The feather'd eddy floats. Thomson's Autumn.

TO CONVOY. v. a. [convoyer, French, from conviare, low Latin.] To accompany by land or sea, for the sake of defence: as, he was convoyed by ships of war.

CONVOY. n. f. [from the verb. Anciently the accent was on the last syllable; it is now on the first.]

1. Force attending on the road by way of defence.

Had not God set peculiar value upon his temple, he would not have made himself his people's convoy to secure them in their passage to it. South's Sermons.

My soul grows hard, and cannot death endure;
Your convoy makes the dangerous way secure. Dryden's Aurengzebe.

Convoy ships accompany their merchants, till they may prosecute the voyage without danger. Dryden's Preface, Dufresnoy.

2. The act of attending as a defence.

Such fellows will learn you by rote where services were done; at such a breach, at such a convoy. Shakspeare's Henry v.

Swift, as a sparkle of a glancing star,
I shoot from heav'n to give him safe convoy. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.

3. Conveyance. Not in use.

Sister, as the winds give benefit,
And convoy is assistant, do not sleep,
But let me hear from you. Shakspeare.

CONVUSANCE. n. f. [convouissance, French.]

Cognizance; notice; knowledge. A law term.

TO CONVULSE. v. a. [convulsus, Lat.]

To give an irregular and involuntary motion to the parts of any body.

Follows the loosen'd, aggravated roar,
Enlarging, deepening, mingling peal on peal,
Cush'd horrible, convulsing heaven and earth. Thomson.

CONVULSION. n. f. [convulsio, Lat.]

1. A convulsion is an involuntary contraction of the fibres and muscles, whereby the body and limbs are preternaturally distorted. Quincy.

If my hand be put into motion by a convulsion, the indifferency of that operative faculty is taken away. Locke.

2. Any irregular and violent motion; tumult; commotion; disturbance.

All have been subject to some convulsions, and fall under the same convulsions of fate, by defensions or invasions. Temple.

CONVULSIVE. adj. [convulsif, Fr.] That produces involuntary motion; that gives twitches or spasms.

They are irregular and convulsive motions, or strugglings of the spirits. Hale.

Show me the flying soul's convulsive strife,
And all the anguish of departing life. Dryden.
Her colour chang'd, her face was not the time,

And hollow groans from her deep spirit came;
Her hair stood up; convulsive rage possess'd
Her trembling limbs, and heav'd her lab'ring breast. Dryden.

In silence weep,
And thy convulsive sorrows inward keep. Prior.

CONY. n. f. [kanin, Germ. connil or connin, Fr. cuniculus, Lat.] A rabbit; an animal that burrows in the ground.

With a short-egg'd hen,
Lemons and wine for sauce; to taste a cony
Is not to be despair'd of, for our money. Ben Jonson's Epig.

The husbandman suffers by hares and conys, which eat the corn and trees. Mortimer.

CONY-BOROUGH. n. f. A place where rabbits make their holes in the ground.

TO CONY-CATCH. v. n. To catch a cony, is, in the old cant of thieves, to cheat; to bite; to trick.

I have matter in my head against you, and against your cony-catching rascals. Shakspeare.

CONY-CATCHER. n. f. A thief; a cheat; a sharper; a tricking fellow; a rascal. Obsolete.

TO COO. v. n. [from the found.] To cry as a dove or pigeon.

The stockdove only through the forest cooes, Mournfully hoarse. Thomson's Summer.

COOK. n. f. [coquus, Lat.] One whose profession is to dress and prepare victuals for the table.

One mistress Quickly is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry-nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakspeare.

The new-born babe by nurses overlaid,
And the cook caught within the raging fire he made. Dryden.

Their cooks could make artificial birds and fishes, in default of the real ones, and which exceeded them in the exquisiteness of the taste. Arbutnot on Coins.

COOK-MAID. n. f. [cook and maid.] A maid that dresses provisions.

A friend was complaining to me, that his wife had turned off one of the best cook-maids in England. Addison.

COOK-ROOM. n. f. [cook and room.] A room in which provisions are prepared for the ship's crew; the kitchen of a ship.

The commodity of this new cook-room the merchants having found to be great, as that in all their ships the cook-rooms are built in their fore-castles, contrary to that which had been anciently used. Raleigh's Essays.

TO COOK. v. a. [coquo, Lat.]

1. To prepare victuals for the table.
Had either of the crimes been cook'd to their palates, they might have changed messes. Decay of Piety.

2. To prepare for any purpose.
Hanging is the word, sir; if you be ready for that, you are well cook'd. Shakspeare.

COOKERY. n. f. [from cook.] The art of dressing victuals.

Some men's wit
Found th' art of cooking to be difficult
More bodies are...
Than will the twigs...
Ev'ry one to eat...
These are the ingredients... are prepared by... but a...

COOL. adj. [cool, Dutch.]

1. Somewhat cold; approaching to cold.
He set his leg in a post, and... could well endure it, renewing it... but a...

2. Not zealous; not a lover; not angry; not fond; without passion; as, a cool friend; a cool deceiver.

COOL. n. f. Freedom from heat; soft and refreshing coldness.

But see where Lucia, as she would have,
Amid the cool of yon...
Enjoys the noon-day... Addison.

Philander was enjoying... of the morning, among the dews that lay on every thing about him, and that gave the air a freshness. Addison.

TO COOL. v. a. [coolen, Dutch.]

1. To make cool; to allay heat.

Snow they use in Naples instead of ice, because, as they say, it cools or congeals any liquor sooner. Addison on Italy.

Jelly of currants, or the jelly of any ripe subacid fruit, is cooling, and very agreeable to the stomach. Arbutnot on Diet.

2. To quiet passion; to calm anger; to moderate zeal.

My lord Northumberland will soon be cool'd. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

He will keep his jealousy to himself, and repine in private, because he will be apt to fear some ill effect it may produce in cooling your love to him. Addison's Spectator.

Had they thought they had been fighting only other people's quarrels, perhaps it might have cool'd their zeal. Swift.

TO COOL. v. n.

1. To grow less hot.

2. To grow less warm with regard to passion or inclination.

My humour shall not cool; I will incense Ford to deal with poison; I will possess him with yellowness. Shakspeare.

You never cool while you read Homer. Dryden.
I'm impatient till it be done; I will not give myself liberty to think, lest I should cool. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

COOLER. n. f. [from cool.]

1. That which has the power of cooling the body.

Coolers are of two sorts; first, those which produce an immediate sense of cold, which are such as have their parts in less motion than those of the organs of feeling; and secondly, such as, by particular viscosity, or grossness of parts, give a greater consistence to the animal fluids than they had before, whereby they cannot move so fast, and therefore will have less of that intestine force on which their heat depends. The former are fruits, all acid liquors, and common water; and the latter are such as cucumbers, and all substances producing viscosity. Quincy.

In dogs or cats there appeared the same necessity for a cooler as in man. Harvey.

Acid things were used only as coolers. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. A vessel in which any thing is made cool.

Your first wort being thus boiled, lade off into one or more coolers, or cool-backs, in which leave the fullage behind, and let it run off fine. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COOLLY. adv. [from cool.]

1. Without heat, or sharp cold.

She in the gelid caverns, wondrous wrought,
And fresh bedew'd with ever-founting streams, Sits coolly calm. Thomson's Summer.

2. Without passion.

Motives that address themselves cool'ly to our reason, are fitted to be employed upon reasonable creatures. Atterbury

COOLNESS. n. f. [from cool.]

1. Gentle cold; a soft or mild degree of cold.

This difference consisteth not in the least or coolest of spirits; for cloves and other spices, myrra, and petroleum, have exceeding hot spirits, hotter a great deal than oil, wax, or tallow, but not so flamed. Bacon's Natural History

The toad loveth shade and coolness. Bacon
Yonder the harvest of cold months laid up,
Gives a flesh coolness to the royal cup;

There ice, like crystal, firm and never lost,
Tempereth hot July with December's frost. Waller
They three enjoy the coolness of the shade.
Dryden's Virgil

2. Want of affection; disinclination.

They parted with such coolness towards each other, as if they scarce hoped to meet again. Clarendon

3. Freedom from passion.

COOL. n. f. [ecume, French.]

1. Soot that gathers over an oven's mouth. Phillips

2. That matter that works out of the wheels of carriages. Bailey

3. It is used in Scotland for the useless dust which falls from large coals.

COOMB, or COMB. n. f. [combe, Fr. cumulus, Latin, a heap. Skinner.] A measure of corn containing four bushels. Bailey

COOP. n. f. [kuype, Dutch.]

1. A barrel; a vessel for the preservation of liquids.

2. A cage; a pen for animals, as poultry or sheep.

Gracchus was slain the day the chickens refused to eat out of the coop; and Claudius Pulcher underwent the like success, when he contemned the tripodary augurations. Brown

There were a great many crammed capons together in a coop. L'Esfrange

To COOP. v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up in a narrow compass; to confine; to cage; to imprison: when it is used absolutely, it has often, perhaps always, the intensive particle up.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides,
And coops from other lands her islanders. Shakl

The Englishmen did coop up the lord Ravensstein, that he stirred not; and likewise held in strict siege the town. Bacon

In the taking of a town the poor escape better than the rich; for the one is let go, and the other is plundered and cooped up. L'Esfrange

Twice conquer'd onwards, now your shame is shown,

Coop'd up a second time within your town!
Who dare not issue forth in open field. Dryden

One world suffice'd not Alexander's mind;
Coop'd up he seem'd, in earth and seas confin'd.

Coop'd up in a narrow isle, observing dreams
With flattering wizards. Dryden

The Trojans, coop'd within their walls so long,
Unbar their gates, and issue in a throng. Dryden

The contempt of all other knowledge, as if it were nothing in comparison of law or physick, of astrology or chymistry, coops the understanding up within narrow bounds, and hinders it from looking abroad into other provinces of the intellectual world. Locke

They are cooped in close by the laws of their countries, and the strict guards of those whose interest it is to keep them ignorant. Locke

What! coop whole armies in our walls again!

Pop

COOP'E. n. f. [coupé, French.] A motion in dancing.

COOPER. n. f. [from coop.] One that makes coops or lairds.

Sectors of artificers and tradesmen, belonging to some towns corporate, such as weavers and coopers, by virtue of their charter, pretend to privilege and jurisdiction. Child

COOPERAGE. n. f. [from cooper.] The price paid for cooper's work.

To COOPERATE. v. z. [con and opera, Latin.]

1. To labour jointly with another to the same end: it has with before the agent, and to before the end.

It puzzleth and perplexeth the conceits of many, that perhaps would otherwise cooperate with him, and makes a man walk almost alone to his own ends. Bacon

By giving man a free will, he allows man that highest satisfaction and privilege of cooperating to his own felicity. Boyle

2. To concur in producing the same effect.

His mercy will not forgive offenders, or his benignity cooperate to their conversions.

All these causes cooperating, mult, at last, weaken their motion. Cheyne

The special acts and impressions by which the Divine Spirit introduces this change, and how far human liberty cooperates with it, are subjects beyond our comprehension. Rogers

COOPERATION. n. f. [from cooperate.] The act of contributing or concurring to the same end.

We might work any effect without and against matter; and this not holpen by the cooperation of angels or spirits, but only by the unity and harmony of nature. Bacon's Natural History

COOPERATIVE. adj. [from cooperate.] Promoting the same end jointly.

COOPERATOR. n. f. [from cooperate.] He that, by joint endeavours, promotes the same end with others.

COOPTATION. n. f. [coopto, Lat.] Adoption; assumption.

COORDINATE. adj. [con and ordinatus, Lat.] Holding the same rank; not being subordinate. Thus shellfish may be divided into two coordinate kinds, crustaceous and testaceous; each of which is again divided into many species, subordinate to the kind, but coordinate to each other.

The word Analysis signifies the general and particular heads of a discourse, with their mutual connexions, both coordinate and subordinate, drawn out into one or more tables. Watts

COORDINATELY. adv. [from coordinate.] In the same rank; in the same relation; without subordination.

COORDINATENESS. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of being coordinate.

COORDINATION. n. f. [from coordinate.] The state of holding the same rank; of standing higher; collateralness.

In this high court of parliament there is a rare coordination of power, a wholesome mixture betwixt monarchy, optimacy, and democracy.

When these petty intrigues of a play are so ill ordered, that they have no coherence with the other, I must grant that Lydus has reason to tax that want of due connexion; for coordination in a play is as dangerous and unnatural as in a state. Dryden on Dramatick Poetry

COOT. n. f. [maer-koet, Dut. colée, Fr.] A small black waterfowl, seen often in fens and marshes.

A lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the tubing cormorant. Dryden

COP. n. f. [kop, Dut. cop, Sax.] The head; the top of any thing; any thing rising to a head: as, a cop, vulgarly cock, of hay; a cop-castle, properly cop-castle, a small castle or house on a hill; a cop of cherry-stones, for cop, a pile of stones one laid upon another; a tuft on the head of birds.

CO'PAL. n. f. The Mexican term for a gum.

COPARCENARY. n. f. [from coparcener.] Joint succession to any inheritance.

In descent to all the daughters in coparcenary, for want of sons, the chief house is allotted to the eldest daughter. Hale

COPARCENER. n. f. [from con and particeps, Lat.]

Coparceners are otherwise called parceners; and, in common law, are such as have equal portion in the inheritance of the ancestor. Corwell

This great lordship was broken and divided, and partition made between the five daughters: in every of these portions, the coparceners severally exercised the same jurisdiction royal, which the earl marshal and his sons had used in the whole province. Darles on Ireland

COPARCENY. n. f. An equal share of coparceners. Phillips's World of Words

COPARTNER. n. f. [co and partner.] One that has a share in some common stock or affair; one equally concerned; a sharer; a partaker; a partner. Milton has used it both with of and in.

Our faithful friends,
Th' associates and copartners of our loss. Milton

Shall I to him make known
As yet my change, and give him to partake Full happiness with me? Or rather not:
But keep the odds of knowledge in my pow'r,
Without copartner. Milton's Paradise Lost

Rather by them
I gain'd what I have gain'd, and with them dwell
Copartner in these regions of the world. Milton

COPARTNERSHIP. n. f. [from copartner.] The state of bearing an equal part, or possessing an equal share.

In case the father left only daughters, the daughters equally succeeded to their father as in copartnership. Hale

CO'PATAIN. adj. [from cop.] High raised; pointed. Hanmer

Oh, fine villain! a sicken doublet, a velvet hose, a scarlet cloke, and a copatain hat. Shakl

COPA'YVA. n. f. [It is sometimes written capivi, copivi, capaywa, copaywa, cupayva, cupayba.] A gum which distils from a tree in Brazil. It is much used in disorders of the urinary passages.

COPE. n. f. [See COP.]

1. Any thing with which the head is covered.

2. A sacerdotal cloak, or vestment worn in sacred ministrations.

3. Any thing which is spread over the head; as the concave of the skies; any archwork over a door.

All these things that are contained Within this goodly cope, both moist and least,
Their being have, and daily are increas'd. S.enser

Over head the dismal liſs
Of fiery darts in flaming volleys ſlew;
And dying vaulted either hoſt with fire;
So, under fiery cope, together ruſh'd
Both battles man. Milton's Paradise Loſt
The ſcholar believes there is no man under the cope of heaven, who is ſo knowing as his maſter. Dryden.

To COPE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cover, as with a cope.
A very large bridge, that is all made of wood,
and coped over head. Addiſon on Italy.
2. To contend with; to oppoſe.
Know my name is loſt,
By treaſon's tooth bare gnawn, and canker-bit;
Yet am I noble as the adverſary
I come to cope. Shakſpeare's King Lear.
3. To reward; to give in return.
I and my friend
Have, by your wiſdom, been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in lieu whereof,
Three thouſand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cope your courteous pains withal.
Shakſpeare.

To COPE. v. n.

1. To contend; to ſtruggle; to ſtrive. It has with before the thing or perſon oppoſed. [In this ſenſe it is a word of doubtful etymology. The conjecture of Junius derives it from koopen, to buy, or ſome other word of the ſame import;
ſo that to cope with ſignifies to interchange blows, or any thing elſe, with another.]
Let our trains
March by us, that we may peruſe the men
We ſhould have cop'd withal. Shakſ. Henry iv.
It is likely thou wilt undertake
A thing, like death, to chide away this ſhame,
That copes with death itſelf, to ſcape from it.
Shakſpeare.

But Eve was Eve;
This far his over-match, who, ſelf-deceiv'd
And raſh, beſidehand had no better weigh'd
The ſtrength he was to cope with, or his own.
Milton

They perfectly underſtood both the hares and the enemy they were to cope withal. L'Eſtrange.

On every plain,
Hoſt cop'd with hoſt, die was the din of war.
Philips.

Their generals have not been able to cope with the troops of Athens, which I have conducted.
Addiſon's Whig Examiner.

If the mind apply itſelf firſt to eaſier ſubjects, and things near a-kin to what is already known;
and then advance to the more remote and knotty parts of knowledge by ſlow degrees, it will be able, in this manner, to cope with great difficulties, and prevail over them with amazing and happy ſucceſs. Watts on the Mind.

2. To encounter; to interchange kindneſs or ſentiments.

Thou firſt piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force muſt know
The royal fool thou cop'ſt with. Shakſpeare.

Thou art e'en as juſt a man,
As e'er my converſation cop'd withal. Shakſp.

To COPE. v. a. To embrace. Not in uſe.

I will make him tell the tale anew;
Where, how, how oft, how long ago, and when,
He hath, and is again to cope your wife. Shakſ.

CO'PESMATE. n. f. [perhaps for cuſmate, a companion in drinking, or one that dwells under the ſame cope, for houſe.]
Companion; friend. An old word.

Ne ever ſtaid in place, ne ſpake to wight,
Till that the fox his copſmate he had found.
Hubbard's Tale.

CO'PIER. n. f. [from copy.]

1. One that copies; a tranſcriber.

A coin is in no danger of having its characters altered by copiers and tranſcribers. Addiſon.

2. One that imitates; a plagiary; an imi-tator.

Without invention a painter is but a copier, and a poet but a plagiary of others. Dryden.

Let the ſaint copier, on old Tiber's ſhore,
Nor mean the talk, each breathing buſt explore;
Line after line with painful patience trace,
This Roman grandeur, that Athenian grace.
Tickel.

CO'PING. n. f. [from cope.] The upper tire of maſonry which covers the wall.

All theſe were of coſtly ſtones, even from the foundation unto the coping. 1 Kings.

The coping, the modillions, or dentils, make a noble ſiew by their graceful projections.
Addiſon's Frecholder.

CO'PIOUS. adj. [copia, Lat.]

1. Plentiful; abundant; exuberant; in great quantities.

Roſe, as in dance, the ſtately trees, and ſpread
Their branches hung with copious fruit. Milton.

Full meaſure only bounds Exceſs, before the all-bounteous king, who ſnow'd

With copious hand, rejoicing in their joy. Milton.

This alkaline acrimony indicates the copious uſe of vinegar and acid fruits. Arbuthnot.

The tender heart is peace,
And kindly pours its copious treaſures forth
In various converſe. Thomſon's Spring.

2. Abounding in words or images; not barren; not confined; not concise.

Hail, Son of God, Saviour of men! thy name
Shall be the copious matter of my ſong
Henceforth, and never ſhall my harp thy praife
Forget, nor from thy Father's praife diſjoin.
Milton.

CO'PIOUSLY. adv. [from copious.]

1. Plentifully; abundantly; in great quantities.
2. At large; without brevity or concife-neſs; diſſuſely.

Theſe ſeveral remains have been ſo copiouſly deſcribed by abundance of travellers, and other writers, that it is very difficult to make any new diſcoveries on ſo beaten a ſubject. Addiſon.

CO'PIOUSNESS. n. f. [from copious.]

1. Plenty; abundance; great quantity; exuberance.
2. Diſſuſion; exuberance of ſtyle.

The Roman orator endeavoured to imitate the copiouſneſs of Homer, and the Latin poet made it his buſineſs to reach the concife-neſs of Demofthenes. Dryden.

CO'PIST. n. f. [from copy.] A copier;
a tranſcriber; an imitator.

CO'PLAND. n. f. A piece of ground which terminates with an acute angle.
Diſt.

CO'PPED. adj. [from cop.] Riſing to a top or head.

It was broad in its baſis, and roſe copped like a ſugar-loaf. Wiſeman's Surgery.

A galeated eſchinus being copped and ſomewhat conic. Woodward.

CO'PPEL. n. f. [This word is variously ſpelt: as copel, cupel, cuple, and cupple;
but I cannot find its etymology.] An inſtrument uſed in chymiſtry, in the form of a diſh, made of aſhes, well waſhed, to cleanſe them from all their ſalt; or of bones thoroughly calcined.
Its uſe is to try and purify gold and ſilver, which is done by mingling lead with the metal, and expoſing it in the coppel to a violent fire a long while.
The impurities of the metal will then be carried off in dregs, which is called the lithaige of gold and ſilver. The refiners call the coppel a teſt. Harris.

COPPER. n. f. [copper, Dutch; cuprum,
Latin.] One of the fix primitive metals.

Copper is the moſt ductile and malleable metal after gold and ſilver. Of a mixture of copper and lapis calaminaris is formed brass; a compoſition of copper and tin makes bell-metal; and copper and brass, melted in equal quantity, produces what the French call bronze, uſed for figures and ſtatues. Chambers.

Copper is heavier than iron or tin; but lighter than ſilver, lead, and gold. Hill on Feffels.

Two veſſels of fine copper, precious as gold.
Psalm.

CO'PPER. n. f. A veſſel made of copper:
commonly uſed for a boiler larger than a moveable pot.

They boiled it in a copper to the half; then they poured it into ea then veſſels. Racon.

COPPER-NOSE. n. f. [copper and nose.] A red nose.

He having colour enough, and the other higher, is too flaming a praife for a good conplexion: I had as lieve Helen's golden tongue had commended Troilus for a copper-nose. Shakſp.

Gutta roſacea ariſeth in little hard tubercles, affecting the face all over with great itching, which, being ſcratched, looks red, and riſes in great welks, rendering the viſage ſeary; and makes copper-noses, as we generally expreſs them.
Wiſeman.

COPPER-PLATE. n. f. A plate on which pictures are engraven for the neater impreſſion, diſtinguiſhed from a wooden cut.

COPPER-WORK. n. f. [copper and work.]
A place where copper is worked or manufactured.

This is like thoſe wrought at copper-works.
Woodward.

CO'PPERAS. n. f. [kopperroſe, Dut. cuperouſe, Fr. ſuppoſed to be found in copper mines only.] A name given to three ſorts of vitriol; the green, the bluiſh green, and the white, which are produced in the mines of Germany, Hungary, and other countries. But what is commonly ſold here for copperas, is an artificial vitriol, made of a kind of ſtones found on the ſea-ſhore in Ef-ſex, Hampſhire, and ſo weſtward, ordinarily called gold ſtones from their colour. They abound with iron, and are expoſed to the weather in beds above ground, and receive the rains and dews, which in time breaks and diſſolves the ſtones: the liquor that runs off is pumped into boilers, in which is firſt put old iron, which, in boiling, diſſolves. This facilitious copperas, in many reſpects, agrees with the native green vitriol.

Chambers. Hill.

It may be queſtioned, whether, in this operation, the iron or copperas be tranſmuted, from the cognation of copperas with copper, and the iron remaining after converſion. Brown.

CO'PPERSMITH. n. f. [copper and smith.]
One that manufactures copper.

Salmonius, as the Grecian tale is,
Was a mad coppersmith of Elis;
Up at his forge by morning peep. Swift.

CO'PPERWORM. n. f. [teredo, Lat.]

1. A little worm in ſhips.
2. A worm that fretteth garments.
3. A worm breeding in one's hand.
Ainſworth.

COPPERY. adj. [from copper.] Containing copper; made of copper.

Some springs of Hungary, highly impregnated with vitriolick salts, dissolve the body of iron put into the spring, and deposite, in lieu of the iron particles carried off, coppery particles brought with the water out of the neighbouring copper-mines. Woodward on Fossils.

COPPICE. n. s. [coupeaux, Fr. from couper, to cut or lop. It is often written copse.] A low wood cut at stated times for fuel; a place overrun with brushwood.

A land, each side whereof was bounded both with high timber trees, and copfes of far more humble growth. Sidney.

Upon the edge of yonder coppice,
A stand, where you may have the fairest shoot. Shakspeare.

In coppice woods, if you leave staddles too thick, they run to bushes and briars, and have little clean underwood. Bacon.

The willows, and the hazel copfes green,
Shall now no more be teen Fanning their joyous leaves to their soft lays. Milton.

Raise trees in your seminaries and nurseries, and you may transplant them for coppice ground, walks, or hedges. Mortimer's Husbandry.

The rate of coppice lands will fall upon the discovery of coalmines. Locke.

COPPLE-DUST. n. s. [probably for coppel, or cupel dust.] Powder used in purifying metals, or the gross parts separated by the cupel.

It may be also tried by incorporating powder of steel, or coppie-dust, by pounding into the quicksilver. Bacon.

COPPLE-STONES are lumps and fragments of stone or marble, broke from the adjacent cliffs, rounded by being bowled and tumbled to and again by the action of the water. Woodward.

COPPLED. adj. [from cop.] Rising in a conick form; rising to a point.

There is some difference in this shape, some being flatter on the top, others more coppied. Woodward on Fossils.

COPSE. n. s. [abbreviated from coppice.] A low wood cut at a certain growth for fuel; a place overgrown with short wood.

The east quarters of the shire are not destitute of copse woods. Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Oaks and hambles, if the copse be burn'd,
Confounded lie, to the same ashes turn'd. Waller.

But in what quarter of the copse it lay,
His eye by certain level could survey. Dryden.

TO COPSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To preserve underwoods.

The neglect of copping wood cut down, hath been of very evil consequence. Swift.

COPULA. n. s. [Latin.] The word which unites the subject and predicate of a proposition: as, books are dear.

The copula is the form of a proposition; it represents the act of the mind, affirming or denying. Watts' Logic.

TO COPULATE. v. a. [copulo, Lat.] To unite; to conjoin; to link together.

If the force of custom, simple and separate, be great, the force of custom copulate, and conjoined, and collegiate, is far greater. Bacon.

TO COPULATE. v. n. To come together as different sexes.

Not only the persons copulating are infected, but also their children. Wissman.

COPULATION. n. s. [from copulate.] The congress or embrace of the two sexes.

Sundry kinds, even of conjugal copulation, are prohibited as unhoneft. Hooker.

COPULATIVE. adj. [copulativus, Latin.] A term of grammar.

Copulative propositions are those which have more subjects or predicates connected by affirmative or negative conjunctions: as, riches and honours are temptations to pride; Cæsar conquered the Gauls and the Britons; neither gold nor jewels will purchase immortality. Watts.

COPY. n. s. [copie, Fr. copia, low Latin; quod cuiquam facta est copia exscribendi.] Junius inclines, after his manner, to derive it from κόπος, labour; because, says he, to copy another's writing is very painful and laborious.]

1. A transcript from the archetype or original.

If virtue's self were lost, we might
From your fair mind new copies write. Waller.
I have not the vanity to think my copy equal to the original. Denham.

He slept forth, not only the copy of God's hands, but also the copy of his perfections, a kind of image or representation of the Deity in small. South's Sermons.

The Romans having sent to Athens, and the Greek cities of Italy, for copies of the best laws, chose ten legislators to put them into form. Swift.

2. An individual book; one of many books: as, a good or fair copy.

The very having of the books of God was a matter of no small charge, as they could not be had otherwise than in written copies. Hooker.

3. The autograph; the original; the archetype; that from which any thing is copied.

It was the copy of our conference;
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it. Shakspeare.

Let him first learn to write, after a copy, all the letters in the vulgar alphabet. Holler.

The first of them I have forgotten, and cannot easily retrieve, because the copy is at the press. Dryden.

4. An instrument by which any conveyance is made in law.

Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives;
But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shakspeare.

5. A picture drawn from another picture.

COPY-BOOK. n. s. [copy and book.] A book in which copies are written for learners to imitate.

COPY-HOLD. n. s. [copy and hold.] A tenure, for which the tenant hath nothing to shew but the copy of the rolls made by the steward of his lord's court: for the steward, as he enrolls other things done in the lord's court, so he registers such tenants as are admitted in the court, to any parcel of land or tenement belonging to the manor; and the transcript of this is called the court roll, the copy of which the tenant takes from him, and keeps as his only evidence.

Copy-hold is called a base tenure, because it holds at the will of the lord; yet not simply, but according to the custom of the manor: so that if a copy-holder break not the custom of the manor, and thereby forfeit his tenure, he cannot be turned out at the lord's pleasure. These customs of manors vary, in one point or other, almost in every manor. Some copy-holds are finable, and some certain: that which is finable, the lord rates at what fine or income he pleases, when the tenant is admitted into it; that which is certain, is a kind of inheritance, and called in many places customary; because the tenant dying, and the hold being void, the next of blood paying the customary fine, as two shillings for an acre, or so, cannot be denied his admission. Some copy-holders have, by custom, the wood growing upon their own land, which by law they could not have. Some hold by the verge in ancient demesne; and though they hold by copy, yet are they, in account, a kind of freeholder; for, if such a one commit felony, the king hath annum, diem, and vestium, as in case of freehold. Some others hold by common tenure, called mere copy-holds; and they committing felony, their land elcheats to the lord of the manor. Cowell.

If a customary tenant die, the widow shall have what the law calls her free bench in all his copy-hold lands. Adlison.

COPY-HOLDER. n. s. [from copyhold.] One that is possessed of land in copyhold.

TO COPY. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To transcribe; to write after an original: it has sometimes out, a kind of pleonasm.

He who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Who loves a lye, lame slander helps about,
Who writes a libel, or who copies out. Pope.

2. To imitate; to propose to imitation; to endeavour to resemble.

He that borrows other men's experience, with this design of copying it out, possesses himself of one of the greatest advantages. Decay of Piety.

Set the examples, and their souls inflame
To copy out their great forefathers fame. Dryden.

To copy her few nymphs aspir'd,
Her virtues fewer swains admir'd. Swift.

TO COPY. v. n.

1. To do any thing in imitation of something else.

Some imagine, that whatsoever they find in the picture of a master, who has acquired reputation, must of necessity be excellent; and never fail, when they copy, to follow the bad as well as the good things. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. It has sometimes from before the thing imitated.

When a painter copies from the life, he has no privilege to alter features: and lineaments, under pretence that his picture will look better. Dryden.

3. Sometimes after.

Several of our countrymen, and Mr. Dryden in particular, seem very often to have copied after it in their dramatick writings, and in their poems upon love. Adlison's Spectator.

TO COQUET. v. a. [from the noun.] To entertain with compliments and amorous tattle; to treat with an appearance of amorous tenderness.

You are coquetting a maid of honour, my lord looking on to see how the gamesters play, and I railing at you both. Swift.

TO COQUET. v. n. To act the lover; to entice by blandishments.

Phyllis, who but a month ago
Was married to the Tunbridge beau,
I saw coquetting t'other night,
In publick, with that odious knight. Swift.

COQUETRY. n. s. [coqueterie, Fr.] Affectionation of amorous advances; desire of attracting notice.

I was often in company with a couple of charming women, who had all the wit and beauty one could desire in female companions, without a dash of coquetry, that from time to time gave me a great many agreeable torments. Adlison.

COQUETTE. n. s. [coquette, Fr. from coquart, a prattler.] A gay, airy girl; a girl who endeavours to attract notice.

The light coquettes in sylphs aloft repair,
And spout and flutter in the fields of air. Pope.

A coquette and a tinder-box are sparkled. Arbutnot.

CO'RACLE. n. f. [corwagle, Welsh; probably from corium, leather, Lat.] A boat used in Wales by fishers, made by drawing leather or oiled cloth upon a frame of wicker work.

CO'RAL. n. f. [corallium, Latin.]

1. Red coral is a plant of as great hardness and stony nature, while growing in the water, as it has after long exposure to the air. The vulgar opinion, that coral is soft while in the sea, proceeds from a soft and thin coat, of a crustaceous matter, covering it while it is growing, and which is taken off before it is packed up for use. The whole coral plant grows to a foot or more in height, and is variously ramified. It is thickest at the stem, and its branches grow gradually smaller. It grows to stones, without a root, or without any way penetrating them; but as it is found to grow, and take in its nourishment, in the manner of plants, and to produce flowers and seeds, or at least a matter analogous to seeds, it properly belongs to the vegetable kingdom.

Hill's Mat. Med.
In the sea, upon the fourth-west of Sicily, much coral is found. It is a submarine plant; it hath no leaves; it brancheth only when it is under water. It is soft, and green of colour; but being brought into the air, it becometh hard and shining red, as we see.

Bacon.
This gentleman, desirous to find the nature of coral, caused a man to go down a hundred fathom into the sea, with express orders to take notice whether it were hard or soft in the place where it groweth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.
He hears the crackling sound of coral woods, And sees the secret source of subterranean floods.

Dryden's Virgil.
A turret was inclos'd
Within the wall, of alabaster white,
And crimson coral, for the queen of night,
Who takes in Sylvan spots her chaste delight.

Dryden.
Or where's the sense, direct or moral,
That teeth are pearl, or lips are coral?

2. The piece of coral which children have about their necks, imagined to assist them in breeding teeth.

Her infant grandame's coral next it grow;
The bells she gingled, and the whistle blew.

CORAL-TREE. n. f. [corallodendron, Lat.] It is a native of America, and produces very beautiful scarlet flowers; but never any seeds in the European gardens.

CO'RALLINE. adj. [corallinus, Lat.] Consisting of coral; approaching to coral. At such time as the sea is agitated, it takes up into itself terrestrial matter of all kinds, and in particular the coralline matter, letting it fall again, as it becomes calm.

CO'RALLINE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Coralline is a sea plant used in medicine; but much inferior to the coral in hardness, sometimes greenish, sometimes yellowish, often reddish, and frequently white.

In Falmouth there is a sort of sand, or rather coralline, that lies under the oar.

CO'RALLOID. } adj. [κοραλλοειδής.] Resembling coral.

CO'RALLOIDAL. } Now that plants and ligenous bodies may indurate under water, without approachment of air, we have experiment in coralline, with many coralloidal concretions.

The pentagons, columnar, coralloid bodies, that are composed of plates fit lengthways of the body, and passing from the surface to the axis of it.

CORANT. n. f. [corant, Fr.] A lofty sprightly dance.

It is harder to dance a corant well than a jig; so in conversation, even, easy, and agreeable, more than points of wit.

I would as soon believe a widow in great grief for her husband, because I saw her dance a corant about his coffin.

CO'RBAN. n. f. [קרבת] An alms-basket; a receptacle of charity; a gift; an alms.

They think to satisfy all obligations to duty by their corban of religion.

King Charles.
Corban stands for an offering or gift made to God, or his temple. The Jews sometimes swore by corban, or the gifts offered unto God. If a man made all his fortune corban, or devoted it to God, he was forbidden to use it. If all that he was to give his wife, or his father and mother, was declared corban, he was no longer permitted to allow them necessary subsistence. Even debtors were permitted to defraud their creditors, by consecrating their debt to God. Our Saviour reproaches the Jews, in the gospel, with these uncharitable and irreligious vows. By this word such persons were likewise meant, as devoted themselves to the service of God and his temple. Corban signifies also the treasury of the temple, where the offerings, which were made in money, were deposited.

CORBE. adj. [courbe, Fr.] Crooked. For sicker thy head very tott'le is,
So thy corbe shoulder it leans amiss.

CO'RBEELS. n. f. Little baskets used in fortification, filled with earth, and set upon the parapet, to shelter the men in firing upon the besiegers.

CO'RBEL. n. f. [In architecture.] The representation of a basket, sometimes placed on the heads of the caryatides.

CO'RBEL. } n. f.
CO'RBIIL. } n. f.

1. A short piece of timber sticking out six or eight inches from a wall, sometimes placed for strength under the semigirders of a platform.

2. A niche or hollow left in walls for figures or statues.

CORD. n. f. [cort, Welsh; chorda, Lat. corde, Fr.]

1. A rope; a string composed of several strands or twits.

She let them down by a cord through the window.

Form'd of the finest complicated thread,
These numerous cords are thro' the body spread.

2. The cords extended in setting up tents, furnish several metaphors in scripture.

Thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; none of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither shall any of the cords thereof be broken.

3. A quantity of wood for fuel, supposed to be measured with a cord; a pile eight feet long, four high, and four broad.

CORD-MAKER. n. f. [cord and make.] One whose trade is to make ropes; a ropemaker.

CORD-WOOD. n. f. [cord and wood.] Wood piled up for fuel, to be sold by the cord.

To CORD. v. a. [from the noun.] To bind with ropes; to fasten with cords; to close by a bandage.

CO'RDAGE. n. f. [from cord.] A quantity of cords; the ropes of a ship.

Our cordage from her store, and cables, should be made.

Of any in that kind most fit for marine trade.

They fastened their ships, and rid at anchor with cables of iron chains, having neither cables nor cordage.

Sprun furnished a sort of rush called sprun, useful for cordage and other parts of shipping.

CO'RDED. adj. [from cord.] Made of ropes.

This night he meaneth, with a corded ladder, To climb celestial Silvia's chamber window.

CORDELI'ER. n. f. A Franciscan friar; so named from the cord which serves him for a cincture.

And who to assist but a grave cordelier.

CO'RDIAL. n. f. [from cor, the heart, Latin.]

1. A medicine that increases the force of the heart, or quickens the circulation.

2. Any medicine that increases strength.

A cordial, properly speaking, is not always what increaseth the force of the heart; for, by increasing that, the animal may be weakened, as in inflammatory diseases. Whatever increaseth the natural or animal strength, the force of moving the fluids and muscles, is a cordial: these are such substances as bring the serum of the blood into the properest condition for circulation and nutrition; as bruths made of animal substances, milk, ripe fruits, and whatever is endued with a wholesome but not pungent taste.

3. Any thing that comforts, gladdens, and exhilarates.

Then with some cordials seek for to appease
The inward languor of my wounded heart,
And then my body shall have thorty ease;
But such sweet cordials pass physicians art.

Spenser.
Cordials of pity give me now,
For I too weak for purges grow.

Your warrior offspring that upheld the crown,
The scarlet honour of your peaceful gown,
Are the most pleasing objects I can find,
Charms to my sight, and cordials to my mind.

CO'RDIAL. adj.

1. Reviving; invigorating; restorative.

It is a thing I make, which hath the king
Five times redeem'd from death: I do not know
What is more cordial.

2. Sincere; hearty; proceeding from the heart; without hypocrisy.

Doctrines are infused among christians, which are apt to obstruct or intercept the cordial superfructing of christian life of renovation, where the foundation is duly laid.

He, with looks of cordial love,
Hung over her enamour'd.

CORDIALITY. n. f. [from cordial.]

1. Relation to the heart That the antients had any such respects of reference unto the heart, will much be doubted.

2. Sincerity; freedom from hypocrisy.

CORDIALLY. adv. [from cordial.] Sincerely; heartily; without hypocrisy.

Where a strong inveterate love of sin has made any doctrine or proposition wholly unsuitable to the heart, no argument or demonstration, no nor in race what ever, shall be able to bring the heart cordially to close with, and receive it.

South's Sermons.

CORNER. n. f. [cordonnier, Fr.] A shoemaker. It is so used in divers statutes.

CORDON. n. f. [Fr.] In fortification, a row of stones jutting out before the rampart and the basis of the parapet.

Chambers.

CORDWAIN. n. f. Cordovan leather, from Cordova in Spain. Spanish leather.

Her straight legs most bravely were embay'd
In golden bulkins of costly cordwain. Fairy Queen.

CORDWAINER. n. f. [uncertain whether from Cordova, Spanish leather, or from cord, of which shoes were formerly made, and are now used in the Spanish West Indies. Trevoux.] A shoemaker.

CORE. n. f. [caur, Fr. cor, Lat.]

1. The heart.

Give me that man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core; ay, in my heart of heart.

Shakespeare's Hamlet.

2. The inner part of any thing.

In the core of the square the raised a tower of a furlong high. Raleigh's History of the World.
Dig out the cores below the surface. Mortimer.

They wasteful eat,
Through buds and bark, into the blacken'd core.

Tomson.

3. The inner part of a fruit which contains the kernels.

It is reported that trees watered perpetually with warm water, will make a fruit with little or no core or stone. Bacon.

4. The matter contained in a boil or sore.

Launce the fore,
And cut the head; for, till the core be found,
The secret vice is fed, and gathers ground.

Dryden's Virgil.

5. It is used by Bacon for a body or collection. [from corps, Fr. pronounced core.]

He was more doubtful of the raising of forces to resist the rebels, than of the resistance itself;
for that he was in a core of people whose affections he suspected. Bacon's Henry VII.

CORIA'CEOUS. adj. [coriaceus, Lat.]

1. Consisting of leather.

2. Of a substance resembling leather.

A stronger projectile motion of the blood must occasion greater secretions and loss of liquid parts, and from thence perhaps spissitude and coriaceus concretions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

CORIAN'DER. n. f. [coriandrum, Latin.]

A plant.

The species are, 1. Greater coriander. 2.
Smaller reticulated coriandr. The first is cultivated for the seeds, which are used in medicine: the second sort is seldom sown. Miller.
Israel called the name thereof annua; and it was, like coriander seed, white. Exodus.

CORINTH. n. f. [from the city of that name in Greece.] A small fruit, commonly called currant.

Now will the corinths, now the rasps supply Delicious draughts. Philipp.

The chief riches of Zont consist in corinths, which the inhabitants have in great quantities.

Brosme.

CORINTHIAN Order.

This is generally reckoned the fourth, but by some the fifth, of the five orders of architecture; and is the most noble, rich, and delicate of them all. Vitruvius ascribes it to Callimachus, a Corinthian sculptor, who is said to have taken the hint by passing by the tomb of a young lady, over which a basket with some of her playthings had been placed by her nurse, and covered with a tile; the whole having been placed over a root of acanthus. As it sprung up, the branches en-

VOL. I.

compassed the basket; but arriving at the tile, bent downwards under the corners of it, forming a kind of volute. Hence Callimachus imitated the basket by the vase of his capital, the tile in the abacus, and the leaves in the volute. Vil-lupandus imagines the Corinthian capital to have taken its original from an order in the temple of Solomon, whose leaves were those of the palm-tree. The capital is adorned with two rows of leaves, between which little stalks arise, of which the sixteen volutes are formed, which support the abacus. Harris.

Behind these figures are large columns of the Corinthian order, adorned with fruit and flowers.
Dryden.

CORK. n. f. [cortex, Lat. kork, Dutch.

Hic dies, anno redeunte, festus

Corticeum astricum pice dimovebit

Amphoræ junum bibere instituit

Consule Tullo. Hor.]

1. A glandiferous tree, in all respects like the ilex, excepting the bark, which, in the cork tree, is thick, spongy, and soft. Miller.

The cork tree grows near the Pyrenean hills, and in several parts of Italy, and the north of New England. Mortimer.

2. The bark of the cork tree used for stopples, or burnt into Spanish black. It is taken off without injury to the tree.

3. A piece of cork cut for the stopple of a bottle or barrel.

I prythee take the cork out of thy mouth, that I may drink thy tidings. Shakespeare.

Be sure, nay very sure, thy cork be good;
Then future ages shall of Peggy tell,
That nymph that brew'd and bottled ale so well.

King.

Nor stop, for one bad cork, his butler's pay.

Pope.

CORKING-PIN. n. f. A pin of the largest size.

When you put a clean pillow-case on your lady's pillow, be sure to fasten it well with three corking-pins, that it may not fall off in the night. Swift.

COR'RY. adj. [from cork.] Consisting of cork; resembling cork.

Bind fast his corry arms. Shakespeare.

COR'MORANT. n. f. [cormorant, Fr. from corvus marinus, Latin.]

1. A bird that preys upon fish. It is nearly of the bigness of a capon, with a wry bill and broad feet, black on his body, but greenish about his wings. He is eminently greedy and rapacious.

Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tablets;
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honour which shall 'bate his scythe's keen edge. Shakespeare.

Those called birds of prey, as the eagle, hawk, puttock, and cormorant. Pea-ham.

Thence up he flew, and on the tree of life
Sat like a cormorant. Milton Par. Lost.

Not far from thence is seen a lake, the haunt
Of coots, and of the fishing cormorant. Dryden.

2. A glutton.

CORN. n. f. [corn, Sax. korn, Germ.

It is found in all the Teutonick dialects;
as, in an old Runick rhyme,

Hagal er kaldastur corna.

Hail is the coldest grain.]

1. The seeds which grow in ears, not in pods; such as are made into bread.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone. John.

The people cry you mock'd them; and, of late,

When corn was given them gratis, you repin'd.

Shakespeare.

2. Grain yet unreaped, standing in the field upon its stalk.

All the idle weeds that grow
In our flourishing corn. Shakespeare.

Landing his men, he burnt the corn all thereabouts, which was now almost ripe. Knelles.

Still a murmur runs

Along the soft inclining fields of corn. Tomson.

3. Grain in the ear, yet unthrashed.

Thou shalt come to thy grave in a full age, like as a stack of corn cometh in his season. Job.

4. An excrescence on the feet, hard and painful; probably so called from its form, though by some supposed to be denominated from its corneous or horny substance.

Ladies, that have your feet Unplag'd with corns, we'll have a bout with you. Shakespeare.

The man that makes his toe
What he his heart should make,
Shall of a corn cry woe,
And turn his sleep to wake. Shakespeare.

Even in men, aches and hurts and corns do en-grieve either towards rain or towards frost.

Bacon's Natural History.

The hardest part of the corn is usually in the middle, thrusting itself in a nail; whence it has the Latin appellation of clavis. Wifeman.

He first that useful secret did explain,
That pricking corns foretold the gall'ing rain.

Gay's Poet.

It looks as there were regular accumulations and gatherings of humours, growing perhaps in some people as corns. Arbuthnot.

Thus Lamb, renown'd for cutting corns,
An offer'd fee from Radelit's corns. Swift.

TO CORN. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To salt; to sprinkle with salt. The word is so used, as Skinner observes, by the old Saxons.

2. To granulate.

CORN-FIELD. n. f. A field where corn is growing.

It was a lover and his life,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass. Shaksp.

You may soon enjoy the gallant lights of armies, encampments, and standards waving over your brother's corn-fields. Pope.

CORN-FLAG. n. f. [corn and flag.] A plant. Miller enumerates eleven species of this plant, some with red flowers, and some with white.

CORN-FLOOR. n. f. The floor where corn is stored.

Thou hast loved a reward upon every corn-floor.

Hogea.

CORN-FLOWER. n. f. [from corn and flower.]

There be certain corn-flowers, which come seldom or never in other places, unless they be set, but only amongst corn; as the blue-bottle, a kind of yellow marygold, wild poppy, and sur-matory. Bacon's Natural History.

Corn-flowers are of many sorts: some of them flower in June and July, and others in August.
The seeds should be sown in March; they require a good soil. Mortimer.

CORN-LAND. n. f. [corn and land.] Land appropriated to the production of grain.

Pastures and meadows are of such advantage to husbandry, that many prefer them to corn lands. Mortimer's Husbandry.

CORN-MASTER. n. f. [corn and master.]

One that cultivates corn for sale. Not in use.

I knew a nobleman in England, that had the greatest audits of any man in my time; a great grafer, a great sheep-master, a great timber-man, a great collier, a great corn-myster, and a great lead-man. Bacon.

CORN-MARIGOLD. n. f. [from corn and marigold.] A flower.

CORN-MILL. n. f. [corn and mill.] A mill to grind corn into meal.

Save the more laborious work of beating of hemp, by making the axle-tree of the corn-mills longer than ordinary, and placing pins in it to raise large hammers. Mortimer.

CORN-PIPE. n. f. [from corn and pipe.] A pipe made by flitting the joint of a green stalk of corn.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms, To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms. Tickel.

CORN-ROCKET. n. f. [from corn and rocket.] A plant.

CORN-ROSE. n. f. A species of poppy.

CORN-SALLAD. n. f. [from corn and sallad.] An herb, whose top-leaves are a fallet of themselves. Mortimer.

CORNAGE. n. f. [from corne, Fr. cornu, Lat.] A tenure which obliges the landlord to give notice of an invasion by blowing a horn.

CORNCHANDLER. n. f. [corn and chandler.] One that retails corn.

CORNCUTTER. n. f. [from corn and cut.] A man whose profession is to extirpate corns from the foot.

The nail was not loose, nor did seem to press into the flesh; for there had been a corn-cutter, who had cleared it. Wife-man.

I have known a corn-cutter, who, with a tight education, would have been an excellent physician. Spectator.

CORNEL. } n. f. [cornus, Lat.]

CORNELIAN-TREE. } The cornel tree beareth the fruit commonly called the cornel or cornelian cherry, as well from the name of the tree, as the cornelian stone, the colour whereof it somewhat represents. The wood is very durable, and useful for wheel-work. Mortimer.

Take a service-tree, or a cornelian-tree, or an elder-tree, which we know have fruits of harsh and binding juice, and set them near a vine or fig-tree, and see whether the grapes or figs will not be the sweeter. Bacon.

A huntress issuing from the wood, Reclining on her cornel spear the stood. Dryden.

Mean time the goddess, in disdain, bestows The mast and acorn, brutal food! and strows The fruits of cornel, as they feast around. Pope.

On wildings and on strawberries they fed; Cornels and brambleberries gave the rest, And falling acorns furnish'd out a feast. Dryden.

CORNELIAN STONE. See CARNELIAN.

CORNEMUSE. n. f. [Fr.] A kind of rustic flute.

CORNEOUS. adj. [corneus, Lat.] Horny; of a substance resembling horn.

Such as have corneous or horny eyes, as lobsters, and crustaceous animals, are generally dimighted. Brown.

The various submarine shrubs are of a corneous or ligneous constitution, consisting chiefly of a fibrous matter. Westward.

CORNER. n. f. [cornel, Welsh; cornier, French.]

1. An angle; a place enclosed by two walls or lines which would intersect each other, if drawn beyond the point where they meet.
2. A secret or remote place.

There 's nothing I have done yet, o' my conscience,

Deserves a corner. Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
It is better to dwell in a corner of a house top, than with a brawling woman and in a wide house. Proverbs.

I am persuaded that none of these things are hidden from him; for this thing was not done in a corner. Act.

All the inhabitants, in every corner of the island, have been absolutely reduced under his immediate subjection. Daries.

Those vices, that lurk in the secret corners of the soul. And son.

3. The extremities; the utmost limit: thus every corner is the whole or every part.

Might I but through my prison, once a day, Behold this maid, all corners else o' th' earth Let liberty make use of. Shakespeare's Tempest.

I turn'd, and tried each corner of my bed, To find if sleep were there; but sleep was lost. Dryden.

CORNER-STONE. n. f. [corner and stone.] The stone that unites the two walls at the corner; the principal stone.

See you yond' coin o' th' capitol, yond' corner-stone? Shakespeare.

A mason was fitting a corner-stone. Howel.

CORNER-TEETH of a Horse, are the fore-teeth between the middling teeth and the tusks: two above and two below, on each side of the jaw, which shoot when the horse is four years and a half old. Farrier's Dict.

CORNERWISE. adv. [corner and wise.] Diagonally; with the corner in front.

CORNET. n. f. [cornette, Fr.]

1. A musical instrument blown with the mouth: used anciently in war, probably in the cavalry.

Israel played before the Lord on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets. 2 Samuel.

Other wind instruments require a forcible breath; as trumpets, cornets, and hunters horns. Bacon's Natural History.

Cornets and trumpets cannot reach his ear; Under an actor's nose, he 's never near. Dryden.

2. A company or troop of horse; perhaps as many as had a cornet belonging to them. This sense is now disused.

These noblemen were appointed, with some cornets of horse and bands of foot, to put themselves beyond the hill where the rebels were encamped. Bacon.

Seventy great horses lay dead in the field, and one cornet was taken. Hayward.

They discerned a body of five cornets of horse very full, standing in very good order to receive them. Clarendon.

3. The officer that bears the standard of a troop.

4. CORNET of a Horse, is the lowest part of his pattern, that runs round the coffin, and is distinguished by the hair that joins and covers the upper part of the hoof. Farrier's Dict.

5. A scarf anciently worn by doctors. Dict.

6. A headdress. Dict.

7. CORNET of Paper, is described by Skinner to be a cap of paper, made by retailers for small wares.

CORNETTER. n. f. [from cornet.] A blower of the cornet.

So great was the rabble of trumpeters, cornetters, and other musicians, that even Claudius himself might have heard them. Hakerwill.

CORNICE. n. f. [corniche, French.] The highest projection of a wall or column.

The cornice of the Palazzo Farnese, which makes so beautiful an effect below, when viewed more nearly, will be found not to have its just measure. Dryden's Dajresnoy.

The walls were massy brass, the cornice high Blue metals crown'd, in colours of the sky. Pope's Odyssey.

CORNICE Ring. [In gunnery.] The next ring from the muzzle backwards. Chambers.

CORNICIE. n. f. [from cornu, Lat.] A little horn.

There will be found, on either side, two black filaments, or membranous strings, which extend unto the long and shorter cornicle, upon protrusion. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNICULATE. adj. [from cornu, Lat.] A term in botany.

Corniculate plants are such as produce many distinct and horned pods; and corniculate flowers are such hollow flowers as have on their upper part a kind of spur, or little horn. Chambers.

CORNIFICK. adj. [from cornu and facio, Lat.] Productive of horns; making horns. Diã.

CORNIGEROUS. adj. [corniger, Latin.] Horned; having horns.

Nature, in other cornigerous animals, hath placed the horns higher, and reclining; as in bucks. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CORNUCOPIA. n. f. [Lat.] The horn of plenty; a horn topped with fruits and flowers in the hands of a goddess.

To CORNU'TE. v. a. [cornutus, Lat.] To bellow horns; to cuckold.

CORNU'TED. adj. [cornutus, Latin.] Grafted with horns; horned; cuckolded.

CORNU'TO. n. f. [from cornutus, Latin.] A man horned; a cuckold.

The peaking cornuto, her husband, dwelling in a continual storm of jealousy. Shakespeare.

CORNY. adj. [from cornu, horn, Lat.]

1. Strong or hard like horn; horny. Up stood the corny reed, Embattel'd in her field. Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. [from corn.] Producing grain or corn. Tell me why the ant, 'Midst summer's plenty, thinks of winter's want; By constant journeys careful to prepare Her stores, and bringing home the corny ear. Prior.

3. Containing corn. They lodge in habitations not their own, By their high crops and corny gizzards known. Dryden.

COROLLARY. n. f. [corollarium, Latin; from corolla; finis coronat opus: corollair, Fr.]

1. The conclusion: a corollary seems to be a conclusion, whether following from the premises necessarily or not.

Now since we have considered the malignity of this sin of detraction, it is but a natural corollary, that we enforce our vigilance against it. Government of the Tongue.

As a corollary to this preface, in which I have done justice to others, I owe somewhat to myself. Dryden's Preface.

2. Surplus. Bring a corollary, Rather than want. Shakespeare's Tempest.

CORONA. n. f. [Latin.] A large flat member of the cornice, so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

In a cornice the gola or cymatium of the corona, the coping, the modillions or dentelli, make a noble shew by their graceful projections.

Spectator

CO'RONAL. n. f. [corona, Latin.] A crown; a garland.

Crown ye god Biechus with a coronal,
And Hymen also crown with wreaths of vine.

Spenser

CO'RONAL. adj. Belonging to the top of the head.

A man of about forty-five years of age came to me, with a round tubercle between the sagittal and coronal future.

Wijeman.

CO'RONARY. a. j. [coronarius, Lat.]

1. Relating to a crown; seated on the top of the head like a crown.

The basilisk of older times was a proper kind of serpent, not above three palms long, as some account; and distinguished from other serpents by advancing his head, and some white marks, or coronary spots upon the crown.

Brown.

2. It is applied in anatomy to arteries, which are fancied to encompass the heart in the manner of a garland.

The substance of the heart itself is most certainly made and nourished by the blood, which is conveyed to it by the coronary arteries.

Bentley.

CORONATION. n. f. [from corona, Lat.]

1. The act or solemnity of crowning a king.

Fortune smiling at her work therein, that a scaffold of execution should grow a scaffold of coronation.

Sidney.

Willingly I came to Denmark,
To shew my duty in your coronation.

A cough, fit, which I caught with ringing in the king's attans upon his coronation day.

Now empress fame had publish'd the renown
Of Sh—'s coronation through the town.

Dryd.

2. The pomp or assembly present at a coronation.

In pensive thought recal the fancied scene,
See coronations rise on ev'ry green.

Pope.

CO'RONER. n. f. [from corona.] An officer whose duty is to inquire, on the part of the king, how any violent death was occasioned; for which purpose a jury is impannelled.

Go thou and seek the coroner, and let him fit o' my uncle; for he 's in the third degree of drink; he 's drowned.

Shakespeare.

CO'RONET. n. f. [coronetta, Ital. the diminutive of corona, a crown.]

1. An inferior crown worn by the nobility. The coronet of a duke is adorned with strawberry leaves; that of a marquis has leaves with pearls interposed; that of an earl raises the pearls above the leaves; that of a viscount is surrounded with only pearls; that of a baron has only four pearls.

In his livery
Walk'd crowns and coronets; realms and islands were

As plates dropt from his pocket.

All the rest are countesses.
—Their coronets lay so.

Nor could our nobles hope their bold attempt
Who ruin'd crowns, would coronets exempt.

Dryden.

Peers and dukes, and all their sweeping train,
And gutters, stars, and coronets appear.

2. An ornamental headdress, in poetical language.

The jest was drawn into a coronet of gold, richly set with pearl.

Sidney.

Under a coronet his flowing hair,
In curls, on either cheek play'd.

Milton.

CO'RPORAL. n. f. [corrupted from corporal, Fr.] The lowest officer of the infantry, whose office is to place and remove the sentinels.

The cruel corporal whisper'd in my ear,
Five pounds, if rightly tipt, would set me clear.

Gay.

CORPORAL of a Ship. An officer that hath the charge of setting the watches and sentinels, and relieving them; who sees that all the foldiers and sailors keep their arms neat and clean, and teaches them how to use them. He has a mate under him.

Harris.

CORPORAL. adj. [corporel, Fr. corpus, Latin.]

1. Relating to the body; belonging to the body.

To relief of lazars and weak age,
Of indigent faint souls past corporal toil,
A hundred alms houses right well supplied.

Shakespeare.

Render to me some corporal sign about her,
More evident than this.

Shakespeare.

That God hath been otherwise seen, with corporal eyes, exceedeth the small proportion of my understanding.

Raleigh.

Beasts enjoy greater sensual pleasures, and feel fewer corporal pains; and are utter strangers to all those anxious and tormenting thoughts which perpetually haunt and disquiet mankind.

Atterbury.

2. Material; not spiritual. In the present language, when body is used philosophically in opposition to spirit, the word corporeal is used, as, a corporeal being; but otherwise corporal. Corporeal is, having a body; corporal, relating to the body. This distinction seems not ancient.

Whither are they vanish'd?
Into the air; and what seem'd corporal
Melted, as breath, into the wind.

Shakespeare.

And from these corporal nutriments, perhaps,
Your bodies may at last turn all to spirit.

Milton.

CORPORALITY. n. f. [from corporal.]

The quality of being imbodied.

If this light be not spiritual, yet it approacheth nearest unto spirituality; and if it have any corporality, then, of all others, the most subtle and pure.

Raleigh's History.

CORPORALLY. adv. [from corporal.]

Bodily.
The sun is corporally conjoined with basiliscus.

Brown.

CORPORATE. adj. [from corpus, Lat.]

1. United in a body or community; enabled to act in legal processes as an individual.

Breaking forth like a sudden tempest, he over-run all Munster and Connaught, desacing and utterly subverting all corporate towns that were not strongly walled.

Spenser on Ireland.

The nobles of Athens being not at this time a corporate assembly, therefore the resentment of the commons was usually turned against particular persons.

Swift.

2. General; united.

They answer in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall.

Shakespeare.

CORPORATENESS. n. f. [from corporate.]

The state of a body corporate; a community.

Dist.

CORPORATION. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.]

A body politic, authorized by the king's charter to have a common seal, one head officer or more, and members, able, by their common consent, to grant or receive, in law, any thing within the compass of their charter: even as one man may do by law all things, that by law he is not forbidden; and bindeth the successors, as a single man binds his executor or heir.

Corwell.

Of angels we are not to consider only what they are, and do, in regard to their own being; but that also which concerneth them, as they are linked into a kind of corporation amongst themselves, and of society with men.

Hooker.

Of this we find some foot-steps in our law,
Which dash her root from God and nature take;
Ten thousand men she doth together draw,
And of them all one corporation make.

Travies.

CORPORATURE. n. f. [from corpus, Lat.] The state of being imbodied.

Dist.

CORPO'REAL. adj. [corporeus, Lat.]

1. Having a body; material; not spiritual. See CORPORAL.

The swiftness of these circles attribute,
Though numberless, to his omnipotence,
That to corporeal substances could add Speed almost spiritual.

Having surveyed the image of God in the soul,
we are not to omit those characters that God imprinted upon the body, as much as a spiritual substance could be pictured upon a corporeal.

God being supposed to be a pure spirit, cannot be the object of any corporeal sense.

The course is finish'd which thy fates decreed,
And thou from thy corporeal prison freed.

Fix thy corporeal and internal eye
On the young gear, or new engender'd fly.

2. It is used by Swift inaccurately for corporeal.

I am not in a condition to make a true step even on Aimsbury Downs; and I declare, that a corporeal false step is worse than a political one.

Swift.

CORPOREITY. n. f. [from corporeus, Lat.] Materiality; the quality of being imbodied; the state of having a body; bodiliness.

Since philosophy affirmeth, that we are middle substances between the soul and the body, they must admit of some corporeity, which supposeth weight or gravity.

It is the saying of divine Plato, that man is nature's horizon, dividing betwixt the upper hemisphere of immaterial intellects, and this lower of corporeity.

The one attributed corporeity to God, and the other shape and figure.

CORPORIFICATION. n. f. [from corporify.] The act of giving body or palpability.

TO CORPORIZY. v. a. [from corpus, Lat.] To imbody; to inspissate into body. Not used.

A certain spirituous substance, extracted out of it, is mistaken for the spirit of the world corporsified.

CORPS. } n. f. [corps, Fr. corpus, Lat.]

1. A body.

That lewd ribald
Laid first his filthy hands on virgin cloene,
To spoil her dainty corpe, so fair and sheene,
Of chastity and honour virginal.

2. A body, in contempt.

Though pteuous, all too little seems
To stuff this man, this veil unhide-bound corps.

He looks as man was made, with face erect.
That scorns his brittle corps, and seems abham'd
He 's not all spirit.

3. A carcase; a dead body; a corse.

Not a friend
Greet my poor corps, where my bones shall be thrown.

Shakespeare.

There was the murder'd corps in covert laid,
And violent death in thousand thaps display'd.
Dryden's Fables.
See where the corps of thy dead son approaches.
Addison.
The corps was laid out upon the floor by the emperor's command: he then bid every one light his flambeau, and stand about the dead body.
Addison's Guardian.

4. The body, in opposition to the soul.
Cold numbness freight bereaves
Her corps of sense, and th' air her soul receives.
Denham.

5. A body of forces.

CORPULENCE. } n. f. [corpulentia, Lat.]
CORPULENCY. }

1. Bulkiness of body; fleshiness; fulness of flesh.

To what a cumbersome unwieldiness,
And burdensome corpulence, my love had grown.
Donne.

It is but one species of corpulence; for there may be bulk without fat, from the great quantity of muscular flesh, the case of robust people.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Spissitude; grossness of matter.

The muscular flesh serves for the vibration of the tail; the heaviness and corpulence of the water requiring a great force to divide it. Ray.

CORPULENT. adj. [corpulentus, Latin.]
Flehy; bulky; having great bodily bulk.

We say it is a fleshy style, when there is much periphrases, and circuit of words; and when,
with more than enough, it grows fat and corpulent.
Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

Excess of nourishment is hurtful; for it mak-eth the child corpulent, and growing in breadth rather than in height. Bacon.

CORPUSCLE. n. f. [corpusculum, Lat.]
A small body; a particle of matter; an atom; a little fragment.

It will add much to our satisfaction, if those corpuscles can be discovered with microscopes.
Newton.

Who knows what are the figures of the little corpuscles that compose and distinguish different bodies?
Watts' Logic.

CORPUSCULAR. } adj. [from corpusculum, Latin.]

Relating to bodies; comprising bodies.
It is the distinguishing epithet of that philosophy, which attempts the rational solution of all physical appearances by the action of one body upon another.

As to natural philosophy, I do not expect to see any principles proposed, more comprehensive and intelligible than the corpuscularian or mechanical.
Boyle.

This may be said, that the modern corpuscu-larians talk, in moist things, more intelligibly than the peripateticks.
Bentley.

The mechanical or corpuscular philosophy, though peradventure the eldest, as well as the best in the world, had lain dead for many ages in contempt and oblivion.
Bentley.

CORRACLE. See CORRICLE.

To CORRARE. v. a. [corrado, Lat.] To rub off; to wear away by frequent rubbing; to scrape together.

CORRADIATION. n. f. [con and radius, Latin.] A conjunction of rays in one point.

The impression of colour worketh not but by a cone of direct beams, or right lines, whereof the basis is in the object, and the vertex point in the eye; so as there is a corradiation, and conjunction of beams.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

To CORRECT. v. a. [corrigo, correctum,
Latin.]

1. To punish; to chastise; to discipline.

Sad accidents, and a state of affliction, is a school of virtue; it corrects levity, and interrupts
the confidence of sinning.
Taylor.

After he has once been corrected for a lye, you must be sure never atter to pardon it in him.
Locke on Education.

Children being to be restrained by the parents only in vicious things, a look or nod only ought to correct them when they do amiss.
Locke.

2. To amend; to take away faults in writings, life, or things.

This is a defect in the first make of some men's minds, which can scarce ever be corrected afterwards, either by learning or age.
Burnet.

Correcting Nature, from what actually the is in individuals, to what she ought to be, and what she was created.
Dryden.

I writ, because it amused me; I corrected, because it was as pleasant to me to correct as to write.
Pope's Preface.

The mind may cool, and be at leisure to attend to its domestick concern: to consider what hat it wants to be corrected, and what inclination to be subdued.
Rogers.

3. To obviate the qualities of one ingredient by another, or by any method of preparation.

O happy mixture! wherein things contrary do so qualify and correct the one the danger of the other's excess, that neither boldness can make us presume, as long as we are kept under with the sense of our own wretchedness; nor, while we trust in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, fear be able to tyrannize over us.
Tiecker.

As, in habitual gout or stone,
The only thing that can be done,
Is to correct your drink and diet,
And keep the inward foe in quiet.
Prior.

In cases of acidity, water is the proper drink:
its quality of relaxing may be corrected by boiling it with some animal substances; as ivory or hartshorn.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

4. To remark faults.

CORRECT. adj. [correctus, Latin.] Revised or finished with exactness; free from faults.

What verse can do, he has perform'd in this,
Which he presumes the most correct of his.
Dryden.

Always use the most correct editions: various readings will be only troublesome where the sense is complete.
Felton.

CORRECTION. n. f. [from correct.]

1. Punishment; discipline; chastisement; penalty.

Wilt thou, pupil like,
Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod? Shaksp.
An offensive wife,

That hath enrag'd him on to offer strokes,
As he is striking, holds his infant up,
And hangs rebov'd correction in the arm
That was uprear'd to execution.
Shaksp.

We are all but children here under the great master of the family; and he is pleased, by hopes and fears, by mercies and corrections, to instruct us in virtue.
Watts.

One fault was too great lenity to her servants, to whom she gave good counsel, but too gentle correction.
Arbuthnot.

2. Alteration to a better state; the act of taking away faults; amendment.

Another poet, in another age, may take the same liberty with my writings; if, at least, they live long enough to deserve correction.
Dryden.

3. That which is substituted in the place of any thing wrong.

Corrections or improvements should be adjoined, by way of note or commentary, in their proper places.
Watts.

4. Reprehension; animadversion.

They proceed with judgment and ingenuity, establishing their assertions not only with great solidity, but subverting them also into the correction of future discovery.
Brown.

5. Abatement of noxious qualities, by the addition of something contrary.

To make ambitious, wholesome, do not take
A dram of country's dulness; do not add Corrections, but as chymists purge the bad. Donne.
CORRECTIONER. n. f. [from correction.]
One that has been in the house of correction; a jailbird. This seems to be the meaning in Shakspere.

I will have you soundly swung for this, you blue-bottle rogue! you filthy famished *correction*er.
Shakspere's Henry IV.

CORRECTIVE. adj. [from correct.] Having the power to alter or obviate any bad qualities.

Mulberries are pectoral, corrective of bilious alkali.
Arbuthnot.

CORRECTIVE. n. f.

1. That which has the power of altering or obviating any thing amiss.

The hair, wool, feathers, and scales, which all animals of prey do swallow, are a reasonable and necessary corrective, to prevent their greediness from filling themselves with too succulent a food.
Ray on the Creation.

Humanly speaking, and according to the method of the world, and the little correctives supplied by art and discipline, it seldom fails but an ill principle has its course, and nature makes good its blow.
South's Sermons.

2. Limitation; restriction.

There seems to be such an instance in the regiment which the human soul exerciseth in relation to the body, that, with certain correctives and exceptions, may give some kind of explication or adumbration thereof.
Hale.

CORRECTLY. adv. [from correct.] Accurately; exactly; without faults.

There are ladies, without knowing what tenes and participles, adverbs and prepositions are, speak as properly and as correctly as most gentlemen who have been bred up in the ordinary methods of grammar schools.
Locke.

Such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
Correctly cold, and regularly low.
Pope.

CORRECTNESS. n. f. [from correct.] Accuracy; exactness; freedom from faults.

Too much labour often takes away the spirit,
By adding to the polishing; so that there remains nothing but a dull correctness, a piece without any considerable faults, but with few beauties.
Dryden's Distaff.

The softness of the flesh, the delicacy of the shape, air, and posture, and the correctness of design, in this statue, are inexpressible. Addison.

Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war.
Pope.

Those pieces have never before been printed from the true copies, or with any tolerable degree of correctness.
Swift.

CORRECTOR. n. f. [from correct.]

1. He that amends, or alters, by punishment or animadversion.

How many does zeal urge rather to do justice on some sins, than to forbear all sin! How many rather to be correctors than practisers of religion.
Spaul's Sermon.

With all his faults, he sets up to be an universal reformer and corrector of abuses, and a remover of grievances.
Swift.

2. He that revises any thing to free it from faults: as the corrector of the press, that amends the errors committed in printing.

I remember a person, who, by his style and literature, seems to have been the corrector of a hedge press in Little Britain, proceeding gradually to an author.
Swift.

3. In medicine.

Such an ingredient in a composition, as guards against or abates the force of another; as the lixivial salts prevent the grievous velleations of refinous purges, by dividing their particles, and preventing their adhesion to the intestinal membranes; and as spices and carminative seeds assist the operation of some catharticks, by dissipating wind. In making a medicine, such a thing is called a corrector, which destroys or diminishes a quality that could not otherwise be dispensed with; thus turpentine is a corrector of quicksilver, by destroying its fluxility, and making it capable of mixture.

Quincy.

TO CORRELATE. v. n. [from con and relatus, Lat.] To have a reciprocal relation, as father and son.

CORRELATE. n. f. One that stands in the opposite relation.

It is one thing for a father to cease to be a father, by calling off his son; and another for him to cease to be so, by the death of his son; in this the relation is at an end, for want of a correlate.

South.

CORRELATIVE. adj. [con and relativus, Latin.] Having a reciprocal relation, so that the existence of one in a particular state depends upon the existence of another.

Father and son, husband and wife, and such other correlative terms, seem nearly to belong one to another.

South.

Giving is a relative action, and so requires a correlative to answer it; giving, on one part, transfers no property, unless there be an accepting on the other.

South.

CORRELATIVENESS. n. f. [from correlative.] The state of being correlative.

CORREPTION. n. f. [corripio, corruptum, Latin.] Objection; chiding; reprehension; reproof.

If we must be talking of other people's faults, let it not be to defame, but to amend them, by converting our detraction into admonition and fraternal correction.

Government of the Tongue.

TO CORRESPOND. v. n. [con and respondeo, Latin.]

1. To suit; to answer; to be proportionate; to be adequate to; to be adapted to; to fit.

The days, if one be compared with another successively throughout the year, are found not to be equal, and will not justly correspond with any artificial or mechanical equal measures of time.

Hobler on Time.

Words being but empty sounds, any further than they are signs of our ideas, we cannot but assent to them, as they correspond to those ideas we have, but no further than that.

Locke.

2. To keep up commerce with another by alternate letters.

CORRESPONDENCE. } n. f. [from con-
CORRESPONDENCY. } respond.]

1. Relation; reciprocal adaptation of one thing to another.

Between the law of their heavenly operations, and the actions of men in this our state of mortality, such correspondence there is as maketh it expedient to know in some sort the one, for the other's more perfect direction.

Hooker.

Whatever we fancy, things keep their course; and their habitodes, correspondencies, and relations, keep the same to one another.

Locke.

2. Intercourse; reciprocal intelligence.

I had discovered those unlawful correspondencies they had used, and engagements they had made to embroil my kingdoms.

King Charles.

Sure the villains hold a correspondence with the enemy, and thus they would betray us.

Denham.

It happens very oddly, that the pope and I should have the same thought much about the same time: my enemies will be apt to say, that we hold a correspondence together, and act by concert in this matter.

Addison.

3. Friendship; interchange of offices or civilities.

Let such military persons be assured, and well reputed of, rather than factious and popular; holding also good correspondence with the other great men in the state.

CORRO'SION. n. f. [corrodo, Latin.] The power of eating or wearing away by degrees.

Corrosion is a particular species of dissolution of bodies, either by an acid or a saline menstruum. It is almost wholly designed for the resolution of bodies most strongly compacted, as bones and metals; so that the menstrua here employed have a considerable moment of force. These liquors, whether acid or urinous, are nothing but salts dissolved in a little phlegm; therefore these being solid, and consequently containing a considerable quantity of matter, do both attract one another more, and are also more attracted by the particles of the body to be dissolved: so when the more solid bodies are put into saline menstrua, the attraction is stronger than in other solutions: and the motion, which is always proportional to the attraction, is more violent: so that we may easily conceive, when the motion is in such a manner increased, it should drive the salts into the pores of the bodies, and open and loosen their cohesion, though ever so firm. Quincy.

A kind of poison worketh either by corrosion, or by a secret malignity and enmity to nature. Bacon's Natural History.

That corrosion and dissolution of bodies, even the most solid and durable, which is vulgarly ascribed to the air, is caused merely by the action of water upon them; the air being so far from injuring and preying upon the bodies it environs, that it contributes to their security and preservation. Woodward.

COTA'NGENT. n. f. [In geometry.] The tangent of an arch which is the complement of another to ninety degrees. Harris.

To COTE. v. a. This word, which I have found only in Chapman, seems to signify the same as To leave behind, To overpass.

Words her worth had prov'd with deeds,
 Had more ground been allow'd the race, and coted far his steeds. Chapman's Iliad.

COTE'MPORARY. adj. [con and tempus, Latin.] Living at the same time; coetaneous; contemporary.

What would not, to a rational man, contemporary with the first voucher, have appeared probable, is now used as certain, because several have since, from him, said it one after another. Locke.

COTLAND. v. f. [cot and land.] Land appendant to a cottage.

COTQUEAN. n. f. [probably from coquin, French.] A man who busies himself with women's affairs.

Look to the bak'd meats, good Angelica;
 Spare not for cost.—

—Go, go, you coquean, go;
 Get you to bed. Shakspeare's Romeo and Juliet.

A stateswoman is as ridiculous a creature as a coquean: each of the sexes should keep within its bounds. Addison.

You have given us a lively picture of husbands hen-pecked; but you have never touched upon one of the quite different character, and who goes by the name of coquean. Addison.

COTTAGE. n. f. [from cot.] A hut; a mean habitation; a cot; a little house.

The sea coast shall be dwellings and cottages for the shepherds, and folds for flocks. Zephaniah.

They were right glad to take some corner of a poor cottage, and there to serve God upon their knees. Hooker.

The self-same sun that shines upon his court, Hides not his visage from our cottages, but Looks on both alike. Shakspeare's Winter's Tale.

Let the women of noble birth and great fortunes nurse their children, look to the affairs of the house, visit poor cottages, and relieve their necessities. Taylor's Holy Lu. ang.

It is difficult for a peasant, bred up in the obscurities of a cottage, to fancy in his mind the splendours of a court. South.

Beneath our humble cottage let us haste,
 And here, unenvied, rural dainties taste. Pope.

COTTAGER. n. f. [from cottage.]

COTTIER. n. f. [from cot.] One who inhabits a cot. Diel.

COTTION. n. f. [named, according to Skinner, from the down that adheres to the mula cotonea, or quince, called by the Italians cotogni; whence cottone, Ital. cotton, French.]

1. The down of the cotton-tree.
 The pin ought to be as thick as a rowling-pin, and covered with cotton, that its hardness may not be offensive. Wijeman.
2. Cloth made of cotton.

COTTON. n. f. A plant.

The species are, 1. Shrubby cotton. 2. The most excellent American cotton, with a greenish seed. 3. Annual shrubby cotton, of the island of Providence. 4. The tree cotton. 5. Tree cotton, with a yellow flower. The first sort is cultivated plentifully in Candia, Lemnos, Cyprus, Malta, Sicily, and at Naples; as also between Jerusalem and Damascus, from whence the cotton is brought annually into these northern parts of Europe. The cotton is the wool which incloses or wraps up the seeds, and is contained in a kind of brown husk, or seed-vessel, growing upon this shrub. It is from this sort that the vast quantities of cotton are taken, which furnish our parts of the world. The second and third sorts are annual: these are cultivated in the West Indies in great plenty. But the fourth and fifth sorts grow in Egypt: these abide many years, and often arrive to be trees of great magnitude. Muler.

To COTTON. v. n.

1. To rise with a knap.
2. To cement; to unite with: a cant word.

A quarrel will end in one of you being turned off, in which case it will not be easy to cotton with another. Swift.

To COUCH. v. n. [coucher, French.]

1. To lie down on a place of repose.
 If I court more women, you'll couch with more men. Shakspeare.

Like plated coat of steel, so couch'd neat,
That nought might pierce. Spenser
7. To fix the spear in the rest, in the posture of attack.
The knight 'gan fairly couch his steady spear,
And fiercely ran at him with rigorous might. Spenser
Before each van
Prick forth the aery knights, and couch their spears, Till thickest legions close. Milton's P. I. p.
The farmer wav'd in air
His flaming sword; Aeneas couch'd his spear. Dryden's Iliad.
8. To depress the condensed crystalline humour or film that overspreads the pupil of the eye. This is improperly call'd couching the eye, for couching the cataract: with equal impropriety they sometimes speak of couching the patient.
Some artist, whose nice hand
Winches the cataracts, and clears his eyes,
And all at once a flood of glorious light
Comes tushing on his eyes. Dennis.

