline.

- FE'UILLAGE. n. f. [French.] A bunch or row of leaves.

Of Homer's head I inclose the outline, that you may determine whether you would have it so large, or reduced to make room for feuillage or laurel round the oval. Jervas to Pope.

- FE'UILLEMORT. n. f. [French.] The colour of a faded leaf, corrupted commonly to philemot.

- FE'UTERER. n. f. A dogkeeper: perhaps the cleaner of the kennel.

- FEW. adj. [feo, peopa, Sax. fu, Dan.]

1. Not many; not in a great number.
 We are left but few of many. Jeremias.
 So much the thirst of honour fires the blood;
 So many would be great, so few be good;
 For who would virtue for herself regard,
 Or wed without the portion of reward? Dryd.

On winter seas we fewer storms behold,
 Than foul diseases that infect the fold. Dryd.
 Men have fewer or more simple ideas from without, according as the objects they conceive with affords greater or less variety. Locke.

The fewer still you name, you wound the more;
 Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score. Pope.
 Party is the madness of many, for the gain of a few. Swift.

The imagination of a poet is a thing so nice and delicate, that it is no easy matter to find out images capable of giving pleasure to one of the few, who, in any age, have come up to that character. Berkley to Pope.

2. Sometimes elliptically; not many words.
 To answer both allegations at once, the very substance of that they contain is in few but this.
Hooker.

So having said, he thus to Eve in few:
 Say, woman, what is this which thou hast done?
Milton.

Thus Jupiter in few unfolds the charge.
 The firm resolve I here in few disclose. Pope.

- FE'WEL. n. f. [feu, French.] Combustible matter; materials for keeping fire: as firewood; coal.

If a spark of error have thus far prevailed falling even where the wood was green, and farthest off from any inclination unto furious attempts, must not the peril thereof be greater in men, whose minds are as dry fuel, apt beforehand unto tumults, seditions and broils?

Others may give the fuel or the fire!
 But they the breath, that makes the flame, inspire. Denham.

A known quantity of fuel, all kind'd at once, will cause water to boil, which being lighted gradually will never be able to do it.
Bentley's Sermons.

- To FE'WEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed with fuel.

Never, alas! the dreadful name,
 That fuels the infernal flame. Cowley.

- FE'WNESS. n. f. [from few.]

1. Paucity; smallness of number.
 These, by reason of their fewness, I could not distinguish from the numbers with whom they are embodied. Dryden.

2. Paucity of words; brevity; conciseness.
Fewness and truth, 'tis thus. Shakspeare.

- To FEY. v. a. [veggen, Dutch.] To cleanse a ditch of mud.

Such muddy deep ditches and pits in the field,
 That all a dry summer no water will yield,
 By veying and casting that mud upon heaps,
 Commodities many the husbandman reaps. Tusser.

- FIB. n. f. [A cant word among children.] A lie; a falsehood.

Destroy his fib or sophistry in vain,
 The creature's at his dirty work again. Pope.
 I so often lie,
 Scarce Harvey's self has told more *fib*s than I. Pope.

- To FIB. v. n. [from the noun.] To lie; to tell lies; to speak falsely.

If you have any mark, whereby one may know when you fib, and when you speak truth, you had best tell it me. Arbutnot.

- FIBBER. n. f. [from fib.] A teller of *fib*s.
FIBRE. n. f. [fibre, French; fibra, Lat.]

1. A small thread or string; the first constituent parts of bodies.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
 And seed their fibres with reviving dew. Pope.

2. A fibre, in physick, is an animal thread, of which some are soft, flexible, and a little elastick; and these are either hollow, like small pipes, or spongy and full of little cells, as the nervous and fleshy fibres: others are more solid, flexible, and with a strong elasticity or spring, as the membranous and cartilaginous fibres: and a third sort are hard and flexible, as the fibres of the bones. Some so very small as not to be easily perceived; and others so big as to be plainly seen; and most of them appear to be composed of still smaller fibres: these fibres first constitute the substance of the bones, cartilages, ligaments, membranes, nerves, veins, arteries, and muscles. Quincy.

My heart sinks in me while I hear him speak,
 And every slacken'd fibre drops its hold,
 Like nature letting down the springs of life:
 The name of father awes me still. Dryden.

- FIBRIL. n. f. [fibrille, French.] A small fibre or string.

The muscles consist of a number of fibres, and each fibre of an incredible number of little fibrils bound together, and divided into little cells. Chyene's Phil. Princ.

- FIBROUS. adj. [fibreux, French; from fibre.] Composed of fibres or stamina.

The difference between bodies fibrous and bodies viscidous is plain; for all wool and tow, and cotton and silk, have a greediness of moisture. Bacon's Natural History.

I saw Petreus' arms employed around
 A well-grown oak, to root it from the ground;

This way and that he wrench'd the fibrous bands,
 The trunk was like a sapling in his hands. Dryd.

The fibrous and solid parts of plants pass unaltered through the intestines. Arbutnot.

- FIBULA. n. f. [Latin.] The outer and lesser bone of the leg, much smaller than the tibia: it lies on the outside of the leg; and its upper end, which is not so high as the knee, receives the lateral knob of the upper end of the tibia into a small sinus, which it has in its inner side. Its lower end is received into the small sinus of the tibia, and then it extends into a large process, which forms the outer ankle. Quincy.

- FICKLE. adj. [picol, Saxon.]

1. Changeable; inconstant; irresolute; wavering; unsteady; mutable; change-ful; without steady adherence.

Remember where we are,
 In France amongst a fickle wavering nation. Shakspeare's Henry VI.

A slave, whose easy borrow'd pride
 Dwells in the fickle grace of her he follows. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Or likest hovering dream,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train. Milton.

They know how fickle common lovers are;
 Their oaths and vows are cautiously believ'd;
 For few there are but have been once deceiv'd. Dryden.

We in vain the fickle sex pursue,
 Who change the constant love for the new. Prior.

2. Not fixed; subject to vicissitude.

He would be loth
 Us to abolish; lest the adversary
 Triumph, and say, fickle their state, whom God
 Most favours! Milton's Paradise Lost.

- FICKLENESS. n. f. [from fickle.] Inconstancy; uncertainty; unsteadiness.

Neither her great worthiness, nor his own suffering for her, could fetter his fickleness; but, before his marriage-day, he had taken to wife that Bacchus of whom the complained. Sidney.

Beware of fraud, beware of fickleness,
 In choice and change of thy dear loved dame. Fanny Queen.

I am a soldier and unapt to weep,
 Or to exclaim on fortune's fickleness. Shakspeare.

Instability of temper ought to be checked, when it disposes men to wander from one scheme of government to another, since such a fickleness cannot but be attended with fatal consequences. Addison's Freeholder.

Whether out of fickleness or design I can't tell,
 I found that what the liked one day she disliked another. Addison.

- FICKLY. adv. [from fickle.] Without certainty or stability.

Do not now,
 Like a young wretched heir, mortgage the hopes
 Of godlike majesty on bankrupt terms,
 To raise a present pow'r that's fickly held
 By the frail tenure of the people's will. Southern.

- FICO. n. f. [Italian.] An act of contempt done with the fingers, expressing a fig for you.

Having once recovered his fortrefs, he then gives the fico to his adversaries. Caracci.

- FICTILE. adj. [fictilis, Latin.] Moulded into form; manufactured by the potter.

The cause of fragility is an impotency to be extended; and therefore stone is more fragil than metal, and to fictile earth is more fragil than crude earth. Bacon's Natural History.

- FICTIO. n. f. [fictio, Latin; fictio, Fr.]

1. The act of feigning or inventing.

If the presence of God in the image, by a mere fictio of the mind, be a sufficient ground to worship that image, is not God's real presence in every creature a far better ground to worship it?
Stillingfleet.

Fiction is of the essence of poetry, as well as of painting; there is a resemblance in one of human bodies, things, and actions, which are not real; and in the other of a true story by a fiction.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. The thing feigned or invented.

If through mine ears pierce any consolations,
By wise discourse, sweet tunes, or poets *fiction*s;
If ought I cease these hideous exclamations,
While that my soul, she lives in afflictions.

Sidney.

So also was the fiction of those golden apples kept by a dragon, taken from the serpent, which tempted Eve.

Raleigh.

3. A falsehood; a lie.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictus, Latin.] Fictitious; imaginary; invented. A word coined by Prior.

And studied lines and fictitious circles draw.

Pope.

FICTITIOUS. adj. [fictivus, Latin.]

1. Counterfeit; false; not genuine.

Draw him strictly to,

That all who view the piece may know
He needs no trappings of fictitious fame. Dryden.

2. Feigned; imaginary.

The numerous persons are as fictitious as the airy ones; and Belinda resembles you in nothing but in beauty.

Pope.

3. Not real; not true; allegorical; made by prospœcia.

Milton, sensible of this defect in the subject of his poem, brought into it two characters of a shadowy and fictitious nature in the persons of sin and death, by which means he has interwoven in his fable a very beautiful allegory.

Addison.

FICTITIOUSLY. adv. [from fictitious.]

Falsely; counterfeitedly.

These pieces are fictitiously set down, and have no copy in nature.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

as well, though not so much, as con-cords; and may well be termed the ornament or rhetorical part of musick, in regard that in this are introduced all the varieties of points, figures, syncopes, diversities of measures, and whatever else is capable of adorning the composition. Harris.

FIGURA'TION. n. f. [figuratus, Latin.]

1. Determination to a certain form.
Neither doth the wind, as far as it carrieth a voice, with motion thereof confound any of the delicate and articulate figurations of the air in variety of words. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The act of giving a certain form.
If motion be in a certain order, there fol-loweth vivification and figuration in living creatures perfect. Bacon's Natural History.

FIGURATIVE. adj. [figuratif-ve, French,
from figura, Latin.]

1. Representing something else; typical;
representative.
This, they will say, was figurative, and served by God's appointment but for a time, to shadow out the true everlasting glory of a more divine sanctity; wherunto Christ being long since entered, it seemeth that all these curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

2. Changed by rhetorical figures from the primitive meaning; not literal.
How often have we been railed at for understanding words in a figurative sense, which cannot be literally understood without overthrowing the plainest evidence of sense and reason.
Stillingfleet.
This is a figurative expression, where the words are used in a different sense from what they signify in their first ordinary intention. Rogers.

3. Full of figures; full of rhetorical exornations; full of changes from the original sense.
Sublime subjects ought to be adorned with the sublimest and with the most figurative expressions.
Dryden's Juu. Pref.

FIGURATIVELY. adv. [from figurative.]
By a figure; in a sense different from that which words originally imply; not literally.
The custom of the apostle is figuratively to transfer to himself, in the first person, what belongs to others. Hammond.
The words are different, but the sense is still the same; for therein are figuratively intended Uziah and Ezechiass. Brown.
Satyr is a kind of poetry in which human vices are reprehended, partly dramatically, partly simply; but, for the most part, figuratively and occultly. Dryden's Juvenal, Dedicat.

1. The form of any thing as terminated by the outline.
Flowers have all exquisite figures, and the flower numbers are chiefly five and four; as in primroses, briar-roses, single muskroses, single pinks and gilliflowers, which have five leaves; lilies, flower-de-luces, borage, buglafs, which have four leaves. Bacon.
Men find green clay that is soft as long as it is in the water, so that one may print on it all kind of figures, and give it what shape one pleases.
Boyle.
Figures are properly modifications of bodies;
for pure space is not any where terminated, nor can be: whether there be or be not body in it, it is uniformly continued. Locke.

2. Shape; form; semblance.
He hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing in the figure of a lamb the feats of a lion. Shakspeare.

3. Person; external form; appearance graceful or inelegant, mean or grand.
The blue German shall the Tigris drink,
Ere I, forsaking gratitude and truth,
Forget the figure of that godlike youth: Dryden.
I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses.
Addison's Spectator.

- A good figure, or person, in man or woman, gives credit at first sight to the choice of either. Clarissa.
4. Distinguished appearance; eminence; remarkable character.
While fortune favour'd, while his arms support
The cause, and rul'd the counsels of the court,
I made some figure there; nor was my name
Obscure, nor I without my share of fame. Dryd.
The speech, I believe, was not to much designed by the knight to inform the court, as to give him a figure in my eye, and keep up his credit in the country. Addison's Spectator.
Not a woman shall be unexplained that makes a figure either as a maid, a wife, or a widow.
Addison's Guardian.
Whether or no they have done well to set you up for making another kind of figures, time will witness. Addison.
Many princes made very ill figures upon the throne, who before were the favourites of the people. Addison's Freeholder.
5. Magnificence; splendour.
If it be his chief end in it to grow rich, that he may live in figure and indulgence, and be able to retire from business to idleness and hurry, his trade, as to him, loses all its innocency. Law
6. A statue; an image; something formed in resemblance of something else.
Several statues, which seem'd at a distance of the whitest marble, were nothing else but so many figures in ivory. Addison.
7. Representations in painting; persons exhibited in colours.
In the principal figures of a picture the painter is to employ the fineness of his art; for in them consists the principal beauty of his work. Dryd.
My favourite books and pictures sell;
Kindly throw in a little figure,
And set the price upon the bigger. Prior.
8. Arrangement; disposition; modification.
The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with the parts of the question. Watts' Logic.
9. A character denoting a number.
Hearts, tongues, figures, scribes, bards, poets cannot Think, speak, cast, write, sing, number
His love to Antony. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.
He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick; but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age.
Bacon.
As in accounts cyphers and figures pass for real soms, so in human affairs words pass for things themselves. South's Sermons.
10. The horoscope; the diagram of the aspects of the astrological houses.
We do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortunetelling: the works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and dabby beyond our element. Shaksp. Lear.
He set a figure to discover
If you were fled to Rye or Dover. Hudibras.
Figure-flingers and star-gazers pretend to foretell the fortunes of kingdoms, and have no foresight in what concerns themselves. L'Esfrange.
11. [In theology.] Type; representative.
Who was the figure of him that is to come.
Romans.
12. [In rhetoric.] Any mode of speaking in which words are detorted from their literal and primitive sense. In strict acceptation, the change of a word is a trope, and any affection of a sentence a figure; but they are confounded even by the exactest writers.
Silken teems precise,
Three pil'd hyperboles, spruce affectation,
Figures pedanticall, these former flies
Have blown me full of maggot ostentation.
Shaksp. Lear.

- Here is a strange figure invented against the plain and natural sense of the words; for by praying to bestow, must be understood only praying to pray. Stillingfleet.
They have been taught rhetoric, but never taught language; as it the names of the figures that embellish'd the discourse of those, who understood the art of speaking, were the very art and skill of speaking well. Locke.
13. [In grammar.] Any deviation from the rules of analogy or syntax.
- To FIGURE. v. a. [from figuro, Latin.]
1. To form into any determinate shape.
Trees and herbs, in the growing forth of their boughs and branches, are not figured, and keep no order. Bacon.
Accept this goblet, rough with figur'd gold.
Dryden's Virgil.
2. To show by a corporeal resemblance: as in picture or statuary.
Arachne figur'd how Jove did afove
Eoropa like a bull, and on his back
Her through the sea d' bear; so lively seen,
That it true sea, and true bull ye would ween.
Spenser.
Now marks the course of rolling orbs on high,
O'er figur'd world now travels with his eye. Pope.
3. To cover or adorn with figures, or images.
I'll give my jewels for a set of leads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
My gay apparel for an almshouse gown,
My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. Shaksp.
4. To diversify; to variegate with adventurous forms or matter.
But this effusion of such manly drops,
Startle mine eyes, and make me more amaz'd
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heav'n Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors. Shaksp.
5. To represent by a typical or figurative resemblance.
When sacraments are said to be visible signs of invisible grace, we thereby conceive how grace is indeed the very end for which these heavenly mysteries were instituted; and the matter whereof they consist is such as signifieth, figurath, and re-presenteth their end. Hooker.
There is a history in all mens lives,
Figuring the nature of the times deceased. Shaksp.
Marrage rings are not of this stuff:
Oh! why should ought less precious or less tough
Figure our loves? Donne.
An heroic poem should be more fitted to the common actions and passions of human life, and more like a glass of nature, figuring a more practicable virtue to us than was done by the ancients.
Dryden.
The emperor appears as a rising sun, and holds a globe in his hand to figure out the earth that is enlightened and adulated by his beams. Addison.
6. To image in the mind.
None that feels sensibly the decays of age, and his life wearing off, can figure to himself those imaginary charms in riches and praise, that men are apt to do in the warmth of their blood. Temple.
If love, alas! be pain, the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare.
Prior.
7. To prefigure; to foreshow.
Three glorious sons, each one a perfect son;
In this the heaven figures some event. Shaksp.
8. To form figuratively; to use in a sense not literal.
Figured and metaphorical expressions do well to illustrate more abstruse and unfamiliar ideas, which the mind is not yet thoroughly accustomed to. Locke.
9. To note by characters.
Each thought was visible that roll'd within,
As thro' a crystal glass the figur'd hours are seen.
Dryden.

- FIGURE-FLINGER*. n. s. [figure and fling.]
A pretender to astrology and prediction.
Quacks, figure-flingers, pettifoggers, and republican plotters cannot well live without it.
Collier of Conscience.
- FIGWORT*. n. s. [fig and wort; ficaria.]
A plant. Miller.
- FILACEOUS*. adj. [from filum, Latin.] Consisting of threads; composed of threads.
They make cables of the bark of lime trees: it is the stalk that maketh the filaceous matter commonly, and sometimes the down that groweth above. Bacon's Natural History.
- FILACER*. n. s. [filizarius, low Lat.
filum] An officer in the Common Pleas,
so called because he files those writs whereon he makes process. There are fourteen of them in their several divisions and counties: they make out all original process, as well real as personal and mixt. Harris.
- FILAMENT*. n. s. [filament, French;
filamenta, Latin.] A slender thread;
a body slender and long like a thread.
The effluvia passing out in a smaller thread, and more enlightened filament, it thireth not the bodies interposed. Broome.
The lungs of consumptives have been consumed, nothing remaining but the ambient mein-brane, and a number of withered veins and filaments. Harvey on Consumptions.
The ever-ralling orb's impulsive ray
On the next threads and filaments does bear,
Which form the springy texture of the air;
And those still strike the next, 'till to the sight
The quick vibration propagates the light.
Blackmore.
The dung of horses is nothing but the filaments
of the hay, and as such combustible. Arbutn.
- FILBERT*. n. s. [This is derived by Junius and Skinner from the long beards or husks, as corrupted from full beard or full of beard. It probably had its name, like many other fruits, from some one that introduced or cultivated it;
and is therefore corrupted from Filbert or Filibert, the name of him who brought it hither.] A fine hazel nut with a thin shell.
In August comes fruit of all sorts; as plumbs, pears, apricots, barberries, fillets, muskmelons, monksheads, or all colours. Bacon's Essays.
Thou had a brain, such as it is indeed!
On what else should thy worm of fancy feed?
Yet in a filbert I have often known
Maggots survive, when all the kernel's gone.
Dorset.
There is also another kind, called the filbert of Constantinople; the leaves and fruit of which are bigger than either of the former: the best are those of a thin shell. Mortimer.
- To FILCH. v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology. The French word filer, from which some derive it, is of very late production, and therefore cannot be its original.] To steal; to take by theft; to pilfer; to pillage; to rob; to take by robbery. It is usually spoken of petty thefts.
He shall find his wealth wonderfully enlarged by keeping his cattle in inclosures, where they shall always have life being, that none are continually filch'd and stolen. Spenser.
The champion robbeth by night,
And prowleth and filcheth by day.
Who steals my purse, steals trash; 'tis something, nothing;
'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands; Tusser.

But he that filches from me my good name,
 Robs me of that which not enriches him,
 And makes me poor indeed. Shakspeare.

He could outcree cities like hives of bees,
 wherein every bee did nought else but sting;
 some like hornets, some like filching wasps,
 others as drones. Burton on Melancholy.

What made thee venture to betray,
 And filch the lady's heart away. Hudibras.
 The pinnace was formerly a husbandman, that secretly filched away his neighbour's goods.

Fain would they filch that little food away,
 While unrestrain'd thote happy gluttons prey. Dryden.
 So speeds the wily fox, alarm'd by fear,
 Who lately filch'd the turkey's caitow care. Gay.

FILCHER. n. f. [from filch.] A thief;
 a petty robber.

FILLE. n. f. [file, French; filum, a thread,
 Latin.]

1. A thread. Not used.
 But let me resume the fil: of my narration, which this of jest of books, but agreeable to my course of life, hath a little interrupted. Wotton

2. A line on which papers are strung to keep them in order.
 All records, wherein there was any memory of the king's attainder, should be cancelled and taken off the file. Bacon
 The petitions being thus prepared, do you continually let apart an hour in a day to peruse those,
 and then rank them into several files, according to the subject matters. Bacon.

Th' apothecary-train is wholl' blind;
 From files a random recipe they take,
 And many deaths of one prescription make. Dryden.

3. A catalogue; roll; series.
 Our present musters grow upon the file
 To five and twenty thousand men of choice. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

The valu'd file
 Distinguishes the swift, the slow, the subtle. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

4. A line of soldiers ranged one behind another.
 Those goodly eyes,
 That o'er the files and musters of the war
 Have glōw'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn
 Upon a tawny front. Shakspeare.
 So saying, on he led his radiant files,
 Dazzling the moon. Milton's Paradise Lost

5. [peol, Saxon; viele, Dutch.] An instrument to rub down prominences.
 The rough or coarse-toothed file, if it be large, is called a rubber, and is to take off the unevenness of your work which the hammer made in the forging:
 the bastard-toothed file is to take out of your work the deep cuts, or file-strokes, the rough file made: the fine-toothed file is to take out the cuts, or file-strokes, the bastard file made: and the smooth file is to take out those cuts, or file-strokes, that the fine file made. Moxon.
 A file for the mattocks and for the coulters.

The smiths and armourers on palmers ride,
Files in their hands, and hammers at their side. Dryden FILCUTTER. n. f. [file and cutter.] A maker of files.
 Gad-steel is a tough sort of steel: filecutters use it to make their chissels, with which they cut their files. Moxon.

TO FILE. v. a. [from filum, a thread.]

1. To string upon a thread or wire.
 Whence to file a bill is to offer it in its order to the notice of the judge.
 From the day his first bill was file'd he began to collect reports. Alaburn and Pope.

2. [from peolan, Saxon.] To cut with a file.

They which would file away most from the largeness of that offer, do in more sparing terms acknowledge little less. Hooker.

Let men be careful how they attempt to cure a blenish by filng or cutting off the head of such an overgrown tooth. Ray.

3. To smooth; to polish.
 His humour is lotty, his discourse peremptory,
 his tongue filch, and his eye ambitious. Shakspeare.
 4. [from filan, Saxon.] To foul; to fully; to pollute. This sense is retained in Scotland.

For Banquo's issue have I fil'd my mind,
 For them the gracious Duncan have I murder'd. Shakspeare.

His weeds divinely fashioned,
 All fil'd and mangl'd. Chapman's Illiad.

TO FILE. v. n. [from the noun.] To march in a file, not abreast, but one behind another.

All ran down without order or ceremony, 'till we drew up in good order, and file'd off. Tutler
 D'd all the grosser atoms at the cell
 Of chance file off to form the pondrous ball,
 And undetermin'd into order fall? Blackmore.

FILMOT. n. f. [corrupted from feuille morte, a dead leaf, French.] A brown or yellow-brown colour.

The colours you ought to wish for are blue or filmot, turned up with red. Swift.

FILER. n. f. [from file.] One who files;
 one who uses the file in cutting metals.

FILIAL. adj. [filial-le, French; filius,
 Latin.]

1. Pertaining to a son; befitting a son.
 My mischievous proceeding may be the glory of his filial piety, the only reward now left for so great a merit. Sidney.

From imposition of strict laws, to free
 Acceptance of large grace; from fervid fear
 To filial; works of law, to works of faith. Milton.

He griev'd, he wept, the sight an image brought
 Of his own filial love, a sadly pleasing thought. Dryden.

2. Bearing the character or relation of a son.
 And thus the filial godhead answer'ing spoke. Milton.

Where the old myrtle her good influence sheds,
 Sprigs of like leaf erect their filial heads;
 And when the parent rose decays and dies,
 With a resembling face the daughter buds arise. Prior.

FILIA'TION. n. f. [from filius, Latin.]
 The relation of a son to a father; correlative to paternity.

The relation of paternity and filiation, between the first and second person, and the relation between the sacred persons of the Trinity, and the denomination thereof, must needs be eternal, because the terms of relation between whom that relation itself were eternal. Hale.

FILINGS. n. f. [without a singular; from file.] Fragments rubbed off by the action of the file.

The filings of iron infused in vinegar, will, with a decoction of galls, make good ink, without any copperose. Brown.

The chippings and filings of those jewels are of more value than the whole mass of ordinary authors. Fenton on the Chifficks.

TO FILL. v. a. [pyllan, Saxon.]

1. To store till no more can be admitted.
 Fill the waterpots with water, and they fill'd them up to the brim. John.
 I am who fill
 Infinite, nor vacuum space. Milton.

The celestial quires, when orient light
 Exhaling first from darkness they beheld;
 Birth-day of heav'n and earth; with joy and shout
 The hollow universal orb they fill'd. Milton.

2. To store abundantly.
 Be fruitful, multiply, and in the seas
 And lakes and running streams the waters fill. Milton.

3. To satisfy; to content.
 He with his comforted Eve
 The story heard attentive, and was fill'd
 With admiration and deep muse to hear. Milton.
 Nothing but the supreme and absolute Infinite can adequately fill and superabundantly satisfy the infinite desires of intelligent beings. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

4. To glut; to surfeit.
 Thou art going to lord Timon's feast.
 —Ay, to see meat fill knives, and wine heat fools. Shakspeare.

5. To FILL out. To pour out liquor for drink.

6. To FILL out. To extend by something contained.

I only speak of him
 Whom pomp and greatness fits to loose about,
 That he wants majesty to fill them out. Dryden.

7. To FILL up. [Up is often used without much addition to the force of the verb.] To make full.

Hope leads from goal to goal,
 And opens still, and opens on his soul;
 Till lengthen'd on to faith, and unconfin'd,
 It pours the bliss that fills up all the mind. Pope.

8. To FILL up. To supply.
 When the several trades and professions are supplied, you will find most of those that are proper for war absolutely necessary for filling up the laborious part of life, and carrying on the under-work of the nation. Addison on the War.

9. To FILL up. To occupy by bulk.
 There would not be altogether so much water required for the land as for the sea, to raise them to an equal height; because mountains and hills would fill up part of that space upon the land, and so make less water requisite. Burnet.

10. To FILL up. To engage; to employ.
 Is it far you ride?
 —As far, my lord, as will fill up the time
 'Twixt this and supper. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

TO FILL. v. n.

1. To give to drink.
 In the cup which the hath filled, fill to her double. Revelations.
 We fill to th' general joy of the whole table,
 And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss. Shakspeare.

2. To grow full.
 3. To glut; to satiate.
 Things that are sweet and fat are more filling, and do swim and hang more about the mouth of the stomach, and go not down so speedily. Bacon.

4. To FILL up. To grow full.
 Neither the Palus Meotis nor the Euxine, nor any other seas, fill up, or by degrees grow shall-lower. Woodward.
 The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion; the second, or the filling up with flesh, incarnation;
 and the last, or skinning over, cicatrization. Sharp.

FILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. As much as may produce complete fatisfaction.
 Her neck and breasts were ever open bare,
 That eye thereof her babes may suck their fill. Fairy Queen.

But thus inflam'd bespoke the captain,
 Who fourth peace shall have his fill of war. Farfax.
 When ye were thirsty, did I not cleave the rock,
 and waters flowed out to your fill? 2 Esdras.
 Mean while enjoy
 Your fill, what happiness this happy state
 Can comprehend, incapable of more. Milton.

Amid' the tree now got, where plenty hung
Tempting to sigh, to pick and eat my fill,
I spai'd not. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Which made me gently first remove your fears,
That so you might have room to entertain
Your fill of joy. Dryden's Sophy.
Your barbarity may have its fill of destruction. Pope.

2. [more properly thill.] The place between the shafts of a carriage.
This mule being put in the fill of a cart, run away with the cart and timber. Mortimer.

FILLER. n. f. [from fill.]

1. Any thing that fills up room without use.

'Tis a meer filler, to stop a vacancy in the hexameter, and connect the preface to the work of Virgil. Dryden's Æneid, Dedicatien.

A mixture of tender gentle thoughts and suitable expressions, of forced and inextricable conceits, and of needless fillers up to the rest. Pope.
2. One whose employment is to fill vessels of carriage.

They have six diggers to four fillers, so as to keep the fillers always at work. Mortimer.

FILLET. n. f. [filet, French; filum, Latin.]

1. A band tied round the head or other part.

His baleful breath inspiring, as he glides,
Now like a chain around her neck he rides;
Now like a fillet to her head repairs,
And with his circling volumes folds her hairs. Dryden's Æneid.

She scorn'd the praise of beauty, and the care;
A belt her waist, a fillet binds her hair. Pope.

2. The fleshy part of the thigh: applied commonly to veal.

The youth approach'd the fire, and as it burn'd,
On five sharp broachers rank'd, the roast they turn'd:

These morsels ray'd their stomachs; then the rest
They cut in legs and fillets for the feast. Dryden.

3. Meat rolled together and tied round.

Fillet of a fenny snake, Shakspeare.
In the cauldron boil and bake.
The mixture thus, by chymick art
United close in every part,
In fillets roll'd, or cut in pieces,
Appear'd like one continu'd species. Swift.

4. [In architecture.] A little member which appears in the ornaments and mouldings, and is otherwise called listel.

Pillars and their fillets of silver. Exodus.

To FILLER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bind with a bandage or fillet.
2. To adorn with an atragal.
He made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapters, and filleted them. Exodus.

To FILLIP. v. a. [A word, says Skinner, formed from the sound. This resemblance I am not able to discover, and therefore am inclined to imagine it corrupted from fill up, by some combination of ideas which cannot be recovered.]

To strike with the nail of the finger by a sudden spring or motion.

If I do, fillip me with a three-man beetle. Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Then let the pebbles on the hungry beach
Fillip the stars: then let the mutinous winds
Strike the proud cedars 'gainst the fiery sun.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

We see, that if you fillip a lute-string, it sheweth double or treble. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FILLIP. n. f. [from the verb.] A jerk of the finger let go from the thumb.

FILLY. n. f. [filoy, Welsh; filic, French.]

1. A young horse or mare. Not now used. Geld fillies, but titts, yet a nine days of age, They die else of gelding, and gelders do rage: Young fillies so likely of bulk and of bone, Keep such to be breeders, let gelding alone. Tusser.

A well-wayed horse will convey thee to thy journey's end, when an unbacked filly may give thee a fall. Suckling.

2. A young mare: opposed to a colt or young horse.

I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile, Neighing in likeness of a filly foal. Shakspeare.

I am joined in wedlock, for my sins, to one of those fillies: who are described in the old poet. Addison's Spectator.

FILM. n. f. [φύλμα, Saxon.] A thin pellicle or skin.

While the silver needle did work upon the sight of his eye, to remove the film of the cataract, he never saw any thing more clear or perfect than that white needle. Bacon.

Michael from Adam's eyes the film remov'd,
Which that false fruit that promis'd clearer sight
Had bred. Milton's Paradise Lost.

A stone is held up by the films of the bladder, and so kept from gaping or offending it. Graunt.

There is not one infidel so ridiculous as to pretend to solve the phenomena of sight, fancy, or cogitation, by those fleeting superficial films of bodies. Bentley's Sermons.

He from thick films shall purge the visual ray,
And on the sightless eyeballs pour the day. Pope.

To FILM. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover with a pellicle or thin skin.

It will but skin and film the ulcerous place,
Whilst rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FILMY. adj. [from film.] Composed of thin membranes or pellicles.

So the false spider, when her nets are spread,
Deep ambu'd in her silent den does lie;
And feels, far off, the trembling of her thread,
Whose filmy cord should bind the struggling fly. Dryden.

The wasps with fruitless toil
Flap filmy pinions off, to exaricate
Their feet in liquid shackles bound, 'till death
Bereave them of their worthless souls; such doom
Waits luxury, and lawless love of gain. Philips.

Loose to the winds their airy garments flew,
Thin glittering textures of the filmy dew;
Dipt in the richest tincture of the skies,
When light disports in ever-mingling dyes. Pope.

To FILTER. v. a. [filtrō, low Latin; per flum trabere.]

1. To defecate by drawing off liquor by depending threads.

2. To strain; to percolate.
Dilute this liquor with fair water, filter it through a paper, and so evaporate it. Grew.

FILTER. n. f. [filtrum, Latin.]

1. A twist of thread, of which one end is dipped in the liquor to be defecated, and the other hangs below the bottom of the vessel, so that the liquor drips from it.

2. A strainer; a searce.

That the water passing through the veins of the earth, should be rendered fresh and potable, which it cannot be by any percolations we can make, but the saline particles will pass through a tenfold filter. Ray on the Creation.

FILTH. n. f. [filth, Saxon.]

1. Dirt; nastiness; any thing that soils or fouls.

Wisdom and goodness to the vile seem vile;
Filths favour but themselves. Shakspeare.

Neither may you trust waters that taste sweet;
for they are commonly found in rising grounds of great cities, which must needs take in a great deal of filth. Bacon's Nat. History.

How perfect then is man? from head to foot
Defil'd with filth, and rotten at the root. Sandys.

Though perhaps among the rout
He wildly sings his filth about;
He still has gratitude and sap'ence,
To spare the folks that give him hap'pence. Swift.

2. Corruption; grossness; pollution.

Such do likewise exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

FILTHILY. adv. [from filthy.] Nastily; foully; grossly.

It stuck filthily in camel's stomach that bulls, bears, and the like, should be armed, and that a creature of his size should be left defenceless. L'Estrange.

FILTHINESS. n. f. [from filthy.]

1. Nastiness; foulness; dirtiness.

Men of virtue suppressed it, lest their shining should discover the others filthiness. Sidney.

2. Corruption; pollution.

They held this land, and with their filthiness polluted this same gentle soil long time,
That their own mother loath'd their beastliness,
And 'gan abhor her brood's unkindly crime,
All were they born of her own native slime. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

They never duly improved the utmost of such a power, but gave themselves up to all the filthiness and licentiousness of life imaginable. South.

FILTHY. adj. [from filth.]

1. Nasty; foul; dirty.
Fair is foul, and foul is fair;
Hover through the fog and filthy air. Shakspeare.

2. Gross; polluted.

As all stories are not proper subjects for an epic poem or a tragedy, so neither are they for a noble picture: the subjects both of the one and of the other, ought to have nothing of immoral, low, or filthy in them. Dryden's Dunciad.

To FILTRATE. v. a. [from filtrare.]

To strain; to percolate; to filter.

The extract obtained by the former operation, burnt to ashes, and those ashes boiled in water and filtrated, yield a fiery salt. Arbuthnot.

FILTRATION. n. f. [from filtrate.] A method by which liquors are procured fine and clear. The filtration in use is straining a liquor through paper, which, by the smallness of its pores, admits only the finer parts through, and keeps the rest behind. Quincy.

We took then common nitre, and having by the usual way of solution, filtration, and coagulation, reduced it into crystals, we put four ounces of this purified nitre into a strong new crucible. Boyle.

FIMBLE Hemp. n. f. [corrupted from femiale.]

The light summer hemp, that bears no seed, which is called finble hemp. Mortimer.

Good flax and good hemp, for to have of her own,

In May a good housewife will see it be sown;
And afterwards trim it, and seive at a need,
The fimbles to spin, and the carle for her seed. Tusser.

FIN. n. f. [fin, Saxon; win, Dutch.]

The wing of a fish; the limb by which he balances his body, and moves in the water.

He that depends
Upon your favours, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Shakspeare.

Their fins consist of a number of glistly bones, long and slender, like pins and needles. Moré.

Thus at half-ebb a rolling sea
Returns, and wins upon the shore;
The watery herd, affrighted at the roar,

Rest on their *fin*s awhile, and stay,
Then backward take their wond'ring way.
Dryden.

Still at his oar th' industrious Libys plies;
But as he plies, each busy arm shrinks in,
And by degrees is fashion'd to a fin.
Addison.

FIN-FOOTED. adj. [fin and foot.] Palmipedous; having feet with membranes between the toes.

It is described like stipesides, or birds which have their feet or claws divided; whereas it is palmipedous or fin-footed, like swans and geese, according to the method of nature in latirostrous or flat-billed birds; which being generally swimmers, the organ is wisely contrived unto the action, and they are framed with fins or oars upon their feet.
Brown.

FIN'NABLE. adj. [from fine.] That admits a fine; that deserves a fine.

This is the order for writs of covenant that be finable.
Bacon.

He sent letters to the council, wherein he acknowledged himself favoured in bringing his cause finable.
Hayward.

FINAL. adj. [final, French; finalis, Latin.]

At last resolv'd to work his final smart,
He lifted up his hand, but back again did start.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

4. Respecting the end or motive.

Some things in such sort are allowed, that they be also required as necessary unto salvation, by way of direct, immediate, and proper necessity final; so that, without performance of them, they cannot by ordinary course be saved, nor by any means be excluded from life, observing them.
Hooker.

By its gravity air raises the water in pumps, siphons, and other engines; and performs all those feats which former philosophers, through ignorance of the efficient cause, attributed to a final, namely, nature's abhorrence of a vacuity.
Ray.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.
Collier.

FIN'NALLY. adv. [from final.]

1. Ultimately; lastly; in conclusion.

Sight best adv'd
Whom patience finally must crown.
Milton.

2. Completely; without recovery.

Not any house of noble English in Ireland was utterly destroyed, or finally rosted out by the hand of justice, but the house of Desmond only.
Davies on Ireland.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for but their own.
South.

FINANCE. n. f. [French.] Revenue; income; profit. It is seldom used in the singular.

This sort of finance hath been increased. Bacon.
The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain; as be the escheats and forfeitures.

To FIND. v. a. [findan, Saxon; vinden, Dutch.]

1. To obtain by searching or seeking.

Ask, and it shall be given to you; seek, and ye shall find.
Matthew.

Whereas thou hast searched all ray stuff, what hast thou found of all the houthold stuff? Gen.
She disappear'd, and leit me dark; I wak'd
To find her, or for ever to deplore
Her loss.
Milton.

A bird that flies about,
And beats itself against the cage,
Finding at last no passage out,
It sits and sings.
Cowley.

2. To obtain something lost.

When he hath found his sheep, he layeth it on his shoulders rejoicing.
Luke.

In my school days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way, with more advised watch,
To find the other forth; by vent'ring both,
I oft found both.
Shakspere.

3. To obtain something desired.

Thus I embolden'd spake, and freedom used
Permissive, and acceptance found.
Milton.

Our voluntary service he requires,
Not our necessitated; such with him
Finds no acceptance, nor can find.
Milton.

find out the Almighty unto perfection? Job.

There are agents in nature able to make the particles of bodies stick together by very strong attractions, and it is the business of experimental philosophy to find them out.
Newton.

What hinders then, but that you find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force? Addison.

22. To FIND out. To obtain the knowledge of.

The principal part of painting is to find out, and thoroughly to understand, what nature has made most beautiful.
Dryden.

23. To FIND out. To invent; to excogitate.

A man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and to find out every device which shall be put to him.
2 Chronicles.

24. The particle out is added often without any other use than that it adds some force or emphasis to the verb.

While she proudly march'd about,
Greater conquests to find out,
She beat out Susan by the by.
Cowley.

It is agreeable to compare the face of a great man with the character, and to try if we can find out in his looks and features either the haughty, cruel, or merciful temper.
Addison.

He was afraid of being insulted with Greek; for which reason he desired a friend to find him out a clergyman rather of plain sense than much learning.

25. To FIND, is a word of very licentious and capricious use, not easily limited or explained; its first idea is the consequence of search; the second, equally frequent, is mere occurrence.

FINDER. n. f. [from find.]

1. One that meets or falls upon any thing. We will bring the device to the bar, and crown thee for a finder of madmen. Shakspeare.
2. One that picks up any thing lost. Some lewd squeaking cryer, May gall the finder's conscience, if they meet. Donne.

O yes! if any happy eye This loving wanton shall desirey, Let the finder luckily know Mine is the wag; 'tis I that owe The winged wand'ner Cassiano.

FINDFAULT. n. f. [find and fault.] A censurer; a caviller.

We are the makers of manners, Kate; and the liberty that follows our places, stops the mouth of all findfaults. Shakspeare.

FINDY. adj. [findig, Saxon.] Plump; weighty; firm; solid. Not used. Thus the proverb,

A cold May and a windy, Makes the barn fat and findy; means that it stores the barn with plump and firm grain. Juvius.

FINE. adj. [finne, French; fin, Dutch and Erse; perhaps from finitus, completed, Latin.]

1. Not coarse. Not any skill'd in loops of fingering fine, With this for curious net-work might compare. Spenser.
2. Refined; pure; free from dross. He was arrayed in purple and fine linen. Luke. Two vessels of fine copper, precious as gold. Ezra.

3. Subtile; thin; tenuous: as, the fine spirits evaporate. When the eye standeth in the finer medium, and the object in the grosser, things shew greater: but contrariwise, when the eye is placed in the grosser medium and the object in the finer. Bacon.

4. Refined; subtilly cogitated. In substance he promised himself money, honour, friends, and peace in the end; but those things were too fine to be fortunate, and succeed in all parts. Bacon. Whether the scheme has not been pursued so far as to draw it into practice, or whether it be too fine to be capable of it, I will not determine. Templ.

5. Keen; thin; smoothly sharp. Great affairs are commonly too rough and stubborn to be wrought upon by the finer edges or points of wit. Bacon.

6. Clear; pellucid; transparent: as, the wine is fine. Let the wine without mixture or stum be all fine, Or call up the master. Johnson.

7. Nice; exquisite; delicate. Are they not sensibler then, that think the foul Nought but a fine perfection of the sense? Davies. The irons of planes are set fine or rank: they are set fine when they stand so shallow below the sole of the plane, that in working they take off a thin shaving. Moxon's Mech. Exerc.

8. Artful; dexterous. The wisdom of all these latter times, in princely affairs, is rather fine deliveries, and mistings of dangers and mischiefs, than solid and grounded courtes to keep them aloof Bacon.

9. Fraudulent; sly; knavishly subtle. Through his fine handling, and his cleanly play, He all those royal signs had stol'n away. Hubbard's Tale.

10. Elegant; beautiful in thought or language. To call the trumpet by the name of the metal was fine. Dryden.

11. Applied to person, it means beautiful with dignity.
12. Accomplished; elegant of manners. He was not only the finest gentleman of his time, but one of the finest scholars. Felton.
13. Showy; splendid. It is with a fine genius as with a fine fashion; all those are displaced at it who are not able to follow it. Pope. The satirical part of mankind will needs believe, that it is not impossible to be very fine and very filthy. Swift.

14. [Ironically.] Something that will serve the purpose; something worth contemptuous notice.

That same knave, Ford, her husband, hat' the finest mid devil of jealousy in him, master Brook, that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare. They taught us, indeed, to cloath, to dwell in houses, To feast, to sleep on down, to be profuse: A fine exchange for liberty. Phillips' Briton.

FINE. n. f. [fin, Cimbr.]

1. A mulct; a pecuniary punishment. The killing of an Irishman was not punished by our law as manslaughter, which is felony and capital; but by a fine or pecuniary punishment, called an ericke. Davies on Ireland.

2. Penalty. Ev'n this ill night your breathing shall expire, Paying the fine of rated treachery. Shakspeare.

3. Forfeit; money paid for any exemption or liberty. The spirit of wantonness is sure scared out of him: if the devil have him not in fee-simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shakspeare. Besides fines set upon plays, games, balls and feasting, they have many customs which contribute to their simplicity. Addison. How vain that second life in other breath, Th' estate which wits inherit after death! Ease, health, and life for this they must resign, Unsure the tenure, but how vast the fine! Pope.

4. [from finis, Latin; fin, ensin, French.] The end; conclusion. It is seldom used but adverbially, in fine. To conclude; to sum up all; to tell all at once. In fine, whatsoever he was, he was nothing but what it pleased Zelmene, the powers of his spirit depending of her. Sidney. His resolution, in fine, is, that in the church a number of things are strictly observed, whereof no law of scripture maketh mention one way or other. Hooker.

Still the fine's the crown; Whate'er the courtes, the end is the renown. Shakspeare. Your daughter, ere she seems as won, D'sires this ring; appoints him an encounter; In fine, delivers me to fill the time, Her self most chastely absent. Shakspeare. The blessings of fortune are the lowest: the next are the bodily advantages of strength and health: but the superlative blessings, in fine, are those of the mind. L'Esrange. In fine, he hears no limbs about him found, With sores and sicknesses belagard round. Dryden's Farnesal.

In fine, let there be a perfect relation betwixt the parts and the whole, that they may be entirely of a piece. Dryden.

To FINE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To refine; to purify. The fining pot is for silver, and the furnace for gold. Proverbs. There is a vein for the silver, and a place for gold, where they fine it. Job.

2. To embellish; to decorate. Now not in use. Hugh Capet, also, who usurp'd the crown, To fine his title with some shews of truth, Convey'd himself as heir to th' lady Lingare. Shakspeare's Henry v.

3. To make less coarse. It fines the grafs, but makes it thort, though thick. Mortimer.

4. To make transparent. It is good also for fuel, not to omit the shavings of it for the fining of wine. Mortimer.

5. [from the substantive.] To punish with pecuniary penalty. To fine men one third of their fortune, without any crime committed, seems very hard. Locke.

To FINE v. n. To pay a fine. What poet ever fin'd for himself? or who By rhymes and verse did ever bid mayor grow? Oldham.

To FINEDRAW v. a. [fine and draw.] To sew up a rent with so much nicety that it is not perceived.

FINEDRAWER n. f. [from finedraw.] One whose business is to sew up rents.

FINEFINGERED. adj. [fine and finger.] Nice; artful; exquisite. The most fin-finger'd workman on the ground, Arachne by his means was vanquished. Spenser.

FINELY. adv. [from fine.]

1. Beautifully; elegantly; more than justly. Plutarch says very finely, that a man should not allow himself to hate even his enemies; because if you indulge this passion on some occasions, it will rise of itself in others. Addison. The walls are painted, and represent the labours of Hercules: many of them look very finely, though a great part of the work has been cracked. Addison on Italy.

2. Keenly; sharply; with a thin edge or point. Get you black lead, sharpened finely. Peachment.

3. Not coarsely; not meanly; gayly. He was alone, save that he had two persons of honour, on either hand one, finely attired in white. Bacon's Nov Atlantis.

4. In small parts; subtilly; not grossly. Salpêtre was but grossly beaten; for it should not be finely powdered. Boyle.

5. [Ironically.] Wretchedly; in such a manner as to deserve contemptuous notice. Let laws be made to obey, and not to be obeyed, and you will find that kingdom finely governed in a short time. South. For him she loves: She nam'd not me; that may be Torrifmond, Whom the has thrice in private seen this day: Then I am finely caught in my own snare. Dryden.

FINENESS. n. f. [from fine.]

1. Elegance; beauty; delicacy. Every thing was full of a choice fineness, that, if it wanted any thing in majesty, it supplied with increase in pleasure; and if at the first it struck not admiration, it ravished with delight. Sidney. As the French language has more fineness and smoothness at this time, so it had more compass, spirit, and force in Montaigne's days. Temple. The softness of her sex, and the fineness of her genius, conspire to give her a very distinguishing character. Prior.

2. Show; splendour; gayety of appearance.

The fineness of cloaths destroys the ease: it often helps men to pain, but can never rid them of any: the body may languish under the most splendid cover. Decay of Piety.

3. Subtily; artfulness; ingenuity.

Note, with the fineness of their souls,
By reason guide his execution. Shakspeare.

4. Purity; freedom from dross or base mixtures.

Our works are, indeed, nought else
But the protractive tryals of great Jove,
To find positive constancy in men;
The fineness of which metal is not found
In fortune's love. Shakspeare.

I am doubtful whether men have sufficiently refined metals; as whether iron, brass, and tin be refined to the height: but when they come to such a fineness as serveth the ordinary use, they try no farther. Bacon's Natural History.

The ancients were careful to coin their money in due weight and fineness; only in times of exigence they have diminished both the weight and fineness. Arbutnot on Coins.

FINER. n. f. [from fine.] One who purifies metals.

Take away the dross from the silver, and there shall come forth a vessel for the finer. Proverbs.

FINERY. n. f. [from fine.] Show; splendour of appearance; gayety of colours.

Dress up your houses and your images,
And put on all the city's finery,
To consecrate this day a festival. Southern.

The capacities of a lady are sometimes apt to fall short in cultivating cleanliness and finery together. Swift.

Don't chuse your place of study by the finery of the prospects, or the most various scenes of sensible things. Watts.

They want to grow rich in their trades, and to maintain their families in some such figure and degree of finery, as a reasonable christian life has no occasion for. Law.

FINE'SSE. n. f. [French.] Artifice; stratagem: an unnecessary word which is creeping into the language.

A circumstance not much to be stood upon, in case it were not upon some finesse. Hayward.

FINGER. n. f. [Finger, Saxon; from fangan, to hold.]

1. The flexible member of the hand by which men catch and hold.

The fingers and thumb in each hand consist of fifteen bones, there being three to each finger. Quincy.

You seem to understand me,
By each at once her choppy finger laying Upon her skinny lips. Shakspeare's Macb.

Diogenes, who is never said,
For aught that ever I could read,
To whine, put fingers i' th' eye, and sob,
Because h' had ne'er another tub. Hudibras.

The hand is divided into four fingers bending forward, and one opposite to them bending backward, and of greater strength than any of them singly, which we call the thumb, to join with them severally or united; whereby it is fitted to lay hold of objects of any size or quantity. Ray.

A hand of a vast extension, and a prodigious number of fingers playing upon it, the organ pipes of the world, and making every one found a particular note. Keel against Burnet.

Poor Peg sewed, spun, and knit for a livelihood, 'till her fingers ends were sore. Abath.

2. A small measure of extension; the breadth of a finger.

Go now, go trust the wind's uncertain breath,
Remov'd four fingers from approaching death;
Or seven at most, when thickest is the board. Dryden's Juvenal.

One of these bows with a little arrow did pierce through a piece of steel three fingers thick. Wilkins' Math. Mag.

3. The hand; the instrument of work; manufacture; art.

Food, that forgets her stubborn look,
This fineness from thy finger took. Waller.

To FINGER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To touch lightly; to toy with.

Go, get you gone, and let the papers lie;
You would be *finger*ing them: to anger me. Shakspeare.

One that is covetous is not so highly pleased with the meer sight and *finger*ing of money, as with the thoughts of his being considered as a wealthy man. Greene's Cosmol. Sac.

2. To touch unseasonably or thievishly.

His ambition would needs be *finger*ing the sceptre, and heaving him into his father's throne. South's Sermons.

3. To touch an instrument of musick.

She hath broke the lute;
I did but tell her she mistook her frets,
And bow'd her hand to teach her *finger*ing. Shakspeare.

4. To perform any work exquisitely with the fingers

Not any skill'd in loops of *finger*ing lace,
With this so curious net-work might compare. Spenser.

FINGER-FERN. n. f. [finger and fern; asplenium, Latin.] A plant.

FINGER-STONE. n. f. [finger and stone; telenites, Latin.] A fossil resembling an arrow.

2. To make perfect.

A poet uses episodes; but episodes, taken separately, finish nothing. Brome on the Odyssey.

3. To perfect; to polish to the excellency intended.

Though here you all perfection should not find,
Yet is it all th' Eternal Will design'd;
It is a finish'd work, and perfect in his kind. Blackmore.

I would make what bears your name as finish'd as my last work ought to be; that is, more finish'd than the rest. Pope.

4. To end; to put an end to.

FINISHER. n. f. [from finish.]

1. Performer; accomplisher.

He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister. Shakspeare.

2. One that puts an end; ender.

This was the condition of those times: the world against Athanasius, and Athanasius against it: half an hundred of years spent in doubtful trials which of the two, in the end, would prevail; the side which had all, or else that part which had no friend but God and death, the one a defender of his innocency, the other a finisher of all his troubles. Hooker.

3. One that completes or perfects.

The author and finisher of our faith. Hebrews.
O prophet of glad tidings! finisher
Of utmost hope! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FINITE. adj. [finitus Latin.] Limited; bounded; terminated.

Servius conceives no more thereby than a finite number for indefinite. Brown.

Finite of any magnitude holds not any proportion to infinite. Locke.

That supposed infinite duration, will by the very supposition, be limited at two extremes, though never so remote asunder, and consequently must needs be finite. Bentley.

FINITELESS. adj. [from finite.] Without bounds; unlimited.

It is ridiculous onto reason, and finiteless as their desires. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

FINITELY. adv. [from finite.] Within certain limits; to a certain degree.

They are creatures still, and that sets them at an infinite distance from God; whereas all their excellencies can make them but *finite*ly distant from us. Stillingsfleet.

FINITENESS. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries.

I ought now to unbuy the current of my passion, and love without other boundary than what is set by the finiteness of my natural powers. Norris.

FINITUDE. n. f. [from finite.] Limitation; confinement within certain boundaries. This is hardly an authorized word.

Finite, applied to natural or created things, imports the proportions of the several degrees of affections, or properties of these things to one another; infinitude, the unboundedness of these degrees of affections, or properties. Cheyne.

FINLESS. adj. [from fin.] Wanting fins.

He angers me
With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
And of a dragon and a finless fish. Shakspeare.

But all that youth can be thou art. Cowley.

They have no notion of life and fire in fancy and in words, and any thing that is just in grammar and in measure is good oratory and poetry to them. Felton on the Classics.

He brings, to make us from our ground retire,
The reasoner's weapons and the poet's fire. Blackmore.

Exact Racine, and Corneille's noble fire,
Taught us that France had something to admire. Pope.

The bold Longinus all the nine inspire,
And warm the critick with a poet's fire. Pope.

Oh may some spark of your celestial fire,
The last, the meanest of your fans inspire. Pope.

10. The passion of love.

Love various hearts does variously inspire,
It firs in gentle bosoms gentle fire,
Like that of incense on the altar laid;
But raging flames tempestuous souls invade;
A fire which every windy passion blows,
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows. Dryden.

The fire of love in youthful blood,
Like what is kindled in brush-wood,
But for a moment burns. Shadwell.

The god of love retires;
Dim are his torches, and extinct his fires. Pope.
New charms shall still increase desire,
And time's swift wing shall fan the fire. Moore's Fables.

Laxity; limberness; want of tension.

FLAGGY. adj. [from flag.]

1. Weak; lax; limber; not stiff; not tense.
His flaggy wings when forth he did display,
Were like two sails, in which the hollow wind
Is gather'd full, and worketh speedy way. Fairy Queen.

That basking in the sun thy bees may lye,
And resting there, their flaggy pinions dry. Dryden's, Virgil.

2. Weak in taste; insipid.

Graft an apple-cion upon the stock of a cole-wort, and it will bear a great flaggy apple. Bacon's Natural History.

FLAGITIOUS. adj. [from flagitius, Latin.]

1. Wicked; villanous; atrocious.
No villainy or flagitious action was ever yet committed, but, upon a due enquiry into the causes of it, it will be found, that a lye was first or last the principal engine to effect it. South.

There's no working up in a flagitious and per-verse nature by kindness and discipline. L'F strange.

First, those flagitious times,
Pregnant with unknown crimes,
Conspire to violate the nuptial bed. Roscommon

Perjury is a crime of so flagitious a nature, we cannot be too careful in avoiding every approach towards it. Allison.

But if in noble minds some dregs remain,
Not yet purg'd off, of spleen and sour disdain,
Discharge that rage on more provoking crimes,
Nor fear a death in these flagitious times. Pope.

2. Guilty of crimes.

He dies, sad outcast of each church and state,
And, huder still, flagitious yet not great. Pope.

FLAGITIOUSNESS. n. f. [from flagitiosus.]

Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back. Prior.

4. Notorious; flaming into notice.

When fraud is great, it furnishes weapons to defend itself; and at worst, if the crimes be so flagrant that a man is laid aside out of perfect shame, he retires loaded with the spoils of the nation. Swift.

With equal poize let speedy justice sway,
And flagrant crimes with certain vengeance pay;
But, 'till the proofs are clear, the stroke delay. Smith.

FLAGRA'TION. n. f. [flagro, Latin.]

Burning. Dict.

FLAG'GSTAFF. n. f. [flag and staff.]

The staff on which the flag is fixed.

The duke, less numerous, but in courage more,
On wings of all the winds to combat flies:
His murdering guns a loud defiance roar,
And bloody cruises on his flagstaff's rise. Dryden.

FLAIL. n. f. [flagellum, Latin; stogel, German.]

The instrument with which grain is beaten out of the ear; the tool of the thrasher.

Our soldiers, like the night-owl's lazy flight,
Or like a lazy thresher with a flail,
Fell gently down as if they it uck their friends. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

When in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail had thresh'd the corn,
That ten-day labourers could not end. Milton.
In this pile shall reign a mighty prince,
Born for a scourge of wit, and flail of sense.

The dextrous handling of the flail, or the plough, and being good workmen with these tools, did not hinder Gideon's and Cincinnatus's skill in arms and government. Locke.

The thresher, Duck, could o'er the queen prevail;

The proverb says, no fence against a flail. Swift.
FLAKE. n. f. [flocus, Latin.]

1. Any thing that appears loosely held together, like a flock of wool.

Crimson circles, like red flakes in the element,
when the weather is hottest. Sidney.

And from his wide devouring oven sent
A flake of fire, that flashing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd, and almost made appear'd.

The earth is sometimes covered with snow two or three feet deep, made up only of little flakes or pieces of ice. Burnet.

Small drops of a misting rain, descending through a freezing air, do each of them shoot into one of those figured icicles; which, being ruffled by the wind, in their fall are broken, and clustered together into small parcels, which we call flakes of snow. Grew's Cosmolog.

Upon throwing in a stone the water boils for a considerable time, and at the same time are seen little flakes of scum rising up. Addison.

2. A stratum; layer; film; lamina.

The flakes of his tough flesh so firmly bound,
As not to be divorced by a wound. Sandys.

The teeth cut away great flakes of the metal, till it received the perfect form the teeth would make. Maxon.

To FLEAK. v. a. [from the noun.] To form in flakes or bodies loosely connected.

From the bleak pole no winds inclement blow,
Mold the round hail, or flake the fleecy snow.

To FLAKE. v. n. To break into laminae;
to part in loose bodies.

FLA'RY. adj. [from flake.]

1. Loosely hanging together.

The silent hour steals on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east. Shak.
The trumpet roars, long flaky flames expire,
With sparks that seem to set the world on fire.

Hence, when the snows in winter cease to weep,
And undissolv'd their flaky texture keep,
The banks with ease their humble streams contain,
Which swell in summer, and those banks disdain.

2. Lying in layers or strata; broken into laminae.

FLAM. n. f. [A cant word of no certain etymology.] A falsehood; a lie; an illusory pretext.

A flam more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old ruspicy and aug'ry. Hudibras.

'Till these men can prove the things, ordered by our church, to be either intrinsically unlawful or indecent, all pretences or pleas of conscience to the contrary are nothing but cant and cheat. flam and delusion. South.

What are most of the histories of the world but lies? Lies immortalized and consign'd over as a perpetual abuse and flam upon posterity. South.

To FLAM. v. a. [from the noun.] To deceive with a lie. Merely cant.

For so our ignorance was flam'd,
To damn ourselves t' avoid being damn'd.

God is not to be flam'd off with lies, who knows exactly what thou can'st do, and what not.

FLAMBEAU. n. f. [French.] A lighted torch.

The king seized a flambeau with zeal to destroy.

As the attendants carried each of them a flambeau in their hands, the sultan, after having ordered all the lights to be put out, gave the word to enter the house, find out the criminal, and put him to death. Addison's Guardian.

FLAME. n. f. [flamma, Latin; flamme,
French.]

1. Light emitted from fire.

Is not flame a vapour, turne, or exhalation heated red hot, that is so hot, as to thine? For bodies do not flame without emitting a copious fume, and this fume burns in the flame. Newton.

What flame, what lightning e'er
So quick an active force did bear! Cowley.

2. Fire.

Jove, Prometheus' theft allow;
The flames he once stole from thee, grant him
now. Cowley.

3. Ardour of temper or imagination; brightness of fancy; vigour of thought.

Of all our elder plays,
This and Philaster have the loudest fame;
Great are their faults, and glorious is their flame:
In both our English genius is express'd,
Lofty and bold but negligently dress'd. Waller.

4. Ardour of inclination.

Smit with the love of kindred arts we came,
And met congenial, mingling flame with flame.

5. Passion of love.

My heart 's on flame, and does like fire
To her aspire. Cowley.

Come arm'd in flames; for I would prove
All the extremities of love. Cowley.

No warning of th' approaching flame;
Swiftly like sudden death it came:
I lov'd the moment I beheld. Granville.

To FLAME. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine as fire; to burn with emission of light.

Can you think to blow out the intended fire your city is ready to flame in, with such weak breath as this? Shakspere.

He fell flaming through th' ethereal sky
To bottomless perdition. Milton.

As one great furnace flam'd. Milton.

2. To shine like flame.

Behold it like an ample curtain spread,
Now streak'd and glowing with the morning red;
Anon at noon in flaming yellow bright,
And chusing sabbath for the peaceful night. Prior.

3. To break out in violence of passion.

FLAMECOLOURED. adj. [flame and colour.] Of a bright yellow colour.

'Tis strong, and it does indifferent well in

The lees and dregs of a flat tamed pipe. Shaksp.
Taste so divine! that what of sweet before Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this and harsh. Milton.

The miry fields
Rejoicing in rich mold, most ample fruit
Of beauteous form produce; pleasing to sight,
But to the tongue inelegant and flat. Philips.

8. Dull; unanimated; frigid.

Short speeches fly abroad like darts, and are thought to be shot out of secret intentions; but as for large discourses, they are flat things, and not so much noted. Bacon.

Some short excursions of a broken vow
He made indeed, but flat insipid stuff. Dryden.

9. Depressed; spiritless; dejected.

I feel my genial spirits droup,
My hopes all flat, nature within me seems
In all her functions weary of herself. Milton.

10. Unpleasing; tasteless.

How weary, dull, flat and unprofitable
Seem to me all the uses of this world! Shaksp.
To one firmly persuaded of the reality of heavenly happiness, and earnestly desirous of obtaining it, all earthly satisfactions must needs look little, and grow flat and unflavoury. Atterb.

11. Preremptory; absolute; downright.

His horse with flat tiring taught him, that discreet stays make speedy journeys. Sidney.

It is a flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted; for true justice punisheth nothing but the evil act or wicked word. Spenser's State of Ireland.

As it is in the nature of all men to love liberty, so they become flat libertines, and fall to all incontinencies. Spenser.

You start away,
And lend no ear unto my purposes;
Those prisoners you shall keep:
—I will, that's flat. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Thus repuls'd, our final hope
Is flat despair: we must exasperate
Th' Almighty Victor to spend all his rage,
And that must end us. Milton's Parad. Lost
If thou sin in wine or wantonness,
Boast not thereof, nor make thy shame thy glory;
Faintly gets pardon by submissiveness,
But he that boasts, thus that out of his story,
He makes flat war with God, and doth defy,
With his miser clod of earth, the spacious sky. Herbert.

You had broke and rabb'd his house,
And stole his talismanique louse;
And all his new-found old inventions,
With flat felonious intentions. H. Abbas

12. Not shrill; not acute; not sharp in sound.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle. Bacon.
The upper end of the windpipe is endowed with several cartilages and muscles to contract or dilate it, as we would have our voice flat or sharp. Ray on the Creation.

FLAT. n. f.

1. A level; an extended plane.
The strings of a lute, viol, or virginals, give a far greater sound, by reason of the knot, board and concave underneath, than if there were nothing but only the flat of a board to let in the upper air into the lower. Bacon.
Because the air receiveth great tincture from the earth, expose flesh or fish, both upon a stake of wood some height above the earth, and upon the flat of the earth. Bacon.

It comes near an artificial miracle to make divers distinct eminences appear a flat by force of shadows, and yet the shadows themselves not to appear. Wotton's Architecture.
He has cut the side of the rock into a flat for a garden; and by laying on it the waste earth, that he has found in several of the neighbouring parts, furnished out a kind of luxury for a hermit. Allison on Italy.

2. Even ground; not mountainous,
Now pile your dust upon the quick and dead,
Till of this flat a mountain you have made,
T' o'er-top old Pelion, or the skyish head
Of blue Olympus. Shakspeare's Hamlet
The way is ready and not long,
Beyond a row of myrtles, on a flat,
Fast by a mountain. Milton's Par. Lost

3. A smooth low ground exposed to inundations.
The ocean, overpeering of his list,
Eats not the flats with more impetuous haste
Than young Laertes, in a riotous head, O'erboards your officers. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
All the infections, that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prospero fall. Shaks.
Half my pow'r 'tis this night,
Passing these flats, are taking by the tide;
These Lincoln washes have devoured them. Shakspeare's King John.

4. Shallow; strand; place in the sea where the water is not deep enough for ships.
I should not see the sandy hour-glass run,
But I should think of shallows and of flats. Shakspeare
The difficulty is very great to bring them in or out through so many flats and sands, if wind and weather be not very favourable. Ribbigh's Essays.
Having newly left these grammatical flats and shallows, where they stuck unreasonably, they are now turmoiled with their unballasted wits in labyrinthical and unquiet deeps of controversy. Milton.

Full in the prince's passage hills of sand,
And dangerous flats, in secret ambush lay,
Where the false tides flew o'er the covered land,
And streamen with dissembled depths betray. Dryden

Must we now have occasion of mere flats and shallows, to the utter ruin of navigation? Bentley.

5. The broad side of a blade.
A dated mandate came
From that great will which moves this mighty frame,
Bid me to thee, my royal charge, repair,
To guard thee from the daemons of the air;
My flaming sword above 'em to display,
All keen and ground upon the edge of day,
The flat to sweep the visions from thy mind,
The edge to cut 'em through that stay behind. Dryden.

6. Depression of thought or language.
Milton's Paradise Lost is admirable; but am I therefore bound to maintain, that there are no flats amongst his elevations, when 'tis evident he creeps along sometimes for above an hundred lines together? Dryden

7. A surface without relief, or prominences.
Are there then such ravishing charms in a dull unvaried flat, to make a sufficient compensation for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills? Bentley.

To FLAT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To level; to depress; to make broad and smooth.

The ancients say, if you take two twigs of several fruit-trees, and flat them on the sides, and bind them close, and set them in the ground, they will come up in one stock. Bacon.
With horrid shapes he does her sons expose,
Disfends their swelling lips, and flats their nose. Cresch.

2. To make vapid.

An orange, lemon, and apple, wrapt in a linen cloth, being buried for a fortnight four feet deep within the earth, though in a moist place and rainy time, were become a little harder than they were; otherwise fresh in their colour, but their juice somewhat flattened. Bacon.

To FLAT. v. n.

1. To grow flat: opposed to swell.
I burnt it the second time, and observed the skin shrink, and the swelling to flat yet more than at first. Temple.

2. To render unanimated or evanid.
Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flat and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles

FLATLONG. adv. [flat and long.] With the flat downward; not edgewise.
What a slow was there given?
—An it had fallen flatlong. Shakspeare's Tempest

FLATLY. adv. [from flat.]

To yield him more obedience, or support. Dan
Unjust, thou say'st,
Flatly unjust, to bind with laws the free. Milt
Not any interpreters allow it to be spoken of such as flatly deny the being of God; but of them that believing his existence, exclude him from directing the world. Bentley.

FLATNESS. n. f. [from flat.]

1. Evenness; level extension.
2. Want of relief or prominence.
It appears to be very plain and uniform, that one would think the coiner looked on the flatness of a figure, as one of the greatest beauties in sculpture. Allison on Medals.
3. Deadness; insipidity; vapidness.

Deadness or flatness in cyder is often occasioned by the too free admission of air into the vessel. Mortimer's Husbandry.

4. Dejection of fortune.
The emperor of Russia was my father:
Oh, that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter's trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery! Shakspeare.

5. Dejection of mind; want of life; want of spirit.

How fast does obscurity, flatness, and imperitency flow in upon our meditations? 'Tis a difficult task to talk to the purpose, and to put life and perspicuity into our discourses. Collier.

6. Dulness; insipidity; frigidity.
Some of Homer's translators have swelled into fustian, and others sunk into flatness. Pope.

7. The contrary to shrillness or acuteness of sound.

Take two saucers, and strike the edge of the one against the bottom of the other within a pipe of water, and you shall find the sound groweth more flat, even while part of the saucer is above the water; but that flatness of sound is joined with a harshness. Bacon.

To FLATTEN. v. a. [flatur, French; from flat.]

1. To make even or level, without prominence or elevation.

2. To beat down to the ground.
If they should he in it, and beat it down, or flatten it, it will rise again. Mortimer.

4. To deject; to depress; to dispirit.
To FLATTEN. v. n.

1. To grow even or level.
2. To grow dull and insipid.

Here joys that endure for ever, fresh and in vigour, are opposed to satisfactions that are attended with satiety and surfeits, and flatten in the very tasting. L'Estrange.

FLATTER. n. f. [from flat.] The workman or instrument by which bodies are flattened.

To FLATTER. v. a. [flatter, French.]

1. To soothe with praises; to please with blandishments; to gratify with servile obsequiousness; to gain by false compliments.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered. Shakspeare's Julius Caesar.

His nature is too noble for the world;
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for 's power to thunder: his heart's his mouth;

What his breast forges that his tongue must vent. Shakspeare.

He that flattereth his neighbour, spreadeth a net for his feet. Proverbs.
He flattereth himself in his own eyes, until his iniquity be found hateful. Pf. lms.

After this way of flattering their willing benefactors out of part, they contrived another of forcing their unwilling neighbours out of all their possessions. Decay of Piety.