- Whether the cataract be wafed by being separated from its vessel, I have never known positively, by dissecting one that had been couch'd. Sharp.
- COUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. A seat of repose, on which it is common to lie down dressed.
So Satan fell; and dragg'd a fiery globe
Of angels on full sail of wing flew high,
Who on their pluney was receiv'd him lost
From his onaly station, and upboe,
As on a floating couch, through the blithe air. Milton's Paradise Regain'd.
To loll on couches rich with citron beds,
And lay their guilty limbs in Tyrian beds. Dante's Virg. Georgicks.
O ye immortal pow'rs, that guard the jui,

Thou may'st repent,
And one bad act with many deeds well done

6. To shelter; to protect.

His calm and blemish'd life
Does with substantial beneficence abound,
And the soft wings of peace cover him round.
Cowley.

7. To incubate; to brood on.

Natural historians observe, that only the male birds have voices; that their songs begin a little before breeding time, and end a little after; that whilst the hen is covering her eggs, the male generally takes his stand upon a neighbouring bough within her hearing, and by that means amotes and diverts her with his songs during the whole time of her sitting.
Albion's Spectator.

8. To copulate with a female.

9. To wear the hat, or garment of the head, as a mark of superiority or independence.

That king had conferred the honour of grandee upon him, which was of no other advantage or signification to him, than to be covered in the presence of that king.
Dryden.

COVERT. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing that is laid over another.

The secundine is but a general cover, not shaped according to the parts; the skin is shaped according to the parts.
Bacon.

The fountains could be strengthened no other way than by making a strong cover or arch over them.
Burnet's Theory.

Orestes' bulky rage,
Unsatisfied with margins closely writ,
Foams o'er the covers, and not finish'd yet.
Dryden's Juvenal.

With your hand, or any other cover, you stop the vessel so as wholly to exclude the air.
Roy.

2 Sam.

Bring some covering for this naked soul,
Whom I'll intreat to lead me.
Shakespeare.

Through her flesh methinks is seen
The brighter soul that dwells within;
Our eyes the subtle covering pass,
And see the lily through its glass.
Cowley.

Then from the floor he rais'd a royal bed,
With coverings of Sidonian purple spread.
Dryden.

Sometimes providence casts things so, that truth and interest lie the same way; and when it is wrapt up in this covering, men can be content to follow it.
South.

COVERLET. n. f. [couvrelet, Fr.]

The outermost of the bedclothes; that under which all the rest are concealed.

Lay her in lilies and in violets,
And silken curtains over her display,
And odour'd sheets, and arras coverlets.
Spenser.

This done, the host produc'd the genial bed,
Which with no costly coverlet they spread.
Dryden's Tables.

I was, for want of a house and bed, forced to lie on the ground, wrapt up in my coverlet.
Swift.

COVERT. n. f. [from cover; covert, Fr.]

1. A shelter; a defence.

Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab;
Be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler.

And give not thus the countertime to fate.

Dryd.

COUNTERTURN. n. f. [counter and turn.]

The catalanis, called by the Romans status, the height and tall growth of the play, we may call properly the counterturn, which destroys that expectation, embroils the action in new difficulties, and leaves you far distant from that hope in which it found you.

Dryden.

To COUNTERVAIL. v. a. [contra and valeo, Lat.] To be equivalent to; to have equal force or value; to act against with equal power.

In some men there may be found such qualities as are able to countervail those exceptions which might be taken against them, and such men's authority is not likely to be shaken off.

Hooker.

And t'acrewit'hal he fiercely at him flew,
And with important outrage him assail'd;
Who, soon prepar'd to field, his sword forth drew,
And him with equal valour countervail'd.

Fairy Q.

The outward stream, which descend, must be of so much force as to countervail all that weight whereby the ascending side does exceed the other.

Wilkins's Dædalus.

We are to compute, that, upon balancing the account, the profit at last will hardly countervail the inconveniences that go along with it.

L'Esfrange.

COUNTERVAIL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Equal weight; power or value sufficient to obviate any effect or objection.

Dryden.

COUNTING-HOUSE. n. f. [count and house.]

The room appropriated by traders to their books and accounts.

Men in trade seldom think of laying out money upon land, till their profit has brought them in more than their trade can well employ; and their idle bags cumbering their counting-houses, put them upon emptying them.

Locke.

COUNTLESS. adj. [from count.] Innumerable; without number; not to be reckoned.

Ay, tear for tear, and loving kifs for kifs,
Thy brother Marcus tenders on thy lips:
O were the sum of these that I should pay
Countless and infinite, yet would I pay them.

Shakspeare.

But oh, her mind, that orcs which includes Legions of mischief, countless multitudes
Of former curses.

Douglas.

By one countless sum of woes oppress'd,
Hoary with cares, and ignorant of rest,
We find the vital springs relax'd and worn;
Thus, thro' the round of age, to childhood we return.

Prior.

I see, I cried, his woe, a countless train;
I see his friends o'erwhelm'd beneath the main.
Pope's Odyssey.

CO'UNTY. n. f. [comté, Fr. comitatus, Latin.]

1. A shire; a circuit or portion of the realm, into which the whole land is divided, for the administration of justice.

Every county is governed by a yearly officer, called a sheriff, who puts in execution all the commands and judgments of the king's courts.

Of these counties four are termed county-palatines, as that of Lancaster, Chetter, Durham, and Ely. A county-palatine is a jurisdiction of so high a nature, that the chief governors of these, by special charter from the king, sent out all writs in their own name, and did all things touching justice as absolutely as the prince himself, only acknowledging him their superior and sovereign. But this power has, by a statute in Henry VIII. his time, been much abridged. There are likewise counties corporate, which are certain cities or ancient boroughs upon which our princes have thought good to bestow extraordinary liberties. Of these London is one, York another, the city of Chetter a third, and Canterbury a fourth. And to these may be added many more; as the county of the town of Kingston upon Hull, the county of the town of Haverfordwest, and the county of Lichfield. County is, in another signification, used for the county-court.

Discharge your powers unto their several counties,

As we will ours.

He caught his death the last county sessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow-woman, and her fatherless children.

2. An earldom.

3. [comté.] A count; a lord. Obsolete.

The gallant, young, and noble gentleman,

The county Paris.

Then at the last, an only couplet fraught With some unmeaning thing they call a thought, A needless Alexandrine ends the song,

That, like a wounded snake, drags its slow length along.

In Pope I cannot read a line, But with a sigh I wuth it mine;

When he can in one couplet fix More sense than I can do in six, It gives me such a jealous fit,

I cry, pox take him and his wit!

2. A pair, as of doves.

Amos, as patient as the female dove, Ere that her golden couplets are disclosed,

His silence will fit drooping.

COURAGE. n. f. [courage, Fr. from cor, Lat.] Bravery; active fortitude; spirit of enterprise.

The king-becoming graces, Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,

I have no reish of them.

Their discipline Now mingled with their courage,

Hope arms their courage; from their towers they throw

Their darts with double force, and drive the foe.

Courage, that grows from constitution, very often forsakes a man when he has occasion for it; and when it is only a kind of instinct in the soul, it breaks out on all occasions, without judgment or discretion. That courage which arises from the sense of our duty, and from the fear of offending Him that made us, acts always in an uniform manner, and according to the dictates of right reason.

Nothing but the want of common courage was the cause of their misfortunes.

COURAGEOUS. adj. [from courage.]

1. Brave; daring; bold; enterprising; adventurous; hardy; stout.

And he that is courageous among the mighty, shall see away naked in that day.

And know, obedience is your safest course.
Dryd.
But if a tight course be taken with children,
there will not be so much need of common rewards and punishments.
Locke.

'Tis time we should decree
What course to take.
Addison's Cato.

The senate observing how, in all contentions, they were forced to yield to the tribunes and people, thought it their wisest course to give way also to time.
Sidney.

13. Method of life; train of actions.

A woman of so working a mind, and so vehement spirits, as it was happy she took a good course; for otherwise it would have been a trouble.
Sidney.

His addition was to courses vain;
His companies unletter'd, rude, and shallow;
His hours fill'd up with rats, banquets, sports.
Shakespeare's Henry v.

As the drop-py-man, the more he drinks,
the drier he is, and the more he still desires to drink;
even so a finner, the more he fine, the apter is he to sin, and more desirous to keep still a course in wickedness.

20. Regularity; settled rule.

21. Empty form.

Men talk as if they believed in God, but they live as if they thought there was none; their vows and promises are no more than words of course.
L'Esrange.

22. Of course. By consequence.

With a mind unprepossessed by doctors and commentators of any sect, whose reasonings, interpretation, and language, which I have been used to, will of course make all chime that way;
and make another, and perhaps the genuine meaning of the author, seem harsh, strained, and uncouth to me.
Locke.

23. Of course. By settled rule.

Sense is of course annex'd to wealth and power;

No mule is proof against a golden shower.
Garth.

Neither shall I be so far wanting to myself, as not to desire a patent, granted of course to all useful projectors.
Swift.

To COURSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hunt; to pursue.

The big round terraces
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase.
Shakespeare.

The king is hunting the deer; I am courching myself.
Shakespeare.

Where's the thane of Cawdor?
We cours'd him at the heels, and had a promise
To be his purveyor.
Shakespeare.

2. To pursue with dogs that hunt in view.

It would be tedious also in flying of a hawk,
in courching of a deer, or hunt, with greyhounds.
Baker's Natural History.

I am continually flouting hares for you to course; we were certainly cut out for one another; for my temper quits an answer just where thine takes it up.
Combe.

3. To put to speed; to force to run.

When they have an appetite
To course, let them not drink nor eat,
And course them out, and tire them in the heat.
Shakespeare's Twelfth Night.

To COURSE. v. n. To run; to rove about.

Swift as quicksilver it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body.
Shakespeare.
The blood, before cold and settled, left the liver white and pale, which is the badge of phillanimity and cowardice; but the sherris warms it, and makes it course from the inwards to the parts extreme.
Shakespeare.

She did fo course o'er my extraneous, with such a greedy intention, that the appetite of her eye did seem to scorch me up like a burning glass.
Shakespeare's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Ten brace and more of greyhounds, snowy fair,
And tall as stags, ran loose, and cours'd around his chair.
Dryden.

All at once
Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend
And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
All ether courching in a maze of light.
Thomson.

CO'URSER. n. f. [from course; course,
French.]

1. A swift horse; a war horse: a word not used in prose.

He proudly pricketh on his course strong,
And Atin ay him pricketh with spurs of shame and wrong.
Spenser.

Then to his absent guest the king decreed
A pair of courses, born of heav'nly breed;
Who from their nostrils breath'd ethereal fire,
Whom Cice stole from her celestial fire.
Dryden.

Th' impatient course pants in every vein,
And, pawing, seems to beat the distant plain;
Hills, vales, and floods appear already crost'd,
And, ere he starts, a thousand steps are lost.
Pope.

2. One who pursues the sport of courching hares.

A leash is a leathern thing, by which a falconer holds his hawk, or a course leads his greyhound.
Hannet.

COURT. n. f. [cour, Fr. hoert, Dutch;
curtis, low Latin.]

1. The place where the prince resides;
the palace.

Here do you keep a hundred knights and
squires,

Men so disorderly, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust
Make it more like a tavern, or a brothel,
Than a grac'd palace.
Shakespeare.

It shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.
Trick.

His exactness, that every man should have his due, was such, that you would think he had never seen a court: the politeness with which this justice was administered, would convince you he never had lived out of one.
Pope.

A suppliant to your royal court I come.
Pope.

2. The hall or chamber where justice is administered.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakespeare.

St. Paul being brought into the highest court in Athens, to give an account of the doctrine he had preached concerning Jesus and the resurrection, took occasion to imprint on those magistrates a future state.
Atterbury.

3. Open space before a house.

You must have, before you come to the front, three courts: a green court plain, with a wall about it; a second court of the same, but more garnished, with little turrets, or other embellishments, upon the wall; and a third court, to square with the front, not to be built but inclosed with a naked wall.
Bacon.

Suppose it were the king's bedchamber, yet the meanest man in the tragedy must come and dispatch his business, rather than in the lobby or court yard (which is fitter for him) for fear the stage should be cleared, and the scenes broken.
Dryden.

4. A small opening enclosed with houses, and paved with broad stones, distinguished from a street.

5. Persons who compose the retinue of a prince.

Their wisdom was so highly esteemed, that some of them were always employed to follow the courts of their kings, to advise them.
Temple.

6. Persons who are assembled for the administration of justice.

7. Any jurisdiction, military, civil, or ecclesiastical.

If any noise or soldier you perceive Near to the wall, by some apparent sign
Let us have knowledge at the court of guard.
Shakespeare's Henry vi.

The archbishop
Of Canterbury, accompanied with other Learned and reverend fathers of his order, Held a late court at Dunstable.
Shakespeare.

I have at last met with the proceedings of the court baron, held in that behalf.
Spektator.

8. The art of pleasing; the art of insinuation; civility; flattery.

Him the prince with gentle court did board.
Spenser.

Hast thou been never base? Did love ne'er lend

Thy frailty virtue to betray thy friend?
Flatter me, make thy court, and say it did;
Kings in a crowd would have their vices hid.
Dryd. Aureng.

Some sort of people, placing a great part of their happiness in strong drink, are always forward to make court to my young maider, by offering that which they love best themselves.
Locke.

I have been considering why poets have such ill success in making their court, since they are allowed to be the greatest and best of all flatterers: the defect is, that they flatter only in print or in writing.
Swift to Gay.

9. It is often used in composition in most of its senses.

To COURT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To woo; to solicit a woman to marriage.

Follow a shadow, it flies you;
Soon to fly it, it will pursue:
So court a mistress, she denies you;
Let her alone, she will court you.
Ben Jonson.
Fond with her love, and with ambition led,
The neighbouring princes court her nuptial bed.
Dryden's Æneid.

Alas! Sempronius, wouldst thou talk of love
To Maron, whilst her father's lie's in danger?
Thou might'st as well court the pale trembling
vestal,
While she beholds the holy flame expiring.
Alaric's Cato.

Ev'n now, when silent scorn is all they gain,
A thousand court you, though they court in vain.
Pope.

2. To solicit; to seek.

Their own ease and satisfaction would quickly teach children to court commendation, and avoid doing what they found condemned.
Locke.

3. To flatter; to endeavour to please.

COURT-CHAPLAIN. n. f. [court and chaplain.] One who attends the king to celebrate the holy offices.

The maids of honour have been fully convinced by a famous court-chaplain.
Swift.

COURT-DAY. n. f. [court and day.] Day on which justice is solemnly administered.

The judge took time to deliberate, and the next court-day he spoke.
Arbutnot and Pope.

COURT-DRESSER. n. f. [court and dresser.] One that dresses the court, or persons of rank; a flatterer.

There are many ways of fallacy; such arts of giving colours, appearances, and resemblances, by this court-dresser, fancy.
Locke.

COURT-FAVOUR. n. f. Favours or benefits bestowed by princes.

We part with the blessings of both worlds for pleasures, court-favours, and commissions; and at last, when we have sold ourselves to our lusts, we grow sick of our bargain.
L'Esfrange.

COURT-HAND. n. f. [court and hand.]

The hand or manner of writing used in records and judicial proceedings.

He can make obligations, and write court-hand.
Shakespeare.

COURT-LADY. n. f. [court and lady.] A lady conversant or employed in court.

The same study, long continued, is as intolerable to them, as the appearing long in the same clothes or fashion is to a court-lady.
Locke.

CO'URTEOUS. adj. [courtois, French.]

Elegant of manners; polite; well-bred;
full of acts of respect.

He hath deserved worthily of his country;
and his ascent is not by such easy degrees, as those who have been supple and courteous to the people.
Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

They are one while courteous, civil, and obliging; but, within a small time after, are supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious.
South.

CO'URTEOUSLY. adv. [from courteous.]

Respectfully; civilly; complaisantly.

He thought them to be gentlemen of much more worth than their habits bewrayed, yet he let them courtlessly pass.
Warton.

Whilst Christ was upon earth, he was not only easy of access, he did not only courtlessly receive all that addressed themselves to him, but also did not disdain himself to travel up and down the country.
Calamy's Sermons.

Alcinous, being prevailed upon by the glory of his name, entertained him courtlessly.
Broom.

CO'URTEOUSNESS. n. f. [from courteous.]
Civility; complaisance.

CO'URTESAN. } n. f. [cortisana, low CO'URTEZAN. } Lat.] A woman of the town; a prostitute; a strumpet.

'Tis a brave night to cool a courtesan.
With them there are no stewes, no dissolute houses, no courtesans, nor any thing of that kind; nay they wonder, with detestation, at you in Europe, which permit such things.
Bacon.

The Corinthian is a column lasciviously decked like a courtesan.
Wotton.

Cnariux, the brother of Sappho, in love with Rhodope the courtesan, spent his whole estate upon her.
Addison.

CO'URTIESY. n. f. [courtoisie, Fr. cortesia, Italian.]

1. Elegance of manners; civility; complaisance.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.
Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice.

Who have seen his estate, his hospitality, his courtesy to strangers.
Peucham.

He, who was compounded of all the elements of affability and courtesy towards all kind of people, brought himself to a habit of neglect, and even of rudeness, towards the queen.
Clarendon.

Courtesy is sooner found in lowly shades
With smoky rafters, than in tap'stry halls,
And courts of princes, whence it first was nam'd.
Milton.

So gentle of condition was he known,
That though the court his courtesy was blown.
Dryden's Fables.

2. An act of civility or respect.

You sparr'd me such a day; another time
You call'd me dog; and, for these courtesies,
I'll lend you thus much money.
Shakespeare.

Repose you there, while I to the hard house Return, and force their scant'd courtesy.
Shaks.

When I was last at Exeter,
The mayor in courtesy shew'd me the castle.
Shakespeare's Richard III.

Sound all the lofty instruments of war,
And by that music let us all embrace;
For heav'n to earth some of us never shall
A second time do such a courtesy.
Shakespeare.

Other states, assuredly, cannot be justly accused for not staying for the first blow; or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.
Bacon.

3. The reverence made by women.

Some country girl, scarce to a courtesy bred,
Would I much rather than Cornelia wed;
If, supercilious, haughty, proud, and vain,
She brought her father's triumphs in her train.
Dryden's Juvenal.

The poor creature was as full of courtesies as if I had been her godmother: the truth on't is,
I endeavour'd to make her look something christian-like.
Congreve's Old Bachelor.

4. A tenure, not of right, but by the favour of others: as, to hold upon courtesy.

5. COURTESY of England. A tenure by which, if a man marry an inheritrix, that is, a woman seized of land, and getteth a child of her, that comes alive into the world, though both the child and his wife die forthwith, yet, if she were in possession, shall he keep the land during his life, and is called tenant per legem Anglie, or by the courtesy of England.
Cowell.

To CO'URTIESY. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To perform an act of reverence: it is now only used of women.

Toby approaches, and courties there to me.
Shakespeare.

The petty traffickers,
That courtiesy to them, do them reverence.
Shakespeare.

2. To make a reverence in the manner of ladies.

If I should meet her in my way,
We hardly courtiesy to each other.
Prior.

CO'URTIER. n. f. [from court.]

1. One that frequents or attends the courts of princes.

He hath been a courtier, he swears.—
If any man doubts that, let him put me to my purgation. I have trod a measure; I have flatter'd a lady; I have been politick with my friend, smooth with mine enemy; I have undone three taylors; I have had four quarrels, and like to have fought one.
Shakespeare.

You are a flattering boy; now, I see you'll be a courtier. Shakspeare.

You know I am no courtier, nor veiled in state-affairs. Baron.

The principal figure in a picture, is like a king among his esortiers, who ought to dim the lustre of his attendants. Dryden.

2. One that courts or solicits the favour of another.

Made thee, all honour'd, honest Roman Brutus, With the arm'd rest, courtiers of beauteous freedom, To drench the capitol? Shakspeare.

There was not among all our princes a greater courtier of the people than Richard III; not out of fear, but wisdom. Sackling.

CO'URTINE. See CURTAIN.

CO'URTLIKE. adj. [court and like.] Elegant; polite.

Our English tongue is, I will not say as sacred as the Hebrew, or as learned as the Greek, but as fluent as the Latin, as courteous as the Spanish, as courtlike as the French, and as amorous as the Italian. Camden's Remains.

CO'URLINESS. n. f. [from courtly.] Elegance of manners; grace of mien; complaisance; civility.

The slightest part that you excel in, is courtliness. Lord Digby to Sir Kenelm Digby.

CO'URTLING. n. f. [from court.] A courtier; a retainer to a court.

Courtling, I rather thou should'st utterly Dispraise my work, than praise it frothily. Ben Jonson.

CO'URTLY. adj. [from court.] Relating or retaining to the court; elegant; soft; flattering.

In our own time (excuse some courtly strains) No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.

CO'URTLY. adv. In the manner of courts; elegantly.

They can produce nothing so courtly writ, or which expresses so much the conversation of a gentleman, as Sir John Sackling. Dryden.

CO'URTSHIP. n. f. [from court]

1. The act of soliciting favour.

He paid his courtship with the crowd, As far as modest pride allow'd. Swift.

2. The solicitation of a woman to marriage.

Be merry, and employ your chiefest thoughts To courtship, and such fair ostents of love, As shall conveniently become you there. Shaksf.
In tedious courtship we declare our pain, And ere we kindness find, first meet disdain. Dryden.

Every man in the time of courtship, and in the first entrance of marriage, puts on a behaviour like my correspondent's holiday suit. Addison.

3. Civility; elegance of manners.

My courtship to an university, My modesty I give to soldiers bare; My patience to a gamester's share. Dryden.

CO'USIN. n. f. [cousin, Fr. consanguineus, Latin.]

1. Any one collaterally related more remotely than a brother or sister.

Macheth unseam'd him.
Oh valiant cousin! worthy gentleman! Shaksf.
Tybalt, my cousin! O my brother's child!
Unhappy fight! alas, the blood is spill'd
Of my dear kinsman. Shakspeare.

Thou art, great lord, my father's sister's son,
And cousin german to great Priam's seed. Shaksf.

2. A title given by the king to a nobleman, particularly to those of the council.

COW. n. f. [in the plural anciently kine, or keen, now commonly cows; cu, Sax.

loe, Dutch.] The female of the bull; for the horned animal with cloven feet, kept for her milk and calves.

We see that the horns of oxen and cows, for the most part, are larger than the bull's; which is caused by abundance of moisture, which in the horns of the bull faileth. Bacon.

After the fever is diminished, asses and goats milk may be necessary; yea, a diet of cows milk alone. Wijeman's Surgery.

Then, leaving in the fields his grazing cows, He fought himself some hospitable house:
Good Creton entertain'd his godlike guest. Dryden's Fables.

To Cow. v. a. [from coward, by contraction.] To depress with fear; to oppress with habitual timidity.

Macduff was from his mother's womb Untimely ripp'd—

—Accur'd be that tongue that tells me so,
For it hath cow'd my better part of man. Shaksf.

By reason of their frequent revolts, they have drawn upon themselves the pressures of war so often, that it seems to have somewhat cow'd their spirits. Howel's Vocal Forest.

For when men by their wives are cow'd,
Their horns of course are understood. Hudibras.

COW-HERD. n. f. [cow, and hyrd, Sax. a keeper.] One whose occupation is to tend cows.

COW-HOUSE. n. f. [cow and house.] The house in which kine are kept.

COW-LEECH. n. f. [cow and leech.] One who professes to cure distempered cows.

To COW-LEECH. v. n. To profess to cure cows.

Though there are many pretenders to the art of farriering and cow-leeching, yet many of them are very ignorant, especially in the country. Mortimer's Husbandry.

COW-WEED. n. f. [cow and weed.] A species of chervil.

COW-WHEAT. n. f. [cow and wheat.] A plant.

CO'WARD. n. f. [couard, Fr. of uncertain derivation.]

1. A poltroon; a wretch whose predominant passion is fear.

Pyrocles did such wonders, beyond belief, as was able to lead Musdorus to courage, though he had been born a coward. Sidney.

There was a soldier that vaunted, before Julius Cæsar, of the hurts he had received in his face. Cæsar, knowing him to be but a coward, told him, You were best take heed, next time you run away, how you look back. Bacon.

Some are brave one day, and cowards another, as great captains have often told me, from their own experience and observation. Temple.

A coward does not always escape with disgrace, but sometimes also he loses his life. South.
Tremble ye not, oh friends! and cowards fly, Doom'd by the stern Telemachus to die! Pope.

2. It is sometimes used in the manner of an adjective.

Having more man than wit about me, I drew;
And rais'd the house with loud and coward cry. Shakspeare.

Invading fears repel my coward joy,
And ill foreseen the present bliss destroy. Prior.

CO'WARDICE. n. f. [from coward.] Fear; habitual timidity; pusillanimity; want of courage.

Certes, fir knight, ye been too much to blame,
Thus for to blot the honour of the dead!

And with foul cowardice his carcase shame,
Whose living hands immortaliz'd his name.

Gallant and fearless courage will turn into a native and heroic valour, and make them hate the cowardice of doing wrong. Milton.

None was disgrac'd; for falling is no shame,
And cowardice alone is loss of fame:

The vent'rous knight is from the saddle thrown,
But 'tis the fault of fortune, not his own. Dryd.

This great, this holy, tis terrible Being, is present to all our affections: sees every treacherous inclination of our heart to desert his service; and treasures up, against the day of his wrath, the secret cowardice which deters us from asserting his cause, which prevails on us to compliment the vices of the great, to applaud the libertine, and laugh with the prophane. Koger.

CO'WARDLINESS. n. f. [from cowardly.] Timidity; cowardice.

CO'WARDLY. adj. [from coward.]

1. Fearful; timorous; pusillanimous.

An Egyptian soothsayer made Antonius believe that his genius, otherwise brave and confident, was in the presence of Octavius poor and cowardly. Bacon's Natural History.

2. Mean; besitting a coward; proceeding from fear.

I do find it cowardly and vile,
For fear of what might fall, so to prevent
The time of life. Shakspeare.

Let all such as can enlarge their consciences like hell, and style a cowardly silence in Christ's cause discretion, know, that Christ will one day scorn them. South.

CO'WARDLY. adv. In the manner of a coward; meanly; vilely.

He sharply reprov'd them as men of no courage, who had most cowardly turned their backs upon their enemies. Knolles.

CO'WARDSHIP. n. f. [from coward.] The character or qualities of a coward; meanness. Not in use.

A very paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend here in necessity, and denying him; and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Shakspeare.

To COW'ER. v. n. [cowrrian, Welsh; courber, Fr. or perhaps borrowed from the manner in which a cow sinks on her knees.] To sink by bending the knees; to stoop; to shrink.

Let the pail be put over the man's head above water, then he cower down, and the pail be pressed down with him. Bacon.

The splitting rocks cow'r'd in the sinking sands,
And would not dash me with their ragged sides. Shakspeare.

As thus he spake, each bird and beast beheld,
Approaching two and two; these cow'ring low
With blandishment, each bird stoop'd on his wing. Milton.

Our dame sits cow'ring o'er a kitchen fire;
I draw fresh air, and nature's works admire. Dryden.

CO'WISH. adj. [from To cow, to awe.] Timorous; fearful; mean; pusillanimous; cowardly. Not in use.

It is the cowish terror of his spirit,
That dares not undertake: he'll not feel wrong,
Which tie him to an answer. Shaksf. in.

CO'WKEEPER. n. f. [cow and keeper.] One whose business is to keep cows.

The terms cowkeeper and hogherd are not to be used in our poetry; but there are no finer words in the Greek language. Breare.

COWL. n. f. [cugle, Saxon; cucullus, Latin.]

1. A monk's hood.

You may imagine that Francis Cornfield did scratch his elbow, when he had sweetly invented. to signify his name, faint Francis with his friery cowl in a cornfield. Camden.

What differ more, you cry, than crown and cowl?

I'll tell you, friend, a wife man and a fool. Pope.

2. [Perhaps from cool, cooler, a vessel in which hot liquor is set to cool.] A vessel in which water is carried on a pole between two.

COWL-STAFF. n. f. [cowl and staff.] The staff on which a vessel is supported between two men.

Mounting him upon a cowl-staff,

Which (tolling him something high)

He appenched to be Pegasus. Suckling.

The way by a cowl-staff is safer: the staff must have a bunch in the middle, somewhat wedge-like, and covered with a soft bolster. Wife-man.

CO'WSLIP. n. f. [paralysis; cup-lippe, Sax. as some think, from their resemblance of scent to the breath of a cow; perhaps from growing much in pasture grounds, and often meeting the cow's lip.]

Cowslip is also called pagil, grows wild in the meadows, and is a species of primrose. Miller.
He might as well say, that a cowslip is as white as a lily. Sidney.

Where the bee socks, there sock I;

In a cowslip's bell I lie. Shakespeare.

Thy little sons

Permit to range the pastures: gladly they

Will mow the cowslip posies, faintly sweet. Philips.

COWS-LUNGWORT. n. f. A species of mullein.

CO'XCOMB. n. f. [cock and comb, corrupted from cock's comb.]

1. The top of the head.

As the cockney did to the eels, when she put them in the patty alive; she rapt them o' th' coxcombs with a stick, and cried, down, wantons, down! Shakespeare.

2. The comb resembling that of a cock, which licensed fools wore formerly in their caps.

There, take my coxcomb: why, this fellow has banished two of his daughters, and did the third a blessing against his will: if thou follow him, thou must needs wear my coxcomb. Shak.

3. A fop; a superficial pretender to knowledge or accomplishments.

I sent to her,

By this same coxcomb that we have i' th' wind,

Tokens and letters, which she did defend. Shak.

I scorn, quoth she, thou coxcomb silly,

Quarter or council from a foe. Hudibras.

It is a vanity for every pretending coxcomb to make himself one of the party still with his betters. L'Estrange.

They overflowed with smart repartees, and were only distinguished from the intended wits by being called coxcombs, though they deserved not to be scandalous a name. Dryden.

Some are bewilder'd in the maze of schools,
And some made coxcomb, nature's neat but fool. Pope.

4. A kind of red flower.

COXCOMICAL. adj. [from coxcomb.] Foppish; conceited: a low word, unworthy of use.

Because, as he was a very natural writer, and they were without prejudice, without prepossession, without affectation, and without the influence of coxcomical, so false cabal, they were at liberty to receive the impressions which things naturally made on their minds. Dennis.

COY. adj. [coi, French; from quietus, Latin.]

1. Modest; decent.

Jafon is as coy as is a maide;
He looked piteously, but nought he said. Chaucer.

2. Reserved; not accessible; not easily condescending to familiarity.

And vain delight she saw he light did pass,

A foe of folly and immodest toy;

Still solemn sad, or still disdainful coy. Spenser.

Like Phœbus sang the no less am'rous boy;

Like Daphne she, as lovely and as coy. Waller.

At this season every smile of the sun, like the smile of a coy lady, is as dear as it is uncommon. Pope.

The Nile's coy source. Grainger.

To COY. v. n. [from the adjective.]

1. To behave with reserve; to reject familiarity.

What, coying it again!

No more; but make me happy to my gust,

That is, without your struggling. Dryden.

Retire! I beg you, leave me.—

—Thas to coy it!

With one who knows you too! Rowe.

2. To make difficulty; not to condescend willingly.

If he coy'd

To hear Cominius speak, I'll keep at home.

Shakespeare's Coriolanus.

To COY. v. a. [for decoy.] To allure.

Not in use.

I'll mountbank their loves,

Coy their hearts from them, and come home beloved

Of all the trades in Rome. Shakespeare.

CO'YLY. adv. [from coy.] With reserve;

with disinclination to familiarity.

This said, his hand he coyly snatch'd away

From forth Antinous' hand. Chapman.

CO'YNES. n. f. [from coy.] Reserve;

unwillingness to become familiar.

When the sun hath warmed the earth and water, three or four male carps will follow a female; and the putting on a seeming coyness, they force her through weeds and flags. Walton.

When the kind nymph would coynes feign,

And hides but to be found again. Dryden.

CO'YSTREL. n. f. A species of degenerate hawk.

One they might trail, their common wrongs to wreak:

The mulet and the coystrel were too weak,

To sooze the falcon. Dryden.

Coz. n. f. A cant or familiar word, contracted from coysin.

Be merry, coz; hence sudden sorrow

Serves to say thus, some good thing comes to-morrow. Shakespeare.

To COZEN. v. a. [To coze is in the old Scotch dialect, as Junius observes, to chop or change; whence cozen, to cheat; because in such traffick there is commonly fraud.] To cheat; to trick; to defraud.

Let the queen pay never so fully, let the muster-master view them never so diligently, let the deputy or general look to them never so exactly, yet they can cozen them all. Spenser.

Guring loved no man so well but that he would cozen him, and expose him to publick mirth for having been cozened. Clarendon.

He that suffers a government to be abused by carelessness or neglect, does the same thing with him that maliciously and corruptly sets himself to cozen it. L'Estrange.

You are not obliged to a literal belief of what the poet says; but you are pleased with the image, without being cozened by the fiction. Dryden.

What if I please to lengthen out his date

A day, and take a pride to cozen fate. Dryden.

Children may be cozened into a knowledge of the letters, and be taught to read, without perceiving it to be any thing but a impost. Locke.

CO'ZENAGE. n. f. [from cozen.] Fraud; deceit; artifice; fallacy; trick; cheat; the practice of cheating.

They say this town is full of cozenage, As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye, Disguised cheaters. Shakespeare.

Wisdom without honesty is meer craft and cozenage; and therefore the reputation of honesty must first be gotten, which cannot be but by living well: a good life is a man's argument. Ben Jonson's Discoveries.

There's no such thing as that we beauty call,
It is meer cozenage all;

For though some long ago
Like certain colours mingled to and fo,
That doth not tie me now from chusing new. Suckling.

Imaginary appearances offer themselves to our impatient minds, which entertain these counterfeits, without the least suspicion of their cozenage. Glanville's Scyllis.

Swauge coz'nage! none would live past years again,

Yet all hope pleasure in what yet remain;
And from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give. Dryd. Jur.

But all these are trifles, if we consider the fraud and cozenage of trading men and shopkeepers. Swift.

CO'ZENER. n. f. [from cozen.] A cheater; a defrauder.

Indeed, fir, there are cozeners abroad, and therefore it behoves men to be wary. Shaksp.

Ten times more gentle, than her father's crabbed;
And he's compos'd of harshness. Shakespeare.

2. Harsh; unpleasing.

That was when
Three crabbed months had found themselves to death,

Ere I could make thee open thy white hand,
And clepe thyself my love. Shakspeare.

How charming is divine philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude fuit it reigns. Milton.

3. Difficult; perplexing.

Beside, he was a threwd philosopher,
And had read ev'ry text and glo's over;
Whate'er the crabbed author hath,
He understood b' implicit faith. Hudibras.

fissure or crack of the skull, either in the same part where the blow was inflicted, or in the contrary part. Wiseman.

At length it would crack in many places;
and those cracks, as they dilated, would appear of a pretty good, but yet obscure and dark, sky-colour. Newton's Opticks.

3. The found of any body bursting or falling.

If I say sooth, I must report they were
As cannons overcharg'd with double cracks.
Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Now day appears, and with the day the king,
Whose early care had robb'd him of his rest:
Far off the cracks of falling houses ring,
And shrieks of subjects pierce his tender breast.
Dryden.

4. Any sudden and quick found.

A fourth?—stare eye!
What will the line stretch out to th' crack of doom? Shakspeare.

Vulcan was employed in hammering out thun-derbolts, that every now and then flew up from the anvil with dreadful cracks and flashes. Akbf.

2. To break; to split.

O, inadam, my heart is crack'd, it's crack'd.
Shakspeare.

Thou wilt quarrel with a man for cracking oats, having no other reason but because thou hast hazard eyes. Shakspeare.

Should some wild fig tree take her native
bent,

And have below the gaudy monument,
Would crack the marble titles, and disperse
The characters of all the lying verse. Dryden.

Or as a lute, which in moist weather rings
Her knell alone, by cracking of her strings.
Donne.

Honour is like that glassy bubble,
That finds philosophers such trouble;
Whose least part crack'd, the whole does fly,
And wits are crack'd to find out why. Hudibras.

A bloody cross, and on his craven crest
A bunch of hairs discolour'd diversly.

Spenser.

Whether it be
Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple,
Of thinking too precisely on th' event;
A thought which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,
And ever three parts coward.

Shaksp.

Yet if the innocent Ionic mercy find,
From cowardice, not ruth, did that proceed;
His noble foes deriv'd not his craven kind Exasperate by such a bloody deed.

Fairfax.

To CRAVEN. v. a. [from the noun.] To make recreant or cowardly.

'Gainst self-slaughter
There is a prohibition to divine,

That crawling insect, who from mud began;
Warm'd by my beams, and kindled into man!

Dryden.

The streams, but just contain'd within their bounds,
By slow degrees into their channel crawl;
And earth increases as the waters fall.

Dryden.

A worm finds what it teaches after, only by seeing, as it crawls from one thing to another.

Grew's Cosmologia.

The vile worm, that yesterday began
To crawl; thy fellow creature, aljeet man.

Prior.

2. To move weakly and slowly, or timorously.

'Tis our first intent
To shake all cares and business from our age,
While we unburthen'd crawl toward death.

Shaksp.

They like tall fellows creep out of the holes; and secretly crawling up the battered walls of the fort, got into it.

Knolles.

For the fleets of Solomon and the kings of Egypt, it is very apparent they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side.

Haylin.

A look so pale no quittance ever gave;
Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to a grave.

Dryden's Jucenal.

He was hardly able to crawl about the room, far less to look after a troublesome business.

Abulhot's John Bull.

Man is a very worm by birth,
Vile reptile, weak and vain!
A while he crawls upon the earth,
Then thrinks to earth again.

Yet crime in her could never creature find;
But for his love, and for her own self fake,
She wander'd had from one to other Ind. Spensf.

Most cursed of all creatures under sky,
Lo, Tantalus, I here tormented lie. Spenser.
Tho' he might burst his lungs to call for help,
No creature would assist or pity him. Roscommon.

5. A word of contempt for a human being.

Hence; home, you idle creatures, get you home;

Is this a holiday? Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.
He would into the stew,

And from the common creatures pluck a glove,
And wear it as a favour. Shakespeare's Richard III.

I've heard that guilty creatures, at a play,
Have, by the very cunning of the scene,
Been stuck so to the soul, that presently
They have proclaim'd their malefactions. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Nor think to-night of thy ill nature,
But of thy follies, idle creature. Prior.

A good poet no sooner communicates his works, but it is imagined he is a vain young creature, given up to the ambition of fame. Pope.

comes to the height.

This hour's the very crisis of your fate;
Your good or ill, your infamy or fame,
And all the colour of your life depends
On this important now. Dryden.

The undertaking, which I am now laying down, was entered upon in the very crisis of the late rebellion, when it was the duty of every Briton to contribute his utmost assistance to the government, in a manner suitable to his station and abilities. Addison's Freeholder.

CRISP. adj. [crispus, Latin.]

1. Curled.
Bulls are more crisp on the forehead than cows.
Bacon.

The Ethiopian black, flat nosed, and crisp haired.
Hale.

2. Indented; winding.

You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the winding brooks,
With your sedg'd crowns, and ever harmless
locks,

Leave your crisp channels, and on this green land

Answer your summons; Juno does command.
Shakespeare.

3. Brittle; friable.

In frosty weather, musick within doors soundeth better; which may be by reason, not of the disposition of the air, but of the wood or string of the instrument, which is made more crisp, and so more porous and hollow. Bacon.

TO CRISP. v. a. [crispo, Latin.]

1. To curl; to contract into knots or curls.

Severn, affrighted with their bloody looks,
Ran fearfully among the trembling reeds,
And hid his crisp'd head in the hollow bank.
Shakespeare's Henry IV.

Young I'd have him too;
Yet a man with crisp'd hair,
Cast in thousand tresses and rings,
For love's fingers, and his rings. Ben Jonson.

Spirit of wine is not only unfit for inflamma-tions in general, but also crisps up the vessels of the dura mater and brain, and sometimes produces a gangrene. Sharp's Surgery.

2. To twist.

Along the crisp'd shades and bow'rs
Revels the spruce and jocund spring. Milton.

3. To indent; to run in and out.

From that issue tomt the crisp'd brooks,
Rolling on orient pearl and sands of gold,
Ran nectar, visiting each plant. Milton.

CRISPATION. n. f. [from crisp.]

1. The act of curling.

2. The state of being curled.

Some differ in the hair and feathers, both in the quantity, crispation, and colours of them;
as he lions are rufate, and have great manes;
the she's are smooth, like cats. Bacon.

CRISPING-PIN. n. f. [from crisp.] A curling iron.

The changeable suits of apparel, and the mantles, and the wimples, and the crisping-pins.
Isaiah.

To be the dowry of a second head. Shakespeare.

CRITERION. n. f. [κρίτηριον.] A mark by which any thing is judged of, with regard to its goodness or badness.

Mutual agreement and endearments was the badge of primitive believers; but we may be known by the contrary criterion. Glanville.

We have here a sure infallible criterion, by which every man may discover and find out the gracious or ungracious disposition of his own heart. South.

By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?
Pope's Horace.

CRITICK. n. f. [κρίτικος.]

1. A man skilled in the art of judging of literature; a man able to distinguish the faults and beauties of writing.

This settles truer ideas in men's minds of several things, whereof we read the names in ancient authors, than all the large and laborious arguments of criticks. Locke.

Now learn what morals criticks ought to show,
For 'tis but half a judge's task to know. Pope.

2. An examiner; a judge.

But you with pleasure own your errors past,
And make each day a critick on the last. Pope.

3. A snail; a carper; a caviller.

Criticks I saw, that others names deface,
And fix their own with labour in their place.
Pope.

Where an author has many beauties consistent with virtue, piety, and truth, let not little criticks exalt themselves, and shower down their ill-nature. Watts.

4. A censurer; a man apt to find fault.

My chief design, next to seeing you, is to be a severe critick on you and your neighbour.
Swift.

CRITICK. adj. Critical; relating to criticicism; relating to the art of judging of literary performances.

Thence arts o'er all the northern world advance,

But critick learning flourish'd most in Fr ee.
Pope.

CRITICK. n. f.

1. A critical examination; critical remarks; animadversions.

I should be glad if I could persuade him to continue his good offices, and write such another critick on any thing of mine. Dryden.

I should as soon expect to see a critique on the poetry of a ring, as on the inscription of a medal. Addison on Medals.

2. Science of criticism.

If ideas and words were distinctly weighed, and duly considered, they would afford us another sort of logic and critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with. Locke.

What is every year of a wife man's life, but a censure and critique on the past? Pope.

Not that my quill to criticks was confin'd;
My verse gave ampler lessons to mankind. Pope.

To CRITICK. v. n. [from the noun.]

To play the critick; to criticize.

They do but trace over the paths that have been beaten by the ancients; or comment, critick, and flourish upon them. Temple.

CRITICAL. adj. [from critick.]

1. Exact; nicely judicious; accurate; diligent.

It is submitted to the judgment of more critical ears, to direct and determine what is graceful and what is not. Holder.

Virgil was so critical in the rites of religion, that he would never have brought in such prayers as these, if they had not been agreeable to the Roman customs. Stillingfleet.

2. Relating to criticism: as, he wrote a critical dissertation on the last play.

3. Captious; inclined to find fault.

What wouldst thou write of me, if thou shouldst praise me?—

—O, gentle lady, do not put me to't;
For I am nothing, if not critical. Shakspeare.

4. [from crisis.] Comprising the time at which a great event is determined.

The moon is supposed to be measured by fensens, and the critical or decretory days to be dependent on that number. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

5. Decisive; nice.

Opportunity is in respect to time, in some sense, as time is in respect to eternity: it is the small moment, the exact point, the critical minute, on which every good work so much depends. Spratt's Sermons.

The people cannot but resent to see their apprehensions of the power of France, in so critical a juncture, wholly laid aside. Swift.

6. Producing a crisis or change of the disease: as, a critical sweat.

CRITICALLY. adv. [from critical.]

1. In a critical manner; exactly; curiously.

Difficult it is to understand the purity of English, and critically to discern good writers from bad, and a proper stile from a corrupt one. Dryden.

These shells which are digged up out of the earth, several hundred of which I now keep by me, have been nicely and critically examined by very many learned men. Woodward.

2. At the exact point of time.

CRITICALNESS. n. f. [from critical.]

Exactness; accuracy; nicety; incidence at a particular point of time.

To CRITICISE. v. n. [from critick.]

1. To play the critick; to judge; to write remarks upon any performance of literature; to point out faults and beauties.

They who can criticise so weakly, as to imagine I have done my worst, may be convinced, at their own cost, that I can write severely with more ease than I can gently. Dryden.

Know well each ancient's proper character;
Without all this at once before your eyes,
Cavil you may, but never criticise. Pope.

2. To animadvert upon as faulty.

Nor would I have his father look so narrowly into these accounts as to take occasion from thence to criticise on his expences. Lease.

To CRITICISE. v. a. To censure; to pass judgment upon.

Nor shall I look upon it as any breach of charity, to criticise the author, so long as I keep clear of the person. Addison.

CRITICISM. n. f. [from critick.]

1. Criticism, as it was first instituted by Aristotle, was meant a standard of judging well. Dryden's Innocence, Preface.

2. Remark; animadversion; critical observations.

There is not a Greek or Latin critick, who has not shewn, even in the stile of his criticism, that he was a master of all the eloquence and delicacy of his native tongue. Addison.

To CROAK. v. n. [spacezzan, Saxon; crocare, Italian; crociare, Latin.]

1. To make a hoarse low noise, like a frog.

The subtle swallow flies about the brook,
And querulous frogs in muddy pools do croak.
Mary's Virgil.

So when Jove's block descended from on high,
Loud thunder to its bottom thook the bog,
And the hoarse nation croak'd. Pope.

Blood, stuff'd in skins, is British christians food;
And France robs marshes of the croaking brood. Gay.

2. To caw, or cry as a raven or crow.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Shakspeare.

The hoarse raven, on the blasted bough,
By croaking from the left, presag'd the coming blow. Dryden.

At the same time the walk of elms, with the croaking of the ravens, looks exceeding solemn and venerable. Addison.

3. It may be used in contempt for any disagreeable or offensive murmur.

Their understandings are but little instructed, when all their whole time and pains is laid out to fill the croaking of their own bellies. Locke.

CROAK. n. f. [from the verb.] The cry or voice of a frog or raven.

The swallow skins the river's watry face;
The frogs renew the croaks of their loquacious race. Dryden.

Was that a raven's croak, or my son's voice?
No matter which, I'll to the grave and hide me. Lee.

It is covered with very hard scales, which cannot, without great difficulty, be pierced; except under the belly, where the skin is tender. It has a wide throat, with several rows of teeth, sharp and separated, which enter one another. It runs with great swiftness; but does not easily turn itself. It is long lived, and is said to grow continually to its death. Some are fifteen or eighteen cubits long. Crocodiles lay their eggs, resembling goose-eggs, sometimes amounting to sixty, near the water-side, covering them with the sand, that the heat of the sun may hatch them. Calmat.

Glosser's show

Beguiles him; as the mournful crocodile
With four white eyes relenting passengers. Shaksp.

Crocodiles were thought to be peculiar unto the Nile. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep. Dryden.
Kneeling crocodiles, whose tears are death;
Sirens, that murder with enchanting breath. Graville.

Crocodile is also a little animal, otherwise called fox, very much like the lizard, or small crocodile. It lives by land and water; has four short small legs, a very sharp muzzle, and a short small tail. It is pretty enough to look at, being covered all over with little scales of the colour of silver, intermixt with brown, and of a gold colour upon the back. It always remains little. Ternaux.

CROCODILINE. adj. [crocodilinus, Lat.]

Like a crocodile. DiD.

ders.

A dwarf as well may for a giant pass,
As negroe for a swan ; a crookback'd lass
Be call'd Europa. Dryden's Juvenal.

There are millions of truths that a man is not, or may not think himself, concerned to know ; as, whether our king Richard III. was crookbacked or no. Locke.

CROOKED. adj. [crocher, French.]

1. Bent ; not straight ; curved.

A bell or a cannon may be heard beyond a hill which intercepts the sight of the sounding body ; and sounds are propagated as readily through crooked pipes, as through straight ones.
Newton's Opticks.

Mathematicians say of a straight line, that it is as well an index of its own rectitude as of the obliquity of a crooked one. Woodward.

2. Winding ; oblique ; anfractuons.

A man shall never want crooked paths to walk in, if he thinks that he is in the right way, wherever he has the footsteps of others to follow.
Locke.

Among the crooked lanes, oo every hedge,
The glow-worm lights his gem. Thomson.

3. Perverse ; untoward ; without rectithe state of being inflected ; inflection.

He that knoweth what is straight, doth evenly : crebly discern what is crooked ; because the absence of straightness, in bodies capable thereof, is crookedness. Hooker.

2. Deformity of a gibbous body.

When the heathens offered a sacrifice to their false gods, they would make a severe search to see if there were any crookedness of spot, any un-beauty or deformity, in their sacrifice.

Taylor's Worthy Communicant.

CROP. n. f. [crop, Saxon.] The crop of a bird ; the first stomach into which its meat descends.

In birds there is no mastication or comminution of the meat in the mouth ; but, in such as are not carnivorous, it is immediately swallowed into the crop or crop. Ray.

But fluttering there, they nestle near the throne,

And lodge in habitations not their own,
By their high crops and corny buzzards known. Dryden.

CROP. n. f. [croppa, Saxon.]

Nought reaped but a weedy crop of care. Spenser.

Lab'ring the soil, and reaping plenteous crop,
Corn, wine, and oil. Milton's Paradise Lost.

The fountain which from Helicon proceeds,
That sacred stream, should never water weeds,
Nor make the crop of thorns and thistles grow. Roscommon.

Nothing is more prejudicial to your crop than mowing of it too soon. Mortimer's Husbandry.

3. Any thing cut off.

Guileless of steel, and from the razor free,
It falls a plenteous crop reserv'd for thee. Dryden.

To CROP. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To cut off the ends of any thing ; to mow ; to reap ; to lop.

Cropp'd are the slower-de-luces in your arms ;
Of England's coat, one half is cut away. Shakspeare.

He, upon whose side
The fewest roses are cropp'd from the tree,
Shall yield the other in the right opinion. Shakspeare.

All the budding honours on thy crest
I'll crop, to make a garland for my head. Shakspeare.

I will crop off from the top of his young twigs a tender one, and will plant it upon an high mountain. Ezek.

There are some tears of trees, which are combed from the beards of goats ; for when the goats bite and crop them, especially in the mornings, the dew being on, the tear cometh forth, and hangeh upon their beards. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

No more, my goats, shall I behold you climb
The steepy cliffs, or crop the flow'ry tyme ! Dryden.

2. To gather before it falls.

O fruit divine !
Sweet of thyself, but much more sweet thus cropp'd. Milton.

engage
A hungry foe, and arm'd with sober rage. Tate's Juvenal.

CRO'SIER. n. f. [croisier, Fr. from croix, a cross.] The pastoral staff of a bishop, which has a cross upon it.

When prelates are great, there is also danger from them ; as in the times of Anselmus and Thomas Becket, who, with their croisiers, did almost try it with the king's sword. Bacon.

Givevances were were, I must confess, and some incongruities in my civil government ;
wherein some say the croisier, some say the distaff, was too busy. Howel.

Her front erect with majesty she bore,
The croisier wielded, and the mitre wore. Dryden.

CRO'SLET. n. f. [croisillet, French.]

1. A small cross.

Then Una 'gan to ask, if aught he knew,
Or heard abroad, of that her champion true,
That in his armour bare a croislet red. Spenser.

Here an unfinish'd diamond croislet lay,
To which soft lovers adoration pay. Gay.

2. It seems to be printed in the following passage, by mistake, for corselet.

The croislet some, and some the cushions mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden.

CROSS. n. f. [croix, Fr. croce, Ital. crux,

a cross.

He was said to make soldiers spring up out of the very earth to follow him, though he had not a cross to pay them salary. Howel.

Whereas we cannot much lament our loss,
Who neither carried back nor brought one cross ! Dryden.

7. Cross and Pile, a play with money ; at which it is put to chance whether the side, which bears a cross, shall lie upward, or the other.

Whacum had neither cross nor pile ;
His plunder was not worth the while. Hudibras.

This I humbly conceive to be perfect boys' play ; cross, I win, and pile, you lose ; or, what's your's is mine, and what's mine is my own. Swift.

8. Church lands in Ireland.

The absolute palatines made their own judges, so as the king's writ did not run in those counties, but only in the church lands lying within the same, which were called the crosses; wherein the king made a sheriff: so in each of these counties palatines there was one sheriff of the liberty, and another of the crosses. Sir J. Davies.

CROSS. adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Transverse; falling athwart something else.

Whatsoever penumbra should be made in the circles by the crosses refraction of the second prism: that penumbra would be conspicuous in the right lines which touch those circles. Newton.

The sun, in that space of time, by his annual contrary motion eastward, will be advanced near a degree of the ecliptick, crosses to the motion of the equator. Holler on Time.

The ships must needs encounter, when they either advance towards one another in direct lines, or meet in the intersection of crosses ones. Bentley.

Was this a face,
To stand against the deep dread-holted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick crosses lightning? Shakespeare.

3. Adverse; opposite: often with to.

We're both love's captives; but with fate fo crosses,

One must be happy by the other's loss. Dryden.
Crosses to our interests, curbing sense and sin;
Oppress'd without, and undermin'd within,
It thrives through pain. Dryden.

It runs crosses to the belief and apprehension of the rest of mankind; a difficulty which a modest and good man is scarce able to encounter. Atterb.

4. Perverse; untractable.

When, through the crosses circumstances of a man's temper or condition, the enjoyment of a pleasure would certainly expose him to a greater inconvenience, then religion bids him quit it. South.

5. Peevish; fretful; ill-humoured.

Did ever any man upon the rack afflict himself, because he had received a crosses answer from his mistress?
Taylor.

All crosses and distasteful humours, and whatever else may render the conversation of men grievous and uneasy to one another, must be shunned. Tillotson.

6. Contrary; contradictory.

The mind brings all the ends of a long and various hypothesis together; sees how one part coheres with, and depends upon, another; and so clears off all the appearing contrarities and contradictions, that seemed to lie crosses and uncouth, and to make the whole unintelligible. South.

7. Contrary to wish; unfortunate.

We learn the great reasonableness of not only a contented, but also a thankful, acquiescence in any condition, and under the crosses and severest passages of Providence. South.

I cannot, without some regret, behold the crosses and unlucky issue of my design; for, by my dislike of disputes, I am engaged in one. Glanville.

8. Interchanged.

Evarechus made a crosses marriage also with Durilaus's sister, and shortly left her with child of the famous Pyrocles. Sidney.

word.

CRUTCH. n. f. [crocia, Ital. croce, French; crucke, German.]

1. A support used by cripples.

Ah, thus king Henry throws away his crutch;
Before his legs be firm to bear his body. Shakspeare.
Hence, therefore, thou nice crutch:
A fealy gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
Must glove this hand. Shakspeare's Henry IV.
On these new crutches let them learn to walk.
Dryden's G. Georcks.

This fair defect, this helpless aid call'd wife,
The bending crutch of a decrepit life. Dryden.
Rhyme is a crutch that lifts the weak along,
Supports the feeble, but retards the strong.
Smith.

The dumb shall sing, the lame his crutch
forego,
And leap exulting like the bounding roe.
Pope.

Nor build their evils on the graves of great men;
For then my guiltless blood must cry against them.
Shakspeare.

What's the matter,
That in the several places of the city
You cry against the noble senate? Shakspeare.
If dressing, mistressing, and compliment,
Take up thy day, the sun himself will cry
Against thee. Herbert.

Lysimachus having obtained the favour of seeing his ships and machines, surpris'd at the contrivance, cried out, that they were built with more than human art. Arbuthnot on Coins.

6. To utter lamentations.

We came crying hither;
Thou know'st, the first time that we smell the air,
We wawle and cry. Shakspeare's King Lear.
Behold, my servants shall sing for joy of heart;
but ye shall cry for sorrow of heart, and shall howl for vexation of spirit. Isaiah.
When any evil has been upon philosophers, they groan as pitifully, and cry out as loud, as other men. Tillotson.

7. To squall, as an infant.

Should some god tell me, that I should be

For the rich spangles that adorn the sky. Waller.
He struggles first for breath, and cries for aid;
Then helpless in his mother's lap is laid. Dryden.
The child certainly knows, that the wormseed or mustard-feed it refuses, is not the apple or sugar it cries for. Locke.

8. To weep; to shed tears.

Her who still weeps with spungy eyes,
And her who is dry cork, and never cries.
Donne.

9. To utter an inarticulate voice, as an animal.

He giveth to the beast his food, and to the young ravens which cry. Psalms.
The heards of the field cry also unto thee. Job.

10. To yelp, as a hound on a scent.

He cried upon it at the merest loss;
Trust me, I take him for the better dog.
Shakspeare.

To CRY. v. a. To proclaim publickly something lost or found, in order to its recovery or restitution.

She seeks, she sighs, but no where spies him:
Love is lost, and thus she cries him. Cassharw.

To CRY down. v. a.

1. To blame; to depreciate; to decry.

Bavius cries down an admirable treatise of philosophy, and says there's atheism in it. Watts.
Men of dissolute lives cry down religion, because they would not be under the restraints of it.
Tillotson.

2. To prohibit.

By all means cry down that unworthy course of late times, that they should pay money. Bucars.

3. To overbear.

I'll to the king.
And from a mouth of honour quite cry down
This Ipswich fellow's insolence. Shakspeare.

To CRY out. v. n.

1. To exclaim; to scream; to clamour.

They make the oppressed to cry; they cry out by reason of the aim of the mighty. Job.
With that Susanna cried with a loud voice,
and the two elders cried out against her. Esau.

2. To complain loudly.

We are ready to cry out of an unequal management, and to blame the Divine administration.

3. To blame; to censure: with of, against, upon.

Are these things then necessities?
Then let us meet them like necessities;
And that same word even now cries out on us.

Giddy censure

Will then cry out of Marcus: oh, if we Had borne the business.

Behold, I cry out of wrong; but I am not heard.

Cry out upon the stars for doing
Ill offices, to cross their woeful

Epiphanius cries out upon us, as rank idolatry, and destructive to their souls who did it.

Tumult, sedition, and rebellion, are things that the followers of that hypothesis cry out against.

I find every sect, as far as reason will help them, make use of it gladly; and where it fails them, they cry out, it is matter of faith, and above reason.

4. To declare loud.

5. To be in labour.

What is the criing out?
—So said her woman; and that her last rance made

Each pang a death.

To CRY UP. v. a.

1. To applaud; to exalt; to praise.

Instead of criing up all things which are brought from beyond sea, let us advance the native commodities of our own kingdom.

The philosopher deservedly suspected himself of vanity, when cried up by the multitude.

The astrologer, if his predictions come to pass, is cried up to the stars from whence he pretends to draw them.

They slight the strongest arguments that can be brought for religion, and cry up very weak ones against it.

He may, out of interest, as well as conviction, cry up that for sacred, which, if once trampled on and profaned, he himself cannot be safe, nor secure.

Poets, like monarchs, on an eastern throne,
Confin'd by nothing but their will alone,
Here can cry up, and there as boldly blame,
And, as they please, give infamy or fame.

Those who are fond of continuing the war, cry
up our constant success at a most prodigious rate.

2. To raise the price by proclamation.

All the effect that I conceive was made by cry- ing up the pieces of eight, was to bring in much more of that species, instead of others current here.

CRY. n. f. [cri, French.]

1. Lamentation; shriek; scream.

And all the first born in the land of Egypt shall die, and there shall be a great cry throughout all the land.

2. Weeping; mourning.

3. Clamour; outcry.

Amazement seizes all; the general cry
Proclaims Laocoon justly doom'd to die.

Their narrow and selfish views have so great an influence in this cry, that there are several of my fellow freeholders who fancy the church in danger upon the rising of bank-stocks.

4. Exclamation of triumph or wonder, or any other passion.

In popish countries some impostor cries out, a miracle! a miracle! to confirm the deluded vulgar in their errors; and so the cry goes round, without examining into the cheat.

5. Proclamation.

6. The hawkers proclamation of wares to be sold in the street: as, the cries of London.

7. Acclamation; popular favour.

The cry went once for thee,
And still it might, and yet it may again.

8. Voice; utterance; manner of vocal expression.

Sounds also, besides the distinct cries of birds and beasts, are modified by diversity of notes of different length, put together, which make that complex idea called tune.

9. Importunate call.

Pray not thou for this people, neither lift up thy cry nor prayer for them.

10. Yelping of dogs.

He turns the dog, resolves to try
The combat next; but if their cry
Invades again his trembling ear,
He straight relieves his wonted care.

11. Yell; inarticulate noise.

There shall be the noise of a cry from the fish-gate, and an howling from the second, and a great crashing from the hills.

12. A pack of dogs.

About her middle round,
A cry of hell-hounds never ceasing bark'd.
You common cry of curs, whose breath I hate
As reek of 'n' rotte: fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead carcases of unburi'd men,
That do corrupt my air.

CRY'AL. n. f. The heron.

CRY'ER. See CRIER.

CRY'ER. n. f. A kind of hawk, called the falcon gentle, an enemy to pigeons, and very swift.

CRYPTICAL. } adj. [κρυπτα.] Hid-CRYPTICK. } den; secret; occult;
private; unknown; not divulged.

The students of nature, conscious of her more cryptick ways of working, resolve many strange effects into the near efficiency of second causes.

Speakers, whose chief business is to amuse or delight, do not confine themselves to any natural order, but in a cryptical or hidden method adapt every thing to their ends.

CRYPTICALLY. adv. [from cryptical.] Occultly; secretly: perhaps, in the following example, the author might have written critically.

We take the word acid in a familiar sense without cryptically distinguishing it from those sapors that are a-kin to it.

CRYPTO'GRAPHY. n. f. [κρυπτα and γραφειν.]

1. The art of writing secret characters.

2. Secret characters; ciphers.

CRYPTO'LOGY. n. f. [κρυπτα and λογος.]
Enigmatical language.

CRY'STAL. n. f. [κρυσταλλος.]

1. Crystals are hard, pellucid, and naturally colourless bodies, of regularly angular figures, composed of simple, not filamentous plates, not flexile or elastick, giving fire with steel, not fermenting with acid menstrua, and calcining in a strong fire. There are many various species of it produced in different parts of the globe.

Flint crystal is a genuine spar, of an extremely pure, clear, and fine texture, seldom either blemished with flaws or spots, or stained with any other colour. A remarkable property of this body, which has much employed the writers on opticks, is its double refraction; so that if it be laid over a black line, drawn on paper, two lines appear in the place of one.

Water, as it seems, turneth into crystal; as it seen in divers caves, where the crystal hangs in fillicidii.

If crystal be a stone, it is not immediately concreted by the efficacy of cold, but rather by a mineral spirit.

Crystal is certainly known and distinguished by the degree of its diaphanicy and of its refraction, as also of its hardness, which are ever the same.

2. Crystal is also used for a factitious body cast in the glass-houses, called also crystal glass, which is carried to a degree of perfection beyond the common glass; though it comes far short of the whiteness and vivacity of the natural crystal.

3. Crystals [in chymistry] express salts or other matters shot or congealed in manner of crystal.

If the menstruum be overcharged, within a short time the metals will shoot into certain crystals.

CRY'STAL. adj.

1. Consisting of crystal.

Then, Jupiter, thou king of gods,
Thy crystal window open, look out.

2. Bright; clear; transparent; lucid; pellucid.

In groves we live, and lie on mossy beds,
By crystal streams that mormur through the meads.

CRY'STALLINE. adj. [κρυσταλλινος, Lat.]

1. Consisting of crystal.

Mount eagle to my palace crystalline.
We provided ourselves with some small receivers, blown of crystalline glass.

2. Bright; clear; pellucid; transparent.

The clarifying of water is an experiment tending to the health; besides, the pleasure of the eye, when water is crystalline. It is effected by casting in and placing pebbles at the head of the current, that the water may strain through them.

He on the wings of cherub rode sublime
On the crystalline sky, in saphir throne'd Illustrious far and wide.

CRY'STALLINE Humour. n. f. The second humour of the eye, that lies immediately next to the aqueous behind the nvea, opposite to the papilla, nearer to the fore part than the back part of the globe. It is the least of the humours, but much more solid than any of them.

Its figure, which is convex on both sides, resembles two unequal segments of spheres, of which the most convex is on its backside, which makes a small cavity in the glassy humour in which it lies. It is covered with a fine coat, called aranea.

The parts of the eye are made convex, and especially the crystalline humour, which is of a lenticular figure, convex on both sides.

CRY'STALLIZATION. n. f. [from crystal- lizet.]

1. Congelation into crystals.

Such a combination of saline particles as resembles the form of a crystal, variously modified,
according to the nature and texture of the salts.
The method is by dissolving any saline body in water, and filtering it, to evaporate, till a filov appear at the top, and then let it stand to shoot; and this it does by that attractive force which is in all bodies, and particularly in salt, by reason of its solidity: whereby when the menstruum or fluid, in which such particles flow, is fixed enough or evaporated, so that the saline particles are within each other's attractive powers, they draw one another more than they are drawn by the fluid, then with they run into crystals. And this is peculiar to those, that, let them be ever so much divided and reduced into minute particles, yet when they are formed into crystals, they each of them reassume their proper shapes; so that one might as easily dissect them of their firmness, as of their figure. This being an immutable and perpetual law, by knowing the figure of the crystals, we may understand what the texture of the particles ought to be, which can form those crystals; and, on the other hand, by knowing the texture of the particles, may be determined the figure of the crystals. Quincy.

2. The mafs formed by congelation or concretion.

All natural metallick and mineral crystallizations were effected by the water, which first brought the particles, whereof each consists, out from amongst the matter of the strata. Woodw.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. a. [from crystal.] To cause to congeal or concrete in crystals.

If you dissolve copper in aqua fortis, or spirit of nitre, you may, by crystallizing the solution, obtain a goodly blue. Boyle.

To CRYSTALLIZE. v. n. To coagulate, congeal, concrete, or shoot into crystals.

Recent urine will crystallize by inspissation, and afford a salt neither acid nor alkaline. Arbutnot on Aliments.

CUB. n. f. [Of uncertain etymology.]

1. The young of a beast; generally of a bear or fox.

I would outface the sternest eyes that look,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear. Shakspeare.

This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would couch,

The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf,
Keep their fur dry. Shakspeare's King Lear.

In the eagle's destroying one fox's cubs, there's power executed with oppression. L'Esrange.

2. The young of a whale, perhaps of any viviparous fish.

Two mighty whales, which swelling seas had tost,

One as a mountain vast, and with her came
A cub, not much inferior to his dame. Waller.

3. In reproach or contempt, a young boy or girl.

O thou dissembling cub! what wilt thou be,
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That thine own trip shall be thine overthrow?
Shakspeare.

O most comical fight! a country squire,
with the equipage of a wife and two daughters, came to Mr. Snipwell's shop last night; but,
such two unlicked cubs!
Congreve.

To CUB. v. a. [from the noun.] To bring forth: used of beasts, or of a woman in contempt.

Cubb'd in a cabbage, on a mattress laid,
On a brown george with lousy swabbers fed;
Dead wine, that stinks of the Borrachio, sup
From a foul jack, or greasy maple cup. Dryden.

CUBATION. n. f. [cubatio, Latin.] The act of lying down. Diä.

CUBATORY. adj. [from cubo, Lat.] Recumbent. Diä.

CUBATURE. n. f. [from cube.] The finding exactly the solid content of any proposed body. Harris.

CUBE. n. f. [from $\kappa\upsilon\beta\omicron\varsigma$, a die.]

1. [In geometry.] A regular solid body, consisting of six square and equal faces or sides, and the angles all right, and therefore equal. Chambers.

2. [Inarithmetick.] See CUBICK Number.

All the master planets move about the sun at several distances, as their common centre, and with different velocities. This common law being observed in all of them, that the squares of the times of the revolutions are proportional to the cubes of their distances. Greav.

CUBE Root. } n. f. The origin of a CUBICK Root. } cubick number; or a number, by whose multiplication into itself, and again into the product, any given number is formed: thus two is the cube-root of eight. Chambers.

CUBEB. n. f. A small dried fruit resembling pepper, but somewhat longer, of a greyish brown colour on the surface. It has an aromattick smell, and is acrid to the taste. *Cubeb*s are brought from Java. Hill.

Aromatticks, as *cubeb*s, cinnamon, and nutmegs, are usually put into crude poor wines, to give them more oily spirits. Floyer.

CUBICAL. } adj. [from cube.]
CUBICK. }

1. Having the form or properties of a cube.

A close vessel containing ten cubical feet of air, will not suffer a wax candle of an ounce to burn in it above an hour before it be suffocated. Wilkins's Mathematical Mag.

It is above a hundred to one, against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice. Bentley's Sermons.

2. It is applied to numbers.

The number of four, multiplied into itself, produceth the square number of sixteen; and that again multiplied by four, produceth the cubick number of sixty-four. If we should suppose a multitude actually infinite, there must be infinite roots, and square and cubick numbers; yet, of necessity, the root is but the fourth part of the square, and the sixteenth part of the cubick number. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

The number of ten hath been as highly extolled, as containing even, odd, long and plain, quadrate and cubical numbers. Brown.

CUBICALNESS. n. f. [from cubical.] The state or quality of being cubical.

CUBICULARY. adj. [cubiculum, Latin.] Fitted for the posture of lying down.

Custom, by degrees, changed their cubicular beds into discombitory, and introduced a fashion to go from the baths unto these. Brown.

CUBIFORM. adj. [from cube and form.] Of the shape of a cube.

CUBIT. n. f. [from cubitus, Latin.] A measure in use among the ancients; which was originally the distance from the elbow, bending inwards, to the extremity of the middle finger. This measure is the fourth part of a well-proportioned man's stature. Some fix the Hebrew cubit at twenty inches and a half, Paris measure; and others at eighteen. Calmet.

From the tip of the elbow to the end of the long finger, is half a yard, and a quarter of the stature; and makes a cubit, the first measure we read of, the ark of Noah being framed and measured by cubits. Hobbs on Time.

Measur'd by cubit, length, and breadth, and height. Milton.

The Jews used two sorts of cubits; the sacred, and the profane or common one. Arbutnot.

When on the goddess's fist I cast my sight,
Scarcely seem'd her stature of a cubit height. Pope.

CUBITAL. adj. [cubitalis, Latin.] Containing only the length of a cubit.

The watchmen of Tyre might well be called pygmies, the towers of that city being so high, that untu men below they appear'd in a cubital stature. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUCKINGSTOOL. n. f. An engine invented for the punishment of scolds and unquiet women, which, in ancient times, was called tumbrel. Corwell.

These mounted on a chair-cumle,
Which moderns call a cucking-stool,
March proudly to the river's side. Hudibras.

CUCKOLD. n. f. [cocu, French, from coukoo.] One that is married to an adulteress; one whose wife is false to his bed.

But for all the whole world; why, who would not make her husband a cuckold, to make him a monarch? I should venture purgatory for 't. Shakspeare's Othello.

There have been,
Or I am much deceiv'd, cuckold ere now;
And many a man there is, ev'n at this present,
Now while I speak this, holds his wife by th' arm,
That little thinks she has been sluic'd in 's absence.

For though the law makes null th' adulterers' deed

Of lands to her, the cuckold may succeed. Dryd.

Ever since the reign of King Charles II. the alderman is made a cuckold, the deluded virgin is debauched, and adultery and fornication are committed behind the scenes. Swift.

To CUCKOLD. v. a.

1. To corrupt a man's wife; to bring upon a man the reproach of having an adulterous wife; to rob a man of his wife's fidelity.

If thou canst cuckold him, thou do'st thyself a pleasure, and me a sport. Shakspeare's Othello.

2. To wrong a husband by unchastity.

But suffer not thy wife abroad to roam,
Nor strut in streets with amazonian pace;
For that's to cuckold thee before thy face. Dryden.

CUCKOLDLY. adj. [from cuckold.] Having the qualities of a cuckold; poor; mean; cowardly; sneaking.

Poor cuckoldly knave, I know him not:
yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous knave hath masses of money. Shakspeare.

CUCKOLDMAKER. n. f. [cuckold and make.] One that makes a practice of corrupting wives.

If I spared any that had a head to hit, either young or old, he or she, cuckold, or cuckoldmaker, let me never hope to see a chine again. Shakspeare.

One Hernando, cuckoldmaker of this city, contrived to steal her away. Dryden's Spanish Friar.

CUCKOLDOM. n. f. [from cuckold.]

1. The act of adultery.

She is thinking on nothing but her colonel, and conspiring cuckoldom against me. Dryden.

2. The state of a cuckold.

It is a true saying, that the last man of the parish that knows of his cuckoldom, is himself. Arbutnot's John Bull.

CUCKOO. n. f. [cuculus, Lat. cucucu, Welsh; cocu, French; cokkock, Dutch.]

1. A bird which appears in the spring, and is said to suck the eggs of other birds, and lay her own to be hatched in their place: from which practice, it was usual to alarm a husband, at the approach of an adulteress, by calling cuckoo; which, by mistake, was in time applied to the husband. This bird is remarkable for the uniformity of his note, from which his name in most tongues seems to have been formed.

C U D

Finding Mopsa, like a cuckoo by a nightingale, alone with Pamela, I came in. Sidney.
 The merry cuckoo, messenger of Spring, His trumpet shrill bath thrice already founded. Spenser.
 The plaining cuckoo gray, Whose note full many a man doth mark, And dars not answer, nay. Shakspeare.
 Take heed, have open eye; for thieves do toot by night:
 Take heed, ere summer comes, or cuckoo birds affright. Shakspeare.

I deduce,
 From the first note the hollow cuckoo sings,
 The tympphony of piping; and touch a theme Unknown to fame, the passion of the grove. Donson.

2. It is a kind of contempt.

Why, what a rascal art thou, then, to praise him for running!—A-horseback, ye cuckoo;—but a-foot, he will not budge a foot. Shaksf.

CUCKOO-EUD } n. f. [cardaminus, CUCKOO-FLOWER. } Latin.] The name of a flower.

When daizies pied, and violets blue,
 And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
 Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaksf.
 Nettles, cuckoo flowers,
 Darnel, and all the idle weeds. Shakspeare.

CUCKOO-SPITTLE. n. f. [cuckoo and spittle.]
Cuckoo-spittle, or woodfue, is that ignominious dew or exudation, or both, found upon plants, especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary; or observable with us about the latter end of May. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

 Stood re-dy gaping with a gunning laugh. Dryd.
TO CUDDELE. v. n. [a low word, I believe, without etymology.] To lie close; to squat.

Have you mark'd a partridge quake,
 Viewing the tow'ning falcon nigh?
 She cuddeles low behind the brake;
 Nor would she stay, nor dare the fly. Prior.

CUDGEL. n. f. [kulfe, Dutch.]

1. A stick to strike with, lighter than a club, shorter than a pole.

Vine twigs, while they are green, are brittle; yet the wood, dried, is extreme tough; and was used by the captains of armies, amongst the Romans, for their cudgels. Bacon.
 Do not provoke the rage of stones
 And cudgels to thy hide and bones:
 Triebles and vanities. Hudibras.

The ass was quickly given to understand, with a good cudgel, the difference betwixt the one playfellow and the other. L'Estrange.

His surly officer ne'er fail'd to crack
 His knotty cudgel on his tougher back. Dryd-n.
 This, if well reflected on, would make people more wary in the use of the rod and the cud-gel. Locke.

The wife Cornelius was convinced, that these being polemical arts, could no more be learned alone than fencing or cudgel playing. Airbuthnot.

2. To cress the CUDGELS, is to forbear the contest, from the practice of cudgel-players to lay one over the other.

It is much better to give way, than it would be to contend at first, and then either to cross the cudgels, or to be baffled in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

TO CUDGEL. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To beat with a stick.

My lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you. Shakspeare's Henry iv.

The ass courting his master, just as the spaniel had done, instead of being stroked and made much of, is only rated off and cudgelled for all his courtship. South.

Three duels he fought, thrice ventur'd his life;
 Went home, and was cudgel'd again by his wife. Swift.

2. To beat in general.

Cudgel thy brains no more about it; for your dull ass will not mend his pace with beating. Shakspeare's Hamlet.

A good woman happened to pass by, as a company of young fellows were cudgeling a walnut-tree, and asked them what they did that for. L'Estrange.

CUDGEL-PROOF. adj. Able to resist a stick.

1. The tail or end of any thing: as, the long curl of a wig.

2. The last words of a speech, which the player, who is to answer, catches, and regards as intimation to begin.

Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake; and to every one according to his cue. Shakspeare.

C U F

3. A hint; an intimation; a short direction.

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
 That he should weep for her? What would he do,
 Had he the motive and the cue for passion That I have? He would drown the stage with tears. Shakspeare.

Let him know how many servants there are,
 of both sexes, who expect waits; and give them their cue to attend in two lines, as he leaves the house. Swift.

4. The part which any man is to play in his turn.

Hold your hands,
 Both you of my inclining, and the rest:
 Were it my cue to fight, I should have known it Without a prompter. Shakspeare's Othello.

Neither is Otto here a much more taking gentleman: nothing appears in his cue to move pity, or any way make the audience of his party. Rymer's Tragedies of the last Age.

5. Humour; temper of mind: a low word.

CUERPO. n. f. [Spanish.] To be in cuervo, is to be without the upper coat, or cloak, so as to discover the true shape of the cuervo or body.

1. A blow with the fist; a box; a stroke.

The priest let fall the book,
 And as he stoop'd again to take it up,
 The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff,
 That down fell priest and book, and book and priest. Shakspeare.

There was no money had for argument, unless the poet and the player went to cuffs in the question. Shakspeare.

He gave her a cuff on the ear, and the world pick him with her knitting-needle. Airbuthnot.

Their own sects, which now lie dormant, would be soon at cuffs again with each other about power and preferment. Swift.

2. It is used of birds that fight with their talons.

TO CUFF. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight; to scuffle.

Clapping forces acted by the court,
 While the peers cuff to make the ratible sport. Dryden's Juvenal.

TO CUFF. v. a.

1. To strike with the fist.

I'll after him again, and beat him.—
 —Do, cuff him soundly; but never draw thy sword. Shaksf.

Were not you my friend, abused, and cuffed, and kicked? Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. To strike with the talons.

Those lazy owls, who, perch'd near fortune's top,
 Sit only watchful with their heavy wings
 To cuff down new-fledg'd virtues, that would rise
 To nobler heights, and make the grove harmonious. Osway.

The dastard crow, that to the wood made wing,
 With her loud kaws her craven kind does bring,
 Who safe in numbers, cuff the noble bird. Dryden.

They with their quills did all the hurt they cou'd,
 And cuff'd the tender chickens from their food. Dryden.

3. To strike with the wings. This seems improper.

How'ring about the coasts, they make their moan,
 And cuff the cliffs with pinions not their own. Dryden's Ænoid.

CUFF. n. f. [coiffe, French.] Part of the sleeve.

He tailed at fops; and, instead of the common fashion, he would visit his mistress in a morning gown, band, throat cuffs, and a peaked beard. Arbutnot.

CUI'NAGE. n. f. The making up of twine into such forms, as it is commonly framed into for carriage to other places. Corwell.

CUI'RASS. n. f. [cuirass, Fr. from cuir, leather; coraccia, Ital.] A breastplate.

The lance pursued the voice without delay,
And pierc'd his cuirass, with such fury sent,
And sign'd his losem with a purple-dint. Dryd.

CUIRASSIER. n. f. [from cuirass.] A man at arms; a foldier in armour.

The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown,
Nor wanted clouds of foot, nor on each horn
Cuirassiers, all in steel, for standing fight. Milton.

The picture of St George, wherein he is described like a cuirasser, or horseman completely armed, is rather a symbolical image than any proper figure. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

CUISS. n. f. [cuisse, French.] The armour that covers the thighs.

I saw young Harry with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury. Shakespeare's Henry iv.

The crosset some, and some the cuisses mould,
With silver plated, and with ductile gold. Dryden's Enaid.

But what had our author to wound Aeneas with at so critical a time? And how came the cuisses to be worse tempered than the rest of his armour? Dryden.

CUL'DRES. n. f. [colidei, Lat.] Mouks in Scotlands.

CUL'ERAGE. n. f. The same plant with arse-smart. Ainsworth.

CULINARY. adj. [culina, Latin.] Relating to the kitchen; relating to the art of cookery.

Great weight may condense those vapours and exhalations, as soon as they shall at any time begin to ascend from the sun, and make them presently fall back again into him, and by that action increase his heat; much after the manner that, in our earth, the air increases the heat of a culinary fire. Newton.

To those who, by reason of their northern exposition, will be still forced to be at the expence of culinary fires, it will reduce the price of their manufacture. Arbutnot.

To CULL. v. a. [cueillir, French.] To select from others; to pick out of many.

The best of every thing they had being cull'd out for themselves, if there were in their flocks any poor diseas'd thing not worth the keeping, they thought it good enough for the altar of God. Hacker.

Our engines shall be bent
Against the brows of this resisting town:
Call for our chiefest men of discipline,
To cull the plots of best advantage. Shaksp.

Like the bee culling from every flow'r,
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey. Shaksp.

I do remember an apothecary
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows, Culling of simples. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.
Then in a moment fortune shall cull forth,
Out of one side, her happy minion. Shaksp.

The choicest of the British, the Roman, Saxun, and Norman laws, being cull'd, as it were, this grand charter was extracted. Howel.

When false flow'rs of rhetoric thou would'st cull,
Trust nature, do not labour to be dull. Dryden.

From his hard he culls,
For slaughter, four the faucest of his bulls. Dryden's Virgil.

When the current pieces of the same denomination of different weights, then the traders

in money cull out the heavier, and melt them down with profit. Locke.

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast. Prior.

The various ord' rings of the world appear:
From each the nicely culls with curious toil,
And decks the goddess with the glittering spoil. Pop.

CULLER. n. f. [from cull.] One who picks or chooseth.

CULLION. n. f. [coglion, a fool, Ital. or perhaps from scullion.] It seems to import meanness rather than folly.] A scoundrel; a mean wretch.

Such a one as leaves a gentleman,
And makes a god of such a cullion. Shaksp.
Up to the breach, you dogs; avoant, you cullions. Shaksp.

CULLIONLY. adj. [from cullion.] Having the qualities of a cullion; mean; base.

I'll make a sop o' th' moonshine of you: you whoreson, cullionly, barber-monger, draw. Shaksp.

CULLUMBINE. n. f. [moie properly spelt COLUMBINE.] The flowers of this plant are beautifully variegated with blue, purple, red, and white. Miller.

Her neck, like to a bunch of cullumbines. Spenser.

CULLY. n. f. [coghione, Ital. a fool.] A man deceived or imposed upon; as by sharpers, or a trumpet.

Why should you, whose mother-wits
Are furnish'd with all perquisites,
B' allow'd to put all tricks upon
Our cully sex, and we use none? Hudibras.

Yet the rich cullies may their boasting spare:
They purchase but sophisticated ware. Dryden.

He takes it in mighty dudgeon, because I won't let him make me over by deed as his lawful cully. Arbutnot.

To CULLY. v. a. [from the noun.] To befool; to cheat; to trick; to deceive; to impose upon.

CULMIFEROUS. adj. [culmus, and fero, Latin.]

Culmiferous plants are such as have a smooth jointed stalk, and usually hollow; and at each joint the stalk is wrapped about with single, narrow, long, sharp-pointed leaves, and their seeds are contained in chaffy husks. Quincy.

There are also several sorts of grasses, both of the Cyprus and culmiferous kinds; some with broader, others with narrower leaves. Woodward.

The properest food of the vegetable kingdom is taken from the farinaceous or mealy seeds of some culmiferous plants; as oats, barley, wheat, rice, rye, maize, panic, millet. Arbutnot.

To CULMINATE. v. n. [culmen, Lat.] To be vertical; to be in the meridian.

Far and wide his eye commands:
For sight no obstacle found here, or shade,
But all sunshine; as when his beams at noon Culminate from th' equator. Milton's Par. Lost.

CULMINATION. n. f. [from culminate.] The transit of a planet through the meridian.

CULPABILITY. n. f. [from culpable.] Blamableness.

CULPABLE. adj. [culpabilis, Latin.]

Than from true evidence of good esteem.
He be approv'd in practice culpable. Shaksp.

2. Guilty; with of.
These being perhaps culpable of this crime, or favourers of their friends. Spenser's State of Irell.

3. Blamable; blameworthy.
The wisdom of God setteth before us in Scripture so many admirable patterns of virtue, and no one of them without somewhat noted wherein they were culpable; to the end that to Him alone it might always be acknowledged, Thou only art holy, Thou only art just. Hosker.

All such ignorance is voluntary, and therefore culpable; so far as it was in every man's power to have prevented it. South.

CULPABLENESS. n. f. [from culpable.] Blame; guilt.

CULPABLY. adv. [from culpable.] Blamably; criminally.

If we perform this duty pitifully and culpably, it is not to be expected we should communicate holily. Taylor.

CULPRIT. n. f. [about this word there is great dispute. It is used by the judge at criminal trials, who, when the prisoner declares himself not guilty, and puts himself upon his trial, answers, Culprit, God send thee a good deliverance. It is likely that it is a corruption of Qu'il parait, May it so appear; the wish of the judge being that the prisoner may be found innocent.] A man arraigned before his judge.

The knight appear'd, and silence they proclaim;
Then said the culprit answer'd to his name;
And, after forms of law, was last requir'd
To name the thing that woman most desir'd. Dryden.

An author is in the condition of a culprit; the publick are his judges: by allowing too much, and confederating too far, he may injure his own cause; and, by pleading and asserting too boldly, he may displease the court. Prior.

CULTER. n. f. [culter, Latin.] The iron of the plough perpendicular to the share. It is commonly written coultter.

Her fallow lies
The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
Doth root upon; while that the culter rusts
That should deracinate such savagery. Shaksp.

To CULTIVATE. v. a. [cultiver, Fr.]

2. To forward or improve the product of the earth by manual industry.

Those excellent seeds implanted in your birth, will, if cultivated, be most flourishing in production; and, as the soil is good, and no cost nor care wanting to improve it, we must entertain hopes of the richest harvest. Felton.

2. To improve; to meliorate.
Were we but less indulgent to our faults,
And patience had to cultivate our thoughts,
Our mind would flourish. Waller.

To make man mild and sociable to man,
To cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
Th' embellishments of life. Addison's Cato.

CULTIVATION. n. f. [from cultivate.]

1. The art or practice of improving soils, and forwarding or meliorating vegetables.

2. Improvement in general; promotion; melioration.

An innate light discovers the common notions of good and evil, which, by cultivation and improvement, may be advanced to higher and brighter discoveries. South.

A foundation of good sense, and a cultivation of learning, are required to give a sensibility to retirement, and make us taste the blessing. Dryden.

CULTIVATOR. n. f. [from cultivate.]

One who improves, promotes, or meliorates; or endeavours to forward any vegetable product, or any thing else capable of improvement.

It has been lately complained of, by some cultivators of clover-grass, that from a great quantity of the seed not any grais springs up. Bythe.

CULTURE. n. f. [cultura, Latin.]

1. The act of cultivation; the act of tilling the ground; tillage.

Give us seed unto our heart, and culture to our understanding, that there may come fruit of it. 2 Esdras.

These three last were slower than the ordinary wheat of itself, and this culture did rather retard than advance. Baron.

The plough was not invented till after the deluge; the earth requiring little or no care or culture, but yielding its increase freely, and without labour and toil. Woodward.

Where grows?—Where grows it not? If vain our toil,

We ought to blame the culture, not the soil. Fix'd to no spot is happiness sincere. Pope.

They rose as vigorous as the sun; Then to the culture of the willing glebe. Thomson.

2. Art of improvement and melioration.

One might wear any passion out of a family by culture, as skillful gardeners blot a colour out of a tulip that hurts its beauty. Latter.

TO CULTURE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cultivate; to manure; to till. It is used by Thomson, but without authority.

CULVER. n. f. [columba, Lat. culpe, Sax.] A pigeon. An old word.

We are also to consider the difference between worth and merit, strictly taken; that is a man's intrinsic, this his current, value; which is less or more, as men have occasion for him. Greene.

5. Fashionable; popular.

Out leaving what is natural and fit, The current folly proves our ready wit; And authors think their reputation false, Which lives as long as fools are pleas'd to laugh. Pope.

6. Passable; such as may be allowed or admitted.

Fouler than heart can think thee, thou canst make No excuse current, but to hang thyself. Shelley.

7. What is now passing; what is at present in its course: as, the current year.

CURRENT. n. f.

1. A running stream.

The current, that with gentle murmur glides, Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth rage;

But his fair course is not hindered; He makes sweet music with th' enamell'd stones. Shakespeare.

These inequalities will vanish in one place, and presently appear in another, and seem perfectly to move like waves, succeeding and destroying one another; save that their motion ostentive seems to be quackish, as if in that vast sea they were carried on by a current, or at least by a tide. Boyle.

Heav'n her Eridanus no more shall boast, Whose fame in thine, like lesser currents, is lost; Thy nobler streams shall visit Jove's abodes, To shine among the stars, and bathe the gods. Dunham.

Not fabled Po more swells the poet's lays, While through the sky his shining current flows. Pope.

2. In navigation.

Currents are certain progressive motions of the water of the sea in several places, either quite down to the bottom, or to a certain determinate depth; by which a ship may happen to be carried more swiftly, or retarded in her course, according to the direction of the current, with or against the way of the ship. Harri.

3. Course; progression.

The castle of Cadmus was taken, and Thebes invented by Pheidias the Lacedemonian industriously; which drew on a surprize on the castle, a recovery of the town, and a current of the war, even into the walls of Sparta. Bacon.

CURRENTLY. adv. [from current.]

1. In a constant motion.

2. Without opposition.

The very cause which maketh the simple and ignorant to think they even see how the word of God runneth currently on your side, is, that their minds are forebidd'n, and their conceits perverted beforehand. Hooker, Preface.

Alfham's Scholmaster.

Curst cows have short horns. P. overbs.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,

Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

I have no gift at all in shrewdness;

I am a right maid, for my cowardice;

Let her not strike me. Shakespeare.

I'll go see if the bear be gone from the gentleman, and how much he hath eaten: they are never curst but when they are hungry. Shaks.

Her only fault, and that is fault enough,

Is, that she is intolerably curst,

And shrewd and froward, so beyond all measure,

That, were my ite for woe than it is,

I wd not wed her for a mine of gold. Shaks.

When I dissuaded him from his intent,

And found him right to do it with curst speech,

I was forc'd to discover him. Shakespeare.

And though his mind

Be never so curst, his tongue is kind. Cressid.

Touch you the four first points with sweetest terms,

Now curst grow to the matter. Shakespeare.

Her mouth she with'd, her forehead taught to frown,

Her eyes to sparkle fires to love unknown;

Her fellow cheeks her envious mind did show,

And every feature spoke aloud the curstness of a shew. Dryden.

CURT. adj. [from curtus, Latin.] Short.

To CURTAIL. v. a. [curt, Latin.] It was anciently written curtal, which perhaps is more proper; but dogs that had their tails cut being called curtal dogs,

the word was vulgarly conceived to mean originally to cut the tail, and was in time written according to that notion.]

1. To cut off; to cut short; to shorten.

I, that am curtail'd of all fur proportion,

Diamond, a flash'd, tent before my time

Use to a br. bang world. Shakespeare.

Then why should we ourselves abridge,

And curtail our own privilege? Hudibras.

Scrubblers send us over their trash in prose and verse, with abominable curtailings and quaint modernisms. Swift.

This general employ, and expence of their time, would as assuredly curtail and retrench

the ordinary means of knowledge and erudition,

as it would shorten the opportunities of vice.

Westward.

Perhaps this humour of speaking no more than we merit, has to numerous curtail'd some of our words; and, in familiar writings and conversations, they often lose all but their first syllables. Addison's Spectator.

2. It has of before the thing cut off.

The count assured the count, that Facl his antagonist had taken a wrong name, having cur- tail'd it of three letters; for that his name was not Facl, but Faction. Addison.

CURTAL. dog. n. f. A dog leaved, or mutilated according to the forest laws, whose tail is cut off, and who is therefore hindered in counting. Perhaps this word may be the original of cur.

I, amazed, ran from her as a witch; and I think if my breast had not been made of earth, and my heart of steel, she had transformed me to a curtal dog, and made me tan it th' wheel.

Shakespeare's Comedy of Errors.

ossicles. Heller on Speech.

CUSHION. n. f. [kussen, Dutch; coussin,

French.] A pillow for the seat; a soft pad placed upon a chair.

Call Claudius, and some other of my men ;
I'll have them sleep on cushions in my tent.

Shakspeare.

If you are learn'd,

Be not as common fools ; if you are not,
Let them have cushions by you.

Shakspeare.

But, ere they sit, officious Baucis lays
Two cushions stuff'd with straw, the seat to raise ;
Coarse, but the best she had.

Dryden's Fables.

An eastern king put a judge to death for an iniquitous sentence ; and ordered his hide to be stuffed into a cushion, and placed upon the tribunal, for the son to sit on.

Swift.

1. Imprisonment ; restraint of liberty.

The council remonstranc'd unto queen Elizabeth the conspiracies against her life, and therefore they advis'd her, that she should go less abroad weakly attended ; but the queen answered, she had rather be dead than put in custody.

Bacon.

For thus enslav'd, is custody severe,
And stripes, and arbitrary punishment Inflicted ?

Milton's Paradise Lost.

2. Care ; guardianship ; charge.

Under the custody and charge of the sons of Marai, shall be the boards of the tabernacle.

Numbers.

We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody ?

Shak.

An offence it were, rashly to depart out of the city committed to their custody.

Knolles.

There is generally but one coin stamp upon the occasion, which is made a present to the person who is celebrated on it : by this means the whole frame is in his own custody.

Adelphon.

There was prepared a fleet of thirty ships for the custody of the narrow seas.

Eaton.

CUSTOM. n. f. [consuetudo, French.]

1. Habit ; habitual practice.

Blood and destruction shall be so in use,
That mothers shall but smile when they behold
Their infants quarter'd by the hands of war ;
All pity choak'd with custom of fell deeds.

Shaksp.

Custom, a greater power than nature, seldom fails to make them worship.

Locke.

2. Fashion ; common way of acting.

And the priest's custom with the people was,
that when any man offered sacrifice, the priest's servant came, while the fesh was in seculing, with a flesh-hook of three teeth in his hands.

1 Samucl.

he not grown rich by it ? Let him have your custom, but not your votes.

Adelphon.

5. Application from buyers : as, this trader has good custom.

6. [In law.]

A law or right not written, which, being established by long use, and the consent of our ancestors, has been, and is, daily practis'd. We cannot say that this or that is a custom, except we can justify that it hath continued to one hundred years ; yet, because that is hard to prove, it is enough for the proof of a custom, if two or more can depose that they heard their fathers say, that it was a custom all their time ; and that their fathers heard their fathers also say, that it was likewise a custom in their time. If it is to be proved by record, the continuance of a hundred years will serve. Custom is either general or particular : general, that which is current through England ; particular, is that which belongs to this or that county ; as gavelkind to Kent, or this or that lordship, city, or town.
Custom differs from prescription ; for custom is common to more, and prescription is particular to this or that man : prescription may be for a far shorter time than custom.

Cowell.

7. Tribute ; tax paid for goods imported or exported.

The residue of these ordinary finances be casual or uncertain, as be the chevants and forfeitures, the customs, butlerage, and imposts.

Bacon.

Those commodities may be dispersed, after having paid the customs in England.

Temple.

Customs to steal is such a trivial thing,
That 'tis their charter to defraud their king.

Dryden.

Strabo tells you, that Britia bore heavy taxes, especially the customs on the importation of the Gallick trade.

Arbutnot.

CUSTOMHOUSE. n. f. The house where the taxes upon goods imported or exported are collected.

Some customhouse officers, birds of passage, and oppressive thursty squires, are the only thriving people amongst us.

Swift.

CUSTOMABLE. adj. [from custom.] Common ; habitual ; frequent.

CUSTOMABLENESS. n. f. [from custom-able.]

1. Frequency ; habit.
2. Conformity to custom.

by right of succession, according to proximity of blood.

Hayward.

CUSTOMARILY. adv. [from customary.]
Habitually ; commonly.

To call God to witness truth, or a lye perhaps, or to appeal to him on every trivial occasion, in common discourse, customarily without consideration, is one of the highest indignities and outrages that can be offered him.

Roy.

CUSTOMARINESS. n. f. [from customary.] Frequency ; commonness ; frequent occurrence.

A vice which for its guilt may justify the sharpst, and for its customariness the frequentest, investives which can be made against it.

Government of the Tongue.

CUSTOMARY. adj. [from custom.]

1. Conformable to established custom ; might be conducive to the advance of real and useful knowledge, lay under the prejudices of education and customary belief.

Glanville.

2. Habitual.

We should avoid the profane and irreverent use of God's name, by cursing, or customary swearing ; and take heed of the neglect of his worship, or any thing belonging to it.

Tristram.

3. Usual ; wonted.

Ev'n now I met him

With customary compliment, when he,
Waiting his eyes to be contrary, and failing
A lip of much contempt, speeds from me.

Shakspeare.

CUSTOMED. adj. [from custom.] Usual ;
common ; that to which we are accutomed.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No common wind, no customed event,
But they will pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs!

Shakspeare.

CUSTOMER. n. f. [from custom.]

1. One who frequents any place of sale for the sake of purchasing.

One would think it Overdone's house ; for here be many old customers.

Shakspeare.

A wealthy poet takes more pains to linc
A flattering audience, than poor tradesmen do
To persuade customers to buy their goods.

Ref. onces.

Lord Strut has bespoke his liveries at Lewis Baboon's shop : Don't you see how that old fox steals away your customers, and turns you out of your business every day ?

Abutnot.

Those papers are grown a necessary part in coffeehouse furniture, and may be read by customers of all ranks for curiosity or amusement.

Swift.

ment ; to divide any continuity by a sharp edge.

Ab, cut my lace asunder,

That may great heart may have some scope to beat,

Or else I swon with this dead killing news.

Shakspeare's Richard III.

And when two hearts were join'd by mutual love,

The sword of justice cuts upon the knot,
And severs 'em for ever.

Dryden.

2. To hew.

Thy servants can skill to cut timber in Indanon.

2 Chronucl.

3. To carve ; to make by sculpture.

Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandfire cut in alabaster ?

Shak.

The triumphal was defaced by time ; but the plan of it is neatly cut upon the wall of a neighbouring building.

Adelphon.

4. To form any thing by cutting.

And they did beat the gold into thin plates,
and cut it into wines.

VOL. I.

Were 't not better

That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant cutlaxe upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand. — Shak. As you like it.

To the lodgments of his herd he ran,
Where the fat pockets slept beneath the sun;
Of two his cutlaxb launch'd the spouting blood,
These quarter'd, lung'd, and fix'd on torks of wood. Pope.

CUTLER. n. f. [coutelier, French.] One who makes or sells knives.

A poultry ring
That she did give, whole poesy was
For all the world like cutlers poetry
Upon a knife; love me, and leave me not. Shakespeare.

In a bye cutler's shop he bought a tenpenny knife: so cheap was the instrument of this great attempt. Watson.

He chose no other instrument than an ordinary knife, which he bought of a common cutler. Clarendon.

CUTPURSE. n. f. [cut and purse.] One who steals by the method of cutting purses: a common practice when men wore their purses at their girdles, as was once the custom. A thief; a robber.

To have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cutpurse. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

A vice of kings,
A cutpurse of the empire and the rule,
That from a shell the precious diadem stole,
And put it in his pocket. Shaksp. Hamlet.

Was there no felony, no bawd,
Cutpurse, nor burglary abroad? Hudibras.

If we could imagine a whole nation to be *cutpurse*s and robbers, would there then be kept that square dealing and equity in such a monstrous den of thieves? Bentley's Sermons.

CUTTER. n. f. [from cut.]

1. An agent or instrument that cuts any thing.
2. A nimble boat that cuts the water.
3. [incisores.] The teeth that cut the meat.

The molares, or grinders, are behind, nearest the centre of motion, because there is a greater strength or force required to chew the meat than to bite a piece; and the cutters before, that they may be ready to cut off a morsel from any solid food, to be transmitted to the grinders. Ray on the Creation.

4. An officer in the Exchequer that provides wood for the tallies, and cuts the sum paid upon them; and then calls the same into the court to be written upon. Corwell.

CUT-THROAT. n. f. [cut and throat.] A ruffian; a murderer; a butcher of men; an assassin.

Will you then suffer these robbers, cut-throats, base people, gathered out of all the corners of Christendom, to waste your countries, spoil your cities, murder your people, and trouble all your seas? Knolls.

Perhaps the cut-throat may rather take his copy from the Parisian massacre, one of the horridest instances of barbarous inhumanity that ever was known. South.

The ruffian robbers by no justice aw'd,
And unpaid cut-throat soldiers, are abroad;
Those venal souls, who, harden'd in each ill,
To save complaints and prosecution, kill. D. rd.

CUT-THROAT. adj. Cruel; inhuman; barbarous.

If to take above fifty in the hundred be extremity, this in truth can be none other than cut-throat and abominable dealing. Carver's Survey.

CUTTLE. n. f. [sepia.] A fish, which, when he is pursued by a fish of prey, throws out a black liquor, by which he darkens the water and escapes.

It is somewhat strange, that the blood of all birds, and beasts, and fishes, should be of a red colour, and only the blood of the cuttle should be as black as ink. Brown.

He that uses many words for the explaining any subject, doth, like the cuttle fish, hide himself for the most part in his own ink. Ray.

CUTTLE. n. f. [from cuttle.] A foul-mouthed fellow; a fellow who blackens the character of others. Hammer.

Away, you cutpurse rascal; you filthy bung, away: by this wine I'll thrust my knife in your mouldy chaps, if you play the fancy cuttle with me. Shak. Henry IV.

CYCLE. n. f. [syclus, Latin; κύκλος.]

1. A circle.
2. A round of time; a space in which the same revolutions begin again; a periodical space of time.

We do more commonly use these words, so as to stile a lesser space a cycle, and a greater by the name of period; and you may not improperly call the beginning of a large period the epocha thereof. Hobbes on Time.

3. A method, or account of a method, continued till the same course begins again.

We thought we should not attempt an unacceptible work, if here we endeavoured to present our gardeners with a complete cycle of what is requisite to be done throughout every month of the year. Evelyn's Kalendar.

How vilely doth this cynick rhyme!

Get you hence, sirrah! faucey fellow, hence. Shakspere.

Without these precautions the man degenerates into a cynick, the woman into a coquette; the man grows fullen and morose, the woman impertinent and fantastical. Adelison.

CYNOSURE. n. f. [from κυνος εγχα.] The star near the north pole, by which sailors steer.

Towers and battlements it fees

Bosom'd high in tufted trees,

Where perhaps some beauty lies,

The cynosure of neighbouring eyes. Milton.

CYON. See CION.

Gather cyons for graffs before the buds sprout. Evobyn.

CY'PRESS-TREE. n. f. [cupressus, Latin.]

1. The cypress is a tall straight tree, produced with great difficulty. Its fruit is of no use; its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Hence the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal tree, and made use of it at funerals, and in mournful ceremonies.

The cypress-tree is always green, and never either rots or is worm-eaten.

Calmet.

In ivory coffers I have stuf't my crowns;

In cypress chests my arras counterpanes. Shak.

He taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest. Isaiah.

Poplars and alders ever quivering play'd,

And nodding cypresses form'd a fragrant shade. Pope's Odyssey.

2. Being anciently used in funerals, it is the emblem of mourning.

Poison be their drink,

Their sweetest shade a grove of cypress trees. Shak. Henry VI.

CYPRUS. n. f. [I suppose from the place where it was made; or corruptly from cypress, as being used in mourning.] A thin transparent black stuff.

Lawn as white as driven snow,

Cyprus black as e'er was crow. Shakspere.

A cyprus, not a bosom,

Hides my poor heart! Shakspere.

CYST. } n. f. [κυστις.] A bag containing some morbid matter.

In taking it out, the cystis broke, and shewed itself by its matter to be a melicris. Wiseman.

There may be a consumption, with a puulent spitting, when the vomica is contained in a cyst or bag; upon the breaking of which the patient is commonly suffocated. Arbutnot on Diet.

CYSTICK. adj. [from cyst, a bag.] Contained in a bag.

The bile is of two sorts: the cystick, or that contained in the gall-bladder, a sort of repository for the gall; or the hepatick, or what flows immediately from the liver. Arbutnot.

CYSTOTOMY. n. f. [κυστις and τομω.] The act or practice of opening encysted tumours, or cutting the bag in which any morbid matter is contained.

CZAR. n. f. [a Slavonian word, written more properly tzar.] The title of the emperor of Russia.

CZARINA. n. f. [from czar.] The empress of Russia.

D.

D Is a consonant nearly approaching in sound to t, but formed by a stronger appulse of the tongue to the upper part of the mouth. The sound of d in English is uniform, and it is never mute.

DA CAPO. [Ital.] A term in music, which signifying from the head or the beginning, means that the first part of the tune should be repeated at the conclusion.

To DAB. v. a. [dauber, Fr.] To strike gently with something soft or moist.

A fore should never be wiped by drawing a piece of tow or rag over it, but only by dabbing it with fine lint. Sharp.

DAB. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A small lump of any thing.
2. A blow with something moist or soft.
3. Something moist or slimy thrown upon one.
4. [In low language.] An artist; a man expert at something. This is not used in writing.

5. A kind of small flat fish.

Of flat fish there are rays, flawks, dabs, plaice. Caracw.

DAB-CHICK. n. f. [colymbus.] a small waterfowl, called likewise dobchick, and dilapper, and dispechick. Ray.

A dab-chick waddles through the copse
 On feet and wings, and flies, and wades, and hops. Pope.

To DA'BBLE. v. a. [dabbelen, Dutch.] To linear; to daub; to spatter; to besprinkle; to wet.
A shadow like an angel with bright hair
Dabbled in blood. Shakespeare's Richard III.
I terrified, and dabbled the wound with oil of turpentine. Wife of Bath's Sermon.

Mean while the South, rising with dabbled wings,
A sable cloud athwart the welkin flings. Swift.

To DA'BBLE. v. n.
1. To play in water; to move in water or mud.
Neither will a spirit, that dwells with stars, dabble in this impure mud. Gloucester's Apol.
The little one complained of her legs, that she could neither swim nor dabble with them. L'Estrange.

But when he found the boys at play,
And saw them dabbling in their clay,
He stood behind a stall to lurk,
And mark the progress of their work. Swift.
2. To do any thing in a slight, superficial, or shallow manner; to tamper.

Shakespeare shall be put into your hands, as clear and as fair as it came out of them: though you, I think, have been dabbling here and there with the text, I have had more reverence for the writer and the printer, and left every thing standing. Atterbury to Pope.

DA'BBLER. n. f. [from dabble.]
1. One that plays in water.
2. One that meddles without mastery; one that never goes to the bottom of an affair; a superficial meddler.

He dares not complain of the tooth ach, lest our dabblers in politics should be ready to swear against him for disaffection. Swift.

DACE. n. f. [of uncertain derivation: in most provinces called dare. Leuciscus.] A small river fish, resembling a roach, but less.

Let me live harmlessly, and near the brink
Of Trent or Avon have a dwelling place;
Where I may see my quill or cork down sink,
With eager bite of perch, or bleak, or dace. Walton.

DA'CTYLE. n. f. [δακτύλος, a finger.] A poetical foot consisting of one long syllable and two short, like the joints of a finger: as, cāndīdūs.

DAD. } n. f. [The child's way of DA'DRY. } expressing father. It is remarkable, that, in all parts of the world, the word for father, as first taught to children, is compounded of a and t, or the kindred letter d, differently placed; as tad, Welsh; ατα, Greek; atta, Gothic; tata, Latin.] Father.

I was never so bethumped with words,
Since first I call'd my brother's father dad. Shakespeare.

His loving mother left him to my care:
Fine child, as like his dad as he could stare! Gay.

To DADE. v. a. To hold up by a leading string.

The little children when they learn to go,
By painful mothers daded to and fro. Drayton.

DÆ'DAL. adj. [dædalus, Latin.]

1. Various; variegated.
2. Skillful: this is not the true meaning, nor should be imitated.
Nor hath
The dædal hand of Nature only pour'd
Her gifts of outward grace. Philips.

DA'FFODIL. } n. f. [Supposed DAFFODILLY. } by Skinner to be DAFFODOWNDILLY. } corrupted from aphodelus.]

This plant hath a lily-flower, consisting of one leaf, which is bell-shaped, and cut into six segments, which incircle its middle like a crown; but the embellishment, which commonly rises out of a membranous vagina, turns to an oblong or roundish fruit, which is triangular, and gapes in three parts; is divided into three cells, and full of rosyish seeds. Milbr.

Strew me the green ground with diffodown- dills.
And cowslips, and kingcups, and loved lilies. Sperfer.

Bid amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And diffodillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herie where Lycid lies. Milton.

The daughters of the flood have search'd the mead
For violets pale, and cropp'd the poppy's head:
The short narcissus, and fair diffodill.
Pancies to please the sight, and cassia sweet to smell. Dryden.

To DART. v. a. [contracted from do ast; that is, to throw back, to throw off.]
To toss aside; to put away with contempt; to throw away slightly. Not in use.

The nimble-footed mid-cap prince of Wales,
And his comrades, that dast the world aside,
And bid it pass. Shakespeare's Henry IV.
I would he had bestow'd this dotage on me;
I would have dast all other respects, and made her half myself. Shakespeare.

DAG. n. f. [dague, French.]
1. A dagger.

2. A hand-gun; a pistol: so called from serving the purposes of a dagger, being carried secretly, and doing mischief suddenly. It is in neither sense now used.

To DAG. v. a. [from daggle.] To daggle; to bemire; to let fall in the water: a low word.

DAGGER. n. f. [dague, French.]
1. A short sword; a poniard.
She ran to her son's dagger, and struck herself a mortal wound. Sidney.
This sword a dagger had his page,
That was but little for his age;
And therefore waited on him so
As dwards upon knights-errant do. Hudibras.
He strikes himself with his dagger; but being interrupted by one of his friends, he stabs him, and breaks the dagger on one of his ribs. Addison.

2. [In fencing schools.] A blunt blade of iron with a basket hilt, used for defence.

3. [With printers.] The obelisk; a mark of reference in form of a dagger; as [†].

DA'GGERDRAWING. n. f. [dagger and draw.] The act of drawing daggers; approach to open violence.

They always are at daggerdrawing,
And one another clapperlawing. Hudibras.
I have heard of a quarrel in a tavern, where all were at daggerdrawing, till one desired to know the subject of the quarrel. Swift.

To DA'GGLE. v. a. [from dag, dew; a word, according to Mr. Lye, derived from the Danish; according to Skinner, from dag, sprinkled, or deagan, to dip. They are probably all of the same root.]

To dip negligently in mire or water; to bemire; to besprinkle.

To DA'GGLE. v. n. To be in the mire; to run through wet or dirt.
Nor like a puppy, daggled through the town,
To fetter and carry long-long up and down. Swift.

DA'GGLEDTAIL. adj. [daggle and tail.] Bemired; dipped in the water or mud, bespattered.

The gentlemen of wit and pleasure are apt to be choaked at the sight of a daggled parson that happens to fall in their way. Swift.

DAILY. adj. [daghe, Saxon.] Happening every day, or very frequently; done every day; quotidian.
Much we were bound to Heaven
In daily thanks, that gave us such a pittance. Shakespeare.

Cease, man of woman born! to hope relief
From daily trouble and continued grief. Tran.

DAILY. adv. Every day; very often.
Let that man with better sense advise,
That of the world least part to us is read;
And daily how through hardy enterprise,
Many great regions are discovered. Farrington.

A man with whom I conversed almost daily for years together. Dryden.

DAINTILY. adv. [from dainty.]
1. Elegantly; delicately.

Truth is a naked and open day-light, that doth not shew the masks and mummeries and triumphs of the world, half so stately and daintily as candle-light. Bacon.

2. Deliciously; pleasantly.
There is no region on earth so daintily watered,
with such great navigable rivers. Howell.
Those young suitors had been accustomed to nothing but to sleep well, and fare daintily. Bacon's View of Episcopacy.

3. Nicely; ceremoniously; scrupulously.

4. Squeamishly; fastidiously.

DA'INTINESS. n. f. [from dainty.]
1. Delicacy; softness.
What should yet thy palate please?
Daintiness and softer ease,
Sleeked limbs and finest blood? Ben Jonson.

2. Elegance; nicety.
The duke exceeded in the daintiness of his leg and foot, and the earl in the fine shape of his hands. Watson.

3. Delicacy; deliciousness.
It was more notorious for the daintiness of the provision which he served in it, than for the magnificence of the dish. Hakewell on Providence.

4. Squeamishness; fastidiousness.
Of sand, and lime, and clay, Vitruvius hath discoursed without any daintiness. Watson.

5. Ceremoniousness; scrupulosity.

DA'INTY. adj. [derived by Skinner from dain, an old French word for delicate; which yet I cannot find in dictionaries.]

1. Pleating to the palate; of exquisite taste; delicious.
Higher concoction is required for sweetness, or pleasure of taste, and therefore all your dainty plums are a little dry. Pacor.

2. Delicate; of acute sensibility; nice; squeamish; soft; luxurious; tender.
This is the slowest, yet the daintiest sense;
For even the ears of such as have no skill
Perceive a discord, and conceive offence;
And knowing not what's good, yet find the ill. Darwin.

3. Serpulous; ceremonious.
They were a fine and dainty people; frugal and yet elegant, though not military. La 27.

Which of you all Will now deny to dance? She that makes dainty,

I'll swear hath corns. Shaksp. Romeo and Juliet.

Therefore to haste;
And let us not be dainty of leave-taking,
But thrust away. Shaksp. cre's Mabeth.

4. Elegant; tenderly, languishingly, or effeminately beautiful.

My house, within the city,
Is richly furnished with plate and gold,
Basons and ewers to lave her dainty hands. Shaksp. Lear.

Why should he be so cruel to yourself,
And to those dainty lambs, which nature lent
For gentle usage and soft delicacy? Milton.

5. Nice; affectedly fine; in contempt.
Your dainty speakers have the corse,
To plead bad causes down to worse. Prior.

DA'INTY. n. f.

1. Something nice or delicate; a delicacy; something of exquisite taste.

Be not delirious of his dainties; for they are deceitful treat. Proverbs.

A worm breedeth in meal, of the shape of a large white maggot, which is given as a great dainty to nightingales. Bacon.

See then produce her dainty store,
And unbought dainties of the poor. Dryden.
The shepherd twins, with sure abundance blest.

On the fat flock and rural dainties feast. Pope.

2. A word of fondness formerly in use.

Why that 's my dainty; I shall miss thee;
But yet thou shalt have freedom. Shaksp. Lear.

There is a fortune coming Towards you, dainty, that will take thee thus,
And set thee aloft. Ben Jonson.

DA'IRY. n. f. [from doy, an old word for milk. Mr. Lye.]

1. The occupation or art of making various kinds of food from milk.

Crounds were turned much in England either to feeding or dairy; and this advanced the trade of English butter. Temple.

2. The place where milk is manufactured.

You have no more worth
Then the coarse and country fairy,
That doth haunt the hearth or dairy. Ben Jonson.

What stores my dairies and my folds contain!
A thousand lambs that wander on the plain. Dryden.

She in pens his flocks will fold,
And then produce her dairy store. Dryden.

3. Pasturage; milk farm; ground where milk cattle are kept.

Dairies, being well housewifed, are exceeding common. Bacon.

Children, in dairy countries, do wax more tall than where they feed more upon bread and fish. Bacon.

DA'IRYMAID. n. f. [dairy and maid.]

The woman servant whose business is to manage the milk.

The poorest of the sex have still an itch
To know their fortunes, equal to the rich:
The *dairy*maid enquires if she shall take
The dainty taylor, and the cook forsake. Dryden.

Come up quickly, or we shall conclude that thou art in love with one of Sir Roger's dairy- maids. Archbishop.

DA'ISY. n. f. [base-yeage, day's eye.
Chaucer.] A spring flower.

It hath a perennial root: the stalks are naked, and never branch out: the cup of the flower is icy and simple, divided into many segments to the foot-stalk. The flowers are radiated; and the heads, after the petals are fallen off, resemble white cones. Miller.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all over white,
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows much bedight. Shaksp.

As he passed, the woods put forth their blossoms, the earth her primroses and daisy-eyes, to behold him. Howel.

Now hawthorns blossom, now the daisies
spring;

Now leaves the trees, and flowers adorn the ground. Pope.

This will find thee picking of daisies, or smelling to a lock of hay. Addison.

Fair-handed Spring unbosoms every grace;
The daisy, primrose, violet. Thomson.

DALE. n. f. [dalei, Gothic; dal, Dutch and German.] A low place between hills; a vale; a valley.

Long tost with storms, and beat with bitter winds,
High over hills, and low adown the dale,

She wand'ring many a wood, and measur'd many a vale. Fairy Queen.

Before the downfall of the fairy state,
This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they, and had still possess'd. Tickel.

He steals along the lonely dale. Thomson.

DA'LLIANCE. n. f. [from dally.]

1. Interchange of caresses; acts of fondness.

Look thou betrace: do not give dalliance Too much the rein: the strongest oaths are straw

To th' fire i' th' blood. Shaksp. Lear's Tempest

Nor gentle purpose, nor endearing smiles,
Wanted; nor youthful dalliance, as befits
Fair couple link'd in happy nuptial league, Alone as they. Milton.

I'll head my people;
Then think of dalliance when the danger's o'er:
My warlike spirits work now another way,
And my soul's tun'd to trumpets. Dryden.

2. Jugal conversation.

The giant, self-dismayed with the found,
Where he with his Ducissa dalliance found,
In haste came rushing forth from inner bow'r. Fairy Queen.

That bower not mystick, where the sapient
king
Held dalliance with his fair Egyptian spouse. Milton.

Thou claim'st me for thy fire,
And my fair son here show'st me, the dear pledge
Of dalliance had with thee in heav'n. Milton.

3. Delay; procrastination.

Both wind and tide stay for this gentleman;
And I, to blame, have held him here too long.—
—Good lord, you use this dalliance to excuse
Your breach of promise. Shaksp. Lear.

DA'LLIER. n. f. [from dally.] A trifler;
a fondler.

The daily dalliers with pleasant words, with smiling countenances, and with wagers purposed to be lost before they were purposed to be made. Ascham.

DA'LLIOP. n. f. [of unknown etymology.]
A tuft, or clump. Not in use.

Of barley the finest and greenest ye find,
Leave standing in dallies till time ye do bind. Tupper.

TO DA'LLY. v. n. [dollen, Dutch, to trifle.]

1. To trifle; to play the fool; to amuse one's self with idle play; to lose time in trifles; to procrastinate idly.

Take up thy master:
If thou should'st dally half an hour, his life,
With thine, and all that offer to defend him,
Stand in assured loss. Shaksp. Lear's King Lear.

He left his cur, and laying hold Upon his arms, with courage bold
Cried out, 'tis now no time to dally,
The enemy begin to rally. Hadibras.

We have trifled too long already: it is madness to dally any longer, when our souls are at stake. Calamy's Sermons.

One hundred thousand pounds must be raised;
for there is no dallying with hunger. Swift.

2. To exchange caresses; to play the wanton; to fondle.

He is not lolling on a low love bed,
But on his knees at meditation;
Not dallying with a brace of courtézans,
But meditating with two deep divines. Shaksp.

3. To sport; to play; to frolic.

She her airy buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun. Shaksp. Lear.

4. To delay.

They that would not be reformed by that correction, wherein he dallied with them, shall feel a judgment worthy of God. Wisdor.

TO DA'LLY. v. a. To put off; to delay; to amuse till a proper opportunity.

He set down to perform service, not by the hazard of one set battle, but by dallying off the time with often skirmishes. Knobes' History.

DAM. n. f. [from dame, which formerly signified mother. Had Nero never been an emperor, shulde never his dame have been slain. Cbaucer.]

1. The mother: used of beasts, or other animals not human.

The dam runs lowing up and down,
Looking the way her harmless young one went,
And can do nought but wail her darling loss. Shaksp. Lear.

Mother, says a sick kite, let me have your prayers.—Alas, my child, says the dam, which of the gods shall I go to? L'Esrange.

Birds bring but one morsel of meat at a time, and have not fewer, it may be, than seven or eight young in the nest together, which, at the return of their dams, do all at once, with equal greediness, hold up their heads and gape. Ray.

2. A human mother, in contempt or detestation.

This brat is none of mine;
It is the issue of Polixena:
Hence with it, and, together with the dam,
Commit them to the fire. Shaksp. Winter's Tale.

DAM. n. f. [dam, Dutch.] A mole or bank to confine water.

As when the sea breaks o'er its bounds,
And overflows the level grounds,
Those banks and dams, that like a screen
Did keep it out, now keep it in. Hadibras.

Not with so fierce a rage the foaming flood Roars, when he finds his rapid course withstood;
Beats down the dams with unresist'd sway,
And sweeps the cattle and the cuts away. Dryden.

Let loose the reins to all your wat'ry steed,
Bear down the dams, and open every door. Dryden.

The inside of the dam must be very smooth and straight; and if it is made very sloping on each side, it is the better. Mortimer's Husbandry.

TO DAM. v. a. [demman, pope-demman,
Sax. dammen, Dutch.]

1. To confine, or shut up, water by moles or dams.

I'll have the current in this place damm'd up;
And here the smug and silver Trent shall run
In a new channel, fair and evenly. Shaksp. Lear.

Home I would go,
But that my doors are hateful to my eyes,
Fill'd and damm'd up with gaping creditors,
Watchful as fowlers when their game will spring. Orway.

Boggy lands are fed by springs, pent by a weight of earth, that dams in the water, and causes it to spread. Mortimer.

'Tis you must drive that trouble from your soul;
As streams, when damm'd, forget their ancient current,
And, wond'ring at their banks, in other channels flow. Smith.

2. It is used by Shakspeare of fire, and by Milton of light.

The more thou damnest it up, the more it burns. Shakspeare.

Moon! if your influence be quite damnd up
With black usurping mists, some gentle taper,
Though a rush-candle from the wicker hole
Of some clay habitation, visit us
With thy long level'd rule of streaming light.

DAM'AGE. n. f. [domage, French.]

1. Mischief; hurt; detriment.

Gross errors and absurdities many commit for want of a friend to tell them of them, to the great damage both of their fame and fortune. Bacon.

Such as were sent from thence did commonly do more hurt and damage to the English subjects than to the Irish enemies, by their continual ceases and extortion. Davies.

He repaid the enemy very much to their damage. Clarendon.

2. Loss; mischief suffered.

His heart exalts him in the harm
Already done, to have dispeopled heav'n,
My damage fondly deem'd! Milton.

3. The value of mischief done.

They believed that they were not able, though they should be willing to sell all they have in Ireland, to pay the damages which had been sustained by the war. Clarendon.

4. Reparation of damage; retribution.

The bishop demanded restitution of the spoils taken by the Scots, or damages for the same. Bacon.

Tell me whether, upon exhibiting the several particulars which I have related to you, I may not sue her for damages in a court of justice? Aldison.

5. In law.

Any hurt or hinderance that a man taketh in his estate. In the common law it particularly signifies a part of what the jurors be to enquire of; for, after verdict given of the principal cause, they are likewise asked their consciences touching costs, which are the charges of suit, and damages, which contain the hinderance which the plaintiff or demandant hath suffered, by means of the wrong done him by the defendant or tenant. Cowell.

When the judge had awarded due damages to a person into whose field a neighbour's oxen had broke, it is reported that he reversed his own sentence, when he heard that the oxen, which had done this mischief, were his own. Watts.

TO DA'MAGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To mischief; to injure; to impair; to hurt; to harm.

I consider time as an immense ocean, into which many noble authors are entirely swallowed up, many very much shattered and damaged, some quite disjointed and broken into pieces. Aldison.

TO DA'MAGE. v. n. To take damage, or be damaged.

DAM'AGEABLE. adj. [from damage]

1. Susceptible of hurt: as, damageable goods.

2. Mischievous; pernicious.

Obscene and immodest talk is offensive to the purity of God, damageable and infectious to the innocence of our neighbours, and most pernicious to ourselves. Government of the Tongue.

DAM'ASCENE. n. f. [damaſcenus, from Damaſcus.] A small plum; a damson, as it is now spoken.

In April follow the cherry-tree in blossom, the damaſcene and plum-trees in blossom, and the white thorn in leaf. Bacon.

In fruits the white commonly is meaner, as in pear-plums and damaſcenes; and the choicest plums are black. Bacon.

DAMASK. n. f. [damaſquin, Fr. damaſchino, Ital. from Damaſcus.]

1. Linen or silk woven in a manner invented at Damaſcus, by which part, by a various direction of the threads, exhibits flowers or other forms.

Not any weaver which his work doth boast
In diaper, damaſk, or in lye. Spenſer.

Wipe your shoes, for want of a clout, with a damaſk napkin. Swiſt's Rules to Servants.

2. It is used for red colour in Fairfax, from the damaſk rose.

And for some deale perplexed was her spirit,
Her damaſk late, now chang'd to pureſt white. Fairfax.

TO DA'MASK. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To form flowers upon fluffs.

2. To variegate; to diversify.

They sat recline
On the soft downy bank, damaſk'd with flowers. Milton.

Around him dance the rosy hours,
And damaſk'd the ground with flow'rs,
With ambient sweets perfume the morn. Fenton.

3. To adorn steel-work with figures; practised, I suppose, first at Damaſcus.

DAMASK-PLUM. See PLUM.

DAMASK-ROSE. n. f. The rose of Damaſcus; a red rose. See ROSE.

Damaſk-roses have not been known in England above one hundred years, and now are to common. Bacon.

No gradual bloom is wanting from the bud,
Nor broad carnations, nor gay spotted pinks,
Nor, shower'd from ev'ry bush, the damaſk-rose. Thomson.

DAMASKENING. n. f. [from damaſquiner, Fr.] The art or act of adorning iron or steel, by making incisions, and filling them up with gold or silver wire: used in enriching the blades of swords, and locks of pistols. Chambers.

DAME. n. f. [dame, Fr. dama, Spanish.]

1. A lady; the old title of honour to women.

The word dame originally signified a mistress of a family, who was a lady; and it is used still in the English law to signify a lady: but in common use, now-a-days, it represents a farmer's wife, or a mistress of a family of the lower rank in the country. Watts' Logic.

Bless you, fair dame! I am not to you known,
Though in your state of honour I am perfect. Shakspeare.

Not all these lords do vex me half so much
As that proud dame, the lord protector's wife. Shakspeare.

Shut your mouth dame! Shakspeare's K. Lear.
Sov'ign of creatures, universal dame! Milton.

2. It is still used in poetry, for women of rank.

His father Faunus; a Laurentian dame
His mother, fair Marica was her name. Dryden.
Who would not repeat that bliss,
And frequent sight of such a dame
Buy with the hazard of his fame? Waller.

3. Mistress of a low family.

They killed the poor cock; for, say they, if it were not for his waking our dame, the world not wake us. L'Estrange.

4. Woman in general.

We've willing dames enough; there cannot be
That vulture in you to devour so many
As will to greatness dedicate themselves. Shakspeare.

DAMES-VIOLET. n. f. A plant, called also queen's gillyflower. Miller.

TO DAMN. v. a. [damno, Latin.]

1. To doom to eternal torments in a future state.

It is most necessary, that the church, by doctrine and decree, do damn and send to hell for ever those facts and opinions. Bacon.

2. To procure or cause to be eternally condemned.

That which he continues ignorant of, having done the utmost lying in his power that he might not be ignorant of it, shall not damn him. South's Sermons.

3. To condemn; to censure.

His own impartial thought
Will damn, and conscience will record the fault. Dryden.

4. To hoot or hiss any publick performance; to explode.

They damn themselves, nor will my muse descend
To clap with such who fools and knaves commend. Dryden.

For the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

You are to good a critick, that it is the greatest happiness of the modern poets that you do not hear their works; and, next, that you are not toarrant a critick as to damn them, like the rest, without learning. Pope.

DAMNABLE. adj. [from damn.]

1. Deserving damnation; justly doomed to never-ending punishment.

It gives him occasion of labouring with greater earnestness elsewhere, to entangle unwary minds with the figures of his damnable opinion. Hooker.

He's a creature unprepar'd, unaccit for death;
And to transport him in the mind he is Were damnable. Shakspeare.

As he does not reckon every form of a damnable nature, so he is far from closing with the new opinion of those who make it no crime. Swift.

2. It is sometimes indecently used in a low and ludicrous sense; odious; pernicious.

O thou damnable fellow! did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches? Shakspeare.

DAMNABLY. adv. [from damnable.]

1. In such a manner as to incur eternal punishment; so as to be excluded from mercy.

We will propose the question, whether those who hold the fundamentals of faith may deny Christ damnably, in respect of those consequences that arise from them? South's Sermons.

2. It is indecently used in a ludicrous sense; odiously; hatefully.

The more sweets they bestow'd upon them,
the more damnably their convulses stunk. Dennis.

DAMNATION. n. f. [from damn.] Exclusion from divine mercy; condemnation to eternal punishment.

He that hath been allright with the fears of hell, or remembers how often he hath been spared from an horrible damnation, will not be ready to strangle his brother for a trifle. Taylor.

Now mince the sin,
And mollify damnation with a phrase:
Say you consented not to Sancho's death,
But barely not forbade it. Dryden.

DAMNATORY. adj. [from damnatorius.] Containing a sentence of condemnation.

DAMNED. part. adj. [from damn.] Hateful; detestable; abhorred; abominable.

degree of melancholy or enthusiasm, may find convents fitted to their humours. Addison

DARK. n. f.

1. Darkness; obscurity; want of light.

Come, thick night,
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,

That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heav'n peep through the blanket of the dark,
To cry, hold, hold! Shakspeare's Macbeth.
Cloud and ever-during dark

Surrounds me! from the cheerful ways of men Cut off. Milton.

Whereas seeing requires light, and a free medium, and a right line to the objects, we can hear in the dark immured, and by curve lines.
Holder.

2. Obscurity; condition of one unknown.

All he says of himself is, that he is an obscure person; one, I suppose he means, that is in the dark. Atterbury.

darken their minds, even by a natural influence.
Tillotson.

To DA'RKEN. v. n. To grow dark.

DA'RKLING. [a participle, as it seems, from darkle, which yet I have never found; or perhaps a kind of diminutive from dark, as young, youngling.] Being in the dark; being without light: a word merely poetical.

O, wilt thou darkling leave me? do not so.
Shakspeare.

Darkling stands
The varying shore o' th' world. Shakspeare.

The wakeful bird
Sings darkling, and, in shade's covert hid,
Tunes her nocturnal note. Milton.

Darkling they mourn their fate, whom Circe's pow'r,

With words and wicked herbs, from human kind
Had alter'd, and in brutal shapes confin'd. Dry.

DA'RKLY. adv. [from dark.] In a situation void of light; obscurely; blindly;
gloomily; uncertainly.

For well you know, and can record alone,
What fame to future times conveys but darkly down. Dryden.

DA'RKNES. n. f. [from dark.]

1. Absence of light.

Darkness was upon the face of the deep.
Genesis.

I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness and the shadow of death. Job.

2. Opakeness; want of transparency.

3. Obscurity; want of perspicuity; difficulty to the understanding.

4. Infernal gloom; wickedness.

The instruments of darkness tell us truths;
Win us with honest trifles, to betray us
In deepest consequence. Shakspeare.

5. State of being intellectually clouded;
ignorance; uncertainty.

All the light truth has, or can have, is from the clearness and validity of those proofs upon which it is received; to talk of any other light in the understanding, is to put ourselves in the dark, or in the power of the prince of darkness.

Locke.

6. The empire of Satan, or the devil.

Who hath delivered us from the power of darkness, and translated us into the kingdom of his dear Son. Colossians.

DA'RK SOME. adj. [from dark.] Gloomy; obscure; not well enlightened; not luminous.

He brought him thro' a darksome narrow pass
To a broad gate. Spenser.

And her fair eyes, like stars that dimmed were
With darksome cloud, now shew their goodly beams. Spenser.

You must not look to have an image in any thing lightsome; for even a face in iron, red-hot, will not be seen, the light confounding the small differences of lightsome and darksome, which flew the figure. Bacon.

A darksome cloud of locusts, swarming down,
Must eat, and on the ground leave nothing green.
Milton.

He, here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.
Milton.

Mistaken blessing, which old age they call,
'Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital. Dryden.

The darksome pines, that o'er yon rocks reclin'd,
Wave high, and murmur to the hollow wind.
Pope.

DA'R LING. adj. [beopling, Saxon; diminutive of dear.] Favourite; dear; beloved; regarded with great kindness and tenderness.

'Tis not for a generous prince to countenance oppression and injustice, even in his most darling favourites. L'Esrange.

Have a care lest some beloved notion, or some darling science, too far prevail over your mind.
Watts.

DA'R LING. n. f. A favourite; one much beloved.

Young Ferdinand they suppose is drown'd,
And his and my lov'd darling. Shakspeare.

In Thames, the ocean's darling, England's pride,
The pleasing emblem of his reign does glide.
Halifax.

She became the darling of the princes.
Addison.

To DARN. v. a. [of uncertain original.]
To mend holes by imitating the texture of the stuff.

Will she thy linen wash, or hosen darn? Gay.

He spent every day ten hours in his closet, in darning his stockings, which he performed to admiration. Swift.

DA'R NEL. n. f. [lolium.] A weed growing in the fields.

He was met ev'n now
Crown'd with rank fumiter and furrow-weeds,
Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn. Shakspeare.

Want ye corn for bread?
'Twas full of darnel; do you like the taste?
Shakspeare.

No fruitful crop the sickly fields return;
But outs and darnel choak the rising corn. Dryden.

To DA'RRAIN. v. a. [This word is by Junius referred to dare: it seems to me more probably deducible from arranger la bataille.]

1. To prepare for battle; to range troops for battle.

The town-boys parted in twain, the one side calling themselves Pompeians, the other Cæsarians; and then darraining a kind of battle, but without arms, the Cæsarians got the over hand.
Carew's Survey of Cornwall.

Comes Warwick, backing of the duke of York:
Darrain your battle; for they are at hand. Shak.

2. To apply to the fight: of single combatants.
 Thencewith they 'gan to hulen greedily,
 Redoubted battle ready to darsaine. Spenser.
- DART. n. f. [dard, French.]
1. A missile weapon thrown by the hand; a small lance.
 Here one is wounded or slain with a piece of a rock or flint; there another with a dart, arrow, or lance. Pracham.
 O'erwhelm'd with darts, which from afar they fling,
 The weapons round his hollow temples ring. Dryden.
2. [In poetry.] Any missile weapon.
- To DART. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To throw offensively.
 He whets his tusks, and turns, and dares the war;
 Th' invaders dart their jav'lines from afar. Dryd.
2. To throw; to emit: as, the sun darts his beams on the earth.
 Pan came, and ask'd what magick eaus'd my smart;
 Or what illeyses malignant glances dart. Pope.
- To DART. v. n.
1. To fly as a dart.
 2. To let fly with hostile intention.
 Now, darting Parthia, art thou struck. Shak.
- To DASH. v. a. [The etymology of this word, in any of its senses, is very doubtful.]
1. To throw or strike any thing suddenly against something.
 If you dash a stone against a stone in the bottom of the water, it maketh a sound. Bacon.
 A man that cuts himself, and tears his own flesh, and dashes his head against the stones, does not act so unreasonably as the wicked man. Tillotson.
2. To break by collision.
 They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;
 And, if they fall, they dash themselves to pieces. Shak/peare.
 David's throne shall then be like a tree,
 Spreading and overhad'wing all the earth;
 Or as a stone, that shall to pieces dash
 All monarchies besides throughout the world. Milton.
3. To throw water in flashes.
Dashing water on them may prove the best remedy. Mortimer.
 Midding his head, and prone to earth his view,
 With ears and chest that dash the morning dew. Tickel.
4. To bespatter; to besprinkle.
 This tempest,
Dashing the garment of this peace, aboded
 The sudden breach on't. Shaksp. Henry VIII.
5. To agitate any liquid, so as to make the surface fly off.
 At once the brushing oars and brazen prow
Dash up the sandy waves, and ope the depth below. Dryden.
6. To mingle; to adulterate; to change by some worse admixture.
 Whacum, bred to dash and draw,
 Not wine, but more unwholesome law, Hudib.
 I take care to dash the character with such particular circumstances, as may prevent ill-natured applications. Addison.
 Several revealed truths are dashed and adulterated with a mixture of fables and human inventions. Speclator.
7. To form or sketch in haste, carelessly.
 Never was dashed out, at one lucky hit,
 A fool so just a copy of a wit. Pope.
8. To obliterate; to blot; to cross out.
 To dash over this with a line, will deface the whole copy extremely, and to a degree that, I fear, may displease you. Pope.

9. To confound; to make ashamed suddenly; to surprise with shame or fear; to depress; to suppress.
 His tongue
 Dropp'd manna, and could make the wofe appear
 The better reason, to perplex and dash
 Maturest councils. Milton.
 Yearly enjoin'd, some say, to undergo
 This annual, humbling certain number'd days,
 To dash their pride and joy for man seduc'd. Milton.
 An unknown hand still check'd my forward joy,
Dash'd me with blushes. Dryden and Lee's Oed.
 To dash this cavil, read but the practice of christian emperors. South.
 After they had sufficiently blasted him in his personal capacity, they found it an easy work to dash and overthrow him in his political. South.
 Nothing dashed the confidence of the mule like the braying of the ass, while he was dilating upon his genealogy. L'Estrange.
 The nymph, when nothing could Narcissus move,
 Still dash'd with blushes for her slighted love. Addison.
 Some stronger pow'r eludes our sickly will;
Dashes our rising hope with certain ill. Prier.
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car;
 Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star. Pope.
- To DASH. v. n.
1. To fly off the surface by a violent motion.
 If the vessel be suddenly stopt in its motion the liquor continues its motion, and dashes the sides of the vessel. C.
2. To fly in flashes with a loud noise.
 On each hand the gushing waters play,
 And down the rough cascade, all dashing, fall. Thomson.
3. To rush through water, so as to make it fly.
 Doeg, tho' without knowing how or why,
 Spurr'd boldly on, and dash'd through thick and thin,
 Thro' fence and nonsense, never out or in. Dryden.
- DASH. n. f. [from the verb.]
1. Collision.
 By the touch ethereal rous'd,
 The dash of clouds, or irritating war
 Of fighting winds, while all is calm below,
 They ferocious spring. Thomson.
2. Infusion; something worse mingled in a small proportion.
 There is nothing which one regards so much with an eye of mirth and pity, as innocence, when it has in it a dash of folly. Addison.
3. A mark in writing; a line —, to note a pause, or omission.
 He is afraid of letters and characters, of notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing. Brown's Vulgar Errors.
 In modern wit, all printed trash is set off with num'rous breaks and dashes. Swift.
4. Sudden stroke; blow; act: ludicrous.
 Stand back you lords, and give us leave awhile.
 —She takes upon her bravely at first dash. Shak/peare.
- DASH. adv. An expression of the sound of water dashed.
 Hark, hark, the waters fall;
 And, with a murmuring sound,
Dash, dash, upon the ground,
 To gentle slumbers call. Dryden.
- DA'STARD. n. f. [adastruga, Sax.] A coward; a poltron; a man infamous for fear.
 The cruelty and envy of the people, Permitted by our dashed noble,

- Have suffer'd me by th' voice of slaves to be Whoop'd out of Rome. Shak/peare.
 Who now my matchless valour dare oppose?
 How long will Dares wait his dastard foes? Dryden.
Dastard and drunkard, mean and inconstant;
 Tongue-vanant hero, vaunter of thy might,
 In threats the foremost, but the last in fight. Dryden.
 Bug-bear thoughts, in the minds of children, Make them dastard, and afraid of the shadow of darkness ever after. Scott.
 Cause on their dastard souls, they stand astonish'd!
Adison.
- To DA'STARD. v. a. To terrify; to intimidate; to desert with cowardice; to dispirit.
 I in weary of this flesh which holds us here,
 And dastard manly souls with hope and fear. Dryden.
- To DA'STARDISE. v. a. [from dastard.]
 To intimidate; to deject with cowardice; to dispirit; to depress; to terrify; to make an habitual coward.
 He had such things to urge against our marriage,
 As, now declar'd, would blunt my sword in battle,
 And dastardise my courage. Dryden.
- DA'STARDLY. adj. [from dastard.] Cowardly; mean; timorous.
 Brawl and clamour is so arrant a mark of a dastardly wretch, that he does as good as call himself so that uses it. L'Estrange.
- DA'STARDY. n. f. [from dastard.] Cowardliness; timorousness.
- DATARY. n. f. [datarius.] An officer of the chancery of Rome, through whose hands benefices pass. Diä.
- DATE. n. f. [datte, Fr. from datum, Lat.]
1. The time at which a letter is written, marked at the end or the beginning.
 2. The time at which any event happened.
 3. The time stipulated when any thing shall be done.
 His days and times are past,
 And my reliance on his fracted dates
 Has smit my credit. Shak/peare's Timon.
 My father's promise ties me not to time;
 And bonds without a date, they say, are void. Dryden.
4. End; conclusion.
 What time would spare, from steel receives its date;
 And monuments, like men, submit to fate. Pope.
5. Duration; continuance.
 Could the declining of this fate, O friend,
 Our date to immortality extend? Daniell.
 Then raise,
 From the conflagrant mass, purg'd and refin'd,
 New heav'ns, new earth, ages of endless date,
 Founded in tighteousness. Milton.
6. [from dactylus.] The fruit of the date-tree.
 Hold, take these keys, and fetch more spices, nurse.
 —They call for dates and quinces in the pastur. Shak/peare.
- DATE-TREE. n. f. See PALM, of which it is a species.
- To DATE. v. a. [from the noun.] To note with the time at which any thing is written or done.
 'Tis all one, in respect of eternal duration yet behind, whether we begin the world so many millions of ages ago, or date from the late year about six thousand years. Berkeley.
 To all their date backs he turns you round;
 These Aldus printed, those Du Sueil has bound. Pope.

DA'TELESS. adj. [from date.] Without any fixed term.

The fly-flow hours shall not determinate
The dateless limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DA'TIVE. adj. [dativus, Latin.]

1. [In grammar.] The epithet of the case that signifies the person to whom any thing is given.

2. [In law.] Those are termed dative executors, who are appointed such by the judge's decree; as administrators with us here in England. Arbiff.

To DAUB. v. a. [labben, Dut. dauber, French.]

1. To smear with something adhesive.
She took for him an ark of bulrushes, and daub'd it with slime and with pitch. Exod.

2. To paint coarsely.
Hasty daubing will but spoil the picture, and make it so unnatural as must want false light to set it off. Osway.

They snatched out of his hands a lame imperfect piece, rudely daubed over with too little reflection. Dryden.

If a picture is daubed with many bright and glaring colours, the vulgar admire it as an excellent piece. Watts.

3. To cover with something specious or gross, something that disguises what it lies upon.

So much he daub'd his vice with shew of virtue,
He liv'd from all attainder of suspect. Shaksp.

4. To lay on any thing gaudily or ostentatiously.

Since princes will have such things, it is better they should be graced with elegance, than daubed with coit. Bacon.

Let him be daub'd with lace, live high, and whore;

Sometimes be lousy, but be never poor. Dryden.

5. To flatter grossly.
Let every one, therefore, attend the sentence of his confidence; for, he may be sure, it will not daub nor flatter. South.

To DAUB. v. n. To play the hypocrite: this sense is not in use.

I cannot daub it further;
And yet I must. Shakespeare.

DAUBER. n. f. [from daub.]

1. One that daubs.

2. A coarse low painter.
What they call'd his picture, had been drawn at length by the daubers of almost all nations, and fill'd unlike him. Dryden.

Parts of different species jumbled together, according to the mad imagination of the dauber, to cause laughter. Dryden.

A sign-post dauber would disdain to paint
The one-eyed hero on his elephant. Dryden.

The treacherous tapster, Thomas,
Hurls a new angel two doors from us,
As true as dauber's hands can make it. Swift.

3. A low flatterer.

DA'UBERY. n. f. [from daub.] An old word for any thing artful.

She works by charms, by spells; and such daubery, as this is beyond our element. Shakespeare.

DA'UBY. adj. [from daub.] Viscous; glutinous; adhesive.
Not in vain the industrious kind
With dauby wax and flowers the cheeks have lin'd. Dryden.

Some the gall'd r. ees with dauby maring hind,
Or far-cloth mists with strong tarpawling coats. Dryden.

DA'UGHTER. n. f. [dahtar, Gothick; dohzer, Saxon; datter, Runick; dohter, German; dochter, Dutch.]

1. The female offspring of a man or woman.

Your wives, your daughters,
Your matrons, and your maids, could not fill up
The cistern of my lust. Shakespeare.

Now Aurora, daughter of the dawn,
With rosy lustre purpled o'er the lawn. Pope.

2. A daughter in law, or son's wife.

3. A woman.
Jacob went out to see the daughters of the land. Genesis.

4. [In poetry.] Any descendant.

5. The female penitent of a confessor.
Are you at leisure, holy father, now;
Or shall I come to you at evening mass?—
—My leisure serves me, penitence daughter now. Shakespeare.

To DAUNT. v. a. [domter, Fr. domitare, Lat.] To discourage; to fright; to intimidate.

Fairfax, whose name inarms thro' Europe rings,
And fills all mouths with envy or with praise,
And all her jealous monarchs with amaze,
And rumours loud, which daunt remotest kings. Milton.

Where the rude ax with heaved stroke,
Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
Or fright them from their dallow'd haunt. Milt.

Some presences daunt and discourage us, when others raise us to a brisk assurance. Glanville.

DAUNTLESS. adj. [from daunt.] Fearless; not dejected; not discouraged.

Grow great by your example, and put on
The dauntless spirit of resolution. Shakespeare.

Dauntless he rose, and to the fight return'd:
With shame his glowing cheeks, his eyes with fury burn'd. Dryden's Virgil.

He, not by wants or woes oppress'd,
Stems the hold torrent with a dauntless breast. Dryden.

The utmost weight of affliction from ministerial power and popular hatred, were almost without bearing, for the glory of such a dauntless conduct as he has shewn under it. Pope.

DAUNTLESSNESS. n. f. [from dauntless.] Fearlessness.

DAW. n. f. [menelulu. It is supposed by Skinner to be named from his note; by Junius to be corrupted from daul; the German tul, and dol in the Bavarian dialect, having the same signification.]

A bird.
I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,
For daw to peck it. Shakespeare's Othello.

If death do quench us quite, we have great wrong,
That dawes, and trees, and rocks should last so long,
When we must in an instant pass to nought. Darvies.

The loud daw, his thro' t displaying, draws
The whole assembly of his fellow daws. Waller.

DAWK. n. f. A cant word among the workmen for a hollow, rupture, or incision, in their stuff.

Observe if any hollow or dawks be in the length. Deason.

To DAWK. v. a. To mark with an incision.
Should they apply that side of the tool the edge lies on, the tool coming about of the work would, where a small irregularity of stuff should happen, jobb the edge into the stuff, and so daw it. Meyen.

To DAWN. v. n. [supposed by the etymologists to have been originally to dawen, or advance toward day.]

1. To grow luminous; to begin to grow light.
I have been troubled in my sleep this night;
But dawning day new comfort hath inspir'd. Shakespeare.

As it began to dawn towards the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene to see the sepulchre. Mattbew.

A night I slept, oblivious of my pain;
Aurora dawn'd and Phebus thiu'd in vain. Pope.

2. To glimmer obscurely.
A Romanist, from the very first dawning of any notions in his understanding, hath this principle constantly inculcated, that he must believe as the church. Locke.

3. To begin, yet faintly; to give some promises of lustre or eminence.
While we behold such dauntless worth appear
In dawning youth, and souls to void of fear. Dryden.

Thy hand strikes out some free design,
When life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DAWN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The time between the first appearance of light and the sun's rise, reckoned from the time that the sun comes within eighteen degrees of the horizon.

Then on to-morrow's dawn your care employ
To search the land, but give this day to joy. Dryden.

2. Beginning; first rise.
These tender circumstances diffuse a dawn of serenity over the soul. Pope.

Such their guiltless passion was,
As in the dawn of time inform'd the heart
Of innocence and undissembling truth. Thomson.

DAY. n. f. [dæg, Saxon.]

1. The time between the rising and setting of the sun, called the artificial day.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? Motherwo.
Of night impatient, we demand the day;
The day arrives, then for the night we pray:
The night and day successive come and go,
Our lasting pains no interruption know. Blackm.

Or object new Casual discourse draws on, which intermits
Our day's work. Milton.

2. The time from noon to noon, or from midnight to midnight, called the natural day.

How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year. Shak.

3. Light; sunshine.
Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness. Peters.

The wit yet glimmers with some streaks of day;
Now spurs the lated traveller apace,
To gain the timely sun. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Around the fields did nimble lightning pass,
Which offer'd us by fits, and snatch'd the day:
'Midst this was heard the shrill and tender cry
Of well-pleas'd ghosts, which in the storm did fly. Dryden.

Yet are we able only to traverse Dawnings or beams, and promises of day. Pope.

4. Any time specified and distinguished from other time; an age; the time. In this sense it is generally plural.

After him reigned Gutic line his heir,
The justest man and truest in his days. F. Green.

I think, in these days, one honest man is oblig'd to re-quit another who are his friends. Pope.

We have, at this time of day, better and more certain means of information than they had. H. Edwards.

5. Life: in this sense it is commonly plural. He never in his days broke his word; that is, in his whole life.

He was never at a loss in his days for a frequent answer. Cassell's Life of Orlando.

6. The day of contest; the contest; the battle.

His name struck fear, his conduct won the day;
He came, he saw, he seiz'd the struggling prey. Rajseman.

The noble thanes do bravely in the war;
The day almost itself professes yours,
And little is to do. Shakespeare's Macbeth
Would you not advantage of the fight delay,
If, striking first, you were to win the day?
Dryden.

7. An appointed or fixed time.

Or if my debtors do not keep their day,
Deny their hands, and then refuse to pay,
I must with patience all the terms attend. Dryd.

8. A day appointed for some commemoration.

The field of Agincourt, Fought on the day of Cyprian Crispianus. Stat.

9. From day to day; without certainty or continuance.

Bavaria hath been taught, that merit and service doth oblige the Spaniard but from day to day. Bacon.

TO-DAY. On this day.

To-day, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Psalms

The past is all by death possess'd,
And frugal fate, that guards the rest,
By giving, bids us live to-day. Fenton.

DA'YBED. n. f. [day and bed.] A bed used for idleness and luxury in the day-time.

Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come down from a daybed, where I have left Olivia sleeping. Shakespeare.

DA'YBOOK. n. f. [from day and book.] A tradesman's journal; a book in which all the occurrences of the day are set down.

True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,
Ere prime thou hast th' imposed day-work done. Fairfax.

DA'YBREAK. n. f. [day and break.] The dawn; the first appearance of light.

I watch'd the early glories of her eyes,
As men for daybreak watch the eastern skies. Dryden.

DAYLA'BOUR. n. f. [day and labour.] Labour by the day; labour divided into daily tasks.

Duth God exact daylabour, light denied,
I fondly ask? Milton.

Daylabour was but an hard and a dry kind of livelihood to a man that could get an estate with two or three strokes of his pen. South.

DAYLA'BOURER. n. f. [from daylabour.] One that works by the day.

In one night ere glimpse of morn,
His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn
That ten daylabourers could not end. Milton.

The daylabourer, in a country village, has commonly but a small pittance of courage. Locke.

DA'YLIGHT. n. f. [day and light.] The light of the day, as opposed to that of the moon, or a taper.

By this the drooping daylight 'gan to fade,
And yield his room to sad succeeding night. Fairy Queen.

Thou shalt buy this dear,
If ever I thy face by daylight see.
Now go thy way. Shakespeare.

They, by daylight passing through the Turks fleet, recovered the haven, to the joy of the besieged christians. Knolles.

He stands in daylight, and disdains to hide
An act, to which by honour he is tied. Dryden.

Will you murder a man in plain daylight? Dry.
Though rough bears in covert seek defence,
White foxes stay, with seeming innocence;
That crafty kind with daylight can dispense. Dryden.

If bodies be illuminated by the ordinary prismatic colours, they will appear neither of their own daylight colours, nor of the colour of the light cast on them, but of some middle colour between both. Newton's Opticks.

DA'YLILY. n. f. The same with aphodel.

DA'YSMAN. n. f. [day and man.] An old

So all ere day spring, under conscious night,
Secret they finish'd, and in order set. Milton.
The breath of heav'n's fresh-blowing, pure and sweet,
With day'spring born, here leave me to respire. Milton.

DA'YSTAR. n. f. [day and star.] The morning star.

I meant to make her fair, and free, and wise,
Of greatest blood, and yet more good than great:
I meant the daystar should not brighter rise,
Nor lend like influence from his lucid feat. Ben Jonson.

Sunk though he be beneath the watry floor;
So jinks the daystar in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head. Milton.

DAY'TIME. n. f. [day and time.] The time in which there is light: opposed to night.

In the daytime Fame sitteth in a watch-tower, and flieth most by night; she minglet things done with things not done, and is a terror to great cities. Bacon.

My ants never brought out their corn but in the night when the moon did shine, and kept it under ground in the daytime. Addison.

DA'YWORK. n. f. [day and work.] Work imposed by the day; daylabour.

True labour in the vineyard of thy lord,
Ere prime thou hast th' imposed day-work done. Fairfax.

3. Scarce; not plentiful: as, a dear year.

4. It seems to be sometimes used in Shakspeare for dear; sad; hateful; grievous.

What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies,
Whom thou in terms so bloody, and so dear,
Hast made thine enemies? Twelfth Night.
Let us return,
And strain what other means is left unto us
In our dear peril. Timon.

Some dear cause
Will in concealment wrapt me up a-while:
When I am known aright, you shall not grieve Lending me this acquaintance. King Lear.

Would I had met my dearest foe in heav'n,
Or ever I had seen that day. Hamlet.

Thy other banish'd son, with his dear fight Struck pale and bloodless. Titus Andronicus.

DEARNESS. n. f. [from dear.]

1. Fondness; kindness; love.
My brother holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage. Shakspeare.

The whole senate dedicated an altar to Friendship, as to a goddess, in respect of the great dearness of friendship between them two. Bacon.

He who hates his neighbour mortally, and wisely too, must profess a'l the dearness and friendship, with readiness to serve him. South.

2. Scarcity; high price.
Landlords prohibit tenants from plowing,
which is seen in the dearness of corn. Swift.

DEARLY. adv. [deorun, Sax.] Secretly; privately; unseen. Obsolete.

At last, as chanc'd them by a forest side
To pass, for succour from the scorching ray,
They heard a rueful voice, that dearly cried
With piercing shrieks. Spenser.

DEARTH. n. f. [from dear.]

1. Scarcity which makes food dear.
In times of dearth, it drain'd much coin out of the kingdom, to furnish us with corn from foreign parts. Bacon.

There have been terrible years dearths of corn, and every place is strewd with beggars; but dearths are common in better climates, and our evils here lie much deeper. Swift.

2. Want; need; famine.
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,
By longing for that food so long a time. Shaksp.
Of every tree that in the garden grows,
Eat freely with glad heart; fear here no dearth. Milton.

3. Barrenness; sterility.
The French have brought on themselves that dearth of plot, and narrowness of imagination, which may be observed in all their plays. Dryd.

To DEARTICULATE. v. a. [de and articulus, Latin.] To disjoint; to dis-member. Diä.

DEATH. n. f. [deaf, Saxon.]

1. The extinction of life; the departure of the soul from the body.

He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death, for the redemption of the transgressions, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance. Hebrews.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity or death. Shakspeare.

Death, a necessary end,
Will come, when it will come. Shakspeare.

He must his acts reveal,
From the first moment of his vital breath,
To his last hour of unrepenting death. Dryden.

2. Mortality; destruction.
How did you dare
To trade and traffick with M. ebeth,
In riddles and affairs of death? Shakspeare.

3. The state of the dead.
In twinship sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shaksp.

4. The manner of dying.
Thou that die the deaths of them that are slain
in the midst of the seas. Isabel.

5. The image of mortality represented by a skeleton.
I had rather be married to a death's head, with a bone in his mouth, than to either of these. Shakspeare.

If I gaze now, 'tis but to see What manner of death's head 'twill be,
When it is free
From that fresh upper skin,
The gazer's joy, and sin. Smolking.

6. Murder; the act of destroying life unlawfully.

As in manifesting the sweet influence of his mercy, on the severe stroke of his justice; so in this, not to suffer a man of death to live. Bacon.

7. Cause of death.
They cried out, and said, O thou man of God,
there is death in the pot. 2 Kings.
He caught his death the last county-lessions, where he would go to see justice done to a poor widow woman. Addison.

8. Destroyer.
All the endeavours Achilles used to meet with Hector, and in the death of him, is the intrigue which comprehends the battle of the last day.
Broom's View of Epic Poetry.

9. [In poetry.] The instrument of death.
Deaths invisible come wing'd with fire;
They hear a dreadful noise, and straight expire. Dryden.

Sounded at once the bow, and swiftly flies
The feather'd death, and hisses thro' the skies. Dryden.

Oft, as in airy rings they skim the heath,
The clam'rous lapwings feel the leaden death. Pope.