Averse alike to flatter or offend.
I learn to flatter you or any man. Newton.

2. To praise falsely.
Flattered crimes of a licentious age,
Provoke our censure. Young

3. To please; to soothe. This sense is purely gallick.
A consort of voices supporting themselves by their different parts makes a harmony, pleasingly fills the ears and flatters them. Dryden.

4. To raise false hopes.
He, always vacant, always amiable,
Hopes thee, of flatt'ring gales Unmindful. Milton.

FLA'TTERER. n. f. [from flatter.] One who flatters; a fawner; or a wheedler; one who endeavours to gain favour by pleasing falsties.

When I tell him he hates flatterers,
He says he does; being then most flattered
Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

Some praises proceed merely of flattery; and if he be an ordinary flatterer, he will have certain common attributes, which may serve every man: But if he be a cunning flatterer, which is a man's self. But if he be an impudent flatterer, look wherein a man is conscious to himself that he is most defective, and is most out of countenance in himself, that will the flatterer entitle him to performe.

If we from wealth to poverty descend,
Want gives to know the flatterer from the friend.
Dryden.

After treating her like a goddess, the husband uses her like a woman: what is still worse, the most abject flatterers degenerate into the greatest tyrants.
Addison's Guardian.

The publick should know this: yet whoever goes about to inform them, shall be censured for a flatterer.
Swift.

FLA'TTERY. n. f. [from flatter; flatterie, French.] False praise; artful obsequiousness; adulation.

Minds, by nature great, are conscious of their greatness,
And hold it mean to borrow aught from flattery.
Rowe.

Simple pride for flattery makes demands;
See how they beg an aim of flattery!
They languish, O! support them with a lye.
Young.

FLA'TTISH. adj. [from flat.] Somewhat flat; approaching to flatness.

These are from three inches over to six or seven, and of a flattish shape.
Woodward on Fossils.

FLA'TULENCY. n. f. [from flatulent.]

1. Windiness; fulness of wind; turgescence by wind confined.

Vegetable substances contain a great deal of air, which expands itself, producing all the disorders of flatulency.
Arbuthnot.

2. Emptiness; vanity; levity; airiness.

Whether most of them are not the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to, may be determined by any that considers the natural flatulency of that airy scheme of notions.
Glanville.

FLA'TULENT. adj. [from flatulentus, flatus, Latin.]

1. Turgid with air; windy.

Pease are mild and demulcent: but being full of aerial particles are flatulent, when dissolved by digestion.
Arbuthnot.

Flatulent tumours are such as easily yield to the pressure of the finger; but readily return, by their elasticity, to a tumid state again.
Quincy.

2. Empty; vain; big without substance or reality; puffy.

To talk of knowledge, from those few indistinct representations which are made to our gross faculties, is a flatulent vanity.
Glanville.

How many of these flatulent writers have sunk in their reputation, after seven or eight editions of their works
Dryden.

FLA'TUOSITY. n. f. [from flatuosité, French; from flatus, Latin.] Windiness; fulness of air.

The cause is flatuosity; for wind stirred, moveth to expel; and all puffers have in them a raw spirit: of wind, which is the principal cause of tension in the stomach and belly.
Bacon.

FLA'TUOUS. adj. [from flatus, Latin.] Windy; full of wind.

Rhubarb in the stomach, in a small quantity, dith digest and overcome, being not flatuous nor loathsome; and so fendeth it to the mesentery veins, and, being opening, it helpeth down urine.
Bacon's Natural History.

FLA'TTUS. n. f. [Latin.] Wind gathered in any cavities of the body, caused by indigestion and a gross internal perspiration; which is therefore discoloured by warm aromatics.
Quincy.

FLA'TWISE. adj. [flat and wise; so it should be written, not flatways.] With the flat downward; not the edge.

Its posture in the earth was flatwise, and parallel to the site of the stratum in which it was deposited.
Woodward on Fossils.

To FLAUNT. v. n.

1. To make a fluttering show in apparel. With ivy canopy'd, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle
Milton.

These courtiers of applause deny themselves things convenient to flaunt it out, being frequently enough tam to immolate their own desires to their vanity.
Boyle.

Here, attir'd beyond our purse, we go,
For usele's ornament and flaunting show:
We take on truit, in purple robes to shine,
And poor, are yet ambitious to be fine.
Dryden.

You sit, you loiter about alehouses, or flaunt about the streets in your new-gilt chariot, never minding me nor your numerous family.
Arbuth.

2. To be hung with something loose and flying. This seems not to be proper: the words flaunt and flutter might with more propriety have changed their places.

Fortune in men has some small difference made;
One flaunts in rags, one flutters in brocade.
Pope.

FLAUNT. n. f. Any thing loose and airy.

How would he look to see his work so noble,
Witlily bound up, what would he say! or how Should I in these my borrow'd flaunts behold
The sterms of his presence!
Shakspeare.

FLA'VOUR. n. f.

1. Power of pleasing the taste.

They have a certain flavour, at their first appearance, from several accidental circumstances, which they may lose, if not taken early.
Addison.

2. Sweetness to the smell; odour; fragrance.

Myrtle, orange, and the blushing rose,
With bending heaps, to nigh their bloom disclose,
Each seems to smell the flavour which the other blows.
Dryden.

FLA'VOROUS. adj. [from flavour.]

1. Delightful to the palate.

Sweet grapes degenerate there, and fruits decline'd
From their first flav'rous taste, renounce their kind.
Dryden.

2. Fragrant; odorous.

FLAW. n. f. [from flāw, to break; floh, Saxon, a garment.]

1. A crack or breach in any thing.

This heart shall break into a thousand flaws
Or ere I weep
Shakspeare's King Lear.

Wool, new-shorn, being laid usually upon a vessel of verjuice, after some time had drunk up a great part of the verjuice, though the vessel were whole, without any flaw, and had not the bung-hole open.
Bacon's Natural History.

We found it exceeding difficult to keep out the air from getting in at any imperceptible hole of flaw.
Boyle.

A flaw is in thy ill-bak'd vessel found:
'Tis hollow, and returns a jarring sound.
Dryd.

As if great Atlas, from his height,
Should sink beneath his heavenly weight;
And with a mighty flaw the flaming wall, as once it shall,
Should gape immense, and rushing down, overwhelm this nether ball.
Dryden.

Whether the nymph shall break Diana's law,
Or some frail china-jar receive a flaw,
He that would keep his house in repair, must attend every little breach of flaw, and suppy it immediately, else time alone will bring all to ruin.

Swift.

2. A fault; defect; something that weakens or invalidates.

Yet certain though it be, it hath flaws; for that the scrivener and brokers do value unsound men to serve their own turn.
Bacon's Essays.

Traditions were a proof alone,
Could we be certain such they were, so known:
But since some flaws in long decisions may be,
They make not truth but probability.
Dryden.

And laid her dowry out in law,
To null her journey with a flaw.
Hudibras.

Their judgment has found a flaw in what the generality of mankind admires.
Addison.
So many flaws had this vow in its first conception
Atterbury.

3. A sudden gust; a violent blast. [from flū, Latin.] Obsolete.

Being incens'd, he's flint;
As humorous as winter, and as sudden
As flaws congealed the spring of day.
Shakspeare.
Oh, that that earth, which kept the world in awe,
Should patch a wall, to expel the winter's flaw.
Shakspeare's Hamlet.

As a huge fish, laid
Near to the cold weed gathering shore, is with a north-flaw fraid,
Shoots back; to, sent against the ground,
Was foil'd Eurialus.
Chapman's Iliad.

Burking their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, and stormy gust, and flaw,
Boreas, and Cæcis, and Argives loud,
And Thracias tend the woods, and seas upturn.
Milton.

I heard the rack,
As earth and sky would mingle; but myself
Was distant; and these flaws, though mortals fear them,
As dangerous to the pillar'd frame of heav'n,
Or to the earth's dark basis underneath,
Are to the main inconsiderable.
Milton.

4. A tumult; a tempestuous uproar.

And this fell tempest shall not cease to rage
Until the golden circuit on my head
Do calm the fury of this madbrain'd flaw.
Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The fort's revolved to the emperor,
The gates are open'd, the portcullis drawn,
And deluges of armies from the town
Come pouring in; I heard the mighty flaw;
When first it broke, the crowding engines saw
Which choak'd the passage.
Dryden's Aureng.

5. A sudden commotion of mind.

Oh these flaws and starts,
Impostors to true fear, would become
A woman's story at a Winter's fire.
Shakspeare.

To FLAW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To break; to crack; to damage with fissure.

But his flaw'd heart,
Alike, too weak the conflict to support,
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

The cup was flawed with such a multitude of little cracks, that it looks like a white, not like a crystalline cup.
Boyle.

The brazen cauldrons with the frosts are flaw'd,
The garment still with ice, at hearths is thaw'd.
Dryden.

2. To break; to violate. Out of use.

Fiance hath flaw'd the leaguer, and hath attached
Our merchant's goods.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

FLA'WLESS. adj. [from flaw.] Without cracks; without defects.

A star of the first magnitude, which the more high, more vast, and more flav'rous, shines only bright enough to make itself conspicuous
Boyle.

FLAWN. n. f. [from flawn, Saxon; flan French; flaye, Dutch.] A sort of custard; a pie baked in a dish.

FLEE'CED. adj. [from fleece.] Having *fleece*s of wool.

As when two rams, flirr'd with ambitious pride,
Fight for the rule of the rich fleece'd flock,
Their horned fronts so fierce on either side
Do meet, that with the terror of the shock
Astonied both stand senseless as a block.

FLEE'CY. adj. [from fleece.] Woolly; covered with wool.

That doth enrich these downs is worth a thought
To that my errand.

From eastern point
Of Libya, to the fleecey star, that bears
Andromeda far off Atlantic seas.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn;
Let fleecey stocks her rising hills adorn.

The good shepherd tends his fleecey care,
Seeks freshest pasture, and the purest air;
Explores the lost, the wand'ring sheep directs.

To FLEER. v. n. [pleafrican, to trifle, Sax. fleardan, Scottish. Skinner thinks it formed from leer.]

1. To mock; to gibe; to jest with insolence and contempt.

You speak to Casca, and to such a man
That is no fleeing tell-tale. Shakspeare.

Dares the slave

Come hither, cover'd with an antick face,
To flee and scorn at our solemnity! Shakspeare.

Do I, like the female tibe,

Think it well to flee and gibe? Swift.

2. To leer; to grin with an air of civility.

How popular and courteous; how they grin and flee upon every man they meet! Burton.

FLEER. n. f. [from the verb]

1. Mockery expressed either in words or looks.

Encave yourself,

And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable corns,

That dwell in every region of his face. Shakspeare.

2. A deceitful grin of civility.

He shall generally spy such false lines, and such a sly treacherous flee upon the face of deceivers, that he shall be sure to have a cast of their eye to warn him, before they give him a cast of their nature to betray him. South.

FLEERER. n. f. [from flee.] A mocker;
a fawner. Dist.

FLEET, FLEOT, FLOT. Are all derived

As far as winds can bear, or waters flow. Prior.

FLEET. n. f. [fleot, Saxon, an estuary, or arm of the sea.] A creek; an inlet of water. A provincial word, from which the Fleet prison and Fleet-fleet are named.

They have a very good way in Essex of draining lands that have land-floods or flets running through them, which make a kind of a small creek. Mortimer's Husbandry.

FLEET. adj. [fiotur, Islandick.]

1. Swift of pace; quick; nimble; active.

Upon that shore he spied Atin stand;
There by his master left, when late he far'd
In Phædræ's fleet bark. Fairy Queen.

I take him for the better dog:

—Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet,
I would esteem him worth a dozen such. Shakspeare.

He had in his stables one of the fleetest horses in England. Clarendon.

His fear was greater than his haste;

For fear, though fleeter than the wind,
Believes 'tis always left behind. Hudibras.

So fierce they drove, their couriers were so fleet,
That the turf trembled underneath their feet. Dryden.

He told us that the welkin would be clear
When swallows fleet soar high and sport in air. Gay.

2. [In the husbandry of some provinces.]

Light; superficially fruitful.

Marl cope-ground is a cold, stiff, wet clay,
unless where it is very fleet for pasture. Mortimer.

3. Skimming the surface. Cant word.

Those lands must be plowed fleet. Mortimer.

TO FLEET. v. n. [plotan, Saxon.]

1. To fly swiftly; to vanish.

How all the other passions flee to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair!
Shakspeare.

A wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Ev'n from the gallows did his fell soul flee. Shakspeare.

2. To be in a transient state; the same with flit.

Our understanding, to make a complete notion,
must add something else to this fleeing and unremarkable superficialities, that may bring it to our acquaintance. Digby on Bodies.

O fleeing joys

Of Paradise, dear bought with lasting woe!
Milton.

While I listen to thy voice,

Chloris! I feel my life decay:

That powerful noise

Calls my fleeing soul away. Waller.

As empty clouds by rising winds are tost,

Their fleeing forms scarce sooner found than lost. Prior.

TO FLEET. v. a.

1. To skim the water.

Who swelling sails in Caspian sea doth cross,
And in frail wood an Adrian gulph doth flee,
Doth not, I wene, so many evils meet. Fairy Q.

2. To live merrily, or pass time away lightly.

Many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and flee the time carelessly as they did in the golden age. Shakspeare.

3. [In the country.] To skim milk; to take off the cream: whence the word fleeing dish.

FLEETINGDISH. n. f. [from flee and

FLESH. n. f. [flæc, flæpe, Saxon;
vlesch, Dutch; fêol, Erse.]

1. The body distinguished from the soul.

As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brais impregnable. Shakspeare. Rich. 11.

A disease that's in my flesh,
Which I must needs call mine. Shakspeare.

And thou, my soul, which turn'st with curious eye

To view the beams of thine own form divine,
Know, that thou can'st know nothing perfectly,
While thou art clouded with this flesh of mine. Dorsets.

2. The muscles distinguished from the skin, bones, tendons.

A spirit hath not flesh and bones. Novo Testa.

3. Animal food distinguished from vegetable.

Flesh should be forborne as long as he is in coats, or at least till he is two or three years old. Locke.

Flesh, without being qualified with acids, is too alkalescent a diet. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Acidity in the infant may be cured by a flesh diet in the nurse. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. The body of beasts or birds used in food, distinct from fishes.

There is another indictment upon thee, for suffering flesh to be eaten in thy house, contrary to the law. Shakspeare's Henry 1v.

nal passions or appetites.

When strong passions or weak fleshliness
Would fix the right way seek to oraw him wide, Spenser.

He would, through temperance and steadfastness,
Teach him the weak to strengthen, and the strong suppress.

Corrupt manners in living, breed false judgment in doctrine: sin and fleshliness bring forth sects and heresies. Alschuler.

FLESHLY. adj. [from flesh.]

1. Corporal.

Nothing resembles death so much as sleep;
Yet then our minds themselves from slumber keep,
When from their fishy bondage they are free.
D. Ham.

2. Carnal; lascivious.
Belial, the dastardly spirit that fell,
The tenth devil; and, after Adam's fall,
The fishy in man's.

3. Animal; not vegetable.

'Till now the distant island rose in view. Pope.

FLEW. n. f. The large chaps of a deep-mouthed hound.
FLEWED. adj. [from flew.] Chapped; mouthed.
My bounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So plow'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew.
Shakespeare.

FLEXANIMOUS. adj. [flexanimus, Latin.] Having power to change the disposition of the mind.
That flexanimous and golden-tongued orator.
Howell.

FLEXIBILITY. n. f. [flexibilité, French; from flexible.] 1. The quality of admitting to be bent; pliancy.
Do not the rays which differ in refrangibility differ also in flexibility? And are they not, by their different intensions, separated from one another, so as after separation to make the colours.
Newton's Opticks.

2. Eagerness to be persuaded; ductility of mind; compliance; facility.
Resolve rather to err by too much flexibility than too much perverseness, by meekness than by self-love. Hanmond.

FLEXIBLE. adj. [flexibilis, Latin; flexible, French.] 1. Possible to be bent; not brittle; easy to be bent; pliant; not stiff.
When splitting winds
Make flexible the knees of knotted oaks. Shakespeare.
Take a stock gilly-flower, tie it upon a stick,
put them both into a glass full of quick silver, so that the flower be covered: after four or five days you will find the flower fresh, and the stick harder and less flexible than it was. Bacon.

2. Not rigid; not inexorable; complying; obsequious.
Phocyon was a man of great severity, and no way flexible to the will of the people. Bacon.

3. Ductile; manageable.

Pity causeth sometimes tears, and a flexion or cast of the eye aside. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

FLEXOR. n. f. [Latin.] The general name of the muscles which act in contracting the joints.
Flutterers, who have the flexor muscles so strong that they are always bowing and cringing, might in some measure be corrected by being tied down upon a tree by the back. Arbushast.

FLEXUOUS. adj. [flexuosus, Latin.] 1. Winding; full of turns and meanders; tortuous.
In regard of the soul, the numerous and crooked narrow cranies, and the restrained flexuos rivulets of corporeal things, are all contemptible. Dghy.

2. Bending; not straight; variable; not steady.
The trembling of a candle discovers a wind, that otherwise we did not feel; and the flexuos burning of flames doth show the air beginneth to be unquiet. Bacon's Natural History.

FLEXURE. n. f. [flexura, Latin.] 1. The form or direction in which any thing is bent.
Contrary is the flexure of the joints of our arms and legs to that of quadrupeds: our knees bend forward, whereas the same joint of their hind legs bends backward. Ray.

2. The act of bending.
The elephant hath joints, but none for courtesy; His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakespeare.

3. The part bent; the joint.
His mighty strength lies in his able loins,
And where the flexure of his navel joins. Sunday.

4. Obsequious or servile cringe. Not used.
Think'it thou the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will give place to flexure and low bends? Shakespeare.

TO FLICKER. v. a. [fligheren, Dutch; placcian, Saxon.] To flutter; to play the wings; to have a fluttering motion.
The wreath of radiant fire,
On flickering Pnaelus' front. Shakespeare.
'Tis was ebbing darkness, past the mid' of night,
And Phoebus, on the confines of the light,
Promis'd the sun, ere day began to spring;
The tuneful lark already stretch'd her wing,
And flickering on her nest made short essays to sing. Dryden.

At all her stretch her little wings she spread,
And with her feather'd arms embrac'd the dead;
Then flickering on his pallid lips, the shove
To print a kiss, the last essay of love. Dryden.

FLIER. n. f. [from fly.] 1. One that runs away; a fugitive; a runaway.
The gates are open, now prove good seconds;
'Tis for the followers fortune widens them,
Not for the fliers. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
Now the fliers from and forsakers of their places, carry the parliamentary power along with them. King Charles.

2. That part of a machine which, by being put into a more rapid motion than the other parts, equalizes and regulates the motion of the rest: as in a jack.
The flier tho't had laden feet,
Turn'd to quick, you scarce could see't. Swift.

FLIGHT. n. f. [from fly.] 1. The act of flying or running from danger.
And now, too late, he wishes for the fight,
That strength he waded in ign. bl. flight Went.
He thinks by flight his mistress must he won,
And claims the prize because he best could run. Dryden's Ind. Emp.

As eager of the chace, the maid
Beyond the forest's verdant limits stray'd;
Pan law and lov'd, and, burning with desire,
Pursu'd her flight; her flight increas'd his fire.
Pope.

2. The act of using wings; volation.
For he so swift and nimble was of flight,
That from his lower tract he dur'd to fly
Up to the clouds, and thence with pinions light
To mount aloft unto the crystal sky. Spenser.
The fury sprang above the Stygian flood;
And on her wicker wings, sublime through night,
She to the Luvian palace took her flight. Dryden.
Winds that tempests brew,
When through Arabian groves they take their flight,
Made wanton with rich odours, loze their spite.
Dryden.

3. Removed from place to place by means of wings.
Ere the bat hath flown
His cloyster'd flight. Shakespeare's Macbeth.
The fowls shall take their flight away together.
2 Esdras.
Fowls, by winter forc'd, forsake the floods,
And wing their hasty flight to happier lands.
Dryden's Aeneid

4. A flock of birds flying together.
Flights of angels wing thee to thy rest. Shakf.
They take great pride in the feathers of birds, and thus they took from their ancestors of the mountains, who were invited into it by the infinite flights of birds that came up to the high grounds. Bacon's New Atlantis.
I can at will, doubt not,
Command a table in this wilderness;
And call swift flights of angels ministrant,
Array'd in glory, in my cup t' attend. Milton.

5. The birds produced in the same season:
as, the harvest flight of pigeons.
6. A volley; a shower; as much shot as is discharged at once.
At the first flight of arrows sent,
Full threecore Scots the flew. Cherry Chase.
Above an hundred arrows discharged on my left hand, pricked me like so many needles; and besides they shot another flight into the air, as we do bombs. Swift

7. The space past by flying.
8. Heat of imagination; fally of the soul.
Old Pindar's flights by him are reacht,
When on that gale his wings are stretcht. Denham.
He flew'd all the stretch of fancy at once; and if he has failed in some of his flights, it was because he attempted every thing. Pope.
Strange graces still, and stranger flights he had;
Was just not ugly, and was just not mad. Pope.
Trust me, dear! good humour can prevail,
When airs and flights, and screams and scolding fall. Pope.

9. Excursion on the wing.
If there were any certain height where the flights of ambition end, one might imagine that the interests of France were but to conserve its present greatness. Temple.
It is not only the utmost pitch of impiety, but the highest flight of folly, to decide these things.
Tillotson.

10. The power of flying.
In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft,
I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way. Shakespeare.

FLIGHTY. adj. [from flight.]

1. Fleeting; swift.
Time, thou anticipat'st my dread exploits:
The flighty purpose never is o'erlook'd,
Unless the deed go with it. Shakespeare.
2. Wild; full of imagination.
FLIMSILY. adj. [Of this word I know not any original, and suspect it to have crept into our language from the cant of manufacturers.]

1. Weak; feeble; without strength of texture.

2. Mean; spiritless; without force.
Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines. Pope.
To FLINCH. v. n. [corrupted from fling.
Skinner.]

1. To shrink from any suffering or undertaking; to withdraw from any pain or danger.
Every martyr could keep one eye steadily fixed upon immortality, and look death and danger out of countenance with the other: nor did they flinch from duty, for fear of martyrdom. South.
A child, by a constant course of kindness, may be accustomed to bear very rough usage without flinching or complaining. Locke.
Oh ingratitude, that John Bull, whom I have honoured with my friendship, should flinch at last, and pretend that he can disburse no more money. Arbuthnot's John Bull.

2. In Shakespeare it signifies to fail.
If I break time, or flinch in property
Of what I spoke, unpitied let me die. Shaksp.
FLINCHER. n. f. [from the verb.] He who shrinks or fails in any matter.

To FLING. v. a. preter. flung; part.
flung or flong. [from fligo, Lat. Skinner:
according to others from flaying; so to fling is to set flying.]

1. To cast from the hand; to throw.
The matrons flung their gloves,
Ladies and maids their scarfs and handkerchiefs
Upon him. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.
'Tis fate that flings the dice; and as the flings,
Of kings make peasants, and of peasants kings.
Dryden.

2. To dart; to cast with violence.
How much unlike that Hector who return'd Clad in Achilles' spoils; when he, among
A thousand ships, like Jove, his lightning flung.
Denham

3. To scatter.
Ev'ry beam new transient colours flings, Colours that change when'er they wave their wings. Pope.

4. To drive by violence.
A heap of rocks, falling, would expel the waters out of their places with such a violence as to fling them among the highest clouds. Burnet.

5. To move forcibly.
The knight seeing his habitation reduced to so small compass, ordered all the apartments to be flung open. Addison's Spectator.

6. To cast: in an ill sense.
I know thy gen'rous temper:
Fling but the appearance of dishonour on it,
It straight takes fire. Addison's Cato.

7. To force into another condition, probably into a worse.
Squalid fortune, into baseness flong,
Doth scorn the pride of wanted ornaments.
Spenser.

8. To FLING away. To eject; to dismiss.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels. Shakespeare.

9. To FLING down. To demolish; to ruin.
These are so far from raising mountains, that they overturn and fling down some of those which were before standing. Woodward.

10. To FLING off. To baffle in the chace;
to defeat of a prey.
These men are too well acquainted with the chace to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.
Addison's Spectator.

To FLING. v. n.

1. To flounce; to wince; to fly into violent and irregular motions.
The angry beast
Began to kick, and fling, and wince,
As if h' had been beside his sense. Hudibras.
Their consciences are galled by it, and this makes them wince and fling as if they had some mettle. Tillotson.

2. To FLING out. To grow unruly or outrageous: from the act of any angry horse that throws out his legs.
Duncan's horses,
Turn'd wild in nature, broke their stalls, flung out,
Contending 'gainst obedience. Shakespeare.

FLING. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A throw; a cast.
2. A gibe; a sneer; a contemptuous remark.
No little scribbler is of wit so bare,
But has his fling at the poor wedded pair. Addis.
I, who love to have a fling
Both at senate-house and king,
Thought no method more commodious
Than to shew their vices odious. Swift.

FLINGER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. He who throws.
2. He who jeers.

FLINT. n. f. [flint, Saxon.]

1. A semipellucid stone, composed of crystal debased, of a blackish gray, of one similar and equal substance, free from veins, and naturally invested with a whitish crust. It is sometimes smooth and equal, more frequently rough; its size is various. It is well known to strike fire with steel. It is useful in glassmaking. Hill on Fossils.
Searching the window for a flint, I found
This paper. Shakespeare's Julius Caesar.
Love melts the rigour which the rocks have bred;
A flint will break upon a featherbed. Cleveland.
There is the same force and the same refreshing virtue in fire kindled by a spark from a flint, as if it were kindled by a beam from the sun.
South's Sermons.

Take this, and lay your flint edg'd weapon by.
Dryden.
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the foud.
Prior.

2. Any thing eminently or proverbially hard.
Your tears, a heart of flint
Might tender make. Spenser.
Throw my heart
Against the flint and hardness of my fault.
Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra.

FLINTY. adj. [from flint.]

1. Made of flint; strong.
Tyrant custom
Hath made the flinty and steel couch of war
My thrice-driven bed of down. Shakespeare.
A pointed flinty rock, all bare and black,
Grew gibbous from behind the mountain's back.
Dryden.

2. Full of stones.
The gathering up of flints in flinty ground, and laying them on heaps is no good husbandry.
Bacon's Natural History.

3. Hard of heart; cruel; savage; inexorable.
Gratitude,
Through flinty Tartar's bosom, would peep forth,
And answer thanks. Shakespeare.

FLIPP. n. f. [A cant word.] A liquor much used in ships, made by mixing beer with spirits and sugar.

The tarpawin and swabber is lolling at Madagascar, with some drunken sunburnt whore, over a can of flip. Dennis.

FLIPPANT. adj. [A word of no great authority, probably derived from flip flap.]

1. Nimble; moveable. It is used only of the act of speech.
An excellent anatomist promised to dissect a woman's tongue, and examine whether there may not be in it certain juices which render it so wonderfully voluble or flippant. Addison.

2. Pert; petulant; waggish.
 Away with shippant epilogues. Thomson.
FLIPPANTLY. adv. [from the adjective.]
 In a flowing prating way.
To FLIRT. v. a. [Skinner thinks it formed from the found.]

 vibrations, as also gradual, and delicate openings.
Addison's Spectator.
 Before you pass th' imaginary flights
 While the spread-fan o'er shades your closing eyes,
 Then give one flirt, and all the vision flies. Pope.
 2. A sudden trick.
 Have licence to play,
 At the hedge a flirt,
 For a sheet or a shirt. Ben Jonson's Gypsies.
 3. A pert young huffey.
 Scurvy knave, I am none of his flirt gills; I am none of his skains mates. Shakespeare.
 Several young flirts about town had a design to cast us out of the fashionable world. Addison.
FLIRTATION. n. f. [from flirt.] A quick sprightly motion. A cant word among women.
 A muslin sounce, made very full, would give a very agreeable flirtation air. Pope.
To FLIT. v. n. [from To fleet; or from flitter, Danish, to remove.]
 1. To fly away.
 Likest it seemeth, in my simple wit,
 Unto the fair sunshine in summer's day,
 That when a dreadful storm away is flit,
 Through the broad world doth spread his goodly
 ray. Spenser.
 2. To remove: to migrate. In Scotland it is still used for removing from one place to another at quarter-day, or the usual term.
 His grudging ghost did strive
 With the frail flesh; at last it flitted is,
 Whither the souls do die of men that live amidst
 Fairy Queen.
 So hardly he the flitted life does win,
 Unto her native prison to return. Fairy Queen.
 It became a received opinion, that the souls of men, departing this life, did flit out of one body into some other. Hooker.
 3. To flutter; to rove on the wing.
 He made a glancing shot, and miss'd the dove;
 Yet miss'd so narrow that he cut the cord
 Which fasten'd, by the foot, the flitting bird. Dryden.
 Fear the just gods, and think of Scylla's fate!
 Chang'd to a bird, and sent to flit in air. Pope.
 4. To be flux or unstable.
 Himself uphigh he lifted from the ground,
 And with strong flight did forcibly divide
 The yielding air, which nigh too feeble found
 Her flitting parts, and element unbound.
 Fairy Queen.
 He stoop at once the passage of his wind,
 And the free soul to flitting air resign'd. Dryden.
FLIT. adj. [from flit.] Swift; nimble;
 quick. Not in use.
 And in his hand two darts exceeding flit,
 And deadly sharp, he held; whose heads were light.
 In poison and in blood, of malice and desigh-
 Fairy Queen.

FLITCH. n. f. [flice, Sax. flycke, Dan.
fleske, floche, French, Skinner.] The side of a hog salted and cured.
 But heretofore 'twas thought a sumptuous feast,
 On birthdays, festivals, or days of state,
 A salt dry flitch of bacon to prepare;
 If they had fresh meat, 'twas delicious fare.
Dryden's Juvenal.
 While he from out the chimney took
 A flitch of bacon off the hook,
 Cut out large slices to be fry'd. Swift.
 He sometimes accompanies the present with a

The labours of Hercules, though flourish'd with much fabulous matter; yet notably set forth, the consent of all nations and ages in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating giants, monsters, and tyrants.
Bacon.

As they are likely to over-flourish their own case, so their flattery is hardest to be discovered.
Collier.

6. To adorn; to embellish; to grace.

To bring you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit.
Shakspeare.

FLO'URISH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Bravery; beauty; ambitious splendour.

I call'd thee then vain flourish of my fortune;
I call'd thee then poor shadow, painted queen,
The presentation of but what I was,
Shakspeare.

The flourish of his sober youth,
Was the pride of naked truth.
Croshaw.

2. An ostentatious embellishment; ambitious copiousness; far-fetched elegance.

This is a flourish: there follow excellent parables.
Bacon.

We can excuse the duty of our knowledge, if we only bestow the flourish of poetry thereon, or those commendatory conceits which popularly set forth the eminence of this creature.
Brown.

The apprehension is to deeply riveted into my mind, that such rhetorical flourishings cannot at all loosen or brush it out.
Mere.

Villanies have not the same countenance,
when there are great interests, plausible colours, and flourishings of wit and rhetorick interpos'd between the sight and the object.

L'Esrange.

The so much repeated ornament and flourish of their former speeches was commonly the truest word they spoke, though least believed by them.
South's Sermons.

Studious to please the genius of the times,
With periods, points, and tropes he slurs his crimes;

He lards with flourish his long harangue;
'Tis fine, say'st thou; what, to be prais'd and hang?
Dryden.

3. Figures formed by lines curiously or wantonly drawn.

A child with delight looks upon emblems finely drawn and painted, and takes some pleasure in beholding the neat characters and flourishings of a bible curiously-printed.
Beyle.

They were intended only for ludicrous ornaments of nature, like the flourishings about a great letter that signify nothing, but are made only to delight the eye.
More against Atheism.

FLO'URISHER. n. f. [from flourish.] One that is in prime or in prosperity.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld, they may, or in his flourish;

Shakspeare.

Phillida flouts me.
Walton's Angler.

To FLOUT. v. n. To practise mockery;
to behave with contempt; to sneer.

Though nature hath given us wit to flout at fortune, hath not fortune sent in this fool to cut off this argument?
Shakspeare.

With talents well endu'd
To be scurrilous and rude;

When you pertly raise your flout,
Flee and gibe, and laugh and flout.
Swift.

FLOUT. n. f. [from the verb.] A mock;
an insult; a word or act of contempt.

He would ask of those that had been at the other's table, Tell truly, was there never a flout or dry blow given?
Bacon.

She opened it, and read it out,
With many a smile and leering flout.
Hudibras.

Their doors are barr'd against a bitter flout;
Snail, if you please; but you shall snail without.
Dryden.

How many flouts and jeers must I expose myself to by this repentance? How shall I answer such an old acquaintance when he invites me to an intemperate cup?
Calamy's Sermons.

FLO'UTER. n. f. [from flout.] One who jeers.

To FLOW. v. n. [floan, Saxon.]

you have a stream at hand to flow the ground Motimer's Husbandry.

Flow. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The rise of water; not the ebb.

Some from the diurnal and annual motion of the earth, endeavour to solve the flows and motions of these seas, illustrating the same by water in a bowl, that rises or falls according to the motion of the vessel.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The ebb or tides, and their mysterious flow,
We as arts elements shall understand.
Dryden.

2. A sudden plenty or abundance.

The noble power of suffering bravely is as far above that of enterprising greatly, as an unblemished conscience and inflexible resolution are above an accidental flow of spirits, or a sudden tide of blood.
Pope.

3. A stream of diction; volubility of tongue.

Teaching is not a flow of words, nor the draining of an hour-glass; but an effectual procuring that a man know something which he knew not before, or to know it better.
South.

FLO'WER. n. f. [flour, French; flos, fiores, Latin.]

1. The part of a plant which contains the seeds.

Such are reckoned perfect flowers which have petala, a stamen, apex, and stylus; and whatever flower wants either of these is reckoned imperfect. Perfect flowers are divided into simple ones, which are not composed of other smaller, and which usually have but one single file; and compounded, which consist of many flosculi, all making but one flower. Simple flowers are ma-nopetalous, which have the body of the flower all of one entire leaf, though sometimes cut or divided a little way into many seeming petala, or leaves; as in borage, bugloss; or polypetalous, which have distinct petala, and those falling off singly, and not altogether, as the seeming petala of monopetalous flowers always do; but those are further divided into uniform and difform flowers: the former have their right and left hand parts, and the forward and backward parts all alike, but the difform have no such regularity, as in the flowers of sage and deadnettle. A monopetalous difform flower is likewise further divided into, first, semi-fistular, whose upper part resembles a pipe cut off obliquely, as in the aristochia: 2d, labiate; and this either with one lip only, as in the acanthum and scordium, or with two lips, as in the far greater part of the labiate flowers: and here the upper lip is sometimes turned upwards, and so turns the convex part downwards, as in the chamæcisus; but most commonly the upper lip is convex above, and turns the hollow part down to its fellow below, and represents a kind of helmet, or monkhood; and from thence these are frequently called galleate, cucullate, and galeculate flowers; and in this form are the flowers of the lamium, and most verticillate plants. Sometimes the lamium is intire, and sometimes jagged or divided. 3d, Corniculate; that is, such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn, as the linaria, delphinium, &c. and the carotium, or calcar, is always impervious at the tip or point. Compounded flowers are first, discous, or discoidal; that is, whose florets are set so close, thick, and even, as to make the surface of the flower plain and flat, which, because of its round form, will be like a discus; which disk is sometimes radiated, when there is a row of petals standing round in the disk, like the points of a star, as in the matricaria, chamæmelum, &c. and sometimes naked, having no such radiating leaves round the limb of its disk, as in the tanaecium: 2d, planifolious, which is composed of plain flowers, set together in circular rows round the centre, and whose face is usually indented, notched, and jagged, as the hieracia. 3d, Fistular, which is compounded of long hollow little flowers, like pipes, all divided into large jags at the ends. Imperfect flowers, because they want the petals, are called stamincous, apetalous, and capillaceous; and those which hang pendulous by fine threads, like the july, are by Tournefort called amentaceous, and we call them cats-tail. The term campaniformis is used for such as are in the shape of a bell, and infundibuliformis for such as are in the form of a funnel. Miller.

Good men's lives

Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying ere they sicken. Shaksp. Macbeth.

With flow'ry inwoven tresses torn

The nymphs in twilight shade of tangled thickets mourn. Milton.

Beauteous flowers why do we spread

Upon the monuments of the dead. Corwly.

Though the same sun with all-diffusive rays

Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,

We praise the stronger effort of his power,

And always set the gem above the flower. Pope.

If the blossom of the plant be of most importance, we call it a flower; such are daisies, tulips, and carnations. Watts.

2. An ornament; an embellishment.

The nomination of persons to those places being so prime and inseparable a flower of his crown, he would reserve to himself. Clarendon.

This discourse of Cyprian, and the excellent flowers of rhetoric in it, shew him to have been a sweet and powerful orator. Haleswill.

Truth needs no flow'rs of speech. Pope.

3. The prime; the flourishing part.

Alas! young man, your days can ne'er be long:
In flow'ry of age you perish for a song. Pope.

4. The edible part of corn; the meal.

The bread I would have in flower, so as it might be baked still to serve their necessary want Spenser on Ireland.

I can make my audit up, that all
From me do back receive the flow'ry of all,
And leave me but the bran. Shaksp.peare.

The flowers of grains, mixed with water, will make a sort of glue. Shrubnot on Elements.

But by thy care twelve urns of wine be fill'd, Next these in worth, and firm those urns be feal'd;

Be twice ten measures of the choicest flow
Prepar'd, ere yet descends the evening hour.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. The most excellent or valuable part of any thing; quintessence.

The choice and flower of all things profitable the Platins do more briefly contain, and more movingly express, by reason of their poetical form. Hooker.

Thou hast slain

The flower of Europe for his chivalry. Shaksp.

The French monarchy is exhausted of its bravest subjects: the flower of the nation is consumed in its wars. Addison.

6. That which is most distinguished for any thing valuable.

He is not the flower of courtesy, but, I warrant him, as gentle as a lamb. Shaksp.peare.

FLO'WER de Luca. n. f. A bulbous iris.

Miller specifies thirty-four species of this plant;
and among them the Persian flower de luca is greatly esteemed for the sweetness and beauty of its variegated flowers, which are in perfection in February, or the beginning of March.

Crop'd are the flower de luca in your arms;

Of England's coat one half is cut away. Shaksp.

The iris is the flower de luca. Psacham.

To FLO'WER. v. n. [fleurer, French; or from the noun.]

1. To be in flower; to be in blossom; to bloom; to put forth flowers.

So forth they marched in this goodly fort,

To take the solace of the open air,

And in fresh flowering fields themselves to sport. Fairy Queen.

Sacred hill, whose head full high,

Is, as it were, for endless memory

Of that dear Lord, who off thereon was found,

For ever with a flow'ring garland crown'd. Fairy Queen.

Then herbs of every leaf, that sudden flower'd,

Op'ning their various colours. Milton.

Mark well the flow'ring almonds in the wood,

If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load. Dryden's Georg.

To leafless shrubs the flow'ring palms succeed,

And od'rous myrtle to the noisome weed. Pope.

2. To be in the prime; to flourish.

Whilome in youth, when flower'd my youthful spring,

Like swallow swift, I wandered here and there;

For heat of heedless lust me did so sting,

That I of doubtful danger had no fear. Spenser.

This cause detain'd me all my flow'ring youth,

Within a loathsome dungeon there to pine. Shaksp.

3. To froth; to ferment; to mantle, as new bottled beer.

Those above water were the best, and that beer did flower a little: whereas that under water did not, though it were fresh. Bacon.

An extreme clarification doth spread the spirits so smooth that they become dull, and the drink dead, which ought to have a little flowering. Bacon's Natural History.

4. To come as cream from the surface.

If you can accept of these few observations; which have flower'd off, and are, as it were, the hunnishing of many studious and contemplative years, I here give you them to dispose of. Milton.

To FLO'WER. v. n. [from the noun.]

To adorn with fictitious or imitated flowers. DiA.

FLO'WERAGE. n. f. [from flower.] Store of flowers.

FLO'WERET. n. f. [fleuret, French.] A flower; a small flower.

Sometimes her head she fondly would agife
With gaudy garlands, or fresh flow'rets' dight,
About her neck, or rings of rushes plight. Fairy Queen.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell, like round and orient pearls,

Stand now within the pretty flow'ret's eyes,
Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. Shaksp.peare.

So to the sylvan lodge

They came, that like Pomona's arbour smil'd,

With flow'rets deck'd, and fragrant smells. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Then laughs the childish year with flow'rets

crownd,

And lavishly perfumes the fields around;

But no substantial nourishment receives,

Infirm the stalks, unfold are the leaves. Dryd.

FLO'WERGARDEN. n. f. [flower and garden.] A garden in which flowers are principally cultivated.

Observing that this manure produced flowers in the field, I made my gardener try those shells in my flowergarden, and I never saw better carnations or flowers. Martimer's Husbandry.

FLO'WERINESS. n. f. [from flowerery.]

1. The state of abounding in flowers.

2. Floridness of speech.

FLO'WERINGBUSH. n. f. A plant.

FLO'WERY. adj. [from flower.] Full of flowers; adorned with flowers real or fictitious.

My mother Circe, with the syrens three,

Amidst the flow'ry kirtled Naiades. Milton.

Day's habinger

Comes dancing from the east, and leads with her

The flow'ry May, who from her green lap throws

The yellow cowslip and the pale primrose. Milton.

O'er his fair limbs a flow'ry vest he threw. Pope.

To her the shadow grove, the flow'ry field,

The streams and fountains no delight could yield. Pope.

FLO'WINGLY. adv. [from flow.] With volubility; with abundance.

FLOWK. n. f. [flake, Scottish.] A flounder; the name of a fish.

Amongst these the flowk, sole, and plaice,

follow the tide up into the fresh waters. Carew.

FLOWKWORD. n. f. The name of a plant.

FLOWN. The participle of fly, or flee, they being confounded; properly of fly.

1. Gone away.

For those,

Appointed to sit there, had left their charge,

Flown to the upper world. Milton.

Where, my deluded sense! was reason flown?

Where the high majesty of David's throne? Prior.

2. Puffed; inflated; elate.

And when night

Darkens the streets, then wander forth the sons

Of Bellial, flown with insolence and wine. Milton.

Is this a bridal or a friendly feast?

Or from your deeds I rightly may divine,

Unseemly flown with insolence or wine. Pope.

FLU'CTUANT. adj. [flucltuans, Latin.] Wavering; uncertain.

To be longing for this thing to-day, and for that thing to-morrow; to change likings for loathings, and to stand wishing and hankering at a venture, how is it possible for any man to be at rest in this fluctuant wande'ring humour and opinion? L'Estrange.

To FLU'CTUATE. v. n. [flucluo, Latin.]

1. To roll to and again, as water in agitation.

The fluctuating fields of liquid air,

With all the curious meteors hovering there,

And the wide regions of the land, proclaim

The Pow'r Divioe, that rais'd the mighty frame. Blackmore.

2. To float backward and forward, as with the motion of water.

3. To move with uncertain and hasty motion.

The tempter
New parts puts on, and, as to passion mov'd, Fluctuates disturb'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

4. To be in an uncertain state; to feel sudden vicissitudes.

As the greatest part of my estate has hitherto been of an unsteady and volatile nature, either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed and settled in substantial acres and tenements. Addison.

3. To be irresolute; to be undetermined.
FLUCTUATION. n. f. [fluctuatio, Latin; fluctuation, French; from fluctuate.]

1. The alternate motion of the water.
Fluctuations are but motions subservient, which winds, storms, shores, shelves, and every interjacency irregularates. Brown.

They were caused by the impulses and fluctuation of water in the bowels of the earth. Woodward's Natural History.

2. Uncertainty; indetermination.
It will not hinder it from making a profelyte of a person, that loves fluctuation of judgment little enough to be willing to be eased of it by any thing but error. Boyle.

FLUE. n. f. [A word of which I know not the etymology, unless it be derived from fluo of fly.]

1. A small pipe or chimney to convey air, heat, or smoke.
2. Soft down or fur, such as may fly in the wind.

FLUE'LLIN. n. f. The herb SPREDWELL.
FLUENCY. n. f. [from fluent.]

1. The quality of flowing; smoothness; freedom from harshness or asperity.
Fluency of numbers, and most expressive figures for the poet, morals for the serious, and pleasantries for admirers of points of wit. Garth's Preface to Ovid.

2. Readiness; copiousness; volubility.
Our publick liturgy must be cashiered, the better to please those men who gloried in their extemporary vein and fluency. King Charles.

We reason with such fluency and fire, The beaux we baffle, and the learned too. Tickel.
The common fluency of speech in many men, and most women, is owing to a scarcity of matter, and a scarcity of words; for whoever is master of language, and hath a mind full of ideas, will be apt, in speaking, to hesitate upon the choice of both. Swift.

3. Affluence; abundance. This sense is obsolete.

Those who grow old in fluency and ease, Behold him tost on seas. Samlys' Paraph. on Job.
God riches and renown to men imparts, Even all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts Cannot so great a fluency receive, But their fruition to a stranger leave. Samlys.

FLUENT. adj. [fluens, Latin.]

1. Liquid.
It is not malleable; but yet is not fluent, but staphied. Bacon.

2. Flowing; in motion; in flux.
Motion being a fluent thing, and one part of its duration being independent upon another, it doth not follow that because any thing moves this moment, it must do so the next. Ray.

3. Ready; copious; voluble.
Those have some natural dispositions, which have better grace in youth than in age, such as is a fluent and luxurious speech. Bacon.
I shall lay before you all that's within me, And with most fluent utterance. Deham.

FLU'ENT. n. f. Stream; running water.
Considering in their hands, that sed'ulous strive To cut th' outrageous fluent; in this distress, Ev'n in the sight of death. Philips.

FLU'ENTLY. adv. [from fluent.] With ready flow; volubly; readily; without obstruction or difficulty.

FLU'ID. adj. [fluidus, Latin; fluide, French.] Having parts easily separable; not solid.

Or serve they as a flow'ry verge to bind
The fluid skirts of that same wat'ry cloud,
Lest it again dissolve, and show'r the earth?
Milton.

If particles slip easily, and are of a fit size to be agitated by heat, and the heat is big enough to keep them in agitation, the body is fluid; and if it be apt to stick to things, it is humid. Newton.

FLU'ID. n. f.
1. Any thing not solid.
2. [In physick.] Any animal juice: as the blood.

Consider how luxury hath introduced new diseases, and with them, not improbably, altered the whole course of the fluids.
Arbuthnot and Pope's Mart. Scriblerus.

FLU'IDITY. n. f. [fluidité, Fr. from fluid.]
The quality in bodies opposite to stability; want of coherence between the parts.

Heat promotes fluidity very much by diminishing the tenacity of bodies: it makes many bodies fluid, which are not fluid in cold, and increases the fluidity of tenacious liquids; as of oil, balsam, and honey; and thereby decreases their resistance. Newton.

A disease opposite to this spirititude is too great fluidity. Arbuthnot

FLU'IDNESS. n. f. [from fluid.] The quality in bodies opposite to stability.

What if we should lay that fluidness and stability depends so much upon the texture of the parts, that, by the change of that texture the same parts may be made to constitute either a fluid or a dry body, and that permanently too? Boyle.

FLU'MMERY. n. f. A kind of food made by coagulation of wheatflower or oatmeal.

Milk and flummery are very fit for children. Locke.

FLUNG. The participle and preterit of fling. Thrown; cast.

Several statues the Romans themselves flung into the river, when they would revenge themselves. Addison on Italy.

FLUOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A fluid state.
The particles of fluids which do not cohere too strongly, and are of such a smallness as renders them most susceptible of those agitations which keep liquors in a fluo, are most easily separated and rarched into vapours. Newton's Opt.

2. Catamenia.
FLU'RRY. n. f.

1. A gust or storm of wind; a hasty blast.
The boat was overset by a sudden flurry from the north. Swift.

2. Hurry; a violent commotion.
To FLUSH. v. n. [fluyzen, Dutch, to flow; fluis, or flux, French.]

1. To flow with violence.

The pulse of the heart he attributes to an ebullition and sudden expansion of the blood in the ventricles, after the manner of the milk, which, being heated to such a degree, doth suddenly, and all at once, flush up and run over the vessel. Ray.

It flushes violently out of the cock for about a quart, and then stops. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. To come in haste.
If the place but affords
Any store of lucky birds,
As I make 'em to flush,
Each owl out of his flush. Ben Jonson's Owls.

3. To glow in the skin; to produce a colour in the face by a sudden afflux of blood. It is properly used of a sudden or transient heat of countenance; not of a settled complexion.

Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her gauled eyes,
She married. Shakspeare's Hamlet.
Thus Eve with count'nance blithe her story told,
But in her cheek distemper flushing glow'd. Milton.

What can be more significant than the sudden flushing and confusion of a blush? Collier.
What means that lovely fruit? What means, alas!
That blood which flushes guilty in your face? Dryden.

At once, array'd
In all the colours of the flushing year,
The garden glows. Thomson's Spring.

4. To shine suddenly. Obsolete.
A stake of fire that flushing in his beard,
Him all amaz'd. Spenser.

To FLUSH. v. a.

1. To colour; to redden: properly to redden suddenly.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court,
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms. Addison's Catò.

Some court, or secret corner seek,
Nor flush with shame the passing virgin's cheek. Gay's Triv.

2. To elate; to elevate; to give the appearance of sudden joy.

As prosperous people, flushed with great victories and successes, are rarely known to confine their joys within the bounds of moderation and innocence. Atterbury's Sermons.

FLUSH. adj.
1. Fresh; full of vigour.

He took my father grossly, full of bread,
With all his crimes broad blown, and flush as May;
And how his audit stands, who knows, save Heav'n. Shakspeare.

I love to wear cloths that are flush,
Not prefacing old rags with plush. Clarendon.

2. Affluent; abounding. A cant word.

Lord Strat was not very flush in ready, either to go to law or clear old debts; neither could he find good bail. Arbuthnot.

FLUSH. n. f.

1. Afflux; sudden impulse; violent flow.
This is commonly corrupted to flash: as, a flash of water.

Never had any man such a loss, cries a widower, in the flush of his extravagancies for a dead wife. L'Esrange.

The pulse of the arteries is not only caused by the pulsation of the heart, driving the blood through them in manner of a wave or flush, but by the coats of the arteries themselves. Ray.

Success may give him a present flush of joy; but when the short transport is over, the apprehension of losing succeeds to the care of acquiring. Regers' Sermons.

2. Cards all of a sort.
To FLU'STER. v. a. [from To flush.]

To make hot and rosy with drinking; to make half drunk.

Three lads of Cyprus, noble swelling spirits,
Have I to-night fluster'd with flowing cups,
And they watch too. Shakspeare's Othello.

FLUTE. n. f. [flute, flute, French; fluyte, Dutch.]

1. A musical pipe; a pipe with stops for the fingers.

Th' oars were silver,
Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke. Shakspeare.

The soft complaining flute
In dying notes discovers
The woes of hopeless lovers,
Whose dirge is whisper'd by the warbling lute.
Dryden

2. A channel or furrow in a pillar, like the concave of a flute split.

To FLUTE. v. a. To cut columns into hollows.

To FLUTTER. v. n. [Flotzpan, Saxon; flotter, Fr.]

1. To take short flights with great agitation of the wings.

As an eagle stirreth up her nest, flutters over her young, and spreadeth abroad her wings, so the Lord alone did lead him.
Deuteronomy.

Think you've an angel by the wings!

One that gladly will be nigh,

To wait upon each morning-sigh;

To flutter in the balmy air

Of your well-perfumed pray'r.
Crashaw.

They fed, and, flutt'ring, by degrees withdrew.
Dryden.

2. To move about with great show and bustle without consequence.

Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high.
Greiv.

No rag, no scrap of all the beau or wit,

That once so flutt'rd, and that once so wit.

Pope's Dunciad.

3. To be moved with quick vibrations or undulations.

Ye spirits! to your charge repair;

The flutt'ring fan be Zephyretta's care.
Pope.

They the tall mast above the vessel rear,

Or teach the flutt'ring sail to float in air.
Pope.

4. To be in agitation; to move irregularly; to be in a state of uncertainty.

The relation being brought him what a glorious victory was got, and how long we fluttered upon the wings of doubtful success, he was not surpris'd.
Howell's Vocal Forest.

It is impossible that men should certainly discover the agreement or discernment of ideas, whilst their thoughts flutter about, or stick only in founts of doubtful signification.
Locke.

Esteem we these, my friends! event and chance,

Produc'd by atoms from their flutt'ring dance!
Prior.

His thoughts are very fluttering and wandering, and cannot be fixed attentively to a few ideas successively.
Watts.

To FLUTTER. v. a.

1. To drive in disorder, like a flock of birds suddenly roused.

Like an eagle in a dovecoat, I

Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli.
Shakespeare.

2. To hurry the mind.

3. To disorder the position of any thing.

FLUTTER. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Vibration; undulation; quick and irregular motion.

An infinite variety of motions are to be made use of in the flutter of a fan: there is the angry flutter, the modest flutter, and the timorous flutter.
Addison's Spectator.

2. Hurry; tumult; disorder of mind.

3. Confusion; irregular position.

FLUVIA'TICK. adj. [fluvialicus, Latin.]

Belonging to rivers.

FLUX. n. f. [fluxus, Latin; flux, French.]

1. The act of flowing; passage.

The simple and primary motion of fire is flux, in a direct line from the centre of the fuel to its circumference.
Digby.

By the perpetual flux of the liquids, a great part of them is thrown out of the body.
Arbut.

2. The state of passing away and giving place to others.

Whether the heat of the sun in animals whose parts are fusible, and in a continual flux, can produce a deep and perfect gloss of blackness.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

What the stated rate of interest should be, in the constant change of affairs and flux of money, is hard to determine.
Locke.

In the constituent matter of one body, turning naturally to another like body, the stock or fund can never be exhausted, nor the flux and alteration sensible.
Woodward.

Languages, like our bodies, are in a perpetual flux, and stand in need of recruits to supply those words that are continually falling.
Felton.

3. Any flow or issue of matter.

Qui veses stop fluxes of blood.
Arbutnet.

4. Dyfentery; disease in which the bowels are excoriated and bleed; bloody flux.

Eat eastern spice, secure

From burning fluxes and hot calenture.
Hallifax.

5. Excrement; that which falls from bodies.

Civet is the very uncleanly flux of a cat.
Shakespeare.

6. Concourse; confluence.

Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;

'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part

The flux of company.
Shaksp. As you like it.

7. The state of being melted.

8. That which mingled with the body makes it melt.

FLUX. adj. [fluxus, Latin.] Unconstant; not durable; maintained by a constant succession of parts.

To FLUX. v. a.

1. To melt.

2. To salivate; to evacuate by spitting.

He might fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world.

South.

FLUXILITY. n. f. [fluxus, Latin.] Easiness of separation of parts; possibility of liquefaction.

Experiments seem to teach, that the supposed aversion of nature to a vacuum is but accidental, or in consequence, partly of the weight and fluidity, or at least fluxility of the bodies here below.
Boyle.

FLUXION. n. f. [fluxio, Latin.]

1. The act of flowing.

2. The matter that flows.

The fluxion increased, and abscesses were raised.
Wiseman.

3. [In mathematics.] The arithmetick or analysis of infinitely small variable quantities; or it is the method of finding an infinite small or infinitely small quantity, which, being taken an infinite number of times, becomes equal to a quantity given.
Harris.

A penetration into the abstruse difficulties and depths of modern algebra and fluxions, are not worth the labour of those who design the learned professions as the business of life.
Watts.

To FLY. v. n. pret. flow or fled; part. fled or flown. [flægan, Saxon. To fly is properly to use wings, and gives flow and flown. To flee is to escape, or to go away, plean, Saxon, and makes fled. They are now confounded.]

1. To move through the air with wings.

Ere the bat hath flown

His cloister'd flight.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Fowl that may fly above the earth in the open firmament of heav'n.
Gnefs.

These men's halitines the warier sort of you do not commend: ye wish they had held themselves longer in, and not flown so dangerously abroad before the feathers of the cause had been grown.
Hooker.

2. To pass through the air.
Man is born unto trouble, as the sparks fly upward.
Job.

3. To pass away, with the idea of swiftness or escape.

Ev'n a romance, a tune, a rhyme,

Help thee to pass the tedious time,

Which else would on thy hand remain;

Though flown, it ne'er looks back again.
Prior.

4. To pass swiftly.

The scouts with flaying speed

Return, and through the city spread the news.
Dryden.

Earth rolls back beneath the flaying flood.
Pope.

5. To move with rapidity.

As striplings whip the top for sport,

On the smooth pavement of an empty court,

The wooden engine flies and whirls about.
Dryd.

6. To part with violence.

Glad to catch this good occasion,

Most thoroughly to be winnow'd, where my chaff

And corn shall fly asunder.
Shaksp. Henry VIII.

He bassas beads, to save his own, made fly;

And now, the sultan to preserve, must die.
Waller.

7. To break; to shiver; to burst asunder with a sudden explosion.

Behold, a frothy substance rise;

Be cautious, of your bottle flies.
Swift.

8. [plean, Saxon; fliehen, German.] To run away; to attempt escape. In this sense the verb is properly to flee, whence fled is formed; but the following examples show that they are confounded: they are confounded oftener in the present than in the preter tense.

Which when the valiant elf perceiv'd, he leapt,

As lion fierce, upon the flaying prey.
Spenser.

Ye shall flee, as ye fled from before the earthquake.

Abiathar escaped and fled after David. 1 Sam.

What wonder if the kindly beams he shed,

Reviv'd the drooping wits again;

If science rais'd her head,

And soft humanity, that from rebellion fled.
Dryden.

He oft desir'd to fly from Israel's throne,

And live in shades with her and love alone.
Prior.

I'll fly from shepherds, flocks, and flow'ry

plains;

From shepherds, flocks, and plains I may remove,

Forsoke mankind, and all the world but love.
Pope.

9. To FLY at. To spring with violence upon; to fall on suddenly.

A servant that he bred, thull'd with remorse,

Oppos'd against the act, thrusting his sword

To his great master; who, therat enrag'd,

New on him, and amongst them sell'd him dead.
Shakespeare.

Though the dogs have never seen the dog-killer, yet they will come forth, and fly at him.

Bacon's Natural History.

No honour, no fortune, can keep a man from being miserable, when an enraged conscience shall fly at him, and take him by the throat.
South's Sermons.

This is an age that flies at all learning, and enquires especially into faults.
South.

10. To FLY in the face. To insult.

This would discourage any man from doing you good, when you will either neglect him, or fly in his face; and he must expect only danger to himself.
Swift's Drapier's Letters.

11. To FLY in the face. To act in defiance.

Fly in nature's face:

—But how, if nature fly in my face first?

—Then nature's the aggressor.
Dryden.

12. To FLY off. To revolt.

Deny to speak to me? They're sick, they're weary,

They have travell'd all the night! mean fetches;

The images of revolt and flaying off.
Shaksp.

The traitor Syphax
Flew off at once with his Numidian horse.
Addison's Cato.

13. To FLY out. To burst into passion.
How easy is a noble spirit discern'd,
From harsh and sulphurous matter that flies out
In contumelies, makes a noise, and stinks.
Ben Jonson's Cariline.

Passion is apt to ruffle, and prides will fly out into contumely and neglect. Collier of Friends.

14. To FLY out. To break out into licence.
You use me like a courser spur'd and rein'd:
If I fly out, my fierceness you command. Dry.

Papists, when unopposed, fly out into all the pageantries of worship; but when they are hard pressed by arguments, lie close intrenched behind the council of Trent. Dryden.

15. To FLY out. To start violently from any direction.
All bodies, moved circularly, have a perpetual endeavour to recede from the centre, and every moment would fly out in right lines, if they were not restrained. Bentley's Sermons.

16. To let FLY. To discharge.
The noisy culverin, o'ercharg'd, lets fly,
And bursts, unaiming, in the rended sky. Gran.

17. To be light and unencumbered: as,
a flying camp.

To FLY. v. a.
1. To shun; to avoid; to decline.
Love like a shadow flies, when substance love
pursues;
Pursuing that which flies, and flying what pursues. Shakespeare.

O Jove, I think
Foundations fly the wretched; such I mean,
Where they should be relieved. Shakespeare.

If you fly physick in health altogether, it will be too strange for your body when you shall need
it. Bacon's Essays.

O whither shall I run, or which way fly
The fight of this so horrid spectacle. Milton.

2. To refuse association with.
Sleep flies the wretch; or when with cares
oppress'd,
And his tott'rd limbs are weary'd into rest,
Then dreams invade. Dryden's Farnal.

Nature flies him like enchanted ground. Dryd.

3. To quit by flight.
Dedalus, to fly the Cretan shore,
His heavy limbs on jointed pinions bore,
The first who fail'd in air. Dryden's Æn.

4. To attack by a bird of prey.
If a man can tame this monster, and with her fly other ravening fowl, and kill them, it is somewhat worth. Bacon.

5. It is probable that stew was originally the preterit of fly, when it signified volation, and sted when it signified escape:
strown should be confined likewise to volation; but these distinctions are now confounded. I know not any book except the scriptures in which fly and stee are carefully kept separate.

FLY. n. f. [fleoge, Saxon.]

1. A small winged insect of many species.
As flies to wanton boys, are we to th' gods;
They kill us for their sport. Shaksp. K. Lear.

My country neighbours begin to think of being in general, before they come to think of the fly in their sheep, or the tares in their corn. Locke.

To prevent the fly, some purpose to sow aches

FO'GGY. adj. [from fog.]

1. Misty; cloudy; dank; full of moist vapours.

Alas! while we are wrapt in foggy mist
Of our self-love, so passions do deceive.

We think they hurt, when most they do assist.

Sidney.

And Phœbus aying so, most shameful sight,
His blushing face in foggy clouds imply,
And hides for shame.

Spenser.

Whence have they this mistle?
Is not their climate foggy, raw and dull?

Shakespeare's Henry v.

As cleere Phœbus, when some foggy cloud
His brightnesse from the world a while doth throwd,

Doth by degrees beginne to shew his light.

Bronson.

Let not air be subject to any foggy noisomeness, from fens or marshes near adjoining.

Wotton's Architecture.

About Michaelmas, the weather fair, and by no means foggy, retire your rarest plants. Evelyn.

2. Cloudy in understanding; dull.

FOIL. interject. [from fah, Saxon, an enemy.] An interjection of abhorrence; as if one should at sight of any thing hated cry out a foe!

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own chime, complexion and degree,
Whereto we see in all things nature tends,
Foh! one may smell in such a will most rank,
Fool disproportionis, thoughts unnatural. Shaksp.

FO'IBLE. n. f. [French.] A weak side; a blind side; a failing.

He knew the foibles of human nature. Friend.

The witty men sometimes have sense enough to know their own foible, and therefore they craftily turn the attacks of argument. Watts.

To FOIL. v. a. [affoler, to wound, old French.]

1. To put to the worst; to defeat; though without a complete victory.

Amazement seiz'd

The rebel thrones; but greater rage to see
Thus foil'd their mightiest. Milton.

Leader of these armies bright,
Which but th' omnipotent none could have foil'd.

Milton.

Yet this subject not: I to thee disclose
What inward thence I feel, not therefore foil'd:
Who meet with various objects, from the sense
Variously representing: yet still free,
Approve the best, and follow what I approve.

Milton.

Strange, that your fingers should the pencil foil,
Without the help of colours or of oil. Waller.
He had been foil'd in the cure, and had left it to nature.

Wissman's Surgery.

In their conflicts with sin they have been so often foil'd, that they now despair of ever getting the day.

Galamy's Sermons.

Virtue, disdain, despair, I oft have try'd;
And, foil'd, have with new arms my foe deuy'd.

Dryden.

But I, the consort of the thunder,
Have wag'd a long and unsuccessful war;
With various arts and aims in vain have toil'd,
And by a mortal man at length am foil'd.

Dryl.

2. [fouiller, French.] To blunt; to dull.

When light-wing'd toys

Of feather'd Cupid foil, with wanton dulness,
My speculative and offic'd instruments. Shaksp.

3. To defeat; to puzzle.

Whilst I am following one character, I am cross'd in my way by another, and put up such a variety of odd creatures in both sexes, that they foil the scent of one another, and puzzle the cence.

Addison.

FOIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A defeat; a miscarriage; an advantage gained without a complete conquest.

We of thy cunning had no diffidence;

One sudden foil shall never breed distrust. Shaksp.

Whoever overthrowth his mate in such sort, as that either his back, or the one shoulder, and 'contrary heel do touch the ground, shall be accounted to give the fall: if he be endangered, and make a narrow escape, it is call'd a foil.

Carew.

So after many a foil the tempter proud,
Renewing fresh assaults, amidst his pride,
Fell whence he stood to see his victor fall. Milt.

When age shall level me to impotence,
And sweating pleasure leave me on the foil.

Southern.

Death never won a stake with greater toil,
Nor e'er was fate to wear a foil.

Dryden.

2. [feuille, French.] Leaf gilding.

A stately palace, boild of squared brick,
Which cunningly was without mortar laid,
Whose walls were high, but nothing strong nor thick,

And golden foil all over them display'd. Fairy Q.

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal foil,
' or in the glittering foil

Set off to th' world, nor in broad rumour lies.

Milton.

5. Something of another colour near which jewels are set to raise their lustre.

As she a black silk cap on him begun
To set for foil of his milk-white to serve. Sidney.

Like bright metal on a fullen ground,
My reformation glittering o'er my fault,
Shall shew more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off. Shaksp.

The fullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem a foil, wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy love. Shakespeare.

'Tis the property of all true diamonds to unite the foil closely to itself, and thereby better augment its lustre: the foil is a mixture of mastica and burnt ivory.

Crew's Museum.

I Hector has a foil to set him off: we oppose the incontinence of Paris to the temperance of Hector.

Boone on the Odyssey.

4. [from fouiller, French.] A blunt sword used in fencing.

He that plays the king shall be welcome; his majesty shall have tribute of me: the adventurous knight shall use his foil and target. Shakespeare.

FO'ILER. n. f. [from foil.] One who has gained advantage over another.

To FOIN. v. n. [foindre, Fr. Skinner.]

To push in fencing.

He hew'd, and lash'd, and foin'd, and thunder'd blows,

A every way did seek into his life;
Ne plate, ne mail, could ward so mighty throws,
But yielded passage to his cruel knife. Fairy Q.

He cares not what mischief he doth, if his weapon be out: he will foia like any devil; he will spare neither man, woman, nor child.

Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Then both, no moment lost, at once advance
Against each other, arm'd with sword and lance:
They lash, they foin, they pass, they strive to bore
Their corsets, and the thinnest parts explore.
Dryden.

FOIN. n. f. [from the verb.] A thrust;
a push.

FOININGLY. adv. [from foin.] In a pushing manner.

FOISON. n. f. [Fouison, Sax.] Plenty;
abundance. Out of use.

Pay justly thy tithes, whatsoever thou be,
That God may in blessing send foison to thee.
Tusser.

Be wilful to kill, and unskilful to store,
And look for no foison, I tell thee before.
Nature should bring forth,
Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people. Shakespeare's Temp.
As those that seed grow full, as blossoming time

That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
To teeming foison; so her plenteous womb
Expresseth his full tith and husbandry. Shaksp.

TO FOIST. v. a. [fausser, French.] To infect by forgery.

Left negligence or partiality might admit or foist in abuses and corruption, an archdeacon was appointed to take account of their doings. Carzew.

FOISTY. adj. [See FUSTY.] Mouldy; fusty.

FOLD. n. f. [falð, fald, Saxon.]

1. The ground in which sheep are confined.
His eyes he open'd, and beheld a field
Part arable and tith; whereon were sheaves
New reap'd; the other part, sheepwalks and folds. Milton.

In thy book record their groans,
Who were thy sheep, and in their ancient fold Slain. Milton.

2. The place where sheep are housed.
Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold;
And Philomel becometh dumb,
And all complain of cares to come. Raleigh.

3. The flock of sheep.
And this you see I scarcely drag along,
Who yearning on the rocks has left her young,
The hope and promise of my tilling fold. Dryd.

4. A limit; a boundary.
Secure from meetings, they're distinctly roll'd;
Nor leave their seats, and pass the dreadful fold. Creech.

5. [from filð, Saxon.] A double; a complication; an involution; one part added to another; one part doubled upon another.

She in this trice of time
Commits a thing so monstrous, to distrust
So many folds of favour! Shakespeare.

The ancient Egyptian mummies were throw'd in a number of folds of linen, besmeared with gums
Not with indented wave, the serpent then
Froze on the ground, as since; but on his rear
Circular base of rising folds, that tower'd Fold above fold, a furling maze! Milton.

Let the draperies be nobly spread upon the body, and let the folds be large: the parts should be often traversed by the flowing of the folds.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

With fear and wonder seiz'd, the crowd be-holds
The gloves of death, with seven distinguish'd folds
Of tough bull hides. Dryden's Virgil.

The inward coat of a lion's stomach has stronger folds than a human, but in other things not much different. Arbutnot.

6. From the foregoing signification is derived the use of fold in composition.
Fold signifies the same quantity added:
as two fold, twice the quantity; twenty fold, twenty times repeated.

But other fell into good ground, and brought forth fruit; some an hundred fold, some sixty fold, some thirty fold. Matthew.

At last appear
Hell bounds high reaching to the horrid roof,
And thrice three fold the gates: three folds were brafs,

Three iron, three of adamant rock. Milton.
Their martyr'd blood and ashes sow
O'er all th' Italian fields, where still doth sway
The triple tyrant; that from these may grow
A hundred fold. Milton.

TO FOLD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To shut sheep in the fold.
The star that bids the shepherd fold,
Now the top of heav'n doth hold. Milton.

We see that the folding of sheep helps ground,
as well by their warmth as by their compit.
Bacon's Natural History.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store,
With wine to drive away the cold,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.

2. To enclose; to include; to shut.
We will descend and fold him in our arms.
Shakespeare's Richard 11.

eyes and the light, the light looks of a greenish blue. Newton's Opticks.