10. [In theology.] Damnation; eternal torments.

We pray that God will keep us from all sin and wickedness, from our ghostly enemy, and from everlasting death. Church Catechism.

DEATHBED. n. f. [death and bed.] The bed to which a man is confined by mortal sickness.

Sweet soul, take heed, take heed of perjury;
Thou art on thy death-bed. Shakspeare.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than the land
Wherein thou liest in reputation sick. Shakspeare.

These are such things as a man shall remember with joy upon his death-bed; such as shall cheer and warm his heart, even in that last and bitter agony. South's Sermons.

Then round our death-bed ev'ry friend should run,
And joy us of our conquest early won. Dryden.

A death-bed figure is certainly the most horrifying sight in the world. Chelier.

A death-bed repentance ought not indeed to be neglected, because it is the last thing that we can do. Atterbury.

Fame can never make us lie down contentedly on a death-bed. Pope.

DEATHFUL. adj. [death and full.] Full of slaughter; destructive; murderous.

Your cruelty was such, as you would spare his life for many deathful torments. Sidney.

Time itself, under the deathful shade of whose wings all things wither, hath wa'ted that lively virtue of nature in man, and beasts, and plants. Raleigh.

Blood, death, and deathful deeds, are in that noise,
Ruin, destruction at the utmost point. Milton.

These eyes behold
The deathful scene; princes on princes roll'd. Pope.

DEATHLESS. adj. [from death.] Immortal; never dying; everlasting.

God hath only immortality, though angels and human souls be deathless. Boyle.

Their temples wreath'd with leaves, that still renew;
For deathless laurel is the victor's due. Dryden.

Faith and hope themselves shall die,
While deathless charity remains. Prior.

DEATHLIKE. adj. [death and like.] Resembling death; still; gloomy; motionless; placid; calm; peaceful; undisturbed; resembling either the hor-rours or the quietness of death.

Why dost thou let thy brave soul lie supprest
In deathlike slumbers, while thy dangers crave
A waking eye and hand? Crawshaw.

A deathlike sleep!
A gentle wafting to immortal life!
On seas, on earth, and all that in them dwell,
A deathlike quiet and deep silence fell. Waller.

Black melancholy fits, and round her throws
A deathlike slumber, and a dread repose. Pope.
DEATH'S-DOOR. [death and door.] A near approach to death; the gates of death.
Shakspeare. It is now a low phrase.

I myself knew a person of great faculty, who was afflicted to death's-door with a vomiting.
Taylor's Worthy Communicant
There was a poor young woman, that had brought herself even to death's-door with grief for her sick husband. L'Estrange.

DEATHSMAN. n. f. [death and man.] Executioner; hangman; headsmen; he that executes the sentence of death.
He 's dead; I'm only sorry
He had no other deathsmen. Shakspeare.
As deathsmen you have rid this sweet young prince. Shakspeare.

DEATHWATCH. n. f. [death and watch.]
An insect that makes a tinkling noise like that of a watch, and is superstitiously imagined to prognosticate death.
The solemn deathwatch chok'd the hour the died. Gay.

We learn to preface approaching death in a family by ravens, and little worms, which we therefore call a deathwatch. Watts.
Misers are muckworms, silkworms beaus,
And deathwatches physicians. Pope.

TO DEAURATE. v. a. [deaurato, Lat.]
To gild, or cover with gold. DiCt.

DEAURATION. n. f. [from deaurate.]
The act of gilding.

DEBACCHATION. n. f. [debacchatio, Lat.]
A raging; a madness. DiCt.

TO DEBAR. v. a. [from bar.] To exclude; to preclude; to shut out from any thing; to hinder.
The same boats and the same buildings are found in countries debarred from all commerce by unpassable mountains, lakes, and deserts.
Raleigh's Essays.

Not so strictly hath our Lord impos'd
Labour, as to debar us when we need Refreshment, whether food, or talk between,
Food of the mind. Milton.
Civility, intended to make us easy, is employed in laying chains and fetters upon us, in debarring us of our wishes, and in crossing our most reasonable desires. Swift.

TO DEBARB. v. a. [from de and barba,
Lat.] To deprive of his beard. DiCt.

TO DEBARK. v. a. [debarquer, French.]
To disembark. DiCt.

TO DEBASE. v. a. [from bas.]
1. To reduce from a higher to a lower state.

Homer intended to teach, that pleasure and sensuality debase men into beasts. Brown.
As much as you raise silver, you debase gold, for they are in the condition of two things put in opposite scales; as much as the one rises, the other falls. Locke.

2. To make mean; to sink into meanness; to make despicable; to degrade.
It is a kind of taking God's name in vain, to debase religion with such frivolous disputes.
Hooker.

A man of large possessions has not leisure to consider of every slight expence, and will not debase himself to the management of every trifle.
Dryden.

Restraint others, yet himself not free;
Made impotent by pow'r, debas'd by dignity.
Dryden.

3. To sink; to vitiate with meanness.
He ought to be careful of not letting his subject debase his style, and betray him into a meanness of expression. Addison.
Hunting after arguments to make good one side of a question, and wholly to refuse these which favour the other, is so far from giving truth its due value, that it wholly debases it.

Locke.

4. To adulterate; to lessen in value by base admixtures.

He reform'd the coin, which was much adulterated and debas'd in the times and troubles of king Stephen. Hale.
Words so debas'd and hard, no stone
Was hard enough to touch them on. Hudibras.

DEBASEMENT. n. f. [from debase.] The act of debasing or degrading; degradation.

It is a wretched debasement of that sprightly faculty, the tongue, thus to be made the interpreter to a goat or hoar. Gov. of Tongue.

DEBASER. n. f. [from debase.] He that debases; he that adulterates; he that degrades another; he that sinks the value of things, or destroys the dignity of persons.

DEBATABLE. adj. [from debate.] Disputable; subject to controversy.

The French requested, that the debatable ground, and the Scottish hostages, might be restored to the Scots. Huyward.

DEBATE. n. f. [debat, French.]

1. A personal dispute; a controversy.
A way that men ordinarily use, to force others to submit to their judgments, and receive their opinion in debate, is to require the adversary to admit what they allege as a proof, or to assign a better. Locke.

It is to diffuse a light over the understanding, in our enquiries after truth, and not to furnish the tongue with debate and controversy. Watts.

2. A quarrel; a contest; it is not now used of hostile contest.

Now, lords, if heav'n doth give successful end
To this debate that bleedeth at our doors,
We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Shakspeare.

'Tis thine to ruin realms, o'erturn a state;
Betwixt the dearest friends to raise debate. Dryd.

TO DEBATE. v. a. [debatre, French.]
To controvert; to dispute; to contest.

Debate thy case with thy neighbour himself,
and discover not a secret to another. Proverbs.
He could not debate any thing without some contumacious, even when the argument was not of moment. Clarendon.

TO DEBATE. v. n.

1. To deliberate.
Your several suits
Have been consider'd and debated on. Shakspeare.

He presents that great soul debating upon the subject of life and death with his intimate friends. Tatler.

DEBATEFUL. adj. [from debate.]

1. [Of persons.] Quarrelsome; contentious.
2. [Of things.] Contested; occasioning quarrels.

DEBATEMENT. n. f. [from debate.] Controversy; deliberation.

Without debatement further, more or less,
He should the bearers put to sudden death.
Shakspeare.

DEBATER. n. f. [from debate.] A disputant; a controvertist.

TO DEBAUCH. v. a. [debaucher, Fr.
debauchari, Latin.]

1. To corrupt; to vitiate.
A man must have got his conscience thoroughly debauched and hardened, before he can arrive to the height of sin. South.

This it is to counsel things that are unjust;
first, to debauch a king to break his laws, and then to seek protection. Dryden.

2. To corrupt with lewdness.
Here do you keep a hundred knights and
squires,
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a notorious inn. Shakspeare.

3. To corrupt by intemperance.
No man's reason did ever dictate to him, that it is reasonable to debauch himself by im-temperance and lewdness to his ruin. Timothy.

DEBAUCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A fit of intemperance.
He will for some time contain himself within the bounds of sobriety; till within a little while he recovers his former debauch, and is well again, and then his appetite returns. Colony.

2. Luxury; excess; lewdness.
The first physicians that were made;
Excess began, and sloth sustains, the trade. Dryd.

DEBAUCHE. n. f. [from debauché, Fr.]
A lecher; a drunkard; a man given to intemperance.

Could we but prevail with the greatest de-bauchees amongst us to change their lives, we should find it no very hard matter to change their judgments. South.

DEBAUCHER. n. f. [from debauch.] One who seduces others to intemperance or lewdness; a corrupter.

DEBAUCHERY. n. f. [from debauch.] The practice of excess; intemperance; lewd-ness.

Oppose vices by their contrary virtues; hypocristy by sober piety, and debauchery by temperance. Spenser.

These magistrates, instead of lessening enormities, occasion just twice as much debauchery as there would be without them. Swift.

DEBAUCHMENT. n. f. [from debauch.]
The act of debauching or vitiating; corruption.

They told them ancient stories of the ravish-ment of chaste maidens, or the debauchment of nations, or the extreme poverty of learned persons. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

TO DEBEL. } v. a. [debellio, Lat.
TO DEBELLATE. } tin.] To conquer; to overcome in war. Not in use.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawful, but as meritorious even of divine honour. Daven.

Thou didst debel, and draw from heaven east
With all his army. Milton.

DEBELLATION. n. f. [from debellatio,
Lat.] The act of conquering in war.

DEBENTURE. n. f. [debetur, Lat. from debet.] A writ or note, by which a debt is claimed.
You modern wits, should each man bring his claim.
Have desperate debetures on your fame;
And little would be left you, I'm afraid,
If all your debts to Greece and Rome were paid.
Swift.

DEBILE. adj. [debilis, Latin.] Weak; feeble; languid; faint; without strength;
imbecile; impotent.

I have not wash'd my nose that bled,
Or fill'd some debile wretch, which without nose
There's many else have done. Shakspeare.

TO DEBILITATE. v. a. [deilitio, Lat.]
To weaken; to make faint; to enfeeble; to emasculate.

In the lust of the eye, the loss of the flesh, and the pride of life, they seem'd as weakly to fall as their debeilitated posterity ever after. Bacon.

The spirits being rendered languid, are incapable of purifying the blood, and debilitated in attracting nutriment. Harvey on Consump.

DEBILITATION. n. f. [from debilitatio, Latin.] The act of weakening.

The weakness cannot return any thing of strength, honour, or safety to the head, but a debilitation and ruin. King Charles.

DEBILITY. n. f. [debilitas, Lat.] Weakness; feebleness; languor; faintness; imbecility.

Metinks I am partaker of thy passion,
And in thy case do glafs mine own debility. Sidney

Aliment too vaporous or perspirable will subject it to the inconveniencies of too strong a perspiration, which are debility, faintness, and sometimes sudden death. Arbuthnot.

DEBONAIRE. adj. [debonnaire, French.] Elegant; civil; well-bred; gentle; complaisant. Obsolete.

Crying, let be that lady debonair,
Thou recreant knight, and soon thyself prepare
To battle, if thou mean her love to gain. Spenser.

Zephyr met her once a-maying;
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair. Milton.

The nature of the one is debonair and accoutable; of the other, retired and supercilious; the one quick and sprightly, the other slow and saturnine. Hazael's Vocal Forest.

And she that was not only passing fair,
But was wicalh discreet and debonair,
Resolv'd the passive doctrine to fulfil. Dryden.

DEBONAIRLY. adv. [from debonair.] Elegantly; with a genteel air.

DEBT. n. f. [debitum, Latin; dette, Fr.]

1. That which one man owes to another.
There was one that died greatly in debt: Well, says one, if he be gone, then he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine with him into the other world. Bacon's Apophthegms.

The debt of ten thousand talents, which the servant owed the king, was no slight ordinary sum. Duppa's Devotions.

To this great loss a sea of tears is due;
But the whole debt not to be paid by you. Waller.

Swift, a thousand pounds in debt,
Takes horse, and in a mighty fret
Rides day and night. Swift.

2. That which any one is obliged to do or suffer.

Your son, my lord, has paid a soldier's debt;
He only liv'd but till he was a man,
But like a man he died. Shakespeare's Much.

DEBTED. part. [from debt.] To DEBT is not found.] Indebted; obliged to.

Which do amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand debted to this gentleman. Shaksp.

DEBTOR. n. f. [debitor, Latin.]

1. He that owes something to another.
I am a debtor both to the Greeks and to the Barbarians, both to the wife and to the unwife. Romans.

2. One that owes money.

I'll bring your latter hazard back again,
And thankfully rest debtor for the first. Shaksp.

If he his ample palm
Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay
Of debtor, straight his body to the touch
Obequious, as whom knights were wont,
To some enchanted castle is conveyed. Philips.

There died my father, no man's debtor;
And there I'll die, nor worse, nor better. Pope.

The case of debtors in Rome, for the first four centuries, was, after the set time for payment, no choice but either to pay, or be the creditor's slave. Swift.

3. One side of an account book.

When I look upon the debtor side, I find such innumerable articles, that I want arithmetick to cast them up; but when I look upon the creditor's side, I find little more than blank paper. Alfison.

DEBULLITION. n. f. [debullitio, Latin.] A bubbling or seething over. Dict.

DECACUMINATED. adj. [decacuminatus, Latin.] Having the top or point cut off. Dict.

DECADE. n. f. [δέκα; decas, Latin.] The sum of ten; a number containing ten.

Men were not only out in the number of some days, the latitude of a few years, but might be wide by whole olympiads, and divers decades of years. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

We make cycles and periods of years; as decades, centuries, and chiliads, chiefly for the use of computations in history, chronology, and astronomy. Helder on Time.

All rank'd by ten; whole decades, when they dine,
Must want a Trojan slave to pour the wine. Pope.

DECADENCY. n. f. [decadence, French.] Decay; fall. Dict.

DECAGON. n. f. [from δέκα, ten, and γωνία, a corner.] A plain figure in geometry, having ten sides and angles.

The monarch oak,
Three centuries he grows, and three he stays
Supreme in state, and in three more decays. Dryden.

The garlands fade, the vows are worn away;
So dies her love, and for my hopes decays. Pope.

TO DECAY. v. a. To impair; to bring to decay.

Infirmity, that decays the wife, doth ever make better the fool. Shakespeare.

Cut off a stock of a tree, and lay that which you cut off to rot, to see whether it will decay the rest of the stock. Bacon.

He was of a very small and decayed fortune, and of no good education. Clarendon.

Decay'd by time and wars, they only prove Their former beauty by your former love. Dryden.

In Spain our springs, like old men's children,
Decay'd and wither'd from their infancy. Dryden.

It is so ordered, that almost every thing which corrupts the soul decays the body. Addison.

DECAY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Decline from the state of perfection; state of depravation or diminution.

What cometh to this great decay may come,
Shall be applied. Shakespeare.

She has been a fine lady, and paints and lutes
Her decays very well. Ben Jonson.

And those decays, to speak the naked truth,
Through the defects of age, were crimes of youth. Dunham.

By reason of the tenacity of fluids, and attrition of their parts, and the weakness of elasticity in solids, motion is much more apt to be lost than got, and is always upon the decay. Newton.

Each may feel increase and decays,
And see now clearer and now darker days. Pope.

Taught, half by reason, half by mere decay,
To welcome death, and calmly pass away. Pope.

2. The effects of diminution; the marks of decay.

They think, that whatever is called old must have the decay of time upon it, and truth too were liable to mould and rottenness. Locke.

3. Declension from prosperity.

And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then thou shalt relieve him. Leviticus.

I am the very man

That, from your first of difference and decay,
Have follow'd your sad steps. Shakespeare.

4. The cause of decline.

He that seeketh to be eminent amongst able men, hath a great task; but that is ever good for the publick: but he that plots to be the only figure among cyphers, is the decay of a whole age. Bacon.

DECAYER. n. f. [from decay.] That which causes decay.

Your water is a fore decayer of your whore's dead body. Shakespeare's Hamlet.

DECEASE. n. f. [decessus, Lat.] Death; departure from life.

Lands are by human law, in some places, after the owner's decease, divided unto all his children; in some, all descendeth to the eldest son. Hooker.

TO DECEASE. v. n. [decedo, Latin.] To die; to depart from life.

He tells us Arthur is deceas'd to-night. Shaksp.

You shall die
Twice now, where others that mortality
In her fair arms holds, shall but once decease. Chapman.

His latest victories still thickest came,
As, near the centre, motion doth increase;

Till he, press'd down by his own weighty name,
Did like the vestal order spoils decease. Dryden.

DECEIT. n. f. [deceptio, Latin.]

1. Fraud; a cheat; a fallacy; any practice by which falsehood is made to pass for truth.

My lips shall not speak wickedness, nor my tongue utter deceit. Job.

2. Stratagem; artifice.

His demand
Springs not from Edward's well-meant honest love,
But from deceit bred by necessity. Shaksp.

3. [In law.] A subtle wily shift or device; all manner of craft, subtilty, guile, fraud, wiliness, sleightness, cunning, covin, collusion, practice, and offence, used to deceive another man by any means, which hath no other proper or particular name but offence. Corwell.

DECEITFUL. adj. [deceit and full.] Fraudulent; full of deceit.

I grant him bloody,
Luxurious, avaricious, false, deceitful. Shaksp.
The lovely young Lavinia once had friends,
And fortune smil'd, deceitful, on her birth. Thomson.

DECEITFULLY. adv. [from deceitful.]
Fraudulently; with deceit.
Exercise of form may be deceitfully dispatched of course. Watson.

DECEITFULNESS. n. f. [from deceitful.]
The quality of being fraudulent; tendency to deceive.
The care of this world, and the deceitfulness of riches, choke the word, and it becomes un-fruitful. Matthew.

DECEIVABLE. adj. [from deceive.]
1. Subject to fraud; exposed to imposture.
Man was not only deceivable in his integrity,
but the angels of light in all their clarity. Brown.
How would thou use me now, blind, and thereby Deceivable, in most things as a child
Helpless? hence easily contemn'd and scorn'd,
And last neglected. Milton.

2. Subject to produce error; deceitful.
It is good to consider of deformity, not as a sign, which is more deceivable, but as a cause which seldom faileth of the effect. Bacon.
He received nothing but fair promises, which proved deceivable. Hlyward.
O ever-failing trust
In mortal strength! and oh, what not in man Deceivable and vain? Milton.

DECEIVABLENESS. n. f. [from deceivable.]
Liableness to be deceived, or to deceive.
He that has a great patron, has the advantage of his negligence and deceivableness.
Government of the Tongue.

They rais'd a feeble cry with trembling notes,
But the weak voice deceiv'd their gasping throats.
Dryden.

5. To deprive by fraud or stealth.
Wine is to be forbore in consumptions, for that the spirits of the wine prey on the viscid juice of the body, intercommon with the spirits of the body, and so deceive and rob them of their nourishment. Bacon.
Plant fruit-trees in large borders, and set therein fine flowers, but thin and sparingly, lest they deceive the trees. Bacon.

DECEIVER. n. f. [from deceive.] One that leads another into error; a cheat.
Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more;
Men were deceivers ever:
One foot in sea, and one on shore;
To one thing constant never. Shakspere.
As for Perkins's dismissal out of France, they interpreted it not as if he were detected for a counterfeit deceiver. Bacon.
Those voices, actions, or gestures which men have not by any compact agreed to make the instruments of conveying their thoughts one to another, are not the proper instruments of deceiving, so as to denominate the person using them a liar or deceiver. South.
It is to be admired how any deceiver can be so weak to foretell things near at hand, when a very few months mull of necessity discover the imposture. Swift.

Adieu the heart-expanding bowl,
And all the kind deceivers of the soul. Pope.

general: but decence and gracefulness can be only in the particulars in doing the good. Sprat.
Were the offices of religion stript of all the external decencies of worship, they would not make a due impression on the minds of those who assist at them. Asterbury.
She speaks, behaves, and acts just as she ought;
But never, never reach'd one gen'rous thought:
Virtue she finds too painful an endeavour,
Content to dwell in decencies for ever. Pope.

2. Suitableness to character; propriety.
And must I own, she said, my secret smart,
What with more decence were in silence kept?
Dryden.
The consideration immediately subsequent to the being of a thing, is what agrees or disagrees with that thing; what is suitable or unsuitable to it; and from this springs the notion of decency or indecency, that which becomes or misbecomes.
South.
Sentiments which raise laughter, can very seldom be admitted with any decency into an heroick poem. Addison.

Dryden.

2. That may be ascertained.

Concerning the time of the end of the world, the question is, whether that time be definable or no.

Burnet's Theory.

To DEFINE. v. a. [definio, Lat. definer, French.]

1. To give the definition; to explain a thing by its qualities and circumstances.

Whose loss can't thou mean,

That do'st so well their miseries define?

Sidney.

Though defining be thought the proper way to make known the proper signification, yet there are some words that will not be defined.

Locke.

2. To circumscribe; to mark the limit; to bound.

When the rings appeared only black and white, they were very distinct and well defined, and the blackness seemed as intense as that of the central spot.

Newton.

To DEFINE. v. n. To determine; to decide; to decree.

The unjust judge is the capital remover of landmarks, when he defineth amits of lands and properties.

Bacon.

DEFINER. n. f. [from define.] One that explains; one that describes a thing by its qualities.

Your God, forsooth, is found

Incomprehensible and infinite;

But is he therefore found? Vain searcher! no:

Let your imperfect definition show,

That nothing you, the weak definer, know.

Prior.

DEFINITE. adj. [from definitus, Lat.]

1. Certain; limited; bounded.

Hither to your harbour divers times he repaired, and here, by your means, had the sight of the goddess, who in a definite compass can set forth infinite beauty.

Sidney.

2. Exact; precise.

Idiots, in this case of favour, would be wisely definite.

Shakspere.

In a charge of adultery, the accuser ought to set forth, in the accusatory libel, or inquisition, which succeeds in the place of accusation, some certain and definite time.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

DEFINITE. n. f. [from the adjective.] Thing explained or defined.

Special bastardy is nothing else but the definition of the general; and the general, again, is nothing else but a definite of the special.

Ayliffe.

DEFINITENESS. n. f. [from definite.] Certainty; limitedness.

Dist.

DEFINITION. n. f. [definitio, Lat. definitio, French.]

1. A short description of a thing by its properties.

I drew my definition of poetical wit from my particular consideration of him; for propriety of thoughts and words is only to be found in him.

Dryden.

2. Decision; determination.

3. [In logick.] The explication of the essence of a thing by its kind and difference.

What is man? Not a reasonable animal merely; for that is not an adequate and distinguishing definition.

Bentley.

DEFINITIVE. adj. [definitivus, Lat.] Determinate; positive; express.

Other authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict and definitive truth.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

I make haste to the ending and comparing of the whole work, it being indeed the very definitive sum of this art, to distribute usefully and gracefully a well chosen plot.

Wotton.

DEFINITIVELY. adv. [from definitive.] Positively; decisively; expressly.

Definitively thus I answer you:

Your love deserves my thanks; but my desert, ; Unmeritable, shuns your high request.

Shaksp.

Bellarmino faith, because we think that the body of Christ may be in many places at once, locally and visibly; therefore we say and hold, that the same body may be circumscriptively and definitively in more places at once.

Hall.

That Methuseelah was the longest lived of all the children of Adam, we need not grant; nor is it definitively set down by Moses.

Brown.

DEFINITIVENESS. n. f. [from definitive.] Decisiveness.

Dist.

DEFLAGRABILITY. n. f. [from deflagro, Lat.] Combustibility; the quality of taking fire, and burning totally away.

We have spent more time than the opinion of the ruddy deflagrability, if I may so speak, of salt-petre did permit us to imagine.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRABLE. adj. [from deflagro, Lat.] Having the quality of wasting away wholly in fire, without any remains.

Our chymical oils, supposing that they were exactly pure, yet they would be, as the best spirit of wine is, but the more inflammable and deflagrable.

Boyle.

DEFLAGRATION. n. f. [deflagratio, Lat.] A term frequently made use of in chymistry, for setting fire to several things in their preparation; as in making Ethiops with fire, with sal prunellas, and many others.

The true reason why paper is not burned by the flame that plays about it, seems to be, that the aqueous part of the spirit of wine, being imbibed by the paper, keeps it so moist, that the flame of the sulphureous parts of the same spirit cannot fasten on it; and therefore, when the digestion is over, you shall always find the paper moist.

To DEFLECT. v. n. [deflecto, Lat.]

To turn aside; to deviate from a true course or right line.

At some parts of the Azores the needle deflecteth not, but lieth in the true meridian: on the other side of the Azores, and this side of the equator, the north point of the needle wheelcloth to the west.

For, did not come from a straight course deflect, They could not meet, they could no world erect.

DEFLECTION. n. f. [from deflecto, Lat.]

1. Deviation; the act of turning aside.

Needles incline to the south on the other side of the equator; and at the very line, or middle circle, stand without deflection.

2. A turning aside, or out of the way.

3. [In navigation.] The departure of a ship from its true course.

DEFLEXURE. n. f. [from deflecto, Lat.]

A bending down; a turning aside, or out of the way.

DEFLORATION. n. f. [decoloration, French; from decoloratus, Lat.]

1. The act of deflouring; the taking away of a woman's virginity.

2. A selection of that which is most valuable.

The laws of Normandy are, in a great measure, the decoloration of the English laws, and a transcript of them.

To DEFLOUR. v. a. [decolorer, Fr.]

1. To ravish; to take away a woman's virginity.

As is the lust of an eunuch to decolor a virgin, so is he that executeth judgment with violence.

Now will I hence to seek my lovely moor,
And let my spleenful sons this trull decolor.

2. To take away the beauty and grace of any thing.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, decolor'd, and now to death devote!

If he died young, he died innocent, and before the sweetness of his soul was decolor'd and ravished from him by the flames and follies of a forward age.

DEFLOURER. n. f. [from decolorer.] A ravisher; one that takes away virginity.

I have often wondered, that those decolorers of innocence, though dead to all the sentiments of virtue and honour, are not restrained by humility.

DEFLOUS. adj. [defluus, Lat.]

1. That flows down.

2. That falls off.

DEFLUX. n. f. [defluxus, Lat.] Downward flow.

Both bodies are clammy, and bridle the deflux of humours, without penning them in too much.

DEFLUXION. n. f. [defluxio, Lat.] The flow of humours downward.

We see that taking cold moveth looseness, by contraction of the skin and outward parts; and so doth cold likewise cause rheums and defluxion from the head.

DEFTLY. adv. [from deft.] Dexterously; skilfully. Obsolete. Properly deftly.

Lo, how finely the graces can it foot
To the instrument;
They dauncen deftly, and singen foote,
In their mentuement.

DEFOEDATION. n. f. [from defoediis, Lat.] The act of making filthy; pollution. This is no English word; at least, to make it English, it should be written defedation.

What native unextinguishable beauty must be impressed and imbrued through the whole, which the defoedation of so many parts by a bad printer, and a worse editor, could not hinder from shining forth!

DEFORCEMENT. n. f. [from force.] A withholding of lands and tenements by force from the right owner.

To DEFORM. v. a. [deformo, Lat.]

1. To disfigure; to make ugly; to spoil the form of any thing.

I that am curtail'd of all fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unhealth'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up.

Winty blasts

Deform the year delightful.

2. To dishonour; to make ungraceful.

Old men with dust deform'd their hoary hair.

DEFORM. adj. [deformis, Lat.] Ugly; disfigured; of an irregular form.

I did proclaim,
That who's kill'd that monster most deform,
Should have mine only daughter to his dame.

So spake the grisly terror; and in shape,
So speaking and so threatening, grew tenfold
More dreadful and deform.

Sight so deform what heat of rock could long Dry-eyed behold?

DEFORMATION. n. f. [deformatio, Lat.] A defacing; a disfiguring.

DEFORMED. participial adj. Ugly; wanting natural beauty.

DEFORMEDLY. adv. [from deform.] In an ugly manner.

DEFORMEDNESS. n. f. [from deformed.] Ugliness; a disagreeable form.

DEFORMITY. n. f. [deformitas, Lat.]

1. Ugliness; illfavouredness.
I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And defeat on mine own deformity.

Proper deformity seems not in the fiend

So horrid as in woman.

Where fits deformity to mock my body,

To shape my legs of an unequal size,

To disproportion me in every part.

Why should not man,

Retaining still divine similitude

In part, from such deformities be free,

And, for his Maker's image sake, exempt?

2. Ridiculousness; the quality of something worthy to be laughed at, or censured.

In comedy there is somewhat more of the worse likeness to be taken, because it is often to produce laughter, which is occasioned by the sight of some deformity.

3. Irregularity; inordinateness.

No glory is more to be envied than that of due reforming either church or state, when deformities are such, that the perturbation and civility are not like to exceed the benefit of reforming.

DEFORSOR. n. f. [from forceur, Fr.] One that overcomes and casts out by force. A law term.

To DEFRAUD. v. a. [defraudo, Lat.] To rob or deprive by a wile or trick; to cheat; to cozen; to deceive; to beguile: with of before the thing taken by fraud.

That no man go beyond and defraud his brother in any matter, because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

My son, defraud not the poor of his living, and make not the needy eyes to wait long.

Churches seem injured and defraud'd of their right; when places, not sanctified as they are, prevent them unnecessarily in that pre-eminence and honour.

There they, who brothers better claim disown,
Expel their parents, and usurp the throne;

Defraud their clients, and, to lucre sold,
Sit brooding on unprofitable gold.

But now he seiz'd Brunei's heav'nly charms,
And of my valour's prize defraud's my arms.

There is a portion of our lives which every wile man may justly reserve for his own particular use, without defrauding his native country.

DEFRAUDATION. n. f. [defraudo, Lat.]

Privation by fraud.

Their impostures are worse than any other, deluding not only into pecuniary defraudations, but the irreparable deceit of death.

DEFRAUDER. n. f. [from defraud.] A deceiver; one that cheats.

The profligate in morals grow fevered,
Defrauders just, and sycophants sincere.

To DEFRA'Y. v. a. [defrayer, Fr.] To bear the charges of; to discharge expenses.

He would, out of his own revenue, defray the charges belonging to the sacrifices.

It is easy to lay a charge upon any town; but to foresee how the same may be answered and defray'd, is the chief part of good advisement.

It is long since any stranger arrived in this part, and therefore take ye no care; the state will defray you all the time you stay; neither shall you stay one day the less for that.

DEFRA'YER. n. f. [from defray.] One that discharges expenses.

DEFRA'YMENT. n. f. [from defray.] The payment of expenses.

DEFT. adj. [Dæft, Sax.] Obsolete.

1. Neat; handsome; spruce.

2. Proper; fitting.

You go not the way to examine: you must call the watch that are their accusers.

—Yea, marry, that's the deft way.

3. Ready; dexterous.

Loud fits of laughter seiz'd the guests, to see

The limping god so deft at his new industry.

The wanton calf may skip with many a bound,

And my cur, Tray, play deft seats around.

DEFTLY. adv. [from deft.] Obsolete.

1. Neatly; dexterously.

Come, high or low,

Thyself and office deftly show.

2. In a skilful manner.

Young Colin Clout, a lad of peerless meed,

Full well could dance, and deftly tune the reed.

DEFUNCT. adj. [defunctus, Lat.] Dead; deceased.

I therefore beg it not
To please the palate of my appetite;
Nor to comply with heat, the young affects,
In me defuncta, and proper satisfaction. Shaksp.

Here entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies, fly. Hudibras.

DEFUNCT. n. f. [from the adjective.]
One that is deceased; a dead man or woman.

Nature doth abhor to make his couch
With the defunct, or sleep upon the dead. Shakspere.

In many cases, the searchers are able to report the opinion of the physician who was with the patient, as they receive the same from the friends of the defunct. Graunt.

DEFUNCTION. n. f. [from defuncta.]
Death.

Nor did the French possess the Salique land
Until four hundred one and twenty years
After defunction of king Pharamond. Shaksp.

TO DEFY. v. a. [deffier, Fr. from de fide decedere, or some like phrase, to fall from allegiance to rebellion, contempt, or insult.]

1. To call to combat; to challenge.

I once again
Defy thee to the trial of mortal fight. Milton.
Where seek retreat, now innocence is fled?
Safe in that guard, I durst even hell defy;
Without it, tremble now when heav'n is nigh. Dryden.

Agis, the Lycian, stepping forth with pride,
To single fight the boldest foe defied. Dryden.

2. To treat with contempt; to slight.

As many fools that stand in better lace,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word Defy the matter. Shakspere.

DEFY. n. f. [from the verb.] A challenge; an invitation to fight: this is now hardly used.

At this the challenger, with fierce defy,
His trumpet sounds; the challeng'd makes reply:
With clangour rings the field, rebounds the vaulted sky. Dryden.

DEFYER. n. f. [from defy.] A challenger; one that invites to fight: more properly desier.

God may revenge the affronts put upon them by such impudent defyers of both, as neither believe a God, nor ought to be believed by man. South.

DEGENERACY. n. f. [from degeneratio, Latin.]

1. A departure from the virtue of our ancestors.

2. A desertion of that which is good.

'Tis true, we have contracted a great deal of weakness and impotency by our wilful degeneracy from goodness; but that grace, which the gospel offers to us for our assistance, is sufficient for us. Tillotson.

The ruin of a state is generally preceded by an universal degeneracy of manners, and contempt of religion, which is entirely our case at present. Swift.

3. Meanness.

There is a kind of sluggish resignation, as well as piousness and degeneracy of spirit, in a state of slavery. Addison.

TO DEGENERATE. v. n. [degenerare, Lat. degenerer, Fr. degenerer, Span.]

1. To fall from the virtue of ancestors.

2. To fall from a more noble to a base state.

When wit transgresseth decency, it degenerates into insulence and impiety. Tillotson.

3. To fall from its kind; to grow wild or base.

Most of those fruits that use to be grafted, if they be set of kernels or stones, degenerate. Bacon.

DEGENERATE. adj. [from the verb.]

8. Unlike his ancestors; fallen from the virtue and merit of his ancestors.

Thou art like enough
To fight against me under Pirrey's pay;
To dog his heels, and curtsy at his frowns,
To show how much thou art degenerate. Shakspere.

Yet thou hast greater cause to be Asham'd of them, than they of thee;
Degenerate from their ancient brood,
Since first the court allow'd them food. Swift.

2. Unworthy; base; departing from its kind or nature.

So all shall turn degenerate, all deprav'd;
Justice and temperance, truth and faith, forgot!
One man except. Milton.

When a man so far becomes degenerate as to quit the principles of human nature, and to be a noxious creature, there is commonly an injury done some person or other. Locke.

DEGENERATENESS. n. f. [from degenerate.] Degeneracy; a being grown wild, or out of kind.

DEGENERATION. n. f. [from degenerate.]

1. A deviation from the virtue of one's ancestors.

2. A falling from a more excellent state to one of less worth.

3. The thing changed from its primitive state.

In plants, these transplantations are obvious;
as that of barley into oats, of wheat into darnel;
and those grains which generally arise among corn, as cockle, aracus, ægilops, and other degenerations.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEGENEROUS. adj. [from degener, Lat.]

1. Degenerated; fallen from the virtue and merit of ancestors.

2. Vile; base; infamous; unworthy.

Let not the tumultuary violence of some men's immoderate demands ever betray me to that degenerous and unmanly slavery, which should make me strengthen them by my consent. King Charles.

Shame, instead of piety, restrains them from many base and degenerous practices. South.
Degenerous passion, and for man too base,
It seats its empire in the female race;
There rages, and to make its blow secure,
Puts flattery on, until the aim be sure. Dryden.

DEGENEROUSLY. adv. [from degenerous.]

In a degenerate manner; basely; meanly.
How wounding a spectacle is it to see heroes, like Hercules at the distaff, thus degenerously employed! Decay of Piety.

DEGLUTITION. n. f. [deglutition, Fr. from deglutio, Lat.] The act or power of swallowing.

When the deglutition is totally abolished,
the patient may be nourished by clysters. Arbush.

1. A deprivation of dignity; dismissal from office.

The word degradation, is commonly used to denote a deprivation and removing of a man from his degree. Zyliffe.

2. Degeneracy; baseness.

So deplorable is the degradation of our nature, that whereas before we bore the image of God,
we now retain only the image of men. South.

3. Diminution, with respect to strength, efficacy, or value.

4. [In painting.] A term made use of to express the lessening and rendering confused the appearance of distant objects in a landscape, so as they may appear there as they would do to an eye placed at that distance from them. Diſt.

TO DEGRADE. v. a. [degrader, Fr.]

1. To put one from his degree; to deprive him of his office, dignity, or title.

He should Be quite degraded, like a hedgeborn swain
That doth presume to boast of gentle blood. Shakspere.

2. To lessen; to diminish the value of.

Nor shalt thou, by descending to assume,
Man's nature, lessen or degrade thine own. Mit.
All higher knowledge in her presence falls Degraded. Milton.

3. To reduce from a higher to a lower state, with respect to qualities: as, gold is degraded into silver.

DEGRAVATION. n. f. [from degravatus, of degravo, Lat.] The act of making heavy.

DEGREE. n. f. [degré, Fr. from gradus, Latin.]

1. Quality; rank; station; place of dignity.

It was my fortune, common to that age,
To love a lady fair, of great degree,
The which was born of noble parentage,
And set in highest seat of dignity. Spenser.
I embrace willingly the ancient received course and conveniency of that discipline, which teacheth inferior degrees and orders in the church of God. Hooker.

Surely men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lye: to be laid in the balance,
they are altogether lighter than vanity. Pfalms.

Well then, Coleville is your name, a knight is your degree, and your place the dale. Shaksp.
Degree being vizarded,
Th' unworthiest thews as fairly in the mask. Shakspere.

This noble youth to madness lov'd a dame
Of high degree, Honoria was her name. Dryden.

He a good husband, a good housewife she. Dryd.
But is no rank, no station, no degree,
From this contagious taint of sorrow free? Prior.

2. The comparative state and condition in which a thing is.

The book of Wisdom noteth degrees of idolatry, making that of worshipping petty and vile idols more gross than simply the worshipping of the creator. Bacon.

As if there were degrees in infinite,
And Heav'n itself had rather want perfection,
Than punish to excess. Dryden.

Admits of no degrees; but must be still Sublimely good, or despicably ill. Roscommon.

3. A step or preparation to any thing.

Her first degree was by setting forth her beauties, truly in nature not to be mistak'd, but as much advanced to the eye, as abas'd to the judgment, by art. Sidney.

Which fight the knowledge of myself might bring,
Which to true wisdom is the first degree. Darwin.

4. Order of lineage; descent of family.

King Latinus, in the third degree,
Had Saturn author of his family. Dryden.

O God, command deliverances for Jacob. Psalms.

Whate'er befalls, your life shall be my care;

One death or one deliverance we will share. Dryden.

2. The act of delivering a thing to another: now commonly called delivery.

3. The act of bringing children.

Ne'er mother

Rejoic'd deliverance more. Shakespeare.

People have a superstitious belief, that in the labour of women it helpeth to the easy deliverance. Bacon.

4. The act of speaking; utterance; pronunciation: now commonly delivery.

If seriously I may convey my thoughts

In this my light deliverance, I have spoke

With one that in her sex, her years profession,

Wisdom and constancy, hath amaz'd me more

Than I daie blame my weakness. Shakespeare.

DELIVERER. n. f. [from deliver.]

1. A savor; a rescuer; a preserver; a releaser.

It doth notably set forth the consent of all nations and ages, in the approbation of the extirpating and debellating of giants, monsters, and foreign tyrants, not only as lawiul, but as meritorious ever of divine honour; and this, although the deliverer came from the one end of the world unto the other. Bacon.

By that feed

Is meant thy great Deliverer, who shall bruise

The serpent's head. Milton.

Andrew Doria has a statue erected to him at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the glorious title of deliverer of the common-wealth. Addison.

Him their deliverer Europe does confess;

All tongues extol him, all religions bless. Hallifax.

2. A relater; one that communicates something by speech or writing.

Divers chymical experiments, delivered by sober authors, have been believed false, only because the menstruums were not as highly rectified, or exquisitely deputed, as those that were used by the deliverers of those experiments. Boyle.

DELIVERY. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of delivering.

2. Release; rescue; saving.

He swore, with tobs,

That he would labour my delivery. Shaksp.

After the delivery of your royal father's person into the hands of the army, I undertaking to the queen mother, that I would find some means to get access to him, she was pleas'd to send me. Denham.

Nor did he in any degree contribute to the delivery of his house, which was at first imagin'd, because it was so ill, or not at all defended. Laurenson.

4. Utterance; pronunciation; speech.

We allege what the scriptures themselves do usually speak, for the saving force of the word of God; not with restraint to any certain kind of delivery, but howsoever the same shall chance to be made known. Hooker.

I was charmed with the gracefulness of his figure and delivery, as well as with his discourses. Addison.

5. Use of the limbs; activity.

Misfidon could not perform any action on horse or foot more strongly, or deliver that strength more nimbly, or become the delivery more gracefully, or employ all more virtuously. Sidney.

The earl was the taller, and much the stronger; but the duke had the nearer limbs, and freer delivery. Watson.

6. Childbirth.

Like as a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out. Isaiah.

DELL. n. f. [from dal, Dutch.] A pit; a hole in the ground; any cavity in the earth, wider than a ditch and narrower than a valley. Obsolete.

The while, the same unhappy ewe, Whose clouted leg her hurt doth shew, Fell headlong into a dell. Spenser.

I know each lane, and every alley green, Dingle, or bushy dell, of this wild wood. Milt.
But, fies to sun-shine, most they took delight In dells and dales, conceal'd from human sight. Tickel.

Cut still more of the deltoide muscle, and carry the arm backward. Sharp's Surgery.

DELUDABLE. adj. [from delude.] Liable to be deceived; that is easily imposed on: rather deludible.

Not well understanding omniscience, he is not so ready to deceive himself, as to fallify unto him whose cogitation is no ways deludable. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DELUDE. v. a. [deludo, Lat.]

1. To beguile; to cheat; to deceive; to impose on.

O, give me leave, I have deluded you;
'Twas neither Charles, nor yet the duke. Shakespeare's Henry vi.

Let not the Trojans, with a feign'd pretence
Of proffer'd peace, delude the Latian prince. Dryd n.

2. To disappoint; to frustrate.

DELUDER. n. f. [from delude.] A beguiler; a deceiver; an impostor; a cheat; a false pretender.

Say, flatterer, say, all fair deluder speak;
Answer me this, ere yet my heart does break. Granville.

And thus the sweet deluder: tune their song. Pope.

TO DELVE. v. a. [belgan, Sax. delven, Dutch; perhaps from delph, a hog. Junius.]

1. To dig; to open the ground with a spade.

It shall go hard
But I will dive one yard below the mine.
And blow them at the moon. Shakespeare.

Delve of convenient depth your thrashing floor;

With temper'd clay then fill and face it o'er. Dryden.

The filthy swine with delving snout
The rooted forest undermine. Philips.

2. To fathom; to sift; to found one's opinion. Figuratively.

What 's his name and birth?

—I cannot delve him to the root: his father Was call'd Sicilius. Shakespeare

DELVE. n. f. [from the verb.] A ditch; a pit; a pittal; a den; a cave.

He by and by

His feeble feet directed to the cry;
Which to that shady delve him brought at last,
Where Mammon erst did sun his treasury. Spenser.

Such a light and mettled dance
Saw you never yet in France;
And by leadmen, for the nonce,
That turn round like grundle-stones,
Which they dig out fro' the delves,
For their hairs bread, wives, and selves. Ben Jonson.

DELVE of Coals. A certain quantity of coals dug in the mine or pit. Dict.

DEL'VER. n. f. [from delve.] A digger; one that opens the ground with a spade.

DEL'LUGE. n. f. [deluge, Fr. from diluvium, Latin.]

1. A general inundation; laying entirely under water.

The apostle doth plainly intimate, that the old world was subject to perish by a deluge, as this is subject to perish by conflagration. Burnet's Theory.

2. An overflowing of the natural bounds of a river.

But if with bays and dams they strive to force
His channel to a new or narrow course,
No longer then within his banks he dwells,
First to a torrent, then a deluge, swells. Denham.

3. Any sudden and resistless calamity.

TO DEL'LUGE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drown; to lay totally under water.

The restless flood the land would overflow,
By which the delug'd earth would useless grow. Blackmore.

Still the battering waves rush in Implacable, till delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks, found'ring in the vast abyss. Phillips.

2. To overwhelm; to cause to sink under the weight of any calamity.

At length corruption, like a general flood,
Shall deluge all. Pope.

2. The state of one deluded.

3. A false representation; illusion; error; a chimerical thought.

Who therefore seeks in these True wisdom, finds her not, or by delusion. Milton.

I, waking, view'd with grief the rising sun,
And fondly mourn'd the dear delusion gone. Prior.

DEL'USIVE. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive; beguiling; imposing on.

When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,
Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear. Prior.

The happy whimsey you pursue,
Till you at length believe it true;
Caught by your own delusive art,
You fancy first, and then assert. Prior.

While the base and grovelling multitude were listening to the delusive deities, those of a more erect aspect and exalted spirit separated themselves from the rest. Taylor.

Phænomena so delusive, that it is very hard to escape imposition and mistake. Hoodward.

DEL'USORY. adj. [from delusus, Latin.] Apt to deceive.

This confidence is founded on no better foundation than a delusory prejudice. Glanville.

DEMAGOGUE. n. f. [δημαγωγος.] A ringleader of the rabble; a popular and factious orator.

Who were the chief demagogues and patrons of tumults, to send for them, to flatter and embolden them. King Charles.

A plausible, insignificant word, in the mouth of an expert demagogue, is a dangerous and dreadful weapon. South.

Demosthenes and Cicero, though each of them a leader, or, as the Greeks called it, a demagogue, in a popular state, yet seem to differ in their practice. Swift.

DEMAIN.

DEME'AN. } n. f. [domains, French.]

DEME'SNE. }

1. That land which a man holds originally of himself, called dominium by the civilians, and opposed to feodum, or fee, which signifies those that are held of a superior lord. It is sometimes used also for a distinction between those lands that the lord of the manor has in his own hands, or in the hands of his lessee, demised or let upon a rent for a term of years or life, and such other lands appertaining to the said manor as belong to free or copyholders. Phillips.

2. Estate in land.

Having now provided
A gentleman of noble parentage,
Of fair demesnes, youthful, and nobly allied. Shakespeare.

That earldom indeed had a royal jurisdiction and feignory, though the lands of that county in demesne were possessed for the most part by the ancient inheritors. Davies.

3. Land adjoining to the mansion, kept in the lord's own hand.

Those acts for planting forest trees have hitherto been wholly ineffectual, except about the demesnes of a few gentlemen; and even there, in general, very unskillfully made. Swift.

TO DEMAND. v. a. [demandar, Fr.]

1. To claim; to ask for with authority.

The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought; 'tis mine, and I will have it. Shakespeare.

2. To question; to interrogate.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demand'd of him how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered? 2 Samuel.

If any friend of Cæsar's demand why Brutus rose against Cæsar, this is my answer: Not that I loved Cæsar less, but that I loved Rome more. Shakespeare.

Young one,
Inform us of thy fortunes; for, it seems,
They crave to be demand'd. Shakespeare.

The oracle of Apollo being demand'd, when the war and misery of Greece should have an end, replied, When they would double the altar in Delos, which was of a cubick form. Pachian on Geometry.

3. [In law.] To prosecute in a real action.

DEMA'ND. n. f. [demande, French.]

1. A claim; a challenging; the asking of any thing with authority.

This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones.

Daniel.

Giving vent, gives life and strength, to our appetites; and he that has the confidence to turn his wishes into demands, will be but a little way from thinking he ought to obtain them.

Locke.

2. A question; an interrogation.
3. The calling for a thing in order to purchase it.

My bookfeller tells me, the demand for those my papers, increases daily.

Addison.

4. [In law.] The asking of what is due. It hath also a proper signification distinguished from plaint; for all civil actions are pursued either by demands or plaints, and the pursuer is called demandant or plaintiff. There are two manners of demands, the one of deed, the other in law: in deed, as in every præcipe, there is express demand; in law, as every entry in land-distress for rent, taking or seizing of goods, and such like acts, which may be done without any words, are demands in law.

Blount.

DEMANDABLE. adj. [from demand.] That may be demanded; requested; asked for.

All foms demandable, for licence of alienation to be made of lands holden in chief, have been stayed in the way to the hanaper.

Bacon.

DEMANDANT. n. f. [from demand.]

1. He who is actor or plaintiff in a real action, because he demandeth lands.

Coke.

2. A plaintiff; one that demands redress. One of the witnesses deposed, that dining on a Sunday with the demandant, whose wife had sat below the squire's lady at church, she the said wife dropped some expressions, as if she thought her husband ought to be knighted.

Spectator.

DEMANDER. n. f. [demandeur, Fr.]

1. One that requires a thing with authority.
2. One that asks a question.
3. One that asks for a thing in order to purchase it.

They grow very fast and fat, which also bettereth their taste, and delivereth them to the demanders ready use at all seasons.

Carew.

4. A dunner; one that demands a debt.
- DEMEAN. n. f. [from demener, Fr.] A mien; presence; carriage; demeanour; deportment.

At his feet, with sorrowful demean,
And deadly hue, an armed corse did lie.

Spenser.

To DEMEAN. v. a. [from demener, Fr.]

1. To behave; to carry one's self.

Those plain and legible lines of duty requiring us to demean ourselves to God humbly and devotionly, to our governors obediently, and to our neighbours justly, and to ourselves soberly and temperately.

South.

A man cannot doubt but that there is a God; and that, according as he demeans himself towards him, he will make him happy or miserable for ever.

Tillotson.

Stephon had long perplex'd his brains,
How with so high a nymph he might Demean himself the wedding-night.

Swift.

2. To lessen; to debase; to undervalue. Now, out of doubt, Antiphollis is mad; Else he would never so demean himself.

Snark.

DEMEANOUR. n. f. [demener, Fr.] Carriage; behaviour.

Of so insupportable a pride he was, that where his deeds might well stir envy, his demeanour did rather breed disdain.

Sidney.

Angels best like us, when we are most like unto them in all parts of decent demeanour.

Hooker.

His gestures fierce

He mark'd, and mad demeanour, then alone,
As he suppos'd, all unobserv'd, unseen.

Thus Eve, with sad demeanour meek,

Ill worthy I.

Milton.

He was of a courage not to be daunted, which was manifested in all his actions, especially in his whole demeanour at Rhee, both at the landing, and upon the retreat.

Clarendon.

DEMERIT. n. f. [démérite, Fr. from demeritus, of demereor, Latin.]

1. The opposite to merit; ill deserving; what makes one worthy of blame or punishment.

They should not be able once to stir, or to murmur, but it should be known, and they shortened according to their demerits.

Thou liv'st by me, to me thy breath resign;

Mine is the merit, the demerit thine.

Whatever they acquire by their industry or ingenuity, should be secure, unless forfeited by any demerit or offence against the custom of the family.

Dryden.

Temple.

2. Anciently the same with merit; desert.

I fetch my life and being
From men of royal siege; and my demerits
May speak, unbosoming, to as proud a fortune
As this that I have reach'd.

As this that I have reach'd.

Shakspeare.

He took his leave of them, whose eyes bade him farewell with tears, making temples to him as to a demi-god.

Sidney.

Be gods, or angels, demi-gods,
Transported demi-gods stood round,
And men grew heroes at the sound,
Enflam'd with glory's charms.

Milton.

Pope.

Nay, half in heaven, except (what's mighty odd)

A fit of vapours clouds this demi-god.

Pope.

DEMI-LANCE. n. f. [demi and lance.] A light lance; a short spear; a half-pike.

On their steel'd heads their demi-lances wore
Small pennons, which their ladies colours bore.

Dryden.

Light demi-lances from afar they throw,
Fatten'd with leather thongs, to gall the foe.

Dryden.

DEMI-MAN. n. f. [demi and man.] Half a man: a term of reproach.

Shakespeare.

DEMURENESS. n. f. [from demure.]

1. Modesty; soberness; gravity of aspect.
Her eyes having in them such a cheerfulness, as nature seemed to smile in them; though her mouth and cheeks obeyed to that pretty demure- ness, which the more one marked, the more one would judge the poor soul apt to believe. Sidney.

2. Affected modesty; pretended gravity.

DEMURRAGE. n. f. [from demur.] An allowance made by merchants to masters of ships, for their stay in a port beyond the time appointed.

DEMURRER. n. f. [demeurer, French; i. e. manere in aliquo loco, vel morari.]

A kind of pause upon a point of difficulty in an action; for, in every action, the controversy consists either in the fact, or in the law: if in the fact, that is tried by the jury; if in law, then is the case plain to the judge, or so hard and rare, as it breedeth just doubt. I call that plain to the judge, wherein he is assured of the law; and in such case the judge with his associates, proceeds to judgment without farther work.

But when it is doubtful to him and his associates, then is their stay made, and a time taken, either for the court to think farther upon it, and to agree, if they can; or else for all the justices to meet together in the Chequer-chamber, and, upon hearing that which the serjeants can say of both parts, to advise, and set down as law, whatsoever they conclude firm, without farther remedy. Cowell

A prohibition was granted, and hereunto there was a demurrer. Ayliffe's Purgeon.

DEN. n. f. [den, Saxon.]

1. A cavern or hollow running horizontally, or with a small obliquity, under ground; distinct from a hole which runs down perpendicularly.

2. The cave of a wild beast.

What, shall they seek the lion in his den,
And fight him there? Shakespeare.
The tyrant's den, whose use, though lost to fame,

Was now th' apartment of the royal damie;
The cavern, only to her father known,
By him was to his darling daughter shown. Dryden.

'Tis then the shapeless bear his den forsakes;
In woods and fields a wild destruction makes. Dryden.

3. Den, the termination of a local name, may signify either a valley or a woody place; for the Saxon den imports both.

DENAY. n. f. [a word formed between deny and nay.] Denial; refusal.

2. Negation; the contrary to confession.
No man more impudent to deny, where proofs were not manifest; no man more ready to confess, with a repenting manner of aggravating his own evil, where denial would but make the fault fouler. Sidney.

3. Refusal; the contrary to grant, allowance, or concession.

Here comes your father; never make denial:
I must and will have Catherine to my wife. Shakespeare.

The denial of landing, and hasty warning us away, troubled us much. Bacon.
He, at every flesh attempt, is repell'd
With faint denials, weaker than before. Dryden.

4. Abjuration; contrary to acknowledgment of adherence.

We may deny God in all those acts that are capable of being morally good or evil: those are the proper scenes, in which we act our confessions or denials of him. South.

DENIER. n. f. [from deny.]

1. A contradictor; an opponent; one that holds the negative of a proposition.

By the word Virtue the affirmer intends our whole duty to God and man, and the denier by the word Virtue means only courage; or, at most, our duty towards our neighbour, without including the idea of the duty which we owe to God. Watts.

2. A disowner; one that does not own or acknowledge.

If it was so fearful when Christ looked his denier into repentance, what will it be when he shall look him into destruction? South.

3. A refuser; one that refuses.
It may be I am esteemed by my denier sufficient of myself to discharge my duty to God as a priest, though not to men as a prince. King Ch.

DENISON. } man of the city; or dnafyddi, free of the city, Welsh.] A freeman; one enfranchised.

Denizen is a British law term, which the Saxons and Angles found here, and retained. Darwin.

Thus th' Almighty Sire began: ye gods,
Natives, or denizens, of blest abodes,
From whence these murmurs? Dryden.

A great many plants will hardly, with nursing, be made to produce their seed out of their native soil; but corn, so necessary for all people, is fitted to grow and to feed as a free denizen of the world. Grew.

He summons straight his denizens of air;
The lucid squadrons round the sails repair. Pope.

TO DENIZEN. v. a. [from the noun.]

To enfranchise; to make free.

Pride, lust, covetize, being several
To these three places, yet all are in all;
Mingled thus, their issue is incestuous;

3. To humble; to deject; to sink.

Others depress their own minds, despond at the first difficulty, and conclude that the making any progress in knowledge is above their capacities. Locke.

If we consider how often it breaks the gloom, which is apt to depress the mind, with transient unexpected gleams of joy, one would take care not to grow too wise for to great a pleasure of life. Addison.

Passion can depress or raise
The heavenly, as the human mind. Prior.

DEPRE'SSION. n. f. [depressio, Lat.]

1. The act of pressing down.

Blocks of a rectangular form, if laid one by another in a level row between supporters sustaining the two ends, all the pieces between will necessarily sink by their own gravity; and much more, if they suffer any depression by other weight above them. Wotton.

2. The sinking or falling in of a surface.

The beams of light are such subtle bodies, that, in respect of them, even surfaces, that are sensibly smooth, are not exactly so: they have their own degree of roughness, consisting of little protuberances and depressions; and consequently such inequalities may suffice to give bodies different colours, as we see in marble that appears white or black, or red or blue, even when most carefully polished. Boyle.

If the bone be much depressed, and the fissure considerably large, it is then at your choice, whether you will enlarge that fissure, or continue it for the evacuation of the matter, and forbear the use of the trepan; not doubting but a small depression of the bone will either rise, or cast off, by the benefit of nature. Wiseman.

3. The act of humbling; abasement.

Depression of the nobility may make a king more absolute, but less safe. Bacon.

DEPRESSION of an Equation [in algebra] is the bringing it into lower and more simple terms by division. Diſt.

DERIVATION. n. f. [derivatio, Latin.]

1. A draining of water; a turning of its course.

When the water began to swell, it would every way discharge itself by any descents or declivities of the ground; and these issues and derivations being once made, and supplied with new waters pushing them forwards, would continue their course till they arrived at the sea, just as other rivers do. Burset.

2. [In grammar.] The tracing of a word from its original.

Your lordship here seems to dislike my taking notice that the derivation of the word Substance favours the idea we have of it; and your lordship tells me, that very little weight is to be laid on it, on a bare grammatical etymology. Lo ke.

3. The transmission of any thing from its source.

As touching traditional communication, and tradition of those truths that I call cognatural and engraven, I do not doubt but many of those truths have had the help of that derivation. Hale.

4. [In medicine.] The drawing of a humour from one part of the body to another.

Derivation differs from revulsion only in the measure of the distance, and the force of the medicines used: if we draw it to some very remote, or, it may be, contrary part, we call that revulsion; if only to some neighbouring place, and by gentle means, we call it derivation. Wiseman.

5. The thing deduced or derived. Not used.

Most of them are the genuine derivations of the hypothesis they claim to. Glanville.

DERIVATIVE. adj. [derivativus, Latin.] Derived or taken from another.

Is there no derogation in 't?
—You cannot derogate, my lord. Shakspeare.

DEROGATE. adj. [from the verb.] Degraded; damaged; lessened in value.

Into her womb convey sterility;
Dry up in her the organs of increase,
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honour her! Shakspeare's K. Lear.

DEROGATION. n. f. [derogatio, Latin.]

1. The act of weakening or restraining a former law or contract.

It was indeed but a wooing ambassage, with good respects, to entertain the king in good affection; but nothing was done or handled to the derogation of the king's late treaty with the Italians. Bacon.

That which enjoins the deed is certainly God's law; and it is also certain, that the scripture, which allows of the will, is neither the derogation nor relaxation of that law. South.

2. A defamation; detraction; the act of lessening or taking away the honour of any person or thing. Sometimes with to, properly with from.

Which, though never so necessary, they could not easily now admit, without some fear of derogation from their credit; and therefore that which once they had done, they became for ever after resolute to maintain. Hooker.

So surely he is a very brave man, neither is that any thing which I speak to his derogation; for in that I said he is a mingled people, it is no disparage. Spenser on Ireland.

The wisest princes need not think it any diminution to their greatness, or derogation to their sufficiency, to rely upon counsel. Bacon.

I say not this in derogation to Virgil, neither do I contradict any thing which I have formerly said in his just praise. Dryden.

None of these patriots will think it a derogation from their merit to have it said, that they received many lights and advantages from their intimacy with my lord Somers. Addison.

DEROGATIVE. adj. [derogativus, Latin.]

Detracting; lessening the honour of. Not in use.

That spirits are corporeal, seems to me a conceit derogative to himself, and such as he should rather labour to overthrow: yet thereby he establisheth the doctrine of lustrations, amulets, and charms. Bacon's Vulgar Errors.

DEROGATORILY. adv. [from derogatory.]

In a detracting manner. Dict.

DEROGATORINESS. n. f. [from derogatory.] The act of derogating. Dict.

DEROGATORY. adj. [derogatorius, Lat.]

Detracting; that lessens the honour of; dishonourable.

They live and die in their absurdities, passing their days in perverted apprehensions and conceptions of the world, derogatory unto God, and the wisdom of the creation. Brown.

These deputed beings are derogatory from the wisdom and power of the Author of Nature, who doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

DERVIS. n. f. [dervis, French.] A Turkish priest, or monk.

Even there, where Christ vouchsaf'd to teach,
Their dervises dare an impostor preach. Sancti.

The dervis at first made some scruple of violating his promise to the dying hachman; but told him, at last, that he could conceal nothing from so excellent a prince. Spectator.

DESCANT. n. f. [discanto, Italian.]

1. A song or tune composed in parts.

Nay, now you are too flat,
And mar the concord with too harsh a descant. Shakspeare.

The wakeful nightingale

All night long her amorous descant sung. Milton.

2. A discourse; a disputation; a disquisition branched out into several divisions or heads. It is commonly used as a word of censure or contempt.

Look you get a prayer-book in your hand,
And stand between two churchmen, good my lord;

For on that ground I'll build a holy descant. Shakspeare.

Kindness would supplant our unkind reportings, and severe descants upon our brethren. Government of the Tongue.

To DESCANT. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To sing in parts.

2. To discourse at large; to make speeches: in a sense of censure or contempt.

Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on mine own deformity. Shakspeare.

Com'st thou for this, vain boaster, to survey me,
To descant on my strength, and give thy verdict?
Milton.

A virtuous man should be pleas'd to find people descanting upon his actions, because, when they are thoroughly canvass'd and examined, they turn to his honour. Addison.

To DESCEND. v. n. [descendo, Lat.]

1. To go downward; to come from a higher place to a lower; to fall; to sink.

The rain descended, and the floods came,

offspring of fear, laziness, and impatience.
Collier against Despair.

Will is younger brother to a baronet, and descended of the ancient family of the Wimbles.
Addison.

7. To fall in order of inheritance to a successor.

Should we allow that all the property, all the estate, of the father ought to descend to the eldest son; yet the father's natural dominion, the paternal power, cannot descend unto him by inheritance. Locke.

The inheritance of both rule over men, and property in things, sprang from the same original, and were to descend by the same rules. Locke.

Our author provides for the descending and conveyance down of Adam's monarchical power to posterity, by the inheritance of his heir, succeeding to his father's authority. Locke.

He ended, and they both descend the hill;
Descended Adam to the bow'r, where Eve Lay sleeping. Milton.

In all our journey through the Alps, as well when we climbed as when we descended them, we had still a river running along with the road.
Addison.

In the midst of this plain stands a high hill, so very steep, that there would be no mounting or descending it, were not it made up of a loose crumbled earth. Addison.

DESCENDANT. n. s. [descendant, French; descendens, Latin.] The offspring of an ancestor; he that is in the line of generation, at whatever distance.

The descendants of Neptune were planted there.
Evon.

O, true descendant of a patriot line,
Vouchsafe this picture of thy soul to see. Dryden.

He revealed his own will, and their duty, in a more ample manner than it had been declared to any of my descendants before them. Atterbury.

DESCENDENT. adj. [descendens, Latin.] It seems to be established, that the substantive should derive the termination from the French, and the adjective from the Latin.]

1. Falling; sinking; coming down; descending.

There is a regrefs of the sap in plants from above downwards; and this descendent juice is that which principally nourishes both fruit and plant. Ray on the Creation.

Relating to descent.

DESCENT. n. s. [descensus, Latin; descente, French.]

1. The act of passing from a higher to a lower place.

Why do fragments, from a mountain rent,
Tend to the earth with such a swift descent?
Blackmore.

2. Progress downward.

Observing such gradual and gentle descents downwards, in those parts of the creation that are beneath men, the rule of analogy may make it probable, that it is so also in things above.
Locke.

3. Obliquity; inclination.

The heads and sources of rivers flow upon a descent, or an inclining plane, without which they could not flow at all. Westward.

4. Lowest place.

From th' extremest upward of thy head
To the descent and dust below thy feet. Shak.

5. Fall from a higher state; degradation.

O soul descent, that I, who erst contended
With gods to sit the highest, am now confin'd
Into a beast, and mix with bestial slime
This essence to incarnate and inbrute. Milton.

6. Invasion; hostile entrance into a kingdom: in allusion to the height of ships.

At the first descent on shore, he was not immuted with a wooden vessel, but he did countenance the landing in his long-boat. Watson.

The duke was general himself, and made that unfortunate descent upon the Isle of Rhee, which was attended with a miserable retreat, in which the flower of the army was lost. Clarendon.

Arise, true judges, in your own defence,
Control those topplings, and declare for sense;
For, should the fools prevail, they stop not there,
But make their next descent upon the fair. Dryd.

7. Transmission of any thing by succession and inheritance.

If the agreement and consent of men first gave a sceptre into any one's hand, that also must direct its descent and conveyance. Locke.

8. The state of proceeding from an original or progenitor.

All of them, even without such a particular claim, had great reason to glory in their common descent from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to whom the promise of the blessed seed was severally made. Atterbury.

9. Birth; extraction; process of lineage.

I give my voice on Richard's side,
To bar my matter's heirs in true descent!
God knows, I will not do it. Shakspeare.

Turnus, for high descent and graceful mien,
Was first, and favour'd by the Latian queen.
Dryden.

10. Offspring; inheritors; those proceeding in the line of generation.

The care of our descent perplexes us most,
Which must be born to certain woe. Milton.

From him
His whole descent, who thus shall Canaan win.
Milton.

11. A single step in the scale of genealogy; a generation.

No man living is a thousand descents removed from Adam himself. Hooker.

Then all the sons of these five brethren reign'd,
By due success, and all their nephews late,
Even thrice eleven descents the crown retain'd,
Till aged Heli by due heritage it gain'd.
Fairy Queen.

12. A rank in the scale of subordination.

How have I then with whom to hold converse,
Save with the creatures which I made, and those
To me inferior; infinite descents
Beneath what other creatures are to thee? Milton.

To DESCRIBE. v. a. [describo, Lat.]

1. To delineate; to mark out; to trace; as a torch waved about the head describes a circle.

2. To mark out any thing by the mention of its properties.

I pray thee, overname them; and as thou nam'st them, I will describe them; and according to my description, level at my attention.
Shakspeare.

He that writes well in verse will often send his thoughts in search, through all the treasure of words that express any one idea in the same language, that so he may comport with the measures of the rhyme, or with his own most beautiful and vivid sentiments of the thing he describes.
Watts.

3. To distribute into proper heads or divisions.

Men pass'd through the land, and described it by cities into seven parts in a book. Joshua.

4. To define in a lax manner by the profusivous mention of qualities general and peculiar. See DESCRIPTION.

To taste the nectar of a kiss. Craſſus.

DESCRIPTION. n. f. [descriptio, Lat.]

1. The act of delineating or expressing any person or thing by perceptible properties.

2. The sentence or passage in which any thing is described.

A poet must refuse all tedious and unnecessary descriptions: a robe which is too heavy, is less an ornament than a burthen. Dryden.

Sometimes, misguided by the tuneful throng,
I look for streams, immortaliz'd in song,
That lost in silence and oblivion lie,
Dumb are their fountains, and their channels dry,

That run for ever by the muse's skill,
And in the smooth description murmur still. Addison.

3. A lax definition.

The sort of definition, which is made up of a mere collection of the most remarkable parts or properties, is called an imperfect definition, or a description; whereas the definition is called perfect, when it is composed of the essential difference, added to general nature or genus. Watts.

4. The qualities expressed in a description.

I'll pay six thousand, and deface the bond,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair. Shakspeare.

TO DESCRIV'. v. a. [descrier, Fr.]

1. To give notice of any thing suddenly discovered; as, the scout descried the enemy, or gave notice of their approach. This sense is now obsolete, but gave occasion to those which are now in use.

2. To spy out; to examine at a distance.
And the house of Joseph sent to desery Bethel. Judges.

Edmund, I think, is gone to desery
The strength o' th' enemy. Shakspeare.

Our merchants, to their great charges, set forth fleets to desery the seas. Abbot.

3. To detect; to find out any thing concealed.

Of the king they got a sight after dinner in a gallery, and of the queen mother at her own table; in neither place deseried, no, not by Cadmus, who had been lately ambassador in England. Wotton.

4. To discover; to perceive by the eye; to see any thing distant or obscure.

Thus dight, into the court he took his way;
Both through the guard, which never him deseried,
And through the watchmen, who him never spied. Habberd's Tale.

The spirit of deep prophecy she hath;
What's past, and what's to come she can desery. Shakspeare.

That planet would, unto our eyes, deserying
Only that part whereon the light falls, appear to be horned, as the moon seems. Kaleigh.

And now their way to earth they had deseried,
To Paradise first tending. Milton.

Although the motion of light be not deseried, no argument can be made from thence to prove that light is not a body. Digby.

A tow'r so high, it seem'd to reach the sky,
Stood on the roof, from whence we could desery
All Hum. Denham.

Once more at least look back, said I;
Thyself in that large glass desery. Prior.

DESCRIV'. n. f. [from the verb.] Discovery; thing discovered.

How near 's the other army?

—Near, and on speedy foot, the main desery
Stands in the hourly thought. Shakspeare.

TO DE/SECRATE. v. a. [desacro, Lat.]

The founders of monasteries imprecated evil on those who should desecrate their donations.

DESECRATION. n. f. [from desecrate.]
The abolition of consecration.

DE/SERT. n. f. [desertum, Lat.] A wilderness; solitude; waste country; uninhabited place.

Be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword.
If trembling I inhibit, then protest me
The baby of a girl. Shakspeare.

He, looking round on every side, beheld
A pathless desert, dark with horrid shades. Milton.

DE/SERT. adj. [desertur, Latin.] Wild; waste; solitary; uninhabited; uncultivated; untilled.

I have words
That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not catch them. Shaksp.

He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness. Deuteronomy.

The promises and bargains between two men in a desert island are binding to them, though they are perfectly in a state of nature, in reference to one another. Locke.

TO DESE/RT. v. a. [deserter, French; desero, Latin.]

1. To forsake; to fall away from; to quit meanly or treacherously.

I do not remember one man, who heartily wished the passing of that bill, that ever deserted them till the kingdom was in a flame. Dryden.

2. To leave; to abandon.

What is it that hords and keeps the orbs in fixed stations and intervals, against an incessant and inherent tendency to desert them? Bentley.

3. To quit the army, or regiment, in which one is enlisted.

DESE/RT. n. f. [properly desfert: the word is originally French.] The last course; the fruit or sweetmeats with which a feast is concluded. See DESE/RT.

DESE/RT. n. f. [from deserve.]

1. Qualities or conduct considered with respect to rewards or punishments; degree of merit or demerit.

Being of necessity a thing common, it is, through the manifold persuasions, dispositions, and occasions of men, with equal desert both of praise and dispraise, shunned by some, by others desired. Hooker.

The base o' th' mount
Is rank'd with all deserts, all kind of natures,
That labour on the bosom of this sphere
To propagate their states. Shakspeare.

Use every man after his desert, and who shall scape whipping? Shakspeare.

2. Proportional merit; claim to reward.

All desert imports an equality between the good conferred, and the good deserved, or made due. South.

3. Excellence; right of reward; virtue.

More to move you,
Take my deserts to his, and join them both. Shakspeare.

DESE/RTER. n. f. [from desert.]

1. He that has forsaken his cause or his post: commonly in an ill sense.

The members of both houses, who at first withdrew, were counted deserters, and outed of their places in parliament. King Charles.

Straight to their ancient cells, recall'd from air,

The reconcil'd deserters will repair. Dryden.

Hots of deserters, who your honour sold,
And safely broke your faith for bribes of gold. Dryden.

2. He that leaves the army in which he is enlisted.

They are the same deserters, whether they stay in our own camp, or run over to the enemy's. Dicay of Piety.

A deserter, who came out of the citadel, says the garison is brought to the utmost necessity. Tatler.

3. He that forsakes another; an abandoner.

The fair sex, if they had the deserter in their power, would certainly have shewn him more mercy than the Bacchanals did Orpheus. Dryden.

Thou, false guardian of a charge too good,
Thou mean deserter of thy brother's blood. Pope.

DESE/RTION. n. f. [from desert.]

1. The act of forsaking or abandoning a cause or post.

Every compliance that we are persuaded to by one, is a contradiction to the commands of the other; and our adherence to one, will necessarily involve us in a desertion of the other. Rogers.

2. [In theology.] Spiritual despondency; a sense of the dereliction of God; an opinion that grace is withdrawn.

Christ hears and sympathizes with the spiritual agonies of a soul under desertion, or the pressures of some stinging affliction. South.

DESE/RTLESS. adj. [from desert.] Without merit; without claim to favour or reward.

She said she lov'd,
Lov'd me desertless; who with shame confest,
Another flame had seiz'd upon my breast. Dryden.

TO DESE/RVE. v. a. [deservir, Fr.] To be worthy of either good or ill.

Those they honoured, as having power to work or cease, as men deserved of them. Hooker.

Some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings, and good name. Shakspeare.

All friends shall taste
The wages of their deservings, and all foes
The cup of their deservings. Shakspeare.

What he deserves of you and me I know. Shakspeare.

Yet well, if here would end
The misery: I deserv'd it, and would bear
My own deservings. Milton.

A mother cannot give him death: though he Deserves it, he deserves it not from me. Dryden.

Since my Oraxia's death I have not seen
A beauty so deserving to be queen. Dryden.

TO DESE/RVE. v. n. To be worthy of reward.

According to the rule of natural justice, one man may merit and deserve of another. South.

Courts are the places where best manners flourish,

Where the deserving ought to rise. Osway.

He had been a person of great deservings from the republick, was an admirable speaker, and very popular. Swift.

DESE/RVEDLY. adv. [from deserve.] Worthily; according to desert, whether of good or evil.

For him I was not sent, nor yet to free
That people victor once, now vile and base, Deservedly made vassal. Milton.

A man deservedly cuts himself off from the affections of that community which he endeavours to subvert. Albans.

DESE/RVER. n. f. [from deserve.] A man who merits rewards. It is used, I think, only in a good sense.

Their love is never link'd to the deserver,
Till his defects are pat's'd. Shakspeare.
Heavy, with some high minds, is an overweight of obligation; or otherwise great deservers
o, perchance, grow intolerable presumers.

Emulation will never be wanting amongst poets, when particular rewards and prizes are proposed to the best deservers. Dryden.

DESICCANTS. n. f. [from desiccate.] Applications that dry up the flow of fores;
driers.

This, in the beginning, may be prevented by desiccants, and waiied. Wiseman.

TO DESICCATE. v. a. [desiccato, Lat.]

1. To dry up; to exhaust of moisture.

In bodies desiccated by heat or age, when the native spirit goeth forth, and the moisture with it, the air with time getteth into the pores. Bacon.

Seminal ferments were elevated from the sea, or some desiccated places thereof, by the heat of the sun. Hale.

2. To exhale moisture.

Where there is moisture enough, or superfluous, there wine helpeth to digest and desiccate
the moisture. Bacon.

DESICCATION. n. f. [from desiccate.]

The act of making dry; the state of being dried.

If the spirits issue out of the body, there fol-loweth desiccation, induration, and consumption.

DESICCATIVE. adj. [from desiccate.]

That has the power of drying.

TO DESIDERATE. v. a. [desidero, Lat.]

To want; to miss; to desire in absence.
A word scarcely used.

Eclipses are of wonderful assistance toward the solution of this so desirable and so much deside- rated problem. Cheyne.

DESIDERATUM. [Latin.] Somewhat which inquiry has not yet been able to settle or discover; as, the longitude is the desideratum of navigation. The tri-section of an angle, and the quadrature of a circle, are the desiderata of geometry.

DESIDILOSE. adj. [desidiosus, Lat.] Idle; lazy; heavy. Diä.

TO DESIGN. v. a. [designo, Lat. dessiner,
French.]

1. To purpose; to intend any thing.

2. To form or order with a particular purpose; with for.

The acts of religious worship were purposely design'd for the acknowledgment of a Being, whom the most excellent creatures are bound to adore as well as we. Stillington.

You are not for obsequity design'd,
But, like the sun, must cheer all human kind.
Dryden.

3. To devote intentionally: with to.

One of those places was design'd by the old man to his son. Claxton.

He was born to the inheritance of a splendid fortune: he was design'd to the study of the law.
Dryden.

4. To plan; to project; to form in idea.

We are to observe whether the picture or outlines be well drawn, or, as more elegant artizans term it, well design'd; then, whether it be well coloured; which be the two general heads.
Wotton.

Thus while they speed their pace, the prince designs

The new elected seat, and draws the lines. Dryd.

5. To mark out by particular tokens.
Little used.

'Tis not enough to make a man a subject, to convince him that there is regal power in the world; but there must be ways of designing and knowing the person to whom this regal power of right belongs. Locke

DESIGN. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An intention; a purpose.

2. A scheme; a plan of action.

Is he a prudent man, as to his temporal estate, that lays designs only for a day, without any prospect to the remaining part of his life? Tillotson.

3. A scheme formed to the detriment of another.

A fedate settled design upon another man's life, put him in a state of war with him against whom he has declared such an intention. Locke.

4. The idea which an artist endeavours to execute or express.

I doubt not but in the designs of several Greek medals, one may often see the hand of an Apelles or Protogenes. Addison.

Thy hand strikes out some new design,
Where life awakes and dawns at every line. Pope.

DESIGNABLE. adj. [designo, Latin.]

Distinguishable; capable to be particularly marked out.

The power of all natural agents is limited:
the mover must be confined to observe these proportions, and cannot pass over all these infinite designable degrees in an instant. Digby.

DESIGNATION. n. f. [designatio, Lat.]

1. The act of pointing or marking out by some particular token.

This is a plain designation of the duke of Marborough: one kind of stuff used to fatten land is called marle, and every body knows that borough is a name for a town. Swift.

2. Appointment; direction.

William the Conqueror forbore to use that claim in the beginning, but mixed it with a titalary pretence, grounded upon the will and designa- tion of Edward the Confessor. Bacon.

3. Import; intention.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon by the mind as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily in their first designation only to those things which have parts, and are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

DESIGNEDLY. adv. [from design.] Purposely; intentionally; by design or purpose; not ignorantly; not inadvertently;

not fortuitously.

Uses made things; that is to say, some things were made designedly, and on purpose, for such an use as they serve to. Ray on the Creation.

The next thing is sometimes designedly to put children in pain; but care must be taken that this be done when the child is in good humour.
Locke.

DESIGNER. n. f. [from design.]

1. One that designs, intends, or purposes;
a purposer.

2. A plotter; a contriver; one that lays schemes.

It has therefore always, been both the rule and practice for such designers to suborn the publick interest, to countenance and cover their private.
Decay of Piety.