FOLIATION. n. f. [foliatio, folium, Lat.]

1. The act of beating into thin leaves.

2. Foliation is one of the parts of a flower, being the collection of those fugacious coloured leaves called petals, which constitute the compass of the flower; and sometimes guard the fruit which succeeds the foliation, as in apples and pears, and sometimes stand within it, as in cherries and apricots; for these, being tender and pulvous, and coming forth in the spring, would be injured by the weather, if they were not lodged up within their flowers. Quincy.

FOLIATURE. n. f. [from folium, Latin.]
The state of being hammered into leaves.
DiG.

FOLIO. n. f. [in folio, Latin.] A large book of which the pages are formed by a sheet of paper once doubled.

Woodward on Fossils.

FOLK. n. f. [folc, Saxon; wolk, Dutch:
it is properly a noun collective, and has no plural but by modern corruption.]

1. People, in familiar language.
Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy, but rather fitting to his doior dolorous discourtes of their own and other folks misfortune. Sidnev.

Dorilaus having married his sifter, had his marriage in short time blest, for so are folk wont to say, how unhappy so ever the children after grow, with a son. Sidnev.

When with greatest art he spoke,
You'd think he talk'd like other folk;
For all a rhetorician's rules
Teach nothing but to name his tools. Hudibras.

2. Nations; mankind.

Thou shalt judge the folk righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Psalms.

3. Any kind of people as discriminated from others.

The river thrice hath flow'd, no ebb between;
And the old folk, time's dotting chronicles,
Say it did fo a little time before. Shakespeare.

Anger is a kind of baseness; as it appears well in the weakness of children, women, old folks, and sick folks. Bacon.

4. It is now used only in familiar or burlesque language.

Old good man Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the tree has seen,
And goes with folks to shew the sight. Swift.

He walk'd and wore a threadbare cloak;
He din'd and supp'd at charge of other folk.
Swift.

FOLKNOTE. n. f. [from folk and note.]

Those hills were appointed for two special uses, and built by two several nations: the one is that which you call folknotes, built by the Saxons, and signifies in the Saxoo a meeting of folk
Spenser on Ireland.

FOLLICLE. n. f. [folliculus, Latin.]

1. A cavity in any body with strong coats.
Although there be no eminent and circular follicle, no round bag or vesicle, which long containeth this humour; yet is there a manifest receptacle of choler from the liver into the guts.
Brown.

2. Follicle is a term in botany signifying feed-vessels, capfula feminalis, or case, which some fruits and seeds have over them; as that of the alkengi, pediculari, &c. Quincy.

To FOLLOW. v. a. [folgian, Saxon; volgen, Dutch.]

1. To go after; not before, or side by side.

I had rather, forsooth, go before you like a man, than follow him like a dwarf. Shakspeare.

Him and all his train

Follow'd in bright procession, to behold Creation, and the wonders of his might. Milton.

What could I do,

But follow strait, invisibly thus led? Milton.

2. To pursue as an enemy; to chase.

Where ranks fell thickest, was indeed the place

To seek Sebastian, through a track of death

I follow'd him by groans of dying foes. Dryd.

3. To accompany; not to forsake.

Yet doubt not but in valley and in plain

God is as here, and will be found alike

Present, and of his presence many a sign

Still following thee, till compassing thee round

With goodness and paternal love, his free

Exprets, and of his steps the track divine. Milton.

Up he rode,

Follow'd with acclamation and the sound

Symphonious of ten thousand harps that tun'd

Angelic harmonies. Milton.

4. To attend as a dependant.

And the three eldest sons of Jesse went and follow'd Saul to the battle. 1 Samuel.

Let not the mule then flatter lawless sway,

Nor follow fortune where she leads the way. Pope.

5. To go after, as a teacher.

Not yielding over to old age his country delights,

he was at that time following a merlin. Sidney.

Some pious tears the pitying hero paid,

And follow'd with his eyes the fleeting shade. Dryden's Aeneid.

We follow fate, which does too fast pursue, Dryden.

6. To succeed in order of time.

Such follow him as shall be regisler'd,

Part good, part bad, of bad the longer fell. Milton.

Signs following signs, lead on the mighty year. Pope.

7. To be consequential in argument, as effects to causes.

I laugh, when those who at the spear are bold

And vent'rous, if that fail them, shrink and fear

What yet they know must follow, to endure

Exile, or ignominy, or bonds, or pain. Milton.

8. To imitate; to copy as a pupil; or to be of an opinion or party.

Where Rome keepeth that which is ancienter and better, others, whom we mean more affect, leaving it for newer, and changing it for worse,

we had rather follow the perfections of them whom we like not, than in defects resemble them whom we love. Houker.

All patterns are sure to be followed more than good rules. Locke.

9. To obey; to observe, as a guide or direction.

If all who do not follow oral tradition as their only rule of faith are out of the church, then all who follow the council of Trent are no christians. Tillotson.

Most men admire

Virtue, who follow not her lore. Par. Regain'd.

Fair virtue should I follow thee,

I should be naked and alone,

For thou art not in company,

And scarce art to be found in one. Evelyn.

Such smiling rogues as these fonth every passion,

That in the nature of their lords rebels:

As knowing nought, like dogs, but following. Shakspeare's King Lear.

3. To be posterieur in time.

4. To be consequential, as effect to cause.

If the neglect or abuse of liberty to examine what would really and truly make for his happiness

mislead him, the miscarriages that follow on it must be imputed to his own election. Locke.

To tempt them to do what is neither for their own nor the good of those under their care, great mischiefs cannot but follow. Locke.

5. To be consequential, as inference to premises.

Though there are or have been sometimes dwarfs, and sometimes giants in the world; yet it does not follow that there must be such in every age, nor in every country. Temple.

Dangerous doctrine must necessarily follow,

from making all political power to be nothing else

but Adam's paternal power. Locke.

6. To continue endeavours; to persevere.

Then shall we know, if we follow on to know

the Lord. Hofea.

FOLLOWER. n. f. [from follow.]

1. One who comes after another; not before him, or side by side.

Little gallant, you were wont to be a follower;

but now you are a leader; whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels? Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

No stop, no stay, but clouds of dust arise,

Spurr'd and cast backward on the follower's eyes. Dryden.

2. One who observes a guide or leader.

The understanding that should be eyes to the blind faculty of the will, is blind itself; and so brings all the inconveniences that attend a blind follower, under the conduct of a blind guide. South's Sermons.

3. An attendant or dependant.

No follower, but a friend. Pope.

4. An associate; a companion.

How accompanied, can't thou tell that?

—With Poins, and other his continual followers. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

5. One under the command of another.

I hold it no wisdom to leave unto the Irish chiefs too much command over their kindred, but rather withdraw their followers from them as much as may be, and gather them under the command of law. Spenser's State of Ireland.

And sure'd Æneas, when his ships were lost,

To leave his followers on a foreign coast. Dryden's Aeneid.

6. A scholar; an imitator; a copier.

Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. 1 Corinthians.

The true profession of christianity inviolably engages all its followers to do good to all men. Sprat's Sermons.

Every one's idea of identity will not be the same that Pythagoras and thousands of his followers have. Locke.

The church of Smyrna professed they worthily loved the martyrs, as the disciples and followers of our Lord; and because of their exceeding great affection to their king and their matter. Nelson.

The studious head or gen'rous mind, Follower of God, or friend of human kind, Poet or patriot, rose but to restore The faith and moral nature gave before. Pope.

1. Want of understanding; weakness of intellect.

This is folly childhood's guide,

This is childhood at her side. Hawthornth.

2. Criminal weakness; depravity of mind.

Think't thou, that duty should have dread to peak,

When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness honour

Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shakspeare.

3. Act of negligence or passion unbecomingly gravity or deep wisdom. In this sense it has a plural.

Love is blind, and lovers cannot see

The pretty follies that themselves commit;

For if they could, Cupid himself would blush

To see me thus transformed to a boy. Shakspeare.

Thy hum'rous vein, thy pleasing folly,

Lies all neglected, all forgot. Prior.

Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,

Whom folly pleases, or whose follies please. Pope.

To FOMENT. v. a. [fomentor, Latin;

fomenter, French.]

1. To cherish with heat.

Every kind that lives,

Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.

no less than parents do their children. Wotton.

Blame then thyself, as reason's law requires,

Since nature gave, and thou foment'st my fires. Dryden.

They are troubled with those ill humours, which they themselves infused and fomented in them. Locke.

FOMENTATION. n. f. [fomentation, Fr.

from foment.]

1. A fomentation is partial bathing, called also stuping, which is applying hot flannels to any part, dipped in medicated decoctions, whereby the steams breathe into the parts, and disencumber obstructed humours. Quincy.

Fomentation collecteth forth the humour by vapours;

but yet, in regard of the way made by the poultice, draweth gently the humours out: for it is a gentle fomentation, and hath withal a mixture of some stupefactive. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

2. The lotion prepared to foment the parts.

The medicines were prepared by the physicians, and the lotions or fomentations by the nurses. Arbutnot on Coins.

FOMENTER. n. f. [from foment.] One that foments; an encourager; a supporter.

These fatal distempers, as they did much hurt to the body politick at home, being like humours fixed in the natural without evacuation, so did they produce disadvantageous effects abroad; and better had it been, that the raisers and fomenters of them had never sprung up. Howel.

FON. n. f. [Scott. A word now obsolete.]

A fool; an idiot.

Sicker I hold him for a greater fon,

That loves the thing he cannot purchase. Spenser.

If you are for a merry jaunt, I'll try, for once, who can foot it farthest.
Dryden's Spanish Fryar.

With them a man sometimes cannot be a penitent, unless he also turns vagabond, and foots it to Jerusalem; or wanders over this or that part of the world, to visit the shrine of such or such a pretended saint.
South.

To FOOT. v. a.

1. To spurn; to kick.

You that did void your rheum upon my beard, and foot me as you spurn a stranger car over your threshold.
Shakespeare.

2. To fettle; to begin to fix.

What confederacy have you with the traitors
Late footed in the kingdom?
Shakespeare.

3. To tread.

Saint Withold footed thrice the world:
He met the night-mare, and her name told;
Bid her alight, and her troth plight,
And aroynt thee, witch, aroynt thee right.
Shaksf.
There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd boy, they featly foot the green.
Tickel.

4. To hold with the foot. Not in use.

We are the earth, and they,
Like moles within us, heave and cast about;
And till they foot and clutch their prey,
They never cool, much less give out.
Herbert.

FOOTBALL. n. f. [foot and ball.]

1. A ball commonly made of a blown bladder, cased with leather, driven by the foot.

Am I so round with you as you with me,
That like a football you do spurn me thus?
Shakespeare.

Such a winter-piece should be beautified with all manner of works and exercises of winter; as footballs, felling of wood, and sliding upon the ice.
Peachment.

As when a sort of lusty shepherds try
Their force at footballs, care of victory
Makes them salute too rudely, breast to breast,
That their encounter seems too rough for jest.
Waller.

One rolls along a football to his foes,
One with a broken tuncanon deals his blows.
Dryden.

2. The sport or practice of kicking the football.

He was sensible the common football was a very imperfect imitation of that exercise.
Abbott.

FOOTBOY. n. f. [foot and boy.] A low menial; an attendant in livery.

Was it discretion, lords, to let this man,
This honest man, wait like a lowly footboy
At chamber-door?
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

Though I had nobody to assist but a footboy, yet I made shift to try a pretty number of things.
Boyle on Colours.

Whenever he imagines advantages will redound to one of his footboys by oppression of me, he never disputes it.
Swift.

FOOTBRIDGE. n. f. [foot and bridge.] A bridge on which passengers walk; a narrow bridge.

Palemon's shepherd, fearing the footbridge was not strong enough, loaded it so long, 'till he broke that which would have born a bigger burden.
Sidney.

FOOTCLOTH. n. f. [foot and cloth.] A sumpter cloth.

Three times a-day my footcloth horse did stumble,
And started when he looked upon the Tower,
As loth to bear me to the slaughterhouse.
Shaksf.

FOOTED. adj. [from foot.] Shaped in the foot.

Snouted and tailed like a boar, and footed like a goat.
Grew.

FOOTFIGHT. n. f. [foot and fight.] A fight made on foot, in opposition to that on horseback.

So began our footfight, in such sort, that we were well entered to blood of both sides.
Sidney.

FOOTHOLD. n. f. [foot and hold.] Space to hold the foot; space on which one may tread surely.

All fell to work at the roots of the tree, and left it so little foothold, that the first blast laid it flat on the ground.
L'Estrange.

He's at the top: he has nothing above him to aspire to, nor any foothold left him to come down by.
L'Estrange.

FOOTING. n. f. [from foot.]

1. Ground for the foot.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.
Shakespeare.

As Noah's pigeon, which return'd no more,
Did shew the footing found, for all the flood.
Davies.

In ascents, every step gained is a footing and help to the next.
Holder's Elements of Speech.

2. Support; root.

Set cloven stakes; and wond'rous to behold,
Their sharpen'd ends in earth their footing place,
And the dry poles produce a living race.
Dryden.

3. Basis; foundation.

All those sublime thoughts take their rise and footing here: the mind stirs not one jot beyond those ideas which sense or reflection have offered.
Locke.

The reasoning faculties of the soul would not know how to move, for want of a foundation and footing in most men, who cannot trace truth to its fountain and original.
Locke.

4. Place; possession.

Whether the unctuous exhalations are Fir'd by the sun, or seeming to alone;
Or each some more remote and slippery star,
Which loses footing when to mortals shewn.
Dryden.

5. Tread; walk.

As he forward mov'd his footing old,
So backward still was turn'd his wrinkled face.
Spenser.

I would outnigh't you did nobody come:
But hark, I hear the footing of a man.
Shaksf.
Break off, break off; I feel the different found
Of some chaste footing near about this ground.
Milton.

6. Dance.

Make holiday: your rye-straw hats put on,
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

7. Steps; road; track.

He grew strong among the Irish; and in his footing his son continuing, hath increased his said name.
Spenser on Ireland.

Like running weeds, that have no certain root;
or like footings up and down, impossible to be traced.
Bacon's Henry VII.

8. Entrance; beginning; establishment.

Ever since our nation had any footing in this land, the state of England did desire to perfect the conquest.
Davies.

The defeat of colonel Bellasis gave them their first footing in Yorkshure.
Clarendon.

No useful arts have yet found footing here;
But all untaught and savage does appear.
Dryden.

9. State; condition; settlement.

Gaul was on the same footing with Egypt as to taxes.
Abuthnot.

FOOTLICKER. n. f. [foot and lick.] A slave; an humble fawner; one who licks the foot.

Do that good mischief which may make this island
Thine own for ever; and I, thy Caliban,
For ay thy footlicker.
Shakespeare's Tempest.

FOOTMAN. n. f. [foot and man.]

1. A soldier that marches and fights on foot.

The numbers levied by her lieutenant did consist of footmen three millions, of horsemen one million.
Raleigh's History.

2. A low menial servant in livery.

He was carried in a rich chariot, litterwise, with two horses at either end, and two footmen on each side.
Bacon.

Like footmen running before coaches,
To tell the inn what lord approaches.
Prior.

3. One who practices to walk or run.

FOOTMANSHIP. n. f. [from footman.] The art or faculty of a runner.

The Irish archers espying this, suddenly broke up, and committed the safety of their lives to their nimble footmanship.
Hayward.

Yet, says the fox, I have baffled more of them with my wiles and shifts than ever you did with your footmanship.
L'Estrange.

FOOTPACE. n. f. [foot and pace.]

1. Part of a pair of stairs, whereon, after four or five steps, you arrive to a broad place, where you make two or three paces before you ascend another step, thereby to ease the legs in ascending the rest of the stairs.
Moxon.

2. A pace no faster than a slow walk.

FOOTPAD. n. f. [foot and pad.] A highwayman that robs on foot, not on horseback.

FOOTPATH. n. f. [foot and path.] A narrow way which will not admit horses or carriages.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both file and gate, horseway and footpath.

FOOTPOST. n. f. [foot and post.] A post or messenger that travels on foot.

For carrying such letters, every thoroughfare weekly appointeth a footpost, whose dispatch is well near as speedy as the horses.

FOOTSTALL. n. f. [foot and stall.] A woman's stirrup.

FOOTSTEP. n. f. [foot and step.]

1. Trace; track; impression left by the foot.

Clear-fighted reason, wisdom's judgment leads,
And sense, her vassal, in her footsteps treads.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow.

2. Token; mark; notice given.

Let us turn our thoughts to the frame of our system, if there we may trace any visible footsteps of Divine wisdom and beneficence.

3. Example.

FOOTSTOOL. n. f. [foot and stool.] Stool on which he that sits places his feet.

Thus have we swept suspicion from our seat,
And made our footstool of security.

They whose sacred office 'tis to bring
Kings to obey their God, and men their king,
By these mysterious links to fix and tie
Men to the footstool of the Deity.

Let echoing anthems make his praises known
On earth, his footstool, as in heaven his throne.

By the phrase of worshipping his footstool, no more is meant than worshipping God at his footstool.

FOP. n. f. [A word probably made by chance, and therefore without etymology.] A simpleton; a coxcomb; a man of small understanding and much ostentation; a pretender; a man fond of show, dress, and flutter; and an impertinent.

A whole trite of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake.

When such a positive abandon'd fop,
Among his numerous absurdities,
Stumbles upon some tolerable line,
I fret to see them in such company.

The leopard's beauty, without the fox's wit, is no better than a fop in a gay coat.

In a dull stream, which moving slow,
You hardly see the current flow;
When a small breeze obstructs the course,
It whirls about for want of force,
And in its narrow circle gathers

Nothing but chaff, and straws, and feathers:
The current of a female mind

Stops thus, and turns with ev'ry wind;
Thus whirling round, together draws
Fools, fops, and rakes, for chaff and straws.

FOPDOODLE. n. f. [fop and doodle.] A fool; an insignificant wretch.

Where stumpy butchers broke your noddle,
And handled you like a fopdoodle.

FOPPERY. n. f. [from fop.]

1. Folly; impertinence.
Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house. Shakespeare's Merch. of Venice.
I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies; and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprize of my powers, drove the grossness of the foppery into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies.

This is the excellent foppery of the world, that when we are sick in fortune, often the forfeits of our own behaviour, we make guilty of our distasters, the sun, the moon, and stars, as if we were villains on necessity.

2. Affectation of show or importance; showy folly.

3. Foolery; vain or idle practice; idle affectation.

They thought the people were better let alone in their fopperies, than to be suffered to break loose from that subjection which your superstition kept them in.

But though we fetch from Italy and France
Our fopperies of tune and modes of dance,
Our sturdy Britons scorn to borrow sense.

I with I could say quaint fopperies were wholly absent from graver subjects.

FOPPISH. adj. [from fop.]

1. Foolish; idle; vain.

Fools ne'er had less grace in a year;
For wise men are grown foppish,
And know not how their wits to wear,
Their manners are so apish.

2. Vain in show; foolishly ostentatious; vain of dress.

With him the present still some virtues have;
The vain are sprightly, and the stupid grave;
The slothful negligent, the foppish neat;
The lewd are airy, and the sly discreet.

The Romans grew extremely expensive and foppish; so that the emperor Aurelian forbid men that variety of colours on their shoes, allowing it still to women.

You would know who is rude and ill-natured, who is vain and foppish, who lives too high, and who is in debt.

FOPPISHLY. adv. [from foppish.] Vainly; ostentatiously.

FOPPISHNESS. n. f. [from foppish.] Vanity; showy or ostentatious vanity.

FOPPLING. n. f. [from fop.] A petty fop; an under-rate coxcomb.

Thy works in Chloë's toilet gain a part,
And, with his taylor, share the fopplag's heart.

FOR. prep. [for, Saxon; voor, Dutch.]

1. Because of.

That which we for our unworthiness are afraid to crave, our prayer is, that God for the worthiness of his Son would notwithstanding vouchsafe to grant.

Edward and Richard,
With fiery eyes sparkling for very wrath,
Are at our backs.

Speak, good Cominius;
Leave nothing out for length.

For as much as the question cannot be scanned, unless the time of Abraham's journey be considered of, I will search into a tradition concerning his travels.

An astrologer saith, if it were not for two things that are constant, no individual would last one moment.

For as much as it is a fundamental law in the Turkish empire, that they may, without any other provocation, make war upon christendoms for the propagation of their laws; so the christians may at all times, as they think good, be upon the prevention.

The governour falling out, took great store of victual and warlike provision, which the Turks had for haste left behind them.

Their offer he willingly accepted, knowing that he was not able to keep that place three days for lack of victuals.

Quit, quit, for shame; this will not move,
This cannot take her:

If of herself she will not love,

Nothing can make her.

Care not for frowns or smiles.

The hypocrite or carnal man hopes, and is the wicked for hoping.

Let no man, for his own poverty, become more oppressing in his bargains; but quietly recommend his estate to God, and leave the success to him.

Persons who have lost most of their grinders, having been compelled to use three or four only in chewing, wore them so low, that the inward nerve lay bare, and they would no longer for pain make use of them.

I but revenge my fate; disdain'd, betray'd,
And suff'ring death for this ungrateful maid.

Sole on the barren sands, the suff'ring chief,
Roar'd out for anguish and indulg'd his grief.

For his long absence church and state did groan,
Madness the pulpit; faction seiz'd the throne.

Nor with a superstitious fear is aw'd
For what befalls at home, or what abroad.

I, my own judge, condemn'd myself before;
For pity, aggravate my crime no more.

Matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burnt th' imperial town,
Shrick'd for the downfall in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.

Children, discountenanced by their parents for any fault, find a refuge in the caresses of foolish flatterers.

A sound mind in a sound body is a short but full description of a happy state in this world; he that has these two has little more to wish for, and he that wants either of them will be but little better for any thing else.

The middle of the gulph is remarkable for tempests.

My open'd thought to joyous prospect raise,
And for thy mercy let me sing thy praise.

Than we to stretch it out.

A paltry ring
That she did give me, whose poesy was,
For all the world, like cutler's poetry
Upon a knife; love me and leave me not.

As thou art at this hour, was Richard then.

It was young counsel for the persons, and violent counsel for the matters.

Authority followeth old men, and favour and popularity youth; but for the moral part, perhaps, youth will have the pre-eminence, as age hath for the polittick.

Comets are rather gazed upon than wisely observed in their effects; that is, what kind of comet for magnitude or colour, produceth what kind of effects.

For me, if there be such a thing as I.

He faith these honours consisted in preserving their memories, and praising their virtues; but for any matter of worship towards them, he utterly denies it.

Our laws were for their matter foreign.

Now for the government, it is absolute monarchy; there being no other laws in China but the king's command.

For me, no other happinesses I own,
Than to have been no issue to the throne.

For me, my stormy voyage at an end,
I to the port of death securely tend.

After death, we sprights have just such natures
We had, for all the world, when human creatures.

Dryden.

Such little wasps, and yet so full of spite;
For bulk mere insects, yet in mischief strong.

Tate's Juvenal.

Hobbes has given us a correct explanation of

This, for any thing we know to the contrary, might be the self-same form which Philojudæus expresseth.

Hooker.

God's desertion shall, for ought he knows,
the next minute supervene.

Decay of Piety.

Probability supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing yet certainly determined on either side.

South.

For any thing that legally appears to the contrary, it may be a continuance to fright us.

Swift.

If such vast masses of matter had been situated nearer to the sun, or to each other, as they might as easily have been, for any mechanical or fortuitous agent, they must necessarily have caused a considerable disorder in the whole system.

Bentley.

34. To the use of; to be used in.

The oak for nothing ill,
The osier good for twigs, the poplar for the mill.

Spenser.

Your understandings are not bright enough for the exercise of the highest acts of reason.

Tillotson.

35. In consequence of.

For love they force through thickets of the wood,
They climb the steepy hills and stem the flood.

Dryden.

36. In recompence of; in return of.

Now, for so many glorious actions done,
For peace at home, and for the publick wealth,
I mean to crown a bowl for Cæsar's health;
Besides, in gratitude for such high matters,
Know I have vow'd two hundred gladiators.

Dryden's Persius.

First the wily wizard must be caught;
For unconstrain'd, he nothing tells for naught.

Dryden's Virgil.

37. In proportion to.

He is not very tall, yet for his years he's tall.
As he could see clear, for those times, through superstition; so he would be blinded, now and then, by human policy.

Bacon.

Emul'd Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge.

Dryden's Juvenal.

38. By means of; by interposition of.

Moral consideration can no way move the sensible appetite, were it not for the will.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

Of some calamity we can have no relief but from God alone; and what would men do in such a case, if it were not for God?

Tillotson.

39. In regard of; in preservation of.

I cannot for my life, is, I cannot if my life might be saved by it.

Vol. I.

I bid the rascal knock upon your gate;
But could not get him for my heart.

Shakspeare.

I cannot for my heart leave a room, before I have thoroughly examined the papers pasted upon the walls.

Addison's Spectator.

40. For all; notwithstanding.

Neither doubt you, because I wear a woman's apparel, I will be the more womanish; since I assure you, for all my apparel, there is nothing
I desire more than fully to prove myself a man in this enterprize.

Sidney.

For all the carefulness of the christians the English bulwark was undermined by the enemy, and upon the fourth of September part thereof was blown up.

Knolles' History.

But as Noah's pigeon, which return'd no
more,

Did shew the footing found for all the flood.

Davies.

They resolute, for all this, do proceed unto that judgment.

Daniel.

If we apprehend the greatest things in the world of the emperor of China or Japan, we are well enough contented, for all that, to let them govern at home.

Stillington.

Though that very ingenious person has anticipated part of what I should say, yet you will,
for all that, expect that I should give you a fuller account.

Boyle on Colours.

She might have passed over my business;
but my rabble is not to be numbed up in silence,
for all her pertness.

Dryden.

For all his exact plot, down was he cast from all his greatness, and forced to end his days in a mean condition.

South.

41. For to.

In the language used two centuries ago, for was commonly used before to, the sign of the infinite mood, to note the final cause. As I come,
for to see you, for I love to see you:
in the same sense with the French pour.
Thus it is used in the translation of the Bible. But this distinction was by the best writers sometimes forgotten; and,
for, by wrong use, appearing superfluous,
is now always omitted.

Who shall let me now

On this vile body for to wreak my wrong?

Fairy Queen.

A large posterity

Up to your happy palaces may mount,
Of blessed saints for to increase the count.

Spenser.

These things may serve for to represent how just cause of fear this kingdom may have towards Spain.

Bacon.

FOR. conj.

1. The word by which the reason is introduced of something advanced before.

Heav'n doth wish us as we wish torches dead,
Not light them for themselves; for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not.

Shakspeare.

Old husbandmen I at Sabinum know,
Who for another year dig, plough, and sow;
For never any man was yet so old,
But hop'd his life one winter more would hold.

Denham.

Tell me what kind of thing is wit:
For the first matter loves variety less.

Cowley.

Thus does he foolishly who, for fear of any thing in this world, ventures to displease God; for in so doing he runs away from men, and falls into the hands of the living God.

Tillotson.

2. Because; on this account that. It is in this sense properly followed by that, and without it is elliptical. This sense is almost obsolete.

I doubt not but great troops would be ready to run; yet for that the worst men are most ready to remove, I would wish them chosen by discretion of wise men.

Spenser on Ireland.

Jealous souls will not be answer'd to:
They are not ever jealous for a cause,
But jealous for they're jealous.

Shakspeare.

Heaven defend your good souls, that you think
I will your serious and great business scant;
For she is with me.

Shakspeare's Othello.

Nor swell'd his breast with uncouth pride,
That heav'n on him above his charge had bid:
But, for his great Creator would the fame,
His will increas'd; so fire augmenteth flame.

Fairfax.

Many excrescences of trees grow chiefly where the tree is dead or faded; for that the natural sap of the tree corrupteth into some preternatural substance.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. FOR as much. In regard to that; in consideration of.

For as much as in publick prayer we are not only to consider what is needful, in respect of God; but there is also in men that which we must regard; we somewhat incline to length, lest over-quick dispatch should give occasion to deem, that the thing itself is but little accounted of.

Locke.

For as much as the thirst is intolerable, the patient may be indulged the free use of spaw water.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. FOR why. Because; for this reason that.

Solyman had three hundred fieldpieces; for why, Solyman purposing to draw the emperor into battle, had brought no pieces of battery with him.

Knolles.

To FORAGE. v. n. [from foris, abroad, Latin.]

1. To wander far; to rove at a distance. Not in use.

Forage, and run

To meet displeasure farther from the doors,
And grapple with him, ere he come so nigh.

Shakspeare's King John.

2. To wander in search of spoil, generally of provisions.

As in a stormy night,
Wolves, urged by their raging appetite,
Forage for prey.

Denham.

There was a brood of young larks in the corn,
and the dam went abroad to forage for them.

L'Esrange.

Nor dare they stray

When rain is promis'd or a stormy day;
But near the city walls their wat'ring take,
Nor forage far, but short excursions make.

Dryd.

3. To ravage; to feed on spoil.

His most mighty father on a hill
Stood smiling, to behold his hon's whelp
Forage in blood of French nobility.

Shakspeare.

To FORAGE. v. a. To plunder; to strip; to spoil.

They will both strengthen all the country round, and also be as continual holds for her majesty, if the people should revolt; for without such it is easy to forage and over-run the whole I md.

Spenser on Ireland.

The victorious Philistines were wofully by the captivated ark, which foraged their country more than a conquering army.

South.

FORAGE. n. f. [fourage, German and French; from foris, Latin.]

1. Search of provisions; the act of feeding abroad.

One way a hand select from forage drives
A herd of bees, fair oxen, and fair kine,
From a fat meadow ground; or fleecy flock,
Ewes and their bleating lambs, over the plains
Their booty.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Provisions sought abroad.

Some o'er the public magazines preside,
And some are sent new forage to provide.

Dryd.

3. Provisions in general.

Provided forage, our spent arms renew'd.

Dryden's Fables.

FORAMINOUS. adj. [from foramen, Latin.] Full of holes; perforated in many places; porous.

Soft and foraminous bodies, in the first creation of the found, will deaden it; but in the passage of the found they will admit it better than harder bodies. Bacon's Natural History.

To FORBEAR. v. n. pret. I forbore, anciently forbare; part. forboren. [Forbæran, Saxon. For has in composition the power of privation; as, forbear: or depravation; as, forfwear, and other powers not easily explained.]

1. To cease from any thing; to intermit. Who can forbear to admire and adore him who weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance. Cheyne.

2. To pause; to delay. I pray you, tarry: pause a day or two, before you hazard; for in eluding wrong, I lose your company; therefore forbear a while. Shakespeare.

3. To omit voluntarily; not to do; to abstain.

He forbare to go forth. 1 Samuel.

At this he started, and forbore to swear; Not out of conscience of the sin, but fear. Dryd.

The wolf, the lion, and the bear, When they their prey in pieces tear, To quarrel with themselves forbear. Denham.

4. To restrain any violence of temper; to be patient. By long forbearing is a prince persuaded, and a soft tongue breaketh the bone. Proverbs.

To FORBEAR. v. a.

1. To decline; to avoid voluntarily. Forbear his presence, until time hath qualified the heat of his displeasure. Shakespeare.
So angry bulls the combat do forbear, When from the wood a lion does appear. Waller.

2. To abstain from; to shun to do; to omit. If it passed only by the house of peers, it should be looked upon as invalid and void, and execution should be thereupon forborn or suspended. Clarendon.
There is not any one action whatsoever which a man ought to do, or to forbear, but the Scripture will give him a clear precept or prohibition for it. South.

3. To spare; to treat with clemency. With all lowliness and meekness, with long suffering, forbearing one another in love. Eph.

4. To withhold. Forbear thee from meddling with God, who is with me, that he destroy thee not. 2 Chronicles.

FORBEARANCE. n. f. [from forbear.] In an unlawful manner.

1. The care of avoiding or shunning any thing; negation of practice. True nobleness would Learn him forbearance from so foul a wrong. Shakespeare.

This may convince us how vastly greater a pleasure is consequent upon the forbearance of sin, than can possibly accompany the commission of it. South.

Liberty is the power a man has to do, or forbear doing, any particular action, according as its doing or forbearance has the actual preference in the mind. Locke.

2. Intermision of something.

3. Command of temper.

Have a continent forbearance, 'till the speed of his rage goes slower. Shakespeare's King Lear.

4. Lenity; delay of punishment; mildness. Not do I take notice of this instance of severity in our own country to justify such a proceeding, but only to display the mildness and forbearance made use of under the reign of his present majesty. Atkinson's Freeholder.

He applies to our gratitude by obligations of kindness and beneficence, of long suffering and forbearance. Rogers.

FORBEARER. n. f. [from forbear.] An intermitter; interceptor of any thing.

The west as a father all goodness doth bring, The east a forbearer, no manner of thing. Tusser.

To FORBID. v. a. pret. I forbale; part. forbidden or forbid. [Forbæodan, Saxon; verbieden, Dutch.]

1. To prohibit; to interdict any thing.

A witch, a quean, an old cozening quean; have I not forbid her my house? Shakespeare.

It is

The practice and the purpose of the king, From whose obedience I forbid my soul. Shaksp.

By tasting of that fruit forbid, Where they sought knowledge, they did error find. Davies.

The voice of reason, in all the dictates of natural morality, ought carefully to be attended to, by a strict observance of what it commands, but especially of what it forbids. South.

All hatred of persons, by very many christian principles, we are most solemnly and indispensably forbid. Sprat.

The chaste and holy race Are all forbidden this polluted place. Dryden.

2. To command to forbear any thing.

She with so sweet a rigour forbad him, that he durst not rebel. Sidney.

They have determined to consume all those things that God hath forbidden them to eat by his laws. Judith.

3. To oppose; to hinder.

The moisture being forbidden to come up in the plant, stayeth longer in the root, and so dilateth it. Bacon's Natural History.

The plaster alone would pen the humour, and so exasperate it, as well as forbid new humour. Bar.

Thy throne is darkness in th' abyss of light, A blaze of glory that forbids the sight! O teach me to believe thee thus conceal'd, And search no farther than thyself reveal'd. Dryden.

4. To accurse; to blast. Now obsolete. To bid is in old language to pray; to forbid therefore is to curse.

Sleep shall neither night nor day Hang upon his penthouse lid; He shall live a man forbid. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

To FORBID. v. n. To utter a prohibition.

Now the good gods forbid, That our renowned Rome Should now eat up her own! Shakespeare.

FORBIDDANCE. n. f. [from forbid.] Prohibition; edict against any thing.

How hast thou yielded to transgress The strict forbiddance! how to violate The sacred fruit forbidden? Milton's Parad. Lost.

FORBIDDENLY. adv. [from forbid.] In an unlawful manner.

With all confidence he swears, as he had seen't, That you have touch'd his queen forbiddenly. Shakespeare.

FORBIDDER. n. f. [from forbid.] One that prohibits; one that enacts a prohibition.

This was a hold accusation of God, making the fountain of good the contriver of evil, and the forbidder of the crime an abettor of the fact prohibited. Brown.

Other care, perhaps, May have diverted from continual watch Our great forbidder! Milton's Paradise Lost.

FORBIDDING. participial adj. [from forbid.] Raising abhorrence; repelling approach; causing aversion.

Tragedy was made forbidding and horrible. A. Hill.

FORCE. n. f. [force, French; fortis, Latin.]

1. Strength; vigour; might; active power.

He never could maintain his part but in the force of his will. Shakespeare.

A ship, which hath struck sail, doth run By force of that force which before it won. Donne.

2. Violence. Thus got the house of Lancaster the crown, Which now they hold by force, and not by right. Shakespeare.

The shepherd Paris bore the Spartan bride By force away, and then by force enjoy'd; But I by free consent. Dryden.

3. Virtue; efficacy. Manifest it is, that the very majesty and holiness of the place where God is worshipp'd, hath in regard of us, great virtue, force, and efficacy; for that it serveth as a sensible help to stir up devotion. Hooker.

No definitions, no suppositions of any sect, are of force enough to destroy constant experience. Locke.

4. Validness; power of law. A testament is of force after men are dead. Hebrews.

Not long in force this charter stood; Wanting that seal, it must be seal'd in blood. Denham.

5. Armament; warlike preparation. Often forces in the plural. O thou! whose captain I account myself, Look on my forces with a gracious eye. Shaksp.

The secret of the power of Spain consisteth in a veteran army, compounded of miscellany forces of all nations. Bacon.

A greater force than that which here we find, Ne'er preis'd the ocean, nor employ'd the wind. Waller.

Those victorious forces of the rebels were not able to sustain your arms. Dryden.

6. Destiny; necessity; fatal compulsion. To FORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compel; to constrain. Dangers are light, if they once seem light; and more dangers have deceived men than forced them. Bacon.

I have been forced to use the cant words of Whig and Tory. Swift's Examiner.

The actions and operations did force them upon dividing the single idea. Brown.

2. To overpower by strength. O that fortune Had brought me to the field where thou art sam'd

To have wrought such wonders with an ass's jaw, I should have forc'd thee soon with other arms. Milton.

With fates averse, the rout in arms resort, To force their monarch, and insult the court. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To impel; to press; to draw or push by main strength. Thou shalt not destroy the trees by forcing an ax against them. Deuteronomy.

Stooping, the spear descended on his chine, Just where the bone distinguish'd either loin: It stuck so fast, so deeply bury'd lay, That scarce the victor forc'd the steel away. Dryden's Æneid.

4. To enforce; to urge. Three bludd'ring nights, burn by the southern blait,

I floated, and discover'd land at last: High on a mounting wave my head I bore, Forcing my strength, and gath'ring to the shore. Dryden's Æneid.

Ye myrtles brown, with ivy never fere, I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude, And with forc'd fingers rude Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year. Milton.

To Trojan guests; left, ignorant of fate,
The queen might force them from her town and state. Dryden.

6. To gain by violence or power.

My heart is your's; but, oh! you left it here
Abandon'd to those tyrants hope and fear;
If they forc'd from me one kind look or word,
Could you not that, nor that small part afford?
Dryden.

7. To storm; to take or enter by violence.

Troy wall'd so high,
Atides might as well have forc'd the sky. Waller.
Heav'n from all ages wisely did provide
This wealth, and for the bravest nation hide;
Who with four hundred foot, and forty horse,
Dare boldly go a new-found world to force.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

8. To ravish; to violate by force.

Force her.—I like it not. Dryden.

turns of wit, and forc'd conceits. Addison.

10. To man; to strengthen by foldicis; to garrison.

Here let them lye,
'Till famine and the ague eat them up:
Were they not forc'd with those that should be our's,
We might have met them d careful, beard to beard.
Shakspeare.

If you find that any great number of soldiers be newly sent into Oroonoke, and that the passages be already forced, then be well advised how you land. Raleigh's Apology.

11. To FORCE out. To extort.

The heat of the dispute had forced out from Luther expressions that seemed to make his doctrine run higher than really it did. Atterbury.

To FORCE. v. n. To lay stress upon—This word I have only found in the following passage.

That morning that he was to join battle with Harold, his armor put on his backpiece before and his breastplate behind; the which being espied by some that stood by, was taken among them for an ill token, and therefore advised him not to fight that day; to whom the duke answered, I force not of such fooleries, but if I have any skill in soothsaying, as in sooth I have none, it doth prognosticate that I shall change copy from a duke to a king. Camden's Remains.

FORCEDLY. adv. [from force.] Violently; constrainedly; unnaturally.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters doth most aptly agree to that structure of the abyss and antediluvian earth; but very improperly and forcedly to the present form of the earth and the waters. Burnet's Theory.

FORCEFUL. adj. [force and full.] Violent; strong; driven with great might;
impetuous.

Why, what need we
Commune with you of this, but rather follow
Our forceful insigation? Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Against the flood he threw
His forceful spear, which, hissing as it flew,
Pierc'd through the yielding planks. Dryden.

Were it by chance, or forceful destiny,
Which forms in causes best whate'er shall be,
Assisted by a friend, one moonless night,
This Palemon from prison took his flight. Dryden.

He pois'd in air, the jav'lin sent,
Though Paris' shield the forceful weapon went.
Pope.

FORCEFULLY. adv. [from forceful.]
Violently; impetuously.FORCELESS. adj. [from force.] Having little force; weak; feeble; impotent.

FORCEPS. n. s. [Latin.]

Forceps properly signifies a pair of tongs; but is used for an instrument in chirurgery, to extract any thing out of wounds, and the like occasions. Quincy.

FORCER. n. s. [from force.]

1. That which forces, dries, or constrains.
2. The embolus of a pump working by pulsion, in contradistinction to a sucker, which acts by attraction.

The usual means for the ascent of water is either by suckers or forcers. Wilkins' Dædalus.

FORCIBLE. adj. [from force.]

1. Strong; mighty; opposed to weak.
That punishment, which hath been sometimes forcible to bridle sin, may grow afterwards too weak and feeble. Hooker.

Who therefore can invent
With what more forcible we may offend
Our yet unwounded enemies? Milton.

2. Violent; impetuous.

Jersey, below'd by all; for all must feel
The influence of a form and mind,
Where comely grace and constant virtue dwell,
Like mingl'd streams, more forcible when join'd:
Jersey shal' at thy altars stand,
Shall there receive the azure band. Prior.

3. Efficacious; active; powerful.

Sweet smells are most forcible in dry substances, when broken; and so likewise in oranges, the ripping of their rind giveth out their smell more. Bacon's Natural History.

4. Prevalent; of great influence.

How forcible are right words? Job.
God hath assured us, that there is no inclination or temptation to forcible which our humble prayers and desires may not frustrate and break afunder. Raleigh's History.

5. Done by force; suffered by force.

He swifter far,
Me overtook, his mother all dismay'd,
And in embraces forcible and foul Ingend'ring with me. Milton.

The abdication of king James, the advocates on that side look upon to have been forcible and unjust, and consequently void. Swift.

horse and mule, whose mouths are forcibly holden with bit and bridle. Hammond.

FORCIPATED. adj. [from forceps.] Formed like a pair of pincers to open and enclose.

The locusts have antennæ, or long horns before, with a long falcation or forcipated tail behind. Bronson.

When they have seized their prey, they will so tenaciously hold it with their forcipated mouth, that they will not part therewith, even when taken out of the waters. Derham.

FORD. n. s. [ford, Saxon, from fapan, to pass.]1. A shallow part of a river where it may be passed without swimming.

Her men the paths rode through made by her sword;
They pass the stream, when she had found the ford. Fairfax.

2. It sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness.

Medusa with Gorgonian terror guards
The ford, and of itself the water riles
All taste of living wight. Milton's Paradise Lost.
Rife, wretched widow! rife; nor undeplor'd
Permit my ghost to pass the thygian ford:
But rise, prepar'd in black to mourn thy peris'd loid. Dryden.

To FORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To pass without swimming.

Adan's shin-bones must have contained a thousand fathom, and much more, if he had forded the ocean. Raleigh's History.

FORDABLE. adj. [from ford.] Passable without swimming.

Pliny placeth the Schenitæ uppon the Euphrates, where the same beginneth to be fordable. Raleigh.
A countryman founded a river up and down, to try where it was most fordable; and where the water ran too smooth, he found it deepest; and,
on the contrary, shallowest where it made most noise. L'Estrange.

FORE. adj. [fore, Saxon.]

1. Anterior; that which is before; not behind.

Though there is an orb or spherical area of the found, yet they move straight and go farthest in the fore lines from the first local impression.
Bacon.

2. That which comes first in a progressive motion.

Resistance in fluids arises from their greater pressing on the fore than hind part of the bodies moving in them. Cheyne.

FORE. adv.

1. Anteriorly; in the part which appears first to those that meet it.

Each of them will bear six demiculvetins and four sikers, needing no other addition than a slight spar deck fore and aft, which is a slight deck throughout. Raleigh's Essays.

2. Fore is a word much used in composition to mark priority of time, of which some examples shall be given. A vitious orthography has confounded for and fore in composition.To FOREADVISE. v. n. [fore and advise.]
To counsel early; to counsel before the time of action, or the event.

Thus to have said,
As you were foreadvise'd, had touch'd his spirit,
And tried his inclination. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

To FOREAPPOINT. v. n. [fore and appoint.] To order beforehand.To FOREARM. v. a. [fore and arm.] To provide for attack or resistance before the time of need.

A man should fix and forearm his mind with this persuasion, that, during his passion, whatsoever is offered to his imagination tends only to deceive. South.

He forearms his care
With rules to push his fortune, or to bear.
Dryden's Æneid.

To FOREBODE. v. n. [fore and bode.]

1. To prognosticate; to foretell.

An ancient aggur, skull'd in future care,
With these foreboding words restrains their hate.
Dryden.

2. To foreknow; to be present of; to feel a secret sense of something future.

Fate makes you deaf, while I in vain implore:
My heart foretold I ne'er shall see you more.
Dryden.
My soul foretold I should find the bow'r
Of some fell monster, fierce with barb'rous pow'r.
Keble.

FOREBODER. n. f. [from forebode.]

1. A prognosticator; a soothsayer.
Your raven has a reputation in the world for a bird of omen, and a kind of small prophet: a crow that had observed the raven's manner and way of delivering his predictions, sets up for a foreboder.

L'Esfrange.

2. A foreknower.

FOREBY. prep. [fore and by.] Near; hard by; fast by.

Not far away he hence doth won

The feast was serv'd; the time so well forecast,

That just when the desert and fruits were plac'd,
The hend's alarm began.

Dryden.

3. To foresee; to provide against.

It is wisdom to consider the end of things before we embark, and to forecast consequences.

L'Esfrange.

To FORECA'ST. v. n. To form schemes; to contrive beforehand.

And whatso heavens in their secret doom

Ordained have, how can frail fleshly wight

Forecast, but it must needs to issue come? Spenser.

When broad awake, she finds in troublous fit,

Forecasting how his foe he might annoy. F. Queen.

FO'RCAST. n. f. [from the verb.] Contrivance beforehand; scheme; plan; antecedent policy.

Alas! that Warwick had no more forecast,

But while he thought to steal the single ten,

The king was slyly finger'd from the deck!

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

He makes this difference to arise from the forecast and predetermination of the gods.

Addison on Medals.

The last, scarce ripen'd into perfect man,

Saw helpies him from whom their life began:

Mein'ry and forecast suit returns engage;

That pointed back to youth; this on to age. Pope.

FORECASTER. n. f. [from forecast.] One who contrives beforehand.

FO'RECASTLE. n. f. [fore and castle.] In a ship, is that part where the foremast

To Latium, and the realms foredoom'd by Jove.

Dryden's Æneid.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,

Following with ease: if favour'd by thy fate,

Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state.

Dryden.

Fate foredoom'd, and all things tend

By course of time to their appointed end. Dryden.

Here Britain's statesmen of the fall foredoom

Of foreign tyrants, and of nymphs at home. Pope.

FORE-END. n. f. [fore and end.] The anterior part.

I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid

More pious debts to heaven than in all

The fore-end of my time.

Shakspeare.

In the fore-end of it, which was towards him, grew a small green branch of palm.

Bacon.

FOREFATHER. n. f. [fore and father.]

Ancessor; one who in any degree of ascending genealogy precedes another.

The custom of the people of God, and the decrees of our forefathers, are to be kept, touching those things whereof the Scripture hath neither one way or other given us charge.

Hooker.

If it be a generous desire in men to know from whence their own forefathers have come, it cannot be displeasing to understand the place of our first ancestor.

Raleigh's History.

Conceit is still deriv'd

From some forefather grief: mine is not so. Shalf.

Shall I not be distraught;

And madly play with my forefathers joints.

Shakspeare.

Our great forefathers,

Had left him nought to conquer but his country.

Addison.

When a man sees the prodigious pains our forefathers have been at in these barbarous buildings, one cannot but fancy what miracles of architecture they would have left us, had they been instructed in the right way.

Addison.

Blest peer! his great forefathers ev'ry grace

Reflecting, and reflected in his race.

Pope.

To FOREFE'ND. v. a. [It is doubtful whether from fore or for and defend. If from fore, it implies antecedent provision; as forearm: if from for, prohibitory security; as forbid. Of the two following examples one favours for, and the other fore.]

1. To prohibit; to avert.

I would not kill thy unprepared spirit;

No, heav'n's forefend! I would not kill thy soul

Shakspeare.

Perhaps a fever, which the gods forefend,

May bring your youth to some untimely end.

Dryden.

2. To provide for; to secure.

Down with the bridge,
Down with it flat: take the horse quite away
Of him, that, his particular to forefend,
Smells from the gen'ral weal. Shakspeare.

He ran fiercely, and smote at Heliodorus with his forefeet.

2 Marcabees.

I continue my line from thence to the heel;

then making the breast with the eminency thereof,

bring out his near forefoot, which I finish.

Peacham.

To FOREGO. v. a. [fore and go.]

1. To quit; to give up; to resign.

Is it her nature, or is it her will,

To be so cruel to an humble sue?

If nature, then she may it mend with skill;

If will, then she at will may will forego.

Having all before absolutely in his power, it remaineth so still, he having already neither fore-given nor foregone any thing thereby unto them, but having received something from them.

Spenser.

He is a great adventurer, said he,

That hath his sword through hard essay foregone;

And now hath vowed 'till he avenged be

Of that despite, never to wear none. F. Queen.

Special reason oftentimes causeth the will to prefer one good thing before another; to leave one for another's sake, to forego meaner for the attainment of higher degrees.

Hooker.

Must I then leave you? Must I needs forego

So good, so noble, and so true a matter? Shaksf.

Let us not forego

That for a trifle which was bought with blood.

Shakspeare.

How can I live without thee! how forego

Thy sweet converse and love so dearly join'd,

To live again in these wild woods forlorn!

Milton.

This argument might prevail with you to forego

a little of your repose for the publick benefit.

Dryden's Juvenal, Dedie.

What they have enjoyed with great pleasure at one time, has proved insipid or nauseous at another;

and therefore they see nothing in it, for which they should forego a present enjoyment.

Locke.

2. To go before; to be past. [from fore and go.]

By our remembrances of days foregone,

Such were our faults: O! then we thought them

not.

Shakspeare.

It is to be understood of Cain, that many years foregone and when his people were increased, he built the city of Enoch.

Raleigh.

Reflect upon the two foregoing objections.

indulged the foregoing speculations.

Addison.

In the foregoing part of this work I promised proofs.

Woolward.

3. To lose.

This is the very efficacy of love,

Whose violent property foregoes itself,

And leads the will to desperate undertakings.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FOREGO'ER. n. f. [from forego.] Ancestor; progenitor.

Honours best thrive,
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our foregoers. Shakspeare.

FO'REGROUND. n. f. [fore and ground.] The part of the field or expanse of a picture which seems to lie before the figures.

All agree that white can subsist on the foreground of the picture: the question therefore is to know, if it can equally be placed upon that which is backward, the light being universal, and the figures supposed to be in an open field. Dryden.

FO'REHAND. n. f. [fore and hand.]

1. The part of a horse which is before the rider.

2. The chief part. Not in use.

The great Achilles whom opinion crowns

And so extenuate the forehead fin. Shakspeare.

FOREHA'NDED. adj. [from fore and hand.]

1. Early; timely.

If by thus doing you have not secured your time by an early and foreheaded care, yet be sure, by a timely diligence, to redeem the time. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

2. Formed in the foreparts.

He's a substantial true-bred beast, bravely foreheaded: mark out the cleanness of his shapes too. Dryden.

FO'REHEAD. n. f. [fore and head.]

1. That part of the face which reaches from the eyes upward to the hair.

The breast of Hecuba,

When she did suckle Hector, look'd not lovelier
Than Hector's forehead when it spit forth blood
At Grecian swords contending. Shakspeare.

Some angel copy'd, while I slept, each grace,
And moulded ev'ry feature from my face:

Such majesty does from her forehead rise,
Her cheeks such blushes cast, such rays her eyes. Dryden.

2. Impudence; confidence; assurance; audaciousness; audacity. The forehead is the part on which shame visibly operates.

A man of confidence presseth forward upon every appearance of advantage; where his force is too feeble, he prevails by dint of impudence: these men of forehead are magnificent in promises, and infallible in their prescriptions. Cellier.

I would fain know to what branch of the legislature they can have the forehead to apply. Swift's Presbyterian Plea.

FOREHO'Lding. n. f. [fore and hold.]

Predictions; ominous accounts; superstitious prognostications.

Your son, that with a fearful soul
Leads discontented steps in foreign soil,
This fair alliance quickly shall call home. Shakspeare.

The learned correspondence you hold in foreign parts. Milton.

The positions are so far from being new, that they are commonly to be met with in both ancient and modern, domestick and foreign writers. Atterbury.

The parties and divisions amongst us may several ways bring destruction upon our country, at the same time that our united force would secure us against all the attempts of a foreign enemy. Addison's Freeholder.

2. Alien; remote; not allied; not belonging; without relation. It is often used with to; but more properly with from.

I must dissemble,

And speak a language foreign to my heart.

Addison's Cato.

Fame is a good so wholly foreign to our natures, that we have no faculty in the soul adapted to it, nor any organ in the body to relish it, placed out of the possibility of fruition. Addison.

This design is not foreign from some peoples thoughts. Swift.

3. Excluded; not admitted; held at a distance.

They will not flick to say you envied him;
And fearing he would rise, he was so virtuous,
Kept him a foreign man still; which so griev'd him,

That he ran mad and died. Shakspeare. Hen. VIII.

4. [In law.] A foreign plea, placitum forissecum; as being a plea out of the proper court of justice.

5. Extraneous; adventitious in general.

These are who, fondly studious of increase,
Rich foreign mould in their ill-natur'd land Induce. Philips.

FO'REIGNER. n. f. [from foreign.] A man that comes from another country; not a native; a stranger.

Joy is such a foreigner,

So mere a stranger to my thoughts, I know
Not how to entertain him. Denham's Sophy.

To this false foreigner you give your throne,
And wrong'd a friend, a kinsman, and a son.

Dryden's Aeneid.

Water is the only native of England made use of in punch; but the lemons, the brandy, the sugar, and the nutmegs are all foreigners. Addison.
Nor could the majesty of the English crown appear in a greater lustre, either to foreigners or subjects. Swift.

FO'REIGNNESS. n. f. [from foreign.] Remoteness; want of relation to something.

Let not the foreignness of the subject hinder you from endeavouring to set me right. Locke.

Our good purposes foreslow'd are become our tormentors upon our death-bed. Eschop Hunt.

Chemes, how many fishers do you know
That rule their boats and use their nets aright,
That neither wind, nor time, nor tide, foreflow?
Some such have been: but ah! by tempest's spite
Their boats are lost; while we may sit and moan
That few were such, and now these few are none.
P. Fletcher.

To FORESLO'W. v. n. To be dilatory; to loiter.

This may plant courage in their quailing
breasts,
For yet is hope of life and victory:
Foreflow no longer make we hence again. Shaksp.

To FORESPEAK. v. n. [fore and speak.]

1. To predict; to forefay; to forefhow; to foretell.

Old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden's Rem.

2. To forbid. [from for and speak.]

Thou hast forespoken my being in these wars,
And say'st it is not fit. Shaksp.

FORESPE'NT. adj. [for and spent.]

1. Wasted; tired; spent.

After him came spurring hard
A gentleman, almost forespent with speed. Shaksp.

2. Forepassed; past. [fore and spent.]

Is not enough thy evil life forespent? F. Queen.
You shall find his vanities forespent,
Were but the outside of the Roman Brutus, Covering discretion with a coat of folly. Shaksp.

3. Bestowed before.

We must receive him
According to the honour of his sender;
And towards himself, his goodness forespent on us,
We must extend our notice. Shaksp.

FORESPURRER. n. f. [fore and spur.]

One that rides before.
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this forespurrer comes before his lord. Shaksp.

FOREST. n. f. [forest, French; foresta, Italian.]

1. A wild uncultivated tract of ground interspersed with wood.

By many tribulations we enter into the kingdom of heaven, because, in a forest of many wolves, sheep cannot chuse but feed in continual danger of life. Hooker.

Macbeth shall never vanquish'd be, until Great Birnam-wood to Dunfinane's high hill Shall come against him.

—That will never be:
Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earth-bound root. Shaksp.

There be airs which the physicians advise their patients to remove unto, which commonly are plain champaigns, but grassy, and not overgrown with heath; or else timber-shades, as in forests. Bacon.

How the first forest rais'd its shady head.

2. [In law.] A certain territory of woody grounds and fruitful pastures, privileged for wild beasts, and fowls of forest, chase, and warren, to rest and abide in, in the safe protection of the king for his pleasure.

The manner of making forests is this: the king sends out his commission, directed to certain persons, for viewing, perambulating, and bounding the place that he has a mind to afforest: which returned into Chancery, proclamation is made, that none shall hunt any wild beasts within that precinct, without licence; after which he appoints ordinances, laws, and officers for the preservation of the vert and venison; and this becomes a forest by matter of record. The properties of a forest are these: a forest, as it is strictly taken, cannot be in the hands of any but the king, who hath power to grant commission to a justice in eyre for the forest; the courts; the officers for preserving the vert and venison, as the justices of the forest, the warden or keeper, the verders, the foresters, agitors, regarders, bailiffs, and huedles. The chief property of a forest is the swainnote, which is no less incident to it than the court of pyepowders to a fair. Cowell.

To FORESTALL. v. a. [fore and stallan, Saxon.]

1. To anticipate; to take up beforehand.

If thou be matter-gunner, spend not all
That thou can'st speak at once; but husband it,
And give men tons of speech; do not forestall
By lavishness thine own and others wit,
As if thou mad'st thy will. Herbert.

What need a man forestall his date of grief,
And run to meet what he would most avoid. Milton.

2. To hinder by preoccupation or prevention.

And though good luck prolonged hath thy date,
Yet death then would the like mishap forestall.
Fairy Queen.

What's in prayer, but this twofold force
To be forestall'd ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd being down. Shakspere's Hamlet.

But for my tears,
I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,
Ere you with grief had spoke. Shakspere.

If thou covest death, a utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

I will not forestall your judgment of the rest. Pope.

3. To seize or gain possession of before another; to buy before another in order to raise the price.

He bold spake, fir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestall'd place at erit,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee. F. Queen.

4. To deprive by something prior: with of. Not in use.

May
This night forestall him of the coming day. Shak.

FORESTALLER. n. f. [from forestall.] One that anticipates the market; one that purchases before others to raise the price.

Commodities, good or bad, the workman must take at his master's rate, or sit still and starve; whilst, by this means, this new sort of ingrossers or forestallers having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

FORESTBORN. adj. [forest and born.]

Born in a wild.
This boy is forestborn,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of desperate studies. Shakspere's As you like it.

FORESTER. n. f. [forestier, French; from forest.]

1. An officer of the forest.

Forester, my friend, where is the bush,
That we stand and play the murderer in?
—Here by, upon the edge of yonder coppice. Shakspere.

2. An inhabitant of the wild country.

FORESWAT. } adj. [from for and swat,
FORESWART. } from fwat.] Spent with heat.

Miso and Mopsa, like a couple of foreswatt
melters, were getting the pure silver of their bodies out of the ore of their garments. Sidney.

To FORETASTE. v. a. [fore and tasle.]

1. To have antepast of; to have precience of.

2. To taste before another.

Perhaps the fact
Is not so heinous now, foretast'd fruit,
Profan'd first by the serpent, by him first Made common and unhallow'd, ere our taste. Milton.

FORETASTE. n. f. Anticipation of.

A pleasure that a man may call as properly his own as his soul and his conscience, neither liable to accident, nor exposed to injury: it is the fore-taste of heaven, and the earnest of eternity. South.

To FORETELL. v. a. preter. and part. pass. foretold. [fore and tell.]

1. To predict; to prophesy.

What art thou, whose heavy looks foretell
Some dreadful story hanging on thy tongue?
Shakspere's Henry vi.

I found
The new-created world, which came in heaven
Long had foretold. Milton.

Mercia's king,
Warn'd in a dream, his murder did foretell,
From point to point, as after it befell. Dryden.
When great Ulysses fought the Phrygian shores,
Deeds then undone my faithful tongue foretold;
Heaven seal'd my words, and you those deeds behold. Pope.

2. To foretoken; to forefhow.

To FORETELL. v. n. To utter prophecy.
All the prophets from Samuel, and those that follow after, have likewise foretold of these days. Acts.

FORETELLER. n. f. [from foretell.] Predictor; forefhower.

Others are propoed, not that the foretold event should be known; but that the accomplishments that expounds them may evince, that the foreteller of them was able to foresee thee. Boyle on Colours.

To FORETH'NK. v. a. [fore and think.]

1. To anticipate in the mind; to have precience of.

The soul of every man
Prophetically does forethink thy fall. Shakspere.

I do pray to thee,
Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom Forethought by heav'n. Shakspere's King John.

Adam could not be ignorant of the punishments due to neglect and disobedience; and felt, by the proof thereof, in himself another terror than he had forethought, or could imagine. Raleigh.

Friday, the fatal day! when next it came,
Her soul forethought the fiend would change his game. Dryden.

2. To contrive antecedently.

Blessed be that God which hath given you an heart to forethink this, and a will to honour him with his own. Bishop Hall.

To FORETH'NK. v. n. To contrive beforehand.

What's my frenzy will be call'd my crime:
What then is thine? Thou cool deliberate villain!
Thou wife, forethinking, weighing politician!
Smith.

FORETHOUGHT. n. f. [from forethink.]

1. Precience; anticipation.

He that is undone, is equally undone, whether it be by spitefulness of forethought, or by the folly of oversight, or evil counsel. L'Esfrange.

2. Provident care.

To FORETOKEN. v. a. [fore and token.]

To forefhow; to prognosticate as a sign.

The king from Ireland hastes; but did no good;
Whilst strange prodigious signs foretoken blood. Davies.

FORETOKEN. n. f. [from the verb.] Prevenient sign; prognostick.

It may prove some ominous foretoken of misfortune. Sidney.

Ticy mistook nothing more in king Edward the Confessor, than that he was Frenchified, and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in of foreign powers, which indeed happened. Camden's Remains.

FORLTOOTH. n. f. [fore and tooth.] The tooth in the anterior part of the mouth; the incisor.

The foreteeth should be formed broad, and with a thin sharp edge like chizzles. Ray.

FORETOP. n. f. [fore and top.] That part of a woman's headdress that is forward, or the top of a periwig.

So may your hats your foretops never press,
Untouch'd your ribbons, faced be your drests. Dryden.

FOREVOUCHED. part. [fore and vouch.] Affirmed before; formerly told.

Must be of such unnatural degree,
That monsters it; or your forevouch'd affection Fall'n into taint. Shaksp. King Lear.

FORWARD. n. f. [fore and ward.] The van; the front.

They that matched in the forward were all mighty men. Maccabees.

TO FOREWA'RN. v. a. [fore and warn.]

1. To admonish beforehand.

I will forewarn you whom you shall fear: fear him which, after he hath killed, hath power to cast into hell. Luke.

2. To inform previously of any future event.

Divine interpreter, by favour sent Down from the empyrean, to forewarn
Us timely of what might else have been our loss Unknown. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. To caution against any thing beforehand.

Well I will arm me, being thus forwarn'd.
Shaksp. Henry vi.

Thy pride,
And wand'ring vanity, when least was safe,
Rejected my forewarning, and disdain'd
Not to be trusted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Tho' Phœbus had forewarned him of singing wars, yet the search of nature was free. Dryden.

Young Choroebus, who by love was led,
To win renown and fair Cassandra's bed,
Had lately brought his troops to Priam's aid;
Forewarn'd in vain by the prophetick maid. Dry.

TO FOREWA'STE. v. n. [fore and waste.]

To desolate; to destroy. Out of use.
Vespasian, with great spoil and rage,
Forewasted all, until gemilla gent
Persuaded him to cease. Fairy Queen.

High time 'gan it wex for Una fair,
To think of those her captive parents dear,
And their forewasted kingdom to repair. Fairy Q.

TO FOREWEARY. v. a. [for and wear.]

To dispirit with labour.
By your toil
And labour long, through which ye hither came,
Ye both forewearied be: therefore a while
I read you rest, and to your bowers recoil. Fairy Queen.

TO FOREWISH. v. a. [fore and wish.] To desire beforehand.

The wiser sort ceased not to what in them lay,
to procure that the good commonly forewished might in time come to effect. Kneller.

FOREWORN. part. [fore and worn, from wear.] Worn out; wasted by time or use.

Neither the light was enough to read the words, and the ink was already foreworn, and in many places blotted. Sidney.

FORFEIT. n. f. [forfait, Fr. forf. d. Welsh.]

1. Something lost by the commission of a crime; something paid for expiation of a crime; a fine; a mulct.

Thy slander I forgive, and therewithal
'Remit thy other forfeits. Shaksp. Henry v.

Th' execution leave to high disposal,
And let another hand, not thine, exact
Thy penal forfeit from thyself. Milton.

Thy life, Melantius! I am come to take,
Of which foul treason does a forfeit make. Wal.

2. A person obnoxious to punishment; one whose life is forfeited by his offence. Now obsolete.

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words. Shaksp. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute,
is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo, who hath sentenced him. Shaksp. Henry v.

TO FORFEIT. v. a. [from the noun.] To lose by some breach of condition; to lose by some offence.

If then a man, on light conditions, gain
A great estate to him, and his, for ever;
If wilfully he forfeit it again,
Who doth bewan his heir, or blame the giver?
Darvies.

Men displeas'd God, and consequently forfeited
all right to happiness. Boyle.

A father cannot alien the power he has over his child: he may perhaps to some degrees forfeit it, but cannot transfer it. Locke.

FORFEIT. participial adj. [from the verb.]

Liable to penal seizure; alienated by a crime; lost either as to the right or possession, by breach of conditions.

All the souls that are, were forfeit once;
And he that might the 'vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Beg that thou may'st have leave to hang thyself;
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord. Shaksp. Titus Andronicus.

This now fenceless world,
Forfeit to death. Milton.

Straight all his hopes exhal'd in empty smoke,
And his long toils were forfeit for a look. Dryden.

Notwith with wond'rous ease he swallow'd
down
His forfeit honour, to betray the town. Dryden.

How the murderer paid his forfeit breath;
What lands so distant from that scene of death,
But trembling heard the fame! Pope's Odyss.

FORFEITABLE. adj. [from forfeit.] Possessed on conditions, by the breach of which any thing may be lost.

FORFEITURE. n. f. [forfaiture, French; from forfeit.]

1. The act of forfeiting; the punishment discharged by loss of something possessed.

2. The thing forfeited; a mulct; a fine.

The court is as well a Chancery to save and debar forfeitures, as a court of common law to decide rights; and these would be work enough in Germany and Italy, if imperial forfeitures should go for good titles. Bacon's War with Spain.

Ancien privileges and acts of grace indulg'd by former kings, must not, without high reason, be revoked by their successors; nor forfeitures be exacted violently, nor penal laws urged vigorously. Taylor's Rule of Living holy.

He fairly abdicates his throne,
He has a forfeiture incur'd. Swift.

FORGAVE. The preterit of forgive.

FORGE. n. f. [forge, French.]

1. The place where iron is beaten into form. In common language we use forge for large work, and smithy for small; but in books the distinction is not kept.

Now behold,
In the quick forge and working-house of thought,
How London doth pour out her citizens. Shaksp. Henry v.

In other part stood one, who at the forge
Labouring, two massy clods of iron and brass
Had melted. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Th' 'œta labour'd Cyclop from his task retires,
Th' Aonian forge exhausted of its fires. Pope.

2. Any place where any thing is made or shaped.

From no other forge hath proceeded a strange conceit, that to serve God with any set form of common prayer is superstitious. Hooker.

3. Manufacture of metalline bodies; the act of working.

In the greater bodies the forge was easy, the matter being ductile and sequacious and obedient to the stroke of the artificer, and apt to be drawn, formed, and moulded. Bacon.

TO FORGE. v. a. [forger, old French.]

1. To form by the hammer; to beat into shape.

The queen of martials,
And Mars himself conducted them; both which being forg'd of gold,
Must needs have golden furniture. Chapman.

Tyger with tyger, bear with bear you'll find
In leagues offensive and defensive join'd;
But lawless man the anvil dares profane,
And forge that steel by which a man is slain,
Which earth at first for plough-shares did afford,
Nor yet the smith had learn'd to form a sword. Tate's Juvenal.

2. To make by any means.

He was a kind of nothing, titleless,
'Till he had forg'd himself a name i' th' fire
Of burning Rome. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

His heart 's his mouth:
What his breast forges, that his tongue must vent. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Those names that the schools forge'd, and put into the mouths of scholars, could never get admittance into common use, or obtain the licence of publick approbation. Locke.

3. To counterfeit; to falsify.

Were I king,
I should cut off the nobles for their lands;
For my more having would be but as sauce
To make me hunger more, that I should forge
Quarrels unjust against the good and loyal,
Destroying them for wealth. Shaksp. Henry v.

FORGER. n. f. [from forge.]

1. One who makes or forms.

2. One who counterfeits any thing; a falsifier.

As in stealing, if there were no receivers there would be no thieves; so in slander, if there were fewer spreaders there would be fewer forgers of libels. Government of the Tongue.

No forger of lies willingly and whitely furnishes out the means of his own detection. West on the Resurrection.

FORGERY. n. f. [from forge.] The crime of falsification.

Has your king married the lady Gray?
And now, to sooth your forgery and his,
Sends me a paper to persuade me patience. Shaksp. Henry v.

Nothing could have been easier than for the Jews, the enemies of Jesus Christ, to have disproved these facts had they been false, to have shewn their falshood, and to have convicted them of forgery. Stephens' Sermons.

A forgery, in setting a false name to a writing, which may prejudice another's fortune, the law punishes with the loss of ears; but has inflicted no adequate penalty for doing the same thing in print, though books sold under a false name are so many forgeries. Swift.

2. Smith's work; fabrication; the act of the forge.

He ran on embattled armies clad in iron,
And weaponless himself,
Mide arms ridiculous, useless the forgery
Of brazen shield and spear, the hammer'd
cuirsas,
Chalybean temper'd steel, and frock of mail
Adamantean proof. Milton's Agonistes.