3. One that forms the idea of any thing in painting or sculpture.

There is a great affinity between designing and poetry; for the Latin poets, and the designers of the Roman medals, lived very near one another, and were bred up to the same relish for wit and fancy. Addison.

DESIGNING. participial adj. [from design.]

Insidious; treacherous; deceitful; frau-dulently artful.

'Twould shew me poor, indebted, and compell'd,

Designing, mercenary; and I know
You would not wish to think I could be bought.
Southern.

DESIGNLESS. adj. [from design.] Without intention; without design; unknow-ing; inadvertent.

DESIGNLESSLY. adv. [from designless.] Without intention; ignorantly; inadvertently.

In this great concert of his whole creation, the designlessly conspiring voices are as differing as the conditions of the respective fingers. Boyle.

DESIGNMENT. n. f. [from design.]

1. A purpose and intent.

The sanctity of the christian religion excludes fraud and falsehood from the designments and aims of its first promulgators. Decay of Piety.

'Tis a greater credit to know the ways of captivating nature, and making her subserve our purposes and designments, than to have learned all the intrigues of policy. Glarville.

2. A scheme of hostility.

News, lords! our wars are done!
The desperate tempest hath so bang'd the Turks,
That their designment halts. Shakspeare.

She received advice both of the king's designate estate, and of the duke's designments against her. Hayward.

3. The idea, or sketch, of a work.

The scenes which represent cities and countries are not really such, but only painted on boards and canvases; but shall that excuse the ill painture or designment of them? Dryden.

When absent, yet we conquer'd in his right;
For though that some mean artist's skill were shown
In mingling colours, or in placing light,
Yet still the fair designment was his own.
Dryden.

DESIRABLE. adj. [from desire.]

1. That is to be wished with earnestness.

Adjudged cases, collected by men of great facicity, will improve his mind toward acquiring this desirable amplitude and extent of thought.
Watts.

He cannot but confess, that it is a thing the most desirable to man, and most agreeable to the goodness of God, that he should send forth his light and his truth by a special revelation of this will. Rogers.

2. Pleasing; delightful.

She then let drop some expressions about an agate snuff-box: I immediately took the hint, and bought one; being unwilling to omit any thing that might make me desirable in her eyes.
Addison.

Our own sex, our kindred, our houses, and our very names, seem to have something good and desirable in them. Watts.

DESIRE. n. f. [desir, Fr. desio, Ital. desiderium, Lat.] Wish; eagerness to obtain or enjoy.

Desire is the uneasiness a man finds in himself upon the absence of any thing, whose present enjoyment carries the idea of delight with it.
Locke.

Drink provokes, and unprovokes; it provokes the desire, but it takes away the performance. Shakspeare.

Desire's the vast extent of human mind;
It mounts above, and leaves poor hope behind.
Dryden.

It is in a man's power only to observe what the ideas are that take their turns in his understanding, or else to direct the fort, and call in such as he hath a desire or use of. Locke.

TO DESIRE. v. a. [desirer, French;
desiderare, Latin.]

1. To wish; to long for; to covet.

Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold.
Deut.

2. To express wishes; to appear to long.
Jove beheld it with a desiring look. Dryden.
3. To ask; to intreat.
Sir, I intreat you home with me to dinner.
—I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night. Shakspeare.
But since you take such int'rest in our woe,
And Troy's disastrous end desire to know,
I will restrain my tears, and briefly tell
What in our last and fatal night befel. Dryden.
4. To require; to demand. Not in use.
A doleful case desires a doleful song,
Without vain art or curious compliments. Spenser.

DESIRER. n. f. [from desire.] One that is eager of any thing; a wisher.
I will counterfeit the bewitchment of some popular man, and give it bountifully to the desirers. Shakspeare.

DESIROUS. adj. [from desire.] Full of desire; eager; longing after; wishing for.

The same piety which maketh them that are in authority, desirous to please and resemble God by justice, insinuateth every way men of action with zeal to do good. Hooker.

Be not desirous of his dainties; for they are deceitful meat. Proverbs.

Men are drowsy and desirous to sleep before the fit of an ague, and yawn and stretch. Bacon.

Adam the while,
Waiting desirous her return, had wove
Of choicest flow'rs a garland. Milton.

Conjugal affection,
Prevailing over fear and timorous doubt,
Hath led me on, desirous to behold
Once more thy face. Milton.

DESIROUSLY. adv. [from desirous.] Eagerly; with desire; with ardent wishes.

DESIROUSNESS. n. f. [from desirous.] Fulness of desire; eagerness. Dict.

TO DESIST. v. n. [desisto, Latin.] To cease from any thing; to stop: with from.

Desist, thou art discern'd,
And toil't in vain; nor me in vain molest. Milton.

There are many who will not quit a project, though they find it pernicious or absurd; but will readily desist from it, when they are convinced it is impracticable. Addison.

DESISTANCE. n. f. [from desist.] The act of desisting; cessation.

Men usually give freest where they have not given before: and make it both the motive and excuse of their desistance from giving any more, that they have given already. Boyle.

DESISTIVE. adj. [desistivus, Latin.] Ending; concluding; final.

Inceptive and desistive propositions are of this sort: the fogs vanish as the sun rises; but the fogs have not yet begun to vanish, therefore the sun is not yet risen. Watts.

DESK. n. f. [disch, a table, Dutch.] An inclining table for the use of writers or readers, made commonly with a box or repository under it.

Tell her in the desk,
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish tapestry,
There is a purse of ducats. Shakspeare.

He is drawn leaning on a desk, with his bible before him. Walton's Angler.

I have been obliged to leave unfinished in my desk the heads of two essays. Pope.

Not the desk with silver nails,
Nor bureau of expence,
Nor standish well japan'd, avails
To writing of good sense. Swift.

DESOLATE. adj. [desolatus, Latin.]

1. Without inhabitants; uninhabited.
Let us seek some desolate shade, and there Weep our sad bosoms empty. Shakspeare.

This hero appears at first in a desolate island, sitting upon the side of the sea. Broome.

2. Deprived of inhabitants; laid waste.
This city will be desolate, without an inhabitant. Jer.

3. Solitary; without society.
TO DESOLATE. v. n. [desolo, Latin.] To deprive of inhabitants; to lay waste; to make desert.

The island of Atlantis was not swallowed by an earthquake, but was desolated by a particular deluge. Bacon.

Thick around
Thunders the sport of those, who with the gun,
And dog impatient bounding at the shot,
Worse than the season desolate the fields. Thomson.

DESOLATELY. adv. [from desolate.] In a desolate manner.

DESOLATION. n. f. [from desolate.]

1. Destruction of inhabitants; reduction to solitude.

What with your praises of the country, what with your discourse of the lamentable desolation thereof made by those Scots, you have filled me with a great compassion. Spenser.

Without her follows to myself and thee,
Herself, the land, and many a christian soul,
Death, desolation, ruin, and decay. Shakspeare.

2. Gloominess; sadness; melancholy; destitution.

That dwelling place is unnatural to mankind; and then the terribleness of the continual motion, the desolation of the far being from comfort, the eye and the ear having ugly images before it, doth still vex the mind, even when it is best armed against it. Sabicy.

Then your hose shall be ungartered, and every thing about you demonstrate a careless desolation. Shakspeare.

My desolation does begin to make
A better life. Shakspeare.

To complete
The scene of desolation, stretch'd around
The grim guards stand. Thomson.

3. A place wasted and forsaken.
How is Babylon become a desolation among the nations! Jer.

DESPAIR. n. f. [desespoir, French.]

1. Hopelessness; dependence; loss of hope.

Despair is the thought of the unattainableness of any good, which works differently in men's minds; sometimes producing uneasiness or pain, sometimes rest and indolency. Locke.

You had either never attempted this change, set on with hope; or never discovered it, stoop with despair. Sidney.

We are troubled on every side, yet not distressed; we are perplexed, but not in despair. 2 Cor.

Wearied, forsaken, and purged at last,
All faith in despair of safety plac'd,
Courage he thence resumes, resolv'd to bear
All their assaults, since 'tis in vain to fear. Denham.

Equal their flame, unequal was their care;
One lov'd with hope, one languish'd with despair. Dryden.

2. That which causes despair; that of which there is no hope.

Strangely visited people,
All swollen and ulcerous, pitiful to the eye;
The mere despair of surgery, he cures;
Hanging a golden stamp about their necks,
Put on with holy prayers. Shakspeare.

3. [In theology.] Loss of confidence in the mercy of God.

Are not all or most evangelical virtues and graces in danger of extremes? As there is, God knows, too often a defect on the one side, so there may be an excess on the other: may not hope in God, or godly sorrow, be perverted into presumption or despair? Spratt.

TO DESPAIR. v. n. [despero, Latin.] To be without hope; to despond: with of before a noun.

Though thou drewest a sword at thy friend yet despair not; for there may be a turning. Eccles.

We commend the wit of the Chinese, who despair of making of gold, but are mad upon making of silver. Bacon.

Never despair of God's blessings here, or of his reward hereafter; but go on as you have begun. Wake.

DESPA'IRER. n. f. [from despair.] One without hope.

He cheers the fearful, and commends the bold,
And makes despairers hope for good success. Dryden.

DESPA'IRFUL. adj. [despair and full.] Hopeless. Obsolete.

That sweet but four despairful care. Sidney.
Other cries amongst the Irish favour of the Scythian barbarism; as the lamentations of their burials, with despairful outcries. Spenser.

DESPA'IRINGLY. adv. [from despairing.] In a manner betokening hopelessness or dependency.

He speaks severely and despairingly of our society. Boyle.

TO DESPA'TCH. v. a. [despecher, Fr.]

1. To send away hastily.

Doctor Theodore Coleby, a sober man, I despatched immediately to Utrecht, to bring the moxa, and learn the exact method of using it. Temple.

The good Æneas, whose paternal care
Iulus' absence could no longer bear,
Despatch'd Achates to the ships in haste,
To give a glad relation of the part. Dryden.

2. To send out of the world; to put to death.

Edmund, I think, is gone,
In pity of his misery, to despatch
His knighted life. Shakspeare.

And the company shall stone them with stones,
and despatch them with their swords. Ezek.

In combating, but two of you will fall;
And we resolve we will despatch you all. Dryden.

Despatch me quickly, I may death forgive;
I shall grow tender else, and wish to live. Dryden.

3. To perform a business quickly; as, I despatched my affairs, and ran hither.

Therefore commanded he his chariot-man to drive without ceasing, and to despatch the journey, the judgment of God now following him. 2 Mac.

No sooner is one action despatched, which, by such a determination as the will, we are fet upon, but another uneasiness is ready to fet us on work. Locke.

4. To conclude an affair with another.

What, are the brothers parted?
—They have despatch'd with Pompey; he is gone. Shakspeare.

DESPA'TCH. n. f. [from the verb]

1. Hasty execution; speedy performance.

Affected despatch is one of the most dangerous things to business that can be. Bacon.

You'd see, could you her inward motions watch,
Feigning delay, she wishes for despatch;
Then to a woman's meaning would you look,
Then read her backward. Granville.

The despatch of a good office is very often as beneficial to the solicitor as the good office itself. Addison.

2. Conduct; management. Obsolete.

You shall put
This night's great business into my despatch,
Which shall, to all our nights and days to come,
Give solely sovereign sway and masterdom. Shakspeare.

3. Express; hasty messenger or message: as, despatches were sent away.

DESPA'TCHFUL. adj. [from despatch.] Bent on haste; intent on speedy execution of business.

So saying, with despatchful looks in haste
She turns, on hospitable thoughts intent. Milton.

Let one despatchful bid some swain to lead
A well fed bullock from the grassy mead. Pope.

DE'SPERATE. adj. [desperatus, Latin.]

1. Without hope.

Since his exile the hath despis'd me most;
Forsworn my company, and rail'd at me,
That I am desperate of obtaining her. Shaksp.

2. Without care of safety; rash; precipitant; fearless of danger.

Can you think, my lords,
That any Englishman dare give me counsel,
Or be a known friend 'gainst his highness' pleasure?

Though he be grown so desperate to be honest,
And live a subject? Shaksp.

He who goes on without any care or thought of reforming, such an one we vulgarly call a desperate person, and that sure is a most damning sin. Hammond.

3. Irrecoverable; unfarmountable; irrecoverable.

These debts may be well called desperate ones; for a mad man owes them. Shaksp.

In a part of Asia the sick, when their cure comes to be thought desperate, are carried out and laid on the earth, before they are dead, and left there. Locke.

I am a man of desperate fortunes, that is, a man whose friends are dead; for I never aimed at any other fortune than in friends. Pope to Swift.

4. Mad; hotbrained; furious.

Were it not the part of a desperate physician to wish his friend dead, rather than to apply the best endeavours of his skill for his recovery?
Spenser's State of Ireland.

5. It is sometimes used in a sense nearly ludicrous, and only marks any bad quality predominating in a high degree.

Concluding all mere desperate fets and foals,
That dust depart from Aristotle's rules. Pope.

DE'SPERATELY. adv. [from desperate.]

1. Furiously; madly; without attention to safety or danger.

Your eldest daughters have foredone themselves,
And desperately are dead. Shaksp.

There might be somewhat in it, that he would not have done, or desired undone, when he broke forth as desperately as before he had done uncivilly. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. In a great degree; violently; this sense is ludicrous.

She fell desperately in love with him, and took a voyage into Sicily in pursuit of him. Adelajon.

DE'SPERATENESS. n. f. [from desperate.]

Madness; fury; precipitancy.
The going on not only in terrors and amazement of conscience, but also boldly, hopefully, confidently, in wilful habits of sin, is called a desperateness also; and the more bold thus, the more desperate. Hammond.

DESPERATION. n. f. [from desperate.]

Hopelessness; despair; dependency.

Is all the policy, strength, and defence,
That Rome can make against them. Shaksp.

As long as we are guilty of any past sin, and have no promise of remission, whatever our future care be, this desperation of success calls all our industry, and we sin on because we have sinned. Hammond.

DE'SPICABLE. adj. [despicabilis, Lat.]

Contemptible; vile; mean; sordid;

worthless. It is applied equally to persons or things.

Our case were miserable, if that wherewith we most endeavour to please God were in his sight so vile and despicable as men's disdainful speech would make it. Hooker.

Their heads as low
Bow'd down in battle, sunk before the spears
Of despicable foes. Milton.

All th' earth he gave thee to possess and rule,
No despicable gift. Milton.

Not less ev'n in this despicable hero,
Than when my name shook Aftick with affright,
And froze your hearts beneath your torrid zone. Dryden.

All the quiet that could be expected from such a reign, must be the result of absolute power on the one hand, and a despicable slavery on the other. Addison.

When men of rank and figure pass away their lives in criminal pursuits and practices, they render themselves more vile and despicable than any innocent man can be, whatever low station his fortune and birth have placed him in. Atkisson.

DE'SPICABLENESS. n. f. [from despicable.]

Meanness; vileness; worthlessness.
We consider the great disproportion between the infinity of the reward and the despicableness of our service. Decay of Piet.

DE'SPICABLY. adv. [from despicable.]

Meanly; sordidly; vilely.
Here wanton Naples crowns the happy shore,
Nor vainly rich, nor despicably poor;
The town in soft solemnities delights,
And gentle poets to her arms invites. Addison.

DESPISABLE. adj. [from despise.] Contemptible; despicable; regarded with contempt. A word scarcely used but in low conversation.

I am obliged to you for taking notice of a poor old distressed courier, commonly the most despisable thing in the world. Arbutnot to Pope.

TO DESPISE. v. a. [despiser, old French,
Skinner; despicio, Latin.]

1. To scorn; to contemn; to slight; to disrespect.

For, lo, I will make thee small among the heathen, and despise among men. Jer.

My sons their old unhappy sire despise,
Spoil'd of his kingdom, and depriv'd of eyes. Pope.

2. In Shakspere it seems once to signify abhor, as from the Italian despettare.

Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest sound
That ever yet they heard. Shakspere.

DESPISER. n. f. [from despise.] Con-temner; scorner.

Art thou thus bolden'd, man, by thy distress,
Or else a rude despiser of good manners,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shakspere.

Wisdom is commonly, at long running, justified even of her despisers. Grov. of Tongue.

Thus the atheists, libertines, and despisers of religion, usually pass under the name of free-thinkers. Swift.

DESPITE. n. f. [spijt, Dutch; despit,
French.]

1. Malice; anger; malignity; maliciousness; spleen; hatred.

Thou wretch! despite o'erwhelm thee! Shaksp.

With men these considerations are usually the causes of despite, disdain, or aversion from others; but with God they pass for reasons of our greater tenderness towards others. Spratt.

2. Defiance; unsubmitted opposition.

The life, thou gav'st me first, was lost and done;

Till with thy warlike sword, despite of fate,
To my determin'd time thou gav'st new date. Shakspere.

My life thou shalt command, but not my shame:

The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death, that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have. Shakspere.

Know I will serve the fair in thy despite. Dryden.

I have not quitted yet a victor's right;
I'll make you happy in your own despite. Dryden.

Say, would the tender creature, in despite
Of heat by day, and chilling dews by night,
Its life maintain? Blackmore.

Thou, with rebel insolence, didst dare
To own and to protect that hoary ruffian;
And, in despite ev'n of thy father's justice,
To stir the seditious rabble up to arms. Rowe.

3. Act of malice; act of opposition.

His punishment eternal misery,
It would be all his solace and revenge,
As a despite done against the Most High,
Thee once to gain companion of his woe. Milt.

TO DESPITE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To vex; to offend; to disappoint; to give uneasiness to.

Saturo, with his wife Rhea, fled by night;
setting the town on fire, to despite Baccius. Raleigh.

DESPITEFUL. adj. [despite and full.]

Malicious; full of spleen; full of hate; malignant; mischievous: used both of persons and things.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth. Shakspere.

Preserve us from the hands of our despiteful and deadly enemies. King Charles.

Meanwhile the heinous and despiteful act
Of Saturo, done in Paradise, was known In heav'n. Milton.

DESPITEFULLY. adv. [from despiteful.]

Maliciously; malignantly.

Pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you. Matthew.

DESPITEFULNESS. n. f. [from despiteful.]

Malice; hate; malignity.

Let us examine him with despitefulness and torture, that we know his meekness, and prove his patience. Wisdom.

DESPITEOUS. adj. [from despite.] Malicious; furious. Out of use.

The knight of the red-cross, when him he spied
Spurring so hot with rage despiteous,
'Gan fairly couch his spear. Fairy Queen.

Turning despiteous torture out of door
Shakspere.

DESPITEOUSLY. adv. [from despiteous.]

In a furious manner. Not in use.

The mortal steel despiteously entail'd
Deep in their flesh, quite thro' the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their gnambeux falls. Spenser.

TO DESPOIL. v. a. [despolio, Lat.]

1. To rob; to deprive; with of.

Despoil'd of warlike arms, and known shield. Spenser.

You are nobly born,
Despoil'd of your honour in your life. Shak.

He waits, with hellish rancour imminent,
To intercept thy way, or send thee back
Despoil'd of innocence, of faith, of bliss. Milton.

He, pale as death, despoil'd of his array,
Into the queen's apartment takes his way. Dryden.

Ev'n now thy aid,
Eugene, with regiments unequal prest,

Awaits: this day of all his honours gain'd
Despoils him, if thy succour opportune Detends not the sad hour. Philips.

2. To dwell by any accident.

These formed stones, despoiled of their shells, and exopted upon the surface of the ground, in time moulder away. Woodward.

3. Simply to strip. Not in use.

A groom can despoil

Of puffed arms, and laid in easy bed. Spenser.

DESPOLIATION. n. f. [from despolio, Lat.] The act of despoiling or stripping.

TO DESPOND. v. a. [despondo, Lat.]

1. To despair; to lose hope; to become hopeless or desperate.

It is every man's duty to labour in his calling,
and not to despond for any miscarriages or disappointments that were not in his own power to prevent. L'Estrange.

There is no surer remedy for superstitious and desponding weakness, than first to govern ourselves by the best improvement of that reason which providence has given us for a guide; and then, when we have done our own parts, to commit all cheerfully, for the rest, to the good pleasure of heaven, with trust and resignation.
L'Estrange.

Physick is their bane:

The learned leaches in despair depart,
And take their heads, depending of their art.

Dryden.

Others desponds their own minds, despond at the first difficulty; and conclude, that making any progress in knowledge, farther than serves their ordinary business, is above their capacities.
Locke.

2. [In theology.] To lose hope of the divine mercy.

He considers what is the natural tendency of such a virtue, or such a vice: he is well apprized that the representation of some of these things may convince the understanding, some may terrify the conscience, some may allure the slothful, and some encourage the desponding mind.
Watts.

DESPOONDENCY. n. f. [from despondent.]
Despair; hopelessness; desperation.

DESPOONDENT. adj. [despondens, Lat.]
Despairing; hopeless; without hope.

It is well known, both from ancient and modern experience, that the very boldest atheists, out of their debauches and company, when they chance to be surpris'd with solitude or sickness, are the most suspicious, timorous, and despondent wretches in the world. Bentley.

Congregated thrushes, linnets, fit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock.

Thomson.

TO DESPONSATE. v. a. [desponso, Lat.] To betroth; to affianc; to unite by reciprocal promises of marriage.

DESPONSA'TION. n. f. [from desponsate.]
The act of betrothing persons to each other.

DESPOT. n. f. [despotis.] An absolute prince; one that governs with unlimited authority. This word is not in use, except as applied to some Dacian prince: as, the despot of Servia.

DESPOTICAL. adj. [from despot.] Ab-

DESPOTICK. adj. [from despot.] Absolute in power; unlimited in authority; arbitrary; unac-countable.

God's universal law

Gave to the man despotick power

Over his female in due awe,

Nor from that right to part an hour,

'Smile she or lower.

Milton.

In all its directions of the inferior faculties, reason conveyed its suggestions with clearness, and enjoined them with power: it had the passions in perfect subjection; though its command over them was but persuasive and political, yet it had the force of coactive and despotical. South.

We may see in a neighbouring government the ill consequences of having a despotick prince;
for notwithstanding there is vast extent of lands, and many of them better than those of the Swiss and Gitions, the common people among the latter are in a much better situation. Addison.

Patitors were forced to give way to the madness of the people, who were now wholly bent upon single and despotick slavery. Swift.

DESPOTICALNESS. n. f. [from despoti-cal.] Absolute authority.

DESPOTISM. n. f. [despotisme, French;
from despot.] Absolute power.

TO DESPUMATE. v. v. [despumo, Latin.] To throw off parts in foam; to froth; to work.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from despumate.]
The act of throwing off excrementious parts in foam.

DESPUMATION. n. f. [from squama,
Lat.] The act of scaling foul bores.
A term of churgery.

DESSE'RT. n. f. [desferte, French.] The last course at an entertainment; the fruit or sweetmeats set on the table after the meat.

To give thee all thy due, thou hast the art

To make a supper with a fine desfert. Dryden.

At your desfert bright pewter comes too late,
When your first course was well serv'd up in plate. King.

TO DESTINATE. v. a. [destino, Lat.]
To design for any particular end or purpose.

Birds are desinated to fly among the branches of trees and bushes. Roy.

DESTINA'TION. n. f. [from destinate.]
The purpose for which any thing is appointed; the ultimate design.

The passages through which spirits are conveyed to the members, being almost infinite, and each of them drawn through so many meanders, it is wonderful that they should perform their regular desinations without losing their way.

Glanville.

There is a great variety of apprehensions and fancies of men, in the desination and application of things to several ends and uses. Hale.

TO DESTINE. v. a. [destino, Latin.]

1. To doom; to devote; to appoint unalterably to any state or condition.

Wherefore cease we then?

Say they who counsel war: we are decreed,
Reserv'd, and destin'd to eternal woe;
Whatever doing, what can we suffer more?
Milton.

All altars flame; before each altar lies,
Dienc'd in his gore, the destin'd sacrifice.

Dryden.

2. To appoint to any use or purpose.

Too thin blood strays into the immediately subordinate vessels, which are desin'd to carry humours secreted from the blood. Aburmut.

3. To devote; to doom to punishment or mifery: used absolutely.

May heav'n around this desin'd head
The choicest of its curses shed. Prior.

4. To fix unalterably.

The infernal judge's dreadful pow'r
From the dark urn shall throw thy desin'd hour.

Prior.

DE'STINY. n. f. [deslinie, French.]

1. The power that spins the life, and determines the fate, of living beings.

Thou art neither like thy fire or dard,
But, like a foul mis-shapen flammick,
Mark'd by the desinies to be avoided. Shelton.

2. Fate; invincible necessity.

He said, dear daughter, rightly may I rue
The fall of famous children born of me;
But who can turn the beam of desinies,
Or break the chain of strong necessity,
Which fast is tied to Jove's eternal seat?
Fair's Queen.

How can hearts, not free, be tried whether they serve

Willing or no, who will but what they must

By desinies, and can no other cause? Milton.

Had thy great desinies but given thee skill

To know, as well as pow'r to act, her will.

Denham.

Chance, or forceful desinies,
Which forms in causes first what'er shall be.

Dryden.

3. Doom; condition in future time.

At the pit of Acheron Meet me i' th' morning: thither he Will come to know his desinies. Shakespeare.

DESTITUTE. adj. [desitutus, Latin.]

1. Forsaken; abandoned: with of.

To forsake the true God of heaven, is to fall into all such evils upon the face of the earth, as men, either desitute of grace divine, may commit, or unprotected from above, may endure.
Hooker.

2. Abject; friendless.

He will regard the prayer of the desitute, and not despise their prayer. Psalm.

3. In want of.

Take the desin'd way

To find the regions desitute of day. Dryden.

Nothing can be a greater instance of the love that mankind has for liberty, than such a savage mountain covered with people, and the Campania of Rome, which lies in the same country, desitute of inhabitants. Addison.

DESTITUTION. n. f. [from desitute.]

Want; the state in which something is wanted; applied to persons.

That desitute in food and cloathing is such an impediment, as, till it be removed, suffereth not the mind of man to admit any other care.

Hooker.

They which want furtherance unto knowledge, are not left in so great desitute, that justly any man should think the ordinary means of eternal life taken from them. Hooker.

The order of paying the debts of contract or restitution is set down by the civil laws of a kingdom: in desitute or want of such rules, we are to observe the necessity of the creditor,
the time of the delay, and the special obligations of friendship. Taylor.

TO DESTROY. v. a. [destruo, Lat. de-struire, French.]

1. To overturn a city; to raze a building to ruin.

The Lord will destroy this city. Genesis.

2. To lay waste; to make desolate.

Solyman sent his army, which burnt and destroyed the country villages. Kneller.

3. To kill.

A people, great and many, and tall as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them, and they succeeded them, and dwell in their land. Deuteronomy.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy.

Shakespeare.

The wise Providence hath placed a certain antipathy between some animals and many insects, whereby they delight in their destruction, though they use them not as food; as the peacock destroys snakes and adders; the weasel, mice and rats; spiders, flies; and some sorts of flies destroy spiders. Hale.

4. To put an end to; to bring to nought.

Do we not see that slothful, intemperate, and incontinent persons destroy their bodies with diseases, their reputations with disgrace, and their faculties with want? Bentley.

There will be as many sovereigns as fathers: the mother too hath her title, which destroys the sovereignty of one supreme monarch. Locke.

DESTROYER. n. f. [from destroy.] The person that destroys or lays waste; a murderer.

It is said, that Assur both founded it and ruined it: it may be understood, that Assur the founder was the son of Shem, and Assur the destroyer was an Assyrian. Raleigh.

Triumph, to be styl'd great conquerors,
Patrons of mankind, gods, and sons of gods!
Destroyers rightlier call'd, and slayers of men. Milton.

Yet, guiltless too, this bright destroyer lives;
At random wounds, nor knows the wound he gives. Pope.

DESTRUCTIBLE. adj. [from destruo, Lat.] Liable to destruction.

DESTRUCTIBILITY. n. f. [from destrucibile.] Liableness to destruction.

DESTRUCTION. n. f. [destructio, Lat.]

1. The act of destroying; subversion; demolition.

2. Murder; massacre.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shak.

3. The state of being destroyed; ruin; murder suffered.

If that your moody discontented souls
Do through the clouds behold this present hour,
Even for revenge mock my destruction. Shaksp.

When that which we immortal thought
We saw so near destruction brought,
We felt what you did then endure,
And tremble yet, as not secure. Waller.

4. The cause of destruction; a destroyer; a depopulator: as a consuming plague. The destruction that wasteth at noon-day. Psalms.

5. [In theology.] Eternal death. Broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. Matthew.

DESTRUCTIVE. adj. [destructivus, low Latin.]

1. That has the quality of destroying; wasteful; causing ruin and devastation; that brings to destruction.

In ports and roads remote,
Destructive fires among whole fleets we fend. Dryden.

One may think that the continuation of existence, with a kind of resistance to any destructive force, is the continuation of solidity. Locke.

2. With of.

He will put an end to so absurd a practice, which makes our most refined diversions destructive of all politeness. Addison.

Both are defects equally destructive of true religion. Rogers.

3. With to.

In a firm building, even the cavities ought not to be filled with rubbish, which is of a perishable kind, destructive to the strength. Dryden.

Excess of cold, as well as heat, pains us; because it is equally destructive to that temper which is necessary to the preservation of life. Locke.

DESTRUCTIVELY. adv. [from destructive.] Ruinously; mischievously; with power to destroy.

What remains but to breathe out Moses's with? O that men were not so destructively foolish! Decay of Piety

DESTRUCTIVENESS. n. f. [from destructive.] The quality of destroying or ruining.

The vice of professors exceeds the destructiveness of the most hostile assaults, as intestine treachery is more ruinous than foreign violence. Decay of Piety.

DESTRU'CTOR. n. f. [from destruor.] Destroyer; consumer.

Helmont wittily calls the fire the destructor and the artificial death of things. Boyle.

DESUDA'TION. n. f. [desudatio, Lat.]

A profuse and inordinate sweating, from what cause soever.

DE'SUETUDE. n. f. [desuetudo, Lat.] Cef-sation from being accustomed; discontinuance of practice or habit.

By the irruption of numerous armies of barbarous people, those countries were quickly fallen off, with barbarism and desuetude, from their former civility and knowledge. Hale.

We see in all things how desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things wherein we are conversant. Government of the Tongue.

DESULTORY. } adj. [desultorius, Lat.]

DESULTORIOUS. } Roving from thing to thing; unsettled; immethodical; unconstant. Desultorious is not in use.

'Tis not for a desultory thought to atone for a lewd course of life; nor for any thing but the superinducing of a virtuous habit upon a vicious one, to qualify an effectual conversion. L'Esfrange

Let but the least trifle cross his way, and his desultorious fancy presently takes the scent, leaves the unfinished and half-mangled notion, and skips away in pursuit of the new game. Norris.

Take my desultory thoughts in their native order, as they rise in my mind, without being reduced to rules, and marshalled according to art. Felton on the Classics.

To DESU'ME. v. a. [desumo, Lat.] To take from any thing; to borrow.

This pebble doth suppose, as pre-existent to it, the more simple matter out of which it is desumed, the heat and influence of the sun, and the due preparation of the matter. Hale.

They have left us relations suitable to those of Aelian and Pliny, whence they desumed their narrations. Brown.

Laws, if convenient and useful, are never the worse though they be desumed and taken from the laws of other countries. Hale.

To DETA'CH. v. a. [detacher, Fr.]

1. To separate; to disengage; to part from something.

The heat takes along with it a sort of vegetative and terrestrial matter, which it detaches from the uppermost stratum. Woodward.

The several parts of it are detached one from the other, and yet join again one cannot tell how. Pope.

2. To send out part of a greater body of men on an expedition.

If ten men are in war with forty, and the latter detach only an equal number to the engagement, what benefit do they receive from their superiority? Addison.

DETA'CHMENT. n. f. [from detach.] A body of troops sent out from the main army.

The czar dispatched instructions to send out detachments of his cavalry, to prevent the king of Sweden's joining his army. Tatter.

Besides materials, which are brute and blind, Did not this work require a knowing mind,
Who for the task should fit detachments elude
From all the atoms? Blackmore.

To DETA'IL. v. a. [detailer, Fr.] To relate particularly; to particularize; to display minutely and distinctly.

They will perceive the mistakes of these philosophers, and be able to answer their arguments, without my being obliged to detail them. Cheyne.

DETA'IL. n. f. [detail, Fr.] A minute and particular account.

I chuse, rather than trouble the reader with a detail here, to defer them to their proper place. Woodward.

I was unable to treat this part of my subject more in detail, without becoming dry and tedious. Pope.

To DETA'IN. v. a. [detineo, Lat.]

1. To keep what belongs to another.

Detain not the wages of the hireling; for every degree of detention of it, beyond the time, is injustice and uncharitableness. Taylor.

2. To withhold; to keep back.

These doings sting him
So venomously, that burning shame detains him
From his Cordelia. Shakspere.

He has described the passion of Calypso, and the indecent advances she made to detain him from his country. Broome.

3. To restrain from departure.

Let us detain thee until we shall have made ready a kid. Judges.

Had Oipheus sung it in the nether sphere,
So much the hymn had pleas'd the tyrant's ear,
The wife had been detain'd to keep her husband there. Dryden.

4. To hold in custody.

DETA'INDER. n. f. [from detain.] The name of a writ for holding one in custody.

DETA'INER. n. f. [from detain.] He that holds back any one's right; he that detains any thing.

Judge of the obligation that lies upon all sorts of injurious persons; the sacrilegious, the detainers of tithes, and cheaters of men's inheritances. Taylor.

To DETE'CT. v. a. [detecus, Lat.]

1. To discover; to find out any crime or artifice.

There's no true lover in the forest; else fighting every minute, and grooming every hour, would detect the lazy foot of time as well as a clock. Shakspere.

Though should I hold my peace, yet thou Wouldst easily detect what I conceal. Milton.

2. To discover in general.

The utmost infinite ramifications and insculcations of all the several sorts of vessels may easily be detected by glasses. Ray.

DETE'CTER. n. f. [from detecus.] A discoverer; one that finds out what another desires to hide.

Oh, heavens! that this treason were not; or not I the detector. Shakspere.

Hypocritify has a secret hatred of its detector; that which will bring it to a trial which it cannot pass. Decay of Piety.

DETE'CTION. n. f. [from detecus.]

1. Discovery of guilt or fraud, or any other fault.

Should I come to her with any detection in my hand, I could drive her thence from the word of her purity. Shakspere.

That is a sign of the true evangelical zeal, and note for the detection of its contrary: it should abound more in the mild and good-natured affections, than in the vehement and wrathful passions. Sprate.

Detection of the incoherence of loose discourses was wholly owing to the syllogistical form. Locke.

2. Discovery of any thing hidden.
Not only the sea, but rivers and rains also, are instrumental to the detection of amber, and other fossils, by washing away the earth and dirt that concealed them. Woodward.

DETE'NTION. n. f. [from detain.]

1. The act of keeping what belongs to another.

How goes the world, that I am thus encounter'd

With clam'rous claims of debt, of broken bonds,
And the detention of long since due debts,
Against my honour? Shakespeare.

2. Confinement; restraint.

This worketh by detention of the spirits, and confipation of the tangible parts. Bacon.

To DETER. v. a. [deterreo, Lat.] To discourage by terrour; to fright from any thing.

I never yet the tragick strain assay'd,
Deter'd by thy immitable maid. Waller.

Many and potent enemies tempt and deter us from our duty; yet our ease is not hard, so long as we have a greater strength on our side.

Tillotson.

Beauty or unbecomingness are of more force to draw or deter imitation, than any discourses which can be made to them. Locke.

The ladies may not be deterred from corresponding with me by this method. Addison.

My own face deters me from my glia;
And Kneller only shows what Celia was. Prior.

To DETERGE. v. a. [detergo, Lat.]
To cleanse a sore; to purge any part from sculence or obstructions.

Consider the part and habit of body, and add or diminish your simples as you design to deterge or incam. Weseman.

Sea salt preserves bodies, through which it passeth, from corruption; and it detergeth the vessels, and keeps the fluids from putrefaction.

Abulobut.

DETERGENT. adj. [from deterge.] That has the power of cleansing.

The food ought to be nourishing and detergent.

Abulobut.

DETERIORATION. n. f. [from deterior, Lat.] The act of making any thing worse; the state of growing worse.

DETERMENT. n. f. [from deter.] Cause of discouragement; that by which one is deterred. A good word, but not now used.

This will not be thought a discouragement unto spirits, which endeavour to advantage nature by art; nor will the ill success of some be made a sufficient determent unto others. Brown.

These are not all the determents that opposed my obeying you. Boyle.

DETERMINABLE. adj. [from determine.]
That may be certainly decided.

Whether all plants have seeds, were more easily determinable, if we could conclude concerning harts-tongue, fern, and some others.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

About this matter, which seems to easily determinable by sense, accurate and sober men widely disagree. Boyle.

To DETERMINATE. v. a. [determiner, French.] To limit; to fix; to determine; to terminate. Not in use.

The fly-flow hours shall not determine:
The date's limit of thy dear exile. Shakespeare.

DETERMINATE. adj. [determinatus, Lat.]
1. Settled; definite; determined.

Demonstrations in numbers, if they are not more evident and exact than in extension, yet they are more general in their use, and deter-minate in their application. Locke.

To make all the planets move about the sun in circular orbs, there must be given to each, by a determinate impulse, those present particular degrees of velocity which they now have, in proportion to their distances from the sun, and to the quantity of the solar matter. Bentley.

2. Established; settled by rule; positive.

Scriptures are read before the time of divine service, and without either choice or stint appointed by any determinate order. Hooker.

3. Decisive; conclusive.

I'm the progress of this business,
Ere a determinate resolution, he,
I mean the bishop, did require a respite. Shaks.

4. Fixed; resolute.

Like men disused in a long peace, more deter-minate to do, than skillful how to do. Steele.

5. Resolved.

My determinate voyage is mere extravagancy.

Shakespeare.

DETERMINATELY. adv. [from *determi-
nate*.]

1. Resolutely; with fixed resolve.

The queen obeyed the king's commandment, full of raging agonies, and determinately bent that she would seek all loving means to win Zelmene. Steele.

In those errors they are so determinately settled, that they pay unto falsity the whole sum of whatsoever love is owing unto God's truth.

Hooker.

2. Certainly; unchangeably.

Think thus with yourselves, that you have not the making of things true or false; but that the truth and existence of things is already fixed and settled, and that the principles of religion are already either determinately true or false, before you think of them. Tillotson.

DETERMINATION. n. f. [from *determi-
nate*.]

1. Absolute direction to a certain end.

When we voluntarily waste much of our lives, that remissness can by no means consist with a constant determination of will or desire to the greatest apparent good. Locke.

2. The result of deliberation; conclusion formed; resolution taken.

They have acquainted me with their determination, which is to go home, and to trouble you no more. Shakespeare.

The proper acts of the intellect are intellec-
tion, deliberation, and determination or decision.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

It is much disputed by divines, concerning the power of man's will to good and evil in the state of innocence; and upon very nice and dangerous precipices stand their determinations on either side. South.

Consult thy judgment, affections, and inclinations, and make thy determination upon every particular; and be always as suspicious of thyself as possible. Calamy.

3. Judicial decision.

He confined the knowledge of governing to justice and lenity, and to the speedy determination of civil and criminal causes. Gulliver.

DETERMINATIVE. adj. [from *determi-
nate*.]

More particularly to determine the proper season for grammar, I do not see how it can be made a study, but as an introduction to rhetor-ick. Locke.

2. To conclude; to fix ultimately.

Probability, in the nature of it, supposes that a thing may or may not be so, for any thing that yet appears, or is certainly determin'd, on the other side. South.

Milton's subject was still greater than Homer's or Virgil's: it does not determine the fate of single persons or nations, but of a whole species.

Addison.

Destruction hangs on every word we speak,
On every thought, till the concluding stroke
Determines all, and closes our design. Addison.

3. To bound; to confine.

The knowledge of men hitherto hath been determined by the view or sight; so that whatsoever is invisible, either in respect of the fineness of the body itself, or the smallness of the parts, or of the subtlety of the motion, is little enquired. Bacon.

The principium individuationis is existence itself, which determines a being of any sort to a particular time and place, incommunicable to two beings of the same kind. Locke.

No sooner have they climbed that hill, which thus determines their view at a distance, but a new prospect is opened. Addison.

4. To adjust; to limit; to define.

He that has settled in his mind determined ideas, with names affixed to them, will be able to discern their differences one from another, which is really distinguishing. Locke.

5. To influence the choice.

You have the captives

Who were the opposites of this day's strife;
We do require them of you, so to use them
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakespeare.

A man may suspend the act of his choice from being determined for or against the thing proposed, till he has examined it. Locke.

As soon as the studious man's hunger and thirst makes him uneasy, he, whose will was never determined to any pursuit of good cheer, is,
by the uncausness of hunger and thirst, presently determined to eating and drinking. Locke.

6. To resolve.

Jonathan knew that it was determined of his father to slay David. 1 Samuel.

7. To decide.

I do not ask whether bodies so exist, that the motion of one cannot be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

8. To put an end to; to destroy.

Now where is he, that will not stay so long Till sickness hath determin'd me? Shakespeare.

sings, and loſe al their right to temporal, yet that forfeiture must devolve only to the supreme Lord. Devey of Piety.

DEVOLUTION. n. f. [devolutio, Latin.]

1. The act of rolling down.

The raising of new mountains, deterrations, or the devolution of earth down upon the valleys from the hills and high grounds, will fall under our consideration. Woodward.

2. Removal successive from hand to hand.

The jurisdiction exercised in those courts is derived from the crown of England, and the last devolution is to the king by way of appeal. Hale.

DEVORATION. n. f. [from devoro, Lat.]

The act of devouring. Diſt.

To DEVOTE. v. a. [devotere, devotus,
Latin.]

1. To dedicate; to consecrate; to appropriate by vow.

No devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possessions, shall be fold or redeemed. Lev.

What black magician conjures up this fiend,
To stop devoted charitable deeds? Shaksp.

They, impious, dar'd to prey
On herds devoted to the god of day. Pope.

2. To addict; as to a sect, or study.

While we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let 's be no stoicks, nor no stocks, I say;
Or to devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid be an outcast quite aljur'd. Scijp.

If persons of this make should ever devote themselves to science, they should be well assured of a solid and increasing talent of body.
Watts.

3. To condemn; to resign to ill.

Aliens were devoted to their rapine and de-spight. D. of P. 15.

Oh why, Penelope, this causeless tear,
To tender sleep's soft blessings interfere?
Alike devote to sorrow's dire extreme
The day reflection and the midnight dream. Pope.

4. To addict; to give up to ill.

The Romans having once debauched their senses with the pleasures of other nations, they devoted themselves unto all wickedness. Grete.

5. To curse; to execrate; to doom to destruction.

Those wicked tents devoted: left the wrath
Impendent, raging into sudden flames,
Down with a r. 21. 120

To destruction sacred and devote,
He with his whole posterity must die. Milton.

Goddess of maids, and conscious of our hearts,
So keep me from the vengeance of thy darts,
Which Niobe's devoted issue felt,
When, luffing through the skies, the feather'd deaths were dealt. Dryden.

Let her, like me, of ev'ry joy forlorn,
Devote the hour when such a wretch was born;
Like me to deserts and to darkness run. Rowe.

DEVOTE. adj. For devoted.

How on a sudden lost,
Defac'd, deslower'd, and now to death devote'
Milton.

DEVOTEDNESS. n. f. [from devote.]

The state of being devoted or dedicated; consecration; addictedness.

Whatever may fall from my pen to her disadvantage, relates to her but as the was, or may again be, an obstacle to your devotedness to seraphick love. Boyle.

The owing of our obligation unto virtue, may be styled natural religion; that is to say, a devotedness unto God, so as to act according to his will. Grete.

DEVOTEE. n. f. [devot, French.] One erroneously or superstitiously religious;
a bigot.

DEVOTION. n. f. [devotion, French;
devotio, Latin.]

1. The state of being consecrated or dedicated.

2. Piety; acts of religion; devoutness.

Mean time her warlike brother on the seas
His waving streamers to the winds displays,
And vows for his return with vain devotion pays.
Dryden.

3. An act of external worship.

Religious minds are inflamed with the love of publick devotion. Hobbes.

For as I pass'd by and beheld your devotion,
I found an altar with this inscription, To the unknown God. Acts.

In vain doth man the name of just expect,
If his devotions be to God neglect. Denham.

4. Prayer; expression of devotion.

An aged holy man,
That day and night said his devotion,
No other worldly business did apply.
Your devotion has its opportunity: we must pray always, but chiefly at certain times. Spence.

5. The state of the mind under a strong sense of dependance upon God; devout-ness; piety.

Grateful to acknowledge whence his good Descends, thither with heart, and voice, and eyes

Directed in devotion, to adore
And worship God supreme, who made him chief
Of all his works. Milton.

From the full choir when loud hosannas rise,
And swell the pomp of dreadful sacrifice;
Amid that scene, if some relenting eye
Glance on the stone where our cold reliques lie,
Devotion's self shall steal a thought from heav'n,
One human tear shall drop, and be forgiv'n.
Pope.

Devotion may be considered either as an exercise of publick or private prayers at set times and occasions, or as a temper of the mind, a state and disposition of the heart, which is rightly affected with such exercises. Luce.

6. An act of reverence, respect, or ceremony.

Whether away to fast?
—Upon the like devotion as your lives,
To gratulate the gentle princes there. Shakespeare.

7. Strong affection; ardent love; such as makes the lover the sole property of the person loved.

Be opposite all planets of good luck
To my preceding, if, with pure heart's love,

Immaculate devotion, holy thoughts,
I tender not thy beauteous princely daughter.
Shakespeare.

He had a particular reverence for the person of the king, and the more extraordinary devotion for that of the prince, as he had had the honour to be trusted with his education.
Clarendon.

8. Earnestness; ardour; eagerness.

He seeks their hate with greater devotion than they can render it him; and leaves nothing undone that may folly discover him their opposite.
Shakespeare.

9. Disposal; power; state of dependance on any one.

A round castle would keep that rich corner of the country at his majesty's devotion.
Clarendon.

DEVOTIONAL. adj. [from devotion.]

Pertaining to devotion; annexed to worship; religious.

Nor are the soberest of them so apt for that devotional compliance and juncture of hearts, which I desire to bear in holy offices, to be performed with me.
King Charles.

The favourable opinion and good word of men comes oftentimes at a very easy rate, by a few demure looks, with some devotional postures and grimaces.
South.

DEVOTIONALIST. n. f. [from devotion.]

A man zealous without knowledge, or superstitiously devout.

To DEVOUR. v. a. [devo, Latin.]

1. To eat up ravenously, as a wild beast or animal of prey.

We will lay some evil beast hath devoured him.
Genesis.

We've willing dames enough: there cannot be that vulture in you, to devour so many as will to greatness dedicate themselves, finding it to incline'd.
Shakespeare.

2. To destroy or consume with rapidity and violence.

A fire devoureth before them, and behind them a flame burneth.
Job.

How dire a tempest from Mycenæ pour'd,
Our plains, our temples, and our town devour'd;
It was the waste of war.
Dryden.

Notwithstanding that Socrates lived in the time of this devouring pestilence at Athens, he never caught the least infection.
Addison.

3. To swallow up; to annihilate.

He found in swiftness to devour the way.
Shakespeare.

Such a pleasure as grows fresher upon enjoyment; and though continually fed upon, yet is never devour'd.
South.

Death walks behind thee, and each flying hour
Does some loose remnant of thy life devour.
Dryden.

4. To enjoy with avidity.

Longing they look, and gaping at the sight,
Devour her o'er and o'er with vast delight.
Dryden.

DEVOURER. n. f. [from devour.]

A consumer; he that devours; he that preys upon.

Rome is but a wilderness of tygers;
Tygers must prey, and Rome affords no prey
But me and mine: how happy art thou, then,
From these devourers to be banish'd!
Shakspeare.

Since those leviathans are withdrawn, the lesser devourers supply their place: fraud succeeds to violence.
Deary of Piety.

Corp and tench do best together, all other fish being devourers of their spawn.
Mortimer.

DEVOUT. adj. [devotus, Latin.]

1. Pious; religious; devoted to holy duties.

We must be constant and devout in the worship of our God, and ready in all acts of benevolence to our neighbour.
Rogers.

2. Filled with pious thoughts.

And, of success secure, return'd to his abode.
Dryden.

3. Expressive of devotion or piety.

Amid dry ground appears, and from his ark
The ancient fire descends with all his train;
Then with uplifted hands, and eyes devout,
Grateful to heav'n.
Milton.

DEVOUTLY. adv. [from devout.] Piously; with ardent devotion; religiously.

Her grace rose, and with modest paces Came to the altar, where she kneel'd; and saint-like

Cast her fair eyes to heav'n, and pray'd devoutly.
Shakespeare.

One of the wise men having a while attentively and devoutly viewed and contemplated this pillar and cross, fell down upon his face.
Bacon.

Her twilights were more clear than our mid-day,
She dreamt devoutlier than most use to pray.
Dunne.

Think, O my soul, devoutly think,
How, with affrighted eyes,
Thou saw'st the wide extended deep
In all its horrors rise!
Addison.

To second causes we seem to trust, without expressing, so devoutly as we ought to do, our dependance on the first.
Atterbury.

DEUCE. n. f. [more properly than deuce, Junius, from Dussus, the name of a certain species of evil spirits.] The devil: a ludicrous word.

'Twas the prettiest prologue, as he wrote it;
Well, the deuce take me if I ha'n't forgot it.
Congreve.

DEUTEROGAMY. n. f. [deutero and γαμος.] A second marriage.

DEUTRONOMY. n. f. [deutero and νομος.] The second book of the law; the fifth book of Moses.

DEUTEROSCOPY. n. f. [deutero and σκοπια.] The second intention; the meaning beyond the literal sense. Not in use.

Not attaining the deuteroscopy, or second intention of the words, they are fain to omit their consequences, coherences, figures, or topologies.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEW. n. f. [deap, Saxon; daarw, Dutch.] The moisture upon the ground.

Fogs which we frequently observe after sun-setting, even in our hottest months, are nothing but a vapour consisting of water: which vapour was sent up in greater quantity all the foregoing day, than now in the evening: but the sun then being above the horizon, taking it at the surface of the earth, and rapidly mounting it up into the atmosphere, it was not discernible: the sun being now gone off, the vapour stagnates at and near the earth, and saturates the air till it is so thick as to be easily visible therein: and when at length the heat there is somewhat further spent, which is usually about the middle of the night, it falls down again in a dew, alighting upon herbs and other vegetables, which it cherishes, cools, and refreshes.
Woodward.

Never yet one hour in bed
Did I enjoy the golden dew of sleep,
But with his tirr'ous dreams was still awak'd.
Shakespeare.

That churchman bears a bounteous mind, indeed;
A hand as fruitful as the land that feeds us;
His dew falls ev'ry where.
Shakespeare.

She looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.
Shakespeare.

Dews and rain are but the returns of moist vapours condensed.
Bacon.

Now sliding streams the thirsty plants renew,
And feed their fibres with reviving dew.
Pope.

To DEW. v. a. [from the noun.] To wet as with dew; to moisten; to bedew.

A trickling stream of balm most sovereign,
And dainty dew, which on the ground still fell,
And overflowed all the fertile plain,
As it had dew'd been with timely rain.
Fairy Q.

With him pour we in our country's puige
Each drop of us.

—Or to much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakespeare.

Give me thy hand,
That I may dew it with my mournful tear.
Shakespeare.

He ceas'd; discerning Adam with such joy Surcharg'd, as had, like grief, been dew'd in tear,

Without the vent of words which these he breath'd.
Milton.

Palemon above the rest appears
In fable garments, dew'd with gushing tears.
Dryden.

In Gallick blood again
He dews his reeking sword, and frowns the ground
With headless ranks.
Philips.

DEWBERRY. n. f. [from dew and berry.]

Dewberries, as they stand here among the more delicate fruits, must be understood to mean raspberries, which are also of the bramble kind.
Hammer.

Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries.
Shakespeare.

DEWBESPARENT. part. [dew and besparent.]

Sprinkled with dew.
This evening late, by them the chewing flocks
Had ta'en their supper on the favoury herb
Of knot-grass dewbesparent, and were in fold,
I sat me down to watch upon a bank
With ivy canopied, and interwove
With flaunting honey-suckle.
Milton.

DEW-BURNING. adj. [from dew and burning.] The meaning of this compound is doubtful. Perhaps it alludes to the sparkling of dew.

He now, to prove his late renewed might,
High brandishing his bright dew-burning blade,
Upon his crested scalp so sure did smite,
That to the skull a yawning wound it made.
Fairy Queen.

DEWDROP. n. f. [dew and drop.] A drop of dew which sparkles at sunrise.

I must go seek some dewdrops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.
Shakspeare.

Innumerable as the stars of night,
Or stars of morning, dewdrops, which the sun
Inspalls on ev'ry leaf, and ev'ry flower.
Milton.

Rest, sweet as dewdrops on the flow'ry lawns,
When the sky opens, and the morning dawns!
Tieck.

DEWLAP. n. f. [from lapping or licking the dew.]

1. The flesh that hangs down from the throat of oxen.

Large rows of fat about his shoulders hung,
And now his neck the double dewlap hung.
Addison.

2. It is used in Shakespeare for a lip flaccid with age, in contempt.

And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks against her lips I bob,
And on the wither'd dewlap pour the ale.
Shakespeare.

DEWLAPT. adj. [from dewlap.] Furred with dewlaps,

Who would believe that there were mountaineers
Develop like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
 Wallets of flesh? Shakspeare.
 The develop bull now chafes along the plain,
 While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein. Gay.
DEW-WORM. n. f. [from dew and worm.]
 A worm found in dew.
 For the trout, the dew worm, which some call the lob worm, and the brandling, are the chief.
Walters.

DE'WY. adj. [from dew.]
 1. Resembling dew; partaking of dew.
 From the earth a dewy mist
 Went up, and water'd all the ground, and each Plant of the field. Milton.
 Where two adverse winds,
 Sublim'd from dewy vapours in mid sky,
 Engage with horrid thock, the ruffled bruce Roars stormy. Phillips.

2. Moist with dew; roscid.
 The joyous day 'gan early to appear,
 And fair Aurora from her dewy bed
 Of aged Tithone 'gan herself to rear,
 With rosy cheeks, for shame as blushing red
Spenser.
 The bee with honied rugh,
 That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such consort as they keep,
 Entice the dewy feather'd sleep. Milton.
 His dewy locks distill'd Ambrosia. Milton.
 Besides the succour which cold Ancien yields,
 The rocks of Hemicus and desay fields. Dryden.

DEXTER. adj. [Latin.] The right;
 not the left. A term used in heraldry.
 My mother's blood
 Runs on the dexter cheek, and this snifter Bounds in my fire's. Shakspeare.

DEXTERITY. n. f. [dexteritas, Lat.]
 1. Readiness of limbs; activity; readinesses to attain skill; skill; expertness.
 2. Readiness of contrivance; quickness of expedient; skill of management.
 His wisdom, by often evading from peril, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers when they pressed him, than into a providence to prevent and remove them afar off. Bacon.
 They attempted to be knaves, but wanted art and dexterity. South.
 The same Protestants may, by their dexterity, make themselves the national religion, and dispose the church-revenues among their pastors.
Swift.

DE'XTEROUS. adj. [dexter, Latin.]
 1. Expert at any manual employment; active; ready: as, a dexterous workman.
 For both their dex'terous hands the lance could wield. Pope.
 2. Expert in management; subtle; full of expedients.
 They confine themselves, and are dexterous managers enough of the wares and products of that corner with which they content themselves.
Locke.

DE'XTEROUSLY. adv. [from dexterous.]
 Expertly; skillfully; artfully.
 The magistrate sometimes cannot do his own office dexterously, but by acting the minister
South.
 But then my study was to cog the dice,
 And dex'terously to throw the lucky sicc. Dryden.

DE'XTRAL. adj. [dexter, Latin.] The right; not the left.
 As for any tunicles or skins, which should hinder the liver from enabling the dextral parts, we must not conceive it diffuseth its virtue by mere irradiation, but by its veins and proper vessels. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DEXTRA'LITY. n. f. [from dextral.] The state of being on the right, not the left, side.
 If there were a determinate prepotency in the right, and such as ariseth from a constant root in nature, we might expect the same in other animals, whose parts are also differenced by dex- trality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIABETES. n. f. [διαβήτης.] A morbid copiousness of urine; a fatal colliqua-tion by the urinary passages.
 An increase of that secretion may accompany the general colliquations; as in fluxes, hectic sweats and coughs, diabetes, and other consump-tions. Judson's Physico-Theology.

DIABO'LICAL. } adj. [from diabolus, DIABO'LICK. } Latin.] Devilish; partaking of the qualities of the devil; impious; atrocious; nefarious; pertaining to the devil.
 This, in other beasts observ'd,
 Doubt might beget of diabolick pow'r,
 Active within, beyond the sense of brute. Milt.
 Does not the ambitious, the envious, and the revengeful man know very well, that the thirst of blood, and affectation of dominion by violence and oppression, is a most diabolical outrage upon the laws of God and Nature. L'Estrange.
 The practice of lying is a diabolical exercise,
 and they that use it are the devil's children. Roy.
 Darned spirits must needs be all envy, despair, and rage: and have so much of a diabolical nature in them, as to with all men to share their misery. Atterbury.

DIACODIUM. n. f. [διακώδιον.] The syrup of poppies.
DIACOSTICS. n. f. [διακωστικά.] The doctrine of founds.

DI'ADEM. n. f. [diadema, Latin.]
 1. A tiara; an enign of royalty bound about the head of eastern monarchs.
 The sacred diadem in pieces rent,
 And purple robe gored with many a wound.
Spenser.
 A list the coblers' temples ties,
 To keep the hair out of their eyes;
 From whence 'tis plain the diadem,
 That princes wear, derives from them. Swift.

2. The mark of royalty worn on the head; the crown.
 A crown,
 Golden in shew, is but a wreath of thorns;
 Brings dangers, troubles, cares, and sleepless nights,
 To him who wears the regal diadem. Milton.
 Why should he ravish then that diadem
 From your grey temples, which the hand of time Must shortly plant on his? Denham.
 Faction, that once made diadems her prey,
 And stopt our prince in his triumphant way,
 Fled like a mist before this radiant day. Kejcom.

DI'ADEMED. adj. [from diadem.] Adorned with a diadem; crowned.
 Not so, when diadem'd with rays divine, Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,
 Her priestless muse forbids the good to die,
 And opens the temple of eternity. Pope.

DI'ADROM. n. f. [διαδρομή.] The time in which any motion is performed; the time in which a pendulum performs its vibration.

A gry is one tenth of a line, a line one tenth of an inch, an inch one tenth of a philosophical foot, a philosophical foot one third of a pendulum; whose diadroms, in the latitude of forty-five degrees, are each equal to one second of time, or a sixtieth of a minute. Locke.

DI'APRESIS. n. f. [διαπρέσις.] The separation or disjunction of syllables; as ac'er.

DIAGNO'STICK. n. f. [διαγνώστης.] A symptom by which a disease is distinguished from others.
 I shall lay down some indisputable marks of this vice, that whenever we see the tokens, we may conclude the plague is in the house;—let us hear you diagnosticks. Callier on Pride.
 One of our physicians proved disappointed of his prognosticks, or rather diagnosticks. Harvey.

DIAGONAL. adi. [διαγώνιος.] Reaching from one angle to another, so as to divide a parallelogram into equal parts.
 The monstrousness of the badger is ill-contrived, and with some disadvantage; the shortness being fixed unto the leg, of one side, that might have been more properly placed upon the diagonal
 mover. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

All sorts of stone composed of granules, will cut and rive in any direction, as well in a perpendicular, or in a diagonal, as horizontally and parallel to the side of the strata. Woodward.

DI'AGONAL. n. f. [from the adjective.]
 A line drawn from angle to angle, and dividing a square into equal parts.
 When a man has in his mind the idea of two lines, viz. the side and diagonal of a square, whereof the diagonal is an inch long, he may have the idea also of the division of that line into a certain number of equal parts. Locke.

DI'AGONALLY. adv. [from diagonal.] In a diagonal direction.
 The right and left are not defined by philosophers according to common acceptation, that is, respectively from one man unto another, or any constant site in each, as though that should be the right in oars, which, upon constant or facing, stands athwart or diagonally unto the other;—but were distinguished according unto their activity, and predominant locomotion, on the either side. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DI'AGRAM. n. f. [διάγραμμα.] A delineation of geometrical figures; a mathematical scheme.
 Many a fair precept in poetry is like a seeming demonstration in the mathematicks; very specious in the diagram, but failing in the meaneck operation. Dryden.

Why do not these persons make a diagram of these cogitative lines and angles, and demonstrate their properties of perception and appetite, as plainly as we know the other properties of triangles and circles? Bentley.

DIAGRYDIATES. n. f. [from diagrydium, Lat.] Strong purgatives made with diagrydium.
 All choleric humours ought to be evacuated by diagrydiates, mixed with tartar, or some acid, or rhabarb powder. Floyer.

DIAL. n. f. [diale, Skinner.] A plate marked with lines, where a hand or shadow shows the hour.
 O, gentlemen, the time of life is short:
 To spend that shortness basely were too long,
 Though life did ride upon a dial's point,
 Still ending at th' arrival of an hour. Shakspeare.

If the motion be very slow, we perceive it not:
 we have no sense of the accretive motion of plants or animals; and the fly shadow steals away upon the dial, and the quickest eye can discover no more than that it is gone. Glanville.

DIAL-PLATE. n. f. [dial and plate.] That on which hours or lines are marked.
 Stada tells us that the two friends, being each of them possessed of a magnetical needle, made a kind of dial-plate, inscribing it with the four and twenty letters, in the same manner as the hours of the day are marked upon the ordinary dial-plate. Addison's Spectator.

DIALECT. n. f. [διαλέκτο.]
 1. The subdivision of a language; as the Attic, Doric, Ionic, Æolic dialects.
 2. Style; manner of expression.

When themselves do profit that whereof they write, they change their dialect; and those words they than, as if there were in them some secret thing. Hooker.

3. Language; speech.

In her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,
Such as moves men. Shakspeare.

In the conferring of a kindness did not bind the person upon whom it was conferred to the returns of gratitude, why, in the universal dialect of the world, are kindnesses still called obligations? South.

DIALECTICAL. adv. [from dialectick.]
Logical; argumental.

Those dialectical subtleties, that the schoolmen employ about physiological mysteries, more declare the wit of him that uses them, than increase the knowledge of sober lovers of truth. Boyle.

DIALECTICK. n. f. [διαλεκτική.] Logical; the art of reasoning.DIALLING. n. f. [from dial.] The scianterick science; the knowledge of shadow; the art of constructing dials on which the shadow may show the hour.DIALIST. n. f. [from dial.] A constructor of dials.

Scientifick dialists, by the geometrick considerations of lines, have found out rules to mark out the irregular motion of the shadow in all latitudes, and on all planes. Mason.

DIALOGIST. n. f. [from dialogue.] A speaker in a dialogue or conference; a writer of dialogues.DIALOGUE. n. f. [διάλογος.] A conference; a conversation between two or more, either real or feigned.

Will you hear the dialogue that the two learned men have compiled in praise of the owl and cuckoo? Shakspeare.

Oh, the impudence of this wicked fox! Lascivious dialogues are innocent with you. Dryden.

In easy dialogues is Fletcher's praise:
He mov'd the mind, but had not pow'r to raise. Dryden.

To DIALOGUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To discourse with another; to confer.

Dut dialogue with thy shadow? Shakspeare.

DIALYSIS. n. f. [διαλυσις.] The figure in rhetoric by which syllables or words are divided.DIAMETER. n. f. [διά and μέτρον.] The line which, passing through the centre of a circle, or other curvilinear figure, divides it into equal parts.

The space between the earth and the moon, according to Ptolemy, is seventeen times the diameter of the earth, which makes, in a gross account, about one hundred and twenty thousand miles. Raleigh.

The bay of Naples is the most delightful one that I ever saw: it lies in almost a round figure of about thirty miles in the diameter. Addison.

DIAMETRAL. adj. [from diameter.] Describing the diameter; relating to the diameter.DIAMETRALLY. adv. [from diametral.] According to the direction of a diameter; in direct opposition.

Christian piety is, beyond all other things, diametrically opposed to profaneness and impiety of actions. Hammond.

DIAMETRICAL. adj. [from diameter.]

1. Describing a diameter.

VOL. I.

2. Observing the direction of a diameter.

The sin of calumny is set in a most diametrical opposition to the evangelical precept of loving our neighbours as ourselves. Gov. of the Tongue.

DIAMETRICALLY. adv. [from diametrical.] In a diametrical direction.

He persuaded the king to consent to what was diametrically against his conscience and his honour, and, in truth, his security. Clarendon.

Thus intercepted in its passage, the vapour, which cannot penetrate the stratum diametrically, glides along the lower surface of it, permeating the horizontal interval, which is betwixt the said dense stratum and that which lies underneath it. Woodward.

DIAMOND. n. f. [diamant, Fr. adamas, Latin.]

The diamond, the most valuable and hardest of all gems; is, when pure, perfectly clear and pellucid as the purest water; and is eminently distinguished from all other substances by its vivid splendour, and the brightness of its reflexions. It is extremely various in shape and size, being found in the greatest quantity very small, and the larger ones extremely seldom met with. The largest ever known is that in the possession of the Great Mogul, which weighs two hundred and seventy-nine carats, and is computed to be worth seven hundred and seventy-nine thousand two hundred and forty four pounds. The diamond bears the force of the strongest fires, except the concentrated solar rays, without hurt; and even that infinitely piercing of all fires does it no injury, unless directed to its weaker parts. It bears a glass house fire for many days, and if taken carefully out, and suffered to cool by degrees, is found as bright and beautiful as before; but if taken hastily out, it will sometimes crack, and even split into two or three pieces. The places where we have diamonds are the East Indies and the Brasils; and though they are usually found clear and colourless, yet they are sometimes slightly tinged with the colours of the other gems, by the mixture of some metalline particles. Hill on Feffils.

Give me the ring of mine you had at dinner;
Or, for the diamond, the chain you promis'd. Shakspeare.

I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond:
thou hast the right angled bent of the brow. Shakspeare.

The diamond is preferable and vastly superior to all others in lustre and beauty: as also in hardness, which renders it more durable and lasting, and therefore much more valuable, than any other stone. Woodward.

The diamond is by mighty monarchs worn,
Fair as the star that ushers in the morn. Blackmore.

The lively diamond drinks thy purest rays,
Collected light, compact. Thomson.

DIAPASE. n. f. [διά πασών.] A chord including all tones. The old word for diapason. See DIAPASON.

And 'twixt them both a quadrant was the base,
Proportion'd equally by seven and nine;
Nine was the circle set in heaven's place,
All which compacted made a good diapase. Spenser.

The sweet numbers and melodious measures,
With which I wont the winged words to tie,
And make a tuneful diapase of pleasures,
Now being let to run at liberty. Spenser.

DIAPASON. n. f. [διά πασών.]

Diapason denotes a chord which includes all tones: it is the same with that we call an eighth, or an octave; because there are but seven tones or notes, and then the eighth is the same again with the first. Harris.

It discovereth the true coincidence of sounds into diapasons, which is the return of the same sound. Bacon.

Harsh dia

Broke the fair music that all creatures made
To their great Lord, whose love their motion sway'd

In perfect diapason, whilst they stood
In first obedience, and their state of good. Milton.

Many a sweet rise, many as sweet a fall,
A full-mouth diapason swallows all. Cresshaw.

From harmony, from heavenly harmony,
This universal frame began;
From harmony to harmony

Through all the compass of the notes it ran,
The diapason closing full in man. Dryden.

DIAPER. n. f. [diapre, Fr. of uncertain etymology.]

1. Linen cloth woven in flowers, and other figures; the finest species of figured linen after damask.

Not any damfel, which her vaunteth most
In skilful knitting of soft filken twine;

Nor any weaver, which his work doth boast
In diaper, in damask, or in linc,

Might in their diverse cunning ever dare
With this so curious net-work to compare. Spenser.

2. A napkin; a towel.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rose-water, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer, a third a diaper. Shak.

To DIAPER. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To variegate; to diversify; to flower.

For fear the stones her tender foot should wrong,
The ground he strew'd with flowers all along,
And diaper'd like the discolor'd mead. Spenser.

Flora used to cloath our grand-dame Earth with a new livery, diapered with various flowers, and chequered with delightful objects. Howell.

2. To draw flowers upon clothes.

If you diaper upon folds, let your work be broken, and taken, as it were, by the half; for reason tells you, that your fold must cover somewhat unseen. Peucham on Drawing.

DIAPHANEITY. n. f. [from διαφανείω.]

Transparency; pellucidness; power of transmitting light.

Because the outward coat of the eye ought to be pellucid, to transmit the light, which, if the eyes should always stand open, would be apt to grow dry and shrink, and lose their diaphaneity; therefore are the eye-lids so contriv'd as often to wink, that so they may, as it were, glaze and varnish them over with the moisture they contain. Ruy.

DIAPHANICK. adj. [διά and φανός.]

Transparent; pellucid; having the power to transmit light.

Air is an element superior, and lighter than water, through whose vast, open, subtle, diaphanick, or transparent body, the light, afterwards created, easily transpired. Raleigh.

DIAPHANOUS. adj. [διά and φανός.]

Transparent; clear; translucent; pellucid; capable to transmit light.

Aristotle calleth light a quality inherent or cleaving to a diaphaneous body. Raleigh.

When he had taken off the insect, he found in the leaf very little and diaphaneous eggs, exactly like to those which yet remained in the tubes of the fly's womb. Ray.

DIAPHORETICK. adj. [διαφορητικός.] Sudorifick; promoting a diaphoresis or perspiration; causing sweat.

A diaphoretick medicine, or a sudorifick, is something that will provoke sweating. Watts.

Diaphoreticks, or promoters of perspiration, help the organs of digestion, because the attenuation of the aliment makes it perishable. Arbuth.

DIAPHRAGM. n. f. [διάφραγμα.]

1. The midriff which divides the upper cavity of the body from the lower.

2. Any division or partition which divides a hollow body.

It consists of a fasciculus of hodies, round, about one sixth of an inch in diameter, hollow, and parted into numerous cells by means of diaphragms thick set throughout the whole length of the body. Woodward

DIARRHOEA. n. f. [διαρροια.] A flux of the belly, whereby a person frequently goes to stool, and is cured either by purging off the cause, or restraining the bowels. Quincy

During his diarrhoea I healed up the fontanel. Wifeman.

DIARRHOETICK. adj. [from diarrhoea.] Promoting the flux of the belly; solutive; purgative.

Miller is diarrhetic, cleansing, and useful in diseases of the kidneys. Arbutnot.

DIARY. n. f. [diarium, Lat.] An account of the transactions, accidents, and observations of every day; a journal.

In sea voyages, where there is nothing to be seen but sky and sea, men make diaries; but, in land-travel, wherein so much is to be observed, they omit it. Bacon.

I go on in my intended diary. Tutler.

DIASTOLE. n. f. [διαστολη.]

1. A figure in rhetorick, by which a short syllable is made long.

2. The dilatation of the heart.

The systole seems to resemble the forcible bending of a spring, and the diastole its flying out again to its natural state. Ray.

DIASTYLE. [δια, and στυλος, a pillar.] A sort of edifice, where the pillars stand at such a distance from one another, that three diameters of their thickness are allowed for intercolumniation. Harris.

DIATYSSERON. n. f. [of δια, and τίσσερα, four.] An interval in musick, composed of one greater tone, one lesser, and one greater semitone: its proportion being as four to three. It is called, in musical composition, a perfect fourth. Harris.

DIATONICK. [of διατόνος.] The ordinary sort of musick which proceeds by different tones, either in ascending or descending. It contains only the two greater and lesser tones, and the greater semitone. Harris.

DIATYCTIC Tone. [of δια and ζυγνυμι.] In the ancient Greek musick, disjoined two-fourths, one on each side of it; and which, being joined to either, made a fifth. This is, in our musick, from A to B.

They allowed to this diatycetic tone, which is our La, Mi, the proportion of nine to eight, as being the unalterable difference of the fifth and fourth. Harris.

DIBBLE. n. f. [from dippel, Dutch, a sharp point, Skinner; from dabble, Juzius.] A small spade; a pointed instrument with which the gardeners make holes for planting.

Through cunning, with dibble, rake, mattock, and spade,

By line and by level trim garden is made.

Tuffer's Husbandry.

DIBSTONE. n. f. A little stone which children throw at another stone.

I have seen little girls exercise whole hours together, and take abundance of pains, to be expert at dibstones. Locke.

DICACITY. n. f. [dicacitas, Lat.] Pertinence; sauciness. DiD.

DICE. n. f. The plural of die. See DIE.

It is above a hundred to one against any particular throw, that you do not cast any given set of faces with four cubical dice; because there are so many several combinations of the six faces of four dice: now, after you have cast all the trials but one, it is still as much odds at the last remaining time, as it was at the first. Bentley.

To DICE. v. n. [from the noun.] To game with dice.

I was as virtuously given as a gentleman need to be; virtuous enough; swore little; diced not above seven times a week. Shakspeare.

DICE-BOX. n. f. [dice and box.] The box from which the dice are thrown.

What would you say, should you see the sparkler shaking her elbow for a whole night together, and thumping the table with a dice-box? Addison.

DICER. n. f. [from dice.] A player at dice; a gamester.

They make marriage vows As false as dicers' oaths. Shakspeare.

DICH. This word seems corrupted from dit for do it.

Rich men sin, and I eat root: Much good dich thy good heart, Apemantus. Shakspeare's Timon.

DICHOTOMY. n. f. [διχοτομία.] Distribution of ideas by pairs.

Some persons have disturbed the order of nature, and abused their readers by an affectation of dichotomies, trichotomies, sevens, twelves, &c. Let the nature of the subject, considered together with the design which you have in view, always determine the number of parts into which you divide it. Watts.

DICKENS. A kind of adverbial exclamation, importing, as it seems, much the same with the devil; but I know not whence derived.

Where had you this pretty weathercock? — I cannot tell what the dickens his name is my husband had him of. Shakspeare.

What a dickens does he mean by a trivial lum? — But ha'n't you found it, sir? Congreve.

DICKER of Leather. n. f. [dicra, low Lat.] Ten hides. DiD.

To DICTATE. v. a. [dicere, Lat.] To deliver to another with authority; to declare with confidence.

The spoils of elephants the roofs inlay, And studded amber darts a golden ray; Such, and not nobler, in the realms above, My wonder dictates is the dome of Jove. Pope. Whatsoever is dictated to us by God himself, or by men who are divinely inspired, must be believed with full assurance. Watts.

DICTATE. n. f. [dictatum, Lat.] Rule or maxim delivered with authority; prescription; prescript.

Those right helps of art, which will scarce be found by those who servilely confine themselves to the dictates of others. Locke.

I credit what the Grecian dictates say, And Samian sounds o'er Scota's hills convey. Prior.

Then let this dictate of my love prevail. Pope.

DICTATION. n. f. [from dicere.] The act or practice of dictating or prescribing. DiD.

DICTATOR. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A magistrate of Rome, made in times of exigence and distress, and invested with absolute authority.

Kind dictators made, when they came home, Their vanquish'd toes free citizens of Rome. Waller.

Julius with honour tam'd Rome's foreign foes;

But patriots fell, ere the dictator rose. Prior.

2. One invested with absolute authority. Unanimous they all commit the care And management of this main enterprise To him, their great dictator. Milton.

3. One whose credit or authority enables him to direct the conduct or opinion of others.

Nor is it a small power it gives one man over another, to have the authority to be the dictator of principles, and teacher of unquestionable truths. Locke.

That riches, honours, and outward splendour, should set up persons for dictators to all the rest of mankind, is a most shameful invasion of the right of our understanding. Watts.

DICTATORIAL. adj. [from dictator.] Authoritative; confident; dogmatical; overbearing.

A young academick often dwells upon a journal, or an observator that treats of trade and politicks in a dictatorial stile, and is lavish in the praise of the author. Watts.

DICTATORSHIP. n. f. [from dictator.]

1. The office of dictator. This is the solemnest title they can confer under the princedom, being indeed a kind of dictatorship. Watson.

2. Authority; insolent confidence. This is that perpetual dictatorship which is exercised by Lucretius, though often in the wrong. Dryden.

DICTATURE. n. f. [dictatura, Latin.] The office of a dictator; dictatorship. DiD.

DICTION. n. f. [dicere, French; dicere, Lat.] Style; language; expression. There appears in every part of his dicere, or expression, a kind of noble and bold purity. Dryden.

DICTIONARY. n. f. [diccionarium, Lat.] A book containing the words of any language in alphabetical order, with explanations of their meaning; a lexicon; a vocabulary; a word-book. Some have delivered the polity of spirits, and left an account that they stand in awe of charms, spells, and conjurations; that they are afraid of letters and characters, notes and dashes, which, set together, do signify nothing; and not only in the dictionary of man, but in the subtler vocabulary of Satan. Brown's Vulgar Errours.

Is it such a fault to translate simulacra images? I see what a good thing it is to have a good catholic dictionary. Stillingfleet.

An army, or a parliament, is a collection of men; a dictionary, or nomenclature, is a collection of words. Watts.

DID. of do. [did, Saxon.]

1. The preterit of do. Thou canst not say I did it. Shakspeare. What did that greatness in a woman's mind? Ill lodg'd, and weak to act what it design'd. Dryden.

2. The sign of the preter-imperfect tense, or perfect. When did his pen on learning fix a brand, Or rail at arts he did not understand? Dryden.

3. It is sometimes used emphatically: as I did really love him.

DIDACTICAL. } adj. [διδασκαλικος.] Pre-DIDACTICK. } ceptive; giving precepts: as a didactic poem is a poem that gives rules for some art; as the Georgicks.

The means used to this purpose are partly didactical, and partly protreptical; demonstrating the truth of the gospel, and then urging the professors of those truths to be steadfast in the faith, and to beware of infidelity. War on Infid.

DI'DAPPER. n. f. [from dip.] A bird that dives into the water.

DIDASCA'LICK. adj. [διδασκαλικός] Preceptive; didactic; giving precepts in some art.

I found it necessary to form some story, and give a kind of body to the poem: under what species it may be comprehended, whether didactical or heroick, I leave to the judgment of the critics. Prior.

TO DI'DDER. v. a. [diddern, Teut. zittern, Germ.] To quake with cold; to shiver. A provincial word. Skinner.

DIDST. The second person of the preter tense of do. See DID.

Oh last and best of Scots! who didst maintain Thy country's freedom from a foreign reign. Dryden.

DIDU'CTION. n. f. [diductio, Latin.] Separation by withdrawing one part from the other.

He ought to shew what kind of strings they are, which, though strongly fastened to the inside of the receiver and superficies of the bladder, must draw as forcibly one as another, in comparison of those that within the bladder draw to as to hinder the diduction of its sides. Boyle.