TO FORGET. v. a. preter. forgot;

part. forgotten or forgot. [forȝȝtan, Saxon; vergetten, Dutch.]

1. To lose memory of; to let go from the remembrance.

That is not forgot

Which ne'er I did remember to my knowledge,
I never in my life did look on him. Shakspeare.
When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
A sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention
Of me must more be heard. Shakspeare.

Forget not thy friend in thy mind, and be not unmindful of him in thy riches. Eccles.

No sooner was our deliverance compleated, but we forgot our danger and our duty. Asterbury.
Alive, ridiculous; and dead, forgot. Pope.

2. Not to attend; to neglect.

Can a woman forget her sucking child? Yea, they may forget; yet I will not forget thee.

Isaiah.

If we might forget ourselves, or forget God;
if we might disregard our reason, and live by humour and fancy in any thing, or at any time, or at any place, it would be as lawful to do the same in every thing, at every time, and every place. Law.

The masks of mean forgotten things. Anon.

FORGETFUL. adj. [from forget.]

1. Not retaining the memory of.

2. Causing oblivion; oblivious.

But when a thousand rolling years are past,
So long their punishments and penance last,
Whole droves of minds are by the driving god
Compell'd to drink the deep Lethæan flood,
In large forgetful diaughts to steep the cares
Of their past labours, and their irksome years.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. Inattentive; negligent; neglectful;
careless.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers.

Hebrews.

The queen is comfortless, and we forgetful
In our long absence. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

Have you not love to bear with me,
When that rash humour, which my mother give me,

Makes me forgetful? Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

I, in fact, a real interest have,
Which to my own advantage I would save;
And, with the usual courtier's trick, intend
To serve myself, forgetful of my friend. Prior.

FORGETFULNESS. n. f. [from forgetful.]

1. Oblivion; cessation to remember; loss of memory.

O gentle sleep!

Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
That thou no more wilt weigh my eyelids down,
And sleep my senses in forgetfulness? Shakspeare.
All birds and beasts lie hush'd; sleep steals away

The wild desires of men and toils of day;
And brings, descending through the silent air,
A sweet forgetfulness of human care. Pope.

2. Negligence; neglect; inattention.

The church of England is grievously charged with forgetfulness of her duty. Hooker.

FORGETIVE. adj. [from forge.] That may forge or produce. A word, I believe, peculiar to Shakspeare.

Good herrie sack ascends me into the brain, dri- s me there all the foolish, dull vapours, makes it apprehensive, quick, forgetive, full of nimble shapes, which, delivered to the voice, becomes excellent wit. Shakspeare.

FORGETTER. n. f. [from forget.]

1. One that forgets.

2. A careless person.

TO FORGIVE. v. a. pret. forgave;
part. pass. forgiven. [FORȜIFAN, Sax.]

1. To pardon a person; not to punish.

Then heaven forgive him too! Shakspeare.

I do beseech your grace for charity;
If ever any malice in your heart
Were hid against me, now forgive me frankly.

—Sir Thomas Lovell, I as free forgive you,
As I would be forgiven: I forgive all. Shakspeare.

Slowly provok'd, she easily forgives. Prior.

2. To pardon a crime.

The people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity. Isaiah.

If prayers

Could alter high deities, I to that place
Would speed before thee, and be louder heard,
That on my head all might be visited,
Thy frailty and infirmer sex forgiven,
To me committed, and by me expos'd. Milton.

3. To remit; not to exact debt or penalty.

The lord of that servant was moved with compassion, loosed him, and forgave him the debt.

Matthew.

FORGIVENESS. n. f. [FORȜIFENNESSE, Saxon.]

1. The act of forgiving.

To the Lord our God belong mercies and for-givenesses. Daniel.

2. Pardon of an offender.

Thou hast promised repentance and forgiveness to them that have sinned against thee.

Prayer of Manass.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's death come not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakspeare.

Forgiveness to the injur'd does belong;

But they ne'er pardon who commit the wrong.
Dryden.

3. Pardon of an offence.

God has certainly promised forgiveness of sin to every one who repents. South.

4. Tendernefs; willingness to pardon.

Here are introduced more heroic principles of meekness, forgiveness, bounty and magnanimity, than all the learning of the heathens could invent.

Spratt.

Mercy above did hourly plead

For her resemblance here below;
And mild forgiveness intercede
To stop the coming blow. Dryden.

5. Remission of a fine, penalty, or debt.

FORGIVER. n. f. [from forgive.] One who pardons.

FORGOT. } [part. pass. of forget.]

FORGOTTEN. } Not remembered.

This song shall not be forgotten. Deut.
Great Strafford! worthy of that name, though all

Of thee could be forgotten, but thy fall. Denh.

The soft ideas of the cheerful note,
Lightly receiv'd, were easily forgot. Prior.

TO FORHA'IL. v. a. [An old word. Probably for forbaul, from for and haul.]

To harass, tear, torment.

All this long tale

Nought castr'd the care that doth me forhail.
Spenser's Pastorals.

FORK. n. f. [furca, Latin; fforch,
Welsh; fourche, French.]

1. An instrument divided at the end into two or more points or prongs, used on many occasions.

At midsummer down with the brambles and brakes,

And after abroad with thy forks and thy rakes.
Tusser.

The vicar first, and after him the crew,
With forks and staves the felon to pursue,
Ran Coll our dog. Dryden's Nani's Priest.

I dine with forks that have but two prongs.
Swift.

2. It is sometimes used for the point of an arrow.

The bow is bent and drawn: make the point of the shaft.

—Let it fall rather, though the fork invade
The region of my heart. Shakspeare. K. Lear.

3. A point.

Several are amazed at the wisdom of the aucients that represented a thunderbolt with three forks, since nothing could have better explained its triple quality of piercing, burning, and melting. Addison on Medals.

TO FORK. v. n. [from the noun.] To shoot into blades, as corn does out of the ground.

The corn beginneth to fork. Martine.

FORKED. adj. [from fork.] Opening into two or more parts.

Naked he was, for all the world, like a forked radish, with a head fantastically carved upon it with a knife. Shakspeare.

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
A forked mountain, or blue promontory. Shakspeare.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled fools
Should in their own confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches goar'd. Shakspeare.

He would have spoke;

But his for his return'd, with forked tongue
To forked tongue. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Ye dragons, whose contagious breath
Peoples the dark retreats of death,

Change your fierce hissing into joyful song,
And praise your Maker with your forked tongue.
Roscommon.

FORKEDLY. adv. [from forked.] In a forked form.

FORKEDNESS. n. f. [from forked.] The quality of opening into two parts or more.

FORKHEAD. n. f. [fork and head.] Point of an arrow.

It seizing, no way enter might;
But back rebounding, left the forkhead keen, Eftsoons it fled away, and might no where be seen. Fairy Queen.

FORKY. adj. [from fork.] Forked; fur-cated; opening into two parts.

The smiling infant in his hand shall take
The crested basilisk and speckled snake;
Pleas'd the green lustre of the scales survey,
And with their forky tongue and pointless sting shall play. Pope's Messiah.

FORLO'RE. [The preterit and participle of the Saxon forleapan, in Dutch verloren.]

Deserted; forfook; forsaken. Obsolete.

Such as Diana by the sandy shore
Of sweet Eurotas, or on Cynthus' green,
Where all the nymphs have her forlore. Fairy Q.

That wretched world he 'gan for to abhor,
And mortal life 'gan loath, as thing forlore.
Fairy Queen.

Thus fell the trees, with noise the desarts roar;
The beasts their caves, the birds their nests forlore.
Fairfax.

FORLO'RN. adj. [from forleapan, from for- leapan, Saxon; verloren, Dutch.]

1. Deserted; destitute; forsaken; wretched; helpless; solitary.

Make them seek for that they wont to scorn;
Of fortune and of hope at once forloorn. Hubb. Tale.

Tell me, good Hobinol, what gars thee greet?
What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs yorn?
Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet?
Or art thou of thy loved lass forloorn? Spenser.

In every place was heard the lamentation of women and children; every thing shewed the heaviness of the time, and seemed as altogether lost and forloorn. Knolles' History.

How can I live without thee! how forego
Thy sweet converse, and love so dearly join'd,
To live again in these wild woods forloorn! Mil.

Lies through the perplex'd paths of this dear
wood;

The nodding horreur of whose shady brows,
Treats the forloorn and wand'ring passenger.
Milton.

My only strength and stay! forloorn of time,
Whither shall I betake me, whose sobriol! Milton.

Like a declining statesman, left forloorn
To his friends pity and pursuers scorn. Denham.

The good old man, forloorn of human aid,
For vengeance to his heav'nly patron pray'd.
Dryden's Æneid.

Philomel laments forlorn. Fenton.
As some sad turtle his lost love deploras,
Thus, far from Delia, to the winds I mourn;
Alike unheard, un pity'd, and forlorn. Pope.

2. Taken away. This sense shows that it is the participle of an active verb, now lost.

When as night hath us of light forlorn,
I wish that day would shortly reascend Spenser.
What is become of great Acrates' son!
Or where hath he hung up his mortal blade,
That hath so many haughty conquests won?
Is all his force forlorn, and all his glory done?
Fairy Queen.

3. Small; despicable: in a ludicrous sense.

He was so forlorn, that his dimensions to any thick sight were invincible. Shakspeare's Hen. IV.

FORLORN. n. f.

1. A lost, solitary, forsaken man.
Henry
Is of a king become a banish'd man,
And forc'd to live in Scotland a forlorn. Shakspeare.

2. FORLORN Hope. The soldiers who are sent first to the attack, and are therefore doomed to perish.

Criticks in plume,
Who lolling on our foremost benches sit,
And still charge first, the true forlorn of wit.
Dryden

FORLORNNESS. n. f. [from forlorn.]
Destitution; misery; solitude.

Men displeas'd God, and consequently forfeited all right to happiness; even whilst they compleated the forlornness of their condition by the lethargy of not being sensible of it. Boyle.

To FORLIE. v. n. [from fore and lie.]
To lie before.

Knit with a golden baldric, which forlay
Await her snowy breast, and did divide
Her dainty paps, which, like young fruit in May,
Now little 'gan to swell; and being ty'd,
Through her thin weed, their places only signify'd. Fairy Queen.

FORM. n. f. [forma, Latin; forme, French.]

1. The external appearance of any thing; representation; shape.

Nay, women are frail too,
—Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves,
Which are as easy broke as they make forms. Shakspeare.

It stood still; but I could not discern the form thereof. Job.

Gold will endure a vehement fire, without any change, and after it has been divided by corrosive liquors into invisible parts; yet may presently be precipitated, so as to appear again in its form. Grew's Cosmol. Sac.

Matter, as wise logicians say,
Cannot without a form subsist;
And form, say I as well as they,
Must fall, if matter brings no grief. Swift.

2. Being, as modified by a particular shape.

When noble benefits shall prove
Not well dispos'd, the mind grown once corrupt,
They run to vicious forms, ten times more ugly
Than ever they were fair. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.
Here toys and death, and death's half-brother,
sleep,
Forms terrible to view, their forms keep;
With anxious pleasures of a guilty mind,
Deep frauds before, and open force behind. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Particular model or modification.
He that will look into many parts of Asia and America, will find even reason there perhaps as contrary as himself, who yet never heard of a syllogism, nor can reduce any one argument to those forms. Locke.

It lengthens out every act of worship, and produces more lasting and permanent impressions in the mind, than those which accompany any transient form of words that are uttered in the ordinary method of religious worship. Addison.

4. Beauty; elegance of appearance.
He hath no form nor comeliness. Isaiah.

5. Regularity; method; order.
What he spoke, though it lack'd form a little,
Was not like madness. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

6. External appearance without the essential qualities; empty show.
Then those whom form of laws
Condemn'd to die, when traitors judg'd their cause. Dryden.
They were young heirs sent only for forms from schools, where they were not suffered to stay three months. Swift.

7. Ceremony; external rites.
Though well we may not pass upon his life,
Without the form of justice; yet our pow'r
Shall do a courtesy to our wrath, which men
May blame, but not controul. Shakspeare.

A long table, and a square table, or a seat about the walls, seem things of form, but are things of substance; for at a long table, a few at the upper end, in effect, sway all the business; but in the other form, there is more use of the countellors opinions that sit lower. Bacon's Eff.

That the parliaments of Ireland might want no decent or honourable form used in England, he caus'd a particular act to pass, that the lords of Ireland should appear in parliament robes. Ducies.

Their general used, in all dispatches made by himself, to observe all decency in their forms. Clarendon.

How am I to interpret, sir, this visit?
Is it a compliment of form, or love? A. Phillips.

8. Stated method; established practice; ritual and prescribed mode.

He who affirmeth speech to be necessary amongst all men, throughout the world, doth not thereby import that all men must necessarily speak one kind of language; even so the necessity of polity and regimen in all churches may be held, without holding any one certain form to be necessary in them all. Hooker.

Nor are constant forms of prayer more likely to flatter and hinder the spirit of prayer and devotion, than unpremeditated and confused variety to distract and lose it. King Charles.

Nor seek to know
Their process, or the forms of law below. Dryden's Æneid.

9. A long seat.

If a chair be defined a seat for a single person, with a back belonging to it, then a stool is a seat for a single person without a back; and a form is a seat for several persons, without a back. Faust's Logic.

I was seen with her in the manor-house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park. Shakspeare.

10. A class; a rank of students.

It will be necessary to see and examine those works which have given so great a reputation to the masters of the first form. Dryden.

11. The seat of bed of a hare.

Now for a clod like hare in form thy peer;
Now bolt and cudgel squirrels leap do more;
Now the ambitious lark, with murrow clear,
They catch, while he, fool! to himself makes love. Silby.

Have you observ'd a sitting hare,
Lightning, and fearful of the storm
Of horns and hounds, clap back her ear,
Afraid to keep or leave her form. Prior.

12. Form is the essential, specifical, or distinguishing modification of the matter of which any thing is composed, so as thereby to give it such a peculiar manner of existence. Harris.

In definitions, whether they be framed larger to augment, or stricter to abridge the number of sacraments, we find grace expressly mentioned as their true essential form, and elements as the matter whereunto that form did adjoin itself. Hooker.

13. A formal cause; that which gives effluence.

They inferred, if the world were a living creature, it had a soul and spirit, by which they did not intend God, for they did admit of a deity besides, but only the soul or essential form of the universe. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To FORM. v. a. [formo, Latin.]

1. To make out of materials.
God formed man of the dust of the ground. Genesis.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit mould prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusion, or grav'n in metal. Milton.
Determin'd to advance into our room
A creature form'd of earth. Milton.

She form'd the phantom of well-bodied air. Pope.

2. To model to a particular shape or state.
Creature in whom excell'd
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet. Milton.

Let Eve, for I have drench'd her eyes,
Here sleep below, while thou to foresight wak'st;
As once thou sleep'st, while the to life was form'd. Milton.

3. To modify; to scheme; to plan.
Lucretius taught him not to form his heroes, to give him piety or valour for his manners. Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

4. To arrange; to combine in any particular manner: as, he formed his troops.

5. To adjust; to settle.
Our differences with the Romanists are thus formed in to an interest, and become the design not of single persons, but of corporations and successions. Decay of Piety.

6. To contrive; to coin.
The defeat of the design is the routing of opinions form'd for promoting it. Decay of Piety.

He dies too soon;
And fate, if possible, must be delay'd;
The thought that labours in my forming brain,
Yet crude and immature, demands more time. Rowe.

7. To model by education or institution.
Let him to this with easy pains be brought,
And learn to labour when he labours not:
Thus form'd for speech, he challenges the wind
And leaves the Scythian arrow far behind. Dryden's Virgil.

FORMAL. adj. [formel, Fr. formalis, Latin.]

1. Ceremonious; solemn; precise; exact to affectation.

The justice,
In fair round belly, with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. Shakspeare.

Formal in apparel,
In gait and countenance nicely like a father. Shakspeare.

Ceremonies be not to be omitted to strangers and formal natures; but the exacting them above the mean is not only tedious, but doth diminish the credit of him that speaks. Baron.

2. Done according to established rules and methods; not irregular; not sudden; not extemporaneous.

There is not any positive law of men, whether it be general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation, as in customs, it cometh to pass, but may be taken away, if occasion serve. Hooker.

As there are formal and written leagues, respective to certain enemies; so there is a natural and tacit confederation amongst all men against the common enemies of human society, so as there needs no intimation or denunciation of the war; but all these formalities the law of nature supplies, as in the case of pirates. Bacon.

3. Regular; methodical.

The formal stars do travel so,
As we their names and courses know;
And he that on their changes looks,
Would think them govern'd by our books. Waller.

4. External; having the appearance but not the essence.

Of formal duty, make no more thy boast;
Thou disobey'st it where it concerns me most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

5. Depending upon establishment or custom.

Still in constraint your suffering sex remains,
Or bound in formal or in real chains. Pope.

6. Having the power of making any thing what it is; constituent; essential.

Of letters the material part is breath and voice; the formal is constituted by the motions and figure of the organs of speech affecting breath with a peculiar sound, by which each letter is discriminated. Holles's Elements of Speech.

Bellarmino agrees in making the formal act of adoration to be subjection to a superior; but withal he makes the mere apprehension of excellency to include the formal reason of it: whereas mere excellency, without superiority, doth not require any subjection, but only estimation. Stillingfleet.

The very life and vital motion, and the formal essence and nature of man, is wholly owing to the power of God. Bentley.

7. Retaining its proper and essential characteristic; regular; proper.

Thou shou'd'st come like a fury cover'd with snakes,
Not like a formal man. Shakspeare.

I will not let him stir,
'Till I have us'd th' approv'd means I have;
With wholesome syrups, drugs, and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again. Shaksp.

FORMALIST. n. s. [formaliste, French; from form.] One who practises external ceremony; one who prefers appearance to reality; one who seems what he is not.

It is a ridiculous thing, and fit for a satyr to persons of judgment, to see what thrusts formalists have, and what prospectives to make superficialities to seem a body that hath depth and bulk. Bacon.

A grave, raucel, skillfully managed face, set upon a grasping ispiring mind, having got many a fly formalist the reputation of a primitive and severe piety. South.

FORMALITY. n. s. [formalite, French; from form.]

1. Ceremony; established mode of behaviour.

The attire, which the minister of God is by order to use at times of divine service, is but a matter of mere formality, yet such as for comeliness sake hath hitherto been judged not unnecessary. Hooker.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than in desperate designs. King Charles.

Many a worthy man sacrifices his peace to formalities of compliment and good manners. L'Estrange.

Nor was his attendance on divine offices a matter of formality and custom, but of conscience. Atterbury.

2. Solemn order, method, mode, habit, or dress.

If men forswear the deeds and bonds they draw,
Though sign'd with all formality of law;
And though the signing and the seal proclaim
The barefac'd perjury, and fix the shame. Dry.

The pretender would have infallibly landed in our northern parts, and found them all fat down in their formalities, as the Gauls did the Roman senators. Swift.

3. External appearance.

To fix on God the formality of faculties, or affections, is the impiture of our fancies, and contradictory to his divinity. Glanville's Scipis.

4. Essence; the quality by which any thing is what it is.

May not a man vow to A and B. that he will give a hundred pounds to an hospital? Here the vow is made both to God and to A. and B. But here A. and B. are only witnesses to the vow; but the formality of the vow lies in the promise made to God. Stillingfleet.

TO FORMALIZE. v. a. [formalizer, Fr. from formal. A word not now in use.]

1. To model; to modify.

The same spirit which anointed the blessed soul of our Saviour Christ, doth to formalize, unite, and actuate his whole race, as if both he and they were so many limbs compacted into one body. Hooker.

2. To affect formality; to be fond of ceremony.

FORMALLY. adv. [from formal.]

1. According to established rules, methods, ceremonies, or rites.

Formally, according to our law,
Depose him. Shakspeare's Richard II.

2. Ceremoniously; stiffly; precisely.

To be stiff and formally reserved, as if the company did not deserve our familiarity, is a downright challenge of homage. Collier.

3. In open appearance; in a visible and apparent state.

You and your followers do stand formally divided against the authorized guides of the church, and the rest of the people. Hooker.

4. Essentially; characteristically.

This power and dominion is not adequately and formally the image of God, but only a part of it. South.

The heathens and the christians may agree in material acts of charity; but that which formally makes this a christian grace, is the spring from which it flows. Smalbridge.

FORMATION. n. s. [formation, French; from formo, Latin.]

1. The act of forming or generating.

The matter discharged forth of volcano's, and other spiracles, contributes to the formation of meteors. Woodward.

The solids are originally formed of a fluid, from a small point, as appears by the gradual formation of a fetus. Arbuthnot.

Complicated ideas, growing up under observation, give not the same confusion, as if they were all offer'd to the mind at once, without your observing the original and formation of them. Watts.

2. The manner in which a thing is formed.

The chorion, a thick membrane obscuring the formation, the dam doth tear asunder. Brown.

FORMATIVE. adj. [from formo, Latin.]

Having the power of giving form; plastic.

As we have established our assertion of the femal production of all kinds of animals; so likewise we affirm, that the meanest plant cannot be raised without seed; by any formative power residing in the soil. Bentley's Sermons.

FORMER. n. s. [from form.] He that forms; maker; contriver; planner.

The wonderful art and providence of the contriver and former of our bodies, appears in the multitude of intentions he must have in the formation of several parts for several uses. Ray.

FORMER. adj. [from forma, Sax. first; whence former, and formost, now commonly written foremost, as if derived from before. Foremost is generally applied to place, rank, or degree, and former only to time; for when we say the last rank of the procession is like the former, we respect time rather than place, and mean that which we saw before, rather than that which had precedence in place.]

1. Before another in time.

Thou other gold-bound brow, is like the first:
—A third is like the former. Shakspeare.

2. Mentioned before another.

A bad author deserves better usage than a bad critic: a man may be the former merely through the misfortune of an ill judgment; but he cannot be the latter without both that and an ill temper. Pope.

3. Past: as, this was the custom in former times.

The present point of time is all thou hast,
The future doubtful, and the former past: Hunter.

FORMERLY. adv. [from former.] In times past.

The places were all of them formerly the cool retreats of the Romans, where they used to hide themselves among the woods and mountains, during the excessive heats of their summer. Adhison.

As an animal degenerates by diseases, the animal salts, formerly benign, approach towards an alkaline nature. Arbuthnot.

FORMIDABLE. adj. [formidabilis, Lat. formidabile, Fr.] Terrible; dreadful; tremendous; terrific; to be feared.

I swell my preface into a volume, and make it formidable, when you see so many pages behind. Dryden's Æneid, Dedication.

They seem'd to fear the formidable fight,
And roll'd their billows on, to speed his flight. Dryden.

FORMIDABLENESS. n. s. [from formidabile.]

1. The quality of exciting terror or dread.

2. The thing causing dread.

They rather chuse to be shew'd the *formidable*ness of their danger, than by a blind embracing it, to perish. Decay of Piety.

FORMIDABLY. adv. [from formidabile.] In a terrible manner.

Behold! e'en to remoter shores,
A conquering navy proudly spread;
The British cannon formidably roars. Dryden.

FORMLESS. adj. [from form.] Shapeless; wanting regularity of form.

All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love. Shaksp.

FORMULARY. n. s. [formulaire, French; from formule.] A book containing stated and prescribed models or set forms.FORMULARY. adj. Ritual; prescribed; stated.FORMULE. n. s. [formule, French; formula, Latin.] A set or prescribed model.TO FORNIFICATE. v. a. [from fornix, Latin.] To commit lewdness.

It is a new way to fornicate at a distance. Brown.

FORNICATION. n. s. [fornication, French; fornicatio, Latin.]

1. Concubinage, or commerce with an unmarried woman.

Bless me! what a fry of fornication is at the door. Shakspeare.

The law ought to be strict against fornication and adulteries; for, if there were universal liberty, the increase of mankind would be but like that of foxes at best. Graunt.

2. In scripture, sometimes idolatry.

Thou didst trust in thine own beauty, thou playdest the harlot, because of thy renown, and pourest out thy fornications on every one that passed by. Ezekiel.

FORNICA'TOR. n. f. [fornicateur, Fr. from fornix, Latin.] One that has commerce with unmarried women.

A fornicator or adulterer steals the soul, as well as dishonours the body of his neighbour. Taylor's Rule of living holy.

FORNICA'TRESS. n. f. [from fornicator.] A woman who without marriage cohabits with a man.

See you the fornicatress be remov'd;
Let her have needful but not slavish means.

To FORSAKE. v. a. pret. forsook; part. pass. forsook or forsaken. [verfarken, Dutch.]

1. To leave in resentment, neglect, or dislike.

'Twas now the time when first Saul God forsook, God Saul; the room in 's heart wild passions took. Cowley.

Orestes comes in time
To save your honour: Pyrrhus cools apace;
Prevent his falsehood, and forsake him fast:
I know you hate him. A. Philips' Distress Mother.
Daughter of Jove, whose arms in thunder wield
Th' avenging bolt, and shake the dreadful shield, Forsok by thee, in vain I fought thy aid. Po, e.

2. To leave; to go away from; to depart from.

Unwilling I forsook your friendly state,
Commanded by the gods, and forc'd by fate. Dryden's Æn.

3. To desert; to fail.

Truth, modesty, and shame the world forsook;
Fraud, avarice, and force their places took. Dryden's Ovid.
When ev'n the flying sails were seen no more,
Forsaker of all sight she left the shore. Dryden.
Their purple majesty,
And all those outward shows which we call greatness,
Languish and droop, seem empty and forsaken,
And draw the wond'ring gazers eyes no more. Rowe.

FORS'KER. n. f. [from forsake.] Deserter; one that forsakes.

Thou didst deliver us into the hands of lawless enemies, most hateful forsakers of God. Apostyp.

FORSOO'TH. adv. [forsoðe, Saxon.]

1. In truth; certainly; very well. It is used almost always in an ironical or contemptuous sense.

Wherefore doth Lyfander
Deny your love, so rich within his soul,
And tender me, forsooth, affection! Shaksp.
A fit man, forsooth, to govern a realm, had so goodly government in his own estate. Hayward.

Unlearned persons use such letters as justly express the power or sound of their speech; yet forsooth, we say, write not true English, or true French. Hollor on Speech.

In the East Indies a widow, who has any regard to her character, throws herself into the flames of her husband's funeral pile, to shew, forsooth, that she is faithful to the memory of her deceased lord. Addison's Freeholder.

She would cry out murder, and disturb the whole neighbourhood; and when John came running down the stairs to enquire what the matter was, nothing, forsooth, only her maid had stuck a pin wrong in her gown. Arbutnot.

Some question the genuineness of his books, because, forsooth, they cannot discover in them that flumen orationis that Cicero speaks of. Baker on Learning.

2. It is supposed once to have been a word of honour in address to women. It is probable that an inferior, being called, shewed his attention by answering in the words yes, forsooth, which in time lost its true meaning; and instead of a mere exclamatory interjection, was supposed a compellation. It appears in Shakspere to have been used likewise to men.

Our old English word forsooth has been changed for the French madam. Guardian

To FORSWE'AR. v. a. pret. forswore; part. forsworn. [forþswærian, Saxon.]

1. To renounce upon oath.

I firmly vow
Never to wooe her more; but do forswear her,
As one unworthy all the former favours
That I have fondly flatter'd her withal. Shaksp.

2. To deny upon oath.

And that fell chain about his neck,
Which he forswore most mosttroufly to have. Shakspere

Observe the wretch who hath his faith forsook,
How clear his voice, and how assur'd his look!
Like innocence, and as serenely bold
As truth, how loudly he forswears thy gold! Dryden's Juvenal.

3. With the reciprocal pronoun: as, to forswear himself; to be perjured; to swear falsely.

To leave my Julia, shall I be forsworn?
To leave fair Sylvia, shall I be forsworn?
To wrong my friends, shall I be much forsworn?
And ev'n that power which gave me first my oath,
Provokes me to this threefold perjury. Shaksp.
One says, he never should endure the sight
Of that forsworn, that wrongs both lands and laws. Daniel.

I too have sworn, ev'n at the altar sworn,
Eternal love and endless faith to Thebes;
And yet am false, forsworn: the hallow'd shrine,
That heard me swear, is witness to my falsehood. Smith.

To FORSWE'AR. v. n. To swear falsely; to commit perjury.

Take heed; for he holds vengeance in his hand,

To hurl upon their heads that break his law.
—And that same vengeance doth hurl on thee,
For false forswearing, and for murder too. Shaksp.

FORSWE'ARER. n. f. [from forswear.] One who is perjured.

FORT. n. f. [fort, French.] A fortified house; a castle.

They erected a fort, which they called the fort d'lor; and from thence they bolted like beasts of the forest. Bacon.

Now to their fort they are about to send Fur the loud engines which their ill defend. Waller.

He that views a fort to take it,
Plants his artillery 'gainst the weakest part. Denham's Sophy.

My fury does, like jealous forts, pursue
With death ev'n strangers who but come to view. Dryden.

FORTED. adj. [from fort.] Furnished or guarded by forts. Not used now.

Your desert speaks loud, and I should wrong
To look it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves with characters of brass
A forted residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rasure of oblivion. Shakspere.

FORTH. adv. [forþ, Saxon; whence further and furthest.]

1. Forward; onward in time.

From that day forth I lov'd that face divine;
From that day forth I cast in careful mind
To seek her out. Fairy Queen.

2. Forward in place or order.

Look at the second admonition, and so forth, where they speak in most unchristian manner. Whitgift.

Mad Pandarus steps forth, with vengeance
vow'd

For Bitias' death. Dryden's Æneid.

3. Abroad; out of doors.

Uncle, I must come forth. Shakspere's Othello.
I have no mind of feasting forth to-night. Shakspere.

Attend you here the door of our stern daughter?
Will she not forth? Shakspere.

When winter past, and summer scarce begun,
Invites them forth to labour in the sun. Dryden.

4. Out away; beyond the boundary of any place.

They will privily relieve their friends that are forth; they will send the enemy secret advertisements; and they will not also stick to draw the enemy privily upon them. Spenser.

Ev'n that sunshine brew'd a show'r for him,
That wail'd his father's fortunes forth of France. Shakspere.

5. Out into a publick character; publick view.

You may set forth the same with farmhouses. Pearsham.

But when your troubled country call'd you forth,
Your flaming courage, and your matchless worth,
To fierce contention gave a prosp'rous end. Waller.

6. Thoroughly; from beginning to end. Out of use.

You cousin,
Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth,
Do with your injuries as seems you best. Shaksp.

7. To a certain degree. Obsolete.

Hence we learn, how far forth we may expect justification and salvation from the sufferings of Christ; no further than we are wrought on by his renewing grace. Hummond.

8. On to the end. Out of use.

I repeated the Ave Maria: the inquisitor bad me say forth; I said I was taught no more. Memoir in Strype.

FORTH. prep. Out of.

And here 's a prophet, that I brought with me
From forth the fleets of Pomfret. Shaksp.

Some forth their cabins peep,
And trembling ask what news, and do hear so
As jealous husbands, what they would not know. Donne.

FORTHCOM'ING. adj. [forth and coming.]

Ready to appear; not absconding; not lost.

Carry this mad knave to jail: I charge you see that he be forthcoming. Shakspere.
We'll see your trinkets here forthcoming all. Shakspere's Henry vi.

FORTH'SSUIVING. adj. [forth and issuing.]

Coming out; coming forward from a covert.

Forthissuing thus, she gave him first to wield
A weighty ax, with trueli temper steel'd,
And double edg'd. Pope's Odyssey.

FORTHRIGHT. adv. [forth and right.]

Not in use.

He ever going so just with the horse, either forthright or turning, that it seemed as he borrowed the horse's body, so he lent the horse his mind. Sidney.

The river not running forthright, but almost continually winding, as if the lower streams would return to their spring, or that the river had a delight to play with itself. Sidney.

Arrived there, they passed in forthright;
For till to all the gate stood open wide.

Fairy Queen.
Thither forthright he rode to rouse the prey.
Dryden

FORTHRIGHT. n. f. A straight path.
Here 's a maze trod, indeed,
Through forthrights and meanders. Shakespeare.

FORTHWITH. adv. [forth and with.] Immediately; without delay; at once; straight.

Forthwith he runs, with feigned faithful haste,
Unto his guest; who, after troublous fights
And dicams, 'gan now to take more sound repast.
Spenser.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate. Hooker.
Neither did the martial men dally or prosecute the service faintly, but did forthwith quench that fire. Davies on Ireland.

Forthwith began these fury-moving sounds,
The notes of wrath, the music brought from hell,
The rattling drums. Daniel's Civil War.

The winged heralds, by command
Of sov'reign pow'r, throughout the host proclaim
A solemn counsel forthwith to be held At Pandæmonium. Milton's Paradise Lost.

In his passage thither one put into his hand a note of the whole conspiracy, desiring him to read it forthwith, and to remember the giver of it as long as he lived. South

FOURTIETH. adj. [from forty.] The fourth tenth; next after the thirtieth.

What doth it avail
To be the fortieth man in an entail? Donne Burnet says, Scotland is not above a fortieth part in value to the rest of Britain; and, with respect to the profit that England gains from hence, not the forty thousandth part. Swift.

FORTIFIABLE. adj. [from fortify.] What may be fortified.

FORTIFICATION. n. f. [fortification, French; from fortify.]

1. The science of military architecture.

Fortification is an art shewing how to fortify a place with ramparts, parapets, moats, and other bulwarks; to the end that a small number of men within may be able to defend themselves, for a considerable time, against the assaults of a numerous army without; so that the enemy, in attacking them, must of necessity suffer great loss. It is either regular or irregular; and, with respect to time, may be distinguished into durable and temporary. Harris.

The Phœnicians, though an unwarlike nation, yet understood the art of fortification. Broom.

2. A place built for strength.

The hounds were uncoupled, and the stag thought it better to trust to the nimbleness of his feet, than to the slender fortification of his lodging. Sidney.

Excellent devices were used to make even their sports profitable; images, battles, and fortifications being then delivered to their memory, which, after stronger judgments, might dispense some advantage. Sidney.

3. Addition of strength. Not much used.

To strengthen the infested parts, give some few advices by way of fortification and antidote. Government of the Tongue.

FOURTIER. n. f. [from fortify.]

1. One who erects works for defence.

The fortifier of Pendennis made his advantage of the commodity afforded by the ground. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

2. One who supports or secures; one who upholds.

He was led forth by many armed men, who often had been the fortifiers of wickedness, to the place of execution. Sidney.

To FOURTYFY. v. a. [fortifier, French.]

1. To strengthen against attacks by walls or works.

Great Dunhnane he strongly fortifies. Shaksp.
He fortified the city against besieging. Ecclesi.

2. To confirm; to encourage.

It greatly fortified her desires, to see that her mother had the like desires. Sidney.
To fortify the former opinions Tostatus adds, that those which dwell near the falls of water are deaf from their infancy; but this I hold as feigned. Raleigh.

3. To fix; to establish in resolution.

But in-born worth that fortune can controul,
New-strung and stiffer bent her foster soul:
The heroine assum'd the woman's place,
Confirm'd her mind, and fortify'd her face. Dryden.

A young man, before he leaves the shelter of his father's house, should be fortified with resolution to secure his virtues. Locke.

To FOURTYFY. v. n. To raise strong places.

Thou us impower'd
To fortify this far and overlay
With this potentuous bridge the dark abyss. Milton.

FOURTYLAGE. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort; a block-house.

Yet was the fence thereof but weak and thin
Nought fear'd their force that fortilage to win. Spenser.

In all straits and narrow passages there should be some little fortilage, or wooden castle set, which should keep and command the strait. Spenser on Ireland.

FOURTYN. n. f. [French.] A little fort raised to defend a camp, particularly in a siege.

Thou hast talk'd
Of Palisadoes, fortins, parapets. Shakespeare.

FOURTYUDE. n. f. [fortitudo, Latin.]

1. Courage; bravery; magnanimity; greatness of mind; power of acting or suffering well.

The king-becoming graces,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

The better fortitude
Of patience, and heroic martyrdom Unfing. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Fortitude is the guard and support of the other virtues; and without courage, a man will scarce keep steady to his duty, and fill up the character of a truly worthy man. Locke.

They thought it reasonable to do all possible honour to the memories of martyrs; partly that others might be encouraged to the same patience and fortitude, and partly that virtue, even in this world, might not lose its reward. Nelson.

2. Strength; force. Not in use.

He wrongs his fame,
Despairing of his own arm's fortitude,
To join with witches and the help of hell!
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

FOURTYLET. n. f. [from fort.] A little fort.

FOURTYNIGHT. n. f. [contracted from fourteen-nights, peoppeyrýne night, Sax.]

It was the custom of the ancient northern nations to count time by nights: thus we say, this day seven-night. So Tacitus, Non dierum numerum, ut nos, sed noctium computant.] The space of two weeks.

She would give her a lesson for walking so late, that should make her keep within doors for one fortnight. Sidney.

Hanging on a deep well, somewhat above the water, for some fortnights space, is an excellent means of making drink fresh and quick. Bacon.

About a fortnight before I had finished it, his majesty's declaration for liberty of conscience came abroad. Dryden.

He often had it in his head, but never, with much apprehension, 'till about a fortnight before. Swift.

FORTRESS. n. f. [fortresse, French.] A strong hold; a fortified place; a castle of defence.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he overran all, breaking down all the holds and fortresses. Spenser on Ireland.

The trump of death sounds in their hearing shrill;

Their weapon, faith; their fortress was the grave. Fairfax.

God is our fortress, in whose enquiring name
Let us resolve to scale their flinty bulwarks. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

There is no such way to give defence to absurd doctrines, as to guard them round about with legions of obscure and undefined words; which yet makes these retreats more like the dens of robbers, or holes of foxes, than the fortresses of fair warriors. Locke.

FORTUITOUS. adj. [fortuit, French; fortuitus, Latin.] Accidental; casual; happening by chance.

A wonder it must be, that there should be any man found so stupid as to persuade himself that this most beautiful world could be produced by the fortuitous concurrence of atoms. Roy.

If casual concourse did the world compose,
And things and acts fortuitous arose,
Then any thing might come from any thing;
For how from chance can constant order spring?
Blackmore.

FORTUITOUSLY. adv. [from fortuitous.] Accidentally; casually; by chance.

It is partly evaporated into air, and partly diluted into water, and fortuitously shared between all the elements. Rogers.

FORTUITOUSNESS. n. f. [from fortuitous.] Accident; chance; hit.

FORTUNATE. adj. [fortunatus, Latin.] Lucky; happy; successful; not subject to miscarriage. Used of persons or actions.

I am most fortunate thus accidentally to encounter you; you have ended my business, and I will merrily accompany you home. Shakespeare.

He sigh'd; and could not but their fate deplore,
So wretched now, so fortunate before. Dryden.

No, there is a necessity in fate
Why still the brave bold man is fortunate:
He keeps his object ever full in sight,
And that assurance holds him firm and right:
True, 'tis a narrow path that leads to bliss,
But right before there is no precipice;
Fear makes them look aside, and so their footing mis. Dryden.

FORTUNATELY. adv. [from fortunate.] Happily; successfully.

Bright Eliza rul'd Britannia's state,
And boldly wile, and fortunately great. Prior.

FORTUNATENESS. n. f. [from fortunate.] Happiness; good luck; success.

O me, said she, whole greatest fortunateness is more unfortunate than my sister's greatest unfortunateness. Sidney.

FORTUNE. n. f. [fortuna, Latin; fortune, French.]

1. The power supposed to distribute the lots of life according to her own humour.

Fortune, that arrant whore,
Ne'er turns the key to th' poor. Shakespeare.
Though fortune's malice overthrow my state,
My mind exceeds the compass of her wheel. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

2. The good or ill that befalls man.

Rejoice, said he, to-day;
In you the fortune of Great Britain lies:
Among so brave a people you are they
Whom heav'n has chose to fight for such a prize.
Dryden.

- The adequate meaning of chance, as distinguished from fortune, in that the latter is understood to befall only rational agents, but chance to be among inanimate bodies. Bentley.
3. The chance of life; means of living.
His father dying, he was driven to London to seek his fortune. Swift.
4. Success, good or bad; event.
This terrestrial globe has been surrounded by the fortune and boldness of many navigators. Temple.
No, he shall eat, and die with me, or live;
Our equal crimes, shall equal fortune give. Dryd.
5. Estate; possessions.
If thou do'st,
And this instructs thee, thou do'st make thy way
To noble fortunes. Shakspeare's King Lear.
That cyclops head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakspeare's King Lear.
But tell me, Tityrus, what heav'nly power
Pursu'd your fortunes in that fatal hour? Dryd.
The fate which governs poets, thought it fit
He should not raise his fortunes by his wit. Dryd.
He was younger son to a gentleman of a good birth, but small fortune. Swift.
6. The portion of a man or woman: generally of a woman.
I am thought some heirs rich in lands,
Fled to escape a cruel guardian's hands;
Which may produce a story worth the telling,
Of the next sparks that go a fortune stealing.
Prologue to Orphan.
The fortune hunters have already cast their eyes upon her, and take care to plant themselves in her view. Spectator.
When mis's delights in her spinnet,
A fiddler may a fortune get. Swift.
7. Futurity; future events.
You who mens fortunes in their faces read,
To find out mine, look not, alas, on me:
But mark her face, and all the features heed;
For on'y there is writ my destiny. Corley.
- TO FORTUNE. v. n. [from the noun.]
To befall; to fall out; to happen; to come casually to pass.
It fortuned, as fair it then befel
Behind his back, unweeting, where he stood,
Of ancient time there was a springing well,
From which fast trickled forth a silver flood.
Fairy Queen.
It fortuned the same night that a christian, serving a Turk in the camp, secretly gave the watchmen warning. Knells.
I'll tell you as we pass along,
That you will wonder what hath fortuned. Shaks.
Here fortuna'd curl to slide. Pope's Dunciad.
- FORTUNED. adj. Supplied by fortune.
Not th' imperious stew
Of the full fortuna'd Cæsar ever shall
Be brook'd with me. Shakspeare
- FORTUNEBOOK. n. f. [fortune and book.]
A book consulted to know fortune or future events.
Thou know'st a face, in whose each look
Beauty lays open love's fortunebook;
On whose fair revolutions wait
The obsequious motions of love's fate. Criſtiano.
- FORTUNEHUNTER. n. f. [fortune and hunt.] A man whose employment is to inquire after women with great portions, to enrich himself by marrying them.
We must, however, distinguish between fortune- hunters and fortune-seekers. Spectator
- TO FORTUNETELL. v. n. [fortune and tell.]
1. To pretend to the power of revealing futurity.
We are simple men; we do not know what's brought to pass under the profession of fortune- telling. Shakspeare.
I'll conjure you, I'll fortunetell you. Shaks.
The gypsies were to divide the money got by stealing linen, or by fortunetelling. Walton.

2. To reveal futurity.
Here, while his canting drone-pipe scan'd
The mystick figures of her hand,
He tipples palmistry, and dines
On all her fortunetelling lines. Claveland
- FORTUNETELLER. n. f. [fortune and teller.] One who cheats common people, by pretending to the knowledge of futurity.
They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-fac'd villain,
A thread-bare juggler, and a fortuneteller. Shaks.
A Welchman being at a sessions-house, and seeing the prisoners hold up their hands at the bar, related to some of his acquaintance that the judges were good fortunetellers: for if they did but look upon their hand, they could certainly tell whether they should live or die. Bacon.
Hast thou given credit to vain predictions of men, to dreams or fortunetellers, or gone about to know any secret things by lot? Duppa.
There needs no more than impudence on one side, and a superstitious credulity on the other,
to the setting up of a fortuneteller. L'Estrange.
Long ago a fortuneteller
Exactly said what now befell her. Swift.
- FORTY. adj. [περοπεριγ, Saxon.]
Four times ten.
On fair ground I could beat forty of them.
Shakspeare.
He that upon levity quits his station in hopes to be better, 'tis sorry to one loses. L'Estrange.
- FORUM. n. f. [Latin]. Any publick place.
The forum was a publick place in Rome,
where lawyers and orators made their speeches before their proper judge in matters of property, or in criminal cases, to accuse or excuse, to complain or defend. Watts on the Mind.
Close to the bay great Neptune's fane adjoins,
And near a forum flank'd with marble shines,
Where the bold youth, the numerous fleets to stare,
Shape the broad sail, or smooth the taper oar.
Pope.
- TO FORWA'NDER. v. a. [for and wander.]
To wander wildly and wearily.
The better part now of the ling'ring day
They travelled had, when as they far esp'y'd

Fairy Queen.
- FORWARD. } adv. [forpeard, Saxon.]
FORWARDS. } Toward a part or place before; onward; progressively; straight before.
When fervent sorrow slaked was,
She up arose, resolving him to find
Alive or dead, and forward forth doth pass.
Fairy Queen.
From smaller things the mind of the hearers may go forward to the knowledge of greater, and climb up from the lowest to the highest things. Hooker.
He that is used to go forward, and findeth a stop, falleth off his own favour, and is not the thing he was. Bacon's Essays.
The Rhodian ship passed through the whole Roman fleet, backwards and forwards several times, carrying intelligence to Drepanum.
Shubthnet.

Shakspeare's Richard III.
6. Quick; ready; hasty.
The mind makes not that benefit it should of the information it receives from civil or natural historians, in being too forward or too slow in making observations on the particular facts recorded in them. Locke.
Had they, who would persuade us that there are innate principles, considered separately the parts out of which their propositions are made, they would not perhaps have been so forward to believe they were innate. Locke.
7. Antecedent; anterior: opposed to posterior.
Let us take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them. Shakspeare.
8. Not behindhand; not inferior.
My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding, as
She is i' th' rear o' our birth. Shakspeare.
- TO F'ORWARD. v. a. [from the adverb.]
1. To hasten; to quicken; to accelerate in growth or improvement.
As we house hot country plants, as lemons, to save them; so we may house our own country plants to forward them, and make them come in the cold seasons. Bacon's Natural History.
Whenever I thine,
I forward the grafts and I ripen the vine. Swift.

Woodward.

Fossil or rock salt, and sal gemm, differ not in nature from each other; nor from the common salt of salt springs, or that of the sea, when pure.

Woodward's Natural History.

It is of a middle nature, between fossil and animal, being produced from animal excrements, intermixed with vegetable salts.

Asbuthnot.

Fo'ssIL. n. f.

In this globe are many other bodies, which, because we discover them by digging into the bowels of the earth, are called by one common name fossils; under which are comprehended metals and minerals.

Locke

Many fossils are very oddly and elegantly shaped.

Bentley.

By the word fossil, used as a denomination of one of three general divisions of natural productions, we understand bodies formed usually within the earth, sometimes on its surface, and sometimes in waters; of a plain and simple structure, in which there is no visible difference of parts, no distinction of vessels and their contents, but every portion of which is similar to and perfect as the whole.

Hill's Mar. Med.

Those bodies which will melt in the fire are called minerals, the rest fossils.

Pemberton.

Evlyn.

While Traulus all his ordure scatters,
To foul the man he chiefly flatters.

Swift.

She fouls a smock more in one hour than the kitchen-maid doth in a week.

Swift.

FOULFACED. adj. [foul and faced.] Having an ugly or hateful visage.

If black tearful, or foulfaced reproach,
Attend the sequel of your impudency,

Your mere enforcement shall acquittance me
From all the impure blots and stains thereof.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

FO'ULLY. adv. [from foul.]

1. Filthily; nastily; odiously; hatefully; scandalously; disgracefully; shamefully.

We in the world's wide mouth
Live scandaliz'd, and foully spoken of. Shaksp.
The letter to the protector was gilded over with many smooth words; but the other two did fully and foully set forth his obstinacy, avarice, and ambition. Hayward.

O brother, brother! Filbert still is true;
I foully wrong'd him: do, forgive me, do. Gay.

2. Not lawfully; not fairly.

Thou play'st it most foully for't. Shakespeare.
FOULMOUTHED. adj. [from foul and mouth.] Scurrilous; habituated to the use of obprobrious terms and epithets.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foulmouth'd man as he is, and said he would cudgel you. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
It was allowed by every body, that fo
mouthed a witness never appeared in any cause.
Adelison.

My reputation is too well established in the world to receive any hurt from such a foulmouthed foufrel as he.
Now singing shrill, and scolding oft between,
Scolds answer foulmouth'd scolds; bad neighbourhood I ween. Pope.

FO'ULNESS. n. f. [from foul.]

1. The quality of being foul; filthiness; naiveness.

The ancients were wont to make garments that were not destroyed but purified by fire; and whereas the spots or foulness of other cloaths are washed out, in these they were usually burnt away. Wilkins.

2. Pollution; impurity.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.
Shakespeare.

There is not so chaste a nation as this, nor so free from all pollution or foulness: it is the virgin of the world. Bacon.

3. Hatred; atrociousness.

Conful, you are too mild:
The foulness of some facts takes thence all mercy. Ben Jonson.

It is the wickedness of a whole life, discharging all its filth and foulness into this one quality, as into a great sink or common shore. South.

4. Ugliness; deformity.

He by an affection sprung up from excessive beauty, should not delight in horrible foulness.
Sidney.

He's fallen in love with your foulness, and he'll fall in love with my anger. Shakespeare.
The fury laid aside
Her looks and limbs and with new methods tried
The foulness of th' infernal form to hide. Dryden.

5. Dishonesty; want of candour.

Piety is opposed to hypocrisy and insincerity
and all falseness or foulness of intentions; especially to that perfonated devotion, under which any kind of impiety is wont to be disguised.
Hammond.

FOUND. The pret. and part. pass. of find.

I am fought of them that asked not for me:
I am found of them that sought me not. Isaiah.
Authors now find, as once Achilles found,
The whole is mortal if a part's unfound. Young.

TO FOUND. v. a. [from fundare, Latin;
fonder, French.]

These tunes of reason are Amphion's lyre,
Wherewith he did the Theban city found. Davies.

They Gabian walls, and strong Fidenæ rear,
Nomentum, Bola with Pometia found,
And raise Colatian tow'rs on rocky ground.
Dryden's Æneid.

3. To establish; to erect.

This also shall they gain by their delay
In the wide wilderness; there they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse,
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd. Milton.

He *found*ing a library, gathered together the acts of the kings and prophets. 2 Mac.

4. To give birth or original to: as, he founded an art; he founded a family.

5. To raise upon, as on a principle or ground.

Though some have made use of the opinion of some schoolmen, that dominion is founded in grace; were it admitted as the most certain truth, it could never warrant any such sanguinary method. Deay of Pesty.

A right to the use of the creatures is founded originally in the right a man has to subsist. Locke.

Power, founded on contract, can descend only to him who has a right by that contract. Locke.

The reputation of the Iliad they found upon the ignorance of his times. Pope.

Whole as the marble, founded as the rock. Shaksp.

TO FOUND. v. a. [from fundere, Latin; fonder, French.] To form by melting and pouring into moulds; to cast.

A second multitude

With wondrous art founded the massy ore,
Severing each kind, found'd the bullion drofs.
Milton.

FOUNDATION. n. f. [from fundation, French.]

1. The basis or lower parts of an edifice.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye; but that foundation which beareth up the one, that root which ministrereth unto the other nourishment, is in the bosom of the earth concealed.
Hooker.

That is the way to make the city flat,
To bring the roof to the foundation,

To buy all. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

O Jove, I think,

Foundations fly the wretched; such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Shakespeare.

I draw a line along shore;

I lay the deep foundations of a wall,
And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryd.

2. The act of fixing the basis.

Ne'er to these chambers where the mighty rest,
Since their foundation, came a nobler guest.
Tickel.

3. The principles or ground on which any notion is raised.

If we give way to our passions, we do but gratify ourselves for the present, in order to our future disquiet; but if we resist and conquer them, we lay the foundation of perpetual peace in our minds. Tillotson.

That she should be subject to her husband, the laws of mankind and customs of nations have ordered it so; and there is a foundation in nature for it. Locke.

4. Original; rise.

Throughout the world, even from the first foundation thereof, all men have either been taken as lords or lawful kings in their own houses. Hooker.

He had an opportunity of going to school on a foundation. Swift.

6. Establishment; settlement.

FO'UNDER. n. f. [from found.]

1. A builder; one who raises an edifice;

one who presides at the erection of a city.

Of famous cities we the founders know;
But rivers, old as seas to which they go,
Are nature's bounty: 'tis of more renown
To make a river than to build a town. Waller.

Nor was Proeneste's founder wanting there,
Whom Jove reports the son of Mulciber. Dryden.

2. One who establishes a revenue for any purpose.

The wanting orphans saw with wat'ry eyes
Their founders charity in the dust laid low. Dryd.

This hath been experimentally proved by the honourable founder of this lecture in his treatise of the air. Bentley.

3. One from whom any thing has its original or beginning.

And the rude notions of pedantick schools
Blaspheme the sacred founder of our rules.
Reformism.

When Jove, who saw from high, with just disdain,
The dead inspir'd with vital breath again,
Struck to the centre with his flaming dart
Th' unhappy founder of the godlike art. Dryden.

King James I. the founder of the Stuart race, had he not confined all his views to the peace of his own reign, his son had not been involved in such fatal troubles. Addison's Freeholder.

Nor can the skilful herald trace
The founder of thy ancient race. Swift.

4. [fondeur, French.] A caster; one who forms figures by casting melted matter into moulds.

Founders add a little antimony to their bell-metal, to make it more sonorous; and so pewte-rers to their pewter, to make it found more clear like silver. Grew's Museum.

TO FO'UNDER. v. a. [from fondre, French.]
To cause such a foreness and tenderness in a horse's foot, that he is unable to set it to the ground.

Phæbus's steeds are founder'd,

Or night kept chain'd below. Shakespeare.
I have founder'd nine scots and odd posts;
and here, travel-tainted as I am, have, in my pure and immaculate valour, taken fir John Coleville of the Dale, a most furious knight;
but what of that? he saw me and yielded.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Thy stumbling founder'd jade can trot as high
As any other Pegasus can fly;
So the dull eel moves nimble in the mud,
Than all the swift-fin'd racers of the flood.
Dorset.

Brutes find out where their talents lie:
A bear will not attempt to fly;

A founder'd horse will oft debate,
Before he tries a five-barr'd gate. Swift.
If you find a gentleman fond of your horse, persuade your matter to sell him, because he is vicious, and founder'd into the bargain. Swift.
Men of discretion, whom people in power may with little ceremony load as heavy as they please, drive them through the hardest and deepest roads, without danger of foundering or breaking their backs, and will be sure to find them neither resty nor vicious. Swift.

TO FO'UNDER. v. n. [from fond, French,
the bottom.]

found.] A place where figures are formed of melted metal; a casting house.

FO'UNDLING. n. f. [from found of find.]

A child expos'd to chance; a child found without any parent or owner.

We, like bastards, are laid abroad, even as foundlings, to be trained up by grief and sorrow.

I pass the foundling by, a race unknown,
At doors expos'd, whom matrons make their own,
And into noble families advance
A nameless issue; the blind work of chance.

A piece of charity practis'd by most of the nations about us, is a provision for foundlings, or for those children who are expos'd to the barbarity of cruel and unnatural parents.

The goddess long had mark'd the child's distress,
And long had sought his sufferings to redress;
She prays the gods to take the foundling's part,
To teach his hands some beneficial art.

FO'UNDRESS. n. f. [from founder.]

1. A woman that founds, builds, establishes, or begins any thing.

2. A woman that establishes any charitable revenue.

For of their order she was patroness,
Albe Clarissa was their chief 't foundress.

For zeal like hers, her servants were to show;
She was the first, where need requir'd to go;
Herself the foundress, and attendant too.

FOUNT. n. f. [fons, Latin; fontaine, French.]

1. A well; a spring.

A table of celestial food divine,
Ambrosial fruits, fetch'd from the tree of life;
And from the font of life ambrosial drink.

2. A small basin of springing water.

Proofs as clear as fountains in July, when
We see each grain of gravel. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
Can a man drink better from the fontain finely paved with marble, than when it swells over the green turf?

Narcissus on the grassy verdure lies;
But whilst within the crystal font he tries
To quench his heat, he feels new heat arise.

3. A jet; a spout of water.

Fountains I intend to be of two natures: the one that sprinkleth or spouteth water; the other a fair receipt of water, without fish, or slime, or mud.

4. The head or first spring of a river.

All actions of your grace are of a piece, as waters keep the tenor of their fountains: your compassion is general, and has the same effect as well on enemies as friends.

5. Original; first principle; first cause.

A mighty God, the fontain of all goodness.
You may reduce many thousand bodies to these few general figures, as unto their principal heads and fountains.

This one city may well be reckoned not only the seat of trade and commerce, but only the fontain of habits and fashions, and good breeding; but of morally good or bad manners to all England.

FO'UNTAINLESS. adj. [from fontain.]

Having no fountain; wanting a spring.

The prospect was, that here and there was room
For barren desert fontainless and dry.

FO'UNTFUL. adj. [font and full.] Full of springs.

But when the fontful Ida's top they seal'd with utmost haste,

All fell upon the high-hair'd oaks.

FRANKPLEDGE. n. f. [francplegium, Latin; of franc, i. e. liber & pleige, i. e. fidi jussor.] A pledge or surety for freedom.

The ancient custom of England, for the preservation of the publick peace, was that every freeborn man at fourteen years of age, religious persons, clerks, knights, and their eldest sons excepted, should find security for his fidelity to the king, or else be kept in prison: whence it became customary for a certain number of neighbours to be bound for one another, to see each man of their pledge forthcoming at all times, or to answer the transgression of any one absenting himself. This was called frankpledge, and the circuit thereof was called decenna, because it commonly consisted of ten households; and every particular person, thus mutually bound, was called decennier. This custom was so strictly observed, that the sheriffs, in every county, did from time to time take the oaths of young ones as they grew to the age of fourteen years, and see that they combined in one dozen or other: this branch of the sheriff's authority was called visus francplegii, view of frankpledge. Cowll.

Fierce was the fight; but halting to his prey,
By force the furious lover freed his way.

Dryden.

This master-key
Frees every lock, and leads us to his person.

Dryden.

4. To banish; to send away; to rid. Not in use.

We may again
Give to our tables meat, sleep to our nights,
Free from our seats and banquets bloody knives.

Shakspeare.

Never any Sabbath of release
Could free his travels and afflictions deep.

Daniel.

5. To exempt.

For he that is dead is free'd from sin.

Romans.

FREEBO'OTER. n. f. [free and booty.] A robber; a plunderer; a pillager.

Perkin was not followed by any English of name, his forces consist of moſtly of baſe people and freebooters, ſitter to ſpoil a coaſt than to recover a kingdom. Bacon.

The earl of Warwick had, as often as he met with any Irish frigates, or ſuch freebooters as failed under their commiſſion, taken all the ſeamen. Clarendon.

FREEBO'OTING. n. f. Robbery; plunder; the act of pillaging.

Under it he may cleanly convey any fit pillage, that cometh handſomely in his way; and when he goeth aboard in the night on freebooting, it is his beſt and ſureſt friend. Spencer.

FREEBORN. n. f. [free and born.] Not a ſlave; inheriting liberty.

O baſeneſs, to ſupport a tyrant's throne, And crush your freeborn brethren of the world! Dryden.

I ſhall ſpeak my thoughts like a freeborn ſubject, ſuch things perhaps as no Dutch commentator could, and I am ſure no Frenchman durſt. Dryden's Enſid, Dedication.

Shall freeborn men, in humble awe, Submit to ſervile ſhame; Who from content and cuſtom draw The ſame right to be rul'd by law, Which kings pretend to reign? Dryden.

FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the juriſdiction of the ordinary. The king may alſo license a ſubject to found ſuch a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's viſitation. Cowell.

FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the juriſdiction of the ordinary. The king may alſo license a ſubject to found ſuch a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's viſitation. Cowell.

FREECHAPPEL. n. f. [free and chappel.] Such chappels as are of the king's foundation, and by him exempted from the juriſdiction of the ordinary. The king may alſo license a ſubject to found ſuch a chappel, and by his charter exempt it from the ordinary's viſitation. Cowell.

FREECOST. n. f. [free and coſt.] Without expence; free from charges.

We muſt not vouch any man for an exact maſter in the rules of our modern policy, but ſuch a one as has brought himſelf ſo far to hate and deſpiſe the abſurdity of being kind upon freecoſt, as not ſo much as to tell a friend what it is o'clock for nothing. South.

FREEDMAN. n. f. [freed and man.] A ſlave manumitted. Libertus.

The freedman jottles, and will be preferred; Firſt come, firſt ſerv'd, he cries. Dryden.

FREEDOM. n. f. [from free.]

1. Liberty; exemption from ſervitude; independence.

The laws themſelves they do ſpecially rage at, as moſt repugnant to their liberty and natural freedom. Spencer on Ireland.

O freedom! firſt delight of human kind! Not that which bondmen from their maſters find, The privilege of doles; nor yet t' inferbe Their names in this or t' other Roman tribe; That falſe enfranchiſement with eaſe is found; Slaves are made citizens by turning round. Dryden.

2. Privileges; franchises; immunities.

By our ſilly Setlers have I learn To have the due and ſtrict or my bond; If you deny it, let the danger light Upon your charters, and your city's freedom. Shakespeare.

3. Power of enjoying franchises.

This prince firſt give freedom to ſervants, ſo as to become citizens of equal privileges with the reſt, which very much increaſed the power of the people. Swift.

4. Exemption from fate, neceſſity, or predetermination.

I wiſe muſt change Their nature, and revoke the high decree Unchangeable, eternal, which ordain'd Their freedom; they themſelves ordain'd their fall. Milton.

In every ſin, by how much the more free will is in its choice, by ſo much is the act the more ſinful; and where there is nothing to importune, urge, or provoke the will to any act, there is ſo much an higher and perfecter degree of freedom about that act. South.

5. Unreſtraint.

I will that all the feaſts and ſabbath; ſhall be all days of immunity and freedom for the Jews in my realm. 1 Macabees.

6. The ſtate of being without any particular evil or inconvenience.

The freedom of their ſtate lays them under a greater neceſſity of always chuſing and doing the beſt things. Law.

7. Eaſe or facility in doing or ſhowing any thing.

FREEFO'OTED. adj. [free and foot.] Not unreſtrained in the march.

We will fetters put upon this fear, Which now goes too freefooted. Shakſp. Hamlet.

FREEHEARTED. adj. [free and heart.] Liberal; unreſtrained.

Love muſt freehearted be, and voluntary; And not inſtigated, or by fate conſtrain'd. Davies.

FREEHOLD. n. f. [free and hold.] That land or tenement which a man holds in fee, fee-tail, or for term of life.

Freehold in deed is the real poſſeſſion of lands or tenements in fee, fee-tail, or for life. Freehold in law is the right that a man has to ſuch land or tenements before his entry or ſeizure. Freehold is ſometimes taken in oppoſite to villenage. Land, in the time of the Saxons, was called either bockland, that is, holden by book or writing, or foreland, that is, holden, without writing. The former was held by far better conditions, and by the better fort of tenants, as noblemen and gentlemen, being ſuch as we now call freehold. The latter was commonly in the poſſeſſion of clowns, being that which we now call at the will of the lord. Cowell.

No alienation of lands holden in chief ſhould be available. touching the freehold or inheritance thereof, but only where it were made by matter of record. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

There is an unſpeakable pleaſure in calling any thing one's own: a freehold, though it be but in ice and ſnow, will make the owner pleaſed in the poſſeſſion, and Rout in the defence of it. Addiſ.

My friends here are very few, and fixed to the freehold, from whence nothing but death will remove them. Swift.

I ſhould be glad to poſſeſs a freehold that could not be taken from me by any law to which I did not give conſent. Swift.

FREEHOLDER. n. f. [from freehold.] One who has a freehold.

As extortion did barriſh the old English freeholder, who could not live but under the law; ſo the law did barriſh the Irish lord, who could not live but by extortion. Davies.

FREELY. adv. [from free.]

1. At liberty; without vallaſage; without ſlavery; without dependance.

2. Without reſtraint; heartily; with full gutt.

If my ſon were my husband, I would freely rejoice in that abſence wherein he won honour, than in the emblements of his bed, where he would ſhew moſt love. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

3. Pkantiſuly; lavishly.

I pledge your grace; and if you knew what pains I have beſtow'd to breed this preſent peace, You would drink freely. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

4. Without ſeruple; without reſerve.

Let ſuch teach others who themſelves excel, And cenſure freely who have written well. Pope.

5. Without impediment.

To follow rather the Goths in rhyming than the Greeks in true verſifying, were even to eat acorns with ſwine, when we may freely eat wheat-bread among men. Aſcham.

The path to peace is virtue: what I ſhow, Thyſelf may freely on thyſelf beſtow: Fortune was never worthipp'd by the wife; But ſet aloft by fools, uſurps the ſkies Dryden.

6. Without neceſſity; without predetermination.

Freely they ſtood who ſtood, and fell who fell. Milton.

He leaves us to chuſe with the liberty of reaſonable beings; they who comply with his grace, comply with it freely; and they who reject it, do alſo freely reject it. Rogers.

7. Frankly; liberally; without coſt.

By nature all things have an equal common uſe: nature freely and indifferently opens the boſoms of the univerſe to all mankind. South.

8. Spontaneouſly; of its own accord.

FREEMAN. n. f. [free and man.]

1. One not a ſlave; not a vaſſal.

Had you rather Caſar were living, and die all ſlaves, than that Caſar were dead, to live all freemen? Shakespeare.

If to break looſe from the conduct of reaſon, and to want that reſtraint of examination and judgment which keeps us from chuſing or doing the worſt, be liberty, true liberty, madmen and fools are only the freemen. Locke.

2. One partaking of rights, privileges, or immunities.

He made us freemen of the continent, What nature did like captives treat before. Dryden.

What this union was is expreſſed in the preceding verſe, by their both having been made freemen on the ſame day. Addiſon.

FREEMINDED. adj. [free and mind.]

Unperplexed; without load of care.

To be *freeminde*d, and cheertully diſpoſed at hours of meat, ſleep, and exerciſe, is one of the beſt precepts of long laſting. Bacon.

FREENESS. n. f. [from free.]

1. The ſtate or quality of being free.

2. Openneſs; unſervecdneſs; ingenuouſneſs; candour.

The reader may pardon it, if he pleaſe, for the freeneſs of the confeſſion. Dryden.

3. Generoſity; liberality.

I hope it will never be ſaid t' at the laity, who by the clergy are taught to be charitable, ſhall in their corporations exceed the clergy itſelf, and their ſons, in freeneſs of giving. Spence.

FREESCHO'OL. n. f. [free and ſchool.] A ſchool in which learning is given without pay.

To give a civil education to the youth of this land in the time to come, proviſion was made by another law, that there ſhould be one freeſchool at leaſt erected in every dioceſe. Davies.

Two clergymen ſtood candidates for a ſmall freeſchool; a gentleman who happened to have a better underſtanding than his neighbours, procured the place for him who was the better ſcholar. Swift.

FREESPO'KEN. adj. [free and ſpoken.]

Accuſtomed to ſpeak without reſerve.

Never a one might ſupped privately with ſome fix or ſeven; amongſt whom there was one that was a dangerous man, and began to take the like courſe as Mucellus and Regulus had done: the emperor fell into diſcourſe of the injuſtice and tyranny of the former time, and, by name, of the two accuſers; and ſaid, what ſhould we do with them, as if we had them now? One of them that was at ſupper, and was a freeſpoken ſenator, ſaid, Mary, they ſhould ſup with us. Bacon.

FRESTONE. n. f. [free and ſtone.] Stone commonly uſed in building.

Freeſtone is ſo named from its being of ſuch a conſtitution as to be wrought and cut freely in any direction. Woodward.

I ſaw her hand; ſhe has a leathern hand, a freeſtone-coloured hand. Shakespeare.

The streets are generally paved with brick or freestone, and always kept very neat. Adiſon.
FREETH'NER. n. f. [free and think.] A libertine; a contemner of religion.
 Atheist is an old-fashioned word: I'm a freethinker, child. Adiſon.
 Of what use is freedom of thought, if it will not produce freedom of action, which is the sole end, how remote soever in appearance, of all objections against christianity? and therefore the freethinkers consider it as an edifice, wherein all the parts have such a mutual dependance on each other, that if you pull out one single nail, the whole fabrick must fall to the ground. Swift.

FREEWILL. n. f. [free and will.]
 1. The power of directing our own actions without restraint by necessity or fate.

We have a power to suspend the prosecution of this or that desire: this seems to me the source of all liberty; in this seems to consist that which is improperly called freewill. Locke.

2. Voluntariness; spontaneity.
 I make a decree, that all they of the people of Israel in my realm, which are minded of their own freewill to go up to Jerusalem, go with thee. Ezra.

FREEWOMAN. n. f. [free and woman.]
 A woman not enslaved.
 All her ornaments are taken away of a freewoman; she is become a bondslave. 1 Maccabees.

TO FREEZE. v. n. preter. froze. [wrielsen, Dutch.]
 2. To be congealed with cold.

The aqueous humour of the eye will not freeze; which is very admirable, seeing it hath the perspicuity and fluidity of common water. Ray.

The freezing of water, or the blowing of a plant, returning at equidistant periods in all parts of the earth, would as well serve men to reckon their years by as the motions of the sun. Locke.

2. To be of that degree of cold by which water is congealed.

Opheus with his late made trees
 And mountain tops, that freeze,
 Bow themselves when he did sing. Shakspeare.
 Thou art all ice, thy kindness freezes. Shakspeare.
 Hear'n froze above severe, the clouds congeal,
 And thro' the crystal vault appear'd the standing hail. Dryden.

TO FREEZE. v. a. pret. froze; part. frozen or froze.

1. To congeal with cold.

When we both lay in the field,
Freeze almost to death, how did he lay me,
 Ev'n in his garments! Shakspeare. Richard III.
 My master and mistress are almost frozen to death. Shakspeare.

3. To chill by the loss of power or motion.

I have a faint cold fear thrills through my veins,
 That almost freezes up the heat of life. Shakspeare.
 Death came on amain,
 And exercis'd below his iron reign;
 Then upward to the feat of life he goes;
 Sense fled before him, what he touch'd he froze. Dryden.

TO FREIGHT. v. a. preter. freighted; part. fraught; which being now used as an adjective, freighted is adopted. [fretter, French.]

1. To load a ship or vessel of carriage with goods for transportation.

The princes
 Have to the port of Athens sent their ships,
Fraught with the ministers and instruments
 Of cruel war. Shakspeare. Troilus and Cressida, P. ol.
 Nor is, indeed, that man less mad than these,
 Who freights a ship to venture on the seas;
 With one frail interposing plank to save
 From certain death, roll'd on by ev'ry wave. Dryden's Juvenal.

Freighted with iron, from her native land
 I steer my voyage. Pope's Odyſſey.

2. To load as the burden; to be the thing with which a vessel is freighted.

I would
 Have sunk the sea within the earth, or ere
 It should the good ship to have swallow'd, and
 The freighting tools within her. Shakspeare.

FREIGHT. n. f.
 1. Any thing with which a ship is loaded.

He clears the deck, receives the mighty freight;
 The leaky vessel groans beneath the weight. Dryden.

2. The money due for transportation of goods.

FREIGHTER. n. f. [fretteur, French.]
 He who freights a vessel.

FREN. n. f. A stranger. An old word wholly forgotten here; but retained in Scotland. Beattie.

But now from me his madding mind is staid,
 And woos the widow's daughter of the glen;
 And now fair Rosalind hath bred his smart,
 So now his friend is changed for a fren. Spenser.

FRENCH CHALK. n. f. An indurated clay, extremely dense, of a smooth glossy surface, and soft and unctuous to the touch; of a greyish white colour, variegated with a dusky green. Hill.
French chalk is unctuous to the touch, astatites is, but harder, and nearer approaching the consistence of stone. Wood.

TO FRENCHIFY. v. a. [from French.]
 To infect with the manner of France; to make a coxcomb.

They mislik'd nothing more in king Edward the Confessor than that he was Frenchified; and accounted the desire of foreign language then to be a foretoken of bringing in foreign powers, which indeed happened. Comien's Remains.
 Has he familiarly dislik'd
 Your yellow starch, or had your doublet
 Was not exactly Frenchified? Shakspeare.

FRENETICK. adj. [frenetique, French; frenetick; generally therefore written phrenetick.] Mad; distracted.

He himself impotent,
 By mean of his frenetick malady. Daniel's Civil War.

FRENZY. n. f. [deſtrive; phrenitis, Latin: whence phrenetify, phrenetify, phrenzy, or frenzy.] Madnets; distraction of mind; alienation of understanding; any violent passion approaching to madness.
 That knave, Ford, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him that ever governed frenzy. Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
 That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
 All else is touring frenzy and distraction. Adiſon.
 Why such a disposition of the body induceth sleep, another disturbs all the operations of the soul, and occasions a lethargy or frenzy: this knowledge exceeds our narrow faculties. Bentley.

FRE'QUENCE. n. f. [frequence, French; frequentia, Latin.] Crowd; concourse; assembly.

The frequence of degree,
 From high to low throughout. Shakspeare.
 He, in full frequence bright
 Of angels, thus to Gabriel smiling spake. Milton.

FRE'QUENCY. n. f. [frequentia, Latin.]
 1. Common occurrence; the condition of being often seen or done.

Should a miracle be indulged to one, others would think themselves equally entitled to it; and if indulged to many, it would no longer have the effect of a miracle: its force and influence would be lost by the frequency of it. Atterbury.

2. Concourse; full assembly.
 Thou cam'st ere while into this senate: who
 Of such a frequence, to many friends
 And kindred thou hast here, solated thee? Ben Jonson's Catiline.

 Finding in it fit ports for fisher's trade,
 'Gan more the same frequent, and further to invade. Spenser.

There were synagogues for men to resort unto:
 our Saviour himself and the apostles *frequent*ed them. Hesker.

It is fellow here, this thy creature,
 By night *frequent*s my house. Shakspeare. Timon.
 At that time this land was known and *frequent*ed by the ships and vessels. Bacon.

Wat'ring the ground, and with our sighs the air
*Frequent*ing, sent from hearts contrite, in sign
 Of sorrow unfeign'd, and humiliation meek. Milton.

To serve my friends, the senate I frequent;
 And there what I before digested, vent. Denham.
 That he *frequent*ed the court of Augustus, and was well received in it, is most undoubted. Dryden.

FRE'QUENTABLE. adj. [from frequent.]
 Conversable; accessible. Not now used, but not inelegant.

While youth lasted in him, the exercises of that age and his humour not yet fully discovered, made him somewhat the more frequentable and less dangerous. Sidney.

FRE'QUENTATIVE. adj. [frequentatif, Fr. frequentativus, Latin.] A grammatical term applied to verbs signifying the frequent repetition of an action.

FRE'QUENTER. n. f. [from frequent.]

 Hellish spirits
 Love more the fresco of the nights. Pope.

2. A picture not drawn in glaring light, but in dusk.
 Here thy well-study'd marbles fix our eye;
 A fading fresco here demands a sigh. Pope.

FRESH. adj. [Saxen; fraische, French.]
 1. Cool; not vapid with heat,

I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repair;
The crocus herbs I to thy board will bring,
And draw thy water from the fresh spring.

Pror.

2. Not salt.

They keep themselves unmixt with the salt water;
For salt, a very great way with the sea, Men may take up as fresh water as if they were near the land.

Atkins's Description of the World.

3. New; not had before.

No arrow will you, his temples did adorn,
But to our crown he did fresh jewels bring.

Dryd.

4. New; not impaired by time.

This second race of men, while yet but few,
And while the dead or judgment pass remain
Fresh in their minds, fearing the Deity,
With some regard to what is just and right,
Shall lead their lives.

Milton's Par. Lost

That rose which first was set, will not decay;
Mine of a fresh date will longer stay.

Dryden.

5. In a state like that of recentness.

We will revive those times, and in our men
Preserve and still keep fresh like flowers in waters.

Denham.

With such a care

As roses from their stalks we tear,
When we would still preserve them new,
And fresh as on the bush they grew.

Waller.

Thou sun, said I, fair light!

And thou enlighten'd earth, so fresh and gay!

Milton.

Think not, 'cause men flatter'ing say,
You're fresh as April, sweet as May,
Bright as is the morning star,
That you are so.

Carver.

6. Recent; newly come.

Amidst the fresh Palmurus press'd;
Yet fresh from life, a new admitted guest.
Fresh from the fact, as in the present case,
The criminals are seiz'd upon the place;
Stiff in denial, as the law appoint,
On engines they dilend their tortur'd joints.

Dryden.

7. Repaired from any loss or diminution.

Nor lies she long; but as her fates ordain,
Springs up to life, and fresh to second pain;
Is sav'd to-day, to morrow to be slain.

Dryd.

8. Florid; vigorous; cheerful; unfaded; unimpaired.

This pope is decrepid, and the bell goeth for him;
Take order that when he is dead there be Chosen a pope of fresh years, between fifty and threecore.

Bacon's Holy War.

Two swains

Fresh as the morn, and as the season fair.

Pope.

9. Healthy in countenance; ruddy.

Tell me

Hast thou beheld a fresh gentlewoman,
Such war of white and red within her cheeks?

Shakspeare.

It is no rare observation in England to see a fresh coloured lusty young man yoked to a consumptive female, and him soon after attending her to her grave.

Harvey on Consumption.

They represent to themselves a thousand poor, tall, innocent, fresh coloured young gentlemen.

All fish from sea or shore,
Fishes or purring brook, or fish or fin

Milton.

FRESHLY. adv. [from fresh.]

1. Coolly.

2. Newly; in the former state renewed.

The weeds of herbs being grown onto such spiciness as that way do, even in the very cutting down, sents oftentimes those seeds which for a while he useth and buried in the earth; but afterwards freshly spring up again, no less pernicious than at the first.

Hobbs.

Then shall our names,
Familiar in their mouth as household words,
Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

Shakspeare's Henry v.

They are now freshly in disservice with them.

Bacon.

but flowers pressed or beaten, do lose the freshness
and sweetness of their odour.

Bacon.

2. Freedom from diminution by time; not staleness.

For the constant freshness of it, it is such a pleasure as can never cloy or overwork the mind;
for surely no man was ever weary of thinking, that he had done well or virtuously.

South.

3. Freedom from fatigue; newness of strength.

The Scots had the advantage both for number and freshness of men.

Hayward.

4. Coolness.

There are some rooms in Italy and Spain for freshness, and gathering the winds and air in the heats of summer; but they be but penings of the winds, and enlarging them again, and making them rebeberate in circles.

Bacon.

Say, if the pleate, the hither may repair,
And breathe the freshness of the open air.

Dryden's Aurengzebe.

She laid her down to rest,
And to the winds expos'd her glowing breast,
To take the freshness of the morning air.

Addis.

5. Ruddy; colour of health.

The secret venom, circling in her veins,
Works through her skin, and bursts in bloating stains;
Her cheeks their freshness lose and want'd grace,
And an unusual paleness spreads her face.

Granville.

6. Freedom from saltiness.

FRESHWATER. [A compound word of fresh and water, used as an adjective.]

Raw; unskilled; unacquainted. A low term borrowed from the sailors, who stigmatize those who come first to sea as freshwater men or novices.

Those novities, as freshwater soldiers which had never seen but some light skirmishes, in their vain bravery made light account of the Turks.

Knolles' History of the Turks.

FRET. n. s. [Of this word the etymology is very doubtful: some derive it from pretan, to eat; others from pretan, to adorn; some from pretan; or the French fretiller: perhaps it comes immediately from the Latin fretum.]

1. A frith, or strait of the sea, where the water by confinement is always rough.

Euripus generally signifies any strait, fret, or channel of the sea, running between two shores.

Brown.

2. Any agitation of liquors by fermentation, confinement, or other cause.

Of this river the surface is covered with froth and bubbles; for it runs along upon the fret, and is still breaking against the stones that oppose its passage.

Addison on Italy.

The blood in a fever, if well governed, like wine upon the fret, dischargeth itself of heterogeneous mixtures.

Derham.

3. That stop of the musical instrument which causes or regulates the vibrations of the string.

It requireth good winding of a string before it will make any note; and, in the tops of lutes, the higher they go, the less distance is between the frets.

Bacon's Natural History.

The harp

Had work, and rested not: the solemn pipe
And oboe, all organs of sweet stop,
And founds on fret by string or golden wire,
Temper'd their tunings, intermix'd with voice
Choral or union.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

They are fitted to answer the most variable harmony: two or three pipes to all those of a church-organ, or to all the strings and frets of a lute.

Grew's Cosmolog. Sac.

4. Work rising in protuberances.

The frets of noses, and all equal figures, please; whereas unequal figures are but deformities.

Bacon's Natural History.

We take delight in a prospect well laid out,
and diversified with fields and meadows, woods and rivers, in the curious fret works of rocks and grottos.

Spectator.

5. Agitation of the mind; commotion of temper; passion.

Calmness is great advantage: he that lets
Another ensue, may warm at his fire,
Mark all his wand'rings, and enjoy his frets;
As cooling fencibles suffer heat to tire.

Herbert.

The incredulous Pheac, having yet
Drank but one round, reply'd in sober fret.

Late's Juvenal.

You, too weak, the slightest joys to bear,
Are on the fret of passion, toil and rage.

Creech's Juvenal.

Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd, I was not in debt.

Pope.

To FRET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To agitate violently by external impulse or action.

You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make a noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heav'n.

Shakspeare.

2. To wear away by rubbing.

Drop them full upon one place,
Till they have fretted us a pair of graves
Within the earth.

Shakspeare's Richard II.

In the banks of rivers, with the washing of the water, there were divers times fretted out big pieces of gold.

Abbot.

Before I ground the object metal on the fret,
I always ground the purity on it with the concave copper, till it had done making a noise; because, if the particles of the purity were not made to stick fast in the pits, they would, by rolling up and down, grate and fret the object metal, and fill it full of little holes.

Newton's Opticks.

3. To hurt by attrition.

Antony

Is valiant and dejected; and, by flouts,
His fretted fortunes give him hope and fear
Of what he has and has not.

Shakspeare.

Shall find all fret with rust, both plow and fields,
And empty helms under his harrow sound.

Haleswell.

5. To form into raised work.
Nor did there want
Cornice or freeze, with buffy sculptures grav'n;
The roof was fretted gold. Milton.

6. To variegate; to diversify.
You grey lines,
That fret the clouds, are messengers of day.
Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

7. To make angry; to vex.
The better part with Mary and with Ruth Chofen thou hast, and they that over-woth,
And at thy growing virtues fret their spleen,
No anger find in thee, but pity and truth.
Milton.

Because thou hast fretted me in all these things, behold I will recompence thy way upon thine head. Ezekiel.

Such an expectation, cries one, will never come to pass: therefore I'll even give it up, and go and fret myself. Collier.

Injuries from friends fret and gall more, and the memory of them is not so easily obliterated.
Arbutnot's History of John Bull.

To FRET. v. n.

1. To be in commotion; to be agitated.
No benefits whatsoever shall ever alter or allay that diabolical rancour, that frets and ferments in some hellish breasts, but that it will foam out in slander and invective. South.

The adjoining brook, that purls along
The vocal grove, now fretting o'er a rock,
Now scarcely moving through a reedy pool.
Thomson's Summer.

2. To be worn away; to be corroded.
Take a piece of gloves leather that is very thin,
and put your gold therein, with sal armoniack, binding it close, and than hang it up: the sal armoniack will fret away, and the gold remain behind. Placham on Drawing.

3. To make way by attrition or corrosion.
These do but indeed scrape off the exuberances, or fret into the wood, and therefore they are very seldom used to soft wood. Moxon.

It inflamed and swelled very much; many wheals arose, and fretted one into another with great exoriation. Wiseman.

4. To be angry; to be peevish; to vex himself.

woman, and dreads her consent. Spectator.

FRI'CASSE'E. n. f. [French.] A dish made by cutting chickens or other small things in pieces, and dressing them with strong sauce.
Oh, how would Homer praise their dancing dogs,
Their stinking cheese, and fricacy of frogs!
He'd raise no fables, sing no flagrant lye,
Of boys with cuskard choak'd at Newberry.
King.

FRI'CA'TION. n. f. [fricatio, Latin.] The act of rubbing one thing against another.

Gentle friction draweth forth the nourishment, by making the parts a little hungry, and heating them: this friction I will to be done in the morning. Bacon's Natural History.

Resinous or unctuous bodies, and such as will flame, attract vigorously, and most then of without friction, as good hard wax, which will convert the needle almost as actively as the loadstone.
Brown.

FRI'CTION. n. f. [friction, French; frictio, from frico, Latin.]

1. The act of rubbing two bodies together.
Do not all bodies which abound with terrestrial parts, and especially with sulphureous oates, emit light as often as those parts are sufficiently agitated, whether the agitation be made by heat, friction,
percussion, putrefaction, or by any vital motion?
Newton's Opticks.

2. The resistance in machines caused by the motion of one body upon another.

3. Medical rubbing with the fleshbrush or cloths.
Frictions make the parts more fleshy and full, as we see both in men and in the currying of horses; for that they draw a greater quantity of spirits to the parts. Bacon.

FRI'DAY. n. f. [frīðedæg, Saxon.] The sixth day of the week, so named of Frya, a Saxon deity.
An' she were not kin to me, she would be as fair on Friday as Helen is on Sunday. Shakespeare.
For Venus like her day, will change her cheer,
And seldom shall we see a Friday clear. Dryden.

Let the Nassau-star in rising majesty appear,
And guide the prosperous mariner
With everlasting beams of friendly light.
Prior.

2. Disposed to union; amicable.
Like friendly colours found our hearts unite,
And each from each contract new strength and light.
Pope.

3. Salutary; homogeneous.
Not that Nepenthe, which the wife of Thone
In Egypt gave to Jove-born Helen,
Is of such power to stir up joy as this,
To life so friendly, or so cool to thir.
Milton.

FRIENDLY. adv. In the manner of friends; with appearance of kindness; amicably.
Here between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace;
That all their eyes may bear those tokens home
Of our restored love and amity.
Shakspeare.

FRIENDSHIP. n. f. [friendship, Dutch.]

1. The state of mind united by mutual benevolence; amity.
There is little friendship in the world, and least of all between equals, which was wont to be magnified: that that is, is between superior and inferior, whose fortunes may comprehend the one the other.
Becon.

He lived rather in a fair intelligence than any friendship with the favourites.
Clarendon.

2. Highest degree of intimacy.
My sons, let your unteemly discord cease,
It not in friendship, live at least in peace.
Dryden's Ind. Emp.

Gracious, my lord, hard-by here is a bovel:
Some friendship will it lend you against the tempest;
Repose you there.
Shakspeare's King Lear.

5. Conformity; affinity; correspondence; aptness to unite.
We know those colours which have a friendship with each other, and those which are incompatible, in mixing together those colours of which we would make trial.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZE. n. f. [drap de frise, French.] A coarse warm cloth, made perhaps first in Friesland.

If all the world
Should in a pet of temperance feed on pulse,
Drink the clear stream, and nothing wear but frieze,
The All-giver would be unthank'd.
Milton.

The captive Germans of gigantic size,
Are rank'd in order, and are clad in frieze.
Dryden's Persus.

He could no more live without his frieze coat than without his skin.
Addison's Guardian.

See how the double nation lies,
Like a rich coat with skirts of frieze;
As if a man, in making poses,
Should bundle thistles up with roses.
Swift.

FRIEZE. } n. f. [In architecture.] A large flat member which separates the architrave from the cornice; of which there are as many kinds as there are orders of columns.
Harris.

No jutting cornice,
Buttrice, nor coigne of ntage, but this bird
Hath made his pendant-bed, and procreant cradle.
Shakspeare.

Nor did there want
Cornice or frieze with bossy sculptures grav'd;
The roof was fretted gold.
Milton's Par. Lost.

Polydore designed admirably well, as to the practical part, having a particular genius for friezes.
Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FRIEZED. adj. [from frieze.] Shagged or napped with frieze.

FRIEZELIKE. adj. [frieze and like.] Resembling a frieze.

To FRIGHT. v. a. [frughtan, Saxon.] To terrify; to disturb with fear; to shock with fear; to daunt; to dismay.

This was in the old authors more frequently written affright, as it is always found in the Scripture.

The herds
Were strongly clam'rous in the frighted fields.
Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Such a numerous host
Fled not in silence through the frighted deep,
With ruin upon ruin, rout on rout,
Confusion was confounded.
Milton.

Cerberic watch, and of a sword that flame
Wide-waving, all approach far off to fright,
And guard all passage to the tree of life.
Milton.

Nor exile or danger can fright a brave spirit,
With innocence guarded,
With virtue rewarded,
I make of my sufferings a merit.
Dryden.

The mind frights it self with any thing reflected on in gross, and at a distance: things thus offered to the mind, carry the shew of nothing but difficulty.
Locke.

Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations.
Thomson's Autumn.

FRIGHT. n. f. [from the verb.] A sudden terror.

You, if your goodness does not plead my cause,
May think I broke all hospitable laws,
To bear you from your palace-yard by might,
And put your noble person in a fright.
Dryden.

To FRIGHTEN. v. a. To terrify; to shock with dread.

The rugged bear's, or spotted lynx's brood,
Frighten the valleys and infest the wood.

FRO'LUCK. adj. [wrolijk, Dutch.] Gay; full of levity; full of pranks.

We faries, that do run

By the triple Heate's team,

From the presence of the sun,

Following darkness like a dream,

Now are frolick.

Shakspeare.

Whether, as some fages sing,

The frolick wind that breathes the spring,

Zephyr with Aurora playing,

As he met her once a maying;

There on beds of violets blue,

And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,

Fill'd her with thee a daughter fair,

So buxom, blithe, and debonnaire.

Milton.

Who ripe, and frolick of his full-grown age,

Roving the Celtick and Iberian fields,

At last betakes him to this ominous wood. Milt.

The gay, the frolick, and the loud. Waller.

FRO'LUCK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A wild prank; a flight of whim and levity.

He would be at his frolick once again,

And his pretensions to divinity. Roscommon.

Alcibiades, having been formerly noted for the like frolicks and excursions, was immediately accused of this. Swift.

While rain depends, the pensive cat gives o'er

Her frolicks, and pursues her tail no more. Swift.

To FRO'LUCK. v. n. [from the noun.] To play wild pranks; to play tricks of levity and gayety.

Mainly spirit and genius plays not tricks with words, nor frolicks with the caprices of a frothy imagination. Glanville.

Then to her new love let her go,

And deck her in golden array;

Be finest at every fine show,

And frolick it all the long day. Roscoe.

FRO'LUCKLY. adv. [from frolick.] Gayly; wildly.

FRO'LUCKSOME. adj. [from frolick.] Full of wild gayety.

When the most high

Eternal Father, from his secret cloud

Amid'st, in thunder utter'd thus his voice. Milt.

Then pierc'd with pain, she shook her haughty head,

Sigh'd from her inward soul, and thus she said.

Dryden's Æneid.

8. Noting progress from premises to inferences.

If an objection be not removed, the conclusion of experience from the time past to the time present will not be found and perfect. Bacon.

This is evident from that high and refined morality, which shined forth in some of the ancient heathens. South.

9. Noting the place or person from whom a message is brought.

The king is coming, and I must speak with him from the bridge.

—How now, Fluellen, cam'st thou from the bridge? Shakspeare's Henry v.

10. Out of: noting extraction.

From high Meonia's rocky shores I came,

Of poor descent; Acetes is my name. Addison

11. Because of: noting the reason or motive of an act or effect.

You are good, but from a nobler cause;

From your own knowledge, not from nature's laws. Dryden.

David celebrates the glory of God from the consideration of the greatness of his works. Tillotson.

We sicken soon from her contagious care;

Grieve for her sorrows, groan for her despair.

Prior

Relaxations from plentitude is cured by spare diet, and from any cause by that which is contrary to it. Arbutnot on Aliments.

12. Out of: noting the ground or cause of any thing.

By the sacred radiance of the sun,

The mysteries of Heate, and the night;

By all the operations of the orbs,

From whom we do exist, and cease to be,

Here I disclaim all my paternal care. Shakspeare.

They who believe that the praises which arise from valour are superiour to those which proceed

from any other virtues, have not considered.

Dryden's Virgil's Æneid, Dedication

What entertainment can be raised from so pitiful a machine? We see the success of the battle from the very beginning. Dryden.

'Tis true from force the strongest title springs,

I therefore hold from that which first made kings.

Dryden.

13. Not near to: noting distance.

His regiment lies half a mile at least

South from the mighty power of the king.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

14. Noting separation or recession.

To die by thee, were but to die in jest;

From thee to die, were torture more than death.

Shakspeare's Henry VI.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,

The youthful charioteers with heaving heart

Rush to the race, and, panting, fearfully bear

Th' extremes of fervish hope and chilling fear.

Dryden's Virgil.

15. Noting exemption or deliverance.

From jealousy's tormenting strife,

For ever be thy bosom free'd. Prior.

16. Noting absence.

Our father he hath writ, so hath our sister,

Of differences, which I best thought it fit

To answer from our home. Shakspeare's King Lear.

17. Noting derivation.

I lay the deep foundations of a wall

And Enos, nam'd from me, the city call. Dryden.

18. Since: noting distance from the past.

The flood was not the cause of mountains, but there were mountains from the creation. Raleigh.

I had, from my childhood, a wart upon one of my fingers. Bacon.

The other had been trained up from his youth in the war of Flanders. Clarendon.

The milk of tygers was his infant food,

Taught from his tender years the taste of blood.

Dryden.

Were there, from all eternity, no memorable actions done 'till about that time? Tillotson.

19. Contrary to. Not in use.

Any thing too overdone is from the purpose of playing; whose end, both at the first and now, was and is to hold, as 'twere, the mirror up to nature. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

Do not believe,

That from the sense of all civility,

I thus would play and trifle with your reverence.

Shakspeare.

Did you draw bonds to forfeit? Sign to break?

Or must we read you quite from what we speak,

And find the truth out the wrong way? Doane.

20. Noting removal.

Thrice from the ground she leap'd. Dryden.

21. From is very frequently joined by an ellipsis with adverbs: as, from above, from the parts above; from below, from the places below; of which some are here exemplified.

22. FROM above.

He, which gave them from above such power, for miraculous confirmation of that which they taught, endued them also with wisdom from above, to teach that which they so did confirm. Hooker.

No sooner were his eyes in slumber bound,

When, from above, a more than mortal sound

Invades his ears. Dryden's Æneid.

23. FROM afar.

Light demillances from afar they throw.

Dryden's Æneid.

24. FROM beneath.

With whirlwinds from beneath the toils'd the

ship,

And bare expos'd the bottom of the deep. Dryd.

An arm arises out of stygian flood,

Which, breaking from beneath with bellowing sound,

Whirls the black waves and rattling stones around.

Dryden.

25. FROM behind.

See, to their base restor'd, earth, seas, and air,

And joyful ages from behind, in crowding ranks appear. Dryden.

26. FROM far.

Their train proceeding on their way,

From far the town and lofty tow'rs survey.

Dryden.

27. FROM high.

Then heav'n's imperious queen shot down from high. Dryden.

28. FROM thence. Here from is superfluous.

In the necessary differences which arise from thence, they rather break into several divisions than join in any one publick interest; and from

hence have always risen the most dangerous factions, which have ruined the peace of nations.

Clarendon.

29. FROM whence. From is here superfluous.

While future realms his wand'ring thoughts delight,

His daily vision, and his dream by night,

Forbidden Thebes appears before his eye,
From whence he sees his absent brother fly.

Pope's Statius.

30. FROM where.

From where high Ithaca, o'erlooks the floods,
Brown with o'er-arching shades and pendent
woods,

Us to these shores our filial duty draws. Pope.

31. FROM without.

When the plantation grows to strength, then it is time to plant it with women as well as with men, that it may spread into generations, and not be pierced from without.

If native power prevail not shall I doubt
To seek for needful succour from without. Dryd.

32. FROM is sometimes followed by another preposition, with its proper case.33. FROM amidst.

Thou too shalt fall by time or barb'rous foes,
Whose circling walls the few'n fam'd hills enclose;
And thou, who rival tow'ns invade the skies,
And, from amidst the waves, with equal glory rise.

Addison.

34. FROM among.

Here had new begun
My wand'ring, had not he, who was my guide
Up hither, from among the trees appear'd, Presence divine! Milton's Par. Lost.

35. FROM beneath.

My worthy wife our arms mislaid,
And from beneath my head my sword convey'd.

Dryden's Æneid

36. FROM beyond.

These followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from beyond Jordan. Mat.

37. FROM forth.

Young Aretus, from forth his bridal bow'r,
Brought the full laver o'er their hands to pour,
And canisters of consecrated flour. Pope.

38. FROM off.

The sea being constrained to withdraw from off certain tracts of lands, which lay till then at the bottom of it. Woodward

Knights, unhors'd, may rise from off the plain,
And fight on foot, their honour to regain. Dryd.

39. FROM out.

The king with angry threatenings from out a window, where he was not ashamed the world should behold him a beholder, commanded his guard and the rest of his soldiers to hasten their deat'h.

Silney

And join thy voice unto the angel-quire,
From out his secret altar touch'd with hallow'd fire.

Milton.

Now shake, from out thy fruitful breast, the feeds

Of envy, discord, and of cruel deeds. Dryden.

Strong god of iron, whose iron sceptre sways
The freezing north and hyperborean seas,
Terror is thine, and wild amazement, flung
From out thy chariot, withers ev'n the strong.

Dryden

40. FROM out of.

Whatever such principle there is, it was at the first found out by discourse, and drawn from out of the very bowels of heaven and earth.

Hooker.

41. FROM under.

He, though blind of sight,
Despis'd, and thought extinguish'd quite,
With inward eyes illumined,
His heav' virtue rous'd

From under ashes into sudden flame. Milton.

42. FROM within.

From within
The broken bowels, and the bloated skin,
A buzzing noise of bees his ears alarms. Dryden.

FROMWARD. prep. [from and toward,
Saxon.] Away from: the contrary to the word toward. Not now in use.

As cheerfully going toward as Pyrocles went forward fromward his death. Sidney.

The horizontal needle is continually varying towards east and west; and so the dipping or inclining needle is varying up and down, towards or fromwards the zenith. Cheyne.

FRONDI'FEROUS. adj. [frondifer, Lat.]
Bearing leaves. *Ditt.*FRONT. n. f. [frons, Latin; front, Fr.]

1. The face.

His front yet threatens, and his frowns command. Pier.

They stand not front to front, but each doth view

The other's tail, pursu'd as they pursue.

Cræch's Mantilius.

The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front and in thy bosom glow.

Thomson.

2. The face, in a sense of censure or dislike: as, a hardened front; a sierce front.
This is the usual sense.

3. The face as opposed to an enemy.

His forward hand, inur'd to wounds, makes way

Upon the sharpest fronts of the most fierce.

Daniel.

4. The part or place opposed to the face.

The access of the town was only by a neck of land: our men had shot, that thundered upon them from the rampiers in front, and from the galleries that lay at sea in flank. Bacon.

5. The van of an army.

'Twixt host and host but narrow space was left
A dreadful interval! and front to front
Presented, flood in terrible array. Milton.

6. The forepart of any thing, as of a building.

Both these sides are not only returns, but parts of the front; and uniform without, though severally partitioned within, and are on both sides of a great and stately tower, in the midst of the front. Bacon.

Palladius adviseth the front of his edifice should so respect the south, that in its first angle it receive the rising rays of the winter sun, and decline a little from the winter setting thereof.

Brown.

The prince approach'd the door,
Possess'd the porch, and on the front above

He fix'd the fatal bough. Dryden's Æneid.

One sees the front of a palace covered with painted pillars of different orders. Addison

7. The most conspicuous part or particular.
To FRONT. v. a. [from the noun.]1. To oppose directly, or face to face;
to encounter.

You four shall front them in the narrow lane;
we will walk lower: if they 'scape from your encounter, then they light on us. Shakspeare.

Can you, when you have push'd out of your gates the very defender of them, think to front
his revenges with easy groans. Shakspeare

Some are either to be won to the state in a fast and true manner, or fronted with some other of the same party that may oppose them, and so divide the reputation. Bacon's Essays.

I shall front thee, like some staring ghost,
With all my wrongs about me. Dryden.

2. To stand opposed, or over against any place or thing.

The square will be one of the most beautiful in Italy when the statue is erected, and a town house built at one end to front the church that stands at the other. Addison on Italy.

To FRONT. v. n. To stand foremost.

I front, but in that file,
Where others tell steps with me. Shakspeare

FRONTAL. n. f. [frontale, Latin; frontal, French.] Any external form of medicine to be applied to the forehead, generally composed among the ancients of coolers and hypnoticks. Quincy.

We may apply intercipients upon the temples of mastick: frontales may also be applied.

Wifeman.

The torpedo, alive, stupifies at a distance; but after death produceth no such effect; which had they retained, they might have supplied opium, and served as frontals in phlebotomy. Brown.

FRONTATED. adj. [from frons, Latin.]

In botany, the frontated leaf of a flower grows broader and broader, and at last perhaps terminates in a right line: used in opposition to cusped, which is, when the leaves of a flower end in a point. Quincy.

FRONTBOX. n. f. [front and box.] The box in the playhouse from which there is a direct view to the stage.

How vain are all these glories, all our pains,
Unless good sense preserve what beauty gains!
That men may say, when we the frontbox grace,
Behold the first in virtue, as in face. Pope.

FRONTED. adj. [from frons.] Formed with a front.

Part fronted brigades form. Milton.

FRONTIER. n. f. [frontiere, Fr.] The marches; the limit; the utmost verge of any territory; the border: properly that which terminates not at the sea, but fronts another country.

Draw all the inhabitants of those borders away, or plant garrisons upon all those frontiers about him. Spenser on Ireland.

I upon my frontiers here keep residence,
That little which is left so to defend. Milton.

quod in fronte conspicitur*; frontispice, French.] That part of any building or other body that directly meets the eye.

With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd, thick with sparkling orient gems

The portal throne. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Who is it has informed us that a rational soul can inhabit no tenement, unless it has just such a sort of frontispiece? Locke.

The frontispiece of the townhouse has pillars of a beautiful black marble, streaked with white.

Addison on Italy.

FRONTLESS. adj. [from front.] Not blushing; wanting shame; void of diffidence.

Thee, frontless man, we follow'd from afar,
Thy instruments of death and tools of war. Dryd.
For vice, though frontless, and of harden'd face,
Is daunted at the sight of awful grace. Dryden.
Strike a blush through frontless flattery. Pope.

FRONTLET. n. f. [from frons, Latin; fronteau, French.] A bandage worn upon the forehead.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes.

Deuteronomy.

To the forehead frontlets were applied, to restrain and intercept the influx. Wifeman.

FRONTROOM. n. f. [front and room.]

An apartment in the forepart of a house.
If your shop stands in an eminent street, the frontrooms are commonly more airy than the back-rooms; and it will be inconvenient to make the frontroom shallow. Maxon.

FRORE. adj. [bevrozen, Dutch, frozen.]

Frozen. This word is not used since the time of Milton.

The parching air
Burns froze, and cold performs th' effect of fire.
Milton.

FRORE. adj. [hevrozen, frozen, Dutch.]
Frozen; congealed with cold. Obsolete.
O, my heart-blood is well nigh frore I feel,
And my galage gown fait to my heel. Spenser.

FROST. n. f. [froyt, Sax.]
1. The last effect of cold; the power or act of congelation.

This is the state of man: to-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hopes, to-morrow blossoms,
And bears his blushing honours thick upon him;
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost,
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

When the frost seizes upon wine, only the more waterish parts are congealed: there is a mighty spirit which can retreat into itself, and within its own compass lie secure from the freezing impression. South.

2. The appearance of plants and trees sparkling with congelation of dew.
Behold the groves that shine with silver frost,
Their beauty wither'd, and their verdure lost.
Pope's Winter.

FROSTBITTEN. adj. [frost and bitten.]
Nipped or withered by the frost.
The leaves are too much frostbitten. Mortimer.

FROSTED. adj. [from frost.] Laid on in inequalities like those of the hoar frost upon plants.

The rich brocaded silk unfold,
Where rising flow'rs grow stiff with frosted gold.
Gay.

FROSTILY. adv. [from frosty.]
1. With frost; with excessive cold.
2. Without warmth of affection.
Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frostily.
Ben Jonson

FROSTINESS. n. f. [from frosty.] Cold; freezing cold.

FROSTNAIL. n. f. [frost and nail.] A nail with a prominent head driven into the horse's shoes, that it may pierce the ice.

The claws are strait only to take hold, for better progression; as a horse that is shod with frostnails. Grew's Cosmol.

FROSTWORK. n. f. [frost and work.]
Work in which the substance is laid on with inequalities, like the dew con-gealed upon shrubs.

By nature shap'd to various figures, those
The fruitful rain, and these the hail compose;
The snowy fleece and curious frostwork these,
Produce the dew, and those the gentle breeze.
Blackmore.

FROSTY. adj. [from frost.]
1. Having the power of congelation; excessive cold.

For all my blood in Rome's great quarrel shed,
For all the frosty nights that I have watch'd,
Be pitiful to my condemned soul. Shakespeare.

The air, if very very cold, irritateth the flame, and maketh it burn more fiercely; as fire
scorcheth in frosty weather. Bacon.

A gnat half-starved with cold and hunger, went out one frosty morning to a bee-nive.
L'Estrange.

2. Chill in affection; without warmth of kindness or courage.

What a frosty spiritied rogue is this! Shaksp.

3. Hoary; gray-haired; resembling frost.
Where is loyalty?

If it be banish'd from the frosty head,
Where shall it find a harbour in the earth? Shaksp.

FROTH. n. f. [froe, Dan. and Scottish.]

1. Spume; foam; the bubbles caused in liquors by agitation.

His hideous tail then hurled he about,
And therewith all enwrapt the nimble thighs
Of his froth foamy steed. Fairy Queen.

When wind expieth from under the sea, as it causeth some rebounding of the water, so it causeth some light motions of bubbles, and white circles of froth. Bacon's Natural History.

Surging waves against a solid rock,
Though all to shivers dash'd, th' assault renew;
Vain battery, and in froth or bubbles end.
Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

The useless froth swims on the surface, but the pearl lies covered with a mass of waters.
Glanville.

The scatter'd ocean flies;
Black sands, discolour'd froth, and mingled mud arise. Dryden.

They were the froth my raging folly mov'd
When it boil'd up; I knew not then I lov'd,
Yet then lov'd most. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

If now the colours of natural bodies are to be mingled, let water, a little thickened with soap, be agitated to raise a froth; and after that froth has stood a little, there will appear, to one that shall view it intently, various colours every where in the surfaces of the bubbles; but to one that shall go so far off that he cannot distinguish the colours from one another, the whole froth will grow white, with a perfect whiteness.
Newton.

A painter having finished the picture of a horse, excepting the loose froth about his mouth and his bridle; and after many unsuccessful essays, despairing to do that to his satisfaction, in a great rage threw a sponge at it, all besmeared with the colours, which fortunately hitting upon the right place, by one bold stroke of chance most exactly supplied the want of skill in the artist. Bentley.

2. Any empty or senseless show of wit or eloquence.

3. Any thing not hard, solid, or substantial.
Who eateth his veal, pig and lamb being froth,
Shall twice in a week go to bed without broth.
Tusser

TO FROTH. v. n. [from the noun.] To foam; to throw out spume; to generate spume.

He frets within, froths treason at his mouth,
And churns it through his teeth. Dryden Excess muddles the best wit, and only makes it flutter and froth high. Grew

FROTHILY. adv. [from frothy.]
1. With foam; with spume.

2. In an empty trifling manner.

FROTHY. adj. [from froth.]
1. Full of foam, froth, or spume.

The sap of trees is of differing natures; some watery and clear, as vines, beeches, pears; some thick, as apples; some gummy, as cherries; and some frothy, as elms. Bacon.

Behold a frothy substance rise;
Be cautious, or your bottle flies. Swift.

2. Soft; not solid; wafting.
Their bodies are so solid and hard as you need not fear that bathing should make them frothy.
Bacon's Natural History.

3. Vain; empty; trifling.
What's a voluptuous dinner, and the frothy vanity of discourse that commonly attends these pompous entertainments? What is it but a mortification to a man of sense and virtue? L'Estrange.

Though the principles of religion were never so clear and evident, yet they may be made ridiculous by vain and frothy men; as the gravest and wisest person in the world may be abused by being put in a fool's coat. Tillotson.

FROUNCE. n. f. A word used by fal-coners for a distemper, in which white spittle gathers about the hawk's bill.

TO FROUNCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
To frizzle or curl the hair about the face. This word was at first probably used in contempt.

Some frounce their curled hair in courtly guise,
Some prank their tufts, and other timely dight
Their gay attine. Fairy Queen.

Some warlike sign must be used; either a slovenly buskin, or an overslaring frounced head.
Afham's Schoolmaster.

Thus, night oft see me in thy pale career,
'Till civil suited morn appear;
Not trick'd and frounc'd as she was wont,
With the Attick boy to hunt. Milton.

FROUZY. adj. [A cant word.]

1. Fetid; mullly.
Petticoats in frouzy heaps. Swift.

2. Dim; cloudy.

Vapours and steams her looks disgrace;
A frouzy dirty-coloured red
Sits on her cloudy wrinkled face. Swift.

FRO'WARD. adj. [framward.] Peevish; ungovernable; angry; perverse: the contrary to to'ward.

The froward pain of mine own heart made me delight to punish him, whom I esteemed the chiefest let in the way. Sidney.

She's not froward, but modest as the dove:
She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shaksp.

Whole ways are crooked, and they froward in their paths. Proverbs.

Time moveth so round, that a froward retention of custom is as turbulent a thing as innovation. Bacon's Essays.

'Tis with froward men, and froward children;
they'll be sooner quieted by fear than by any sense of duty.
L'Estrange.

Motions occasion sleep, as we find by the common use and experience of rocking froward children in cradles. Temple.

FRO'WARDLY. adv. [from froward.] Pee-vishly; perversely.

I hid me and was wroth, and he went frowardly
in the way of his heart. Isaiah.

FRO'WARDNESS. n. f. [from froward.]
Peevishness; perverseness.

How many frowardnesses of ours does he smother?
how many indignities does he pass by?
how many affronts does he put up at our hands?
South.

We'll mutually forget
The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age.
Addison's Cato.

FRO'WER. n. f. [I know not the etymology.] A cleaving tool.

A frower of iron for cleaving of lath,
With roll for a sawpit, good husbandry hath.
Tusser.

TO FROWN. v. a. [frogner, old French,
to wrinkle. Skinner.] To express displeasure by contracting the face to wrinkles; to look stern.

Say, that she frowns; I'll say, she looks as clear

As morning roses newly wash'd with dew. Shaksp.
They chuse their magistrate;

And such a one as he, who puts his thall,
His popular thall, against a graver bench
Than ever frown'd. Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

How now, daughter, what makes that frontlet
on? You are too much of late i' th' frown.

—Thou wast a pretty fellow, when thou hadst no need to care for her frowning. Shaksp.
Heroes in animated marble frown. Pope.

The wood,
Whose shady horrors on a rising brow
Wav'd high, and frown'd upon the stream below.
Pope.

FROWN. n. f. [from the verb.] A wrinkled look; a look of displeasure.

Patiently endure that frown of fortune, and by some notable exploit win again her favour.

Krolles' History of the Turks.

In his half-clos'd eyes

Stern vengeance yet and hostile terror stand;
His front yet threatens, and his frowns command

Prior

FROWNINGLY. adv. [from frown.] Sternly; with a look of displeasure.

What, look'd he frowningly?

A countenance more in sorrow than in anger,

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

FROWY. adj. Musty; mossy. This word is now not used; but instead of it frouzy.

But if they with thy gotes should yede,

They soon might be corrupted;

Or like not of the frouy fede,

Or with the weeds be glutted,

Spenser.

FROZEN. part. pass. of freeze.

1. Congealed with cold.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms?

Ev'n such have heard, if any such there be,
Whose earth is bounded by the frozen sea.

Dryden.

Fierce Boreas, with his offspring, issues forth
To invade the frozen wagon of the north.

Dryd.

A cheerful blaze arose, and by the fire
They warm'd their frozen feet, and dry'd their wet attire.

Dryden's Flower and Leaf.

2. Chill in affection.

Against whom was the fine frozen knight, frozen in despair; but his armour naturally representing ice, and all his furniture lively answering thereto.

Silbey

Be not ever frozen coy;

One beam of love will soon destroy

And melt that ice to floods of joy.

Carew.

3. Void of heat or appetite.

Even here, where frozen chastity retires,
Love finds an altar for forbidden fires,

Pope.

F. R. S. Fellow of the Royal Society.

Who virtu profess

Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.

Pope.

Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUCTIFICATION. n. f. [from fructify.]

The act of causing or of bearing fruit;
fecundation; fertility.

That the sap doth powerfully rise in the springs, to put the plant in a capacity of fructification, he that hath beheld how many gallons of water may be drawn from a birch tree, hath slender reason to doubt.

Brown's Vulgar Errors

To FRUCTIFY. v. a. [from fructifer. Fr.]

To make fruitful; to fertilize.

The legal levies the sovereign raises are as vapours which the sun exhales, which fall down in sweet showers to fructify the earth.

Howell.

Where'er the look, behold some sudden birth
Adorns the trees, and fructifies the earth.

Granville.

To FRUCTIFY. v. n. To bear fruit.

It waterth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; as serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents which befall men in this present life.

Hooker.

Thus would there nothing fructify, either near or under them, the sun being horizontal to the poles.

Brown.

FRUCTUOUS. adj. [from fructuosus. French;

from fructify.] Fruitful; fertile; impregnating with fertility.

Apples of price, and plenteous sheaves of corn
Oft interlac'd occur; and both imbibe
Fatt'ning congenial juice, so rich the soil,
So much does fructuous moisture o'erabound!

Philips

FRUGAL. adj. [from frugalis. Latin; frugal,

French.] Thrifty; sparingly; parfimonious; not prodigal; not profuse; not lavish.

Reasoning, I oft admire,

How nature wise and frugal could commit

Such disproportions, with superfluous hand

So many nobler bodies to create,

Greater to manifold to this one use.

Milton.

And wing'd purveyors his sharp hunger led

With frugal scraps of flesh and maslin bread.

Harte.

If through mists he shoots his fullen beams,
Frugal of light, in loose and straggling streams,
Suspect a drifting day.

Dryden's Virgil

FRUGALLY. adv. [from frugal.] Parfimoniously; sparingly; thriftily.

Mean time young Pafmond his marriage
press'd,

And frugally resolv'd, the charge to shun,

To join his brother's bridal with his own

Dryd.

FRUGALITY. n. f. [from frugalité. French; frugalitas. Latin.] Thrift; parsimony;
good husbandry.

As for the general sort of men, frugality may be the cause of drinking water; for that is no small saving, to pay nothing for one's drink.

Bacon.

Frugality and bounty too.

Those differing virtues, meet in you.

Waller.

In this frugality of your praises, some things I cannot omit.

Dryden's Fables, Dedication.

The boundaries of virtues are indivisible lines:
it is impossible to march up close to the frontiers of frugality, without entering the territories of parsimony.

Arbutnot's John Bull.

FRUGIFEROUS. adj. [from frugifer. Latin.]
Bearing fruit.

Ainsworth.

FRUIT. n. f. [from fructus. Latin; frwyth, Welsh; fruit. French.]

the seeds are contained.

The Strawberry grows underneath the nettle,
And whol some berries thrive and ripen best
Neighbour'd by fruit of baser quality.

Shaksp.

2. That part of a plant which is taken for food.

By tasting of that fruit forbid,

Where they sought knowledge, they did error find.

Davies.

See how the rising fruits the gardens crown,
Imbibe the sun, and make his light their own.

Blackmore.

3. Production.

The fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness, and truth.

Ephesians.

4. The offspring of the womb; the young of any animal.

Can'st thou their reck'nings keep? the time

compute,

When their ivorn bellies shall enlarge the fruit?

Sandys.

5. Advantage gained by any enterprise or conduct.

What is become of all the king of Sweden's victories? Where are the fruits of them at this day? Or of what benefit will they be to posterity?

Swift.

Another fruit, from considering things in themselves, will be, that each man will pursue his thoughts in that method which will be most agreeable to the nature of the thing, and to his apprehension of what it suggests to him.

Locke.

6. The effect or consequence of any action.

She blushed when she considered the effect of granting; she was pale when she remembered the fruits of denying.

Silbey.

They shall eat of the fruit of their own way.

Proverbs.

FRUITAGE. n. f. [from fruitage. French.]

Fruit collectively; various fruits.

In heav'n the trees

Of life ambrosial fruitage bear, and vines

Yield nectar.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

Greeditly they pluck'd

The fruitage, fair to sight, like that which grew
Near that bituminous lake where Sudom flamm'd.

Milton.

What is more ordinary with them than the taking in flowers and fruitage for the garnishing of their work?

Morr.

FRUITBEARER. n. f. [from fruit and bearer.]

That which produces fruit.

Trees, especially fruitbearers, are often insected with the meales.

Mortimer.

FRUITBEARING. adj. [from fruit and bear.]

Having the quality of producing fruit.

By this way graft trees of different kinds one on another, as fruitbearing trees on those that bear not.

Mortimer.

FRUITERER. n. f. [from fruitier. Fr.] One who trades in fruit.

I did fight with one Sampson Stockfish, a fruiterer, behind Gray's-inn.

Shakspere.

Walnuts the fruiterer's hand in Autumn stain;

Blue plumbs and juicy pears augment his gain.

Cy.

FRUITERY. n. f. [from fruiterie. French.]

1. Fruit collectively taken.

Oft, notwithstanding all thy care

To help thy plants, on the small fruiterie

Exempt from ills, an oriental blait

Disasterous flies.

Philips.

2. A fruit-loft; a repository for fruit.

FRUITFUL. adj. [from fruit and full.]

1. Fertile; abundantly productive; liberal of vegetable product.

If the continued cruel, he could no more sustain his life than the earth remain fruitful in the sun's continual absence.

Silbey.

The earth,

Though in comparison of heav'n, so small,

Nor glitt'ring, may of solid good contain

More plenty than the sun that barren shines,

Whose virtue on itself works no effect,

But in the fruitful earth.

Milton.

2. Actually bearing fruit.

Adonis' gardens,

That one day bloom'd, and fruitful were the next.

Shakspere.

3. Prolifick; childbearing; not barren.

Hear, Nature, hear; dear goddesses, hear a father!

Suspend thy purpose, if thou did'st intend

To make this creature fruitful;

Into her womb convey sterility.

Shakspere.

Male he created thee, but thy consort

Female for race; then blest'd mankind, and said,

Be fruitful, multiply, and fill the earth;

Subdue it, and throughout dominion hold.

I have copied nature, making the youths amorous and the damsels fruitful.

Gay.

4. Plenteous; abounding in any thing.

While you, my lord, the rural shades admire,

And from Britannia's publick ports retire,

Me into foreign realms my fate conveys,

Through nations fruitful of immortal lays.

Addison.

FRUITFULLY. adv. [from fruitful.]

1. In such a manner as to be prolifick.

How sacred seeds of sea, and air, and earth,

And purer fire through universal night

And empty space did fruitfully unite.

2. Plenteously; abundantly.

You have many opportunities to cut him off:
if your will want not, time and place will be fruitfully offered.

Shakspere.

Fruitfully abound.

Dryden.

FRUITFULNESS. n. f. [from fruitful.]

1. Fertility; fecundity; plentiful production.

Neither can we ascribe the same fruitfulness to any part of the earth, nor the same virtue to any plant thereon growing, that they had before the flood.

Raleigh's History.

2. The quality of being prolifick, or bearing many children.

The goddess, present at the match she made,
So bleis'd the bed, such fruitfulness convey'd,
That ere ten moons had sharpen'd either horn,
To crown their bliss, a lovely boy was born.
Dryden's Ovid.

3. Exuberant abundance.

The remedy of fruitfulness is easy, but no labour will help the contrary; I will like and praise some things in a young writer, which yet, if he continues in, I cannot but justly hate him for.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

FRUIT-GROVES. n. f. [fruit and groves.]
Shades, or close plantations of fruit-trees.

The faithful slave,
Whom to my nuptial train Icarus gave,
To tend the fruit-groves.
Pope's Odyssey.

FRUITION. n. f. [fruur, Latin.] Enjoyment; possession; pleasure given by possession or use.

Man doth not seem to rest satisfied either with fruition of that wherewith his life is preserved, or with performance of such actions as advance him most deservedly in estimation.
Hooker.

I am driv'n, by beath of her renown,
Either to seek shipwreck, or to arrive
Where I may have fruition of her love.
Shaksp.

God riches and renown to men imparts,
Ev'n all they wish; and yet their narrow hearts
Cannot so great a fluency receive,
But their fruition to a stranger leave.
Sandys.

Wit once, like beauty, without art or dress,
Naked and unadorned, could find success;
'Till by fruition, novelty destroyed,
The nymph must find new charms to be enjoy'd.
Granville.

Affliction generally disables a man from pursuing those vices in which the guilt of men consists: if the affliction be on his body, his appetites are weakened, and capacity of fruition destroyed.
Rogers' Sermons.

FRUITIVE. adj. [from the noun.] Enjoying; possessing; having the power of enjoyment. A word not legitimate.

To what our longings for fruitive or experimental knowledge, it is reserved among the prerogatives of being in heaven, to know how happy we shall be, when there.
Boyle.

FRUITLESSLY. adv. [from fruitless.]
Vainly; idly; unprofitably.

After this fruit curiosity fruitlessly enquireth,
and confidence blindly determineth.
Brown.
Walking they talk'd, and fruitlessly divin'd
What friend the priests by those words design'd.
Dryden.

FRUITLESS. adj. [from fruit.]

1. Barren of fruit; not bearing fruit.

The Spiniards of Mexico, for the first forty years, could not make our kind of wheat bear seed; but it grew up as high as the trees, and was fruitless.
Raleigh's History.

2. Vain; productive of no advantage;
idle; unprofitable.

O! let me not, quoth he, return again
Back to the world, whose joys so fruitless are;
But let me here for ay in peace remain,
Or straightway on that lust long voyage fare.
Spenser's Fairy Queen.

Serpent! we might have spar'd our coming hither,
Fruitless to me, though fruit be here 't excess.
Milton.

The other is for entirely waving all searches into antiquity, in relation to this controversy, as being either needless or fruitless.
Waterland.

3. Having no offspring.

Upon my head they plac'd a fruitless crown,
And but a barren sceptre in my gripe;
No son of mine succeeding.
Shakspere

FRUIT-TIME. n. f. [fruit and time.] The autumn; the time for gathering fruit.FRUIT-TREE. n. f. [fruit and tree.] A tree of that kind whose principal value arises from the fruit produced by it.

Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops.
Shakspere.

They possessed houses full of all goods, wells digg'd, vineyards and oliveyards, and fruit-trees in abundance.
Nehemiah.

All with a border of rich fruit-trees crown'd,
Whose loaded branches hide the lofty mound.

I like thy armour well;
I'll frush it, and unlock the rivets all,
But I'll be master of it.
Shakspere.

FRUSH. n. f. [from the verb.] A sort of tender horn that grows in the middle of the sole, and at some distance from the toe: it divides into two branches, running toward the heel, in the form of a fork.
*Farrier's Dict.*FRUSTRA'NEOUS. adj. [frustra, Latin.] Vain; useless; unprofitable; without advantage.

Their attempts being so frustraneous, and the demonstrations to the contrary so perspicuous, it is a marvel that any man should be zealously affected in a cause that has neither truth nor any honest usefulness in it.
Mor.

He timely withdraws his frustraneous kindnesses, and sees the folly of endeavouring to stroke a tyger into a lamb, or to court an Ethiopian out of his colour.
South.

To FRUSTRATE. v. a. [frustror,
Latin; frustrer, French.]

1. To defeat; to disappoint; to balk.

It is an axiom of nature, that natural desire cannot utterly be frustrate.
Hooker.

I survive,
To mock the expectations of the world;
To frustrate prophecies, and to raze out
Rotten opinion.
Shakspere's Henry IV.

Stern look'd the fiend, as frustrate of his will;
Not half suffic'd, and greedy yet to kill.
Dryden.

Not more almighty to resist our might,
Than wise to frustrate all our plots and wiles.
Mil.

2. To make null; to nullify.

The act of parliament which gave all his lands to the queen, did cut off and frustrate all such conveyances.
Spenser.

Now thou hast aveng'd
Supplanted Adam; and by vanquishing
Temptation, hast regain'd lost paradise,
And frustrate the conquest fraudulent.
Milton.

The peculiar strength of the motive may of itself perhaps contribute to frustrate the efficacy of it, rendering it liable to be suspected by him
to whom it is address'd.
Atterbury.

FRUSTRATE. participial adj. [from the verb.]

1. Vain; ineffectual; useless; unprofitable.

He is drown'd
Whom thus we stray to find, and the sea mocks
Our frustrate search on land.
Shaksp. Tempest.

The ruler of the province of Judea being by Julian busied in the re-edifying of this temple, flaming balls of fire issuing near the foundation, and oft consuming the workmen, made the enterprize frustrate.
Raleigh's History.

All at once employ their thronging daits;
But out of order thrown, in air they join,
And multitude makes frustrate the design.
Dry.

2. Null; void.

Few things are so restrained to any one end or purpose, that, the same being extinct, they should forthwith utterly become frustrate.
Hooker.

FRUSTRA'TION. n. f. [frustratio, Latin;
from frustrate.] Disappointment; defeat.

In states notoriously irreligious, a secret and irresistible power countermands their deepest projects, splits their counsels, and finites their most refined policies with frustration and a curse.
South.

FRUSTRATIVE. adj. [from frustrate.]
Fallacious; disappointing.FRUSTRATORY. adj. [from frustrate.]
That makes any procedure void; that vacates any former process.

Bartolus refrains this to a frustratory appeal.

science.FRY. n. f. [from frøe, foam, Danish.
Skinner.]1. The swarm of little fishes just produced from the spawn.

They come to us, but as love draws;
He swallow us, and never chaws;
By him, as by chain'd shot, whole ranks to die;
He is the tyrant pike, and we the fry.
Dance.

Forthwith the bounds and seas, each creek and bay,
With fry innumerable swarm, and shoals
Of fish, that with their fins and shining scales
Glide under the green wave in sculls, that oft Bank the mid-sea.
Milton's Parad. Lost.

The angler had the hap to draw up a very little fish from among the fry.
L'Esrange.

So close behind some promontory lie
The huge Leviathans, t' attend their prey;
And give no chase, but swallow in the fry,
Which through their gaping jaws mistake the way.
Dryden.

2. Any swarm of animals; or young peo-

To FUMBLE. v. a. To manage awkwardly.

As many farewells as he stars in heav'n,
With distinct breath and configur'd kisses to them,
He fumbles up all in one loose adieu. Shaksp.
His greasy bald-pate choir
Came fumbling o'er the heads, in such an agony
They told 'em false for fear. Dryd. Spanish Fryar.

FUMBLER. n. f. [from fumble.] One who acts awkwardly.

FUMBLINGLY. adv. [from fumble.] In an awkward manner.

FUME. n. f. [fumée, French; fumus, Latin.]

1. Smoke.
Thus fighting fires a while themselves consume;
But straight, like Turks, forc'd on to win or die,
They first lay tender bridges of their fumes;
And o'er the breach in unctuous vapours fly. Dryden.

2. Vapour; any volatile parts flying away.
Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs:
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers eyes.

It were good to try the taking of fumes by pipes, as they do in tobacco, or other things, to dry and comfort. Bacon.

In winter, when the heat without is less, breath becomes so far condensed as to be visible, flowing out of the mouth in form of a fume, or crafter vapour; and may, by proper vessels, set in a strong freezing mixture, be collected in a considerable quantity. Woodward.

3. Exhalation from the stomach.
The fumes of drink discompose and stupify the brains of a man overcharged with it. South.
Plung'd in sloth we lie, and snore supine,
As fill'd with fumes of undigested wine. Dryden.
Pow'r, like new wine, does your weak brain surprize,
And its mad fumes in your discourses rise;
But time these yielding vapours will remove:
Mean while I'll taste the sober joys of love. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

4. Rage; heat of mind; passion.
The fumes of his passion do really intoxicate and confound his judging and discerning faculty. South.

That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

6. Idle conceit; vain imagination.
Plato's great year would have some effect, not in renewing the state of like individuals; for that is the fume of those, that conceive the celestial bodies have more accurate influence upon these things below, than they have, but in grofs. Bacon.

To lay aside all that may seem to have a show of fumes and fancies, and to speak solids, a war with Spain is a mighty work. Bacon.

To FUME. v. n. [fumer, French; fumo, Latin.]

1. To smoke.
Their pray'rs pass'd
Dimensionless through heav'nly doors; then clad
With incense, where the golden altar fum'd
By the great intercessor; came in sight
Before their father's throne. Milton.

From thence the fuming trail begun to spread,
And lambent glories danc'd about her head. Dryden's Æn.

Straight hover round the fair her airy band;
Some, as she sipp'd, the fuming liquor fann'd. Pope.

2. To vapour; to yield exhalations, as by heat.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming. Shakespeare.
Silence lay,
Whose constant cups lay fuming to his brain,
And always boil in each extended vein. Rescormon.

3. To pass away in vapours.

We have
No anger in our eyes, no storm, no lightning:
Our hate is spent and fum'd away in vapour,
Before our hands be at work. Ben Jonson.
Their parts are kept from fuming away by their fixity, and also by the vast weight and density of the atmospheres incumbent upon them. Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

The first fresh dawn than wak'd the gladden'd race,
Of uncorrupted man, nor blush'd to see
The foggard sleep beneath its sacred beam;
For their light slumbers gentle fum'd away. Thomson's Spring.

4. To be in a rage; to be hot with anger.

When he knew his rival freed and gone,
He swells with wrath; he makes outrageous moan:
He fies, he fumes, he stares, he stamps the ground,
The hollow tow'r with clamors ring around. Dryd.

To FUME. v. a.

With fragrant thyme the city fumigate,
And break the waxen walls to save the state. Dryden's Virgil.

2. To medicate or heal by vapours.

FUMIGATION. n. f. [fumigatio, Latin; fumigation, Fr. from fumigate.]

1. Scents raised by fire.
Fumigations, often repeated, are very beneficial. Arbuthnot.
My fumigation is to Venus, just
The souls of roses, and red coral's dust:

And, last, to make my fumigation good,
'Tis mixt with sparrows brains and pigeons blood. Dryden.

2. The application of medicines to the body in fumes.

FUMINGLY. adv. [from fume.] Angri-ly; in a rage.

That which we move for our better learning and instruction sake, turneth unto anger and cholera in them: they grow altogether out of quietness with it; they answer fumingly, that they are ashamed to debase their pens with making answer to such idle questions. Hobbs.

FUMITER. n. f. A plant. See FUMATORY.

Why, he was met even now,
As mad as the next tea; fuming aloud,
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow weeds. Shakespeare.

FUMOUS. } adj. [fumeux-se, French; from FUMY. } fume.] Producing fumes.

From dice and wine the youth retir'd to rest,
And puff'd the famy god from out his breast:
Ev'n then he dreamt of drink and lucky play;
More lucky had it lasted 'till the day. Dryden.

FUN. n. f. [A low cant word.] Sport; high merriment; frolicksome delight.

Don't mind me, though, for all my fun and jokes,
You bards may find us bloods good-natur'd folks. Mare.

FUNCTION. n. f. [functio, Latin.]

1. Discharge; performance.
There is hardly a greater difference between two things than there is between a representing commoner in the function of his public calling, and the same person in common life. Swift.

2. Employment; office.
The ministry is not now bound to any one tribe: now none is excluded from that function of any degree, state, or calling. Whitgift.
You have paid the heav'n's your function, and the prisoner the w'y other debt of your calling. Shakespeare's Measure for Measure.

Nor was it any policy, or attorney, or partiality of affection either to the men or to the function, which fixed me. King Charles.

This double function of the goddess gives a considerable light and beauty to the ode which Horace has addressed to her. Addison.

Let not these indignities discourage us from asserting the just privileges and pre-eminence of our holy function and character. Atterbury.

3. Single act of any office.
Without difference those functions cannot, in orderly sort, be executed. Hobbs.
They have several offices and prayers against fire, tempests, and especially for the cead, in which functions they use sacerdotal garments. Stillingfleet.

4. Trade; occupation.
Follow your function; go, and batten on cold bits. Shakespeare.

5. Office of any particular part of the body.
The bodies of men, and other animals, are excellently well fitted for life and motion; and the several parts of them well adapted to their particular functions. Bentley's Sermons.

6. Power; faculty: either animal or intellectual.
Tears in his eyes, distraction in his aspect,
A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
With forms to his conceit. Shakespeare's Hamlet.
Nature seems
In all her functions weary of herself:
My race of glory run, and race of shame;
And I shall shortly be with them that rest. Milton.

Whatever warms the heart, or fills the head, As the mind opens, and its functions spread,
Imagination plies her dang'rous art,
And pours it all upon the peccant part. Pope.
Though every human constitution is morbid, yet are their diseases consistent with the common functions of life. Arbuthnot.

FUND. n. f. [fund, French; fundo, a bag, Latin.]

1. Stock; capital; that by which any expense is supported.

He touches the passions more delicately than Ovid, and performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Part must be left, a fund when foes invade,
And part employ'd to roll the warty tide. Dryd.

In preaching, no men succeed better than those who trust entirely to the stock or fund of their own reason, advanced indeed, but not overlaid by commerce with books. Swift.

2. Stock or bank of money.

As my estate has been hitherto either tost upon seas, or fluctuating in funds, it is now fixed in substantial acres. Addison.

FUNDAMENT. n. f. [fundamentum, Latin.] The back part of the body.

FUNDAMENTAL. adj. [fundamentalis, Latin, from fundament.] Serving for the foundation; that upon which the rest is built; essential; important; not merely accidental.

Until this can be agreed upon, one main and fundamental cause of the most grievous war is not like to be taken from the earth. Raleigh.

You that will be less fearful than discreet,

That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the charge of 't. Shaksp.

Others, when they were brought to allow the throne vacant, thought the succession should go to the next heir, according to the fundamental laws of the kingdom, as if the last king were actually dead. Swift's Examiner.

Gain some general and fundamental truths, both in philosophy, in religion, and in human life. Watts.

Such we find they are, as can controul
The servile actions of our wav'ring soul,
Can fight, can alter, or can enain the will;
Their ills all built on life, that fundamental ill. Prior.

Yet some there were among the founder few,
Of those who less presum'd, and better knew,
Who durst assert the juster ancient cause,
And here restor'd wit's fundamental laws. Pope.

FUNDAMENTAL. n. f. Leading proposition; important and essential part which is the groundwork of the rest.

We propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnable in respect of superstructures and consequences that arise from them. South.

It is a very just reproach, that there should be so much violence and hatred in religious matters among men who agree in all fundamentals, and only differ in some ceremonies, or mere speculative points. Swift.

FUNDAMENTALLY. adv. [from fundamental.] Essentially; originally.

As virtue is seated fundamentally in the intellect, so perspective in the fancy; so that virtue is the force of reason, in the conduct of our actions and passions to a good end. Greuv.

Religion is not only useful to civil society, but fundamentally necessary to its very birth and constitution. Bentley.

The unlimited power placed fundamentally in the body of a people, the legislators endeavour to deposit in such hands as would preserve the people. Swift.

FUNERAL. n. f. [funus, Latin; funerailles, French.]

FURRIER. adj. [from furth, not from far, as is commonly imagined; forth, further, furthel, corrupted from farther, forthel, forþden, Saxon. Forþer is used by sir Thomas More. See FORTH and FARTHER, of which the examples are to be referred to in this word.]

1. At a greater distance.

2. Beyond this.

What farther need have we of witness.
Matthew.

Satan had journey'd on, pensive and slow;
But farther way found none, to take it to mend,
As one continu'd brake, the undergrowth
Of shrubs and tangling bushes had perplex'd
All path of man or beast that pass'd that way.
Milton.

Their earnest eyes they fix'd, imagining
For one forbidden tree a multitude
Now tis'n, to work them farther woe or shame.
Milton.

I may meet
Some wand'ring spirit, from him to draw
What farther would be learn'd.
Milton.

3. Further has in some sort the force of a substantive in the phrase no further, for nothing further.

Let this appear
Thy doubt, since human reach no farther knows.
Milton.

FUSÉE. n. f. [from fuseau, French.]

1. The cone round which is wound the cord or chain of a clock or watch.

The reason of the motion of the balance is by the motion of the next wheel, and that by the motion of the next, and that by the motion of the fusee, and that by the motion of the spring: the whole frame of the watch carries a reasonableness in it, the passive impression of the intellectual idea that was in the artist. Hale.

2. A firelock [from fusil, French]; a small neat musket. This is more properly written fusil.

3. FUSÉE of a bomb or granado shell, is that which makes the whole powder or composition in the shell take fire, to do the designed execution. 'Tis usually a wooden pipe or tap filled with wildfire, or some such matter; and is intended to burn no longer than is the time of the motion of the bomb from the mouth of the mortar to the place where it is to fall, which time Anderfon makes twenty seven seconds. Harris.

4. Track of a buck. Ainsworth.

FUSIBLE. adj. [from fuse.] Capable of being melted; capable of being made liquid by heat.

Colours afforded by metalline bodies, either colliquate with, or otherwise penetrate into other bodies, especially fusible ones. Boyle.

FUSIBILITY. n. f. [from fusible.] Capacity of being melted; quality of growing liquid by heat.

The ancients observing in that material a kind of metallical nature, or at least a fusibility, seem to have resolv'd it into a nobler use. Watson.

The bodies of most use, that are sought for out of the depths of the earth, are the metals which are distinguished from other bodies by their weight, fusibility, and malleableness. Locke.

FUSIL. adj. [from fusile, French; fusilis, Latin.]

1. Capable of being melted; liquifiable by heat.

Some, less skilful, fancy these scapi that occur in most of the larger Gothic buildings of England are artificial; and will have it, that they are a kind of fusil marble. Woodward.

2. Running by the force of heat.

The liquid ore he drain'd
Into fit molds prepar'd; from which he form'd
First his own tools: then, what might else be wrought

Fusile, or grav'n in metal. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Perpetual flames,
O'er sand and ashes, and the stubborn silt,
Prevailing, turn into a fusil sea. Philips.

FUSIL. n. f. [from fusil, French.]

1. A firelock; a small neat musket.

2. [In heraldry; from fusus, Latin.] Something like a spindle.

FUSION. n. f. [from fusio, Latin; fusio, French.]

1. The act of melting.

2. The state of being melted, or of running with heat.

Metals in fusio do not flame for want of a copious flame, except spelter, which flames copiously, and thereby fuses. Newton's Opt.

FUSS. n. f. [A low cant word.] A tumult; a bustle.

End as it befits your station;
Come to use and application;
Nor with senates keep a fuss:
I submit, and answer thus.

Swift.

FUST. n. f. [fuste, French.]

1. The trunk or body of a column.
2. [from fuste, French.] A strong smell, as that of a mouldy barrel.

To FUST. v. n. [from the noun.] To grow mouldy; to smell ill.

FUSTIAN. n. f. [futaine, French; from fuste, a tree, because cotton grows on trees.]

1. A kind of cloth made of linen and cotton, and perhaps now of cotton only.

Is supper ready, the house trimm'd, the serving-men in their new fustian and their white stockings?

Shakspeare.

2. A high swelling kind of writing made up of heterogeneous parts, or of words and ideas ill associated; bombast.

Nor will you raise in me combustion,

By dint of high heroic fustian.

Hudibras.

What fustian have I heard these gentlemen find out in Mr. Cowley's odes! In general I will say, that nothing can appear more beautiful to me than the strength of those images which they condemn.

Dryden.