TO DIE. v. a. [beag, Saxon, a colour.] To tinge; to colour; to stain.

So much of death her thoughts
Had entertain'd, as died her cheeks with pale. Milton.

All white, a virgin faint she fought the skies;
For marriage, though it sullies not, it dies. Dryden.

DIE. n. f. [from the verb.] Colour; tincture; stain; hue acquired.

It will help me nothing
To plead mine innocence; for that die is on me,
Which makes my whit'nt part black. Shaksp.

We have dainty works of feathers of wonderful lustre, excellent dies, and many. Bacon.
Darkness we see emerges into light,
And shining suns descend to sable night:
Ev'n heav'n itself receives another die,
When wearied animals in slumbers lie
Of midnight ease; another, when the grey
Of morn precludes the splendor of the day. Dryden.

It is surprising to see the images of the mind stamped upon the aspect; to see the cheeks take the die of the passions, and appear in all the colours of thought. Collier of the Aspect.

TO DIE. v. n. [beadian, Sax.]

1. To lose life; to expire; to pass into another state of existence.

Thou dost kill me with thy falsehood; and it grieves me not to die, but it grieves me that thou art the murderer. Sibbey.
Nor did the third his conquests long survive,
Dying ere scarce he had begun to live. Addison.

Oh let me live my own, and die too!
To live and die is all I have to do. Denham.

2. To perish by violence or disease.

The dira only served to confirm him in his first opinion, that it was his destiny to die in the ensuing combat. Dryden.
Talk not of life or ransom, he replies;
Patroclus dead, whoever meets me, dies:
In vain a single Trojan sues for grace;
But least the sons of Priam's hateful race:
Die then, my friend! what boots it to deplore?
The great, the good Patroclus is no more!

He, far thy better, was foredoom'd to die;
And thou, dost thou, bewail mortality? Pope.

3. It has by before an instrument of death.
Their young men shall die by the sword; their sons and daughters shall die by famine. Jerem.

4. Of before a disease.
They often come into the world clear, and with the appearance of sound bodies; which, notwithstanding, have been infected with disease, and have died of it, or at least have been very infirm. Wisdeman.

5. For commonly before a privative, and of before a positive cause: these prepositions are not always truly distinguished.

At first she startles, then she stands amaz'd;
At last with terror she from thence doth fly,
And loaths the wat'ry glass wherein she gaz'd,
And thuns it still, altho' for thirst she dies. Darvies.

He in the laden vineyard dies for thirst. Addison.

Hipparchus being passionately fond of his own wife, who was enamoured of Bathyllus, leaped and died of his fall. Addison.

6. To be punished with death.

If I die for it, as no less is threatened me, the king my old master must be relieved. Shaksp.
What is the love of our neighbour?—
—The valuing him as the image of God, one for whom Christ died. Hammoud.

7. To be lost; to perish; to come to nothing.

How now, my lord, why do you keep alone?
Of sorriest fancies your companion making,
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on. Shakspere's Macbeth.

If any sovereignty, on account of his property, had been vested in Adam, which in truth there was not, it would have died with him. Locke.

Whatever pleasure any man may take in spreading whispers, he will find greater satisfaction by letting the secret die within his own breast. Speetator.

8. To sink; to faint.

His heart died within him, and he became as a stone. Samuel.

9. [In theology.] To perish everlastingly.

So long as God shall live, so long shall the damned die. Hakerwill on Providence.

10. To languish with pleasure or tenderness.

To sounds of heav'nly harps she dies away,
And melts in visions of eternal day. Pope.

11. To vanish.

This battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light. Shakspere.

The smaller stains and blemishes may die away and disappear, amidst the brightness that surrounds them; but a blot of a deeper nature casts a shade on all the other beauties, and darkens the whole character. Addison's Speetator.

12. [In the style of lovers.] To languish with affection.

The young men acknowledged, in love-letters, that they died for Rebecca. Tatler.

13. To wither, as a vegetable.

Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground, and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit. John.

14. To grow rapid, as liquor.

DIE. n. f. pl. dice. [dē, Fr. dis, Welsh.]

1. A small cube, marked on its faces with numbers from one to six, which gamblers throw in play.

Keep a gameller from the dice, and a good student from his book, and it is wonderful. Shakspere.

I have set my life upon a cast,
And I will stand the hazard of the die. Shaksp.
He knows which way the lot and the die shall fall, as perfectly as if they were already cast. South.

2. Hazard; chance.
Eftsoons his cruel hand sir Guyon staid,
Temp'ring the passion with advisement slow,
And must'ring might on enemy dismay'd;
For th' equal die of war he well did know. Fairy Queen.

So both to battle fierce arranged are;
In which his harder fortune was to fall
Under my spear: such is the die of war. Fairy Queen.

Thine is th' adventure, thine the victory:
Well has thy fortune turn'd the die for thee. Dryden.

3. Any cubick body.
Young creatures have learned spelling of words by having them pass'd upon little flat tablets or dies. Watts.

DIE. n. f. plur. dies. The stamp used in coinage.

Such variety of dies made use of by Wood in stamping his money, makes the discovery of counterfeiters more difficult. Swift.

DI'ER. n. f. [from die.] One who follows the trade of dying; one who dies clothes.

The fleece, that has been by the die stain'd, Never again its native whiteness gain'd. Waller.

There were some of very low rank and professions who acquired great estates: coblers, diers, and shoemakers gave public shows to the people. Arabian on Coins.

DI'ET. n. f. [dista, low Latin; dieta.]

1. Food; provisions for the mouth; victuals.

They cared for no other delicacy of fare, or curiosity of diet, than to maintain life. Raleigh.

Time may come, when men
With angels may participate; and find
No inconvenient diet, nor too light fare. Milton.

No part of diet, in any season, is so healthful, so natural, and so agreeable to the stomach, as good and well-ripened fruits. Temple.

Milk appears to be a proper diet for human bodies, where acrimony is to be purged or avoided; but not where the canals are obstructed, it being void of all saline quality. Arbuthnot.

2. Food regulated by the rules of medicine, for the prevention or cure of any disease.

I commend rather some diet for certain seasons, than frequent use of physick; for those *diet*s alter the body more, and trouble it less. Bacon.

I retrained myself to so regular a diet, as to eat flesh but once a-day, and little at a time, without salt or vinegar. Temple.

3. Allowance of provision.

For his diet, there was a continual diet given him by the king. Jeremiah.

TO DI'ET. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To feed by the rules of medicine.
She *diet*s him with fasting every day,
The swelling of his wounds to mitigate,
And made him pray both early and eke late. Fairy Queen.

Shew a while like fearful war,
To diet rank minds sick of happiness,
And purge th' obstructions which begin to stop
Our very veins of life. Shakspere's Henry iv.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold; and then
We powt upon the murrings, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we've stuff'd
These pipes, and these conveyances of blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priestlike fasts; therefore I'll watch him
Till he be dieted to my request. Shakspere.

I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness; for it is my office. Shaksp.
Henceforth my early care
Shall tend thee, and the fertile burden ease;
Till, dieted by thee, I grow mature
In knowledge as the gods, who all things know. Milton.

We have lived upon expedients, of which no country had less occasion: we have dieted a healthy body into a consumption, by plying it with physick instead of food. Sawjs

2. To give food to.
I'm partly led to diet my revenge,
For that I do suspect the ludy Moor
Hath leapt into my seat. Shakspere's Othello.

3. To board; to supply with diet.
To DI'ET. v. n.

1. To eat by rules of physick.

2. To eat; to feed.
I join with thee calm peace and quiet;
Spare fast, that oft with gods doth diet. Milton.
DI'ET-DRINK. n. f. [diet and drink.]
Medicated liquors; drink brewed with medicinal ingredients.

The observation will do that better than the lady's diet-drinks, or apothecary's medicines. Locke.

DI'ET. n. f. [from dies, an appointed day, Skinner; from diet, an old German word signifying a multitude, Junius.] An assembly of princes or estates.

An emperour in title without territory, who can ordain nothing of importance but by a diet, or assembly of the estates of many free princes, ecclesiastical and temporal. Raleigh.

DI'ETARY. adj. [from diet.] Pertaining to the rules of diet. Diç.

DI'ETER. n. f. [from diet.] One who prescribes rules for eating; one who prepares food by medicinal rules.

He faue'd our broth as Juno had been sick,
And he her dieter. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

DIETETICAL. } adj. [δίαιτητικός.] Re-DIETETICK. } lating to diet; belonging to the medicinal cautions about the use of food.

He received no other counsel than to refrain from cold drink, which was but a dietetical caution, and such as culinary prescription might have afforded. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

This Look of Cheyne's became the subject of conversation, and produced even sects in the dietetick philosophy. Arbuth. on Alim.

To DIFFER. v. n. [diff-ero, Latin.]

1. To be distinguished from; to have properties and qualities not the same with those of another person or thing.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry. Bacon.

Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute. Addison's Cato.

The several parts of the same animal differ in their qualities. Arbuthnot.

2. To contend; to be at variance.

A man of judgment shall sometimes hear ignorant men differ, and know well within himself that those which so differ mean one thing, and yet they themselves never agree. Dunor.

Here uncontroll'd you may in judgment sit;
We'll never differ with a crowd'd pit. Rowe.

3. To be of a contrary opinion.
In things purely speculative, as these are, and no ingredients of our faith, it is free to differ from one another in our opinions and sentiments. Burnet's Theory.

There are certain meatures to be kept, which may leave a tendency rather to gain than to irritate those who differ with you in their sentiments. Addison's Freeholder.

Others differ with me about the truth and reality of these speculations. Cheyne.

DI'FFERENCE. n. f. [differentia, Latin.]

1. State of being distinct from something; contrariety to identity.

Where the faith of the holy church is one, a diff-erence between customs of the church doth no harm. Hooker.

2. The quality by which one differs from another.

This nobility, or diff-erence from the vulgar, was not in the beginning given to the succession of blood, but to the succession of virtue. Raleigh.

Thus, born alike, from virtue first began
The diff-erence that distinguish'd man from man:
He claim'd no title from descent of blood;
But that, which made him noble, made him good. Dryden.

Though it be useful to discern every variety that is to be found in nature, yet it is not convenient to consider every diff-erence that is in things, and divide them into distinct classes under every such diff-erence. Locke.

3. The disproportion between one thing and another, caused by the qualities of each.

You shall see great diff-erence betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia. Shakspere's Winter's Tale.

Oh the strange diff-erence of man and man!
To thee a woman's services are due;
My fool usurps my body. Shaksp. King Lear.

Here might be seen a great diff-erence between men practis'd to fight, and men accustomed only to spoil. Hayward.

4. Dispute; debate; quarrel; controversy.

What was the diff-erence?—It was a contention in publick. Shakspere's Cymbeline.

He is weary of his life, that hath a diff-erence with any of them, and will walk abroad after daylight. Samtys.

Nothing could have fallen out more unluckily than that there should be such diff-erences among them about that which they pretend to be the only means of ending diff-erences. Tillotson.

5. Distinction.

Our constitution does not only make a diff-er-ence between the guilty and the innocent, but, even among the guilty, between such as are more or less criminal. Addison's Freeholder.

6. Point in question; ground of controversy.

Are you acquainted with the diff-erence
That holds this present question in the court?
Shakspere.

7. A logical distinction.

Some are never without a diff-erence; and commonly, by amusing men with a subtilty, blanch
the matter. Bacon.

8. Evidences of distinction; differential marks.

Henry had the title of sovereign, yet did not put those things in execution which are the true marks and diff-erences of sovereignty. Darvies.

9. Distinct kind.

This is notoriously known in some diff-erences of break or tern. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

To DI'FFERENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To cause a diff-erence; to make one thing not the same as another.

Most are apt to seek all the diff-erences of letters in those articulating motions; whereas feveral combinations of letters are framed by the very same motions of those organs which are commonly observed, and are diff-erenced by other concurrent causes. Holler.

Grass diff-erences a civil and well cultivated region from a barren and desolate wilderness. Koy.

We see nothing that diff-erences the courage of Mæchethus from that of Sergethus. Pepci.

DI'FFERENT. adj. [from differ.]

1. Distinct; not the same.

There are covered galleries that lead from the palace to five diff-erent churches. Addison.

2. Of contrary qualities.

The Britons change
Sweet native home for unaccustom'd air,
And other climes, where diff-erent food and soil Portend dittempers. Philips.

3. Unlike; dissimilar.

Neither the shape of faces, nor the age, nor the colour, ought to be alike in all figures, any more than the hair; because men are as diff-erent from each other, as the regions in which they are born are diff-erent. Dryden's Dufresney.

Happiness consists in things which produce pleasure, and in the absence of those which cause any pain: now these, to diff-erent men, are very diff-erent things. Locke.

DIFFERENTIAL Method, is applied to the doctrine of infinitesimals, or infinitely small quantities, called the arithmetick of fluxions. It consists in descending from whole quantities to their infinitely small differences, and comparing together these infinitely small differences, of what kind soever they be: and from thence it takes the name of the differential calculus, or analysis of infinitesimals. Harris.

DI'FFERENTLY. adv. [from diff-erent.] In a different manner.

He may consider how diff-erently he is affected by the same thought, which presents itself in a great writer, from what he is when he finds it delivered by an ordinary genius. Addison.

DI'FFERINGLY. adv. [from differing.]
In a different manner.

Such protuberant and concave parts of a surface may remit the light to diff-erentially, as to vary a colour. Boyle.

DIFFICIL. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Difficult; hard; not easy; not obvious. Little used.

That that should give motion to an unweildy bulk, which itself hath neither bulk nor motion, is of as difficil apprehension as any mystery in nature. Glauville's Sceptis.

Latin was not more difficil,
Than to a blackbird 'tis to whistle. Hudibras.

2. Scrupulous; hard to be persuaded.

The cardinal finding the pope difficil in granting the dispensation, doth use it as a principal argument, concerning the king's merit, that he had touch'd none of those deniers which had been levied by popes in England. Bacon.

DIFFICILNESS. n. f. [from difficil.] Dif-culty to be persuaded; incompliance; impracticability. A word not in use, but proper.

There be that in their nature do not affect the good of others: the lighter sort of malignity turneth but to a crossness, or frowardness, or aptness to oppose, or difficilnes, or the like;
but the deeper sort, to envy and mere mischief. Bacon.

DIFFICULT. adj. [difficilis, Latin.]

1. Hard; not easy; not facil.

It is difficil in the eyes of this people. Zachar.

2. Troublesome; vexatious.

3. Hard to please; peevish; morose.

DI'FFICULTY. adv. [from difficil.]

Hardly; with difficulty; not easily.
A man, who has always indulged himself in the full enjoyment of his station, will difficil be persuaded to think any methods unjust that offer to continue it. Fogers's Sermons.

DIFFICULTY. n. f. [from difficult; difficulté, French.]

1. Hardness; contrariety to easiness or facility.

The religion which, by this covenant, we engage ourselves to observe, is a work of labour and difficulty; a service that requires our greatest care and attention. Rogers.

2. That which is hard to accomplish; that which is not easy.

They mistake difficulties for impossibilities: a penurious mistake certainly; and the more penurious, for that men are seldom convinced of it, till their convictions do them no good. South.

3. Distress; opposition.

Thus, by degrees, he rose to Jove's imperial seat: Thus difficulties prove a soul legitimately great. Dryden.

4. Perplexity in affairs; uneasiness of circumstances.

They lie under some difficulties by reason of the emperor's displeasure, who has forbidden their manufactures. Adison on Italy.

5. Objection; cavil.

Men should consider, that raising difficulties concerning the mysteries in religion, cannot make them more wise, learned, or virtuous. Swift.

To DIFFIDE. v. n. [diffido, Latin.]

To distrust; to have no confidence in.

With hope and fear

The woman did the new solution hear:

The man diffides in his own augury,

And doubts the gods. Dryden.

DIFFIDENCE. n. f. [from diffide.]

1. Distrust; want of confidence in others.

No man almost thought himself secure, and men durst scarce commune or talk one with another; but there was a general diffidence every where. Bacon's Henry VII.

You have brought scandal

To Israel, diffidence of God, and doubt

In feeble hearts, propens enough before

To waver. Milton's Agonistes.

2. Doubt; want of confidence in ourselves.

If the evidence of its being, or that this is its true sense, be only on probable proofs, our assent can reach no higher than an assurance or diffidence arising from the more or less apparent probability of the proofs. Locke.

Be silent always when you doubt your sense; And speak, though sure, with seeming diffidence. Pope.

Whatsoever atheists think on, or whatsoever they look on, all do administer some reasons for suspicion and diffidence, lest possibly they may be in the wrong; and then it is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living God. Bentley.

DIFFIDENT. adj. [from diffide.]

1. Distrustful; doubting others.

Be not diffident

Of wisdom; she deserts thee not, if thou

Dismiss not her, when moist thou need'st her nigh. Milton.

Pliny speaks of the Seres, the same people with the Chinese, as being very shy and diffident in their manner of dealing. Asbathnot.

2. Doubtful of an event, used of things; uncertain.

I was really so diffident of it, as to let it lie by me these two years, just as you now see it. Pope.

3. Doubtful of himself; not confident.

I am not so confident of my own sufficiency, as not willingly to admit the counsel of others; but yet I am not so diffident of myself, as brashly to submit to any man's dictates. King Charles.

Distress makes the humble heart diffident.

Clarissa.

To DIFFIND. v. a. [diffindo, Latin.]

To cleave in two; to split. Diç.

DIFFISSION. n. f. [diffusio, Latin.] The act of cleaving or splitting. Diç.

DIFFLATION. n. f. [difflare, Lat.] The act of scattering with a blast of wind. Diç.

DIFFLUENCE. } n. f. [from diffluo, Latin.]

DIFFLUENCY. } The quality of falling away on all sides; the effect of fluidity; the contrary to confistency.

Ice is water congealed by the frugidity of the air, whereby it acquirith no new form, but rather a consistence or determination of its diffuency; and amitteth not its essence, but condition of fluidity. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIFFLUENT. adj. [diffluens, Lat.] Flowing every way; not consistent; not fixed.

DIFORM. adj. [from forma, Latin.]

Contrary to uniform; having parts of different structure; dissimilar; unlike; irregular: as, a diform flower, one of which the leaves are unlike each other.

The unequal refractions of diform rays proceed not from any contingent irregularities; such as are veins, an uneven polish, or fortuitous position of the pores of glass. Newton.

DIFORMITY. n. f. [from diform.] Diversity of form; irregularity; dissimilitude.

While they murmur against the present disposition of things, they desire in them a diformity from the primitive rule, and the idea of that mind that formed all things best. Brown.

DIFFRANCHISEMENT. n. f. [franchise, French.] The act of taking away the privileges of a city.

To DIFFUSE. v. a. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. To pour out upon a plane, so that the liquor may run every way; to pour without particular direction.

When these waters began to rise at first, long before they could swell to the height of the mountains, they would diffuse themselves every way. Burnet's Theory.

2. To spread; to scatter; to disperse.

Wisdom had ordain'd

Good out of evil to create; instead

Of spirits malign, a better race to bring

Into their vacant room, and thence diffuse

His good to worlds, and ages, infinite. Milton.

No sect wants its apostles to propagate and diffuse it. Decay of Piety.

A chief renown'd in war,

Whose race shall bear aloft the Latian name,

And through the conquer'd world diffuse our name. Dryden.

His eyes diffus'd a venerable grace,

And charity itself was in his face. Dryden.

DIFFUSE. adj. [diffusus, Latin.]

1. Scattered; widely spread.

2. Copious; not concise.

DIFFUSED. participial adj. [from diffuse.]

This word seems to have signified, in Shakspeare's time, the same as wild, uncouth, irregular.

Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once,

With some diffused songs. Shakspeare.

He grows like savages,

To swearing and stern looks, diffus'd attire,

And every thing that seems unnatural. Shakspeare.

DIFFUSEDLY. adv. [from diffused.]

Widely; dispersedly; in manner of that which is spread every way.

DIFFUSEDNESS. n. f. [from diffused.]

The state of being diffused; dispersion.

DIFFUSELY. adv. [from diffuse.]

1. Widely; extensively.

2. Copiously; not concisely.

DIFFUSION. n. f. [from diffuse.]

1. Dispersion; the state of being scattered every way.

Whereas all bodies act either by the communication of their natures, or by the impressions and signatures of their motions, the diffusion of species visible seemeth to participate more of the former operation, and the species audible of the latter. Bacon's Natural History.

A sheet of very well bleeked marbled paper did not cast distinct colours upon the wall, nor throw its light with an equal diffusion; but threw its beams, unstained and bright, to this and that part of the wall. Boyle on Colours.

2. Copiousness; exuberance of style.

DIFFUSIVE. adj. [from diffuse.]

1. Having the quality of scattering any thing every way.

Diffusive of themselves, where'er they pass

They make that warmth in others they expect:

Their valour works like bodies on a glass,

And does its image on their men project. Dryden.

2. Scattered; dispersed; having the quality of suffering dissolution.

All liquid bodies are diffusive; for their parts, being in motion, have no connexion, but glide and fall off any way. Burnet.

No man is of so general and diffusive a lust, as to prosecute his amours all the world over. South.

The stars, no longer overlaid with weight,

Exert their heads from underneath the mafs,

And upward soar, and kindle as they pass,

And with diffusive light adorn their heav'nly place. Dryden.

Cherish'd with hope, and fed with joy it grows;

Its cheerful buds their opening bloom disclose,

And round the happy soil diffusive odour flows. Prior.

3. Extended.

They are not agreed among themselves where infallibility is seated; whether in the pope alone, or a council alone, or in both together, or in the diffusive body of christians. Tillotson.

DIFFUSIVELY. adv. [from diffusive.]

Widely; extensively; every way.

DIFFUSIVENESS. n. f. [from diffusive.]

1. Extension; dispersion; the power of diffusing; the state of being diffused.

2. Want of conciseness; large compass of expression.

The fault that I find with a modern legend is its diffusiveness: you have sometimes the whole side of a medal over-run with it. Adliff on Med.

To DIG. v. a. pret. dug, or digged; part. pass. dug, or digged. [DIE, Saxon, a ditch; dyger, Danish, to dig.]

1. To pierce with a spadé.

Then said he unto me, Son of man, dig now in the wall; and when I had digged in the wall,

I beheld a door. Ezekiel.

2. To form by digging.

Seek with heart and mouth to build up the walls of Jerusalem, which you have broken down; and to fill up the mines that you have digged, by craft and subtilty, to overthrow the same. Whitgift.

He built towers in the desert, and digged many wells; for he had much cattle. 2 Chronicles.

3. To cultivate the ground by turning it with a spade.

The walls of your garden, without their furniture, look as ill as those of your house; so that you cannot dig up your garden too often. Temple.

Be first to dig the ground, be first to burn

The branches lopt. Dryden's Virgil.

4. To pierce with a sharp point.

A rav'nous vulture in his open'd side

Hot crooked beak and cruel talons tried;

Still for the growing liver digg'd his breast,
The growing liver still supplied the feast. Dryd.
5. To gain by digging.

It is digg'd out of even the highest mountains, and all parts of the earth contingently; as the pyrites. Woodward.

Nor was the ground alone requir'd to bear
Her annual income to the crooked share;
But greedy mortals, rummaging her store,
Digg'd from her entrails first the precious ore.
Dryden's Ovid.

To DIG. v. n. To work with a spade; to work in making holes, or turning the ground.

They long for death, but it cometh not; and dig for it more than for hid treasures. Joh.

The Italians have often dug into lands, described in old authors as the places where statues or obelisks stood, and seldom failed of success.
Adison's Travels.

To DIG up. v. a. To throw up that which is covered with earth.

If I digg'd up thy forefathers graves,
And hung their rotten coffins up in chains,
It would not shake mine ire. Shakspeare.

DIGAMY. n. f. [δυγαμία.] Second marriage; marriage to a second wife after the death of the first: as bigamy, having two wives at once.

Dr. Champny only proves, that archbishop Cranmer was twice married; which is not denied: but brings nothing to prove that such bigamy, or digamy rather, deprives a bishop of the lawful use of his power of ordaining.
Bishop Ferne.

DIGERENT. adj. [digerens, Latin.] That has the power of digesting, or causing digestion. Diſt.

DIGEST. n. f. [digesta, Latin.] The pandect of the civil law, containing the opinions of the ancient lawyers.

I had a purpose to make a particular digest, or recompilement to the laws of mine own nation.
Bacon.

Laws in the digest shew that the Romans applied themselves to trade. Arbutnot on Coins.

To DIGEST. v. a. [digero, digestum,
Latin.]

1. To distribute into various classes or repositories; to range or dispose methodically.

2. To concoct in the stomach, so as that the various particles of food may be applied to their proper use.

If little faults, proceeding on distemper, Shall not be wink'd at, how shall we stretch our eye,
When capital crimes chew'd, swallow'd, and digested,

Appear? Shakspeare's Henry v.
Each then has organs to digest his food;
One to beget, and one receive, the brood. Prior.

3. To soften by heat, as in a boiler, or in a dunghil: a chymical term.

4. To range methodically in the mind; to apply knowledge by meditation to its proper use.

Chosen friends, with sense refin'd,
Learning digested well. Thomson.

5. To reduce to any plan, scheme, or method.

Our play
Leaps o'er the vauit and firrings of those broils,
'Ginning i' th' middle: starting thence away
To what may be digested in a play. Shakspeare.

6. To receive without loathing or repugnance; not to reject.

First, let us go to dinner.
—Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.
—No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk;

Then, howsoever thou speak'st, 'mongst other things

I shall digest it. Shakspeare's Mer. of Ven.

The pleasure of numbers is, that rudeness and barbarism might the better taste and digest the lessons of civility. Peachment.

7. To receive and enjoy.

Cornwal and Albany,
With my two daughters dowers, digest the third.
Shakspeare.

8. [In chirurgery.] To dispose a wound to generate pus in order to a cure.

To DIGEST. v. n. To generate matter, as a wound, and tend to a cure.

DIGESTER. n. f. [from digest.]

1. He that digests or disposes.

2. He that digests or concocts his food.
People that are bilious and fat, rather than lean, are great eaters and ill digesters. Arbut.

3. A strong vessel or engine, contrived by M. Papin, wherein to boil, with a very strong heat, any bony substances, so as to reduce them into a fluid state. Quincy.

4. That which causes or strengthens the concoctive power.

Rice is of excellent use for all illnesses of the stomach, a great restorer of health, and a great digester. Temple.

DIGESTIBLE. adj. [from digest.] Capable of being digested or concocted.

Those medicines that purge by stool are, at the first, not digestible by the stomach, and therefore move immediately downwards to the guts.
Bacon's Natural History.

DIGESTION. n. f. [from digest.]

1. The act of digesting or concocting food in the stomach.

Now good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both. Shakspeare's Macbeth.

Digestion is a fermentation begun, because there are all the requisites of such a fermentation;
heat, air, and motion: but it is not a complete fermentation, because that requires a greater time than the continuance of the aliment in the stomach: vegetable putrefaction resembles very much animal digestion. Arbutnot on Aliments.

Quantity of food cannot be determined by measures and weights, or any general Lessian rules; but must vary with the vigour or decays of age or of health, and the use or disuse of air or of exercise, with the changes of appetite; and then, by what every man may find or suspect of the present strength or weakness of digestion.

Every morsel to a satisfied hunger, is only a new labour to a tired digestion. South.

2. The preparation of matter by a chymical heat.

We conceive, indeed, that a perfect good concoction, or digestion, or maturation of some metals, will produce gold. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

Did chymick chance the furnaces prepare,
Raise all the labour-houses of the air,
And lay crude vapours in digestion there?
Blackmore.

3. Reduction to a plan; the act of meth-odising; the maturation of a design.

The digestion of the counsels in Sweden is made in senate, consisting of forty counsellors, who are generally the greatest men. Temple.

4. The act of disposing a wound to generate matter.

5. The disposition of a wound or sore to generate matter.

The first stage of healing, or the discharge of matter, is by surgeons called digestion. Sharp.

DIGESTIVE. adj. [from digest.]

1. Having the power to cause digestion, or to strengthen the stomach.

A chillsfactory menstruum, or a digestive preparation, drawn from species or individuals, whose stomachs peculiarly dissolve lapidous bodies. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. Capable by heat to soften and subdue.

The earth and sun were in that very state; the one active, piercing, and digestive, by its heat;
the other passive, receptive, and stored with materials for such a production. Hall.

3. Methodising; adjusting.

To business, ripen'd by digestive thought,
This future rule is into method brought. Dryd.

DIGESTIVE. n. f. [from digest.] An application which disposes a wound to generate matter.

I dressed it with digestives. Wiseman.

DIGESTURE. n. f. Concoction. Not used.

Neither tie yourself always to eat meats of easy
digesture; such as veal, sweetbreads. Harvey.

DIGGER. n. f. [from dig.] One that opens the ground with a spade.

When we visited mines, we have been told by diggers, that even when the sky seemed clear, there would suddenly arise a steam so thick, that it would put out their candles. Boyle.

To DIGHT. v. a. [Sihitan, to prepare, to regulate, Saxon.]

1. To dress; to deck; to bedeck; to embellish; to adorn. It seems always to signify the past: the particle passive is dight, as digthed in Hudibras is perhaps improper.

Let my due feet never fail
To walk the stuidious cloisters pale;
And love the high embow'd roof,
With antick pillar, massy proof;

And storied windows richly dight,
Casting a dim religious light. Milton.

Just to the proud insulting lass Array'd and dighted Hudibras. Hudibras.

2. To put on.

On his head his dreadful hat he dight,
Which maketh him invisible to fight. Hubb. Tale.

DIGIT. n. f. [digitus, Latin.]

1. The measure of length containing three fourths of an inch.

If the inverted tube of mercury be but twenty-five digits high, or somewhat more, the quick-silver will not fall, but remain suspended in the tube, because it cannot press the subjacent mercury with so great a force as doth the incumbent cylinder of the air, reaching thence to the top of the atmosphere. Boyle's Spring of the Air.

2. The twelfth part of the diameter of the sun or moon.

3. Any of the numbers expressed by single figures; any number to ten: so called from counting upon the fingers.

Not only the numbers seven and nine, from considerations abstruse, have been extolled by poet, but all or most of other digits have been as mystically applauded. Brown's Vulg. Errors.

DIGITATED. adj. [from digitus, Latin.]
Branched out into divisions like fingers:
as a digitated leaf is a leaf composed of many small leaves.

For animals multiformed, or such as are digiti-tated, or have several divisions in their feet, there are but two that are uniparous; that is, men and elephants. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIGLADIATION. n. f. [digladiatio, Lat.]

A combat with swords; any quarrel or contest.

Aristotle seems purposely to intend the cherishing of controversial digladiations, by his own affection of an intricate obscurity. Glanville.

DIGNIFIED. adj. [from dignify.] Invested with some dignity: it is used chiefly of the clergy.

DIG

Abbots are stiled dignified clerks, as having some dignity in the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DIGNIFICATION. n. f. [from dignify.] Exaltation.

I grant that where a noble and ancient descent and merit meet in any man, it is a double dignification of that person. Walton's Angler.

TO DIGNIFY. v. a. [from dignus and facio, Latin.]

1. To advance; to prefer; to exalt. Used chiefly of the clergy.

2. To honour; to adorn; to give lustre to; to improve by some adventitious excellence, or honourable distinction.

Such a day,
So fought, so follow'd, and so fairly won,
Came not till now to dignify the times
Since Cæsar's fortunes! Shakspeare's Henry IV.
Not that we think us worthy such a guest,
But that your worth will dignify our feast.

Ben Jonson.
No turbot dignify my boards;
But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords. Pope.

DIGNITARY. n. f. [from dignus, Latin.] A clergyman advanced to some dignity, to some rank above that of a parochial priest.

If there be any dignitaries, whose preferments are perhaps not liable to the accusation of superfluity, they may be persons of superior merit. Swift.

DIGNITY. n. f. [dignitas, Latin.]

1. Rank of elevation.
Angels are not any where spoken so highly of as our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, and are not in dignity equal to him. Hooker.

2. Grandeur of mien; elevation of aspect.
Some men have a native dignity, which will procure them more regard by a look, than others can obtain by the most imperious commands. Clarissa.

3. Advancement; preferment; high place.
Faster than spring-time shows comes thought on thought,
And not a thought but thinks on dignity. Shakspeare.
For those of old,
And these late dignities heap'd up to them. Shakspeare.

4. [Among ecclesiasticks.] By a dignity we understand that promotion or preferment to which any jurisdiction is annexed. Ayliffe's Parergon.

5. Maxims; general principles: νευαὶ δοξαί.

The sciences concluding from dignities, and principles known by themselves, receive not satisfaction from probable reasons, much less from bare assertions. Brown.

6. [In astrology.] The planet is in dignity when it is in any sign.

DIGNOTION. n. f. [from dignosco, Lat.] Distinction; distinguishing mark.

That temperamental dignotions, and conjecture of prevalent humours, may be collected from spots in our nails, we are not averie to concede. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

TO DIGRESS. v. n. [digressus, Latin.]

1. To turn aside out of the road.

2. To depart from the main design of a discourse, or chief tenour of an argument.
In the pursuit of an argument there is hardly room to digress into a particular definition, as often as a man varies the signification of any term. Locke.

3. To wander; to expatiate.
It seemeth (to digress no farther) that the Tartarians, spreading so far, cannot be the Israelites. Brerewood.

4. To go out of the right way, or common track; to transgress; to deviate. Not in use.

DIL

I am come to keep my word,
Though in some part am forced to digress,
Which at more leisure I will excuse
As you shall well be satisfied. Shakspeare.

Thy noble shape is but a form of wax,
Digressing from the valour of a man. Shakspeare.

DIGRESSION. n. f. [digressio, Latin.]

1. A passage deviating from the main tenour or design of a discourse.
The good man thought so much of his late conceived commonwealth, that all other matters were but digressions to him. Sidney.

He, the knew, would intermix
Grateful digressions, and solve high dispute
With conjugal cares. Milton.

Here some digression I must make, t' accuse Thee, my forgetful and ungrateful mate. Denham.

To content and fill the eye of the understanding, the best authors sprinkle their works with pleasing digressions, with which they recreate the minds of their readers. Dryden.

2. Deviation.

The digression of the sun is not equal; but, near the equinoctial interfections, it is right and greater; near the solstices more oblique and lesser. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DIJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judicial distinction.

DIKE. n. f. [dic, Saxon; dyk, Erse.]

1. A channel to receive water.
The dykes are fill'd, and with a roaring sound
The rising rivers float the nether ground. Dryden.
The king of dykes! than whom no sluice of mud
With deeper fable hots the silver flood. Pope.

2. A mound to hinder inundations.
God, that breaks up the flood-gates of so great a deluge, and all the art and industry of man is not sufficient to raise up dykes and ramparts against it. Cowley.

TO DILACERATE. v. a. [dilaceratio, Latin.] To tear; to rend; to force in two.

The infant, at the accomplished period, struggling to come forth, dilacerates and breaks those parts which restrained him before. Brown.

DILACERATION. n. f. [from dilaceratio, Latin.] The act of rending in two.

The greatest sensation of pain is by the obstruction of the small vessels, and dilaceration of the nervous fibres. Arbuthnot.

TO DILANIATE. v. a. [dilatio, Lat.] To tear; to rend in pieces.

Rather than they would dilaniate the entrails of their own mother, and expose her thereby to be ravished, they met half way in a gallant kind. Howel's England's Tears.

TO DILAPIDATE. v. n. [dilapido, Latin.] To go to ruin; to fall by decay.

DILAPIDATION. n. f. [dilapidatio, Lat.] The incumbent's suffering the chancel, or any other edifices of his ecclesiastical living, to go to ruin or decay, by neglecting to repair the same: and it likewise extends to his committing, or suffering to be committed, any willful waste in or upon the glebe-woods, or any other inheritance of the church. Ayliffe's Parergon.

'Tis the duty of all church-wardens to prevent the dilapidations of the chancel and mansion-house belonging to the rector or vicar. Ayliffe.

DILATABILITY. n. f. [from dilatabile.] The quality of admitting extension.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the gullets of serpents: I have taken two adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray.

By this continual contractibility and dilatability, by different degrees of heat, the air is kept in a constant motion. Arbuthnot.

DILATABLE. adj. [from dilate.] Capable of extension.

The windpipe divides itself into a great number of branches, called bronchia: these end in small air bladders, dilatable and contractible, capable to be inflated by the admission of air, and to subside at the expulsion of it. Arbuthnot.

DILATION. n. f. [from dilatatio, Lat.]

1. The act of extending into greater space: opposed to contraction.

The motions of the tongue, by contraction and dilatation, are so easy and so subtle, that you can hardly conceive or distinguish them aright. Holder.

2. The state of being extended; the state in which the parts are at more distance from each other.

Joy causeth a cheerfulness and vigour in the eyes; singing, leaping, dancing, and sometimes tears: all these are the effects of the dilatation, and coming forth of the spirits into the outward parts. Bacon's Natural History.

The image of the sun should be drawn out into an oblong form, either by a dilatation of every ray, or by any other casual inequality of the refractions. Newton.

TO DILATE. v. a. [dilato, Latin.]

1. To extend; to spread out; to enlarge: opposed to contract.

But ye thereby much greater glory gate,
Than had ye sought with a prince's peer;
For now your light doth more itself dilate,
And in my darkness greater doth appear. Spenser.

Satan alarm'd,
Collecting all his might, dilated flood,
Like Teneriff, or Atlas, unremov'd. Milton.

Opener of mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart,
And growing up to godhead: which for thee
Chiefly I fought; without thee can despise. Milton.

Through all the air his founding strings dilate
Sorrow, like that which touch'd our hearts of late. Waller.

Diffus'd, it rises in a higher sphere;
Dilates its drops, and softens into air. Prior.

I mark the various fury of the winds;
These neither seasons guide, nor order binds;
They now dilate and now contract their force;
Various their speed, but endless is their course. Prior.

The second refraction would spread the rays one way as much as the first doth another, and dilate the image in breadth as much as the first doth in length. Newton.

2. To relate at large; to tell diffusely and copiously.

But he would not endure that woful theam
For to dilate at large; but urg'd sore,
With piercing words, and piteous implore,
Him hasty to arise. Fairy Queen.

I observing,
Took once a pliant hour, and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not distinctly. Shakspeare's Othello.

TO DILATE. v. n.

1. To widen; to grow wide.
His heart dilates and glories in his strength. Addison.

2. To speak largely and copiously.
It may be behoveful for princes, in matters of grace, to transact the same publicly, and by themselves; or their ministers to dilate upon it, and improve their lustre, by any addition or eloquence of speech, Clarendon.

DILATOR. n. f. [from dilate.] That which widens or extends.

The buccinators, or blowers up of the cheeks, and the dilators of the nose, are too strong in choleric people.

DILATORINESS. n. f. [from dilatory.] The quality of being dilatory; slowness; sluggishness.

DILATORY. adj. [dilatatoire, Fr. dilatatorius, Lat.] Tardy; slow; given to procrastination; addicted to delay; sluggish; loitering.

An inferior council, after former tedious suits in a higher court, would be but dilatory, and so to little purpose.

What wonder did ever heal but by degrees? Thou know'st we work by wit, and not by witchcraft?

And wit depends on dilatory time. Shakspeare.

These cardinals tulle with me; I abhor This dilatory sloth, and tricks of Rome. Shakspeare.

Dilatory fortune plays the jilt With the brave, nooble, honest, gallant man, To throw herself away on tools and knaves.

A dilatory temper commits innumerable cruelties without design.

DILECTION. n. f. [dilectio, Latin.] The act of loving; kindness.

So free is Christ's dilection, that the grand condition of our felicity is our belief.

DILEMMA. n. f. [δῆλονμα.]

1. An argument equally conclusive by contrary suppositions. A young rhetorician applied to an old sophist to be taught the art of pleading, and bargained for a certain reward to be paid, when he should gain a cause. The master sued for his reward, and the scholar endeavoured to elude his claim by a dilemma: If I gain my cause, I shall withhold your pay, because the judge's award will be against you; if I lose it, I may withhold it, because I shall not yet have gained a cause. On the contrary, says the master, if you gain your cause, you must pay me, because you are to pay me when you gain a cause; if you lose it, you must pay me, because the judge will award it.

A dilemma, that Morton used to raise benevolence, some called his fork, and some his crotch.

Hope, whose weak being ruin'd is Alike if it succeed, and if it miss; Whom good or ill does equally confound, And both the horns of fate's dilemma wound.

2. A difficult or doubtful choice; a vexatious alternative.

A strong dilemma in a desperate case!

To act with int'my, or quit the place.

A dire dilemma, either way I'm sped;

If foes they write, if friends they read, no dead.

DILIGENCE. n. f. [diligentia, Latin.] Industry; assiduity; constancy in business; continuance of endeavour; uninterrupted application; the contrary to idleness.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me.

Brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure.

DILIGENT. adj. [diligens, Latin.]

1. Constant in application; persevering in endeavour; assiduous; not idle; not negligent; not lazy.

See'st thou a man diligent in his business, he shall stand before kings.

1. Clear; not opaque.

2. Clear; plain; not obscure.

To DILUCIDATE. v. a. [from dilucidare, Latin.] To make clear or plain; to explain; to free from obscurity.

I shall not extenuate, but explain and dilucidate, according to the custom of the ancients.

DILUCIDATION. n. f. [from dilucidatio, Latin.] The act of making clear; explanation; exposition.

DILUENT. adj. [diluens, Latin.] Having the power to thin and attenuate other matter.

DILUENT. n. f. [from the adjective.] That which thins other matter.

There is no real diluent but water: every fluid is diluent, as it contains water in it.

To DILUTE. v. a. [diluo, Latin.]

1. To make thin; to attenuate by the admixture of other parts.

Drinking a large dose of diluted tea, as she was ordered by a physician, she got to bed.

2. To make weak.

The chamber was dark, lest these colours should be diluted and weakened by the mixture of any adventurous light.

DILUTE. adj. Thin; attenuated.

If the red and blue colours were more dilute and weak, the distance of the images would be less than an inch; and if they were more intense and full, that distance would be greater.

DILUTER. n. f. [from dilute.] That which makes any thing else thin.

Water is the only diluter, and the best dissolvent of most of the ingredients of our aliment.

DILUTION. n. f. [dilutio, Latin.] The act of making any thing thin or weak.

Opposite to dilution is coagulation or thickening, which is performed by dissipating the most liquid parts by heat, or by insinuating some substances, which make the parts of the fluid cohere more strongly.

DILUVIAN. adj. [from diluvium, Latin.] Relating to the deluge.

Suppose that this diluvian lake should rise to the mountain tops in one place, and not diffuse itself equally into all countries about.

DIM. adj. [Dimme, Saxon; dy, Welsh; doru, Erie.]

1. Not having a quick sight; not seeing clearly.

For her true form how can my spark discern, Which, dim by nature, art did never clear?

2. Dull of apprehension.

The understanding is dim, and cannot by its natural light discover spiritual truths.

3. Not clearly seen; obscure; imperfectly discovered.

We might be able to aim at some dim and seeming conception, how matter might begin to exist by the power of that eternal first Being.

Something, as dim to our internal view, Is thus perhaps the cause of all we do.

4. Obstructing the act of vision; not luminous; somewhat dark.

Her face bright wondrous fair did seem to be, That her broad beauty's beam great brightness threw

Through the dim shade, that all men might it see.

To DIM. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To cloud; to darken; to hinder from a full perception of light, and free exercise of vision.

As where the Almighty's lightning brand does light,

It dims the dazed eyes, and daunts the senses quite.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much use of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless all dim lighted.

Every one declares against blindness, and yet who almost is not fond of that which dims his sight?

For thee I dim these eyes, and stuff this head, With all such reading as was never read.

2. To make less bright; to obscure.

A ship that through the ocean wide, By conduct of some star, doth make her way,

When as a storm hath dimin'd her trusty guide, Out of her course doth wander far astray.

To wait the dimming of our shining star.

Thus while he spake, each passion dimin'd his face,

Thrice chang'd.

The principal figure in a picture is like a king among his courtiers, who dims all his attendants.

2. To impair; to lessen; to degrade.

Impiously they thought

Thee to diminish, and from thee withdraw
The number of thy worshippers. Milton.

3. To take any thing from that to which it belongs; the contrary to add.

Nothing was diminished from the safety of the king by the imprisonment of the duke. Hayward.

Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish aught from it. Deuteronomy.

To DIMINISH. v. n. To grow less; to be impaired.

What judgment I had, increases rather than diminishes; and thoughts, such as they are, come crowding in to fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to chuse or to reject. Dryden.

Crete's ample fields diminish to our eye;
Before the Boreal blasts the vessels fly. Pope.

DIMINISHINGLY. adv. [from diminish.]

In a manner tending to vilify, or lessen.

I never heard him censure, or so much as speak diminishingly of any one that was absent. Locke.

DIMINUTION. n. f. [diminutio, Latin.]

1. The act of making less: opposed to augmentation.

The one is not capable of any diminution or augmentation at all by men; the other apt to admit both. Hooker.

2. The state of growing less: opposed to increase.

The gravitating power of the sun is transmitted through the vast bodies of the planets without any diminution, so as to act upon all their parts, to their very centres, with the same force, and according to the same laws, as if the part upon which it acts were not surrounded with the body of the planet. Newton.

Finite and infinite seem to be looked upon as the modes of quantity, and to be attributed primarily to those things which are capable of increase or diminution. Locke.

3. Discredit; loss of dignity; degradation.

Gladly to thee

Heroick laurel'd Eugene yields the prime;

Nor thinks it diminution to be rank'd

In military honour next. Philips.

4. Deprivation of dignity; injury of reputation.

Make me wife by thy truth, for my own soul's salvation, and I shall not regard the world's opinion or diminution of me. King Charles.

They might raise the reputation of another, though they are a diminution to his. Addison.

5. [In architecture.] The contraction of the diameter of a column, as it ascends.

And all the way he roared as he went,

That all the forest with astonishment

Thereof did tremble; and the beasts therein

Fled fast away from that dreadful din. Hubbard's Tale.

O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear;
To make an earthquake: sure, it was the roar
Of a whole herd of lions. Shakspeare's Tempest.

While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thit;
And to the stack, or the barn door,
Stoutly struts his dame before. Milton.

Now night over heav'n
Inducing darkness, grateful truce impos'd,
And silence, on the odious din of war. Milton.

How, while the troubled elements around,
Earth, water, air, the stunning din resound,
Thro' streams of smoke and adverse fire he rides,
While every shot is level'd at his sides. Smith.

Some independent ideas, of no alliance to one another, are, by education, custom, and the constant din of their party, so coupled in their minds, that they always appear there together. Locke.

To DIN. v. a. [from the noun.]

Happy to catch me just at dinner-time. Pope.

DINT. n. f. [dýnt, Saxon.]

1. A blow; a stroke.
Much daunted with that dint her sense was daz'd;

Yet, kindling rage, herself she gather'd round. Spenser.

Neither vainly hope
To be invulnerable in these bright arms,
Though temper'd heav'nly; for that mortal dint,
Save he who reigns above, none can resist. Milton.

2. The mark made by a blow; the cavity remaining after a violent pressure.

He embrac'd her naked body o'er;
And, straining hard the statue, was afraid
His hands had made a dint, and hurt the maid. Dryden.

3. Violence: force; power.

Now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
The dint of pity. Shakespeare's Julius Cæsar.

We are to wrest the whole Spanish monarchy out of the hands of the enemy; and, in order to it, to work our way into the heart of his country by dint of arms. Addison.

The dewlapt bull now chafes along the plain,
While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
And by the dint of war his mistress claims. Gay.

TO DINT. v. a. [from the noun.] To mark with a cavity by a blow, or violent impression.

With greedy force each other both assail,
And strike to fiercely, that they do impress
Deep-lined furrows in the batter'd mail:
The iron walls to ward their blows were weak and frail. Fairy Queen.

Leave, leave, fair bride, your solitary booe,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It is fresh tabrets: and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint. Dunne.

Deep-dinted wrinkles on her cheeks she draws;
Sunk are her eyes, and toothless are her jaws. Dryden's Æneid.

DINUMERATION. n. f. [dinumeratio, Lat.] The act of numbering out singly.

DIOCESAN. n. f. [from diocesis.] A bishop, as he stands related to his own clergy or flock.

As a diocesan you are like to outdo yourself in all other capacities, and exemplify every word of this discourse. South.

Old Corineus compass'd thrice the crew,
And dipp'd an olive-branch in holy dew,
Which thrice he sprinkled round, and thrice aloud
Invok'd the dead, and then dismiss'd the crowd. Dryden's Æneid.

He turn'd a tyrant in his latter days,
And from the bright meridian where he stood,
Descending, dipp'd his hands in lover's blood. Dryden.

The kindred arts shall in their praise conspire,
One dip the pencil, and one string the lyre. Pope.
Now, on fancy's easy wing convey'd,
The king descended to th' Elysian shade;
There in a dusky vale, where Lethe rolls,
Old Bavius sits to dip poetic souls. Pope's Dunci.

So fishes, rising from the main,
Can soar with moisten'd wings on high;
The moisture dried, they sink again,
And dip their wings again to fly. Swift.

DIRGE. [This is not a contraction of the Latin dirige, in the popish hymn Dirige gressus meos, as some pretend;
but from the Teutonic dyrke, laudare, to praise and extol. Whence it is possible their dyrke, and our dirge, was a laudatory song to commemorate and applaud the dead. Verflegan. Bacon apparently derives it from dirige.] A mournful ditty; a song of lamentation.

Th' imperial jointress of this warlike state
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,

In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakspere's Hamlet.

Meanwhile the body of Richard, after many indignities and reproaches, the diriges and obseques of the common people towards tyrants, was obscurely buried. Bacon.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These your own anthems shall become,
Your lasting epicedium. Sandys.

Twenty puny lyes I'll tell,
That men shall swear I've discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. Shakspeare.

Examine thy customs of diet, sleep, exercise, apparel, and the like; and try, in any thou shalt judge hurtful, to discontinue it by little and little; but so, as if thou find any inconvenience by the change, thou come back to it again. Bacon.

2. To break off; to interrupt.

There is that property, in all letters, of aptness to be conjoined in syllables and words, through the voluble motions of the organs from one stop or figure to another, that they modify and discriminate the voice, without appearing to discontinue it. Holder's Elements of Speech.

DISCONTINUITY. n. f. [dis and continuity.] Difunity of parts; want of cohesion.

That discontinuity of parts is the principal cause of the opacity of bodies, will appear by considering that opaque substances become transparent by filling their pores with any substance of equal, or almost equal, density with their parts. Newton.

DISCONVENIENCE. n. f. [dis and convenience.] Incongruity; disagreement; opposition of nature.

Fear ariseth many times out of natural antipathies of nature; but, in these disconveniences of nature, deliberation hath no place at all. Bramhall's Answer to Hobbes.

DISCORD. n. f. [discordia, Latin.]

1. Disagreement; opposition; mutual anger; reciprocal oppugnancy.

See what a scourge is laid upon your hate,
That heav'n sends means to kill your joys with love!

And I, for winking at your discords too,
Have lost a brace of kilticnens. Shakspeare.

He is a false witness that speaketh lies, and that soweth discord among brethren. Proverbs.

2. Difference or contrariety of qualities, particularly of sounds.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
And hark what discord follows; each thing meets
In mere oppugnancy. Shakspeare.

Discord, like that of music's various parts,
Discord that makes the harmony of hearts;
Discord, that only this dispute shall bring,
Who best shall love the duke and serve the king. Dryden.

All nature is but art unknown to thee;
All chance, direction which thou canst not see;
All discord, harmony not understood;
All partial evil, universal good. Pope.

3. [In music.] Sounds not of themselves pleasing, but necessary to be mixed with others.

It is found alone that doth immediately and incorporeally affect most; this is most manifest in music, and concords and discords in music; for all sounds, whether they be sharp or flat, if they be sweet, have a roundness and equality; and if they be harsh, are unequal: for a discord itself is but a harshness of divers sounds meeting. Bacon.

It is the lark that sings so out of tune,
Straining harsh discords and unpleasing sharps. Shakspeare.

How doth music amaze us, when of discords
She maketh the sweetest harmony! Peuchan.

To DISCORD. v. n. [discordo, Latin] To disagree; not to suit with.

Sounds do disturb and alter the one the other; sometimes the one drowning the other, and making it not heard; sometimes the one jarring and discording with the other, and making a confusion. Bacon.

DISCORDANCE. } n. f. [from discord.]

DISCORDANCY. } Disagreement; opposition; inconsistency.

DISCORDANT. adj. [discordans, Latin.]

1. Inconsistent; at variance with itself.

Myrrha was joy'd the welcome news to hear,
But, clogg'd with guilt, the joy was un sincere;
So various, so discordant is the mind,
That in our will a different will we find. Dryden.

2. Opposite; contrarious.

The discordant attraction of some wandering comets would certainly disorder the revolutions of the planets, if they approached too near them. Cheyne.

3. Incongruous; not conformable.

Hither conscience is to be referred; if by a comparison of things done with the rule there be a consonancy, then follows the sentence of approbation; if discordant from it, the sentence of condemnation. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

DISCORDANTLY. adv. [from discordant.]

1. Inconsistently; in disagreement with itself.

2. In disagreement with another.

Two strings of a musical instrument being struck together, making two noises that arrive at the ear at the same time as to sense, yield a sound differing from either of them, and as it were compounded of both; inasmuch, that if they be discordantly tuned, though each of them struck apart would yield a pleasing sound, yet being struck together they make a harsh and troublesome noise. Boyle.

3. Peevishly; in a contradictory manner.

To DISCOVER. v. a. [découvrir, French; dis and cover.]

1. To show; to disclose; to bring to light; to make visible.

Up he starts,
Discovers and surpris'd. Milton.

Man with strength and free will arm'd
Complete, to have discover'd and repuls'd
Whatever wiles of foe or seeming friend. Milton.

8. To find things or places not known before.

Some to discover islands far away. Shakspeare.
Another part in squadrons bend their nation
On bold adventure, to discover wide
That dismal world. Milton.

So of things. The Germans discovered printing and gunpowder.

9. To exhibit to the view.

Some high climbing hill,
Which to his eye discovers unaware
The goodly prospect of some foreign land,
First seen, or some renown'd metropolis
With glitt'ring spires and battlements adorn'd. Milton.

Not light, but rather darkness visible,
Seri'd only to discover fights of woe. Milton.

DISCOVERABLE. adj. [from discover.]

1. That may be found out.

That mineral matter, which is so intermixed with the common and terrestrial matter, as not to be discoverable by human industry; or, if discoverable, diffused and scattered amongst the crasser matter, can never be separated. Woodward's Natural History.

Revelation may assert two things to be joined, whose connection or agreement is not discoverable by reason. Watts.

2. Apparent; exposed to view.

They were deceived by Satan, and that not in an invisible situation, but in an open and discoverable apparition, that is, in the form of a serpent. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It is concluded by astronomers, that the atmosphere of the moon hath no clouds nor rains, but a perpetual and uniform serenity; because nothing discoverable in the lunar surface is ever covered and absconded by the interposition of any clouds or mists. Bentley.

DISCOVERER. n. f. [from discover.]

1. One that finds any thing not known before; a finder out.

If more be found out, they will not recompense the discoverer's pains, but will be fitter to be cast out. Held.

Places receive appellations, according to the language of the discoverers, from observations made upon the people. Brooker.

The Cape of Good Hope was doubled in those early times; and the Portuguese were not the first discoverers of that navigation. Arbuthnot.

An old maiden gentlewoman is the greatest discoverer of judgments; she can tell you what sin it was that fell such a man's house on fire. Addison's Spectator.

2. A scout; one who is put to descry the posture or number of an enemy; speculator.

Here stand, my lords, and send discoverers forth,
To know the numbers of our enemies. Shakspeare.

DISCOVERY. n. f. [from discover.]

1. The act of finding any thing hidden.

Of all who since have us'd the open sea,
Than the bold English none more fame have won;

Beyond the year, and out of heaven's high way,
They made discoveries where they see no sun. Dryden.

2. The act of revealing or disclosing any secret.

What, must I hold a candle to my shame;
They in themselves, good sooth, are too, too light.

Why 'tis an office of discoveries, love,
And I should be obscur'd. Shakspeare.

Things that appeared amiable by the light of this world, appear of a different odious hue in the clear discoveries of the next. South.

To DISENTANGLE. v. a. [dis and entangle.]

1. To unfold or loose the parts of any thing interwoven with one another.

Though in concretions particles so entangle one another, that they cannot in a short time clear themselves, yet they do incessantly strive to diseentangle themselves, and get away.

2. To set free from impediments; to disembroil; to clear from perplexity or difficulty.

Till they could find some expedient to explicate and diseentangle themselves out of this labyrinth, they made no advance towards supplying their armies.

The welfare of their souls requires a better judgment than their own, either to guide them in their duty, or to diseentangle them from a temptation.

3. To diseengage; to separate.

Neither can God himself be otherwise understood by us than as a mind free and diseentangled from all corporeal mixtures.

To DISENTERRE. v. a. [dis, and enterrer, French.] To unbury; to take out of the grave.

Though the blindness of some fanatics have savaged on the bodies of the dead, and have been so injurious unto worms as to disenterre the bodies of the deceased, yet had they therein no design upon the soul.

To DISENTHRALL. v. a. [dis and enthrall.]
To set free; to restore to liberty; to rescue from slavery.

But God my soul shall disenthral'd;
For I upon his name will call.

If religion were false, bad men would set the utmost force of their reason on work to discover that falsity, and thereby disenthral themselves.

To DISENTHRONE. v. a. [dis and enthrone.]
To depose from sovereignty; to dethrone.

Either to diseenthrone the king of heav'n We war, if war he butt; or to regain Our own right lo'd.

Of Turnus, for Lavinia disepos'd.

DISESTEEM. n. f. [dis and esteem.]
Slight regard; a disregard more moderate than contempt.

When any one, by mischance, falls into diseesteem, he will fall under neglect and contempt.

To DISESTEEM. v. a. [from the noun.]
To regard slightly; to consider with a slight degree of contempt.

Should Mars see 't,
That horrid hurrier of men, or the that betters him,

Minerva, never so incens'd, they could not diseesteem.

But in this sacred gift you diseesteem,
Then cruel plagues shall fall on Priam's state.

I would not be thought to diseesteem or diluade the study of nature.

DISESTIMATION. n. f. [dis, and estimation, Lat.] Disrespect; disesteem.

DISFAVOUR. n. f. [dis and favour.]

1. Discountenance; unpropitious regard; unfavourable aspect; unfavourable circumstance.

2. A state of ungraciousness or unacceptableness; a state in which one is not favoured.

While free from sacrilege, he was at peace, as it were, with God and man; but after his sacrilege he was in disfavour with both.

3. Want of beauty.

To DISFAVOUR. v. a. [from the noun.]
To discountenance; to withhold or withdraw kindness.

Might not those of higher rank, and nearer access to her majesty, receive her own commands, and be countenanced or disfavoured according as they obey?

DISFAVOURER. n. f. [from disfavour.]
Discountancer; not a favourer.

It was verily thought, that had it not been for four great disfavours of that voyage, the enterprise had succeeded.

DISFIGURATION. n. f. [from disfigure.]

1. The act of disfiguring.
2. The state of being disfigured.
3. Deformity.

To DISFIGURE. v. a. [dis and figure.]
To change any thing to a worse form; to deform; to mangle.

You are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted, and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it.

In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured.

Subject is their punishment,
Disfiguring not God's likeness, but their own,

Or, if his likeness, by themselves defac'd.
Uriel, on the Assyrian mount,

Saw him disfigur'd more than could befall Spirit of happy sort.

A nose flatter, or a mouth wider, could have consisted, as well as the rest of his figure, with such a soul and such parts as made him, disfigured as he was, capable to be a dignitary in the church.

Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain

On Africk's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

His long absence, and travels which had disfigured him, made him altogether unknown.

DISFIGUREMENT. n. f. [from disfigure.]
Defacement of beauty; change of a better form to a worse.

The disfigurement that travel or sickness has bestowed upon him, is not thought great by the lady of the ill.

And they, so perfect is their misery,
Not once perceive their foul disfigurement.

Milton

dignity.

So Dagon shall be magnified, and God,
Besides whom is no god, compar'd with idols,
Disglorify'd, blasphem'd, and had in scorn.

Milton.

To DISGORGE. v. a. [degorger, Fr. from gorge, the throat.]

1. To discharge by the mouth; to spew out; to vomit.

So, thou common dog, didst thou disgorge
Thy glutton bosom of the royal Richard?
And now thou wouldst eat thy dead vomit up.

Shakspeare.

From the distant shore they loudly laugh,
To see his leaving breast disgorge the briny draught.

Dryden.

2. To pour out with violence.
All th' embossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with licence of free foot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world?

Shakspeare.

The deep-drawing barks do there disgorge
Their wailike freightage.

Shakspeare.

Of four infernal rivers, that disgorge
Into the burning lake their baleful streams.

Milton.

Countries much annoyed with earthquakes, have volcanoes; and these are constantly all in flames, whenever any earthquake happens; they disgorge that fire which was the cause of the disaster.

Derham.

DISGRACE. n. f. [disgrace, Fr.]

1. State of being out of favour.

2. State of ignominy; dishonour; state of shame.

Like a dull actor, now
I have forgot my part, and I am out
Even to a full disgrace.

Shakspeare.

Poetry, howsoever censured, is not fallen from the highest stage of honour to the lowest stair of disgrace.

Peacham.

3. Act of unkindness. Obsolete.
To such bondage he was for so many courses tied by her, whose disgraces to him were graced by her excellence.

Sidney.

4. Cause of shame.
And is it not a foul disgrace,
To lose the boltsprit of thy face?

Baynard.

And he whose affluence disdain'd a place,
Brib'd by a title, makes it a disgrace.

Brown.

To DISGRACE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To bring a reproach upon; to disho-nour, as an agent.

We may not so in any one special kind admire her, that we disgrace her in any other; but let all her ways be according unto their place and degree adored.

Hooker.

Men's passions will carry them far in misrepresenting an opinion which they have a mind to disgrace.

Burnet.

2. To bring to shame, as a cause: as, his ignorance disgraced him.

3. To put out of favour: as, the minister was disgraced.

DISGRACEFUL. adj. [disgrace and full.]
Shameful; ignominious; reproachful;
procuring shame.

Masters must correct their servants with gentleness, prudence, and mercy; not with upbraiding and disgraceful language, but with such only as may express and reprove the fault, and amend the person.

Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

To retire behind their chariots, was as little disgraceful then, as it is now to alight from one's horse in a battle.

Pope.

DISGRACEFULLY. adv. [from disgraceful.]
In disgrace; with indignity; ignominiously.

The senate have cast you forth
Disgracefully, to be the common tale
Of the whole city.

Ben Jonson.

DISGRACEFULNESS. n. f. [from disgraceful.] Ignominy.

DISGRACER. n. f. [from disgrace.] One that exposes to shame; one that causes ignominy.

I have given good advice to those infamous disgracers of the sex and calling.

Swift.

DISGRACIOUS. adj. [dis and gracious.]
Unpleasing.

I do suspect I have done some offence,
That seems disgracious in the city's eye.

Shakspeare.

To DISGUISE. v. a. [deguiser, Fr. dis and guise.]

1. To conceal by an unusual dress.
How might we disguise him?

—Alas! I know not: there is no woman's gown big enough for him.

Shakspeare.

Disguis'd he came; but those his children
dear
Their parent soon discern'd through his disguise.

Milton.

2. To hide by a counterfeit appearance; to cloak by a false show: as, he dis-guis'd his anger.

3. To disfigure; to change the form.

They saw the faces, which too well they knew,

Though then disguis'd in death, and smear'd all o'er
With filth obscene, and dropping putrid gore.

Dryden.

More deuteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.

Milton.

Ulysses wakes, not knowing the place where he was; because Minerva made all things appear in a disguis'd view.

Pope.

4. To deform by liquor: a low term.

I have just left the right worshipful, and his myrmidons, about a meaker of five gallons; the whole magistracy was pretty well disguis'd before I gave them the slip.

Spectator.

DISGUISE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A dress contrived to conceal the person that wears it.

They generally act in a disguise themselves, and therefore mistake all outward show and appearances for hypocrisy in others.

Addison.

Since I in Arcite cannot Arcite find,
The world may search in vain with all their eyes,
But never penetrate through this disguise.

Dryden.

2. A false appearance; counterfeit show.

Hence guilty joys, distastes, furnishes,
False oaths, false tears, deceits, disguises.

Pope.

3. Disorder by drink.
You see we've burnt our cheeks; and mine own tongue
Splits what it speaks: the wild disguise hath almost

Antick'd us.

Shakspeare.

DISGUISEMENT. n. f. [from disguise.]
Dress of concealment.

Under that disguisement I should find opportunity to reveal myself to the owner of my heart.

Sidney.

The marquis thought best to disguise his beard, and told him, that he was going covertly to take a secret view of the forwardness of his majesty's fleet: this did somewhat handsomely beai the disguisement.

Watson.

DISGUISER. n. f. [from disguise.]

1. One that puts on a disguise.
I hope he is grown more diligenced from his intentions on his own affairs, which is quite the reverse to you, unless you are a very dexterous dis-guiser.

Swift.

2. One that conceals another by a disguise; one that disfigures.

Death's a great disguiser.

Shakspeare.

DISGUST. n. f. [degout, French.]

1. Aversion of the palate from any thing.

2. Ill humour; malevolence; offence cou-ceived.

The manner of doing is of more consequence than the thing done, and upon that depends the satisfaction or disgust wherewith it is received.

Locke.

Thence dark disgust and hatred, winding wiles,
Coward deceit, and ruffian violence.

Thomson.

To DISGUST. v. a. [degouter, French;
degusto, Latin.]

1. To raise aversion in the stomach; to distaste.

2. To strike with dislike; to offend. It is variously constructed with at or with.

If a man were disgusted at marriage, he could never recommend it to his friend.

Atterbury.

Those unenlarged souls are disgusted with the wonders which the microscope has discovered.

Watts.

3. To produce aversion: with from.

What disgusts me from having to do with answer jobbers, is, that they have no conscience.

Swift.

DISGUSTFUL. adj. [disgust and full.]
Nauseous; that causes aversion.

I have finished the most disgustful task that ever I undertook.

Swift.

DISH. n. f. [disc, Saxon; dyse, Erse;
discus, Latin.]

1. A broad wide vessel, in which food is served up at the table.

Of these he murders one; he boils the flesh,
And lays the mangled morsels in a dish.

Dryden.

I saw among the ruins an old heathen altar, with this particularity in it, that it is hollowed like a dish at one end; but it was not this end on which the sacrifice was laid.

Addison.

2. A deep hollow vessel for liquid food.
Who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish;
Or do his grey hairs any violence?

Milton.

A ladle for our silver dish
Is what I want, is what I wish.

Prior.

3. The meat served in a dish; any particular kind of food.

I have here a dish of doves, that I would bestow upon your worship

Shakspeare.

Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcass fit for hounds

Shakspeare's Julius Cæsar.

The contract you pretend with that base wretch,
One bred of alms and foster'd with cold dishes,
With seraphs o' th' court; it is no contract, none.
Shakespeare.

'Tis not the meat, but 'tis the appetite,
Makes eating a delight;
And if I like one dish
More than a another, that a pleasant is. Suckling.
The earth would have been deprived of a most excellent and wholesome fare, and very many delicious dishes that we have the use and benefit of. Woodward.

Many people would, with reason, prefer the gripping of an hungry belly, to those dishes which are a feast to others. Locke.

4. A kind of measure among the tinner.
They measure block-tin by the dish, which containeth a gallon. Carew.

To DISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To serve in a dish; to send up to table.

For conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes, though it be dish'd
For me to try. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

DISH-CLOUT. n. f. [dish and clout.] The cloth with which the maids rub their dishes.

A dish-clout of Jaquenetta's he wears next his heart for a favour. Shaksp. Love's Labour Lost.

mergus.] The name of a bird.

DISHABILLE. adj. [deshabille, Fr.]
Undressed; loosely or negligently dressed.

Queens are not to be too negligently dressed or dishabille. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

DISHABILLE. n. f. Undress; loose dress.

A woman who would preserve a lover's respect to her person, will be careful of her appearance before him when in dishabille. Clarissa.

To DISHABIT. v. a. [This word I have found only in Shakespeare.] To throw out of place; to drive from their habitation.

But for our approach those sleeping stones,
By the compulsion of their ordinance,
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been dishabited, and wide haveock made.
King Lear.

DISHARMONY. n. f. [dis and harmony.]
Contrariety to harmony.

To DISHEARTEN. v. a. [dis and hearten.]
To discourage; to deject; to terrify;
to depress.

To dishhearten with fearful sentences, as though salvation could hardly be hoped for, is not so consonant with christian charity. Hooker.

Be not dishhearten then, nor cloud those looks
That want to be more cheerful and serene.
Milton.

Yet neither thus dishhearten'd nor dismay'd,
The time prepar'd I waited. Milton.

It is a consideration that might dishhearten those who are engaged against the common adversaries, that they promise themselves as much from the folly of enemies, as from the power of their friends. Stirling Fleet.

Men cannot say, that the greatness of an evil and danger is an encouragement to men to run upon it; and that the greatness of any good and happiness ought in reason to dishhearten men from the pursuit of it. Tillotson.

A true christian fervour is more than the alliances of our potent friends or even the fears of our dishhearten enemies. Atterbury.

DISHERRISON. n. f. [dis and herison.]
The act of debarring from inheritance.

To DISHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.]

Dishrict, ran howling o'er the plain. Dryden.

To DISHEVEL. v. a. [deshveleer, French.]
To spread the hair disorderly; to throw the hair of a woman negligently about her head. It is not often used but in the passive participle.

A gentle lady all alone,
With garments rent and hair dishveiled,
Wringing her hands, and pining piteous moan.
Spenser.

After followed great numbers of women weeping, with dishveiled hair, scratching their faces, and tearing themselves, after the manner of the country. Knolles.

A troop of Trojans mix'd with these appear,
And mourning matrons with dishveiled hair.

The flames, invol'd in smoke,
Of incense, from the sacred altar broke,
Caught her dishveiled hair and rich attire.
Dryden's Æneid.

You this morn beheld his ardent eyes,
Saw his arm lock'd in her dishveiled hair. Smith.

DISHING. adj. [from dish.] Concave;
a cant term among artificers.

For the form of the wheel, some make them more dishing, as they call it, than others; that is, more concave, by setting off the spokes and felles more outwards. Mortimer.

DISHONEST. adj. [dis and honest.]

1. Void of probity; void of faith; faithless; wicked; fraudulent.

Justice then was neither blind to discern, nor lame to execute. It was not subject to be imposed upon by a deluded fancy, nor yet to be bribe'd by a glazing appetite, for an utile or ju-cundum to turn the balance to a false or dishonest sentence. South.

He lays it down as a principle, that right and wrong, honest and dishonest, are defined only by laws, and not by nature. Locke.

2. Unchaste; lewd.

To-morrow will we be married.—I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonest desire, to desire to be a woman of the world.
Shakespeare's As you like it.

3. Disgraced; dishonoured.

Dishonest with topp'd arms the youth appears,
Spoil'd of his nose, and thurten'd of his ears.
Dryden.

4. Disgraceful; ignominious. These two senses are scarcely English, being borrowed from the Latin idiom.

She saw her sons with purple death expire,
Her fiered domes invol'd in rolling fire;
A dreadful series of intestine wars,
Inglorious triumphs, and dishonest scars. Pope.

DISHONESTLY. adv. [from dishonest.]

1. Without faith; without probity; faithless; wickedly.

I protest he had the chain of me,
Tho' most dishonestly he doth deny it. Shakespeare.

2. Lewdly; wantonly; unchastely.

A wise daughter should bring an inheritance to her husband; but she that liveth dishonestly is her father's heaviness. Ecclesiasticus.

DISHONESTY. n. f. [from dishonest.]

1. Want of probity; faithlessness; violation of trust.

Their fortune depends upon their credit, and a stain of open public dishonesty, must be to their disadvantage. Swift.

2. Unchastity; incontinence; lewdness.

Mrs. Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous fool to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistakes, do I!—Heaven be my witness you do,
if you suspect me in any dishonesty. Shakespeare.

DISHONOUR. n. f. [dis and honour.]

1. Reproach; disgrace; ignominy.

Let not my jealousies be your dishonours,
But mine own fancies. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

He was pleas'd to own Lazarus even in the dishonours of the grave, and vouchsafed him, in that despicable condition, the glorious title of his friend. Bayle's Seraphic Love.

Take him for your husband and your lord;
'Tis no dishonour to confer your grace
On one descended from a royal race. Dryden.

2. Reproach uttered; censure; report of infamy.

So good, that no tongue could ever
Pronounce dishonour of her; by my life
She never knew harm doing. Shakespeare.

To DISHONOUR. v. a. [dis and honour.]

1. To disgrace; to bring shame upon; to blat with infamy.

It is no vicious blot, murder, or foulness,
No unchaste action, or dishonour'd step,
That hath depriv'd me of your grace and favour.
Shakespeare.

This no more dishonours you at all,
Than to take in a town with gentle words,
Which else would put you to your fortune. Shaksp.

A woman that honoureth her husband, shall be judg'd wise of all: but she that dishonoureth him in her pride, shall be counted ungodly of all.
Ecclesiasticus.

We are not so much to strain ourselves to make those virtues appear in us which really we have not, as to avoid those imperfections which may dishonour us. Dryden's Dufresnoy.

2. To violate chastity.

3. To treat with indignity.

One glimpse of glory to my issue give,
Grac'd for the little time he has to live:
Dishonour'd by the king of men he stands;
His rightful prize is ravish'd from his hands.
Dryden's Virid.

DISHONOURABLE. adj. [from dishonour.]

1. Shameful; reproachful; ignominious.

He did dishonourable find
Those articles which did our state decrease.
Daniels.

2. Being in a state of neglect or disrespect.

He that is honoured in poverty, how much more in riches? and he that is dishonourable in riches, how much more in poverty? Ecclesi.

DISHONOURER. n. f. [from dishonour.]

1. One that treats another with indignity.

Preaching how meritorious with the gods
It would be, to ensnare an irreligious Dishonourer of Dagon. Milton.

2. A violator of chastity.

To DISHORN. v. a. [dis and horn.] To strip of horns.

We'll dishorn the spirit,
And mock him home to Windsor. Shakespeare.

DISHUMOUR. n. f. [dis and humour.]
Peevishness; ill humour; uneasy state of mind.

Speaking impatiently to servants, or any thing that betrays inattention or dishumour, are also criminal. Spectator.

DISIMPROVEMENT. n. f. [dis and im- provement.] Reduction from a better to a worse state; the contrary to melioration; the contrary to improvement.

The final issue of the matter would be, an utter neglect and dishimprovement of the earth.
Norris.

I cannot see how this kingdom is at any height of improvement, while four parts in five of the plantations, for thirty years past, have been real dishimprovements. Swift.

To DISINCARCERATE. v. a. [dis and incarcerate.] To set at liberty; to free from prison.

The arsenical bodies being now coagulated, and kindled into flaming atoms, require dry and warm air, to open the earth for to disincarcerate the same venene bodies. Harvey.

DISINCLINATION. n. f. [from disincline.] Want of affection; slight; dislike; ill-will not heightened to aversion.

Disappointment gave him a disinclination to the fair sex, for whom he does not express all the respect possible. Zibuthnot and Pope.

To DISINCLINE. v. a. [dis and incline.] To produce dislike to; to make disaffected; to alienate affection from.

They were careful to keep up the fears and apprehensions in the people of dangers and designs, and to disincline them from any reverence or affection to the queen, whom they begun every day more implacably to hate, and consequently to disoblige. Clarendon.

DISINGENUITY. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Meanness of artifice; unfairness.

They contract a habit of ill-nature and disingenuity necessary to their affairs, and the temper of those upon whom they are to work. Clarendon.

DISINGENUOUS. adj. [dis and ingenuous.] Unfair; meanly artful; vitiously subtle; sly; cunning; illiberal; unbecoming a gentleman; crafty.

'Tis disingenuous to accuse our age of idleness, who all our powers engage in the same studies, the same course to hold, Nor think our reason for new arts too old. Denham.

It was a disingenuous way of proceeding, to oppose a judgment of charity concerning their church, to a judgment of reason concerning the nature of actions. Stillingfleet.

There cannot be any thing so disingenuous and unbecoming any rational creature, as not to yield to plain reason, and the conviction of clear arguments. Locke.

DISINGENUOUSLY. adv. [from disingenuous.] In a disingenuous manner.

DISINGENUOUSNESS. n. f. [from disingenuous.] Mean subtilty; unfairness; low craft.

I might prefer them with the unreasonableness, the disingenuousness, of emulating a profession to which their own hearts have an inward reluctance. Government of the Tongue.

DISINHERISON. n. f. [dis and inherit.] 1. The act of cutting off from any hereditary succession; the act of disinheriting.

If he stood upon his own title of the house of Lancaster, inherent in his person, he knew it was a title condemned by parliament, and generally prejudged, in the common opinion of the realm, that it tended directly to the disinheritison of the line of York. Bacon's Henry VII.

The chief minister of the revenue was obliged to prevent, and even oppose, such disinheritison. Clarendon.

2. The state of being cut off from an hereditary right.

In respect of the effects and evil consequences, the adultery of the woman is worse, as bringing bastardy into a family, and disinheritison or great injuries to the lawful children. Taylor.

To DISINHERIT. v. a. [dis and inherit.] To cut off from an hereditary right; to deprive of an inheritance.

Is it then just with us to disinherit The unborn nephews for the father's fault? Davies.

Unmuffle, ye faint stars; and thou, fair moon, stoop thy pale visage through an amber cloud, And disinherit chaos that reigns here

In double night of darkness, and of slander, Miln.

Posterity stands curs'd! fair patrimony, That I must leave ye, sons! O were I able To waste it all myself, and leave ye none; So disinherited, how would ye bleis Me, now your curse! Milton.

Of how fair a portion Adam disinherited his whole posterity by one single prevarication! South.

To DISINTER. v. a. [from dis and inter.] To unbury; to take as out of the grave.

The philosopher, the saint, or the hero, the wife, the good, or the great man, very often lie hid and concealed in a plebeian, which a proper education might have disinterred. Addison.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [dis and interest, French.] It is written disinterested by those who derive it immediately from interest, and I think more properly.] Void of regard to private advantage; not biased by particular views; impartial.

Not that tradition's parts are useless here, When general, old, disinterest'd, and clear. Dryden.

DISINTERESTMENT. n. f. [dis, and interestment, French.] Disregard to private advantage; disinterest; disinterestedness. This word, like charges in the same sentence, is merely Gallick.

He has managed some of the changes of the kingdom with known ability, and laid them down with entire disinterestment. Prior's Postscript.

DISINTEREST. n. f. [dis and interest.]

1. What is contrary to one's wish or prosperity; that which any one is concerned to prevent.

They judge it the great disinterest to Rome. Glauville.

2. Indifference to profit; superiority to regards of private advantage.

DISINTERESTED. adj. [from disinterest.]