Fustian is thoughts and words ill sorted, and without the least relation to each other.

Dryden.

Chance thoughts, when govern'd by the clove,
Oit rise to fustian, or descend to prose.

Smith.

FUSTIAN. adj. [from the noun.]

1. Made of fustian.
2. Swelling; unnaturally pompous; ridiculously tumid; used of style.

When men argue, th' greatest part
O' th' contest falls on terms of art,
Until the fustian stuff be spent,
And then they fall to th' argument.

Hudibras.

Virgil, if he could have seen the first verses of the Sylva, would have thought Statius mad in his fustian description of the statue on the brazen horse.

Dryden's Dufresnoy.

FUSTIC. n. f. A sort of wood brought from the West Indies, used in dying of cloth.

Diã.

To FUSTIGATE. v. a. [fustigo, Latin.] To beat with a stick; to cane.

Away, you scullion, you rampallian, you fustilianian: I'll tickle your catastrophe.

Henry IV.

FU'STINESS. n. f. [from fustis.] Mouldiness; stink.

FU'STY. adj. [from fustis.] Ill-smelling; mouldy.

Hector shall have a great catch, if he knock out either of your brains: he woe as good crack a fusty nut with no kernel.

Shakspeare.

The fusty plebeians hate thine honours.

Shakspeare.

The large Achilles, at this fusty stuff,

From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause.

Shakspeare.

FUTILE. adj. [utile, French; utilis, Latin.]

1. Talkative; loquacious.

One utile person, that maketh it his glory to tell, will do more hurt than many that know it their duty to conceal.

Bacon.

2. Trifling; worthless; of no weight.

FUTILITY. n. f. [utilité, French; from utile.]

1. Talkativeness; loquacity.

This fable does not strike so much at the utility of women, as at the incontinent levity of a prying humour.

L'Estrange.

2. Triflingness; want of weight; want of solidity.

Trifling utility appears in their signs of the zodiac, and their mutual relations and aspects.

Bentley.

FUTTOCKS. n. f. [corrupted from foot hooks. Skinner.] The lower timbers that hold the ship together.

FUTURE. adj. [futurus, Latin; futur, French.] That will be hereafter; to come: as, the future state.

Glory they sung to the Most High! good will To future men, and in their dwellings peace.

Milton.

He sows the teeth at Pallas's command,
And flings the future people from his hand.

Addison's Ovid.

FUTURE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Time to come; somewhat to happen hereafter.

Thy letters have transported me beyond
This ignorant present time; and I feel now
The future in the instant.

Shakspeare. Macb.

The mind, once jaded by an attempt above its power, either is disabled for the future, or else checks at any vigorous undertaking ever after.

Locke.

FUTURELY. adv. [from future.] In time to come.

This presence of God, as it is presence, is not the cause of any thing futurely succeeding;

neither doth God's aforeknowledge impose any necessity, or bind.

Raleigh.

FUTURITION. n. f. [from future.] The state of being to be; the condition of being come to pass hereafter.

Is it imaginable, that the great means of the world's redemption should rest only in the number of possibilities, and hang so loose in respect of its futurition, as to leave the event in an equal poise, whether ever there should be such a thing or no?

South.

FUTURITY. n. f. [from future.]

1. Time to come.

Not my service past, nor present sorrows,
Nor purpos'd merit in futurety,
Can ransom me.

Shakspeare's Othello.

I will contrive some way to make it known to futurety, that I had your lordship for my patron.

Swift.

2. Event to come.

All futureties are naked before that All-seeing Eye, the sight of which is no more hindered by distance of time than the sight of an angel can be determined by distance of place.

South.

This, great Amphiarus, lay hid from thee,
Thou skill'd in fate and dark futurety.

Pope.

3. The state of being to be; futuration.

It may be well reckoned among the bare possibilities, which never commence into a futurety; it requiring such a free, sedate, and intent mind, as it may be, is no where found but among the platonical ideas.

Glanville's Sceptis.

To FUZZ. v. n. [without etymology.] To fly out in small particles.

FUZZBALL. n. f. [fuzz and ball.] A kind of fungus, which, when pressed, bursts and scatters dust in the eyes.

FY. interj. [fy, French and Flemish; φύ; vab, Lat.] A word of blame and disapprobation.

And fy on fortune, mine avowed foe,
Whose wrathful wrecks themselves do now allay.

Spenser.

Ey, my lord, fy! a soldier, and afraid? What need we fear who knows it, when none can call our power to account?

Shakspeare.

A bawd, fir, fy upon him.
But fy, my wand'ring muse, how thou do'st stray!

Shakspeare.

Expectance calls thee now another way.

Milton.

Nay, fy, what mean you in this open place?

Ushand me, or, I swear, I'll scratch your face:

Let go, for shame; you make me mad for spite:

My mouth's my own; and if you kiss, I'll bite.

Dryden.

Fy, madam, he cried, we must be past all these gaities.

Tatler.

G

G

G Has two sounds, one from the Greek γ, and the Latin, which is called that of the hard g, because it is formed by a pressure somewhat hard of the forepart of the tongue against the upper gum. This sound g retains before a, o, u, l, r; as gate, go, gull. The other sound, called that of the soft g, resembles that of j, and is commonly, though not always, found before e, i; as, gem, gibbet. Before n, at the end of a word, g is commonly melted away; as in the French, from which these words are commonly derived: thus, for benign, malign, condign, we pronounce benine, maline, condine. It is often silent in the middle of the words before b; as, might. The Saxon g, seems to have had generally the sound of y consonant; whence gate is by rusticks still pronounced yate.

GABARDINE. n. f. [gavardina, Italian.] A coarse frock; any mean dress.

My best way is to creep under his gabardine; there is no other shelter hereabouts.

Shakspeare.

You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
And spit upon my Jewish gabardine. Shakspeare.
The knight did straight submit,
And hid his weapons at her feet:
Next he disrob'd his gabardine,
And with it did himself resign. Hudibras.

To GABBLE. v. n. [gabbare, Italian;
gabberen, Dutch.]

1. To make an inarticulate noise.

When thou could'st not, savage,
Shew thine own meaning, but would'st gabble like

A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purpuses
With words that made them known. Shakspeare.
Flocks of fowl, that when the tempest roars,
With their hoarse gabbling seek the silent thour.
Dryden's Æneid.

2. To prate loudly without meaning.

Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house?
Shakspeare.

Which made some think, when he did gabble,
Th' had heard three labourers of Babel. Hudib.
Such a rout, and such a rabble,
Run to hear Jack Pudding gabble. Swift.

GABBLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Inarticulate noise like that of brute animals.
Not to know what we speak one to another, so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose: enough's language, gabble enough, and good enough. Shakspeare.

2. Loud talk without meaning.

Forthwith a hideous gabble rises loud
Among the builders; each to other calls,
Not understood. Milton's Parad. Lost.

GABBLER. n. f. [from gabble.] A prater;
a chattering fellow.

GABEL. n. f. [gabelle, French; gabella, basket which is filled with earth to make a fortification or intrenchment.

His battery was defended all along with gabions, and casks filled with sand. Knolles.

GABLE. n. f. [gaval, Welsh; gable,
French.] The sloping roof of a building.

Take care that all your brick-work be covered with the tiling, according to the new way of building, without gable ends, which are very heavy, and very apt to let the water into the brick-work.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

GAD. n. f. [gab, Saxon; gaddur, Islandick,
a club.]

1. A wedge or ingot of steel.

Flemish steel is brought down the Rhine to Dort, and other parts, some in bars, and some in gads; and therefore called Flemish steel, and sometimes gad steel. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

2. It seems to be used by Shakspeare for a style or graver. [from gab, Saxon, a goad.]

I will go get a leaf of brass,
And with a gad of steel will write these words.
Shakspeare.

To GAD. v. n. [Derived by Skinner from gadfly; by Junius from gadaw, Welsh, to forsake; thought by others only the preterit of the old word gaan, to go.]

To ramble about without any settled purpose; to rove loosely and idly.
How now, my headstrong, where have you been gadding?

—Where I have learnt me to repent. Shakspeare.
Give the water no passage, neither a wicked woman liberty to gad abroad. Ecclesi.

The lesser devils arose with ghastly rore,
And thronged forth about the world to gad;
Each land they fill'd, river, stream and shore.
Fairfax.

Envy is a gadding passion, and walketh the streets, and doth not keep home. Bacon.

Gad not abroad at ev'ry quest and call
Of an untrai'd hope or passion;
T'ncourt each place or fortune that doth fall,
Is wantonness in contemplation. Herbert.

These, shepherd, thee the woods and desert caves,
With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'ergrow'n,
And all their celso's moan. Milton.

A fierce loud buzzing breeze; their stings draw blood,
And drive the cattle gadding through the wood.
Dryden.

She wreaks her anger on her rival's head;
With furies flights her from her native home,
And drives her gadding, round the world to roam. Dryden.

There 's an ox lost, and this cockcomb ruins a gadding under wild fowl. L'Esrange.

No wonder their thoughts should be perpetually sluifing from what disguits them, and seek better entertainment in more pleasing objects, after which they will unavoidably be gadding.
Locke.

GADDER. n. f. [from gad.] A rambler;
one that runs much abroad without business.

A drunken woman, and a gadder abroad, caufeth great anger, and she will not cover her own shame. Ecclesi.

GADDDINGLY. adv. [from gad.] In a rambling, roving manner.

GADFLY. n. f. [gad and fly; but by Skinner, who makes it the original of gad, it is called goadfly. Supposed to be originally from goad, in Saxon gab, and fly.] A fly that when he stings the cattle makes them gad or run madly about;
the breeze.

The fly called the gadfly breedeth of somewhat that swimmeth upon the top of the water, and is most about ponds. Bacon's Nat. History.
Light fly his slumbers, if perchance a slight
Of angry gadflies fasten on the herd. Thomson.

GAFF. n. f. A harpoon or large hook.
Ainsworth.

GAFFER. n. f. [gaffer, companion,
Saxon.] A word of respect, now obsolete, or applied only in contempt to a mean person.

For gaffer Treadwell told us by the bye,
Excessive sorrow is exceeding dry. Gay's Post.

GAFFLES. n. f. [gafelucay, spears, Sax.]

1. Artificial spurs put upon cocks when they are set to fight.

2. A steel lever to bend crossbows. Ainsw.

To GAG. v. n. [from gagbel, Dutch, the palate, Minsberw.] To stop the mouth with something that may allow to breathe, but hinder to speak.

He's out of his guard already: unless you laugh and minister occasion to him, he is gagg'd.
Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

There foam'd rebellious logick, gagg'd and bound. Pope.

GAG. n. f. [from the verb.] Something put into the mouth to hinder speech or eating.

Some, when the kids their dams too deeply drain,
With gags and muzzles their soft mouths restrain.
Dryden.

Your woman would have run up stairs before me; but I have secur'd her below with a gag in her chaps, Dryden.

GAGE. n. f. [gage, French.]

1. A pledge; a pawn; a caution; any thing given in security.

He, when the shamed shield of Asia Saasfay
He spy'd, with that same fauy champion's page,
He to him leapt; and that same envious gage,
Of victor's glory from him snatcht away.
Fairy Queen.

These I throw my gage,
Disclaiming here the kindred of a king,
And lay aside my high blood's royalty. Shakspeare.

There is my gage, the manual seal of death,
That marks thee out for hell. Shakspeare. R. 4. 11.

They from their mothers breasts poor orphans
rend,
Nor without gages to the needy lend. Sandys.

I am made the cautionary pledge,
The gage and hostage of your keeping it.
Southern's Oron.

But since it was decreed, auspicious king,
In Britain's right that thou should'st wed the main,

Heav'n, as a gage, would cast some previous thing,
And therefore doom'd that Lawson should be slain. Dryden.

In any truth, that gets not possession of our minds by self-evidence or demonstration, the arguments that gain it assent, are the vouchers and gages of its probability. Locke.

2. A measure; a rule of measuring.
One judges, as the weather dictates, right
The poem is at noon, and wrong at night;
Another judges by a surer gage,
An author's principles or parentage. Young.

To GAGE. v. a. [gager, French.]

1. To wager; to depone as a wager; to impawn; to give as a caution, pledge, or security.

A moiety competent
Was gaged by our king. Shakspeare. Hamlet.

He found the Turkish merchants making mery-ry: unto these merchants he gave due salutations, gaging his faith for their safety, and they likewise to him. Knolles' History.

2. To bind by some caution or surety; to engage.

My chief care
Is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time, something too prodigal,
Hath left me gaged. Shakspeare.

3. To measure; to take the contents of any vessel of liquids particularly. More properly gauge. See GAUGE.

We shall see your bearing.
—Nay, but I bar to night: you shall not gage me
By what we do to-night. Shakspeare.

To GAGGLE. v. n. [gagen, gagelen,
Dutch.] To make a noise like a goose.

Bird, prune their feathers, gee' gaggles, and crows seem to call upon rain; which is but the comfort they receive in the relenting of the air.
Bacon's Natural History.

May fat gee' gaggle with melodious voice,
And we'er want gooseberries or apple-sauce.
King.

GAILY. adv. [from gay.]

1. Airily; cheerfully.

2. Splendidly. See GAYLY.

GAIN. n. f. [gain, French.]

1. Profit; advantage: contrary to loss.
But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Phil.

Besides the purpose it were now, to teach how victory should be used, or the gains thereof communicated to the general confest. Raleigh.

Havock and spoil, and ruin are my gain.
Milton.

It is in praise of men as in gettings and gains;
for light gains make heavy purses; for light gains come thick, whereas great come but now and then. Bacon's Essays.

This must be made by some governor upon his own private account, who has a great flock that he is content to turn that way, and is invited by the gains. Temple.

Compute the gains of his ungovern'd zeal,
Ill suits his cloth the praise of railing well.

Dryden

Folly fights for kings or dives for gain. Pope.

2. Interest; lucrative views.

That, sir, which serves for gain,
And follows but for form,
Will pack, when it begins to rain,
And leave thee in the storm. Shakespeare

3. Unlawful advantage.

Did I make a gain of you by any of them whom I sent unto you? 2 Corinthians.

If pride, if envy, if the lust of gain,
If mad ambition in thy bosom reign,
Thou boast'st, alas! thy sober sense in vain. Fitzgerald.

4. Overplus in a comparative computation; any thing opposed to loss.

To GAIN. v. a. [gagner, French.]

1. To obtain as profit or advantage.

Egypt became a gained ground by the muddy and limeous matter brought down by the Nilus, which settled by degrees into a firm land. Brown.

He gains, to live as man,
Higher degree of life. Milton.

What reinforcement we may gain from hope. Milton.

2. To win; not to lose.

A leper once he lost, and gain'd a king. Milton.

3. To have the overplus in comparative computation.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that. Burnet's Theory of the Earth.

4. To obtain; to procure, to receive.

I acceptance found, which gain'd
This answer from the gracious voice divine. Milton.

That side from small reflection gains
Of glimmering air; less vex'd with tempest loud. Milton.

If such a tradition were endeavour'd to be set on foot, it is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment; but much more difficult to conceive however it should come to be universally propagated. Tillotson's Sermons.

For fame with toil we gain, but loose with ease,
Sure some to vex, but never all to please. Pope.

5. To obtain increase of any thing allotted.

I know that ye would gain the time, because ye fee the king is gone from me. Daniel.

6. To obtain whatever, good or bad.

Ye should not have looked from Crete, and have gained this harm and loss. Act.

7. To win against opposition.

They who were sent to the other pass, after a short resistance, gained it. Clarendon.

Fat fees from the defended Umhran draws,
And only gains the wealthy client's cause. Dryden.

O love! for Sylvia let me gain the prize,
And make my tongue victorious as her eyes. Pope.

8. To draw into any interest or party.

Come, with presents, laden from the east,
To gratify the queen and gain the court. Dryden.

If Pyrrhus must be wrought to pity,
No woman does it better than yourself:
If you gain him, I shall comply of course. A. Phillips.

9. To obtain as a wooer.

He never shall find out fit mate, but such
As some misfortune brings him, or mistake,
Or whom he wishes most shall seldom gain
Through her perverseness, but shall see her gain'd
By a far worse. Milton.

10. To reach; to attain.

The west still glimmers with some streaks of day:

Now spurs the lated traveller ago,
To gain the timely inn. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Death was the post, which I almost did gain:
Shall I once more be tost into the main? Waller.

Sun! found his praise
In thy eternal course, both when thou climb'st,
And when high noon hast gain'd, and when thou fall'st. Milton.

We came to the roots of the mountain, and had a very troublesome march to the top of it. Addison on Italy.

Thus sa'd from death, they gain the Phœtan shores,
With shatter'd vessels and disabled oars. Pope.

11. To GAIN over. To draw to another party or interest.

The court of Hanover should have endeavour'd to gain over those who were represented as their enemies. Swift.

To GAIN. v. n.

1. To grow rich; to have advantage; to be advanced in interest or happiness.

Thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortions. Ezekiel.

2. To encroach; to come forward by degrees: with on.

When watchful herons leave their watry stand,
And mounting upward with erected flight,
Gain on the skies, and soar above the fight. Dryden's Virgil.

So on the land, while here the ocean gains,
In other parts it leaves wide sandy plains. Pope.

GAIN. adj. [An old word now out of use.] Handy; ready; dexterous.

Preface to the Accidence.

*GAIN*ER. n. f. [from gain.] One who receives profit or advantage.

The client, besides retaining a clear conscience, is always a gainer, and by no means can be at any loss, as seeing, if the composition be overhard, he may relieve himself by recourse to his oath. Bacon.

If what I get in empire
I lose in fame, I think myself no gainer. Denham's Sophy

He that loses any thing, and gets wisdom by it, is a gainer by the loss. L'Estrange.

By trade, we are as great gainers by the commodities of other countries as of our own nation. Addison's Freeholder.

*GAIN*FUL. adj. [gain and full.]

1. Advantageous; profitable.

He will dazzle his eyes, and bait him in with the luscious proposal of some gainful purchase, some rich match, or advantageous project. South

2. Lucrative; productive of money.

Nor knows he merchants gainful care. Dryden.

Maro's muse commodious precepts gives,
Instructive to the swains, nor wholly bent
On what is gainful: sometimes she divers
From solid counsels. Philips.

*GAIN*FULLY. adv. [from gainful.] Profitably; advantageously.

*GAIN*FULNESS. n. f. [from gainful.] Profit; advantage.

*GAIN*GIVING. n. f. ['gain and give.]

The same as misgiving; a giving against: as gainfaying, which is still in use, is saying against, or contradicting.

It is but foolery; but it is such kind of gain-giving as would, perhaps, trouble a woman. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

*GAIN*LESS. adj. [from gain.] Unprofitable; producing no advantage.

*GAIN*LESSNESS. n. f. [from gainless.] Unprofitableness; want of advantage.

The parallel holds too in the gainlessness as well as laboriousness of the work: minor, buried in earth and darkness, were never the richer for all the ore they digg'd; no more is the infatiable miser. Decay of Piety.

*GAIN*LY. adv. [from gain.] Handily; readily; dexterously. Out of use.

To *GAIN*SAY. v. a. ['gain and say.]

1. To contradict; to oppose; to controvert with; to dispute against.

Speeches which *gain*say one another, must of necessity be applied both unto one and the same subject. Hooker.

Too facile then, thou didst not much *gain*say; Nay, didst permit, approve, and fair dismiss. Milton.

2. To deny any thing.

I never heard yet
That any of those bolder vices wanted
Lest impudence to *gain*say what they did,
Than to perform it first. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

*GAIN*SAYER. n. f. [from gain and say.] Opponent; adversary.

Such as may satisfy *gain*sayers, when suddenly, and besides expectation, they require the fame at our hands. Hooker.

We are, for this cause, challenged as manifest *gain*sayers of scripture, even in that which we read for scripture unto the people. Hooker.

It was full matter of conviction to all *gain*sayers. Hammond.

Others fought themselves a name by being his *gain*sayers, but failed of their purpose. Fell.

*GAIN*ST. prep. [for against.] See *AGAIN*ST.

Tremble, ye nations! who, secure before,
Laugh'd at those arms, that 'gainst ourselves we bore. Dryden.

To *GAIN*STAND. v. a. ['gain and stand.]

To withstand; to oppose; to resist. A proper word, but not in use.

Love proved himself valiant, that durst with the sword of reverent duty gainstand the force of so many enraged desires. Sidney.

*GAIN*ST. prep. [for against.] See *AGAIN*ST.

Thou art so lean and meagre waxen late,
That scarce thy legs uphold thy feeble gait.
Hubbard's Tale.

3. The manner and air of walking.
Great Juno comes; I know her by her gait.
Shakespeare.

He had in his person, in his aspect, the appearance of a great man, which he preserved in his gait and motion.
Clarendon.

A third, who, by his gait
And fierce demeanour, seems the prince of hell.
Milton.

Leviathans
Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton.

I describ'd his way,
Bent all on speed, and mark'd his airy gait.
Milton.

- GALA'GE. n. f. A shepherd's clog. Not in use.

My heart-blood is well-nigh froze, I feel;
And my galage grown fast to my heel. Spenser.

- GALA'NGAL. n. f. [galange, French.] A medicinal root.

The lesser galangal is in pieces, about an inch or two long, of the thickness of a man's little finger; a brownish red colour, extremely hot and pungent. The larger galangal is in pieces, about two inches or more in length, and an inch in thickness: its colour is brown, with a faint cast of red in it: it has a disagreeable, but much less acrid and pungent taste.
Hill.

- GALAXY. n. f. [γαλαξίας; galaxie, Fr.] The milky way; a stream of light in the sky, consisting of many small stars.

A broad and ample road, whose dust is gold,
And pavement stars, as stars to thee appear,
Seen in the galaxy.
Milton's Par. Lost.

A brown, for which heaven would disband
The galaxy, and stars be tann'd.
Clarendon.

Several lights will not be seen,
If there be nothing else between;
Men doubt, because they stand so thick 't' th' sky,
If those be stars that paint the galaxy.
Cowley.

We dare not undertake to show what advantage is brought to us by those innumerable stars in the galaxy.
Bentley.

- GALBANUM. n. f. A resinous gum.

We meet with galbanum sometimes in loose granules, called drops of tears, which is the purest, and sometimes in large masses. It is soft like wax, and ductile between the fingers; of a yellowish or reddish colour; its smell is strong and disagreeable. It is of a middle nature between a gum and a resin, being inflammable as a resin, and soluble in water as a gum, and will not dissolve in oil as pure resins do. It is the produce of an umbelliferous plant.
Hill.

I yielded indeed a pleasant odour, like the best myrrh; as galbanum.
Ecclus.

- GALE. n. f. [gabling, hafty, fudden, German.] A wind not tempestuous, yet stronger than a breeze.

What happy gale
Blows you to Padua here, from old Verona?
Shakespeare.

Winds
Of gentlest gale Arabian odours fann'd
From their soft wings, and Flora's earliest smells.
Milton.

Fresh gales and gentle air.
Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside.
Addison.

- GA'LEATED. adj. [galteatus, Latin.]

1. Covered as with a helmet.
A galteated echinus copped, and in shape somewhat more conick than any of the foregoing.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. [In botany.] Such plants as bear a flower resembling a helmet, as the monkshood.

- GALERI'ULATE. adj. [from galerus, Lat.] Covered as with a hat.

GA'LIOT. n. f. [galotte, French.] A little galley or sort of brigantine, built very slight and fit for chase. It carries but one mast, and two or three patereroes. It can both sail and row, and has sixteen or twenty seats for the rowers, with one man to each oar.
Diſc.

Barbarossa sent two notable pyrates with thirty galists, who, landing their men, were valiantly encountered, and forced again to their galists.
Kudler's History.

- GALL. n. f. [geala, Sax. galls, Dut.]
- The bile, an animal juice remarkable for its suppurated bitterness.

Come to my woman's breast,
And take my milk for gall, you murdering ministers!
Shakespeare.

A honey tongue, a heart of gall,
Is fancy's spring, but sorrow's fall. Shakespeare.

This position informs us of a vulgar error, terming the gall bitter, as their proverb implies. It's as bitter as gall; whereas there's nothing gustable sweeter; and what is most unctuous must needs partake of a sweet flavour.
Hurvy.

Gall is the greatest resolvent of curdled milk: Boerhaave has given at a time one drop of the gall of an eel with success.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

- The part which contains the bile.
The married couple, as a testimony of future concord, did cast the gall of the sacrifice behind the altar.
Brown.

- Any thing extremely bitter.
Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you fend,
Though ink be made of gall.
Shakespeare.

Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest meat they taste!
Shakespeare.

She still insults, and you must still adore;
Grant that the honey's much, the gall is more.
Dryden's Juvenal.

- Rancour; malignity.
They did great hurt unto his title, and have left a perpetual gall in the mind of the people.
Spenser on Ireland.

- Anger; bitterness of mind.
Suppose your hero were a lover,
Though he before had gall and rage;
He grows dispirited and low,
He hates the fight, and thuns the blow. Prior.

- A slight hurt by fretting off the skin.
[from the verb.]
This is the fatallest wound; as much superior to the former, as a gangrene is to a gall or scatch.
Government of the Tongue.

7. [from galla.]
Galls or gallnuts are preternatural and accidental tumours, produced on trees; but those of the oak only are used in medicine. We have oriental and European galls: the oriental are brought from Aleppo, of the bigness of a large nutmeg, with tubercles on their surface, of a very firm texture, and a disagreeable, acerb, and astringent taste. The European galls are of the same size, with perfectly smooth surfaces: they are light, often spongy, and cavernous within, and always of a lax texture. They have a less austere taste, and are of much less value than the first sort. The general history of galls is this: An insect of the fly kind wounds the branches of the trees, and in the hole deposits her egg: the lacerated vessels of the tree discharging their contents, form a tumour or woody case, about the hole, where the egg is thus defended from all injuries. This tumour also serves for the food of the tender maggot, produced from the egg, which, as soon as it is in its winged state, gnaws its way out, as appears from the hole found in the gall; and where no hole is seen, the maggot, or its remains, are sure to be found within. It has been observed, that the oak does not produce galls in cold countries: but this observation shall be confined to the medicinal galls; for all those excrescencies which we call oak-apples, oak-grapes, and oak-cones, are true gall, though less firm in their texture.

Hill.

Besides the acorns, the oak beareth galls, oak-apples, and oak-nuts. Bacon's Nat. Hist.
Malpighi, in his treatise of galls, under which name he comprehends all preternatural and morbose excrescences, demonstrates that all such excrescences, where any insects are found, are excited by some venenose liquor, which, together with their eggs, such insects shed.
Roy.

The Aleppo galls, wherewith we make ink, are no other than cases of insects, which are bred in them.
Deham.

To GALL. v. a. [galer, French.]

- To hurt by fretting the skin.
I'll touch my point
With this contagion, that, if I gall him slightly,
It may be death. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

His yoke is easy, when by us embrac'd;
But loads and galls, if on our necks 'tis cast.
Denham.

A carrier, when he would think of a remedy for his galled horse, begins with casting his eye upon all things. Locke.

On the monarch's speech Achilles broke,
And furious thus, and many a good word;
Tyrant, I well deserv'd thy galling crew.
Pope's Iliad.

- To impair; to wear away.
He doth object, I am too great of birth;
And that my state being gall'd with my expence,
I seek to heal it only by his wealth. Shakespeare.

If it should fall down in a continual stream like a river, it would gall the ground, wash away plants by the roots, and overthrow houses. Roy.

- To tease; to fret; to vex.
In honour of that action, and to gall their minds who did not so much commend it, he wrote his book. Hosker.

What they seem contented with, even for that very cause we reject; and there is nothing but it pleaseth us the better, if we espy that it galleth them.
Hosker.

When I shew justice,
I pity those I do not know;
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall.
Shakespeare.

All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

No man commits any sin but his conscience smites him, and his guilty mind is frequently galled with the remembrance of it. Tillotson.

- To harass; to mischief; to keep in a state of uneasiness.
The Helots had gotten new heart, and with divers sorts of shot from corners of streets and house-windows galled them. Sidney.

Light demerces from afar they throw,
Fasten'd with leathern thongs, to gall the foe.
Dryden's Aeneid.

In our wars against the French of old, we used to gall them with our long bows, at a greater distance than they could shoot their arrows. Addis.

To GALL. v. n. To fret.
I have seen you glecting and galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.
Shakespeare.

GALLANT. adj. [galant, French; from gala, fine dress, Spanish.]

On oozy ground his galles moor; Their heads are turn'd to sea, their sterns to shore. Dryden.

2. It is proverbially considered as a place of toilsome misery, because criminals are condemned to row in them.

The most voluptuous person, were he tied to follow his hawks and his hounds, his dice and his courtships every day, would find it the greatest torment that could befall him: he would fly to the mines and the galles for his recreation, and to the spade and the mattock for a diversion from the misery of a continual uninterrupted pleasure. South.

GALLEY-SLAVE. n. f. [galley and slave.]

A man condemned for some crime to row in the galles.

As if one chain were not sufficient to load poor men, he must be clogged with innumerable chains: this is just such another freedom as the Turkish galley-slaves do enjoy. Bramhall. Hardened galley-slaves: despite manumission. Deeny of Pity.

The furies gently dash against the shore, Flocks quit the plains, and galley-slaves their oar. Garth.

GALLIARD. n. f. [gaillard, French; imagined to be derived from the Gaulish ard, genius; and gay]

1. A gay, brisk, lively man; a fine fellow.

Selden is a galliard by himself. Clarendon.

2. An active, nimble, spritely dance. It is in both senses now obsolete.

I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was form'd under the star of a galliard. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

There's nought in France That can be with a nimble galliard won: You cannot revel into dukedoms there. Shakspeare.

If there be any that would take up all the time, let him find means to take them off, and bring others on; as musicians use to do with those that dance too long galliards. Bacon.

The tripl's and changing of times have an agreement with the changes of motion; as when galliard time and minuet time are in the melody of one dance. Bacon.

GALLIARDISE. n. f. [French.] Merriment; exuberant gayety. Not in use.

At my nativity my ascendant was the watery sign of Scorpius: I was born in the planetary hour of Saturn, and I think I have a piece of that leaden planet in me: I am no way facetious, nor disposed for the mirth and galliardise of company. Brown's Rel. Med.

GALLICISM. n. f. [gallicisme, French; from gallicus, Latin.] A mode of speech peculiar to the French language: such as, he figured in controversy; he held this conduct; he held the same language that another had held before: with many other expressions to be found in the pages of Bolingbroke.

In English I would have gallicisms avoided, that we may keep to our own language, and not follow the French mode in our speech. Felton on the Claffets.

GALLIGASKINS. n. f. [Caliga Gallo-Vasconum, Skinner.] Large open hose.

Not used but in ludicrous language.

My galligaskins, that have long withstood The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts, By time tub'd'e, what will not time subdue, An horrid chafin disclosure. Philips.

GALLO'ON. n. f. [galon, French.] A kind of close lace made of gold or silver, or of silk alone.

To G'ALLOP. v. n. [galoper, French.] Derived by all the etymologists, after Bulaeus, from καταδραση; but perhaps it comes from gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch; that is, to go on full speed.]

1. To move forward by leaps, so that all the feet are off the ground at once.

I did hear

The galloping of horse: who was 't come by?

Shakespeare's Macbeth.

His steeds will be restrain'd,

But gallop lively down to western hill. Donne.

In such a shape grim Saturn did restrain

His heav'nly limbs, and flow'd with such a mane,

When half surpriz'd, and fearing to be seen,

The leacher gallop'd from his jealous queen.

Dryden's Virgil.

2. To ride at the pace which is performed by leaps.

Seeing such streams of blood as threatened a drowning life, we galloped toward them to part them.

Sidney.

They 'gan espy

An armed knight towards them gallop fast,

That seem'd from some feared foe to fly.

Fairy Queen.

He who fair and softly goes steadily forward, in a course that points right, will sooner be at his journey's end than he that runs after every one he meets, though he gallop all day full speed.

Locke.

3. To move very fast.

The golden son

*Gallop*s the zodiac in his glistering coach. Shakf.

Whom doth time gallop withal?

—With a thief to the gallows. Shakespeare.

He that rides post through a country may, from the transient view, tell how in general the parts lie: such superficial ideas he may collect in galloping over it. Locke.

G A L L O P. n. f. [from the verb.] The motion of a horse when he runs at full speed; in which, making a kind of a leap forward, he lifts both his forelegs very near at the same time; and while these are in the air, and just upon the point of touching the ground, he lifts both his hindlegs almost at once.

Farrier's Dict.

G'ALLOPER. n. f. [from gallop.]

1. A horse that gallops.

Mules bred in cold countries are much better to ride than horses for their walk and trot; but they are commonly rough gallopers, though some of them are very fleet. Mortimer's Husbandry.

2. A man that rides fast, or makes great haste.

To G'ALLOW. v. a. [axelpan, to fright, Saxon.] To terrify; to fright.

The wrathful skies

Gallop the very wand'ers of the dark, And make them keep their caves. Shakespeare.

G'ALLOWAY. n. f. A horse not more than fourteen hands high, much used in the north; probably as coming originally from Galloway, a shire in Scotland.

G'ALLOWGLASSES. n. f.

1. It is worn likewise of footmen under their shirts of mail, the which footmen the Irish call gallowglasses: the which name doth discover them also to be ancient English; for gallogla signifies an English fervitor or yeoman. And he being so armed in a long shirt of mail, down to the calf of his leg, with a long broad ax in his hand, was then pedes gravis armaturæ; and was instead of the footmen that now weareth a corset, before the corset was used, or almost invented.

Spenser on Ireland.

2. [Hammer, otherwise than Spenser.] Soldiers among the wild Irish, who serve on horseback.

A puissant and mighty pow'r

Of gallowglasses and stout keenes,

Is marching hitherward in proud array. Shaksp.

G'ALLOW. } n. f. [It is used by some in

G'ALLOWS. } the singular; but by more only in the plural, or sometimes has another plural gallowses. Galgo, Goth.

zealga, Saxon; galge, Dutch; which some derive from gabalus furca, Latin;

others from גבול high, others from gallu, Welsh, power: but it is probably derived like gallow, to fright, from axelpan, the gallows being the great object of legal terrour.]

1. A beam laid over two polls, on which malefactors are hanged.

This monster sat like a hangman upon a pair of galloos: in his right hand he was painted holding a crown of laurel, in his left hand a purse of money. Sidney

I would we were all of one mind, and one mind good; O, there were desolation of gaulers and gallowses. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

I prophesied if a gallow were on land, This fellow could not drown. Shakespeare.

He took the mayor aside, and whispered him that execution must that day be done, and therefore required him that a pair of gallows should be erected. Huyward.

A poor fellow, going to the gallows, may be allowed to feel the smart of wasps while he is upon Tyburn road. Swift.

G'AMBOGE. n. f. A concreted vegetable juice, partly of a gummy, partly of a resinous nature, heavy, of a bright yellow colour, and scarce any smell. It is brought from America and the East Indies, particularly from Cambaja, or Cambogia. Hill.

To G'AMBOL. v. n. [gambiller, Fr.]

1. To dance; to skip; to frisk; to jump for joy; to play merry frolicks.

Bears, tigers, ounces, pards,

Gambol'd before them. Milton's Par. Lost.

The king of elfs, and little fairy queen,

Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green.

Dryden.

The monsters of the flood

Gambol around him in the wat'ry way,

And heavy whales in awkward measures play.

Pope.

2. To leap; to start.

'Tis not madnes

That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,

And I the matter will record, which madnes

Would gambol from. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

G'AMBOL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A skip; a hop; a leap for joy.

A gentleman had got a favourite spaniel, that would be still toying and leaping upon him, and playing a thousand pretty gambols.

L'Ejrange.

Bacchus through the conquer'd Indies rode,

And beasts in gambols frisk'd before their honest

god. Dryden.

2. A frolick; a wild prank.

For who did ever play his gambols,

With such unofferable rambles! Hudibras.

G'AMBREL. n. f. [from gamba, gambarella, Italian.] The leg of a horse.

What can be more admirable than for the principles of the fibres of a tendon to be so mixed as to make it a soft body, and yet to have the strength of iron? as appears by the weight which the tendon, lying on a horse's gambrel, doth then command, when he rears up with a man upon his back.

GAME. n. f. [gaman, a jelt, Islandick.]
 1. Sport of any kind.
 We have had pastimes here, and pleasing game.
Shakspeare.
 2. Jelt: opposed to earnest or seriousness.
 Then on her head they set a garland green,
 And crowned her 'twixt earnest and 'twixt game.
Spenser.
 3. Insolent merriment; sportive insult.
 Do they not seek occasion of new quarrels,
 On my refusal, to distress me more;
 Or make a game of my calamities?
Milton.
 4. A single match at play.
 5. Advantage in play.
 Mutual vouchers for our fame we stand,
 And play the game into each other's hand.
Dryd.
 6. Scheme pursued; measures planned.
 This seems to be the present game of that crown, and that they will begin no other 'till they see an end of this.
Temple.
 7. Field sports: as, the chace, falconry.
 If about this hour he make his way,
 Under the colour of his usual game,
 He shall here find his friends with horse and men,
 To set him free from his captivity.
Shakspeare.
 What arms to use, or nets to frame
 Wild beasts to combat, or to tame,
 With all the myst'ries of that game.
Waller.
 Some sportsmen, that were abroad upon game,
 spied a company of bustards and cranes.
L'Estrange.
 8. Animals pursued in the field; animals appropriated to legal sportsmen.
 Hunting, and men, not beasts, shall be his game,
 With war, and hostile snare, such us refuse Subjection to his empire tyrannous.
Milton.
 There is such a variety of game springing up before me, that I know not which to follow.
Dryden's Fables, Preface.
 A bloodhound will follow the person he pursues, and all bounds the particular game they have in chace.
Arbuthnot.
 Go, with thy Cynthia hunt the pointed spear
 At the rough bear, or chace the flying deer;
 I and my Chloe take a nobler aim,
 At human hearts we sling, nor ever miss the game.
Prior.
 Proud Nimrod first the bloody chace began,
 A mighty hunter, and his prey was man:
 Our haughty Norman boasts that barb'rous name,
 And makes his trembling slaves the royal game.
Pope.
 Shorten my labour, if its length you blame,
 For, grow but wife, you rob me of my game.
Young.
 9. Solemn contests, exhibited as spectacles to the people.
 The games are done, and Cæsar is returning.
Shakspeare.
 Mido, when entering the Olympick game,
 With a huge ox upon his shoulders came.
Denham.
TO GAME. v. n. [gaman, Saxon.]
 1. To play at any sport.
 2. To play wantonly and extravagantly for money.
Gaming leaves no satisfaction behind it: it no way profits either body or mind.
Locke.
GAMECOCK. n. f. [game and cock.] A cock bred to fight.
 They manage the dispute as fiercely as two gamecocks in the pit.
Locke.
GAME-EGG. n. f. [game and egg.] An egg from which a fighting cock is bred.
 Thus boys hatch game-eggs under birds of prey,
 To make the fowl more furious for the fray.
Garth.
GAMEKEEPER. n. f. [game and keep.] A person who looks after game, and sees it is not destroyed.
GAMESOME. adj. [from game.] Frolick-some; gay; sportive; playful; sportful.

GERON, though old, yet gamefome, kept one end with Cosma.
Sidney.
 I am not gamefome; I do lack some part
 Of that quick spirit that is in Antony.
Shaksf.
 The gamefome wind among her trusses play,
 And curleth up those growing riches short.
Fairfax.
 Belial, in like gamefome mood.
Milton.
 This gamefome humour of children should rather be encouraged, to keep up their spirits and improve their strength and health, than curbed or restrained.
Locke.
GAMESOMENESS. n. f. [from gamefome.]
 Sportiveness; merriment.
GAMESOMELY. adv. [from gamefome.]
 Merrily.
GAMMASTER. n. f. [from game.]
 1. One who is vitiously addicted to play.
 Keep a gamester from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful.
Shakspeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.
 A gamester, the greater master he is in his art,
 the worse man he is.
Bacon.
Gamesters for whole patrimonies play;
 The steward brings the deeds, which must convey
 The whole estate.
Dryden's Juvenal.
 Could we look into the mind of a common gamester, we should see it full of nothing but trumps and mattadores: her flumbers are haunted with kings, queens, and knaves.
Addison.
 All the superfluous whims relate,
 That fill a female gamester's pate;
 What agony of soul she feels
 To see a knave's inverted heels.
Swift.
 Her youngest daughter is run away with a gamester, a man of great beauty, who in dressing and dancing has no superior.
Larw.
 2. One who is engaged at play.
 When lenity and cruelty play for kingdoms,
 The gentle gamester is the soonest winner.
Shaksf.
 A man may think, if he will, that two eyes see no more than one; or that a gamester seeth always more than a looker-on: but, when all is done, the help of good counsel is that which setteth business straight.
Bacon.
 3. A merry frolicksome person.
 You're a merry gamester,
 My lord Sands.
Shakspeare's Henry VIII.
 4. A prostitute. Not in use.
 She's impudent, my lord,
 And was a common gamester to the camp.
Shakspeare.
GAMMER. n. f. [of uncertain etymology; perhaps from grand mere, and therefore used commonly to old women.] The compellation of a woman corresponding to gaffer: as, Gammer Gurton's Needle. An old play.
GAMMON. n. f. [gambone, Italian.]
 1. The buttock of a hog salted and dried; the lower end of the stich.
 Ask for what price thy venal tongue was sold:
 A ratty gammon of some sev'n years old.
Dryd.
Gammons, that give a relish to the taste,
 And potted fowl, and fish, come in so fast,
 That ere the first is out, the second stinks.
Dryd.
 2. A kind of play with dice.
 The quick dice,
 In thunder leaping from the box, awake
 The sounding gammon.
Thomson's Autumn.
GAMMUT. n. f. [gama, Italian.] The scale of musical notes
 Madam, before you touch the instrument,
 To learn the order of my fingering,
 I must begin with rudiments of art,
 To teach you gamut in a briefer sort.
Shakspeare.
 When by the gamut some musicians make
 A perfect song, others will undertake,
 By the same gamut chang'd, to equal it:
 Things simply good can never be unfit.
Donne.
 Long has a race of heroes fill'd the stage,
 That rant by note, and through the gamut rage;

In songs and airs express their martial fire,
 Combat in trills, and in a fugue expire.
Addison.
'GAN, for began, from 'gin for begin.
 The noble knight 'gan feel
 His vital force to faint.
Spenser.
TO GANCH. v. a. [ganciare, from gancio, a hook, Italian; ganche, French.] To drop from a high place upon hooks, by way of punishment: a practice in Turkey, to which Smith alludes in his Pocockius.
 Cohors catenis qua pia stridulis
 Gemunt onusti, vel fude trans finem
 Lustantur adâ, pendulive
 Sanguineis trepidant in uncis.
Musa Arg.
G'ANDER. n. f. [gandna, Saxon.] The male of the goose.
 As deep drinketh the goose as the gander.
Camden's Remains.
 One gander will serve five geese.
Mortimer.
TO GANG. v. n. [gangan, Dutch; gangan, Saxon; gang, Scottish.] To go; to walk. An old word not now used, except ludicrously.
 But let them gang alone,
 As they have brewed, so let them bear blame.
Spenser.
 Your flaunting beaus gang with their breasts open.
Arbuthnot.
GANG. n. f. [from the verb.] A number herding together; a troop; a company; a tribe; a herd. It is seldom used but in contempt or abhorrence.
 O, you pandery rascals! there 's a knot, a gang, a pack, a conspiracy against me.
Shakspeare.
 As a gang of thieves were robbing a house, a mailiff fell barking.
L'Estrange.
 Admitted in among the gang,
 He acts and talks as they befriend him.
Prior.
GANGHON. n. f. [French.] A kind of flower.
Ainsworth.
G'ANGLION. n. f. [γαγγλιον.] A tumour in the tendinous and nervous parts.
 Bonefsetters usually represent every bone dislocated, though possibly it be but a ganglion, or other crude tumour or preternatural protuberance of some part of a joint.
Wifeman.
TO G'ANGRENATE. v. a. [from gangrene.] To produce a gangrene; to mortify.
 Parts cauterized, gangrenated, fiderated, and mortified, become black, the radical moisture or vital sulphur suffering an extinction.
Brown.
G'ANGRENE. n. f. [gangrene, French; gangræna, Latin.] A mortification; a floppage of circulation followed by putrefaction.
 This experiment may be transferred unto the cure of gangrenes, either coming of themselves, or induced by too much applying of opiates.
Bacon.
 She saves the lover, as we gangrenes stay,
 By cutting hope, like a lopt limb, away.
Waller.
 A discolouring in the part was supposed an approach of a gangrene.
Wifeman's Surgery.
 If the substance of the soul is fettered with these passions, the gangrene is gone too far to be ever cured: these inflammations will rage to all eternity.
Addison's Spectator.
TO G'ANGRENE. v. a. [gangrener, French; from the noun.] To corrupt to mortification.
 In cold countries, when men's noses and ears are mortified, and, as it were, gangrened with cold, if they come to a fire they rot off presently;
 for that the few spirits that remain in those parts, are suddenly drawn forth, and so putrefaction is made complete.
Bacon.
Gangren'd members must be lop'd away,
 Before the nobler parts are tainted to decay.
Dryden.

To GA'NGRENE. v. n. To become mortified.

Wounds immedicable

Rankle and fester, and gangrene

To black mortification.

Milton's Agonistes.
As phlegmons are subject to mortification, so also in fat bodies they are apt to gangrene after opening, if that fat be not speedily digested out.

Wise man's Surgery.

GA'NGRENOUS. adj. [from gangrene.] Mortified; producing or betokening mortification.

The blood, turning acrimonious, corrodes the vessels, producing hæmorrhages, pustules red, lead-coloured, black and gangrenous. Arbutnot.

GA'NTELOPE. } n. f. [gantlet is only corrupted from gantlope; gant, all, and loopen, to run, Dutch.] A military punishment, in which the criminal running between the ranks receives a lash from each man.

But would'st thou, friend, who hast two legs alone,

Would'st thou to run the gantlet these expose,

To a whole company of hob-nail'd shoes? Dryd.

Young gentlemen are driven with a whip, to run the gantlet through the several classes. Locke

GA'NZÁ. n. f. [ganza, Spanish, a goose.] A kind of wild goose, by a flock of which a virtuoso was fabled to be carried to the lunar world.

They are but idle dreams and fancies, And favour strongly of the ganza's. Hudibras

GAOL. n. f. [geol, Welsh; geole, French.] A prison; a place of confinement. It is always pronounced and too often written jail, and sometimes goal.

Then am I the prisoner, and his bed my gaol.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Have I been ever free, and must my house

Be my retentive enemy, my gaol? Shakspeare.

If we mean to thrive and do good, break open the gaols, and let out the prisoners. Shakspeare.

To GAOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To imprison; to commit to gaol.

Goaling vagabonds was chargeable, pesterous, and of no open example. Bacon

GA'OLDELIVERY. n. f. [gaol and deliver.] The judicial process, which by condemnation or acquittal of persons confined evacuates the prison.

Then doth th' aspiring soul the body leave, Which we call death; but were it known to all, What life our souls do by this death receive, Men would it birth of gaol-delivery call. Davies.

These make a general gaol-delivery of souls, not for punishment. South

GA'OLER. n. f. [from gaol.] Keeper of a prison; he to whose care the prisoners are committed.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when

The steeld gaoler is the friend of men. Shaksp.

I know not how or why my surly gaoler,

Hard as his irons, and insolent as pow'r

When put in vulgar hands, Cleanthes,

Put off the brute. Dryden's Cleomenes.

From the polite part of mankind she had been banished and immured, 'till the death of her gaoler.

Tutler.

GAP. n. f. [from gape.]

1. An opening in a broken fence.

Behold the despair,

By custom and covetous pates,

By gaps and opening of gates. Tuffin's Husbandry.

With terrors and with furies to the bounds

And crystal wall of heav'n; which, opening wide,

Roll'd inward, and a spacious gap disclos'd

Into the wasteful deep. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Bushes are most lalling of any for dead hedges,

or to mend gaps. Mortimer's Husbandry

I fought for a man, says God, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me, for the land that I should not destroy it.

Rogers.

2. A breach.

The loss of that city concerned the christian commonweal: manifold miseries afterwards ensued by the opening of that gap to all that side of christendom. Knolles.

3. Any passage.

So stands the Thracian herdsman with his spear

Full in the gap and hopes the hunted bear,

And hears him rustling in the wood. Dryden.

4. An avenue; an open way.

The former kings of England passed into them a great part of their prerogatives; which though then it was well intended, and perhaps well deserved, yet now such a gap of mischief lies open thereby, that I could wish it were well stop'd. Spenser.

5. A hole; a deficiency.

If you violently proceed against him, mistaking his purpose, it would make a great gap in your honour. Shakspeare's King Lear.

Nor is it any botch or gap in the works of nature

Mere.

6. Any interstice; a vacuity.

Each one demand, and answer to his part

Perform'd in this wide gap of time, since first

We were dissever'd. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

That I might sleep out this great gap of time my Antony is away. Shaksp. Antony and Cleopatra.

To make 'twixt words and lines huge gaps,

Wide as meridians in maps. Hudibras.

One can revive a languishing conversation by a sudden surprising sentence; another is more dexterous in seconding; a third can fill the gap with laughing. Swift.

7. To open of the mouth in speech during the pronunciation of two successive vowels.

The hiatus, or gap between two words, is cauted by two vowels opening on each other. Pope.

8. To stop a GAP. To escape by some mean shift: alluding to hedges mended with dead bushes, till the quicksets will grow.

His policy consists in setting traps,

In finding ways and means, and stopping gaps.

Swift.

9. To stand in the GAP. To make defence; to expose himself for the protection of something in danger.

What would become of the church, if there were none more concerned for her rights than this? Who would stand in the gap? Lesly.

GAP-TOOTHED. adj. [gap and tooth.] Having interstices between the teeth.

The reeve, miller, and cook, are distinguished from each other, as much as the mincing lady prioress and the broad speaking gap-toothed wife of Bath. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

To GAPE. v. n. [geapan, Saxon.]

1. To open the mouth wide; to yawn.

Some men there are love not a gaping pig;

Some, that are mad, if they behold a cat. Shaksp.

Gaping or yawning, and stretching, do pass from man to man; for that that causeth gaping and stretching is when the spirits are a little heavy by any vapour. Arbutnot.

She stretches, gapes, unglues her eyes,

Swift.

2. To open the mouth for food, as a young bird.

As callow birds,

Whose mother 's kill'd in seeking of the prey,

Cry in their nest, and think her long away:

And at each leaf that flurs, each blast of wind,

Gape for the food which they moit never find. Dryden.

As in a drought the thirsty creatures cry,

And gape upon the garber'd clouds for rain,

Then first the martlet meets it in the sky,

And with wet wings joys all the feather'd train. Dryden.

3. To desire earnestly; to crave: with for.

To her grim death appears in all her shapes;

The hungry grave for her due tribute gapes.

Denham.

To thy fortune be not thou a slave;

For what hast thou to fear beyond the grave?

And thou, who gap'st for my estate; draw near;

For I would whisper somewhat in thy ear. Dryd.

4. With after.

What shall we say of those who spend their days in gaping after court-favour and preferments? L'FStrange.

5. With at.

Many have gaped at the church revenues; but before they could swallow them, have had their mouths stopp'd in the church-yard. South.

6. To open in fissures or holes.

If it assume my noble father's person,

I'll speak to it though hell itself should gape

And bid me hold my peace. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

May that ground gape, and swallow me alive,

Where I shall kneel to him that slew my father. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The great horse-mussel, with the fine shell,

doth gape and shut as the oysters do. Bacon.

The reception of one is as different from the admission of the other, as when the cart's falls open under the incisions of the plough, and when it gapes and greedily opens itself to drink in the dew of heaven or the refreshments of a shower. South.

The mouth of a little artery and nerve gapes into the cavity of these vesicles. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

7. To open with a breach.

The planks, their pitchy coverings wash'd

away,

Now yield, and now a yawning breach display:

The roaring waters, with a hostile tide,

Rush through the ruins of her gaping side. Dryden.

That all these actions can be performed by aliment, as well as medicines, is plain; by observing the effects of different substances upon the fluids and solids, when the vessels are open and gape by a wound. Arbutnot.

8. To open; to have an hiatus.

There is not, to the best of my remembrance, one vowel gaping on a another for want of a cæsuræ in this poem. Dryden.

9. To make a noise with open throat.

And, if my muse can through past ages see,

That noisy, nauseous, gaping fool is he. Resammon.

10. To stare with hope or expectation.

Others will gape 't anticipate

The cabinet designs of fate;

Apply to wizards, to forsee

What shall, and what shall never be. Hudibras.

11. To stare with wonder.

Parts of different species jumbled together according to the mad imagination of the dawber; and the end of all this to cause laughter: a very monster in a Bartholomew fair, for the mob to gape at. Dryden's Dunciess.

Where elevated o'er the gaping crowd,

Clas'd in the board the perjurd head is bow'd,

Betimes retreat. Gay's Trivia.

12. To stare irreverently.

They have gaped upon me with their mouth.

Jes.

GA'PER. n. f. [from gape.]

1. One who opens his mouth.

2. One who stares foolishly.

3. One who longs or craves.

The golden shower of the dissolved abbeys lands rained well near into every gaper's mouth.

Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

GAR, in Saxon, signifies a weapon: so Eadgar is a happy weapon; Eibhelgar, a noble weapon. Gibson's Camden.

To GAR. v. a. [giera, Islandick.] To cause; to make. Obsolete. It is still used in Scotland.

Tell me, good Hobbinol, what gars thee greet? What! hath some wolf thy tender lambs y-torn? Or is thy bagpipe broke, that sounds so sweet? Or art thou of thy loved lass forlorn. Spenser.

GARB. n. f. [garbe, French.]

1. Dress; clothes; habit.

Thus Belial, with words cloath'd in reason's garb,
Counsell'd ignoble ease and peaceful sloth.

Milton.

He puts himself into the garb and habit of a professor of physick, and sets up. L'Estrange.

2. Fashion of dress.

Horace's wit, and Virgil's state,
He did not steal, but emulate;
And when he would like them appear,
Their garb, but not their cloaths did wear.

Denham.

3. Exterior appearance.

This is some fellow,
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth affect

A fauce roughness and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature. Shakspeare's King Lear.

GARBAGE. n. f. [garbear, Spanish. This etymology is very doubtful.] The bowels; the offal; that part of the inwards which is separated and thrown away.

The cloyed will,

That satiate, yet unsatisfy'd desire, that tub
Both fill'd and running, ravening first the lamb,
Longs after for the garbage.

Shakspeare.

Lust, though to a radiant angel link'd
Will fate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

Shakspeare's Hamlet.

A flim more senseless than the rog'ry
Of old aruspicy and aug'ry,
That out of garbages of cattle

Prefag'd th' events of truce or battle. Hudibras.

Who without aversion, ever look'd
On holy garbage, though by Homer cook'd?

Roscommon.

When you receive condign punishment, you run to your confessor, that parcel of guts and garbage.

Dryden.

GARBEL. n. f. A plank next the keel of a ship. Bailey.

GARBIDGE. } n. f. Corrupted from GARBISH. } garbage.

All shavings of horns, hoofs of cattle, blood, and garbidge, is good manure for land. Mortimer.

In Newfoundland they improve their ground with the garbish of fish. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARBLE. v. a. [gartellare, Italian.] To sift; to part; to separate the good from the bad.

But you who fathers and traditions take,
And garble some, and some you quite forsake.

Dryden.

Had our author 'et down this command, without garbling, as God gave it, and joined mother to father, it had made directly against him. Locke.

The understanding works to collate, combine, and garble the images and ideas, the imagination and memory present to it. Cheyne.

GARBLES. n. f. [from garble.] He who separates one part from another.

A further secret in this clause may best be discovered by the projectors, or at least the garblers of it. Swift's Examiner.

GARBOIL. n. f. [garbouille, French; garbuglio, Italian.] Disorder; tumult; uproar. Hammer.

Look here, and at thy sovereign leisure read
What garboils the awak'd. Shakspeare.

GARD. n. f. [garde, French.] Wardship; care; custody.

GARDEN. n. f. [gardd, Welsh; jardin, French; giardino, Italian.]

1. A piece of ground enclosed, and cultivated with extraordinary care, planted with herbs or fruits for food, or laid out for pleasure.

Thy promises are like Adonis' gardens,
Which one day bloom'd and fruitful were the next. Shakspeare.

My lord of E'y, when I was last in Holbourn,
I saw good strawberries in your garden there. Shakspeare's Richard III.

In the royal ordering of gardens there ought to be gardens for all the months in the year. Bacon.

In every garden should be provided flowers, fruit, shade and water. Temple.

My garden takes up half my daily care,
And my field asks the minutes I can spare. Harte.

2. A place particularly fruitful or delightful.

I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy. Shakspeare.

3. GARDEN is often used in composition for hortensis, or belonging to a garden.

4. Garden-mould. Mould fit for a garden.

They delight most in rich black garden-mould, that is deep and light, and mixed rather with sand than clay. Mortimer.

5. Garden-tillage. Tillage used in cultivating gardens.

Peas and beans are what belong to garden-tillage as well as that of the field. Mortimer.

6. Garden-ware. The produce of gardens.

A clay bottom is a much more pernicious soil for trees and garden-ware than gravel. Mortimer.

To GARDEN. v. n. [from the noun.]

To cultivate a garden; to lay out gardens.

At first, in Rome's poor age,
When both her kings and consuls held the plough,
Or garden'd well. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

When ages grow to civility and elegancy, men come to build stately, sooner than to garden finely; as if gardening were the greater perfection. Bacon.

GARDENER. n. f. [from garden.] He that attends or cultivates gardens.

Our bodies are our gardens, to the which our wills are gardeners; so that if we plant nettles, or sow lettuce, the power lies in our will. Shakf.

Gardeners tread down any loose ground, after they have sown onions or turnips. Bacon.

The gardener may top religion as he pleases. Hewel.

The life and felicity of an excellent gardener is preferable to all other diversions. Evelyn.

Then let the learned gard'ner mark with care
The kinds of stocks, and what those kinds will bear. Dryden.

GARDENING. n. f. [from garden.] The art of cultivating or planning gardens.

My compositions in gardening are after the Pindarick manner, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without affecting the nicer elegancies of art. Spektator.

GARE. n. f. Coarse wool growing on the legs of sheep. Diſt.

GARGARISM. n. f. [γαργαρισμος; gargarisme, French.] A liquid form of medicine to wash the mouth with.

Apoplethmisms and gargarisms draw the rheum down by the palate. Bacon.

To GARGARIZE. v. a. [γαργαρίζω; gargarifer, French.] To wash the mouth with medicated liquors.

Vinegar, put to the nostrils, or gargarised, doth ease the hiccough; for that it is astringent, and inhibiteth the motion of the spirit. Bacon.

This being relaxed, may make a shaking of the larynx; as when we gargarize. Holder.

GARGET. n. f. A distemper in cattle.

The garget appears in the head, maw, or in the hinder parts. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GARGLE. v. a. [gargouiller, French; gargogliare, Italian; gurgel, German, the throat.]

1. To wash the throat with some liquor not suffered immediately to descend.

Gargle twice or thrice with sharp oxycrate. Harsy.

The excision made, the bleeding will soon be stop by gargling with oxycrate. Wijeman.

They comb, and then they order ev'ry hair;
Next gargle well their throats. Dryden's Pers.

2. To warble; to play in the throat. An improper use.

Those which only warble long,
And gargl' in their throats a long. Waller.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd a while to doat

On nonsense gargl'd in an cunuch's throat. Fentyn.

GARGLE. n. f. [from the verb.] A liquor with which the throat is washed.

His throat was washed with one of the gargles set down in the method of cure. Wijeman.

GARLAND. n. f. [garlaude, guirland, French.]

1. A wreath of branches or flowers.

Strephon, with leavy twigs of laurel-tree,
A garland made, on temples for to wear;

For he then chosen was the dignity
Of village-lord that Whituniver to bear. Sidney.

A reeling world will never stand upright,
'Till Richard wear the garland of the realm.

—How! wear the garland! dost thou mean the crown?

—Ay, my good lord. Shakspeare's Richard III.

Then party-colour'd flow'rs of white and red
She wove, to make a garland for her head. Dryden.

Vanquish again; though she be gone,
Whose ga'land crown'd the victor's hair,
And reign; though she has left the throne,
Who made thy glory worth thy care. Prior.

Her gods and godlike heroes rise to view,
And all her faded garlands bloom anew. Pope.

2. The top; the principal; the thing most prized.

With every minute you do change a mind,
And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile, that was your garland. Shakspeare.

GARLICK. n. f. [gar, Saxon, a lance; and leek, the leek that shoots up in blades. Skinner. Allium, Latin.]

It has a bulbous root, consisting of many small tubercles included in its coats: the leaves are plain: the flowers consist of six leaves, formed into a corymbus on the top of the stalk; and are succeeded by subrotund fruit, divided into three cells, which contain roundish seeds. Miller.

Garlick is of an extremely strong smell, and of an acrid and pungent taste. It is extremely active, as may be proved by applying plasters of garlick to the feet, which will give a strong smell to the breath. Hill.

Garlick has, of all our plants, the great strength, affords most nourishment, and supplies most spirits to those who eat little flesh. Lough.

'Tis mortal sin an onion to devour;
Each clove of garlick is a faced pow'r;
Religious nations sure, and blest abodes,
Where ev'ry orchard is o'er-run with gods. Tate.

GARLICK Pear-tree. n. f.

This tree is pretty common in Jamaica, and several other places of America, where it usually rises to the height of thirty or forty feet, and spreads into many branches. When the flowers fall off the puntal, it becomes a round fruit, which, when ripe, has a rough brownish rind, and a mealy sweet pulp, but a strong scent of garlick. Miller.

GARLICK Wild. n. f. A plant.

GARLICKEA'TER. n. f. [garlick and eat.] A mean fellow.

You've made good work,
You and your apron men, that stood so much

The breath of garlickeaters. Shakspeare.

GARMENT. n. f. [guarniment, old French.]

Any thing by which the body is covered; clothes; drefs.

Hence, rotten thing, or I shall shake thy bones
Out of thy garments. Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

Our leaf once fallen, springeth no more; neither doth the sun or summer adorn us again with the garments of new leaves and flowers. Raleigh.

Faintest thing that shines below,
Why in this robe dost thou appear?
Would'st thou, a while more perfect show,
Thou must at all no garment wear. Cowley.

Three worthy perions from his side it tore,
And dy'd his garment with their scatter'd gore. Waller.

The peacock, in all his pride, does not display half the colours that appear in the garments of a British lady, when she is dressed. Addison.

Let him that fues for the coat, i. e. the shirt, or inner garment, take the cloak also, is a proverbial phrase too; for in the truth of the letter, a shirt is no likely matter of a lawsuit, and signifies an uncountessing sufferance of such small losses. Kettlewell.

GARNER. n. f. [grenier, French.]

A place in which thrashed grain is stored up.

Earth's increase, and soyson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty. Shakspeare.

For sundry foes the rural realm furround;
The fieldmouse builds her garner under ground:
For gather'd grain the blind laborious mole,
In winding mazes, works her hidden hole. Dryd.

To GARNER. v. a. [from the noun.]

To store as in garners.

There, where I have garner'd up my heart,
Where either I must live, or bear no life. Shakf.

GARNET. n. f. [garnato, Italian; granatus, low Latin; from its resemblance in colour to the grain of the pomegranate.]

The garnet is a gem of a middle degree of hardness, between the sapphire and the common crystal. It is found of various sizes. Its surfaces are not so smooth or polite as those of a ruby, and its colour is ever of a strong red, with a plain admixture of blueish: its degree of colour is very different, and it always wants much of the brightnefs of the ruby. Hill.

The garnet seems to be a species of the carbuncle of the ancients; the Bohemian is red, with a slight cast of a flame-colour; and the Syrian is red, with a slight cast of purple. Woodw.

To GARNISH. v. a. [garnir, French.]

1. To decorate with ornamental appendages.

There were hills which garnish'd their proud heights with stately trees. Sidney.

GARNITURE. n. f. [from garnish.]

Furniture; ornament.

They conclude, if they fall short in garniture of their knees, that they are intemperate in furniture of their heads. Government of Tongue.

Plain sense, which pleas'd your fires an age ago,
Is lost, without the garniture of show. Granv.

As nature has pour'd out her charms upon the female part of our species, so they are very assiduous in bestowing upon themselves the finest garnitures of art. Addison's Spectator.

GARROUS. adj. [from garum.]

Resembling pickle made of fish.

In a civet-cat an offensive odour proceeds, partly from its food, that being especially fish: whereof this humour may be a garrous excretion, and odious separation. Brown.

GARRAN. n. f. [Erse. It imports the same as gelding.]

The word is still retained in Scotland.] A small horse; a hobby. A Highland horse, which, when brought into the north of England, takes the name of galloway.

When he comes forth, he will make their caws and garrans to walk, if he doth no other harm to their persons. Spenser.

Every man would be forced to provide winter-fodder for his team, whereas common garrans shift upon grass the year round; and this would force men to the enclosing of grounds, so that the race of garrans would decrease. Temple.

GARRRET. n. f. [garite, the tower of a citadel, French.]

1. A room on the highest floor of the house.

The mob, commissiun'd by the government, are seldom to an empty garret sent. Dryden.

John Bull skipped from room to room; ran up stairs and down stairs, from the kitchen to the garret. Arbutnot's John Bull.

On earth the god of wealth was made
Sole patron of the building trade;
Leaving the arts the spacious air,
With licence to build castles there:

And 'tis conceiv'd their old pretence,
To lodge in garrets, comes from thence. Swift.

2. Rotten wood. Not in use.

The colour of the shining part of rotten wood, by daylight, is in some pieces white, and in some pieces inclining to red, which they call the white and red garret. Bacon.

Thou art no soldier fit for Cupid's garrison. Sidney.

2. Fortified place stored with soldiers.

Whom the old Roman wall so ill contain'd,
With a new chain of garrisons you bind. Waller.

3. The state of being placed in a fortification for its defence.

Some of them that are laid in garrison will do no great hurt to the enemies. Spenser on Ireland.

To GARRISON. v. a. [from the noun.]

To secure by fortresses.

Others those forces join,
Which garrison the conquests near the Rhine. Dryden's Journal.

GARRULITY. n. f. [garrulitas, Lat.]

1. Loquacity; incontinence of tongue; inability to keep a secret.

Let me here
Expiate, if possible, my crime,
Shameful garrulity. Milton's Agonistes.

2. The quality of talking too much; talkativeness.

Some vices of speech must carefully be avoided: first of all, loquacity or garrulity. Ray.

GARRULOUS. adj. [garrulus, Latin.]

Prattling; talkative.

Old age looks out,
And garrulous recounts the feats of youth. Thomson.

GARTER. n. f. [gardus, Welsh; justier, French; from gar, Welsh, the binding of the knee.]

1. A string or riband by which the stocking is held upon the leg.

Let their heads be sleekly comb'd, their blue coats brush'd, and their garters of an indifferent knit. Shakspeare's Taming of the Shrew.

When we rest in our cloaths we looser our garters, and other ligatures, to give the spirits free passage. Ray.

Handsome garters at your knees. Swift.

There lay three garters, half a pair of gloves, and all the trophies of his former loves. Pope.

2. The mark of the order of the garter, the highest order of English knighthood.

Now by my george, my garter.
—The george, profan'd, hath lost his holy honour;

The garter, blemish'd, pawn'd his knightly virtue. Shakspeare's Richard III.

You owe your Ormond nothing but a son,
To fill in future times his father's place,
And wear the garter of his mother's race. Dryd.

3. The principal king at arms.

To GARTER. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with a garter.

He, being in love, could not see to garter his horse. Shakspeare.

A person was wounded in the leg, below the gartering place. Wifeman's Sargery.

GARTH. n. f. [as if girth, from gird.]

The bulk of the body measured by the girdle.

GAS. n. f. [A word invented by the chymists.] It is used by Van Helmont, and seems designed to signify, in general, a spirit not capable of being coagulated; but he uses it loosely in many senses. Harris.

GASCONADE. n. f. [French; from Gascon, a nation eminent for boasting.] A boast; a bravado.

Was it a gasconade to please me, that you said your fortune was increased to one hundred a year since I left you? Swift.

To GASCONADE. v. n. [from the noun.] To boast; to brag; to bluster.

To GASH. v. a. [from hacher, to cut, French. Skinner.] To cut deep so as to make a gaping wound; to cut with a blunt instrument so as to make the wound wide.

Where the Englishmen at arms had been defeated, many of their horses were found grievously gashed or gored to death. Hayward.

Wit is a keen instrument, and every one can cut and gash with it; but to carve a beautiful image requires art. Tillettson.

See me gash'd with knives,
Or fear'd with burning steel. Rowe's Royal Conv.
Streaming with blood, all over gash'd with wounds,

He reel'd, he groan'd, and at the altar fell. A. Philips.

GASH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A deep and wide wound.

He glancing on his helmet, made a large
And open gash therein; were not his target,
That broke the violence of his intent,
The weary soul from thence it would discharge. Spenser.

A perilous gash, a very limb lopt off. Shaksp.
Hamilton drove Newton almost to the end of the lists; but Newton on a sudden gave him such a gash on the leg, that therewith he fell to the ground. Hayward.

But th' ethereal substance clos'd,
Not long divisible; and from the gash
A stream of nectarous humour issuing flow'd. Milton.

2. The mark of a wound. I know not if this be proper.

I was fond of back sword and cudgel play, and I now bear in my body many a black and blue gash and fear. Arbutnot.

GASKINS. n. f. [from Gasconne. See GALLIGASKINS.] Wide hole; wide breeches. An old ludicrous word.

If one point break, the other will hold;
Or, if both break, your gaskins fall. Shaksp.

To GASP. v. n. [from gape, Skinner; from gisse, Danish, to sob, Junius.]

1. To open the mouth wide to catch breath with labour.

The sick for air before the portal gasp. Dryden.
They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes;
But the weak voice deceiv'd their *gasp*ing throats. Dryden.

The *gasp*ing head flies off; a purple flood Flows from the trunk. Dryden's Æneid.
The ladies gasp'd, and scarcely could respire;
The breath they drew no longer air, but fire. Dryden.

A scanthog of wit lay *gasp*ing for life, and groaning beneath a heap of rubbish. Dryden.
The rich countrymen in Austria were faint and *gasp*ing for breath. Brown's Travels.

Pale and faint,
He *gasp*s for breath; and, as his life flows from him,
Demands to see his friends. Addison's Cato.

2. To emit breath by opening the mouth convulsively.

I lay me down to gasp my latest breath;
The wolves will get a breakfast by my death. Dryden.

He staggers round, his eyeballs roll in death,
And with short sobs he *gasp*s away his breath. Dryden's Æneid.

3. To long for. This sense is, I think, not proper, as nature never expresses desire by *gasp*ing.

The Castilian and his wife had the comfort to be under the same master, who, seeing how dearly they loved one another, and *gasp*ed after their liberty, demanded a most exorbitant price for their ransom. Spektor.

GASP. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of opening the mouth to catch breath.

2. The short catch of breath in the last agonies.

His fortunes all lie speechless, and his name
Is at last gasp. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

Ah, Warwick, Montague hath breath'd his last;
And to the latest gasp cry'd out for Warwick. Shakspere's Henry vi.

If in the dreadful hour of death,
If at the latest gasp of breath,
When the cold damp bedews your brow,
You hope for mercy, shew it now. Addison.

To GAST. v. a. [from γαστ, Saxon. See AGHAST.] To make aghast; to fright; to shock; to terrify; to fear; to affray.

When he saw my best alarmed spirits,
Bold in the quarrel's right, rous'd to th' encounter,

Or whether *gast*ed by the noise I made,
Full suddenly he fled. Shaksp. K. Lear.

GASTRICK. adj. [from γαστρε.] Belonging to the belly.

GASTROGRAPHY. n. f. [γαστρε and γραφω.] In strictness of etymology signifies no more than sewing up any wound of the belly; yet in common acceptation it implies, that the wound of the belly is complicated with another of the intestine. Sharp's Surgery.

GASTROTOMY. n. f. [γαστρε and τομω.] The act of cutting open the belly.

GAT. The preterit of get.

Moses gat him up into the mount. Exodus.

GATE. n. f. [geat, Saxon.]

1. The door of a city, castle, palace, or large building.

Open the gate of mercy, gracious God!
My foul lies through these wounds to seek thee. Shakspere

Gates of monarchs
Are arch'd so high, that giants may jet through,
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun. Shaksp. Cymb.

2. A frame of timber upon hinges to give a passage into enclosed grounds.

Know'st thou the way to Dover?
—Both stile and gate, hoiteway and footpath. Shakspere.

3. An avenue; an opening.

To pay the creditor, that lent him his rent, he must gather up money by degrees. Locke.

4. To crop; to pluck.

What have I done?
To see my youth, my beauty, and my love
No sooner gain'd, but slighted and betray'd;
And like a rose just gather'd from the stalk,
But only smelt, and cheaply thrown aside,
To wither on the ground! Dryden.

5. To assemble.

They have gathered themselves together against me. Job.

All the way we went there were gathered some people on both sides, standing in a row. Bacon.

6. To heap up; to accumulate.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Or his own door being that against his entrance. Shakspere.

After he had seen the vision, we endeavour'd to get into Macedonia, assuredly gathering that the Lord had called us. Acts.

From this doctrine of the increasing and lessening of sin in this respect, we may gather, that all sins are not alike and equal, as the thick of ancient times, and their followers, have falsely imagined. Perkins.

Return'd,
By night, and listening where the hapless pair
Sat in their sad discourse, and various plaint, Thence gather'd his own doom. Milton.

Madamoiselle de Seudery, who is as old as Sibly, is translating Chaucer into French: from which I gather that he has formerly been translated into the old Provençal. Dryden.

15. To GATHER Breath. [A proverbial expression.] To have respite from any calamity.

The luckless lucky made
A long time with that savage people staid,
To gather breath, in many miseries. Spenser.

To GA'THER. v. n.

1. To be condensed; to thicken.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A long will help the beating storm to hear.
Dryden's Pastorals.

When gath'ring clouds o'erhadow all the skies,
And shoot quick lightnings, weigh my boys! he cries. Dryden.

When the rival winds their quarrel try,
South, east, and west, on airy courses born,
The whirlwind gathers, and the woods are torn.
Dryden.

Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
And threatens every hour to burst upon it.
Addison's Cato.

There be three things that mine heart feareth;
the slander of a city, the gathering together of an unruly multitude, and a false accusation. Eccles.

4. To generate pus or matter.

Ask one, who by repeated restraints hath subdued his natural rage, how he likes the change, and he will tell you 'tis no less happy than the ease of a broken imposthume after the painful gathering and filling of it. Decay of Piety.

GA'THER. n. f. [from the verb.] Pucker;
cloth drawn together in wrinkles.

Give laws for pantaloons,
The length of breeches and the gathers,
Part cannons, periwigs, and feathers. Hudib.

GA'THERER. n. f. [from gather.]

1. One that gathers; one that collects; a collector.

I will spend this preface about those from whom I have gathered my knowledge; for I am but a gatherer and disposer of other men's stuff
Watson's Preface to Elem. of Architecture.

2. One that gets in a crop of any kind.

I was a herdman and a gatherer of sycamore fruit. Amos.

tion of charitable contributions.

Let every one lay by him in store, that there be no gatherings when I come. 1 Corinthians.

GA'TTEN-TREE. n. f. A species of Cornelian cherry.

GAUDE. n. f. [The etymology of this word is uncertain: Skinner imagines it may come from gaude, French, a yellow flower, yellow being the most gaudy colour. Junius, according to his custom, talks γαυδω; and Mr. Lye finds gaude,
in Douglas, to signify deceit or fraud, from gawawdio, Welch, to cheat. It seems to me most easily deducible from gaudium, Latin, joy; the cause of joy;
a token of joy: thence aptly applied to any thing that gives or expresses pleasure.
In Scotland this word is still retained, both as a showy bawble, and the person fooled. It also in Scotland denotes a yellow flower.] An ornament; a fine thing; any thing worn as a sign of joy.
It is not now much used.

He stole th' impression of her fantasy,
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gaudets, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats. Shaksp.

The sun is in the heav'n, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,

Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudets,
To give me audience. Shaksp. King Lear.

My love to Hermia
Is melted as the snow; seems to me now
As the remembrance of an idle gaude,
Which in my childhood I did doat upon. Shaksp.

Some bound for Guiney, golden sand to find,
Bore all the gaudets the simple natives wear;
Some for the pride of Turkish courts design'd,
For folded turbants finest holland bear. Dryden.

To GAUDE. v. a. [gaudeo, Latin.] To exult; to rejoice at any thing.

Go to a gossip's feast, and gaude with me,
After a long grief such nativity. Shakspere.

GA'UDERY. n. f. [from gaude.] Finery;
ostentatious luxury of dress.

The triumph was net pageants and gaudery, but one of the wisest and noblest institutions that ever was. Bacon's Essays.

Age, which is but one remove from death, and should have nothing about us but what looks like a decent preparation for it, scarce ever appears, of late, but in the high mode, the flaunting garb, and utmost gaudery of youth, with cloaths as ridiculously, and as much in the fashion, as the person that wears them is usually grown out of it. South

A plain suit, since we can make but one,
Is better than to be by tarnish'd gaud'ry known.
Dryden.

GA'UDILY. adv. [from gaude.] Showily.

GA'UDINESS. n. f. [from gaudy.] Show-iness; tinsel appearance.

GA'UDY. adj. [from gaude.] Showy;
splendid; pompous; ostentatiously fine.

Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy,
But not express in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man. Shaksp.

Fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
As thick and numberless
As the gay notes that people the sun-beams.
Milton.

A goldfinch there I saw, with gaudy pride
Of painted plumes, that hopp'd from side to side.
Dryden.

The Bavarian duke his brigades leads,
Gallant in arms, and gaudy to behold. Philips.
A man who walks directly to his journey's end, will arrive thither much sooner than him who wanders aside to gaze at every thing, or to gather every gaudy flower. Watts.

It is much to be lamented, that persons so naturally qualified to be great examples of piety, should, by an erroneous education, be made poor and gaudy spectacles of the greatest vanity.
Lavo.

GA'UDY. n. f. [gaudium, Latin.] A feast;
a festival; a day of plenty. A word used in the university.

He may surely be content with a fast to-day,
that is sure of a gaudy to-morrow. Cheyne.

GAVE. The preterit of give.

Thou can'st not every day give me thy heart;
If thou can'st give it, then thou never gav'st it:
Lovers riddles are, that though thy heart depart,
It stays at home, and thou with losing gav'st it.
Donne.

ground.

Let it lie upon the ground or gavel eight or ten days. Mortimer.

GA'VELKIND. n. f. [In law.] A custom whereby the lands of the father are equally divided at his death among all his sons, or the land of the brother equally divided among the brothers, if he have no issue of his own. This custom is of force in divers places of England, but especially in Kent. Corwell.

Among other Welch customs he abolished that of gavelkind, whereby the heirs female were utterly excluded, and the bastards did inherit as well as the legitimate, which is the very Irish gavelkind. Davies on Ireland.

To GAUGE. v. a. [gauge, jaugé, a measuring rod, French. It is pronounced, and often written, gagé.]

1. To measure with respect to the contents of a vessel.

2. To measure with regard to any proportion.

The vases nicely gauged on each side, broad on one side, and narrow on the other, both which minister to the progressive motion of the fluid.
Dehahn's Physico-Theology.

There is nothing more perfectly admirable in itself than that artful manner in Homer, of taking measure or gaging his heroes by each other, and thereby elevating the character of one person by the opposition of it to some other he is made to excel. Pope.

GAUGE. n. f. [from the verb.] A measure,
a standard.

This plate must be a gauge to file your worm and groove to equal breadth by. Moron.

If money were to be hired, as land is, or to be had from the owner himself, it might then be had at the market rate, which would be a constant gauge of your trade and wealth. Locke.

Timothy proposed to his mistress, that the should entertain no servant that was above four foot seven inches high; and for that purpose had prepared a gauge, by which they were to be measured. Arbuthnot's History of J. Bull.

GAUGER. n. f. [from gauge.] One whose business is to measure vessels or quantities.

Those earls and dukes have been privileged with royal jurisdiction; and appointed their special officers, as sheriff, admiral, gauges, and escheator.
Carew on Cornwall.

GAUNT. adj. [As if gewant, from gepanian, to lessen, Saxon.] Thin;
slender; lean; meagre.

Oh, how that name befits my composition!
Old Gaunt, indeed, and gaunt in being old:
Within my grief hath kept a tedious fast;
And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?
For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;
Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:
The pleasure that some fathers feed upon
Is my strict fast; I mean my childrens looks;
And therein fasting, thou hast made me gaunt:
Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,
Whose hollow womb inherits nought but bones.
Shakspere's Richard II.

Two maffisks, gaunt and grim, her flight
pursu'd,
And oft their fallen'd fangs in blood embro'u'd.

Dryden's Fables.

GAUNTLY. adv. [from gaunt.] Leanly;
slenderly; meagerly.

GAUNTLET. n. f. [gantlet, French.]
An iron glove used for defence, and thrown down in challenges. It is sometimes in poetry used for the cestus, or boxing glove.

A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shaksp. Henry IV
Feel but the difference, soft and rough;
This a gauntlet, that a muff. Cleveland.

Some shall in swiftness for the goal contend,
And others try the twanging bow to bend;
The strong with iron gauntlets arm'd shall stand,
Oppos'd in combat, on the yellow sand. Dryd.
Who naked wrestled best, bestmear'd with oil;
Or who with gauntlets gave or took the foil.
Dryden's Fables.

The funeral of some valiant knight
May give this thing its proper light;
View his two gauntlets; these declare
That both his hands were us'd to war. Piers.

So to repel the Vandals of the stage,
Our vet'ran bard resumes his tragick rage;

He throws the gavnet Otway us'd to wield,
And calls for Englishmen to judge the field.

Southern.

At some her gazing glances roving flew.

Fairf.

Gaze not on a maid, that thou fall not by those things that are precious in her.

Bechis.

A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind.

Shakspeare.

High stations tumults, but not bliss create;

None think the great unhappy, but the great.

Fools gaze and envy; Envy darts a sting,

Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.

Yeo. g.

To GAZE. v. a. To view steadfastly.

Strait toward heav'n my wond'ring eyes I

turn'd,

And gaz'd a while the ample sky.

Milton.

GAZE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Intent regard; look of eagerness or wonder; fixed look.

Being lighten'd with her beauty's beam,

And thereby fill'd with happy influence,

And lifted up above the world's gaze,

To sing with angels her immortal praise.

Spenser.

Do but note a wild and wanton herd,

If any air of musick touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze,

By the sweet power of musick.

Shakspeare.

'Fore your queen dy'd, she was more worth such

Than what you look on now.

Shakspeare.

Or open admiration, him behold,

On whom the great Creator hath bestow'd

Worlds.

general, but its tendency to promote or hinder
the attainment of some end. Norris.

In particulars our knowledge begins and so spreads itself by degrees to generals. Locke.

I have considered Milton's Paradise Lost in the fable, the characters, the sentiments, and the language; and have shewn that he excels, in general, under each of these heads. Addison.

An history painter paints man in general; a portrait painter a particular man, and consequently a defective model. Reynolds.

2. The publick; the interest of the whole.
Not in use.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,

Hath raised me from my bed; nor doth the general

Take hold on me; for my particular grief
Ingluts and swallows other sorrows. Shaksp.

3. The vulgar. Not in use.

The play, I remember, pleased not the million;
'twas caviare to the general: but it was, as I received it, and others, whose judgment in such matters cried in the top of mine, an excellent play. Shaksp.

4. [general, French.] One that has the command over an army.

A general is one that hath power to command an army. Locke.

The generals on the enemy's side are inferior to several that once commanded the French armies.

Whatever generates a quantity of good chyle, must likewise generate milk. Arbutnot.

GENERATION. n. f. [from generare;
generation, French.]

1. The act of begetting or producing.

Seals make excellent impressions; and so it may be thought of sounds in their first generation; but then the dilatation of them, without any new sealing, shews they cannot be impressions. Bacon.

He longer will delay, to hear thee tell
His generation, and the rising birth
Of nature, from the unapparent deep. Milton.

If we deduce the several races of mankind in the several parts of the world from generation, we must imagine the first numbers of them, who in any place agree upon any civil constitutions, to assemble as so many heads of families whom they represent. Temple.

2. A family; a race.

Y' are a dog.

—Thy mother's of my generation: what's she, if I be a dog? Shaksp.

quest of Palestine, which with singular virtue they performed, and held that kingdom some few generations. Raleigh's Essays.

5. An age.

By some of the ancients a generation was fixed at an hundred years; by others at an hundred and ten; by others at thirty-three, thirty, twenty-five, and twenty: hut it is remarked, that the continuance of generations is so much longer as they come nearer to the more ancient times.

Every where throughout all generations and ages of the christian world, no church ever perceived the word of God to be against it. Hooker.

GENERATIVE. adj. [generatif, French;
from genero, Latin.]

1. Having the power of propagation.

He gave to all, that have life, a power genera- tive, thereby to continue their species and kinds. Raleigh's History.

In grains and kernels the greatest part is but the nutriment of that generative particle, so disproportionable unto it. Brown.

2. Prolifick; having the power of production; fruitful.

If there hath been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty upon the earth, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

GENERATOR. n. f. [from genero, Latin.]
The power which begets, causes, or produces.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

GENE'RAL. } adj. [generique, Fr.
GENE'RICK. } from genus, Latin.]

That comprehends the genus, or distinguishes from another genus, but does not distinguish the species.

The word consumption being applicable to a proper, and improper to a true and bastard consumption, requires a generical description qua-drate to both. Harvey on Consumptions.

Though wine differs from other liquors, in that it is the juice of a certain fruit; yet this is but a general or generick difference; for it does not distinguish wine from cyder or perry; the specifick difference of wine, therefore, is its pressure from the grape. Watts' Logick.

GENE'RICALY. adv. [from generick.]
With regard to the genus, though not the species.

These have all the essential characters of sea-shells, and shew that they are of the very same specifick gravity with those to which they are so generically allied. Woodward.

And ripens spirits as he ripens mines. Pope.

His gen'rous spouse, Thicano, heav'nly fair,
Nurs'd the young stranger with a mother's care. Pope.

Pray for others in such forms, with such length, importunity, and earnestness, as you use for yourself; and you will find all little ill-natur'd passions die away, your heart grow great and generous, delighting in the common happiness of others, as you used only to delight in your own. Larv.

3. It is used of animals. Spritely; daring; courageous.

So the imperial eagle does not stay
Till the whole carcase he devour,
As if his gen'rous hun, or underfoot
That he can never want plenty of food,
He only sucks the tasteful blood. Cowley.

His op'ning hounds, and now he hears their cries:
A gen'rous pack. Addison.

4. Liberal; munificent.

When from his vest the young companion bore
The cup the gen'rous landlord own'd before,
And paid profusely with the precious bowl,
The flinted kindness of this churlish soul. Parnell.

 Notwithstanding all their talk of reason and philosophy, which they are deplorably strangers to, and those unanswerable doubts and difficulties, which, over their cups, they pretend to have against christianity; persuade but the covetous man not to deify his money, the proud man not to adore himself, and I dare undertake that all their giantlike objections against the christian religion shall presently vanish and quit the held.
South.

To make the convexity of the earth discernible, suppose a man lifted in the air, that he may have a spacious horizon; but then, because of the distance, the convexity and gibbousness would vanish away, and he would only see a great circular flat.
Bentley's Sermons.

GIBCAT. n. f. [gib and cat.] An old worn-out cat.

I am as melancholy as a gibcat, or a logg'd bear. Shaksp. Hamlet.

To GIBE. v. n. [gaber, old French, to sneer, to ridicule.] To sneer; to join censoriousness with contempt.

They seem to imagine that we have erected of late a frame of some new religion, the furniture whereof we should not have borrowed from our enemies, lest they should afterwards laugh and gibe at our party. Hooker.

When he saw her toy, and gibe, and geer,
 And pass the hounds of modest mery make,
 Her dalliance he despis'd. Spenser.

Why that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
 Whole influence is hegot of that loose grace
 Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools.

When thou wast in thy gilt, and thy perfume, they mockt thee for too much curiosity: in thy rags thou know'st none, but art despis'd for the contrary.

GILT. The participle of gild.

Where the gilt chariot never mark'd its way.

GILTHEAD. n. f. [gilt and head.]

1. A sea fish.

2. A bird. He blended together the livers of giltheads, the brains of pheasants and peacocks, tongues of phenicopters, and the melts of lampres.

GILT-TAIL. n. f. [gilt and tail.] A worm so called from his yellow tail.

GIM. adj. [an old word.] Neat; spruce; well dressed.

GIMCRACK. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner to be ludicrously formed from gin, derived from engine.] A slight or trivial mechanism.

For though these gimcracks were away,
However, more reduc'd and plain,
The watch would still a watch remain;
But if the horal orbit ceases,

The whole stands still, or breaks to pieces. Prior.
What's the meaning of all these trigrams and gimcracks?
Jumping over my master's hedges,
and running your lines cross his grounds?

GIMLET. n. f. [gibelet, guimbelet, French.]

A borer with a ferew at its point.

The gimlet hath a worm at the end of its bit.

GIMMEL. n. f. [Supposed by Skinner and Ainsworth to be derived from gimellus, Latin, and to be used only of something consisting of correspondent parts, or double. It seems rather to be gradually corrupted from geometry or geometrical. Any thing done by occult means is vulgarly said to be done by geometry.]

Some little quaint devices or pieces of machinery.

I think by some odd gimmals or device
Their arms are set like clocks, still to strike on,
Else they could not hold out for as they do.

GIMMER. n. f. [See GIMMAL.] Movement; machinery. The holding together of the parts of matter has so confound'ed me, that I have been prone to conclude with myself, that the gimmers of the world hold together not so much by geometry as some natural magic.

GIMP. n. f. [See GIM. Gimp, in old English, is neat, spruce.] A kind of silk twist or lace.

GIN. n. f. [from engine.]

1. A trap; a snare.

As the day begins,
With twenty gins we will the small birds take,
And pasture make.

Which two, through treason and deceitful gin,
Hath stain'd his Mordant.

So strives the woodcock with the gin;
So doth the coney struggle in the net.

Be it by gins, by snares, by subtilty,
If those, who have but sense, can shun

The engines that have their annoy'd;
Little for me had reason done,

If I could not thy gins avoid.

Though dearly to my cost; thy gins and toils
No more on me have pow'r, their force is null'd.

He made a planetary gin,
Which rats would run their own heads in,
And come on purpose to be taken,
Without th' expense of cheese and bacon.

Keep from slaying scourge thy skin,
And ankle free from iron gin.

2. Any thing moved with ferews, as an engine of torture.

Typhæus' joints were stretched on a gin.

3. A pump worked by rotatory fails.

The delts would be so flown with waters, it being impossible to make any adits or foughs to drain them, that no gins or machines would suffice to lay and keep them dry.

A bituminous plate, alternately yellow and black, formed by water drizzling on the outside of the gin pump of Moltzen castles.

4. [contracted from GENEVA.] The spirit drawn by distillation from juniper-berries.

This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
And hurls the thunder of our laws on gin.

Gin thops sower sighs return.

GINGER. n. f. [zinziber, Latin; gingero, Italian.]

The flower consists of five leaves, shaped somewhat like those of the iris: these are produced in the head or club, each coming out of a separate leafy scale. The ovary becomes a triangular fruit, having three cells which contain seeds.

The root of ginger is of the tuberous kind, knotty, crooked, and irregular; of a hot, acid, and pungent taste, though aromatick, and of a very agreeable smell. The Indians eat both the young shoots of the leaves and the roots themselves.

Or waiving ginger round the streets to go,
And visit alehouse where ye first did grow.

GINGERBREAD. n. f. [ginger and bread.]

A kind of farinaceous sweetmeat made of dough, like that of bread or biscuit, sweetened with treacle, and flavoured with ginger and some aromatick seeds. It is sometimes gilt.

An' I had but one penny in the world, thou should'st have it to buy gingerbread.

Her currants there and gooseberries were spread;
With the enticing gold of gingerbread.

'Tis a loss you are not here, to partake of three weeks frost, and eat gingerbread in a booth by a fire upon the Thames.

GINGERLY. adv. [I know not whence derived.] Cautiously; nicely.

What is 't that you
Took up so gingerly?

GINGERNESS. n. f. Niceness; tenderness.

GINGIVAL. adj. [gingiva, Latin.] Belonging to the gums.

Whilst the Italians strive to cut a thread in their pronunciation between D and T, so to sweeten it, they make the occlusæ appallæ, especially the gingival, softer than we do, giving a little of periviousness.

To GINGLE. v. n.

1. To utter a sharp clattering noise; to utter a sharp noise in quick succession.

The foot grows black that was with dirt embrown'd,

And in thy pocket gingling halfpence found.

Once, we confess, beneath the patriot's cloak,
From the crack'd bag the dropping guinea spoke,
And gingling down the backstays, told the crew,
Old Carø is as great a rogue as you.

2. To make an affected sound in periods or cadence.

To GINGLE. v. a. To shake so that a sharp shrill clattering noise should be made.

Her infant grandame's whistle next it grew;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew.

GINGLE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A shrill resounding noise.

2. Affectation in the sound of periods.

GINGLYMOID. adj. [γινλυμοειδης, a hinge, and ειδης.] Resembling a ginglymus; approaching to a ginglymus.

The malleus lies along, fixed to the tympanum, and on the other end is joined to the iacus by a double or ginglymoid joint.

GINGLYMUS. n. f. A mutual indenting of two bones into each others cavity, in the manner of a hinge, of which the elbow is an instance.

GINNET. n. f. [γιννητος.] A nag; a mule; a degenerated breed. Hence, according to some, but, I believe, erroneously, a Spanish gennet, improperly written for ginnet.

GINSENG. n. f. [I suppose Chinese.] A root brought lately into Europe, of a brownish colour on the outside, and somewhat yellowish within; and so pure and fine, that it seems almost transparent. It is of a very agreeable and aromatick smell, though not very strong. Its taste is acrid and aromatick, and has somewhat bitter in it. We have it from China and America. The Chinese value this root at three times its weight in silver. Hill.

To GIR. v. a. To take out the guts of herrings. Bailey.

GIPSY. n. f. [corrupted from Egyptian; for when they first appeared in Europe, they declared, and perhaps, truly, that they were driven from Egypt by the Turks. They are now mingled with all nations.]

1. A vagabond who pretends to foretell futurity, commonly by palmistry or physiognomy.

The butler, though he is sure to lose a knife, a fork, or a spoon every time his fortune is told him, shuts himself up in the pantry with an old gipsy for above half an hour. Addison.

A frankick gipsy now, the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants. Prior.

In this still labyrinth around her lie
Spells, philters, globes, and spheres of palmistry;

A sigil in his hand the gipsy bears,
In th' other a prophetick sieve and sheers. Garth.

I, near yon stile, three fallow gypsies met;
Upon my hand they cast a poring look,
Bid me beware, and thrice their heads they shook. Gay.

2. A reproachful name for a dark complexion.

Laura, to her lady, was but a kitchen-wench;
Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra a gipsy; Helen and Hero hildings and harlots. Shakspeare.

3. A name of slight reproach to a woman.
The widow play'd the gipsy, and so did her confidant too, in pretending to believe her. L'Esrange.

A slave I am to Clara's eyes;
The gipsy knows her power, and flies. Prior.

GIRASOLE. n. f. [girafolo, French.]

1. The herb turnfol.

2. The opal stone.

To GIRD. v. a. pret. girded or girt.
[gýrdan, Saxon.]

1. To bind round.

They sprinkled earth upon their heads, and girded their loins with sackcloth. 2 Maccabees.

2. To put on so as to surround or bind.
Cords of the bigness of packthread were fastened to bandages, which the workmen had girt round my neck. Swift.

3. To fasten by binding.

He girt his warlike harness about him. 1 Mac.
My bow and thunder, my almighty arms
Girt on, and sword upon thy puissant thigh. Milton.

No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe. Addison's Cato.

The combatant too late the field declines,
When now the sword is girded to his loins. Prior.

4. To invest.

Stoop then, and set your knee against my foot;
And in requerdon of that duty done,
I gird thee with the valiant sword of York. Shakspeare's Henry vi

The son appear'd,
Girt with omnipotence. Milton's Par. Lost.

5. To dress; to habit; to clothe.

I girded thee about with fine linen, and I covered thee with silk. Ezekiel.

Typhone there keeps the ward,
Girt in her sanguine gown, by night and day,
Observant of the fouls that pass the downward way. Dryden.

6. To cover round as a garment.

These, with what skill they had, together
sow'd,
To gird their waist: vain covering, if it hide
Their guilt, and dreaded shame! Milton.

7. To furnish; to equip.

So to the coast of Jordan he directs
His easy steps, girded with snaky wiles. Milton.

8. To enclose; to encircle.

That Nyseian isle,
Girt with the river Triton, where old Cham
Hid Amalthea, and her florid son
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye. Milton.

9. To reproach; to gibe.

Being mov'd, he will not spare to gird the god. Shakspeare.

To GIRD. v. n. [Of this word in this sense I know not the original; it may be formed by a very customary transposition from gird or cut.] To break a scornful jest; to gibe; to saucer.

This wondrous error growth
At which our critics gird. Drayton.

Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me:
the brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to invent any thing that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men. Shakspeare.

GIRD. n. f. [from the verb.] A twitch; a pang; it may come from the sensation caused by a bandage or girdle drawn hard suddenly. This word is now seldom used, unless the former etymology be admitted.

Sweet king! the bishop hath a kindly gird:
For shame, my lord of Winchester relent. Shakf.

Conscience by this means is freed from many fearful girds and twinges which the atheistic feels. Tillotson.

He has the glory of his conscience, when he doth well, to set against the checks and girds of it when he doth amiss. Goodman.

GIRDER. n. f. [from gird.] In architecture, the largest piece of timber in a floor. Its end is usually fastened into the summers, or breast summers, and the joists are framed in at one arm to the girders.

The girders are also to be of the same scantling the summers and ground-plates are of, though the back girders need not be so strong as the front girders. Moxon's Mech. Exer.

These mighty girders which the fabrick bind,
These ribs robust and vatt in order join'd. Black.

GIRDLE. n. f. [gýrde, Saxon.]

1. Any thing drawn round the waist, and tied or buckled.

There will I make thee beds of roses,
With a thousand fragrant posies;
A cap of flowers, and a girdle,
Embroider'd all with leaves of myrtle. Shaksp.

My conceit there is somewhat amiss, until they put on their girdles. Brown.

On him his mantle, girdle, sword and bow,
On him his heart and soul he did bestow. Cowley.

Great breezes in great circles, such as are under the girdle of the world, do refrigerate. Bac.

To GIRDL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To gird; to bind as with a girdle.
Lay the gentle babes, girdling one another
Within their innocent alabafter arms. Shakspeare.

2. To enclose; to shut in; to environ.
Those sleeping stones,
That as a waif do girdle thee about. Shakspeare.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Shakspeare.

GIRDLEBELT. n. f. [girdle and belt.]

The belt that encircles the waif.
Nor did his eyes less longingly behold
The girdlebelt, with nails of burnish'd gold. Dryden.

GIRDLER. n. f. [from girdle.] A maker of girdles.

GIRE. n. f. [gyrus, Latin.] A circle described by any thing in motion. See GYRE.

GIRL. n. f. [About the etymology of this word there is much question: Meric Casaubon, as is his custom, derives it from κόρη of the same signification; Minsheu from garrula, Latin, a prattler, or girella, Italian, a weathercock; Junius thinks that it comes from berlodes, Welsh, from which, says he, barlot is very easily deduced. Skinner imagines that the Saxons, who used ceopl for a man, might likewise have ceopla for a woman, though no such word is now found. Dr. Hickes derives it most probably from the Islandick karlinna, a woman.] A young woman, or female child.

In those unstedg'd days was my wife a girl. Shakspeare.

I will love thee ne'er the less, my girl. Shakf.

The foolish Amphimachus, to field brought gold to be his wracke, Proude girl like, that doth ever beare her dowre upon her backe. Chapman.

A weather-beaten lover, but once known,
Is sport for every girl to practise on. Donne.

Tragedy should blush as much to stoop
To the low mimick follies of a farce,
As a grave matron would to dance with girls. Rescommon.

A boy, like thee, would make a kingly line;
But oh! a girl like her, must be divine! Dryden.

GIRLISH. adj. [from girl.] Suiting a girl; youthful.
In her girlish age she kept sheep on the moor. Carew.

GIRLISHLY. adv. [from girlish.] In a girlish manner.

Beneath the radiant line that girts the globe. Thomson.

GIRT. } n. f. [from gird.]

GIRTH. } n. f. [from gird.]

1. A band by which the saddle or burden is fixed upon the horse.

Here lies old Hobson, that hath broke his girt;
And here, alas! hath laid him in the dirt. Milton.

- Or the fiddle turn'd round, or the girth brake;
- For low on the ground, woe for his sake,
The law is found
Nor Pegasus could bear the load,
Along the high celestial road;
The reed oppress'd would break his girth,
To raise the lumber from the earth. See Jt
Mordant gallops on alone;
The roads are with his followers strown;
This breaks a girth and that a bone. Swift }
2. A circular bandage.
The most common way of bandage is by that of the girt, which girt hath a bolster in the middle, and the ends are tacked firmly together. Wise man's Surgery.
3. The compass measured by the girdle, or encloping bandage.
He is a lusty jolly fellow that lives well, at least three yards in the girth. Addison's Fiecholder.
- TO GIRTH. v. a. To bind with a girth.
TO GISE Ground. v. a. Is when the owner of it does not feed it with his own stock, but takes in other cattle to graze. Bailey.
- GISLE. Among the English Saxons, signifies a pledge: thus, Fredgisse is a pledge of peace; Gislebert an illustrious pledge, like the Greek Homerus. Gibf. Camden.

Ours gives himself for gone; you've watch'd your time,
He fights this day unarm'd, without his rhyme. Dryden.
The parents, after a long search for the body, gave him for drowned in one of the canals. Addison's Spectator.
As the hinder feet of the horse stuck to the mountain, while the body reared up in the air, the poet with great difficulty kept himself from sliding off his back, inasmuch that the people gave him for gone.

Addison's Guardian

22. To conclude; to suppose.
Whence came you here, O friend, and whither bound?
All gave you lost on fair Cyclopean ground.
Garth's Ovid.

23. To GIVE away. To alienate from one's self; to make over to another; to transfer.

The more he got, the more he shewed that he gave away to his new mistresses, when he betrayed his promises to the former.
Sidney.

If you shall marry,
You give away heav'n's vows, and those are mine;
You give away myself, which is known mine.
Shakespeare.

Honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself
To this most patient, sweet, and virtuous wife.
Shakespeare.

I know not how they fold themselves; but thou, like a kind fellow, gav'st thyself away gratis, and I thank thee for thee.
Shakespeare.
Love gives away all things, that so he may advance the interest of the beloved person.
Taylor.

But we who give our native rights away,
And our enslav'd posterity betray,
Are now reduc'd to beg an alms and go
On holidays to see a puppet-show.
Dryden's Fuv.
Alas, said I, man was made in vain! How is he given away to misery and mortality!
Addison.
Theodosius made a private vow never to inquire after Constantia, whom he looked upon as given away to his rival, upon the day on which their marriage was to have been solemnized.
Addison.

Whatsoever we employ in charitable uses, during our lives, is given away from ourselves: what we bequeath at our death, is given from others only, as our nearest relations.
Atterbury.

About them round, A lion now he stalks with fiery glare. Milton.

GLAREOUS. adj. [glarieux, French; glareosus, Latin; from glaire.] Consisting of viscous transparent matter, like the white of an egg.

GLARING. adj. Applied to any thing notorious: as, a glaring crime.

GLASS. n. f. [glær, Saxon; glas, Dut. as Pezon imagines, from glis, British, green. In Etie it is called klänn, and this primarily signifies clean or clear, being so denominated from its transparency.]

1. An artificial substance made by fusing fixed salts and flint or sand together, with a vehement fire.

The word glass cometh from the Belgick and High Dutch: glafs, from the verb glafsen, which signifies amongst them to shine; or perhaps from glacies in the Latin, which is ice, whose colour it receiveth. Peacham on Drawing.

Glass is thought to compact and firm a body, that it is indestructible by art or nature, and is also of so close a texture that the subtlest chymical spirits cannot pervade it. Boyle.

Show'rs of grenades rain by sudden burst Disploding murderous bowels, fragments of steel And stones, and glass and nitrous grain adul. Philips

2. A glass vessel of any kind.

I'll see no more, And yet the eighth appears, who bears a glass Which shews me many more. Shaksp.

3. A looking-glass; a mirror.

He was the mark and glass, copy and book, That fashion'd others. Shaksp. Henry IV.

He spreads his subtle nets from sight, With tinkling glasses, to betray The larks that in the meshes light. Dryden.

4. An Hour Glass. A glass used in measuring time by the flux of sand.

Woe my wife's liver Infected as her life, she would not live The running of one glass. Shaksp.

5. The destined time of man's life.

No more his royal self did live, no more his noble sonne, The golden Meleager now, their glasses all were run. Chapman.

6. A cup of glass used to drink in.

To this last costly treaty, That swallow'd so much treasure, and like a glass Did break i' th' rinking. Shaksp. Henry VIII.

When thy heart Dilates with fervent joys, and eager soul Prompts to pursue the sparkling glass, he sure 'Tis time to thun it. Philips.

7. The quantity of wine usually contained in a glass; a draught.

While a man thinks one glass more will not make him drunk, that one glass hath disabled him from well discerning his present condition. Taylor.

The first glass may pass for health, the second for good-humour, the third for our friends; but the fourth is for our enemies. Temple.

8. A perspective glass

The moon whose orb Through optick glass the Tuscan artist views. Milton.

Like those who survey the moon by glasses, I tell of a shining world above, but not relate the glories of the place. Dryden.

GLASS. adj. Vitreous; made of glass.

Get thee glass eyes: And, like a scurvy politician, seem To see the things thou dost not. Shaksp.

Glass bottles are more fit for this second lining than those of wood. Mortimer's Husbandry.

To GLASS. v. a.

1. To see as in a glass; to represent as in a glass or mirror. Not in use.

Methinks I am partaker of thy passion, And in thy case do glass mine own debility. Sidney.

2. To case in glass.

Methought all his senses were lockt: in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy; Who tend'ring their own worth, from whence they were glass'd, Did point out to buy them, along as you pass. Shaksp.

To cover with glass; to glaze.

I have observed little grains of silver to lie hid in the small cavities, perhaps glass'd over by a vitrifying heat, in crucibles wherein silver has been long kept in fusion. Boyle.

GLASSFURNACE. n. f. [glass and furnace.] A furnace in which glass is made by liquefaction.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his hand into it, he may perhaps be awakened into a certainty that it is something more than bare imagination. Locke.

GLASSGAZING. adj. [glass and gazing.]

Finical; often contemplating himself in a mirror.

A whorson, glassgazing, finical rogue. Shaksp.

GLASSGRINDER. n. f. [glass and grinder.]

One whose trade is to polish and grind glass.

The glassgrinders complain of the trouble they meet with. Boyle.

GLASSHOUSE. n. f. [glass and house.]

A house where glass is manufactured.

I remember to have met with an old Romant Mosaic, composed of little pieces of clay half vitrified, and prepared at the glasshouses. Adisson.

GLASSMAN. n. f. [glass and man.] One who sells glass.

The profit of glasses consists only in a small present made by the glassman. Swift.

GLASSMETAL. n. f. [glass and metal.]

Glass in fusion.

Let proof be made of the incorporating of copper or brass with glassmetal. Bacon.

GLASSWORK. n. f. [glass and work.]

Manufacture of glass.

The crystalline Venice glass is a mixture, in equal portions, of stones brought from Pavia, and the ashes of a weed called kali, gathered in a desert between Alexandria and Rosetta; by the Egyptians used first for fuel, and then they crush the ashes into lumps like a stone, and so sell them to the Venetians for their glassworks. Bacon.

GLASSWORT. n. f. [salicornia, or saltwort.] A plant.

It hath an petalous flower, wanting the empalement; for the stamina, or chives, and the embryos grow on the extreme part of the leaves; these embryos afterward become pods or bladders, which, for the most part, contain one seed. The inhabitants near the sea-coast cut the plants up toward the latter end of summer; and having dried them in the sun, they burn them for their ashes, which are used in making of glass and soap. These herbs are by the country people called kelp. From the ashes of these plants is extracted the salt called sal kali, or alkali, by the chymists. Miller.

For the fine glass we use the purest of the finest sand, and the ashes of chali or glasswort; and for the coarser or green sort, the ashes of brake or other plants. Brown's Vulg. Err.

GLASSY. adj. [from glass.]

1. Made of glass; vitreous.

In the valley near Mount Carmel in Judea there is a sand, which, of all others, hath most affinity with glass; inasmuch as other minerals laid in it turn to a glassy substance. Bacon.

2. Resembling glass, as in smoothness or lustre, or brittleness.

Man's proud man! Drest in a little brief authority, Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd: His glassy essence, like an angry ape, Plays such fantastick tricks before high heav'n, As makes the angels weep. Shaksp.

There is a willow grows afloat a brook, That shows his hoary leaves in the glassy stream. Shaksp.

The magnet attracteth the shining or glassy powder brought from the Indies, usually employed in writing dust. Brown.

Whose womb produc'd the glassy ice? Who bred
The hoary frosts that fall on winter's head? Shaksp.

The glassy deep. Dryden's Æneid.

GLASTONBURY Thorn. n. f. A species of MEDLAR.

This species of thorn produces sem- bunches of flowers in winter, and flowers again in spring. Milner.

GLAUCOMA. n. f. [γλαυκωμα; glaucomé, French.] A fault in the eye, which changes the crystalline humour into a grayish colour, without detriment of sight, and therein differs from what is commonly understood by suffusion. Quincy

The glaucoma is no other disease than the cataract. Sharp.

GLAIVE. n. f. [glaiue, French; glajf, a hook, Welsh.] A broad sword; a falchion.

Two hundred Greeks came next in fight well try'd,
Not surely arm'd in steel or iron strong,
But each a glaiue hath pendant by his side. Fairfax

When zeal, with aged clubs and glaiues,
Gave chase to rockets and white slaves. Hudib.

To GLAVER. v. n. [glave, Welsh, flattery; għpan, Saxon, to flatter. It is still retained in Scotland.] To flatter; to wheedle. A low word.

Kingdoms have their distempers, intermissions, and paroxysms, as well as natural bodies; and a glavering council is as dangerous as a wheedling priest, or a flattering physician. L'Esfrange.

To GLAZE. v. a. [To glafs, only accidentally varied.]

1. To furnish with windows of glass.
Let there be two delicate cabinets daintily paved, richly hanged, and glazed with crystalline glass. Bacon's Essays.

2. To cover with glass, as potters do their earthen ware. [from the French glâse, argilla.]

3. To overlay with something shining and pellucid.

Sorrow's eye, glaz'd with brining tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects. Shaksp.

The reason of one man operates on that of another in all true oratory; wherein though with other ornaments he may glaze and brandish the weapons, yet is it found reason that carries the stroke home. Greav's Cosm. Sac.

White, with other strong colours with which we paint that which we intend to glaze, are the life, the spirit, and the lustre of it. Dryden.

GLAZIER. n. f. [corrupted from glazier, or glaffier, of glafs.] One whose trade is to make glass windows. Other manufacturers of glass are otherwise named.

Into rabbits the several panes of glasswork are set and fastened by the glazier. Mexon.

The dextrous glazier strong returns t' his bound,
And ginglyng fishes on the penthouse found. Gay's Trivia.

And then, without the aid of neighbour's art,
Perform'd the carpenter's and glazier's part. Harte

GLEAM. n. f. [gelioma, Saxon.] Sudden shoot of light; lustre; brightness.

Then was the far Dodonian tree far seen
Upon seven hills to spread his gladsome gleam;
And conquerors bedecked with his green,
Along the banks of the Ausonian stream. Spenser.

At last a gleam
Of dawning light turn'd thitherward in haste
His travell'd steps. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I bent down to look just opposite,
A shape within the wat'ry gleam appear'd,
Bending to look on me. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Mine is a gleam of bliss, too hot to last;
Wat'ry it shines, and will be soon o'ercast.
Dryden's Aurengzebe.

We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and lustrous helmets,
And covers all the field with gleams of fire. Addison's Cato.

In the clear azure gleam the flocks are seen,
And floating banks paint the waves with green. Pope.

Nought was seen, and nought was heard,
But dreadf'ul flames
Fires that glow. Pope's St. Cecilia.

To GLEAM. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To shine with sudden conflagration.
Observant of approaching day,
The meek-ey'd moon appears, mother of dews,
At first faint gleaming in the dappled east. Thomson's Summer.

2. To shine.
On each hand the gushing waters play,
And down the rough cascade white dashing fall,
Or gleam in lengthen'd vistas through the trees. Thomson.

GLEAMY. adj. [from gleam.] Flashing; darting sudden conflagrations of light.
In brazen arms, that cast a gleamy ray,
Swift through the town the warrior bends his way. Pope.

To GLEAN. v. a. [gleaner, French, as Skinner thinks, from granum, Latin.]

1. To gather what the reapers of the harvest leave behind.

She came and gleaned in the field after the reapers. Ruth.

Cheap conquest for his following friend remain'd;
He reap'd the field, and they but only glean'd. Dryden.

The precept of not gathering their land clean, but that something should be left to the poor to glean, was a secondary offering to God himself. Nelson.

She went, by hard necessity compell'd,
To glean Paternon's fields. Thomson.

2. To gather any thing thinly scattered.

So much as from occasions you may glean,
If aught, to us unknown, adlicts him thus. Shakspere's Hamlet.

That goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, end'nal, by extortion. Shakspere's Henry VIII.

They gleaned of them in the highways five thousand men. Judges.

But Argive chiefs, and Agamemnon's train,
When his resplendent arms flash'd through the shady plain,
Fled from his well-known face with wonted fear;
As when his thund'ring sword and pointed spear
Drove headlong to their ships, and glean'd the routed rear. Dryden's Æneid.

In the knowledge of bodies we must be content to glean what we can from particular experiments; since we cannot, from a discovery of their real essences, grasp at a time whole heaves, and in bundles comprehend the nature and properties of whole species together. Locke.

GLEAN. n. f. [from the verb.] Collection made laboriously by slow degrees.

Plains, meads, and orchards all the day he plies;
The gleans of yellow thyme distend his thighs:
He spoils the saffron. Dryden's Virgil.

GLE'ANER. n. f. [from glean.]

1. One who gathers after the reapers.

For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,

Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field. Thomson.

2. One who gathers any thing slowly and laboriously.

An ordinary coffee-house gleaner of the city is an arrant flatfiman. Locke.

GLE'ANING. n. f. [from glean.] The act of gleaning, or thing gleaned.

There shall be as the shaking of an olive-tree, and as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done. Bible.

The orphan and widow are members of the same common family, and have a right to be supported out of the incomes of it, as the poor Jews had to gather the gleanings of the rich man's harvest. Atterbury.

GLEBE. n. f. [gleba, Latin.]

1. Turf; soil; ground.

This, like the moory plots, delights in fedy bowers;
The grassy galebs loves, and oft attir'd with flowers

Of rank and mellow glebe. Drayton.
Fertile of corn the glebe of oil and wine,
With herds the pastures throng'd, with flocks the hills. Milton.

Mark well the flowing almonds in the wood;
If od'rous blooms the bearing branches load,
The glebe will answer to the sylvan reign,
Great heats will follow, and large crops of grain. Dryden.

Sleeping vegetables lie,
'Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to-day. Garth.

2. The land possessed as a part of the revenue of an ecclesiastical benefice.

The ordinary living or revenue of a parsonage is of three sorts: the one in land, commonly called the glebe; another in tythe, which is a set part of our goods rendered to God; the third, in other offerings bestowed upon God and his church by the people. Spelman.

A trespas done on a parson's glebe land, which is a freehold, cannot be tried in a spiritual court. Aylmer's Paragon.

Many parishes have not an inch of glebe. Swift.

GLEBOUS. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy. Diſ.

GLEBY. adj. [from glebe.] Turfy; perhaps in the following passage fat or fruitful, if it has indeed any meaning.

Pernicious flattery! thy malignant seeds
In an ill hour, and by a fatal hand
Sadly diffus'd o'er virtue's gleby land,
With rising pride amidst the coin appear,
And choke the hopes and harvest of the year. Prior.

GLEDE. n. f. [gledaglide, Saxon.] A kind of hawk.

Ye shall not eat the gled, the kite, and the vulture. Dictionomy.

GLEE. n. f. [gledgde, Saxon.] Joy; merriment; gaiety. It anciently signified musick played at feasts. It is not now used, except in ludicrous writing, or with some mixture of irony and contempt.

She marcheth home, and by her takes the knight,
Whom all the people follow with great glee. Fairy Queen.

Many warers make themselves glee by vexing the inhabitants; who again foretell not to baigne them with perfume. Carew.

Is Blouzelinda dead? Farewel my glee!
No happiness is now refer'd for me. Gay.

The poor man then was rich, and liv'd with glee;
Each barley-head untaxt, and day-light free. Harte.

GLEED, n. f. [from glopan, Saxon, to glow.] A hot glowing coal. A provincial and obsolete word GLEEFUL, adj. [glee and full.] Gay; merry; cheerful. Not used.

My lovely Anon, wherefore look'st thou sad,
When every thing doth make a gleeful boast?
Shakespeare.

GLEEK, n. f. [glijgge, Saxon.] Mulick; or mulician.

What wilt thou give us?—No money, but the gleek: I will give you the mulick.
Shakespeare.

To GLEEK, v. a. [glijgman, in Saxon, is a mulick or a dioll]

1. To sneer; to gibe; to droll upon.
I can gleek upon occasion
I have seen you gleeking or galling at this gentleman twice or thrice.
Shakespeare.

2. In Scotland it is still retained, and signifies to fool or spend time idly, with something of mimi cry or drollery.

To GREEN, v. n. To shine with heat or polish. I know not the original notion of this word: it may be of the same race with glow or with gleam. I have not remarked it in any other place.

Those who labour

The sweaty forege, who edge the crooked scythe,
Bend stubborn steel, and harden gleaming armour,
Acknowledge Vulcan's aid
Virg.

GLEET, n. f. [It is written by Skinner glitt, and derived from glijdan, Saxon, to run softly.] A fanious ooze; a thin ichor running from a fore.

A hard dry cicicat, without either matter or gleet.
Wijman's Surgery.

To GLEET, v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To drip or ooze with a thin fanious liquor.

His thumb being inflamed and swelled, I made an incision into it to the bone: this not only bled, but gleeted a few drops.
Wijman.

2. To run slowly.

Vapours raised by the sun make clouds, which are carried up and down the atmosphere, 'till they hit against the mountainous places of the globe, and by this concussion are condensed, and so gleet down the caverns of these mountains, whose inner parts, being hollow, afford them a basin.
Cheyne's Phil. Princ.

GLEETY, adj. [from gleet] Ichorous; thinly fanious

If the flesh lose its ruddiness, and the matter change to be thin and gleety, you may suspect it corrupting.
Wijman.

GLEN, n. f. [gleann, Erse.] A valley; a dale; a depression between two hills.

From me his madding mind is flart,
And woos the widow's daughter of the glen.
Spenser.

GLEW, n. f. [gluten, Latin.] A viscous cement made by dissolving the skins of animals in boiling water, and drying the gelly. See GLUE.

GLIB, adj. [from glib, Skinner.]

1. Smooth; slippery; so formed as to be easily moved.

Liquid bodies have nothing to sustain their parts, nor a v thing to cement them: the parts being glib are continually in motion, fall off from one another, which way soever gravity inclines them.
Burnet's Theory.

Habbakkuk brought him a smooth strong rope compactly twisted together, with a noose that slip as glib as a birdcatcher's gin.
Arbutnot.

2. Smooth; voluble.

I want that glib and dily at

To speak and purpose not, since what I well intend,

I'll do't before I speak. Shakespeare's King Lear.
There was never to much glib nonsense put together in well sounding English
Locke.

Now Carl his shop from fish drain;
Three genuine tons of Swift's rimon;
And ten, to make them pass the glibber, Revis'd by Turbald, More, and Casber, Swift.
Be sure he's a true spoken man;
Do but hear on the clergy how glib his tongue ran.
Swift.

GLIB, n. f.

The Irish have from the Scythians mantles and long glib; which is a thick curled tuft of hair hanging down over their eyes, and monstrously disfiguring them
Spenser on Ireland.

To GLIB, v. a. [from the adjective.] To castrate.

I'll geld them all: fourteen they shall not see,
To bring false generations; they are coheirs,
And I had rather glib myself, than they Should not produce fair issue.
Shakespeare.

GLIBLY, adv. [from glib.] Smoothly; volubly.

Many who would startle at an oath, whose flourishes as well as conscience recoil at an obscenity, do yet slide glibly into a detraction
Government of the Tongue.

GLIBNESS, n. f. [from glib.] Smoothness; slipperiness.

A polished, ice-like glibness doth ensold
The rock.
Chipsian's Odyssy.

The tongue is the most ready for motion of any member, needs not so much as the flexure of a joint, and by access of humours acquires a glibness too, the more to facilitate its moving.
Government of the Tongue.

To GLIDE, v. n. [glijdan, Saxon; glijden, Dutch.]

1. To flow gently and silently.

By east, among the dusty vallies glide
The silver streams of Jordan's crystal flood.
Purfax.

Broke by the jutting land on either side,
In double streams the briny waters glide.
Dryd.

Just before the confines of the wood,
The gliding Lethe leads her silent flood.
Dryd.

Where stay the Muses, in what lawn or grove?
In those fair fields where sacred Ihs glides,
Or else where Cam his winding vales divides.
Pope.

2. To pass on without change of step.

Ye gliding ghosts, permit me to relate
The mystick wonders of your silent state.
Dryden's Aeneid.

3. To move swiftly and smoothly along.

If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I glide thither in a day?
Shakespeare's Cymb.

Shoals of fish, with fins and shining scales,
Glide under the green wave.
Milton.

He trembl'd every limb, and felt a snarl
As if cold steel had glided through his heart.
Dryden's Fables.

All things are beheld as in a hasty motion, where the objects only glide before the eye and disappear.
Dryden.

GLIDE, n. f. [from the verb.] Laple; act or manner of passing smoothly.

About this neck
A green and gilded snake had wreath'd itself,
Who, with her head nimble in turrets, approach'd
The opening of his mouth; but suddenly,
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,
And with indented glides did slip away
Into a bush.
Shakespeare's As you like it.

GLIDER, n. f. [from glide.] One that glides.

The glance into my heart did glide;
Hey ho the glider;
Therewith my soul was sharply glide,
Such wounds soon waach wider.
Spenser.

GLIKE, n. f. [glijg, Saxon. See GLIECK.] A sneer; a scold; a scout. Not now in use.

Where's the ballad's-braves, and Charles his glies.
Shakespeare.

To GLIMMER, v. n. [glimmer, Dutch, to glow.]

1. To shine faintly.

The west yet glimmers with some streaks of day.
Shakespeare.

The truth appears so naked on my file,
That any purblind eye may find it out.
—And on my side it is so well appear'd,
So clear, so shining, and so evident,
That it will glimmer through a band man's eye.
Shakespeare.

For there no twilight of the sun's dull ray
Glimmers upon the pure and native day.
Cowley.

Out in glimmering bowers and glades
He met her.
Milton.

See'st thou yon dreary plain, forlorn and wild,
The seat of desolation, void of light,
Save what the glimming of t'wice liv'd flames
Casts pale and dreadful?
Milton's Par. Lost.

The sacred influence
Of light appears, and from the walls of heav'n
Shoos far into the bosom of dim night
A glimmering dawn.
Milton's Par. Lost.

Through these sad shades this chaos in my soul,
Some seeds of light at length begin to roll;
The rising motion of an infant ray,
Shot glimmering through the cloud, and promis'd day.
Prior.

Off by the winds, extinct the signal lies;
Or smother'd in the glimm'ring socket dies.
Gay's Trivia.

When rosy morn'ng glimmer'd o'er the dales,
He drove to pasture all the lusty males.
Pope.

2. To be perceived imperfectly; to appear faintly.

On the way the baggage post-boy, who had been at court, got a glimmering who they were.
Watson.

The pagan priesthood was always in the duists;
and there was a perceivable glimmering of the Jewish rites in it, though much corrupted.
Swift.

GLIMMER, n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica
and glimmer.
Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible and elastic: tale, catfisher, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.
Woodward.

GLIMMER, n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. Faint splendour; weak light.

2. A kind of fossil.

The lesser masses that are lodged in sparry and stony bodies, dispersedly, from their shining and glimmering, were an inducement to the writers
of fossils to give those bodies the name of mica
and glimmer.
Woodward on Fossils.

Stones which are composed of plates, that are generally plain and parallel, and that are flexible
and elastic: tale, catfisher, or glimmer, of which there are three sorts, the yellow or golden, the white or silvery, and the black.
Woodward.

GLIMPE, n. f. [glimmen, Dutch, to glow.]

1. A weak faint light.

Such vast room in nature,
Only to shine, yet scarce to contribute
Each orb a glimpse of light, convey'd so far Down to this habitable, which returns
Light back to them.
Milton.

Thousands of things, which now either wholly escape our apprehensions, or which our short-sighted reason having got some faint glimpse of,
we, in the dark, grope after.
Locke.

2. A quick flashing light.

Lig't as the lightning glimpse they ran?
My thoughtless youth was wing'd with vain desires,
My manhood, long mis'd by wand'ring fires, Follow'd false lights; and when their glimpse was gone,
My pride struck out new spangles of her own.
Dryden.

3. Transitory lustre.

There no dear glimpse of the sun's lovely face
Strikes through the solid darkness of the place.
Cowley.

If I, celestial fire, in aught
Have serv'd thy will, or gratified thy thought,
One glimpse of glory to my issue give;
Grac'd for the little time he has to live. Dryden.

4. Short fleeting enjoyment.

If, while this wearied flesh draws fleeting breath,

Not satisfy'd with life, afraid of death,
If haply be thy will that I should know
Glimpse of d. light, or pause from anxious woe;
From now, from instant now, great fire, dispel
The clouds that press my soul. Prior.

5. A short transitory view.

O friends! I hear the tread of nimble feet
Hasting this way, and now by glimpse discern Ithuriel, and Zephon, through the shade. Milton.
Some God punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might have a taste or glimpse of his present justice. Hakewill.

A man used to such sort of reflections, sees as much at one glimpse as would require a long discourse to lay before another, and make out in one entire and gradual deduction. Locke.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd. Dryden.

6. The exhibition of a faint resemblance.

No man hath a virtue that he has not a glimpse of. Shakspeare.

To GLISTEN. v. n. [glittan, German.]

To shine; to sparkle with light.
The bleating kind
Eye the bleak heaven, and next the glisening
earth,

With looks of dumb despair. Thomson.
The ladies eyes glisened with pleasure.
Richardson's Pamela.

To GLISTER. v. n. [glittan, German; glisleren, Dutch.] To shine; to be bright.

The wars flame most in summer, and the helmets glister brightest in the fairest sunshine.
Spenser on Ireland.

'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glistering grief,
And wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.

The golden fun
Gallops the zodiack in his glistering coach. Shaksf.
All that glister is not gold. Shakspeare.
You were more the eye and talk
Of the court to-day, than all Else that glister'd in Whitehall. Ben Jonson.

When the sun shone upon the shields of gold and brass the mountians glistered therewith, and shined like lamps of fire. Muccabees.

It consisted not of rubies, yet the small pieces of it were of a pleasant redish colour, and glistered prettily. Boyle.

GLISTER. n. f. [properly written clyster, from κλίστρον.] See CLYSTER. It is written wrong even by Brown.

Now enters Euseb with new state airs,
His lordship's premier minister;
And who, in all profound affairs,
Is held as needful as his glister. Swift.

Choler is the natural glister, or one excretion whereby nature excludeth another; which descending daily unto the bowels, extimulates those parts, and excites them unto expulsion. Brown.

To GLITTER. v. n. [glitman, Saxon.]

1. To shine; to exhibit lustre; to gleam.
Steel glosses are more resplendent than the like plates of brass, and so is the glittering of a blade Bacon's Phys. Rom.

Before the battle joins, from afar
The field yet glitters with the pomp of war.
Dryden's Virgil.

Scarce had'st thou time t' untheath thy con-
qu'ring blade;
It did but glitter, and the rebels fled. Granville.

2. To be specious; to be striking.

On the one hand fet the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

In crowds collected; and in courts sincere.
Young.

GLITTER. n. f. [from the verb.] Lustre;
bright show; splendour.

Clad
With what permissive glory since his fall
Was left him, or false glitter. Milton.

Flourish not too much upon the glitter of fortune, for fear there should be too much alloy in
it. Collier on Pride.

Take away this measure from our drest and habits, and all is turned into such paint and glitter, and ridiculous ornaments, as are a real shame to the wearer. Larv.

GLITTERAND. Shining; sparkling. A participle used by Chaucer and the old English poets. This participial termination is still retained in Scotland.

GLITTERINGLY. adv. [from glitter.]

GLOBOSE. adj. [globosus, Latin.] Spherical; round.

Regions, to which
All thy dominion, Adam, is no more
Than what this garden is to all the earth,
And all the sea; from one entire globe
Stretch'd into longitude. Milton's Par. Lost.

Then form'd the moon
Globe, and ev'ry magnitude of stars. Milton.

GLOBOSITY. n. f. [from globe.] Sphericality; sphericalness.

Why the same eclipse of the sun, which is seen to them that live more easterly, when the sun is elevated six degrees above the horizon, should be seen to them that live one degree more westerly, where the sun is but five degrees above the horizon, and so lower and lower proportionably, 'till at last it appear not at all; no account can be given, but the globosity of the earth. Ray on the Creation.

GLOBOUS. adj. [globosus, Latin.] When the accent is intenced to be on the last syllable, the word should be written globe, when on the first globous: I have transferred hither a passage of Milton, in which this rule has been neglected.]
Spherical; round.

Wide over all the plain, and wider far
Than all this globe earth in plain outspread;
Such are the courts of God! Milton.

The brazen instruments of death discharge
Horrible flames, and turpid streaming clouds;
Large globous irons fly, or dreadful bits,
Singeing the air. Philips.

GLOBULAR. adj. [globular, Lat.] Having the form of a small sphere; round;
spherical.

The figure of the atoms of all visible fluids seemeth to be globular, there being no other figure so well fitted to the making of fluidity.

Grew's Cosmologia Sacra.

GLOBULARIA. n. f. [Latin; globulaire, French.] A flocculous flower.
Miller.

GLOBULE. n. f. [globule, French;
globulus, Latin.] Such a small particle of matter as is of a globular or spherical figure; as the red particles of the blood, which swim in a transparent serum, and are easily discovered by the microscope.
'These will attract one another when they come within a due distance, and unite like the spheres of quicksilver.
Quincy.

The hailstones have opaque globules of snow in their centre, to intercept the light within the halo.
Newton's Opticks.

Blood consists of red globules, swimming in a thin liquor called serum: the red globules are elastic, and will break; the vessels which admit the smaller globule, cannot admit the greater without a disease. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLOBULOUS. adj. [from globule.] In form of a small sphere; round.

The whiteness of such globulous particles proceeds from the air included in the froth. Boyle.

To GLOMERATE. v. a. [glomerare, Latin.]
To gather into a ball or sphere. A filamentous substance gathered into a ball is said to be glomerated, but discon-tinuous particles are conglobated.

GLOMERATION. n. f. [glomeratio, Lat.]

1. The act of forming into a ball or sphere.

2. A body formed into a ball.
The rainbow consisteth of a glomeration of small drops, which cannot fall but from the air that is very low. Bacon.

GLOOMINESS. n. f. [from gloomy.]

1. Want of light; obscurity; imperfect light; dismalness.

2. Want of cheerfulness; cloudiness of look; heaviness of mind; melancholy.

Neglect spreads gloominess upon their humours, and makes them grow fullen and inconvertible.

Collier of the Spleen.

The gloominess in which sometimes the minds of the best men are involved, very often stands in need of such little incitements to mirth and laughter as are apt to disperse melancholy.

Addison.

GLOOMY. adj. [from gloom.]

1. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; almost dark; dismal for want of light.

These were from without

The growing miseries, which Adam saw

Already in part, though hid in gloomiest shade,

To sorrow abandon'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

Deep in a cavern dwells the drowy god,

Whose gloomy mansion nor the rising sun,

Nor setting visits, nor the lightsome noon.

Dryden's Fables.

The surface of the earth is clearer or gloomier,

just as the sun is bright or more overcast. Pope.

2. Dark of complexion.

That fair field

Of Enna, where Proserpine gathering flow'rs,

Herself a fairer flow'r by gloomy Dis

Was gather'd. Milton's Paradise Lost.

As I suppose, toward your once glory'd friend,

My son, now captivate, hither hath inform'd

Your younger feet, while mine cast back with age

Come lagging after. Milton's Agonistes

GLORIFICATION. n. f. [glorification, French, from glorify.] The act of giving glory.

VOL. I.

At opening your eyes, enter upon the day with thanksgiving for the preservation of you the last night, with the glorification of God for the works of the creation. Taylor.

To GLORIFY. v. a. [glorifier, French; glorifico, Latin.]

1. To procure honour or praise to one.

Two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the banks that bound them in. Shaksp.

Justice is their virtue: that alone
Makes them sit sure, and glorifies the throne.

Daniel.

2. To pay honour or praise in worship.

God is glorified when such his excellency, above all things, is with due admiration acknowledged.

Hooker.

This form and manner of glorifying God was not at that time first begun; but received long before, and alledged at that time as an argument for the truth.

Hooker.

Good fellow, tell us here the circumstance,

That we for thee may glorify the Lord. Shaksp.

All nations shall glorify thy name. Psalms.

Our bodies with which the apostle commands us to glorify God, as well as with our souls.

Duty of Man.

This is the perfection of every thing, to attain its true and proper end: and the end of all these gifts and endowments, which God hath given us, is to glorify the giver.

Tillotson.

3. To praise; to honour; to extol.

Whomsoever they find to be most licentious of life, desperate in all parts of disobedience and rebellious disposition, him they set up and glorify.

Spenser on Ireland.

No chymist yet the elixir got,

But glorifies his pregnant pot,

If by the way to him befall,

Some odoriferous thing, or med'cinal. Donne.

4. To exalt to glory in heaven; to raise to celestial beatitude.

If God be glorified in him, God shall also glorify him in himself, and shall straightway glorify him.

John.

Whom he justified, them be also glorified.

The members of the church remaining, being perfectly sanctified, shall be eternally glorified; then shall the whole church be truly and perfectly holy.

Pearson.

The soul, being immortal, will, at some time or other, retume its body again in a glorified manner.

Aylmer's Parergon.

GLORIOUS. adj. [gloriosus, Latin; glorieux, French.]

1. Boastful; proud; haughty; ostentatious.

Glorious followers, who make themselves as trumpets of the commendation of those they follow, taint business for want of secrecy. Bacon.

They that are glorious must needs be factious; for all bravery stands upon comparisons. Bacon.

2. Noble; illustrious; excellent. It is frequently used by theological writers, to express the brightness of triumphant sanctity rewarded in heaven.

Let them know that thou art Lord, the only God, and glorious over the whole world. Daniel.

He is glorious in respect of the brightness and splendor of his celestial body, till made more glorious and majestic by the authority which his Father hath committed to him of universal Judge.

Nelson.

Impartial justice holds her equal scales,

'Till stronger virtue does the weight incline;

If over thee thy glorious foe prevails,

He now defends the cause that once was thine.

Prior.

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,

And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Addison's Cato.

She must stand amongst the first servants of God, and be glorious amongst those that have fought the good fight.

Law.

If there be nothing so glorious as doing good, if there is nothing that makes us so like to God, then nothing can be so glorious in the use of our money, as to use it all in works of love and goodness. Law.

GLORIOUSLY. adv. [from glorious.] Nobly; splendidly; illustriously.

They inspire with those celestial flames, which shine so gloriously in their works. Dryd. n.

Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
And rise to faults true critics dare not mend.

Pope.

GLORY. n. f. [gloire, French; gloria, Latin. Among the old poets it was used sometimes as one syllable, glorē.]

1. Praise paid in adoration.

Glory to God in the highest. Luke.

2. The felicity of heaven prepared for those that please God.

Thou shalt guide me with thy counsel, and afterwards receive me into thy glory. Psalms.

Then enter into glory, and resume

His seat at God's right hand, exalted high

Above all names in heav'n. Milton's Par. Lost.

It is hardly possible for you to beseech and intrate God to make any one happy in the highest enjoyments of his glory to all eternity, and yet be troubled to see him enjoy the much smaller gifts of God, in this short and low state of human life.

Law.

3. Honour; praise; fame; renown; celebrity.

Think it no glory to swell in tyranny. Sidney.

Glory is like a circle in the water,

Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,

'Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Shakspere's Henry vt.

And with that word and warning soon was dight,

Each soldier longing for near coming glory.

Fairfax.

Israel's bright sceptre far less glory brings,

There have been fewer friends on earth than kings. Cowley.

Can we imagine that neither the ambition of princes, or interest, or gain in private persons, or curiosity and the desire of knowledge, or the glory of discoveries, could ever move them in that endless time to try their fortunes upon the sea.

Burnet.

Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown,
Of all applause, be fondest of your own. Young.

4. Splendour; magnificence.

Solomon, in all his glory, was not array'd like one of these. Matthew.

Treated to ill, chas'd from your throne,

Returning, you adorn the town;

And with a brave revenge do show

Their glory went and came with you. Waller.

Aristotle says, that should a man under ground converse with works of art, and be afterwards brought up into the open day, and see the several glories of the heaven and earth, he would pronounce them the works of God. Addison's Spect.

5. Lustre; brightness.

Now sleeping flocks on their soft fleeces lie;

The moon, serene in glory, mounts the sky. Pope.

From opening skies may steaming glories shine,

And fairs embrace thee with a love like mine.

Pope.

6. A circle of rays which surrounds the heads of saints in picture.

It is not a converting but a crowning grace; such an one as irradiates, and puts a circle of glory about the head of him upon whom it descends.

South's Sermons.

A smile plays with a surprizing agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distinction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.

Collier of the Assect.

7. Pride; boastfulness; arrogance.

By the vain glory of men they entered into the world, and therefore shall they come shortly to an end. Wisdom.

5 N

On death-beds fume in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die. Young.

8. Generous pride.

The success of those wars was too notable to be unknown to your ears, to which all worthy fame hath glory to come unto. Sidney.

To GLO'RY. v. n. [glorior, Latin.] To boast in; to be proud of.

With like judgment glorying when he had happened to do a thing well, as when he had performed some notable mischief. Sidney.

They were wont, in the pride of their own proceedings, to glory, that whereas Luther did but blow away the roof and Zuinglius batter but the walls of popish superstition, the last and hardest work of all remained, which was to raze up the very ground and foundation of popery. Hooker.

Let them look they glory not in mischief,
Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them. Shakespeare.

Your glorying is not good. I Corinthians.

Thou hast seen mount Atlas,

While storms and tempests thunder on its brow,
And oceans break their billows at its feet,
It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height. Addison's Cato.

This title of freeholder is what I most glory in, and what most effectually calls to my mind the happiness of that government under which I live. Addison's Freeholder.

If others may glory in their birth, why may not we, whose parents were called by God to attend on him at his altar? Atterbury.

No one is out of the reach of misfortune; no one therefore should glory in his prosperity. Clarissa.

To GLOSE. v. a. To flatter; to collogue.