1. Superiour to regard of private advantage; not influenced by private profit.

As disinterested as you appear to the world, no man is more in the power of that prevailing favourite passion than yourself. Swift.

2. Without any concern in an affair; without fear or hope.

DISINTERESTEDLY. adv. [from disinterested.] In a disinterested manner.

DISINTERESTEDNESS. n. f. [from disinterested.] Contempt of private interest; neglect of personal profit.

These expressions of selfishness and disinterestedness have been used in a very loose and indeterminate manner. Brown.

To DISINTRICATE. v. a. [dis and intricate.] To disentangle. Diſ.

To DISINVITE. v. a. [dis and invite.] To retract an invitation. Diſ.

To DISJOIN. v. a. [dejoindre, Fr. dis and join.] To separate; to part from each other; to disunite; to sunder.

Never shall my harp thy praise Forget, nor from thy father's praise disjoin. Milton.

Lest different degree Disjoin us, and I then too late renounce Deity for thee, when fate will not permit. Milton.

Happier for me, that all our hours assign'd Together we had liv'd; ev'n not in death disjoin'd. Dryden.

Never let us lay down our arms against France, till we have utterly disjoin'd her from the Spanish monarchy. Addison.

To DISJOINT. v. a. [dis and joint.]

1. To put out of joint.

Be all their ligaments at once unbound, And their disjointed bones to powder ground. Sundys.

Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame, Bot mangle and disjoint the brittle frame? More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's fame. Prior.

2. To break at junctures; to separate at the part where there is a cement. Mould'ring arches, and disjointed columns. Irene.

3. To break in pieces; to dilaniate. Rotation must disperse in air All things which on the rapid orb appear; And if no power that motion should controul, It must disjoint and dissipate the whole. Blackm.

Should a barbarous Indian, who had never seen a palace or a ship, view the separate and disjointed parts, he would be able to form but a very lame and dark idea of either of those excellent and useful inventions. Watts.

4. To carve a fowl.

5. To make incoherent; to break the relation between the parts.

The constancy of your wit was not wont to bring forth such disjointed speeches. Stancy.

But now her grief has wrought her into frenzy; The images her troubled fancy forms Are incoherent, wild; her words disjointed. Smith.

To DISJOINT. v. n. To fall in pieces.

Let both worlds disjoint, and all things suffer, Ere we will eat our meal in fear. Shakespeare.

DISJOINT. participle. [from the verb.] Separated; divided. We now write disjointed.

Young Fontinbras, Holding a weak supposal of our worth, Thinks by our late dear brother's death Our state to be disjoint and out of frame. Shakf.

DISJUDICATION. n. f. [dijudicatio, Lat.] Judgment; determination; perhaps only mistaken for dijudication.

The disposition of the organ is of great importance in the dijudications we make of colours. Boyle on Colours.

DISJUNCT. adj. [disjunctus, Lat.] Disjoined; separate.

DISJUNCTION. n. f. [from disjunctio, Latin.] Disunion; separation; parting.

You may Enjoy your mistress now, from whom you see There's no disjunction to be made, but by Your ruin. Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

There is a great analogy between the body natural and politic, in which the ecclesiastical or spiritual part justly supplies the part of the soul; and the violent separation of this from the other, does as certainly infer death and dissolution, as the disjunction of the body and the soul in the natural. South.

DISJUNCTIVE. adj. [disjunctivus, Lat.] 1. Incapable of union.

Such principles, whose atoms are of that disjunctive nature, as not to be united in a sufficient number to make a visible mass. Greve.

2. That marks separation or opposition: as, I love him, or fear him.

There are such words as disjunctive conjunctions. Watts.

3. In logick.

A disjunctive proposition is when the parts are opposed to one another by disjunctive particles: as, It is either day or night; The weather is either shiny or rainy; Quantity is either length, breadth, or depth. The truth of disjunctives depends on the necessary and immediate opposition of the parts; therefore only the last of these examples is true; but the two first are not strictly true; because twilight is a medium between day and night; and dry cloudy weather is a medium between shining and raining.

A disjunctive syllogism is when the major proposition is disjunctive: as, the earth moves in a circle, or an ellipsis; but it does not move in a circle, therefore it moves in an ellipsis. Watts.

DISJUNCTIVELY. adv. [from disjunctive.] Distinctly; separately.

What he observes of the numbers disjunctively and apart, reason suggests to be applicable to the whole body united. Decay of Piety.

DISK. n. f. [discus, Latin.]

1. The face of the sun, or any planet, as it appears to the eye.

The disk of Phœbus, when he climbs on high, Appears at first but as a bloodshot eye. Dryden.

It is to be considered, that the rays, which are equally refrangible, do fall upon a circle answering to the sun's disk. Newton.

Mercury's disk
Can scarce be caught by philosophic eye,
Lost in the near effulgence. Thomson.

2. A broad piece of iron thrown in the ancient sports; a quoit.

The crystal of the eye, which in a fish is a ball, in any land animal is a disk or bowl; being hereby fitted for the clearer sight of the object. Grew.

In areas varied with mosaic art,
Some whirl the disk, and some the jav'lin dart. Pope.

DISKINDNESS. n. f. [dis and kindness.]

1. Want of kindness; want of affection; want of benevolence.

2. Ill turn; injury; act of malignity; detriment.

This discourse is so far from doing any diskindness to the cause, that it does it a real service. Woodward.

DISLIKE. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Disinclination; absence of affection; the contrary to fondness.

He then them rook, and tempering goodly well
Their contrary dislikes with loved means,

Did place them all in order, and compel
To keep themselves within their sundry reigns,
Together link'd with adamantine chains. Spenser.

Your dislikes, to whom I would be pleasing,
Do cloud my joys with danger and with sorrow. Shakespeare.

God's grace, that principle of his new birth,
Gives him continual dislike to sin. Hammond.

Our likings or dislikes are founded rather upon humour and fancy, than upon reason. L'Estr.

Sorrow would have been as silent as thought, as severe as philosophy. It would have rested in inward senses, tacit dislike. South.

The jealous man is not angry if you dislike another; but if you find those faults which are in his own character, you discover not only your dislike of another, but of himself. Adairson.

2. Discord; dissension; disagreement.

This sense is not now in use.

This said Aletes, and a murmur rose
That shew'd dislike among the christian peers. Fairfax.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To disapprove; to regard without affection; to regard with ill-will or disgust.

What most he should dislike seems pleasant to him;

What like, offensive. Shakespeare's King Lear.

Ye dislike, and so undo

The players, and disgrace the poet too. Denham.

Whoever dislikes the digressions, or grows weary of them, may throw them away. Temple.

DISLIKEFUL. adj. [dislike and full.] Disaffected; malign. Not in use.

I think it best, by an union of manners, and conformity of minds, to bring them to be one people, and to put away the dislikeful conceit of the one and the other. Spenser's Ireland.

TO DISLIKE. v. a. [dis and like.] To make unlike. Unusual.

Muffle your face,

Dis mantle you; and, as you can, dislike
The truth of your own seeming. Shakespeare.

DISLIKENESS. n. f. [dis and likeness.] Dissimilitude; not resemblance; unlikeness.

That which is not designed to represent any thing but itself, can never be capable of a wrong representation, nor mislead us from the true apprehension of any thing by its dislikeness to it; and such, excepting those of substances, are all our own complex ideas. Locke.

DISLIKER. n. f. [from dislike.] A disapprover; one that is not pleased.

There is a point, which whoever can touch, will never fail of pleasing a majority, so great that the dislikers will be forced to fall in with the herd. Swift.

TO DISLIMB. v. a. [dis and limb.] To dilaniate; to tear limb from limb. Dick.

TO DISLIMN. v. a. [dis and limn.] To unpaint; to strike out of a picture.

That which is now a horse, even with a thought
The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water. Shakespeare.

TO DISLOCATE. v. a. [dis and locus, Latin.]

1. To put out of the proper place.

After some time the flats on all sides of the globe were dislocated, and their situation varied, being elevated in some places, and depressed in others. Woodward.

2. To put out of joint; to disjoint.

Were 't my fitness
To let these hands obey my boiling blood,
They're apt enough to dislocate and tear Thy flesh and bones. Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISLOCATION. n. f. [from dislocate.]

1. The act of shifting the places of things.

2. The state of being displaced.

The posture of rocks, often leaning or prostrate, shews that they had some dislocation from their natural site. Burnet.

3. A luxation; a violent pressure of a bone out of the socket, or correspondent part; a joint put out.

It might go awry either within or without the upper, as often as it is forcibly pulled to it, and so cause a dislocation, or a strain. Grew.

TO DISLODGE. v. a. [dis and lodge.]

1. To remove from a place.

The shell-fish which are resident in the depths live and die there, and are never dislodged or removed by storms, nor cast upon the shores; which the littorales usually are. Woodward.

2. To remove from a habitation.

These senses lost, behold a new defeat,
The soul dislodging from another seat. Dryden.

3. To drive an enemy from a station.

My sword can perfect what it has begun,
And from your walls dislodge that haughty son. Dryden.

4. To remove an army to other quarters.

The ladies have prevail'd,
The Volscians are dislodg'd, and Marcus gone. Shakespeare.

TO DISLODGE. v. n. To go away to another place.

Soon as midnight brought on the dusky hour,
Friendly to sleep, and silence, he resolv'd
With all his legions to dislodge. Milton.

DISLOYAL. adj. [desloyal, French; dis and loyal.]

1. Not true to allegiance; faithless; false to a sovereign; disobedient.

Foul distrust, and breach Disloyal; on the part of man, revolt
And disobedience. Milton.

2. Dishonest; perfidious.

Such things, in a false disloyal knave,
Are tricks of custom; but, in a man that's just,
They're cold delations working from the heart,
That passion cannot rule. Shakespeare's Othello.

3. Not true to the marriage-bed.

The lady is disloyal.
—Disloyal! The word is too good to paint out her wickedness. Shakespeare.

Disloyal town!

Speak, didst not thou
For sake thy faith, and break thy nuptial vow? Dryden.

4. False in love; not constant. The last three senses are now obsolete.

DISLOYALLY. adv. [from disloyal.] Not faithfully; treacherously; disobediently.

DISLOYALTY. n. f. [from disloyal.]

1. Want of fidelity to the sovereign.
Let the truth of that religion I profess be represented to judgment, not in the disguises of levity, schism, heresy, novelty, and disloyalty. King Charles.

2. Want of fidelity in love. Obsolete.

There shall appear such seeming truths of Hero's disloyalty, that jealousy shall be called assurance. Shakespeare.

DISMAL. adj. [dies malus, Latin, an evil day.] Sorrowful; dire; horrid; melancholy; uncomfortable; unhappy; dark.

The thane of Cawder 'gan a dismal conflict. Shakespeare.

He hears

On all sides from innumerable tongues
A dismal universal hiss. Milton.

Nor yet in horrid shade or dismal den,
Nor nocent yet; but on the grassy herb Fearless, unfeard he slept. Milton.

The dismal situation waste and wild
A dungeon horrible! Milton.

Such a variety of dismal accidents must have broken the spirits of any man. Clarendon.

On the one hand set the most glittering temptations to discord, and on the other view the dismal effects of it. Decay of Piety.

Dreadful gleams, Dismal screams. Pope.

DISMALLY. adv. [from dismal.] Horribly; sorrowfully; uncomfortably.

DISMALNESS. n. f. [from dismal.] Horrible; sorrowful.

TO DISMANTLE. v. a. [dis and mantle.]

1. To deprive of a dress; to strip; to denude.

He that makes his prince despised and undervalued, and heats him out of his subjects hearts, may easily strip him of his other garrisons, having already dispossessed him of his strongest, by dismantling him of his honour, and seizing his reputation. South.

2. To loose; to throw off a dress; to throw open.

This is most strange!

That she, who ev'n but now was your best object,
Dearest and best, should in this trice of time
Commit a thing so monstrous, to dismantle

So many folds of favour. Shakespeare.

3. To strip a town of its outworks.

It is not sufficient to possess our own fort without the dismantling and demolishing of our enemies. Haberwill.

4. To break down any thing external.

His eyeballs, rooted out, are thrown to ground;
His nose dismantled in his mouth is found;
His jaws, cheeks, front, one undistinguish'd wound. Dryden.

TO DISMASK. v. a. [dis and mask.] To divest of a mask; to uncover from concealment.

Fair ladies mask'd are roses in the bud,
Or angels veil'd in clouds; are roses blown, Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shewn. Shakespeare.

The marqu's thought: best to dismask his beard;
and told him: that he was going covertly. Wotton.

To DISMAY. v. a. [dismayar, Spanish.]
To terrify; to discourage; to affright;
to depress; to deject.

Their mighty strokes their habergeons dismay'd.
Spenser.

Enemies would not be so troublesome to the western coasts, nor that country itself would be so often dismay'd with alarms as they have of late years been. Raleigh's Essays.

He will not fall thee; fear not, neither be dif-
may'd. Deut.

Nothing can make him remis in the practice of his duty; no prospect of interest can allure him, no fear of danger dismay him. Atterbury.

DISMAY. n. f. [dismayo, Spanish.] Fall of courage; terror felt; desertion of mind; fear impressed.

All fate mote,
Pondering the danger with deep thoughts; and each

In other's countenance read his own dismay.
Milton.

This then, not minded in dismay, yet now
Assures me that the bitterness of death Is past. Milton.

DISMAYEDNESS. n. f. [from dismay.] Dejection of courage; dispiritedness.

The valiantest feels inward dismay'dness, and yet the fearfullest is abashed fully to shew it.
Sidney.

DISMEMBER. v. a. [French.] A tenth; the tenth part; title.

Since the first sword was drawn about this question,

Ev'ry tithie su' 'mongst many thousand dismem-
Hath been as dear as Helen. Shakespeare.

The pope began to exercise his new rapines by a compliance with king Edward, in granting him two years disme from the clergy. Ayliffe.

To DISMEMBER. v. a. [dis and member.]
To divide member from member; to dilate; to cut in pieces.

I am with both, each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirl asunder, and dismember me. Shak.

O, that we then could come by Cæsar's spirit,
And not dismember Cæsar! but, alas!
Cæsar must bleed for it. Shakespeare.

A state can never arrive to its period in a more deplorable crisis, than when some prince lies hovering, like a vulture, to devour or dismember its dying carcass. Swift.

Fowls obscene dismember'd his remains,
And dogs had torn him on the naked plains.
Pope's Odyssey.

Those who contemplate only the fragments or pieces of science dispersed in short unconnected discourses, can never survey an entire body of truth, but must always view it as deformed and dismembered. Watts.

To DISMISS. v. a. [dimissus, Latin.]

1. To send away.

We commit thee thither,
Until his army be dimiss'd from him. Shaksp.
He dimiss'd the assembly. id.

If our young Iulus be no more,
Dimiss our navy from your friendly shore.
Dryden.

3. To discard; to divest of an office.

DISMISSION. n. f. [from dimissio, Lat.]

1. Dispatch; act of sending away.

So pois'd, so gently she descends from high,
It seems a soft dimission from the sky. Dryden.

2. An honourable discharge from any office or place.

Not only thou degrad'n them, or remit't it
To life obscure, which were a fair dimission;
But throw't them lower than thou didst exalt them high. Milton's Signifies.

3. Deprivation; obligation to leave any post or place.

You must not stay here longer; your dimission
Is come from Cæsar. Shakespeare.

To DISMORTGAGE. v. a. [dis and mort- gage.] To redeem from mortgage.

He dismortgag'd the crown demesnes, and left behind a mass of gold. Howell's Verbal Foref.

To DISMOUNT. v. a. [demonter, French.]

1. To throw off a horse.
From this flying steed uncin'd, as once
Bellerophon, though from a lower clime,
Dismounted, on th' Asian field I fall. Milton.

2. To throw from any elevation or place of honour.

3. To throw a cannon from its carriage.
The Turks artillery, planted against that tower, was by the christian cannoners dismounted with shot from the tower, and many of the gunners slain. Knoxes.

To DISMOUNT. v. n.

1. To alight from a horse.
When he came within sight of that prodigious army at Agincourt, he ordered all his cavalry to dismount, and implore upon their knees a blessing.
Atkins's Fiecholder.

2. To descend from any elevation.

To DISNATURALIZE. v. a. [dis and natur- alize.] To alienate; to make alien; to deprive of the privileges of birth.

DISNATURAL. adj. [dis and nature.]
Unnatural; wanting natural tenderness; devoid of natural affection. Unusual.

If the most teem,
Create her child of spleen, that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her.
Shakespeare's King Lear.

DISOBEDIENCE. n. f. [dis and obedience.]

1. Violation of lawful command or prohibition; breach of duty due to superiors.

Th' offence is holy that she hath committed;
And thus deceit loses the name of craft,
Of disobedience, or undutious title. Shaksp.
Of man's first disobedience, and the fruit
Of that forbidden tree, sing heav'nly muse.
Milton.

Murder, adultery, or disobedience, to parents, have a general notion antecedently to laws.
Stillingfleet.

This is not disobedience, but rebellion; 'tis disclaiming the sovereignty of Christ, and renouncing all allegiance to his authority. Rogers.

2. Incompliance.

If planetary orbs the sun obey,
Why should the moon disown his sovereign sway?
Why in a whirling eddy of her own
Around the globe terrestrial should she run?
This disobedience of the moon will prove
The sun's bright orb does not the planets move.
Blackmore.

DISOBEDIENT. adj. [dis and obedient.]

Not observant of lawful authority; guilty of the breach of lawful commands, or prohibition.

The man of God was disobedient unto the word of the Lord. 1 Kings.

To DISOBEY. v. a. [dis and obey.] To break commands, or transgress prohibitions.

She absolutely disobey'd him, and he durst not know how to disobey. Sibney.

He's loth to disobey the god's command,
Nor willing to forsake this pleasant land.

Denham.

DISOBLIGATION. n. f. [dis and obliga- tion.] Offence; cause of disgust.

If he receded from what he had promised, it would be such a disobligation to the prince that he would never forget it. Clarendon.

There can be no malice, and consequently no crime or disobligation. L'Esrange.

To DISOBLIGE. v. a. [dis and oblige.]

To offend; to disgust; to give offence to. A term by which offence is tenderly expressed.

Abley had been removed from that charge, and was thereby so much disobliged, that he quitted the king's party. Clarendon.

Those, though in highest place, who slight and disoblige their friends, shall infallibly come to know the value of them, by having none when they shall most need them. South.

It is in the power of more particular persons in this kingdom, than in any other, to distress
the government, when they are disobliged.

My plan has given offence to some gentlemen, whom it would not be very safe to disoblige.

Atkinson's Guardian.

We love and esteem our clergy, and are apt to lay some weight upon their opinion, and would not willingly disoblige them. Swift.

If a woman suffers her lover to see she is loth to disoblige him, let her beware of an encroacher.
Charissa.

DISOBLIGING. participial adj. [from dis- oblige.] Disgusting; unpleasing; offensive.

Peremptoriness can best no form of understanding: it renders wise men disobliging and troublesome, and fools ridiculous and contemptible. Government of the Tongue.

DISOBLIGINGLY. adv. [from disoblig- ing.] In a disgusting or offensive manner; without attention to please.

DISOBLIGINGNESS. n. f. [from disoblig- ing.] Offensiveness; readiness to disgust.

Or like a star disorb'd. Shakespeare.

DISORDER. n. f. [dis and order; desor- dre, French.]

1. Want of regular disposition; irregularity; confusion; immethodical distribution.

When I read an author of genius without method, I fancy myself in a wood that abounds with many noble objects, rising among one another in the greatest confusion and disorder.
Spektator.

2. Tumult; disturbance; bustle.

A greater favour this disorder brought:
Unto her servants, than their awful thought Durst entertain, when thus compell'd they prest

The yielding marble of her snowy breast.
Haller.

3. Neglect of rule; irregularity.

From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art.
Pope.

4. Breach of laws; violation of standing institution.

There reigned in all men blood, manslaughter, disquieting of good men, forgetfulness of good turns, and disorder in marriages. Wisdom.

5. Breach of that regularity in the animal economy which causes health; sickness; distemper. It is used commonly for a slight disease.

Pleasure and pain are only different constitutions of the mind, sometimes occasioned by disorder in the body, or sometimes by thoughts in the mind. Locke.

6. Discomposure of mind; turbulence of passions.

To DISORDER. v. a. [dis and order.]

1. To throw into confusion; to confound; to put out of method; to disturb; to ruffle; to confuse.

Eve,

Not so repuls'd, with tears that ceas'd not flowing,
And tresses all disorder'd, at his feet Fell humble. Milton.

You disorder'd heap of ruin lies,
Stones rent from stones, where clouds of dust arise. Dryden.

The incursions of the Goths, and other barbarous nations, disorder'd the affairs of the Roman empire. Arbutnot.

2. To make sick; to disturb the body: as, my dinner disorders me.

3. To discompose; to disturb the mind.

4. To turn out of holy orders; to depose; to strip of ecclesiastical vestments.

Let him be strip'd, and disorder'd; I would fain see him walk in queupo, that the world may behold the inside of a sinner. Dryden.

DISORDERED. adj. [from disorder.]

Disorderly; irregular; vitious; loose; unrestrained in behaviour; debauched. Here do you keep a hundred knights and squire,

Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn. Shakspeare, King Lear

DISORDEREDNESS. n. f. [from disorder'd.]

Irregularity; want of order; confusion. By that disorder'dness of the soldiers, a great advantage was offered unto the enemy. Knutles.

DISORDERLY. adj. [from disorder.]

1. Confused; immethodical; without proper distribution.

These obsolete laws of Henry I. were but disorderly, confused, and general things; rather cases and shells of administration than institutions. Hale.

2. Irregular; tumultuous.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

His thoughts, which are the pictures and reflexes of passions, are generally such as naturally arise from those disorderly motions of our spirits. Dryden.

A disorderly multitude contending with the body of the legislature, is like a man in a fit under the conduct of one in the fulness of his health and strength. Addison.

3. Lawless; contrary to law; inordinate; contrary to the rules of life; vitious.

He reproved them for their disorderly assemblies against the peaceable people of the realms. Hayward.

The matter sword, disposer of thy pow'r. Prior.

DISPOSITION. n. f. [from dispositio, Lat.]

1. Order; method; distribution.

Touching musical harmony, whether by instrument or voice, it being of high and low, in due proportionable disposition, such notwithstanding is the force thereof, and so very pleasing effects it hath, in that very part of man which is most divine, that some have been thereby induced to think, that the soul itself by nature is, or hath in it, harmony. Hobbes.

Under this head of invention is placed the disposition of the work, to put all things in a beautiful order and harmony, that the whole may be of a piece. Dryden's Discourse.

I ask whether the connection of the extremes be not more clearly seen, in this simple and natural disposition, than in the perplexed repetitions and jumble of five or six syllogisms? Locke.

2. Natural fitness; quality.

Refrangibility of the rays of light is their disposition to be refracted, or turned out of their way, in passing out of one transparent body or medium into another. Newton.

to the symptoms which affect the brain: it relieves in any inflammatory disposition of the coat of the nerve. Arbuthnot on Diet.

4. Temper of mind.

I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villainous inconsistency of man's disposition is able to bear. Shakspeare.

Lesser had been
The thwartings of your disposition, if You had not shew'd them how you were dis-pos'd,
Ere they lack'd power to cross you. Shakspeare.

5. Affection of kindness or ill will.

I take myself to be as well informed as most men in the dispositions of each people towards the other. Swift.

6. Predominant inclination.

As they pinch one another by the disposition,
he cries out, no more. Shakspeare.

The love we bear to our friends is generally caused by our finding the same disposition in them which we feel in ourselves. Pope.

7. Assortment; adjustment of external circumstances: not used.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due reference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shaksp. Othello.

The blow from saddle forc'd him to fly;
Else might it needs down to his manly breast
Have cleit his head in twain, and lie thence dis-possess'd. Fairy Queen.

Thou that hold the opinion of Pythagoras, ere I will allow of thy wits; and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossest the soul of thy grandame. Shakspeare's Twelfth Night.

Let us sit upon the ground, and tell
How some have been dispos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they dispossest.
Shakspeare's Richard II.

I will chuse
Mine heir from forth the beggars of the world,
And dispossest her all. Shakspeare's Timon.

In thee I hope; thy succours I invoke,
To win the crown whence I am dispossess'd;
For like renown awaiteth on the stroke,
To call the haughty down, or raise th' opprest's'd.
Fairfax.
The children went to Gilead, and took it,
and dispossessed the Amorite which was in it.

Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise.
Milton.

Nothing is here for tears, nothing to wail
Or knock the breasts; no weaknefs; no contempt,
Dispraise, or blame.
Milton's Agonistes.
I need not raise

Trophies to thee from other men's dispraise.
Donham.

Looks slight not men: the general has seen Mours
With as bad faces; no dispraise to Bertran's.
Dryden.

If any writer shall do this paper so much honour as to inscribe the title of it to others, the whole praise or dispraise of such a performance will belong to some other author.
Addison.

My faults will not be hid, and it is no dispraise to me that they will not: the clearness of one's mind is never better proved than in discovering its own faults.
Pope.

To DISPRAISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

To blame; to censure; to condemn.
In praising Antony, I've disprais'd Cæsar.
Shakspeare.

No abuse, Ned, in the world; honest Ned, none: I disprais'd him before the wicked, that the wicked might not fall in love with him; in which doing, I have done the part of a careful friend.
Shakspeare's Henry iv.

The critics, while they like my wares, may dispraise my writing.
Spectator.

DISPRAISER. n. f. [from dispraise.] A

Diæ.

DISPROPORTION. n. f. [from dis and proportion.] Unsuitableness in form or quantity of one thing, or one part of the same thing, to another; want of symmetry; disparity.

Not to affect many proposed matches
Of her own chime, complexion, and degree,
Where to we see in all things nature tends:
Foh! one may smell, in such, a will most rank,
Fool disproportion; thoughts unnatural.
Shakspeare.

Reasoning, I oft admire
How nature, wise and frugal, could commit
Such a disproportion; with superfluous hand
So many nobler bodies to create,
Greater, to many fold, to this one use.
Milton.

Perhaps, from gearnefs, state and pride,
Thus surpris'd, she may fall:

Sleep does disproportion hide,
And, death resembling, equals all.
Waller.

For their strength,
The disproportion is so great, we cannot but Expect a fatal consequence.
Denham's Sophy.

What did the liquid to th' asserably call,
To give their aid to form the pond'rous ball?
First tell us, why did any come? next, why
In such a disproportion to the dry?
Blackmore.

That we are designed for a more exalted happiness than can be derived from the things of this life, we may infer from their vast disproportion
to the desires and capacities of our soul.
Rogers.

To DISPROPORTION. v. a. [from the noun.] To mismatch; to join things unsuitable in quantity or form; to join unfitly.

This fits deformity to mock my body,
To shape my legs of an unequal size,
To disproportion me in every part.
Shakspeare.

Distance and men's fears have so enlarged the truth, and so disproportioned every thing, that we have made the little troop of discontent's a gallant army, and already measured by the evening shadow.
Suckling.

Musick craveth your acquaintance: many are of such disproportioned spirits, that they avoid her company.
Peacham.

We on earth, with undiscording voice,
May rightly answer that melodious noise;
As once we did, till disproportion'd his Jur'd against nature's chime.
Milton.

DISPROPORTIONABLE. adj. [from disproportion.] Unsuitable in form or quantity; not duly regulated in regard to something else.

Doubts and fears are the sharpest passions:
through these false optics all that you see is like the evening shadows, disproportionable to the truth, and strangely longer than the true substance.
Suckling.

Had the obliquity been greater, the earth had not been able to endure the disproportionable differences of season.
Brown.

We are apt to set too great a value on temporal blessings, and have too low and disproportionable esteem of spiritual.
Smalridge.

There is no wine of so strong a body as to bear such a disproportionable quantity of water as sixty parts.
Brome.

like; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into dissimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from sallet oil. Boyle.

The light, whose rays are all alike refrangible,
I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that,
whose rays are some more refrangible than others,
I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those dissimilar parts can have a like situation. Bentley.

DISSIMILARITY. n. f. [from dissimilar.]
Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of dissimilarity must repel these beings from their centre: so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre;
and the principle of dissimilarity, forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Cheyne.

DISSIMILITUDE. n. f. [dissimilitudo, Lat.]
Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous dissimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter dissimilitude, either with Egyptians or any other nation. Hooker.

The dissimilitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means wherby to worship God. Stillingfleet.

As human society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain dissimilitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness

DISTORTION. n. f. [distortio, Lat.] Irregular motion by which the face is writhed, or the parts disordered.

By his distortions he reveals his pains;
He by his tears and by his sighs complains. Prier.

In England we see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported out of themselves by the bellowings and distortions of enthusiasm. Addison's Spectator.

To DISTRACT. v. a. part. pass. distra-cted; anciently distraught; and sometimes distraet. [distraetus, Latin.]

1. To pull different ways at once.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but, being distraet, driveth that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

2. To separate; to divide.

By sea, by sea,
—Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiiership you have by land;
Distraet your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen. Shakespeare.

3. To turn from a single direction toward various points.

If he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distraet it by a multiplicity of the object. South.

4. To fill the mind with contrary considerations; to perplex; to confound;
to harass.

While I suffer thy terrors I am *distraet*d. Psal.
Come, count, count thou quake, and change
thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin, and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught and mad with terror?
Shakespeare's Richard III.

It would burst forth; but I recover breath,
And sense distraet to know well what I utter. Milton's Agonistes.

He possesses a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or *distraet*d with immoderate cares. Ray.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, how would a perpetual noise distraet us! We should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep or meditate than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

5. To make mad; properly, by an unsettled and vagrant fancy; but, popularly, to make mad in whatever mode.

Wherefore throng you hither?—
—To fetch my poor *distraet*d husband hence:
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery. Shaksp.

Better I were distraet,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woe, by wrong imagination, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shaksp.

She was unable in strength of mind to bear the grief of his disease, and fell *distraet*d of her wits. Bacon.

You shall find a *distraet*d man fancy himself a king, and with a right inference require suitable attendance, respect, and obedience. Locke.

DISTRACTEDLY. adv. [from distraet.]

Madly; frantically.

Methought her eyes had cross'd her tongue;
For she did speak in starts *distraet*dly. Shaksp.

DISTRACTEDNESS. n. f. [from distraet.]

The state of being *distraet*d; madness.

DISTRACTION. n. f. [distraetio, Latin.]

1. Tendency to different parts; separation.

While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions, as Begu'd all spies. Shaksp. Ant. and Cleop.

2. Confusion; state in which the attention is called different ways.

Never was known a night of such distraction,
Noise so confus'd and dreadful; jostling crowds,
That ran and knew not whither. Dryden.

What may we not hope from him in a time of quiet and tranquillity, since, during the late distractions, he has done so much for the advantage of our trade? Addison's Freeholder.

3. Perturbation of mind; violence of some painful passion.

The insensible passions follow the temper of the heart; the concupiscible distractions, the crisis of the liver. Brown.

The distraction of the children, who saw both their parents expiring together, would have melted the hardest heart. Tatler.

4. Madness; franticness; loss of the wits; vagrancy of the mind.

Madam, this is a meer distraction:
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shaksp.

So to mad Pentheus double Thebes appears,
And furies howl in his dittertemp'd ears:
Orestes to, with like distraction tost,
Is made to fly his mother's angry ghost. Waller.

Commiserate all those who labour under a settled distraction, and who are that out from all the pleasures and advantages of human commerce. Atterbury.

5. Disturbance; discord; difference of sentiments.

The two armies lay quiet near each other without improving the confusion and distraction which the king's forces were too much inclined to. Clarendon.

DISTRACTIVE. adj. [from distraet.]
Causing perplexity.

Of grown unmindful through distraetive cares,
I've stretch'd my aims, and touch'd him un-wares. Dryden.

To DISTRAIN. v. a. [from distringo,
Latin.]

but was then distraught of his wits. Camden.

DISTRESS. n. f. [distress, French.]

1. The act of making a legal seizure.

He would first demand his debt; and, if he were not paid, he would straight go and take a distress of goods and cattle, where he could find them, to the value. Spenser.

Quoth she, some say the soul's secure Against distress and forfeiture. Hudibras.

2. A compulsion in real actions, by which a man is assured to appear in court, or to pay a debt or duty which he refused.

Cowell.

3. The thing seized by law.

4. Calamity; misery; misfortune.

There can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes. Shak.

These shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distresses of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring. Luke.

People in affliction or distress cannot be hated by generous minds. Clarissa.

To DISTRESS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prosecute by law to a seizure.

2. To harass; to make miserable; to crush with calamity.

Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle. Duteronomy.

She did distribute her goods to all them that were nearest of kindred. Julius.

DISTRIB'UTER. n. f. [from distribute.] One who deals out any thing; a dispenser.

There were judges and distributors of justice appointed for the several parts of his dominions. Addison on Italy.

Of that peculiar matter out of which the bodies of vegetables and of animals are formed, water is the common vehicle and distributor to the parts of those bodies. Wentward.

DISTRIB'UTION. n. f. [distributio, Lat.]

1. The act of distributing or dealing out to others; dispensation.

Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution. Bacon's Essays.

Providence has made an equal distribution of natural gifts, whereof each creature severally has a share. L'Esrange.

Every man in a great station would imitate the queen in the distribution of offices in his disposal. Swift.

2. Act of giving in charity.

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns. Atterbury.

3. [In logick.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish a universal whole into its several kinds of species. Watts.

DISTRIB'UTIVE. adj. [from distribute.]

1. That is employed in assigning to others their portions: as, distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

If justice will take all, and nothing give, Justice methinks is not distributive. Dryden.

Observe the distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best critics. Swift.

2. That assigns the various species of a general term.

DISTRIB'UTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.

2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may and ought to be by all means avoided. Hooker.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together; and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them singly and alone. Watts' Logick.

DISTR'ICT. n. f. [districtus, Latin.]

1. The circuit or territory within which a man may be compelled to appearance. Corwell.

2. Circuit of authority; province.

His governors, who formed themselves upon the example of their grand monarch, practised all the arts of despotic government in their respective districts. Addison.

With stern distaste avow'd,
To their own districts drive the sutor crowd.
Pope's Odyssey.

3. Region; country; territory.

Those districts which between the tropicks lie
The scorching beams, directly darted, fry.
Blackmore.

DISTR'ICTION. n. f. [districtus, Latin.]

Sudden display. Little used.
A smile plays with a surprising agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distriction, and fits like a glory upon the countenance. Collier on the Aspect.

To DISTRU'ST. v. a. [dis and trust.] To regard with diffidence; to disside in; not to trust.

He sheweth himself unto such as do not distrust him. Wisdom.

They can survey a variety of complicated ideas without fatigue or disturbance. Watts.

3. Tumult; violation of peace.

This mischief had not then befall'n,
And more that shall befall: innumerable Disturbances on earth through female snares.
Milton.

DISTU'RBER. n. f. [from disturb.]

1. A violator of peace; he that causes tumults and publick disorders.

He stands in the sight both of God and men most justly blameable, as a neediefs disturber of the peace of God's church, and an author of dissension. Hooker.

Men that make an insult upon society, ought to be humbled, as disturbers of the public tranquillity. Addison.

Ye great disturbers, who in endless noise,
In blood and horror, seek unnatural joys;
For what is all this bustle, but to shun
Those thoughts with which you dare not be alone.
Granville.

2. He that injures tranquillity; he that causes perturbation of mind.

Two deep enemies,
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers.
Shakspeare.

To DISTRU'RN. v. a. [dis and turn.] To turn off; to turn aside. Not in use.

He glad was to disturn that furious stream
Of war on us, that else had swallow'd them.
Daniel.

DISVALU'ATION. n. f. [dis and valuation.]

Disgrace; diminution of reputation.

What can be more to the disvaluation of the power of the Spaniard, than that eleven thousand English should have marched into the heart of his countries? Bacon.

To DISVAL'UE. v. a. [dis and value.]

To undervalue; to set a low price upon.

Her reputation was disvalued
In levity. Shakspeare's Meas. for Meas.

He, with his soft pipe, and smooth dittied song,
Well knows to still the wild winds when they roar. Milton.

DITTY. n. f. [dicht, Dutch.] A poem to be sung; a song.

Although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due sort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is,
by a native puissance and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled. Hooker.

Being young, I framed to the harp
Many an English ditty lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament. Shakf.
Strike the melodious harp, shrill timbrels ting,
And to the warbling lute soft ditties sing. Sandy.

His annual wound in Lebanon, allur'd
The Syrian damfels to lament his fate,
In am'rous ditties, all a summer's day. Milton.

Mean while the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to th' oaten flute;
Rough satyrs danc'd. Milton.

They will be fighting and singing under thy in-exorable windows lamentable ditties, and call thee cruel. Dryden.

DIVA'n. n. f. [an Arabick or Turkish
word.]

1. The council of the oriental princes.

To take away all doubt, or any probable diva-rication, the curse is plainly specified. Erasm.

To DIVE. v. n. [ðippan, Saxon]

1. To sink voluntarily under water.

I am not yet informed, whether when a diver diveth, having his eyes open, and swimmeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less. Bacon's Natural History.

Around our pole the spiny dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the bears divides,
The lefs and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the southern sea. Dryden.

That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air,
I think, seems plain from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbutnot.

2. To go under water in search of any thing.

Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes: the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Raibigh.

The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where fully fights for kings, or dives for gain. Luc.

3. To go deep into any question, doctrine, or science.

The wits that div'd most deep, and soar'd most high,
Seeking man's pow'rs, have found his weakness such. Dantes.

He performs all this out of his own furd, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply. Dryden.

Whensoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.

You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.

You should have div'd into my inmost thoughts.
Philips.

The Curtii bravely div'd the gulph of fame. Denham.

To DIVE'LL. v. a. [divello, Latin.] To pull; to separate; to sever.

They begin to separate; and may be easily divelled or parted asunder. Brown's Vulg. Eri.

DI'VER. n. f. [from dive.]

1. One that sinks voluntarily under water.
Perseverance gains the diver's prize. Pope.

2. One that goes under water in search of treasure.

It is evident, from the relation of divers and fishers for pearls, that there are many kinds of shell-fish which lie perpetually concealed in the deep, screened from our sight. Woodward.

3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.

He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion. Newton's Architecture.

To DIVERGE. v. n. [divergo, Latin.]
To tend various ways from one point.

Homogenous rays, which flow from several points of any object and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points. Newton.

DIVERGENT. adj. [from divergens, Lat.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DIVERS. adj. [diversus, Lat.] Several; sundry; more than one. Out of use.

We have divers examples in the church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the gospel.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old; then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years; but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty.

Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solyman's councils were revealed.

Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour upon the aëtion of spring-water.

DIVERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]

1. Different from another.

Four great beasts came up from the sea, divers one from another.

2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep Divers, detaching contact.

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care;
His papers light fly diverse, tost in air.

DIVERSIFICATION. n. f. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles, or manners of diversification, should generate differing colours.

2. Variation; variegation.

3. Variety of forms; multiformity.

4. Change; alteration.

This, which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified.

To DIVERSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, Fr.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter, which may be much diversified.

DIVERSTON. n. f. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diverston of it to the sprouts that were not forward.

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety.

Hooker.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and, not resting in a bare diversity, rise into a contrariety.

South.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension.

Arbutnot.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches.

Hooker.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it.

Rogers.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity.

Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day.

Pope.

DIVERSLY. adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

The lack we all have, as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid.

Hooker.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed.

Bacon.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted.

Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection.

Watson.

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversly understood.

Ruleigh.

William's arm

Could nought avail, however sam'd in war;
Nor armies leagu'd, that diversly assay'd
To curb his power.

Philips.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we fall;
Reason the card, but passion is the gale.

Pope.

Infect the found pine, and divert his grain,
Tortive and errant, from his course of growth.

Shakspere.

He finds no reason to have his rent abated, because a greater part of it is diverted from his landlord.

Locke.

They diverted saillery from improper objects, and gave a new turn to ridicule.

Addison.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours, and degrees of retransmissibility, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet, the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow, and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted.

Newton.

2. To draw forces to a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose sundry occasions, which divided, and diverted their power some other way.

Davies on Ireland.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these cates compar'd,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!

Milton.

They avoid pleasure, lest they should have their affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVINITY. n. f. [divinité, Fr. divinitas, Lat.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God ; deity ; godhead.
As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton.
When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stirlingfleet.
2. God ; the Deity ; the Supreme Being ;
the Cause of causes.
'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.
3. False god.
Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes, Beauteous divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.
4. Celestial being.
God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities.
Cheyne.
5. The science of divine things ; theology.
Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate.
Shakespeare.
Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error. Shakespeare.
Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

DIVORCE. n. f. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Latin.]
1. The legal separation of husband and wife.
Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.
To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.
Shakespeare's Henry VIII.
He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperor and Scribonia. Dryden.
 2. Separation ; disunion.
Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections, in her, from my religion. King Charles.
These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other ; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms. Ayliffe.
 3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.
4. The cause of any penal separation.
Go with me, like good angels, to my end ;
And, as the long divorce of steel falls on me,

And lift my soul to heav'n. Shakespeare.
 - TO DIVORCE. v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.
2. To force asunder ; to separate by violence.
Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and, not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them ?
Hooker.
The continent and the island were continued together, within men's remembrance, by a drawbridge ; but are now divorced by the down-fallen cliffs. Casco's Survey of Cornwall.
So seem'd her youthful soul not eas'ly forc'd,
Or from so fair, so sweet a feat divorc'd. Waller.
 3. To separate from another.
If thou wert not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepolch'ring on adulteress. Shakespeare.
If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full per-

- fection, nevertheless the mind that should possels them, divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.
4. To take away ; to put away.
I dare not make myself so gilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to : nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shakespeare.
Aerial failure the lungs with gentle force
Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce.
Blackmore.
 - DIVORCEMENT. n. f. [from divorce.]

DO'CIBLE. adj. [docilis, Lat.] Tractable; docile; easy to be taught.

The ashine feast of low-thistles and brambles is commonly set before them, as all the food and entertainment of their tenderest and most docible age.

Milton.

DO'CIBLENESS. n. f. [from docible.] Teachableness; docility; readiness to learn.

I might enlarge in commendation of the noble hound, as also of the docibleness of dogs in general.

Walton's Angler.

DOCILE. adj. [docilis, Latin.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful.

Elk's Voyages.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret arts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill.

Prior.

DOCILITY. n. f. [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Latin.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous.

South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? the docility of an elephant, and the insistency of a camel for travelling in deserts?

Grew.

DOCK. n. f. [docca, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb.

Miller.

Nothing teems

But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility.

Shakespeare.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know,

Love rooted out, again will never grow.

Swift.

DOCK. n. f.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.

2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula.

Grew's Museum.

DOCK. n. f. [as some imagine, of δοκίμω.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatwain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please.

DOCTOR. n. f. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import, it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it, but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring.

Shakespeare.

Then stood there up one in the council,
A Pharisee, named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws.

Acti.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their pride,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes.

Denham.

Each profelyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest.

Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By medicine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too.

Shakespeare.

How does your patient, doctor?—
—Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick coming fancies.

Shakespeare.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother.

Gov. of Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe;
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.

Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest.

Collin.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor.

Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school.

Clarendon.

DOCTRINAL. adj. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject.

South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument.

Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy?

Hooker.

DOCTRINAL. n. f. Something that is part of doctrine.

Not such as assent to every word in scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ.

South.

DOCTRINALLY. adv. [from doctrine.]

In the form of doctrine; positively, as necessary to be held.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points.

Ray.

DOCTRINE. n. f. [doctrina, Latin.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or matter; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not, either at one time or other.

Hooker.

You are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them.

Asterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies toward each other.

Watts.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine.

Mark.

DOCUMENT. n. f. [documentum, Latin.]

1. Precept; instruction; direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributors.

Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crowded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time.

Watts.

2. Precept, in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard.

Government of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of ereking authors into several classes.

Harvey.

DODDER. n. f. [souteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant; when it first shoots from the seed it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away.

From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment.

Hill.

DO'DDERED. adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supererescant plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round

The household gods, and shade the holy ground.

Dryden's Æneid.

The peasants were enjoy'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.

Dryden's Fables.

DODECAGON. n. f. [dodeka and γωνία.] A figure of twelve sides.

DODECATEMORION. n. f. [δωδεκάτημοριον.]
The twelfth part.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:

Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows straight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole and one half portion of the signs.

Creech.

To DONGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift, and play sly tricks, like a dog.] The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retentions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to huggle and dodge in the amends.

Hale's Contemplation.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God.

South.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.

Milton.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me; the dodg'd with me above thirty years.

Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t' other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time.

Swift.

DO'DKIN. n. f. [duytken, Dutch.] A doitkin, or little doot; a contemptuous name for a low coin.

Hroker.

DOES. The third person from do, for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries.

Locke.

To DOFF. v. a. [from do off.] The word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

1. To put off drefs.

You have deceiv'd our trust,

And made us doff our easy robes of peace,

To crouch our old limbs in ungentle sleep.

Shakespeare's Henry iv.

Doff those links.

Nature, in awe to him,

Had doff'd her gaudy trim,

With her great master so to sympathize.

That judge is hot, and doff's his gown.

Dryden's Juvenal.

Alcides doff's the lion's tawny hide.

Rowe.

2. To strip; to divest of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear

Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?

Heav'n's king, who doff's himself our flesh to wear,

Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.

Craharw

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland

Would create soldiers, and make women fight,

To doff their dire distresses.

Shaksp. Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device,

Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency,

than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope.

Shakespeare's Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.—

—Canst thou so doff me?

Shakespeare.

DOG. n. f. [dogge, Dutch; canis, Lat.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bull-dog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as taste both every passion:

Reneg, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks

With every gale and vary of their masters,

As knowing naught, like dogs, but following.

Shakespeare's King Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog?

Locke.

The clamour roars of men, and boys and dogs.

Thompson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dogdays.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

It parts the twins and erab, the dog divides

And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.

Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times
Shall live, in spite of their own doggerel rhymes Dryden

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all doggerel rhyme. Dryden.

It is a dispute among the critics, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroic verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Addison's Spectator.

DOG'GEREL. n. f. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those Who dealt in doggerel, or who pin'd in prose. Dryden's Juvenal.

The vilest doggerel Grabstreet sends
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

DOG'GISH. adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

DOG'HEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shakspere.

DOG'GGLE. n. f. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakspere.

But could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too, Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year. Dryden's Juvenal.

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

DOG'KENNEL. n. f. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dog-kennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden.

I am desir'd to recommend a dogkennel to any that shall want a pack. Tatler.

DOG'LOUSE. n. f. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

DOG'MA. n. f. [Latin.]

1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the christian faith. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DOGMA'TICAL. } adj. [from dogma.] Au-DOGMA'TICK. } thorative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I said by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination. Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically in a controversy, which I look never to see decided. South.

DOGMA'TICALNESS. n. f. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

DOGMA'TIST. n. f. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in. Glanville.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor. Watts.

To DOG'MATIZE. v. n. [from dogma.]

To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools, impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;
Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way. Blackmerc.

DOGMA'TIZER. n. f. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on papists or protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

DOG'ROSE. n. f. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrecence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance. Desham.

DOG'SLEEP. n. f. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who rais'd an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dog sleep. Addison.

DOG'SMEAT. n. f. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

DOG'STAR. n. f. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dogstar's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addison.

DOG'STOOTH. n. f. [from dog and tooth.] A plant. Miller.

DOG'TROT. n. f. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode
A dogtrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.

DOGWE'ARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogweary. Shakspere.

DOG'WOOD. n. f. A species of cornelian cherry.

DOI'LY. n. f. A species of woollen stuff, so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily suit, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve's Way of the World.

DOI'NGS. n. f. [from To do.] This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly.—
—But how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air! Shaksp.

2. Feats; actions; good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmana's doings, speeches, and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.

If I'm tradue'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties nor person, yet will be The chronicles of my doing, let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shakspere.

At length a reverend sire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,
And testified against their ways. Milton.

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare Mirth with respect, few words with curtesy. Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Must High. Hicksc.

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.
Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings?
Hooker.
6. Festivity; merriment: as, jolly doings.
7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low mean language.
After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms.
Swift.

DOIT. n. f. [duyt, Dutch; doight, Erse.]
A small piece of money.
When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian.
Shakespeare's Tempus.
In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit.
Pope.

DOLE. n. f. [from deal; dælan, Sax.]
1. The act of distribution or dealing.
It was your preformise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.
Shakespeare.
The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner.
Bacon.

At her general dole,
Each receives his ancient soul.
Cleveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.
Now, my masters, happy man be his dole, say I; every man to his business.
Shakespeare.
Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be 's dole.
Hudibras.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity.
They had such firm dependence on the day,
That need grew pamper'd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, to ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall.
Dryden.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd.
Dryden's Juvenal.

4. Blows dealt out.
What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way?
Milton.

5. [from dolor.] Grief; sorrow; misery.
Obsolete.
Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping.
Shaksp.
Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife.
Shakespeare's Hamlet
They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense,
Dole with delight.
Milton's Paradise Lost.

To DOL. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute.

She earnestly entreated to know the cause thereof, that either she might comfort or accompany her doleful humour.
Sidney.
For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread so doleful lay.
Spenser.
With scrowed face, and doleful wuine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances.
South.

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins.
Dryden.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.
How oft my doleful sire cried to me, tarry,
son,
When first he spied my love!
Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.
It watereth the heart to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befall men in this present life.
Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible,
Serv'd only to discover lights of woe,
Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell!
Milton.
Happy the mortal man, who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of misery past;
Who to his destin'd stage has carried on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down.
Prior.

DO'LEFULLY. adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.

Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use.
Shaksp.

DOLORIFICK. adj. [dolorificus, Latin.] That causes grief or pain.
The pain retained, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again.
Ray.
This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid,
is insensible, and not dolorifick.
Arbutn. on Air.

DO'LOROUS. adj. [from dolor, Latin.]
1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.
We are taught, by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy.
Hooker.
You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I spake t' you for your comfort.
Shakespeare.
Though many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp, Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death.
Milton.
Talk not of ruling in this dolorous gloom, Nor think vain words, he cried, can ease my doom.
Pope.

2. Painful.
Their dispatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion.
More's Antidote against Atheism.

DO'LOUR. n. f. [dolor, Latin.]
1. Grief; sorrow.
I've words too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal,
To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart.
Shaksp. care.

dolphins.
Peacham.

DOLT. n. f. [dol, Teutonick.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thick-skull; a loggerhead.
Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect
To those high pow'rs, which idly sit above.
Sidney.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt: oh gull, oh dolt,
As ignorant as dirt!
Shakespeare's Othello.
Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,
Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;
They neither have the hearts to stay,
Nor wit enough to run away.
Hudibras.
Wood's adul'trate copper,
Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunder-bolts.
Swift.

DO'LTISH. adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

DONATION. n. f. [donatio, Latin.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton's Paradise Lost.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given: which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Raleigh's Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd;
Other donation none thou canst produce. Milton.

DONATIVE. n. f. [donatif, French; from donatus, Latin.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperor's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowell.

Never did people carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleaveland.

DONE. The part. pass. of To do.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof whoſo did eat, estoons did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser's Fairy Queen.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word

by which a wager is concluded: when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakspeare's Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
—Done: but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleaveland.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Eſtrange.

DONJON. n. f. [now corrupted to dun-geon, from dominionum, low Latin, according to Menage.] The highest and strongest tower of the castle, in which prisoners were kept; as in Chaucer. It is now used of subterraneous prisons.

Was evin joyant to the garden-wall,
Ther as this Emely had her playeing. Chaucer.

DONOR. n. f. [from dono, Latin.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teneuing ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden's Fivernal.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

DONSHIP. n. f. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,
Your bosom-friends, as you suppose;
But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o' th' mire. Hudibras.

DOODLE. n. f. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little: faincant.] A trifler; an idler.

TO DOOM. v. a. [deman, Saxon.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didst not doom
Su strictly, but much more to pity incline.
Milton.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.
Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,
Dooming that son to be the fire
Of such another son. Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.
Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,
Abolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden's Æneid.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death,
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave.
Shakspeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,
Have doom'd our ships to seek the Lætan land.
Dryden's Æneid.

Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.
Granville.

DOOM. n. f. [dom, Sax. doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgment.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death.
Shakspeare.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom applied,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.
Milton.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe. Milton.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all Hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him.
Locke.

2. The great and final judgment.

Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out:
Strew good luck, o'uphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom. Shakspeare.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou dost evil. Shakspeare. King Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently us'd.
—Revoke that doom of mercy, for 'tis Clifford.
Shakspeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household task, shall be her doom.
Dryden's Illiad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom;
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
Pope.

DOOMSDAY. n. f. [doom and day.]

1. The day of final and universal judgment; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out,
and run,
As it were doomsday. Shakspeare. Julius Cæsar.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday. Brown.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night:
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-faults day is my body's doomsday. Shakspeare.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK. n. f. [doomsday and book.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

The Dances also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomsday-book. Camden.

DOOR. n. f. [door, dupe, Saxon; dorris, Erse.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses, and gates of cities or public buildings; except in the licence of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free will open flew. Fairy Q.
In the side, a door

Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast. Milton's Paradise Lost.

To the same end men several paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead. Denham.
For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in. Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a house: often in the plural, doors.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air,
and another of the same kind and bigness within doors.
Bacon's Natural History.

Let him doubt whether his cloaths be warm,
and so go naked; whether his house be firm,
and live without doors. Decay of Piety.

Martin's office is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel. Arbutnot.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never fall the actions of their own species,
push at those who approach them with their foreheads.
Addison's Spectator.

The fultan entered again the peasant's house,
and turned the owner out of doors. Addison.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grass appear;
And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year.
Dryden.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security. Hammond.

5. Out of DOOR, or DOORS. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,

With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To servile duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door.
Dryden's Persius.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother. Locke.

6. At the DOOR of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door. Dryden.

7. Next DOOR to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

A seditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult. L'Esperance.

DOORCASE. n. f. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is enclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood atwart two other pieces. Mexon.

DOORKEEPER. n. f. [door and keeper.] Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistances to thee, desires to be even a door-keeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants. Taylor's Preface.

DO'QUET. n. f. A paper containing a warrant.

Before the institution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased without an oath. Bacon's Office of Alienation.

DORMANT. adj. [dormant, French.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can insure his anger is dormant; or, should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

With this radius he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, till it swims within his reach. Grew's Museum.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion were the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant. Brown.

3. Private; not publick.

There were other dormant musters of soldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together. Bacon.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions. Swift.

5. Leaning; not perpendicular.

Old dormant windows must confess
Her beams: their glimmering spectacles,
Struck with the splendor of her face,
Do th' office of a burning glass. Cleveland.

DO'RMITORY. n. f. [dormitorium, Lat.]

1. A place to sleep in: used commonly for a room with many beds.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories. Mortimer.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,
And Jones and Boyle's united labours fall.
Pope's Dunciad.

2. A burial place.

The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cæmeteria, and in English dormitories. Ayliffe's Parergon.

DO'RMOUSE. n. f. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.] A small animal which passes a large part of the winter in sleep.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,
A little less than dead: more dulness hangs
On us than on the moon. Ben Jonson's Cataoine.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused. Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. f. [from dorn, German, a thorn.] A fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shell-fish, as scallops and sheath-fish; and flat, as turbot, dorns; and holybut. Carew.

DO'RNICK. n. f. [of Deornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table.

TO DORR. v. a. [tor, stupid, Teuto-nick.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner.

DORR. n. f. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vagimpennous, or sheath-winged, as beetles and dorrs. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The dorr or hedge-chaffer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this, and his eyes, black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shell spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chestnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair. Grew's Musæum.

DO'RSEL. } n. f. [from dorsum, the back.]
DO'RSEK. } A pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burden, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written, dosfel.

DORSIFEROUS. } adj. [dorsum, and fero, DORSIPAROUS. } or pario, Latin.] Having the property of bearing, or bringing forth, on the back. It is used of plants that have the seed on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

DO'RITURE. n. f. [contracted from dormitura; dormitura, Latin; dortoir, Fr.] A dormitory; a place to sleep in. He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat. Bacon.

DOSE. n. f. [δοσις.]
 1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vigorous dose too fiercely wrought,
 And added fury to the strength it brought.

Dryden's Virgil.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose. Arbutnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignorant in power and place that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that, as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down. South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot. Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into
 The world, but he has done his dose;
 Married his punctual dose of wives,
 Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives. Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose; that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE. v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines. Derham.

2. To give physick, or any thing nauseous, to any man: in a ludicrous sense.

DO'SSEL. n. f. [corrupted from dorsel, something laid upon the part.] A pledge; a nodule or lump of lint to be laid on a sore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a dosel. Wifmar.

DOST. The second person of do.

Why then dosst treat me with rebukes, instead
 Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?
Addison's Cat.

DOT. n. f. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg; and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing.

To DOT. v. a. To mark with specks.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

DO'TAGE. n. f. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The foul in all hath one intelligence;
 Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
 And too much driness in an old man's sense,
 Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
 Then doth the foul want work, and idle sit;
 And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
 As joyful as our hearts:
 Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
 Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
 Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DO'TAL. adj. [dotalis, Latin.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possess,
 My people thin, my wretched country waste,
 An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
 Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own?
Garth's Ovid.

DO'TARD. n. f. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood, called in some provinces a twiechild.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise,
 Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
 And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,
 Else never should thy judgment be so frail. Fairy Queen.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,
 To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.

DO'TATION. n. f. [dotalio, Latin.] The act of giving a dowry or portion. Diët.

To DOTE. v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, French.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote,
 I see my fun. Shaksp. Comedy of Errors.
 A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote:
 A sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Fer.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
 Of arms imagin'd in your lonely cell:
 Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
 Permit to men the thought of peace and war. Dryden's Æneid.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison's Spectator.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting obliviance. Shakspere.

3. To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
 Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on,
 And blest'd, and grac'd. Shaksp. Henry IV.
 Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
 Because thou seem'st me dote upon my love. Shakspere.

All the beauties of the court besides
 Are mad in love, and dote upon your person. Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power,
 And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
 Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,
 As not to entertain a nobler fire? Dryden.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctance, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death all eloquent! you only prove
 What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

DO'TED. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid.
 Not used.

His senseless speech and doted ignorance
 The prince had marked well. Spenser.

DO'TER. n. f. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
 It mourns that painting and usurping air
 Should ravish doters with a fallie aspect;
 And therefore is the born to make black fair. Shakspere.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed by the uncertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DO'TINGLY. adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
 Should hope in this low town to find a maid? Dryden's Fivental.

DO'TTARD. n. f. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dotards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

DO'TTEREL. n. f. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

DO'UBLE. adj. [double, Fr. duplex, Lat. duple, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Eclus.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but on whom they are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads: His cares must still be double to his joys in any dignity. Ben Jonson's Cataline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers, by neglecting, and not removing, prove single.

Bacon's Natural History.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swain so high, his double chin
Might rest upon 't.
Dryden's Spanish Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus curst steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief hold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.
Dryden.
No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night.
Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be.
Darvies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

The magnifico is much belov'd,
And hath in his effect a voice potential,
As double as the duke's.
Shakespeare's Othello.

7. Deceitful; acting two parts, one openly, the other in secret.

I th' presence
He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning.
Shakespeare
Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart.
1 Chronicles.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. f. [duplex placitum, Latin.]

Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff.
Cowell.

DOUBLE QUARREL.

Is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferior ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official; and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed.
Cowell.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetic; for then I was double their age, which now I am not.
Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways: as, double-edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity; as, double-died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.]

Biting or cutting on either side.
But moist their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantick force to rear.
Dryden.

DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.]

Having two rows of buttons.
Others you'll see, when all the town's afloat,
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,

Gay's Trivia.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. f. [double and dealer.]

A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion.
L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING. n. f. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the wiser for me; there's go'd —

—But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.
Shakespeare.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for, without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing.
Brome.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.]

To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,

Whilst the draid danger does behind remain.
Fairy Queen.

DRAFF. n. f. [drap, dirty, Saxon; drap, Dutch, the sediment of ale.]

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tatter'd prodigals, lutely come from swinekeep-ing, from eating druff and hulks. Shakspere.

'Twere simple fury, still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;

To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!

No, give them grains their fill;
Hulks, druff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.

I call'd and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the druff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the druff of servile food,
Consume me. Milton.

2. Refuse; sweepings. Perhaps improper.

Younger brothers but the druff of nature. Dryd.

DRA'FFY. adj. [from druff.] Worthless; dreggy.

TO DRAG. v. a. [dragan, Saxon.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.

Such his aspect, when, foil'd with bloody dust, Dragg'd by the cords which through his feet were thrust. Denham.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this changing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag
it as long as I am able. Swift.

2. To draw any thing burdensome, any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife, Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd so well,
To part with all my bliss to save my lover,
On! can I drag a wretched life without him?
Smith.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels, but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

They shall surprisè
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.

The confiable was no sooner espied but he was reproach'd with disdainful words, beaten and dragg'd in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

To fall, that's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish.
Dryden.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down.
Dryden.

TO DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of founding lashes, and of dragging chains.
Dryden.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon.

DRA. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on nooks.
Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgments to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car:
it is used for the carriage of lumber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men.
Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

TO DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a draggled damsel, here and there,

Dragnets were made to fish within the deep,
And castingnets did rivers bottoms sweep.
Mil's Virgil.

Some fishermen, that had been out with a dragnet, and caught nothing, had a draught towards the evening, which put them in hope of a sturgeon at last. L'Estrange.

One of our late great poets is sunk in his reputation, because he could never forgive any conceit which came in his way, but swept, like a dragnet, great and small. Dryden.

Whatever old Time, with his huge dragnets, has conveyed down to us along the stream of ages, whether it be shells or shell-fish, jewels or pebbles, sticks or straws, seaweeds or mud, these are the ancients, these are the fatners. Watts.

DRA'GON. n. f. [draco, Latin; dragon, French.]

1. A kind of winged serpent, perhaps imaginary, much celebrated in the romances of the middle ages.

I go alone,
Like to a lonely dragon, that his fen
Makes fear'd and talk'd of more than seen.

Shakspere.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning

May bear the raven's eye. Shaksp. Cymbeline.
And you, ye dragons! of the scaly race,
Whom glittering gold and shining armours grace;
In other nations harmless are you found Their guardian genii and protectors own'd.

Rowe.
On fiery volumes there a dragon rides;
Here, from our strict embrace, a stream he glides.

2. A fierce violent man or woman.

3. A constellation near the north pole.

DRA'GON. n. f. [dracunculus, Latin.] A plant.

1. In weight the eighth part of an ounce.

The trial being made betwixt lead and lead, we going severally seven drams in the air, the balance in the water weigheth only four drams and forty-one grains, and abateth of the weight in the air two drams and nineteen grains: the balance kept the same depth in the water. Bacon.

2. A small quantity, in a kind of proverbial sense.

One loving hour
For many years of sorrow can dispense;
A dram of sweet is worth a pound of sour.

Fairy Queen.
No dram of judgment with thy force is join'd;
Thy body is of profit, and my mind. Dryden.

3. Such a quantity of distilled spirits as is usually drank at once.

I could do this, and that with no rash pecton,
But with a ling'ring dram, that should not work Maliciously like poison. Shaksp. Winter's Tol.
Every dram of brandy, every pot of ale that you drink, raiseth your character. Steele.

4. Spirit; distilled liquor.

A second fee, by meeker manners known,
And modest as the maid that sips alone;
From the strong fate of drams if thou get free,
Another Dury, Ward! shall sing in thee. Pope.

To DRAM. v. n. [from the noun.] In low language, to drink drams; to drink distilled spirits.

DRAMA. n. f. [ἄραμα.] A poem accommodated to action; a poem in which the action is not related, but represented; and in which therefore such rules are to be observed as make the representation probable.

Many rules of imitating nature Aristotle drew from Homer, which he fitted to the drama; furnishing himself also with observations from the theatre, when it flourished under Æschylus, Euripides, and Sophocles. Dryden.

DRAMA'TICAL. } adj. [from drama.]
DRAMA'TICK. } Represented by action; not narrative.

I hope to make it appear, that, in the great dramatick poem of nature, is a necessity of introducing a God. Bentley.

Shakespeare.

DRAUGHT. n. f. [from draw.]

1. The act of drinking.

They flung up one of their hogheads, and I drank it off at a draught; which I might well do, for it did not hold half a pint. Gulliver's Travels.

2. A quantity of liquor drank at once.

He had once continued about nine days without drink; and he might have continued longer, if, by distempering himself one night with hard study, he had not had some inclination to take a small draught. Boyle.

Fill high the goblets with the sparkling flood,
 And with deep draughts invoke our common god.
Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs en-slave;
 He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave.
Dryden's Æneid.

I have cured some very desperate coughs by a draught every morning of spring water, with a handful of sage boiled in it. Temple.

Every draught, to him that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature; a provision for rheum and diseases. South.

3. Liquor drank for pleasure.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
 I would not taste thy treasonous offer. Milton.

Nomben'd hills, that lie unscen
 In the pernicious draught: the word obscene,
 Or harsh, which, once elane'd, must ever fly
 Irrevocable; and the too prompt reply. Prior.

Delicious wines th' attending herald brought;
 The gold gave lustre to the purple draught.
Pope's Odyssey.

4. The act of drawing or pulling carriages.

A general custom of using oxen for all sorts of draught, would be perhaps the greatest improvement. Temple.

The most occasion that farmers have, is for draught horses. Mortimer's Husbandry.

5. The quality of being drawn.

The Hertfordshire wheel-plough is the best and strongest for most uses, and of the easiest draught. Mortimer.

6. Representation by picture.

Her pencil drew what'er her soul design'd,
 And oft the happy draught surpass'd the image in her mind. Dryden.

7. Definition; sketch; outline.

A good inclination is but the first rude draught of virtue; but the finishing strokes are from the will. South.

I have, in a short draught, given a view of our original ideas, from whence all the rest are derived. Locke.

8. A picture drawn.

Whereas in other creatures we have but the trace of his footsteps, in man we have the draught of his hand: in him were united all the scattered perfections of the creature. South.

9. The act of sweeping with a net.

Upon the draught of a pond, not one fish was left, but two pikes grown to an excessive bigness.
Hale.

10. The quantity of fishes taken by once drawing the net.

He laid down his pipe, and cast his net, which brought him a very great draught. L'Esrange.

11. The act of shooting with the bow.

They drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon. Jeremiah.
Draw the water for the siege. Nath.

5. To suck.

He hath drawn thee dry. Eccles.
 There was no war, no death, no stop of trade or commerce; it was only the crown which had sucked too hard, and now being full, upon the head of a young king, was like to draw less.
Bacon's Henry VII.

Sucking and drawing the breast dischargeth the milk as fast as it can be generated. Wifeman.

6. To attract; to call toward itself.

We see that salt, laid to a cut finger, bealeth it; so as it seemeth salt draweth blood, as well as blood draweth salt. Bacon.

Majesty in an eclipse, like the sun, draws eyes that would not have looked towards it if it had shined out. Suckling.

He affected a habit different from that of the times, such as men had only beheld in pictures, which drew the eyes of multitudes, and the reverence of many, towards him. Clarendon.

7. To draw as the magnet does.

She had all magnetic force alone,
 To draw and satten fondred parts in one. Donne.

Draw out with credulous desire, and lead
 At will the manliest, resoluteest breast,
 As the magnetic hardest iron draws. Milton.

All eyes you draw, and with the eyes the heart;
 Of your own pomp yourself the greatest part.
Dryden.

8. To inhale.

Thus I call'd, and stony'd I know not whither,
 From where I first drew air, and first beheld
 This happy light. Milton's Paradise Lost.

While near the Lucrine lake, consum'd to
 death,
 I draw the sultry air, and gasp for breath,
 You taste the cooling breeze. Addison on Italy.

Why drew Marseilles' good bishop purer breath,

When nature sicken'd, and each gale was death?
Pope.

9. To take from any thing containing or holding.

They drew out the staves of the ark. 2 Chron.

10. To take off the spit or broacher.

The rest
 They cut in legs and fillets for the feast,
 Which drew on and serv'd, their hunger they appease. Dryden.

11. To take from a cask.

The wine of life is drawn, and the mere lees
 Are left this vault to brag of. Shakespeare.

12. To pull a sword from the sheath.

We will our youth lead on to higher fields,
 And draw no swords but what are sanctified.
Shakespeare.

I will draw my sword; my hand shall destroy them. Exodus.
 He proceedeth so far in his insolence, as to draw out his sword with an intent to kill him.
Dryden.

In all your wars good fortune blew before you,
 Till in my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
 The weight of my misfortunes drags'd you down.
Dryden.

13. To let out any liquid.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
 Of my more fierce endeavour. Shakespeare.

I opened the tumour by the point of a lancet, without drawing one drop of blood. Wifeman.

The joiner puts boards into ovens after the batch is drawn. Mortimer's Husbandry.

15. To unclose or slide back curtains.

Go, draw aside the curtains, and discover
 The several caskets to this noble prince. Shaks.
 Alarm'd, and with presaging heat he came,
 And drew the curtains, and expos'd the dame,
Dryden.

Shouts, cries, and groans first pierce my ears,
 and then
 A flash of lightning draws the guilty scene,
 And shows new arms, and wounds, and dying
 men. Dryden.

16. To close or spread curtains.

Philoctetes intreated Pamela to open her grief;
 who drawing the curtain, that the candle might not complain of her blushing, was ready to speak. Sidney.

17. To extract.

Herbs draw a weak juice, and have a soft stalk.
Racon.

Spirits, by distillations, may be drawn out of vegetable juices, which shall flame and fume of themselves. Cheyne.

18. To procure, as an agent cause.

When he finds the hardship of slavery outweigh the value of life, 'tis in his power, by refusing his master, to draw on himself death.
Locke.

19. To produce, or bring, as an efficient cause.

When the fountain of mankind
 Did draw corruption, and God's curse, by sin,
 This was a charge that all his heirs did bind,
 And all his offspring grew corrupt therein.
Sir John Davies.

Religion will require all the honour we can do it, by the blessings it will draw down upon us.
Tilleyson.

Our voluntary actions are the precedent cause of good and evil, which they draw after them, and bring upon us. Locke.

What would a man value land ready cultivated, and well stocked, where he had no hopes of commerce with other parts of the world, to draw money to him by the sale of the product? Locke.

Those elucidations have given rise or increase to his doubts, and draw on obscurity upon places of scripture. Locke.

His sword ne'er fell but on the guilty head;
Oppression, tyranny, and pow'r usurp'd,
Draw all the vengeance of his arm upon 'em.

20. To convey secretly or gradually.
The liars in wait draw themselves along.

In process of time, and as their people increased, they drew themselves more westerly towards the Red Sea.

21. To protract; to lengthen; to spilt.
How much her grace is alter'd on the sudden!
How long her face is drawn! how pale she looks,
And of an earthly cold.

Hear himself repine
At Fate's unequal laws; and at the clue
Which mercies in length the midmost sister drew.

If we shall meet again with more delight,
Then draw my life in length; let me sustain,
In hopes of his embrace, the worst of pain.

In some similes, men draw their comparisons into minute particulars of no importance.

22. To utter lingeringly.
The brand, amid the flaming fuel thrown,
Or drew, or seem'd to draw, a dying groan.

23. To represent by picture, or in fancy.
I do arm myself
To welcome the condition of the time;
Which cannot look more hideously on me,
Than I have drawn it in my fantasy.

With his other hand thus o'er his brow,
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it.
Draw the whole world expecting who should reign,
After this combat, o'er the conquer'd main.

From the soft assaults of love
Poets and painters never are secure:
Can I, untouch'd, the fair one's passions move,
Or thou draw beauty, and not feel its pow'r?

24. To form a representative image.
The emperor one day took up a pencil which fell from the hand of Titian, who was then drawing his picture; and, upon the compliment which Titian made him on that occasion, he said, Titian deserves to be served by Cæsar.

25. To derive; to have from some original cause or donor.

Shall freborn men, in humble awe,
Submit to servile shame;
Who from consent and custom draw
The same right to be rul'd by law,
Which kings pretend to reign?
Several wits entered into commerce with the Egyptians, and from them drew the rudiments of sciences.

26. To deduce, as from postulates.
From the events and revolutions of these governments, are drawn the usual instructions of princes and statesmen.

27. To imply; to produce as a consequential inference.

What shows the force of the inference but a view of all the intermediate ideas that draw in the conclusion, or proposition inferred?

28. To illure; to entice.

I'll raise such artificial spights,
As by the strength of their illusion
Shall draw him on to his confusion.
We have drawn them from the city.
Draw me not away with the wicked.
Having the art, by empty promises and threats, to draw others to his purpose.

The Spaniards, that were in the towne, had so good memories of their losses, in their former salies, as the confidence of an army, which came for their deliverance, could not draw them forth again.

29. To lead, as a motive.
Your way is shorter;
My purposes do draw me much about.
Æneas wond'ring stood, then ask'd the cause
Whence to the stream the crowding people draws.

30. To persuade to follow.
I drew this gallant head of war,
And call'd these fiery spirits from the world
To outlook conquest.

The poet
Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and woods;
Since nought for stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music, for the time, doth change his nature.

31. To induce; to persuade.
The English lords did ally themselves with the Irish, and draw them in to dwell among them,
and gave their children to be fostered by them.

Their beauty or unbecomiugness are of more force to draw or deter their imitation than discourses.

32. To win; to gain: a metaphor from gaming.

This seems a fair deserving, and must draw me
That which my father loses.

33. To receive; to take up: as, to draw money from the funds.

For thy three thousand ducats here is six.—
—If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts, and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them, I would have my bond.

34. To extort; to force.
So sad an object, and so well express'd,
Drew sighs and groans from the griev'd hero's breast.

Can you e'er forget
The fond embraces, and repeated blessings,
Which you drew from him in your last farewell?

35. To wrest; to distort.
I wish that both you and others would cease from drawing the sculptures to your fantasies and affections.

36. To compose; to form in writing:
used of formulary or juridical writings.

In the mean time I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants.
Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
The report is not unartfully drawn, in the spirit of a pleader who can find the most plausible topicks.
Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill?

37. To withdraw from judicial notice.
Go, wash thy face, and draw thy action:
come, thou must not be in this humour with me.

38. To eviscerate; to embowel.
In private draw your poultry, clean your tripe,
And from your cels their slimy substance wipe.

39. To DRAW in. To apply to any purpose by distortion or violence.

A dispute, where every little straw is laid hold on, and every thing that can but be drawn in any way, to give colour to the argument, is advanced with ostentation.

40. To DRAW in. To contract; to pull back.

Now, sporting muse, draw in the flowing reins;
Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains.

41. To DRAW in. To inveigle; to entice.

Have they invented tones to wia
The women, and make them draw in
The men, as Indians with a female Tame elephant inveigle the male?
It was the prostitute saith of faithless microeants that drew them in, and deceived them.

42. To DRAW off. To extract by distillation.

Authors, who have thus drawn off the spirits of their thoughts, should be still for some time, till their minds have gathered fresh strength, and by reading, reflection, and conversation, laid in a new stock of elegancies, sentiments, and images of nature.

43. To DRAW off. To drain out by a vent.
Stop your vessel, and have a little vent-hole stopp'd with a spill, which never allow to be pulled out till you draw off a great quantity.

44. To DRAW off. To withdraw; to abstract.

It draws men's minds off from the bitterness of party.

45. To DRAW on. To occasion; to invite.
Under colour of war, which either his negligence drew on, or his practices procured, he devised a subsidy.

46. To DRAW on. To cause; to bring by degrees.

The examination of the subtle matter would draw on the consideration of the nice controversies that perplex philosophers.

47. To DRAW over. To raise in a still.
I took rectified oil of virriol, and by degrees mixed with it essential oil of wormwood, drawn over with water in a limbeck.

48. To DRAW over. To persuade to revolt; to induce to change a party.

Some might be brought into his interests by money, others drawn over by fear.
One of differing sentiments would have drawn Luther over to his party.

49. To DRAW out. To protract; to lengthen.

He must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To ling'ring sufferance.

50. To DRAW out. To beat out, as is done to hot iron.

Batter a piece of iron out, or, as workmen
call it, draw it out, till it comes to its breadth.

Virgil has drawn out the rules of tillage and planting into two books, which Hesiod has dispatched in half a one.

51. To DRAW out. To extract; to pump out by insinuation.

Philocles found her, and, to draw out more,
said she, I have often wondered how such excellencies could be.

52. To DRAW out. To induce by motive.

Whereas it is concluded, that the retaining diverse things in the church of England, which other reformed churches have cast out, must needs argue that we do not well, unless we can show that they have done ill: What needed this wrest to draw out from us an accusation of so-reign churches?

53. To DRAW out. To call to action; to detach for service; to range.

Draw out a file, pick man by man,
Such who dare die, and dear will sell their death.

Next of his men and ships he makes review,
Draws out the best and ablest of the crew.

54. To DRAW out. To range in battle.

Let him desire his superior officer, that, the next time he is drawn out, the challenger may be placed near him.

55. To DRAW up. To form in order of battle.

So Muley-Zedan found us
Drawn up in battle, to receive the charge. Dryd.

56. To DRAW up. To form in writing; to compose in a formal manner.

To make a sketch, or a more perfect model of a picture, is, in the language of poets, to draw up the scenery of a play. Dryden.

A paper may be drawn up, and signed by two or three hundred principal gentlemen. Swift.

To DRAW. v. n.

1. To perform the office of a beast of draught.

An heifer which hath not been wrought with, and which hath not draws in the yoke. Deut.

Think every bearded fellow, that's but yok'd,
May draw with you. Shakspeare's Othello.

2. To act as a weight.

They should keep a watch upon the particular bias in their minds, that it may not draw too much. Addison's Spectator.

3. To contract; to shrink.

I have not yet found certainly, that the water itself, by mixture of ashes, or dust, will shrink or draw into less room. Bacon.

4. To advance; to move; to make progression any way.

You were, Jupiter, a swan, for the love of Leda: Oh, omnipotent love! how near the god draws to the completion of a goose. Shakspeare.

Draw ye near hither all the chief of the people. 1 Samuel.

He ended; and th' archangel soon drew nigh,
Not in his shape celestial, but as man

Clad to meet man. Milton's Par. Lost.

They returned to the camp where the king was, and the Scots drew a little back to a more convenient post for their residence. Clarendon.

Ambitious meteors! how willing they are to set themselves upon the wing, taking every occasion of drawing upward to the sun. Dryden.

Now nearer to the Stygian lake they draw,
Whom from the shore the surly boatmen saw,
Observ'd their passage through the shady wood,
And mark'd their near approaches to the flood.

Dryden.

And now I faint with grief; my fate draws nigh,

In all the pride of blooming youth I die.

Addison's Ovid.

5. To draw together; to be collected; to come together.

They muster there, and round the centre swarm,

And draw together in a globe form. Blackmore.

6. To draw a sword.

For his sake
Did I expose myself, pure; for his love
Drew to defend him, when he was beset.

Shakspeare.