Hammer. See To GLOZE.

GLOSS. n. f. [γλῶσσα; glose, French.]

1. A scholium; a comment.

They never hear sentence, which mentioneth the word or scripture, but forthwith their glosses upon it are the word preached, the scripture explain'd, or delivered unto us in sermons. Hooker.

If then all souls, both good and bad, do teach,
With gen'ral voice, that souls can never die;
'Tis not man's flatt'ring gloss, but nature's speech,
Which, like God's oracles, can never lie. Davies.

Some mutter at certain passages therein, by putting ill glosses upon the text, and taking with the left hand what I offer with the right. Howel.

All this, without a gloss or comment,
He could unriddle in a moment. Hadibras.

In many places he has perverted my meaning by his glosses, and interpreted my words into blasphemy and bawdry, of which they were not guilty. Dryden's Fables, Preface.

They give the scandal, and the wife discern;
Their glosses teach an age too apt to learn. Dryden.

Explaining the text in short glosses, was Accursius's method. Baker on Learning.

Indentures, cov'nants, articles they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes with all their glosses are. Pope.

2. Superficial lustre. In this sense it seems to have another derivation; it has perhaps some affinity to glow.

His iron coat all over-grown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glittering gloss dark'ned with filthy dust. Spenser.

You are a sectary,

That's the plain truth: your painted gloss discovers,

To men that understand you, words and weakness. Shakespeare.

Golden opinions from all sorts of people,
Which would be worn now in their newest glosses,
Shakespeare.

The doubt will be whether it will polish so well; for steel glosses are more resplendent than plates of brass. Bacon.

Weeds that the wind did tofs
The virgins wore: the youths, woven coats, that cast a faint dim gloss, Chapman's Iliads.

Like that of oil
It was the colour of devotion, giving a lustre to reverence, and a gloss to humility. South.

Groves, hedges, and meadows, are at any season pleasant to look upon; but never so much as in the opening of the spring, when they are all new and fresh, with their first gloss upon them. Addison's Spectator.

3. An interpretation artfully specious; a specious representation. This sense seems to partake of both the former.

Painters oft with silly poets join,
To fill the world with strange but vain conceit;
One brings the stuff, the other stamps the coin,
Which breeds nought else but glosses of deceit. Sidney.

It is no part of my secret meaning to draw you hereby into hatred, or to set upon the face of this cause any fairer gloss than the naked truth doth afford. Hooker, Preface.

He seems with forged quaint conceit
To set a gloss upon his bad intent. Shakespeare.

The common gloss

Of theologians. Milton.

To GLOSS. v. n. [glosser, French, from the noun.]

1. To comment.

Thou detain'st Briseis in thy hands,
By priestly glossing on the gods commands. Dryd.

2. To make sly remarks.

Her equals first observ'd her growing zeal,
And laughing gloss'd, that Abra, serv'd so well. Prior.

To GLOSS. v. a.

1. To explain by comment.

In parchment then, large as the fields, he draws,
Assurances, big as gloss'd civil laws. Donne.

2. To palliate by specious exposition or representation.

Is this the paradise, in description whereof so much glossing and deceiving eloquence hath been spent? Hooker's Sermons.

Do I not reason wholly on your conduct?
You have the art to gloss the foulest cause. Philips.

3. To embellish with superficial lustre.

But thou, who lately of the common strain
Wert one of us, if still thou dost retain
The same ill habits, the same follies too,
Gloss'd over only with a faint-like show,
Then I resume the freedom which I gave,
Still thou art bound to vice, and still a slave. Dryden's Persius.

GLOSSARY. n. f. [glossarium, Latin; glossaire, French.] A dictionary of obscure or antiquated words.

According to Varro, when delubrum was applied to a place, it signified such a one, in quo dei simulacrum dedicatum est; and also in the old glossaries. Stillingfleet.

I could add another word to the glossary. Baker.

GLOSSA'TOR. n. f. [glossateur, French, from gloss.] A writer of glosses; a commentator.

The reason why the assertion of a single judge does not prove the existence of judicial acts, is because his office is to pronounce judgment, and not to become an evidence: but why may not the same be said of two judges? Therefore, in this respect, the glossator's opinion must be false. Ayliffe.

GLOSSER. n. f. [glossarius, Latin.]

1. A scholiast; a commentator.

2. A polisher.

GLOSSINESS. n. f. [from glossy.] Smooth polish; superficial lustre.

Their surfaces had a smoothness and glossiness much surpassing whatever I had observed in marine or common salt. Boyle.

GLOSSOGRAPHER. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] A scholiast; a commentator.

GLOSSOGRAPHY. n. f. [γλῶσσα and γράφω.] The writing of commentaries.

GLOSSY. adj. [from gloss.] Shining; smoothly polished.

There came towards us a person of place; he had on him a gown with wide sleeves, of a kind of water-cambiet, of an excellent azure colour, far more glossy than ours. Bacon.

The rest entire

Shone with a glossy scarf. Milton.

His furcoat was a bearskin on his back;
His hair hung long behind, and glossy raven black. Dryden.

Myself will search our planted grounds at home,
For downy peaches and the glossy plum. Dryden.

GLOVE. n. f. [glope, Saxon, from klaffue, Danish, to divide.] Cover of the hands.

They flew about like chaff i' th' wind;
For haste some left their masks behind,
Some could not stay their gloves to find. Drayton.

White gloves were on his hands, and on his head
A wreath of laurel. Dryden.

To GLOVE. v. a. [from the noun.] To cover as with a glove.

Weaken'd with grief, being now enraged with grief,
Are thrice themselves: hence therefore, thou nice crutch;

A sealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakespeare's Henry IV.

The next he preys on is her palm,
That alm'nor of transpiring balm;
So soft, 'tis air but once remov'd;
Tender as 'twere a jelly glove'd. Cleveland.

GLO'VE. n. f. [from glove.] One whose trade is to make or sell gloves.

Does he not wear a great round beard like a Glover's paring knife? Shakespeare.

To GLOUT. v. n. [A low word of which I find no etymology.] To pout; to look fullen. It is still used in Scotland.

She lurks in midst of all her den, and streaks
From out a ghaisty whirlpool all her necks,
Where, glouting round her neck, to fish she falls. Chapman.

Glouting with fullen spight, the fury shook
Her cotted locks, and blasted with each look. Garth.

To GLOW. v. n. [glopan, Saxon; gloeyen, Dutch.]

1. To be heated so as to shine without flame.

But sithence silence lesseneth not my fire,
But told it flames, and hidden it does glow,
I will reveal what ye to much desire. Spenser.

His goodly eyes,
That o'er the files and musters of the war
Have glow'd like plated Mars, now bend, now turn Their office upon a tawny front. Shakespeare.

Kunigund, wife to the emperor Henry II. to show her innocency, did take seven glowing irons, one after another, in her bare hands, and had thereby no harm. Hakerwill.

Not all parts like, but all alike inform'd
With radiant light, as glowing iron with fire. Milton.

2. To burn with vehement heat.

Nor would you find it easy to compose
The mettled steed, when from their nostrils flows
The scorching fire that in their entrails glows. Addison's Oriol.

How op'ning heav'n's their happy regions show,
And yawning gulphs with flaming vengeance glow. Smith.

- Fires that glow,
Shrieks of woe. Pope.
3. To feel heat of body.
Did not his temples glow
In the same sultry winds and scorching heats?
Addison's Cato.
The cord slides swiftly through his glowing hands. Gay.
4. To exhibit a strong bright colour.
With smile that glow'd
Celestial rosy red, love's proper hue. Milton.
Clad in a gown that glows with Tyrian rays.
Dryden.
A malicious joy,
Whose red and fiery beams cast through your visage
A glowing pleasure. Dryden and Lee's Oedipus.
From the mingled strength of shade and light,
A new creation rises to my sight;
Such heav'nly figures from his pencil flow,
So warm with life his blended colours glow,
Admit the soft variety I'm lost. Addison.
Like th' ethereal glow'd the green expanse.
Savage.
Fair ideas flow,
Strike in the sketch, or in the picture glow.
Pope.
Not the fair fruit that on yon branches glows,
With that ripe red th' autumnal sun bestows,
Can move the god. Pope.
Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And fair Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.
Here clearer sits glow round the frozen pole.
Pope.
5. To feel passion of mind, or activity of fancy.
You strive in vain
To hide your thoughts from him, who knew too well
The inward glowings of a heart in love. Addison.
Forc'd compliments and formal bows
Will show thee just above neglect;
The fire with which thy lover glows,
Will settle into cold respect. Prior.
Did Shadrach's zeal my glowing breast inspire
To weary tortures, and rejoice in fire. Prior.
Let the gay conscience of a life well spent Calm ev'ry thought, inspire ev'ry grace,
Glow in thy heart, and smile upon thy face.
Pope.
With furies surrounded,
Despairing, confounded,
He trembles, he glows,
Amidst Rhodope's snows. Pope.
So perish all, whose breasts ne'er learn'd to glow
For others good, or melt at others woe. Pope.
To praise is always hard,
When real virtue fires the glowing bard. Lewis.
6. To rage or burn as a passion.
A fire which every windy passion blows;
With pride it mounts, and with revenge it glows.
Dryden.
When crept into aged veins,
Love slowly burns, and long remains;
It glows, and with a fullen heat,
Like fire in logs, it warms us long. Shadwell
- To Glow. v. a. To make hot so as to shine. Not in use
On each side her
Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,
With divers colour'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool.
Shakespeare.
- GLOW. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Shining heat.
2. Vehemence of passion.
3. Brightness or vividness of colour.
The pale complexion of true love,
And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain.
Shakespeare.
A waving glow his bloomy heds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.
Such as suppose that the great stile might happily be blended with the ornamental, that the

- simple, grave, and majestic dignity of Raffaele could unite with the glow and bustle of a Paulo, or Tintore, are totally mistaken. Reynolds.
- GLOWWORM. n. f. [glow and worm] A small creeping grub with a luminous tail.
The honey bags steal from the humble bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
And light them at the fiery glowworm's eyes.
Shakespeare.
The glowworm shows the mottin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his insectual fire. Shakespeare.
A great light downeth a smaller that it cannot be seen; as the sun that of a glowworm. Bacon.
The man, who fill upon the ground
A glowworm spy'd, supposing he had found
A moving diamond, a breathing stone;
For life it had, and like those jewels thone:
He held it dear, 'till by the springing day
Informed, he threw the worthless worm away.
Waller.
- To GLOZE. v. n. [gleyan, Saxon.]
1. To flatter; to wheedle; to insinuate; to fawn.
Man will hearken to his glozing lies,
And easily transgress. Milton's Parad. Lost.
So glow'd the tempter, and his proem tun'd:
Into the heart of Eve his words made way.
Milton.
A false glozing parasite would call his fool-hardiness valour, and then he may go on boldly, because blindly, and by mistaking himself for a lion, come to perish like an ass. South.
Now for a glozing speech,
Fair protestations, specious marks of friendship.
Philips.
2. To comment. This should be gloss.
Which Salique land the French unjustly gloze
To be the realm of France. Shaksp. Henry v.
- GLOZE. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Flattery; insinuation.
Now to plain dealing; lay these glozes by.
Shakespeare.
2. Specious show; gloss. Not used.
Precious couches full oft are shaken with a fever;
If them a bodily evil in a bodily gloze be not bidden,
Shall such morning dews be an ease to the heat of a love's fire? Stibney.
- GLOZEN. n. f. [from gloze.] A flatterer.
- GLUE. n. f. [glu, French; gluten, Lat.
glud, Welsh.] A viscous body commonly made by boiling the skins of animals to a jelly; any viscous or tenacious matter by which bodies are held one to another; a cement.
Water, and all liquors, do hastily receive dry and more terrestrial bodies proportionable; and dry bodies, on the other side, drink in waters and liquors: so that, as it was well said by one of the ancients of earthily and watery substances, one is a glue to another. Bacon's Nat. History.
The driest and most transparent glue is the best.
Moxon.
To build the earth did chance materials chuse,
And through the parts cementing glue diffuse.
Blackmore.
The flowers of grains, mixed with water,
will make a sort of glue. Abuthnot.
- To GLUE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To join with a viscous cement.
I fear thy overthrow
More than my body's parting with my soul:
My love and fear glu'd many friends to thee.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.
Whoso teacheth a fool is as one that glieth a porchard together. Ecclesi.
The custom of crowning the holy Virgin is so much in vogue among the Italians, that one often sees in their churches a little tinsel crown, or a circle of flars, glued to the canvass over the head of the figure. Addison on Italy.
Moist wounds, if kept clean, and from the

- air, the flesh will glue together with its own native balm. Derham.
2. To hold together.
The parts of all homogeneal hard bodies, which fully touch one another, stick together very strongly; and for explaining how this may be, some have invented hooked atoms, which is begging the question; and others tell us their bodies are glued together by rest; that is, by an occult quality, or rather by nothing. Newton.
3. To join; to unite; to inviscerate.
Those wasps in a honeypot are sensual men plunged in their lust and pleasures; and when they are once glued to them, 'tis a very hard matter to work themselves out. L'Esperance.
Intemperance, sensuality, and fleshly lusts,
do debauch mens minds and clog their spirits; sink us down into sense, and glue us to those low and inferior things. Tilbison.
She curb'd a groan, that else had come;
And pausing, view'd the present in the tomb:
Then to the heart ador'd devoutly glu'd
Her lips, and, raising it, her speech renew'd.
Dryden.
I hear thee, view thee, gaze o'er all thy charms,
And round thy phantom glue my clasping arms.
Pope.
- GLU'BOILER. n. f. [glue and boil.] One whose trade is to make glue.
- GLUER. n. f. [from glue.] One who cements with glue.
- GLUM. adj. [A low cant word formed by corrupting gloom.] Sullen; stubbornly grave.
Some, when they hear a story, look glum, and cry, Well what then? Guardian.
- To GLUT. v. a. [engloutir, French; glutio, Latin, to swallow; γλυτω.]
1. To swallow; to devour.
Till cram'd and gorg'd, nigh burst
With suck'd and glutted offal. Milton.
2. To cloy; to fill beyond sufficiency; to fate; to disgust.
The ambassador, making his oration, did so magnify the king and queen, as was enough to glut the hearers. Bacon.
Love breaks friendship, whose delights
Feed, but not glut our appetites. Denham.
What way remove
His settled hate, and reconcile his love,
That he may look propitious on our toils,
And hungry graves no more be glutted with our spoils. Dryden.
No more, my friend;
Here let our glutted execution end. Dryden's Æn.
I found
The fickle ear soon glutted with the sound,
Condemn'd eternal changes to pursue,
Tir'd with the last, and eager of the new. Prior.
3. To feast or delight even to satiety.
With death's carcass glut the grave. Milton.
His faithful heart, a bloody sacrifice,
Tom from his breast, to glut the tyrant's eyes.
Dryden.
A sylvan scene, which, rising by degrees,
Leads up the eye below, nor gluts the sight
With one full prospect; but invites by many,
To view at last the whole. Dryden.
4. To overfill; to load.
He attributes the ill success of either party to their glutting the market, and retailing too much of a bad commodity at once. Abuthnot.
5. To saturate.
The menstruum, being already glutted, could not act powerfully enough to dissolve it. Boyle.
- GLUT. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. That which is gorged or swallowed.
Disgorged soul
Their devilish glut, chain'd thundersbolts, and hail
Of iron globes. Milton's Paradise Lost.
2. Plenty even to loathing and satiety.

So death

Shall be deceiv'd his glut; and with us two
Be forc'd to satisfy his ravenous maw. Milton.
Let him but set the one in balance against the other, and he shall find himself miserable, even in the very glut of his delights. L'Estrange.
A glut of study and retirement in the first part of my life, cast me into this; and this will throw me again into study and retirement. Pope.

3. More than enough; overmuch.
If you pour a glut of water upon a bottle, it receives little of it. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

4. Any thing that fills up a passage.
The water some suppose to pass from the bottom of the sea to the heads of springs, through certain subterranean conduits or channels, until they were by some glut, stop, or other means, arrested in their passage. Woodward.

GLUTINOUS. adj. [glutineux, French; from gluten, Latin.] Gluy; viscous; tenacious.

The cause of all vivification is a gentle and proportionable heat, working upon a glutinous and yielding substance; for the heat doth bring forth spirit in that substance, and the substance being glutinous, produceth two effects; the one that the spirit is detained, and cannot break forth; the other, that the matter, being gentle and yielding, is driven forwards by the motion of the spirits, after some swelling, into shape and members. Bacon's Natural History.

Next this marble venom'd seat,
Smear'd with gums of glutinous heat. Milton.
Nourishment too viscid and glutinous to be subdued by the vital force. Arbutnot on Aliments.

GLUTINOUSNESS. n. f. [from glutinous.] Viscosity; tenacity.

There is a resistance in fluids, which may arise from their elasticity, glutinosities, and the friction of their parts. Chzyne.

GLUTTON. n. f. [glouton, French; from glutio, Latin, to swallow.]

1. One who indulges himself too much in eating.

The Chinese eat horseflesh at this day, and some gluttons have used to have catsflesh baked. Bacon's Natural History.

Through Macer's gullet the runs down
While the vile glutton dines alone;
And, void of modesty and thought,
She follows Bibbo's endless draught. Prior.

If a glutton was to say in excuse of his gluttony, that he only eats such things as it is lawful to eat, he would make as good an excuse for himself as the greedy, covetous, ambitious tradesman, that should say, he only deals in lawful business. Law.

2. One eager of any thing to excess.

The rest bring home in state the happy pair
To that last scene of bliss, and leave them there;
All those free joys insatiably to prove,
With which rich beauty feasts the glutton love. Cowley.

Gluttons in murder, wanton to destroy,
Their fatal aits to impiously employ. Granville.

To GLUTTONISE. v. n. [from glutton.]

To play the glutton; to be luxurious.

GLUTTONOUS. adj. [from glutton.] Given to excessive feeding; delighted overmuch with food.

When they would smile and fawn upon his debts,
And take down th' interest in their gluttonous maws. Shakespeare.

The exceeding luxuriousness of this gluttonous age, wherein we prefs nature with overweighty turgens, and finding her strength defective, we take the work out of her hands, and commit it to the artificial help of strong waters. Raleigh.
Well observe

The rule of not too much, by temperance taught
In what thou eat'st and drink'st; seeking from thence

Due nourishment, no gluttenous delight. Milton.

GLUTTONOUSLY. adv. [from gluttonous.] With the voracity of a glutton.

GLUTTONY. n. f. [gluttonie, French; from glutton.] Excess of eating; luxury of the table.

Gluttony, a vice in a great fortune, a curse in a small. Holiday.

Their sumptuous gluttonies and gorgeous feasts,
On citron tables or Atlantick stone. Milton.

Well may they fear some miserable end,
Whom gluttony and want at once attend. Dryden's Juvenal.

The inhabitants of cold moist countries are generally more fat than those of warm and dry; but the most common cause is too great a quantity of food, and too small a quantity of motion; in plain English, gluttony and laziness. Arbutnot.

GLUY. adj. [from glue.] Viscous; tenacious; glutinous.

It is called balsamick mixture, because it is a gluy spumous matter. Harvey on Conf.

With gluy wax some new foundations lay
Of virgin combs. Dryden's Ann. Mirab.

Whatever is the composition of the vapour let it have but one quality of being very gluy or viscous, and it will mechanically solve all the phenomena of the grotto. Addison.

GLYN. n. f. [Irish; gleann, glyn, plur. Erse; glenn, Scottish.] A hollow between two mountains.

Gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mucks at it, and sets it light. Shakespeare's Richard II.

The gnarling porter durst not whine for doubt;
Still were the furies while their sovereign spoke. Fairfax.

GNARLED. adj. [gnar, nar, or nurr, is in Staffordshire a hard knot of wood which boys drive with sticks.] Knotty.

Merciful heav'n!
Thou rather with thy sharp and sulph'rous bolt
Split'st the unwedgeable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. Shaksp. Measure for Measure

To GNASH. v. a. [knaschen, Dutch.] To strike together; to clash.

The seer, who could not yet this wrath as-swage,
Row'd his green eyes, that spark'd with his rage,
And gnash'd his teeth. Dryden's Virgil

To GNASH. v. n.

1. To grind or collide the teeth.

He shall gnash with his teeth, and melt away. Psalms.

There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth. Matthew.

56. To Go by. To observe as a rule.
'Tis not to be supposed, that by searching one can positively judge of the size and firm of a stone; and indeed the frequency of the fits, and violence of the symptoms, are a better rule to go by. Sharp's Surgery.
57. To Go down. To be swallowed; to be received, not rejected.
Nothing so ridiculous, nothing so impossible, but it goes down whole with him for truth and earnest. L'Estrange.
Folly will not easily go down in its own natural form with discerning judges. Dryden.
If he be hungry, bread will go down. Locke.
Ministers are so wise to leave their proceedings to be accounted for by reasoners at a distance, who often mould them into the systems that do not only go down very well in the coffeehouse, but are supplies for pamphlets in the present age. Swift.
58. To Go in and out. To do the business of life.
The lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in. Psalms.
59. To Go in and out. To be at liberty.
He shall go in and out, and find pasture. John.
60. To Go off. To die; to go out of life; to de cease.

I would the friends we miss were safe arrived:
Some must go off; and yet, by these I see,
So great a day as this is cheaply bought. Shakf.
In this manner he went off, not like a man that departed out of life, but one that returned to his abode. Tatler.

61. To Go off. To depart from a post.
The leaders having charge from you to stand,
Will not go off until they hear you speak. Shakf.

62. To Go on. To make attack.
Bold Cethegus,
Whose valour I have turn'd into his poison,
And prais'd fo to daring, as he would Go on upon the gods. Ben Jonson's Catiline.

63. To Go on. To proceed.
He found it a great war to keep that peace, but was fain to go on in his story. Sidney.
He that desires only that the work of God and religion shall go on, is pleas'd with it, whoever is the instrument. Taylor.
I have escap'd many threats of ill fits by these motions: if they go on, the only pollice I have dealt with is wool from the belly of a fat sheep.

To look upon the soul as going on from strength to strength, to consider that she is to shine forever with new accessions of glory, and brighten to all eternity, is agreeable. Addison.

Go on cheerfully in the glorious course you have undertaken. Addison.

Copious bleeding is the most effectual remedy in the beginning of the disease; but when the ex-pectoration goes on successfully, not so proper, because it sometimes suppresseth it. Arbutnot.

I have already handled some abuses during the late management, and in convenient time shall go on with the rest. Swift.

When we had found that design impracticable, we should not have gone on in so expensive a management of it. Swift.

Many clergymen write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent blots and interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extraordinary expletives.

I wish you health to go on with that noble work.
Berkley.

64. To Go over. To revolt; to betake himself to another party.

In the change of religion, men of ordinary understandings don't so much consider the principles as the practice of those to whom they go over. Addison on Italy.

Power, which, according to the old maxim, was used to follow, is now gone over to money.

65. To Go out. To go upon any expedition.
You need not have pick'd me: there are other men fitter to go out than I. Shakspere.

66. To Go out. To be extinguished.
Think'st thou the fiery fever will go out,
With titles blown from adulation? Shakspere.
Spirit of wine burned till it go out of itself, will burn no more. Bacon's Nat. History.

The care of a state, or an army, ought to be as constant as the chimney's fire, to make any great production; and if it goes out for an hour, perhaps the whole operation fails. Temple.

The morning, as mistaken, turns about;
And all her early fires again go out. Dryden.
Let the acquaintance be decently buried, and the flame rather go out than be smothered. Collier.
My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure. Addf.
And at her felt approach and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night. Pope.

67. To Go through. To perform thoroughly; to execute.

Finding Pyrocles every way able to go through with that kind of life, he was as desirous for his sake as for his own to enter into it. Sidney.
If you can as well go through with the statute laws of that land, I will think you have not left all your time there. Spenser.

Kings ought not to suffer their council to go through with the resolution and direction, as if it depended on them, but take the matter back into their own hands. Bacon.

He much feared the earl of Antrim had not steadiness of mind enough to go through with such an undertaking. Clarendon.

The amazing difficulty and greatness of his account will rather terrify than inform him, and keep him from setting heartily about such a task, as he despairs ever to go through with it. South.

The powers in Germany are borrowing money,
in order to go through their part of the expence.
Addison on the War.

68. To Go through. To suffer; to undergo.

I tell thee that it is absolutely necessary for the common good that thou shouldst go through this operation. Arbutnot.

69. To Go upon. To take as a principle.
This supposition I have gone upon through these papers. Addison.

70 The senses of this word are very indifferent; its general notion is motion or progression. It commonly expresses passage from a place, in opposition to come.
This is often observable even in figurative expressions. We say, the words that go before and that come after: to-day goes away and to-morrow comes.

Go to. interj. Come, come, take the right course. A scornful exhortation.

Go to then, O thou far renowned son
Of great Apollo; shew thy famous might In medicine. Spenser.

Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow:
Let me be clear of thee. Shakspere.

My favour is not bought with words like these:
Go to; you'll teach your tongue another tale.

Roswe.

GO-BETWEEN. n. f. [go and between.] One that transacts business by running between two parties. Commonly in an ill sense.

Even as you came in to me, her assistant, or go-between, parted from me: I say I shall be with her between ten and eleven. Shakspere.

GO-BY. n. f. Delusion; artifice; circum-vention; overreach.

Except an apprentice is instructed how to adulterate and varnish, and give you the go by upon occasion, his master may be charged with neglect.
Collier on Pride.

GO-CART. n. f. [go and cart.] A machine in which children are enclosed to teach them to walk, and which they push forward without danger of falling.

Young children, who are try'd in
Go-carts, to keep their steps from sliding,
When members knit, and legs grow stronger,
Make use of such machine no longer. Prior.

GOAD. n. f. [gād, Saxon.] A pointed instrument with which oxen are driven forward.

Oft in his harden'd hand a goad he bears. Pope.

To GOAD. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prick or drive with the goad.
2. To incite; to stimulate; to instigate;
to drive forward.

Most dangerous
Is that temptation, that doth goad us on
To sin in loving virtue. Shakspere.

Goaded with most sharp occasions,
Which lay nice manners by, I put you to
The use of your own virtues. Shakspere.

Of all that breathes the various progeny,
Stung with delight, is goaded on by thee. Dryd.

GOAL. n. f. [gaule, French, a long pole, set up to mark the bounds of the race.]

1. The landmark set up to bound a race;

the point marked out to which racers run.

As at the Olympian games, or Pythian fields,
Part curb their fiery steeds, or shun the goal
With rapid wheels. Milton's Paradise Lost.

And the sloe sun his upward beam
Shoots against the dusky pole,
Pacing toward the other goal. Milton.

2. The starting post.

Hast thou beheld, when from the goal they start,
The youthful charioteers with heaving heart
Rush to the race? Dryden's Virgil.

3. The final purpose; the end to which a design tends.

Our poet has always the goal in his eye, which directs him in his race: some beautiful design, which he first establishes, and then contrives the means, which will naturally conduct him to his end. Dryden.

Each individual seeks a several goal;
But heav'n's great view is one, and that the whole. Pope.

So man, who here seems principal alone,
Perhaps acts second to some sphere unknown;
Touches some wheel, or verges to some goal;
'Tis but a part we see, and not a whole. Pope.

4. It is sometimes improperly written for goal, or jail.

GOAR. n. f. [goror, Welsh] Any edging sewed upon cloth to strengthen it. Skinner.

GOAT. n. f. [gaz, Saxon and Scottish.] A ruminant animal that seems a middle species between deer and sheep.

Gall of goat, and slips of yew. Shakspere.
We Cyclops care not for your goat-fel Jove,
Nor other blest ones; we are better fare. Chapm.
You may draw naked boys riding and playing with their papermills uput goats, eagles, or dolphins. Peacham.

The little bear that rock'd the mighty Jove,
The swan whose borrow'd shape conceal'd his love,

Are grac'd with light; the nursing goat's repaid
With heav'n, and duty rais'd the pious maid.

Creech.

GOATBEARD. n. f. [goat and beard; barba capri.] A plant.

GOATCHAFER. n. f. An insect; a kind of beetle. Bailey.

GOATHERD. n. f. [gāt and hyn'd, Sax.
a feeder or tender.] One whose employment is to tend goats.

Is not think same goatherd proud,
That sits on yonder bank,
Whose straying herd themselves doth shroud
Among the bushes rank? Spenser's Pastoral.

They first gave the goatherd good contentment, and the marquis and his servant chased the kid about the stack. Wotton.

GOATMARJORAM. n. f. The same with GOATBEARD.

GOATSMILK. n. f. [goat and milk.] This is more properly two words.]

After the fever and such like accidents are diminished, asses and goatsmilk may be necessary.
Wise man's Surgery.

GOATMILKER. n. f. [goat and milker.] A kind of owl so called from sucking goats. Bailey.

GOATS RUE. n. f. [galega.] A plant.

Goat's Rue has the reputation of being a great alexipharmick and sudorifick: the Italians eat it raw and boiled; with us it is of no esteem. Hill.

GOATSKIN. n. f. [goat and skin.] Then fill'd two goatskins, with hot hands divine;
With water one, and one with fable wine. Pope.

GOATSTHORN. n. f. [goat and thorn.] An herb.

GOATISH. adj. [from goat.] Resembling a goat in any quality; as rankness; lust.

An admirable evasion of a whoremaster, man, to lay his goatish disposition on the change of a star.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

The last is notorious for its goatish smell, and tufts not unlike the beard of that lecherous animal.

More against Atheism.

GOB. n. f. [gobe, French.] A small quantity. A low word.

Do't think I have so little wit as to part with such a gob of money?

L'Esrange.

GO'BLET. n. f. [gobe, French.] A mouthful; as much as can be swallowed at once.

Therewith she spew'd, out of her filthy maw, A flood of poison, horrible and black, Full of great lumps of flesh and goblets raw.

Spenser.

By devilish policy art thou grown great, And like ambitious Sylla, overgorg'd With goblets of thy mother's bleeding heart.

Shakspeare's Henry vi.

The cooks, slicing it into little goblets, prick it on a prong of iron, and hang it in a furnace.

Sandys' Travels.

The giant gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and blood,

Lay stretch'd at length, and snoring in his den, Belching raw goblets from his maw, o'ercharg'd With purple wine and cruddled gore confus'd.

Addison.

To GO'BLET. v. a. [from the noun.] To swallow at a mouthful. A low word.

Down comes a kite powdering upon them, and goblets up both together.

L'Esrange.

To GO'BBLE. v. a. [gobber, to swallow, old French.] To swallow hastily with tumult and noise.

The sheep were so keen upon the acorns, that they gobbled up now and then a piece of the coat along with them.

L'Esrange.

Of last year's corn in barn great store; Fat turkeys gobbling at the door.

Prior.

The time too precious now to waste, And supper gobbled up in haste, Again afresh to cards they run.

Swift.

GO'BBLER. n. f. [from gobble.] One that devours in haste; a gormand; a greedy eater.

GO'BLET. n. f. [goblet, French.] A bowl, or cup, that holds a large draught.

My figur'd goblets for a dish of wood. We love not loaded boards, and goblets crown'd; But free from surfeits our repose is found.

Denham.

Crown high the goblets with a chearful draught; Enjoy the present hour, adjourn the future thought.

Dryden.

GO'BLIN. n. f. [French; gobeline, which Spenser has once retained; writing it in three syllables. This word some derive from the Gibellines, a faction in Italy; so that elze and goblin is Guelph and Gibelline, because the children of either party were terrified by their nurses with the name of the other: but it appears that elze is Welsh, and much older than those factions. Eiliff uifon, are phantoms of the night, and the Germans likewise have long had spirits among them named goboldi, from which gobeline might be derived.]

1. An evil spirit; a walking spirit; a frightful phantom.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us! Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd, Bring with thee airs from heav'n, or blasts from hell!

Shakspeare.

To whom the goblin, full of wrath, reply'd, Art thou that traitor angel?

Milton's Par. Lost.

Always, whilst he is young, be sure to preserve his tender mind from all impressions and notions of spirits and goblins, or any fearful apprehensions in the dark.

Locke.

2. A fairy; an elf.

His son was Elfincel, who overcame The wicked gobbelines in bloody field; But Elfant was of most renowned fame, Who of all crystal did Pantica build.

Spenser.

Go, charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions; shorten up their sinews With aged cramps.

Shakspeare's Tempest.

Mean time the village rouses up the fire, While well attested, and as well believ'd, Heard solemn goes the goblin story round.

Thomf.

GOD. n. f. [god, Saxon, which likewise signifies good. The same word passes in both senses with only accidental variations through all the Teutonick dialects.]

1. The Supreme Being.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth.

Jshu.

God above

Deal between thee and me. All the churches of God are united into one by the unity of discipline and government, by virtue whereof the same Christ ruleth in them all.

Pearson.

The Supreme Being, whom we call God, is necessary, self-existent, eternal, immense, omnipotent, omniscient, and best being; and therefore also a being who is and ought to be esteemed most sacred or holy.

Grew's Cosmologia.

2. A false god; an idol.

He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed.

Exod.

As flies to wanton boys are we to the gods, They kill us for their sport.

Shakspeare's King Lear.

Strong god of arms, whose iron sceptre sways The freezing north, and Hyperborean seas, And Scythian colds, and Thracia's winter coast, Where stand thy steeds, and thou art honour'd most.

Dryden.

3. Any person or thing deified or too much honoured.

Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly.

Philippians.

I am not Licio,

But one that scorns to live in this disguise, For such a one as leaves a gentleman, And makes a god of such a cullion.

Shakspeare.

To GOD. v. a. [from the noun.] To deify; to exalt to divine honours.

This last old man

Lov'd me above the measure of a father; Nay god'ed me, indeed.

Shakspeare's Coriolanus.

GO'DCHILD. n. f. [god and child.] A term of spiritual relation; one for whom one became sponsor at baptism, and promised to see educated as a christian.

GO'DDAUGHTER. n. f. [god and daughter.] A girl for whom one became sponsor at baptism. A term of spiritual relation.

GO'DDESS. n. f. [from god.] A female divinity.

Hear, nature, hear; dear goddesses hear a father?

Shakspeare.

A woman I forswore; but I will prove, Thou being a goddess, I forswore not thee: My vow was earthy, thou a heav'nly love.

Shakspeare.

I long have waited in the temple night, Built to the gracious goddesses Clemency; But reverence thou the pow'r.

Dryden.

From his feat the goddesses born arose, And thus undaunted spoke.

Dryden's Fables.

When the daughter of Jupiter presented herself among a crowd of goddesses, she was distinguished by her graceful stature and superior beauty.

Addison.

Modesty with-held the goddess' train. Pope. GO'DDESS-LIKE. adj. [goddesses and like.] Resembling a goddess.

Then female voices from the shore I heard; A maid amidst them goddess-like appear'd.

Pope.

GO'DFATHER. n. f. [god and father.] The sponsor at the font.

He had a son by her, and the king did him the honour as to stand godfather to his child.

Bacon's Henry viii.

Confirmation, a profitable usage of the church, transferred from the apostles, consists in the child's undertaking in his own name the baptismal vow; and that he may more solemnly enter this obligation, bringing some godfather with him, not now, as in baptism, as his procurator.

Hanmond.

GO'DHEAD. n. f. [from god.]

1. Godship; deity; divinity; divine nature. It is used both of idols and of the true God.

Be content:

Your low-laid son our godhead will uplift.

Shakspeare.
At the holy mount

Of heav'n's high-seated top, th' imperial throne Of godhead, fix'd for ever firm and sure, The filial pow'r arriv'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

So may thy godhead be confest, So the returning year be blest.

Prior.

2. A deity in person; a god or goddesses.

Were your goddesses to borrow of men, men would forsake the gods.

Shakspeare's Timon.

Adoring first the genius of the place, The nymphs and native godheads yet unknown.

Dryden's Æneid.

GO'DLESS. adj. [from god.] Without sense of duty to God; atheistical; wicked; irreligious; impious.

Of these two sorts of men, both goddesses, the one has utterly no knowledge of God, and the other studies how to persuade themselves that there is no such thing to be known.

Hooker.

That goddesses crew

Rebellious.

Milton.

For faults not his, for guilt and crimes Of goddesses men, and of rebellious times, Him his ungrateful country sent, Their best Camillus, into banishment.

Dryden.

GOLD. n. f. [golg, Saxon; golud, riches, Welsh. It is called gold in our English tongue, either of geel, as Scaliger says, which is in Dutch to shine; or of another Dutch word, which is gellen, and signifies in Latin valere, in English to be of price or value: hence cometh their ordinary word gelt, for money. Peacham on Drawing.]

1. Gold is the heaviest, the most dense, the most simple, the most ductile, and most fixed of all bodies, not to be injured either by air, or fire, and seeming incorruptible. It is soluble by means of sea-salt; but is injured by no other salt. Gold is frequently found native, and very rarely in a state of ore. Pure Gold is so fixed, that Boerhaave informs us of an ounce of it set in the eye of a glass furnace for two months, without losing a single grain. Hill on Fossils.

Gold hath these natures: greatness of weight, closeness of parts, fixation, plianctness or softness, immunity from rust, and the colour or tincture of yellow. Bacon's Natural History.

Ah! Buckingham, now do I ply the touch,
To try if thou be current gold indeed. Shakspeare.

We readily say this is gold, and that a silver goblet, only by the different figures and colours represented to the eye by the pencil. Locke.

The gold thought vessel which madtempests beat,
He fees now vainly make to his retreat. Dryden.

2. Money.

For me, the gold of France did not seduce,
Although I did admit as a motive
The sooner to effect what I intended. Shakspeare.

Thou that so stoutly had resisted me,
Give me thy gold, if thou hast any gold;
For I have bought it with an hundred blows. Shakspeare's Henry vi.

3. It is used for any thing pleasing or valuable. So among the ancients χρυσον ἀποδοτικον; and animamque more'sque aureos educit in astra. Horace.

GO'LDBEATER. n. f. [gold and beat.]

One whose occupation is to beat or soliate gold to gild other matter.

Our goldbeaters, though, for their own profit sake, they are wont to use the finest gold they can get, yet they scruple not to employ coined gold; and that the mint-masters are wont to alloy with copper or silver, to make the coin more stiff, and less subject to be wasted by attrition. Boyle.

GO'LDBEATER'S Skin. n. f. The intestinum rectum of an ox, which goldbeaters lay between the leaves of their metal while they beat it, whereby the membrane is reduced thin, and made fit to apply to cuts or small fresh wounds, as is now the common practice. Quincy.

When your gillyflower blow, if they break the pod, open it with a penknife at each division, as low as the flower has burst it, and bind it about with a narrow slip of goldbeaters skin, which moisten with your tongue, and it will stick together. Mortimer.

GO'LDBOUND. adj. [gold and bound.]

Encompassed with gold.
Thy air,
Thou other goldbound lion is like the first. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

GO'LDEN. adj. [from gold.]

1. Made of gold; consisting of gold.

Of golden metal, that must round my brow,
Were redhat steel to fear me to the brain. Shakspeare.
Nine royal knights in equal rank succeed,
Each warrior mounted on a fiery steed,
In golden armour glorious to behold;
The rivets of their arms were nail'd with gold. Dryden.

2. Shining; bright; splendid; resplendent.

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fish morning drops upon the rose;
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep. Shakspeare.

'Tis better to be lowly born

Than wear a golden sorrow. Shakspeare.
Heaven's golden winged herald late he saw
To a poor Galilean virgin sent. Cryshaw.

They held a good share of civil and military employments during the whole time of the usurpation. Swift.

21. Elegant; decent; delicate: with breeding.

If the critic has published nothing but rales and observations in criticism, I then consider whether there be a propriety and elegance in his thoughts and words, clearness and decency in his remarks, wit and good breeding in his delivery.

Mankind have been forced to invent a kind of artificial humanity, which is what we express by the word good breeding.

Those among them, who return into their several countries, are sure to be followed and imitated as the greatest patterns of wit and good breeding.

22. Real; serious; not feigned.

Love not in good earnest, nor do further in sport neither, than with safety of a pure blush thou may'st in honour come off again.

23. Rich; of credit; able to fulfil engagements.

Antonio is a good man: my meaning, in saying that he is a good man, is to have you understand me that he is sufficient.

24. Having moral qualities, such as are wished; virtuous; pious; religious: applied both to persons and actions. Not bad; not evil.

For a good man some would even dare to die. The woman hath wrought a good work upon me.

All man's works on me, Good or not good, ingraft my merit, these Shall perfect, and for these my death shall pay.

What reward Awaits the good, the rest what punishment.

The only Son of light In a dark age against example good, As a fit allurement

Such follow him, as shall be registred Part good, part bad, of lead the larger scroff.

Grant the best what happiness they would, One they must want, which is to pass for good.

No further intercourse with Heaven had he, But that good works to men of low degree.

25. Kind; soft; benevolent.

Matters being so turned in her, that where at first being her manners did breed good will, now good will became the chief cause of liking her manners.

Glorious to God in the highest, now on earth peace and good will towards men Without good nature man is but a better kind of venom.

Here we are lov'd, and there we love; Good nature now and passion strive Which of the two should be above, And laws unto the other give.

'Tis no wonder if that which affords so little glory to God, hath no more good will for men.

When you shall see him, sir, to die for pity, 'Twere such a thing, 'twould so deceive the world,

'Twould make the people think you were good natur'd

To teach him betimes to love and be good natured to others, is to lay early the true foundation of an honest man.

Good sense and good nature are never separated, though the ignorant would have thought otherwise.

Affability, mildness, tenderness, and a word which I would fain bring back to its original sig-nification of virtue, I mean good nature, are of duty to.

This doctrine of God's good will towards men, this command of men's proportionable good will to one another, is not this the very body and substance, this the very fountain and life of our Saviour's whole institution?

It was his greatest pleasure to spread his healing wings over every place, and to make every one sensible of his good will to mankind.

How could you chide the young good natur'd prince, And drive him from you with so stern an air.

26. Favourable; loving.

But the men were very good unto us, and we were not hurt.

Truly God is good to Israel, even to such as are of a clean heart.

This idea must necessarily be adequate, being referred to nothing else but itself, nor made by any other original but the good liking and will of him that first made this combination.

27. Companionable; sociable; merry. Often used ironically.

Though he did not draw the good fellows to him by drinking, yet he eat well.

Not being permitted to drink without eating, will prevent the custom of having the cup often at his nose; a dangerous beginning and preparation to good fellowship.

It was well known, that sir Roger had a good fellow in his youth.

28. It is sometimes used as an epithet of slight contempt, implying a kind of negative virtue or bare freedom from ill.

My good man, as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause.

She had left the good man at home, and brought away her gallant.

29. In a ludicrous sense. As for all other good women that live to do but little work, how handsome it is to lounge themselves in the sunshine, can they that have been a while in Ireland can well witness.

30. Hearty; earnest; not dubious. He, that saw the time fit for the delivery he intended, called upon us to follow him, which we both, bound by oath, and willing by good will, obeyed.

The good will of the nation to the present war has been free, but too much experienced by the successes that have attended it.

God will, the fact, my want of strength supplies:

And diligence that give what age denies.

31. In Good time. Not too fast. In good time, replies another, you have heard them dispute against a vacuum in the schools.

32. In Good faith. Really; seriously. What, must I hold a candle to my thames? They in themselves, good faith are too too light.

33. Good. [To make.] To keep; to maintain; not to give up; not to abandon. There died upon the place all the chieftains, all making good the fight without any ground given.

He forc'd them to retire in spite of their dragons, which were placed there to make good their retreat.

Since we claim a proper interest above others in the pre-eminent rights of the household of faith, then to make good that claim, we are oblig'd above others to conform to the proper manners and virtues that belong to this household.

He without fear a dangerous war pursues; As honour made him first the danger chase, So sin he makes it good on virtue's score.

34. Good. [To make.] To confirm; to establish.

I further will maintain Upon his bad life to make all this good.

To make good this explication of the article, it will be necessary to prove that the church, which our Saviour founded and the apostles gathered, was to receive a constant and perpetual accession.

These propositions I shall endeavour to make good.

35. Good. [To make.] To perform. While the sun extends her grace, She makes but good the promise of her face.

36. Good. [To make.] To supply. Every distinct being has somewhat peculiar to itself, to make good in one circumstance what it wants in another.

GOOD. n. s.

1. That which physically contributes to happiness; benefit; advantage; the contrary to evil or misery.

I fear the emperor means no good to us.

This caution will have also this good in it, that it will put them upon considering, and teach them the necessity of examining more than they do.

Good is what is apt to cause or increase pleasure, or diminish pain in us; or else to procure or preserve us in the possession of any other good, or absence of any evil.

Refuse to leave thy destin'd charge too soon, And for the church's good defer thy own.

Works may have more wit than does them good, As bodies pass through excess of blood.

A thirst after truth, and a desire of good, are principles which still act with a great and universal force.

2. Prosperity; advancement. It he had employ'd Those excellent gifts of fortune and of nature Unto the good, not ruin of the state.

3. Earnest; not jest. The good woman never died after this, 'till she came to die for good and all.

4. Moral qualities, such as are desirable; virtue; righteousness; piety; the contrary to wickedness.

Depart from evil and do good.

Not only carnal good from evil does not justify; but no good, no not a purpos'd good, can make evil good.

O sons, like one of us is Man become, To know both good and evil, since his taste Of that defend'd fruit, but let him merit His knowledge of good lost, and evil got, Happier had it suffic'd him to have known Good by itself, and evil not at all.

Empty of all good, wherein consists Woman's domestick honour, and chief praise.

By good, I question not but good, morally so called bonum honestum, ought, chiefly at least, to be understood; and that the good of profit or pleasure the bonum utile or jucundum, hardly come into any account here.

Nor holds this earth a more deserving knight
For virtue, valour, and for noble blood,
Truth, honour, all that is compriz'd in good.
Dryden.

5. GOOD placed after had, with as, seems a substantive; but the expression is, I think, vitious; and good is rather an adjective elliptically used, or it may be considered as adverbial. See GOOD. adv.

The pilot must intend some port before he steers his course, or he had as good leave his vessel to the direction of the winds, and the government of the waves.
South.

Without good nature and gratitude, men had as good live in a wilderness as in a society.
L'Estrange.

GOOD. adv.

1. Well; not ill; not amiss.

2. As GOOD. No worse.

Was I to have never parted from thy side,
As good have grown there still a lifeless rib.
Milton.

Says the cuckoo to the hawk, Had you not as good have been eating worms now as pigeons?
L'Estrange.

GOOD. interjection. Well! right! It is sometimes used ironically.

GOOD-CONDITIONED. adj. Without ill qualities or symptoms. Used both of things and persons, but not elegantly.

No surgeon dilates an abscess of any kind by injections, when the pus is good-conditioned.
Sharp's Surgery.

GOOD-NOW. interjection.

1. In good time; a la bonne heure. A gentle exclamation of entreaty. It is now a low word.

Good-now, sit down, and tell me, he that knows,
Why this fame watch? Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. A soft exclamation of wonder.

Good-now, good-now, how your devotions jump with mine!
Dryden.

GOODLINESS. n. f. [from goodly.] Beauty; grace; elegance.

She sung this song with a voice no less beautiful to his ears, than her goodliness was full of harmony to his eyes.
Sidney.

The stateliness of houses, the goodliness of trees, when we behold them, delighteth the eye.
Hooker.

GOODLY. adj. [from good.]

1. Beautiful; graceful; fine; splendid. Little in use.

A prince of a goodly aspect, and the more goodly by a grave majesty, wherewith his mind did deck his outward graces.
Sidney.

A goodly city is this Antium.
Shakespeare.

Patience and sorrow strove
Which should express her goodliest: you have seen Sunshine and rain at once. Her smiles and tears
Were like a wetter May.
Shakespeare.

Here from gracious England have I offer
Of goodly thousands.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Rebeckah took goodly raiment of her eldest son
Esaú, and put them upon Jacob.
Genesis.

There was not among the children of Israel a goodlier person than he.
1 Sam.

Both younger than they were; of stature more;
And all their formes, much goodlier than before.
Chapman.

He had not made them any reconence for their goodly houses and olive gardens, destroyed in the former wars.
Knolles.

The goodliest man of men since born
His sons, the fairest of her daughters Eve.
Milton.

Of the fourth Edward was his noble song;
Fierce, goodly, valiant, beautiful, and young.
Waller.

Not long since, walking in the field,
My nurse and I, we there beheld

A goodly fruit, which, tempting me,
I would have pluck'd.
Waller.

How full of ornament is all I view
In all its parts! and seems as beautiful as new:
O goodly order'd work! O power divine!
Of thee I am, and what I am is thine!
Dryden.

His eldest born, a goodly youth to view,
Excell'd the rest in shape and outward shew;
Fair, tall, his limbs with due proportion join'd,
But of a heavy, dull, degenerate mind.
Dryden.

2. Bulky; swelling; affectedly turgid.

Round as a globe, and liquor'd every chink,
Goodly and great he fails behind his link.
Dryden.

3. Happy; desirable; gay.

England was a peaceable kingdom, and but lately inured to the mild and goodly government of the Confessor.
Spenser.

We have many goodly days to see.
Shakespeare.

GOODLY. adv. Excellently. Obsolete.

There Alma, like a virgin queen most bright,
Doth flourish in all beauty excellent;
And to her guests doth bounteous banquet dight,
Attemper'd goodly well for health and for delight.
Spenser.

GOODLYHOOD. n. f. [from goodly.] Grace; goodness. Obsolete.

But mote thy goodlyhood forgive it me,
To meet which of the gods I shall thee name.
Spenser.

GOODMAN. n. f. [good and man.]

1. A slight appellation of civility: generally ironical.

How now, what's the matter? part.
—With you, goodman boy, if you please: come,
I'll flesh ye.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

2. A rustick term of compliment; gaffer.

Nay, hear you, goodman deliver.
But see the tun-beams bright to labour warn,
And gild the thatch of goodman Hodge's barn.
Gay's Past.

Old goodman Dobson of the green,
Remembers he the trees has seen.
Swift.

GOODNESS. n. f. [from good.] Desirable qualities either moral or physical; kindness; favour.

If for any thing he loved greatness, it was because therein he might exercise his goodness.
Sidney.

There is in all things an appetite or desire, whereby they incline to something which they may be; all which perfections are contained under the general name of goodness.
Hooker.

All goodness
Is poison to thy stomach.

—Yes, that goodness
Of gleaning all the land's wealth into one,
Into your own hands, cardinal, by extortion:
The goodness of your intercepted packets
You write to the pope against the king: your goodness,
Since you provoke me, shall be most notorious.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.

There's no goodness in thy face.
Shakespeare.

There is a general, or natural goodness in creatures, and a more special or moral goodness.
Perkins.

The goodness of every thing is measured by its end and use, and that's the best thing which serves the best end and purpose.
Tillotson.

All made very particular relations of the strength of the Scots army, the excellent discipline that was observed in it, and the goodness of the men.
Clarendon.

No body can say that tobacco of the same goodness is risen 'n respect of itself; one pound of the same goodness will never exchange for a pound and a quarter of the same goodness.
Locke.

GOODS. n. f. [from good.]

1. Moveables in a house.

That giv't to such a guest
As my poor selfe, of all thy goods the best.
Chapman.

2. Personal or moveable estate.

That a writ be su'd against you,
To forfeit all your goods, lands, tenements,
Castles, and whatsoever.
Shaksp. Henry VIII.

This hinders nothing the proceedings of the civil courts, which respect the temporal punishment upon body and goods.
Lesley.

3. Wares; freight; merchandise.

Her majesty, when the goods of our English merchants were attached by the duke of Alva, arrested likewise the goods of the Low Dutch here in England.
Ralsign's Essays.

Salce, that scorn'd all pow'r and laws of men,
Goods with their owners hurrying to their den.
Waller.

GOODY. n. f. [corrupted from good wife.]

A low term of civility used to mean persons.

Soft, goody sheep, then said the fox, not so;
Unto the king fo rash you may not go.
Hubberd's Tale.

Swarm'd on a rotten stick the bees I spy'd,
Which erst I saw when goody Dobson dy'd.
Plain goody would no longer down;
'Twas madam in her grogram gown.
Swift.

GOODYSHIP. n. f. [from goody.] The quality of a goody. Ludicrous.

The more shame for her goodyship,
To give so near a friend the slip.
Hubbras.

GOOSE. n. f. plural geese. [gor, Saxon; goes, Dutch; garwe, Erie, ling. gewey, plural.]

1. A large waterfowl proverbially noted, I know not why, for foolishness.

Thou cream-faced town,
Where go'st thou that goose look?
Shakespeare.

Since I pluck't geese, play'd truant, and whipt top, I knew not what 'twas to be beaten till lately.
Shakespeare.

Birds most easy to be drawn are waterfowl; as the goose and swan.
Peachment on Drawing.

Nor watchful dogs, nor the more wakeful geese, disturb with nightly noise the sacred peace.
Dryden's Fables.

2. A taylor's smoothing iron.

Come in, taylor: here you may roast your goose.
Shakespeare.

GOOSEBERRY. n. f. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.] A berry and tree.

Motimes.

GORBELLIED. adj. [from gorbelly.] Fat; bigbellied; having swelling paunches.

Hang ye gorbellied knives, are you undone?
Ne, ye fat chuffs, I would your store were here.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

GORBELLY. n. f. [from gor, dung, and belly, according to Skinner and Junius. It may perhaps come from gor, Welsh, beyond, too much; or, as seems to me more likely, may be contracted from gormand, or german's belly, the belly of a glutton.] A big paunch;

a swelling belly. A term of reproach for a fat man.

GORD. n. f. An instrument of gaming, as appears from Beaumont and Fletcher.
Warburton.

Thy dry bones can reach at nothing now, but gords and vinepins.
Beaumont and Fletcher.

Let vultures gripe thy guts; for gords and Fulham holds.
Shakespeare.

GORE. n. f. [gone, Saxon; gôr, Welsh, famous matter.]

1. Blood effused from the body.

A grievous wound,

From which forth guth'd a stream of gore blood thick,

That all her goodly garment stain'd around,
And into a deep sanguine dy'd the grassy ground.
Spenser.

Another's crimes the youth unhappy bore,
Glutting his father's eyes with guiltless gore.
Dryden's Æn.

2. Blood clotted or congealed.

The bloody tact

Will be aveng'd; though here thou see him die,
Rolling in dust and gore.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

His horrid head and knotted tresses stood
Stiff with his gore, and all his wounds ran blood.
Denham.

To GORE. v. a. [goberrian, Saxon.]

1. To stab; to pierce.

Oh, let no noble eye profane a tear
For me, if I be gor'd with Mowbray's spear.
Shakespeare's Richard II.

No weaker lion's by a stronger slain;
Nor from his larger tusks the forc'd boar
Commission takes his brother swine to gore.
Tate's Juvenal.

For arms his men long pikes and jav'lines bore,
And poles with pointed steel their foes in battle gore.
Dryden.

2. To pierce with a horn.

Some tois'd, some gor'd, some trampling down
he kill'd.
Dryden.

He idly butting, feigns

His rival gor'd in every knotty trunk.
Thomson.

GORGE. n. f. [gorge, French.]

1. The throat; the swallow.

There were birds also made so finely, that they did not only deceive the fight with their figures, but the hearing with their songs, which the watry instruments did make their gorge deliver.
Sidney.

And now how abhorred in my imagination it is! my gorge rises at it.
Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Her delicate tenderness will find itself abused, begin to heave the gorge, disrelish and abhor the Moor.
Shakespeare's Othello.

2. That which is gorged or swallowed.

Not in use.
And all the way, most like a brutish beast,
He spewed up his gorge, that all did him detest.
Spenser.

To GORGE. v. n. [gorger, French.]

1. To fill up the throat; to glut; to satiate.

Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and full.
Shakespeare.

He that makes his generation messes,
To gorge his appetite.
Shakespeare's King Lear.
Gorge with my blood thy barbarous appetite.
Dryden.

I desire that they will not gorge the lion either with nonsense or obscenity.
Addison.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Africk's sands, dishonor'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Num dia.
Addison's Cato

The giant, gorg'd with flesh, and wine, and
blood,

Lay stretcht at length, and snoring in his den.
Addison.

2. To swallow; as, the fish has gorged the hook.

GORGED. adj. [from gorge.] Having a gorge or throat.

Look up a height, the shrill gorg'd lark so far
Cannot be seen or heard.
Shakespeare

GORGEOUS. adj. [gorgeias, old French. Skinner.] Fine; splendid; glittering in various colours; showy; magnificent.

O, that deceit should dwell
In such a gorgeous palace!
Shakespeare.

As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer.
Shakespeare.

He had them look upon themselves and upon their enemies, themselves dreadful, their enemies gorgeous and brave.
Hayward.

The gorgeous eail, with richest land,
Pours on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.
Milton.

With gorgeous wings, the marks of sov'reign sway,

The two contending princes make their way.
Dryden's Virgil.

GORGEOUSLY. adv. [from gorgeous.] Splendidly; magnificently; finely.

The duke, one solemn day, gorgeously clad in a suit all over spread with diamonds, lost one of them of good value.
Watton.

GORGEOUSNESS. n. f. [from gorgeous.] Splendour; magnificence; show.

GORGET. n. f. [from gorge.] The piece of armour that defends the throat.

He with a pally tumbling on his gorget,
Shakes in and out the rivet.
Shakespeare.

He did oftentimes spend the night in the church alone praying, his headpiece, gorget, and gauntlets lying by him.
Knolles.

See how his gorget peers above his gown,
To tell the people in what danger he was.
Ben Jonson.

About his neck a threefold gorget,
As rough as trebled leathern target.
Hudibras.

GORGON. n. f. [γεργω.] A monster with snaky hairs, of which the fight turned beholders to stone; any thing ugly or horrid.

Gorgons and hydras, and chimeras dire.
Milton.

Why did'st thou not encounter man for man,
And try the virtue of that gorgon face
To stare me into stature.
Dryden.

GORMAND. n. f. [gourmand, French.] A greedy eater; a ravenous luxurious feeder.

To GORMANDIZE. v. n. [from gormand.] To eat greedily; to feed ravenously.

GORMANDIZER. n. f. [from the verb.] A voracious eater.

GORSE. n. f. [gors, Saxon.] Furz; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter.

GORY. adj. [from gore.] 1. Covered with congealed blood.

When two hoars with rankling malice met,
Their gory sides the fresh wounds fiercely fret.
Spenser.

Why do'st thou shake thy gory locks at me?
Thou can'st not say I did it.
Shakespeare's Macbeth.

2. Bloody; murderous; fatal. Not in use.

The obligation of our blood forbids
A gory emulation 'twixt us twain.
Shakespeare.

GOSHAWK. n. f. [gors, goose, and hawoc, a hawk.] A hawk of a large kind.

Such dread his awful visage on them cast;
So seem poor doves at goshawks sight aghast.
Fairfax.

GOSLING. n. f. [from goose.] 1. A young goose; a goose not yet full grown.

Why do you go nodding and wagging like a fool, as if you were hipshot? says the goose to her gosling.

L'Estrange.

Nature hath instructed even a brood of goslings to stick together, while the kite is hovering over their heads.
Swift.

2. A katkin on nut-trees and pines.

GOSPEL. n. f. [gwoer yspel, or God's or good tidings; εὐγγέλιον; foskel, skual fuach, happy tidings, Euse.]

1. God's word; the holy book of the christian revelation.

Thus may the gospel to the rising sun
Be spread, and flourish where it first begun.
Walker.

All the decrees whereof scripture treateth are conditional, receiving Christ as the gospel offers him, as Lord and Saviour; the former, as well as the latter, being the condition of scripture-election, and the rejecting, or not receiving him thus, the condition of the scripture-reprobation.
Hammond.

How is a good christian animated and cheered by a steadfast belief of the promises of the gospel?
Bentley.

2. Divinity; theology.

To Go'SPEL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fill with sentiments of religion. This word in Shakespeare, in whom alone I have found it, is used, though so venerable in itself, with some degree of irony: I suppose from the gossellers, who had long been held in contempt.

Are you he gossell'd
To pray for this good man, and for his issue,
Whose heavy hand hath bow'd you to the grave?
Shakespeare.

GO'SPELLER. n. f. [from gospel.] A name of the followers of Wickliffe, who first attempted a reformation from popery, given them by the papists in reproach, from their professing to follow and preach only the gospel.

These gossellers have had their golden days,
Have trodden down our holy Roman faith.
Romce.

GO'SSAMER. n. f. [gossipium, low Latin.] The down of plants; the long white cobwebs which fly in the air in calm sunny weather, especially about the time of autumn.

A lover may bestride the gossamer,
That idles in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall, so light is vanity.
Shakespeare.

Four nimble gnats the horses were,
Their harnesses of gossamer.
Drayton's Nymphid.

The filmy gossamer row flits no more,
Nor halcyons bask on the short sunny shore.
Dryden's Virgil.

GO'SSSIP. n. f. [from god and rysb, relation, affinity, Saxon.]

1. One who answers for the child in baptism.

Go to a gossip's feast and gaud with me,
After so long grief such nativity.
Shakespeare.

At the christening of George duke of Clarence, who was born in the castle of Dublin, he made both the earl of Kildare and the earl of Ormond his gossips.
Darvies on Ireland.

2. A tipping companion.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab.
And when the drunks against her lips I bob,
Shakespeare.

3. One who runs about tattling like women at a lying-in.

To do the office of a neighbour,
And be a gossip at his labour.
Hudibras.

'Tis sung in ev'ry street,
The common chat of gossips when they meet.
Dryden.

To Go'SSIP. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To chat; to prate; to be merry.
Go to a gossip's feast and gaude with me.
—Who all my heart, I'd gossip at this feast.
Shakespeare.
His mother was a vintress of my order,
And, in the spiced Indian air by night,
Full o'ten hath the gossip by my side
To market and exchange must be left
To their own ways of talking; and gossippings not be rob'd of their ancient privilege.
He gives himself up to an idle gossipping
conversati'on.
Locke.

2. To be a pot-companion.
Nor met with fortune, or er than at feast,
Full wa'n of blood, of mirth, of gossipping.
Shakspeare.
GOSSIP. n. f. [gossipy, from gossip.]
Gossip of com. a story, by the canon law, is a spiritual affinity; and the juror, that was gossip to either of the parties, might, in former times, have been challenged as not indifferent.
GO'STING. n. f. [rubia.] An herb.
Darwin.

GO. The preterit of get.
Titus Lartius writes, they fought together;
but Aufidius got off.
If you have strength Achilles' arms to bear,
Though soul Therites got thee, thou shalt be Lov'd and esteem'd.
These regions and this realm my wars have got;
This mournful empire is the loser's lot.
When they began to reason about the means how the sea got thither, and away back again, there they were presently in the dark.

GO. The part. pass. of get.
Solyman commended them for their valour in their evil haps, in a plot fo well by them laid, more than he did the victory of others got by good fortune, not grounded upon any good reason.
A gentle persuasion in reasoning, when the first point of submission to your will is got, will most times do.
If he behaves himself so when he depends on us for his daily bread, can any man say what he will do when he is got above the world?
Thou wert from Ætna's burning entrails torn,
Got by fierce whirlwinds, and in thunder borne.

GO'TTES. The part. pass. of get.
W' seem cannot be gotten for gold.
Few of them, when they are got in into a office, apply their thoughts to the execution of it.
GOUD. n. f. Wood; a plant.
GOVE. n. f. A mow.
To GOVE v. n. To mow; to put in a gove goff, or mow. An old word.
To GOVERN. v. a. [gouverner, French;
gubernō, Latin.]

1. To rule as a chief magistrate.
The inconvenience is in reaso to be redressed
in the govern'r than in the govern'd; as a malady in a vital part is more incurable than in an external.
Slaves to our passions we become, and then
It grows impossible to govern men.
2. To regulate; to influence; to direct.
I don't pre-ent'ain it war, though it puts the power into my hands, and though such turbulent and noisy spirits as you are govern all things in times of peace.
The chief point, which he is to carry away in his eye, and by which he is to govern all his effects, designs, and actions.
3. To manage; to restrain.
Goater her, the's desperate; governer.
4. [In grammar.] To have force with regard to syntax; as, amo governs the accusative case.

Listen, children, unto me,
And let this your lesson be,
In our language evermore
Words that govern go before.
5. To pilot; to regulate the motions of a ship.
To GOVERN. v. n. To keep superiority;
to behave with haughtiness.
By that rule,
Your wicked atoms may be working now
To give bad counsel, that you still may govern.

GOVERNABLE. adj. [from govern.] Submissive to authority; subject to rule;
obedient; manageable.
The flexibility of the former part of a man's age, not yet grown up to be headstrong, makes it more governable and safe.

GOVERNANCE. n. f. [from govern.]
1. Government; rule; management.
Jonathan took the governance upon him at that time, and rose up instead of his brother Judas.
2. Control, as that of a guardian.
Me he knew not, neither his own ill,
'Till through wise handling, and fair governance,
I him recurred to a better will.
What shall king Henry be a pupil still,
Under the turl'y Glosster's governance?

3. Behaviour; manners. Obsolete.
He liketh it to fall into mischance
That is regardless of his governance.
GOVERNANT. n. f. [gouvernante, Fr.]
A lady who has the care of young girls of quality. The more usual and proper word is governess.

GOVERNESS. n. f. [gouvernesse, French,
from gove.]
1. A female invested with authority.
The moon, the governess of floods,
Pale in her anger, wathes all the air,
That rheumatick diseases do abound.
2. A tutorefs; a woman that has the care of young ladies.
He presented himself unto her, falling down upon both his knees, and holding up his hands, as the old governess of Dmiac is painted, when she suddenly saw the golden shower.
His three younger children were taken from the governess in whole hands he put them.

3. A tutorefs; an instructress; a directress.
Great afflu'n that severe governess of the line of man hangs upon those souls the reins on GOVERNMENT. n. f. [gouvernement,
French.]
1. Form of a community with respect to the disposition of the supreme authority.
There seem to be but two general kinds of government in the world: the one exercised according to the arbitrary commands and will of some single person; and the other according to certain orders or laws introduced by agreement or custom, and not to be changed without the consent of many.
No government can do any act to limit itself:
the supreme legislative power cannot make itself
not to be absolute.
2. An established state of legal authority.
There they shall found
Their government, and their great senate chuse
Through the twelve tribes, to rule by laws or-dain'd.
While he survives, in concord and content
The commons live, by no division rent;
But the great monarch's death divides the government.
Every one knows, who has considered the nature of government, that there must be in each particular form of it an absolute unlimited power.

Where any one person or body of men seize into their hands the power in the last resort, there is properly no longer a government, but what Aristotle and his followers call the abuse or corruption of one.
3. Administration of publick affairs.
Safety and equal government are things
Which subjects make as happy as their kings.
Those governments which curb not evils, cause;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.
4. Regularity of behaviour. Not in use.
You needs must learn, lord, to amend this fault;
Though sometimes it shews greatness, courage,
blood,
Yet oftentimes it doth present harsh rage,
Defect of manners, want of government,
Pride, haughtiness, opinion, and chican.
The want thereof makes thee abominable.
5. Manageableness; compliance; obsequi-ousness.
Thy eyes windows fall,
Like death, when he shuts up the day of life;
Each part depriv'd of supple government,
Shall stiff and stark, and cold appear, like death.

6. Management of the limbs or body.
Obsolete.
Their god
Shot many a dart at me with fierce intent;
But I them warded all with wavy government.
7. [In grammar.] Influence with regard to construction.
GOVERNOUR. n. f. [gouverneur, French.]
1. One who has the supreme direction.
It must be confessed, that of Christ, working as a creator and a governor of the world by providence, all are partakers.
They heget in us a great idea and veneration of the mighty author and governor of such stupendous bodies, and excite and elevate our minds to his adoration and praise.
2. One who is invested with supreme authority in a state.
For the king in is the Lord's, and he is the governour among the nations.
The monarch cannot urge obedience upon such potent grounds as the monarch, if to disposed, can urge disobedience; as, for instance, if my governour should command me to do a thing, or I must die, or I clear my estate; and the monarch steps in and tells me, that I offend God, and run my soul, if I obey that command, too easy to see a greater force in this persuasion.

3. One who rules any place with delegated and temporary authority.
To you, our governour
Remains the centre of this healthish villain.
4. A tutor; one who has care of a young man.
To E'tam will I, where the young king is,
Being ordain'd his special goverour;
And for his safety there I'll best devise.
The great work of a governour is to furnish the carrage, and form the mind; to settle in his pupil good habits, and the principles of virtue and wisdom.
During the minority of kings, the election of bishops, and other affairs of the church, must be left in the hands of their governours and courtiers.

5. Pilot; regulator; manager.
Behold all the ships, which though they be fo great, and are driven of fierce winds, yet they are turned about with a very small helm, whither-soever the governour listeth.
GOUGE. n. f. [French.] A chissel

having a round edge, for the cutting of such wood as is to be rounded or hollowed. Moxon.

GOUJERES. n. f. [gouje, French, a camp trull.] The French disease. Hammer.

GOURD. n. f. [gourde, French.]

1. A plant. The fruit of some species are long, of others round, or bottle-shaped. Miller.

But I will taste, and from each bough and brake, Each plant, and juiciest gourd, will pluck such choice

To entertain our angel-guest. Milton's Par. Lost.
Gourd feeds abound to much in oil, that a sweet and pleasant one may be drawn from thence by expression; they are of the four greatest cold feeds, and are used in emulsions. Lill.

2. A bottle [from gourt, old French. Skinner.] The large fruit so called is often scooped hollow, for the purpose of containing and carrying wine, and other liquors: from thence any leathern bottle grew to be called by the same name, and so the word is used by Chaucer. Hammer.

Girl in his Gabin gown the hero sat. Dryden.
Yet not superior to her sex's cares,

The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and clains she 's the last appeal;
In these great points she leads the common weal. Young.

4. The dress of peace.

He Mas depos'd, and arms to gowns made yield,

Successful councils did him soon approve
As fit for close intrigues as open field. Dryden.

GO'WNED. adj. [from gown.] Dressed in a gown.

A noble crew about them waited round
Of lag'd and sober peers, all gravely gown'd. Sperdy.