7. To practise the art of delineation.

So much insight into perspective, and skill in drawing, as will enable him to represent tolerably on paper, any thing he sees, should be got.

Locke.

8. To take a card out of the pack; to take a lot.

He has drawn a black, and smiles. Dryden.

9. To make a fore run by attraction.

10. To DRAW off. To retire; to retreat.

When the engagement proves unlucky, the way is to draw off by degrees, and not to come to an open rupture. Collier.

11. To DRAW on. To advance; to approach.

The fatal day draws on, when I must fall.

Dryden.

12. To DRAW up. To form troops into regular order.

The Earl Bernard, with the king's troops, seeing there was no enemy left on that side, drew up in a large road opposite to the bridge. Clarendon.

13. To DRAW retains, through all its varieties of use, some shade of its original meaning, to pull. It expresses an action gradual or continuous, and less surely. Thus we forge a sword by blows, but we draw it by a continued line. We pour liquor quick, but we draw it in a continued stream. We force compliance by threats, but we draw it by gradual prevalence. We write a letter with whatever haste, but we draw a bill with slow scrupulosity.

DRAW. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. The act of drawing.

2. The lot or chance drawn.

DRAWBACK. n. f. [draw and back.]

Money paid back for ready payment, or any other reason.

In poundage and drawbacks I lose half my rent;
Whatever they give me, I must be content.

Swift.

DRAWBRIDGE. n. f. [draw and bridge.]

A bridge made to be lifted up, to hinder or admit communication at pleasure.

Half the buildings were raised on the continent, and the other half on an island, continued together by a drawbridge. Carew.

DRAWER. n. f. [from draw.]

1. One employed in procuring water from the well.

From the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water. Deuteronomy.

2. One whose business is to draw liquors from the cask.

Stand in some bye room, while I question my puny drawer to what end he gave me the sugar.

Shakspeare's Henry IV.

Let the drawers be ready with wine and sixth glasses;

Let the waiters have eyes, though their tongues must be tied. Ben Jonson.

A man of fire is a general enemy to all waiters, and makes the drawers abroad and his footmen at home, know he is not to be provoked. Tatler.

3. That which has the power of attraction.

Love is a flame, and therefore we say beauty is attractive, because physicians observe that fire is a great drawer. Swift.

4. A box in a case, out of which it is drawn at pleasure.

There may be other and different intelligent beings, of whose faculties he has as little knowledge, or apprehension, as a worm, shut up in one drawer of a cabinet, hath of the senses or understanding of a man. Locke.

We will suppose the China dishes taken off, and a drawer of medals supplying their room. Addison on Medals.

5. [In the plural.] The lower part of a man's dress.

The Maltse harden the bodies of their children, by making them go stark naked, without shirt or drawers, till they are ten years old.

Locke.

DRAWING. n. f. [from draw.] Delineation; representation.

They random drawings from your sheets shall talk,

And of one beauty many blunders make. Pope.

DRAWINGROOM. n. f. [from draw and room.]

1. The room in which company assemble at court.

What you heard of the words spoken of you in the drawing-room was not true: the sayings of princes are generally as ill related as the sayings of wits. Pope.

2. The company assembled there.

DRAWN. part. [from draw.]

An army was drawn up near six thousand horse.

So Betty was the pipe, a Partisan bow,
With vigour drawn must put the staff below.

Johnson's Fables.

1. Equal; where each party takes his own share.

If we make a drawn game of it, or procure but moderate advantages, every British hunt must terminate. Addison.

2. With a sword drawn.

What, art thou drawn among those heartless hinds?

Shakspeare.

3. Open; put aside, or unclosed.

A curtain drawn presented to our view
A town besieg'd. Dryden's Tyrannic Love.

4. Evicted.

There is no more faith in thee than in a stoned pounce; no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox.

Shakspeare.

5. Induced as from some motive.

The Irish will better be drawn to the English, than the English to the Irish government.

Spenser on Ireland.

As this friendship was drawn together by fear on both sides, so it was not like to be more durable than was the fear.

Hayward.

DRAWWELL. n. f. [draw and well.] A deep well; a well out of which water is drawn by a long cord.

The first conceit, tending to a watch, was a drawwell: the people of old were wont only to let down a picher with a handcord, far as much water as they could easily pull up.

Greuv.

To DRAWL. v. n. [from draw.] To utter any thing in a slow, driveling way.

Then mount the clerks, and in one lazy tone
Through the long heavy page drawl on. Pope.

DRAY. n. f. [dray, Saxon.]

DRAYCART. n. f. The car on which beer is carried.

Let him be brought into the field of election upon his draycart, and I will meet him there in a triumphant chariot. Addison.

When drays bound high, then never cross behind,

Where bubbling yeast is blown by gusts of wind.

Gay.

DRAYHORSE. n. f. [dray and horse.] A horse which draws a dray.

This truth is illustrated by a discourse on the nature of the elephant and the drayhorse. Tatler.

DRAYMAN. n. f. [dray and man.] One that attends a dray or cart.

A brace of draymen bid God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee. Shakspeare.

Have not cobblers, draymen, and mechanicks governed as well as preached? Nay, have not they by preaching come to govern? South.

DRAYPLOUGH. n. f. [dray and plough.]

A plough of a particular kind.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for miry clays. Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRAZEL. n. f. [perhaps corrupted from drösel, the fenn or dross of human nature; or from dröselle, French, a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch.

As the devil uses witches,
To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expir'd, the drazes
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD. n. f. [drad, Saxon.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright; horror either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
 When pow'r to flattery bows? To plainness know-our
 Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shaksf.
 Let not thy dread strike me afraid. Job
 Was ever any wicked man free from the sting of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tobias
 If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terror of eternal misery. Rogers

2. Habitual fear; awe.
 The fear of you, and the dread of you, shall be upon every beast of the earth. Genfs.

3. The person or thing feared; the cause of fear.
 Let him be your dread. Ijair
 To thee of all our good the sacred spring;
 To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our lofter king. Prior

DREAD. adj. [dræd, Saxon.]
 1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
 That laid the sentence of dread banishment
 O beyond! proud man, should take it off again
 With words of sooth! Shakspeare
 It cannot be, but thou hast murder'd him:
 So should a murderer look, so dread, so grim.
Shakspeare
 To be expos'd against the warring winds;
 To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder.
Shakspeare
 Terror seiz'd the rebel host,
 When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
 The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd.
Milton

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.
 Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n, Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
 The summoning archangels to proclaim Thy dread tribunal. Milton's Paradise Lost
 From this descent
 Celestial virtues rising, will appear
 More glorious and more dread than from no fall.
Milton

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase, dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.
 You may despise that which terrifies others,
 and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake

To DREAD. v. n. To be in fear.
Dread not, neither be afraid of them. Deut

DREADER. n. f. [from dread.] One that lives in fear.
 I have suspended much of my pity towards the great dreaders of popery. Swift

DREADFUL. adj. [dread and full.]

1. Terrible; frightful; formidable.
 The rigid interdiction which rebounds
 Yet dreadful in mine ear. Milton
 The ill night,
 Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton
 Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
 Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville

2. Awful; venerable.
 How dreadful is this place! Genfs.

DREADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.]
 Terribly; frightfully.
 Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself, can find
 A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
 Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
 Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews.
Dryden

DREADFULNESS. n. f. [from dreadful.]
 Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewell on Providence

DREADLESSNESS. n. f. [from dreadless.]
 Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of course crossed him. Sidney

DREADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unafrighted; intrepid; unshaken;
 undaunted; free from terrour.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
 It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort Unto an aged woman. Fairy Queen
 All night the dreadless angel, unparfaced,
 Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton

DREAM. n. f. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρῆμα τη βυ, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen.
 This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram:

Συνησας ὁ βυθὸς καὶ παρῖνος ἢ μᾶθε
 ὠδῶν,
 Τὴν σπυδὴν μεταδίει, ἢ φέρε τὰς ὄδους.
Antbol.

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
 In the affliction of those terrible dreams
 That shake us nightly. Shakspeare's Macbeth
 In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
 Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden

Glorious dreams: stand ready to restore
 The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryd.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
 A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
 Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
 He may enguard his dotage. Shakspeare

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
 But, being awake, I do despise my dream.
Shakspeare

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt myself and me:
 We have been down together in my sleep,
 Unbuckling helms, filling each other's throat,
 And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shakspeare

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
 Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shak.
 He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust. Burnet
 He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
 Till teach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
Dryden

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading,
 but not digesting. Locke

I began to dream of nothing less than the immortality of my work. Smith

5. To be sluggish; to idle.
 Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
 And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.
 The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
 Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy. Dryd.
 At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
 And dreams the future fight, and early rose.
Dryden

DREAMER. n. f. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision laid, and vanish'd from his sight;
 The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryd.
 If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometimes he angers me
 With telling of the moldwarp and the ant,
 Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shaksf.

3. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reverer.
 The man of sense his meat devours,
 But only smells the peel and flowers;
 And he must be an idle dreamer,
 Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer.
Prior

4. A sluggard; an idler.

DREAMLESS. adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams.

The favages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden's Remains

DREAR. n. f. Dread; terrour.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
 The hoarse night raven, trump of doleful drear.
Spenser

DREAR. adj. [dreorig, Saxon, dreary.]
 Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
 A drear and dying sound
 Affrights the flames at their service quaint.
Milton

DREARIHEAD. n. f. [from dreary.] Horrour; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhed,
 Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
 She grew to hideous shape of drearihead,
 Pined with grief of folly late repented. Spenser

DREARIMENT. n. f. [from dreary.] This word is now obsolete.

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
 Your doleful dreariment. Spenser's Epithalamium

2. Horror; dread; terrour.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
 To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent:
 Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly feud,
 Inroll'd in flames and smouldring dreariment.
Fairy Queen

DREARY. adj. [dreorig, Saxon.]
 • This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
 With dreary thricks did also yell;
 And hungry wolves continually did howl
 At her abhorred face, fo horrid and so foul.
Fairy Queen

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, the led
 Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden

Towns, forests, herds, and men promiscuous Crown'd,

With one great death deform the dreary ground.

Prior.

DREDGE. n. f. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often slooped may be called from this.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar bedge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spalls of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom.

Carew.

To DREDGE. v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne find a welcome acceptance.

Carew.

DREDGER. n. f. [from dredge.] One who fishes with a dredge.

DREGGINESS. n. f. [from dreggy.] Fullness of dregs or lees; foulness; muddiness; feculence.

DREGGISH. adj. -[from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they sing in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong.

Hursey on Consumption.

DREGGY. adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

These numerous veins, such is the curious frame, Receive the pure insinuating stream; But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit, To form the blood or feed the limbs unfit.

Blackmore.

Ripe grapes being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out.

Boyle.

DREGS. n. f. [dr̄yertzen, Saxon; dreg-gian, Islandick.]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine, If for the dregs we could some other blame. Davis. They often tread destruction's horrid path, And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.

Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive
What the first sprightly running could not give.

Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.

Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd

Than we, the dregs and rubbish of mankind. Dryd.

What diffidence we must be under whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure.

Ry, etc.

To DRAIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain: split differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets; 'tis but setting her mill a-going, and I can drain her of them all.

Congreve.

'Tis drain'd and emptied of its poison now;
A cordial draught.

Southern.

To DRENCH. v. a. [dr̄encan, Saxon.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their fishness and glosses.

Shakspeare.

To-day deep thoughts learn with me to drench In mirth, that after no repenting draws. Milton.

VOL. I.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.

Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep

Their drenched natures lie, as in a death. Shakspeare

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd

Our swords in native blood. Phillips.

3. To physick by violence.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.

Mortimer's Husbandry.

DRENCH. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench

Of that forgetful lake benumb not still,

That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dictionary.

Hany, says she, how many haft thou kill'd to-day? Give my roan horse a drench, says he;

and answers, fourteen, an hour after. Shakspeare.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,

And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.

Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Their counsels are more like a drench that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRENCHER. n. f. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or sleeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dict.

DRENT. participle. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme to brent, or burnt.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present

see
In danger rather to be drent than brent?

Fairy Queen.

To DRESS. v. a. [dresser, French.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request

He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;

And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest.

Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beautifully; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel, and glass gems, and counterfeit imagery.

Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,

Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.

Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dress'd out, the value of three hundred twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four-pence.

Shubhurst.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress

This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r. Edmon.

Well must the ground be digg'd, and better dress'd.

New toil to make, and mel'orate the rest. Dryden.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil instead of bark. Mortimer's Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps he shall burn incentive. Exodus.

When you dress your young tops, cut away

roots or spigs. Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To prepare victuals for the table.

Thus the voluptuous youth, bred up to dress

For his fat grandfire some delicious mets,

In feeding high his tutor wif forpats,

An heir apparent of the gourmand race. Dryden.

DRESS. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laughed at in our forefathers warrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity they are brought about, we think becoming. Government of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,

A dress by fates and furies worn alone.

Pope's Statius.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciences, and keeps at distance an encroacher.

Clarissa.

3. The skill of adjusting drefs.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry.

Pope.

DRESSER. n. f. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

She hurries all her hand-maids to the task;

Her head alone will twenty dressers ask. Dryden.

2. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

Said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold,

these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none. Luke.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is dress'd or prepared for the table.

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meat:

What dogs are these! Where is the rascal cook?

How durst you, villains! bring it from the dresser,

And serve it thus to me that love it not?

Shakspeare.

A maple dresser in her hall she had,

On which full many a slender meal she made.

Dryden.

When you take down dishes, tip a down upon the dresser. Swift's Directions to the Cook.

DRESSING. n. f. [from dress.] The application made to a sore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an eschar made by the cathartic.

Wifeman or Tumour.

The room in which clothes are put on.

Latin books might be found every day in his dress'ing-room, if it were carefully searched.

Swift.

DRI

DREST. part. [from dress.]

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.
Addison.

DRIE. v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defal-cate. A cant word.

Merchants gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains dribs a part.
Dryden.

To DRIBBLE. v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages: drop, drip, dripple, dribble, thence drivel and driveller. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it.
Woodward on Fossil.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary sappression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder. Abucaprot.

2. To fall weakly and flowly.

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Shakspeare.

3. To flaver as a child or idiot.

To DRIBBLE. v. a. To throw down in drops.

Let the cook follow with a ladle full of soup,
and dribble it all the way up stairs. Swift.

DRIELET. n. f. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum.

Twelve long years of exile borne,
Twice twelve we number'd since his blest return;
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the driblet of a day. Dryden.

DRIER. n. f. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture;
a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of dairy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. f. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half tent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Fairy Queen.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or born along in a body.

The ready vaders stand;
Swift as on wings of wind upon they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky.
Pope's Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

O'er thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.
Shakspeare.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind: as, a snow-drift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern:
and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Locke.

DRI

•Their drift comes known and they discover'd are;

For some, of many, will be false of course.
Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This, by the stile, the manner, and the drift,
'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow, no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every plain.
Ellis' Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

He wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
Impatient bounding through the drifted heaps.
Thomson.

To DRILL. v. a. [driken, Dutch;
Espan, Sax. from Dungh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the Shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole. Moxon's Mechanical Exercises.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whacum by my side lay kill'd. Hudibras.
Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes?
Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drill-bow in the right hand; but, when they turn small work, they hold the drill-bow in their left hand. Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off: in low phrase;
corrupted, I believe, from drawled.

She has babbled him out of his youth: she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Addison.

5. To draw from sleep to sleep. A low phrase.

When by such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another, by the same arts they corrupt and squeeze him. South.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority.

Drilled through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field. Hudibras.

DRILL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill.

DRI

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,

Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.

To DRINK. v. n. preter. drank, or drunk; part. pass. drunk, or drunken.
[Djuncan, Saxon.]

1. To swallow liquors; to quench thirst.

Here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace.
Shakspeare.

She said, drink, and I will give thy camels drink also; to I drank, and she made the camels drink also. Genesis.

He drank of the wine.
When delight is the only end, and rests in itself, and dwells there long, then eating and a drinking is not a serving of God, but an inordinate action. Taylor's Rule of Living Holy.

2. To feast; to be entertained with liquors.

We came to fight you.—For my part I am sorry it is turned to a drinking. Shakspeare.

3. To drink to excess; to be a habitual drunkard. A colloquial phrase.

4. To DRINK to. To salute in drinking;
to invite to drink by drinking first.

I take your princely word for those redresses.
—I gave it you, and will maintain my word;
And thereupon I drink unto your grace. Shakspeare.

5. To DRINK to. To wish well to in the act of taking the cup.

Give me some wine; fill full:
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakspeare.

I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleros about London. Shakspeare.

To DRINK. v. a.

1. To swallow: applied to liquids.

He had eaten no bread, nor drank any water,
three days and three nights. Samuel.
We have drunken our water for money. Samuel.

2. To suck up; to absorb.

Set rows of rosemary with flow'ring stem,
And let the purple violets drink the firmam.
Dryden.

Brush not thy sweeping skirt too near the wall;
Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil.
Gay.

3. To take in by any inlet; to hear; to see.

My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's uttering, yet I know the sound.
Shakspeare.

Thither write, my queen;
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,

Though ink be made of gall. Shakspeare. Cymbeline.

Phemius! let acts of gods, and heroes old,
What ancient bards in hall and bow' have told,
Attemper'd to the lyre, your voice employ;
Such the pleas'd ear will drank with silent joy.

I drank delicious poison from thy eye. Pope.

4. To act upon by drinking.

Come, we have a hot venison patty to dinner;
come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drank down all unkindness. Shakspeare.

He will drown his health and his strength in his belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drank down himself too. South.

5. To make drunk.

Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions. 1 Kings.

6. It is used with the intensive particles off, up, and in. Off, to note a single act of drinking.

One man gives another a cup of poison, a thing as terrible as death; but at the same time he tells him that it is a cordial, and so he drinks it off, and dies. South.

7. Up, to note that the whole is drunk.
Alexander, after he had drank up a cup of fourteen pints, was going to take another.

Arbutnot on Coms.

8. In, to enforce the sense: usually of inanimate things.

The body being reduced nearer unto the earth, and emptied, becometh more porous, and greedily drinketh in water. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

DRINK. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Liquor to be swallowed: opposed to meat.

When God made choice to rear
His mighty champion, strong above compare,
Whose drink was only from the liquid brook!

Milton.

2. Liquor of any particular kind.

We will give you rare and choice drinks.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

The juices of fruits are either watery or oily:
I reckon among the watery all the fruits out of which drink is expressed, as the grape, the apple, and the pear. Bacon.

O madnes, to think use of strongest wines,
And strongest drinks, our chief support of health.

Milton.

These, when th' allotted orb of time's complete,

Are more commended than the labour'd drink.

Philips.

Amongst drinks, austere wines are apt to occasion foul eruptions. Arbutnot on Aliments.

DRINK-MONEY. n. f. [drink and money.]

Money given to buy liquor.

Peg's servants were always asking for drink- money. Arbutnot.

DRINKABLE. adj. [from drink.] Potable;
such as may be drank.

DRINKER. n. f. [from drink.] One that drinks to excess; a drunkard.

It were good for those that have moist brains,
and are great drinkers, to take fume of lignum, aloes, rosemary, and frankincense, about the fume of the moon. Bacon.

The drinker and debauched person is the object of scorn and contempt. South.

The urine of hard drinkers affords a liquor extremely fetid, but no inflammable spirit; what is inflammable stays in the blood, and affects the brain. Great drinkers commonly die apoplectick. Arbutnot on Aliments.

TO DRIP. v. n. [drippen, Dutch.]

1. To fall in drops.

2. To have drops falling from it.

The soil, with fatt'ning moisture fill'd,
Is cloath'd with grass, and fruitful to be till'd;
Such as in fruitful vales we view from high,
Which dripping rocks, not rowling streams
supply. Dryden.

The finest sparks, and clearest beaux,
Drip from the shoulders to the toes. Prior.

TO DRIP. v. a.

1. To let fall in drops.

Her flood of tears

Seem like the lofty barn of some rich swain,
Which from the thatch drips fast a shower of rain.

Swift.

2. To drop fat in roasting.

Let what was put into his belly, and what he drips, be his sauce. Walter's Angler.

His offer'd entrails shall his crime reproach,
And drip their fatness from the hazle broach.

Dryden's Virgil.

DRIP. n. f. [from the verb.] That which falls in drops.

Water may be procured for necessary occasions from the heavens, by preserving the drips of the houses. Martin.

drive on their time by the periods of sin and death. Taylor.

He, driven to dismount, threatened, if I did not the like, to do as much for my horse as fortune had done for his. Shelton.

The Romans did not think that tyranny was thoroughly extinguished, till they had driven one of their consuls to depart the city, against whom they found not in the world what to object, saving only that his name was Tarquin. Hooker.

He was driven by the necessities of times, more than led by his own disposition, to rigour.

King Charles.

13. To distress; to straighten.

This kind of speech is in the manner of desperate men far driven. Spenfer's State of Ireland.

14. To urge by violence, not kindness.

He taught the gospel rather than the law,
And forc'd himself to drive, but lov'd to draw.

Dryden.

15. To impel by influence of passion.

I drive my sister from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness. Shakspere.

Discontents drive men into sickness.

King Charles.

Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into cholera. Clarendon.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St.
Paul; where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect.

Locke.

16. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that, of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon's Natural History.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities driven up and resolv'd into their most simple principles. Digby on Bodies.

To drive the argument farther, let us inquire into the obvious designs of this divine architect.

Chynee's Philosophical Principles.

The design of these orators was to drive tonic particular point, either the condemnation or accidental. Swift.

17. To carry on; to keep in motion.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well, if he sit at great usury.

Bacon.

The bees have common cities of their own,
And common fert; beneath one law they live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive.

Dryden.

Your Pafimond a lawless bargain drive,
The parent could not sell the daughter's love.

Dryden.

The trade of life cannot be driven without partners. Collier.

18. To purify by motion: so we say to drive feathers.

His thrice driven bed of down. Shakspere.

The one 's in the plot, let him be never so innocent; and the other is as white as the driven snow, let him be never so criminal. L'Estrange.

19. TO DRIVE out. To expel.

Tumults and their excitors drive myself and many of both houses out of their places.

King Charles.

As soon as they heard the name of Rosettes, they forthwith drove out their governour, and received the Turks into the town. Knolles' Hist.

TO DRIVE. v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but, being distracted, drives it that way where the greater and powerful' part of the earth is placed. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides;
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean born,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn.

Dryden.

Nor with the rising storm would vainly strive;
Ere left the helm, and let the vessel drive. Dryd.

2. To rush with violence.

Pierce Borcas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden's Aeneid.

Near as he draws, thick hailings of smoke
With gloomy pillars cover all the place;
Whose little intervals of night are broke
By sparks that drive against his sacred face.

Dryden.

Then with so swift an ebb the flood drives
backward,

If 'pt from underneath the scaly herd. Dryden.

The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' imbosh their hives in clusters. Dryden.

While thus he flood,
Perithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood.
As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
Th' imperious tempest and th' impetuous seas.
The wolves scamper'd away, however, as hard as they could drive.
Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand.

3. To pass in a carriage.
There is a litter ready; lay him in 't,
And drive tow'rd Dover.
Thy flaming chariot-wheels that shock
Heav'n's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drow'st of warring angels difarray'd.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.
Authors drive at these, as the highest elegancies, which are but the frigidities of wit.
We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at.
They look no further before them than the next line: whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another.
We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.
Four rogues in buckram let drive at me.
At Aoxur's shield he drove, and at the blow
Both shield and arm to ground together go.

6. To drive in all its senses, whether active or neuter, may be observed to retain a sense compounded of violence and progression.

To DRIVE. v. n. [from drip, drippl, dribble, drivel.]

1. To slaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard.
I met with this Chremes, a driveling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth.
No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytick, or a fool.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.
This driveling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow fotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey, by love;
A driveling hero, fit for a romance.

DRIV'EL. n. f. [from the verb.]

1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth.
Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth, and eyes.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use.
What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts!
Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives,
While still more wretch, more wicked, he dura prove.

DRIV'ELLER. n. f. [from drivel.] A fool; an idiot; a slaver.

I have heard the antient driv'ellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgment.

DRIVEN. The participle of drive.
They were driven forth from among men.

DRIV'ER. n. f. [from drive.]

1. The person or instrument that gives any motion by violence.
2. One who drives beasts.
He from the many-peopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the drivers cries.
The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death.
The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to.

3. One who drives a carriage.
Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and, ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his phant body bends.

To DRIZZLE. v. a. [driselen, German, to shed dew.] To shed in small flow drops, as winter rains.
When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew.

Though now this face of mine he hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory.

To DRIZZLE. v. n. To fall in short flow drops.

And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear.
Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture aught, no drizzling shower,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts.

DRIZZLY. adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted son.

DROIL. n. f. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel.] A drone; a slug-gard.

To DROIL. v. n. To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live without entoyle.

Desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant: the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets.

DROLL. n. f. [droler, French.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jackpudding.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way.
Why, how new, Andrew? cries his brother droll;
To-day's conceit, methinks, is something dull.

Democritus, dear droll! revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy neighbor'd mirth.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lutes in Smithfield drolls.

To DROLL. v. n. [droile, French.] To jest; to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries, used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous.
Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed or drolled into them.

Let virtuous insult and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature.

DRO'LLERY. n. f. [from droll.] Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heav'n and hell, borrow the christians faith, and the atheists drollery upon it.

DRO'MEDARY. n. f. [dromedare, Italian.] A sort of camel, so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a-day.

Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble; and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue. Their hair is soft and shorn: they have no fangs and foreteeth, nor horns upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. See CAMEL.

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place.
Mules, after their camels and dromedaries,
And waggons fraught with utensils of war.

DRONE. n. f. [broen, Saxon.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone.
Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him.
Sit idle on the household hearth,
A burd'uous drone, to visitants a gaze.
It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

Here while his canting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystic figures of her hand,
He tipples palmately, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.
What have I lost by my forefathers fault!
Why was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long noble race of droning kings?

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melissoil and honeyuckles pound,
With these alluring favours strew the ground,
And mix with tinkling brass the cymbal's droning sound.

DRO'NISH. adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive.

The droonish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,

Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient lives again.

To DROOP. v. n. [droef, forrow, Dutch.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deep;
Faint'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himself. Shak.
I drop, with struggling spent;
My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after drop. Shakespeare's Tempest.
Good things of day begin to drop and drowie,
While night's black agents to their prey do rouse. Shakespeare.

When by impulse from heav'n Tyrtæus sung,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung,
Roscommon.

Can flow'rs but drop in absence of the sun
Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.

Time seems not now beneath his years to drop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers drop.
Dryden.

When furious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the count of love,
The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts.
Dryden.

I'll animate the soldiers drooping courage
With love of freedom and contempt of life.
Ashton's Cato

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to drop and languish.
Swift

3. To sink; to lean downward: commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray, Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd

Laborious, till day doesp. Milton's Par. Lost
His head, though gay,

Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold, Hung drooping, unflour'd. Milton's Par. Lost
On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which with a sigh she rais'd, and this she said.
Pope.

DROP. n. f. [droppe, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the medicine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we, in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakespeare's Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine, being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be torn into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade
Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden's Span. Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And, Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. f. [gutta serena, Lat.]

A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quencl'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton's Par. Lost

To DROP. v. a. [droppan, Saxon.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.

His heavens shall drop down dew. Deut.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,
And drop their anchors on the meads below.
Dryden.

One only ing remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an awkward court'ry to the knight.
Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear,
To bite his pen and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep lim from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shakespeare.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and disvel themselves of those visible shapes. Watts's Logic.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac. Amos.

5. To insert indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them. Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgment in its favour, they suddenly drop the pursuit. Sharp's Surgery.

7. To quit a matter.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me if I drop you here. L'Esrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without further association.

She drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditional account of him to after-ages; and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish. Swift.

10. To hedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots. Varius stellatus corpora guttis.

Or spouting, with quick glance,
Skew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milton.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heav'n
Upon the place beneath. Shakespeare.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God. Psalms.

While cumber'd with my dropping cloaths I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' inhospitable coast.

Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lyceus wept from every dropping stone. Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.

Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars. Gallucci's Treat.

In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet melt at last drop into the sun's body. Chyene.

4. To fall spontaneously.

So may'st thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop

Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease
Gather'd, not harshly pluck'd. Milton.

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.

It was your perjuric,
That in the dote of blows your son might drop. Shakespeare.

6. To die.

Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us. Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.

Virgil's friends thought fit to drop this incident or Helen. Addison's Travels.

I heard of it twice occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropp'd. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.

Either you come not here, or, as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Caclets and qualmish, with a yawning face. Dryden.

He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry: and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator.

9. To fall short of a mark.

Often it drops or overleats by the disproportion of distance or application. Collier.

Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage. Pope.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life. Baker on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakespeare.
And yet no doubts the poor man's draught
controll;

He dreads no poison in his homely bowl;
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryden.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each + ble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name,
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here.

He from his seat

Of them affay'd,
Hunger and thirst contraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefulst dishes, writh'd their jaws
With foot and cinders fill'd. Milton.

Erfc.]

1. An instrument of military music, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threatening drums. Shakespeare.

In drums, the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangour shrill
Aflights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood. Philips.

Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport.
Shakespeare.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,
But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them.
Shaksf.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off.
South.

DRUNKEN. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.
Shaksf.
Drunk men imagine every thing tinctured round; they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things at a distance; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double.
Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

3. Saturated with moisture.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.
Shakespeare.

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a howling April between.
Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season.
Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid:
He shall live a man forlorn.
Shakespeare.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring:
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go.
Dryden.

5. Thirsty; a-thirst.

So dry he was for I way.
Shakespeare.
Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their tying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry sun'd tongues.
Philips.

6. Jeune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice.
Ben Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within or without the fabrick; a piece not to dry as the meer contemplation of proportions: and therefore I hope therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself.
Watson's Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.
Glauville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.
L'Esrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others.
L'Ejor.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament.
Pepet.

7. Hard; severe. [drien anciently to endure; drie, Scottish.]

Of two noblemen, the one was given to scoff, but kept ever loyal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry blow given?
Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings us'd to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet.
Hudibras.

TO DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arify; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt and dried away.
Shakespeare.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire, as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arify.
Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.
Bacon.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who dries his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.
Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one

Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which, burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes.
Dryden.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries.
Denham.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd tile in mourning
Dries up her tears.
Dryden.

1. Without moisture.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection.
Bacon.

Wouldst thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and barres.
Dryden's Juvenal.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
Pepet.

DRY'NESS. n. f. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; scarcity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrid by the sun, by dryness of the soil, from want and defect of water.
Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Such was the discord which did hit disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.
Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the innaction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible.
Roy on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature?
Bailey.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for 't.
Shakespeare.

Of all thy dues be done, and none left out. Milton.

They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.

In respect to the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

TO DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.

This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakspere.

DUEL. n. f. [duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight.

In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet, if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.
Dream not of your fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton's Paradise Lost.

'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought:
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

TO DU'EL. v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.

He must at length, poor man! die dully at home, when here he might to fashionably and genteelly have been duelled or fluxed into another world. Soutk.

The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.

TO DU'EL. v. a. To attack or fight with singly.

Who single
Duell'd their armies rank'd in proud array,
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton's Agonistes.

DU'ELLER. n. f. [from duel.] A single combatant.

They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them. Decay of Piety.

DU'ELLIST. n. f. [from duel.]

1. A single combatant.

If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.

Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryden.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.

His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say. Ben Jonson.

DUE'LLO. n. f. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of duelling.

The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duells avoid it. Shakspere.

DU'ENNA. n. f. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.

I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could no longer contain; I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbuthnot on Pope.

DUG. n. f. [deggia, to give suck, Islandick.]

1. A pap; a nipple; a teat; spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.

Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which the daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one Of sundry shape, yet all ill-favoured. F. Queen.

They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dig. Raleigh's History.

Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supplied
The infant Jove, and nurs'd his growing pride. Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast, without reproach.

It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears;
With whom, from tender dig of common nourse,
At once I was up brought. Fairy Queen.

As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dig between its lips. Shak.

DUG. The pret. and part. pass. of dig.

They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison.

DUKE. n. f. [duc, French; dux, Lat.] One of the highest order of nobility in England.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here with him this night. Shakspere.

Aurmarle, Surrey, and Exeter must lose
The names of dukes, their titles, dignities,
And whatsoever profits thereby rise. David's Civil War.

Du'KEDOM. n. f. [from duke.]

1. The feignory or possessions of a duke.
Her brother found a wife,
Where he himself was loit; Prospero his duke- dom
In a poor isle. Shakspeare's Tempest.
The cardinal never resigned his purple for the prospect of giving an heir to the dukedom of Tuscany. Milford

The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham. Shakspeare.

Du'LCET. adj. [dulcis, Latin.]
1. Sweet to the taste; luscious.
From sweet kernels pres'd,
She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold Wants the fit vessels pure. Milton.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.
I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shakspeare.
A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of *dulcet*ymphonies, and voices sweet. Milton.

Du'LCIFICATION. n. f. [from dulcify.]
The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltness, or acri-mony.

In colcothar, the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth: for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues. Boyle.

To Du'LCIFY. v. a. [dulcifer, French.]
To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocythis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal. Brown.
I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulci- fied tincture of vitriol. Wiseeman's Surgery.
Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbutnot.

Du'LCIMER. n. f. [dolcimello, Skinner.] A musical instrument played by striking the brass wires with little sticks.

Ye hear the sound of the cornet, flote, harp, sackbut, psalterey, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick. Daniel.

To Du'LCORATE. v. a. [from dulcis,
Latin.]
1. To sweeten.
The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swine's dung above all other dung. Bacon.

2. To make less acrimonious.
Turbit mineral, as it is sold in the shops, is a rough medicine; but, being somewhat dulcorated, first procureth vomiting, and then salivation.
Wiseeman's Surgery.

Du'LCORATION. n. f. [from dulcorate.]
The act of sweetening.

Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulco- ration importeth a degree to nourishment: and the making of things inalimental to become ali-mental, may be an experiment of great profit.
Bacon.

Du'LHEAD. n. f. [dull and head.] A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.

This people be fools and dulheads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief. Alcham.

Du'RIA. n. f. [δύρα.] An inferior kind of adoration.

Paleotus faith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the image; but with the different degrees of latin and dulia. Stillingfleet.

DuLL. adj. [dwl, Welsh; dole, Saxon;
doll, mad, Dutch.]

1. Stupid; doltish; blockish; unappre-hensive; indocile; slow of understanding.

Such is their evil hap to play upon dull spirited men. Hooker.
He that hath learned no wit by nature, nor art, may complain of gross-breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred. Shakspeare.

Sometimes this perception, in some kind of bodies, is far more subtle than the sense; so that the sense is but a dull thing in comparison of it.
Bacon's Natural History.

Every man, even the dullest, is thinking more than the most eloquent can teach him how to utter. Dryden.

2. Blunt; obtuse.
Meeting with Time, Slack thing, said I,
Thy feythe is dull; wret it, for shame. Herbert.

3. Unready; awkward.
Gynecia a great while stood still, with a kind of dull amazement, looking stedfastly upon her tongue. Fairy Queen.

Memory is so necessary to all conditions of life, that we are not to fear it should grow dull for want of exercise, if exercise would make it stronger. Locke.

4. Hebetated; not quick.
This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing. Matthew.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension; now that fear is sharpened and pointed.
Bacon.

5. Sad; melancholy.

6. Sluggish; heavy; slow of motion.
Thenceforth the waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunk thereof did faint and feeble grow. Spenser.

7. Gross; cloggy; vile.
She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling. Shakspeare.

8. Not exhilarating; not delightful: as, to make diccionaries is dull work.

9. Not bright: as, the mirror is dull, the fire is dull.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

10. Drowly; sleepy.

To DuLL. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To stupify; to infatuate.
So was she dulled with all, that we could come so near as to hear her speeches, and yet she not perceive the hearers of her lamentation. Silney.
Those drugs she has
Will stupify and dull the sense awhile. Shakspeare.

2. To blunt; to obtund.
Borrowing dulls the edge of industry. Shakspeare.
This entrance of the battle did wret the courage of the Spaniards, though it dulled their swords. Bacon.

3. To fadden; to make melancholy.

4. To hebetate; to weaken.
Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
The troublous noise did dull their dainty ears.
Spenser.

Nothing hath more dulled the wits, or taken away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Alcham.

5. To damp; to clog.
Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a foddren quickness; lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance. Hooker.

In bodies, union strengtheneth and cheiseth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression-and even so is it of minds. Bacon.

6. To make heavy, or slow of motion.
Usury dulls and damps all industries, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the flag. Bacon.

7. To fully brightness.
The breath dulls the mirror. Bacon.

Du'LLARD. n. f. [from dull.] A block-head; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.

What! mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakspeare.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee leek it. Shakspeare.

Du'LLY. adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.
It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful. Dryden's Duffresnoy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.
The air if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gayly; not brightly;
not keenly.
Not that I think those pantomimes,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art
Than those who dully act one part. Hulibras.

Du'LNES. n. f. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; in-docility; slowness of apprehension.
Nor is the dulness of the scholar to extinguish,
but rather to inflame, the charity of the teacher.
South.

2. Want of quick perception.
Nature, by a continual use of any thing, groweth to a satiety and dulness either of appetite or working. Bacon.

3. Drowsiness; inclination to sleep.
Here cease more questions;
Thou art inclin'd to sleep. 'Tis a good dulness,
And give it way. Shakspeare's Tempest.

4. Sluggishness of motion.

5. Dimness; want of lustre.

6. Bluntness; want of edge.

Du'LY. adv. [from due.]

1. Properly; fitly; in the due manner.
Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his precept.
Spenser.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole, which we call health. South.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.
Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pepp.

DUMB. adj. [דומ, he was silent;
dumbs, Gothic; dumbe, Saxon; durn, Danish; dom, Dutch, dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometime to unclose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them.
Hooker.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shakespeare's Rich. III.
Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech.
Watts's Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the godlike man.
Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show?
Shakespeare.
His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton.
Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech.
Roscommon.

For he who covets gain in such excess
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind.
Dryden's Fivernal.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show.
Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old fear withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours, and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryden.

DU'MBLY. adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.

DU'MBNESS. n. f. [from dumb.]

1. Incapacity to speak.

There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed.
Shakespeare's Winter's Tale.

To th' dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakespeare.

2. Refusal to speak; silence.

'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprize.
Dryden.

TO DU'MFOUND. v. a. [from dumb.] To confuse; to strike dumb. A low phrase.

They had like to have dumfounded the justice;
but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spenser.

DUMP. n. f. [from dom, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leafy. Shakespeare.
Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet concert; to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump: the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance.
Shakespeare.

Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on in solemn dump. Hudibras.
The tquire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps. Gay.

2. Absence of mind; reverie. Locke uses dumps singularly.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people,
when it carries them away from the company.
Locke.

DU'MPISH. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bid ling th' old adieu, his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumppish sight.
Spenser.

The list which I live at this age is not a dead, dumppish, and four life; but chearful, lively, and pleasant.
Herbert.

DU'MPLING. n. f. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.

DUN. adj. [dun, Saxon.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown.
Newton.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell. Shaks.
He then survey'd
Hell and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heaven on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton's Par. Lost.

TO DUN. v. a. [dunan, Saxon, to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day.
Bacon.

When thou dunnest their parents, seldom they, without a suit before the tribune, pay. Dryden.

I remember what she won:
And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

DUN. n. f. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Phillips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun—Sir, remember my bill.
Arbutnot's John Bull.

DUNCE. n. f. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dun, Dutch, stupid.] A dullard; a dolt; a thick-skull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best, in streets but scarce allow'd
To tinkle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd.
Dryden.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God?
Stillingfleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word.
Swift.

DUNG. n. f. [dinez, Saxon.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung, all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment
Bacon.

I judge the likeliest way to be, the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days.
Bacon's Nat. Hist.

For when from herbs the pure part must be won
From gross by stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.

He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

TO DUNG. v. a. [from the noun.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds when the west wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help.
Bacon.

There, as his dream foretold, a cart he found,
That carried compost south to dung the ground.
Dryden.

DU'NGEON. n. f. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoke of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumber'd senseless corse,
And, ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse.
Spenser.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungion; nor our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton.

Now from the north
Of Norumbeque, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungion, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust and flaw.
Milton.

By imagination, a man in a dungion is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addison.

DU'NGFORK. n. f. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where.
Mortimer.

DU'NGHIL. n. f. [dung and hill.]

1. A heap or accumulation of dung.
I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dung-hills are as much bound to him as I. Shaks.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a durghil.
L'Esrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a durghil: it is too noble a plant for to base a soil.
South.

The durghil having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land.
Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lightn'd by his beams, and kindly nurs'd,
Of which our earthly durghil is the worst. Dryden.

3. Any situation of meanness.

The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Ev'n from the durghil lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.

Out, durghil! dar'it thou brave a nobleman?
Shakespeare.

DU'NGHIL. adj. Sprung from the durghil; mean; low; base; vile; worthless.

His durghil thoughts, which do themselves enure
To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire. Spenser.

DU'NGY. adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the see to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shakespeare.

DU'NGYARD. n. f. [dung and yard.] The place of the durghil.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dung-yard.
Mortimer.

DU'NNER. n. f. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

DUODECUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Latin.] Consisting of twelves.

Griseus, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of scripture together.
Arbutnot.

DUPE. n. f. [dupe, French; from duppe, a foolish bird, easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party; child and man the same.

Dunciad.

TO DUPE. v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit.

Pope.

DUPLE. adj. [duplus, Latin.] Double; one repeated.

TO DUPLICATE. v. a. [duplico, Lat.]
1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undistemp'ed sentiments. Glanville.

2. To fold together.

DUPPLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4, or as the square of 2 to the square of 4.

Phillips, Harris, Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a dupli-ate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attractions growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface.

Newton's Opticks.

DUPPLICATE. n. f. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies, than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems.

Hale's Origin of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid. Wifeman.

DUPPLICATION. n. f. [from duplicate.]

A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes.

Ray on the Creation.

DUPPLICITY. n. f. [duplicitis, Lat.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at once.

Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Do not affect duplicities nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts, in your division of things. Watts.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue.

DURABILITY. n. f. [durabilis, Latin.]

The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferior unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hosker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Rowley.

DURABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable.

Raleigh.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,

And durable! Milton.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied To motion, measures all things durable By present, past, and future. Milton.

DURABLENESS. n. f. [from durable.]

Power of lasting; continuance.

The different consistence and durability of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less. Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durability of the metal that supports it. Addison.

DURABLY. adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

DURANCE. n. f. [from dure, law Fr.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailer; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in safe durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shak.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Huabras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I comait myself to lasting durance. Congreve's Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration.

A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth high'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heav'n's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

DURATION. n. f. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration; that it should have a due length in it. Addison.

TO DURE. v. n. [duro, Latin.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Raleigh.

DUREFUL. adj. [from dure and full.]

Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dried,
Is long ere it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heav'n ascend. Spenser.

DURELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Raleigh.

DURESS. n. f. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

2. In law.

A plea used, by way of exception, by him who, being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, feels any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowell.

DURING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure: as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor while he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DURITY. n. f. [duret , French; durus, Lat.] Hardness; firmness.

Ancients did burn fragments of marble, which in time became marble again, at least of indissoluble durability, as appeareth in the standing theatres. Wotton's Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durability. Brown.

DURST. The preterit of dare.

The christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUSK. adj. [duyfter, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured. The hills, to their sopply, Vapour and exhalation, dusk and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton.

DUSK. n. f. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back. Speator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin. Dryden.

TO DUSK. v. a. [from the noun.] To make dusky.

TO DUSK. v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. DiE.

DUSKILY. adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.

DUSKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw,
Huge flames, that dimm'd all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in duskish smoke, and brimstone blue. Spenser.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore rather a dusky tincture than an absolute black. Watson.

DUSKILY. adv. [from duskish.] Cloudily; darkly.

The lawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snail, made the snail to burn duskily. Bacon.

DUSKY. adj. [from dusk; duyker, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer, Chok'd with ambition of the meanest tort. Shak.
There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away. Dryden.

Through the plains, of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night. Pope.

2. Tending to blackness; dark-coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got. Shakpeare.
It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour. Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour. Woodw.
By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton's Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horror, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy. Bentley.
Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sullied the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen. Pope.

DUST. n. f. [durt, Saxon; duist, Erfc.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops. Shaksp.
Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, inasmuch as they cast dust upon them: that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on. Bacon.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.

The sceptre, learning, physic, must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shaksp.

Out of the ground waft taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return. Milton.

3. A mean and dejected state.

God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Samuel.

TO DUST. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from dust.

2. To sprinkle with dust.

DUSTMAN. n. f. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.

The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DUSTY. adj. [from dust.]

1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.

All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspere.
Arms and the dusky fields I kiss admire,
And loften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.

2. Covered or scattered with dust.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the ear he sweats, or dusty hears
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson.

DUTCHNESS. n. f. [duchesse, French.]

1. The lady of a duke.

The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakpeare.
'The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be near her majesty. Swift.

The generous god who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens mines,
Kept diots for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.

2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.

DUTCHY. n. f. [duché, French.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.

Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Berne. Addison.
France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DUTCHY-COURT. n. f. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowell.

DUTEOUS. adj. [from duty.]

1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or regal authority.

Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success. Dryden.
A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryd.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her borden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass? Prior.

2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes; with to.

I know thee well; a servicable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakpeare.
Every heast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd. Milton.

3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.

With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties. Shakpeare.

DUTIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]

1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiours; reverent.

She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.

2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.

There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing the thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DUTIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]

1. Obediently; submissively.

2. Reverently; respectfully.

His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Mitho enviously watching her. Sidney.
He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DUTIFULNESS. n. f. [from dutiful.]

1. Obedience; submission to just authority.

Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden.

2. Reverence; respect.

It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner. Taylor.

DUTY. n. f. [from due.]

1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.

When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded you, say, We are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. Luke.
The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.

2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.

Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me: I Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shakpeare.

All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance. Taylor.

3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatter'y bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls. Shak.
God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater: it being not probable, that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.

4. Act of reverence or respect.

They both atone,
Did duty to their lady as became. Fairy Queen.

5. The business of a soldier on guard.

The regiment did duty there punctually. Clarendon.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him, used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus. Arbutnot.

6. The business of war; service.

The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.
See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For seven long years, on duty ev'ry day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay! Dryden.

7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.

All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port. Addison.
Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law. Arbutnot.

DWARF. n. f. [ðpeong, Saxon; dwerf, Dutch.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minims, of hind'ring knot-grafs made. Shakpeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.
They, but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs, in narrow room Throng numberless. Milton.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in denision. L'Espr.

Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Motimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftloones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needles spear he gave. Spenser.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition: as, dwarf-elder, dwarf-honey-suckle.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread. Bacon.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrank into a race of beauties, that seems almost another species. Aldison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were,
As cherubins, all gilt. Shakspeare.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shaksp.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king duth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories. Shak.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish
wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY. adv. [from dwarfish.]
Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS. n. f. [from dwarfish.]
Minuteness of stature; littleness.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm. Glavinille.

To DWAULE. v. a. [dwælan, Saxon, to wander; dwælen, Dutch.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL. v. n. preterit dwelt, or dwelled. [dualla, old Teutonic, is stay, delay; duelia, Islandick, to stay, to stand still.]

1. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have a habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be told unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant. Leviticus.

He shall dwelt alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Leviticus.

John Haywood and sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peachment.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwelt no frowns, nor anger; from these gates Sorrow flies far. Milton.

2. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the Land of Promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles. Heb.

3. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwelt in doubtful joy. Shak.

4. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwelt;
More busying his quick eyes her face to view,
Than his dull ears to hear what she did tell. Spens.

Th' attentive queen
Dwelt on his accents. Smith.
Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy. Pope.

5. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heav'n, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal:
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwelt. Dryden.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those who defend our negotiators, dwelt upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

- To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwelt this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth

To town or village nigh. Milton.

- DWE'LLER. n. f. [from dwelt.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The hooles being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now mornuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

- DWE'LLING. n. f. [from dwelt.]

1. Habitation; piece of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore. Fairy Qu.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jeremiah.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men, Delighted. Milton.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton.

The living few and frequent funerals then Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgments to their dwellings trace. Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky. Dryd.

2. State of life; mode of living.

My dwelling shall be, with the beasts of the field. Daniel.

- DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. f. [from dwelt and house.] The house at which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe.

- DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. f. [dwelt and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser.

- To DWINDLE. v. n. [dwipnan, Saxon.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.

Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a sifter turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Aldison.

Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought,
Their period finish'd ere 'tis well begun. Thomf.

2. To degenerate; to sink.

'Tis now dwindled down to light frothy stuff. Norris.

If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.

He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Altierh.

Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.

3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.

Weary sev'n nights nine times nine,
Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine. Shakf.

We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.

Physicians, with their milky cheer,
The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

4. To fall away; to be diminished; to moulder off.

E.

E A D

E Has two sounds; long, as scène, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as, cân, câne; mân, mâne; gâp, gâpe; glâd, glâde; brêd, brêde; shîn, chîne; wîp, wîpe; thîn, thîne; nôd, nôde; tûn, tûne; plûm, plûme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as, gûne, knowlêdge, êdge, gîve. Anciently almost every word ended with e, as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greats; for need, needs; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterward it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mêa, mēan; fêl, fêal; mêt, mêt; nêt, nêt.

EACH pron. [elc, Saxon; elcb, Dutch; ilk, Scottish.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of different greatness be,
Yet both are for ea & other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and your's to be inclos'd. Dryd.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry.

Th' invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be th' inventor mis'd. Milton.

Let each
His adamantin coat gird well, and each Fit well his helm. Milton.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton.

Wife Plato said, the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford. Denham.

To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shakspeare.
Let each esteem other better than themselves. Phil.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Bright'ning each other! Thou art all divine. Albion's Cato.

EAD [æl, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness, or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conqueror; which Macarius, Eupolemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild. Gibf. Camden.

EA'GER. adj. [eagon, Saxon; aigre, French.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought. Dryd.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came. Dryden.
With joy th' ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager, for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day. Dryd.

Love inflam'd, and eager on his bliss, Smother'd her words. Addison's Ovid.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the founding brass of old to the labouring moon. Glanville.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Spratt.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

A man, charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, where he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spur'd. Addis.

5. Sharp; sour; acid.

With a sudden vigour it doth passer
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shakspeare.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
—It is a nipping and an eager air. Shakspeare.
The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, wherby the cold becometh more eager. Bacon.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whoever died in that expedition was a martyr! South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait. Stepney.

E A G

2. Ardently; hotly.

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Anthony were inclos'd. Shakspeare.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles' History of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS. n. f. [from eager.]

1. Keennefs of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shaksf.

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fit,
Some falcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry mis'd.

Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge if not waily regulated, is often an hindrance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour. Addison.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.

Addison's Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of hate,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste.

Dryden.

EA'GLE. n. f. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; eallor, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey.

The eagle, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back.
Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arms still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew. Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED. adj. [from eagle and eyed.]
Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

As he was quick and perspicacious, he was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Horace.

Every one is eagle-eyed to see Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.
EAGLESPEED. n. f. [eagle and speed.]
Swiftness like that of an eagle.
Abrupt, with eagle-speed the cut the sky,
Infant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.
EAGLESTONE. n. f. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder.
Calmet.

The eagle-stone contains, in a cavity within it,
a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that, if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ear, or eagle-stone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EAGLET. n. f. [from eagle.] A young eagle.
This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tying on her breast, and the fourth picking at one of her eyes. Darwin.

EAGRE. n. f. [ager, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Islandick, is to agitate, to incite.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn.
For as an eagle rides in triumph o'er the tide,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force.
Dryden.

EALDERMAN. n. f. [ealde; man, Saxon.]
The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

EAME. n. f. [eam, Saxon; com, Dutch.]

L'Estrange.

Be not alarmed, as if all religion was falling about our ears. Bacon's Theory.

5. The highest part of a man; the top.
A cavalier was up to the ears in love with a very fine lady.
6. The privilege of being readily and kindly heard; favour.
Aristippus was earnest suitor to Dionysius for some grant, who would give no ear to his suit; Aristippus fell at his feet, and then Dionysius granted it. Bacon's Apophthegms.

They being told there was small hope of ease,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty. Ben Jonson.
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own. Pope.

Pope.

EARTHUR. n. f. [earth and nut.] A piguit; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their tenth root only where they grow. Ray.

EARTHQUAKE. n. f. [earth and quake.]

Tremour or convulsion of the earth.
It is subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stop'd, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions, and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake.
Woodward's Natural History.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horreur.
King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul. Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

in fat earthly vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins.

All water, especially that of rain, is stured with matter, light in comparison of the common earthly matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; ter-rene.

To survey his dead and earthly image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater. Shakespeare.

Him lord pronounc'd, he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend Their earthly charge. Milton's Paradise Lost.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.
Those earthly spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.
Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthly, the dark dungeon thine. Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and
speak;
Lay open to my earthly gross conceit,
Smother'd in errors, scabbie, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words deceit. Shakespeare.

Nor is my flame
So earthly, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham's Sophy.

EASE. n. f. [aize, French.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
Davies.

The priest on skins of off'ring takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees. Dryden's Aeneas.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency, or a freedom from pain. L'Esrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting.
Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain. Dryden.

5. Unconstrained; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or con-ceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance. Pope.

6. At EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease,
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden.

Men of parts and penetration were not idly to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.
Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Lucretius.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.
Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be ease'd, if France can yield relief. Shakespeare.

As if with spots my sufferings I could ease.
Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbutnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees?
Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gathering clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load.

Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries.
No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it.

Isaiah.

Locke.

EASEFUL. adj. [ease and full.] Quiet;
peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious, threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easy western bed.

Shaksp.

EASEMENT. n. f. [from ease.]

1. Assistance; support; relief from ex-pences.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements.

Swift.

2. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like.

Cowell.

EASILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance;
but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped.

Bacon.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know.

Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

Is it not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can?

Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden's Dev. in State of Inno.
Not soon provok'd, the easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes.

Prior.

EASINESS. n. f. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd.

Ben Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength.

Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered.

Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half atchiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd.

Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers.

Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them.

Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable fore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy.

Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own.

South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves.

Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort;
not formality.

Abstract and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dregs.

Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep.

Ray.

EAST. n. f. [eort, Saxon; beos, Erse.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the west.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward.

Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest
For the whole space that 's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich east to boot.

The gorgeous east, with richest hand,
Pours on her kings barbarick, pearl and gold.

Milton.

EASTER. n. f. [eastre, Saxon; oosier, Dutch.] The day on which the christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter?

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism.

Decay of Piety.

EASTERLING. n. f. [from east.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquish'd
Those spoils'd, rich, and swearing Easterlings.

Spenser.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EASTERLY. adj. [from east.]

1. Coming from the parts toward the east.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, wherby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthful.

Raleigh.

2. Lying toward the east.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England.

Graunt.

3. Looking toward the east.

Water he chafes clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition.

Arbutnot.

EASTERN. adj. [from east.]

1. Dwelling or found in the east; oriental.
Like eastern kings a lazy state they keep.

Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom slaves.

Thomson.

2. Lying or being toward the east.
The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices.

Adairson.

3. Going toward the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward.

Adairson.

4. Looking toward the east.

Th' angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct.

Milton.

EASTWARD. adv. [east and toward.]
Toward the east.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set.

Ferrius.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?

Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light.

Dryden.

EAS'Y. adj. [from ease.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect.

Hooker.

How much is it in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try.

Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy accents, and planted with variety of palaces.

Adairson on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmo-lled; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges or employment.

Temple.

Keep your thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations.

Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy.

Adairson's Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances,
they are naturally enemies to innovations.

Adairson's Freshholder.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter.

Adairson's Spectator.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable.

Smithridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps Might yield them easier habitation.

Milton.

Pleasure has been the business of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself.

Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.

Bated with reasons not plausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares.

Milton.

With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts.

Dryden.

The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and beauteous to my wishes.

Adairson's Cate.

6. Ready; not unwilling.

Pity and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive.

Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.

They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy.

Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.

Those move easies that have learn'd to dance.
Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Demian's strength, and Waller's sweetness join.

Pope.

TO EAT. v. a. preterit ate, or eat;
part. eat, or eaten. [ean, Saxon; itan, Gothick; eich, Erse.]

1. To devour with the mouth.

Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth.

Isaiah.

Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polymmus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up.

Bacon's War with Spain.

Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite,
because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle.

Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.

Thou nest of gold art worth of gold;
Others less fine in carat is more precious,
Preserving life in medicine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most re-nown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up.

Shakspere's Henry, iv.

They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it.

Fasting cares,
Lydian airs. Milton.

There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.

Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.

They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat.

Hobbes's on Providence.

Cred't were not to be lost

By a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, periodically, his word,
And swears his ears through a two inch board.

Hudibras

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.

He did eat continually at the king's table.

2 Samuel.

And when the scribes and pharisees saw him eat with publicans and sinners, they said unto his disciples, How is it that he eateth with publicans and sinners?

Matthew.

2. To take food.

He that will not eat till he has a demonstration that it will nourish him, he that will not sit 'till he insally knows the business he goes about will succeed, will have little else to do but sit still and perish.

Locke.

3. To be maintained in food.

The righteous eateth to the satisfying of his soul, but the belly of the wicked shall want.

Proverbs.

Thou art past the tyrant's stroke;
Care no more to cloath and eat Shaksp. Cymb.
But, thanks to my indulgent stars, I eat,
Since I have found the secret to be great. Prior.

4. To make way by corrosion.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials.

South.

A prince's court eats too much into the income of a poor state.

Addison's Italy.

EATABLE. adj. [from eat.] That may be eaten.

EATABLE. n. f. Any thing that may be eaten.

If you all sorts of persons would engage,
Suit well your eatables to ev'ry age.

King.

EATER. n. f. [from eat.]

1. One that eats any thing.

The Caribes and the Cannibals, almost all, are eaters of man's flesh.

Milton.

A knave, a rascal, an eater of broken meats.

Shakspere.

If the taste of this fruit maketh the eaters like gods, why remainest thou a beast?

Bacon.

As if the lotus grew only here, the virtue of whose fruit is to cause in the eaters an oblivion of all other soils.

Hewel.

2. A corrosive.

EATH. adj. [eað, Saxon.] Easy; not difficult. An old word.

Where ease abounds, it's eath to do amiss.

Fairy Queen.

What works not beauty, man's relenting mind

Is eath to move with plaints and shews of woe.

Fairfax

The way was strait and eath.

Fairfax

EATH. adv. [from the adjective.] Easily. An old word.

Who hath the world not try'd,
From the right way full eath may wander wide.

Hobbes's Tale

EATINGHOUSE. n. f. [eat and house.] A house where provisions are sold ready dressed.

An hungry traveller slept into an eatinghouse for his dinner.

L'Estrange.

EAVES. n. f. [eape, Saxon.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.

Every night he comes

With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nodd'ng steals us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't.

Shakspere.

His tears run down his beard, like winter drops

From eaves of reeds.

Shakspere's Tempest.

If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter.

Bacon.

Usher'd with a shower still,

When the gull hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,

With minute drops from off the eaves.

Milton.

The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.

Woodward

TO EAVESDROP. v. a. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.

EAVESDROPPER. n. f. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.

Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me.

Shakspere.

EBB. n. f. [ebba, epplob, Saxon; ebbē, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide toward the sea: opposed to flow.

The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to tripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'nds the deep.

Milton.

Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the laden vessels into port:

Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main.

Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.

You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.

Spenser on Ireland.

This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.

Raleigh's History

Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away.

Keats's

The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining.

Dyden

Near my apartment let him prisoner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see.

Dryden.

What is it he aspires to?

Is it not this? To shed the flow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your descent.

Addison's Cato.

TO EBB. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To flow back toward the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea.

Shakspere.

From thence the tide of fortune left thee. Inore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.

Dryden's Æneid.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am running water:
—I'll teach you how to flow.

Hereditary flesh instructs me. Shaksp. Tempest.
But oh, he ebb'd the foaming waves decay!

For ever lovely fleets, for ever fly! Hobbes.

EBEN. } n. f. [ebenus, Latin.] A hard,
EB'ON. } heavy, black, valuable wood,
EB'ONY. } which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vite, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods.

Mexon.

Out by the winds exact the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.

Guy.

EBRIETY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Bitter almonds, as an antidote against ebriety, hath commonly failed.

Brown's Vul. Err.

EBRILADE. n. f. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. f. [ebrietas, Latin.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion.

Brown.

EBULLITION. n. f. [ebullio, Latin.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder.

Bacon.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crasse and fumed exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis.

Brown's Vul. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties.

Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, 'till they get between its outmost particles and the main mass of the metal?

Newton.

A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniac, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue.

Abraham.

ECCENTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, ECCENTRICK. } Latin.]

1. Deviating from the centre.

2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricicks and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs.

Bacon.

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament: but up or down,
By centrick or eccentricick, had to tell.

Milton.

They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick and eccentricick, scribbled o'er,
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb.

Milton.

Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentricick?

Newton's Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which most needs be often eccentric to the ends of his master.

Bacon's Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentric and irregular.

King Charles.

A character of an eccentric virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties.

Dryden.

Then from what'er we can to sense produce, Common and plain, or wondrous and abstruse, From nature's constant or eccentric laws, The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws, That an effect most presuppose a cause.

Prior.

ECCENTRICITY. n. f. [from eccentric.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.

Brown.

By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally.

Holler.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.

Watson.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit.

Harris.

ECHYMOSIS. n. f. [ἐκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood.

Quincy.

Echymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole.

Wifeman.

Laxations are accompanied with tumour and echymosis.

Wifeman.

ECCLESIASTICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasti-

ECCLESIASTICK. } cus, Latin.]

Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the ministers.

Hooker.

Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers.

Swift.

A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government.

Swift.

ECCLESIASTICK. n. f. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church.

Burnet's Theory.

ECCROPTICKS. n. f. [ἐκ and κροπτικός.]

Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccroptick.

Harvey on the Plague.

ECHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]

ECHINATED. } Bristled like a hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrite in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls.

Woodward on Fossils.

ECHINUS. n. f. [Latin.]

1. A hedgehog.
2. A shellfish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs.

Harris.

E'CHO. n. f. [ἠχώ; echo, Latin.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus

The pleasant myrtle may teach th' unfortunate Echo

In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess.

Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

Bacon's Natural History.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds, Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns, As if a double hunt were heard at once.

Shakespeare.

Wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them, And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.

Shakespeare.

O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!

With other echo late I taught your shades To answer, and resound far other song!

Milton.

To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing; The woods shall answer, and the echo ring.

Pope.

'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence; The found must seem an echo to the sense.

Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting

All the church echo'd. Shaksp. Taming of Shrew. Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;

Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds.

Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!

Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!

Her mitt'd princes hear the echoing noise, And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.

Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.

Decay of Piety.

With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;

Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.

Dryden's Æneid.

One great death deforms the dreary ground; The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound.

Prior.

ECLAIRCISSEMENT. n. f. [French.]

Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer.

Clarendon.

ECLAT. n. f. [French.] Splendour; show; lustre.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprize, and relat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

Pope's Essay on Homer.

ECLICTICK. adj. [ἐκλεκτικός.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the eclitick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.

Waller on the Mind.

ECL'GMA. n. f. [ἐκ and λήξις.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

ECLIPSE. n. f. [ἐκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven: the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,

Sliver'd in the moon's eclipses.

Shakespeare.

Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse Then suffer'd.

Milton's Paradise Lost.

So though the sun victorious be, And from a dark eclipse set free, The influence, which we fondly fear, Afflicts our thoughts the following year.

Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one.

Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life.

Raleigh.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses.

King Ch.

To ECLIPSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign.

Saunders.

Now if the earth were flat, the dark'ned moon Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one.

Greech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son, Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.

Shaksp.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Sidney.

Praise him to his father:—

—Let the prince's glory Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.

Denham's Sophy.

Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate, Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings reitor'd;

But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate, Whien, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.

Dryden.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him.

Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engrofs'd All pow'r, and us eclips'd.

Milton's Par. Lost.

ECLIPTIK. n. f. [ἐκλειπτικός.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the zodiack, and making an angle with the equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23° 30'.

This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line.

This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the ecliptick is that part among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east.

If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs.

Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward's Natural History.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which, passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLIP'TICK. adj. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day; The sun revolving through th' ecliptick way, Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

E'CLOGUE. n. f. [ἐκλογή.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues.

What exclaiming praises Basilius gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONOMICK. } adj. [from economy.]

ECONOMICAL. } adj. [from economy.]

2. Frugal.

Some are so plainly economical, as even to desire that the seat be well watered, and well swaled. Watson's Architect.

ECONOMY. n. f. [ὀικονομία.] This word is often written, from its derivation, economy; but a being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hannond.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. Ben Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epic poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden's Dedication to th. Æneid.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid, That by a constant separation made, They may a due economy maintain, Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. f. [ἐκ and φράσις.] Such medicines as render tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it even so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the hap thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate. Swift.

EJE'CTION. n. f. [ejectio, Latin.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broom.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

EJE'CTMENT. n. f. [from ejecere.] A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT. adj. [eaptæ, Saxon; abta, Go- thick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandy's Journey.

EIGHTH. adj. [from eight.] Next in or- der to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet?—A seventh! I'll see no more; And yet the eighth appears! Shakespeare.
In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continued years, And water her ambrosial couch with tears; The eighth she voluntarily moves to part, Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart. Pope.

EI'GHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heat, And leave eighteen. Shakespeare's Cymbeline.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam died Abijam. 1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY. adv. [from eight.] In the eighth place.

Eightly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon's Nat. Hist.

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain. Wilkins' Math. Magic.

EI'GHTSCORE. adv. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; a hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights?

Eighty eight hours? and lovers absent hours, More tedious than the dial eighty times? Oh weary reckoning! Shakespeare's Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen, And each hour's jny wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakespeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

EIGNE. adj. [aifne, Fr.] In law, it denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for avement of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not sub- ject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue for a pardon un-compelled before the time; in all which, some- mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EI'SEL. n. f. [eopil, Saxon.] Vinegar, verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind How thou resemblest Christ, as with fowre poison,

If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall, How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall. Sir T. Moore

EI'THER. pron. [æððer, Saxon; auther, Scottish.]

1. Whichsoever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both, Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves, Nor either cares for him. Shakespeare.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton's Nymph.
Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both.

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, on the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryden's Virgil.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage:

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

EITHER. adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or: either the one or the other.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assign'd? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULATION. n. f. [ejulatio, Lat.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Phillips.

EKE. adv. [eac, Saxon; ook, Dutch.] Also; likewise.

If any strength we have, it is to ill;
But all the good is God's both power and eke will. Fairy Queen.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

TO EKE. v. a. [eacan, Saxon.]

1. To increase.

I dempt there much to have eked my store,
But such eking hath made my heart fore. Spenser.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you.

—And mine to eke out her's. Shakespeare.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakespeare.

Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shakespeare.

4. To spin out by useless additions. In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.

TO ELABORATE. v. a. [elaboro, Lat.]

1. To produce with labour.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbutnot.

ELABORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Latin.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament of outward shew Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELABORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.]

Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.

Some colored powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELABORATION. n. f. [from elaborate.]

Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition. Ray.

TO ELANCE. v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people
Joyfully repeated 'tis!
Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly Irrevocable. Prior.

TO ELAPSE. v. n. [elapsus, Latin.] To glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docile season, a learning time in youth, which suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Clarissa.

ELASTICAL. } adj. [from elasticus.] Hav-

ELASTICK. } ing the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastic engines did the rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pressure, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastic, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton's Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension; in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastic and strong. Arbutnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastic power, and break through, where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTICITY. n. f. [from elastic.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear an hundred weight without rupture; but at the same time cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and immediately it raiseth the weight. Arbutnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELATE. adj. [elatus, Lat.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

Oh, thoughtless mortals! ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate!
I, of mind elate, and scornning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear. Pope's Odyssey.

TO ELATE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity.

2. To exult; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELATERIUM. n. f. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture and an acid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of a wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELATION. n. f. [from elate.] Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

ELBOW. n. f. [elboga, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Strait will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home;
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow. Shakespeare's Othello.

ELBOWCHAIR. n. f. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Dioclesian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

ELBOWROOM. n. f. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shakespeare.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventures also. Buen.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

TO ELBOW. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one jostles in the shoe. Dryden's Farnal.

2. To push; to drive to a distance; to encroach upon.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryden.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,
He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours.
Dryden.

To ELBOW. v. n. To jut out in angles.
ELD. n. f. [eald, Saxon; eld, Scottish.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.
Her heart with joy, unwonted inly swell'd
As feeling wond'rous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser.

Thy blazed youth
Becomes assaged, and doth beg the alms
Of pashed eld. Shakspeare.
He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If like wife he some fair one wedded not,
Thenceby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and childless eld.
Milton.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.
They count him of the green-hair'd eld.
Chapman.

ELDER. n. f. [ellara, Saxon; sambucus.]
A tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood: the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a ruse: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. Müller.
Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overhades the mouth of that same pit.
Shakspeare.

ELDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now corrupted to old. [eald, ealdor, Saxon.]
Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters.
Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways the level in her husband's heart. Shakspeare.
How I firmly am refus'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter
Before I have a husband for the elder.
Shakspeare.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistratus, as they were, so were they called, elder men. Raleigh's History.
The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.
Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile; not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or awful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

ELDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.
I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can hawl when I am deaf, and tread lustily when I am giddy. Swift.

ELDERS. n. f. [from elder.]
1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.
Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chafe,
Shake off their irth curse. Shakspeare.
The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose.
Samlys.

2. Ancestors.
Says the goose, if it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you.
I loose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand not pardon, but applause.
Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their hardships and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser's State of Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clarks and elders ana; like the rude
Claus of presbytry, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side.
Cleveland.

ELDERSHIP. n. f. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.
The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Raleigh.
That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my first right due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove. Dryden.
Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause.
Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be, of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker.

ELDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [eald, ealdor, ealdste, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Maudslin, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare. Macbeth.
The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. That has lived most years.
Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

ELECAMPANE. n. f. [helenium, Latin.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species. Müller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampa root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill.

TO ELECT. v. a. [electus, Latin.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.
Henry his son is chosen king though young;
And Lewis of France, *elect*d first begu'd.
Daniel.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, *elect*d a hundred senators out of the commons. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

ELECT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.
You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembled
To plead your cause. Shakspeare's Henry VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.
The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony; and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton.

ELECTION. n. f. [electio, Latin.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would chuse the meetest? Watts's him, not thy election,

But natural necessity, begot. Milton.
As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Spratt.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and chusing will!
Not if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will chuse. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things: which so cleareth mens judgment and election, as it is the less apt to slide into error. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.
Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Adelphi.

ELECTIVE. adj. [from elect.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unsuiter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Greus's Cypriologia Sacra.

ELECTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtle enough to discern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Greus.

ELECTOR. n. f. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperors and popes. Waller
2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperor.

ELECTORAL. adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

ELECTORATE. n. s. [from elector.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison's Freeholder.

ELECTRE. n. s. [electrum, Latin.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity, and to the bodies that so attract the epithet electric.

2. A mixed metal.
Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon

ELECTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum.]
ELECTRICK. } See ELECTRE. }

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electric bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown.

An electric body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electric body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electric body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electric body.

If that attraction were not rather electric than magnetic, it was wonderful what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, be held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electric vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton's Opticks.

ELECTRICALITY. n. s. [from electric. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Gray, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

ELECTUARY. n. s. [electarium, Celsus Anrel. which is now written electuary.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey.

Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMOSYNARY. adj. [elemosine, v.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an elemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posterior to and dependent on itself. Glanville's Scripps.

2. Given in charity. This is the present use.

ELEGANCE. }

ELEGANCY. } n. s. [elegantia, Latin.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking; beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh.

Their questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

My compositions in gardening are altogether pleasrick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

ELEGANT. adj. [elegans, Latin.]

1. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
These may 't thou find some elegant retreat. London.

2. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

ELEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organic arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the strict style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton.

In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake. Johnson.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententious. Bacon.

Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope's Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGIACK. adj. [elegiacus, Latin.]

1. Used in elegies.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful.

Let elegiac lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay.

ELEGY. n. s. [elegus, Latin.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

ELEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Latin.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should loose the qualities which now they have. Hosker.

A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.

Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakspeare.

My dearest sister fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make Thy spirits all of comfort. Shakspeare.

The king,
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shakspeare. King Lear.
The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. Peter.

Here he four of you, able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.

He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know the works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakspeare.

Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton.

They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent. Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great spout together, as you guess?
—One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shakspeare. Henry VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other science; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hosker.

Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser.

We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal.

There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master. Dryden.

To ELEMENT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemental bodies, I now question. Boyle.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublunary, lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Of absence, 'cause it doth remove
The thing which elemented it. Donne.

ELEMENTAL. adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war. Dryden's Virgil.

Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And slip with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison, not properly, that is by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fall upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

ELEMENTARITY. n. f. [from elementary.]

The simplicity of nature, or absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large-class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity. Brown.

ELEMENTARY. adj. [from element.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation. Libbushnot.

2. Initial; rude.

EL'EM. n. f.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Ethiopia in dattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brazilians wound, and collect the resin. Hill's Mat. Med.

EL'ENCH. n. f. [elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole temptation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown's Vulgar Errors.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

EL'EOTS. n. f. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer's Husbandry.

ELEPHANT. n. f. [elephas, Latin.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk, or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes. Shakespeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure. Shakespeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold. Dryden's Virgil.

ELEPHANTIASIS. n. f. [elephantiasis, Latin.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

ELEPHANTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To ELEVATE. v. a. [elevo, Latin.]

1. To raise up aloft.
This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyfs. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

Others apart fat on a hill retir'd,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate. Milton.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vitious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgments of learned men are alledged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgments of others as learned? Hooker.

ELEVATE. part. adj. [from elevated.]

Exalted; raised aloft.
On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton.

ELEVATION. n. f. [elevatio, Latin.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His stile was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Watson.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hesker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no circular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla. Brown.

ELEVATOR. n. f. [from elevate.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chyrurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

ELEVEN. adj. [ændlepen, Saxon.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of a gion. Shakespeare.

ELEVENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Raleigh's History.

ELF. n. f. plural elves. [elf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss.]

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from brier. Shakespeare

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton.

The king of elvs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on neaths, and danc'd on ev'ry green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Page.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was evil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair for matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hannmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shakespeare.

ELFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser.

ELFLOCK. n. f. [elf and lock.] Knots of hair twisted by elves.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night,
And cokes the elf-locks in foul flutish hairs,
Which once untangl'd, much misfortune bodes. Shakespeare.

To ELICITE. v. a. [elicio, Latin.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale's Origin of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the meer lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELICIT. adj. [elicitus, Latin.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness; meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hannm.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

ELICITATION. n. f. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bramhall.

To ELIDE. v. a. [elido, Latin.] To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

ELIGIBILITY. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose therein in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes's Sermons.

ELIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Latin.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him, that next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison's Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.
Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Cliffia.

ELIGIBLENESS. n. f. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

ELIMINATION. n. f. [elimino, Latin.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dill.

ELISION. n. f. [eliso, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off: as, can't the attempt, there is an elision of a syllable. You will observe the abbreviations and elision, by which consonants of most obscure sounds are joined together, without any following vowel to intervene. Swift

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon.

ELIXATION. n. f. [elixus, Latin.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution, of solid aliments, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELIXIR. n. f. [Arabic.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Haller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befall
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing. In the soul, when the supreme faculty moves regularly, the inferior passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. Smith.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance. What wonder then, if fields and regions here Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton's Par. Lost.

ELK. n. f. [elc, Saxon.] A large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heavy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumbering silent in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELL. n. f. [eln, Saxon.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter. They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure. Acquit thee bravely, play the man; Look not on pleasures as they come, but go: Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span Makes not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

ELLYPSIS. n. f. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetoric, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 13. Hannond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Waller's Delectus.

The planets do not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentric. Bentley.

ELLIPTICAL. } adj. [from ellipsis.] Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptical orbits in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentric motion, that may make the orbits elliptical. Cheyne.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne's Phil. Prin.

ELM. n. f. [ulmus, Lat. elm, Saxon.]

1. A tree.

The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows, upon the borders of the fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit trees: because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Lush'd the rock, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate. Shakespeare.

ELOCUTION. n. f. [elocutio, Latin.]

1. The power of fluent speech. A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech. Whose taste, too long forbore, at first essay Gave elocution to the mute, and taught The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise. Milton.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words. The third happiness of his poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of cloathing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden. As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

ELOGE. n. f. [elogé, French.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and eloges. Watson.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject. Hollis's Elements of Speech.

TO ELOIGNE. v. a. [eloigner, French.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused.

From worldly care himself he did eloin,
And greatly thimmed manly exercise. F. Queen
I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou hast do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she eloin me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

TO ELONGATE. v. a. [from longus, Latin.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

2. To put further off. The first star of Aries in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

TO ELONGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Elio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees into the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward. Brown.

ELONGATION. n. f. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound. Arbutnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wishman's Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real. Glanville's Sceptis.

5. Departure; removal.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent or elongation. Brown.

TO ELOPE. v. a. [loopen, to run, Dut.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politic, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance. Addison.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.
The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELOPEMENT. n. f. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power; commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow. Aspliff's Paragon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbutnot

E'LOPS. n. f. [ἔλος.] A fish: reckoned however by Milton among the serpents. Scorpion and asp, and amphibia dire, Cerales horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear, And dipfas. Milton's Par. Lof.

E'LOQUENCE. n. f. [eloquentia, Latin.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant

More learned than the ears. Shaksp. Coriolanus.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence Flourish'd, since mute. Milton.

His infant fortrefs pleads a milder doom, And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say the be mute, and will not speak a word; Then I'll commend her volubility,

And say the uttered piecing eloquence. Shaksp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense, And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence. Pope.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Latin.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator. Isaiah.

Oh death! all eloquent, you only prove What dull we dote on, when 'tis man we love. Pope.

'ELSE. pronoun. [eller, Saxon.] Other; one beside: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shaksp.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom. Hale.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you; He did it when he had nothing else to do. Densham.

ELSE. adv.

1. Otherwise.

Dare not, on thy life, Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due, But stand aloof, and think profane to view: This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood, These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood. Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause? Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found, And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious, Or else good night your vow. Shakspere.

ELSEWHERE. adv. [else and where.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot's Descrip. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Raleigh's History.

For, if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere, Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd, And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice Shall be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere. Milton.

Although feasted bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hucker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere. Milton.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere; My mother's daughter knows not how to fear. Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

Milton.

When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.
Dryden

2. To perplex; to entangle.
The christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction.
Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.
That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piet.

To EMBRO'THEL. v. a. [brothel, brodel.]
To enclose in a brothel.
Men, which chuse
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute,
Worse than embrothel'd trumpets prostitute.
